Bustling Plaster Rock.

In these days of incessant praying with our faces toward the West it has come to be all too generally supposed that there and there only towns are born, attain vigor, and get charters in a night when of a truth a thriving youngster is growing big here in the middle of one of our oldest forests, a living reputation of the popular conception of this matter. Truth is, that where the pen of an optimist or Western real-estate agent would make the story of Plaster Rock read like a circus poster, the people of this province sleep on and entertain an angel unawares. For it is safe to say that the average well informed New Brunswicker has not seen, and has heard but vaguely of the Town in the Tobique Woods; and where the spires of three churches rise out of a young city, he imagines the hermit guide along with his birch canoe; or at the most perhaps a mill place with piles of lumber and board shacks where the labourers live.

It is every thing but this. And whether New Brunswick or not appreciates what the town of Plaster Rock really is, there is no doubt that New York, Chicago, Boston, Philadelphia and American towns as far west as California have heard inasmuch that every year their wealthy sports-people come in very increasing numbers to The Little Town in the Wilderness. To-day it's the huntsman's mecca, the haunt of the stalkers of moose and the casters of salmon flies. And these people are not silent. They recognise growth and know the earmarks of a city by intuition, and these are the people—more shame to our province and her supposedly wide-awake newspapers—who are making a name and a future for the town of Plaster Rock.

To the man devoid of imagination, the town might be only a collection of so many hundred houses, and the dwelling place of perhaps six hundred people, with two busy mills and their piles of sawed lumber. He is the kind of man who never saw blue sky, and wouldn't recognise a fleecy cloud; nor know the perfect picture of a green tree and its twin self in the water. But your pioneer, your cheerful men your optimists, the men who imagine and then build big cities, these men keep their eyes towards tomorrow and a see future for Plaster Rock.

The traveller who here expects to start on the last stage of a journey to Plaster Rock in some such contrivance as an antiquated stage coach, and over a post road that need to be an Indian trail, is disappointed perhaps when he boards a first class rail way coach, and does the twenty-eight miles from Perth to his destination over a first rate road bed; and he may be further surprised when he finds himself domiciled in a modern hotel with bath and hot and cold water, where he supposed he should have to hold forth at a mill house.

Where he imagined religion had as yet little root, the steeple of three new churches, will tend to elevate a great deal his estimation of the morals of this place, and he will admire the splendid school with its two departments, primary and advanced with the temple of the Oddfellows and the Theatre Elite. He will see barber shops and the signboards of prosperous doctors; busy and well stocked stores; the humming mills which after all are the pumping heart of the town; and the central office where the wires come in from the world and make a hundred miles as nothing. There is the well built bridge busy with traffic, electric lights are common; and on the hill back of the town is a model farm second to none in the province, the property of the real moving spirit of this town, Mr Donald Fraser sr.

Thus is the adage verified that not one half of the world knows what the other half is up to. The key to the future for Plaster Rock however is contained very considerably in the one word—advertising—advertising by the people themselves, the hotel men and the merchants and most of all the medium of an interested newspaper, anxious for the development of all province, all the time, and Canada forever.—Mail.

Hartland vs. Bloomfield

Contrary to the announcement in last week's paper there was no ball game with Woodstock on Tuesday evening; the Woodstockers claiming an engagement elsewhere. Arrangements were made with Bloomfield, however, and a double-header was pulled off. The border village has a stalwart looking team and in their new suits they looked neat, but it is not too much to say that their play was decidedly ragged. They brought with them a good number of fair spectators, but even then the support from the grand stand was not all it should have been.

The score in the afternoon was 15-5 and in the evening 26-3, both games in favor of Hartland. There probably was never such an exhibition of loose playing on any field. It is generally believed that Bloomfield was not at its best. It was an off day for them. Their battery in the evening had absolutely no support from the field and the whole performance might well have been termed "A Comedy of Errors."

On this particular day there was no really good playing shown by the visitors and the home team won no great distinction. True, Reid struck out 18 men in the afternoon and Graham 7. In the evening Tuck made an acrobatic catch that was worthy of applause, and that home run of Sprague's at the close of the game, won while the ball was being juggled among the fielders, was the climax.

Naturally the visiting team felt somewhat down-hearted but they are a manly set of fellows who took defeat without a kick or a murmur, and ability to do this is a strong point in any team.

They are good losers. It is hoped by many that the Hartland team will be asked to play a return game, and the number of those hoping they will trimmed to a finish when this comes off is not wholly made up of people outside of the town.

Likes the Paper.

A subscriber in British Columbia writes: I am inclosing a postal note for 50c. for my subscription until June 1911, and I must say I appreciate your paper very much. I would not be without it for double the price."

Overheard in the Subway.

"Oh, say, Mame!" said the thin girl with the overpower pompadour. "Yer know that swell feller we got talking to when we were in bathing down ter th' beach?"

Mame stopped her gum-chewing long enough too signify that she did.

"Well, after you left, he said some awful nice to me. He said my arms reminded him of the Venus de Milo's."

LIFE OF THE IRON DUKE

DUKE OF WELLINGTON WAS BORN APRIL 29, 1769.

Won Battle of Waterloo When Forty-Six—Became Prime Minister of England.

There seems to be some doubt about the exact date and place of birth of the Duke of Wellington. On the whole, the evidence obtainable seems to point to April 28th as being the day of his birth. It is certain, however, that the Iron Duke was born at Dangan Castle, Dublin, in 1769, and hence first saw the light of day some four months before Napoleon. His father, the first Lord Mornington, was remarkable only as a musical composer. On neither side of his family had the military instinct shown itself, yet at a very early age the future Duke of Wellington showed the love for fighting that was in him.

SENT TO ETON.

After a brief education at a preparatory school in Chelsea, Arthur Wellesley was sent to Eton, where, like Napoleon, he displayed a wonderful faculty for rapid and correct calculation. When but half through his education, Lord Mornington died, leaving his family in straitened circumstances. Wellesley's mother then moved to Brussels. Here in the house in which they lodged, Arthur Wellesley completed his studies, which were principally playing the violin, which he did fairly well, and learning French, which he did better.

STUDIED FOR THE ARMY.

A few months after their arrival in Brussels, Wellesley was sent to a military academy at Angers, where he really did work, so that in a year's time he was sufficiently qualified to obtain a commission in the 73rd Highland Regiment. Within the next five years he exchanged into no fewer than five different regiments, ending up by being appointed aide de camp to the Lord-Lieutenant of Ireland. In 1790 he was returned to the Irish Parliament as member for Trim, and really showed great political acumen.

FRENCH CAMPAIGN.

But war was in the air; the French had won a victory over the Allies at Fleurus, and Wellesley, anxious to be in the fray, joined the 33rd Regiment as colonel, and started off for Ostend. He first met the French at Buxel, near Bois-le-Duc, and what is still more interesting, had to retire before them. The campaign was a strenuous one, the hardships extreme; Wellesley learned much, especially of French tactics, which he never forgot. Hostilities ended, he returned home, and in so disastrous a state were his finances that he made up his mind to leave the army and take a civil appointment, if he could possibly get one. But the fates willed it otherwise. In 1796 his regiment, the 33rd, was ordered to India. Wellesley was unable to accompany it, but he left a few months later and pointed it in Calcutta. From henceforth he set himself seriously to work to carve out his military career. He gave up cards, sports, his violin and other frivolous amusements, and set himself to study for some hours every day.

SOON BECAME FAMOUS.

The authorities soon began to appreciate his ability and striking worth, with the result that he was put in charge of several expeditions. His military fame increased daily; his powers of administration were extraordinary; he practically governed the whole of Madras. With the defeat of the Marhattas, treaties of peace followed, and Wellesley, ill in health, returned home. It was on his arrival in England in 1805 that he met Nelson for the first and last time. Pending active service, Wellesley again entered Parliament as member for Rye. For two years he acted as Chief Secretary for Ireland with great success, but finally relinquished his appointment in order to take command of the troops sent to besiege Copenhagen. After this followed the Peninsular war, where he again proved himself so great a commander, and finally Waterloo, the crowning point of his life.

PRIME MINISTER.

When, in 1815, the Duke of Wellington, as he had been created, finished his military career, he was only 46 years of age. For the rest of his life politics engrossed his every attention. Although as Prime Minister he ruled England, it cannot be said that Parliament was his sphere. Nevertheless, his bitterest opponents never for one moment doubted his honesty of purpose.

DEATH OF THE DUKE.

On the morning of the 14th of September, 1852, the Duke was suddenly taken ill. In spite of all his physicians could do, he never rallied from the first attack, but breathed his last on the afternoon of the same day at the age of eighty-three.

He was given a state funeral, and was buried in St. Paul's Cathedral with all the pomp due to his greatness a few weeks later.

BREAD BAKING FORTY WAYS.

From Sticking It on a Hot Jar to Turning a Kettle Over It.

"In visiting Greece I was struck with the primitive ovens built behind most of the houses in small towns," says a correspondent of the Bakers Weekly. "These were like large beehives, built of clay; they were evidently solid up to the sole, then had the arched roof over, with a door at one side."

"They were heated with fires of straw and twigs and when ready for use were swept out, the dough put in and the opening stopped up with stones and clay till the bread is cooked. Structures like these are typical of the ovens found in many lands where men have had to evolve appliances for various uses from the materials they had at hand."

"Thus in some places we find holes dug in the earth and lined with stones, in which a fire is kept burning till sufficient heat is raised, the bread being then put in and a stone laid over the opening, with a fire on it to keep up the cooking heat."

"In these ovens, we are told, the South Sea Islanders bake their bread, fruit and yams and roast their pork, and doubtless they answer their purposes very well. In some Eastern countries fire is put into a large earthen jar with small mouth and sloping sides, the cakes of bread being stuck on the outside of the jar to bake."

"Then we know the old fashioned griddle, so much used in old Scotch farm houses, on which scones, bannocks and oatcakes are fired. This is also employed in Scandinavia for baking the universal 'fled' bread, and it is also in use in many other countries in various shapes."

"In Cornwall the old kettle style of oven is still used for home baking, the dough being laid on the hot hearthstone with a large, round iron pot inverted over it. Fire outside of this keeps up the baking heat and the Cornish 'kettle bread' is very good eating indeed, even if it is a little puddingy in the centre sometimes."

"Even more primitive means of baking have to be used sometimes, as when the Australian digger rolls up his 'damper' in leaves and covers it with hot ashes to bake; but still, all methods from hot stones to draw plate ovens are used for the one great purpose, to make bread, and the variety of means used for this end go to show the universal importance of that article. Regular bakehouses with proper ovens seem to have been in use, however, for hundreds of years, and doubtless many relics of them are still in existence."

GRATEFUL CHINAMEN.

Experience of a British Columbia Bishop.

One of the Chinamen's most engaging peculiarities is his strong sense of gratitude, which is not merely personal, but racial. So, at least, the Rt. Rev. John Sheehy says in his book, "A Bishop in the Rough." In 1860 he was a young missionary stationed at Fort Hope, British Columbia, and he came much in contact with Chinamen.

On board the river steamboat there was a Chinaman with whom I conversed, and who was much astonished at my acquaintance with the religions of China, and inquired my name. It appears that he mentioned the circumstance to his fellow countryman with whom he was to lodge, and it happened that this man had been for a few months at New Westminster, and I had taught him to read. So he set to work to find out where I was staying, and presently brought me an offering of a very handsome purse and a bracelet of sandalwood. Right glad he was to see me, and we shook hands and nodded and grinned at each other heartily.

The next day I called upon him at his store, and he served up refreshments for me. The Chinamen are not only personally grateful for benefits or kindness received, but they have a racial gratitude. Because I did my best to teach a few Chinamen at New Westminster, and was of course courteous and kind to them, I was always most kindly and hospitably received by Chinamen throughout the colony. When I visited Victoria, as I was welcomed by Chinese storekeepers there, and invited to partake of refreshments wherever I called.

HIS CHIEF CONCERN.

They were carrying Mr. Tytphist, who was laid up with a broken leg, into another room. "Don't stumble, boys," he groaned; "this cot bedstead cost me $1.50."

SOME CAPRICIOUS WILLS

WIVES PUNISHED BY HEN-PECKED HUSBANDS.

Strange Provisions Which Widows Were Compelled to Carry Out.

"This is where I get my own back." One can almost imagine the henpecked husband, who has borne for years the lash of a shrew's tongue, gleefully making this remark, as, with the aid of a lawyer, he cuts off his wife with the proverbial shilling. What reason it was which led a Middlesex (England) tradesman recently to leave his wife out of his will altogether, and further stipulate that any expenses she may incur in connection with his will be paid out of her own pocket, and not be charged against his estate, is not known, says London Tit-Bits.

"As for thirty years my wife has never lost an opportunity of lashing me with her tongue," ran a codicil in the will of a Liverpool merchant of a generation ago, "and making me the butt of her vulgar wit, I bequeath to her an annuity of £300 so long as she lives under the same roof with her mother, whose tongue is as poisonous as her own and whom she hates as cordially as she does me; and so long as mother and daughter together visit my grave on the first day of each month, and in the presence of my solicitor, or his deputy, express regret for the unhappiness they have caused me."

RESULT OF JEALOUSY.

Probably, however, the meanest will on record was that of a man who left to his wife the sum of one farthing, with the direction that it should be sent to her by post in an unstamped envelope, complaining that she had called him "an old pig" and other names.

It was probably jealousy, rather than affection, that inspired the following clause in a will preserved at Somerset House: "Having expiated the errors of a single life by the sorrows of a married one, I now make my will in the full belief that you will outlive me. There are widows, my love, and there are widows. Some rejoice and some do not. Those that do are a discreditable lot. The bare idea of your joining their ranks is so distasteful that I damp any glee you may feel at my death I leave you £10 a year instead of the £100 you expected."

SMILES AND CARESSES.

Jealousy has led to other strange wills. A short time ago a Mr. William Claghorn died in America, possessed of about $300,000 and a pretty wife. Of her he was indifferently jealous. He left her all his money, however, but stipulated that she should forfeit $1,000 of the estate each time she appeared in public unveiled, and another $1,000 each time she smiled at a man. "I do further order that for every time she dances with a man, goes to any gathering for entertainment, amusement, or instruction with a man, that the same sum shall be forfeited, and further, that if she do permit any coarseness or fashion of dress, $5,000 be forfeited."

As a contrast, one might mention the wealthy man who left not a single penny to his widow unless within the space of five years she married again, in which case he bequeathed to her the sum of $5,000. "My object in making this proviso," continued the testator, "is that some other man may know from experience something of the difficulties I have found from living with her."

"During my married life," wrote another disillusioned husband, "I have always declared that my wife was the dearest woman in the world, and I am convinced that should anyone be rash enough to marry her after my death he will find her so. To deter, as far as possible, anyone making such a ruinous experiment I leave her nothing."

Vanity appears to have been the besetting sin of the wife of another testator, who left her the sum of $80,000, to be increased to $105,000 provided that after his death, she wore a widow's cap, which in his lifetime she had stoutly declared she never would wear. "My widow," wrote the disingenuous husband, "would please me greatly by doing this, as I think it would suit her." The good lady, however, was as sharp-witted as she was vain, for after wearing the odious cap for six months she boldly claimed the increased legacy. The matter was brought before a court of law, and to the widow's delight judgment was given in her favor on the ground that the testator had omitted to stipulate that the cap should be worn always. The week after this decision was given the triumphant widow was once more a wife.

A TEN YEARS' PENANCE.

It is happily seldom that the revenge of a disappointed husband takes quite such an extreme form as in the case of the man whose will ran thus: "When I remember that the only happy times I ever enjoyed were when my wife sulked with me, and when I remember that my married life might, for this reason, be considered to have been a fairly happy one because she was nearly always sulking, I am constrained to forget the repulsion the contemplation of her face inspired me with, and leave her the sum of $800,000 on condition that she undertakes to pass two hours a day at my graveside for the ten years following my decease, in company with her sister, whom I have reason to know she loathes worse than she does myself."

A FRIEND OF KINGS.

Sir Ernest Cassel, Once a Poor Boy, Now Entertains Royalty.

Sir Ernest Cassel has had a career full of romance, the romance of the self-made man. It seems like a fairy tale that the unknown lad of the '70s should now be the friend and confidant of the King of England, and the German Emperor.

It is rumored that he is one of the six men who move in the mysterious background of the Government of England, says the Gentleman. He has been the builder of his own fortune. Money has grown under his hands, and banks and railways have made his vast riches.

One of the most dramatic moments in his career was a Boer war incident. The British Government stood in need of a big sum at short notice. It was obtained by Sir Ernest in three hours. Luck seems not to attend him on the turf, although he once won the Two Thousand.

A FEW STEPPING STONES.

Helps for Climbers Who Would Make Success of Life.

Make your pennies count and the dollars will come. Make your courage equal to your strength. They are both needed. Make the most of your opportunities. They are too precious to be wasted.

Make men have confidence in your ability and your integrity. Make your work so good that it will be valuable to any employer. Make light of your disappointments and lighter of your successes. They are to be used, not to be dwelt upon.

Make your work accurate. If the foundation is not solid the structure is not safe.

Make men respect you rather than fear you. Respect always outlives fear. Make your work helpful to others if you want it to be helpful to you. Make the smallest task worth while and the big things will come without your hunting for them. Make your success through your own ability instead of through another's folly.

Make the end of your work as good as the beginning. Don't forget the last stroke can spoil the job. Make no one responsible for your shortcomings but yourself. You are the master of your work. Make yourself and others realize you are in the world because you are a man.

SENTENCE SERMONS.

New truth comes through obedience to old.

Doing nothing is learning to do wrong.

No man is brave until he has faced ridicule.

In some churches cold facts would make a hot sermon.

A store of unpractised piety in the heart soon paralyzes it.

No man can be faithful to divine ideals who dodges daily duties.

Some hope to cure the tiger of biting by filling his teeth with gold.

The endeavor always counts more for one's happiness than the success.

A man soon gets tired of his religion when he does not work at it.

It's a god deal easier to seem fit to die than to be fit to live with.

The less a man thinks about his sincerity the more he is likely to have.

It's no use looking in lonely places for men who are really walking with God.

The most harmless amusement is poisonous when it is the only food your heart gets.

The man who lives by the golden rule never has to talk to his friends about his piety.

TRUE COURTESY.

Great Men Find It Pays to Be Civil and Kind.

A member of the Society of Friends, who had made a fortune as a merchant, was asked how he had managed it. "By a single article," he answered, "in which every one may deal who pleases—civility." The Rev. E. J. Hardy, in his book, "How to be Happy Through Civil," gives an incident from the life of Lord Beaconsfield, an apt illustration of the charm which the spirit of civility infuses into every-day life.

Gladstone was attacking in the House of Commons the administration of Beaconsfield, or rather of Disraeli, as he was then. He had begun a sentence, "The right honorable gentleman and his satellites," when some interruption threw him out. He came to a stop, and seemed on the point of breaking down.

Disraeli leaned across the table and repeated the word "satellites," whereupon his adversary at once recollected himself and resumed his invective.

Civility has been defined as benevolence in small things. This is well illustrated by an anecdote told of Gen. William Napier.

Taking a country walk one day, he met a little girl, about five years old, sobbing over a broken bowl, which she had dropped in bringing it back from the field to which she had taken her father's dinner. She said she would be beaten on her return home for having broken it.

With a sudden gleam of hope, she innocently looked up into his face, and said, "But you can mend it, can't you?"

He explained that he could not mend the bowl, but he would give her a shilling to buy another. However, on opening his purse it was empty of silver, and he had to make amends by promising to meet his little friend in the same spot at the same hour next day, and to bring the shilling with him, bidding her tell her mother she had seen a gentleman who would bring her the money for the bowl the next day. The child, trusting him, went on her way comforted.

On his return home, he found an invitation to dine the following evening with some one whom he specially wished to see.

He hesitated for some time, trying to calculate the possibility of going to meet his little friend, of the broken bowl and still being in time for the dinner-party; but finding this could not be, he wrote to decline the dinner invitation, on the plea of a previous engagement, saying, "I cannot disappoint her. She trusted me implicitly."

SPREADS PESTILENCE.

What the Rat Has Cost Us in Human Lives.

For one of the most terrible of all diseases the rat is now certainly known to be responsible, the bubonic plague, or black death. No scourge of mankind is more dreadful than this. It is laying the Egyptians at the beginning of recorded history; a single epidemic at Athens a third of her citizens. At Lyons, in 1572, the pestilence killed 80,000 persons; Venice in 1516 lost 70,000. During the great plague of London in 1665, 68,596 died, out of a population of 460,000; and the dead lay in the streets because the living were too few to bury them.

Even as late as 1771, an epidemic of the bubonic plague cost Moscow nearly a fourth of its 250,000 souls. But, after the last Parthian arrow, the disease, retired to India and the region westward toward the Mediterranean, which seems to have been its original home; and after 1850 Europe and Africa were free.

It broke out again in 1894, from a peculiar virulent strain, that had its habitat in certain districts of Northern China. The army supply trains carried the rats and the rat carried the bacillus pestis from the Manchurian frontier to the sea. From there it made its way back by junk to Canton, where, between March and August of 1894, it killed upwards of 100,000 persons. Thence the Chinese strain of the plague bacillus passed by ship to Bombay, and diffused itself through India. Five million persons died of the pestilence in India during the six years that ended with 1908, and it was only with 1908 that the annual mortality fell below 200,000.

Before it was discovered that quarantine must include rats as well as men, this new Indo-Chinese strain had spread over the whole civilized world.

Her husband was a merchant, and one day while downtown she dropped into his office. "What are those books on top of the safe?" she asked. "Those are the day books, my dear," he replied. "And where are the night books?" she queried. "Night books," he echoed in surprise. "Yes," she rejoined. "Those you have to work over at night sometimes, when you are kept here until 2 o'clock in the morning."

WHEN NATURE IS AILING

MANY ANIMALS PERISH FROM NEGLECT.

Nature Has a Heavy Sick List, but no Doctors or Surgeons to Attend.

Human beings are the only living organisms on the face of the earth that look after their sick comrades. Nature runs up very close in most things; most of the animals know how to protect their young and keep themselves in food and housing, but the all-important surgeon, physician, and hospital are entirely wanting.

Such domestic animals as the horse, cow, dog, and cat are, of course, doctored like human beings, but this is only because they are in our immediate care; but the ailing wanderer of the woodland is left severely alone.

You might perhaps imagine that Nature makes up for this deficiency by safeguarding her creatures against illness, for we hardly ever see such a thing, for instance, as a sick rabbit.

But this is a mistake. Thousands of animals perish annually from neglected disorders, and the reason why we hardly ever see an ailing beast lies in the fact that it does not show itself until it is dead.

CATERPILLARS GET FEVER.

Even caterpillars have their illnesses. They find it just as troublesome as we do to get through prolonged bad weather. They do not contract pneumonia or influenza, it is true; but in wet seasons they get low fever and dysentery. The first symptom of low fever in a caterpillar is a change in its complexion.

If he is a green caterpillar his beautiful emerald coat turns a sickly yellow. He loses his appetite; his round, plump body gets flat and flabby. Soon he is too weak to cling to his oak-tree perch.

Nature has given him no instinct to keep out of the draught and wet, and unless he has been rescued by a passing entomologist and taken into dry quarters, he dies.

In the case of beetles, death will occur where the slightest doctoring would put things straight. A coleopterist once picked up a dumble-dor beetle on a country road in a dying condition.

The big blue body had been drenched with rain, then dust had passed over it and adhered, with the result that the creature was dying of suffocation. The coleopterist raised it in a neighboring pool and in twenty minutes it flew away quite well.

This often happens with beetles, and they do not appear to think of hunting for water. The same creature is frequently killed by a noxious parasite which collects in dense clusters round the points of the legs—just exactly where the beetle can't get at them.

WHEN BEETLES GO MAD.

A pin-point will remove this plague, but there is nothing in Nature to supply the remedy, and the creature does not think of using twigs or thorns.

A further and very quaint disorder is a species of imbecility. Some beetles lose their sense of balance and are constantly tumbling over on to their backs. If they do this on a smooth flat surface they are so formed that they can never struggle over on to their legs again, and the dire result is starvation.

Beasts and birds are liable to consumption, pneumonia, distemper, glanders, diphtheria, heart disease, and several other well-known disorders. Consumption in a state of Nature is not common, nor is pneumonia, but occasionally a rabbit has been found sitting outside its burrow, shivering from head to tail and gasping for breath. It has come out, fancying there is no air in the burrow. But the trouble is pneumonia. A passing human being might save it if he could catch it; but of course the startled creature would scramble away into the bush and die in solitude. The most obvious, perhaps, of all cases of neglect, where a little attention would right matters, is when animals put their limbs out of joint, or break them, or burst blood-vessels.

A little human surgery in the woodland would bring about happy recoveries. But, as Nature does not attend to such matters, many a rabbit, fox, pheasant, mouse, or hare loses its life over what among us is regarded as the most trifling accident.—Pearson's Weekly.

A BRIGHT BLACKSMITH.

The greatest improvement in vehicle construction was when some bright blacksmith thought of heating the tires and shrinking them on the wheel. While many claim the honor, it is not known to whom it rightly belongs. Previous to this event tires were made in short sections and held on the felloes with nails. When starting on a long haul the driver always laid in a good supply of nails to use on the trip.

Prize Winners for June and July.

Although rather late with the announcement the editor is pleased to state that the correspondents at Riverbank and at Armond rendered the most satisfactory service during June and July and to them will be sent the prizes. It will be remembered that to the correspondent who sends in the news from any locality most regularly and complete in any one month is awarded a handsome book. This plan has worked well and the offer is continued.

Who will win the August prize? Correspondents are wanted in every locality and the editor will be glad to furnish stationery and postage and to send the paper free to any who will send in the news.

It is to be regretted that in some instances correspondents have ceased to work for us after having won one prize. Keep up the good work.

A Correction.

I wish to contradict an article published in the Fort Fairfield Review a short time ago which stated that Marshall Armstrong was fined $50 for selling liquor. The statement was entirely false, and the correspondent who sent the item had better correct the error.

Sermon to Prentice Boys.

At a Prentice Boys' celebration in Fredericton the other day, Rev. A. A. Rideout addressed the audience. It was the anniversary of the Defence of Derry and the Gleaner reports Mr. Rideout to have:

He said in part: We are celebrating a day famous in history. There have been famous victories won in the past such as Wolfe's victory at Quebec, Clive's at Plassey, Wellington at Waterloo, but the defence of Derry and Battle of the Boyne are of great importance since they settled the question of religious liberty. When the thirteen boys closed the gate in face of the enemy and put up the standard "No Surrender," a thrill went through the Protestant world and their standard became a watchword to all lovers of religious freedom.

The speaker pointed out the great territorial expansion which took place soon after these events, and said because of the victories won four hundred millions who today live beneath the folds of the flag enjoy liberty of conscience and freedom to worship as their conscience dictates.

The Order stands for loyalty, fear to God, and love to the brotherhood. Its teachings are good, ennobling the lives of its members, and because of this it is a power for the right. That which makes a nation great is not the army or navy, the not in wealth of mine or forest or sea, or farm. It is in the lives of her people. Be true to the teachings of the Order the life will be right, and thereby you have added to that which makes a nation know and esteemed in the world. We are not called on to go on the field of battle and fight for our country, but we are called to live for it. This we can do by being true to the principles for which our fathers fought.

A Home-Made Automobile.

Fredericton has not only an amateur aeroplane builder but yesterday a home-made automobile appeared on the street. The new machine is the property and manufacture of a young man named Gough, who is employed as engineer at the Bijou moving picture theatre. The new auto is built on the same plan as the old tricycle only it has four wheels and besides the driver will carry another passenger. It does not run noiselessly by any means, but it gets over the ground at a pretty rapid rate of speed. Gleaner.

Woodstock Notes.

Woodstock, N. B., August 16.—On the motion of Councillor J. Rankine Brown, of Woodstock, the Carleton county council tonight voted to contribute $1,000 toward the relief of the Campbellton fire sufferers.

The following councillors were appointed by Warden Stevens as delegates to the convention of the Union of Municipalities to be held in Woodstock, it is thought next month: Williams, Lamont, Alex. Bell, Tompkins, Kinney.

Charles Wright, a restaurant keeper to-night gave a chicken supper to the members of Woodstock's baseball team to commemorate their recent victory over the Waterville (Me.) baseball team. An orchestra of six pieces from the Woodstock band furnished music.

An Unfortunate Response.

The problem of too many churches in a given locality is often a perplexing one. It is said that the churches in a certain village, on the opposite sides of the street, were so close that when the congregation in one church sang "Will There Be Any Stars in My Crown?" the congregation in the other church promptly responded, "No, Not One; No, Not One." Fortunately it is if the seeming contradiction is confined to the unintentional inharmonious responses in song.

In addition to these features Mademoiselle Bergerat, one of the most highest priced performers in the world, will perform her daring "Swing of Death" in a two-ton automobile in front of the grand stand. CAKES.

New England Coffee Cake.—Two cups brown-sugar, two cups New Orleans molasses, one cup butter and lard mixed, five cups flour, four eggs beaten separately, one cup cold coffee, two teaspoons cinnamon, two teaspoons cloves, two nutmegs grated, one-half pound raisins chopped, one cupful walnut meats chopped. Stir lard, sugar, eggs, and coffee together, then add the soda stirred with molasses, and spices last of all. Flour raisins and nuts in a moderate oven about one hour. This will make three small bread tins of cake.

Eggless Cake.—One cup of chopped nuts, one cup of sour milk, one cup sugar, one-half cup of butter, one teaspoon each of cinnamon, cloves, and soda, two cups flour, which must be dissolved in soda with milk; bake in a square cake tin.

Raisin Coffee Cake.—One and one-half tablespoons lard or butter. Three tablespoons of sugar. "Cream these." One egg, one cup sweet milk, one-quarter teaspoon salt, two cups flour, three teaspoons baking powder, one-half cup small raisins, put in good size pan, pour melted butter over top, sprinkle with sugar and cinnamon, and bake in moderate oven.

Surprise Cake.—Make a plain white cake of one cupful of sugar, one-half cupful of butter, two cups of flour sifted with two teaspoons of baking powder, and add as last the stiffly beaten whites of two eggs, one-half teaspoonful of vanilla. Bake in flat pan. In each square press a chocolate cream before frosting with the yolks of two eggs beaten and stiffened with powdered sugar and flavored with vanilla.

Devil Food Cake.—One and one-half cupful of granulated sugar, one-half cupful butter, creamed together. Yolks of four eggs and whites of two beaten well. Add to above one-quarter cupful of four milk, one-quarter teaspoonful of soda in the milk, three-quarters cupful of sweet milk, two cupfuls of flour sifted with one small teaspoonful of baking powder. Add to this two squares of melted chocolate. Bake in two square tins in a medium oven. Frosting: Boil one cupful of granulated sugar with six tablespoons of water until it threads. Beat the whites of two eggs to a stiff froth, pour the boiling syrup. Heat until thick enough to spread on cake. When this is cool melt two squares of chocolate and spread over the white frosting.

Hints on Baking.—If you find the cake is rising in a cone in the center you may be sure the oven is too hot. Never mix a cake until the oven is ready to receive it; it is likely to fall and be heavy. On adding citron to a cake shave it in thin slices, flour it and lay it between layers of the batter. When baking a cake try to have nothing else in the oven, then set the tin as near the centre of the bottom shelf as possible. Never leave a cake standing in the tin in which it is baked—it will make it heavy.

MEATS.

Spanish Beefsteak.—Four pounds steak off the round cut two inches thick. Stick a clove here and there, sprinkle with salt, pepper, and flour, place in good hot oven and pour boiling water over and in pan, enough to taste from time to time. Let this cook about one hour, then slice onions (cut half an inch thick) all over the steak, seasoning a little, and baste frequently. When onions are tender pour over a can of tomatoes. Do not use all the liquor of tomatoes. When done and meat is tender, slice cheese thin all over top and put in oven until cheese melts. Take out and remove meat to platter and make gravy, thickening with flour, and serve. This is enough for eight persons and if cooked properly is delicious.

Chicken's Liver with Bacon.—Clean livers, separate into six pieces, and sprinkle with salt and pepper. Wrap each piece separately in a thin slice of bacon and fasten with a small wooden skewer. Put into a hot frying pan and cook frequently and removing some of the fat if necessary.

Gypsy Stew.—Try this in your chafin dish: Three pounds of chopped veal, add just a little water and cook until tender, then add one-half pound of cheese cut fine; one cupful of English walnut meats; cut fine; dash of red pepper; one cupful of cream, and one cupful of milk; serve hot on buttered toast.

Boiled Tongue.—Boil a tongue until tender, peel, and put back into the liquor it was cooked in; season with salt and pepper. Fry a small onion in a slice of salt pork or bacon; thicken with a table-spoonful of flour; add to the tongue and let boil until quite tender. If the liquor is not thick enough, add a little more flour. Serve hot with the liquor poured over the tongue. Also good cold.

SUMMER OUTINGS.

Summer Traveler.—You can carry waists in a suit case with little crushing if you place one above another on a padded coat hanger. Lay them in with the width of the waists along the length of the suit case. Five or six waists can be carried in this way and when reaching your destination it is easy to lift out the hanger with the waists on. Warm Coffee for Outing.—A good way to keep coffee warm when going to the park, with lunch is to take an earthen jug, such as wines and liquors are sold in. Fill it with hot water, let it heat thoroughly, then empty water out. Pour in necessary amount of cream and fill with boiling coffee. Wrap jug in several thicknesses of cloth and it will keep nice and warm several hours.

CHEESE DISHES.

Rice and Cheese.—One teaspoonful of rice to four cupfuls of hot water. Boil rapidly for twenty minutes. On bottom of buttered baking dish put layer of bread crumbs, then a thick layer of rice and grated cheese, another of cheese. Finish with bread crumbs on top. Pour over all a cold mixture of one egg, one cupful of milk, two table-spoonfuls of melted butter, one table-spoonful of salt, one-fourth teaspoonful of dry mustard. Bake twenty minutes in a quick oven. This is delicious as a luncheon dish or as a substitute for potatoes with meat.

Cheese Balls.—Beat the whites of two eggs stiff. Have ready one-half cupful of finely grated cheese. Mix cheese and beaten eggs quickly, mold into balls with floured hands, and fry in hot fat. Serve while hot.

ASPARAGUS.

Novel Asparagus Dish.—Asparagus is of such great value to the human system that it should be served as frequently as possible. Cut about two dozen stalks of asparagus into inch length and boil tender; drain, pour over them a cupful of brown butter, stir until hot, pour into a baking dish, and break about six eggs on top; put a bit of butter on each; salt and pepper to taste, and place into an oven until the eggs are set.

Escalloped Asparagus.—Boil the asparagus until tender, cut into small pieces, put into a baking dish, and pour over it a sauce made by rubbing one table-spoonful of butter, one and one-half table-spoonfuls of flour, and pouring over it one pint of hot milk. Cook until like curd. Bake the asparagus and sauce half an hour.

POTATOES.

Potato Volcano.—Mash potatoes smoothly, season with salt, butter, and a little milk. Form (on a plate that can be put in the oven) into a conical shape, with a hollow in the center as large as a cup. For the filling use half a cupful of melted butter, four large spoonfuls of grated cheese, yolks of two eggs well beaten, and a little pepper and salt. Stir together thoroughly and pour into the crater of the volcano. Spread the sides of the crater with a thin coating of melted butter, sprinkle with cracker crumbs, bake in hot oven twenty minutes, and serve. This is an appetizing dish for lunch.

FRYING AND BOILING.

Frying.—Bacon, three to five minutes; chops, breaded, four to six minutes; cauliflower, eight to twelve minutes; croquettes, six minutes; fish balls, three to five minutes; fish slices, six to ten minutes; fish, small, five to eight minutes; oysters, five to eight minutes.

Boiling.—Peas, twenty minutes; potatoes, twenty to thirty minutes; potatoes, sweet, forty-five minutes; rice, steamed, one hour; turkey, three hours; veal, one to two hours; wheat, two hours.

CARE OF LAWN MOWER.

Lawn mowers are self-sharpening, and when they do not cut the grass properly, it is because the screws need setting, and not because the blades are dull. To make the lawn mower cut smoothly, adjust the screws on the side of the stationary knife or blade. Loosen the front screw and tighten the back screw, so that the front sharp edge of the stationary blade will be raised closer to the rotary blades. Then, if the lawn mower is still not sharp enough, also tighten the screws that fasten the rotary blades so that they will be lowered closer to the stationary blade. To illustrate, a pair of scissors whose screw is loose, will not cut, but tighten the screw, thereby bringing the blades together, and the scissors will cut again. Do not sharpen a lawn mower by filing the edges of blades, for if you do you will increase the space between the rotary blades and stationary blade, and your lawn mower will cut worse than before you tried to sharpen it. Although this hint will be new and valuable to men mostly, it is stated here because, by prolonging the life of a lawn mower, it is a household economy and housewives should welcome a hint that affects household expenses favorably.

THE QUEEN'S CHAMBERS.

THEY HAVE IN THEM HOSTS OF ART TREASURES.

Her Majesty Expects All Those Under Her to do Their Duty Always.

Her Majesty's private apartments at Buckingham Palace consists of a suite of seven rooms, known as the Louis room, the Boudoir, the Tapestry Chamber, the Dressing and Bedrooms, Writing room and Waiting room. Considerable changes were made in the private apartments in all the royal palaces when the King ascended the throne and the arrangements in the apartments, which are the subject of this article, are of especial interest, as they were all carried out under what was practically the direct supervision of the Queen.

The rooms are on the second floor of the palace below the apartments occupied by the ladies in waiting with which they are in telephone communication. The Tapestry room, which is really the library, is a very beautiful apartment.

THE BOOK SHELVES.

With which part of the walls are lived, contain many very valuable volumes, many of them being presents to the Queen from the immediate members of her family. An exquisite edition of Tennyson's poems is a present from the Prince of Wales. Shakespeare's works in twelve volumes was bestowed on her Majesty by the Duchess of Albany, and an early edition of Sir Walter Scott's novels was a recent gift from the Queen of Spain.

There is very little modern fiction to be found in the Queen's library, most of the books being German, French, and English classic works. A very interesting little volume in a birthday book containing the signatures of nearly every crowned head in Europe, beside those of many other distinguished persons. The book was given to the Queen many years ago by her father, whose signature was the first to be made in it.

There is also another book of autographs given to her Majesty by the Czar some years ago.

On one side of the Tapestry room is the Writing room, and on the other

THE QUEEN'S BOUDOIR.

The writing table in the former apartment is very large and covered with photographs of the Queen's most intimate friends and relatives. It is at this table that the Queen conducts all her correspondence when the court is in residence at the palace.

Her Majesty attends to her correspondence in a very businesslike manner. Every morning after ten o'clock, unless occupied by some other important engagement, the Queen works at this table for a couple of hours, dictating some letters to Miss Knollys, and answering others herself.

It is perhaps not generally known that every letter addressed to the Queen is brought under her Majesty's notice. Hundreds of letters are begging letters, which it would be quite impossible as well as inadvisable to take any notice of, but the Queen is advised of their receipt. Many a humble supplicant in real distress has, however, often had her appeal answered.

Most of the Queen's social engagements are arranged at this table, and the enormous number of them may be judged from the fact that a large number of them are settled three years in advance.

THE BOUDOIR.

On the other side of the Tapestry Room is not used very frequently by the Queen. It is here that the various daily arrangements of the Court are settled, not always, however, by Her Majesty in person, though occasionally the Queen receives some of the Court officials in the boudoir when Her Majesty has some particular directions to give. There is a book kept in this room in which a record of all these "Court instructions" are kept, so that no question can subsequently arise as to what Her Majesty's mutual instructions are.

Beyond the Boudoir is the Louis Room. That is the official name of it, but it is usually called the Sitting Room, and is one of the most beautiful apartments in any of the royal palaces.

It is full of interesting possessions, many of them being presents to Her Majesty from various members of the English and other Royal families. There is a porcelain elephant, modelled by the Empress of Russia, the fire screen given to Her Majesty by the women of Denmark bearing thousands of signatures, a silver flower vase of exquisite design and workmanship, which was a present from the late Empress Frederick, and many other ornaments far too numerous to mention.

THE WAITING ROOM.

is beyond the sitting room of which it is really a part. Guests bidden in the ordinary way to Buckingham Palace are of course always "commanded" to come, but this form of invitation is never issued to those whom it pleases Her Majesty to honor by an invitation to the private apartments. The Queen writes a simple note asking the recipients of this coveted form of invitation to come to Buckingham Palace at a certain hour, usually either to lunch or afternoon tea; but no reply is expected to this invitation, except the recipient is prevented by illness or other serious circumstances from accepting it, when of course an apology for not being able to do so must be sent.

Adjoining the boudoir are Her Majesty's bedroom and dressing room. In the centre of the latter stands a large jewel case where all the jewels which the Queen may require are ready for use at any moment. Of course only a comparatively small number of the Royal jewels are kept in this case, the great majority of them being carefully put away in safes.

In no court in Europe is there greater order and less extravagance than in the English Royal Palaces, and yet it is an acknowledged fact by Royal visitors to the English Court that no where is the splendor and dignity of a great monarchy more fittingly maintained.

ROYAL LADY ADMIRAL.

A Princess Who Controls a Steamship Line.

Several Royal ladies have had the honorary title of "Admiral" conferred upon them, and are privileged to wear a uniform denoting their rank. Princess Waldemar of Denmark is one of them, but she is the only lady in the world who could take full command of a battleship. This daughter-in-law of the Royal House of Denmark has an extraordinary passion for the sea, and manages anything that floats, from a sailing-yawl to a Dreadnought.

Her Royal Highness has actually organized and controls one of the biggest shipping companies in Denmark. She is so proud of her accomplishment in nautical matters that she has had a large anchor tattooed on her arm, to remind her friends of her connection with the Danish navy, while her own is attending the naval academy in order to fit himself for a career at sea. She has assisted them in their studies, and in so doing has made herself conversant in the whole art of navigation, and desired to see her own country taking a more prominent part in the world's shipping industry.

Denmark is quite a small country and does not require a large fleet. So this patriotic woman made up her mind to devote her attention to building up the nation's merchant marine. Using the influence of the Royal circle she consulted great financiers, bankers, business men, and those prominent in shipping circles. These kings of industry instructed her in the methods of forming a stock company and of securing capital, besides giving her advice on the starting and maintaining of a gigantic steamship line.

As soon as the plans were completed she started the business world a few years ago by publishing the prospectus of a company to operate a line of steamers between Scandinavia and various ports in the Far East.

The company was successfully launched, and soon became a prosperous concern. Branches have sprung up all over Europe, the headquarters being in the capital of Denmark. Every morning Her Royal Highness is present in her private office, and, with the assistance of a staff of shipping experts, controls one of the most important steamship lines in the world.

FOR A KING'S FUNERAL.

Some of the Items for Court Mourning When George I. Died.

One of the English magazines publishes an itemized account of the mourning bills when George I. died. The total cost of the carpets, hangings, cloth for mourning, and forms of warders, women of the guard, chapel children and the making of the same was about $25,000.

One of these items is a tailor's charge of more than $5 for making "a black coat for the Ratkiller." There were some attempts at economy, for there is a charge of $200 by one Thomas Hawgood, "embroiderer," for taking off the bullion badges from the laced coats and putting them on the mourning coats of 100 yeomen of the guard and forty warders of the Tower of London.

Among other things provided were 140 pairs of large black leather gloves for the yeomen of the guard and the warders of the Tower, ten pairs of black kid and twelve pairs of lambkin gloves for the children of the chapel, 140 pairs of large black rolling stockings for the yeomen of the guard and the warders of the Tower and black leather waistbelts and mourning laced swords for them; cost, $110 7s. 6d. The glass sconces in St. James's Palace were taken down and the branches and borders of the chandeliers were all lacquered black.

Some of the interesting items given in the Queen are:

For sixty-four yards of black three-quarter wide taffeta for sixteen pair of trumpets and four pairs of kettle drum banners, and making them for the four troops of Horse Guards, $20 18s. For thirty-one yards of the same taffeta for nine pair of trumpets and one pair of kettle drum banners, and making them for the Royal Regiment of Horse Guards, $23 8s. And for embroidering a black coat on the back and breast with his Majesty's letters and crowns and on the arm with rats and wheat-sheaf for the Ratkiller, $4 8s. 9d.

Anne Colthorpe, seamstress, for making thirty shirts, sixty pair of large sleeves, sixty plain bands, sixty pair of plain cuffs, and thirty pocket handkerchiefs for the ten children of the chapel, $4 9s. 1d. For thirty-two yards of black cloth to cover the communion tables, pulpits, reading desks and cushions for French and Lutheran chapels at St. James's, $19 4s. For fourteen and a half yards of superfine black cloth for a carpet for the communion table, pulpit cloth and cushions, and to cover two benches, two Bibles and two common prayer books, and two long cushions for the Lord's seat.

John Bell and partner, mercers, for seven yards of black velvet for a bag for the Crown, and twelve yards of black Mantua silk, to cover the table and Crown at the Parliament House, $12 10s., and for fifty-five yards of white satin to cover a bolster, pillow and mattress set, and eighty-five yards of white sarsenet for a pair of blankets for a white cloth bed at St. James's, $25 2s. 2d.

For two and a half yards of super-fine purple ingrain cloth for a stool and cushion for the Queen, and three cushions for the eldest Princesses in the Lutheran chapel, $2 15s.

INDIA'S ITINERANT BEGGARS.

Religious Fanatics Who Inflict Tortures on Themselves.

India is blessed—or perhaps cursed—with the largest congregation of itinerant beggars of any country in the world. These mendicants, or ascetics, as they are usually called, are in a sense religious fanatics, who inflict bodily tortures on themselves with the dual idea of performing certain religious functions and also of calling attention to themselves with the view to receiving alms from curious and devout passers-by. A man will remain suspended on a thin, taut wire, supported by two bamboo poles, for lengthy periods—often a fortnight on end. Below, on the ground, lies outspread the mat upon which he receives the contributions of the sympathetic crowd.

ELEVATOR FOR WHEAT.

LACK OF THEM IN EUROPEAN CITIES.

Organization Needed to Handle Shipments at Great Centres of Population.

London, England has no elevators, and never has had, although it buys more wheat than any other city. It has six million mouths to feed, so that the grain is devoured as fast as it arrives.

To give bread to London, writes Herbert N. Carron in Harper's Weekly, would take the entire crop of Indiana or Siberia. Neither are there any elevators of any importance in Paris, Berlin or Antwerp. Whatever wheat arrives at these cities is either hurried to the mill or reshipped.

Wheat is too precious in Europe to be restored for a year or two years, as may happen in Minnesota, Rotterdam has one elevator only and of moderate size. Neither Odessa nor Sulina has any of large proportions, for the reason that in Odessa the labor unions have an unconquerable prejudice against elevators, and in Sulina the grain is held only a short time and then forwarded elsewhere.

This Sulina, as a glance at the map of Europe will show, is the loneliest of all the wheat cities. It stands on a heap of gravel at the mouth of the Danube—an oasis of human life in a vast marshy wilderness.

HAVE NEVER SEEN RAILWAY.

The children born there have never seen a railway, but 1,400 ships leave the stone docks of Sulina every year laden with enough wheat to feed London, Paris and Berlin.

To find the exact reverse of Sulina, we must go to Buenos Ayres—the premier wheat city of South America and the gayest of them all. Built up at first by the cattle trade, and now depending mainly upon wheat, this superb city has now become the topmost pinnacle of South American luxury and refinement. It has several new elevators, erected by the railway companies.

ONE POUND OF GOLD.

For every 18,000 pounds of wheat that goes to the city there will go back to the farmer one pound of gold. For every loaf of bread upon a Londoner's table there will go a cent and a half to the man behind the reaper. And so the sale of every wheat crop means that the gold will come throbbing out to the arteries of business, like the blood from the heart, and on its way back and forth nourish the whole body of the nation.

More wheat and a more efficient organization of wheat agencies—that is the programme of the future. Already one unsuccessful effort has been made to hold an international wheat congress, and the second attempt may end more happily.

Now that the world has become so small that a cable despatch flashes completely around it in 12 minutes; now that there are 44 nations united by The Hague conference and 58 by the Postal Union; now that war has grown to be so expensive that cannon shot may cost as much as a college education and one battleship as much as a first-class university, it is quite probable that the march of co-operation will continue until there is a congress, and a central headquarters and tribunal, which will represent nothing less than an international fellow ship of the wheat.
