KLONDIKE NUGGET.

ANARCHISTS MUST GO.

The progress of anti-anarchist legislation which has been inaugurated by the government of the United States will be followed with much interest. In the measure now pending before congress it is proposed, if possible, to prevent persons of anarchistic leanings from landing at any American port.

In the case of criminals who are identified as anarchists, deportation may follow at the expiration of their term of sentence. For the protection of the president's life another bill has been introduced which makes any attempt to kill the president whether successful or not a crime punishable by death.

These two bills, which with some modifications, will undoubtedly be passed by the present congress, will be condemned by some people as tending toward unnecessary interference with personal liberty. The claim will be set up that freedom of individual speech and action is the one privilege above all others that is guaranteed by the constitution of the United States, and that such laws are now proposed are unwarranted, and contrary to the spirit of the constitution.

Such objections will come, however, from the identical class of criminals who it is hoped may be reached and controlled by the legislation in question. Law abiding citizens whose minds are normally constituted need have no fear or can offer no serious opposition to such legislation. The anarchist or anarchistic sympathizer is not entitled to the protection of any law. He must be classed with the rattlesnake or mad dog, both of which should be put out of existence whenever or wherever discovered.

The United States and Great Britain have been the places of refuge most largely sought by anarchist refugees. Their numerical strength in both countries is much greater than would, perhaps, be imagined. It is proposed hereafter that insofar as the former country is concerned it will no longer afford an asylum for such criminals.

This determination should prove a long stride in the direction of solving the problem. The anarchist breed cannot be completely extinguished without the co-operation of all the civilized powers, and the movement about to be inaugurated by the United States government, will probably be the beginning of an united effort having that end in view.

The incorporation ordinance passed its first reading yesterday. It is an extremely voluminous document, and intelligent comment as to its merits can not be made until the various provisions are closely scanned. The alternative proposal offered by the council, of a commission of three men to take the place of a mayor and board of aldermen, may prove more desirable, and undoubtedly would be less expensive, than a regularly constituted municipality. When the full text of the ordinance is made public and its terms become generally understood, it should not be difficult to decide between the two proposals. The main object to be accomplished is to secure a town government which will prove efficient as well as economical.

Two Red Roses.

There is an innate satisfaction in the possession of the genuine. On the other hand, there is a grateful sense of superiority in having got the better of some one in the palming off of the artificial. So it is really rather difficult to decide, oftentimes, whether it is more pleasing to exhibit the true or the spurious. As a matter of fact, the latter is of such skillful contrivance these days as to make it almost impossible of detection.

At a recent Saturday evening "at home," a function at which the ever present chafing dish plays an important part, the appearance of the hostess was admirably set off by the delicately tinted tea rose, fragrant, modest and bewitching, which peeped out from the artistically arranged coils of copper colored hair. Wherever the hostess moved, there moved masculine admiration and feminine envy. The rose, with its unassuming scent, was just the touch necessary to the success of the Grecian toilet.

Among the guests was a young matron of classic features and ravener hair. As it happened, she was the only one of the invited who wore a rose in her hair. A blood red specimen gleamed and shone in the folds of her dusky environment, and the woman was very good to look upon as she moved across the room. Others had carried bouquets in their hands, but she alone wore a rose in her hair. Yet she was not happy. She felt that the hostess had outstripped her in the matter of hair ornament. When admiring glances were turned her way, she heeded them not, because she imagined they were comparing glances and not signs of approval; but their casters were contrasting her unfavorably with the hostess, who wore the tea rose. And so, after a time, when the hour for going home came, the young matron was moved, in spite of herself, to concede to the hostess.

"Good night dear. And how charming you looked with that lovely rose in your hair." "Oh, I am so glad you liked it," said the other in an embarrassed sort of way. She hesitated a minute, glanced at the red rose on the head of her guest, and then said, "Of course, you know it is an imitation." "You don't say so!" exclaimed the caller.

"Yes, and I have been embarrassed all evening thinking how unnatural it must look beside your lovely red rose." "Oh," said the young woman, in a burst of unwonted frankness, "mine's artificial too."

And all the way home she felt better than she had felt during the evening. Debating Club Organized. The Dawson Literary and Debating Club held a very interesting business meeting last night in the class room of the Methodist church. The committee appointed at a previous meeting to draft a constitution made its report and presented a constitution to govern the workings of the society. After lively discussion and with a few amendments the constitution was adopted.

After the adoption of the constitution the following officers were elected: President, Mr. F. T. Congdon; vice president, Mr. George Edwards; secretary, Mr. J. H. Sparling; treasurer, Miss K. Freeman. The following were elected as an executive committee: Dr. J. N. E. Brown, W. R. Hamilton, J. R. Gray, Miss K. Edwards, Mr. Coleman.

Every alternate Friday evening was selected upon which to hold the meetings of the club and in all probabilities the lecture hall of the St. Andrew's church will be secured in which the meetings will hereafter be held. The next meeting will be held next Friday next, the 13th, at the lecture hall of St. Andrew's church, and a general musical and literary program will be given.

At It Again. Mr. J. L. Hall has reopened the Holborn cafe and is once more giving his friends the glad hand.

Stroller's Column.

The people on Hunker are of a social turn of mind and the result is that considerable time is devoted to the cultivation of social nature. Hunker, like all other rich creeks in the Klondike, has numerous road houses and the road house that does not give a dance every ten days or two weeks is looked upon with suspicion. In fact, a road house can give a dance on the least provocation. Any improvement, no matter how trivial, it is only a few pieces of fresh thinking, must be followed by a "grand opening." The truth of the whole matter is that a dance is patronized to the bar and bar business is "ready money" to a road house. There! The secret of road house dances is out. Hunker road house keepers are no exception to those of other creeks. They all have bars for which they pay a relentless and grasping government good money (all governments agree in that respect) and in order to make that money a "grand opening" must be of frequent occurrence. The Hunker people are in luck in that they have an orchestra that, if it should ever become lost, strayed or stolen, would be easily described as one is a white man and the other a negro. The former is a violinist while the latter can pick a banjo with the ease, grace and "fragrance" of a minstrel of the Billy West type. He can also sing Goo-Goo eyes. One night last week a "grand opening" was given on Hunker. Things are seldom opened with prayer, a corkscrew being generally employed. All the people were present on one of his pumps was bare and that it should be covered, so he started back alone, the partner reluctantly following. Carefully they retraced their steps looking closely but in naught could they find of the lost moccasin. Arriving at the scene of the late festivities the house was all dark, the proprietor having counted up his receipts and retired to pleasant dreams. He was aroused to assist in the search for the lost moccasin. He arose, lighted a lamp and after the others had been admitted, search in the bar room for the lost moccasin began but to no purpose. At last the young man chanced to glance down at the one foot that was encased in buckskin when he exclaimed:

HUNKER ROAD HOUSE "GRAND OPENING."

"Say, you fellows please excuse me for what (hic) trouble I have caused you, but (hic) I've found uzzer moccasin."

TOM CHISHOLM'S BROTHER JOE

either side, including some young men from Whiskey Hill. The name is not applied for the reason that there is ever any whiskey there for there is not. It is always drunk as soon as it gets there. At the dance in question were a number of young men from "Hook, Inoo elevation" and one of them, a three-hundred-cut-away youth, wore a pair of dancing pumps in other that he might "heel and toe and the way we go" with an ease and grace that would cause one lady to whisper to another "An't he a loolapulusa?" In order to protect his patent leathers from the rough places on the new government road, he wore a pair of the late census returns which say there are 20,000. The Stroller is convinced that not over two of every three persons were enumerated and if any one doubts the assertion let him ask of those he meets the question: "Were you interviewed by a census man?" If over two-thirds say they were, then will the Stroller retire from the position he holds. However, there is no doubt but that the enumerators searched most diligently for population, else how would 300 Esquimaux have been discovered? There is no doubt but that a lot of white trash was overlooked in the mad rush to find Esquimaux but as 300 of the latter were found, the fact that many whites were overlooked can be forgiven.

The heating arrangement in the hardware store of McLennan & McFeely is a fearful and wonderfully constructed contrivance which is supposed to be taken for a grain separator or a quart mill as it is to be suspected of being a stove. A lady in the store a few days ago mistook the contrivance for a washing machine and laid her hand on it. Then she found what it was there for.

It is a fact that brothers seldom write letters to each other. While they may be almost inseparable while growing up, when they attain to manhood and their paths diverge they rarely ever take either the time or trouble to communicate with each other by letter. This is not as it should be, but it is a fact all the same. Occasionally thoughts of boyhood's happy days when the two brothers were wont to break everything on the farm from wild colts down to cats to harness return, a flood of tender recollections of the brother now far away returns and on sudden impulse a letter is written to him; but these impulses are rare. By the last mail a large envelope came to the postoffice directed to Tom Chisholm. Imagine his delight on opening it to find that, besides a long letter, it contained a picture of his brother Joe who he had not seen for many years. The letter read:

Zoological Garden, Cincinnati, Ohio, November 2, 1901. "Dear Brother Tom, As I have just had my picture taken I enclose you one, also a few lines. Tom, there are but the two of us left and I am not very well. It was an unlucky day for us when they trapped us on our native island, Burneo. You were lucky to escape and go north while poor unfortunate me have been kept in captivity and exhibited all over the United States to admiring idiots who always say "He is cute, but my gracious, how homely he is!"

"Say, Tom, suppose you come back in disguise and perhaps I can escape us on our native island, Burneo. You can live in the trees and eat coconuts. Write and tell me what you think of my plan. How do you like your only brother's picture? Some folks say it flatters me. Others who remember you say we look very much alike. When you write send a cut out of your mug; also say what you think of the proposition to return to Burneo. "Your loving brother Joe."

George De Lion is something of a horse fancier, one of his chief ambitions being to own a stepper that will lay all over anything on the road when it comes to speed. In order to gratify this particular ambition De Lion began looking around for a horse one day lately. An evil spirit ran him up against Tom Kirkpatrick and before he could make good his escape Tom had sold him a horse that he warranted to have more speed than any other in the Yukon. In one respect Tom was probably right for as no one was ever able to get any speed out of the horse, he still has all he ever had. In fact, De Lion has found that the ...Show Us, Commissioner...

The project is on foot to incorporate the town of Dawson. A splendid idea, that; it sounds fine. But on second thought, what inducement is offered the people for the change. Can we, for instance, have a vote in the affair, or are we to be placed in the position of the Britisher in the Transvaal. Are the people who pay the principal part of the taxes of this territory to be allowed a vote in the municipal affairs. We understand, as the law now stands an alien, with certain property qualifications, has that right. Is it the intention of the Yukon council to change the law for the purpose of disfranchising the alien residents of this city? Commissioner, you will make a mistake if that policy is carried out. The best interests of this country can be better served by giving to the people more generous laws than in stultifying those which favor us.

THE STORY OF AN APACHE

Who Was Defiant at Age as a Young Apache. Adopted by an Army Officer. Acquired All the Vices of the Race.

The writer owes to Dick Huyl not exactly of grateful acknowledgment, but a story will demonstrate, by writing his biography, that he is a man who is not one else who knew him in Sunday school library. That kind of boy, Dick, the Indian, with all the vices of total depravity that Apache converts or wild men children together, Dick lived, fought and played for two years in the same outfit, constantly, and was captured by the devil-forged force in the desert, if only dropped down the neck road a live load, case of my first fit of by determined if I ever enough I would tell the world had a young Apache. ### THE STORY OF AN APACHE BOY

Who Was Defiant at Four Years of Age as a Young Lion.

Adopted by an Army Officer He Soon Acquired All the Vices of Soldier Life.

The writer owes to Dick Huyt a debt not exactly of gratitude, as the story will demonstrate, which she, in writing his biography, seeks to discharge. Dick Huyt's history will never be written by me nor by anyone else who knew him to adorn a Sunday school library. He was not that kind of boy. Dick was an Apache Indian, with all the characteristics of total depravity that the word Apache conveys or suggests. We were children together, Dick and I. He lived, fought and played together two years in the same army post. On one memorable occasion Dick, incited by the devil-for I firmly believe in the devil, if only for Apaches—dropped down the neck of my neck coat a live toad. It was the case of my first fit of hysterics, and he determined if I ever grew old enough I would tell the whole world how I would Apache could be. In 1872, if I remember rightly, General Crook had succeeded, after years of bloody war and the loss of hundreds of good men, in subduing most of the hands composing the Apache nation of New Mexico and Arizona. They had dwelt in the strongholds of mountains and desert, from which they frequently emerged to rob and murder all miners or emigrants that they could ambush, leaving nothing for the human mind to conceive of in the way of cruelty whenever a white man fell into their power.

At the reservation, although they were well fed and quite decently clothed, it was necessary to watch them constantly, and large bodies of troops were detailed for that purpose. Nevertheless, scarcely a week passed but a small squad of Apaches, usually led by some attractive squaw, would slip quietly past the guards and escape through the darkness into their beloved cañon plains and mountain barrens. Roll call nearly every morning developed these absences, and next day would come the news of rapine and horrors generally, favorite Apache mode of disposing of the unsuspecting freighter, miner or emigrant whose camp they had located in raiding was to tie the victim by the four limbs to stakes and then to build a fire on that point of his body designated in the old Apache almanacs as "virgo."

These seemed to be something particularly fascinating to the Apache mind in this form of torture. It gave the miners and papooses plenty of time to invent small torments of their own, as it were. The women and children emigrants—But enough of this to say that the absolute blood entertained by these Indians for the whites was fully reciprocated, especially by the soldiers. It was no easy matter to track and successfully follow the runaways through the cañons and mesquite thickets, over the barren deserts and desolate mountains that make up the topography of Arizona. But in that parched country water is only to be found at certain springs and water holes, between which days of travel often intervene, but which are equally well known to soldiers and to Indians.

So when the morning report showed to General Crook that so many warriors, squaws and papooses were missing the grim old warrior would make no sign of pursuit, but on the night following or perhaps the next one a squad of mounted men would file silently out of the reservation bearing orders to move as rapidly as possible to the water hole of Palo Pinto or to Agua Grande spring or to some other place where the presence of the precious fluid favored a camping place for the renegades. The troops were always positively instructed to bring back no prisoners, all matters of detail being left to the officers in command. On June morning there were reported missing 8 Indians and 12 squaws and papooses, including Wahmema, than whom a more depraved and cruel Indian never existed, even in Arizona.

Two nights afterwards a squad of the Twenty-third infantry, Crook's own regiment, under Lieutenant Huyt, a splendid young fellow who has since left the service, was sent out on a scout with the usual orders. No trace of the renegades was found, but a burned ranch and stage station and a cremated cowboy gave sufficient evidence of Indians at large. The next night, or rather just at dawn, after a long and fatiguing march, the scouts reached a natural rock basin at the foot of one of the steepest and most inaccessible knobs to be found in the desolate Arizona. This basin had often collected a supply of acid water, which, however, was drinkable enough in that country. A thin vapor of smoke from a nearby spent fire convinced the troopers that their night's march had not been in vain, and on creeping up as close as possible the hostiles were outlined against the rocks fast asleep.

The little squad was deftly deployed out so as to avoid missing a single shot and at the word of command fired, killing nearly every one of the Indians. The others jumped up, only to be cut down by the reserve fire. The only two unhurt were Wahmema and his 4-year-old papoose. Grasping the child, he sprang for the mountain side, scaling the rocks like a chamois and a shower of bullets, soon finishing his pursuers and getting out of range of their rifles. Halting on a shelf of rock, he set the child down and proceeded to indulge in every exhibition of contempt and derision that his imagination could invent to aggravate the discomfited troopers, who gashed their several sets of teeth in rage at the insults of the old heathen. They were relieved at last by the arrival of Lieutenant Huyt, who bore in his hand a new target rifle, received only the day before the scout started.

This wonderful gun was guaranteed to carry 1,000 yards with accuracy, and the lieutenant, who was one of the best fellows in the world in garrison, but quite cold hearted and bloodthirsty where Apaches were concerned, announced that while he was doubtful of his gun carrying near the Indian, yet he was going to try. The Apache, feeling secure against their cartridges, continued his taunts until Huyt, taking deliberate aim, with sights raised for 1,500 yards, fired. His aim was true and the gun all that is was boasted. The old savage plunged face forward over the ledge and crashed down the rocky mounds a side at the very feet of his slayer.

The attention of the soldiers was now directed to the papoose, the subject of this sketch. That interesting infant still calmly occupied the ledge and was evidently turning the situation over in his mind. The troopers, with Lieutenant Huyt at their head, slowly and painfully clambered up the rocks and finally approached the orphan, who, instead of squalling as a civilized Christian child would have done, commenced throwing stones at his pursuers, hitting Lieutenant Huyt squarely on the nose with a half pound rock and drawing blood copiously. He followed this success by other good throws, causing as nearly a panic as possible. At last, by flanking him, our Apache was knocked down by a blow from a saber and stunned. His capture was now easy, but the lieutenant's orders were to return no prisoners.

"What shall we do with the little devil?" asked one of the men. "Shoot him or throw him over the cliff after his father?" The "little devil" had regained consciousness by this time and deliberately set his teeth into the call of the soldier's leg. Lieutenant Huyt wiped his bloody nose and replied: "A baby who fights this way ought not to be killed in cold blood. By George, I'll take him back to San Carlos if it costs me my commission!"

A pap was put into the young one's mouth to prevent any more biting, and, with a soldier holding each hand, he was landed on the plain below. There he was placed on horseback, a larva tied to one foot, passed under the horse—and tied to the other, and thus the troopers returned to the reservation.

Lieutenant Huyt was a great favorite with General Crook, but he had disobeyed orders and confidently expected to be put under arrest. But the general had already heard something of the storm throwing affair and had enjoyed a hearty laugh over Huyt's broken nose. When the lieutenant in making his report reached the point where Wahmema was killed, the general interrupted him with, "By the way, I think you had better not let me know officially any more of this scout than you have already told." Thus glancing at the swollen nose he burst into a roar of laughter in which all the other officers joined.

The young Indian was confined in the armory until his first fright was overcome. The soldiers of Company A named him Dick Huyt and, fitting him out with a uniform fashioned from the lieutenant's old clothes, regularly adopted him into the service.

In less than a month the small recruit learned to express himself tolerably in English and in a very short time had accumulated all the accomplishments of tobacco chewing and profanity possessed by the soldiers. He also picked up a wonderful knowledge of bugle calls and evolutions, always turning out at roll call and taking his place at the extreme left of the company when in line.

When I first knew him, he had been under the refining influences of the United States service two years. If that Indian had improved in that time, I am very glad I did not know him before. He was not beautiful according to classic standards.

The Apaches fasten the heads of their lances between boards, and this, as much as anything else, served to render Dick unattractive to us children. Then he had such a predilection for carrying snakes in his pocket. The soldiers spoiled him, of course, and upheld him in every villainy he chose to perpetrate. When he shot the mules in an ambulance filled with women and children, causing a runaway and a smash up, one soldier thrashed him with a barrel stave and a dozen more gave him 5 cent pieces to comfort him. They alternately pounded and petted, but it was all one to him. He seldom laughed and never cried. He was an Apache.

I said he never cried. I will note an exception. Every Saturday afternoon the men took him out behind the quarters and gave him a bath. This process was very simple. They stripped off his clothing and turned the hose on him. On these occasions the shrieks of the little savage could be heard all over the post.

I have not seen Dick since I was 9 years old, but I like to think that he grew up and regularly enlisted in the old regiment and is now an honor to the service.—New York Tribune.

Cannibalism in Africa.

The cannibalism of the black continent known as the human Leopards—in the country near Sierra Leone, disclosed by the recent trial, brings forcibly before us the difference between the East African and the West African habits of eating human flesh. The Sherbro cannibals waylaid and killed their victims and afterward feasted on their flesh. The cannibalism of the east coast is of a very different kind. The flesh of the old people—the grandfather and grandmother of a family—is dried and mixed with condiments; and a portion of this is offered, with a dim sort of sacramental meaning, to travelers who become guests of the family. To refuse it would be a deadly insult. To accept it is a passport to the privileged position of a friend of the house. Many of our travelers in East Africa have eaten this sacramentally of the ancestors of some dark-skinned potentate.

The cannibalism of the west coast is as has just been seen, of a more horrible kind. The Sherbro's case seem to be connected with fetishism, the worst developments of which are peculiar to that country; but there is a hideous genuine appetite for fresh human flesh still existing among the negroes of West Africa. This cannibalism manifests itself in a refinement of gluttony which has its mild analogy in the tastes of Europeans. Young boys are brought from the dark interior, kept in pens, fattened on bananas, and finally killed and baked. To these Thyestean feasts come not only the savage chiefs of the interior, but also, it is whispered, black merchants from the coast. Men who appear at their places of business in broadcloth and tall hats, ape the manners of their white masters, are said to disappear annually into the interior, where, we are told, they might be seen in naked savagery, taking part in the banquets on plump boys, in which they delight. Be this as it may, somehow the native of the west coast and its hinterland is unlike the East or South African native in the deep-living savagery and the extraordinary facility for returning to it which are his leading and very unpleasant characteristics. The subject claims the attention of the anthropologist, and certainly suggests a curious reason for questioning the relationship of the black man and the ape or the gorilla, being that the race of monkeys seem to be singularly free from anything like cannibalism.—Saturday Review.

Two Mile Tract on Indian Closed to Another Entry.

A notice has been posted in the gold commissioner's office to the effect that a plan of the survey of the ground applied for by William Croteau for hydraulic ground has been filed from further placer mining entries. The concession lies on the right limit of Indian river and extends from a point one mile westerly and up stream from the mouth of Australia creek, thence up stream two miles and one mile in width.

The Meanest Man Medal.

The sudden shower had driven the people into doorways and under awnings for shelter.

A group had gathered in a covered alleyway between two sections of a big dry goods store, and one of the men was talking.

"I played a joke on the girls in my shop which I guess they found out on their way home last evening," he said. "You know, there is about a dozen of them."

"Yes."

"Well, they are the greatest gum chewsers you ever saw, and I got tired of seeing them wear their jaws. I had noticed that nearly every one of them had some particular place for sticking her gum, and just before quitting time yesterday afternoon I managed to go around and pick off the wads one by one, mix a little Scotch snuff with each and stick them all back in their place without being seen at it."

"Don't you suppose it made them sick?" asked one.

"Not sick enough to hurt, I guess, but I rather think it'll stop their."

"At this point an excited man forced his way into the center of the group."

"I'm mighty glad to see you, sir," he exclaimed. "I'm glad to hear you talk."

"You have the advantage of me."

"You bet I have! When it comes to a show down, I'm several points to the good, as far as you are concerned. For the last week or so I have been crawling around on my hands and knees, except when I have been standing up to kick myself. A man caught into his garbage box. He told me I was the meanest man in Chicago, and I guess I was. I felt 'tis it anyway. He gave me a medal on the strength of it, and I've carried it for a whole week, waiting and watching for a meaner man. Before I'd do such a thing as you've bragged of doing I'd drown myself in a sewer. I would, by Jove! You're the meanest man in Chicago. The medal's yours."

Hereupon he thrust inside the waistcoat of the other a flat, round piece of galvanized iron, elbowing his way out and went forth into the pelting rain with his head held well up.—Chicago Tribune.

Where Science Stumbles.

In a lecture on "The Progress and Tendency of Astronomy," delivered at Columbian university, Washington, Professor Simon Newcomb spoke of the determination of the exact motion of the solar system as one of the victories of the nineteenth century. It is determined that the solar system is moving forward in space 40,000 miles an hour, but when it came or whether it is going no one can tell.

Mr. Newcomb does not believe instruments will ever be discovered that will allow astronomers to prove that rational inhabitants exist on other planets. The only way in which they can judge will be by conditions of other planets which would make it probable or improbable that rational beings such as are on the earth can live there.

Wars may be inhabited, but astronomers have not been able to draw any evidence on that subject one way or the other. What changes may come to the earth, the solar system or the universe can only be matters of uncertain speculation. Only one theory can be counted upon; and that is that "all things must end."

STANDING ROOM ONLY

Every Seat in Auditorium Was Occupied Last Night.

For the first time in the history of Dawson money amounting to $150 was refused for seats at the Auditorium last night for the very good reason that every seat in the big play house was sold and occupied.

As the Nugget stated in its issue of Tuesday, the play this week, "Friends," as produced at the Auditorium, is the best ever seen in Dawson - good because produced by good people, star actors and actresses, and not barn stormers.

Everybody was more than pleased last night and many who were turned away then have secured tickets today for tonight's entertainment.
