Aviation—training—all expenses in connection with the general maintenance of the air force, including training personnel for civil air operations and provision of the necessary facilities therefor.

Civil air operations—flying operations for civil government departments in connection with aerial photographic surveys, forestry patrols, forestry and grain pests, transportation, etc., control of civil aviation; establishing aerodromes and airship bases; aeronautical engineering, etc.

Air mail routes—to provide for expenses in connection with establishing and maintaining air mail routes; preparation and lighting of intermediate landing fields, etc., $1,750,000.

Mr. SPENCER: How many men have been dismissed from the air force?

Hon. D. M. SUTHERLAND (Minister of National Defence): One hundred and seventy-eight.

Mr. SPENCER: Has it been possible to take any of them into other branches of the service?

Mr. SUTHERLAND: It has been possible in some cases. The government has done everything it can do, although it must be borne in mind that these men have really no greater claims than many others who have been let out of the service in other departments.

Mr. MALCOLM: Will the reduction in the force mean that civil aviators will be engaged to do what staff men formerly did?

Mr. SUTHERLAND: The work will to some extent fall into commercial aviation hands.

Item agreed to.

Government of the Northwest Territories—radio services—for the maintenance and operation of the Northwest Territories radio system —further amount required, $33,000.

Mr. MALCOLM: Why is this necessary?

Mr. SUTHERLAND: We operate the radio service in the Northwest Territories for the Department of the Interior. With regard to the extra item the Northern Exploration Company three or four years ago installed the following stations: Burnside, in the Arctic; Hunter bay, at the eastern end of Great Bear lake; Fort Reliance, at the eastern end of Great Slave lake; Stony rapids, at the eastern end of lake Athabasca; Baker lake, near Hudson bay. They have not operated those stations in the last couple of years, and they offered to sell them to the government at a very reduced rate. The apparatus is very good, it has been examined by our people, and it was thought advisable to buy it. That accounts for the $25,000. The balance is for opening up a station on Great Bear lake where this mining development has taken place. It was not in contemplation when the original estimate was prepared.

Mr. MALCOLM: Is it sending or receiving apparatus?

Mr. SUTHERLAND: Both.

Mr. ELLIOTT: Apparently this is a misstatement. The estimate says for maintenance and operation.

Mr. SUTHERLAND: That is improperly described.

Mr. POULIOT: If unemployment is still severe next winter, would the minister have any objection to giving to the unemployed some of the moth-eaten clothes in the armouries?

The CHAIRMAN: Order. The member must learn to conform to the rule. Speeches in committee of the whole must be strictly relevant to the item under discussion.

Mr. POULIOT: But the minister, I am sure, will answer my question.

The CHAIRMAN: Even if the minister consents to do so, the rules of the house must be observed.

Mr. SUTHERLAND: We have no moth-eaten clothes.

The CHAIRMAN: Order.

Mr. SUTHERLAND: We shall be very glad to do all we can to assist the unemployed. We have already given away a considerable amount of underwear.

Mr. POULIOT: Thank you.

Item agreed to.

Cadet services—to meet balance of commitments, $260,000.

Miss MACPHAIL: Why is this item introduced in the supplementaries when we were encouraged by the main estimates tc think there was a reduction?

Mr. SUTHERLAND: I am guilty. My intention was to try to get along with the former amount. I was unaware at the time that this vote is for the school year beginning the first of September last and ending in June. So we are committed for the whole amount now.

Miss MACPHAIL: It is not really an addition?

Mr. SUTHERLAND: Oh, no. The hon. member will recall it was $400,000 last year; it is $40,000 less with this supplementary.

Miss MACPHAIL: What does the minister propose doing next year,—leaving it as it is now?

Mr. SUTHERLAND: In all probability we will keep on about the same. It may be necessary to cut down to a certain extent, but in a general way we want to keep the movement going.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I protest against this expenditure. As the committee knows, some of us have been opposed to the cadet movement. We do not think it is a good thing to encourage the military spirit on the part of boys, as we believe this movement does. But at this particular time, when civil servants are being cut ten per cent, when large numbers of men are being laid off, when the unemployed are having a desperate time even to exist, and when a man died in Montreal the other day of poisoning from food taken from the dump, which is just one more example of the desperate straits to which men are reduced, it seems to me absurd that we should have in the supplementary estimates $260,000 more for cadet training in schools. Some of us have protested previously that we do not believe the Dominion government has any right to go into the educational field in this way; that it is a distinct invasion of provincial rights. I am aware that the provinces have consented to this arrangement. I am glad to think that in my own city, after much effort, we have managed to keep cadet training out of our public schools. We intend to keep on doing so, but in other places the officers do everything in their power to induce school boards to take it up. Quite often the boards are reluctant to do so, and many parents are strongly opposed to having their children receive cadet training, but it is done on the urgent solicitation of officers of the Department of National Defence.

We have brought up these points before, but I wish to do so again. In these particular circumstances and with the conditions that prevail to-day there seems no justification whatever for placing this amount in the supplementary estimates and keeping the vote where it was in previous years. In any case, if the arrangements are such that the minister is in honour bound to carry them forward this year, it seems to me that at least he should give the assurance to the house that there will be cuts as soon as this school year is over.

Mr. POULIOT: May I suggest to the minister that in these times of hardship this money might be used to buy shoes and clothing for the children of the unemployed who because of their lack of clothing are unable to attend school. I know that in many cities and towns in different parts of the country there are children who cannot go to school because they are not properly clothed, so I suggest that instead of encouraging this drum-beating we permit children to attend school with proper clothing. I am glad to support the timely suggestions of the hon. member for Southeast Grey and the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre. If the minister is unable to accept them, could he not give this money to institutions that are supported by private charity? There is such an institution in Montreal called La Maison Ignace Bourget, which was founded by a member of the press gallery and some of his friends to care for old men in that city. At present they are sheltering, feeding and clothing about three hundred people. It is an admirable work, and I believe we should give all we possibly can to the poor in order to help them through these hard times.

Miss MACPHAIL: I have said so often what I think about this cadet training that there is no need to go into it at any great length to-night. But I want to state once more that it is educationally unsound, because instead of developing a child it uses the child for an objective quite outside the child itself. I notice we have a new, outstanding authority for that view; I refer to Doctor A. S. Lamb, head of the McGill school of physical education, who has stated it many times, with much force, both in the press and on the public platform. For that reason I am against cadet training. My own belief is that if the instructors were not paid so much per head we would not hear very much about cadet training. I have come to the conclusion that boys do not like it; they prefer something that is joyous and free and that means something to themselves. It may be that on parade, when everything is shined up, they like the show, just as most people do, but I think boys rather hate cadet training day by day. They are not interested in it, and if it were not for the department urging them on the one side and the teachers urging them on the other—the department because it is trying to keep a military machine in some sort of readiness, and the teachers because they make money out of it—I do not think we would hear anything about cadets. It should not be carried on, no matter how well we could afford it, because it is bad from every point of view; but this year we cannot afford it. It is simply ridiculous to spend money in order to have small boys strutting up and down a yard with guns when other children, as hon. members have truly said, have not clothes to wear or food to eat to enable them to go to school.

To-day I had in my office a man of mature years, though still young, who six months ago completed a two year term in one of our penitentiaries. He came out with a determination to do the right thing, and he has made a great effort. During the six months he has been out he has kept himself strictly honest; he has not done anything he feared he might do. He has kept away from the old crowd; he has sought work and up to the present he has been able to keep himself, but now he is in desperate straits. He asked for a job, a job of any kind; he was only too willing to work, and he is just one man out of hundreds. We have scores of men lying all over our parks, some of them hardly more than boys. They are desperate and they will fill our criminal institutions if something is not done about it. We should use every cent we can get together to save those who can be saved instead of spending money on this sort of nonsense, though I am not sure that this is any worse than the yearly drill we are to have. I see we are going on with the non-permanent active milita this year. It is a terrible waste of money, and there is no justification for it under present conditions.

There is just one other point to which I should like to refer. Even from the military side, cadet training is useless. It does not make soldiers; it is simply a waste of money. If that amount of money were spent on real physical education, teaching the boys to play the game, as seems to have been so successful in English public schools, it would mean a great deal. I think we found during the great war that it took as long to train cadets as it took to train those who had never been cadets. From every point of view I protest against this vote. I was glad to hear the minister say, however, that this is not an actual increase, that the money has been practically spent already. It should be cut out altogether. I am wondering if we must go on forever training boys in military tactics just because Strathcona created a fund. It would have been better if he had taken it with him, if we must keep on forever doing this sort of thing. I do not like to think that because a trust was established years ago we must go on spending money in this way year after year. We will go on forever if we do not find some way of stopping it. We do need physical education. There is a great movement in that direction in our schools and universities, but that is quite a different thing from military drill.

Mr. BOUCHARD: I should like to ask the minister to let this item stand in order that my hon. friend from St. Johns-Iberville may speak to it.

Mr. SUTHERLAND: I do not think the hon. gentleman wants to speak to this item. I am allowing another one to stand, however. The item he is interested in is the permanent militia, which was passed the other day; but as the hon. gentleman will have noticed, there is an item under which he will be free to speak.

Mr. GARDINER: The minister stated that certain commitments had been made up to the end of June. How much of the present vote will it take to meet those commitments?

Mr. SUTHERLAND: Practically the whole of the vote.

Mr. GARDINER: Including the $100,000 in the ordinary estimates?

Mr. SUTHERLAND: Quite so.

Mr. GARDINER: That will meet the commitments up to the end of June?

Mr. SUTHERLAND: The school year.

Mr. GARDINER: No provision is being made for the beginning of the new school term.

Mr. SUTHERLAND: This is the way the vote has gone through for a number of years. It is for the present school year, and it has always passed this way.

Mr. GARDINER: In view of the conditions we are now passing through and the protests that have been made with regard to expenditures, will the minister take into consideration the possibility of notifying the school at the end of the present term that the department cannot commit itself to the support of cadet training until such time as the house gives its consent?

Mr. SUTHERLAND: I am not prepared to give such an undertaking.

Mr. HEAPS: On what ground will the school be justified in proceeding with arrangements for training in the next term unless they have some assurance that the government will come to their assistance?

Mr. SUTHERLAND: This is the way the vote has been administered for a number of years. This is for the current term.

Mr. HEAPS: Personally, I think there should be a settled policy. I was pleased to see the item reduced from $400,000 to $100,000, but evidently the minister is coming forward with a new proposal which means that the total item will be reduced by ten per cent as compared with last year. That is only a small cut in an item of this kind, which we could very well get along without. If the government, for reasons of economy or on any other ground, thought it desirable that the item should be reduced from $400,000 to $100,000, why have they changed theiir minds as they are now doing?

Mr. SUTHERLAND: I have acknowledged my responsibility in this matter. I must personally accept the responsibility for it.

Mr. DONNELLY: Unless the minister notifies the schools that there is likely to be no grant next year, they will commit themselves to the same expenditure again and the vote will continue. If he does not notify them, they will make their arrangements for next year as they have done before, and the result will be that we shall never have the vote reduced. It means that we are committed to the same vote year after year, and there is no way of reducing it.

Mr. LAVERGNE: I hope the vote will not be reduced, because, so far as Quebec is concerned, we have more cadets in that province than anywhere else in Canada, and this is a splendid educational movement. It forms the mind of the child, gives him an idea of discipline, and teaches him how to carry himself and how to answer his superiors. I am glad to say that so far as we are concerned the cadet movement is progressing year by year and doing great good to the children of the province, physically, mentally and morally.

Mr. POULIOT: I am strongly against that kind of discipline—

Mr. LAVERGNE: And my hon. friend is the best example of what he says.

Mr. POULIOT: Give me a chance to speak; you are not in the chair. I have the floor and it is my turn now. My hon. friend, I believe, is a colonel in the army, but I want to tell him we are not his soldiers. I am a friend of his, but I do not depend on him. Here we are all free, and the Prime Minister, when he sits in his place, is only the first among equals, as I have already said. We are all the same. That is why I take this opportunity to speak as a free lance. As regards that word "discipline," may I say that if I had been in Ottawa I should probably have attended the dinner given in honour of the Minister of Railways. I should likely have done so because I like him personally; I would have attended a dinner given, not to the Minister of Railways, but to a very fine man. And if I had been there and had heard the Prime Minister complimenting the hon. gentleman on his spirit of discipline, I would have protested, because that is no compliment to a member of the House of Commons. As I say, we are all free and must continue to exercise our freedom. I am in favour of gymnastics, because it is good for children; it helps them to grow up into healthy men and women. I believe in gymnastics on the old principle of mens sana in corpore sano; but I am strongly against instilling militaristic ideas into the minds of children. No doubt we must have respect for order, but there is a great difference between a proper understanding of order in the state and the militaristic idea of discipline. Although I am a free lance I am strongly in favour of social order; I believe in it just as firmly as my hon. friend from Montmagny does; but I am not at all strong for the idea of having children carry guns when they are only ten years of age. It is good for them to do their daily dozen, and children should go in for healthful sports, and it is a good deal cheaper, if you are to spend money on physical training for children, to buy them footballs and baseballs and things of that kind than to buy a lot of prizes and fancy uniforms and guns and trumpets and so on. Let the government buy them footballs and bats and baseballs. Let them go in for sports which will help to make them healthy. That will be just as good for them as this cadet training.

If I take up the time of the committee now it is only because I have been prevented before from doing so. And when a man, whoever he may be, says that a member of the House of Commons is retarding progress because he expresses his views, let me say to my hon. friend that I am here as a free man. I have never been a cadet in my life, and that is why I express myself freely in a free House of Commons in a free country. We must have absolute freedom. Had I been brought up a cadet, perhaps I should not now say what I am saying, for fear of being unpleasant to someone. But as a free man, I speak freely. That is all I have to say at present.

Miss MACPHAIL: We have been told many times in previous years by ministers of national defence that there was no compulsion in this matter, that there was no such thing as compulsory military training in the schools. This year we have seen a good deal in the press about three youths who were expelled from the Windsor Technical School because they would not take cadet training. If that is not compulsion, I should be happy to have the minister explain what it is.

Mr. SUTHERLAND: The three young men in question were over eighteen years of age, and therefore they did not come under the cadet movement, which is limited to eighteen. They were working with the cadets, and evidently the Windsor school board had some regulations; but the government had absolutely nothing to do with them.

Mr. HEAPS: How is this item made up?

Mr. SUTHERLAND: It is made up of the pay to cadet instructors, also—

Mr. HEAPS: How much do the cadet instructors receive out of this sum?

Mr. SUTHERLAND: The round figures are as follows:

Cadet instructors, $42,000; military clerks, $5,000; stenographers, $14,000; physical training instructors, $42,000; cadet signallers, $1,700; instructional allowance, $184,000; transport of district cadet officers, $11,000; transport of physical training instructors, $8,000; cadet instructors' courses, $22,000; freight and cartage, $2,000; rifles, ammunition and equipment, $2,000; postage, stationery and telephones, $2,800; Miscellaneous, $300; grant to the Dominion of Canada Rifle Association, $1,000.

Mr. GARDINER: Does this vote provide for all the salaries paid to the instructors, or are they supplemented by the school boards?

Mr. SUTHERLAND: It costs the school boards considerably more. This is given in the way of a grant to instructors who fulfil certain qualifications and take certain courses. In most of the collegiates the instructor carries on some other work and this grant is made for his cadet duties.

Mr. HEAPS: Do the cadets receive any uniforms at the expense of the government?

Mr. SUTHERLAND: Up until last year there was a uniform grant, but that has been cut out.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): The minister brought down his main estimates of $100,000, which showed a decrease of $300,000 over last year. I am quite sure it was not the intention of the minister to deceive the committee or the country with those main estimates; I am sure he believed that $100,000 was all that was required, but is he prepared to suggest that $100,000 should be ample for next year? The minister thought that $100,000 would be sufficient for this year, and we accept his explanation that the supplementary amount of $260,000 was unexpected. But I suggest that he make it expected next year in so far as a reduction is concerned. If the minister wants to save the country and relieve unemployment to the extent of $260,000 he has the means at hand. Does he want to take that course?

Mr. SUTHERLAND: I am very much in favour of this movement, but it had to give way to pressure from other things. I am quite convinced that it cannot get along on $100,000, but just what it will require will have to be considered by the treasury board and the council.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): In view of the general circumstances now existing throughout the country does the minister not think he is hurting himself, his cause and his government by continuing to vote this amount of money? There is not a man or woman in the country acquainted with the actual conditions but who would praise the minister if he eliminated this vote during the present economic depression. It is quite true that it is not a great amount but it looks pretty big to the unemployed and to those who are trying to serve the unemployed and steady them during this time of stress. The voting of $360,000 for the drilling of little boys in schools is not the thing to do during times like these. I am opposed to this vote in both good and bad times, but in view of the present economic conditions I think it should be eliminated.

Mr. SUTHERLAND: Of course the hon. gentleman must realize that there are two sides to this question. Many people throughout Canada have a different idea from his. These grants are not being forced on the school boards; if they do not want them they do not have to take them. Since the main estimates were brought down I have had many representations from people all over the country protesting against the reduction. This is not a military organization; the physical training is what justifies it. The discipline entailed is a most excellent thing for young people at a time like this. Discipline and physical training are the very essence of the cadet corps, not militarism.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Perhaps it was because of the protests that the minister included $260,000 in the supplementaries.

Mr. SUTHERLAND: No.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): It was just a mistake on the minister's part?

Mr. SUTHERLAND: Oh, no.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Was it an underestimate?

Mr. SUTHERLAND: Yes, an underestimate on my part.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): In view of the fact that some $84,000 is for salaries of personnel and the rest for travelling expenses, and so on, I am not surprised that at a time like this the drill instructors, lecturers and military gentlemen do not want to be deprived of their little perquisites. I should have been surprised had the minister not received protests, but I am surprised at his unwillingness to tell these people that in times like this when children are starving they should be willing to forego their perquisites. I attended a public school in the old country where we were given excellent physical training by a sergeant-major of the British regular army, but he did not train us with guns, he used Swedish drills. He trained us in a gymnasium properly equipped with the necessary apparatus to build up such health and strength as our physical structure would permit. We did not have this silly gun drilling, this standing at arms, this saluting the sergeant-major and all the rest of that rot against which resentment is developing at the present time. The minister is not helping his cause or his government by bringing forward this vote this year.

Mr. DONNELLY: I rise again to protest against this vote. I realize, as does the minister, that physical training and discipline are of great value to children, but there are other things of more value at a time like this. First things should come first. We realize this when we visit districts, as I have during the past winter, and find little villages with their three and four roomed schools closed and the children forced to run on the streets. It is very hard to go back to those people and justify a vote like this being granted to schools for physical training when other children cannot get the first principles of education.

[Mr. Sutherland.]

When the primary schools in certain districts are being closed, it is difficult for one to justify a vote of $260,000 for cadet training. If you could have the schools open and have this cadet course going on as well, that would be all right, but these are strenuous times and we are in a period of depression, so that I think we might well curtail some of these activities.

Mr. SPENCER: The minister says he is more or less obligated to put this extra amount into the estimates. If that is so, probably he cannot get away from it just now, but he refuses to give consideration to the question of notifying the schools that they cannot expect $360,000 or any part of that amount another year. The government in their wisdom have seen fit to cut down the estimates in many ways. They have cut out some $200,000 in provincial grants which were being used in an endeavour to eliminate certain social diseases. They have eliminated a small grant of $20,000 to the Canadian Social Hygiene Council, an organization that has done invaluable work throughout Canada in helping to keep our people healthy. If it is necessary to cut out $220,000 in these two bodies the work of which was doing an enormous amount of good—and I have no doubt the public will suffer because grants have been cut out—surely we can see our way to notifying the schools that in future years this amount for cadet training will be reduced, if for no other reason than that the amount of money thus saved will be turned into the two grants that have been reduced as I have stated, so as to enable us to cope with conditions that face the public from time to time.

Item agreed to.

Mr. SUTHERLAND: There is one item I am not calling. The ex-Minister of National Defence has asked that there should be some discussion with regard to aviation, and I have no objection that a discussion take place on that other item. I had not intended to call it to-night. If the hon. gentleman wants to discuss it, with the consent of the committee I have no objection to his discussing aviation on it.

Mr. RALSTON: I was going to take only a few minutes. Would the minister give to the committee a brief explanation of how he intends to apportion this lump sum of $1,750,000, which is now being voted instead of the $5,442,000, between the three services, that is, the training service, civil air operations and air mail routes?

The CHAIRMAN: What is the item?

Mr. RALSTON: Item 89.

The CHAIRMAN: But there is nothing before the committee.

Mr. RALSTON: The minister was good enough to say that he would revert to it.

The CHAIRMAN: What item shall I call?

Mr. SUTHERLAND: Item 344, but I do not want it passed to-night.

National Defence — general — miscellaneous— to authorize refund to the widow of the late Sergeant-Major Henry Hinde of his contributions to the militia pension fund, $919.32.

Mr. RALSTON: The minister has bracketed the whole three items in one lump appropriation of $1,750,000, whereas last year it was divided into $2,266,000 for training; $2,776,000 for civil air operations and $400,000 for air mail routes. How does he propose to divide up the lump sum which is being voted this year, and what work is proposed to be done under the three items?

Mr. SUTHERLAND: Civil air operations are washed out altogether, so far as this appropriation is concerned. An amount of $1,555,000 will go to aviation proper and $195,000 to civil aviation.

Mr. RALSTON: Does my hon. friend, when speaking of civil aviation, mean air mail routes, the third item in estimate No. 89?

Mr. SUTHERLAND: This year we have $77,000 under the air mail heading, which is largely used for maintenance.

Mr. RALSTON: Do I take it that the amount of $1,555,000 is on account of the training item, that is the first item?

Mr. SUTHERLAND: Yes.

Mr. RALSTON: And nothing for civil air operations?

Mr. SUTHERLAND: No.

Mr. RALSTON: And $77,000 for the air mail routes?

Mr. SUTHERLAND: Yes.

Mr. RALSTON: That still leaves about $200,000?

Mr. SUTHERLAND: No; control of civil aviation, $64,500; St. Hubert aerodrome, $22,500; grants to clubs and schools of aviation, $31,000.

Mr. RALSTON: Do I take it there is about $200,000 in toto under that item?

Mr. SUTHERLAND: The civil aviation grant, $195,000, that is including air mail routes, $77,000.

Mr. RALSTON: For the purposes of this division, $195,000 comes under air mail routes?

Mr. SUTHERLAND: Not civil government aviation, but civil aviation such as the control of air mail routes, air ports and grants to aeroplane clubs.

Mr. RALSTON: But this does not contain any vote in specific terms for civil aviation; the amount of practically $200,000 comes under this item of air mail routes and analogous services, that is all the services which are furnished by the controller of aviation.

Mr. SUTHERLAND: Quite so.

Mr. RALSTON: And there is nothing for civil air operations.

Mr. SUTHERLAND: Nothing whatever.

Mr. RALSTON: Then that item can be disregarded in discussing the appropriation.

Mr. SUTHERLAND: Quite so.

Mr. RALSTON: Are no civil air operations being carried on, for instance, for the payment of Indian treaty money; for the fisheries patrol service; for the Deparment of Agriculture; for transportation on account of the Department of Mines? Is the department carrying on none of those services at all?

Mr. SUTHERLAND: It is possible some slight service will be done, for instance for the Indian department, on the understanding the out-of-pocket expenses will come from the appropriation of the Department of the Interior. Of course we have the men and the equipment, but we have not the money to carry out the service. In some such cases, where they supply the money for the out-of-pocket expenses, something like that may be done.

Mr. RALSTON: The minister has no plans for that at all?

Mr. SUTHERLAND: No; except that if the Department of Interior say: We want something there and we will give you the oil and gas, the department will carry out the service.

Mr. RALSTON: But the men under that were paid out of the ordinary civil aviation vote and not out of training.

Mr. SUTHERLAND: They will have to be taken out of the training vote. They are all paid out of the one vote.

Mr. RALSTON: But that was not the case in the past.

Mr. SUTHERLAND: No, but they are all in the one vote now.

Mr. RALSTON: Under this item of $1,555,000 which I understand is for training, how many men and how many officers will be trained?

Mr. SUTHERLAND: There are 103 officers and 606 men in the air force at the present time.

Mr. RALSTON: How many will be trained at Borden and how many at Trenton?

Mr. SUTHERLAND: I am not just sure about that, but I have the figures somewhere, if the hon. member will wait a minute or two. Of course there are a great many more at Borden than at Trenton.

Mr. RALSTON: If my hon. friend will give me the proportions I shall be satisfied.

Mr. SUTHERLAND: At headquarters there are 16 officers and 46 men; at Borden 17 officers and 207 men; at Winnipeg air station 11 officers and 100 men and at Trenton 15 officers and 38 men.

Mr. RALSTON: Is my hon. friend not going to use the men at the Winnipeg air station for civil aviation work?

Mr. SUTHERLAND: If there is any work to be done in the north country, undoubtedly they are the ones who would do it.

Mr. RALSTON: I am referring to mining work particularly. All hon. members are interested in the development of the north country and undoubtedly aviation could be used to great advantage in that connection. Does not the minister believe it is desirable to use the air force for that purpose?

Mr. SUTHERLAND: Most of the preliminary work has been done up there. The routes have been well surveyed and photo graphs have been taken which will take some time to develop. The service will not suffer, if it does not go on this year.

Mr. RALSTON: What will the minister do with the 100 men at Winnipeg, if they are not put at work of that kind? What will these men be doing? Are they not enlisted?

Mr. SUTHERLAND: Yes. They have to be kept somewhere, that is a certainty. I take it the hon. gentleman does not wish us to let out any more men. It may be that those men will be moved around gradually; some may go to Trenton; there will be some at Vancouver. They will be on hand to do what there is to be done.

[Mr. Sutherland.]

Mr. RALSTON: I do not want the minister to lay off any more men. I protested before about the large number who were let go and the manner in which they were discharged. I feel however that in the present instance there is an arbitrary cut of $1,750,000 I know the minister is having difficulty; I do not think for one minute that he cut his own vote. I submit to the minister, however, and I think all hon. members will agree, that the idea of slashing the vote in this manner, without any regard to the work to be done, was wrong. Although the force may not have been kept at full strength, at the same time the trained men could have been used for useful work not only in the Department of National Defence but in the other departments.

While year after year I brought before this committee, and supported, a cadet vote, I say that if there had to be a cut it would have been better to cut that vote than to drop, as in the present instance, 78 officers and 100 men, half of whom were returned soldiers and married. I do not know whether he has satisfied himself, but the minister has not given me a satisfactory explanation for the dropping of those men, the resulting tremendous dislocation in the air service, and the set back which this service, of which Canada was so proud, received by reason of the fact that these men were let go.

The minister now finds himself in the position where he cannot carry on civil aviation work at all. He is training a few men at Borden, a few at Trenton, and 100 men in Winnipeg are apparently doing nothing. As I understand him they are simply waiting to give service to the department, if any opportunity presents itself.

Then, $77,000 will not go very far in connection with air mail routes. I think at this time a word should be said about the routes that were developed whereby through the use of the air force and the men connected with it, it was made possible to provide communication with the outlying districts. The air force were the pioneers in that work. Again in the more settled areas they surveyed the routes, established landing fields and perfected a system of which Canada was proud. I think the Canadian people believe a great mistake is now being made when they see that because we are going through a period of depression this fine service is being completely demoralized. On what routes does the minister intend to spend the $77,000?

Mr. SUTHERLAND: That amount is very largely for maintenance. The stations throughout the west have to be maintained, and a certain amount of money is necessary for that purpose. Those stations were not laid up until the first of April, the beginning of this fiscal year, and it takes a good deal of money to get them settled down for a rest. The machinery has to be put into grease.

Mr. RALSTON: Is there any air mail route which will be used this year?

Mr. SUTHERLAND: No lighted mail.

Mr. RALSTON: No lighted air mail route? Is there any air mail route on which government services are to be used?

Mr. SUTHERLAND: Government services are to be used from Rimouski to Montreal.

Mr. RALSTON: Is there any survey being made on the St. John to Montreal route ?

Mr. SUTHERLAND: No. That was well surveyed and fully completed last year. Let the item stand, then.

The CHAIRMAN: Item stands.

Mr. POULIOT: Is the minister through for to-night—because I wish to be nice to him. He has been nice to me, and I do not wish to prevent him finishing his estimates.

Mr. SUTHERLAND: We will let it stand.

Mr. POULIOT: The minister is not going on?

Mr. SUTHERLAND: I have finished, with the exception of this vote.

Mr. POULIOT: What time is it?

The CHAIRMAN: I cannot see the clock.

Mr. POULIOT: I believe it is 11.30, and I ask for the adjournment of the house. We were supposed to adjourn at eleven o'clock and I now ask for the adjournment.

Mr. STEVENS: My hon. friend has overlooked the motion passed suspending the rules for yesterday and to-day.

Mr. NEILL: That was on the understanding that we were not to sit on Saturday. The decision has been made however to sit on Saturday.

Mr. MALCOLM: It will not be Saturday for at least half an hour.

The CHAIRMAN: The hon. member is quite right.

DEPARTMENT OF FISHERIES

Salaries and disbursements of fishery officers and guardians, fisheries patrol and fisheries protection services, $1,022,000.

Mr. RALSTON: This item, Mr. Chairman, is as good as any to permit me to refer the Minister of Fisheries to the discussion that he and I have had during the last two weeks, particularly with regard to the lobster season in the western end of Nova Scotia. Possibly the committee will remember that last winter from December first to January fifteenth a special lobster fishing season was granted to the fishermen at the western end of Nova Scotia instead of unemployment relief. Hon. members can hardly realize what it means to be pulling lobster traps in open boats in December and January weather. Some of them fished from Seal island, eighteen miles out in the Atlantic ocean, and hon. members can imagine what that involved during that inclement season of the year. But in return for that concession they were penalized; their regular season which runs from March first to May thirty-first was cut by fifteen days. I objected to it at the time on the ground that it was not fair to make those men pay for their own unemployment relief. It simply meant they were being given an opportunity to get enough food for themselves and families, but this relief was charged back to them by cutting off two weeks from their spring season. They got something like eleven thousand hundredweight of lobsters, probably one-fourth or one-fifth of the regular catch, and owing to the stormy weather they lost quite a bit of their gear. Then in March they had to fit out again. It was probably one of the worst March months in many years, and several of the men hardly took a lobster during that month. Representations began to be made to me early in April for the restoration of the season to the end of May. These I forwarded to the minister, and he gave them consideration, but he advised me that nothing could be done until the first of May, by which time the returns would come in showing what kind of season the fishermen had had. The return disclosed that counting the winter season and the two months up to May first, they had caught something like 24,000 or 25,000 hundredweight, when the normal catch would be from 40,000 to 50,000 hundredweight or perhaps more. It was represented to the minister that these men had had a very hard time, having lost a great deal of their gear, and were just beginning to pay expenses when they had to cease fishing. Finally after a good deal of discussion the minister extended the season until May twentieth; putting it the other way, he took only ten days off the spring season instead of fifteen as he planned when he gave the men their relief season last December. The minister objected to restoring the full season further, stating that representations had come to him that the price would go down if the request of the men were granted. Now I am informed that the lobster fishing is just really beginning, and if these men had ten days more during which to fish they would be able to make perhaps between $100 and $200 as a result of their total lobster fishing season. At the present time they hope they may be able to pay expenses up to May 20; that is all. I am told that the price has gone up five cents in the last three or four days of the season, just at the time when the minister was advised that the price would go down if the men were allowed to fish. I submit that these fishermen have not been given a fair deal. I know the minister has considered the matter carefully and that representations have been made to him by fishermen in the eastern section of the province against extending the season. But I contend that these men in western Nova Scotia were entitled to their own season, that they were not asking any special consideration. On behalf of the fishermen of the western section of Nova Scotia I protest most strongly against the way in which this matter has been handled. There has been talk about preserving the lobster fisheries, and that we would lose all our lobsters if these men were allowed to fish. As I told the minister the other night, I have a newspaper clipping in my office which indicates that away back in 1895 it was predicted that there would be no more lobsters around Cape Sable island, yet they have been fishing lobsters there ever since. The lobster crop has been up and down, and the theories that have been advanced about the depletion of the lobster have not been borne out. These men should be given a chance to live, and the regulations should be relaxed for their benefit. Again I protest as vigorously as I know how against the treatment of these men. The department has given all the other fishermen their full season, but these men have been cut off simply because of the fact that they had a relief season in December.

Hon. ALFRED DURANLEAU (Acting Minister of Fisheries): I am sorry the hon. member for Antigonish-Guysborough is not in his seat, so that I might call on him to answer my hon. friend. He is aware that all the members from the eastern and northern parts of the province are strongly opposed to the extension of the season from the fifteenth to the end of May. As he has just said, the usual lobster fishing season in the western end of Nova Scotia runs from March first to the thirty-first of May. Last fall on account of a petition for a fall fishing season, we decided to authorize this from December first to January fifteenth, and as an offset close fishing this spring on May fifteenth instead of the end of the month. Unfortunately March, as stated by my hon. friend, was so stormy that a very small catch was made. The April catch has been reasonably good. We received petitions from the eastern and northern fishing areas asking us not to extend the season from the fifteenth to the end of May. According to our figures the catch this year has been as good as if not better than in previous years.

Mr. RALSTON: I know the minister wants to be fair, and I am sure he will acknowledge that the catch has been fair only if you count the catch taken in the special relief season. The catch in the regular season was only about half the normal catch.

Mr. DURANLEAU: That is so, but they had their catches during December and January, and there were many reasons why the season should not be extended for too long a period. In dealing with this matter we must take into consideration two things. One is the effect an extension of the season will have on the future of the fisheries. My hon. friend knows very well that we have to protect the fisheries and that is why, when the winter season is extended to include December and January, the spring season cannot be extended also. I am told that in 1921 the season in western Nova Scotia was extended, with the result that the fisheries were so badly depleted that conditions did not become reasonably normal until 1925. These are the facts.

The other question to be considered is the effect an extension will have on the other areas. The western area ships all its lobsters nine inches or more in length to United States markets. The live lobster business is the most paying branch of the industry on the different parts of the coast where it is carried on. In southeastern Nova Scotia the season this year opened on the 16th, and in the whole gulf of St. Lawrence division and down through the straits of Canso, to and including the most of Richmond county, the season opened about a week later. Each of these districts ships large quantities of live lobsters to Boston, as my hon. friend knows, and the market conditions there are so bad that, with large supplies coming, the prices are likely to fall to such an extent that the fishermen will not make anything. We had requests some time ago for the extension of the season to May 31, but at the same time we had representations from Boston dealers and from the eastern and northern parts of the fisheries to the effect that prices in Boston would fall if this were done. In March, when western Nova Scotia was the only area shipping and the catches were very light, prices in Boston were from $40 to $50 per crate. Last week, when my hon. friend came to my office, with fairly large shipments going in from both eastern and western Nova Scotia, the price fell to $19, which does not make it a very paying proposition, and it was felt that the price would fall as low as $15. The Boston dealers are all counselling against an extension, as they say that because of economic conditions the market this year cannot absorb large quantities of lobsters. We are told that if these are shipped the prices are bound to fall to very low levels. One of the largest shippers of the gulf division who is now in Boston wired about two weeks ago saying it would be wholly unfair to the gulf division to extend the season in western Nova Scotia.

These facts are well known to my hon. friend, but even though everyone in northern and eastern sections protested we extended the season by about five days. I understood that every one was satisfied; we received no protests following that extension. Of course there was some protest from the eastern fishermen, but I understood that the western people were satisfied. I know my hon. friend is pleading the case of the fishermen of his constituency, but we must take into consideration also the interests of other parts of eastern Canada.

Mr. RHODES: Perhaps my hon. friend would permit me to say a word, because I understand it is the intention that we adjourn immediately.

Mr. RALSTON: I should like a word before we do adjourn.

Mr. RHODES: So far as I am concerned that will be quite satisfactory, but I think the hon. gentleman should have the full facts before him. I think the minister has made a very complete answer, but at that time I was in charge of this department and have knowledge of the facts. My experience, which goes back for perhaps thirty years, has taught me one thing: I have never known a period in any area when there was not an agitation, with some special reason assigned, for an extension or enlargement of the lobster fishing season. You can take that as axiomatic. So when I was approached with the request that this winter season be extended, let me say that one of the arguments they used in support of the request was that it would assist in the relief of unemployment, though that was by no means their strongest point. They wanted to share during a longer period of the year in the profitable Boston market. Having had the experience of which I have spoken, I said I would consider their request upon one condition, and that was that they should consent to a shortening of the summer season. So Mr. Cowie of the department was sent by me, as minister, to the province of Nova Scotia. He conferred with the fishing interests concerned, and in consideration of the extension of the winter season they agreed unanimously not to ask for an enlargement of the summer season.

Mr. RALSTON: Who agreed on behalf of the fishermen?

Mr. RHODES: I do not for one moment assert that Mr. Cowie saw each individual fisherman along the shore.

Mr. RALSTON: But who, on behalf of the fishermen of western Nova Scotia, made that agreement?

Mr. RHODES: I do not propose to be put through a catechism as to whether it was John Jones or William Smith, but I do say that I took pains to send Mr. Cowie to that section of the country, and he conferred with groups of fishermen and with those who were identified with the industry to a sufficient extent to get a proper expression of opinion representative of the views of the fishermen in the areas concernnd. They agreed that they would not ask for an extension.

I say I was at pains to have that course taken, because I knew very well that if they secured this extra six weeks during the winter season they would come along this summer and ask for an extension covering the same weeks as have obtained hitherto. Now, if you please, whatever the reason may be, here they are, and I am not finding fault with my hon. friend for pleading the cause of the fishermen. They want to have their cake and eat it. I say that the acting minister is to be commended, because of the special conditions obtaining, for extending the season for five days, but in doing that I think he went as far as he could be expected to go in the circumstances. We must remember that we must have regard for the interests of the fishermen not only in this particular area but throughout the whole of the maritime provinces. All these men are shipping to the one market, and the seasons must be rotated so the advantage will be divided equally among the lobster fishermen along the various parts of the shore.

I hope my hon. friend the acting minister will forgive me for having taken up this time, but because of the knowledge I had of the incident I thought I should advise my hon. friend who I am sure wants the whole story.

The CHAIRMAN: It is moved that the committee rise and report progress.

Mr. RALSTON: I am in the hands of the committee, but surely I might say a word first.

Mr. BENNETT: We promised to rise at a reasonable time. The shorthand staff of this house is a little weary, and I had intended to move that the committee rise at 11.45. I think perhaps under the circumstances the hon. gentleman will realize that we cannot finish this item to-night, and in view of the work that has been done by the shorthand staff I think the committee had better rise.

Mr. RALSTON: I could finish in three minutes.

Mr. BENNETT: But could the item be finished?

Mr. RALSTON: I want to say to my hon. friend the former Minister of Fisheries that I do not know who was seen by his representative down there. I only know this, that the representations came to me very directly that there had been no agreement of any kind with regard to the six weeks' season, and I do not think that my hon. friend should really talk about an agreement under circumstances of this kind. The circumstances were these. The men needed something to see them through the winter, for they had had a very much more difficult time than usual. My hon. friend knows that the price of ground fish was very low and the market poor. These men had to have unemployment relief, and the government simply said to them, "You can go out and fish lobsters." They were allowed to go out and fish for six weeks, and now the minister says that there was a bargain whereby these men, under these conditions, were going to be precluded from asking, not for an extension, but merely for the regular season. Both the minister and the ex-minister have used the term extension. No one suggests an extension. The ex-minister declares that it had frequently been the practice of these men to request an extension, but I point out to him that this year all they are asking for is the regular season. I submit, therefore, that my hon. friend cannot talk about an agreement.

In the second place, with regard to the other people affected, may I ask how it is that this year my hon. friends happen to be so particular about the other people who are affected when every other year the season has been the same and there has been no suggestion of cutting ten days off the season in western Nova Scotia in order to accommodate someone else either on the north shore or in the east. This year ten days are cut off because, we are told, somebody else is going to be injured. As I said to the minister the other night, are you going to cut off ten days merely because someone else does not like the season? Of course the competitors in other sections would like to see the season shortened as much as possible. But the point is that the seasons are prescribed by order in council and have been for some time, and they do overlap. Now the packers and the Boston dealers saw their chance this year and they said, "We are not going to have an overlapping season. Ten days are cut off the fellows in western Nova Scotia and we will see to it that these ten days are kept off." That is not much of an argument, that someone else in some other part of the province wanted to see these men continue to be deprived of the ten days.

Thirdly, with regard to conservation. The Minister of Finance and I do not know a great deal about lobsters, although we were both born near the gulf shore. But I want to say to him—I think he will agree with me—that the lobster fishery has been going on there for a long time and it has taken more than ten days' fishing to destroy the industry. I think that all this solicitude about the conservation of lobsters down there at this particular time could well be left to the fishermen themselves, to the people who, after all, have to make their living out of the business. I do not think that we need be so anxious to do for them what they can do far better for themselves.

As to the price, the minister has not answered what I have said. According to a letter I have received from a director of the Maritime Fisheries Federation, the price has gone up—not down—five cents per pound in the last five days. That is in the face of all the representations which my hon. friend had from the Boston dealers, and I say to him again that the Boston dealers had better be left out of it and the fishermen given a chance for their lives, particularly at this time. I make this representation because letters have come to me with regard to the matter. If the minister has not yet received any complaint, he will get my letter in the morning. One point more; I ask my hon. friend the ex-Minister of Fisheries: suppose there had been an agreement, even if there had been a signed bond that they would not ask for their regular season, what has he to say about the situation when we find the month of March practically a total blank? I have two letters, both written on March 29. I quote an extract from the first:

> Times are hard; the lobstermen have not been able to even set their traps yet, owing to the gales which have prevailed here since the first of March.

From the second letter I quote the following:

> The men here have only a few traps out, and as it is awful rough to-day, would imagine that very few of the traps will be left.

I submit, therefore, that the men were justified in asking that the minister maintain the season for the ten days. Questions of conservation, price and other people's views do not enter into the situation where not only the rights but the very living of the lobstermen of western Nova Scotia are concerned.

Progress reported.

On motion of Mr. Bennett the house adjourned at 11.55 p.m.

Saturday, May 21, 1932

The house met at eleven o'clock.

UNEMPLOYMENT AND FARM RELIEF

Hon. W. A. GORDON (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I desire to lay upon the table of the house order in council No. 1172 with respect to an advance to be made to the Saskatchewan Relief Commission.

MONTREAL HARBOUR COMMISSION

Hon. ALFRED DURANLEAU (Minister of Marine) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 98, to amend the Montreal Harbour Commissioners' Act, 1894.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Explain.

Mr. DURANLEAU: The purpose of this proposed legislation is to vest in the crown all the properties of the Montreal harbour, not only those within the limits of the harbour but also those outside. Under 4 and 5, George V, chapter 42, all the properties of the harbour within its limits are vested in the crown. Harbour development in the last decade has obliged the harbour commissioners to extend their facilities beyond the official limits; for instance, the extension of elevator No. 3 which was built in 1928 is outside the boundaries of the harbour. We think it is an anomaly that the harbour facilities outside the boundaries should not be vested in the crown as the other properties are.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Do the boundaries include both shores of the St. Lawrence river?

Mr. DURANLEAU: We have not many facilities on the south shore; they are mostly on the north shore in Montreal.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

SOLDIER SETTLEMENT ACT

Hon. W. A. GORDON (Acting Minister of Immigration and Colonization) with unanimous consent moved that the house go into committee to consider the following proposed resolution:

> That the Soldier Settlement Act be amended to provide for the transfer to the province or municipality of any land which for two years preceding such transfer has not been the subject of a contract of sale; to authorize the director of soldier settlement to pay rates, taxes and assessments on lands not under contract of sale; and to enable the department to convey areas greater in extent than five acres for the purposes specified in section 29 of the act.

He said: His Excellency the Governor General having been made acquainted with the subject matter of this resolution recommends it to the favourable consideration of the house.

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee, Mr. LaVergne in the chair.

Mr. GORDON: Mr. Chairman, the purpose of this resolution is to enable the governor in council or the director of soldier settlement, as the case may be, to dispose of lands presently in the name of the director of soldier settlement which are unoccupied and vacant by transferring them to the provinces where the lands are in an unorganized territory, and where they are located in organized territory to transfer them, if deemed advisable, to the municipalities.

The question of vacant dominion lands has caused a good deal of difficulty throughout Canada, the municipalities having no power to assess them, and the director of soldier settlement having no legal right to pay the taxes. Fortunately the number of locations is decreasing each year, but it has been suggested by the director that this power should be vested in him, particularly as the provinces at the present time are endeavouring to place settlers from the urban centres upon the land.

This amendment to the act will facilitate such work.

Mr. ELLIOTT: Is this limited to vacant lands? It would not appear so from the resolution.

Mr. GORDON: It deals with lands that are not under a contract of sale, but have come back to the director.

Mr. SPEAKMAN: Will these lands be transferred without cost to the provinces in lieu of arrears of taxation?

Mr. GORDON: There may be tracts of land which will be turned over to the provinces for a consideration, but I think in the majority of cases the transfer to the provinces or to the municipalities will be for little or no consideration.

Mr. BOWMAN: But I presume only upon the request of the provinces or the municipalities?

Mr. GORDON: Yes.

Mr. REID: I commend the minister for the introduction of this resolution. It has been long sought in British Columbia with respect to the payment of taxes. I notice the concluding lines of the resolution read:

—and to enable the department to convey areas greater in extent than five acres—

And so on. In many of the municipalities in the lower Fraser valley the acreage is 4·9 —five acres with the road allowance taken off. There are many areas of that size in that section, and I should like to know if all lands will be included, no matter how small in area?

Mr. GORDON: The act empowers the director to sell portions of land up to five acres, but it has been found that in many cases it is desirable to sell a larger piece of land out of a location. The act is designed to vest the director with that authority.

Mr. REID: But with regard to the payment of taxes, all areas will be included irrespective of size?

Mr. GORDON: Yes.

Mr. SPEAKMAN: I assume from the wording of the resolution that the director is to be given discretion whether he will pay the taxes and still carry the land, or turn it over to the province or the municipality to be dealt with.

Mr. GORDON: That is the intention.

Mr. SANDERSON: If I am not out of order, Mr. Chairman, I would ask the minister if he has the information for me in regard to the 4,165 men who last year were put on the land in Ontario. I would remind him that this information was promised to me on April 22 last, then again on May 3, then again on May 11, but so far I have not received it. What progress if any, is he making in getting this information?

Mr. GORDON: Following the requests made by the hon. member, some time ago I asked the officers of the department to prepare a list of those placed upon farms segregated by counties. As I have explained already, the placing of people upon the land was not kept track of by counties, but by districts. This morning I received a partial list which I think will cover the majority of cases distributed by counties throughout Ontario. I do not think it would be desirable to lay upon the table a list of the names of those who were so placed. I think the reason for not doing this is obvious. Many of these men were working for small salaries, some for larger; there are men who had occupied different positions in life before going on farms with a desire to look after themselves. During the course of the day I shall give to the hon. member the list by counties, as it has been prepared, but I do not think the names of the individuals should be disclosed. With respect to those placed by the railway companies, I communicated with the companies and I shall be glad either to lay upon the table or show to the hon. member the reply I received. The companies do not keep track of the names by counties and they did not think it desirable to put their staffs to work to prepare this information.

Mr. SANDERSON: On May 11 the minister stated that it would not be possible for him to give me a list by counties, and I said I would not press that point if he would give me as much information as he had on the matter. The minister has stated that he has a back to the land policy and on April 22 he stated that during the last calendar or fiscal year he had placed 4,165 persons back on the land in the province of Ontario. Since that time I think I have been very patient in regard to the information promised to me by the minister on April 22. He now tells me this morning that he has not the names and he does not think it would be fair to give them. I cannot see why he should not give the names of those placed back on the land in the province of Ontario during the past year. I should prefer if the minister would be frank and candid with me and tell me that he does not want to supply the information which he has volunteered to give not once, not twice but three times. Since April 22 he has been stating that he is getting this information for me. I do not like this process of stalling—I hope that is not unparliamentary—because I think any hon. member of this house is entitled to the information. Will the minister give me what information he has obtained after having his officials work on this matter since April 22? It is a simple request and the minister should tell me frankly either that he does not want to give me the information or that he has not the information. I am inclined to think that he has not got the information he said he had on April 22.

Mr. GORDON: Mr. Chairman, I resent the last statement made by the hon. member. I do not want to get into any acrimonious discussion with the hon. member on this matter, but I think it is obvious that it would not be in the public interest to give the names of people who heretofore have occupied probably prominent positions in urban life and who of their own volition—perhaps prompted by the efforts of our department—have gone on to the land in inferior and obscure positions. I do not propose to lay these names on the table of the house but I would be glad to show them to the sceptical hon. member. The information was not kept by counties but I have a list showing the distribution by counties and I shall be very glad to give it to the hon. member during the course of the day.

The CHAIRMAN: Shall the resolution carry?

Mr. SANDERSON: It is not carried yet.

Mr. CHAPLIN: Why not see the list?

Mr. SANDERSON: When I want the hon. member for Lincoln (Mr. Chaplin) to give me any advice, I will ask for it.

Mr. CHAPLIN: The hon. member needs a lot.

Mr. SANDERSON: When I do seek advice I will seek it from someone in whom I have confidence, and I do not think I have confidence in the hon. member for Lincoln.

Mr. CHAPLIN: The hon. member will never have confidence in anyone.

The CHAIRMAN: I think hon. members should come back to the resolution before the chair.

Mr. SANDERSON: The minister stated he resented my remarks. I am very sorry if he does, but I have no apology to tender. Since April 22 I have been seeking for information and the minister has not been frank with me. He has not been candid and has been stalling and bluffing along since April 22.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

The CHAIRMAN: The hon. member is too old a parliamentarian not to know that that is not parliamentary.

Mr. SANDERSON: The minister has referred to me as being sceptical. I really think he has been bluffing.

The CHAIRMAN: Order.

Mr. STEVENS: That is out of order.

Mr. SANDERSON: If the minister expects me to do what he suggested, to go down to his office and make out a list, I am afraid I must disappoint him. He promised to give me the information I asked for and I do not think he has any intention of giving it to me.

Mr. GARDINER: During the discussion which has just taken place between the minister and the hon. member for South Perth (Mr. Sanderson) the minister made a remark which I think should not be allowed to pass unnoticed. For some time this house has been regaled with an outline of the efforts of the department to get people back on the land. The hon. member asked the minister for the names of those who had gone back to the land in certain counties and the minister replied that he would not like to give the names because of the fact that many people from the urban centres who had occupied good positions had gone back to the land to inferior positions. I do not think that that statement should pass unchallenged because if the policy of the government is to put people back on the land, surely it cannot expect the people to go back to inferior positions.

Mr. BRADETTE: Apparently this resolution is intended to help the municipalities in the organized and unorganized districts to collect taxation. Undeeded land in the province of Ontario, land which has reverted to the province or to the crown has never paid taxes to the school sections in the unorganized districts or to the municipalities that are organized. The province never paid taxes either to school sections in unorganized districts or in organized municipalities. This is an anomaly from which we have suffered for many years, particularly in northern Ontario—I do not know about southern Ontario. Under this legislation, with respect to any lands that may revert to the province, will the province see that the taxes are paid to the school sections and also to the municipalities?

Mr. GORDON: This house has no jurisdiction whatever over lands that may revert to the provinces. This legislation refers only to lands that presently stand in the name of the director of soldier settlement. I am very well acquainted with the difficulty the hon. member refers to, and it is a difficulty, particularly in those sections of Canada and in northern Ontario where lands are alienated from the crown, subsequently reverting to the crown after the organization of school sections and the other paraphernalia of municipal government. Unfortunately we have no authority to deal with matters of that kind under this legislation.

Mr. CAYLEY: Will this enable the municipalities to collect back taxes?

Mr. GORDON: No.

Mr. VALLANCE: With regard to insurance placed by the soldier settlement board on soldiers' property, the policy of the late government, and, I think, of this government until quite recently, was that any member of an insurance company who was a returned man should have the preference in placing insurance with that company. It seems that the policy has been changed. Has the matter been brought to the attention of the minister? In the city of Saskatoon there are some firms with whom the soldier settlement board has been placing insurance right up until quite recently, and now they are denied the right of this business which heretofore has been theirs. Will the minister give some explanation, if there is one, of the situation in Saskatoon at the present time with reference to insurance?

Mr. GORDON: It would be difficult for me to answer that question without having had some notice that I was going to be interrogated in that regard. Wherever there are available returned soldiers in the insurance business, I think it would be highly desirable that they should be preferred in the placing of fire insurance policies. I do know of one case where in 1926, I think, the insurance was taken away from a firm composed of returned soldiers and given to another firm who were not returned men That is only one illustration, however. It would be impossible for me to cover the whole field without having had notice that the question would be asked. If the hon. member would like to see the list of insurance agents with whom policies are placed, I should be glad to place it at his disposal.

Mr. VALLANCE: I would suggest that the minister investigate the situation in Saskatoon.

[Mr. Bradette.]

Mr. DONNELLY: What is the policy in regard to the payment by the government of taxes on land that has been sold to soldiers, the taxes not being paid either by the department or by the soldiers? Schools have been built and telephone lines constructed, and debentures have been issued and the lands all assessed. Some of the soldiers are still living on these lands and the taxes are not being paid. What is the government's policy in that regard?

Mr. GORDON: As the hon. member knows, lands held by the crown in the right of the province or of the dominion are not subject to municipal taxation. The policy of the department with respect to the payment of taxes can probably be best put in this way. Under the terms of the legislation as it now stands, with respect to land occupied in the manner defined by the act, the director of soldier settlement, in his judgment, has the right to pay and as a matter of fact in a large number of cases does pay, these taxes from time to time. The taxes on other lands are in somewhat difficult position, and as will be observed, the resolution now before the committee will, in a measure, remedy the situation that has existed heretofore. The hon. member probably knows that an arrangement was entered into about April 1, 1930, whereby taxes were paid on all land. The legality of that course was questioned at the time by the Department of Justice and this legislation will, in a measure, correct the situation, giving to the director those powers that will be indicated in the bill when it comes down. This bill was the subject of a number of conferences between the soldiers' representatives and the provinces and municipalities, and it is with the desire to assist throughout Canada—not in any one province—those municipalities that find themselves in the position indicated by the hon. member, that this legislation is proposed.

Mr. SPEAKMAN: I wish to ask the minister two questions, one with respect to the position of civilian settlers under the board and the other with reference to certain rental leases on the third crop share basis. That would come more properly under the estimates when they are before the house, and I assume that I shall have the opportunity then to bring the matter up.

Resolution reported, read the second time and concurred in. Mr. Gordon thereupon moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 100 to amend the Soldier Settlement Act.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

SUPPLY

DEPARTMENT OF FISHERIES

The house in committee of supply, Mr. LaVergne in the chair.

Department of Fisheries—salaries and disbursements of fishery officers and guardians, fisheries patrol and fisheries protection services, $1,022,000.

Mr. NEILL: This vote, which is a very large one and, indeed, the largest one in fisheries estimates, reflects the activities of the department or what might be called the active efforts towards conservation of the industry, the work actually done in the field as compared with the overhead expenses of the clerical staff. I am glad to see that the cut in this estimate has been less than that in many others, and while on account of the increasing demand made by the growing necessities of the industry, we regret to see this item cut at all, we realize we must make sacrifices in this branch along with others of the government. We have been told very often, and quite properly so, by the Prime Minister how under present economic conditions expenses must be cut and cut to a very great extent. We see that recorded in the slashing of the estimates by many millions of dollars. Some of us perhaps think the slashing has gone to the point where it has ceased to be economical and has become almost wasteful inasmuch as a penny saved is sometimes a pound lost later on. But we must recognize the fact that where economy can be practised with any regard for efficiency, it must be done.

I wish to say a few words by way of suggesting a method whereby the minister in this case can make a very considerable saving in expenditure without, I think, lessening in the least the efficiency of the service to be carried out; in fact, I think it would increase the efficiency of the service. I refer to the expenditures in connection with the Vancouver office of the Department of Fisheries. I am comparing this with the Nova Scotia office, and I think the comparison is a good one. Conditions are not exactly similar, but the activities are very much the same. In Nova Scotia they have five district supervisors; in British Columbia, while technically they have only three, let us say they have four. In Nova Scotia the number of inspectors is thirty-three, while in British Columbia it is thirty-two, but I notice that the expenditure for the thirty-two is very much less than for the thirty-three in Nova Scotia. This bears out what I have always maintained, namely that the inspectors in British Columbia, taking into consideration the work and responsibility involved, are underpaid. As regards the special guardians, they are not enumerated in the Auditor General's report, but the amount expended on them is given and we can gauge by the amount expended some idea of the work carried on. In Nova Scotia in the last year of which the Auditor General's report has record, there was spent for special guardians $56,669, and in British Columbia only $28,714, or just about one-half. So the situation is this: Nova Scotia has more supervisors, more inspectors and apparently double the number of special guardians, if we gauge it by the expenditure on them. That represents the work done on the ground where we get dollar value for every dollar expended, money actually spent in the work of an official in the district.

The situation is very different when we come to the cost of the clerical end of the office. In Nova Scotia the number on the staff is fourteen, in British Columbia it is twenty-four, or an increase of 70 per cent. In Nova Scotia the cost of the staff is $15,717, and in British Columbia it is $31,509, or an increase of 106 per cent, showing that in the Vancouver office they are paying not only more people but higher salaries than in the Nova Scotia office. Then there are a couple of odd items under the heads of "disbursements" and "various"; they apply to both districts. The disbursements, being what the name would indicate, that is odd payments, amount in Nova Scotia to $3,099, while in British Columbia they are more than double, or $6,491. In the case of "various," which again indicates the nature of the expenditure, the amount spent in Nova Scotia was $3,327 and in British Columbia, $12,448, or nearly four times as much, making the total cost in Nova Scotia of the clerical staff at the head office, $22,143, and in British Columbia, $50,448, or something like 140 per cent greater.

By analyzing the figures in the Auditor General's report, because that is where I get my information, we find that the increased cost in British Columbia is due to three things: first, a much bigger salary paid to the chief supervisor; second, lavish expenditure on those items of "disbursements" and "various," and, third, too large a staff, or at least many more than in Nova Scotia. Let us compare the total costs of the work on the ground. The three items I have enumerated, namely, district supervisors, inspectors and guardians cost in Nova Scotia a grand total of $152,782, and in the expenditure of that sum they spent clerically $22,143. In British Columbia the total expenditure on the items of district supervisors, inspectors and guardians is only $117,360; but they expended, in overseeing that expenditure, $50,448. Therefore, British Columbia spent on actual work nearly one-third less than that spent in Nova Scotia while it cost twice as much to take care of the spending. Let me put this in another way. In Nova Scotia each dollar spent in the office means an expenditure of $6.89 in the field. In British Columbia each dollar spent in the office means an expenditure of only $2.30 in the field. Note the difference. Let me put it on a percentage basis. In Nova Scotia on a field expenditure of, in round figures, $153,000, it cost 14 per cent additional to spend that sum, not 14 per cent of that expenditure, but 14 per cent more. In British Columbia, on a field expenditure of $117,000, it cost 43 per cent more to spend it. There is a great disparity between that and 14 per cent.

Take a line of expenditure very often criticized, and quite unjustly, namely, the pension department of the government; it is often said this branch is over-run with red tape officials. But its expenditure in administering the enormous amount spent on hospitals and so forth runs only to 3·607 per cent.

I wish to ask the minister and the committee: What are we getting for this expenditure of $50,000 on the Vancouver office? I can tell the minister one thing, and that is we are not getting $50,000 worth of results. A great deal of this money is spent in red tape. This is the procedure: let us begin at the very bottom. There is a fishery guardian out in the district seeing that there is no poaching over perhaps one biggish river, if it is in an isolated place, or if there are two or three creeks or small rivers close enough so that he can get around them, then he may have charge of half a dozen of those little rivers or creeks. If anything goes wrong or he wants further authority, he reports to the district inspector who has from ten to thirty guardians under him covering an area of thirty to fifty square miles. Then the district inspector reports to the district supervisor. There are three or four of them at strategic points in the province. He reports to the division supervisor in Vancouver, at this office the cost of which I am criticizing, and in turn the supervisor reports to Ottawa, where there are two heads, two competent men, one for the east and one for the west. They in turn report to the deputy, and presumably the deputy reports to the minister. I may say just here that these men who are called eastern and western heads are thoroughly familiar with conditions in the east and west; they have been over almost every mile of the territory. The deputy minister also has a good working knowledge of the different areas and different matters involved. Then when the decision is given by the minister, this same process is slowly and painfully reversed, and finally it drifts back to the man in the field. The process is cumbersome and tends to produce delay, and in fishery matters which are often a question of hours, delay produces inefficiency.

My suggestion is that we wipe out the Vancouver office and save about $35,000. I said that the cost was $50,000, but I realize that we could not save that whole amount. Some of these expenses would have to be carried on; for instance, telegrams would have to be paid for, and presumably a little more clerical help would be needed here, and I would suggest that we pay better salaries to these district inspectors, who are greatly underpaid. A few years ago I knew of one of these men, who had a great deal of responsibility, who was not getting a salary as large as that paid the engineer working under him. These men must have sound judgment, and sometimes they are subject to extreme temptation. I do not suggest that this is the case now, but many years ago I recall that one of these men gave a decision permitting some person to do such and such a thing for three days. And then he disappeared for three days so that the head office could not get at him, and I believe it was made well worth his while to disappear for that time. This is a fine body of men and they are not being paid enough for the responsibilities they must carry. We could pay these men better salaries and still save a great deal of money in connection with that office. We would still have the fisheries guardian reporting to the district inspector, who would report to the district supervisor. These three men are familiar with local conditions, and their opinions would be sent direct to the division head here in Ottawa, who is also familiar with those conditions and who would forward them to the deputy. Surely that is enough, three men in British Columbia and two in Ottawa familiar with the problems which may arise in that area.

We hear a great deal about economy, and as I have said some of it is unwise. Here is an opportunity to save money and at the same time promote efficiency. The business men—and I am talking principally about the canner, by which I mean more than the man who just cans fish; I refer also to the man who buys, sells or packs fish—wants three things particularly from the department. First he wants efficiency, then he wants speed and in the third place he wants economy, though he is not so keen on that because the cost does not come directly out of his own pocket. Efficiency and speed are very material to him, and here is an opportunity to improve both, at the same time effecting economy to the extent of something like $35,000. The minister is here in a dual capacity; he is also Minister of Marine. Perhaps if we saved this $35,000 he would not have to cut by ten per cent the men drawing the miserable salary of $65 a month on marine boats. Let us economize in the right places, and then we will not have to scrimp ten per cent from a married man getting only $65 a month.

I should like to make the suggestion that we save the cost of this office. Why is it necessary in British Columbia to spend this $50,000 every year to supervise an expenditure of only $117,000, when in Nova Scotia we only spend $22,000 on an expenditure of $153,000? In all courtesy I might say my brother members from Nova Scotia have not the record of being unwilling to spend government money when they get the chance. Nova Scotia is always willing to milk the federal cow when the opportunity offers, so I suggest that when it comes to economy we in British Columbia should be at least on a par with them.

Mr. VENIOT: I object to that reference to Nova Scotia.

Mr. NEILL: I should like the minister to give to us an explanation of the great difference in cost as between the two offices.

Mr. DURANLEAU: My hon. friend has based his whole argument on a comparison of the administration of the fisheries in the eastern provinces as against British Columbia. I do not think the base of his argument is very sound, in the first place because there is a great difference between the fisheries in the east and in the west, and also because geographical conditions make a very great difference. It is really impossible to make any proper comparison between the Atlantic and Pacific coasts. For instance, the sea fisheries on the Atlantic coast, which produce nearly one-half of the product of the fisheries, in value, need no supervision on the sea. On the other hand all the fisheries on the Pacific coast, with the exception of the halibut and black cod fisheries which make up less than ten per cent, of the total, need close supervision and administration.

That is one reason for the difference. Again, all along the coast and rivers of the maritime provinces there are good roads, so that a great deal of the work can be done more economically from land. Hence the cost of our land service there, made up of supervisors, inspectors and guardians, is relatively large. On the other hand there are practically no coastal roads in British Columbia, so the work has to be done mainly by boat, though necessarily there is a large amount of work to be done in protecting the spawning salmon in interior waters. Hence the cost of the land service in British Columbia is relatively small as compared with that in the maritime provinces, while the cost of the boat patrol service is very much larger.

I have some figures for the year 1930-31 which will clarify this point. I do not like to give too many figures, but I think in fairness to the committee and to my department I should place this statement on Hansard. For supervisors and inspectors the expense by provinces was as follows:—

Prince Edward Island	$ 21,459
Nova Scotia	118,268
New Brunswick	63,642
British Columbia	138,093

Now take the cost of the guardians:

Prince Edward Island	$ 4,667
Nova Scotia	56,669
New Brunswick	42,779
British Columbia	28,714

I give these figures to show the committee that the argument of my hon. friend is not sound, because in some parts of the country we must spend more money on certain branches of administration, because of geographical conditions or for other special reasons, than we spend in other parts of the country. My hon. friend has directed his criticism principally against the head office in Vancouver, and he has given $50,000 as the cost of that office. I think my hon. friend is mistaken; he must have taken the figures for the whole district. I have here the cost of the main office in Vancouver, and if you compare this with the expenses of the eastern division you will not find very much difference. Take salaries, for example; in Vancouver they amount to $27,960. Deducting ten per cent leaves about $25,000 for salaries. The whole amount is $23,419, and for the eastern division the amount for salaries is $21,660; so the difference is not very large. In the west the amount to be expended for contingencies is $8,000, including telegrams, telephone calls, freight, cartage and so forth, and in the east contingencies amount to $2,500. I repeat, Mr. Chairman, that these expenses are not incurred simply for the pleasure of incurring them. We have to incur them on account of geographical considerations and because of the difference in the fisheries as between east and west. I do not think much can be said against the expenses of the head office at Vancouver. We have there a chief supervisor, one district supervisor, one accountant, grade 2; two principal clerks, one collector of fish revenue, one clerk, grade 4, one clerk, grade 2; three stenographers, grade 2; one typist, grade 2; one messenger, one stenographer, grade 2 who is employed temporarily during only seven months of the year. My hon. friend will see by the last item that we are trying to cut expenses as much as possible because someone in the head office is employing a stenographer during the rush season only, for seven months. So I do not think my hon. friend's criticism is very fair under the circumstances. My hon. friend, however, has offered some suggestions, and I am always glad to get suggestions from him because I know that he has had a large experience in these matters. But anything that is acceptable will be studied by my department and if anything can be done to reduce the expenses we shall do it, but I am told that in the past we have done our best. If my hon. friend has any complaint to make against a particular employee I should like to hear it.

Mr. NEILL: No, I have not.

Mr. DURANLEAU: I am told that the employees that I have just enumerated, and whose salaries amount to about $25,000, are absolutely necessary for the good administration of the fisheries in the west.

Mr. NEILL: I had anticipated, of course, that some defence would be put up and I was curious to know what it could be and what it would be, but I certainly did not anticipate such a lame reply as I have received.

To begin with, I would say in reply to the minister's last remark, asking if I had any complaint to make against any particular employee, that I have none whatever. I am not acquainted with the personnel of the office, except the head of it, and I would regret to see in these hard times any man or woman lose his position through curtailment of expenses, although many people in Ottawa have had to lose their positions. If the office was wiped out, I would suggest that provision be made to try to take these people on in other branches of the service either here or elsewhere.

As regards the criticism of my comparison, the minister says that my argument is not sound. He says that the fish in British Columbia waters are different from the fish in Atlantic waters. I admit that, but I was not dealing with fish. I was dealing with the clerical expenses of an office. It does not cost any more to take care of a salmon than of a cod. As to the argument that there are different geographical considerations, that there are roads in Nova Scotia and the employees there can travel over the roads, I would point out that the people to whom I am referring are engaged in clerical work in the head office at Vancouver, and whether there are trails or roads makes absolutely no difference because their work is done in the office, and the roads do not affect the cost of their work one particle. I grant that where the local guardian has to travel, that would add to his expenses, but that has no relation whatever to the cost of the clerical assistance in the head office.

The minister also says that in British Columbia we have a sea patrol. Yes, we have, and it is an expensive one and I have much pleasure in saying that it is also an efficient one. But that has no bearing on this vote. The minister would almost imply that that made the cost of the office in Vancouver more expensive, but as he very well knows, or ought to know, there is another vote entirely that covers the cost of the patrol port. So that has no bearing on the subject whatever.

Again, the minister says that he will show the difference in cost, and he quotes figures which with one exception are a duplicate of my own figures. He says, with an air of backing up his own argument and opposing mine, that in Nova Scotia the guardians cost $56,000 and in British Columbia $28,000. That just confirms my argument. That Nova Scotia can take care of $50,000 of guardians' work at such a low percentage of cost as fourteen per cent, while British Columbia with an expenditure for guardians of only $28,000 requires 43 per cent, just confirms my argument and does not combat it in the least.

But the minister did combat my figures in one respect. He said that I had put too much into the Vancouver office, and he quoted the figures, and I noted one figure that he omitted. He gave the total as $28,000, and my figure was $31,960, and the minister said that I was wrong. But he forgot to put in the salary of the chief supervisor, who is essentially the head of the Vancouver office. If he adds to the figures he gave, the $3,960 which the chief supervisor gets, he arrives at exactly the same figure that I gave for salaries alone. Then the minister enumerated some of the employees. I am not going to go into details. I cannot say that this man or that man is not necessary. It would be invidious and unfair for me to do so because I do not know them. I have no doubt that every man and every woman according to their lights are doing the work for which they are paid, but I am saying that on the principle of economy and efficiency the whole office at Vancouver could be wiped out.

Let me give an illustration, a precedent, a Dominion government precedent for the minister if he likes. Many years ago I was an Indian agent out there on that same coast with the same geographical conditions, only they were worse then than they are now, and when I wanted to buy five dollars' worth of stamps at government expense, I had to make out elaborate vouchers in quadruplicate, and send them to the head office, which was very much like this Vancouver one, although it was situated in Victoria. Then the head office man wrote back to Indian Agent Neill and said that he had received his letter enclosing vouchers, which he had forwarded to Ottawa. That took some time. Later on the Ottawa office wrote to the man in Victoria, "You can instruct Indian Agent Neill to buy five dollars' worth of stamps." There was more correspondence. The cheque followed the same devious course. As Indian agent I was familiar with the ground and knew the circumstances, and nine times out of ten my advice was taken and had to be taken. I forwarded my recommendations to Victoria and they went the usual rounds again. Finally I cut out those formalities and did what I thought ought to be done, and by the time I was due for a vote of censure, the incident was too far back for anything to be done about it. But suddenly some man with some idea of efficiency said "All this is unnecessary. What is the sense of it?" The office in Victoria was closed and the agents communicated direct with Ottawa. I would suggest to the minister that the whole head office in British Columbia could be dispensed with at a great saving of expense and with no loss of efficiency on the grounds I have mentioned.

Then I buttressed it with the fact that in Nova Scotia, where, I may say, they are wholly alive to their opportunities with respect to spending money—the hon. member for Gloucester (Mr. Veniot) will allow me to say that?

Mr. VENIOT: That is fair.

Mr. NEILL: I do not blame them; I would do the same. But when they can do it so cheaply, there is no reason why it should not be done in British Columbia. I would wipe the whole thing out. Pay the inspectors better money and they will rise to their responsibilities. Give them more work and pay them—that is a good business principle—and save from thirty to thirty-five thousand dollars.

Mr. VENIOT: When we were dealing with oyster culture I brought up a question which I think I am in order in bringing up again under item 171.

The CHAIRMAN: Item 176 covers oyster culture.

Mr. VENIOT: I know, but 171 also covers it to some extent because it has to do with the salaries of guardians who are employed in this line of industry. On that occasion I brought up the question of containers or barrels for oysters. Under its new regulations the department has specified that oysters shall be packed in a certain way. Designs for the container or barrel have been submitted to the department. Under the ways and means bill before the house the sales tax has been increased from four to six cents, and if the department is going to insist upon a costly container being adopted it will be an injustice to the fishermen. Has the department made up its mind with respect to what design of container it will impose upon the oyster fishermen?

Mr. DURANLEAU: A regulation was adopted in 1931 as to the dimensions of oyster containers. This was done, I am told, after consultation between the officials of the department and the fishermen and others engaged in the industry in the east. But since then representations have been made against the cost of those containers, and my deputy tells me that at the present time he is communicating with the interested parties in order to come to some agreement on the matter.

Mr. VENIOT: I thank the minister for the information. Let me now draw this to his attention. When deciding on the design of the container, in the name of conscience do not leave it to those interested in the manufacture of containers to say what shall be adopted; and be careful that the price does not exceed, to any great extent at least, the price at which our oystermen have been buying their containers in the past. Why should there be a special design of container for the shipment of oysters any more than for the shipment of anything else? Why should regulations be adopted which impose that extra duty upon the oyster fishermen as well as upon the oyster exporters? An oyster is just as sweet in its flavour when packed in an apple barrel as it is in a barrel that costs $1.50. I would prefer to have oysters shipped in boxes rather than in barrels, and I think if the fishermen were consulted and a reasonably sized box could be decided upon, it would be more satisfactory than the barrel. For the past few years our oyster fishery has been going down somewhat, and if you impose extra burdens upon the fishermen you are certainly not going to do them any good. I fear that these extra burdens may drive some of our fishermen, not all, into violations of the law by fishing out of season in order to make up the extra cost brought about by the imposition of the department's regulations during the open season. I wish the department would go very fully into this matter before adopting a design on which the fishermen will have to pay a sales tax and which will impose on them extra burdens.

Mr. DURANLEAU: My hon. friend will admit that we must have a minimum size container in order to protect the trade. People want to know what they are getting.

Mr. VENIOT: They will not know any better if the oysters are packed in a $1.50 barrel than if in a 75-cent barrel.

Mr. DURANLEAU: No doubt; but we must have a standard size of container for the protection of trade. We are as much concerned as my hon. friend to minimize as much as possible the expenses to be incurred by the fishermen in packing their oysters. To-day we are studying the suggestion made—now repeated by my hon. friend—to put oysters in boxes as well as barrels. I can assure him that the interests of the manufacturer of boxes or barrels will not prevail; we are looking after the interests of the fishermen themselves and the protection of the industry.

Mr. RALSTON: Under this item there are two or three matters which I wish to bring to the minister's attention. I submit to him that it does seem as if we have not yet realized the importance of the fishing industry in the province from which I come and the necessity for more careful consideration being given to the interests of those engaged in it. Let me point out what was done soon after this government came into power. A firm of engineers was employed to make a report in connection with the marketing of Canadian fish and fish products, based on a general survey of the industry. That had already been done two years before by a commission which investigated the maritime fisheries—a commission which I think all members regard as being thoroughly competent to deal with the question. Nevertheless my hon. friend felt that he wanted a fresh view on the matter and he employed this firm to make a report. The newspaper notices intimated very clearly that something would come from this which would be of great advantage to the fishing communities, but when the report did come down, with all due respect to the gentlemen who made it I think the minister and the department generally felt that in so far as it proposed practical means of assisting the fishermen it turned out to be practically a dud. The report dealt with information which was already in the hands of the department; I am sure the competent departmental officers had collated it long before, and I am sure the department already had full access to practically all the information which was gathered by that firm at some considerable cost to the country. I do not say a word against the firm; I understand they are a reputable firm of engineers, though I do not know them at all. I feel, however, that this effort on the part of the present Minister of Finance to get a new viewpoint in connection with the fisheries, did not result in any real accomplishment.

Let me give my hon. friend an example. The report has been laid on the table of the house, though I have never had an opportunity of reading it. The report is very long and no copies were printed, but the minister prepared a summary, and just to give an idea of how practical it is in connection with the marketing of fish, let me read the headline recommendation at page 80 of the summary:

> That the Minister of Fisheries consider the announcement of a fiscal policy with respect to fisheries, and all industries and trades dependent thereon, based upon the following principles:
> (a) That the government refrain from levying any taxation—other than that which applies to all industries and groups—particularly directed to those engaged in the production, processing and marketing of fish, until such time as the industry has attained a reasonably prosperous and self-reliant status.

I cannot suggest a more futile or more meaningless recommendation. I never heard and I cannot conceive that the former minister, the present minister or the government as a whole intended to levy any special tax upon the fishing industry, yet the first recommendation is that the government refrain from doing so. I do not think it needed a firm of engineers or a commission to make a recommendation of that kind. What they mean I do not know, I am sure. I am not going through all the recommendations contained in the report.

Mr. NEILL: The second recommendation is a good one.

Mr. RALSTON: It is this:

(b) That consideration be given, subject to unsurmountable constitutional or other obstacles, if any, to the ultimate withdrawal—within a specified period, announced in advance—of the fishing bounty, except any that the government may decide to apply to destructive species, and that the sum so released be devoted by the department to assist in the execution of educational and other measures directed toward the permanent improvement of the industry.

Mr. NEILL: That is the only good thing in the report.

Mr. RALSTON: I want to give the government credit for efforts along educational lines in connection with the fisheries but in doing so I am paying a lefthanded compliment to their predecessors in office also. Educational work in connection with the fisheries has been carried on by both governments, and a great deal has been done in that respect. I believe we are all convinced that this is one way in which we can assist the fishing industry, but I do not think it needed any recommendation from a commission to establish that fact, and I do not think the assistance which will result from the withdrawal of the bounty will mean a great addition to the funds available for that purpose.

Mr. MacDONALD (Cape Breton South): You would not be in favour of withdrawing the bounty?

Mr. RALSTON: No. Then the recommendations go on to deal with the fisheries conservation policy, with which I dealt last night in connection with lobsters. A sort of lefthanded recommendation is made in connection with the trawler in paragraph 2 (b):

That, in general, conservation policy shall be directed to restriction of seasons, locations, and of licences—partly as a means of securing adherence to and respect for regulations—but not of the gear or equipment used. Only such reasonable and effective regulation shall be exercised, in the latter instance, which may prevent uneconomic destruction of the species, or any serious deterrent to the quality of the fish caught.

I suppose there are more teeth in that recommendation than in any of the others, though they are well veiled and covered up. At least that is a direct recommendation against restrictions on trawlers. The next paragraph has to do with the classification of information, and the following paragraph states solemnly that the Department of Trade and Commerce shall consult with the officials of the Department of Marine and the Department of Fisheries in connection with the information thus made available in order to initiate discussions with the various steamship companies operating from or to Canadian ports in reference to the adjustment or improvement of their services, schedules or facilities. I hardly think it was necessary to recommend consultation between various departments of the government and I venture to say that these officials have discussed many times with the steamship and railway companies the question of rates on fish and the cost of transportation. Then there is a reference to the sockeye salmon treaty, and in paragraph 5 the biological board is urged to direct greater concentration upon the solution of practical problems of fishery research. Paragraph 6 is as follows:

That consideration be given by the minister to the advisability of a reference to the Board of Railway Commissioners for Canada of the whole question of railway rates and tariffs respecting freight and express shipments of fish and fish products . . .

That question has been before the board more than once on applications by individual shippers. So far as I know there has been no case prepared or reference made by the minister, and it seems to me that if this recommendation had been really intended to mean something it should have been positively to the effect that a reference be made to the Board of Railway Commissioners with regard to this very important matter of the cost of transporting fish instead of gently suggesting consideration of the advisability of a reference. I do not think anything has been done in that connection at all.

The next paragraph suggests that the Canadian Fisheries Association be broadened in scope, and the following paragraph suggests that the Department of Fisheries conduct a campaign of education, as previously mentioned. Paragraph 9 recommends that the information collected be made available to the trade. Paragraph 10 suggests that encouragement be given to the formation of a lobster canners' association, and in paragraph 11 it is suggested that the biological board be requested to carry on experiments with a view to developing small fish reduction units suitable for establishment in the less important fishing centres. Units of this kind were established years ago; I do not think that is any new policy at all, and obviously this would meet only a small part of the real problems of the fishermen. Paragraph 12 recommends that every effort be made to extend the degree of diversification practised in the curing industry, and in paragraph 13 it is suggested that means be sought for reducing the number of brands of canned salmon. Paragraph 14 states:

> That encouragement should be given to fishermen's cooperative unions for the purpose of obtaining their supplies cheaply and of improving their standards of production.

Everyone is trying to do that. Paragraph 15 states:

> That overlapping of the inspection acts . . . should be adjusted; that inspection service by the proper authorities should be extended to cover fish reduction plants and retail stores . . .

and so on. Paragraph 16 suggests the employment of express rather than freight for the shipment of fresh fish. That is the report in connection with our fisheries, made by a so-called expert commission. Does anyone wonder why I suggest that so far as any actual help to the fisheries is concerned the report is practically a dud, because I believe whatever it contains of importance already has been taken up by the department, and whatever is contained in the report that is not important was not worth appointing a commission to find out. My hon. friend from Comox-Alberni (Mr. Neill) has given me the proper word for the report, and I thank him for it; the report is one of platitudes.

I should like to say just a word with regard to the matter of taxation, the first point mentioned in the report. The other night there was a discussion in connection with the sales tax on salt; a good deal was said to the effect that fishermen should use Canadian salt, and that the government was quite right in imposing a 6 per cent sales tax on salt imported into Canada. Since then I have found that there are 380 men engaged in the whole salt industry in Canada, including the part of the country from which you and I come, Mr. Chairman. I think probably the minister has a report dealing with Canadian salt in connection with our fisheries, and I doubt very much whether it unreservedly supports the ideas expressed by my hon. friend the Minister of Finance with regard to the usability of that salt in the operations of the fishing industry. As a matter of fact the situation is just this: I have talked with those engaged in the fishing industry in my own constituency and I myself did everything in my power to assist Mr. Chambers, in connection with Malagash salt. I endeavoured to get packers and fishermen down there interested in it, and it was with difficulty that they were induced to take it up. So far as its use in connection with their fish was concerned, I am bound to say that the reports were not too satisfactory. My hon. friend knows what the difficulties are. Mr. Chambers tried to do all he could to meet them, but the unfortunate situation remains. The hon. member for Antigonish-Guysborough (Mr. Duff) knows more about the fishing industry than I ever hope to know, and the other night he said that it had not proved satisfactory to the industry. What is the use, under the guise of helping the fishermen, of trying to force them to use material that they consider is not satisfactory, and imposing this six per cent tax on them in connection with salt, which is one of the basic materials they use in their industry? In addition to that, there is a three per cent excise tax, but at the moment I am discussing the sales tax. Salt was always free of sales tax. The Minister of Fisheries suggested that most of the fish is exported anyway and that a rebate could be obtained. Let me give him an illustration and ask him how the fishermen can really get a rebate in connection with salt used on their fish. The fish are placed in butts into a salt pickle. Some of the fish is taken out and made into dried fish for use partly in Canada, and some of it is sent green to the United States. How will anyone tell how much salt is used in connection with exported fish and therefore how much of it is entitled to the rebate? The fish is sold, perhaps, to a jobber in Canada, part of it finding its way to the domestic market, some of it in this part of the country but most of it in the eastern provinces, and a portion is sent to the United States. It is simply impossible, therefore, to tell what proportion of it is entitled to the rebate, and this is merely the imposition of an irritating tax from which the fishermen gets no benefit whatever. Who pays? There is only one man who pays, and that is the fisherman. The minister might say, "But you do not take the tax on a pound of salt and deduct it from the price of the fish." Supposing the dealer pays a cent or a cent and a quarter or a cent and a half a pound, he does not take a fraction of a cent per pound off for the salt. What he will probably do is this: he says, "we have to reduce the price of fish at a certain time to meet market conditions." And the reduction comes three or four days earlier than it otherwise would in order to take care of the sales tax on the salt, and the fisherman pays it. If there is to be an increase in the price of fish, it comes later, that is what takes place, and the fisherman pays the difference. In common with the others who spoke the other night, I protest that this government is not even carrying out the spirit of the first paragraph of the report, and are certainly not helping the industry by putting on that sales tax.

With respect to coverings, I do not know what the minister was thinking of when he permitted, at least without any strenuous objection—perhaps he did object to some extent—a tax on the coverings, articles which in themselves are free of the sales tax, and on barrels, butts, boxes and everything used in connection with the packing of fish. Here again there is only one man who pays, and that is the fisherman, because the people who supply the boxes say that if they have to pay the sales tax the man who supplies the raw material must have the deduction made. Again, it is done in the same lefthanded fashion. No direct charge against the fisherman is made, but just as before, the reduction in the price of fish comes a little earlier. There again, you cannot possibly make a case for the reduction of the tax, because you do not know how much is exported. The man who actually produces the fish and pays the tax is probaly not the man who exports at all, and therefore he cannot get his money back. I know of little industries, all over the western shore particularly, where the men, with their families, in little outhouses, put up a certain amount of dried or boneless fish, as it is called. They may sell it in the domestic market, or possibly to a jobber. How will these people get the rebate on coverings in connection with exports? It is merely an additional tax on this basic industry, and while it does not come within the recommendation of the Cockfield-Brown report, which says that you shall refrain from putting a special tax on the industry, at the same time it contravenes that report to this extent, that it imposes on the industry a tax which up to the present time it has not had to bear. I submit that it is in direct contravention of the principle which we are all trying to establish, namely, assistance to this basic industry.

I spoke of boneless fish. That is boxed. But so are haddies and fillets. Some of these come to this market up here, but many of them do not. Often round fish are boxed and iced. You will never get a rebate of these taxes and, as I say, the fisherman is going to pay. I submit that the minister would be well advised to take up with his colleagues in cabinet this matter of the sales tax, which is of so much importance to the fishing industry.

Further with regard to the sales tax provisions, I find that on one article of fishermen's gear which was apparently considered as exempt, the tax has never been attempted to be enforced until this government came into power. I am not suggesting that the wording of the schedule is such that the department is not justified if they construe the wording strictly in imposing the tax; but, trawl kegs, which are buoys used for the purpose of keeping up trawls, were never taxed before; they were regarded as part of the gear of the fisherman and exempt. Last year trawl kegs had a sales tax, a very heavy item, imposed upon them. I know some men in the cooperage business who are engaged in making trawl kegs, and one of them has had to pay on the kegs not only for last year but for previous years as well. Again, the burden is passed on to the fisherman, and this contravenes the intent of the exemption schedule to the sales tax, which provides, or at any rate is supposed to provide, that gear used in connection with the fishing industry shall be free of the tax. This is a matter to which I wish to direct the attention of the Minister of Fisheries and of the Minister of Finance. I have already brought it to the attention of the Minister of National Revenue and pleaded for some amelioration of the present situation.

The hon. member for Antigonish-Guysborough and I do not agree on some things in connection with the fisheries; naturally, as regards the length of season in our respective constituencies, we differ. He got a fifteen-day extension to the first part of his season, and I had fifteen days cut off the latter part of mine.

Mr. RHODES: Plus six weeks.

Mr. RALSTON: That was a special relief season in December and January. Guysborough got a continuous season, having fifteen days added in the spring of the year when the catching is good, without having to outfit twice, whereas the western shore got a split season, having to outfit twice, and that extra season in the most inclement part of the year.

With regard to halibut, reference has been made to Newfoundland fish. Here is another case in which the Minister of Fisheries would be well advised to give direct attention to the situation with regard to fish coming from that dominion. Last year I protested against fish from Newfoundland being made exempt from the special one per cent excise tax. I considered that this was an extra tax which Newfoundland fish should bear the same as the others. This year I protest more vigorously still against Newfoundlfand fish being exempt from the three per cent excise tax, and I hold in my hand a telegram which I received the other day, and which probably the minister has also received. I shall read it. It is dated May 3, and reads:

> Newfoundland halibut being dumped in this country duty free is demoralizing our very limited Canadian market and has already driven prices to a point where our fishermen cannot operate and pay expenses. On behalf of our Atlantic coast halibutters, four of whom are tied up at our wharf this week, we vigorously protest this lack of protection for one of our primary industries, when practically all other Canadian industries are enjoying a large measure of protection by tariff and when we are virtually excluded from United States market by tariff and transportation charges. Can we not get some prompt action on this matter which is of such vital importance to our hard pressed fishing population.

That is signed by Ralph P. Bell of the Lockeport company in Lockeport, Nova Scotia. That is a case where the Newfoundland fish are completely demoralizing an industry in Nova Scotia, the halibut industry. These fish are now to be exempted from the three per cent excise tax instead of the one per cent, and I ask the minister to view this matter in the light of giving assistance to the fisheries. The fishermen are entitled at least to the preservation of the domestic markets regarding which the report of Cockfield, Brown and Company was supposed to be particularly concerned.

What is on the other side of the sheet? For the last two years there has been a consistent and persistent effort to tax those things used by the fishermen which were formerly free. I refer to food, clothing, gasoline, oiled clothing, and tin plate which I forgot to mention in connection with the sales tax. These things are being taxed and these taxes, as well as the sales tax on packages are being paid by the fishermen as well as by other members of the community. For the first time taxes are being put on these articles used by our primary producers and I submit that the minister, considering this matter in the light of what was supposed to be the purpose of the report of Cockfield, Brown and Company, should take off these taxes.

The mention of tin plate reminds me that when I was dealing with the sales tax I neglected to mention the lobster canning industry. A tax in connection with coverings means a tax on the tin plate and the cans used for packing lobsters. Many of these cans go outside of Canada and many are sold within Canada; those sold within Canada must pay the tax, while a rebate can be obtained on those sold outside of Canada. However, the rebate is obtained by the exporter and not by the man who actually supplies the can in the first place. The cost comes out of the fisherman.

This whole fishing industry, the third largest in Nova Scotia so far as money is concerned, is in desperate straits at this time. If the minister had access to the budgets of these lobster fishermen he would realize the large contribution they make to the communities in which they live. Only allowing a small amount for depreciation on boat and engine, it costs a fisherman about six or seven hundred dollars per season for gasoline, help, rope, traps and so on. It is not as if the man could go out and use only his labour; he has got to do more than that, he has got to invest money, and they have to earn their expenses before they get anything for their families. These men are in such a position that the matter of taxation becomes vital to them. The taxes should be taken off those things which they use instead of new taxes being imposed.

The suggestion has been made that a bonus should be paid on fish. A strong delegation from the salt banker industry waited on the minister and urged that a bonus be paid. The shore fishermen of Nova Scotia are in need of assistance and the only practical way to meet their needs is by way of a bonus on all shore fish, not trawler fish. If this were done the industry would be given a chance to live and it would be doing only that which was done for the wheat farmer in the west and for other primary producers, such as coal producers. An opportunity would be given to these men to compete with trawler-caught fish and at least get back some of the domestic markets which they have lost.

I urge upon the minister, as I urged upon his predecessor, that he carry on negotiations of the most impressive character, if I may use that word, with the country to the south of us whereby its tariff regulations may be so adjusted as to give us proper access to that market. The minister knows that since 1923 there has been a provision on the statute books—this was put through by Mr. Fielding—with regard to reciprocal trade in natural products. I submit that the time has come when negotiations should be resumed to permit an opportunity of entry to that market. Let me remind the minister that at the present time the tendency in the country to the south is all the other way. The tendency has been to exclude our lobsters except above a certain size, and if this government does not change its present attitude with regard to high tariffs I fear that that market will be seriously endangered. I do not want to take up the time of the committee any further except to say that these points with which I have dealt have come up from time to time and I have put them together to discuss under this item in order to urge upon the minister that he give serious and earnest consideration to the desperate plight in which the fishermen of Nova Scotia find themsevles at the present time.

Mr. RHODES: Mr. Chairman, the hon. member for Shelburne-Yarmouth (Mr. Ralston) in his remarks, which I could not help but observe were highly and wholly critical, has covered a very wide field. At the outset of his remarks he proceeded to criticize very severely the report of Cockfield, Brown and Company. It may be that the findings as read by my hon. friend from that succinct and abbreviated digest of the report which has been brought down to parliament have not been happily worded, they may be more or less general in their terms, but I would point out to my hon. friend that he should bear in mind the fact that there was a very exhaustive examination made by this company covering a period of approximately nine months.

Mr. RALSTON: I am sure of that.

Mr. RHODES: Whatever criticism may be levelled at the terms of the findings, as read by my hon. friend, I think he should remember that as the result of that survey, the contacts formed and the interest stirred up in all branches of the fishing industry, ultimate benefits will be derived and up to the moment there have been some substantial benefits derived by the industry as a result of the work of that company. I think the best answer I can give in general terms to my hon. friend is to say that so far as I am aware no branch of the industry and no individual of whom I have heard has had anything but favourable comment to make in connection with the work of this company. I am speaking from memory, but that is my recollection of the situation. It may be that in the odd case there is an individual who may feel critical, but that happens in connection with all movements.

Mr. RALSTON: There was nothing to criticize because there was nothing there.

Mr. RHODES: Let me say this in a general way: We must walk before we run; we cannot, so far as government activity in regard to the fishing industry is concerned, create a new heaven and a new earth overnight. But I think in recent years there has been a marked stimulus in the fisheries, and there is a feeling throughout the industry that sympathetic consideration is being given to their problems by the department and particularly by the officials to whom I wish to pay a tribute for the outstanding devotion they have displayed towards the interest of that industry.

My hon. friend referred to some remarks I made the other night with respect to the subject of Malagash salt; he did so in connection with observations made by the hon. member for Antigonish-Guysborough (Mr. Duff). I am at one with the hon. member for Shelburne-Yarmouth in agreeing that the hon. member for Antigonish-Guysborough has a very wide and practical experience in the fishing industry, and I would be prepared at any time to defer to his judgment on practical points. But when I made the statement the other evening with respect to the merit of Canadian as against imported salt, I had not reference to Malagash salt as such, although I am prepared to deal with the question of Malagash salt. What I had in mind at that time was this, that while the salt as it is extracted in its natural form from that mine, may not be as suitable for the fishing industry as salt brought from the Mediterranean or Turks island, I am assured by those who are experts in the chemical side of the industry, that there is no reason in the world why, by a process of refining we cannot produce in Canada a salt that would be as suitable for the fishing industry as salt imported from Turks island. In fact I might say there are in that particular salt certain properties which have a deleterious effect on some of the fish cured. That, however, is more or less by the way.

Mr. RALSTON: Why impose the sales tax until that is demonstrated?

Mr. RHODES: My hon. friend brings up the sales tax and I am going to deal with that. He devoted the major portion of his remarks to a criticism of the tariff and the sales tax as applied to the products of the fishing industry. In that regard, I have no doubt he was within his right, and I think he was within the item itself in bringing that to the attention of the Minister of Fisheries but that subject is one which more properly ought to be discussed in ways and means. I have a hope, before the day is concluded, we shall be in ways and means, and at that time I shall be very happy to discuss the sales tax especially as applied to salt and to the usual coverings. I have a hope I shall be able to answer my hon. friend, possibly even to his satisfaction, when the subject is under consideration then.

My hon. friend would endeavour to make it appear that because of the action of this government some special burdens have been imposed upon the fishing industry. As a matter of fact I do not subscribe to that point of view. As a government we have been compelled, in view of the strenuous times through which we are passing, to impose taxation, and this has had to be of general application. He referred to the fishing industry which, I admit very readily, is in a bad way, but if this is any comfort to those in the industry, it is the fact, nevertheless, that they are in no worse plight than is the farming industry, nor, in many respects, the mining industry, nor, in many respects, the lumbering industry. So far as the fisherman is one of the general community in this country, he must be prepared to bear his fair proportion of the general taxation which the people as a whole must bear in these times. If my hon. friend could make it appear there was some special taxation imposed upon the fishermen to the exclusion of any other class of people, there would be some point in his criticism.

Mr. RALSTON: Cockfield-Brown say that you must not do that.

Mr. RHODES: Yes; that there must not be applied to them any special tax which is not of general application. I subscribe to that view and we are within the general bounds of it. My hon. friend says that since this government came into power we have been taxing trawl kegs. He admits at once they are taxable under the law.

Mr. RALSTON: I was quite frank about that.

Mr. RHODES: I thank my hon. friend for having been so frank. Maybe he thought his government was lax in its application of the law—

Mr. RALSTON: No.

Mr. RHODES: —and this government has been observing it.

Mr. RALSTON: I assure my hon. friend we would have had an order in council exempting them if that were necessary.

Mr. RHODES: Apart from the merits of the case he has at least given a tribute to the efficient manner in which this government applies the law.

Mr. RALSTON: No, I resent it.

Mr. RHODES: That is altogether irrespective as to whether there ought or ought not to be a tax on trawl kegs.

My hon. friend referred to a bonus for the fishing industry and in that connection he spoke of the bonus which, he says, exists upon wheat. He knows full well that the bonus upon wheat was a special one under extraordinary circumstances for a year and that it has not been renewed for this year. I do not wish to enter into a discussion as to the merits of this or that or the other industry; but leaving aside the question whether a bonus is or is not in itself sound, if you bonus fish, you must bonus the products of the farm in toto. Indeed, I do not see how a bonus could be limited to that; there is no reason why it should not go into the realm of the forest. If you do that, you will run into a sum of money which the treasury of this country cannot possibly provide. As a matter of fact, to be logical in the matter, if you are going to bonus every activity in a dull period for the purpose of trying to carry it through until conditions become better, you are just indulging in a process of trying to lift yourself by your bootstraps. If your bonus is applied logically and generally, in another sense you are simply taking money out of one pocket and putting it into the other, because you must tax in order to provide the money.

Mr. RALSTON: But you bonus the manufacturers by imposing duties.

Mr. RHODES: My hon. friend is not at this stage going to get me into a discussion of that, although at a proper time I will be glad to talk on it.

Mr. RALSTON: We have had that discussion.

Mr. RHODES: I do not for a moment admit the tariff is in all cases a tax. I am not, however, going to be led into a discussion on the tariff at this stage of the session and especially when the estimates of my colleague, the Minister of Fisheries, are under discussion. I do not wish to be a party to attempting to retard the progress of his estimates.

My hon. friend has referred to the relationship which exists between ourselves and our neighbours to the south. In that connection he mentioned the fact that there has been on the statute books since 1923 an offer to our friends in the United States. I do not say this in any hypercritical sense, but let me point out to him that his party was in power for nine years of that period; we have been in office less than two. In the light of the division of power since 1923, he has no basis of criticism or of finding any fault with us That is merely an aside. Let me say to him that this government—and because I was Minister of Fisheries, I can speak very clearly on this point—was at pains to take every step and make every effort to make the contacts and to enter into discussions with our friends to the south with a view, if possible to ameliorating conditions, not only to the advantage of the fishing industry in Canada but to the mutual advantage of the United States and ourselves.

Mr. RALSTON: You cannot do that by imposing higher duties on their products.

Mr. RHODES: I sat and listened to my hon. friend, I hope with courtesy and without a single interruption although he spoke for twenty minutes, and I think he should accord to me the courtesy of allowing me to have at least one completed sentence without in interjection. My hon. friend is getting along in years but he still shows the impetuosity of youth. He does not seem to be able to contain himself for more than half a minute. It is a nice spring morning and if he would just contain himself in peace and relax a little I am sure he would find it very good for the nervous system.

Mr. POULIOT: The smile of my hon. friend is just as welcome as the spring morning.

Mr. RHODES: I do not know why my hon. friend from Shelburne-Yarmouth refers to the question of the tariff in association with the United States of America because if there is one country in the world which has been noted for its high tariff it has been that country, and if there is one country in the world which formulates its tariff policy to suit the needs of its own people without regard to the rest of the world it is the United States. I do not complain of that because that is their right and their privilege. But my hon. friend must not attempt to make it appear that we must place ourselves in the position where we are to defer entirely to the whims and whimsies of our friends to the south. My hon. friend must realize, and I think the people of the United States themselves would be the first to say, that the question of our tariff is entirely a matter for ourselves, and they would be the last to take exception to our altering the tariff on any item as in our judgment we deemed to be in our own best interests.

My hon. friend from Shelburne-Yarmouth has taken the position that the excise tax of three per cent ought to be imposed on fish imported into this country from Newfoundland. If my hon. friends from Antigonish-Guysborough and Queens-Lunenburg were here I am sure they would unanimously take exception to any such proposal. The question of our relationship with Newfoundland, as my hon. friend knows, is a very old story. It goes back over a long period of years, and it has been distinctly understood that we would never impose any form of taxation against the importation of fish from Newfoundland, which after all is the only commodity they have to sell to us, and there is the further fact that the balance of trade between Canada and Newfoundland has for all time been very largely in our favour. But the fishing industry itself in Nova Scotia is vitally interested in the importation, duty free, of fish from Newfoundland, for a very considerable portion of the fishing industry of Nova Scotia is based upon the processing of Newfoundland fish for re-export.

At one o'clock the committee took recess.

The committee resumed at three o'clock.

Mr. RHODES: Mr. Chairman, when the committee rose at one o'clock I was dealing with the question of the imposition of a duty or tax upon importations of fish from Newfoundland. I had pointed out that the subject was by no means new. It has been discussed over a number of decades, and I do not know of any branch of the fishing industry that has been more opposed in the past and so far as I am aware, is still opposed to such a tax or duty than those associated with the ownership, operation and management of the Lunenburg fleet. Apart from the consideration that the importation of salt fish from Newfoundland has hitherto proven a profitable branch of the Canadian fishing industry, there was the further consideration that one of the strongest arguments used by those who were opposed to the imposition of the duty or tax was that if by any chance we impeded the importation of their fish we would invite reprisals on the part of Newfoundland, perhaps quite properly so, and that those reprisals would take the form, amongst others, of not permitting the sale of bait to our bankers. If they were not able to get their bait in Newfoundland ports it would mean their return periodically to the ports of the maritime provinces, with consequent loss of time and also loss of profit in their fishing operations. So that while I do not for one moment suggest that when these considerations are borne in mind the last word has been said, I do submit that they are of such moment as to preclude, for the time being at least, our entertaining the imposition of such a duty. As I do not wish to take up the time of the committee further in passing the estimates of my colleague the Acting Minister of Fisheries (Mr. Duranleau), I will content myself with these few observations.

Mr. SMITH (Cumberland): Mr. Chairman, about the last thing I would wish to do at this late stage of the proceedings would be to hold up the estimates of the minister, but by reason of the fact that certain statements were made Tuesday evening and again to-day of a derogatory character as to the quality of the salt produced in the riding I have the honour to represent, I feel I am drawn into this controversy, and that something in the interests of truth, justice and accuracy should be said with respect to this product. The Malagash salt industry was established in Malagash some years ago, and in normal times it employs upwards of a hundred hands. It was felt at the time of its establishment that it would more or less interlock with the fishing industry of Nova Scotia. The district in which the industry has been developed is not by any means what might be termed affluent; the people there have been struggling along under most severe handicaps particularly during the last couple of years. To show the community spirit on the part of the employers as well as the employees, the committee will be interested to learn that a cooperative working arrangement has been entered into by them.

Now, the derogatory statements made by the hon. members for Antigonish-Guysborough and Shelburne-Yarmouth with respect to the quality of this salt in the curing of fish ought, I think, to be answered by those in the industry who know what they are talking about. In this connection I am going to read into the record certain telegrams I have received from those who know the fish business with respect to the value of this salt in the curing of fish. The first is from S. R. Giffin and Son, of Goldboro, Nova Scotia:

> Malagash salt best we ever used for hard cured dried codfish,—never dampen again after being dried or turn red in hot countries if held any time as sometimes happens when fish are cured with salt such as Turks island.

The next telegram is from Austin E. Nickerson carrying on business in the constituency of the hon. member for Shelburne-Yarmouth (Mr. Ralston): He says:

> Understand discussion regarding Malagash salt now going on. Wish to advise that we have used Malagash salt solely for the past ten years with absolutely good results, and on account of good keeping qualities of our fish have been able to obtain extra prices. Have never seen any indication of red fish, but there is a slight sediment, apparently gravel, in salt, but that can be overcome by proper methods of curing. Have used many other salts, including German, and prefer Malagash.

[Mr. Rhodes.]

Another telegram is from McCormack and Zatzman, Limited, of St. John, New Brunswick. They say:

> Regarding Malagash fishery salt, we have used thousands of tons of it in the last few years, shipping a large portion of our products to southern countries, with absolutely no spoilage losses and without cold storage charges, whereas when formerly using solar or sea salt we have experienced losses in these markets. Malagash is the best salt we know of for all cures of smoked herring and Gaspereau, and you will be making no mistake whatever in doing everything possible to increase the use of Malagash salt by Canadian fishermen.

Another telegram is from A. Haydon, Magdalen islands. It is dated from New Glasgow and is as follows:

> Visiting here to-day noticed controversy in house on salt and cures of fish. After an experience of many years supervising fish packing in Nova Scotia and Magdalen islands, wish to state I have used Malagash mined salt on the curing of codfish and mackerel, and have found it very satisfactory. My opinion is that codfish cured with mined salt has a much milder flavour than fish cured with solar salt.

That point was emphasized this morning by the hon. Minister of Finance. I have another telegram which comes from the fisheries experimental station at Halifax. This station, I understand, is under the biological board, which is composed of representatives of the fish industry, the fisheries department and the universities. The telegram reads as follows:

> Regarding Malagash salt, can state that if proper precautions are taken mined salts will prevent red fish. Tests here recent lots of Malagash salt, there was very little sediment on fish, and we have proof that large amount of equal salt has been mined at Malagash.

The last telegram I desire to read is from the Malagash Salt Company, Limited. They say:

> If Hansard records statement that Malagash salt leaves red streaks on the fish and that sediment is unsatisfactory . . . correction should be made. Many people make such statements without advising themselves on recent result with Malagash salt. Their conclusions are really based on results that are out of date.
> Such erroneous statements on Malagash salt have been very damaging and have retarded the development of the industry the importance of which you fully appreciate. Malagash is cheapest of few salts available here that does not produce red fish. The fishermen's losses from reddening is now recognized by Halifax station officials and trade generally as a terrific handicap. Malagash being germ free is definitely stated on page twelve of Harrison's honorary research council paper number eleven. Regarding sediment Dr. Leim, director Halifax station advises this difficulty no longer a factor with salt from vein that we have worked past two years also on reddening. Our sales talks on fishery salt all based on American bureau fishery findings and recommendations bulletins numbers 884 and 919 and Malagash salts are those most nearly meeting the specifications recommended. If such evidence is acceptable it shows the fishermen's troubles are in a large measure due to failure to adopt the scientific information available to them. The Cockfield-Brown report draws that conclusion. S. R. Giffin and Son, Goldboro, claim our salt best for hard dry cure. A. E. Nickerson, Yarmouth, claims they did not have a loss from reddening on shipment many million pounds cut fish to American market where colour is also an all important factor. McCormack and Zatzman, St. John, very large users have had greatest satisfaction our salt. W. H. Smith, Lunenburg Sea Products, Lunenburg, reports Malagash salt very satisfactory for their processed fish trade. W. C. Smith and Company, Lunenburg, have also long appreciated the better keeping qualities Malagash salt. Fisheries department Gaspe cure demonstrator Peter Mercier wrote us last fall Malagash salt only salt with which he could produce that cure on the Magdalen Islands. While fish cured by these firms represent practically all different cures produced in maritimes we have very many maritime references including Robichaud, member of McLean commission. Several Newfoundland as well Morue Francaise St. Pierre among our best and largest customers and highly satisfied with results over several years on their cure similar to Lunenburg. In many of these cures the difference in return from the use of salt of the specification recommended will more than pay for all the salt used and Canadian Malagash salt meets the requirements.

I have every sympathy, as every hon. member from Nova Scotia has, for the fishing industry; we all realize that it has suffered a great deal and that, due to world conditions, it is in a most unfavourable position to-day. But I cannot see why a blow should be struck at another legitimate Canadian industry, the Malagash salt industry, by depreciating the quality of their product, which I think has been conclusively demonstrated by the telegrams I have just read to be equal to any other salt produced for the curing of fish. I think in fairness to this industry the hon. gentlemen opposite who have spoken in this way should withdraw or qualify their statements, as they seem to be labouring under a misapprehension. Of course, if hon. gentlemen opposite are not interested in industry in the maritime provinces they will not withdraw, but I contend that this is a legitimate industry which should not be dealt a blow on the floor of this house with respect to the quality of its products, which a great many fishermen say is eminently suitable for the purposes for which they use it.

One other point and I am through. When this industry was started a seam was developed which contained some material which caused reddening. That vein or seam has been abandoned, and to-day they are developing another seam producing an excellent quality of salt for fisheries purposes. In addition, with the scientific improvements that have been adopted by this company, they are able to produce a salt that is claimed by many fishermen to be better than any other salt used in the curing of fish.

Mr. SHORT: I listened with a great deal of interest to the discussion that took place last evening and this forenoon in connection with the fishing industry. I have been interested in that industry for the past thirty years, and I was especially interested in the remarks of my hon. friend from Shelburne-Yarmouth, who seems to be the champion of the fishing industry in western Nova Scotia.

I cannot agree with many of the suggestions made by the hon. gentleman last night and this morning, but on one point I do agree with him. That is that the government was badly advised in that they did not grant the full two weeks extension of the season to May 31, though they did give us five days more than we really expected at first. Of course, when the six weeks season was granted last winter it was understood that two weeks would be taken off the other end of the season, which would close on May 15 instead of May 31. Those six weeks were of great benefit to the fishermen of western Nova Scotia, and it is a fact that they made that bargain. Of course they expected then that they would secure their usual catch of lobsters during the month of March and April, but unfortunately March this year was a very severe month along the coast of Nova Scotia, during which few if any lobsters were taken. I have the figures here showing the catch during the months of March and April for the past three years. They are:

	Pounds	Value
1930	3,271,300	$650,372
1931	2,956,100	497,733
1932	1,751,000	264,239

So it will be seen that there was a great shortage in the catch this year as compared with the two previous years, and that is accounted for entirely by the severe weather along the coast. I made representations to the government asking that the fishermen be given the extra two weeks in order to make up for the loss they sustained particularly during March, but in their judgment the government did not see fit to grant that extension. I think they made a mistake, but I am not going to censure them for that. I believe the fishermen in western Nova Scotia are grateful for the extra five days, which will compensate them somewhat.

With regard to the drain on the lobsters, or the conservation of the fisheries, that is an exploded idea; there are just as many lobsters in the sea to-day as ever there were. As I say, I have been connected with the industry for some thirty years or more, and in each of those thirty years we were told that unless something was done in connection with the lobster season they soon would be extinct. What has been the result? Last year the catch was better than it had been for many years, and I noticed in the press the other day that when the season opened in Cape Breton they had the largest catch they have ever had. I believe in conservation, but I also believe that the department should be advised by those who know something about the industry. I am not censuring the government for what they have done; perhaps they were wise, but I think they go too much on theory rather than on practice.

I was particularly interested in the remarks of my hon. friend for Shelburne-Yarmouth. He had nothing to offer but complaints and criticisms. He criticized this government for everything that has been done by the Department of Fisheries since this government came into power, but I want to tell the committee that in the two years it has been in power this government has done more for the fishermen than the government of my hon. friend did in the nine years they were in power. They never turned a hand to do anything for the fishermen. During the few months that the present Minister of Finance was in charge of the Fisheries department, he did more for the fishing industry of Canada than any minister who has ever had charge of that department, and it was with extreme regret that the industry learned that he was giving up that portfolio to take the more responsible one of Finance. Had the Minister of Finance retained the portfolio of Fisheries, I believe he would have done something worth while for the fishing industry, for which nothing has ever been done by any minister who has ever managed the department.

My hon. friend speaks about the excise duty and the sales tax on salt. In my opinion our Canadian salt industry should receive the support of the fishing industry. It is good salt. I have had experience in the use of Malagash salt, for we have used quantities of it, and while, as the hon. member for Antigonish-Guysborough said the other night, it does leave a little scum on top of the pickle after it is made, that does not interfere with the curing of the fish. We have used thousands of tons of it and have found it very good salt indeed. We have used, occasionally, Mediterranean salt, and sometimes Turk's island salt, because vessels coming up from the West Indies can bring Turk's island salt to Nova Scotia cheaper than we can obtain the Malagash salt delivered to our plants. But so far as quality is concerned, the Malagash salt is perfectly good. It is a reliable brand and if it is properly used there is no reason why the fishermen of Nova Scotia should not be using Nova Scotia salt instead of Mediterranean or West Indies salt.

My hon. friend from Shelburne-Yarmouth spoke about a bounty on fish. That started, of course, with the Lunenburg fleet; they asked for a bounty. I suggest that if the government grants a bounty on salt fish it will have to give a bounty on fresh and smoked fish. Moreover, it will have to extend the bounty to farm produce, lumber and all other industries. I think it would be a mistake to begin giving a bounty to this or that industry. We are not in a position to grant bounties to all the natural industries of the country, and in my opinion the government would be ill-advised to give a bounty to any one particular class of fish produced in Canada.

As regards the sales tax on packages and coverings, this, of course, will include the tins as well as the outside package for canned fish. It includes the parchment covers for fillets, haddies and kippers, as well as the package. But this sales tax, it must be remembered, applies to every other industry as well as fish; it applies to every business. If we protest on behalf of the fishing industry, we must protest also on behalf of fruit and poultry, the butter and milk industry and every other. It is absolutely necessary for us to raise taxes this year from every source possible, and if it is unavoidable to tax the packages used for fish, then I say that the fishing industry will accept the tax just as other industries are accepting it. If, however, exemptions are to be made, the fishing industry must get the benefit of them along with the others. Personally, I have heard no complaints from those engaged in the fishing industry. Many of these people interested in the industry are carrying on a very large business in Nova Scotia, and I have had no complaints from them with regard to packages. They intimate that they realize the necessity for raising taxes from every possible source. The fishing industry will have to bear its share along with the others, but if exemptions are made then, as I say, we feel that we must be included.

The fishing industry has been hard hit, particularly in the last two years. During that time there is not a concern engaged in the industry that has broken even. But they are not discouraged. We feel that we are over the worst of it now, and I believe that conditions are going to improve. When they do, the fishing industry, along with others, will benefit.

I do not intend to say anything further, because I realize that the committee is anxious to get through, but I must say that this government is doing what it can for the industry, and I believe it is disposed to do all in its power to further the interests of the fishermen. My hon. friend from Shelburne-Yarmouth spoke of the report submitted by Cockfield, Brown & Company. He called it a dud, saying that there was nothing in it. I say that there is a great deal in it. If many of the suggestions contained in that report are carried out, as I believe they will be carried out by this government eventually, the result will be highly beneficial to the industry, and I think that the Minister of Finance, the former Minister of Fisheries, deserves a great deal of credit from the industry for having employed this firm, and for the report that has been submitted.

Mr. GAGNON: Has the minister received any official request for cooperation on behalf of the Quebec provincial government with regard to the maritime fisheries in the gulf and the St. Lawrence river?

Mr. DURANLEAU: Not to my knowledge.

Mr. GAGNON: Of course, the minister's answer does not satisfy me to any great extent. I understand him to say that he has no knowledge of any communication. I should like to know precisely whether the Department of Fisheries of the province of Quebec has sent a letter or a telegram or any other communication asking for the cooperation of the federal government, with a view to improving the situation in the maritime fisheries, especially in the last six months.

Mr. DURANLEAU: I am informed by my officials that during the past two years no communication has been received from the department of fisheries of the province of Quebec.

Mr. GAGNON: I am very much surprised to hear that. As was stated on the floor of the house during the discussion which took place some weeks ago on the motion of the hon. member for Charlevoix-Saguenay (Mr. Casgrain), a great number of people from the Gaspe coast, especially from the counties of Gaspe and Bonaventure came to Quebec to interview the government and ask that necessary representations be made by the Quebec government to secure the cooperation of the federal government. I hold in my hand a copy of the memorandum submitted by that delegation to the provincial government, and I should like to quote as follows:

> We affirm our confidence in the diplomacy of the provincial cabinet to conduct negotiations in view of joining with the Ottawa government and to regularize our position by way of cooperation. Since a few years, under the influence of new knowledge and the requirements of commerce, a quiet revolution has taken place in the domain of fisheries that we cannot ignore. Consequently many new initiatives are now on the order of the day; a ministry of fisheries has even been created to look after this evolution.

That memorandum was submitted to the provincial government on March 19, 1932. Since that time the hon. member for Charlevoix-Saguenay has moved very eloquently a resolution which was agreed to unanimously. This resolution asked this government to cooperate with the provincial government of Quebec in order to give assistance to the maritime fisheries. I understand that such a policy of cooperation cannot be carried on or attempted by the federal government alone. It is not an easy thing for this government to intervene. But I have no hesitation to say that this question of the development of fisheries is as vital to the province of Quebec as it is to the maritime provinces and British Columbia. In discussing this question I should like to refer to a memorandum prepared by one of the fisheries' experts in the province of Quebec, dealing with the development of fisheries in that province.

During the period from 1900 to 1920, thanks to modern scientific discoveries, numerous scientists have applied themselves intensely and successfully to the study of the sea. They have succeeded in making many discoveries relating to fish migration and have formulated many laws which have resulted in increasing the productivity of the fisheries. These studies, still practically at their inception, are being prosecuted actively year by year. In Europe alone, fourteen nations, by common consent have divided the waters in which scientific research is to be carried on. They have grouped themselves into a great intellectual cooperative society. Universities are popularizing the practical knowledge to be derived from their investigations in connection with fishing. The complete courses are already fairly extensive and cover from three to five years.

It is now generally admitted that if accurate knowledge of the different soils is essential to rational farming, some knowledge of the sea is equally essential to the profitable pursuit of fishing. In his book entitled The Products of the Sea Dr. Loir writes:

> Just as rational farming proceeds from chemical laboratories, so rational fishing finds in oceanographical laboratories all the elements essential to its development.

The natural resources conservation commission, which has devoted several of its sittings to the study of the fishery problem, has given expression to similar views. If we are to believe the high authorities who have given the deepest thought to this serious question, scientific institutions, study circles, research and demonstration centres have become as indispensable to the promotion of the fishing industry and its proper administration as they are in the case of agriculture. The solution of the problem lies in study and teaching: a technical staff is necessary to provide the required guidance. It would take too long to enumerate the different subjects one must master to qualify as an expert or specialist in fishery matters.

Scientists have not only confined themselves to the thorough investigation of marine life but they have devoted themselves no less intensely to the transformation of the industrial processes in vogue during the last century and to the improvement of commercial methods with a view to obtaining a better return. By 1900 these men were associated together under the name of International Sea Exploration Committee, which is now divided into the following three great intellectual associations:

> The International Sea Exploration Committee.
> The International Mediterranean Committee.
> The International Fishery Research Committee of North America.

The United States, France and Canada are members of the latter committee.

As the fisheries of the province of Quebec have been entirely under the control of the provincial government since 1922 and as the fishery map of our province, according to the annual report on fisheries issued by Ottawa, seems to have been deleted from that of the dominion, it goes without saying that we are not represented on this International Fishery Research Committee of North America. We do not belong to any group as we do in the case of agriculture, and the official circles of our province have appeared to be perfectly satisfied with this state of affairs, at least up to the last session of the legislature. They have not even thought of providing us with an intelligent nomenclature of the fish varieties to be found in the province of Quebec. Our provincial fishery service is composed of a staff which lacks scientific, industrial and commercial training. After eight years of groping there are no institutions of learning, there are no demonstration establishments and the service is powerless and absolutely incapable of solving the many problems which arise. The lamentable failure of its undertakings in connection with porpoise destruction, refrigeration construction and so on justifies amply the criticism which has been directed against it. Establishments of this kind have existed for several years in all parts of Europe, even in the least advanced countries such as Esthonia, Bulgaria and so on. Establishments are to be found in the British, Italian and French colonies and even Indo-China. The fishermen of the province of Quebec are placed at a disadvantage when compared with those of Indo-China who enjoy a leadership which keeps in contact with modern progress.

For about twenty-five years prior to 1922 public opinion in the province of Quebec was misled by the constantly reiterated claim that the organization of our fisheries depended upon the question of jurisdiction. This formed the subject of endless discussions between Quebec and Ottawa. It will be remembered that since 1898 there has been a constant conflict between the governments at Quebec and Ottawa with regard to jurisdiction. Three cases have been submitted by the courts of the province of Quebec for decision by the privy council. British Columbia had to cope with the same difficulty but that province was parctical enough to use them as a pretext to delay the organization of its fisheries. In spite of its conflicts, it never ceased to cooperate with Ottawa, and at the present time that province possesses two marine biological stations located at Prince Rupert and Nanaimo, and also a well organized and complete fishery service which, according to the statement of the former Minister of Justice (Mr. Lapointe) on April 3, 1922, costs the federal treasury $400,000 a year and yields but a trifling revenue. On the other hand, the maritime provinces led by practical men have applied themselves with sincerity and perseverance to the study of the various aspects of the fishing industry. Instead of fighting the federal authorities and confusing the minds of the people, they have cooperated with them in order to strengthen their hand. As early as 1900 the maritime provinces had a marine biological station located at St. Andrews, the first of its kind in Canada. Later, about 1922, under the direction of Professor Cobb, of Washington university, they founded the Halifax Fishery School at a cost of $100,000 provided by the federal government. A few years later, a second biological station, more up to date and better equipped, was constructed at Halifax, again at the expense of the federal government. All these institutions contribute to the training of industrial executives and others who fill the most difficult positions in the fisheries service.

Towards 1915 there was organized the Canadian Fisheries Association, to which the best minds of the country, representatives of the federal and provincial governments, of the universities and of big business, contribute their valuable cooperation, and, at the annual meetings, which mark epochs in the life of the movement, discuss all questions affecting the fishing industry. It is this well organized and effective influence, which the province of Quebec has always ignored, that, on July 12, 1928, brought about the appointment of a deputy minister of fisheries separate from the Department of Marine, and, in 1930, the creation of a department of fisheries.

It is likewise to the efforts and recommendations of this association that we owe the reform that has been going on for fifteen years of the whole federal service; information offices in all the provinces except Quebec, a service composed of trained and disciplined men, marine biological laboratories at St. Andrews, Halifax, Prince Rupert and Nanaimo, improved transportation by rail and water of the products of the sea, and all the advantages that have brought about the development of the fisheries of the other provinces to the point where they command the attention even of foreigners.

The spirit that has guided the evolution observed beyond our boundaries has been altogether different from that seen in Quebec, where politicians, apparently indifferent to the promotion of our fisheries and unconcerned with their future, have contented themselves with boasting of their exploits and of their achievements before the courts. Quebec has ignored too much the cooperative and educational movement. Who amongst our public men has set himself up as the qualified defender of our population of 50,000 souls who, drawing their livelihood from the fishing industry, inhabit a territory capable of maintaining 100,000 persons and more? Lack of vision, indifference, want of organization and knowledge, together with an absurd policy, have caused our fishermen to emigrate in large numbers and have brought about stagnation in the region of the gulf. As Monseigneur Roy, the well known educator, has said: "Our provincialism is heightened by an intellectual provincialism that is a Canadian form of ignorance. We are too little acquainted with the intellectual accomplishments of our neighbours."

The province of Quebec now bears the sorry reputation of being the most backward of all as regards the capacity of its fishery staff and the application of scientific research to fisheries. The success or failure of any industry being dependent upon the attention given to it and upon its good or bad administration, it is not to be wondered at that Quebec fishermen have an income lower than those of the other provinces, as is shown by the following table taken from the statistics of 1919-20. The figures which I am going to quote have been extracted from a memorandum which was submitted by a delegation of fishermen who interviewed the provincial government on March 19, 1932. The figures are as follows:

Province	Number of fishermen	Total income	Average income per man
British Columbia	11,464	$28,301,607	$2,207
Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta	1,665	1,649,044	1,170
Ontario	4,156	3,410,750	826
Nova Scotia	22,085	15,171,929	687
New Brunswick	10,452	4,979,574	477
Prince Edward Island	3,399	1,536,844	463
Quebec	10,699	4,358,731	398

Mark the great difference between British Columbia and Quebec. In 1920, in British Columbia the fishermen had an average income of $2,207, while in Quebec it was $398. I should not like to be considered a detractor of my province, but the figures I am quoting are of interest as showing that all governments which have been at the head of affairs, whether in Quebec or Ottawa and of whatever party, have neglected their duties to our fishermen. Since I put all parties on the same footing, I think I shall not be accused of being inspired by narrow political criticism.

Mr. NEILL: Would the hon. gentleman tell me where he gets his information that the British Columbia fisherman's income is $2,000?

Mr. GAGNON: These figures, as I said a moment ago, are taken from statistics of 1919-20.

Mr. NEILL: Oh.

Mr. BRADETTE: The hon. member is decrying his own province.

Mr. GAGNON: The hon. member for North Timiskaming, who is interrupting, knows nothing about fisheries; he has never opened his mouth in the house in regard to that industry. Why, then, should he interrupt me?

Mr. BRADETTE: I am interrupting the hon. member because he is decrying his own province.

Mr. GAGNON: The figures have been chosen for the year 1919-20 because it was in that year that the judgment of the privy council was rendered giving exclusive jurisdiction to the federal government over the fisheries in the maritimes and Quebec. Our fishermen in 1919-20 were thus at the foot of the list with an average income per season of $398. The insufficiency of this income clearly explains their demoralization and their tendency to emigrate. It would appear that the courage and patriotic spirit displayed by the late Hon. Mr. Perron, Liberal Minister of Agriculture in Quegec, on the subject of agriculture, was needed to secure the admission of this cruel truth concerning our fisheries and to proclaim it loudly in official circles in order to arouse our administrators.

Such were the circumstances under which the provincial government, in 1922, negotiated the administration of the whole of our fisheries, the federal government consenting, without opposition, to surrender them to the province, and this was done at the expense of the provincial treasury and the sacrifice of our reputation. If not one of the objectives at least the consequence of this transaction, cleverly engineered by certain high federal officials and escaping the penetration of our provincial ambassador, was to get rid of the province of Quebec, in order to keep all fishery subsidies for the other provinces, particularly for the maritimes, which are the competitors of our fishermen even in our domestic market.

Mr. BRADETTE: I rise to a point of order. The hon. member has reflected on my own province. There is a rule that no hon. member may read his speech and that rule should be followed.

Mr. GAGNON: The hon. member is inconsistent, because at the beginning of the session he made about two or three speeches in the house and he has not been able to deliver one without reading it.

Mr. BRADETTE: I never read my speeches and I want the hon. member to withdraw those words, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN: I think the hon. member for Dorchester must accept the denial of the hon. member for North Timiskaming. That is the well-known rule. So far as the reading of speeches is concerned, any hon. member has the right to consult his notes, but the rule is that no member may read his speech.

Mr. GAGNON: I gladly bow to your ruling, Mr. Chairman, and if the hon. member for North Timiskaming says that he never reads his speeches I am obliged to tell my eyes that they have not seen what they have seen and I must accept his denial. I was simply quoting some notes from a memorandum which has been given to me by one of our fishery experts in the province of Quebec.

The CHAIRMAN: The hon. member is quite entitled to quote from his authority. While no member is allowed to read his speech, every member is entitled to consult his notes and to quote from memoranda.

Mr. GAGNON: In order to close the controversy, Mr. Chairman, I shall try to raise my eyes a little higher so as not to offend my hon. friend from North Timiskaming, who does not like to see a sheet of paper in the hands of an hon. member.

The agreement which was entered into in 1922 between the federal government and the provincial government whereby the federal government transferred to the provincial authority the administration of the maritime fisheries of the province of Quebec has been most detrimental to the interests of fishermen and to the fisheries in general, as was admitted in this house three weeks ago by the hon. member for Charlevoix-Saguenay. He then stated that it was a mistake on the part of the federal government to transfer these fisheries to the province of Quebec. The hon. member for Antigonish-Guysborough, who is also an expert in fisheries, admitted the same thing, and said that it would be more in the interests of the fisheries if that agreement should be cancelled. As I stated in the house during the debate on the motion of my hon. friend from Charlevoix-Saguenay, this agreement, which was not approved by parliament and was effectuated only by a mere order in council, is absolutely illegal and ultra vires because by the British North America Act the maritime fisheries are vested solely within the jurisdiction of the federal government.

In 1921, a few weeks before that agreement was made and after the judgment of the privy council was rendered giving complete jurisdiction to the federal government over all maritime fisheries in the province of Quebec, the federal government inaugurated a long series of reforms and especially it proposed the establishment of a fisheries bureau in the province of Quebec. The establishment of such a bureau, Mr. Chairman, would certainly have been a great help to the fisheries of Quebec just as it has proved beneficial to the fisheries of British Columbia and of the maritime provinces. Last year at the beginning of April I wrote to the present Minister of Finance, who at that time was Minister of Fisheries, the following letter, and as it is a letter I hope that my hon. friend from North Timiskaming will not be offended if I am obliged to look at it in order to read it.

Mr. BRADETTE: Very clever.

Mr. GAGNON: The letter reads as follows:

Honourable Sir,—

On the 30th of November, 1920, a judgment was rendered by the privy council which put an end to the discussion regarding the administration of the fisheries of the province of Quebec. A little later the Department of Justice commenting on this decision, interpreted it to mean that "dans les eaux navigables accessibles par voie de navigation a partir de la mer" the federal fisheries service had exclusive authority. Nevertheless, the use of the soil, the "Solum," in order to set up, maintain and use fishing equipment still retains the character of private property.

This discussion put an end to a federal-provincial conflict which had been used, during twenty years, as a pretext by many to delay the methodical and rational organization of our maritime fisheries. It made it possible for our province like all the others:

(1) To possess a single and complete service: (a) To enforce fishing laws and regulations; (b) To see that the treaties regarding the presence of foreign fishermen on our coasts were observed.

(2) To put an end to abusive and wrongly defined pretentions derived from certain seignorial privileges.

(3) To place all our fisheries, educational and police service under the direction of the federal government which alone possesses all the necessary means of action.

(4) To create a maritime biological service to study conditions on our coasts in the same manner as those already functioning in other countries and in other provinces.

(5) To establish on a well-defined basis a cooperative association of the federal and provincial governments for the purpose of stimulating our sea-fisheries. The highest authorities in the country have already recognized the fact that it is essential that the two powers work in concert in order that the administration may exercise to the full its salutary influence on our fisheries.

(6) To receive a reasonable share of the subsidies voted to fisheries, which amount to more than $2,000,000 annually.

During the season of 1921, the Department of Marine and Fisheries supervised the fishing "dans les eaux navigables par voie de navigation a partir de la mer." It elaborated and commenced to put in force a series of urgent reforms, the object of which was to collect and form a personnel possessing a scientific, technical and commercial knowledge sufficient to establish an equipment such as is found in all modern fishery services in Canada and elsewhere, for the purpose of the now universally recognized principle that in the fishing industry, as in agriculture, the State must be an educator.

In the beginning of February of the following year, after a debate in the Quebec Legislature, J. E. Perrault, Minister of Colonization, Mines and Fisheries, met the federal authorities, who, after only a few days' deliberation, yielded to the provincial government the administration of all fisheries in the province: the grave reasons which may have been given in order to justify such an arrangement have never been disclosed, no official declaration was made in order to inform the public on this point. Our population has therefore remained very poorly informed as to these secret negotiations conducted with the greatest dispatch and for an essentially political purpose without consideration for the interest of the trade in sea-products; they were rendered possible only by an excessive complaisance on the part of the federal cabinet of the time. The Right Hon. Arthur Meighen objected to the ratification of this agreement. (See Hansard, 1922.)

I am not yet acquainted with the details of the federal-provincial understanding and do not know what portion of authority the federal government ceded to the provincial, nor even if we are to understand that the provincial authorities have acquired the exercise of all the rights of the federal government; it would be strange indeed if this transfer completely destroys the effect of the decision of the privy council.

I cannot admit that as a result of the abandoning of our fisheries to the provincial government the federal government is now relieved of all obligations towards our fisheries, that it now has a motive sufficient to justify the withdrawal of its cooperation, as has been done during the last nine years; that it should abandon its program of development drawn up in 1921 and discontinue its fishery service established even before confederation. Our population cannot be content to contribute 25 per cent of the federal fisheries budget without deriving therefrom any benefit. In short, I prefer to believe that your department was created to relieve the social conditions of all the fishermen of the country, those of the province of Quebec not being excepted.

It is not yet opportune to mention the revision of this agreement. For the moment I wish simply to draw your attention to the abnormal situation of the fisheries of my province and to solicit your assistance in helping them.

I submit that your department, without prejudice to the provincial authorities, should be represented in Quebec, as indeed is the case in other provinces where there exists a sea-fishing industry, that it should possess a "pied-a-terre" at Quebec, which would keep in touch with our fishing fields and which would become the point of transmission for all the activities of your department. This "pied-a-terre" should be equipped in the same way as all modern fishery bureaux so as to provide all the service the present needs demand. It would interest itself in the protection of our waters and the products of the sea, the improvement of transportation facilities and publicity; it would serve as a disinterested intermediary between the producers and consumers; a centre of general information, etc., etc.; in short, to fulfill all the functions mentioned in the annual report of your department, to wit:

(a) To enforce the laws, regulations, and the articles of the various treaties with regard to the construction of fish slides in dams, the cleaning of rivers, etc.;

(b) To enforce the law regarding the inspection of fish. For the future, it is necessary that the province of Quebec be as well organized in this respect as any other and have the service of real technicians at its disposal;

(c) To enforce the law respecting the manufacture of preserved fish. This branch could be considerably developed with the help of a competent personnel;

(d) To participate in the organization of a biological marine service. We have not as yet profited by the biological marine service as constituted in 1912 by act of the federal parliament. Its intervention would be necessary for us in order to harmonize the conduct of fishing operations with our particular conditions, to instruct the fishermen and the leaders of the industry, and to create a staff to serve the industry;

(e) To centralize the knowledge relating to fishing, in its triple branches, scientific, commercial and industrial;

(f) To direct a centralizing service for catches, as exists, for example, in the maritime provinces;

(g) To see to the distribution of fishing premiums and to the compilation of statistics;

(h) To carry on a publicity movement for sea products and to augment the consumption of fish;

(i) Etc., etc.

The above mentioned activities are organized elsewhere as federal services, are equally necessary in my province, which desires to have them, but our provincial government does not appear to have jurisdiction.

The CHAIRMAN: Order. The hon. member has spoken forty minutes.

Mr. MARCIL (Translation): Mr. Chairman, it is quite evident that if the hon. member for Dorchester (Mr. Gagnon), is appointed Minister of Fisheries, he will very efficiently discharge the duties of this office. The position is vacant and the house must not be astonished if the hon. member is called upon to administer that department, after the proofs of efficiency he has just given.

I have no knowledge of the fishery development in the county of Dorchester, however, what he has just stated about the fisheries in the counties of Gaspé and Bonaventure has added nothing to my knowledge. They were facts with which I was well acquainted. The hon. member referred back to the year 1922, I shall go further back; thirty-five years ago, in 1897, I had the honour of being the Liberal candidate against the Hon. Mr. Flynn, then Prime Minister of Quebec and member for his native county, Gaspé. The vote, at first, was favourable to me, however, after a recount, the Hon. Mr. Flynn was declared elected. My opponent, in 1897, rested the whole of his campaign on the right which the Quebec Legislature had of controlling the fisheries in the province and. during the last week of the election, the Hon. Mr. Flynn read a despatch from London informing us that the Privy Council had just decided that the leases for salmon fishing, etc., were under the provincial jurisdiction. The Hon. Mr. Flynn took the stand that this judgment constituted a great provincial victory. It is therefore useless to go back to 1922, as we can go further back and prove that the Conservative party of that day had championed the cause of Quebec, so far as fisheries are concerned.

The conflict continued, and, in 1921, another decision was given by the Privy Council, declaring that navigable waters were under the jurisdiction of the Dominion government, but that the shores formed part of the provincial domaine; the provincial government's authority was supreme on land while that of the Dominion was supreme on the waters. The conflict still continued, since the judgment of the Privy Council had not settled the question and that there existed two jurisdictions, federal at high tide and provincial on land. There was a settlement so far as the Magdalen islands, because they were entirely surrounded with water, and they were left under dominion control.

What interests the Gaspé and Bonaventure fishermen, to-day, are not questions of jurisdiction or administration; they want, especially, markets to sell their fish. When I had the privilege of being elected in 1900, fisheries existed at St. Charles-de-Caplan, St. Siméon, St. Bonaventure, Paspébiac, Port Daniel and at l'Anse-aux-Gascons. It is a section of the country entirely inhabited by fishermen and where fishing was carried on a large scale. The fisheries then were partly under the control of the dominion, and partly under the control of the province. At all events, the fishermen to-day, have no complaint to make in this connection; they are not as well informed as the hon. member for Dorchester on the subject; but what they do complain of, is the lack of markets for the sale of their fish. It is up to the dominion government to find the markets, they are entrusted with negotiating trade treaties with foreign countries and are obliged to find markets for our products. Naturally, the Conservative policy, by increasing the tariff, created, by that fact, the impossibility of trading abroad. My first remarks, in the house, after the advent of this government, condemned this policy, because I was aware of what had taken place for over a quarter of a century. When we wish to trade with other countries, we must purchase from them; if we wish to sell abroad, we must make purchases abroad; if not, other nations will not buy from us as long as we continue to increase the tariff.

The government, through the medium of its Department of Trade and Commerce, has already begun to demolish this tariff wall. The hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Stevens), fortunately, was able to conclude a trade treaty with New Zealand, to undo what the government had done the previous year. An Imperial Economic Conference is to be held in July next, it will give us an opportunity of finding markets for our products. We have no markets, and that is the underlying cause of the distress existing in this country, which is rich in natural resources of all kinds, both on land and sea. There are as many fish in the sea to-day, as there were 20, 30 or 50 years ago; the markets alone are lacking. Our fishermen, our young men of Gaspé, were obliged to give up fishing because they could not dispose of their catch. The same may be said of agriculture.

During the last dominion election I had to face a bitter attack on the question of New Zealand butter. Men who were ignorant of the subject or else were badly informed, proclaimed highly that if the treaty, which was then existing, was repealed, Canadian butter would increase in price. It was then sold at 35 cents per pound; it now sells from 15 to 17 cents. The Gaspe potatoes which are not graded, have no market. The hon. Minister of Agriculture for Quebec, informed me, when he last visited Ottawa, that two or three car loads of potatoes from Rimouski had been offered on the Montreal market at 10 cents per bushel, and had not found a purchaser. Last year, not one single lumber camp, in Gaspe, was thrown open, where, usually, all winter thousands of young men find work; the result is that the farmers of the two counties comprised in Gaspe, were unable to sell their products. The barns are still filled with hay and cellars full of potatoes and people are in great distress. I am in receipt of letters from persons who are best able to judge of these facts in that section of the country, asking me to request the government to assist these people who are undergoing a crisis as they never have experienced before owing to the lack of markets to sell their products. Our young people are leaving us, forced by circumstances to abandon the Gaspe peninsula in order to earn a livelihood in other sections of the country; not only are they to be found in Quebec or Montreal, but large numbers have emigrated to the United States; there is a colony of them in Detroit and many others are to be found in various places of the United States. People were told, at the last election, that a new regime would improve the situation, in a short time; unfortunately the country was deceived, but is now wiser. If we had to-morrow, an election in Quebes or in any part of Canada, the people's verdict would perhaps not be the same.

Mr. CHEVRIER (Translation): Hear, hear!

Mr. MARCIL (Translation): I know as a fact that in the constituency I represent, the people would condemn this administration. However, this is not the time to discuss politics.

I would request the hon. member for Dorchester, who read to us a long list of requests he addressed to the former Minister of Fisheries, to strongly insist with the present minister that he must grant his requests. If the hon. member can be of service to the fishermen of his native province, they will feel very grateful to him and I trust that before long we shall see him at the head of the Department of Fisheries in which he seems greatly interested. He delivered just now a very interesting speech on the situation existing in Europe and elsewhere. All this is very well, but what we need at present, are markets. The sadest part of it all is that, meanwhile, the people have no markets and we must find them some as soon as possible. Instead of devoting any more time to the question of fisheries—let him blame one government or the other, for they are often both at fault—I think that he should set aside this question of jurisdiction and endeavour to use the influence which he certainly has to convince the hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Stevens) that he must, necessarily, find markets for the products of the farmers and fishermen of Quebec and the other sections of the country.

We have very often heard speeches advocating bonuses to coal, wheat and their transportation. The new trade treaty with New Zealand is almost exclusively to the advantage of British Columbia. The government has made concessions of every description. There are bonuses on Nova Scotia steel, on coal, on the carrying of Western wheat. In a word, all groups who support the present government seem able to exert on the administration an influence which, I am sorry to note by the results secured to date, is not exerted by the Conservative deputation from the province of Quebec.

Mr. Chairman, the hon. member for Dorchester is a talented young man who will probably be called upon to play a commanding part. If he wishes to render a real service to his province, he should assume the leadership of a movement to secure for the mother province of the dominion the help farmers require, for they are the backbone of this country. To repeat the words spoken by one of his predecessors as representative of the Quebec district, I believe: The last citizen to stand under the British flag in Canada will be a French-Canadian. I believe those words are true. The inhabitants of Quebec were the first Canadians, they have remained Canadians and they will so remain for ever. We have a right to expect from the federal government the treatment we are entitled to receive. I trust the Conservative representation from Quebec will bring its influence to bear while it is in a position to do so and holds the balance of power. The present administration would not exist without the Quebec representation. Without the 25 ridings which the Liberals lost in Quebec, the Government would not have attained power. I understand the minister is only directing the Fisheries department provisionally. The member for Dorchester will probably be entrusted with the administration of that department at no distant date. I would ask the members supporting the government to improve their tenure of office by coming to the assistance of the people of Quebec who are greatly in need of it from every standpoint. I will not insist further.

Mr. Chairman, I thank you for the opportunity you have given me to make these observations. I would ask my colleagues who sit to the right to put politics aside, to devote their attention to the real interests of the fishermen, the farmers of the province of Quebec, also to the poor workingmen of the city of Montreal who to-day are out of work and in a most distressing situation, and their number runs into thousands. The administration has a splendid opportunity to come to their help. Let us forget the past, let us face the present and the future.

Mr. RALSTON: I should like to say just a word in reply to the remarks of my hon. friend from Cumberland. I think he will search in vain to find anything I said derogatory to Malagash salt. What I did say was that I had done my very best to assist Mr. Chambers and those connected with him in finding a market for that product among the fishermen of Nova Scotia and that at least some of the men found difficulty in using it.

[Mr. Marcil.]

The objection which I was taking to the sales tax on salt was the objection he has taken, namely that a blow should not be struck at a Canadian industry. The industry to which I am referring is the fishing industry of Nova Scotia, which is to use his own words, 100 per cent Canadian, and which is being struck a blow by this six per cent sales tax on a raw material used in connection with that industry, plus three per cent excise tax. I say the fishermen of Nova Scotia do not deserve that, and in that sense I object to the taxation which is being imposed by this government.

There is one other matter. The minister suggests that the reason the excise tax is not being made applicable to Newfoundland is because of the fear of reprisals. I thought that was the one thing about which this government cared nothing at all. They were going to make a Canadian tariff and enact Canadian laws without regard to what anyone else did. Now it seems they are changing their attitude. I only want to say that I do not want to see the fishing industry of Nova Scotia sacrificed in order to avoid reprisals. I suggested to my hon. friend that the three per cent tax was imposed as an excise tax and not a duty, and was made applicable to Great Britain and the dominions overseas, so it seems to me that it could hardly be regarded as a hostile act if it were made applicable to the dominion of Newfoundland as well.

My hon. friend from Digby-Annapolis paid a high tribute to the record of this government in connection with fisheries. I would not expect my hon. friend to do anything else; he is a loyal supporter of this government through evil times and good, and even though the government did not accept his recommendation and mine with regard to the lobster season—

Mr. SHORT: They did accept my recommendation in part.

Mr. RALSTON: Even though they did not accept his recommendation and mine with regard not to the extension but the restoration of the lobster season, I would not expect my hon. friend to complain. I want to tell him that when the time comes I am quite prepared to discuss with him or with anyone else the record of this government, as compared with that of the previous government, with regard to fisheries. I think he will find that the only two things that have been done by this government—he may know of something more, though I doubt it—in connection with fisheries were the appointment of the Cockfield Brown commission, which made the report to which I referred this morning, and the adoption of a regulation which provided that trawlers should be marked with a number on the bow of the boat and that the numbers shall be at least eighteen inches in height.

Mr. SHORT: We have been in power only two years, and hon. gentlemen opposite were in power for nine years.

Mr. RALSTON: If those accomplishments are any comfort to my hon. friend—

Mr. SHORT: Wait until we are in nine years.

Mr. RALSTON: —of course he is entitled to it.

Mr. GAGNON: I thank the hon. member for Bonaventure for the kind words he has said about me. The time, of course, is too limited to engage in an exchange of compliments, although I appreciate the one he has paid me. I understood from his words that he wished me to continue reading the letter I sent last year to the Minister of Fisheries. The rest of that letter reads:

With reference to the protection of our waters, I wish to draw your attention in particular to the fact that there exists at present in the gulf and in the northern part of the gulf, a nuisance which causes incalculable damage to our fishers and which will become a menace in the future: porpoises. It has been calculated that their number reaches approximately 100,000 and that they consume 1,000,000 tons of small fish every year. These statistics are astounding. It permits us to doubt the utility and usefulness of fishing regulations as long as the porpoises continue to thrive in our waters in such considerable numbers. They take away more merchantable fish in a week tnan could be taken away by any illegal fishing in many seasons.

In the past the poirpoise schools limited their activities to the entrance of the Saguenay or thereabouts. We are therefore convinced that this section was the home of a very intense maritime life for it was sufficient during many centuries to furnish them the quantity of food necessary for life. No biological research has as yet been conducted in this section, but simple observation permits us to state that it is the point on which converged during centuries many species of fish coming from the Atlantic and from the sources of the St. Lawrence. When this fact is more clearly demonstrated, we must assuredly be convinced that the destruction of porpoises interests the maritime provinces and the province of Ontario as well as Quebec, and that therefore the problem is a national one, and consequently a federal one.

From the fact that the porpoises for the last ten years stay less in the district of the Saguenay than for centuries previous, we must conclude that they no longer find sufficient nourishment, and that the river St. Lawrence is so impoverished by their depredations that they are forced to emigrate towards the gulf. Their destructive work is continually increasing and prevents all profitable fishing operations. It is now common knowledge that many species of fish, which it is claimed go up the river to spawn, have considerably diminished in the last 25 or 50 years.

The government of Quebec undertook to solve this problem but did not succeed; it has, however, become too serious to be abandoned. We can but conclude that the federal parliament alone must see to the removal of a danger which threatens the whole of Canada. When it was a question of lessening the harmful effect of dogfish and seals, etc., affecting the fishing industry of certain provinces, the federal government deemed it proper to intervene; it cannot ignore the problem caused by the presence of porpoises in our waters. Since it concerns the future of the St. Lawrence, the problem is serious enough to warrant the attention of the federal government, on whose part action or cooperation is essential.

In concluding I submit that the federal government, even though the agreement of 1922 be not revised and remain as it is at present, must, in Quebec as well as elsewhere, join in finding a solution for all our fishing problems, and that we also have all possible reasons to claim the organization by it of a modern, competent fishing service, well furnished, and which the provincial government cannot render complete for different reasons.

There exist, I am perfectly convinced, many gaps in our fishing administration, a field of great enterprise where the influence of your department could be beneficently employed and which demands its intervention. To arrive at a practical result I can suggest nothing better, in the first place, than the establishment of a local fisheries bureau in order to establish a contact with our population. This bureau would be the starting point for many other useful enterprises which would develop in due course.

I attach a great importance to the question which I have tried to lay before you, and dare to hope that you will give this problem your prompt and serious attention. I do not doubt that all the members of the province of Quebec will give it their enthusiastic approval.

Hoping to have the occasion of discussing this matter with the expert of your department,

I beg you to accept, dear Mr. Rhodes, my kindest regards,

O. Gagnon.

This letter was sent in April, 1931, and I was pleased later on to see that my recommendations were included in part, although in different terms, in the memorandum submitted to the provincial government in March, 1932, by the fishermen of Bonaventure, Gaspe and Saguenay. I can only repeat now to the minister, who loves his province so well and who knows the condition of the fisheries there, the demand I made to his predecessor, and ask him to try his best to remedy the detrimental situation which was brought about by the transfer of maritime fisheries to the government of Quebec in 1922.

As the hon. member for Bonaventure said a moment ago, in the province of Quebec there is an abnormal situation. The federal government has transferred the whole of the maritime fisheries of the St. Lawrence river to the provincial government; nevertheless, it kept under its supervision and control that part of the maritime fisheries pertaining to the Magdalen islands, which, as you know, belong to the province of Quebec. We find, therefore, on the one hand, that the maritime fisheries of the province of Quebec in the St. Lawrence river have been transferred to the government of that province, while on the other hand, the maritime fisheries in the gulf of St. Lawrence have been transferred to Halifax, because the fisheries of the Magdalen islands in the gulf of St. Lawrence are under the control of Nova Scotia.

It appears, therefore, that this agreement, which was entered into, is not only illegal and ultra vires but is absolutely ridiculous, and it is detrimental to the interests of the fishermen. I appreciate the fact that the minister cannot immediately put an end to that agreement, because it is bilateral: both the federal and the provincial governments are committed to it, so that without first having received a request from the provincial government for its abrogation, the minister cannot put an end to it. I have in my hand documents showing that the provincial government does not at present wish to have the agreement abrogated, but if that is not possible just now, owing to the fact that the government of the province of Quebec does not wish it, nevertheless I think we ought to do something for the fisheries of that province. And one thing which in my opinion is absolutely necessary is the establishment of a fisheries office in Quebec, which would begin to supervise conditions in the province, make a thorough investigation and suggest to the government the proper steps to be taken to meet the situation that exists there.

A moment ago my hon. friend from Comox-Alberni showed some surprise at the figures I gave. I have here the figures showing the revenue of the fishermen of Canada for the year 1930, and I find that the per capita revenue in British Columbia was $1,194.

Mr. NEILL: Who says that?

Mr. GAGNON: I am giving this from the statistics for 1930.

[Mr. Gagnon.]

Mr. NEILL: But who says it?

Mr. GAGNON: As my hon. friend knows, the Year Book is published by the Department of Trade and Commerce, but the articles are not signed. But these figures have been compiled by the technicians and experts of that department. They were taken from the memorandum submitted to the provincial government by the fishermen of Bonaventure and Gaspe. I did not invent these figures myself; they were quoted in the memorandum submitted by the fishermen who asked the provincial government to do something to put an end to the illegal agreement which was entered into in 1922. As I say, the per capita revenue of fishermen in British Columbia for the year 1930 was $1,194, whereas in the province of Quebec it was only $206. According to the officials of the department, during the last ten years the annual average revenue of the fishermen of Quebec has diminished rather than grown. In 1920, the average earnings were $398, while by 1930, they had dropped to $206.

I do not wish to take up the time of the committee any longer except to say that I respond to the invitation given by the hon. member for Bonaventure (Mr. Marcil) who stated that I ought to ask the government to help the fishermen and farmers of Quebec. I do not intend to ask hon. members to read my speeches, but on April 15 last I was courageous enough to ask the government of the day to do for the eastern farmer as much as it was doing for the western farmer.

Before taking my seat, I ask the minister to try to satisfy the fishermen of Quebec and establish a fishery bureau which I know will prove to be as useful as similar establishments which have been created in connection with other departments, especially the Department of Agriculture. On April 15 last I stated that dual establishment, dual legislation and dual administration in connection with the same subjects were not in the interests of the people. It is absolutely against the public interests for the government of Quebec and the federal government to devote their energies concurrently to the same subjects, but we cannot change the situation brought about by confederation. This situation can be remedied only by calling together as soon as possible a provincial conference to study ways and means of preventing dual administration. Until this conference takes place or until other steps are taken to remedy the situation, I think we ought to do for fisheries what we have done for agriculture and other industries.

While it is true the federal government has transferred the administration of fisheries to the province of Quebec, it should still take an interest in the fishermen. Notwithstanding the sympathy the provincial government may have for the fishermen, notwithstanding its desire to help fishermen in general, it is unable to solve the problem. The problem of the fisheries is not only provincial in character, it is national and even international. Every year fishermen come from Newfoundland to fish along the coast of Charlevoix-Saguenay and Gaspe. The provincial authorities are unable to put a stop to this practice; the provincial government has no authority to take any steps to remedy the situation. In 1922 the federal government had a boat equipped for this service, which boat was managed by experts. The gentleman at the head of that particular branch of the department in Quebec was Doctor Bernier, who has a wide knowledge of all questions affecting the fisheries. This gentleman has been in the department for almost ten years and has rendered great service to the fishermen.

I think I have spoken long enough, and I thank the hon. Minister of Fisheries for listening patiently to my remarks. Should he receive a letter from the provincial government, I ask the minister to rise above party prejudices and recognize that this is not only a provincial problem but rather one that is national in scope. I ask him to forget party differences and to do his best to help the provincial authorities in this regard.

Mr. VENIOT: Mr. Chairman, I have listened with a great deal of interest to the hon. member for Dorchester (Mr. Gagnon) and to the attack he made upon the administration of fisheries by the government of the province of Quebec. Whatever may have been his object in making that attack he certainly was far afield in his comparisons to show the results of the administration. The hon. member pointed out that in 1930 the earning capacity of the average fisherman in British Columbia was $1,194 as compared with $206 for the average fisherman in Quebec, but he failed to throw the proper light upon this subject by giving the earning capacity of the average fisherman in New Brunswick and Nova Scotia, where the fisheries are under the control of the federal government. If he had given those figures the committee would have seen that the same conditions prevail in New Brunswick and Nova Scotia that he says prevail in Quebec.

The hon. member stated that every fall fishermen from Newfoundland come and fish in Quebec waters but he knows quite well that the vessels do not come for fish; they are engaged in the sealing business. The hon. member should have told the committee that under the decision of the privy council the province of Quebec has absolutely nothing to do with fishing outside the three mile limit; that is entirely under the jurisdiction of the Dominion government. He should also have told the committee that so far as regulations for the administration of fisheries are concerned the provincial government has nothing at all to do with the laying down, the adopting and the putting into force of regulations for the conservation of fisheries. That matter is under the jurisdiction of the federal government, and althought the provincial government has taken over the care of the fisheries, in the final analysis it has nothing to do with passing or adopting regulations for the conservation of fish.

Mr. GAGNON: That is exactly what I said.

Mr. VENIOT: Far from it. Having referred to the inconsistent attitude of the hon. gentleman in connection with his comparisons, let me now come to another point.

I wish it to be distinctly understood that any remarks which I have made in connection with Malagash or any other salt manufactured in Canada were not made with the intention of knocking the industry.

Mr. MACDOUGALL: The hon. member knows nothing about it.

Mr. VENIOT: The hon. member says I know nothing about it, but he knows less. If the hon. gentleman had wanted to be fair in dealing with the salt question he would have told this committee that complaints have been so numerous in connection with the use of Malagash salt that the government has instituted an investigation to be carried on by the biological branch. That branch has not as yet obtained sufficient evidence to permit its submitting an official report. It would never have been called upon to make this investigation—

Mr. MACDOUGALL: Will my hon. friend place himself on record as being opposed to the use of Malagash salt by the fishermen of Nova Scotia?

Mr. VENIOT: I am not talking about the fisheries in Nova Scotia.

Mr. MACDOUGALL: No, the hon. member is talking about salt and he is opposed to Malagash salt.

Mr. VENIOT: I say that at present the fishermen cannot use Malagash salt to advantage.

Mr. MACDOUGALL: The hon. member is trying to destroy that industry.

Mr. VENIOT: Let the hon. gentleman hold his peace.

Mr. SMITH (Cumberland): I think the hon. gentleman was in the house when I read a telegram from the fisheries experimental station at Halifax.

Mr. VENIOT: Yes, I was, and I am talking about the biological board.

Mr. SMITH (Cumberland): That is under the biological board.

Mr. VENIOT: The hon. gentleman read a telegram from that station. He should have procured his information from the Department of Fisheries. As he is in Ottawa, he needs only to call up by telephone to find out what the report in that department is. That is the official report and it is what should have been read in the house rather than these telegrams. Let me proceed: The hon. gentleman read a letter from the McCormack firm in St. John, but he told the committee that they were putting up smoked herring and gaspereau. I have no complaint to make against Malagash salt in the conservation of smoked herring and gaspereau.

Mr. MACDOUGALL: The hon. member is now taking back what he said.

Mr. VENIOT: Will the hon. gentleman kindly keep his peace Mr. Chairman, I think I am entitled to order. I am taking nothing back. I do not have to do so.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. MacDonald, Cape Breton South): I should like to call the attention of the committee to this rule:

> Sometimes there are a number of items in a resolution. Each item may then, if the committee think proper, be taken up as a distinct question, and so discussed and amended. The debate in such a case must be strictly relevant to the item, and when it has been disposed of, no reference can be again made to it when the subsequent items are under consideration.

This item refers to salaries and disbursements of fishery officers and guardians, fisheries patrol and fisheries protection services. I think the debate has gone somewhat far afield and I would ask hon. members to confine themselves to the item before the chair.

Mr. VENIOT: I agree with you, Mr. Chairman, but when I am hitting back at arguments that have been advanced all afternoon, I do not think you should shut me off. I intend to continue meeting those arguments until such time as the chair orders me to sit down. I do not intend to take up much time if the hon. member for Inverness will just hold his peace for a while and let me proceed.

I was referring to the letter read from the McCormack firm in Saint John. They put up smoked herring and gaspereau. They admit that the brine derived from Malagash salt has a scum over it. That will not injure the smoked herring, nor will it be noticed after the herring is taken out of the brine and prepared for the market by smoking, nor will it injure nor detract from the value of the gaspereau treated in the same way. By that scum and by the colour it leaves on the salted cod, there is injury done not so much to the cod salted and prepared for drying and dried for the market as to the cod caught and put up in the fall of the year, what we call half-prepared or half-cured cod for the Brazilian, Italian and Portugese markets. That is where the Malagash salt becomes injurious to the cod fisheries of northern New Brunswick.

Mr. MACDOUGALL: Will the hon. member permit me a question?

Mr. VENIOT: No, I will permit no question.

Mr. MACDOUGALL: How long is the hon. member going to continue this?

Mr. VENIOT: Sit down!

Mr. MACDOUGALL: I shall not. I do not want to have an industry in Nova Scotia blackguarded by the hon. member or anyone else who does not know what he is talking about.

Mr. VENIOT: I want that word "blackguarded" taken back.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. MacDonald, Cape Breton South): I think that word should be withdrawn.

Mr. VENIOT: I want it withdrawn now.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Go ahead.

Mr. VENIOT: Withdraw.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. MacDonald, Cape Breton South): I think the hon. member should withdraw that expression "blackguarded."

Mr. MACDOUGALL: I do not wish to see a member from New Brunswick decrying an industry that is capable of development.

Mr. VENIOT: That is not a withdrawal.

Mr. MACDOUGALL: I do not wish to cause any trouble, but I want to see this industry developed in Nova Scotia and I am sure no member from one of the other maritime provinces would try to oppose its development.

Mr. VENIOT: I want that word "blackguarded" withdrawn.

Mr. MACDOUGALL: Certainly, I withdraw it, but the hon. member is not doing anything to assist the development of the industry in Nova Scotia.

Mr. VENIOT: I am not decrying the Malagash salt industry, but I am just as much concerned in defending the rights of the fishing industry in my province as the hon. member from Nova Scotia is in defending the industry in his province. If we are compelled to bring in Malagash salt and use it in the fishing industry in New Brunswick, the use of that salt will lessen the value of our cod on the market because of the discolouration that takes place in the brine. Everybody admits there is a scum and that scum will discolour, especially the cod caught late in the fall of the year. That cod should be almost perfectly white in order to command on the market the price that it should receive. The price is diminished by reason of the fact that that white cod is discoloured by the Malagash salt. That is the only objection I have to its use; I am not objecting to its use in the conservation of herring.

Mr. SMITH (Cumberland): I think it was admitted in one of the telegrams I read from a firm that they found this sediment or discolouration material, but they have abandoned that seam and are working a new seam which is absolutely clear and without sediment.

Mr. VENIOT: I have no proof of that to warrant any person using it and that is the reason, if I mistake not, that the Department of Fisheries ordered an investigation of which they have not yet received the final report. I am positive that if the time comes when scientific research shows that that sediment no longer exists, our New Brunswick fishermen will use the Malagash salt. But they will not use it in any quantity until they are sure that its use is not going to destroy the cash value of the product they put on the market. That is all I wish to say now in respect to that or anything else connected with the fisheries.

As regards the sales tax and excise tax we shall discuss them on their merits in their proper place, when they come before the house.

Mr. DURANLEAU: I wish to say only a word of explanation. I do not intend to make long comments on all the statements made by the different speakers, but I consider the hon. member for Dorchester deserves our congratulations for the able speech he made to the committee this afternoon. He is keenly interested in the fishing industry in this country. At the beginning of his remarks, he asked the Minister of Fisheries whether any communication had been received from the Minister of Fisheries of Quebec in regard to the cooperation that was suggested by a resolution adopted by this house about a month ago. I answered, not to my knowledge. I was speaking from memory and, of course, subject to correction. Since the question was put, although it is Saturday afternoon, I had somebody call at my office and make a search, and my secretary tells me that during the first days of May a letter was received from the Minister of Fisheries in the province of Quebec, Mr. La Ferte, relating to the resolution which was adopted by this house and to which I referred a moment ago, and stating that there were difficulties in the way of the administration of fisheries in the province of Quebec, and asking for the cooperation of the federal authorities on the lines suggested by the resolution. I want to make that correction immediately in order to be fair to the Minister of Fisheries in the province of Quebec.

Mr. POWER: If the hon. minister had only known that two hours ago we might have got nearer to prorogation.

Mr. DURANLEAU: This matter has been left in abeyance pending the end of the session, which has been expected from day to day during the last few days. I can assure the committee that as soon as we are relieved of the heavy work of the session I shall immediately take the matter up with the Department of Fisheries at Quebec, and any assistance or cooperation that can be given by this government to the province will be given. I can understand that the duality of administration of fisheries in the province of Quebec makes the situation perhaps somewhat difficult, but nevertheless we will do our utmost to help the provincial authorities with a view to ameliorating the situation in the interests of the fisheries of that province.

Mr. BRADETTE: I certainly do not feel like making any apology for saying a few words about the fisheries of the central part of Canada after all that we have heard about the fisheries of the maritime provinces, of Quebec and of British Columbia. It may surprise some hon. members to know that there are deep sea fish in the waters of Hudson bay and James bay. The hon. member for Dorchester (Mr. Gagnon) accused me of not knowing anything about fish. I may not know as much about fish as he does, but nevertheless I believe that the report that was made in 1930 on the fisheries of Hudson bay is not a fair report. I protested against it last year to the then Minister of Marine, and he promised that a further inquiry would be made when a proper base for operations was established. There is now no longer any need for delay, for Fort Churchill can be used as a base for fishing operations during the whole summer. I believe that in what I am going to say on this matter I shall have the backing, as I had last year, of the hon. member for Nelson (Mr. Stitt). We who live in northern Ontario or northern Quebec or northern Manitoba know that there are not only fresh water fish in the river estuaries but also salt water fish in the waters of the Hudson bay and James bay. Last year the Minister of Railways told me that he was willing and ready to cover with gold any deep sea fish that would be caught in the Hudson bay waters, and I believe that I am going to be a wealthy man, Mr. Chairman, because now we have positive proof that there exist in the Hudson bay and James bay deep sea fish. I quote from the Ottawa Morning Journal of September 12, 1931, a Canadian Press despatch by direct wire:

> The Pas, Man., Sept. 11.—There is a great future for the fishing industry in Hudson bay, in the opinion of John Ingebrechtson, who with a crew of eight men sailed a 30-foot fishing smack over Canada's inland sea this summer.
> Four samples of commercial fish taken by net from the waters of the bay have been forwarded here by the experienced fishman together with a letter telling of his experiences. The most prolific species of fish encountered, he wrote, is a pink salmon of fine quality. His men hauled in several hundred pounds of salmon in one fishing field far north of Churchill, and there was apparently no limit to the quantity there.
> The nine men left The Pas on May 27, with their small craft, which was launched at Churchill early in June. The crew spent three months on the bay testing various fields. For the most part their efforts were confined to waters north and northeast of Churchill, and they did not visit the southerly portion.
> The first profitable field was found two hundred miles north of Churchill, where salmon ranged two and a half to three feet in length.

I commended the government for appropriating in 1930 a certain amount of money for making an inquiry into the fisheries in Hudson bay. I criticized the report that was made of the operations then conducted and the very small amount of time that was spent in fishing operations. I am going to quote one paragraph of that report. It is entitled: "A preliminary report of the investigations of the Hudson bay and strait fisheries expedition of 1930 by H. B. Hachey, officer in charge." Speaking of the time spent in actual fishing operations the report says:

> The record of fishing operations furnishes the particulars of the actual fishing done. Hand lines were used at several points for seven hours and fifteen minutes.

Seven hours and fifteen minutes to cover an area of seven hundred square miles of salt water! The report continues:

> Drift-bets were used for twelve hours. Long lines were used for two hours and fifty-five minutes, and trawling operations were carried on for fifty-seven hours and fifty minutes. As a result of the total work covering the whole of Hudson bay not a single commercial fish was taken.

I objected to that report last year, as did my hon. friend from Nelson because it would be absolutely impossible in that length of time to discover the actual situation in Hudson bay. I appreciated the promise of the Minister of Railways last year that other parties would be sent to find out what was the actual situation in Hudson bay with regard to fish. I have in my hand a clipping from the Kapuskasing Tribune of last year to the effect that aeroplanes were heading for James bay, and later on they landed at Moose Factory, where fisheries were going to be developed. The despatch goes on:

> During the first week of April a second plane visited Moose, this time alighting on the Moose harbour side. It brought in a party of the Moose River Fishing Syndicate, who have established themselves at this point.

Last fall in speaking of this matter with some of the officials in Cochrane and North Bay the mining engineer of the Temiskaming and Northern Ontario railway told me that there was a report in the hands of the federal government with reference to certain investigations that had taken place in years past with regard to the fisheries in the Hudson bay, and after making inquiry I received a copy of this report from the Department of Fisheries. It is entitled, "Reports on fisheries investigations in Hudson and James bays and tributary waters." I am going to make a few citations so that the house will realize that there are both fresh water and salt water fish in Hudson bay. I wish to remove any wrong impression that there may be in this regard. It has always seemed strange to me that whenever new developments are proposed to be undertaken in that northern country there are people who view the proposals with skepticism. I remember the campaign that was conducted against bringing the Temiskaming and Northern Ontario railway through the territory through which it now runs, which was described as a country of stunted poplar and bottomless muskeg. The same skepticism is observable to-day with regard to the natural resources in Hudson bay and James bay.

Mr. RYCKMAN: What is the date of that report?

Mr. BRADETTE: 1914. At page 24 the report, speaking of codfish, which is a salt water fish, says:

> Cod are known to occur in Hudson bay. A few schooners from St. John's fish in Hudson straits and Ungava bay every year. There would apparently be, therefore, no reason why these fish should not exist in larger quantities than have yet been found.

As I stated a moment ago, the operations that were conducted in Hudson bay in 1930, covering only a few days, were too brief to allow the real situation to be discovered. They had to cover seven hundred square miles of water in a period of about two weeks. At page 34 of this report I find this:

> The other species of the west coast are not of a great deal of economic importance; rock-cod occur in the bay and it is said that the true cod does also, but there is no record of a single specimen of either of them ever having been found on the west coast.
> Besides the strictly fish wealth, there are other forms of marine life possessed of considerable value; one such is the white whale, another is the seal. The former occurs in great numbers and as he is quite valuable for his oil,—of which he yields 100 gallons each, it may be expected that an industry founded on his products will develop as soon as the market is brought near enough to the place of production. The seal is not the fur seal but its hide makes extraordinary waterproof bags, boots, gun-covers, and so on.

I could give many other quotations from this report proving clearly that there are salt water fish in those waters. Speaking of seals the report says:

> At certain periods, notably in September, when the fish enter the rivers, seals follow them up. In the western portion of the bay visited they all appeared to be of one species, which I take to be the "barbed seal," Erignatus barbatus. I shot three of them, but unfortunately secured only one which floated some days later and was partly eaten by bears.

This proves that there are fish in commercial quantities in Hudson bay. I believe the administration is sympathetic towards the development of this great natural resource. In the report of 1914 it was said that it was almost impossible to develop any fisheries in Hudson bay because of the lack of communication; but to-day with the Temiskaming and Northern Ontario terminus at Moosomee and the Hudson bay railway terminus at Churchill, a twenty-four hour service could be given to the markets of Montreal and Toronto for any fish caught in James bay and Hudson bay. I hope the government will find it possible to extend the exploratory work that they so well started in 1930. Last year the present Minister of Finance said that once a proper basis was established at Hudson bay this exploratory work would be extended. As I have already stated, with these two railroad terminals, it would be very easy to continue the survey work with a few flat-bottomed boats, and to test the commercial possibilities of the fisheries by the use of one or two trawlers stationed at those points. I know that the Minister of Railways, although a northern Ontario man, does not believe very much in the fisheries of Hudson bay.

Mr. MANION: I understand my hon. friend quoted me a few minutes ago when I was not in the house. I should be glad if he would tell me what he said.

Mr. BRADETTE: I suppose the Minister of Railways was speaking in a jocular vein, but towards the end of last session when we were going up in the elevator he told me he would pay their weight in gold for any salt water fish caught in Hudson bay.

Mr. MANION: I take exception to that statement. I never in my life, either in a private conversation or publicly, said anything of the kind. If my hon. friend desires to quote my views with respect to the fishing possibilities in Hudson bay, I wish he would rely on a speech or public statement of some kind, because I do not care to be quoted on the strength of some conversation, whether real or imaginary.

Mr. BRADETTE: Then I will take those words back, although I think they were uttered. I told the minister at the time that I hoped he would be wealthy enough some day to make good his promise. I am glad to realize that the Minister of Railways thinks there are salt water fish in Hudson bay.

Mr. MANION: Not only do I believe there are salt water fish in Hudson bay, but when at Churchill last summer I very much enjoyed eating some presented to me by the member for Nelson (Mr. Stitt).

Mr. BRADETTE: I am very happy to have my views corroborated by the Minister of Railways, who says he has actually eaten some salt water fish taken from Hudson bay. This is absolutely in contradiction of the statement made in the report of 1930, that not a single fish of commercial value had been caught. That is why I object so strongly to that report, which is a slur on the fisheries of the whole of northern Canada. Surely anyone looking at that great inland sea would never conclude that Providence had not blessed it with a single fish of commercial value. I believe the new minister has the development of our fisheries at heart. In northern Ontario we are inclined to think that the maritime provinces and British Columbia—at least that is the talk on the street—are afraid lest the fisheries in Hudson bay may be developed to their detriment by reason of the railroad service that is now available. I hope the minister is now in a position to promise that effective steps will be taken in the very near future to develop these fisheries.

Mr. DURANLEAU: As I did not expect the question of the Hudson bay fisheries would be discussed this afternoon, I am not prepared to answer my hon. friend in detail. I am told that we could not send any important fishing expedition to those waters until in 1930 a cold storage base was established at Churchill. Then we hired a trawler with the best captain and crew we could get, and instructed them to ascertain whether there were fish in commercial quantities in those waters. My hon. friend contends that they did not fish long enough to be able to make a conclusive report. I am told that the trawler was sent there in the middle of July and remained until the end of August; that is, the trawler was there as early as possible in the season and remained as late as possible. Of course, the crew could not work very long hours, but I am told they did their best to ascertain to what extent there was fish sufficient to develop an industry. As long as I am in control of this department I promise my hon. friend that I will examine the possibilities of doing something more along the lines already attempted.

Mr. ILSLEY: The hon. members for Shelburne-Yarmouth, and Digby-Annapolis and the Minister of Finance made some reference in their speeches to the proposed sales tax on coverings. This is a matter of very great importance not only to the fishermen, but also to the farmers, fruit growers and others who have to purchase barrels and similar containers. The hon. member for Shelburne-Yarmouth stated it would be impracticable for the fishermen who placed their catch in barrels to get a refund because it would be utterly impossible for any particular seller of fish who did not himself export them to determine in what proportions they were exported and sold for domestic consumption. I have brought this problem to the attention of the Minister of Finance by correspondence, as he knows. I have set out in detail the great difficulty which I think there will be in operating the refund provisions of the sales tax proposals with regard to barrels for apples and potatoes, and I do not want to say anything more about it now except this: I hope the Minister of Finance, when the ways and means resolutions are reached, will explain to the committee how these refund provisions can be operated. I hope he will drop the tax on coverings, because I do not see how it can be productive of anything other than injustice. I am not speaking now particularly of the burden; I am speaking of the impossibility of the refund going to the people who pay the tax, and I trust the minister will go into that matter fully so that the primary producers, whether they be those of farm or sea products, will know what steps to take to get back the sales tax they pay on the ceverings of that part of their product which is exported from the country, because that is the intention of the provisions.

Mr. STITT (Nelson): I am glad to join with the hon. member for North Timiskaming, who made such an eloquent plea for a further investigation of the fisheries of Hudson bay. I spoke on this matter last year, and I think I furnished the department with sufficient information to satisfy anyone as to the existence of fish in large quantities in Hudson bay. I do not depend entirely on documentary evidence; I have lived in that country for eighteen years, and I think I know something of its resources. I had occasion again this year to write the minister asking him to carry on a further investigation.

Last year an investigation was carried on by a party from The Pas, who took out a small boat thirty-four feet long, with an inboard motor of about eight horsepower, and cruised up and down the bay. They caught about all the fish they could possibly bring in. Now they have gone about as far as they can go and now they need some help. I asked the minister if the department could not see its way clear to send in a trawler to make a proper investigation by cruising down one side of the bay and up the other. His reply to me is rather painful. I do not know where the minister gets his information; I realize that he is new to the job and possibly the game is strange to him, but I must say that whoever supplies his information do not know very much about fishing in Hudson bay. In one paragraph of his letter the minister states:

> My advice is that there never has been any question that fish exist in the portions of the bay about the estuaries of the rivers. The investigations made in 1930 bear this out. These fish are from the lakes and rivers that are tributary to the bay, as in these northern latitudes practically all the fresh water fish run down the rivers into the salt water during the summer months.

That is the paragraph to which I wish to take exception. In all fairness and in all kindness I wish to say to the minister that if he expects me to take a statement like that lying down he does not know the member for Nelson. The men who were carrying on this investigation last year, as I said, got a boat load of true salmon, not salmon trout. The Minister of Railways has told the committee that he had a treat when he ate some of this fish, as well as some of the herring that have been caught there as well. As a matter of fact the herring the minister ate was taken from the water by myself and delivered to his car, so it was really fresh when he got it. Of course the salmon was salted, as the fishermen could not keep it. After doing some local work around Churchill, where, however, they could not expect to get many fish because of the dredging, they took this small boat and cruised about two hundred or two hundred and fifty miles up the bay. For the benefit of the committee I will read one or two extracts from the report. On the 18th of June they caught 210 pounds of salmon around the harbour, and after that they sailed up the bay almost as far as Chesterfield inlet. On that trip they caught 1,150 pounds of salmon, 3,430 pounds of salmon trout and 2,060 pounds of cisco, which is a type of herring. The report continues:

> Having caught their load around Sentry island the Utto Sverdrup continued north to make further explorations. They went as far as Dawson inlet, which lies approximately fifty miles to the north of Eskimo point.

That would be about 200 miles north of Churchill.

> In the Dawson inlet region they again caught salmon. Likewise they caught a few cod as they did further south. They did not remain long in this region but prepared to return to Churchill with their load.
> All along the coast the bay waters are full of capling, a species of the herring family. It is believed the white whale feeds almost entirely on these. The salmon and the cod feed on them also.
> These capling were to be found wherever they sailed. In places where they anchored in shallow water and could see to the bottom, in some instances a depth of 20 feet, they sighted immense schools of capling.

With reference to this trawling expedition that went into the bay I appreciate the efforts of the government in that connection. I think they were sincere, but whoever instructed that trawler certainly did not know very much about Hudson bay. They were instructed to go to the centre of the bay and cruise up and down in water hundreds of fathoms deep. These are bank fish, as they are in Nova Scotia and everywhere else, and that trawler should have cruised up and down the banks on the east and west side. The minister has stated that this was the very best captain and the very best boat obtainable. I have nothing to say in that regard, but in my opinion it was more of a Cook's tour than a fishing expedition. They were very well stocked with something that brought them lots of cheer, and I am credibly informed that some of it was sold around Churchill at a very good figure. So after all this trawling expedition which has been mentioned so often was only a number of men having a good time at the expense of the government. I do not blame the government for that, however; I think they were sincere in their endeavour to locate fish.

The east side of the bay, which is in Quebec and in which hon. members of that province will probably be interested, has a shore line of approximately 1,200 miles. There is deep water on the east coast and it is said the fish are much more plentiful there than on the west coast, but when I am told by the minister that the fish go into the fresh water and that they are fresh water fish, all I can say is that whoever gave him that advice did not know what they were talking about. They are not fresh water fish; they do not go into the fresh water lakes in the winter, after spending the summer in the bay. Neither do the white whales, of which there are thousands, go up into fresh water; neither do the seals, of which there are also thousands. These are both the small hair seals weighing from 25 to 50 pounds and the great grey seals weighing up to 750 pounds. The same applies to all the other mammals. Often you will see as many as 200 walrus weighing up to a ton each, on the islands along the east coast. These mammals live exclusively on fish, and I think it is quite reasonable to suggest that if there were no fish in the bay, these seals, walrus and white whales would not be there. At any tide at Churchill or Nelson you can see from a hundred to a hundred and fifty white whales coming in; I have seen as many as a thousand come in with a shoal of these capling which they were chasing. So that it is utterly ridiculous to say that these are fresh water fish that simply run down the bay in the summer and go back into the fresh water lakes to spend the winter. I trust that the minister will make an endeavour to correct that foolish statement. I should very much regret to have such a statement made to anybody else besides myself, because it would certainly make him and his department appear very foolish.

I might read an extract from some of the evidence given by Doctor Edward E. Prince, former Dominion Commissioner of Fisheries. As government inspector of fisheries, he knew what he was talking about, I take it. At page 43 of the report of the Senate investigation in regard to Hudson bay and strait, Mr. Prince states:

I have for twenty-five years paid special attention to Hudson bay fishery resources. I have been to Nelson river, north of the Pas, and west, in what you might call the basin of Hudson bay. I went overland, not by Hudson strait.

In regard to fish, he says:

The true salmon does not appear to be frequent in Hudson bay. Its northern limit is, I think, Ungava bay. The Hudson bay salmon is called Hearn's salmon, after the British explorer Hearn, which runs from two to eighteen pounds. They are very abundant; they are a migratory fish and go in and out into the bay and up the rivers again. . . . Then there is a sea trout and flat fish. There is also the large white fish. White fish are typical fresh water fish, but in Hudson bay quantities come down and hang about the estuary. They are valuable food; they range up to six pounds. Then there is the lesser white fish, sometimes called herring, corresponding to the so-called lake herring, which are quite abundant. They are better than the sea herring, having less bone. Then there are gold-eye herring and true herring, and ling. Ling belongs to the cod family. It is a very ugly fish with a large head, something like a white fish.

This is from one who was an officer of the minister's department. I could go on reading documentary evidence for the next two hours, but all I ask the minister to do is to make a further investigation and find out for his own information and for the benefit of the government and of the country as a whole, just what exists in that bay, which is 750 miles long and 500 miles wide.

In regard to fish, the captain of one of the grain boats told me last fall that outside the strait he saw French and German vessels fishing. He informed me the French vessels were always there but that, so far as he knew, that was the first time any German vessels had come there to fish. I do not think it is an unreasonable inference that these vessels were attracted to those fishing grounds because of the good catches they could make, for they would hardly come all the way from Germany and France merely for the sake of the scenery. They were there because the fishing was good. I am not familiar with the east side of the bay, but I have here an article that appeared in the Northern Miner, by Louis Martineau, who told of his experiences covering twenty-eight years in that country. I will read one or two extracts with reference to fish. He says:

The salmon fisheries on the east side of the bay could easily support two large canners, Mr. Martineau stated. He had caught 100 salmon in an hour with hook and line, and at the rivers they could be readily scooped out of the water with paddles.

Lobsters and other crustaceans are found on the east coast for one thousand miles, and Mr. Martineau has also picked up oyster sheils, which would indicate beds of these bivalves. There are other mussels of all kinds in abundance. The lakes are full of salmon, white fish, and even eels are fairly plentiful.

Seals are in Hudson bay by the millions, said Mr. Martineau, seals of at least half a dozen varieties. There were the great grey seals that weigh up to 500 pounds, other varieties that go from 50 to 125 pounds in weight, and the small seals that weigh from 15 to 30 pounds.

Walrus are numerous in some sections, and because of its extreme thickness the hides are sought for making the heaviest machine belting.

Porpoises abound in the bay and there are easily enough of them there to break the United States monopoly on the extremely fine oil that is extracted from these fish, and that is used for watches and extremely fine precision instruments.

I do not need to go further, but I hope the minister will make it his business to get first-hand data before he writes more letters like the one to which I have referred, as he might innocently do that district a great injustice if it was circulated.

Mr. MacLEAN: There is a vote of $11,000 for oyster culture, and I may tell the minister that we have been proceeding with this work in the province of Prince Edward Island for the last few years. In 1928 an agreement was entered into whereby the federal government took over and started to develop the great oyster areas which we had had there for a number of years. In 1924 a similar agreement had been drawn up, but it was never signed by the department. The 1924 agreement was prepared by the Hon. J. D. Stewart and the members of his provincial cabinet, and the present minister (Mr. Duranleau) was good enough to send me from his office copies both of that agreement and of the later agreement made in 1928. The two agreements are practically identical. I do not think there are any powers in the one which cannot be found in the other. The point with regard to which I should like to have some information from the minister is in connection with the policy of the department. Clause 9 reads exactly the same in both agreements. Let me quote it:

> The dominion shall inform the province as to any policy intended to be adopted by the former for the encouragement and development of the oyster or other mollusc industry as soon as such policy is decided upon, as well as of any changes that may from time to time be made in such policy as such changes are decided upon.

Under that clause, when the federal Department of Fisheries decided upon a certain policy, whether in respect to leasing areas or anything else, it was intended that before putting such policy into effect they should consult with the provincial government for their approval. I understand that last season the department decided on the policy of leasing areas, and that before they embarked upon that policy, in conformity with section 9, which, as I say, is the same in both agreements, they consulted with the provincial government. After that consultation they proceeded to lease areas.

No doubt either the minister or his deputy is familiar with both agreements. Is it the minister's opinion that the two agreements are identical in the powers they contain, or does he think that there are in either agreement certain powers that are not conferred by the other? So far as I can find out, both agreements are the same. I have before me copies of both, and after examining them carefully I cannot find any difference between them so far as the powers they confer are concerned. I should like to know from the minister whether his department consulted with the provincial authorities last year, and whether as a result of that consultation they proceeded, in accordance with the terms of section 9 of the agreement, to lease areas as the policy of the department.

Mr. DURANLEAU: My information is that there was a consultation between the Department of Fisheries and the authorities on the island before these notices for leases were issued, and it was agreed that the policy would be as outlined in the notices published in 1931 in the Charlottetown Guardian, the Patriot and other papers.

Item agreed to.

To assist in the conservation and development of the deep sea fisheries and the demand for fish, $136,000.

Mr. NEILL: Mr. Chairman, I desire to say a few words on this vote. I ask the minister to consider instituting a policy of bonusing for the processing of dogfish. I realize that the granting of bonuses is a common thing nowadays, and I think in this case it is fully justified. Dogfish are worse than sharks as far as destructive powers are concerned. They not only eat fish but they destroy the nets. Sharks will destroy a net if they happen to get into one, but they do not frequent the waters where the nets are ordinarily used.

I should like to cite an instance of a reduction plant which made an effort to reduce the number of these fish. This plant was conducted by a cannery company in an effort to keep its men employed. No charge was made for overhead but it was found there was a loss of $2 per ton on 3,200 tons of fish processed. Patriotism is all right but when it comes to a loss of $2 per ton it cannot be kept up very long. This plant spent $27,000, and in addition it expended $7,000 for white labour. Some $15,000 was spent for fish, some of which were caught by Japanese. The continued operation of such a plant would not only keep men employed in these days of unemployment but would prove of great benefit to the fishing industry. The argument is often used that dogfish are all over the Pacific, and I suppose in the Atlantic, and that it would be about as useless to try to kill them off as it would be to pump out the ocean. That seems to be a plausible argument but I think real experience shows otherwise. The waters of the ocean are not inhabited by so many fish per square mile or square yard; the different fish frequent certain areas and if they are destroyed in that area their absence is noticed for quite a long while. A reduction plant was started down on the San Juan islands south of British Columbia but they were unable to get sufficient fish from the neighbouring waters although they are contiguous to the waters of the gulf of Georgia to which I refer.

I can quote another instance in the case of whales. Whaling was indulged in very extensively a number of years ago and was found to be very profitable. Three stations were built on the west coast of Vancouver island and it was then decided to build one on the gulf of Georgia. It had been noticed that the whales were numerous between the island and the mainland, they were seen to be blowing all over the place and it was thought that a great harvest could be got from these comparatively sheltered waters. However, they were able to catch only nineteen, I think it was, whales; that was the total population, so to speak, of whales in that area, and it was many years before the outside whales started to come in again, I think either ten or twelve years. That supports the point I am trying to make, that if you vigorously prosecute the taking of these dogfish in the gulf of Georgia they would not immediately rush in from some other portions of the Pacific coast. Sea lions are destroyed and although the whole Pacific ocean is open to them; their destruction has proved very beneficial to the local gill netters.

The particular reduction plant to which I refer was only paying the fisherman $3 per ton for the fish. The fisherman could not make a living at that rate, and even with that small price paid, the plant could not pay its way. The suggestion offered is that the men should be given a bonus of $1 per ton and the reduction plant 50 cents per ton in order to enable it to operate. I should like to give some figures to show how beneficial the operation of this plant would prove. The 3,200 tons processed by this plant represents roughly 400,000 dogfish. According to the last report of the Department of Fisheries the number of salmon caught last year of record was 37,000,000. These dogfish have the playful habit of coming along and taking a bite out of the best portion of a salmon. Of course the salmon dies. Then when the dogfish feels like having another appetizer, it attacks another salmon. I think it is fair to say that each dogfish would kill at least four salmon per day. Taking this figure, the number of dogfish processed would have destroyed in one year sixteen times the total catch of salmon last year.

The department exists for the purpose of stimulating and encouraging the fishing industry, and I do not know of a better way they could carry out this purpose. This vote is for the conservation and development of deep sea fisheries and the demand for fish, and I think it would cover the bonus to which I refer. If not, there is another vote lower down on the page where $160,000 is to be authorized by statute for fishing bounty. This is the vote which always brings a blush of shame to the honest countenances of the hon. member for Digby-Annapolis (Mr. Short) and the Chairman (Mr. MacDonald, Cape Breton South). I notice that the hon. member for Digby-Annapolis said very emphatically this afternoon that he was opposed to bounties, but under this item we find him subscribing to a bounty of $160,000, to which he is not entitled.

Mr. SHORT: That is a bounty provided by statute and one which we have had for fifty years.

Mr. NEILL: And paid for out of the federal treasury.

Mr. SHORT: That did not cost this country a dollar. It was paid for by the government of the United States.

Mr. NEILL: That is an old, old story, and I really think the hon. member has come to believe it. After long years of malfeasance one sometimes comes to believe in a thing. That sum is taken out of the consolidated revenue fund of Canada every year. There is no reason why it should not be used for the purpose for which it was voted in the act, I think, of 1882, namely, for the development of fisheries. I know, however, this is a sore point with my hon. friend and I shall say nothing more about it at present. I was only pointing out that here would be a real, practical use for it. I do not think even my hon. friends will claim that the present use of that bounty is to the best interest even of the fishermen to whom it goes. It is handed out in small amounts and the Cockfield Brown report says that it should be used for some more general purpose; that was the only practical suggestion in the report. In any case that would be a place where this money could be used in a very practical way and it certainly would be cheaper to spend the money in that manner and help fishermen to help themselves rather than that we should have to put them on relief. A fisherman is almost like a doctor. He knows his business; he has been brought up to it for generations and he is not accustomed to other work; he would be about as much at home doing manual work on a road as a doctor or a lawyer would be. Why not help him to help himself? If you gave this assistance, you could measure it in dollars; when you go in for direct relief, you do not know where the cost is going to end. This policy would enable people to help themselves, and I know of no better way in which money could be used than to help workless people to help themselves. This reduction plant, very much to their credit be it said, made a vigorous effort to meet the situation and to assist the fishermen over the gap between seasons. But I have a certificate audited by a firm of auditors showing that the loss was very substantial; in fact, as I said, it ran to about $2 a ton.

The principle of bonusing cannot be denied, because we have bonuses on wheat and coal, and already to-day we have had suggestions that the Atlantic fishermen should also receive a bonus. I am not opposing that. If we are going in for that kind of protection, it should not be confined to one class. I do not expect the minister to do this out of hand, but he or his successor, if they appoint a permanent Minister of Fisheries, should look into this question and see if it will not pay. Some years ago something of this kind was done on the Atlantic coast, but perhaps they did not have the proper equipment. There is now a growing market for the meal and I understand some use has been found for the oil made from dogfish livers. Would the minister kindly look during the recess into this phase of the situation and see whether he cannot help out this industry, which otherwise must absolutely perish? I forgot to say that the plant to which I have been alluding has written me that it has had to shut down; it could not carry on any longer. If it had been able to continue, this would have meant a great deal of work for people who would otherwise be very hard up, and it would also have materially assisted in conserving the supply of salmon we want to catch for human use. It would do as much good as a whole army of officials guarding rivers and creeks, because it would have done away with an enormous number of these dogfish. I think any hon. member who knows the destructiveness of these fish will confirm what I say.

Item agreed to.

To provide for the payment of bounty for the destruction of hair seals in tidal waters, $40,000.

Mr. NEILL: I am sorry to see that this item has been cut down by ten per cent. That means that we are going to slacken our activities in doing away with one of these enemies to which I have already alluded. It is poor economy, after you have paid a heavy bounty for many years for the destruction of panthers and wild animals of that description, to stop paying the bounty and let the enemies breed again. As regards these hair seals, when you shoot them they immediately sink, so that although the bounty is $2 apiece, you may really kill three seals before you get the bounty for two, because it is so difficult to retrieve the animal.

I should like also to speak of the annual hunt for sea lions. The statement has been made that, on account of the expense, the abandonment of this hunt has been under consideration. There is, however, very little expense involved; the hunt is conducted by means of government patrol boats and almost entirely by members of the crews; they are on patrol in any case and they are doing an effective work. In this manner thousands, yes, tens of thousands of dollars are saved to the fishermen. It was definitely noted that the very year, almost the very month this patrol boat first began to destroy these sea lions off the Virgin islands, I think it is, there was a marked diminution in the number of fishermen's nets destroyed in the rivers and inlets. A net costs from $300 to $400, and to have it torn to pieces the first night it is put out, is a serious matter. It is said that we must be humane to these animals. That is all very well, but the people who say that do not think about the poor fisherman and his net which is destroyed and for which he has paid a very heavy price including duty. Nature, so to speak, keeps the balance by propagating these enemies, but when man comes in and takes an enormous toll on the salmon for human food, you no longer need the enemies, and unless you destroy the latter, you will obliterate the useful species. I can assure the minister the fishermen are grateful for the action of the government in thus assisting them year after year. I hope he will continue this and not pay any attention to those who call these sea lions innocent animals. You might as well talk about an innocent tiger.

There is just one other word I should like to say. I throw it out as a suggestion that will have to be dealt with by the minister or his department sooner or later. The time is rapidly coming when, in the interest of the British Columbia salmon industry, we shall have to renounce the treaty made with the United States, Russia, and, I think, Japan, to stop pelagic fur sealing. As the committee is aware, a treaty was made lasting for fifteen years and at the end of that time it was to continue automatically unless notice of six months or a year was given. It worked very well for a long time, but now the seals have increased so much they are beginning to be a considerable menace to the fish. They pass up the coast in the months of May and June in enormous numbers. Gunboats are sent out by both ourselves and the United States to see that they are not poached upon during that time. They breed on the rookeries. A limited number are killed by the United States, but they have increased enormously They are just as destructive as or even more so than the hair seal, and they come along just as the salmon begin to be valuable, cleaning everything in front of them. The day will come when the government will have to consider seriously renouncing that treaty and allowing these fur seals to be taken.

Item agreed to.

To provide for the payment to the Leonard Fisheries, Limited, of trawler licence fees, the collection of which was declared to be ultra vires of dominion authority by the Exchequer Court of Canada, $5,856.36.

Mr. REID: I wish to draw to the attention of the minister the case of the Great West Packing Company, Limited. In 1927 and 1928 the Dominion government Department of Fisheries licensed salmon canneries. The licence fee was $20 and there was a tax of four cents per case on canned sockeye salmon and three cents per case on all other varieties. In compliance with the demand of the Department of Fisheries in Vancouver for payment of the case tax before December 1 of each year this company paid in addition to the licence fee a tax on each case as follows: 1927 salmon pack, $474.94; 1928 salmon pack, $568.01, or a total of $1,042.95. Some time in 1927 the right of the Dominion government to license canneries was questioned, and in 1929 the privy council decided that the authority to do so was vested in the provincial government. In 1929 the Dominion government did not collect the case tax. I am informed that some of the larger companies did not pay the case tax in 1927, and that only five or six companies paid the case tax in 1928, and that no action was taken to collect during those years.

In the item before us provision is made for refunding licence fees which were later declared to be ultra vires of dominion authority, and I claim that exactly the same course should be followed in the case that I am now bringing to the minister's attention, that of the Great West Packing Company, because the principle in both cases is exactly the same. In fact, I believe that the case of the Great West Packing Company for a refund of the licence fees paid is even stronger because in 1928 they wrote to the dominion Department of Fisheries, after having paid the tax under protest, and here is the reply which they received from the department, which I claim is a direct promise from the department. The department in its letter says:

As the question of jurisdiction over such plants is before the courts the existing law is in effect. It provides for the necessity for taking out cannery licences. While it is not considered desirable at the moment to take court action to enforce fees, should a company refuse to pay them, should the reference to the courts be decided in favour of the federal contention, necessary action to collect such fees will be taken. On the other hand, should the decision be otherwise, the whole question will be dealt with and those who have paid their fees will have such refunded to them, unless action is taken to compel those who have not done so to pay them.

I would ask the minister to note those words: "Those who have paid their fees will have such refunded to them."

Mr. NEILL: By whom is that letter signed?

Mr. REID: The letter is to Mr. D. McPherson of the Great West Packing Company, Limited. Here is a direct promise made in 1928 to refund the licence fees that were paid under protest. The licence fee had been declared ultra vires of the dominion authority, and therefore the principle of refunding the fees is exactly the same as in the case before us where licence fees are being refunded to the Leonard Fisheries, Limited, although I maintain that the case of the Great West Packing Company is even stronger because of this letter from the Department of Fisheries. Before this item passes, Mr. Chairman, I would ask the minister to give me an assurance that the licence fees will be refunded in this case. I have given him the date of the letter and stated that it came from the Department of Fisheries. I claim that that was a direct promise on the part of the department to refund the licence fees.

Mr. DURANLEAU: As the time is so short I am sorry that I cannot give a very lengthy answer to my hon. friend, but my officials tell me that the case of the canneries in the west and the case of the Leonard Fisheries Limited are not similar at all. The canneries of the west have paid a very reasonable licence fee, and if they had not been taxed by the federal government they would have been taxed by the provincial government. As a matter of fact, immediately after the decision declaring our imposition ultra vires the canneries were taxed by the provincial government. While I do not think the cases are similar I am quite willing to examine the case which my hon. friend has brought to my attention. If, as he states, a definite promise was made by the department—

Mr. REID: A definite promise has been made.

Mr. DURANLEAU: I will look into the matter and if I find that the department is committed we shall have to do what is right, but at the present time I do not think the case which my hon. friend has brought to my attention is similar to the case referred to in the item under discussion.

Mr. REID: Have I the assurance of the minister that if he finds that a promise was made to pay back the fees, this firm will receive the refund of its licence fees? They claim that they received the letter containing the promise from the Department of Fisheries, dated December 1, 1928, wherein it is specifically stated:

On the other hand, should the decision be otherwise, the whole question will be dealt with, and those who have paid their fees will have such refunded to them.

I think that is a very definite statement from the department, and that they cannot get away from it, because it must be remembered that this firm was paying these licence fees under protest. If the minister finds the promise to pay from the department will he have the licence fees refunded to the firm?

Mr. DURANLEAU: I do not think it would be wise to make a definite promise such as is asked for by my hon. friend, but I will study the whole record, and if I find that in fairness the fees should be refunded, it will be done, but I cannot give a definite promise now.

Mr. NEILL: And if refunded to one, the licence fees will be refunded to all in the same class?

Mr. DURANLEAU: Yes, of course.

Item agreed to.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Publishing debates—further amount required, $20,000.

To provide for the full sessional indemnity to members of the House of Commons—days lost through absence caused by illness, official public business, or on account of death during the present session—notwithstanding anything to the contrary in chapter 147 of the revised statutes, 1927, an act respecting the Senate and House of Commons, or any amendments thereto. Payments to be made as the treasury board may direct, $25,000.

To purchase, for the use of senators and members of parliament, 360 copies of the Canadian Annual Review, edition of 1931-32, $2,340.

Estimates of the Sergeant-at-Arms—further amount required, $7,574.25.

Mr. POULIOT: I see that this vote provides for the purchase of 360 copies of the Canadian Annual Review. We do not need that at all.

Item agreed to.

Amount to provide for expenses in connection with the representation of Canada at the International Radio Conference at Madrid, Spain, in September, 1932, $15,000.

Mr. POULIOT: Will the government send delegates to this conference?

Mr. BENNETT: It is so intended. The conference is concerned with the distribution of wave lengths.

Item agreed to.

IMMIGRATION AND COLONIZATION

Immigration salaries and contingencies—further amount required, $48,000.

Mr. POULIOT: Have any civil employees the advantage of going home at the expense of the state?

Mr. BENNETT: Not so far as I know.

Mr. POULIOT: I might have something to say with respect to it.

Mr. MANION: Send it in by letter!

Item agreed to.

INTERIOR

Salaries, contingencies, $726,015.

Mr. GARDINER: Are any estimates in the Interior department left other than this one?

Mr. BENNETT: Number 201 is held.

Mr. CAMPBELL: I understand No. 12 is to be held over until Monday.

Mr. RHODES: There are two items still standing in that department.

Item stands.

PUBLIC WORKS

Harbours and rivers generally; for maintenance of services; no new works to be undertaken, $25,000.

Mr. REID: I desire to speak on this item.

Mr. RHODES: If it is agreeable to my hon. friend, it is understood an item will be held under which any business connected with the Public Works department may be discussed.

Item agreed to.

LABOUR

Combines Investigation Act, $25,000.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: The same understanding?

Mr. BENNETT: Any matter may be discussed under item 189.

Item agreed to.

PUBLIC WORKS

Champlain graving dock, $83,000.
Esquimault graving docks, $76,800.
Lorne graving dock, $43.000.
Selkirk—repair slip, $2,800.

Mr. BENNETT: Any further questions can be taken up under item 110.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: That is right.

Item agreed to.

Progress reported.

On motion of Mr. Bennett the house adjourned at six twenty p.m.

Monday, May 23, 1932

The house met at eleven o'clock.

BANKING AND COMMERCE

MOTION FOR CONCURRENCE IN FOURTH REPORT OF FINDINGS OF COMMITTEE ON INQUIRY INTO PRICE OF GASOLINE

Mr. E. J. YOUNG (Weyburn): Mr. Speaker, on Friday last the following notice appeared in votes and proceedings in my name:

On Monday next—that the fourth report of the select standing committee on banking and commerce, on the reference as to the price of gasoline, be concurred in.

A word of explanation is due the house as to why I, who was not even a member of the committee, should take it upon myself to move concurrence in the report. This is my reason. I was very anxious to have the report brought before the house. Under the rules it is necessary that forty-eight hours' notice be given before concurrence be moved. We were coming so close to the end of the session that I thought on Friday unless notice was given before the end of last week it would be impossible to have concurrence moved this session. I endeavoured to get in touch with the chairman of the committee to find out what his intentions were, but could not locate him. So I took it on myself to put on the order paper the notice which I have read. Terms of the reference are as follows:

That in the opinion of this house the price of gasoline to the Canadian consumer has for some time past been too high, and that this matter should be referred to the select standing committee on banking and commerce to investigate and report.

The question submitted to the committee was this: Are we paying too much for our gasoline; and if so, why? If we are paying too much for our gasoline, the committee reckoned that somebody, either our refiners or our distributors, must be getting too much for their services, and that is what they undertook to investigate.

Mr. BENNETT: Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that this is a sparse house and we could proceed with other matters, the hon. gentleman might adjourn his speech and go on with it to-morrow, on motions.

Mr. YOUNG: That is satisfactory to me.

Mr. BENNETT: If he will adjourn the debate I think it would expedite matters.

Mr. YOUNG: I move to adjourn the debate.

Motion agreed to and debate adjourned.

LAND SETTLEMENT

Hon. W. A. GORDON (Acting Minister of Immigration and Colonization): I desire, Mr. Speaker, to lay on the table of the house the information asked for by the hon. member for South Perth (Mr. Sanderson) with respect to land placements in the province of Ontario by counties. Accompanying the return are letters from the commissioners of colonization of the Canadian Pacific Railway and the Canadian National Railways. These letters indicate that the railways, not having kept the information in the form desired by the hon. member, are not in a position to furnish it. With respect to the department, they have not kept the information in a way that would make it easily available by counties, but it is only fair to the hon. member to say that I showed him the list as kept by the department, giving the name of the individual, the wages and the address, and I believe that after reviewing it his fears in a general way as to the accuracy of the statements which have been made have been dissipated. The return which has been prepared, so far as the department is concerned, after a good deal of labour and time, will, I think, check out to within a very few in number of those contained in the information I have heretofore given to the house. There is a slight increase because the return covers a period a little longer than up to the first of May when the matter was raised in the house.

BANKRUPTCY ACT AMENDMENT

Mr. JOHN T. HACKETT (Stanstead): Mr. Speaker, I beg to move, seconded by Mr. Turnbull:

That Bill No. 36, an act to amend the Bankruptcy Act (locality of debtor), be withdrawn.

Mr. SPEAKER: By consent of the house.

Motion agreed to and bill withdrawn.

QUESTIONS

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk).

POSTMASTERSHIP OF LAPRAIRIE—INQUIRY

Mr. DUPUIS:

1. What are the names and addresses of the persons who testified at the inquiry held by the Post Office Department, in connection with the case of Noel Fontaine, postmaster of Laprairie, Quebec, on February 27, and March 16, 1931?

2. Did the following persons testify at that inquiry: Miss Jeannette Cedilot, Mrs. Paul Bonneterre (née Angeline Dupré), Messrs. Samuel Racine, Wilfrid Ste-Marie, David Racette, Emilien Lamarre and Mrs. Arthur Lamarre (née Noella Fontaine), all of Laprairie?

3. If said persons were heard as witnesses by the commissioner holding the inquiry, why do their names and the evidence given not appear in the report of said commissioner as tabled in the house by the hon. Postmaster General, as "sessional paper No. 198" dated March 22, 1932?

4. Does the original report of said commissioner mention the evidence given by the persons above enumerated in second question?

5. If so, is the government aware that said names were left out?

6. Why were they left out?

7. Why did said commissioner not mention them in his report?

8. Is the Postmaster General aware that the evidence given by the above mentioned persons is entirely favourable to the postmaster of Laprairie?

Mr. SAUVE:

1. According to the report of commissioner, the following persons gave evidence: Arthur Dufort, Joseph Ste. Marie, Oliva Lefebvre, Joseph Chouinard, Louis Roy, Emile Gravel, Remi Dore, Mrs. Odila Audette, Petronille Barbeau (Beaulieu), Miss Antoinette Beaulieu, Alfred Beaulieu, Jos. M. Longtin, Mrs. Pacifique Racine, Arthur Lamarre, Fernand Fontaine, Gabriel Cedilot, Camille Bourdon, Noel Fontaine.

2. In the report of the commissioner there is no record of the persons mentioned.

3, 4, 5 and 6. See answer to No. 2.

7. No information.

8. No.

EXCISE DUTY—CIGARETTES AND TOBACCO

Mr. GOTT:

1. How much excise duty was collected on cigarettes for the year ending March 31, 1932?

2. How many cigarettes were manufactured in Canada during the fiscal years ending March 31, 1929, 1930, 1931, 1932?

3. How much tobacco was exported from Canada during the fiscal year ending March 31, 1932?

4. To what countries was it exported?

Mr. RYCKMAN:

1. $26,415,948.77.

2.

QUESTIONS PASSED AS ORDERS FOR RETURNS

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS—AMERICAN EMPLOYEES

Mr. PRICE:

1. How many American citizens are employed by the Canadian National Railway Company in Canada?

2. How long have they been employed, what positions do they hold and what salaries do they receive?

Mr. MANION: In regard to question No. 1, Mr. Speaker, the railway company informed me they cannot get this information in time. Therefore I would move that it stand as an order for return.

DR. TORY'S OFFICE FURNISHINGS

Mr. ROGERS:

1. What is the total cost of furnishing the office of Dr. H. M. Tory, President of the National Research Council, in the research building, Sussex street?
2. What is the price of each desk, chair, table, rug, etc?

MR. GEORGE GONTHIER'S OFFICE FURNISHINGS

Mr. ROGERS:

1. What was the total cost of furnishing the office of Mr. George Gonthier, Auditor-General, in the Confederation building?
2. What is the price of each desk, chair, table, rug, etc?
3. What became of the furniture formerly in the office of the Auditor-General?

UNOPPOSED MOTION FOR PAPERS

MR. VICTOR GARIEPY

Mr. TETREAULT:

For a copy of all correspondence, telegrams, and other documents exchanged, from 1926 to July, 1930, between the Department of Agriculture and Mr. P. E. Boivin, former member for Shefford, and Mr. Victor Gariepy, of Waterloo, Quebec, in connection with the appointment of Mr. Victor Gariepy as veterinary surgeon in the service of the Dominion government, in the county of Shefford.

UNEMPLOYMENT AND FARM RELIEF

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. McKenzie) has asked me a question on several occasions. I thought he had misread what I said on the 29th July, 1931, I find on looking up the record that I then said:

During the last few days I have received telegrams from the province of Saskatchewan suggesting that it was not desirable that direct relief which might be regarded as charity should be accorded to those hardy settlers who have lost their all for the third, and in some instances the fourth succeeding year, but rather that they would like to execute some document which would indicate that they regarded the help given as an obligation which they might some time be able to pay.

I may say to my good friend from South Huron (Mr. McMillan) that that indicates at least the attitude of some of those who at the present time are without crops, having had their third successive crop failure. I observe the hon. gentleman read my remarks as indicating that I had received communications from the province of Saskatchewan, and he was seeking information as to what member of the provincial government had communicated with me. It will be observed that my language did not mean that I had received communications from the provincial government, but from persons residing within the province. While some of the communications were marked "personal," the one that gave me the most information was from a loan company manager, who, I knew, had travelled over the territory and found a disposition on the part of the settlers not to take charity but to make a contribution in the sense indicated.

[Mr. Manion.]

Mr. DONNELLY: The hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. McKenzie) is away at the present time, but I understood him to say that the declaration of the Prime Minister was to the effect that certain people in the west had written letters or sent communications of some kind to the right hon. gentleman intimating that they were ready and willing and anxious to pay back this money that was loaned, and that the hon. member had received communications from private individuals asking for copies of these letters and telegrams.

Mr. BENNETT: That is not the way it reads.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

NORTH BATTLEFORD-EDMONTON BRANCH LINE CONSTRUCTION

On the orders of tht day:

Mr. CAMERON R. McINTOSH (North Battleford): May I ask the Minister of Railways whether he has any further information to give the house and the country in connection with the laying of steel on certain branch lines of the Canadian National Railways in northwestern Canada. The particular road to which I am referring is the sixty-nine mile stretch which is ready for steel between North Battleford and Edmonton.

Hon. R. J. MANION (Minister of Railways): There was forwarded to me this morning a general review of the question to which the hon. gentleman refers, and which he has sent throughout the whole of his constituency. It places on words of mine conclusions which I do not think he had any right to draw, and under these circumstances I do not think I will make any more statements to the hon. gentleman in regard to the railway.

Mr. McINTOSH: If the minister would state what I have published in an irregular way, I might try to correct it.

Mr. MANION: I will state it at the proper time.

Mr. McINTOSH: All right.

DEPORTATION CASES

INVESTIGATION UNDER PROVISIONS OF IMMIGRATION ACT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. S. WOODSWORTH (Winnipeg North Centre): I have received a telegram from a Mrs. Stahlberg, of Montreal, stating that her husband, John Stahlberg, a resident of Canada for twelve years, was arrested by the Royal Canadian Mounted Police, on orders from the Immigration department, at their home, 1342 St. Antoine street, Montreal, on May 19, and immediately placed on a train for Halifax. May I ask the Minister of Immigration why it is that this policy of snatching people away from their homes, without giving them the opportunity of a trial in the place of their residence, is being continued. It seems to me to be very unjust and heartless, especially in the case of those men with families, and perhaps the minister could give some information with reference to this case.

Hon. W. A. GORDON (Acting Minister of Immigration and Colonization): I have not before me the particulars of the case to which reference has been made, but I think the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre is scarcely stating the position correctly when he suggests that people are being whisked away—if that is what he said—

An hon. MEMBERS: Snatched away.

Mr. GORDON: —snatched away from their homes and placed under arrest and tried. That is not the position at all. These sections of the Immigration Act under which officials of the department are functioning have been the subject of very considerable debate in this house on a number of occasions. Hon. members who were here in 1910 will remember the debate that then arose when the section of the act as it presently appears in the statutes was brought into being. And in 1919, as some hon. members will recollect, the act was twice amended, in the one session I believe. These amendments were the subject of a good deal of debate in this chamber on a number of occasions, and I believe amendments to the sections in question were passed twice by this chamber. I do not think the amendments received the approval of the other house. Then in 1928, the section as it presently stands, which is a re-enactment of the legislation of 1910, was passed by this house, and it sets out the method to be followed in connection with investigations in the cases of those who may be or may have been guilty of an infraction of this law.

These men are not snatched away from their homes; they are not under arrest, although they are in detention, it is quite true. Many suggestions have been made as to some other method that might be pursued. Some say that they should be incarcerated in the gaol in their home city. They have not been convicted of an offence; they are not on trial; but their conduct as aliens in Canada is under review to determine whether or not they have a right to stay in Canada.

I am not going to go into this question at any great length. I could discuss it at very great length, but I feel that certain members of this chamber are sufficiently acquainted with this law and are quite familiar with the method which, of necessity, has to be pursued if law is to be enforced and those responsible for the invocation of the law are to do their duty. The board of inquiry may consist of one or of three members; the law makes provision for that. Those men whose conduct in Canada is under review are entitled, I think, to have their conduct reviewed by a competent board of inquiry composed of three members. True it is that the act contemplates that they may be brought before a board of inquiry at an immigrant station anywhere in Canada. Now, had they been brought before the nearest immigrant station, let us say, for example, at some port on the boundary, where there are no detention quarters, to start with, and reviewed by one officer, who works part time for customs and part time for immigration and is not acquainted with the practice and procedure contemplated by this section, that would not, in my opinion, be a fair review of the alien's case and a fair determination of it. There are very few places in Canada—the necessity has not arisen—where boards of inquiry composed of three members are set up, and there are very few places where proper detention quarters are available for the detention of aliens until such time as their cases can be reviewed and their appeals heard.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: If I may interrupt the minister, is it not quite true, in the Winnipeg cases, that we have proper quarters right in the city of Winnipeg?

Mr. GORDON: I will come to that in a moment. With respect to those cases that have been the subject of some comment—in some sections of the press recently—the evidence of the alien's right to stay in Canada was within the knowledge, in almost all of the cases, of the same witnesses. That made it rather difficult for the officers enforcing the law to be here and there all over Canada, as occasion might arise, when the men were detained for investigation. The department—I believe they adopted the proper course—considered that these men, in having their conduct reviewed, should be brought before a board of inquiry composed of three persons, men who were well acquainted with the law and with what the law contemplates, rather than being taken before an officer not qualified to make a decision of this kind. I do not say that disrespectfully of these officers, because of necessity they are located at places in Canada where a close investigation of the effect of this law is not necessary in order that their duties may be properly discharged. Had they been brought before the nearest board of inquiry of one, then it would likely have been very incompetently considered from the standpoint of the alien whose case was under review. I agree with the stand taken by the officers of the department that there is necessity for uniformity in connection with these cases.

It has been suggested by some newspapers, and I think by some hon. members, that these men are not being given a fair trial. They are not on trial. The hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Brown) does not agree with that, but the fact is that they are aliens whose conduct and whose right to be in Canada is merely under review. If, on the one hand, it is found that they have the right to be here, they are immediately returned to their homes, as I believe one or two have been. If, on the other hand, it is found that they are here wrongfully or illegally or, being here legally, have transgressed our laws or are bent on stirring up distrust or riot, are bent on breaking our laws, then, so far as the officers of the department are concerned, after that has been made clear proceedings are taken in connection with deportation. These men are not precluded from the right to resort to habeas corpus and for some unaccountable reason they seem to be better fortified with money to carry on defence than even our own citizens are when they fall foul of the law.

There is another aspect of this matter upon which I think I should comment. There are many tens of thousands of law-abiding well-ordered citizens of foreign countries living in Canada. These people desire to obey our laws and are appreciative of what is offered to them in this country. But they suffer from the actions of the very indifferent percentage who will persist in waging war against our institutions. British subjects in Canada and Canadian born people are prone to class all people from foreign lands as undesirable. They do it unconsciously but it is very unjust and unfair to many of these people. My association with many thousands of them who come from parts of the world other than the British Empire, mainly Europe, has convinced me that they are being penalized by the actions of their compatriots. These people are wholesome, upstanding and decent citizens of this country and they are being penalized by the actions of a small percentage of those who want to stir up difficulties and distrust of our institutions. I do not propose to administer the affairs of this department in such a way that those who are endeavouring to obey our laws and who are proud of their right to be in this country are to be penalized because of the actions of some of their countrymen who do not seem to realize or appreciate the advantages afforded them by reason of the right given to enter Canada.

As time goes on it becomes more obvious that the last place on earth to which these men want to be sent is to their country of origin, and that is the place where they should be sent if they are not appreciative of the advantages and the rights conferred when they were allowed to enter Canada and live among the British and native born people of our country. I do not like to dwell too long on this matter but I assure the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Woodsworth) that these men are being denied no right to spread their case upon the record. They are given the right to appear before me on appeal; they are given ample time and opportunity and are advised that they can appeal to the courts under habeas corpus proceedings. Not one word of evidence is taken down in any one of these cases until the person whose conduct and right to remain in Canada is under review is advised that he has the right to retain competent counsel. And these men do procure counsel, at times very expensive counsel, and their cases are determined fairly and justly as contemplated by our laws. If it is found that they have no right to remain in Canada, then I assure hon. members that I propose to carry out the duty cast upon me to invoke this law just as vigorously and fairly as I know how.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Before the minister concludes, may I ask—

Mr. SPEAKER: This matter is not the subject of debate.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I was merely asking a question.

Mr. SPEAKER: The hon. member asked a question and the minister replied to it at length.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I intended to ask merely a supplementary question before the minister concluded. I should like to know if there have been cases where aliens have had their naturalization certificates cancelled?

Mr. BENNETT: The act provides for that.

Mr. GORDON: I have not before me any detailed information with respect to the question asked by the hon. member, but I can say that the act certainly provides for the cancellation of naturalization certificates in cases where those certificates should be cancelled. I believe there have been a number of cancellations; if there have not, there should have been.

Mr. CAHAN: There have been naturalization certificates cancelled because of absence of at least seven years, but otherwise no certificate has been cancelled except upon the report of a judge specially appointed for the purpose of examining into the facts as to whether or not the certificate was obtained by fraud, or, on the other hand, unless there has been a conviction by a criminal court of this country.

HYDROGRAPHIC SURVEY SHIP

On the orders of the day.

Mr. ANGUS MacINNIS (Vancouver South): Mr. Speaker, I should like to inquire of the Minister of Marine (Mr. Duranleau) if a contract has been let for the taking of the hydrographic survey ship being built in Collingwood from that port to the Pacific coast, and if so, the name of the contractor.

Hon. ALFRED DURANLEAU (Minister of Marine): Mr. Speaker, I have not the exact information before me but I shall be glad to reply to-morrow to my hon. friend.

CIVIL SERVICE ACT AMENDMENT

Hon. C. H. CAHAN (Secretary of State) moved the second reading of Bill No. 99, to amend the Civil Service Act.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time, and the house went into committee thereon, Mr. LaVergne in the chair.

Sections 1, 2 and 3 agreed to.

On section 4—Residents for local appointments.

Mr. HEENAN: I understand that this bill was based upon the report of the committee but, unfortunately, I have been absent for a few days and have missed the discussion thereon. Could the minister tell us on what procedure the government intend to act now with respect to appointments of postmasters in post offices with a revenue of less than $3,000?

Mr. CAHAN: There is a special clause covering that.

The CHAIRMAN: The question will be in order under that clause.

Mr. ROSS: What is the meaning of residence of one year? Will it mean simply residence where a man is in the district, or something similar to the qualification for a vote?

Mr. CAHAN: The residence to qualify a civil servant, that is residence of five years, is fixed by another clause. This, I presume, is simply residence in the locality for "one year immediately preceding," and is the outcome of criticisms which were made before the committee to the effect that in the appointment of civil servants for certain, might I say, subordinate positions in a locality, nominations were made of those resident outside that locality. This is to qualify only those who have been resident for one year in the locality. Clause 4 of the bill is in almost the same terms as paragraph 4 of the report of the special committee on the administration of the Civil Service Act.

Mr. VENIOT: Might I call the attention of the minister to a point I have in mind? Suppose the applicant is not a resident of the district in which the post office is located but is a resident of a rural route receiving its mail through that post office. Is he to be considered, in applying for the position, as a resident of the district? I think that point ought to be made clear.

Mr. CAHAN: It would be impossible to draft an amendment to meet all cases. This clause applies to appointments to local positions in any province and it declares that so far as practical such appointments shall——be made from persons having resided in such locality for a period of at least one year immediately preceding the date last fixed for receiving applications for such local positions.

I am adopting the phraseology of the committee's report and I think we shall have to trust to the future to decide how far this is practicable.

Mr. VENIOT: My reason for bringing up this point is that in the past we had difficulty in the Post Office Department in deciding this matter, and in many cases we had to leave it to the Civil Service Commission.

Mr. CAHAN: That is exactly where it is left now.

Mr. VENIOT: Let the responsibility lie there.

Mr. VALLANCE: I notice the chairman of the committee is not in the chamber. The explanation given by the minister is the reason for leaving the clause as it is with the words "so far as practicable." We were trying to cover any possible case.

Mr. ROSS: What does "locality" mean?

Mr. VALLANCE: Within the radius of distribution of that post office.

Mr. ROSS: In my constituency several appointments were made where a man was temporarily located there, perhaps doing certain work while the family was situated elsewhere. Nevertheless he came into competition with men who all their lives had been residents of that constituency.

Mr. CAHAN: The man must be actually resident for one year in the locality; that means his domicile, his home, must have been in that locality for one year.

Mr. ROSS: If the word "domicile" is used, that will be satisfactory.

Mr. CAHAN: "Residence" is more explicit than "domicile."

Mr. GANONG: In my constituency in the customs service Milltown is an outport, while St. Stephen is a port. The Civil Service Commission promotes from the outport to the port. Examinations for the outport are not allowed to be held at St. Stephen. The result will be that appointments will be made wholly from the outport. Does the word "locality" mean the district or simply the locality?

Mr. CAHAN: "Locality" must be determined by the relation to the local position which is to be filled. The clause reads:

> The appointments to any local positions in any province shall, so far as practicable, be made from persons having resided in such locality.

I think we shall have to trust to the Civil Service Commission to deal with that, "so far as practicable," as stated in the clause.

Mr. VENIOT: I was not a member of the committee, but evidently the matter did not come before it in all its phases. I presume it would have to consider the regulations adopted by certain departments whereby they extend the territory. Take, for instance, the main post office in Ottawa. It is included in a certain zone, so that persons, even from a district outside the city limits, can apply for an Ottawa position and still be considered as being residents of the Ottawa district. The same thing applies in the case of the Department of National Revenue. In New Brunswick, Saint John being the head office for the Department of National Revenue, it has happened, and it can happen again, that people in Saint John city may apply and become revenue officers or subcollectors of customs in the county of Charlotte, just as in the case brought up by the hon. member for that constituency. In the past that was not considered a violation of the act or regulations. Of course there is no provision in this clause to meet that situation. This is no time to try to amend the bill in that respect, but I would suggest that the provision be allowed to operate for a year and then, if any injustices occur, we can amend it.

Mr. CAHAN: This is simply a general provision to cover a specific case. As no one knows better than the hon. member for Gloucester, the Civil Service Commission has discretion and authority to carry this provision into effect, and it also has authority to make, concerning this, rules and regulations which must necessarily from time to time receive the approval of the governor in council. The committee undoubtedly intended to lay down a general line of policy, leaving it to the commission to work out that policy by rules and regulations which will later be framed. The words "so far as practicable" leave the commission a certain discretion in such a case as that to which the hon. member for Gloucester has referred.

Mr. LUCHKOVICH: How would this clause apply to returned soldiers? If a returned soldier living in a city heard of a vacancy in a village and applied for that position, would he have precedence over applicants who actually resided locally or would he have to reside in that particular locality?

Mr. CAHAN: I suggest that the returned soldier would have no preference in a locality in which he did not reside.

Mr. VENIOT: He did not have it under the old law.

Section agreed to.

Sections 5 and 6 agreed to.

On section 7—Vacation leave.

An hon. MEMBER: What is the idea of putting in "in a tropical country"?

Mr. CAHAN: That amendment I believe was introduced at the suggestion of the Department of Trade and Commerce which maintains certain offices in hot countries where it is advisable to give one month's holiday on account of climatic conditions.

Section agreed to.

On section 8—Gratuity in lieu of retiring leave.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: May I ask the Secretary of State if this clause is intended to enable the government to make immediate appointments once clerks are retired?

Mr. CAHAN: It was pointed out before the committee by deputy heads of departments that at present a retiring official has the right to a certain length of leave according to the number of his years of service, the maximum being six months' leave. It has been found very difficult at times to administer a department during the term of leave of absence of a retiring official as under the existing law there is no power of appointment until the leave of the retiring official has expired. It was suggested before the committee, and upon consideration the government thought it advisable to provide that an official upon retirement should be allowed to retire at once, so that in case there is need of a new appointment at once it could be made, the retiring official receiving a gratuity in lieu of leave of absence.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: What my hon. friend says as to the difficulty in administration, as I recall it, is correct. I hope, however, that this provision will not be used by the government to retire too many officials all at once.

Mr. CAHAN: I may say, Mr. Chairman, that that suggestion is certainly not applicable to my administration of my office because I have not retired any officials. Death has retired quite a number, and even in these cases I have refrained from making new appointments so far as it was possible so to do consistent with maintaining efficiency.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I hope that the example of the Secretary of State in the particular he has mentioned will be followed by other ministers.

Mr. VENIOT: I am glad that this amendment is being made to the act because my experience as head of the Post Office Department would certainly suggest its advisability. Knowing how difficult it was to administer the act and do justice to those applying for positions that had been vacated by the retirement of officials, I was seriously considering during my latter years of office attempting to have such an amendment made to the act, and I am glad, therefore, that it has been made.

Section agreed to.

On section 9—Suspension of employees in remote districts.

Mr. NEILL: I would like to ask the necessity for this clause. Who asked for it?

Mr. CAHAN: The necessity arises out of the fact that in remote districts where there has been malfeasance of office, theft or other dereliction of duty of a very material kind, no suspension of such officer can be effected at present until it is reported to the head office and the deputy minister or the head of the department takes measures to suspend such an official. This amendment authorizes the chief officer of the department in a remote district to suspend the official and report the suspension to the deputy head in Ottawa for further definite action.

Mr. NEILL: I am entirely opposed to this idea. I do not think this amendment is justified. There is no part of Canada, or very few parts at all events, that are not now in reach of communication by wire, and how long would it take for the chief officer, the little petty man out in a remote place, to wire to Ottawa to get consent to suspend? Are we going to go back to the old days of the divine right of kings when, if the King's porridge was not cooked to his taste, he said "Behead the cook"? I visualize a situation somewhat like this: This amendment talks about the chief officer, but actually he may be a very petty, inferior officer. One day he may get out of bed on the wrong side or he may have had a quarrel with his wife, or he may be drunk with a little brief authority and power, and he suspends one of his officials. The deputy minister has power to remove the suspension, but the man would not be paid in the meantime, and the head out in the remote district, having ordered the suspension, would naturally endeavour to make good on it and have it confirmed. Nine times out of ten the man would get a raw deal. Nothing is going to happen even if a man who has stolen money is left on the staff for a few hours longer until authority is received from Ottawa for his suspension. I do not think this amendment is justified. It is going to lead to a lot of trouble and a lot of injustice.

Mr. CHEVRIER: The law as it now stands, section 51 of the act, reads:

> The head of a department, and in his absence the deputy head, may
> (a) suspend from the performance of his duty any officer, clerk or employee guilty of misconduct or negligence in the performance of his duties.

It was brought to the attention of the committee by the civil service commissioners and by certain deputy ministers that particularly in cases of surveys in far-distant portions of Canada, when an employee became unruly or no more worthy of retaining his position, the officer in charge of the party could not suspend him but had to communicate with the deputy head at Ottawa. That took time and in the meantime the man was continued on as an unruly subject. On the recommendation of the officers of the departments and also in conformity with the representations made by the civil service commissioners for the better administration of the act, the committee felt justified in making this recommendation because the law, section 51, also provides in paragraph (b) that the head of the department may remove such suspension. The recommendation now made does not alter the remaining portion of paragraph (b) of section 51 which reads:

> . . . but no person shall receive any salary or pay for the time or any part of the time during which he was under suspension unless the commission is of opinion that such suspension was unjust.

The amendment simply means that for the time being the superior officer will have the right to suspend, but the whole case will have to be referred to Ottawa and will not be disposed of until the head of the department and the commission have passed thereon.

Mr. NEILL: But my point is that these suspensions will be much more frequent in the future on account of this loose authority.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I am very much inclined to take the same view that my hon. friend from Comox-Alberni has taken and to regard this amendment as an extension of too great authority possibly to persons who may not have the judgment to exercise it. In any case we may perhaps narrow down the scope of the clause if we cannot defeat it. Would the minister be good enough to give a definition of a remote district? What is meant by that phrase, "remote district?" Is it to cover the case of a man such as the senior member for Ottawa suggests, who is employed on surveys far away from rail and telegraphic communication, or are there any fixed territories that would come within the ambit of what are now called "remote districts"?

Mr. VALLANCE: These cases were never referred to the Civil Service Commission at all, but the engineer in charge wired to the deputy head and he, in every instance, gave the powers that this section now gives.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): What is the power?

Mr. CHEVRIER: The right to suspend never belonged to the commission.

Mr. VENIOT: No; I am wondering, however, how conduct of officials who do not come under the commission could be referred to that body. Let us consider post offices with less than $3,000 revenue which would not come under the commission at all.

Mr. CHEVRIER: That is not the point, Mr. Chairman. The point is that the present law provides that a civil servant cannot be suspended by the Civil Service Commission but by the head or the deputy head of the department. There are two things which may happen however, and they are these: Where expeditions and things of that nature are carried out some of the employees are under the Civil Service Commission and some are not. Those who are not under the control of the commission are not affected in any way by this legislation because the old rule prevails. But those who are—

Mr. VENIOT: That is not so, here.

Mr. CHEVRIER: Yes. So that those who are under the Civil Service Commission, and in remote districts, may be suspended by the chief of the expedition or party. The law has to be carried out as it would have been if the deputy had been in control, namely that the Civil Service Commission eventually must pass upon the merit or demerit of the suspension.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I should like the minister to explain the meaning of the term "remote district" as it appears in the act? I have in mind men who may take a trip to the Arctic ocean.

Mr. CAHAN: I think the term "remote district" simply means a remote district, that is a district far removed from the centre of administration.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Bow River, for example?

Mr. CAHAN: This section will be carried out under regulations framed by the commission and approved by the governor in council. I do not think any prejudice is likely to result to any civil service officer or employee in the civil service who is doing his duty. I can understand that a man employed by the civil service and operating in a remote district may become an habitual drunkard, or demented, or he may suffer from ill health so that he is utterly incapable of performing his duties. He may be guilty of some crime in the administration of his office. In such cases the responsible head of the department located in such remote district certainly should have the right temporarily to suspend and to report to the deputy head. It is a mere suspension. If the commission should decide that the suspension was not justified the man would be paid his full time and returned to office and to the performance of his duties. The fact is that in the administration of any department of business affairs I should not care to be administering in a remote district unless I had at least the right to suspend officers who were incompetent, inefficient, guilty of mal-administration or misconduct. It is simply a right temporarily to suspend.

Mr. NEILL: The minister has said that the man who is suspended will suffer no wrong because the Civil Service Commission will see to it that suspension is removed and that he is paid in full if such suspension were not justified. But here is the situation: After all, men are human and liable to frailties. Under some of the circumstances enumerated a moment ago a man on the impulse of the moment or in a temper may suspend a subordinate. Having reported the suspension, human nature would be opposed to the admission, "I spoke too quickly, and I am sorry." He will not do that. It is up to the official to try to justify the suspension. He will do it, and stress every effort within his ability or facilities to make the suspension permanent, despite the fact that the dismissal was made too rashly or too quickly.

Will the minister tell us any instance where the public service of Canada has been prejudiced and any loss sustained by the government through the lack of this section? I should like to hear one instance.

Mr. CAHAN: Mr. Chairman, I have not such a poor opinion of human nature as my hon. friend. For many years I have employed men—very rough men—some 10,000 to 20,000 of them, when nearly every man carried a revolver and sometimes shot at sight. However their foremen always had a sense of justice, and although they might do things in anger they were not likely, when in cold blood they reviewed the circumstances, to misrepresent their own motives or the facts. I have confidence in the officials in charge of departments in remote districts. If they give way to anger and improperly or unjustly suspend men they will not endeavour to misrepresent the facts to the commission or the head office. However if they should do so there would be thorough and competent inquiries and in the end justice would be done. I think that a man in a remote district, who has a dozen or a hundred men under him, especially when they have little or no communication during certain seasons of the year with the outside world, should have the right of suspension for misconduct or inefficiency. Otherwise there could not be proper administration of any branch of any department.

Mr. NEILL: From the minister's remarks I gather that I would be justified in advising subordinates to carry revolvers and to shoot at sight.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): The minister has referred to the centre of administration. Was he referring to Ottawa or to the nearest office of the particular department in question?

Mr. CAHAN: Under section 51 in every instance the head of the department is the head officer at Ottawa. For the information of hon. members I shall read section 51:

> 51. The head of a department, and in his absence the deputy head, may
> (a) suspend from the performance of his duty any officer, clerk or employee guilty of misconduct or negligence in the performance of his duties;
> (b) remove such suspension;
> but no person shall receive any salary or pay for the time or any part of the time during which he was under suspension unless the commission is of opinion that such suspension was unjust or made in error or that the punishment inflicted was too severe.
> 2. All cases of suspension, with the reasons therefor, shall be reported in writing by the deputy head to the commission.

It must be a report by the deputy head of the department to the commission sitting at Ottawa, who have the final determination and disposition of the matter.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): In answer to my question regarding a definition of remote places the minister said that a remote place was any place removed a great distance from the centre of administration. Now he says the centre of administration is Ottawa. In my view the city of Vancouver would be removed a great distance from Ottawa. Would this legislation give power to officials in Vancouver to discharge or suspend minor officials?

Mr. GUTHRIE: No.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Does it?

Mr. GUTHRIE: No.

Mr. CHEVRIER: Let me say to my hon. friend from Bow River that we had in mind cases of a temporary character such as I mentioned a moment ago, an expedition, a survey, or something of that kind not in the ordinary course of administration. He mentioned the appointment of a postmaster at Vancouver. I do not think anyone, no matter how he might disport his imagination, would try to argue that Vancouver is in a remote district of Canada.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Not at all. The minister's definition does that.

Mr. CHEVRIER: No one could argue that Vancouver, Edmonton or Halifax is a remote point from Ottawa in the administration of the civil service. "In a remote district" means in a district which is far removed from the ordinary administration of the Civil Service Commission. This section covers only the cases that are presently under the Civil Service Act. Probably what my hon. friend from Comox-Alberni (Mr. Neill) has in mind is a minor position which is not under the act and is not at all affected by this provision. It gives to the chief of the party the right to suspend, subject to the Civil Service Commission subsequently passing on that suspension after he has reported it to the deputy head. The section is not complicated at all.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Not after the senior member for Ottawa (Mr. Chevrier) has cleared up the meaning of "any remote district." It seems that this is to apply to employees on such business as surveys, expeditions, and the like.

Mr. CHEVRIER: Certainly.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): In that case it will not be as vicious as if applied, as the minister's definition would lead me to believe it might be applied, to such remote places as Vancouver.

Section agreed to.

On section 10—Act not to apply to postmasters of certain revenue post offices.

Mr. GAGNON: As a difficulty arises on the interpretation of this section, I would ask the Secretary of State (Mr. Cahan) to consent to its standing over until after luncheon.

Mr. HEENAN: Some of us may not be here after luncheon. I thought we might have an explanation at least as to what procedure will be followed in filling these offices with less than $3,000 revenue. How will the returned soldier preference be maintained under these conditions?

Mr. CAHAN: This bill is simply an enactment of the various material paragraphs of the report of the select committee of this house which reported upon the administration of the Civil Service Act. I am not in a position to answer the question of the hon. gentleman in detail. Under 57a no particular line of conduct or policy has been discussed or even considered by the government when I have been present. It was suggested that the report might be carried into effect by order in council, but the view of the officers of the Department of Justice, confirmed by the Minister of Justice, was that it should be carried into effect, if at all, by express enactment. This section 10 is the proposed enactment.

Mr. HEENAN: I am not complaining about the section. I want to know how we are going to carry it out and at the same time protect the returned soldier. Surely the government must have some idea whether or not they are going to protect the returned soldier, and how. Hitherto these positions have been advertised in the different centres where the vacancies occur. Will this practice be followed, and by whom?

Mr. CAHAN: This section 10 provides that "the preference provided by section twenty-nine of this act, in favour of the persons mentioned therein, shall be applied in respect of appointments to such positions." This includes returned soldiers. I presume the government, when this bill is passed, will adopt such a line of policy as will maintain for the returned soldier the preference which he at present enjoys under the Civil Service Act. I cannot go further than that.

Mr. BROWN: How is it possible to apply the provisions of section 29 when those positions are taken from under the Civil Service Act? Under present conditions an examination of the candidates has to be held. Whether that examination is perfect or imperfect is not the point. There is an examination held, and under the act a returned soldier having sixty per cent of the qualifications takes the lead over the man who has one hundred per cent.

Mr. BOWMAN: They are all treated on the same basis so long as they come within the disability.

Mr. BROWN: He certainly has a percentage of preference under the act, and that is determined by the examination. He is given so much credit for his educational qualifications, his personality, and so on all down the line. Then an estimate is made as to whether the returned soldier in view of all the circumstances takes precedence over the man who is not a returned soldier. When all these positions are taken from under the act, how is it possible to hold any such investigation and to determine on anything like a fair basis whether the returned soldier is really a competent man or not? Actually it rests in the hands of the man who has the gift of the position to say that in his judgment the candidate has or has not the necessary qualifications.

Mr. CAHAN: I think it is possible. Personally I have not taken one side or the other in connection with this report. I thought that perhaps it was not expedient that I, who nominally for the time being represent the civil service in this house, should do so. But there are branches of the public service in which appointments are made and which are not under the Civil Service Act. A large body of the employees of the National Revenue department are not within the provisions of the Civil Service Act. I know while I was temporarily performing the duties of minister of that department last summer a number of appointments were made, but in every case there was a thorough examination of all applicants, and the officials of the department reported upon the merits of those applicants irrespective of their political affiliations. I venture to say that the merit system is not necessarily restricted to the Civil Service of Canada as administered under the Civil Service Act. In my humble opinion it is quite possible in many cases to have a much better application of the merit system outside of the Civil Service Act. I have no doubt some regulations will have to be made whereby the preference given to the returned soldier shall, in accordance with this section, be retained. If it is not retained, my hon. friend, as a member of this house, will have full opportunity later to express his demand for a rectification of the procedure adopted.

Mr. BROWN: In actual practice, I think it will work out that the appointments will be made just as they were made under the old-fashioned system.

Mr. CHEVRIER: As a member of the committee, may I again say that it was the intention of the committee that the soldiers' preference should be maintained, and I am satisfied that it will be maintained if the regulations are followed out. There were two ways in which it could have been done. Personally, I should have preferred to have the recommendation of the committee submitted to the Civil Service Commission, so that the commission would have availed itself of section 59 of the act and made a report to the effect that in its view it was impracticable or no longer in the public interest that this portion of the service should remain within its jurisdiction, and then it would have availed itself of the last part of section 59, making regulations thereunder. It is provided that such regulations as are deemed advisable shall be made, prescribing how such positions are to be dealt with. If this is taken away from under the operation of the act, either by statute or by the operations of the Civil Service Commission, upon an order in council, though at present, it would seem to me, it will be taken away by the effect of the bill, then all those excluded positions are to-day subject to the old order in council No. 1053, which declares that the soldiers' preference must be maintained. At present all these exempted positions are subject to the provisions of that order in council No. 1053, and if they are exempted under the statute, it is quite competent for parliament to say that, notwithstanding that such position may be taken away from the commission, section 29 of the act shall apply, in which there is ample safeguard for all preferences to returned men. To my mind, whether you do it one way or the other, the soldiers' preference will be maintained; and at all events it was well settled in the minds of members of the committee that that preference should not be done away with.

Mr. CAHAN: I ask that this section stand for the present and that we proceed with the others.

Section stands.

On section 11—Retired private secretaries not to be entitled to positions in civil service.

Mr. HACKETT: This section would take away from the private secretary a prerogative which has been his for many years, I recommend that the committee consider very carefully some of the consequences of this section. The importance of the private secretary to his minister cannot be over estimated. A minister is dependent to a great extent upon his private secretary, and because of the importance of the position it has in the past attracted men of unusual sagacity, ability and great devotion to duty. Recently the practice of doing away with private secretaries who have served ministers of a previous administration has been modified, in the present government many of the ministers have retained the services of the men who had served their predecessors in office. This, I believe, is commendable. I do not think it has been known that a private secretary has ever been disloyal to the minister whom he was serving. The service as a whole, I submit, has been enriched by the absorption into it of men who have served as private secretaries. Private secretaries have opportunities for acquiring experience and becoming efficient administrators which many others in the service are denied; if we look about the service we find that many who are discharging important duties in high office in a commendable way have been in earlier days private secretaries. I am aware that some have protested that the provision of the Civil Service Act which this section would abrogate tends to lessen the ambition of the civil servant who has not been a private secretary, because he might be denied an opportunity for advancement by the appointment of a former private secretary to a position over him. There may be something in the objection, but I think, it should weigh very lightly in the scale when considered with the possibility of denying to the service the excellence, natural and acquired, of this class of men. I therefore ask the committee to hesitate before withdrawing from the private secretaries that stimulus to take up and perform very arduous duties which follows from the offer of a high and permanent position in the service when they have finished their days of secretaryship.

Mr. BROWN: Would the passing of this section mean that the private secretary, when he ceased to be such, would be eliminated from the service?

Mr. CAHAN: I understand that is the case. If a civil servant is appointed private secretary, while private secretary he is entitled under the law to an addition of $600 to his salary as civil servant. But a private secretary who is appointed at a time when he is not a member of the civil service, and who continues as private secretary for any term of years, would have no right to be appointed to the civil service upon the termination of his engagement as private secretary.

Mr. VENIOT: Except by application and examination.

Mr. CAHAN: He would have to work his way up from the bottom as though he had never been a civil servant.

Mr. NICHOLSON: I support what the hon. member for Stanstead (Mr. Hackett) has said. This is most unfair. Assuming that all private secretaries were released every time there was a change of government, and absorbed into the service, those who were so released and absorbed into the service would be only a small fraction of the total number of civil servants in Ottawa or in Canada. Anyone who has had experience with the departments and with the private secretaries of ministers over a period of years—I have had an experience of some fifteen years—cannot fail to realize that the private secretaries, from the Prime Minister's down, are perhaps the ablest men in the service. These men serve long arduous hours, they are at the beck and call of their own ministers, of members of the house, of delegations and of all types and classes of people from one end of this country to the other and to my way of thinking it would be most unfair to cast them adrift simply because a government has changed. I am unable to understand just what the committee had in mind in making this recommendation. There are men and women who served under previous administrations and who are to-day diligent in their services to present ministers. I do not know where you could find people more courteous and diligent than these private secretaries, and I feel that the clause should be amended.

Mr. BROWN: I am inclined to agree with the hon. member for East Algoma (Mr. Nicholson). I cannot imagine that the number involved would be very great, and I think it would be advisable to amend this clause. A private secretary must have the complete confidence of his minister and I think it is a credit both to the ministers and to the secretaries that those who served in the past have been taken over. I do not think this clause should pass as it might very well be that the very excellent service rendered by these secretaries might be required again in the course of a few years, as we think possibly might happen.

Mr. CHEVRIER: Mr. Chairman, it is with a lot of diffidence that I agree with the recommendation. During the eleven years I have been in this house I have come to appreciate the value of the private secretaries but, on the other hand, one must not lose sight of the fact that at every election there would be ten to fifteen men and women injected into the civil service. These men and women are not put into minor positions, they are entitled to chief and principal clerkships. There are conscientious men and women who for twenty to twenty-five years, and sometimes for thirty years, have been expecting promotions to these positions and I think it would be most unfair and against the merit system to inject these secretaries into the service over the heads of those already in the service. The service may be deprived of very efficient men and women but we must not blow hot and cold at the same time.

Mr. HACKETT: Does the hon. member consider that this would be a departure from the merit system? Does he not consider that private secretaries have some opportunity of establishing their merit and that they are appointed because of merit?

Mr. CHEVRIER: I can only answer my hon. friend by quoting the definition of appointments to the civil service. An appointment to the civil service proper is made only upon a competitive examination or a demonstration of skill. I have yet to be shown that any of these private secretaries have been appointed into the service upon a competitive examination or a demonstration of skill. So long as the merit system is defined along those lines I cannot logically admit that these secretaries are being admitted into the service upon a competitive basis. If there is a vacancy and these secretaries can bring themselves within the rules and regulations of the Civil Service Commission to compete in examinations, that course might be tried, but I think even then difficulty would be encountered. In the case of promotions or vacancies unless there are no departmental men or women capable of filling the position, no outsider can compete. The deputy head of a department must state that there is no one in the department in line for promotion to the vacant position before an outsider is allowed to compete. I think the course taken by the committee was a fair one towards the service and showed its intention that the merit system as described by the statute should be continued and that those employees in the service who have been long waiting for a promotion should not be debarred simply because someone who has served a minister well and truly is to be taken into the service.

When a minister comes into office he has two alternatives in the selection of a private secretary; he may appoint a new secretary or take over the secretary who served the previous minister. There are private secretaries who have served ministers under different administrations, and there are others who are appointed because of the fortunes of war and perhaps they should be prepared to go out when the fortunes of war go the other way. I think it would be a good thing if a system of permanent private secretaries was adopted.

Mr. NICHOLSON: In connection with the question raised by the hon. member as to actual merit against academic merit, I should like to ask the hon. member if he does not consider that when a minister appoints a secretary he does appoint one because of merit and ability. I think we can take for granted that when a private secretary is appointed he has some merit—merit at least equal to that of the majority of civil servants. He has, shall we say at least four years' experience with the minister, the deputy minister, members of the house and the public and is it not reasonable to say that the experience acquired, plus the ability he had when appointed, would put him on a level with the average civil servant? My hon. friend shakes his head but it is my opinion that a private secretary with the experience he has gained and the ability he possessed when appointed is just about equal to any man or woman in the category of the service to which he would be appointed. To my way of thinking it is most unfair to cast these men adrift simply because a change has occurred in the government. I have come in contact with former private secretaries who are now in the service and it is my opinion that their being there is of advantage to the service.

Mr. BOWMAN: Mr. Chairman, I think the senior member for Ottawa (Mr. Chevrier) has stated clearly the reasons why the committee brought in this recommendation. I agree with what the hon. members for Stanstead (Mr. Hackett) and East Algoma (Mr. Nicholson) have said with respect to the merits of the private secretary, but I cannot see that what they said with respect to being cast adrift applies because these private secretaries would have a right to compete for vacant positions.

Mr. NICHOLSON: To start at the bottom.

Mr. BOWMAN: Why should they not start at the bottom on the same basis as many others? After all, a man who has served perhaps twenty or twenty-five years in the civil service is entitled to some consideration. Why should a private secretary, simply because he has occupied for a year, or two, or three, or four years that position with one of the ministers, be given a position in the civil service in priority to the other man? Not only does this procedure deprive of promotion the man whose position is immediately below that given to the private secretary—

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Has this procedure deprived any civil servant of his promotion? I have never heard of such a case.

Mr. BOWMAN: If private secretaries are placed in positions of importance, of seniority, they must certainly stop the whole line of promotion from the bottom up.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Not necessarily.

Mr. BOWMAN: I cannot see where they do not if we have a real merit system.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Likely information on that point came before the committee, and I should like to know whether in recent appointments any private secretary to a minister has prevented promotion in the civil service.

Mr. BOWMAN: Unless an absolutely new position were created, I cannot conceive where that would not be the case.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I hate to interrupt, but I thought the committee had evidence to that effect, because I saw a good deal of it in the newspapers. My private secretary was a civil servant and of course returned to the department, so I have no personal experience of the situation described. I was thinking of private secretaries to other former ministers and I have not heard of their displacing anybody.

Mr. BOWMAN: The committee have taken it for granted to this extent that where private secretaries have been given appointments in the civil service, they must take established positions; otherwise those positions would be open to competition in the usual way.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Is it not provided in the act that they are to be given positions of chief clerk or better?

Mr. BOWMAN: Yes, but if that is done, they take positions which others now lower down in the service would ultimately fill, and so they stop the whole line of promotion. Personally I quite agree that some, from their experience, would prove to be very valuable civil servants; but after all, if you are going to have a merit system, they should enter the service just the same as anybody else, that is, by competition and merit combined. That and the reasons set out by the senior member for Ottawa were those that appealed to the members of the committee in bringing in this recommendation. We felt that a man who had a great number of years of experience in the position which he occupied in a department, should not have his right of promotion interfered with by the injection into the service before him, of somebody merely because the latter had occupied the position of private secretary.

Mr. CARMICHAEL: I wish to express my approval of this amendment as outlined in the proposed bill and to endorse the remarks made by the hon. member for Dauphin (Mr. Bowman), and the senior member for Ottawa (Mr. Chevrier). As I understand the situation, it is that a minister has a right to select his private secretary wheresoever he desires. A private secretary need not have any special academic qualifications; he is a man whom the minister selects to do his private work, whom the minister thinks will be capable of doing that special work. He is a man perhaps for whom the minister has a liking, who will be congenial, and a man, or, indeed it may be a lady, who will be capable of filling a position that may require a special personal qualification. But it does not necessarily follow that that particular person could drop into some department of government and fill just as acceptably a position there. Further, if I understand the practice correctly, it is that when a private secretary has held such a position for a year, if some change of government should occur or if for some other reason that secretary is thrown out of such a position, then he or she is required to be taken into the civil service in some department of government. I believe that to be a correct statement of the situation. When they are made permanent with some department, I understand they are given very handsome salaries. Surely there is no element of fairness in that procedure. It leads naturally to dissatisfaction among those other civil servants, many of whom may, as has been pointed out, have been in the department for a number of years and are anxiously waiting for promotion. This private secretary, who may not be at all capable, is taken into that department and given perhaps a position of seniority over those who have been there for ten, fifteen or more years. That is most unfair. If the provision were made—and I presume it exists—that private secretaries might come into the civil service through the method of examination just like any other applicant, that would be fair. In that case it would be open to any private secretary to come into the service under prescribed examination, and if he or she should be qualified for that position, he or she should be taken on and given a rating along with others.

As regards the argument that because a private secretary has left some other position, he should be given special consideration, in all fairness that argument is not used in reference to members of parliament. Members of parliament leave their callings and take their chances with the public for one year, or two or more years. But after the public says; We do not want you any longer, no special provision is made for us; we drop out and sometimes we may drop very hard, but we have to look out for ourselves. There is no department of government to reach out a welcome hand and offer us a generous, substantial emolument for the rest of our lives, unless perchance, we might land in the upper chamber. Most of us, however, leave our callings, enter political life and take our chances. Generally speaking, therefore, it is only fair that the gentleman or lady who leaves some other calling and becomes private secretary to a minister, should, when the minister ceases to be such, take his or her chances just as the rest of us have to do.

Mr. HACKETT: The hon. member for Kindersley has apparently overlooked the red chamber.

Mr. CARMICHAEL: I mentioned that.

Mr. HACKETT: Members of this house have been known to retire there and not without some satisfaction to themselves. I would like, however, to bring the remarks of the hon. gentleman to this test. Is there an abuse? I suggest that this change should not be made unless it is to cure an abuse. Is there a man in the civil service who has been a private secretary who is unfitted and does not possess the qualifications for the position in the service which he now holds? If, as suggested by the hon. member for Ottawa, the definition of merit is not sufficiently broad to measure merit in its true sense, I think it should be amended. In any event I move, Mr. Chairman, seconded by the hon. member for East Algoma, that section 11 be deleted.

Mr. PECK: There is just one point that does not seem to have yet been considered, and that is the effect upon the present private secretaries. It seems to me that if we adopt the section as it stands it is going to deprive the existing private secretaries of the benefits they have a right to receive under the present law. So if we pass this section I think it should be only on the understanding that it does not take away from the present private secretaries the rights which they now have. These men and women have been appointed under a certain law, and they knew when they received their appointments that having served for a certain period they would be taken care of in the civil service. They have remained as private secretaries on that understanding. So I repeat, Mr. Chairman, that if this section is going to pass, it should be only on the understanding that those who are now occupying the position of private secretary shall have the benefit of the existing law. In other words, that this section be amended so as not to apply to existing private secretaries.

Mr. CHEVRIER: There is one word that I want to say on this amendment, and it is as to what is meant by the merit system. The merit system, as I understand it, is not the merit of the man who is trying to get into the service. The merit system is the system that finds the man best fitted for the position, then appoints him and protects him until his retirement, and sees that he is treated in an equitable manner. That, as I understand it, is the merit system. It is not the merit of the man outside trying to get into the service. If this amendment is carried, the meritorious employee will be deprived of the right of promotion, and therefore the merit system will suffer an encroachment. I think that those members of the house who feel that the merit system is the only one, and I am one of those, Mr. Chairman, who feel that the merit system is the only proper system for the administration of the civil service, cannot vote in any other way except against the amendment.

Mr. GAGNON: I would like to say one word, and that is that I gladly support the amendment which has been moved by the hon. member for Stanstead. According to the information I have, only about five or six private secretaries would be affected by the bill as it now stands, because most of the private secretaries have been taken from the service already. But the private secretaries who were appointed in July or August, 1930, entered the service on the understanding that should their ministers abandon their office for one reason or another they would be given a position in the civil service. Why should we be so strict, speaking about abuses and that sort of thing, when there are only about five or six private secretaries who are eligible to enter the service and why should we deprive them of an acquired right to be appointed to the service?

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I rise to a point of order, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN: I would point out to the hon. member for Stanstead that there cannot be any amendment to strike out a section.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): That was my point, Mr. Chairman, exactly.

The CHAIRMAN: The point is well taken.

Mr. CHEVRIER: In answer to the hon. member for Dorchester, it does not make a bit of difference if there is only one private secretary to be absorbed into the service. That would be a sufficient encroachment on the merit system to warrant us in carrying this section as it stands.

Mr. ROSS: The argument that a person becomes a private secretary with the understanding of later on entering the civil service is, I think, a very poor argument.

An hon. MEMBER: Why?

Mr. ROSS: Why should a private secretary be given such a preference over those who have to take a competitive examination in order to enter the service? I have listened to the argument on both sides, and I repeat that that was about the weakest argument that could be put up, namely, that a person becomes a private secretary, I do not care under what government, with the promise that he is going to step into some nice job in the civil service.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): One comes to have a realization of the difficulties to be encountered when one has had experience. For example, in 1922, when the late government came into office we found the private secretary of the Prime Minister left high and dry after a good many years' service.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: There were three of them.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Yes, there were three, and this particular man was absorbed into the civil service and became a very valuable member of it. Another one is acting as private secretary to-day. I took my private secretary from the civil service itself, and when I went out of office he was absorbed back into the service. I do know, however, that I tried through the avenue of the Civil Service Commission to have provision made for two of these private secretaries who had been left stranded and we did manage to absorb them into the civil service. I do not know of any civil servant who has suffered in consequence of these appointments, and I thought probably the committee that suggested this amendment would have evidence to prove that people in the civil service who had earned the right to promotion had been prevented from being promoted by the absorption of private secretaries into the civil service at the time of the change of government. It does seem to me that a man who has acted as private secretary to a minister for seven or eight years, as some of these gentlemen whom we found out in the cold had acted, is entitled to some consideration. It is all right, as the hon. member for Kindersley has pointed out, to say that we as members of the house must take our chances, that we have nothing to look forward to after our term of service has expired, but I say, Mr. Chairman, that the man who acts in the capacity of private secretary, if he is worthy of the name at all, is a valuable acquisition to the civil service of this country. That is my feeling in the matter. Perhaps the provision in the old act, that one year's service as a private secretary entitles a man to entrance to the civil service, might be amended to call for a period of five or six years, but it seems to me that it is hardly fair that with a change of government five or six men who have given good service should be left out in the cold and have to seek some other employment. There are usually not more than that number.

Mr. NICHOLSON: One word, Mr. Chairman, in reply to the hon. member for Kingston City (Mr. Ross). I do not think he caught the implication of the suggestion with regard to the rights of those who have come into the service. At the time they came in the law provided that they would be taken care of. The law, as it stood, made provision for them, and if this legislation comes into effect they will not be cared for. The proposed legislation would undermine the conditions under which these men came into the service as private secretaries.

Perhaps what the ex-minister said may be worthy of some consideration, namely that the period of time they should serve could be extended from one to three or four years. However to take that class of man and say that he must go back and pass an examination to take a position as janitor or office boy, or some other position, and then to work up again, is grossly unfair. No business in this country could be built up by following that principle. These men and women have come into the service because of their exceptional qualifications, or they would not be here. They have served and are serving, and to pass an enactment saying that because a government or minister may change they must be cut adrift without any moorings whatsoever is in my view the most unfair suggestion I have heard brought before this House of Commons.

Mr. ROSS: I do not think my hon. friend appreciated my stand. I do not see any reason why these men should not pass a civil service examination. The best qualified clerk in any city or town, or anywhere else, cannot take a government position without passing an examination. If they pass civil service examinations they are eligible for positions. I come to the argument that nothing has been heard about anybody being hurt. How can one person be put into a high position without hurting some person who did not get the position? How could it happen that somebody would not be hurt and that some one has not been stopped in his line of promotion, unless such people were appointed to unnecessary positions for which there was no competition. I cannot understand how any person could be picked up outside of the service and put into some high position in it without hurting everybody from that position down.

At one o'clock the committee took recess.

The committee resumed at three o'clock.

On section 11—Retired private secretaries not to be entitled to positions in civil service.

Mr. CAHAN: Mr. Chairman, this bill is in accordance with the report of the select special committee, and the government has introduced the bill in order to carry out the views of that committee, but I think this discussion has led to a reconsideration as to whether section 2 of the amending act which was passed in 1929 should be amended in the form now proposed.

In selecting a private secretary I think there is no member of a government, entering upon his duties as minister of the crown, but has found very serious difficulty in procuring in the civil service men who are thoroughly competent and qualified for the position of private secretary. I do not reflect at all upon the members of the service who are subject to the direction of the Secretary of State when I say quite frankly that, excepting women in the service, it would have been impossible for me to find in that branch a man who was thoroughly qualified, or rather who had the qualifications which I desired, for appointment as private secretary. In the first place, the private secretary to the Secretary of State must be thoroughly competent in two languages. He should be a man of education, preferably a graduate of one of the colleges. He must be of a mentality and temperament which qualify him to deal not only with other departments and their officials but with the general public as well.

When I sought to obtain a private secretary I was disposed to retain the secretary of my predecessor in that office, who was a thoroughly qualified man. But in conversation with him I found that he felt some diffidence in remaining as my secretary. He had been carrying out the views of my predecessor in office who, to a certain extent, was a political organizer, and he felt that perhaps his political views somewhat debarred him from receiving my full confidence as my private secretary. When I sought to obtain another I asked at least four or five young men whom I thought were perfectly qualified. but each refused to accept the salary which would be available to the private secretary of a minister of the crown. A private secretary must attend to his duties from at least half past nine in the morning until midnight or later. He has no such hours of leisure as those which are allotted to the ordinary civil servant. In the course of two or three years I think he becomes more competent and more efficient to fulfil creditably the duties of a member of the civil service than any other class of men appointed to that service. Some of those who were appointed under the statute as it exists at the present time were induced to accept employment as private secretaries, and to carry on the duties pertaining to that office, at comparatively low salaries because they knew that under the statute, if they were not guilty of misconduct, they would be qualified for appointments, in the civil service, to the position of a chief clerk, when the minister should retire.

In discussing this matter with some of my colleagues and with other members of the house it was suggested that the public service could be adequately protected if a slight amendment were made to the statute passed in 1929, which is chapter 38 of the statutes of that year, making it necessary for a private secretary to serve not one year before qualifying for appointment to the service, but to serve at least three years before being eligible for such appointment. The section of the Civil Service Act as it now stands reads:

> . . . in the event of the minister or other member of the government, or the leader of the opposition for whom he is acting as secretary, ceasing to be a minister or member of the government or to be the leader of the opposition, as the case may be, the said secretary shall thereupon be appointed to a permanent position in the public service classified not lower than that of chief clerk, provided that the said secretary has been acting as such for a period of not less than one year.

It occurs to me that in justice to those who have already accepted appointment, and to insure that this section is not made use of for the purpose of qualifying for first-class clerkships men who have been placed temporarily in the office of private secretary, for the present every good purpose might be served if we simply amended that section by striking out the word "one" and inserting in lieu thereof the word "three," so that three years would be sufficient.

I should like to know how that amendment would meet with the views of the house. This is rather a difficult matter. Personally I feel under a moral obligation to the young gentleman whom I selected. I do not think he has any politics in the world. He is a thoroughly competent man in French and in English and is a college graduate who devotes himself in a most efficient way to the services which are required of him. He must be so competent as to relieve the minister of a great deal of the minister's share of work in the administration of the department. The Department of Secretary of State receives from four thousand to five thousand letters a week, which have to be distributed and dealt with. The minister cannot attend to that. Since I have been in the office, while I have been in Ottawa I have worked frequently at least fourteen or sixteen hours a day. I have no civil service hours, and during the session I keep my secretary employed till midnight more frequently than otherwise. And that man, with that experience with me, is, I am sure, as competent and as well qualified for civil service duties as any other young man seeking an appointment to the civil service could possibly be. I go further than that. There are in the Department of the Secretary of State some young women who would be thoroughly qualified for these duties, but it is impossible for a Secretary of State to retain a young woman at his office until midnight, taking her away on his official trips and all that sort of thing. It is necessary for me to have a young man as private secretary, and in that whole department I do not think there is any person, who would accept the position of private secretary, who is as well qualified as the young man whose services I secured, on the condition, well understood by him, that he came in under the provisions of this act, the repeal of which is now sought. I should like to have the views of hon. members with regard to such an amendment. I cannot move the amendment myself, but if the committee is favourable I would ask my colleague, the Minister of Finance, to move it.

Mr. RHODES: I beg to move accordingly:

That all the words after the words "said act" in the first line of section 11 of the bill be struck out and the following be inserted in place thereof:

"is hereby amended by striking out the words 'one year' in the last line of said subsection and by inserting the words 'three years' in place thereof."

Mr. CAHAN: The section now reads:

Provided that the said secretary has been acting as such for a period of not less than one year.

As amended it would read:

Provided that the said secretary has been acting as such for a period of not less than three years.

Mr. MARCIL: Does this mean that he must serve three years continuously with the same minister, or may he serve with different ministers during that time?

Mr. CAHAN: With any minister, I should say, in the capacity of private secretary.

Mr. MARCIL: Does the amendment provide for that?

Mr. CAHAN: As it stands now, the section provides that the secretary, either of a minister or of the leader of the opposition:

. . . shall thereupon be appointed to a permanent position in the public service, classified not lower than that of chief clerk, provided that the said secretary has been acting as such for a period of not less than one year.

I assume, and I think it is clear, that this means provided he has been acting as secretary of a minister of the crown or a leader of the opposition for three years, as the amendment now reads.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): When the motion for concurrence in the report of the committee was before the house, I ventured to move an amendment to one clause of that report which I regarded as objectionable. In reply to my amendment, hon. members, including some on both sides, suggested that as the report of the committee was unanimous we might as well accept it as it stood and not propose any amendment. Indeed, the Prime Minister went further, and having praised the committee for its excellent work and the unanimity of its decision, said:

Under these circumstances, so far as the government are concerned, we assumed that the unanimous judgment of the committee would be unanimously adopted by the house.

Now the government changes its mind, and we have, suggested by one minister and moved by another, an amendment to the bill, which amendment is just as objectionable as it was contended that my proposed amendment to the report was. I regard this section 11 as one of the excellent features of the bill. It restored the merit principle where the merit principle had been violated by the previous administration. I support the present section of the bill, and I am opposed to the amendment not only because the section in question sustains the merit principle throughout and protects the privileges and rights of civil servants, but further because every single organization representing the civil servants that appeared before the committee asked for this legislation. Further than that, the report of the Civil Service Commission itself submitted in the year 1930 makes pointed reference to this very matter. Under the subject "legislation", at page 14, the report says:

Private Secretaries—

It would seem that a retrograde step was taken, in so far as civil service legislation is concerned, when chapter 38, 19-20 George V, was placed on the statutes. Legislation of this character has a tendency to dishearten the conscientious, hardworking employee whose chances of advancement are blocked by the preferment of an ex-minister's private secretary, and the lowering of interest in the personnel is reflected inevitably in the character of the work performed.

It is also open to question whether, from the point of view of efficiency and economy, the departments are benefited by having their higher supervisory positions filled by persons who are unfamiliar with their work.

Secretaries of ministers are certainly not familiar with the routine work of civil service administration.

In many instances, no doubt, the private secretary is a capable official who may, if he has had years of experience as private secretary in a department, speedily become of value to the staff. On the other hand, the tendency is to create in some departments unnecessary higher-grade positions, or to fill those already vacant with a view rather to the interest of the private secretary than to that of the department. It may be pointed out, further, that the legislation in question is contrary to the whole spirit of the Civil Service Act, inasmuch as private secretaries are appointed without competition, and the section of the act requiring that vacancies be filled as far as possible by promotion is contravened.

There is the definite printed recommendation of the Civil Service Commission, made to this house in the form of its annual report. In the evidence given before the committee every single organization represented on behalf of the civil servants recommended this very piece of legislation and opposed the granting of positions to private secretaries, especially the few positions available to men of that type. I quote from page 261 of the evidence. In this case it is given by the president of the Civil Service Association of Ottawa:

The Witness: Now, I would like to break a little fresh ground. There is the piece of legislation known as the private secretaries' amendment to the Civil Service Act, properly known as chapter 38, 19-20 George V, an Act to amend the Civil Service Act, assented to June 14, 1929, which we believe to be decidedly contrary to the principle of the merit system. Perhaps I could put it this way: A new government comes into office following a general election. A minister brings to Ottawa a young man he has selected to be his private secretary —John Doe. Already in this department is one Richard Roe, who has been employed in the service for twenty years, having successively held a junior clerkship, a principal clerkship and now is a head clerk—these various advances having been effected by promotion after the usual investigation by the Civil Service Commission. Richard Roe is now looking forward to a chief clerkship. There may be only one chief clerkship in that department; the present incumbent is some years older than Roe and is due for superannuation in a couple of years or so, but manages to hang on—human nature—most of us would do the same. In the meantime the ministry, with a small majority, is getting ready for the inevitable general election which in four years follows. The administration is changed. Under the legislation I have referred to, the minister, ceasing to be a minister or member of government, the said secretary (John Doe) "shall thereupon be appointed to a permanent position in the public service classified not lower than that of chief clerk, provided that the said secretary has been acting as such for a period of not less than one year."

The present proposal is to change that and make it three years. That is but a very slight improvement of an entirely incorrect principle. The evidence continues:

The department has no need, or no place, for an additional chief clerk. The elderly incumbent is now retired and John Doe fills the position. As a consequence Richard Roe's opportunity is postponed for years or it may be forever. Further, the principal clerk next in line to Richard Roe, the clerk grade 4, the clerk grade 3, grade 2, grade 1, all efficient public servants, all are in a like predicament. The line of promotion in that department is blocked indefinitely. Not only may this unfortunate circumstance occur after a general election, but it may occur in any department, at any time during any administration, when any member of the government ceases to be a member of that government.

Nothing that I could say would add to the very pointed and effective remarks of the president of the Civil Service Association given before that committee. Let us continue and endeavour to find out whether any damage has been done. The point has been raised by the hon. members for East Algoma (Mr. Nicholson) and Stanstead (Mr. Hackett) as to whether or not anyone has been injured by this provision. I quote from the evidence of the same witness as follows:

Q. How many positions are there in the civil service as chief clerk?

The position of chief clerk is the one to which these secretaries are supposed to go. Incidentally, it carries with it an emolument of $3,100 per year. The question continues:

Can you tell me, Mr. Bland—approximately? —A. In the neighbourhood of 200 or 250, with that salary.

Those are all the positions there are of that particular type. The evidence continues:

Q. How many private secretaries were put into the civil service after the election of 1918?

Mr. Bland: There have been 54 all together.

That is not a small proportion, 54 out of 250. Those 54 appointments had the effect of postponing indefinitely expected advancements within the service based on the merit system. These advancements might well have been anticipated, in fact should be anticipated by every occupant of a position within the service. I am opposed to any alteration of the present section in the bill. As I said at the outset of my remarks, this section is one of the bright features of the bill and I hope this committee will sustain the special committee in this regard.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Mr. Chairman, if I understand rightly the words of the Secretary of State (Mr. Cahan) the proposed amendment leaves the section as it was except that the secretary must have occupied his position for four years instead of three.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Three years.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Three years. Well, I am in favour of that and I find myself in accord with the Secretary of State in that respect. I have had experience in the provincial and federal houses with private secretaries and I know that when a minister takes office and finds the secretary of his predecessor holding the position, he feels that if his services are to be dispensed with, a position should be found for him. I do not think a secretary should be thrown into the street. I know that many ministers would be completely lost without their secretaries. I have had to do without one for the last two years and I do not know where anything is. My files are valueless, they are stacked up here and at home and it is nothing but provocation for me to find anything. I suppose that is one of the penalties of being in opposition, but I am learning something in the meantime. When we came into office in Ottawa my first duty was to find a place for my predecessor's secretary. I could not throw him out into the street and I had to look around the departments for two months to find a position in which to place him and I finally was successful in finding an opening in the Department of the Interior, and I believe he is still in that position. I was then in position to appoint a secretary of my own, which I did. My predecessor's secretary did not lose one day's pay, he went from one position to the other. I would not refuse the same right to my hon. friends as their time will come, perhaps before very long, and positions will have to be found for their secretaries. The only difference has been that the Liberal governments, voluntarily, usually have taken care of their predecessor's private secretaries, while the Tory governments, I believe, did not always take care of ours. I may be wrong, but I understand that one of the reasons for passing the previous amendment was that we wanted to make sure that our successors would treat our secretaries the same as we had voluntarily treated theirs. It may be that we were mistaken in mistrusting our hon. friends, but we wanted to make sure by law that our secretaries would be taken care of.

Mr. CHEVRIER: Mr. Chairman, I am in full accord with what has been said by the hon. member for Bow River (Mr. Garland), if I understand the Secretary of State correctly, his argument is that a large number of the present private secretaries accepted their positions in the expectations that they would be treated as fairly as the others. I have no quarrel with that statement, but I would point out that opposed to these fifteen or twenty private secretaries there are a vast number of civil servants who for twenty, twenty-five or thirty years have been expecting promotion. The time may come when they are able to step into the positions upon which they have had their eyes set, and they should not be denied that opportunity. Even the proposed amendment, which seems to be a sort of palliative, would be the worst possible encroachment upon the merit system, and I, for one, cannot accept it. I cannot agree to the infusion into the service of those who have served for three years or longer as private secretaries—notwithstanding the personal qualifications they may have—ahead of those who for years have been hoping to obtain a just reward for long and faithful service. If there is anything in the present merit system —and I believe there is a great deal—then the system of promotion on merit should be conserved. For that reason I am sorry that on this occasion I cannot accept the amendment of the Secretary of State.

Mr. MacINNIS: I do not wish to say very much in connection with this amendment and the clause of the bill that is now under discussion, excepting that I agree with the senior member for Ottawa and also the hon. member for Dauphin who were with me on the committee. Before we made this recommendation, we gave the matter a great deal of study and I consider the recommendation of the committee as embodied in the bill correct in principle. If so, then the substitution of three years for one year, as provided for by the amendment, does not alter the original principle involved. If it is wrong in principle that a person should come into the civil service in any way except by competitive examination or promotion by merit, then the provision of a term of three years does not alter the situation. The hon. member for West Edmonton, Minister of the Interior in the previous administration, stated that when they came into office in 1922, they found it rather difficult to place the private secretaries who retired at that time with the outgoing ministry. It is rather strange that while the administration of which he was a member were in office from 1922 on, it was not until 1929, when practically they were leaving office, that it occurred to them to make this provision.

Another point which I wish to make is this: the hon. member for East Algoma says that those men, after having been a few years in office, would be thrown out on a cold world without any consideration, and that that is not fair. It may not be a desirable thing for those who have been thrown out in that way, but there is nothing unfair about it. It is, however, decidedly unfair to take them into the service without a competitive examination, over the heads of those who are already in the service and who have done good and faithful work. The same principle could be put in another way: temporary employees are on many occasions taken into the various branches of the service, but as soon as their positions become permanent, they have to submit to an examination and become permanent employees upon their merits or upon the standing they receive through that examination. Therefore, in my opinion, this clause of the bill should be passed as drafted and the amendment should be voted down because it is a violation of the main principle of the Civil Service Act.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: In connection with what has been said concerning the merit system and what an amendment such as this one may lead to, there are one or two points which come to my mind as I think of what I have seen in the public service over a period of a good many years. Before the section under discussion was included in the act, I can recall that the practice on the part of ministers not infrequently was to appoint one who had been a faithful private secretary to some position in the public service other than a position for which an examination was required, and that what happened on more than one occasion—and I have two or three in mind at the moment—was that the private secretary of a minister was, on the eve of a general election, appointed to the position of deputy minister or assistant deputy minister by his minister who recognized the faithful nature of his service and was not prepared to leave to chance the future of one who had served him well over a number of years. I believe that is very apt to happen again unless some provision is made which will permit of men who have rendered faithful service as private secretaries, being looked after in the manner here provided. That is a feature to be considered. Those who are in the public service have every right to look forward to promotion to the highest positions in the service, and certainly to such positions as assistant deputy minister or deputy minister, as regards which it lies beyond the control of any civil service commission to make the appointment. If we are to revert to the order of things that existed in the past, I can well see where it is altogether possible that a number of private secretaries may receive appointments to positions of that kind by an outgoing ministry rather than that it should take chances with respect to what might become of its private secretaries. The permanent service might suffer more in the end so far as promotion because of merit is concerned.

As regards the position of a private secretary, it must be remembered that in the years that anyone is associated in that capacity with a minister, he acquires a knowledge of government business in a large way that cannot otherwise be acquired, and a knowledge which is of the utmost service to the country as a whole. There are some positions that men can train for and which, especially if of a technical character, admit of concentration on one particular line which brings its own promotion, but for that kind of all-round service which means a great deal to the public service in its relation to the public, there is no training that any man or woman can receive equal to that which a private secretary to a minister of the crown necessarily gains.

Further, members of the civil service generally have standard hours of work and other features of employment which are more or less regular, that do not apply in the case of private secretaries. The work of the latter is in large part not subject to limitations of any description; they are called upon to work at all hours of the day and night and with relation to all kinds of subjects; they are brought into touch with the public generally and they come to have an acquaintance in a large way with affairs throughout the dominion, all of which, it seems to me, merits a certain definite recognition on the part of the service in which they have been working. After all, a private secretary to a minister is in the civil service, or rather, in the public service—probably I should make that distinction—but he is certainly very much in the public service, and I think it would be a great loss to the country if there were not the possibility of men and women who are being trained under ministers of the crown, finding their way ultimately into permanency of some relationship with public affairs. The suggestion of changing the period from one to three years is wise; indeed, a period of three years is perhaps short enough. In the interests of the public service, I am inclined to think it is desirable to seek to retain permanently those who have had that kind of training which can be had only in association with a minister of the crown and from an intimate knowledge of the affairs generally of some department of government.

Mr. CAMPBELL: I wish to associate myself with those who have spoken in opposition to this amendment and in favour of the bill as introduced by the Secretary of State. I regret very much he has seen fit to alter the bill and to bring in this amendment. The principle involved in the original act is thoroughly vicious and the committee's recommendation is one that at the time met with the approval of the house. I see no reason why the house should change its mind at the present time. I fully appreciate the disabilities under which private secretaries labour, but in all fairness to the civil service, I contend the policy followed in the past has had a demoralizing efffect upon the whole service. Here we have men or women saddled on to the civil service with salaries ranging from three to four thousand dollars a year put into positions where they are not required at all and where very often, I understand, they do practically nothing simply because they happen to have been fortunate enough to have been a minister's private secretary for a short time. The effect on the civil service is to dishearten those who have had long and faithful service in that particular branch, and who are working at salaries probably very much below that which is given to this preferred class who have no particular knowledge of the work they are supposed to do. I think that something ought to be done to give this class of men and women a preference in the civil service—I quite appreciate that—but I think it should be done on the basis of merit and that they should be given a salary commensurate with the work they are doing. I see no reason whatever why they should be saddled on to the civil service to create all the disharmony and ill-will that the practice is creating at the present time. If we have to look after them, and I quite appreciate what the leader of the opposition has said, that something should be done for them, I would prefer that they be given a retiring allowance and take their chance of getting into the civil service in the ordinary way rather than that they be allowed to enter by the back door as this amendment provides. The amendment does not, as other members have suggested, change the original principle at all. It makes no change in principle whatever, but simply lengthens the time of service necessary to qualify for entry to the service, and I do submit to the Secretary of State that the amendment is an unfair one. It is unfair to ask the house to take a stand against the committee's report after the house has already agreed to that report. I hope that the Secretary of State will see fit to withdraw the amendment rather than force it through now.

Mr. LAPOINTE: I am in favour of this amendment, and I was sorry to see the section of the old act struck out. I am in favour of the merit system, and I admit that competitive examination is necessary for the good working of that system, but there is no rule without an exception, and this is a case where an exception must be made to the general rule. I do not think it would be possible for a minister to select a private secretary by competitive examination. Those who have been members of a government know that that is impossible. The private secretary is a confidential man. He has to replace his minister very often, and to act as a liaison officer between the minister and the public and between the minister and the officers of the department. If my friend from Mackenzie (Mr. Campbell) has known private secretaries who do not work—I do not know where he has found them. I have never seen in any department a private secretary who does not work. They work a good deal more than most of the civil servants, and it would be impossible for a minister to attract to his service as a minister of the crown a man who must have the education, the culture, the tact, and the many other qualities that are necessary to make a good private secretary unless there was a provision of this kind to give him some guarantee for the future. That has always been recognized. I was not here this morning and I do not know whether what I am about to refer to was mentioned or not. But in 1908 when the Civil Service Act was enacted and the first Civil Service Commission appointed, and the merit system introduced into the service, it was recognized that the case of the private secretaries was a special one.

Mr. CAHAN: That has not been referred to. I was holding it in abeyance to use if necessary, and I hope that my hon. friend will fully state the case because it lays down a principle of long standing in the Civil Service Act.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Hon. gentlemen will find that chapter 16, section 81, of the revised statutes of 1906 provides:

> Any member of the civil service may be appointed private secretary to the head of a department, and may be paid an additional salary not exceeding six hundred dollars a year whilst so acting.
> 2. No salary shall be payable to any private secretary unless the amount has been voted by parliament.

That was the law as it existed prior to 1908. In 1908 the Civil Service Amendment Act was enacted, section 39 of which reads as follows:

> Any person chosen by a minister to be his private secretary may, without examination and irrespective of age, be appointed for a period not exceeding one year, and paid as a clerk in subdivision B of the second division, and after one year's services as such secretary he shall be deemed to be appointed to such rank.

In 1912 by chapter 15, section 1, that section 39 was repealed and the following was substituted therefor:

> Any person chosen by a minister to be his private secretary may, without examination and irrespective of age, be appointed a clerk, for a period not exceeding one year, in subdivision B of the first division or in subdivision A or subdivision B of the second division, and shall be paid a salary not exceeding the maximum salary of the subdivision to which he is appointed, and after one year's service as such secretary he shall be deemed to be permanently appointed to the inside service at the salary which he is then receiving as such clerk and with rank in such subdivision.

So, from the very first it has been recognized that the case of the private secretaries was a special one and that they should be given permanent employment in the service after having acted as private secretary for a certain length of time.

The objections to the law of 1908 and of 1912 were that after a year of service as private secretary to a minister the private secretary was a permanent officer of the department and the minister could then appoint a new private secretary who, after one year of service, might also be appointed permanently to the civil service. There were certainly objections to a system which would have allowed a minister to appoint many persons to the civil service permanently after having first served him as private secretary for one year. So that section was repealed in 1918, but it was found afterwards that it was necessary to give some permanency to the private secretaries acting bona fide for a minister of the crown as such, and that is the reason why the amendment of 1929 was enacted. I believe, Mr. Chairman, that it is advisable to substitute three years for one year, but after my experience as a member of the government for a few years I really believe that it is good policy to make an exception of all the private secretaries, and I am therefore supporting the amendment.

Mr. CHEVRIER: The amendment will not carry unanimously. I desire to register my most emphatic protest against it. All I desire to say in conclusion is this. I see no good purpose in helping out one or two or three undoubtedly well-deserving and well qualified employees, at the same time ruining the hopes and destroying the ambitions and forever wiping out the legitimate desires of a large body of civil servants just for the sake of giving a few a reward which could well be given in other ways.

Mr. SPEAKMAN: Mr. Chairman, having listened to the debate and given the matter some considerable thought I wish simply to state my opinion. Both from personal knowledge and from what I have been able to learn from men better qualified to speak than I am, the private secretaries are men who must be exceptionally well qualified, and must give excellent service or they would not hold their positions. Further I realize that they have qualifications which, in a sphere suitable to their training, would fit them for services to their country. But, Mr. Chairman, while I believe they should receive recognition I do not believe they should receive it at the expense of four or five times their number, at the expense of men who may have given equally good service, and have developed expectations to which they are entitled, and which have kept up their morale and ambition. By reason of the appointments they would find these positions nullified.

As I have said I believe some provision should be made for them, but not at the expense of four or five times their number, not at the expense of men whose further advancement would be blocked, and who would have to renounce positions for which they were qualified and to which they had looked forward so long. For these reasons I shall oppose the amendment and support the section in the bill.

Amendment agreed to: Yeas, 44; nays, 21.

Section as amended agreed to.

Section 12 agreed to.

On section 13—Retirement from office of present civil service commissioners. Tenure of office of commissioners.

Mr. CAHAN: In this connection I am about to suggest an amendment, which I shall ask one of my colleagues to move. The suggestion has been made that a civil servant might be appointed a member of the Civil Service Commission, that there are men who as civil servants have had a wide experience in the administration of the Civil Service Act, and that such men should not be debarred from appointment to the commission. However these civil servants are now entitled to superannuation under the Civil Service Superannuation Act. From time to time they have paid in to the pension fund, and if appointed as members of the Civil Service Commission they should not be debarred from the benefits to which they are entitled under the Civil Service Superannuation Act.

I am not making any promises on behalf of the government. I have not discussed with my colleagues the matter as to whether or not a civil servant is to be appointed a member of the commission, but I do say that a number of representations have been made by hon. members on both sides of the house that the government might favourably consider the appointment of at least one civil servant as a member of the Civil Service Commission.

The amendment which I am about to suggest, and which I will ask one of my colleagues to move, is that section 13 of the bill be amended by adding to the new subsection (3) of section 3 of the Civil Service Act a paragraph which I shall read in a few moments. Subsection 3 of section 3 now reads:

> Each commissioner shall hold office during good behaviour for a period of ten years from the date of his appointment, save that his tenure of office shall cease upon his attaining the age of sixty-five years.

The amendment proposes to add the following words:

> Provided that if a civil servant, who is a contributor under the provisions of the Civil Service Superannuation Act be appointed to be a commissioner, he shall be eligible, notwithstanding the provisions of the Civil Service Superannuation Act, to continue to be a contributor under the said act; his tenure of office as commissioner shall be counted as service in the civil service for the purposes of the said act, and he, his widow and children, or other dependents, if any, shall be eligible to receive the respective allowances or gratuities provided by the said act; and in case his tenure of office shall cease as in this subsection provided, or in the event of his being retired from the said office of commissioner for any reason other than that of misconduct, he shall be eligible to receive the same benefits under the said act as if his office as commissioner had been abolished.

[Mr. Speakman.]

Mr. RYCKMAN: I so move in amendment.

Mr. VENIOT: On what basis do you fix the amount he shall contribute? Will it be on his salary as commissioner?

Mr. CAHAN: The salary he is receiving.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Mr. Chairman, is not the minister erecting a preference for the appointment of a civil servant to this position, inasmuch as he is not providing for superannuation or retiring allowance for the commissioners. It seems to me that there should be no bar to a civil servant acting as a commissioner, but I believe further that unless he is willing to accept the position on the same basis as the other gentlemen who will occupy the position with him, it would be somewhat unfair. There would be a preference to the civil servant accepting the position. I see no reason for interfering with his superannuation, which would take effect the moment he accepted the position on that basis. It does strike me that unless the three commissioners are permitted to contribute to the superannuation fund on the same basis, a preference is being offered that is quite unwarranted.

Mr. HACKETT: I heard the question asked by the hon. member for Gloucester, but I had some difficulty in reconciling the answer given with the act as I recall it. The act provides for contributions by civil servants on certain well-defined salaries. I could understand that a commissioner, during his period in office, might be permitted to continue to contribute to the superannuation fund as if he were still a civil servant. That could be done without amending the act, but if I correctly understood the answer of the Secretary of State it is suggested that the civil servant who might become a civil service commissioner would contribute on the basis of his salary as a civil service commissioner, which might be considerably higher than his previous salary.

Mr. CAHAN: I was wrong if I made that suggestion; the bill itself says he may continue to contribute on the same basis as though he were still a member of the service.

Mr. HACKETT: I might also say to the hon. member for West Edmonton that this is not an innovation. As an example, the recent appointee to the Board of Railway Commissioners is continuing his service as a judge, from the point of view of the Judges Act, with regard to his retiring allowance. When he has completed his service on the Board of Railway Commissioners that service will count as if he had continued to be a judge, and if I have correctly understood the legislation he will be entitled to the benefits he would receive otherwise under the Judges Act.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): In the meantime he is not drawing his retiring allowance, and under the Judges Act he has not contributed.

Mr. HACKETT: There is no contribution under the Judges Act. At the end of his service, or in the event of loss of health, he will be entitled to claim his pension just as if he had continued to be a judge.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Is my hon. friend sure of that statement: I fancy that his service on the commission will not count; that is, his retiring allowance will start from the date he accepted the appointment to the railway board.

Mr. HACKETT: Probably that is not of interest to the committee. We both might read the act again.

Mr. VALLANCE: In the event of a civil servant being appointed to the commission, during his term as a civil service commissioner would he pay at the rate he was paying before he accepted that appointment? For instance, the hon. member for West Edmonton suggests that while one commissioner might be appointed from the civil service, the other two commissioners might be appointed from any other walk of life. I wonder if my hon. friend is aware of the fact that while under the Civil Service Act no more than three commissioners can be appointed, this government may see fit to appoint only one or two commissioners. If they appoint only one commissioner they may increase the salary to $10,000 or $12,000, and if that commissioner is appointed from the civil service and is to be retired on that salary of $12,000 or $10,000 after paying 5 per cent to the superannuation fund during his period of office, I think that should be looked into.

Mr. BOWMAN: As the act stands at present I do not think the objection taken by the hon. member for South Battleford would apply, because section 6 of the act definitely fixes the salaries of the commissioners at $7,000 and $6,000 a year, and that provision is not altered by the bill under consideration.

To be quite frank, I was hoping that this section of the act would be amended to provide higher salaries. Recently the radio bill was introduced in the house, and it was suggested that the salary of the chairman of the radio commission should be $12,000 per annum, while the salaries of the commissioners should be $10,000 per annum. Personally I think that is much too high; I do not see how we can think of paying $12,000 to the chairman and $10,000 to the other members of the radio commission while we only pay $7,000 to the chairman and $6,000 to the other members of the Civil Service Commission. As I stated previously, I think this is one of the most important commissions in Canada, if not the most important, and we should have men on that commission of very high character, strict integrity and considerable business ability. I am very strongly of the opinion that we will not get the right kind of men until we pay salaries commensurate with the duties that are performed. Personally I would have liked, and would still like, to see an amendment to the Civil Service Act authorizing the government to pay higher salaries than are set out at present in the Civil Service Act.

Mr. VENIOT: Since I asked the question in this regard perhaps I may be permitted to make a suggestion for the consideration of the minister. I believe the Civil Service Commission would be very considerably improved if we had on it a commissioner appointed from the civil servants of Canada. But if we appoint a man who has been drawing a salary of $5,000 to $6,000 to a position paying $7,000 or $7,500 I think it would be wrong to permit him to make his contribution to the superannuation fund on the basis of that $7,000 salary, because his pension will be calculated upon the salary he received previously.

The suggestion I have to make is this, that if a civil servant is appointed to the Civil Service Commission he should be permitted to continue paying into the superannuation fund on the maximum salary of the position which he held previously, and that the number of years he served on the commission should count to the full in calculating the pension.

Mr. MARCIL: I have personal knowledge of some cases of judges who were appointed lieutenant governors. The time served in that capacity is counted as though they had been on the bench. Of course they received only one salary, but on retiring from the post of lieutenant governor the years they served there counted as though they were served on the bench. I think it would be a mistake now to put a civil servant on the commission and ask him to contribute to the pension fund on the basis of his salary as a civil service commissioner unless the other commissioners were placed in the same position.

Mr. CAHAN: The proposed amendment provides that he shall be eligible, notwithstanding the provisions of the Civil Service Superannuation Act, to continue to be a contributor under the said act. So that the superannuation act would apply if he continued to contribute as he had done in previous years.

Mr. VENIOT: It is clear enough, do you think?

Mr. CAHAN: It seemed to me so.

Section as amended agreed to.

On section 10—Act not to apply to postmasters of certain revenue post offices.

Mr. SPEAKMAN: In regard to section 10, I have not been on the special committee nor have I given to the subject the special attention which the members of that committee have devoted to it. At the same time, with the little knowledge I have of the situation, I am very strongly opposed to this provision. I think it was stated by the Secretary of State that the report itself had been accepted unanimously. That is true so far as the committee goes, but it is not true with respect to the house itself. I fancy the Secretary of State, when he spoke of unanimity, was referring to the committee and not to the house, one section of which is very definitely opposed to the clause now before us, and which registered its objections in an amendment which was moved to this provision as it appeared in the report itself.

I am not going to speak at any length on this occasion; in fact I will not do more than make one or two comments on one phase of the matter. From our experience in the past and from what we have seen in respect of similar post offices and similar positions, there is no question in my mind that these appointments will be made very largely upon the recommendation of the sitting member from the constituency concerned, if that sitting member is a supporter of the government, but not necessarily otherwise. Now it has been argued by members of this house who support this clause that one of the definite duties of a representative is to represent his district with respect to appointments such as these, as well as in all other matters; that the member elected by the people representing a riding is possibly the best qualified man in the country to suggest the most suitable person to fill a position of this kind; and further, that being an elected member and being responsible to his constituents it would be to his interest to see that the very best men were appointed to fill such positions as came in contact with the general public. There may be something in that. But the experience of the past has also taught us that when such appointments are made on the recommendation of the member that member is understood to be a follower of the government in power. In a constituency represented by a member who is not a follower of the government, whether a member of the opposition or of any independent group, then the power of recommendation lies not in the hands of the member but in the hands of the defeated candidate or of the committee that supported him during the election. This, while not recognized in law, is so thoroughly recognized in practice that it has been taken for granted. There might possibly be some excuse for placing on the statutes this provision, that, as a member and as part of his duties, the elected representative should have some responsibility in regard to appointments. That would place it upon a certain basis of principle, and though I think the principle would still be wrong, nevertheless there would exist some basis of principle. But when that is not done, when the appointments are made as they have been made in the past and as undoubtedly they will be made in the future, then it is based upon no principle whatever but is simply a reversion to the most blatant form of political patronage. For my part, I cannot understand any member being anxious to secure political patronage. I remember that when the Right Hon. Arthur Meighen was leader of the opposition, speaking to me on this very point, he made the observation that he could not understand any member of the house or of the government being desirous in any way of extending the field of patronage or of securing for himself greater responsibilities than he already had, inasmuch as every position which he filled meant that he created nineteen enemies and one ingrate. That may be so, but there are a great many who are perfectly willing to accept that responsibility and face that danger. I am not going to take up the time of the house on this question. Nothing I can say will alter in any way the opinion of the house, but for my own sake and in order to make my position clear I say not only that I am definitely opposed to this clause but that in its actual working-out, what has been said by various members as to responsibility of the member and the principle which underlies it, the principle of representation, has no bearing upon the question at all. This will be simply a reversion to that type of patronage which I consider most objectionable, and from which this class of the public service has been freed to a large extent; and so far as I can judge it will, particularly in those parts of Canada about which we have heard so much during the last few days, simply result in confusion in the ranks of the public service. There will be a host of dismissals after every election and a host of reappointments by political friends, and to that extent there will be a destruction of the merit system upon which we pride ourselves that our public service is based. I cannot speak too strongly against that phase of the report nor can I possibly support the amendment.

WINDING-UP ACT AMENDMENT

The house resumed from Friday, May 20, consideration in committee of Bill No. 81, to amend the Winding-up Act.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Mr. Chairman, this bill was passed by the committee but stood over at my request in order that an amendment might be made to bring it up-to-date with the amendments to the Bankruptcy Act passed last week. I move that the following be added as Section 3:

Section 23 of the said act is amended by adding thereto the following subsection:

(2) In the case of any company except building societies, incorporated banks, savings banks, insurance companies, trust companies, loan companies and railway companies, the court shall not appoint as liquidators any person who is not licensed as a trustee under the Bankruptcy Act.

Amendment agreed to.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

SUPPLY

INDIAN AFFAIRS

Hon. HUGH GUTHRIE (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, an arrangement was made with the hon. member for Mackenzie (Mr. Campbell) to go into supply in order that he might have an opportunity to discuss a certain matter, and I therefore move that the house go into committee of supply.

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee of supply, Mr. Geary in the chair.

NATIONALIZATION OF RADIUM

To provide for expenses connected with the administration of Indian Affairs, including salaries, supplies, relief, medical attendance, hospitalization, dwellings, agricultural activities, surveys, roads, bridges, irrigation, dyking, education, etc., and a grant of $100,000 approved by parliament in the session of 1926-27, $3,873,000.

Mr. CAMPBELL: Mr. Chairman, under this item I desire to discuss the matter of government control or nationalization of the radium deposits in the Great Bear lake district. The material which I have under my hand would take me forty minutes or more to place on record, but because of the lateness of the time and the desire for early prorogation I have abbreviated my material and will take up as little time as possible. However, I consider that this matter is of sufficient importance to merit some consideration by the committee even at this late date. I had arranged with some hon. members of the medical profession to assist me in this discussion and to deal with it more from the technical standpoint, but unfortunately several of these hon. members were obliged to leave over the week end and are not present. Perhaps I may be permitted therefore to deal with this matter from the technical point of view.

I have gone very carefully through the report of the cancer commission recently appointed by the Ontario government. I refer to what is known as the Cody commission. In this report it is pointed out that the facilities in Canadian hospitals for dealing with cancer are totally inadequate, that is with respect to the supply of radium. It is stated that the largest hospital in Ontario has less than half a gramme of radium on hand while some clinics in the United States, the British Isles and on the continent of Europe have eight or more grammes. I might point out that there are about twenty-eight and one-third grammes to an ounce. At the present time a gramme of radium is worth about $70,000 and there is only about one pound available in the whole world. There are about sixteen grammes of radium in Canada at the present time. The commission's report states that at present day prices radium to the value of about $200,000,000 is urgently needed throughout the world for the war on cancer. The commission recommends that the government appoint a radium commission for the purchase, control and distribution of that product. It is pointed out that in Great Britain there is a national radium trust and a radium commission to look after the purchase, distribution and use of radium. Belgium, it appears, produces about 95 per cent of the world's annual output of radium, and the control by the Belgium government constitutes a trust which limits the supply, holds the price at the figure I have indicated and prevents there being a sufficient supply to meet the needs of the world. Radium is particularly valuable because it is practically indestructible. The report indicates that the mass disintegrates at the rate of one per cent every twenty-five years. Therefore the radioactivity of radium will last for a period of about 2,500 years.

With respect to cancer, the report states that this disease is wide-spread, and the evidence appears to be conclusive that it is increasing over the whole world. In the mortality returns for every country in the world, cancer has ousted tuberculosis from second place in causes of death, the first being held by heart disease. In 1929, deaths from cancer in Canada numbered 88.7 per 100,000 of the population; in 1930, the last year for which figures are at present available, this had risen to 93.3. In the United States, in 1930 the number was 96 per 100,000, while in 1900 it was only 63. The report points out that from the beginning of the time when there were tabulated records, there has been a progressive increase in the number of deaths from cancer. Taking the state of Massachusetts alone, in 1842 the deaths per 100,000 were only 13; in 1860 this had risen to 26; in 1900, to 71, and in 1928 it had risen to the alarming figure of 130. May I quote from an address delivered by Senator McRae and quoted in the Ottawa Journal as follows:

Doctor Ellis MacDonald, director of cancer research in the university of Pennsylvania, says that 100 additional grams of radium, if properly applied, would save in the United States alone the lives of 30,000 people every year.

. It goes on to point out that the supply and the price are under the control of the Belgian trust which is a part of the activities of the Belgian government. Radium is mined very largely in the Belgian Congo. I understand guards surround the mines so that no one can go there and see what is being done and there seems to be a general suspicion that the supply is limited and controlled to such an extent as artificially to raise the price and to limit the supply of radium available for the use of the world.

[Mr. Campbell.]

May I quote again from a Canadian Press despatch from Calgary, dated April 20, as follows:

A warning that European interests were seeking control of Canadian radium production was voiced to-night by Doctor H. W. McGill, Conservative member of the Alberta legislature for Calgary.

Doctor McGill made the disclosure just prior to his departure for Edmonton to attend a meeting of the Medical Council of the Alberta College of Physicians and Surgeons. He said he would place the matter before the meeting.

May I again quote from a recent editorial in the Toronto Globe? It says:

Some anxiety is expressed by those who assume to speak for mining interests lest General McRae's proposal for government control of the new radium deposits in the Great Bear lake region may lead to confiscation of rich ores anywhere, and thus menace the whole mining industry: Such an inference is surely not warranted.

Senator McRae made his appeal in behalf of suffering humanity, which needs radium for cancer treatment and can get it only at very high cost. Only a few days ago a New York hospital received five grams of radium on loan from Belgium, and the value is set at $350,000. If Canada has the reputed great quantity of radium in its pitchblende ore at Great Bear lake, it has a chance to render a tremendous service, but it should be done on a fair basis.

Again from a recent editorial in the Ottawa Journal, may I quote as follows:

Those who realize what radium has come to mean in fighting the scourge of cancer must welcome these words, spoken in the Senate on Wednesday by Mr. Meighen:

"Government control of radium production and conservation is having immediate and earnest consideration. It looks as though Canada had a supply of radium of inestimable value to this country and to the world, such as to imply the necessity of a thorough and most careful investigation. I am confident that a policy involving control by the government will be worked out."

Radium is manufactured in a number of countries, the first factory having been started in France six years after the discoveries of Mme. Curie. But while small supplies come from Bohemia, Colorado and Portugal, the chief source of production is in the Belgian Congo, and, unfortunately, a monopoly. The result of this monopoly, so it is alleged, is that radium is at a prohibitive price, its benefits denied to the vast majority.

In the Senate on Wednesday Senator McRae said there was a danger of Canada's radium supply passing into the hands of foreign control, a development that would withhold its benefits from the Canadian people. This, should it come to pass, would be intolerable. The province of Ontario has just had a report from a cancer commission urging the creation of cancer clinics and the use of radium in combating the disease. It would be a crime if, in the light of this, Canada permitted outside interests to step in, seize control of her radium resources, and exploit them for private profit.

I may say that I have under my hand a considerable number of geological reports on the Great Bear lake area. There is, of course, a good deal of doubt as to the extent of those deposits, and owing to the desire to save time now I shall not quote from those reports as extensively as I had intended. I shall, however, refer to a few of them just to show that they indicate, in the opinion of geologists, there are reasons to believe we have in that area a very considerable amount of pitchblende or radium ore. From memorandum series No. 51, issued by the Department of Mines in October, 1931, I quote the following:

> From a small surface pit sunk to a depth of twelve feet at the original discovery point, eight tons of cobbed, high-grade pitchblende were taken in the early part of this year.

Again it says:

> Beyond any question, the pitchblende deposits at La Bine point constitute a very valuable source of radium. At the present value of radium, ore could easily meet the cost of shipment to rail ($400) per ton. Improved transportation facilities, however, will have to be provided if serious production is to be attained.

Then it goes on to explain what the transportation facilities are at the present time and which would appear to be totally inadequate to render any service in the movement of ore from that area to outside points. May I interject at this point that owing to the impossibility, as those reports indicate, of getting the ore out, I see no object whatever in throwing that area open at the present time, and I suggest to the minister the necessity for keeping it closed and withholding development until better transportation facilities are provided. The report goes on to give a good deal of technical information which is valuable for my argument, but owing to the limited time, I shall not weary the house with it.

Again, from memorandum series No. 48, issued in March, 1931, by the Department of Mines, I quote the following:

> There is no question but that an interesting discovery of pitchblende has been made. Its possible commercial value can necessarily only be determined by the proving up of tonnage, and this will have to await results of further development work.

I quote from a similar bulletin issued by the same department entitled, "Mineral development activities in district of Mackenzie, Northwest Territories," and under the heading of "Pitchblende and Silver" I find this:

> According to assays made by the Department of Mines from samples obtained at La Bine point, Echo bay, at the east end of Great Bear lake, the pitchblende deposit is very rich in uranium oxide assaying from thirty per cent to sixty-two per cent, corresponding to a content of one gram of radium in thirteen tons and six and a half tons of ore respectively. These pitchblende veins have been traced over a number of claims. Silver is associated with the pitchblende in the form of wire silver or leaf silver. Silver contents have been found to range from 1,634 to 8,965 ounces per ton.

From a similar bulletin by D. F. Kidd, geological survey, Department of Mines, entitled "The Great Bear lake—Coppermine river district" I quote:

> Two main types of mineral deposits have been found in the area; (a) copper deposits; (b) pitchblende deposits with silver and silver deposits.

The article goes on to explain the discoveries, but I shall not take up the time of the house elaborating on that.

There would appear to be every reason to suppose that sufficient radium for the world's use will be secured in that area, and Canada owes it as a sacred duty not only to our own people but to suffering humanity throughout the world to prevent this very valuable resource from falling into private hands, or at all events to see that if it does fall into private hands it shall be properly controlled by the government and be conserved for the use of suffering humanity. The existence of the Belgian trust, the activities of that body, and the extent to which the price of radium has been raised in consequence, make it urgent that the Canadian government on behalf of the Canadian people should take an interest in this matter and see that something is done before it is too late.

I had a number of questions to submit to the minister with respect to this matter, but I shall not put them on record now. In order to save time I handed a memo. to the minister this afternoon, and I trust that in his reply he will cover the questions that I raised therein.

There are other evidences on record to prove that the Belgian government are making an enormous profit out of this trust in selling radium at the price of $70,000 per gramme. The results are of tremendous benefit to the Belgian treasury, but at the expense of sufferers throughout the world.

The Department of Mines of Canada estimates that the cost of producing radium from the Great Bear lake area should not exceed $10,000 per gramme, and in this $10,000 is included $4,000 as the cost of freight under present conditions of transportation. If railways covered that area making it accessible, say, to Winnipeg or Ottawa, where there is cheap electric power, the radium could be purified at the minimum of cost—

Mr. MURPHY: Might I ask from what report my hon. friend obtains the figure as $10,000 per gramme as the cost of production?

Mr. CAMPBELL: That figure is given in one of the reports issued by the Department of Mines. I intended to quote my authority for the figure, but owing to the desire to save time I did not make a note of it, but I got the figure from one of the bulletins issued by the department. Deducting freight of $4,000 per gramme would leave the production costs at $6,000 per gramme, and if one figures $200 per ton, on a basis of ten tons to produce one gramme, which I think is a conservative estimate from the reports from which I have already quoted, it would bring the production costs down to about $6,200 per gramme. Now my argument is this. It is uneconomic and unfair to the people of Canada to try to develop this resource with the transportation facilities that are available in that area at the present time. I am not worried about the development being held up. On the contrary, let us hold it up until the proper time when proper transportation facilities are provided. If this area is as rich in radium, copper, silver and other minerals as we have reason to suppose, there is no doubt that railways will be built into the area in time, and when railway facilities have been built the cost of producing radium will be brought down to a point where it can be made available to all our hospitals.

Judged by the publicity which this area has received, there is no doubt that there will be a rush into the district this summer. Various press reports that I have under my hand would indicate this. There are great dangers in that. These claims will be taken up. With the present difficulty in getting in supplies there is little or no doubt that there will be practically no development work done at the present time. As a matter of fact, the Department of Mines itself has declared a moratorium as regards assessment work on these claims, so that those now staking claims are given one year's extension in which to do the necessary amount of work, and there is very little doubt that when another year comes around there will be demand for another moratorium. There you have a valuable natural resource held in private hands. The moratorium secures to the claim holders their rights, but at the same time the natural resources are being alienated from the public. In connection with the movement of stake-claimers into that area, may I quote from an article in the New York Sun of April twentieth last, which says that one thousand veteran gold prospectors will set out from various parts of the United States and Canada for the Great Bear lake district in the hope of staking their claims this year.

The Ottawa Citizen of April 28 had a copyrighted article by Frederick B. Watt, referring to the silver in that district assaying ten thousand ounces to the ton, and the article states that at the present price of silver this would mean $2,500 a ton.

May I refer to the statement made by the Prime Minister when introducing the radio bill into this house a few days ago. He stated that there was no doubt that at some future time the people of Canada would regret that any of the natural resources had ever been alienated from the crown, and that remark provoked applause from every part of this chamber. He stated that the air, which is one of our natural resources, was now to be preserved to the people of Canada. If that principle is sound with respect to the air as a natural resource, I say that it is doubly true with respect to something that is needed to preserve human life—the use of radium—and I do hope that the minister before this debate ends will indicate some policy on the part of the government that will give us a hope that this natural resource will not be alienated from the people of Canada. I trust his statement will be just as strong as, and perhaps a little stronger than, the statement from which I quoted issued by the government leader in the Senate.

Mr. IRVINE: I should like to endorse the sentiments expressed by the previous speaker, and perhaps go a little farther in respect to the natural resources to which he has referred. He laid emphasis upon the necessity of controlling the exploitation of radium in the different sections. I agree with him, but I should like to go farther and say that other natural resources in those sections no matter what they may be should also be preserved.

I was particularly relieved the other day by the statement of the Prime Minister to the effect that the air was going to be preserved for the people of Canada. All my life I have had a nightmare that some day a huge corporation would bottle the air in the atmosphere surrounding the earth and sell it to us at so much a bottle. I was afraid I would not be able to buy my bottle. Happily the radio bill has prevented such an occurrence. What is true of the air is just as true of the land and the minerals therein. They belong to the people of Canada just as much as does the air. With all the lessons history has provided, surely the time has come when a government with any vision should take steps to prevent the exploitation by individuals for private profit of our natural resources. I have before me an extract from The Canadian News Bulletin issued by the Minister's department, which is as follows:

According to reports reaching Ottawa a great many mineral claims have already been staked in the area adjacent to Great Bear lake, Northwest Territories, and there is every likelihood that many more will be staked this summer. Some prospectors have already gone in by aeroplane and others are planning to go in by water transport as soon as the ice goes out. In view of this great activity the topographical survey, Department of the Interior, Ottawa, has reprinted the manual respecting the survey of mineral claims in dominion lands for the use of dominion land surveyors who may be called upon to make official surveys of these claims.

In other words the department is facilitating—and quite properly so while the old system lasts—the requirements of private speculators and prospectors.

My point is that if there are rich deposits of ore of any description in the Great Bear lake section of this country, that ore belongs to the people of Canada. It belongs not only to the people who are living now but to those who may be here two thousand years from now. Because of that fact this government should take immediate steps to prevent exploitation. If there are no mineral deposits in that section the government should take immediate steps to prevent speculation in respect of something which does not exist. We have had enough of that sort of speculation. In either case I hope the government will not only take the advice of the previous speaker to prevent development by private individuals, but that it will proceed to ascertain whether or not there are minerals, and take the appropriate action in relation thereto. A few pounds of radium would pay the national debt. Why should the government permit some individual to derive the entire benefit therefrom? Here is an opportunity to safeguard for Canadians that which is their proper right and heritage.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I am sure the Superintendent General of Indian Affairs must feel he is getting plenty of advice and I hesitate to give any more. There were certain commendable actions taken by the former Superintendent General of Indian Affairs in conjunction with the Department of Agriculture, and I feel sure that after the minister's attention has been drawn to them he will continue the work then begun. I refer to keeping herds on Indian reserves free from bovine tuberculosis. There was a time some years ago when Indian reserves were polluted with bovine tuberculosis, and there was a consequent spread of the disease to Indian children. I hope my hon. friend will work in the same harmonious cooperation with the Minister of Agriculture to keep the herds clean from that dread disease. Another good work undertaken by his predecessor was the establishment of a chain of splendid hospitals throughout the various reserves. I should like to say one word in connection with the retiring Indian commissioner, Mr. W. M. Graham. I will go into that later in the day when we get on to the Indian question proper.

Mr. MURPHY: Mr. Chairman, hon. members have dealt at some length with the possibility of the government taking some action to control the development of radium deposits in the Northwest Territories. In that connection may I say that in 1930 a deposit of pitchblende was discovered by some private prospectors at Echo bay, a point situated on the eastern short of Great Bear lake. Some twenty tons of ore from that vein have been shipped to Ottawa, and during the past few months and even at the present time the Department of Mines are carrying on in their laboratory certain experiments with a view to the reduction of the ore in order to ascertain the quantity and quality of the radio active elements which may be present therein. The ore itself contains not only radio active elements but also a large percentage of silver. In discussing this matter it is well to remember that the vein of pitchblende was discovered through the initiative of private prospectors and to remember also that they have staked their claims and that under the laws of this country they have secured certain rights therein.

At present on account of the lack of transportation it is difficult to transport pitchblende or copper ore from that territory. May I point out however that there are facilities available at the present time which need only a certain amount of development to make them available throughout that season of the year when waterborne transportation may take place. From Waterways, Alberta, to Great Bear lake the system is navigable with the exception of two portages one along the boundary in the northern part of Alberta, where, at the present time, there is a motor road, and the other on the Great Bear river between the Mackenzie river and Great Bear lake, a distance of about ten or twelve miles. A certain sum has been placed in the estimates this year looking towards the building of a portage road around the rapids on that river. Therefore transportation from the area around Great Bear lake can be made available during that period of the year when waterborne transportation is possible. In addition to that, ore of a certain richness can be transported by means of aeroplanes. I have been informed that the silver deposits in certain parts of the vein at least are of such richness that it is highly profitable to transport the ore even by aeroplane. My information is that a silver content as high as 22,000 ounces to the ton has been found in some of that ore.

Dealing now with the value of the pitchblende deposit in connection with radium, I may say that at present it is undetermined. It is only in its infancy, and we do not know yet the extent or value of that deposit. Experiments which are being carried on at present by the Mines department are designed to obtain that accurate information so far as possible, and the process which has been worked out by their chemists has been very successful so far. I am told that the process they have evolved is more economical than the process used in Belgium to reduce the ore which they obtain in the Congo. With regard to radium, I may say that its present selling price varies from about $50,000 to about $75,000 per gramme, and that in all about 60 grammes were sold last year. I have been unable to secure any definite figure as to the cost price of that radium, though it is currently reported to be from $10,000 to $15,000 per gramme. Our importations of radium have been as follows:

1929	40,687
1930	46,012

Mr. SPENCER: May I ask where that was imported from?

Mr. MURPHY: I have not that information, although I may say generally that up to 1930 radium was produced in Belgium, in the United States and in Czechoslovakia. In 1930, however, the United States ceased the production of radium, since the Belgians were able to put it on the market at a much lower figure than was possible in the United States. Belgian radium sells for from $50,000 to $70,000 per gramme, while the best the United States could do was about $120,000 per gramme. So I take it that the radium imported since 1930 has come from Belgium. I stated a moment ago that radium was produced in practically only two countries, Czechoslovakia and Belgium, but at present no exports are being made from Czechoslovakia, where the company is under state control. Therefore at present the world is dependent upon the concern in Belgium known as the Union Miniere de Haut Katanga, and the supply of ore is obtained from the Congo which, before the discovery in the Great Bear lake district in the Northwest territories of Canada, was the richest in the world. Radium has been discovered not only in the Great Bear lake district; there are radioactive ores in Ontario also, at Wilberforce, which is in the county of Haliburton. A private company is making certain experiments in that area. While the mineral deposits in the Northwest Territories, of course, are under the control of the Dominion government, the mineral deposits in Ontario are under the control of the provincial government.

[Mr. Murphy.]

Previous speakers have stated that in their opinion the government should take steps to see that this valuable element, radium, is controlled if not operated for the benefit of the people of Canada. I suppose they meant also for the benefit of the rest of the world, though they had particularly in mind the people of Canada. But may I point out that at the present time this pitchblende deposit in the Northwest Territories is in private hands. Those areas have been staked under the laws of this country, and those men have obtained rights. While it is certainly within the competence of the Dominion government to take such steps as may be deemed wise to preserve for the people of Canada the benefits which may come from the use of radium, still those private individuals must have their rights looked after under our laws.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I understand there is a suspension of the provision in connection with the development work that must be done each year on the claim. To what extent has that suspension been carried?

Mr. MURPHY: That applies to all minerals, both in the Yukon and in the Northwest Territories. Owing to the present low prices of metals the rules governing development or representation work have been suspended for a period of a year, but before obtaining his final lease or title to his claim an individual must do the amount of work provided for under our laws. He is simply given a moratorium of a year; in the final analysis he must do the amount of work required under the regulations.

Mr. IRVINE: Would it not be a good way to get rid of those who have already filed claims if the government refused to give them any further extensions of time?

Mr. MURPHY: I do not think that is practicable. The moratorium has been granted for a period of a year, during which it is not necessary for them to do representation work, though of course they may go ahead and do it.

Mr. IRVINE: But when that year is up, if they have not made sufficient improvements to qualify; then if another year goes by and still they have not done any development work, would it not be possible to take back the claims?

Mr. MURPHY: As I said a moment ago, the moratorium is only for a period of one year.

Mr. COOTE: When was that moratorium granted?

Mr. MURPHY: I have forgotten the dates. It was some months ago in the case of the Northwest Territories, and two or three months ago in the case of the Yukon.

Mr. COOTE: Was that done by order in council?

Mr. MURPHY: Yes, under the regulations.

Mr. SPENCER: At whose request.

Mr. MURPHY: The request came from different quarters, but principally from the prospectors themselves. I may say that the moratorium was granted for several reasons. One was that this region is very inaccessible and there are many difficulties in the way of transportation, as other speakers have already pointed out. Then again there was the low prices obtained for minerals such as silver and copper, which are the principal minerals found in those areas.

With regard to the government's control of radium, it goes without saying that in the first instance the mineral resources of the country belong to the state. That, of course, is self-evident; it is granted. But we have had on the statute books for a long time laws prescribing how these resources shall be disposed of, and until the present time the mineral resources of this country at least have been developed by private enterprise. Private prospectors have gone into these unknown quarters of Canada and have spent years, sometimes practically a lifetime, prospecting, and have met with many disappointments, and it is only a certain type of individual who will undertake that work.

Mr. SPENCER: What royalties are demanded?

Mr. MURPHY: I shall come to that in a moment. There are only two methods by which these resources can be brought into production: one is by the government actively going into the mining business or, on the other hand, by private enterprise; and until the present time they have been developed solely by private enterprise. These radium deposits are still in their infancy. The extent of the deposits is not yet known, nor to a certain extent has their richness been ascertained. Moreover, there are in Canada no refineries which are capable of carrying on the refining of that ore, at least commercially. The only place in which they can be refined at the present time is a small laboratory in the Mines department in Ottawa, and the process of reducing that ore has not yet been completed even here.

As regards the control which the government exercises at present, the payments which are made to the government in the way of royalty are provided for by certain regulations, which set out what the state shall receive from the private owners, those who are actually developing these mines. Possibly I cannot do better than read the clause which deals with this point. It is to be found in section 93 of the quartz mining regulations:

> There shall be paid to the crown on every mine acquired under the provisions of these regulations, or under the provisions of the quartz mining regulations which preceded these regulations, an annual royalty on any profits of such mines which exceed the sum of $10,000 during any calendar year, and the owner, manager, holder, tenant, lessee, occupier or operator of the mine shall be liable for and shall pay to the crown an annual royalty as follows:
> (a) upon annual profits in excess of $10,000 and up to $1,000,000, three per cent;
> (b) on the excess above $1,000,000 up to $5,000,000, five per cent;
> (c) on the excess above $5,000,000 up to $10,000,000, six per cent;
> (d) on the excess above $10,000,000, a proportional increase of one per cent for each additional $5,000,000.

In addition to that, subsection 4 of that section reads:

> The annual profits shall be ascertained and fixed in the following manner. The gross receipts from the year's output of the mine or, in case the ore, mineral, or mineral-bearing substance, or any part thereof, is not sold but is treated by or for the owner, tenant, holder, lessee, occupier or operator of the mine, upon the premises or elsewhere, then the actual market value of the output at the pit's mouth or, if there is no means of ascertaining the market value, or if there is no established market price or value, the value of the same as appraised by the mining recorder shall be ascertained, and from the amount so ascertained, the following and no other expenses, payments, allowances or deductions, shall be deducted and made.

I will not read the manner in which the deductions are to be made, as that is not relevant to the argument, but the important point of that clause is this:

> The actual market value of the output at the pit's mouth or, if there is no means of ascertaining the market value, or if there is no established market price or value, the value of the same as appraised by the mining recorder shall be ascertained.

That puts it in the power of the minister of the day to set a market value, and the price of that particular mineral at the pit's mouth. In addition to that, the following clause was added to the present regulation in force this year, being section 130:

> The governor in council reserves the right to make such additional regulations from time to time as may appear to be necessary or expedient in the public interest, governing the development and operation of any mineral claim or mine acquired under these regulations, in which, in the opinion of the minister, ores containing radioactive elements occur in sufficient quantity for extraction; also regulations governing the production and conservation of such ores and the elimination of waste.

Those are the regulations at present in force, dealing with government control so far as mineral operations are concerned.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): When was that regulation passed? What is the date of the order?

Mr. MURPHY: They became effective on April 2, 1932. I do not think I need extend my remarks at greater length at the present time, except to say this. The government have not been unmindful of the value of radium to the people of this and other countries. We have been told by the medical profession that radium is very valuable in the treatment of cancer. We know also that the present supply of world radium is controlled by a monopolistic company, and we have also been informed that the price of radium is altogether too high in view of the cost of producing the mineral, although as I said earlier in my remarks, we have no accurate figures as to the actual cost of production. The Belgian company, however, claim that they have materially reduced the price of radium, from $120,000 per gramme to $70,000 and, in larger quantities, $50,000 per gramme.

How may the government exercise control over these deposits? The deposit which is now known to be in existence, although as to its extent or richness we have no definite data, is in private hands. There exists in Canada no commercial plant for the reduction of the ore. The right to that deposit has been acquired by prospectors who have spent a long time in the north, men who went in there and have pitted their strength against the elements, have suffered hardships and, under the laws of Canada, have acquired certain rights. These rights must be respected.

Mr. CAMPBELL: If the department had enforced the regulations the rights would have been extinguished; it is only by the moratorium that they have any rights at all.

Mr. MURPHY: I must take exception to the statement of the hon. member; it is not quite correct. Simply because the regulations have been changed to allow a year's moratorium, it does not necessarily follow that these men would not have gone ahead and done their representation work. They might have done so and it is hardly correct to say that this work would not have been done if the moratorium had not been granted.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): They are operating now.

Mr. MURPHY: I am not in position to say that they are not even now carrying on that representation work. They are actually mining to-day and I would be very much surprised if they are not doing much more than the $100 per year of representation work required by the regulations.

Mr. CAMPBELL: Why the necessity for the moratorium?

Mr. MURPHY: The moratorium was not put on solely at the request of the discoverers of the pitchblende deposits, in fact I do not think they made any representations. The representations were made by those who hold claims of zinc, lead, copper and silver deposits rather than by those who are engaged in mining this radium ore.

As I say, this matter could be controlled by means of royalties so that the state would obtain what is considered to be a fair share for the state, that is, for all the people. Legislation could be passed by this parliament whereby in the case of radium a royalty in kind could be made available for the people of Canada. No legislation exists at the present time to permit this action being taken, and I merely mention the different methods by which control could be exercised. The government is fully aware of the value claimed for radium in the treatment of disease, but as to just what method will be adopted in order to secure for Canada the benefit which is justly her due, I am not in position to say. This matter is actively engaging the attention of the government and we are prepared to take such necessary steps as will make radium available to the sufferers in Canada at the lowest possible price.

Mr. IRVINE: Mr. Chairman, the statement of the minister as to how these people became possessors of resources which were properly held by the crown is the ordinary orthodox statement. Surely the minister will agree that if no definite action is taken now, pretty soon all these resources will be taken up by individuals in precisely the same way as these people to whom he has referred have obtained their rights; and before very long there will not be any natural resources left in the name of the crown. Of course this is not to be laid at the door of the minister, but the responsibility is upon him to take a new step away from that course which in the past has not been for the benefit of the people of Canada. I think the recent statement of the Prime Minister is the most important that has ever come from the treasury benches, and his remarks apply just as much to the resources now under discussion as they do to air and other resources. Unless the minister definitely says that the time has come for us to stop the exploitation of these resources for private profit, it may go on forever. The government should declare that all the resources in the area under discussion shall be regarded as being for the general advantage of Canada. Some of the unemployed should to put to work immediately to examine the whole field and estimate its value. If it should be found that there is value, either in radium or other minerals, then the government should finance the development by creating sufficient money to do so, thus absorbing a great proportion of our unemployed and at the same time garnering the wealth which might be applied to the paying of our national debt. The government's course is clear, and I should like to ask the minister if he will not go so far as to assure the committee that the government will not extend the time limit to those prospectors and others who have obtained leases or rights in respect of mineral resources in the Great Bear lake district. Will the minister give the undertaking that no further extension of time will be given to those who have filed claims?

Mr. MURPHY: I am not in position to give a categorical answer to the question asked by the hon. member, because the action of the government would be predicated to a great extent upon conditions. The hon. member has asked me to state that no further extension of time will be granted to those who are now in possession of mineral claims, but I am not in a position to give that assurance. However, I am willing to give this matter every consideration. I assure the committee that I have no desire to act in a manner other than that which will be for the benefit of all the people of Canada. The prospector who may have spent many years of his life, perhaps all of his life in discovering and prospecting these areas should not be cut off from the fruits of his labours because of any drastic action on the part of the government.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: It seems to me most regrettable that the minister should take the attitude he has just taken. Apparently in his eyes the prospector fills the whole horizon, and it makes very little difference—

Mr. MURPHY: I did not make any such statement as that.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I did not suggest the minister had made the statement; I said it was apparent to the rest of us that in the eyes of the minister the claims of the prospector were of paramount importance. The minister began by pointing out that the mines had been discovered by private prospectors and were now in private hands, and these facts were set up as serious objections to our taking any action. I think we all recognize that the prospector has certain claims, and every one of us would be glad to see that his rights are safeguarded. But in practically all mining areas it is not the prospector who makes the fortunes out of the mines; almost invariably it is the promotor. Generally the prospector has not the capital with which to develop the mine; he has to sell out, sometimes for a mere pittance, to the promoter who goes in and reaps the profits. It is not going to be different in a case of this kind. We are all willing to grant sufficient to remunerate the prospector, but it becomes evident that there are other claims than his. Let me give one illustration. Some hon. members may remember a few years ago the claims made by certain individuals who in the early days, had gone into Churchill, put up with all sorts of hardship, and laid claim to lands that later on were to become the site of the present harbour and town of Churchill. It seemed then that there were certain claims that ought not lightly to be set aside; yet it was recognized that larger claims had precedence. Because certain people had taken up homesteads there in the early days, that did not mean they were forever to levy toll on the rest of the Dominion of Canada through the development of a railway and port in the north.

The minister states that certain transportation facilities are available, and yet elsewhere he rather suggests that a moratorium has been granted because there are not sufficient transportation facilities to enable the development to proceed. This is, after all, a minor matter. The lack of transportation facilities, the fact that the value is, as the minister has said, undetermined; the further fact that at present there is no commercial plant for reduction—all these considerations make the present a particularly opportune time to take possession of those areas and deposits. If we wait for one or two or three years, as is so frequently the case, it might very well be urged that vested interests are at stake. By that time the promoters would be in control and would have behind them large amounts of capital. But now we are getting in on the ground floor, as apparently the only man who has claims at the moment is the prospector, who could very easily be satisfied.

Mr. NICHOLSON: What about those who have furnished all the money necessary to enable the prospectors to go in there and do the work they have been doing for the last ten years?

Mr. WOODSWORTH: If we expropriate the mining claims, the simplest method would be to make a refund. That is what we do in expropriation cases of various kinds. Take, for example, the man who has settled and built a little home; a railway is going to run right through his place and his land is expropriated. The owner may or may not be refunded all he has invested; it is considered a minor matter whether he is compensated to that extent or not. The railway, it is decided, must go through, and the court determines what under the circumstances the man should receive. It would be comparatively easy to indemnify those who have furnished the money to grubstake prospectors.

The minister further says that so far the development of mining areas has been by private enterprise. We all admit that, but our contention is that we have reached the stage when that policy ought to be abandoned. That is especially true in this particular case where the physical welfare of so many people is at stake. There seems to be no reason why in the future we should continue the haphazard policy of private development that in the past has undoubtedly meant the exploitation of our great natural resources in order that a few might grow wealthy at the expense of the great majority of the people in the community.

The minister says that he is willing to give a fair share to the state. Our contention is that the state owns all; not that a few royalties should be paid to the state, but rather that the state should be considered, in the words of the Prime Minister the other day, as the trustee for development in the interests of all the people. That is a new point of view, and it is one that we in this corner should like to put forward now. It is quite true that in the development we must reward the prospectors, those who have gone in and done the pioneer work, but we have reached the stage where it should be recognized that not a small royalty but the whole resources should belong to the state. The crumbs should be thrown to private individuals not to the state.

One point that strikes me as being of the greatest importance in this matter is the claim made by our scientists that radium is essential for the treatment of cancer. None of us is an expert in that phase of the question; we have to take what the medical men tell us. But if their statements are at all correct, it means that the welfare, the safety, the health of hundreds of thousands of people are at stake. If that be true, I can hardly understand the attitude of the minister in dilly-dallying with an important question of this kind and refusing to state a forthright policy in dealing with it. It would seem to me to be the right thing to settle this matter as one of principle. If it is discovered within the next few months, or even if it is at the present time held by scientists, that radium is essential in the treatment of cancer, the government should immediately set aside those areas in which it is produced as belonging to all the people and proceed to work them in order that radium may be made available for those who need it.

Mr. STITT (Nelson): I thought the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Woodsworth), having been up through the north would have a greater knowledge of the usefulness of a prospector than he appears to have according to the statement he has made on the floor of the house. Were it not for the prospector, there would not today be a mining company operating in Canada.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Granted.

Mr. STITT (Nelson): The prospector must come first. It is not fair to compare a prospector with a man who owns either a home or land which may be expropriated by a railway company. The home or land owner has an investment only in that home or land, while the average prospector has invested many years of his life. He goes out into the woods and fields and endures all kinds of hardship, half the time eating salt pork and bacon. I know whereof I speak, because I have done it myself. He goes far afield and he makes these strikes. Then, of course, the mining company comes in and acquires the claims. The statement that the mines are exploited for the benefit of a few is not correct, because thousands of people own shares in mining stocks and are in receipt of big dividends from them. It is true that the biggest stock owner receives the largest dividend.

In the case of this Great Bear lake strike. I happen to know Gilbert La Bine, who made it; how he travelled the 2,000 miles into the Arctic, pulling behind him a toboggan with his tent and grub, later leading by hand his partner who was also a prospector and who was snow blind. When he arrived at La Bine point, he found that he could not take his partner any further and he had to make camp. After he had fixed his partner up in the camp and got food for him, he looked around him and made this discovery. The La Bine brothers have been prospecting for twenty years. They have made their strike after a lifetime of toil.

Mr. IRVINE: Why not, as a reward, make this prospector the next governor general of Canada?

Mr. STITT (Nelson): If we have anything against him, we may do that. It is very unfair to say to that man: we are going to take away from you what you have been all your life looking for. A number of people are behind this grubstaking of La Bine; there are hundreds of people interested in it. It is known as the Eldorado Gold Mining Company, with about $2,000,000 worth of shares held all over Canada.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: How much money has so far been invested in the development at Great Bear lake?

Mr. STITT (Nelson): I imagine about $30,000 or $40,000 on prospecting, exclusive of development work now going on. I am interested in that country myself, and to send one prospector in there costs on an average $1,500. It costs from seven to eight dollars a day to feed your prospector, over and above what you pay him for his work. It would be most unfair at this time, before the area has been proved, to talk of expropriating it. The government can always protect themselves. If they want that radium, they can forbid its export just as they forbid the export of gold; but to talk about taking it away from the prospector, well, you had better not come up to my constituency and talk that kind of thing.

Mr. COOTE: It is quite evident from the remarks of the last speaker that prospecting for our mineral resources has been carried on in a very haphazard way indeed. It is time these activities were carried on much more thoroughly and systematically than they have been in the past. Many geologists and mineral and petroleum engineers are at present without employment. The government has lately paid off from the air force nearly forty married men, some of the most competent fliers that we have in Canada, with a splendid record of war service. Some of them have flown across the great mineral areas of the Northwest Territories. Let us employ these men to take aeroplanes into that area, carrying geologists who will prospect the country in a thorough manner. I sympathize with the prospector and would want to see him well taken care of. At the present time the prospectors as well as the investing public are taken care of by the promoter. There has been too much money put into the development of our petroleum and mineral resources for the amount of production that has taken place. I say that the time has come when we should tackle this problem in a business-like way. We have aeroplanes and fliers, and let us send these geologists up there well equipped to prospect our mineral wealth in that area. Let us start in Canada a real national policy for the development of our mineral resources. Now is the time to do it; for as the hon. member for Wetaskiwin has said, the longer we wait the less mineral resources we will have to take care of. What is the use of reserving all these mineral resources to the crown and then leasing them out to promoters to be used as a basis for stock promotions which are loaded on an unsuspecting public at prices which can never return dividends? In a few cases, of course, handsome dividends may be paid, but I contend that they should be returned to the state.

Mr. IRVINE: One more remark. It is a rather strange argument that because one or two prospectors have happened to wander into this north country and have thereby obtained certain so-called legal rights, the government should not conserve both the present and future interests of the Canadian people. I never heard such an argument as that. Certainly I have no intention of suggesting for a moment that any prospector should be deprived of wages or reward for his services. I suggested in a question to my hon. friend who brought this matter up that I would be willing to make the man governor general of Canada who had encountered such hardships as he described and had rendered such service.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Give him a title.

Mr. IRVINE: We have no titles now, but if a title could be given him, I would suggest that he be given two. It is a man of achievement that we want to put into a position of that sort; there is nothing too good for such a man so far as I am concerned. But I refuse to let him stand in the way of a policy which will be in the interests of Canada for all time; for that is what he is doing according to the argument that has been made here this afternoon. It is a strange argument, and I submit that it should not be considered for a moment. Reward any man who has done service, glorify him, if you like, but safeguard our natural resources for posterity.

Mr. NICHOLSON: I would like to say a word with regard to the general question. It is evident that some members who have spoken on this question have very little conception of what the development of a mine really means. Personally I know nothing whatever about the discovery of radium in the Great Bear lake area, but I wonder if my hon. friends have any idea how much money has often to be spent before the man who is developing a prospect can say whether it is really a mine or not, and I wonder how much money this country would have to spend before we could know that there really was a deposit of great value in the Great Bear lake area? Let me give an illustration. In the district in which I happen to live, after prospectors, thousands of them, had gone over the ground carrying their packs and suffering the hardships that have been mentioned, an area was discovered that gave promise of mineralization. In the instance of which I have knowledge five and one-half million dollars in cash have been spent for diamond drilling. The people who have spent that money do not know to-day whether they have a mine or not, but they are continuing to diamond drill. In one area in northern Ontario, through the determination of a mining engineer and a geologist, backed up by a number of men who are interested in this prospect, they have drilled down to 4,700 feet, and they do not know yet whether they have a mine or not. Would the government, if someone suggested that we spend five or six million dollars on a prospect in order to prove whether there was anything in it, spend that amount of money on a gamble? And where would the country land in a very short time if the government started doing that sort of thing all over the country?

Mr. IRVINE: We spent more than that amount above the estimated cost for the Montreal bridge.

Mr. NICHOLSON: If my hon. friend would go through northern Ontario and see what the men are doing and the money they are risking in order to develop one single mine, he would have a better appreciation of the situation. The greatest chances in the world are being taken by men who are willing to spend their money in ascertaining whether they have a mine or not. One of the greatest mines in northern Ontario was brought into production by a group of men who lived in northern Ontario, had come up there from the east, acquired some means, had been prospecting elsewhere, had got one property and sold it, and then went on. After they had spent a million dollars of their own money and of the money of the people that they could get around them, they did not know whether they had a mine or not. Then what happened? Every one of these men pledged everything he had and might have in the future to a bank in order to get a loan to go on with the work. Is this country prepared to put up money on such a prospect as that?

Mr. IRVINE: It cost a lot of money for Columbus to discover America. Would my hon. friend suggest that Columbus should therefore have incorporated a company and taken possession of the North American continent for all time?

Mr. NICHOLSON: My hon. friend is very clever, but the question is simply this: shall the country take such risks or not? If the country decides to take such risks and sends men out prospecting to develop mines, I have a picture in my mind's eye of the number of mines they will discover.

Mr. MacINNIS: I do not think it is a question of the country taking risks. The country is taking all the risk there is to-day in providing for unemployment. We have left the development of our natural resources in the past in the hands of private interests who have developed and exploited them for private gain, and as soon as they were exploited to the limit and nothing more was to be got out of them, the people who were working on these natural resources were thrown out of work to swell the ranks of the unemployed. If the government does not wish to take this step now and safeguard what little natural resources we have left, it will be compelled to do it in the very near future. This is one of the most important questions that has been brought before the house this session. The hon. member for East Algoma asks, should the government risk five or six million dollars on a prospect? Why, the first thing the government did after the election of 1930 was to summon parliament and appropriate twenty million dollars for the relief of unemployment. We are receiving no benefit from our contributions to that end, because we are giving doles and the men are doing nothing. Would it not be better to put them out as prospectors? Many of them would be glad to do this work rather than leave it in the hands of private interests who, very often, are aliens.

Mr. CAMPBELL: There is one aspect of this matter which has not been dealt with by most hon. members who have spoken. I refer to the question of what is to be done with resources still unalienated. The discussion has evolved into an argument as to whether or not we should expropriate the claims already staked. The minister left an impression on the minds of hon. members—probably not intentionally—that all the area had already been taken up. We have every reason to believe that large numbers of prospectors are still going in, and no doubt many more claims will be staked. Separate and apart from the other arguments there is the question as to what is to be done with the remaining unalienated resources.

There is another matter I should like to discuss, one apart from that of government development. As a matter of fact I did not suggest that, but I did suggest that the government should take some steps, either by developing the resources themselves or controlling development by private interests, to see that the interests of the people of Canada are protected. I can see that government members can put up a very good argument as to why they should not carry on such developments. I suggest, however, that action should be taken somewhat similar to that taken with respect to gold. At a critical period last fall the government placed an embargo on gold, which cannot now be exported from Canada except by licence; therefore most of it is sold and handled by the federal government. That is one way in which these resources could be controlled, even after private interests had been allowed to carry out their programs.

There are other ways in which this matter could be dealt with. I was shocked and surprised to find that hon. members on the government benches have not shown the vision, the foresight or advanced thought evidenced a few days ago by their own leader. When the Prime Minister made his statement concerning radio it was far in advance of anything I have ever heard from the government benches. He showed a vision with respect to the protection of our natural resources which few, if any, of his followers have shown. I should like to commend that attitude to hon. members opposite. They could do no better in that respect than to follow the example of their leader.

Mr. LAPOINTE: There are five minutes left, and I think I have sufficient time to present some points which have arisen in my mind. I refer to the proceeds from sales of Indian lands, after they have been surrendered.

Mr. MURPHY: Mr. Chairman, I do not wish to appear discourteous, but may I remind the hon. member that we are discussing an item under civil government?

Mr. LAPOINTE: No, my hon. friend is wrong.

Mr. MURPHY: The discussion to which my hon. friend is directing his remarks would properly come under the Department of Indian Affairs.

Mr. LAPOINTE: The minister is wrong; this discussion is under the Department of Indian Affairs.

Mr. MURPHY: Then the discussion is all out of order, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN: Yes, the discussion was all out of order.

Mr. RHODES: There was a distinct understanding that one item would be held, and that all discussion could take place upon it.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

Mr. LAPOINTE: We are discussing an item which deals generally with Indian affairs.

Mr. MURPHY: I am sorry that I was out of the house when the item was called.

Mr. LAPOINTE: I shall have finished before six o'clock.

Mr. MURPHY: Very well; proceed.

Mr. LAPOINTE: The other day the minister admitted the money from the sale of Indian lands belongs to the provinces. He says, however, that he does not wish to pay it back to the provinces because he is trying to come to some agreement whereby the money will be kept in trust for the Indians. The Prime Minister has said—and that is the reason I speak to-day—the trouble is that the privy council did not say that the money should or should not be held as a trust fund for the Indians. My right hon. friend is altogether wrong about that. It has been held that the Indian lands are the property of the provinces, and when they are surrendered in any way the provinces become the sole owners. The Indians have an interest until the land has been surrendered. This has been decided in two well known cases, the first an Ontario case concerning the St. Catharine's Milling Company, which is reported at 14 appeal cases, page 46. In connection with that case the privy council stated as follows:

The crown has all along had a present proprietary estate in the land, upon which the Indian title was a mere burden. The ceded territory was, at the time of the union, land vested in the crown, subject to "an interest other than that of the province in the same" within the meaning of section 109,—

That refers to section 109 of the British North America Act.

—and must now belong to Ontario in terms of that clause, unless its rights have been taken away by some provision of the act of 1867 other than those already noticed.

It appears to them to be sufficient for the purposes of this case that there has been all along vested in the crown a substantial and paramount estate, underlying the Indian title, which became a plenum dominium whenever that title was surrendered or otherwise extinguished.

Then in the year 1920, there was a case between the province of Quebec and the Dominion of Canada which is reported in the Law Reports, Appeal Cases, Volume 1, 1921. At page 411 I find the following:

The Dominion government had, of course, full authority to accept the surrender on behalf of the crown from the Indians, but to quote once more the judgment of the Board in the St. Catherine's Milling Company's case, it had "neither authority nor power to take away from Quebec the interest which had been assigned to that province by the Imperial Statute of 1867." The effect of the surrender would have been otherwise if the view, which no doubt was the view upon which the Dominion government acted, had prevailed—

Which seems to be the view which the right hon. gentleman takes at this time—

—namely, that the beneficial title in the lands was by the act of 1850 vested in the Commissioner of Indian Lands as trustee for the Indians, with authority, subject to the superintendence of the crown, to convert the Indian interest into money for the benefit of the Indians. As already indicated, in their Lordships' opinion that is a view of the act of 1850 which cannot be sustained.

There is no doubt that as soon as those lands were surrendered and sold the money belonged to the province of Quebec. Three hundred thousand dollars of that money is held by this government. The province is asking for it; the province has a right to get it, and I do not see upon what basis my hon. friend can refuse to hand it over. Why should we have further litigation to get that money?

The CHAIRMAN: Shall the item carry?

Some hon. MEMBERS: Carried.

Some hon. MEMBERS: No.

At six o'clock the committee took recess.

After Recess

The committee resumed at eight o'clock.

The CHAIRMAN: Shall the item carry?

Item agreed to.

Progress reported.

INSURANCE BILLS—CONSIDERED IN COMMITTEE

The house resumed, from May 6, consideration in committee of Bills Nos. 67 and 68—Mr. Rhodes—Mr. LaVergne in the chair.

FOREIGN INSURANCE COMPANIES

The CHAIRMAN: The committee is considering Bill No. 67, and the first section is No. 25.

On section 25—Valuation of securities.

Mr. RHODES: I am ready to proceed with this section, but I understand the hon. member for Wetaskiwin has something to say with regard to it. Perhaps we could proceed with the other sections of the bill and return to this section when the hon. member arrives.

Section stands.

Sections 26 to 31 inclusive agreed to.

On section 32—Appraisement of real estate.

Mr. RHODES: There are two amendments to be proposed to this section.

Mr. RYCKMAN: I move that this section be amended by striking out the words "in Canada" in the first line and inserting the said words after the words "by it" in the fourth line of subsection 1.

Mr. SPENCER: How will that work out?

Mr. RHODES: This means that the real estate to be valued will be the real estate in Canada. We do not propose to go outside of Canada in connection with the valuation of the real estate of a foreign company.

There is a further amendment to subsection 2 of this section.

Mr. RYCKMAN: I move that subsection 2 of section 32 be amended by inserting the words "in Canada" after the words "of real estate" in the third line.

Mr. RHODES: The same explanation obtains.

Amendments agreed to.

Section as amended agreed to.

Sections 33 and 34 agreed to.

On section 35—Release of assets in Canada.

Mr. RHODES: There is an amendment to be proposed to subsection 3 of this section. It is simply an amendment for the purpose of making clear the intent of the section.

Mr. RYCKMAN: I move that subsection 3 of section 35 be amended by striking out the words "with the concurrence of the treasury board" in the second line thereof and the word "shall" in the fifth line thereof, and inserting in lieu thereof the words "may" in the fifth line thereof, followed by the words "with the concurrence of the treasury board."

Mr. RHODES: There is also an amendment to be moved to subsection 6 of this section.

Mr. RYCKMAN: I move that subsection 6 of section 35 be amended by striking out the words "securities" in the second line thereof and substituting therefor the words "assets in Canada."

Mr. RHODES: The object of this amendment will be obvious; it is for the purpose of making it clear that the valuation is to consist of all the assets in Canada, not of the securities alone.

Mr. SPENCER: Are these the same bills that have been gone over so carefully by the other chamber, and which there was no need to send to the banking and commerce committee? We have had about eight or nine amendments now and the bill is so long that it is probable, before we get through with it, that there will be as many more. Is the Minister of Finance still of the opinion that it was unnecessary to have these bills carefully gone over by the committee?

Mr. RHODES: Yes; and the mere fact that we have so many amendments, many of which are moved for the purpose of clarity, of making the intent of the bill obvious beyond question, would indicate the very extreme care with which the bill has been considered.

Amendments agreed to.

Section as amended agreed to.

Sections 36 and 37 agreed to.

On section 38—Maintenance of separate funds.

Mr. RHODES: I have a verbal amendment to move to this section. It is to improve the language and make the intent clearer. My colleague will move it.

Mr. RYCKMAN: I move:

That subsection 1 of section 38 be amended by striking out the words "registered under the provisions of this act to transact the business of life insurance" in the first and second lines of the subsection.

Amendment agreed to.

Section as amended agreed to.

Sections 39 to 51 inclusive agreed to.

On section 52—Classes of hazards covered by certificate.

Mr. RHODES: I have an amendment which reads:

That subsection 1 of section 52 be amended by inserting the words "subject to the provisions of subsection 2 of section 8 of this act" before the words "any company" at the beginning of this section.

The object of the amendment is to make it clear that this section is not to override section 8, but to be read in conjunction with it.

Mr. RYCKMAN: I move the amendment.

Amendment agreed to.

Section as amended agreed to.

Mr. RHODES: Section 25 was allowed to stand to suit the convenience of the hon. member for Wetaskiwin, but a similar provision is contained in the next bill we are to consider, except that it provides for the addition of a fifteen per cent limitation upon the holding of common stocks. The hon. member may proceed under this section to discuss the matters he desires to discuss, or it may suit his purpose to wait until we are considering the next bill.

Mr. IRVINE: What I desire to say can be taken up under the next bill.

Mr. IRVINE: Mr. Chairman, perhaps the committee will permit me to make a few remarks before this section carries. My remarks will not refer particularly to this section, although some of the things I desire to take up might come within its provisions. It may be contended that what I am about to say might have been more fittingly said on the second reading of the bill, but at that time we in this corner of the house were reasonably certain that the bill would go to a select standing committee. Observing that the bill covered a very large field and was practically a substitution for all insurance legislation, we decided to allow it to go through second reading in the hope that before a select committee we would be able to obtain a better understanding of its details. However, for reasons which were no doubt satisfactory from the minister's point of view, the bill did not go to a committee, and it now becomes necessary, after making some attempt to know what the bill is about, to ask that certain clauses be explained and to ascertain why certain provisions of the revised statutes of 1927 were not included in the present bill, and to criticize some of the new sections which did not appear in the old legislation.

I hope the committee will be lenient in allowing me to transgress beyond the boundaries of the present section, it will save time; otherwise I should have to refer to many different sections as they come before the committee. As I say, this bill covers the whole field of legislation in connection with Canadian insurance companies and British insurance companies doing business in Canada. This legislation is made necessary because of the findings of the supreme court, in respect to provincial jurisdiction and I suppose that is why it must be passed at this session. Otherwise it might have come before a select standing committee where we would have had more time to deal with its provisions.

I am in agreement with the main object of the bill, which seems to be to secure, or at least to retain, some control over insurance in Canada by some central body such as the Dominion government or the Department of Insurance. The bill, being as I say, a substitute for the legislation contained in the revised statutes of 1927, and covering a tremendous field, should have been studied by hon. members much more carefully than we will have an opportunity of doing. It is very bad practice to take such important legislation from the Senate without our having an opportunity of considering it in committee. However, I assume there are good reasons why this cannot be done. I suppose the Senate should be congratulated on a very fine piece of legislation, but we do not like to take all that the Senate says for granted, and we should have an opportunity to go into details, although it may be too late to talk about that now.

I shall now come to the specific points in the bill on which I should like to have an explanation, and I shall suggest some alterations in certain sections. I think I should refer first to the fact that certain sections in the old act which we believed were good legislation have been left out of this bill. I contend that such sections as I will refer to in a few minutes should be included among the company clauses. If hon. members will look at section 56 of the old act they will find that it prohibits any insurance company or its directors, directly or indirectly, from promoting or organizing other companies. It has been charged and, I believe with good reason, that certain insurance companies in Canada have done that sort of thing even in spite of the fact that that section was in the old act. As that is not the business of an insurance company, we would like to know why this section of the 1927 statute was not included in the new legislation. There may be some good reason for this which has not been made apparent. The committee is entitled to know why this omission was made.

Section 57 of the old act does not appear in the new bill. That section rigidly restricted underwriting on the part of insurance companies. With that section removed, so far as I am aware, the insurance companies could become underwriting companies. There may be in this bill a clause which has escaped my notice prohibiting that in another way, but if there is not, I should like the minister to explain why the provisions in the old act in this connection do not appear in the present legislation. The business of insurance is not the underwriting of any enterprise or company; it is to carry on insurance, and this legislation should rigidly restrict such companies to the business of insurance. If there is in the act no provision which prevents an insurance company from entering these other lines of business, it is just possible some of them will do so.

Section 82 of the old act which again, I believe, was a very good provision, does not appear in the present bill, and so far as I am able to find out, there is no substitute for it covering the same point. Section 82 forbids any insurance company or any official of it to offer any estimate of the amount of its shares or dividends. This, of course, might be used by agents and others for the purpose of inducing individuals to become insured in individual companies. Prior to this legislation being included in the old act, I understand, considerable abuse was practised by companies in that very particular. But since the enactment of section 82 I believe that grievance has been fairly well cleared up. Again I should like the minister to state why that section does not appear in the new measure, or whether there is in the bill any substitute covering that particular point.

Subsection 4 of section 63, which, of course, was in the Insurance Act of 1927, probably would be better deleted. Certain insurance companies have, I understand, reorganized other companies, written up the value of stocks, poured in water and appropriated to themselves the major portion of the capital; and still the stock of such companies is regarded as the same in value after reorganization as it was before. I believe steps should be taken to legislate to prohibit an insurance company from doing that sort of thing.

I come now to the sections of this bill which are new in insurance legislation in Canada. The first clause of importance is that which provides for a limitation of investments in common stocks to fifteen per cent. I know that the section in question is not yet before the committee, but I thought if I indicated now our difficulty in respect thereto, perhaps the minister, when he comes to it, will give the explanation. I shall be as brief as possible. We are at a loss to understand why the limitation should be fifteen per cent. If we have to have any percentage, it should be one per cent. So far as I am able to gather, all the insurance companies of Canada, with the exception of the Sun Life, taking them all together, have so far invested in common stocks only a little over one per cent of their book assets, although if they had wanted to do so they might have invested to a much greater degree because there was no legislation prohibiting them. Sometimes it is wise for us to criticize insurance companies, but in this instance I think we ought to give credit to the insurance companies of Canada which have stayed so well within the limits of their trust and have invested their money in the way in which a good insurance company should do. It does not appear to us in this section of the house that insurance companies should be permitted to invest in common stocks the funds of their policyholders, but if there has to be any percentage at all, we want it reduced or some reason given for the fifteen per cent permitted.

When we come to section 7 we find an exception which apparently must have been made in particular for the Sun Life Assurance Company. That is to say, it provides that subsection 6 shall not apply to such company having an excess of fifteen per cent in common stocks when this act comes into force. Meanwhile, of course, such company must not invest any more in common stocks, and if and when it has reduced its investment in common stocks to fifteen per cent, it will come within this provision of the law. I understand the Sun Life has some 47 or 50 per cent of the value of its book assets invested in common stocks, and this clause, while it does not so state, has been inserted expressly to safeguard that company. I do not object to that. The trouble has already been done; the government cannot do otherwise than deal with the situation as they find it, and perhaps if government in the past had listened a little more to the protests that came from this section of the house, such a provision as this would not have been necessary, because those of us who had paid any attention to the insurance business in Canada knew what was taking place in this regard and warned the house about it. But the point is that no provision is made for any specified time within which this or any company having an excess of fifteen per cent of its book assets invested in common stock, can now come within the provision of the legislation. It may be very difficult to arrange such a time, but some limitation should be imposed, so that any company coming within the provisions of this section would understand that the people of Canada, while they have been very kind in giving them an opportunity to correct their insurance practice, feel that the sooner the correction is made the better. There ought to be some provision in the section for that purpose, but I cannot see any in the bill as it stands.

Subsection 8 provides that shares of common stock which may come as bonuses or dividends to companies from investments already made should not be regarded as an investment in common stock within the meaning of this act. It may be advisable to retain that section on the ground that insurance companies now have investments in common stocks of other companies, and such companies, while they may be in very good condition, might find it necessary to refinance and might grant certain privileges to the insurance companies holding their stock. But at the same time there might be considerable abuse, and it appears to me that at least some consideration should be given to the section and safeguards taken against possible abuses.

There is another section to which I wish to refer, namely, subsection 2 of section 71, which provides that in a period of depression any insurance company which finds that its stocks have gone down with all other stocks may, in order to appear solvent in its books, write up its assets within certain limitations. Again I do not object; that may be necessary at certain times, but I do say that the same privilege should be given to everybody else. If the farmer, for instance, could write up the value of the butter and the eggs and the wheat that he has to sell he would be solvent, but there is no such provision made for him. This really appears to be class legislation. Very careful consideration should be given to this section of the bill.

I trust that the minister will explain why the sections of the old act which I have mentioned are not included in the bill, and will endeavour to answer the questions I have raised with respect to the particular sections I have mentioned.

In conclusion, I should like to say that in my opinion the insurance business in Canada perhaps is more ripe than any other business to be taken over by the state. If it had not been for the action of the Prime Minister and the government, we would now have neither insurance companies nor banks in Canada. In my opinion the action which the Prime Minister and the government took saved these institutions. But for the credit of the nation that was placed behind the banks through the Finance Act there is not a bank in Canada would have stood, and but for the special legislation by order in council with respect to insurance companies, there would be no insurance company in Canada to-day. I commend the government for its action in those respects. It was necessary to save those institutions. But, Mr. Chairman, we do not want to save them for private individuals. If it is necessary to place the credit of the people of Canada behind such institutions, we want to control them for the people of Canada, and so I suggest that the government next year bring down legislation nationalizing the entire insurance business in this country. The business of insurance belongs to the people. It is the easiest and safest business to run; it is the most important from the point of view of finance, and I trust that the government will take it over.

Mr. RHODES: May I express my thanks to the hon. member for Wetaskiwin for his courtesy in advising me that he intended to make some references, by way of fair criticism, to certain provisions of this bill. If it meets with the approval of the committee, I shall endeavour to deal with the observations made by my hon. friend, especially as they have applied to various sections of the bill, in one reference rather than wait till we come to the particular sections involved.

In the first place my hon. friend has asked why sections 56, 57 and 82 of the old Insurance Act do not appear in this new measure. Let me point out that the insurance bills as they appear before this house represent not only the wisdom and judgment of the Senate, which gave many weeks of careful study to them, but also the combined judgment of all parties who evinced an interest in insurance legislation, including the provinces, which hitherto have opposed the dominion in its attempt to deal with insurance legislation at all. The reason these sections have been left out is due solely to the fact that, in the opinion of eminent counsel, to reenact them in this measure would be to reenact sections which in terms have to do with the business of insurance, and that is the very thing which the privy council has determined beyond question is a subject which comes within the exclusive jurisdiction of the provinces. It might be, perhaps it is so, that these bills would be better if certain provisions of those sections could have been incorporated in them, but we can only go so far in this legislation dealing with the subject of insurance as the privy council in its wisdom has decided we may go.

My hon. friend dealt with subsection 4 of section 63 of the bill.

Mr. SPENCER: Before the minister gets away from that point, may I read section 81 of the old Insurance Act, which provides:

> No officer, agent, employee or servant of such life insurance company, nor any person soliciting insurance, whether an agent of the company or not, shall be deemed to be for any purpose whatever the agent of any person insured in respect of any question arising out of the contract of insurance between such person insured and the company.

The section deals with the soliciting of insurance. I would ask the Finance minister if his remark applies to that section, and if so, in what way does that section clash with the decision of the privy council?

Mr. RHODES: As I have stated before, I do not profess to be able to give a legal opinion which has any value, but I am assured by competent legal authorities that beyond question to attempt to reenact this section would be in clear violation of the decision of the privy council. There is no question in the world in their judgment that an attempt to reenact this section would be unconstitutional having in mind the decision of the privy council.

Mr. COOTE: Would the minister say the same with respect to the old section 82?

Mr. RHODES: Yes, beyond question.

Coming to subsection 4 of section 63 of the bill before us, I apprehend that in the mind of my hon. friend from Wetaskiwin this is an attempt to permit the injection of watered stock into the securities of insurance companies. I may say to my hon. friend that the section does not mean that at all, nor is it capable of that interpretation. Many soundly managed companies have for one reason or another found it desirable to change the class and character of their securities. This section provides that if that is done there shall be no impairment either of the status or of the value of the securities, so if a reorganization were to take place as permitted under this subsection the insurance company would still have as ample, as complete and as full protection as it had with the securities which it held prior to the reorganization.

My hon. friend raised the question why there has been imposed a limitation of fifteen per cent upon the amount of common stock which may be held in the assets of insurance companies. In fact he queried as to why insurance companies could hold any common stock at all. Hon. members will recall on a previous occasion I pointed out that in times past the superintendent of insurance had sought very diligently to have a limit imposed as to the amount of common stock which could be held by life insurance companies. The house in its wisdom, however, saw fit not to accept his judgment and imposed no limitation upon the amount of common stock which could be held. Leaving aside for a moment the merit of the question whether or not it is wise to allow insurance companies to invest in common stocks, we must remember that as a matter of actual fact every company in Canada to a greater or lesser degree has among its assets common stocks. So that we are not dealing with a theory; when we are discussing the matter of the holding of common stocks we are dealing with facts.

Upon that point, however, I think the argument may be made with considerable force that there is no good reason why the insurance companies should be limited to bonds in their purchases of securities. If one were to survey the market to-day he would find bonds not of companies but of nations which are selling for a mere fragment of their issued prices. Under legislation restricting the investment in securities to bonds, insurance companies might very properly have invested in many of those bonds and yet fared much worse in the matter of the reduction of their assets. That would be so even under the present drastic reduction in common stock values obtaining to-day. As a matter of fact however there are common stocks of Canadian companies, known in investment circles as seasonal stocks, which despite the low point at which all stocks and bonds are selling to-day, compare very favourably with securities of all kinds, whether they be bonds or debentures, issued not only in Canada but in any other part of the world. I have in mind the common stocks of some companies which represent their whole assets; that is to say, there are no debentures or bonds ahead of them. I submit, Mr. Chairman, that as a security the common stock in a company like that is not only in a class with many bonds but has the merit that to the extent the company prospers there is an added yield and consequently an added income to the insurance company fortunate enough to hold it.

I was somewhat impressed when I took note of the only element of criticism we have had with respect to these measures. The gentleman outside of the house who has been so vocal in his criticism of them was at pains to point out that we in Canada would be well served if we had an insurance act and an inspector of insurance such as they have in the state of New York. As a matter of fact at an insurance convention held in that state on October 30, 1929, Superintendent Conway issued a statement which was published in the New York Journal of Commerce. It is as follows:

> There has been such a drastic readjustment of the prices of the leading common stocks of the country that I took the opportunity this afternoon to recommend to the insurance companies the purchase of such stocks. In addition I called into conference the heads of the largest life insurance companies available in this state. These life insurance companies were unanimous in their belief that the values of many of the leading common stocks had been readjusted to the point where they should be purchased. I stated to them that I would recommend to the next legislature of the state of New York an amendment to the statute so as to permit the purchase of the leading common stocks of the country by life insurance companies for investment purposes. The life insurance presidents, who were at the conference, offered to return to-morrow afternoon and confer to see if there was any way in which under the present statute they could make purchases.

My sole object in reading this opinion by Superintendent Conway is to show that the argument with respect to the value of common stocks, as an investment by life insurance companies, is by no means onesided.

Mr. LUCAS: Time has proven that Mr. Conway's judgment at that time was very wrong.

Mr. RHODES: Time has proven that his judgment with respect to that being the right time to purchase common stocks was wrong.

Mr. COOTE: Wrong any time.

Mr. RHODES: I would point out that a host of others were equally wrong at that time, and I have no hesitation in placing myself among the number.

Mr. CAYLEY: Did he advise the purchase of any amount, or was an amount stipulated?

Mr. RHODES: There was no question as to the amount and no suggestion as to limitation. I have used the opinion of Mr. Conway merely to indicate that there was a conservative point of view favourable to the purchase by insurance companies of common stocks to be held for investments.

Mr. SPENCER: What is the object of using the figure fifteen per cent? For instance, I understand one life insurance company held about forty-seven per cent common stock whereas the average among other life insurance companies is about 1.56 per cent. Would the minister give us some reason why the figure fifteen was suggested?

Mr. RHODES: The best answer I can give is to say that the figure was arbitrary; they might have said ten per cent. I do not know that any exact reason can be given as to why the figure fifteen was used in place of the figure ten, sixteen or seventeen. I assume it was selected as representing the combined judgment of those who had to do with the consideration of the act before the committee of the Senate. I suppose the figure fifteen is a fair one, and one beyond which it would not be advisable to go in the purchasing of common stocks. It is true that there are insurance companies to-day which have less than two per cent of their total investments in common stock holdings. I would point out to my hon. friend, however, that if those companies confined their investments in common stocks to less than two per cent when, under the legislation as it previously stood, they could have invested without limit in common stocks, it does not seem reasonable to assume that now, when they are restricted to fifteen per cent, they will enlarge upon the total amount of common stock they hold in proportion to their total amount of investments.

Mr. SPENCER: That was not the reason for my question. The insurance companies generally have not seen fit to invest even to two per cent. If only one insurance company has seen fit to invest so radically in common stock I should have thought those drafting the act would have followed the course adopted by the majority of insurance companies, and put the maximum a great deal lower.

Mr. RHODES: I do not know that I can enlarge upon the answer I have already given. An argument for 10 per cent or for 16 per cent might be supported as well as the argument for fifteen per cent. I take this to be an arbitrary figure imposed, in the judgment of those who have knowledge of these matters, as being the safe figure beyond which one company should not go in the investment of these funds. Of course that decision was arrived at after several weeks of consultation, not only on the part of the representatives of the provinces but, I would point out, by the representatives of all the life insurance companies, including those to which my hon. friend refers. The bill is concurred in by all the life insurance companies, so I take it as beyond question that they are satisfied that this is a safe provision to be included in the act.

My hon. friend referred to the fact that one life insurance company in Canada already has a very large proportion of its assets invested in common stock. That is true, but it would be the height of folly to attempt to impose upon that company legislation that would bring it, under existing market conditions, immediately within the limitation of fifteen per cent. It would mean that the company would be compelled to jettison many tens of millions of dollars' worth of its securities upon a distressed market, and if we attempted any such thing we would do a great harm not only to that company but to its policyholders. I think we are wise to give such a company time in which to dispose of its securities under the most favourable conditions, we hope under conditions which will permit of a substantial appreciation in price. In this connection let me point out that this company cannot buy another dollar's worth of common stock. There must be a gradual process of reduction, eventually bringing the company within the provisions of the act, which says it may not hold more than fifteen per cent of its assets in the form of common stock.

Mr. IRVINE: Would it not be possible to give such powers to the superintendent of insurance, with respect to this particular company, so that at least he may exercise persuasive authority in order to bring it within the scope of the act as soon as possible?

Mr. RHODES: I submit that to do so would be to attempt to thrust too much responsibility upon one official of the government; it would practically mean that you would substitute the superintendent of insurance for the company in the management of its own affairs. If you come to the point where you say the government must take over insurance, that is another matter, but until we make that decision I submit that a provision of the kind suggested would be very unwise. At the same time I think I am fair to the superintendent of insurance, and I believe I am within the judgment of the committee and will receive the approval of the great majority of hon. members, when I say that in the person of the superintendent of insurance we have a gentleman who is very vigilant in the public interest. I am sure that if any guidance of his can lead companies along safe channels he will be the first to make suggestions of the kind.

Mr. SPENCER: Would the minister tell me whether trust companies are allowed to invest in common stock?

Mr. RHODES: Trust companies may invest their own capital in that way, but they may not invest their trust funds. In that respect they are confined to the securities set out in the Trust Companies Act.

Mr. SPENCER: Are not policyholders' trust funds in the same position?

Mr. RHODES: Certainly they are in a moral sense, without question, but they are not in the same position as trust funds held by a trustee under the Trust Companies Act.

My hon. friend referred also to the section of this bill which permits the valuation of securities. That is precisely the provision that obtained in the old act, as to principle. We are permitted now to do with respect to stocks only what the old act has always permitted with respect to bonds, and I submit that if we are to permit the valuation of one form of assets we ought to permit the valuation of another, so long as the act provides that both may be held by the company as valued securities.

May I conclude by expressing my grateful thanks to my hon. friend from Wetaskiwin for his word of commendation with respect to the action of the government in the matter of the valuation of the securities of life insurance companies. I hesitate to think what would have been the reaction, had we not taken that step, upon the companies, upon Canadian business institutions and so on. In following that course we were only keeping to the judgment of the governments of each of the United States of America. This method was used during the war period, and subsequent events proved that the action of the government was wise. I do not profess to be a prophet or to be able to see into the future, but I have the hope, the faith and the belief that we are passing through a period of depression from which we will emerge, and that in the light of after events it will be shown that our action in the present instance was directed to the benefit of the policyholders, to the stability of the companies, to the preservation of Canadian credit, and to the public good. In what position would the government have been, for example, had it not taken action similar to that taken in the United States? It would have meant that Canadian companies, which do a very large proportion of their business in foreign fields, would have been placed in an unfair position to such an extent that their business would have been imperilled in the field where to-day they have equal opportunity with American companies.

I hope I have covered all the points raised by my hon. friend from Wetaskiwin, as it was my desire to do. If I have missed any point I will endeavour to deal with it more fully as we proceed with the various sections.

Mr. COOTE: Are there more companies than one that have as much as fifteen per cent of their assets in common stock?

Mr. RHODES: I believe there is only one life insurance company in Canada that has as much as fifteen per cent of its securities invested in common stock.

Mr. COOTE: I do not think it is wise to allow these companies to invest as much as fifteen per cent in common stock.

Mr. RHODES: There are other companies with more than five per cent, and as a matter of fact one company has as much as thirteen per cent of its assets invested in common stock.

Mr. COOTE: In connection with this very point, I look upon insurance premiums as trust funds in the highest sense of that word. They are held in trust for widows and orphans, for whom so much concern is expressed in this house, and we should no longer allow these companies to invest, in common stocks, trust funds held for widows and orphans. I think the experience of the last three years certainly proves that this is a situation that should be corrected.

Mr. RHODES: Whether legally or not, I do not think that there is any question that morally they are trust funds and should be so regarded. It might be the part of wisdom for us to restrict the investment in common stocks to a lower figure than fifteen per cent, but I submit that we have gone a long way in the right direction in reducing the authority of the companies to fifteen per cent, whereas heretofore they have had no limitation at all imposed upon them. If a year or two hence conditions, as I trust, are more stable, and insurance companies are in a position to dispose of securities in the form of common stock, we may then, I hope, be able to determine the wisdom of still further restricting the extent to which such investments may be made.

Mr. COOTE: If we are going in the right direction we ought to go all the way. Provision could be made with respect to companies that now hold common stocks. That could be done, by means of authority in the act, through orders in council passed by the government from time to time giving the companies sufficient time to dispose of their common stocks without loss to themselves. If that were done, companies that do not now hold common stocks would not be liable to make the mistake of investing their funds in these stocks. That would be a much better way of dealing with the situation in which many companies now find themselves.

Mr. RHODES: Any company which was able to resist the temptation of making money by investments in common stocks to the extent of limiting their investments to less than two per cent during the hectic days of 1927 and 1928 can certainly be trusted not to attempt, in the light of the experience of the past two years, to invest too much of its securities in common stock. Assuming for the sake of argument that it were wise to prohibit them from investing in common stocks at all, it would be a mistake to impose an arbitrary restriction by statute on these companies with respect to time. If a year hence conditions are such as to warrant us in considering, first, a policy, and then the wisdom of its application in a more restricted measure, that is another matter. But under conditions as they exist I say that for this year, having taken such a long step, it would be unwise at this time to go further, because it would be open to parliament to deal with the matter in a year's time in the light of experience gained in the interval, and we could then deal with it far more effectively in the interests not only of the public but of the companies themselves.

Mr. LUCHKOVICH: Is it not a fact that the state of New York refused to allow the Sun Life Company to sell insurance because of its policy of dealing in stocks, and that this refusal was made long before the stocks began to fall?

Mr. RHODES: I would not subscribe to the impression conveyed by the hon. gentleman's question. I am not familiar with the facts, but I am advised that there were certain restrictions on the part of the state of

New York, aside altogether from the question of stocks, which restrictions were distasteful to that company, who in their own judgment decided not to attempt to invade that field. I do not understand for a moment, however, that the decision of the company not to attempt to take out registration there had any reference to or reflection upon their securities in any shape or form.

Mr. CAYLEY: I agree with the minister that perhaps the government have taken the only course they could to save the companies in the predicament in which they find themselves. He has spoken of common stocks that are perhaps as good an investment as bonds, and he has also implied that there are some mighty poor common stocks. The question that occurs to me is this: What precaution will the department take to satisfy itself that the companies are investing in good and not in questionable common stocks?

Mr. RHODES: The conditions are laid down by statute. We could never expect to take out of the hands of the companies the management of their own business and to place it in the hands of an official of government, unless we were prepared to go the length of taking over the insurance business, which is another matter.

Mr. CAYLEY: But surely there is some provision that these common stocks must have proved their value.

Mr. RHODES: That is prescribed in the act, and it was in the old act. The provision was that they had to pay not less than four per cent dividend for a period of seven years. In other words, the stocks had to be reasonably matured and seasoned stocks before the companies could invest in them.

Mr. CAYLEY: Do these same provisions apply to surpluses held by fire insurance companies?

Mr. RHODES: Yes.

Mr. NICHOLSON: With regard to investments in stocks by insurance companies, these investments are made only after the exercise of their best judgment by the directors and investment managers of the companies. The whole discussion has centred around a particular company which is reputed to hold a large block of common stock, but no discussion whatever has taken place with regard to other insurance companies that have invested in securities which are listed here as legitimate investments for insurance companies, and if you eliminate them you leave very few securities in which an insurance company can invest, the book value of whose investments has been reduced just as much as the book value of the company that has common stocks. Take one or two items: Bonds and debentures of municipalities and school sections. I know many municipalities whose bonds and debentures would be reduced, if you took their market value to-day, just as greatly as the common stocks in which a number of insurance companies have invested. Then again, we have ground rents, and mortgages on real estate in Canada and elsewhere, I personally know insurance companies who have followed what is known as the conservative line and invested, not in common stocks, but in high class real estate mortgages. What would these insurance companies do to-day if they were called upon to realize upon these mortgages? It will be found that certain classes of bonds and debentures, of preference and common stocks of reliable companies are below their normal value. I know of one company paying and earning seven per cent on its preference stock, and that stock is selling to-day at a price barely equal to three years' dividends—it is worth about one-fifth of its ordinary market value. Why is that? Simply because it is not the seller or holder of real estate who fixes the price; it is the purchaser, and the same applies to bonds, school debentures and so on. This whole discussion has been centred about one company which is known to hold large blocks of common stocks, selected upon the best judgment of its directors. Anyone who has faith in Canada will admit that those stocks are as intrinsically sound as the best real estate or bonds to be purchased in Canada. They will come back just as surely as any other investment. I look upon this discussion, centred as it is against one company, as unfair and unwise in the interests of Canada and the policyholders of that company.

Mr. IRVINE: So far as I am concerned, I centred my remarks upon no single company. If anything I said applied to any company, that company itself is entirely to blame. My hon. friend appears to have an excellent knowledge of business and investments; I ask him if he considers common stock investments to be as safe as bonds?

Mr. NICHOLSON: If the investments of insurance companies are to be limited to the bonds of Canada, then there is nothing to be said. The bonds of Canada are the best investment you can get. Will my hon. friend suggest that the investments of insurance companies should be limited to the bonds of Canada?

Mr. IRVINE: No.

Mr. RHODES: The remarks of the hon. member for Wetaskiwin have been quite in keeping with this matter, and his suggestions and criticisms have been very constructive. I do not think any exception can be taken to anything he has said.

Section 9 agreed to.

On section 10—Stock transferable.

Mr. SPENCER: I understand from the Minister of Finance that sections 56, 57 and 82 of the old act are left out of this bill in order to get away from the decisions of the privy council. Does the minister think that we are safe in passing this bill and that it will not be challenged by the various provinces?

Mr. RHODES: I cannot answer that question either negatively or affirmatively. I can only say that the bill was drafted after full conference and consultation with eminent counsel who represented the three provinces which have hitherto taken exception to dominion jurisdiction, and that the bill meets substantially with their approval. At all events it is safe to say that they have not taken active steps in opposition to the two bills as they now stand, and I hope after we have operated under this legislation for a year or so, the provinces will accept them without question.

Section agreed to.

Sections 11 to 31 inclusive agreed to.

On section 32—Liability of directors for transfer of shares.

Mr. SPENCER: Are special penalties provided for directors who mismanage their companies?

Mr. RHODES: Section 118 provides for penalties.

Section agreed to.

Sections 33 to 43 inclusive agreed to.

On section 44—Approval of by-laws by treasury board.

Mr. RHODES: I am going to propose that subsection (7) of this section be amended by striking out the words "under the provisions of this act or of the Winding-up Act," in the third and fourth lines, and striking out the words "of this act and" in the fifth line thereof. This amendment is necessitated because of the fact that there is no provision in this act for winding up, and the only act under which that process can take place is the Winding-up Act.

Mr. RYCKMAN: I move accordingly.

Amendment agreed to.

Section as amended agreed to.

Sections 45 to 62 inclusive agreed to.

On section 63—Investment of company's funds.

Mr. SPENCER: This is the contentious clause. I should like again to refer the minister to subclause 6 of this clause and to ask him whether he would not give consideration to reducing that figure of fifteen per cent.

Mr. RHODES: I do not think there is anything I can add to what I said a short while ago regarding this particular clause. It may be that fifteen per cent is too much; it might be that ten per cent would be too much. As to that I cannot say, but I have said that this percentage represents the combined judgment of those who devoted a great deal of time and careful thought and study to this subject, including the life insurance companies themselves, who hitherto, when no limitation had been imposed upon them, invested not more than two per cent of their funds in common stocks. We might be well advised to let this figure remain as it is, and, as we proceed from session to session, revise it if necessary.

Section agreed to.

Sections 64 to 80 inclusive agreed to.

On section 81—Maintenance of separate funds.

Mr. RHODES: I have a minor amendment to move to this section, namely:

That subsection one be amended by striking out the words "registered under the provisions of this act to transact the business of life insurance."

This is merely for the purpose of good wording, because the clause would be correctly expressed with those words included. They are surplus, unnecessary. I shall ask my colleague, the Minister of National Revenue, to move this amendment.

Mr. RYCKMAN: I move accordingly.

Sections 82 to 89 inclusive agreed to.

On section 90—Fraternal benefit societies.

Mr. RHODES: I have a minor amendment to move to this section. If members of the committee will refer to this section they will see the words "forty-one to forty-four". This should read: "forty-one and forty-four". I am therefore going to ask my colleague, the Minister of National Revenue to move:

That subsection 2 of section 90 be amended by striking out the words "forty-one to forty-four thereof both inclusive" in the fourth and fifth lines and substituting therefor the words "forty-one and forty-four thereof."

Mr. RYCKMAN: I move accordingly.

Mr. DUPUIS: After the amendment, the clause will read: "with the exception of sections 26 and 41 and 44." There are two "ands".

Mr. RHODES: My hon. friend is quite right. The first "and" should also be deleted.

Mr. RYCKMAN: I move accordingly.

Section as amended agreed to.

Sections 91 to 107 inclusive agreed to.

On section 108—Delivery of securities.

Mr. RHODES: There is an amendment to this section, to strike out the words "with the concurrence of the treasury board" in the second line of subsection 3 and insert the same words after the words "he may" in the fifth line of the said subsection. That is to make this section conform, and for the same reasons as given when the amendment was moved with reference to Bill No. 67.

Mr. RYCKMAN: I move accordingly, Mr. Chairman.

Section 110 to 118 inclusive agreed to.

On section 119—Annual statement.

Mr. RHODES: There is an amendment to this section, Mr. Chairman, to insert the word "British" before the word "company" where it occurs in paragraps (a), (b), (c), (d) and (e) of this section. This is only of application to British companies, and the amendment is designed to make that clear beyond question.

Mr. RYCKMAN: I move accordingly, Mr. Chairman.

Section as amended agreed to.

Sections 120 to 122 inclusive agreed to.

On section 123—Name of company.

Mr. RHODES: There is a verbal amendment to this section, Mr. Chairman. It is to amend subsection 1 by striking out the words "company or British company registered under this act" in lines 2 and 3, and substituting therefor the words "corporation registered under the laws of the Dominion of Canada to transact the business of insurance"; and to amend subsection 2 by striking out the words "company or British company registered under this act" in lines 3 and 4 of the said subsection, and substituting therefor the words "corporation registered under the laws of the Dominion of Canada to transact the business of insurance."

Mr. RYCKMAN: I move accordingly, Mr. Chairman.

On section 139—Reserve liability for annual statement.

Mr. RHODES: I have an amendment to this section which I believe will make for better construction. The purpose of the amendment is to form a considerable portion of subsection 1 into a new subsection. The amendment is as follows:

That subsection one of section 139 be amended by striking out the words "provided that" in the seventh line thereof, and by inserting as subsection 3 of the said section, all the remaining words of the proviso beginning with the words "Every British company" and ending with the words "under such policies."

Mr. RYCKMAN: I move accordingly.

Section as amended agreed to.

Sections 140 to 150 inclusive agreed to.

On section 151—Name of provincial company.

Mr. RHODES: I have an amendment to this section which will make it conform to previous sections as amended. The amendment is as follows:

1. That subsection one of section one hundred and fifty-one be amended by striking out the words "company or British company or provincial company registered under this act" in the second and third lines of the said subsection, and substituting therefor the words "corporation registered under the laws of the Dominion of Canada to transact the business of insurance."

2. That subsection two of section one hundred and fifty-one be amended by striking out the words "company or British company or provincial company registered under this act" in the third and fourth lines of the said subsection, and substituting therefor the words "corporation registered under the laws of the Dominion of Canada to transact the business of insurance."

Mr. RYCKMAN: I move accordingly.

On the preamble.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Before the bill is reported I should like to ask the minister if he thinks it will be accepted by the provinces, and that they will not urge that their jurisdiction is being encroached upon. My information is different. I was not here when the bills were first discussed, but I have read Hansard, and I learn from that source that the minister based his opinion as to the bills being within the jurisdiction of this dominion on the following statement by Lord Haldane:

Their Lordships have no doubt that the Dominion parliament might pass an act forbidding aliens to enter Canada, forbidding them so to enter to engage in any business without a licence, and further they might furnish rules for their conduct while in Canada requiring them, e.g. to report at stated intervals.

In the last case, which was decided a few months ago, their lordships of the privy council expressed the hope that that was the last litigation concerning insurance between the dominion and the provinces. I am very much afraid that the hopes of Lord Dunedin, who delivered the judgment, will not be realized. The statement of Lord Haldane, quoted by my hon. friend, is referred to in the judgment of a few months ago in the case of the Attorney General of Quebec versus the Attorney General of Canada. In that case Lord Dunedin is quoted as follows:

Their Lordships consider that although the question was studiously kept open in the Reciprocal Insurers case, it was really decided by what was then laid down. The case decided that a colourable use of the Criminal Code could not serve to disguise the real object of the legislation, viz., to dominate the exercise of the business of insurance. And in the same way it was decided that to try by a false definition to pray in aid section 95 of the British North America Act, which deals with immigration, in order to control the business of insurance, was equally unavailing. What has got to be considered is whether this is in a true sense of the word alien legislation, and that is what Lord Haldane meant by "properly framed legislation." Their Lordships have no doubt that the Dominion parliament might pass an act forbidding aliens to enter Canada or forbidding them so to enter to engage in any business without a licence, and further they might furnish rules for their conduct while in Canada, requiring them e.g., to report at stated intervals. But the sections here are not of that sort, they do not deal with the position of an alien as such; but under the guise of legislation as to aliens, they seek to intermeddle with the conduct of insurance business, a business which by the first branch of the 1916 case has been declared to be exclusively subject to provincial law. Their Lordships have, therefore, no hesitation in declaring that this is not "properly framed" alien legislation.

Further he says it is really the same old attempt made in another way. I will not quote more extracts, but surely the present legislation is the same old attempt not even made in another way but in the same old manner. I have nothing else to say except to prophesy that again these bills will run the gauntlet of the privy council and will meet the fate of the previous bills.

Mr. RHODES: I do not think any good purpose can be served by my attempting to enter into a discussion with my hon. friend as to the legal phases of this question—

Mr. LAPOINTE: I just want to issue a warning.

Mr. RHODES: —even if I felt myself competent to do so, which I would be the first to admit I am not. But I do not share the apprehensions of my hon. friend. In the first place those whose opinions I respect, eminent counsel, are in agreement, so far as lawyers can agree in controversial matters, that the language of the statute places us safely within our jurisdiction having regard to the recent decisions of the privy council upon the subject of the rights of the dominion as against the provinces in the matter of the business of life insurance.

There is, however, a further reason which I think should not be overlooked. It is that these bills were framed after complete, full and very harmonious conferences and discussions with eminent legal gentlemen representing the three provinces, which hitherto have taken exception to the dominion jurisdiction as against the provincial jurisdiction in the matter of insurance. I will quote here just one sentence spoken in another place by a very eminent gentleman:

> I think I can assure those hon. gentlemen that there is no disposition on the part of the provinces—even those which have introduced bills on this subject—to say that no jurisdiction is left to the dominion. There is rather a disposition to find ground upon which they can stand, as distinguished from the ground on which we can stand, and to avoid if possible further litigation on this question.

I have the hope that not only the legal phraseology of these bills and the way in which they are framed but more particularly the atmosphere of confidence in which they have been framed is an indication that we have arrived at the last of our questions of jurisdiction, certainly as touching the business of insurance. Upon that question I may be quite wrong, but I can only give my hon. friend the opinions of those I have mentioned, for what they may be worth.

Mr. LAPOINTE: I may say that I am authorized by the legal department of the province of Quebec to say that they do not accept that bill. Not only that, but they say Ontario does not accept it either. On my last trip to Quebec there was a representative of the Ontario legal department on the train, and he told me the same thing; he has not the slightest doubt that this legislation is ultra vires. So far as I am concerned I should like very much if some ground could be found upon which to base an understanding. I believe it is important that there should be some general control of the business of insurance, but I am afraid my hon. friend is too hopeful when he believes that this will be accepted by the provinces.

Mr. RHODES: That may be so, although I will say that I think the dominion has gone a very long way in its endeavour to find a practical common ground which will be reasonably acceptable to the provinces. But if they insist upon gratifying their taste for further litigation I can only say that there is an old maxim about the pitcher going too often to the well. Perhaps if the provinces persist in their activities they may not find themselves so uniformly successful.

Mr. LAPOINTE: The trouble is that they have always won their points.

Mr. CAYLEY: Perhaps the minister would permit me to refer to a subject that was discussed a few nights ago when we were considering the question of taxation.

Mr. RHODES: We will come to that again; the bill is in committee.

Mr. SPENCER: Before these bills are reported I should like to remind the committee that now we have finished considering three bills on the subject of insurance, covering in all some 118 pages and containing some 224 sections. It was because of the length of these bills that we in this corner of the house thought it would be better to send them to one of the standing committees, because it is impossible to go through them thoroughly in committee of the whole. The Minister of Finance, however, gave as the principal reason why that should not be done the fact that the bills were so thoroughly considered in the other chamber that he did not think it worth while to pass them on to a committee of this house. Apparently the work done in the other chamber, however, did not even suit the Minister of Finance himself, because in the course of the consideration of these bills dozens of amendments have been moved by the minister or his confreres. The very fact that these amendments have been moved is full justification for our request that these bills be sent to a standing committee of the house.

Bills reported.

Mr. SPEAKER: When shall said bills be read a third time?

Mr. SPENCER: Next sitting of the house.

Mr. RHODES: Unless my hon. friend has any amendments to move, I would suggest that at this stage of the session, in view of the fact that the Senate is sitting, it would afford them a greater opportunity to deal with the bills than if we sent them up later.

Mr. SPENCER: In view of the remarks of the minister I withdraw my objection.

Motion agreed to and bills read the third time and passed.

WATERTON GLACIER INTERNATIONAL PEACE PARK

Hon. T. G. MURPHY (Minister of the Interior) moved the second reading of Bill No. 97, respecting the Waterton Glacier International Peace Park.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and the house went into committee thereon, Mr. LaVergne in the chair.

On section 1—Proclamation.

Mr. ERRICK F. WILLIS (Souris): Mr. Chairman, the present occasion offers an opportunity of presenting to this house certain facts in regard to the project known as the International Peace Garden of America.

May I say in a word that there is now in practically the geographical centre of this continent, a garden of three thousand acres, in the Turtle mountains donated to the people of North America by the governments of the province of Manitoba and the state of North Dakota, for the purpose of a living and lasting memorial to the greatest peace ever existing between two nations.

May I direct the attention of this house to the background, organization, and plans of this project, which in the future will, I believe, be well known to you all.

The idea of a beautiful garden on the international boundary was first thought of by an eminent Canadian horticulturist, Mr. Henry J. Moore, of Islngton, Ontario, in 1928, and was suggested to the convention of the National Association of Gardeners held in Toronto in August, 1929. The project met with the heartiest approval of the audience which represented thirteen United States horticultural societies, and practically all of the major horticultural organizations of Canada. The association formed a peace garden committee which committee organized an international committee. This committee has changed slightly from time to time in personnel, but is at present as follows:

Canadian Representatives

Secretary: Mr. H. J. Moore, Islington, Ont.
Treasurer: Sir John Aird, president, Canadian Bank of Commerce, Toronto.
Mr. J. E. Atkinson, president, Star Publishing Co., Toronto.

Dr. Chas. MacLachlan, San Haven, N.D., superintendent State Tuberculosis Sanatorium.

Joseph W. Parmley, Ipswich, South Dakota, president, Canada-to-Canal Highway.

Having set up a powerful organization composed of leading men and women of this continent, backed by technical experts in horticulture, the next step was the selection of a site for the international peace garden. For this purpose two experts were chosen, one representing the sponsoring body of the United States and one for Canada. The Canadian representative as chosen was Henry J. Moore, above mentioned, a graduate of the Royal Botanic Gardens at Kew, England, and one of the leading horticulturalists of this dominion. The American representative as chosen was Joseph K. Dunlop, of South Euclid, Ohio, estate superintendent to Congressman Chester W. Bolton. Mr. Dunlop is one of the outstanding practical horticulturists in the United States, having a special knowledge of ornamental gardening and landscape architecture.

This committee of experts had several sites brought to their attention, both east and west, and after a careful and unhurried survey, reported unanimously to the sponsoring associations in the summer of 1931, in favour of the Turtle mountain site, on the International boundary between North Dakota and Manitoba. This recommendation was subsequently agreed to by the international committee on September 16, 1931.

Mr. J. W. Parmley of Ipswich, South Dakota, and Mr. W. V. Udall of Boissevain, Manitoba, drew the attention of the committee to the Turtle mountain region, and on June 2, 1931, it was inspected by Mr. Dunlop and Mr. Moore. Some idea of the nature of the region may be gathered from part of the report of Mr. Moore as to the inspection. I quote:

We inspected the area from the air, and what a sight greeted the eye. Those undulating hills rising out of the limitless prairie are filled with lakes and streams and in the lakes are lovely islands, all timber clad. On the south of the imaginary and unrecognizable boundary, wheat everywhere! On the north the Manitoba forest reserve. One photograph taken from the air revealed seventeen lakes, but in the Turtle mountains there are nearly two hundred on both sides of the boundary. What a place for a garden! Then on the ground our inspection of soils and vegetation was made. There is no finer soil anywhere. The vegetation composed of oak, elm, ash, poplar and other trees and hundreds of species of shrubs and flowers revealed this. Then a motor boat trip across Lake Max, in the forest reserve, where some ten species of ducks were noticed. Also in this reserve are beaver and many other forms of animals, and birds, including swans and partridge.

The Turtle mountain region is the watershed of Manitoba and North Dakota. It is a beautiful undulating plateau which rises out of the seemingly endless prairie. The hills rise from a mean elevation of four hundred feet to an average of about one thousand feet, although at one point an elevation of 2,500 feet is attained. The contours of the area lend themselves to the development of landscape gardening in all its forms. There are sheltered areas galore; there are scenes of pastoral loveliness and others of rugged grandeur.

A popular scientific description of the Turtle mountains has been given by Daniel E. Willard, A.M.; Fellow of the American Geological Society, former professor of geology, state agricultural college of North Dakota. He says:

The Turtle mountains plateau is a unique remnant of an older landscape of the continent of North America. It is located in approximately the centre of the continent, one half way between lake Superior and the Rocky mountains. It is crossed by the international boundary between the United States and Canada.

Owing to its unique location and to its geologic and geographic features it is a most fitting place for the location of the International Peace Garden. Its beauty as a natural garden at once impresses the observer. Its fitness to be the place of an international playground, and movement of international friendliness, and good-will becomes more apparent the more the natural features of its geological character are studied.

There is probably no accessible spot between the Atlantic and Pacific oceans that affords a more inviting and appropriate location for the International Peace Garden than does this natural beauty spot of the Turtle mountain.

The Turtle mountains are not mountains at all. The region is part of the great central plain of the continent. It is a plateau about 40 by 60 miles in extent lying in part in the United States and in part in Canada. Nature, in laying out the ground plan of the landscape of the continent did not give heed to political boundaries. It happens that the political boundary, between the United States and Canada, crosses this unique landscape feature.

Great valleys have been formed by the erosion of streams. Remnants of the original formations, that have not been carried away, remain as hills and plateaus. The Turtle mountain plateau is such a remnant. The great valley of the Souris or Mouse is on the west and north. The great Assinniboine basin is north. The Pembina, tributary of the Red river of the north, lies to the east and north. To the south is the great plain of the Devils lake region, sloping to the south, a part of the Shevenne drainage system. . . .

It is a natural garden. Stones—boulders—of every kind found in the formation to the north for hundreds of miles occur here in rich profusion, Granites, quartzets, porphyry, limestones, fragments of hard volcanic lavas, soft shales, in fact every variety of formation of which the earth is composed in the region extending to the west of Hudson's bay may be picked up here.

A rockery may some time adorn the garden or a geological museum made up of stones picked up in the immediate vicinity, that represent every geologic formation between the international boundary and the North Pole.

A more charming recreation ground would be hard to find. Places of greater interest to the geologist, the nature lover, are few. The lover of fish, birds and game will revel here. The land belongs to two great nations. It is open to the world. Nature made it a monument to peace and good will.

For the purposes of the garden, the province of Manitoba kindly agreed to donate to the association fifteen hundred acres of the Turtle mountain forest reserve, and the state of North Dakota agreed to purchase and donate an adjoining block of land of equal size. Following this a meeting of representatives of the sponsoring organizations and representatives was held at the Royal York hotel in Toronto on December 2, 1931. At that conference the state of North Dakota was represented by Dr. Charles McLachlan of San Haven, North Dakota, and the province of Manitoba by Hon. D. G. McKenzie, the Minister of Mines and Natural Resources. The two governments then formally donated to the international peace garden a tract of land in the Turtle mountains of over 3,000 acres, being an oblong block, three miles long by one-and-a-half miles wide.

The plans of the garden will be under the supervision of three expert horticulturists appointed by the American sponsoring body and three by the Canadian sponsoring body, and the actual carrying out of the plan will be under the supervision of the secretary who will reside at or near the garden.

May I say in passing that the official sponsoring organizations are:

For Canada—The Canadian Florists and Gardeners' Association.

For United States—The National Association of Gardeners.

Among the different organizations which have endorsed the project are the following in Canada:

1. The National Council of Women of Canada.
2. The Federated Women's Institutes of Canada.
3. The Canadian Florists and Gardeners' Association.
4. The Ontario Gardeners and Florists' Association.
5. The Manitoba Horticultural Association.
6. The Ontario Horticultural Association (80,000 members).
7. The Saskatchewan Horticultural Association.
8. The Ontario Women's Auxiliary to the Canadian Legion.
9. The Canadian Historical Society.
10. The United Farm Women of Saskatchewan.
11. The president of the Kiwanis clubs of Canada and several local clubs.
12. The Canadian Gladiolus Society.
13. The Rose Society of Ontario.
14. The United Church of Canada.
15. The Roman Catholic Church.
16. The Anglican Church of Canada.
17. The Salvation Army of Canada.
18. The Baptist Church of Canada.
19. The various local Rotary Clubs.
20. The Toronto Progress Club.
21. The Holy Blossom Synagogue (Hebrew) Toronto.
22. The Boy Scouts of Canada.
23. The Girl Guides of Canada.
24. The Toronto and District Labour Council.
25. The ornamental committee of the Canadian Horticultural Council.
26. Catholic Women's League.
27. The Manitoba government and opposition.
28. Various local chapters of the Imperial Order of the Daughters of the Empire.
29. The University of Manitoba.
30. There are also a large number of boards of trade, chambers of commerce, municipal councils, and other governing bodies.

Among the United States organizations which have endorsed the project are:

1. The National Association of Gardeners.
2. The Federated Business Women's clubs of the United States.
3. The Massachusettes Horticultural Society.
4. The garden clubs of America.
5. The New York Horticultural Society.
6. The American Orchid Society.
7. The American Rose Society.
8. The American Society of Landscape Architects.
9. The Boy Scouts of America.
10. The Campfire Girls.
11. The Lions Clubs.
12. The Florida Horticultural Society.

13. The North Dakota Rural Letter Carriers' Association.
14. The North Dakota Postmasters' Association.
15. The Yellowstone Highway Association.
16. The Mount Rushmore National Memorial Association.
17. The Canada-to-Canal Highway Association.
18. The Great Northern Railroad.
19. The Rapid Airlines Corporation.
20. The Magna Carta Day Association.
21. The imperial orders of the Daughters of the Empire of the United States.
22. The chambers of commerce of North Dakota, South Dakota and many other states.
23. The government of North Dakota.
24. The Department of Education, North Dakota.
25. The Department of Education, South Dakota.
26. The International Bird Banding Association.
27. Various boards of trade and municipal councils representing some 100 towns in the middle west and elsewhere.
28. The American Pigeon Society.
29. Churches of practically every denomination throughout the United States.

Nursery companies and individuals in many countries have promised to donate trees and shrubs and perennial flowering plants by way of having their native countries represented in the garden.

There will be rock gardens, wild flower sanctuaries, greenhouses for tender plants and trees, shrubs and flowers of all varieties and kinds. Many institutions have asked for the right to establish within the garden memorials to their respective associations including the Magna Carta Association, and many others.

Parents have donated money to have trees planted in the names of their girls and boys, and the Girl Guides of both countries have started a movement to have every company in the two countries provide money to plant a tree for each. The Boy Scout movement is also considering a similar idea for their association.

The garden will be a thing of beauty even as Kew Gardens, London.

There appears to be no lack of cooperation, and the nurserymen of North America and Europe have come forward in large numbers offering their assistance. It is hoped that the garden will be able to establish a standard for horticulture on this continent.

The location of the garden is an admirable one inasmuch as it is within thirty miles of the geographical centre of the North American continent, and is easily accessible from all directions.

From the south the garden may be approached by way of the Canada-to-Canal highway, otherwise known as the C. to C. highway, which is an international highway going south from Manitoba through the states of North Dakota, South Dakota, Nebraska, Kansas, Oklahoma, Texas and the Pan-American republics of the Panama canal. It is the longest highway on this continent going north and south. Within the province of Manitoba it is located on provincial highway No. 25 which is a highway running directly south from the city of Brandon through Boissevain to the international peace garden, and this highway is linked up with the trans-Canada highway at Brandon, being provincial highway No. 1. It may also be approached from the east by provincial highways No. 1 and No. 2.

The international peace garden is approximately sixty miles south of the city of Brandon, and ten miles south of the town of Boissevain in the province of Manitoba, and ten miles north of the town of Dunseith in the state of North Dakota.

The organization behind the international peace garden is not one of any particular geographical location, but is a business organization which sprang from various centres on this continent, after four years of study and work, up until the present time, when it is actively sponsored by thousands of the leading citizens in Canada and the United States. The international peace garden is not concerned with either politics or religion, but draws its support from those of all creeds, political affiliations and races who believe in the commemoration of the great peace between the United States and Canada, by the creation on the international boundary of a beautiful garden, which on its completion will rival the Royal Botanic Gardens at Kew, England, or any other place in the world.

The international peace garden receives its financial support from public subscriptions obtained by its various sponsoring organizations throughout the United States and Canada. The objective is an endowment of five million dollars which when properly invested will yield an annual revenue large enough for perpetual maintenance. Of this amount the Canadian share is reckoned at one million dollars. No really active campaign has yet commenced, but contributions have been coming in from all over Canada to Sir John Aird, the Canadian treasurer, and to date in Canada alone over six thousand persons have contributed. Public schools throughout Canada have been taking a special interest in the project and school children have been permitted to contribute amounts of from five cents upwards and contributions have varied from that amount up to fifteen hundred dollars. Each contributor becomes a shareholder, and the names are to be recorded in a permanent record book to be maintained within the garden. The land for the garden having been donated, and so many people having come forward, unasked to contribute, the committee anticipates no difficulty in being able to maintain the garden for an indefinite period of time.

The dedication of the international peace garden will be held on July 14, 1932, and to this dedication the world is invited. It is hoped that at the ceremony there will be present the Prime Minister of this country, or members of his cabinet, and the President of the United States, or members of his executive council, and leading representatives from the different governments, the different churches, and the leading societies of both countries. The arrangements for the dedication will be under the management of the International Peace Picnic Association which last year held a celebration at the site, at which some ten thousand people were present.

Legislation is now going through the legislatures of North Dakota and Manitoba to incorporate the international peace garden, and also to transfer to it fifteen hundred acres on each side of the international boundary or a total of three thousand acres, making up a block of land three miles long by one and one-half miles in width. Words cannot express the great feeling of thankfulness felt by the people of this continent to the government of the province of Manitoba and that of the state of North Dakota for the great confidence shown in this project by the magnificent gift to it of three thousand acres of land.

What I desire to point out to this house is that the international peace garden movement in reality commenced in 1928, and is sponsored and endorsed by leading citizens and societies in the United States and in Canada. I desire also to make it very clear that the site for the international peace garden was selected by horticultural experts appointed from the United States and Canada, and that a site was not chosen until 1931, after due deliberation and proper examination.

The international peace garden is not a government institution, but is rather what might be termed a foundation to commemorate peace administered by a business organization in accordance with the wishes of its shareholders.

The governments of Manitoba and North Dakota have shown their confidence in the project and its personnel by donating 3,000 acres, and the garden will be dedicated this year at a site which is in the Turtle mountains in practically the geographic centre of the North American continent, at a location which in the opinion of the experts is highly suitable for the purposes of the garden.

May I say in passing that the international peace garden should not be confused with the Waterton Glacier Peace park, about which this house may have heard something. The Waterton Glacier project is merely a change of name in connection with the national park now in existence, with the hope that by including the word "peace" tourists in large numbers may be brought to view its forests. The change in name does not include the creation of anything new, nor does it make the forest the property of the public, but is merely the advertising of an area which in its present form has been in existence as long as the continent, and which was formerly known as Glacier park and Waterton park.

An international peace garden has a value which is educational and symbolic and renders a material benefit to the two nations of this continent which cannot be over estimated.

In commemorating a peace of over one hundred years it invites a continuation of peaceful and friendly relationships without which there cannot be material progress. It encourages peace rather than war and breaks down the barriers of reserve and indifference. It tends to offset insidious and dangerous propaganda which may be engendered by vocal citizens on both sides of the border and helps to disarm hatred and prejudice.

There is nothing which can be compared to a garden as typifying peace, and there is no memorial as beautiful as one of trees, shrubs and flowers. Other memorials of stone and concrete there have been, but a garden becomes more beautiful and more symbolic as the years advance, and the more the visitors who come to this international peace garden the stronger the friendship between the two nations will become.

The garden will become an object lesson to the nations of Europe, pointing out that nations may live in peace as neighbours to the mutual benefit of each country.

In the past we have enjoyed the friendship and confidence of the American people, but it is always highly desirable that such a condition of affairs should be nurtured and strengthened, in order that founded upon the past a bond of everlasting friendship may be created for the future.

I think it highly proper at this point to draw to the attention of the house a part of the address delivered to this house by the Prime Minister on July 8, 1931, when speaking on the Disarmament conference, as found on page 3552 of Hansard, he said:

The development of democracy depends upon the maintenance of peace. War is destructive of all democratic forms of government. The declaration that this country desires to maintain peace is not sufficient. It is idle to think that permanent and lasting peace can come in our time merely by our making declarations and speeches. We have passed in the house and elsewhere resolutions in favour of peace; we have become parties to treaties of arbitration, and we have joined with other nations in declaring that so far as we are concerned war is renounced as an instrument of national policy. But all these renunciations, all these declarations, all these resolutions in favour of arbitration and peaceful settlement of dispute, either by recourse to law in world courts or other peaceful means, are useless except to the extent that they influence people's minds to think in terms of peace. If we are to have peace we must have it by cultivating and maintaining the spirit of peace, not the spirit of war. A warlike spirit is not consistent with the maintenance of peace, and the spirit of peace is an attitude of mind that comes from continuous education. It is therefore useful that we should from time to time make declarations so that the youth of the country may see the glories of peace as distinguished from the heroic achievements of war.

No man who reads history, no one who is familiar with the growth of civilization and with the heroic achievements of men who have given their lives on battlefields in every part of the world for high principles and great causes, can fail to realize that their example has inspired generations in days gone by, and will continue to inspire noble achievements that are consistent with the courage and enterprise of our races. But in this age we realize that war on any scale is destructive, not only of the nations that engage in it, but of the world at large. There can be no war of any importance now that does not become general in its effects and influences. There can be no war in these days of scientific achievement in the use of poisonous gases, artillery, tanks and aerial warfare that is not fatal to the very development of civilization itself. We now realize that far from being a virtue war is the negation of all virtues and is destructive of the world's civilization. But in the face of all that has been said, as illustrating the point I desire to make, it will be found that to-day amongst European nations there are many men under arms; equipment is being provided for war; men are talking in terms of the next great conflict, as though we had not been at the world's Gethesmane.

How are we to bring about the end we have in mind? We must do it, as I have said, by creating the will to peace, which comes from continuous educational effort. . . .

No prairie fire of which we have ever heard could spread like the conflagration of military operations in communities divided only by imaginary lines. That being so, disarmament must be a world-wide state of mind.

This country in the northern half of this continent, this young democracy with its ten millions of people, freed from the horrors of all probability of war within its borders, its shores protected by the application of doctrines of an international character, has very little to disarm. . . .

I trust that the representations we will offer will not be unworthy of the great traditions of Canada in her struggle to maintain peace, in her belief in peaceful methods for the settlement of disputes, in her conviction that by recourse to judicial and arbitral methods the differences of peoples having been settled, the differences of nations may also be concluded.

The international peace garden will serve a great educational purpose in cultivating and maintaining the spirit of peace rather than the spirit of war, and is receiving the support of the people of this continent. Following the dedication on July 14 of this year, the garden will symbolize the hopes and aspirations of two great peoples who speak the same tongue, and who cherish the same ideas in regard to peace, and will be a perpetual reminder of the fact that there is a better way to settle international disputes than by recourse to war.

Mr. J. S. STEWART (Lethbridge): In order to meet the wishes of the committee I promise to be very brief indeed, Mr. Chairman, but as this bill relates to a part of the country which I have the honour to represent I feel it incumbent upon me to say a word or two on the subject.

The action now being taken is the first step on our part towards carrying out a contract made between this government and the government of a friendly country, the United States of America, for the establishment of an international peace park between Canada and the United States. About six weeks ago a bill was passed by congress and we are now carrying out our part of the contract as agreed to by the Department of External Affairs in a letter written under date of February 17 of this year, by Doctor Skelton, in which the United States were notified that if they would cooperate in creating this international peace park so far as Glacier park is concerned, Canada would reciprocate. The two parks lie adjacent to one another. There is in Canada possibly 225 square miles in the Waterton lakes district, and the Glacier national park in the United States comprises an area of 1,500 square miles. There is a common body of water between the two parks known as Waterton lakes. There are in these two parks two very fine hotels operated by the Great Northern railway. There is the Glacier hotel at Glacier station, and in Canada, at Waterton lakes a magnificent hotel which cost somewhere in the neighbourhood of $250,000 to build, known as the Prince of Wales hotel. The idea of having this known as an international peace park originated at a meeting of Rotarians held about a year ago at Waterton lakes, attended by many representatives from the United States as well as from Alberta and other provinces of Canada. They decided to approach their respective governments and ask them to declare these two parks in the two countries an international peace park. As I say the bill has already passed congress and has been assented to, and we are now carrying out our part of the contract in the bill which is before the committee.

May I say that the opening celebration will be held on June 18 of this year, at which there will be present representatives from the United States and Canada and from many other parts of the world. There are gentlemen coming from England to take part in the celebration and speak on that occasion. The idea behind it all is to celebrate the one hundred years of peace, friendship and goodwill which have existed between the two countries. There will be four trains carrying the international Rotarians to their great meeting which will be held at Seattle, and these trains will be halted at Glacier station for six hours. The visitors will be transported to Canadian territory, and I would like to invite hon. gentlemen to take part in the celebration. I heartily commend to the committee the passage of this bill.

Hon. W. R. MOTHERWELL (Melville): When this bill was on the order paper for its first reading, it stood there for four or five weeks, halting, the government apparently not knowing what to do about it. I was wondering if the government was ever going to go forward with it.

Mr. BENNETT: It stood there awaiting the passing of the American bill.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I think it awaited many other things besides that. Anyhow it is here now. It has been given its first and second readings and is now in committee of the whole, and I have not yet heard the sponsor of the bill say anything about it. I have no desire to put the Minister of the Interior in an awkward position, but I do not propose to have this bill go through in this somewhat clandestine fashion without my having something to say about it even if the minister won't.

I was associated with the Turtle mountain scheme, which was started four years ago, and as representing the prairies I was in favour of it. The people of Saskatchewan with no boundary line site as good, and the people of Manitoba, were behind it. A secretary was appointed in Toronto, by name Mr. Moore. He has been here comparatively recently and it was from him that I learned the probability of this Waterton scheme not being likely gone on with. But here I find it at this stage, in committee of the whole, and the minister has not said a word about it.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh yes he did.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: At what stage?

Mr. MURPHY: On the introduction of the bill.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Let us hear some more about it, then, as the explanation on the first reading is generally pretty slim.

Mr. MURPHY: I was just trying to be courteous to the hon. member.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I am trying to be courteous to the hon. minister, and I want to give him the opportunity to say something more now on this bill. I have some material in my room and I hope to keep this discussion going until eleven o'clock so that I may get my memory freshened up by consulting my material. I had no idea that this was going to be gone ahead with at all. I am very much concerned about it. I saw the peace arch south of Vancouver some years ago, and it is a very beautiful representation of peace between the two countries. I believe in that kind of thing. I believe in both symbolizing and living the peace, but I do not believe in having a scrap among the Canadian provinces for the sake of peace between part of Canada and part of the United States, and that is what my hon. friend the minister is provoking by this bill. You cannot have the whole boundary line seeded down with peace parks, gardens and arches. If you are going to have one peace park in Alberta you will kill the Turtle mountain scheme, and if you are going to have the Turtle mountain scheme it will probably hurt the Alberta scheme. You cannot have and maintain the two as at present constituted. That is the situation as I see it. I did not make any contribution towards the Turtle mountain scheme except to lend it my moral support, and I am going to continue to lend it my moral support, and possibly go a little further at a later stage. I am familiar with the site at Turtle mountain. It was one of the first places I went to in 1881 when there was very little settlement, and I know something of its suitability for a park. The establishment of that park has been under way for four years.

I would also point out that these park names are very similar; no provincial secretary's department would issue charters with two names so similar, but inasmuch as this is a federal bill and Manitoba's is a provincial one, it means that there is evidently no law restraining plagiarism in the matter of names as between the dominion and provinces.

Mr. MURPHY: If my hon. friend will allow me—

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I want my hon. friend to get up and help me kill a little time until eleven o'clock.

Mr. MURPHY: The area in the Turtle mountains was not set aside or named in a bill by the provincial government. They simply donated the area, but there was no bill passed.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: No bill was passed by the Manitoba legislature with respect to it?

Mr. MURPHY: No, the area was set aside as an area which could be used for the purpose.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: The Manitoba government certainly got behind it and took some action, whether by way of issuing a charter for a company or by means of a bill or order in council I do not know, but at all events the Manitoba government sponsored the scheme. The state of Dakota did the same, and congress passed a bill with respect to certain school lands, thus sanctioning this peace garden. All the preliminaries necessary for the establishment of the Turtle mountain peace garden were started four years ago before this other scheme was ever heard of, or three and a half years ago at all events. If this is an evidence of my hon. friend's idea of peace among ourselves, I do not think very much of it. I do not see how under the present financial conditions of the country we are going to build two peace gardens, much less maintain them after they are built. I can quite understand the position of my hon. friend from Lethbridge and of the Prime Minister, who made a slight interjection a moment or so ago. Now that the thing has got going to this extent, they feel obligated to get behind it, but I am sure that they must both wish it was in Jericho or at the bottom of the sea; for they have to take a stand on it just as I have to do, and the Minister of the Interior also. My standpoint as a member of the opposition does not amount to very much, but as a citizen of the prairies who wants to see one of these schemes go ahead I object to trying to go ahead with two, with the strong probability of at least one of them falling down. That is what is likely to happen, during such times as these at least. I should like to see an arch on the prairie, something like the one south of Vancouver. Some few years ago I had the opportunity of motoring in that vicinity and saw the peace arch there erected. I was then impressed with three obvious facts: First, it takes money to build an arch, second, it takes a considerable amount of ground, and third, it takes a lot of money to maintain it. I imagine that will be the experience with all the parks on our southern boundary with which the government are connected. There is no doubt that when the two prairie parks proposed are in a state of completion, if they both get that far, large sums of money will be required for their maintenance.

In my view it is wrong to present a bill such as the one now before us, the title of which is so much similar to the other one that the people are being deceived. They are confusing the two. The provinces have always held that they were justified in refusing to issue a charter to a company the name of which is so much like that of another that it may lead to deception, so that people may not know which from t'other or one from the other. I take it that spirit should be reflected in this bill, and nobody is familiar with that fact more than the Prime Minister. On the other hand I quite appreciate his position. I expect this is a Calgary show.

An hon. MEMBER: Oh no.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: It is an Alberta show, then.

An hon. MEMBER: A stampede.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: A duplication of peace gardens is most unfortunate. Certainly I should like to hear the Prime Minister speak at this time, because I should like some enlightenment. It is my desire to represent the people in Saskatchewan who are behind the Turtle mountain peace garden. They believed that there would be only one such boundary garden, and were quite agreed to have it at Turtle mountain. Along her boundary line Saskatchewan has no such advantageous location. There is no place from a prairie standpoint between the Rocky mountains and Winnipeg which would afford anything like the suitability of the Turtle mountain district. That is the reason I favoured the project and was absolutely shocked when I learned that this bill was on the order paper. I was not at all surprised when the Minister of the Interior hesitated to promote it any further. However, now that he is proceeding with the legislation I expect he will give us an explanation. If he will speak I shall immediately sit down, because I am very much concerned in his statement. Probably he would elevate his voice to an audible pitch so that I may have a better opportunity to hear him.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Carried.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: No, it is not carried.

Hon. T. G. MURPHY (Minister of the Interior): Mr. Chairman, those who have already spoken—and I refer particularly to the first two speakers—have described the areas in which it is proposed to locate in one a peace garden and the other in which there is a national park. It is not necessary for me to recapitulate their statements. Suffice it to say that the peace garden idea was started voluntarily about four years ago by organizations in Canada and the United States known as horticultural societies. The meeting at which the project took definite form so far as Canadian participation is concerned, was at the city of Toronto, on Canadian soil. Since that time the work in Canada has been carried on voluntarily. Certain moneys have been raised and promises of contributions made. At this point may I say that I consider it was a very worthy idea indeed. The location of the peace garden was not at first decided upon. A committee was formed which, acting in conjunction with a similar organization in the United States, was to select a position along the international boundary line at which this garden could be located. Eventually the Turtle mountain site was selected. The government of Manitoba set aside an area in a forest reserve, and the state of North Dakota set aside an area in that state immediately adjoining along the boundary line. Recently the United States congress passed legislation by which certain school lands were added to the area in North Dakota. So much for the peace garden.

For a number of years there has been in southern Alberta an area known as Waterton park. Immediately across the boundary in the United States is an area in the state of Montana known as Glacier park. So far as natural beauty, scenery and facilities are concerned these two areas virtually form one park. The idea now is simply to name that area the Waterton Glacier International Peace Park. The hon. member for Melville is mistaken when he states that the setting up of this area will entail great expense. If he so believes he is badly misinformed, because no expense whatsoever is involved in this measure. These areas will continue to be administered by the respective governments as they have been in the past, and throughout the years moneys have been spent to develop the two areas, namely, Waterton park in Canada and Glacier park in the United States. This bill is introduced for only one purpose, namely to give an international name to the two areas.

In addition to these projects there are other monuments situated along the international boundary line, namely the peace arch on the international boundary between White Rock, British Columbia, and Blaine, Washington. And then, further, there is the international peace bridge which connects—

The CHAIRMAN: Order. It is now eleven o'clock.

Mr. MURPHY: What about the eleven o'clock rule?

Mr. RHEAUME: Go on.

Mr. LAPOINTE: It is eleven o'clock.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Yes, eleven o'clock is striking.

The CHAIRMAN: I have to report progress.

Mr. RHEAUME: No, let us go on.

The CHAIRMAN: I have to report progress.

Mr. MURPHY: Very well; I move that the committee rise and report progress.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Could we take up something else?

Progress reported.

Mr. SPEAKER: When shall the committee have leave to sit again?

Some hon. MEMBERS: This day.

Mr. BENNETT: This day. Mr. Speaker, if there is general consent in the house, and the shorthand writers are not too tired, we might dispense with the eleven o'clock closing rule for at least twenty-five or thirty minutes. If that is the will of the house I would move accordingly.

Mr. SPEAKER: Mr. Bennett moves, seconded by Mr. Guthrie, that the house do not now adjourn.

Mr. BENNETT: No, that the eleven o'clock rule be suspended.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Carried.

Mr. COOTE: Mr. Speaker, how long do you wish to sit?

Mr. YOUNG: Twenty-five minutes.

Mr. BENNETT: Whatever may be the judgment of the house. If the house desires to sit for only thirty minutes, well and good; if it desires to sit until twelve o'clock I am content. It rests entirely with the house; if the house does not consent I shall not ask the house to sit.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: May I ask if it is the intention of the Prime Minister to go on with the bill we have been discussing, or to proceed with something else?

Mr. BENNETT: I had intended to proceed with the bill.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I imagine we will make more progress if we proceed with something else.

WAYS AND MEANS

SPECIAL WAR REVENUE ACT AMENDMENT

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Prime Minister) moved that the speaker do now leave the chair for the house to resolve itself into committee of ways and means.

Mr. SPEAKER: Carried.

Mr. COOTE: Before you leave the chair, Mr. Speaker, I want to say that if this house cannot make progress—

Mr. SPEAKER: The motion was declared carried without a dissenting voice.

Mr. COOTE: I was trying to attract your attention when the motion was being put. I want to protest against Mr. Speaker reading motions and declaring them carried without looking to see whether or not any hon. member desires to speak to the motion.

Mr. SPEAKER: The motion is carried and the house is in committee.

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee, Mr. LaVergne in the chair.

6. (i) That the rate of consumption or sales tax as imposed by section eighty-six of the said act, as amended by section eleven of chapter 54 of the statutes of 1931, be increased to six per cent.

(ii) That the following words be removed from the list of articles exempt from the consumption or sales tax set out in schedule III to the said act, as enacted by chapter 54 of the statutes of 1931, that is to say:—

"Bakers' cake and pies, not to include biscuits;" "and substitutes therefor" in line seven of the said schedule; "lard compound and similar substances, made from animal or vegetable stearine or oils;" "materials for use solely in the manufacture of any substitute for butter or lard;" "extract of rennet;" "ice cream;" "usual coverings to be used exclusively for covering goods not subject to the consumption or sales tax;" "materials to be used exclusively in the manufacture of usual coverings to be used for covering goods not subject to the consumption or sales tax."

Also under the heading "Goods Enumerated in Customs Tariff Items;" the following figures and words, namely;—

"45. Milk foods, n.o.p.; prepared cereal foods, in packages not exceeding twenty-five pounds weight each;"

"46. Prepared cereal foods, n.o.p.;"

And that the word "lard" where it first appears in line eight of the said schedule be struck out and the words "lard, when produced in Canada" be substituted.

(iii) That the following words be inserted in the said schedule:—

"All articles manufactured or produced by the labour of the blind in institutions established for their care or under the control or direction of such institutions."

(iv) That the following words be removed from the list of articles exempt to the extent of fifty per cent of the consumption or sales tax set out in schedule IV to the said act, as enacted by chapter 54 of the statutes of 1931, that is to say:—

"Biscuits of all kinds."

Mr. BROWN: In regard to this matter of coverings, I have a letter from a man interested in the production of honey, and I should like an explanation from the minister.

Mr. RHODES: If my hon. friend will permit me, I can anticipate what he is going to say by advising him that while the resolution will remain we will propose an amendment to the bill founded upon the resolution which will eliminate the usual coverings from the six per cent sales tax.

Mr. BROWN: That would include honey containers?

Mr. RHODES: Yes, all containers.

Mr. CAYLEY: Including cheese boxes?

Mr. RHODES: Yes.

Mr. VENIOT: Does that include salt?

Mr. RHODES: Yes.

Mr. TOTZKE: Would that include flour sacks?

Mr. RHODES: Yes.

Mr. COOTE: I should like to ask hon. members in the far corner to speak up so that we may hear them.

Mr. RHODES: The question was with respect to usual coverings, and I advised the hon. member for Lisgar that when the bill is introduced, founded upon this resolution, it will contain a provision which will eliminate usual coverings from the operation of the sales tax.

Mr. VENIOT: You will put it back where it was before?

Mr. RHODES: Yes.

Mr. NEILL: Does that include tins for salmon?

Mr. RHODES: Yes.

Mr. CAYLEY: Will the minister tell the committee if it is intended to change the tax on ice cream in any way?

Mr. RHODES: No, there is no intention of changing the tax on ice cream.

Mr. BROWN: Will the minister leave ice cream subject to the tax?

Mr. RHODES: Yes, ice cream will be subject to the tax.

Mr. BROWN: That is another burden laid upon the farmer.

Mr. RHODES: I do not subscribe to that point of view at all. This tax is levied upon a processed food, and it should be borne either by the manufacturer or by the consumer or both. There is no reason why the farmer should have to pay it at all.

Mr. CAYLEY: Would the minister explain how he intends to collect this ice cream tax?

Mr. RHODES: From the manufacturer.

Mr. CAYLEY: I understand there may be some difficulty in collecting it because the invoice price will differ in various cases.

Mr. RHODES: I am advised by officials of the Department of National Revenue that there will be no more difficulty in administering the collection of this tax than there has been in the case of other sales taxes.

Mr. CAYLEY: But I was thinking of a case where ice cream might be bought from one manufacturer for perhaps 90 cents a gallon; other ice cream, with other services, might sell at $1 or $1.25, while if the ice cream is put in one of these frigidaires, together with certain other services, it might cost still more. The invoice price would not be a constant quantity; it would be variable.

Mr. RHODES: The tax would be imposed upon the selling price of the manufacturer, and not upon the price referred to by my hon. friend.

Mr. MacLEAN (Prince): I believe very strong protests have been coming in, have they not?

[Mr. Veniot.]

Mr. RHODES: I have some amendments to move. I move that paragraph 6 of the resolution be amended by adding thereto the following subsection:

That the following words be inserted in the said schedule III: "baker's cake and pies when produced by any one manufacturer or producer to the value of not more than $5,000 in any one calendar year."

The object is to exempt these to the extent of $5,000 in the case of all manufacturers who produce in quantities less than the sum mentioned. They pay no tax, but those who produce in quantities greater pay a tax.

Mr. MacLEAN: Does that include biscuits?

Mr. RHODES: No.

Amendment agreed to.

Mr. RHODES: I have an amendment with respect to articles manufactured by the blind. We put these in the fully exempted list, but we find that this would work unfairly. In the manufacture of many commodities, I know that certain manufacturers are themselves employers of blind people, people who would otherwise be thrown out of work if the competition became very keen, as would likely happen should the full exemption of six per cent obtain. It is proposed that instead of giving them the full exemption of six per cent we put them in the half list. That would give them a preference over goods manufactured in the ordinary way, but at the same time it would not make the competition so unfair as to preclude a reasonable opportunity for manufacturers to conduct their business in the ordinary course. The amendment is that the following words be inserted in schedule IV:

All articles manufactured or produced by the labour of the blind in institutions in Canada established for their care or under the control or direction of such institutions.

Notice having been given in the budget resolutions of the intention to exempt totally from the sales tax articles manufactured by the blind, provision will be inserted in the bill whereby such articles will be exempted from April 7 up to and including May 23, after which date, in accordance with the amending resolutions, these goods will bear the half rate of three per cent. I will ask my colleague to move the amendment.

Mr. RYCKMAN moved:

That subsection (iii) of paragraph 6 of the resolution of April 6, 1932, to amend the Special War Revenue Act, be struck out and the following substituted therefor:

"(iii) That the following words be inserted in schedule IV: 'all articles manufactured or produced by the labour of the blind in institutions in Canada established for their care or under the control or direction of such institutions.' "

Amendment agreed to.

Mr. RHODES: I have another amendment, that paragraph 6, subsection (ii) of the resolution of April 6, 1932, to amend the Special War Revenue Act, be amended by adding thereto the following words:

That the words oatmeal, rolled oats, cornmeal, rolled wheat, be deleted and that there be inserted in lieu thereof: "oatmeal, rolled oats, cornmeal and rolled wheat when in packages exceeding five pounds each in weight"; and that the words "bran, shorts, middlings" be deleted and that there be inserted in lieu thereof the words "shorts, bran and middlings when for use as cattle, hog, poultry or other stock feed, or when sold for human consumption in packages exceeding five pounds each in weight."

The effect will be to place a tax on all processed foods uniformly, in the case of packaged foods, but all these commodities in bulk or quantities over five pounds in weight are tax free.

Mr. MacLEAN: Has the minister considered the request of silver fox ranchers with regard to biscuits used for the feeding of these animals? It is only fair to exempt them when other foods for animals are exempted.

Mr. RHODES: We have arranged in the bill which is based on the resolution to place fox food in the category of cattle foods, and therefore they will be exempt.

Mr. MacLEAN: Thanks very much.

Mr. CAYLEY: What revenue is expected from the tax on ice cream?

Mr. RHODES: Six hundred thousand dollars.

Mr. COOTE: The minister has enumerated certain cereals. Were they taxed in the old act?

Mr. RHODES: They were taxed until 1924. My hon. friend understands that we are taxing only packaged processed foods and not essential foods. Bran, shorts and middlings in bulk are not taxed.

Mr. KENNEDY (Winnipeg): Does the exemption apply to those articles in packages over five pounds?

Mr. RHODES: Over five pounds they are not subject to the tax.

Mr. COOTE: I am not quite clear on that. Would rolled oats in a package or sack of five pounds or less be taxable, or rolled oats sold by a grocer out of a barrel in less than five pounds?

Mr. RHODES: If they were sold out of the barrel they would not be subject to the tax. The idea is to tax the processed and fancy named foods which are sold in package form.

Mr. COOTE: The bulk of the rolled oats sold to-day is sold in small sacks. I do not know what the size of the sack is, but this is one of the staple foods.

Mr. RHODES: My hon. friend realizes that this tax is imposed on the manufacturer at the source; that is where it is paid. If a purchaser goes to a grocery shop and wants to buy the foods in packages, he must pay the tax.

Mr. COOTE: Whether this tax is paid by the manufacturer or by the retailer, in the end the purchaser must pay. I think it is a mistake to put a tax on cereals, which is one of the staple foods of the people.

Mr. RHODES: If the individual desires to buy in bulk or from bulk he does not pay the tax, but if he insists upon purchasing packaged food in packages of less than five pounds weight, he must be prepared to pay for a commodity upon which the manufacturer has paid a sales tax.

Mr. COOTE: The majority of people have not money enough to buy in bulk. The only way they can buy is in small packages.

Mr. SPENCER: They have acquired a bad habit.

Mr. STEVENS: They can get it in bulk for half price.

Mr. COOTE: In some places they cannot buy in bulk.

Paragraph agreed to.

7. That the special excise tax on imports imposed by section eighty-eight of the said act, as enacted by section fourteen of chapter 54 of the statutes of 1931, be increased to three per cent.

Mr. NEILL: Is the minister going to propose any more amendments?

Mr. RHODES: There are a number of amendments which will appear in the bill; for instance salt for use by deep sea fishermen.

An hon. MEMBER: A new budget.

Mr. RHODES: The bill will exempt from the sales tax salt used in the sea and gulf fisheries.

Mr. POWER: Is the minister considering the question of an excise tax on lumber?

Mr. RHODES: That will be exempted under the bill. The exemption will apply also to fibres and there will be a provision to exempt from the excise tax animals for the improvement of stock.

Mr. COOTE: Are barrels to be exempt?

Mr. RHODES: Perhaps my hon. friend did not hear me; I told him that the bill will provide for the deletion of the tax upon all containers.

Mr. VENIOT: In connection with salt, does the minister refer to the excise or sales tax?

Mr. RHODES: The sales tax.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Does the minister agree with his colleague the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Ryckman), who has been moving the various amendments, that this special excise tax is really a customs tax?

Mr. RHODES: I do not know that any good purpose can be served by discussing names. My right hon. friend knows that it is a tax applied for the specific purpose of raising revenue, and to that extent at least it is distinguished from a tax imposed as a customs tax. It is purely a revenue tax of a special character as distinguished from an ordinary tariff. I am not disposed to quarrel at all with my right hon. friend as far as the name is concerned.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: What revenue does the minister expect to derive from this three per cent tax?

Mr. RHODES: The estimate is that we will derive a revenue of $5,500,000 for each one per cent, so that this tax ought to bring in $16,500,000.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Am I right in assuming that this tax is to apply on the value for duty purposes, and that as a matter of fact it comes nearer to being a tax of four per cent than it does to being one of three per cent?

Mr. RHODES: The tax applies on the duty paid value, but I think it is a tax of three per cent rather than four per cent.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: The average rate on dutiable goods is about thirty per cent, and when the value for duty purposes is taken into account the rate runs higher.

[Mr. Rhodes.]

Mr. RHODES: The value for duty purposes would be applicable only to a very limited number of articles, so I do not think it would have any appreciable bearing upon the amount.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Will not the effect of this tax be further to restrict trade rather than to encourage it in such a way as to increase the revenue?

Mr. RHODES: That is a moot question. I think it follows that to the extent that the duty is raised you make it a little more difficult for the hurdle to be jumped. The fact is that we need revenue and must seek it in every available way, and it was felt that under the circumstances this was a desirable method.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: As I understood the Prime Minister a day or two ago, he intimated quite frankly that the present duties were intended to be prohibitive.

Mr. BENNETT: When did he say that? Show me that.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I shall be pleased to look it up. I certainly got the impression and I think the house did, that the duties had been put at a certain point avowedly for the purpose of restricting trade.

Mr. BENNETT: Restricting, not prohibiting.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: They were at a point which in many cases was prohibitive, and I think that was quite frankly stated. At any rate we know that in many cases the present rate is prohibitive and how a further duty of three per cent is going to bring in revenue to the administration is a conundrum.

Mr. RHODES: I think it is fair to say that all taxation takes a toll of business; it is a drain upon business as it is upon the purse. I do not think we can get very far by discussing this phase of it. It seems to me that the important question is, first, that we must have the money, and, second, we must find the best way to get it with the least detriment to business and with the least possible burden upon those who pay the tax.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: May I ask the minister whether the purpose of this tax is not part of the bargaining paraphernalia of the ministry in connection with the forthcoming conference? Is it not intended to assist the administration in bargaining?

Mr. RHODES: No. The right hon. gentleman will recall that the tax was imposed in the first instance over a year ago as a one per cent tax. It is purely a revenue tax and has reference to nothing else but revenue.

Mr. DONNELLY: If I buy goods in the United States to the value of $100 American money, they would be worth $110 in Canadian money, our dollar being at a discount. Would I have to pay this tax on the $100 or the $110?

Mr. RHODES: It would be paid upon the invoice value of the goods in Canadian dollars.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Does the minister not think that in connection with the forthcoming conference it would be a helpful gesture to decide at once to abolish this tax so far as trade within the empire is concerned, indicating that the government's real desire is trade within the empire? Has the ministry considered that, or would the minister be prepared to make a statement before parliament prorogues?

Mr. RHODES: I think that the representatives of the other British nations will be the first to realize our necessities and recognize that this tax is a tax for revenue purposes only.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I cannot altogether agree with my hon. friend. Great Britain, for example, with whom we shall be chiefly negotiating, recognizing our necessities and, I believe, the need of our scouring markets in that country, has imposed practically no duties against Canada. In November next the new British tariff becomes applicable to the dominions unless in the interval by way of negotiation something is arrived at which will encourage trade. My point is that it would be a helpful indication of the government's attitude and a real encouragement of trade within the empire if an announcement were at once made by the minister that this three per cent excise tax would not apply against goods entering Canada from the other parts of the empire. Moreover it would be adopting towards Great Britain an attitude similar to that which she is adopting towards Canada.

Mr. RHODES: My answer to that is this: We have been giving a preference to Great Britain for a quarter of a century. So far as this excise tax on imports is concerned, it is applicable to the whole world, including the British dominions. Therefore we are in precisely the same position with respect to the preference as we were before the imposition of this tax. As regards its bearing upon interdominion trade, it may be a subject for discussion, but, if so, it would be a subject for the conference. It is not one upon which it would be wise or seemly for us to make an announcement in advance.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: The preference with Great Britain is by no means what it has hitherto been. As my hon. friend knows, the first action on the part of the new Conservative administration was to raise the duty against Britain as well as against other parts of the world, and the preference was made distinctly less than it had previously been. It is not to-day anything like what it was in 1930. That, I think, is true so far as the preference to Britain is concerned. However, if it is preferences within the empire we are talking about, here is a real opportunity for Canada to show that she wants to encourage trade within the empire, by saying that, while she now has a tax that relates to the whole world, as respects trade within the empire she will not apply this three per cent impost. If my hon. friend is anxious to proceed along the lines on which Britain has set the example with respect to trade with Canada, he would consider that suggestion very carefully.

My hon. friend speaks about our having given Britain the preference. That preference has been as much of an advantage to Canada as to Great Britain. The idea that the only country which benefits by a preference is the one that sells and not the one that buys, is a mistake. No trade would ensue at all unless the arrangement were beneficial both ways. Trade in itself is exchange, and exchange in itself is valuable or it would not take place. It is wrong to argue that because we have given Britain the preference, she has been the only one to gain an advantage. We have gained because we have procured from Great Britain commodities we desired at a rate at which it would not have been possible to obtain them had the preference not existed. We have also another benefit because of the preference; we have been able to keep down the cost of living and some of the costs of production, and thus have helped our producers in the great basic industries, and have, in regard to our great export production, been better able to compete and hold our own in foreign markets. The preference, therefore, has been as much of a benefit from the Canadian point of view as it has been from the British point of view.

It should also be noted in this connection that, after all, Britain has not for the most part imposed any tax against us. She has given us in her markets the same opportunities as have her own producers or manufacturers. That is a large concession, very different from that which we give Great Britain, whose goods are taxed before they come into this country at all. All these points are matters of importance, particularly on the eve of a conference.

I again would suggest to the minister that he make some gesture showing that we wish to trade within the empire, instead of making such trade more difficult as he is doing by the proposed three per cent tax. This tax, indeed, may be the means of entirely shutting out some British goods, especially when it comes on top of existing tariffs. As a preliminary to the conference, it would be an admirable step, just now when the minister is proceeding with his bill, to have it so amended that the three per cent tax will not apply to commodities coming from different parts of the British Empire.

Mr. RHODES: I cannot agree with my right hon. friend when he says that the people of the mother country have granted us a concession permitting us to trade with them on the same basis as they have allowed the whole world to trade with them.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Not a concession. We have been in a favoured position in the British market in that we have been able to sell our goods on exactly the same basis as has the British producer or manufacturer. There has been no handicap of a tariff, except in a limited way, over which our commodities have had to pass before entering the British market.

Mr. RHODES: That is not what my hon. friend said before. He may not have said then what he intended to say, but he said something about a concession having been granted to Canada and not to another country.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I was speaking only in relation to trade between Canada and Great Britain.

Mr. RHODES: When I spoke of our having given Great Britain a preference for a quarter of a century, I was not for a moment attempting to weigh the question of advantage to one side or the other, nor had I that in mind. I was dealing with the mere fact that there had been for that period of time a preference in this market to the mother country which we did not give to countries outside the empire. It may be that this three per cent tax is some handicap to business, but I submit that the people of the mother country, with the fairness which has always characterized them, would be the first to concede that it is purely a revenue-producing measure. My right hon. friend has suggested that, as a gesture prior to the conference, we might eliminate the three per cent tax in favour of the importation of British goods. Apart altogether from the wisdom of taking a step in advance of a conference where these questions should be a matter of discussion, let me point this out to my right hon. friend: If we did that, to the extent that we failed as a result to derive revenue—and we would lose revenue to a very substantial sum—to that extent we would have to impose additional taxation upon the people of Canada to make up the difference. Wherever the money comes from, we must have a certain revenue and it remains to be determined what avenues we should pursue in obtaining it. From that point of view I do not subscribe to the suggestion of my right hon. friend that it would be the part of wisdom for us to take the action he suggests. That is only my view, but I have it clearly in mind that that is the position which would appeal to the sense of fairness and justice of the British people.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I do not wish to prolong the debate on this point; on the other hand I do not wish the minister to run away with the idea that he is going to secure revenue by adding a tax which, when placed upon the present tax, will have the effect of practically prohibiting trade. As our tax against Great Britain stands at the moment, there is very little preference left. A preference given to Great Britain means nothing unless the actual rate of taxation allows some British goods to enter this country. The rate of taxation with respect to most British goods, particularly with this three per cent added, will be prohibitory, and, to the extent that it is prohibitory, the minister will derive no benefit whatever. With this three per cent tax off, a little trade might trickle in, and to that extent there would be some revenue, so that it would be helping both the revenue and conference to take the step I suggest.

Mr. YOUNG: I think if the minister would study this question carefully he would agree that the leader of the opposition was right when he said that this tax would work out closer to four per cent than three per cent because it is levied on the duty paid value of the goods. In fact, in cases where the duty has been raised one hundred per cent, it will work out to as much as six per cent.

In an unguarded moment the minister referred to this tax as a duty. I am not going to quarrel with him over the name, but it has all the earmarks of a duty and it works like a duty; that is, it is imposed on all goods coming through the customs.

Mr. COOTE: When is a duty not a duty?

Mr. YOUNG: When you can evade it.

Mr. RHODES: When it is an excise tax on imports.

Mr. YOUNG: It will raise the price in Canada on all imports entering the country, and by that same act you notify Canadian producers of similar goods to increase their prices by a like amount. In the short session of 1930 the minister's leader brought in certain amendments to the tariff increasing the duty on a great number of articles, but before doing so he extracted from the Canadian producers of those articles a promise that they would not take advantage of the tariff to increase their domestic prices. The question I would ask the Minister of Finance is this: Has he obtained any similar assurances from Canadian manufacturers that they will not take advantage of this duty, or tax, if you wish to call it that, to increase their prices in the same proportion?

Mr. RHODES: My right hon. leader extracted that promise in connection with amendments to the tariff from manufacturers producing the goods in question. He would not contemplate going hat in hand to the manufacturers of this country and consulting them as to whether it would be competent for the government to raise by way of taxation certain sums of money which the government needs. I may say in reply to my hon. friend that certainly I did not consult the manufacturers prior to suggesting an increase in the excise tax on imports by this two per cent. My hon. friend may be right but I can say to him that up to the moment I have not had any indication from any quarter that the price of goods has been increased by the manufacturers in consequence of the application of this increase in the tax from one to three per cent.

Mr. YOUNG: At least the manufacturers have not been asked to give any assurance that they would not increase their prices. I take it then, that calling this tax an excise tax instead of a duty will be acceptable to the manufacturers, because it will absolve them from the promise they made that they would not take advantage of any increase in the tariff to increase their prices. Let us see how that will work out. They have the right, without violating any promise, to take full advantage of the situation. The figures I am going to give I am giving from memory, but I believe that they are substantially correct.

The minister told us that this tax would yield $5,500,000 at one per cent. It figures out at $16,500,000 at three per cent, and at not more than $20,000,000 at four per cent, as the revenue expected by the minister. We produced in Canada last year some $2,947,000,000 of manufactured goods, of which we exported something like $475,000,000, leaving about $2,500,000,000, of Canadian produced manufactured goods to be consumed in this country. If our manufacturers under this arrangement have the right to increase their prices three or four per cent on all these goods it will give them the opportunity to collect from the people of this country something like $100,000,000 in addition to what the minister is collecting in revenue. I do not think that they will go to that extent, but I believe that they will go half that far and take $50,000,000 out of the pockets of the people of this country and put it into their own coffers, and my hon. friend gets $16,000,000 or $20,000,000. Is that good business, I ask, in view of the present financial situation in this country?

Mr. RHODES: My answer would be that if the facts were anything approaching the imaginings of my hon. friend from Weyburn it would be very bad business, but I cannot subscribe to the accuracy of anything like the fantastic figures he has just given.

Mr. YOUNG: The figures are not fantastic.

Mr. RHODES: I cannot add to what I said before. I know of no instance where there has been an increase in price due to this tax.

Mr. YOUNG: You have not heard of it yet.

Mr. RHODES: I would be very much surprised if we did hear of such a thing.

Mr. CAYLEY: This is what you would call a depression tax to increase the revenue.

Mr. RHODES: Purely a revenue tax.

Mr. CAYLEY: A hard times tax, and if hard times continue will the tax go up again next year?

Mr. RHODES: My hon. friend knows that he cannot expect an answer to that question. We can hope that the times will improve and that it may be possible to reduce it. That is the more hopeful outlook.

Mr. CAYLEY: We will hope for the best.

Mr. COOTE: I think this is an appropriate time for me to say that this is a bad tax. At a time when business is so badly depressed as it is at present, it is certainly a mistake to hamper it with these increased sales and excise taxes, and I would suggest to the minister that before he brings in another budget he seriously consider getting his taxes where the money exists.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Where is that?

Mr. COOTE: From the incomes of the millionaires of this country.

Mr. CASGRAIN: There aren't any more.

Mr. SPEAKMAN: I understand, Mr. Chairman, that this is purely a revenue tax. While we do not call it a duty, it being levied on all imported goods, nevertheless it has all the features of a duty, and it is applied to the duty paid value of the goods. During the last two years the revenue from customs has been steadily decreasing in spite of the increase in the rates of the tariff. That has been due, of course, partly to the decreased value of the goods, the decrease in their dollar value, and partly to general business conditions throughout the world. There is no question that it is also due in part to the restricting effect of increased tariffs. This tax will of course, increase that restricting effect, and the question in my mind is, to what extent will this additional duty—for we may as well call it by its proper name—further restrict our trade and so reduce our revenue, or to what extent will it bear out the minister's anticipations of increased revenue? There is a point beyond which tariffs cease to be revenue producing, and I am very much afraid that the tariff on many articles which are now paying a high rate of duty will, with this added duty, have reached that point, and will cease to realize anything like the revenue which the minister anticipates.

In reply to the leader of the opposition, who suggested that this tax might be removed from goods imported from Great Britain or elsewhere throughout the empire, the Minister of Finance replied that if we did this, it being a revenue producing tax, it would necessitate taxing our own people more heavily in order to make up the deficit, as we require a certain amount of revenue in any case. To what extent, again, does the minister believe that taxes of that kind are paid by anybody else than our own people? So far as I am concerned, and I am not a fanatic, I have never seen the time when an increased price upon goods imported and sold in this country, whether that increased price was brought about by the tariff or by a sales or excise tax, was not paid by the purchasers of the goods, they being our own people. Therefore I cannot very well see what difference it makes to our own people whether we pay a tax upon goods we buy from Great Britain or whether we pay it on some other articles. We pay it in any case. I am a good enough Canadian to hope that our revenues will be increased. I am not anxious to see revenues decrease; my hope would be to the contrary. I am just Scotch enough, however, to say that I ha'e me doots.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I should like to see my hon. friends carry out to the fullest extent their theory that tariffs will increase prosperity in Canada. Certainly they are giving it a real trial. To say that this three per cent tax is not a tariff does not appeal to my sense of reason. It is just as much a tariff as any other tax. When there is added to the already excessive tariffs on imports from foreign countries and from Great Britain another three per cent tax I think we are reaching the prohibitive stage.

My hon. friends seem to take comfort in the thought that prices have not been increased. But prices have not decreased to the extent they would have had it not been for the fact that through the imposition of tariffs manufacturers have been allowed to charge undue prices. That, in a nutshell, is the situation. I make the prediction that so long as hon. members opposite continue their present course, just so long will the depression in Canada continue. We are having a real trial of what tariffs can do for us, and the experience is a bitter one. My hon. friends may determine to pursue that course. All I have to say is that there will be splendid proof of what excessive tariffs can do to Canada. The experiment seems to be bearing out my contention.

Mr. HACKETT: How does that apply to Great Britain?

Mr. LAPOINTE: Wait and see.

Mr. VENIOT: Does the dump apply in consequence of the depression of the pound sterling, and does the fixing of value for duty purposes apply to the three per cent excise tax?

Mr. RHODES: It is on the duty paid value that the excise tax is imposed.

Mr. VENIOT: On the duty paid value?

Mr. RHODES: Yes. I should like to take a little longer, but I am afraid it is too late to-night. I must say however that my hon. friend from West Edmonton is not altogether correct in his assertion that the three per cent excise tax is an additional burden imposed upon goods already taxed. He may call it what he likes; I shall not quarrel with him. My hon. friend must realize however that there is a wide range of duty free goods upon which this tax applies.

Mr. YOUNG: The average rate on all goods is twenty per cent.

Mr. CAYLEY: Will the minister assure us that as soon as times are better and the revenue permits it, this tax will be removed?

Mr. RHODES: My experience in public life has been too wide to make any definite commitments as to what will be done in the future with respect to taxation. I will say to my hon. friend, however, that nobody would be more delighted than I—and I am sure I can speak for my colleagues—when the time arrives that we can not only reduce taxation in this respect but in every other possible respect.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Carried.

Paragraph agreed to.

Paragraphs 8 and 9 agreed to.

Resolution reported, read the second time and concurred in. Mr. Rhodes thereupon moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 102, to amend the Special War Revenue Act.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

Mr. RHODES: Is there any objection to giving the bill second reading to-night and letting it stand at that stage?

An hon. MEMBER: Well—

Mr. RHODES: All right; next sitting of the house.

Mr. SPEAKER: Mr. Rhodes moves, seconded by Mr. Stevens, that said bill be now read a second time.

Mr. RHODES: No.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Yes, read it now.

Mr. RHODES: Very well.

Motion agreed to and bill read the second time.

On motion of Mr. Bennett the house adjourned at twelve o'clock midnight.

The house met at eleven o'clock.

BANKING AND COMMERCE

MOTION FOR CONCURRENCE IN FOURTH REPORT OF FINDINGS OF COMMITTEE IN INQUIRY INTO PRICE OF GASOLINE

The house resumed from Monday, May 23, consideration of the motion of Mr. Young that the fourth report of the select standing committee on banking and commerce, on the reference as to the price of gasoline, be concurred in.

Mr. E. J. YOUNG (Weyburn): In moving concurrence in the fourth report of the select standing committee on banking and commerce, I wish first of all to draw the attention of the house to the wording of the reference, which reads:

> That, in the opinion of this house, the price of gasoline to the Canadian consumer has for some time past been too high and that this matter should be referred to the select standing committee on banking and commerce to investigate and report.

The question with which the committee had to deal was this: Are we in Canada paying too much for our gasoline, and, if we are, what is the reason? The committee reasoned that if we are paying too much for our gasoline it must be that somebody connected with the refining of gasoline or somebody connected with its distribution—or both—is getting too much for his services.

During the calendar year 1931 we imported 84,000,000 gallons of gasoline on which duty was paid, and during the same year we imported some 32,000,000 gallons on which no duty was paid. Now, all of that 32,000,000 gallons which came in duty free was imported by refiners. In order to prove that statement I would refer the house to section 272 of the customs tariff as amended at the short session in September, 1930. It reads:

> Natural casinghead, compression or absorption gasoline, lighter than ·6690 specific gravity at 60 degrees temperature, when imported by distillers of petroleum for blending with other gasolines distilled in Canada: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, free; general tariff, free.

Let me explain what natural casinghead gasoline is: it is gasoline as it comes from the earth. In that state it is not suitable for use in engines; it vaporizes too easily. But it has been found that by mixing it with other gasoline it can be used quite satisfactorily. It is not the raw material of any manufacturing process; it is gasoline, and the only treatment it requires is to pour some other kind of gasoline in with it.

This section 272 provides that refiners of gasoline may import that form of gasoline duty free, but anybody else who is importing it must pay a duty of 2½ cents per gallon, plus whatever dumping duties the government sees fit to impose. I should like hon. members to picture to themselves for a moment two distributors of gasoline located on opposite corners of the same street, one of them a branch of a refining company and the other an independent distributor. Both these distributors are selling identically the same product, namely, a mixture of Canadian refined gasoline, with casinghead gasoline imported from some other country. The government says to one of these distributors, "You may bring in your gasoline free of duty," and to the other it says, "For the same kind of gasoline you must pay a duty of 2½ cents per gallon plus whatever dumping duty we see fit to impose."

I ask you to consider for a moment what the effect of that would be on an independent distributor. How can any independent distributor hope to survive and do business under such conditions when the government allows his competitor to bring in his gasoline duty free while it insists on the independent distributor paying a duty of anywhere from 2½ to 5 cents a gallon? Yesterday the announcement appeared in the press that the price of gasoline had dropped 4 cents in New York, and the despatch reported that this was due to the competition of independent distributors. No such thing could happen in Canada because the government here has specifically said to the independent distributors, "We will not allow you to remain in business; at any rate, we will not allow you to bring in your product at the same rate as we allow the refiners to import the very same thing."

I contend, therefore, that I am justified in the statement that all of the 32,000,000 gallons of duty-free gasoline imported last year was imported by the refiners. Some 84,000,000 gallons of dutiable gasoline was brought in, and I presume it was brought in by the independents. That is only about one-eighth of the total consumption, so that seven-eighths of the consumption passes through the hands of the refiners. The committee reasoned, then, that since the refiners held such a large proportion of the market, they must look to that source to investigate whether or not we are paying too much for our gasoline.

The largest refiner in Canada is the Imperial Oil Company. They are such a large factor in the market that whatever they do the others must generally fall in line with, so that the committee decided that if they investigated the Imperial Oil Company first to find out how they were faring, they would have a pretty good idea as to what was happening with the others. They investigated, securing the services of a firm of chartered accountants, competent men who looked into the affairs of the company. I have here a summary of their findings, and I will give it to the house: (a) That the company has not been guilty of any cost-loading; (b) The company has been honestly and soundly financed; (c) That marketing costs in this country are too high; (d) Variations in price during the last three years are based not on refining costs but on variations in the price of crude oil and on increases in various forms of taxes, freight and exchange; (e) That lower prices of gasoline in the United States and Canada, which appear to arouse the wrath of our people, are due in large measure to tax evasions on the other side of the line; (f) That the zoning basis of establishing prices tends to favour districts remote from refineries rather than those that are close; (g) That in some districts the spread between the wholesale and retail price is entirely in the hands of the retailers; (h) That the average profits of the Imperial Oil Company after paying all refining and marketing costs is 1·01 cents per gallon; and, (i) That no further expense should be incurred in continuing the investigation.

Those are the findings of the committee and they are based on the evidence produced. That was as far as the committee could go in investigating. They found that the companies were not taking excessive profits; they were not dishonestly managed; that variations in prices were due not to variations in the cost of refining but to variations in the cost of crude oil and changes in freight rates, taxes and so forth. But there is one thing which the committee did not and could not investigate, nor could they be expected to investigate it, and that is the question whether the Canadian refineries are efficiently managed, or whether, on the other hand, the oil-refining industry is one that can be profitably carried on in Canada. The committee could not investigate this question because there is no one in Canada who could give evidence in that regard; the only persons in Canada who could give evidence as to the efficiency of the refineries are the refinery men themselves. No person in Canada is capable of informing us whether our refineries are as efficient as the refineries in other countries. The committee, therefore, could not investigate that phase of the situation.

But there is one infallible test which we can apply to determine whether or not our refineries are efficient, and it is this question: Can we buy gasoline cheaper anywhere else? If the refineries of other countries can sell gasoline cheaper to us than we can get it from our own refineries, then one of two things is true: Either they are more efficient than our refineries, or the refining of gasoline is better adapted to other countries than ours. The question is, Can we or can we not buy gasoline from somebody else cheaper than from our own refineries? In answer to that question I would refer the house to the evidence of Mr. O. B. Roger, of the Shell Oil Company. It will be found at page 411 of the evidence given before the committee. Mr. Donnelly is questioning Mr. Roger:

Q. You could buy from American concerns, as I have just said, for between 4 and 5 cents, and yet you are paying 6?—A. Yes; but then we would have been subject to dumping duty. The regulations provide that gasoline must be imported at the price in the bulletin.

Q. Instead of giving it to the government you give it to the American companies?—A. Yes.

What does that mean? It means that under the amendment to the Customs Act passed by this house in September, 1930, the government has power to fix the value for duty on gasoline. They did so. They fixed a certain value which they informed the importers they must pay for their gasoline, and if they did not pay that price they were subject to dumping duty. The Shell Oil Company was able to buy gasoline at 4 and 5 cents a gallon in the United States. That was lower than the price fixed in the bulletin, and the Customs department said to them, "If you buy at that price in the United States we will make you pay in the form of a dumping duty the difference between that and the bulletin price. But if you see fit to pay the extra price in the United States to the refiners over there you will be exempt from the dumping duty. We don't care whom you pay the extra price to, but we insist upon your paying it." Could further evidence be required that we are paying for our gasoline more than is necessary when the customs officials deliberately say to importers, "You must pay more and we don't care whether you pay it into the revenue or to the American manufacturer, but we insist on your paying it." The Shell Oil Company had to add that to the price they charged for their gasoline. Referring to page 413 of the evidence, I find the hon. member for Swift Current (Mr. Bothwell) examining Mr. Roger in connection with gasoline coming from the Dutch West Indies, as follows:

Q. What would your freight be on that from the Dutch West Indies to Montreal?—A. I should say nearly one cent a gallon, perhaps a fraction under a cent, but approximately a cent. I should say the freight, as far as my memory serves me, fluctuated somewhere in 1931 around 29 cents a barrel.

Q. At this price, that would bring it up to about 6·40 cents an Imperial gallon?—A. Excluding duty and sales tax.

Here again we have evidence that the same company could bring gasoline from the Dutch West Indies and lay it down in Montreal at 6·40 cents per gallon if it were not for the duty. No further evidence should be required to prove that we are paying too much for our gasoline. If further evidence is required, I refer the house to the statement made by the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Ryckman) when his estimates were going through to the effect that certain men from Montreal had come to him and stated that they wanted to bring gasoline in from Roumania. What answer did he give? He said: If this gasoline is being dumped, you cannot bring it in. What did he mean by dumping? Under the new definition of dumping as set out in 1930 by the minister, it means the selling in Canada of gasoline or of anything else at a price lower than that at which our own manufacturers are willing to sell for. Time and time again the government has deliberately insisted that the people of this country pay more for their gasoline than they want to pay.

I want to say a few words in defence of Imperial Oil Limited. This company has been criticized quite severely, and in my opinion unjustly for their action in curtailing production in the Turner valley oil field. The market in western Canada for gasoline has fallen off considerably during the last year or two and Imperial Oil Limited found it necessary to reduce its purchases in the valley by about half. For that they were very severely criticized; people said that they should use Canadian produced gasoline, that it should be shipped down to eastern Canada instead of importing similar gasoline from the United States. The company put out an explanation in its own defence. This was to be found in most of the filling stations in western Canada and I shall read in part from a copy I secured. It reads:

The cost of the Turner valley product, plus freight rates, are such that the product cannot compete with other gasolines except within a freight radius of Calgary. Turner valley gasolines laid down at the Sarnia refinery of Imperial oil, within reach of a large consuming market, would cost on the present basis of prices and freights $5.97 per barrel. Casinghead gasoline which is equivalent to the product of Turner valley, on the basis of prices existing in the mid-continent field and of established freight rates would cost $3.62 per barrel. It is obvious, therefore, that the amount of naphtha drawn from the Turner valley must depend entirely upon the consumption of gasoline within that area of the western provinces where favourable freight rates prevail.

I think that is a very fair and just statement of the case. The company states quite clearly that if they were to use Turner valley gasoline and ship it to the parts of Canada where there are markets for it, it would cost them $2.35 a barrel more than the United States product. Very properly they take the stand that they could not incur that extra cost and add it to the burden borne by the consumer in this country. I say that that is a very fair and proper attitude for that company to take. But I ask this question of the Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett) and I want an answer: If it is right, if it is fair, if it is in the public interest that Imperial Oil Limited should be allowed to buy its supplies where they can be bought the cheapest, why is it not right for the common people of this country to do the same thing? That is the question to which I should like an answer. I think I have proved that the price of gasoline in this country is too high and the cause of this high price is the duties and dumping duties imposed by the present government. The additional cost which we are paying is not going into the treasury, in many cases it is being paid to foreign manufacturers.

Mr. Speaker, I beg to move that the report be concurred in.

Mr. R. W. GRAY (West Lambton): Mr. Speaker, I move that the house do now proceed to the orders of the day.

Mr. YOUNG: Mr. Speaker, that motion is out of order; there is a motion before the chair.

Mr. SPEAKER: A motion for reading the orders of the day has preference to any motion before the house.

Mr. GARDINER: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order; is the motion to proceed to orders of the day seconded?

Mr. SPEAKER: It is seconded by Mr. McPhee.

The house divided on the motion (Mr. Gray) which was agreed to on the following division:

RADIO BROADCASTING

MESSAGE INTIMATING RADIO STATION TO BE LOCATED IN SASKATOON

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Leader of the Opposition): Before the orders of the day are called, I might say to the Prime Minister that I have received a wire from one of the members of the local legislature of Saskatchewan stating with respect to the control of radio by a commission that the hon. member for Saskatoon (Mr. MacMillan) has wired to his city that one of the radio stations is to be located in Saskatoon. That, in the mind of the member who wired me, indicates that the decision will not be made by technical men, but will be actuated by political motives. I know nothing of the matter except the representation in the telegram, and I am sorry the hon. member for Saskatoon is not in his seat, because I should like first to have asked him if he personally sent the wire referred to. May I ask the Prime Minister, although I am sure it is not necessary to ask the question: Was the wire authorized in any way?

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Prime Minister): I assure the right hon. gentleman that no such telegram has been sent with my knowledge or consent, either direct or indirect, and I have no reason to believe that any determination of any question of this kind has ever been thought of by the administration. I can assure him further, although I have received large numbers of letters indicating that particular individuals should be appointed to certain positions, I have replied that this matter has not yet been considered; that the bill has not been finally passed in the house, and further that so far as employees were concerned, this matter would have to be decided by the commission itself.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

QUESTIONS PRECLUDED BY VOTE TO PROCEED TO ORDERS OF THE DAY

Hon. E. N. RHODES (Minister of Finance): I did not wish to raise a point of order while the leader of the opposition (Mr. Mackenzie King) was putting his question just now, because I knew in any event he would be able to get the leave of the house. But in view of the motion which has just been passed, we are in the orders of the day and therefore we cannot, as would usually be the case, submit questions before the orders of the day are called. I raise this point of order just so that a precedent will not be created, if Your Honour rules, as you should, that it is not now competent to raise questions on the orders of the day.

Mr. SPEAKER: In my view, the motion just passed makes the next order of business the orders of the day. Out of deference to the leader of the opposition and the Prime Minister, I made no objection while they were both on their feet. A few minutes ago the Secretary of State (Mr. Cahan) would have spoken, but I stopped him and I think the next proceeding of the house is to read the orders of the day.

Right Hon. MACKENZIE KING (Leader of the Opposition): It was quite unwittingly that I overstepped the rule, but I thank Your Honour and the hon. Minister of Finance for not having raised an objection, and for according me the privilege of bringing up the matter which, of course, might as well have been brought up when the radio broadcasting bill is further considered in committee as will I expect be the case a little later in the day.

CIVIL SERVICE ACT AMENDMENT

Hon. C. H. CAHAN (Secretary of State) moved the third reading of Bill No. 99, to amend the Civil Service Act.

Mr. E. J. YOUNG (Weyburn): I move in amendment that the house do now revert to motions.

Mr. GUTHRIE: That is out of order.

Mr. RHODES: If I may rise to a point of order, obviously the motion of the hon. member for Weyburn is out of order; it is a negative of a motion which was decided by the house by vote just a moment ago.

Mr. YOUNG: There have been two orders of the day since then.

Hon. PETER HEENAN (Kenora-Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, with respect to the—

Mr. WOODSWORTH: We have no idea of what business is being transacted.

Mr. HEENAN: With respect to the third reading of Bill No. 99, I desire to make just a few observations, because yesterday I attempted to get some information from the minister in charge of the measure and unfortunately we were not able before lunch to proceed with the bill in committee. Yesterday, while the bill was in committee, I endeavoured to ascertain the procedure that is to be followed in connection with the appointments of postmasters to positions in offices that have a revenue of less than $3,000. I am not opposing the bill but what I wanted to be sure of at that time was that the preference for returned soldiers would be continued as it was prior to this enactment, and the reason I rise at this time is because the returned soldier preference in the constituency that I have the honour to represent is being entirely overlooked.

In 1920, a resolution passed the Ontario legislature unanimously, in effect, that in all cases returned soldiers were to get the preference in appointments to permanent positions within the jurisdiction of the government of Ontario. Only recently a sheriff has been appointed in Kenora by the Ontario government, and the occupant, while a very good citizen in every way, is not a returned soldier. I have received many letters from returned men in my district telling me that they had no knowledge whatever that that position was about to be filled, and further that it was filled on the recommendation of the executive of the Conservative association for the district. There were two other appointments. The office of registrar for the district was vacated twice, and while the position was filled in both cases by very good citizens the returned soldiers in the district did not get an opportunity of appointment to those two vacancies. Again only recently, about a month ago, the mayor of Kenora was appointed to a provincial government position, and he is not a returned soldier. Those positions were filled upon the recommendation of the executive of the Conservative association for that district. What I wanted to say to the minister was this: If federal government positions are going to be filled in the same way, I think the minister will agree that I have reason to look askance at the protection that is afforded to the returned soldier in the matter of preference in appointments. How are the returned soldiers in that large district going to know where to apply? Are they to apply to the Postmaster General, to the member for the district or to the Conservative executive, and even if they know where to apply, what guarantee is there that the returned soldier preference will be maintained in appointments to these positions?

That is the only observation that I have to make, Mr. Speaker, and I am sorry that the bill was reported out of committee before I was given an opportunity of ascertaining beyond the shadow of a doubt that the returned soldiers in that district, and it is the only district that I have the right to speak for, would get a square deal in federal government appointments.

[Mr. Heenan.]

Mr. E. J. GARLAND (Bow River): I am opposed to the third reading of this bill, Mr. Speaker, because of two clauses that it contains. One of them I referred to when the discussion on the resolution was before the house, and at that time Your Honour will recollect that I moved to delete the clause referring to the exemption of revenue post offices up to $3,000. When the bill was before the house yesterday I disagreed with the administration in the amendment which was proposed by the Minister of Finance to modify section 11. It is not my intention at this time to prolong the debate unnecessarily. I simply wish to move, therefore:

That Bill No. 99, an Act to amend the Civil Service Act be not now read a third time but that it be referred back to the committee of the whole for the purpose of amending it by striking out section 10—and by striking out section 11, substituting for section 11 the wording of the section as contained in the first reading of the bill.

May I explain that section 10 is the one referring to the exemption of post offices with revenues up to $3,000. Under the first reading of the bill hon. members will recall that section 11 carried out the unanimous desire of the committee, the unanimous desire of every civil service organization which appeared before that committee, and the desire of many other people. As it stood at the first reading of the bill section 11 took away from private secretaries to ministers the special privilege which had been accorded to them under the amendment to the act moved some years previously. My motion is therefore to restore section 11 as originally drafted in the amendment this year, and I sincerely trust that the house will see that the merit system, to the extent at least of the improper changes being made to this bill—and I use the word "improper" advisedly—be not interfered with.

Mr. E. R. E. CHEVRIER (Ottawa): Mr. Speaker, I shall have to vote for the motion now before the house so that the bill may be referred back to the committee. I will so vote in the hope that before the committee the section dealing with private secretaries may be brought back to its previous form, and at the same time in the hope that the committee will not alter the section with reference to postmasters as recommended by the special committee.

Mr. J. L. BROWN (Lisgar): Mr. Speaker, I find myself in somewhat the same position in regard to my vote as the hon. member for Ottawa. I should like the matter to be referred to the committee, however, in the hope that section 10 may be eliminated from the bill, and that the amendment to section 11 as introduced to the house yesterday may be confirmed. When section 10 was under discussion in committee I expressed my sentiments in regard to the purpose of that section. I should like to repeat my views however in regard to statements made yesterday concerning the possibility of retaining returned soldiers' preference. I think the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River (Mr. Heenan) has given a good illustration of how matters have worked out. We have seen how a similar pious wish has worked out in regard to appointments made by the legislature of Ontario. I am quite satisfied that no matter what regulations are framed, when it comes to actual operations the matter of returned soldiers' preference will work out in the present instance as it worked out in the province of Ontario, as described by the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River.

Hon. ERNEST LAPOINTE (Quebec East): Mr. Speaker, I am exactly in the same position as my hon. friend from Lisgar. I cannot support the motion because I am opposed to deleting from the bill the amendment carried yesterday.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: The same here.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Question.

Hon. PETER HEENAN (Kenora-Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, I am wondering if the minister in charge of the bill would take this opportunity to make a statement. He did not speak before, because already he had moved third reading. I do not wish to repeat my statements of yesterday with regard to the assurance which should be given to returned soldiers, but as the house seems to be quieter than it was when I spoke previously I should like to repeat a few statements. May I point out that in the year 1920 a resolution was passed unanimously by the Ontario legislature to the effect that returned soldiers would receive the preference in all permanent positions. In the riding I have the honour to represent they are not getting it. I should like to pass over to the minister a letter which will indicate what is going on. I do not wish to make it public because in my opinion the condition it discloses is a disgrace. This letter from the Canadian Legion at Fort Frances indicates what is going on. I am not blaming the government, because I feel sure neither the Prime Minister nor any other member of the government would tolerate what is happening among the ranks of their own followers. I should like to pass this letter over to the minister so that he may have an opportunity of reading it; it is not my desire to make it public at this moment, because the matter is altogether too disgraceful. I am convinced when the minister sees what is contained in it he will realize why I have taken this position. The resolution passed by the Ontario legislature was unanimous; and I regard it as an order of the house. Notwithstanding that fact the returned soldiers are not receiving preference in that district. It may be that in the town of Kenora the members of the legion are satisfied—I doubt it—but hon. members must bear in mind that the district of Kenora is very large, and positions may be filled without returned soldiers in other parts of the district knowing anything about them or getting consideration.

The position of sheriff is a district position; the sheriff appointed is a very eminent citizen, notwithstanding the fact that he is a Conservative. He is not a returned soldier. The position of district registrar has been vacant twice, and is now filled by a gentleman who is not a returned soldier. The mayor of Kenora, the gentleman who has sent telegrams to the effect that I deliberately falsified facts, has only recently received his appointment. I regard that appointment as compensation for the telegrams he sent out saying that I was not telling the truth in eastern Canada with respect to such matters as I am now speaking about. He is not a returned soldier. So far as I can understand the persons who will make recommendations to the Postmaster General are those who are now recommending to the provincial government the appointment of men who are not returned soldiers.

Yesterday the minister in charge of the bill took a very fair position. I think if the Conservative executive, the member for the district, or the defeated candidates are to make the recommendations with respect to the filling of positions the government ought to let that fact be known. Otherwise, I may have to vote that the bill go back into committee.

Hon. C. H. CAHAN (Secretary of State): The letter which the hon. member has shown to me does not deal with federal affairs. I cannot deal with Ontario political affairs, because I am not responsible therefor in any way.

Mr. HEENAN: But the minister will see—

Mr. CAHAN: Therefore, the complaints made in this letter, which I am not allowed to read to the house, are complaints of which I cannot take cognizance.

With regard to the bill now before the house, it provides that the preference established by section 29 of the Civil Service Act, that is, the preference granted in favour of the persons mentioned therein, shall be applied in respect of appointments to such positions. That preference is reaffirmed and reincorporated into the amending bill. I have not the slightest doubt that the members and officials of the government who will carry this measure into effect will give due consideration to the statutory enactment of the parliament of Canada, to which the ministers of the crown who administer the act are responsible. That is all I can say.

The house divided on the amendment (Mr. Garland, Bow River), which was negatived on the following division:

WAYS AND MEANS

CUSTOMS TARIFF AMENDMENT

Mr. E. N. RHODES (Minister of Finance) moved the second reading of Bill No. 95, to amend the Customs Tariff.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Carried.

Mr. YOUNG: Mr. Speaker, I move that the house do now revert to motions.

Mr. SPEAKER: The house has already by resolution proceeded from motions to orders of the day, and I do not think it can undo what it has done in that respect, at this sitting. The second reading of Bill No. 95 was carried.

Motion agreed to and bill read the second time.

Mr. RHODES: I move, Mr. Speaker, that you do now leave the chair for the house to go into committee on Bill No. 95.

Motion agreed to, and the house went into committee, Mr. LaVergne in the chair.

Bill considered in committee, reported, read the third time and passed.

INCOME WAR TAX ACT AMENDMENT

Hon. E. N. RHODES (Minister of Finance) moved the second reading of Bill No. 96, to amend the Income War Tax Act.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Is this the bill that proposes the two per cent excise?

Mr. RHODES: No, this is the income tax bill.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I beg your pardon; I had not heard the title.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time, considered in committee, read the third time and passed.

SPECIAL WAR REVENUE ACT

Hon. E. N. RHODES (Minister of Finance) moved the second reading of Bill No. 102, to amend the Special War Revenue Act.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time, and the house went into committee thereon, Mr. LaVergne in the chair.

On section 1—Part III repealed and re-enacted.

Mr. CAYLEY: Mr. Chairman, I should like to refer again to the matter of the taxation of net insurance premiums. I referred to this matter yesterday and the minister asked me to defer my remarks until the bill was before the committee. It seems to me that there is some injustice in taxing the net premiums of foreign companies doing business in Canada two per cent, while the net premiums of Canadian companies are taxed only one per cent. I can understand that the government may have in mind the fact that these foreign companies do considerable business in Canada, but I remind the minister that the premiums paid to foreign companies are paid by Canadian policyholders. This is actually a tax upon Canadian policyholders. I think the government had in mind the New England mutuals which do business on a small premium, perhaps the smallest of any company operating in that class, but I think these companies are to be commended for the splendid methods they have adopted in the carrying on of business. They endeavour not only to pay fire losses but to prevent fires. They have an organization of inspectors and expert engineers who are continually on the job doing what they can by way of advising factory owners how to improve their premises and reduce fire hazards. I bring this matter to the attention of the minister because I think my previous remarks, I believe on the resolution, might have been misunderstood. These companies are called foreign companies, yet they are doing Canadian business just the same as the Canadian companies.

Mr. RHODES: I do not think that this tax in actual practice will prove to be an unfair burden on the foreign companies because it must be borne in mind that these companies carry a select class of risks. In the main their premiums are very small and the yield of the two per cent tax will not be comparable to the yield of the one per cent tax in the case of Canadian companies. I point out to my hon. friend that if Canadian policyholders do not desire to pay the two per cent tax, they can insure in companies where they will have to pay only one per cent. Another argument in favour of this tax, and one which I think demonstrates that there is no discrimination against these companies, is the fact that they have no office staff, they support no taxpayers in the form of employees and pay no income tax whereas, on the other hand, the Canadian companies do all these things. I understand that the foreign companies have not taken any exception to this tax, and I think that is the best evidence that in their judgment they feel they have not been discriminated against. I have no recollection of any complaint coming in on this score so I must assume under these circumstances that there is a reasonable acceptance to the tax on the part of the companies in question.

Sections 2 to 11 inclusive agreed to.

On section 12—Excise tax of three per cent on duty paid value.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Under this section the special excise tax of one per cent imposed by the act of last year is increased to three per cent. I wish to repeat what has been said frequently, that this tax really is an increase of duty, that there is in reality an increase of three per cent in the customs tariff on everything except a few articles enumerated in the schedule. In delivering his budget speech, the Minister of Finance took no little credit to himself and the government for not having imposed any increased duties this session. Had he been in the chamber when I was delivering my speech I would have drawn his attention specifically, as in fact I mentioned particularly, that in that statement he was entirely mistaken, that, as a matter of fact, the government this session by increasing the excise tax, which is a customs tariff from one to three per cent, had raised all existing duties higher by two per cent. May I say to my hon. friend that the effect of this increase will be to make still more difficult trade between this country and other parts of the British Empire and other portions of the world. As the Minister of Finance well knows, the present rate of duty is prohibitive on a very large number of articles, and on those on which it is not prohibitive this increase of three per cent will have the effect of making trade practically prohibitive.

This is May 24, known as Empire day, Victoria day. I desire to make a special appeal to the minister and the ministry on this Empire day on behalf of trade within the empire, and to request the minister to consider favourably exempting, so far as this so called excise tax is concerned, all commodities coming into Canada from any other part of the British Empire. That would be extending a preference of at least three per cent to all the other parts of the British Empire upon goods imported therefrom into Canada. It would not lead to any great inflow of commodities, because there would still remain the very high duties which have already been imposed against Great Britain and the other dominions by the lessening of the preference which has taken place since the present administration has come into office. Coming on the eve of the Imperial economic conference, it would be a gesture which would go very far in the way of indicating an attitude of approach, of good will, which might have very valuable effects when the conference meets in this city.

The Minister of Finance has intimated that this tax is intended for revenue purposes. As I said yesterday, it really is a tax which will have the effect of lessening the revenue that is now being obtained from goods that come into Canada from other countries, because it will make still more difficult the importation of goods. He can derive revenue only upon commodities which enter this country. Furthermore, it is a tax upon the Canadian people; the consumers in Canada are the ones who will have to bear, I imagine, the whole burden of the tax. I do not think any foreign country or any other part of the British Empire will bear any appreciable portion of it; it will be just one more burden added to those which the already overburdened taxpayers in this country have to bear.

May I take advantage of speaking at the moment on this subject of customs duties to say to my hon. friend that if the Imperial conference is to result in any increase of trade between the different parts of the British Empire, it will not be by merely taking one, two, three or four per cent off some of the already existng high rates of duty, and leaving duties that are still very largely, if not wholly, prohibitive. It will only be by the government realizing that trade is what this country needs at the present time and that trade to any appreciable extent can take place only as there is both import and export trade. The late Right Hon. Joseph Chamberlain, who was a strong advocate and by some designated the father of certain forms of proposed preference within the empire, as long as thirty years ago, made very clear what he had in mind concerning the advantages to inter-empire trade, and in other respects, which, would accrue from the preference, and how alone those advantages could be obtained. I shall read just one statement made by the late Mr. Chamberlain, which has an important bearing upon what I am now discussing, and more particularly upon what the government will have very carefully to consider in connection with the forthcoming Imperial economic conference. The statement was made in 1902 and is as follows:

> The very valuable experience which we have derived from the history of the Canadian tariff shows that, while we may most readily and most gratefully accept from you any preference which you may be willing voluntarily to accord to us, we cannot bargain with you for it, we cannot pay you for it, unless you go much further and enable us to enter your home market on terms of greater equality. . . . So long as a preferential tariff, even a munificent preference, is still sufficiently protective to exclude us altogether, or nearly so, from your markets, it is no satisfaction to us that you have imposed even greater disability upon the same goods if they come from foreign markets.

That statement is as applicable to conditions to-day as it was at the time it was made by the late Mr. Joseph Chamberlain. If my hon. friends hope to encourage trade between different parts of the empire, and particularly between Great Britain and Canada, as we on this side all hope they may succeed in doing, they will have to abandon their so-called "Canada first" policy, based as it is upon the idea that no goods are to come into this country which can be produced or manufactured here, and that the only preference which will be given will be one over and above a tariff which is sufficiently high to prevent any kind of competition with goods that are produced or manufactured in Canada. Because there is a wholesome element of competition, it does not mean that the industries of this country are thereby going to suffer. It rather means that they will have to put on an extra spurt, and in the end probably be more efficient than they otherwise would have been. So I think that at the moment the minister has an opportunity to do what he himself and other members of the government have been saying they would like to do, namely, have Canada set an example to the empire, and through the empire to the world. No better occasion could be chosen for such an example than this Empire day. If it were not that the rules of the house make it impossible for me to move an amendment to delete the application of this tax so far as other parts of the British Empire are concerned, I would move that amendment at this time, but as my hon. friend knows better than anyone else, inasmuch as the revenues might be affected thereby, and he says that they would be, a motion to that effect from this side of the house would be out of order; it would, however, not be out of order for him as minister to have one of his colleagues move to exempt from the operation of the tax all goods imported into Canada from different parts of the empire, and I hope that he will do that.

In speaking on this section may I mention one other phase of this matter. I confess that I have found it very difficult to understand what was really in the minds of the ministry with respect to this particular excise tax so called. I cannot think of it as a revenue tax because I feel that if the ministry really wanted to get revenue by means of the customs tariff they would make a tariff for revenue. They would not add to a tariff that is already very high, a rate of duty that makes a still higher protectionist tariff. So I cannot accept, as freely and as fully as I should like to be able to do, the idea that this tax is really intended in the long run to be one for revenue purposes solely and that the revenue to be derived from it is to be intended to form part of the general revenue that goes into the consolidated revenue fund to be drawn on for any purpose that may be legal in that connection.

The thought has occurred to me that possibly along with statesmen in other parts of the British Empire the ministry may have in mind the creation of something in the nature of an imperial zollverein, and in connection therewith the organization of a fund which will be used for the purposes of so-called "development" within the empire. As my hon. friend knows, a certain school of imperialists have always advocated that there should be thrown around the British Empire a tax that would apply to foreign countries but would not apply to commodities imported by different parts of the empire from other parts of the empire. Such a scheme would be in the nature of an imperial zollverein. They have thought that such a scheme to a certain extent at least would appear to the rest of the world as an outward and visible sign of the unity and completeness of the empire as a fiscal entity. In one form or another, it has long been suggested that some particular tax should be earmarked for development or other specific purposes within the empire. I think the proposal was first put forward in connection with imperial defence, that every part of the empire should contribute one or two or three per cent of its revenues or revenue to be derived from some special source for the purpose of the development of imperial defence. When that idea did not find favour in different parts of the empire, the idea was put forward of a similar development fund for the purpose of imperial organization so-called. There is now the suggestion that a central fund for the purposes of imperial development should be started.

I shall not take up time to quote from authorities, but I have in my hand a copy of The Dalhousie Review, which is a publication issued in the home city of my hon. friend the Minister of Finance. It may serve as an example. It contains, as its first article in the January, 1932, issue, an article by Sir Robert Hadfield, entitled the Economic Development of Empire, and at page 428 I find the following paragraph which embodies the idea I have been seeking to disclose. Sir Robert Hadfield says:

> I have come to the conclusion that in connection with this super-organization of empire development we should have an imperial development fund of very considerable magnitude to be raised and used under practical arrangement with our overseas kinsmen, for the sole purpose of developing all our wealth-creating opportunities. Further, I propose that an empire development board be formed, which must include representatives from all parts of the empire, and possess a permanent organization in each country. This body should meet far more frequently than the Imperial conference, and should hold session in Great Britain and in the dominions in rotation, so that every member should get first-hand the opportunity of experiences of the conditions, requirements and possibilities of different parts of the empire.

If at the forthcoming economic conference a proposal should be put forward for the creation of some central fund which will be at the disposition of a central organization, I hope that my hon. friend and those who are associated with him will weigh very carefully all the arguments which have been presented in the past against any scheme of centralization as an effective means of holding the British Empire together. I believe that the British Empire has a foundation that is impregnable so long as we firmly maintain, in connection with the affairs of each of the self-governing parts of the empire, the conception of fiscal autonomy, along with all other forms of autonomy which we now so completely enjoy. But to surrender something, however small, which will in the least restrict the freedom of the self-governing dominions in their trade negotiations with other countries, or which will occasion a sense of restraint as to the obligations which in a fiscal way are binding as between the different parts of the empire would, I fear, have the opposite effect from that desired by those who wish to see the British Empire continue to grow in unity and strength as the years go by. I will quote in connection with the opinion I have here expressed the words of one whose name in these matters should carry a good deal in the way of authority with hon. gentlemen opposite. I have here a quotation from Sir John Willison's Life of Sir Wilfrid Laurier. Referring to a statement which the late Mr. Joseph Chamberlain had made as to the only form of zollverein Mr. Chamberlain thought would be of any real service to the British Empire, the author gives his opinion, which may be regarded as expert opinion, of the effect of any zollverein upon the development of the British Empire. The statement of Mr. Joseph Chamberlain, to which Sir John Willison refers, is as follows:

> I believe the only form that would meet with the slightest favour would be an imperial zollverein, in which there would be free trade between the portions of the empire and duties as against strangers.

Sir John Willison at page 307 of his Life of Laurier says:

> It is necessary to add, at the risk of misunderstanding, that it is not easy to conceive a zollverein arrangement that will not restrict the freedom of the colonies—

Colonies they were called at that time, now dominions:

> —and tend with changing circumstances to produce irritation and unrest; and that the trade relations between Great Britain and the colonies will probably be better controlled by concurrent legislation than by a joint tariff.

I submit that that paragraph is one deserving of very careful consideration by members of the ministry who will be representing Canada at the forthcoming Imperial economic conference. The conception of a zollverein that Joseph Chamberlain had was a tax that would operate as against foreign countries, but to be of any value it would have to be accompanied by complete free trade within the British Empire itself. I do not assume that the present ministry will consider at the forthcoming conference any development of trade on the basis of free trade within the empire. They have said over and over again that they would not. On the other hand, I do think from the statements made by the Prime Minister in England, and made in this house since, that it is quite conceivable that what the government is not prepared to consider on a free trade basis they may have in mind seeking to bring about on a "Canada first" basis, on a protectionist basis instead of on a free trade basis. In other words, it is conceivable that they will seek to have the British Empire develop on the basis of each of its self-governing parts having protective tariffs so high as to make impossible the importation of goods that are produced or manufactured by itself, and that they will seek to exclude foreign goods by raising still higher the existing tariff against foreign countries. That would be an imperial zollverein on the basis of high protection. A policy of that kind I believe would be fatal not only to trade within the empire but fatal to the future development of the empire in other respects, and I think this is the best moment at which to give expression to that view.

I repeat again, I hope my hon. friend will to-day, on Empire day, make at least a gesture of an attitude which really means that the government desires to see trade within the British Empire furthered through the reduction of duties in a way which will permit of the flow of commodities into this country, to be accompanied by a similar flow from this country into all other parts of the empire. I hope the minister will give us some assurance that at least something of the kind is in the minds of the ministry, or, better still, that at the approaching conference they may have something of the kind to propose.

Mr. RHODES: I am quite sure that the right hon. leader of the opposition will not misunderstand me if I do not at this stage of the session attempt to reply to him at length, or that on the other hand he will not take exception if my reply is quite brief.

I am at one with my right hon. friend when he expresses a desire for trade within the empire. I do not think he need have any misapprehension that it is in the mind of the government to erect a wall, as it were, around the empire, for the exclusion of trade with the rest of the world. While I have always been a strong advocate personally of empire trade, and I believe much can be accomplished for the benefit of the different dominions through the stimulus of empire trade, I have never understood that that meant that we were to trade exclusively within the empire and that it was to prevent us from trading with the world at large.

I have read the article by Sir Robert Hadfield in the Dalhousie Review to which my right hon. friend referred, and I hasten to assure him that whatever merits or demerits may attach to the three per cent tax, it has no reference whatever to a revolving fund which is designed to be an adjunct to an empire zollverein. As a matter of fact, I think my right hon. friend has some misgiving upon the point. I beg to assure him there is nothing in the minds of the government with respect to the three per cent excise tax upon imports other than a desire to raise revenue. My right hon. friend has said the three per cent excise tax is a tax upon the people of this country; in great part, that is so. It does not always follow however, that the importer pays the tax. It is true that the importer goes to the customs house and takes out the goods; he goes through the physical act of paying money into the customs for the goods he takes out. It happens in many instances however that the tax is actually borne by the exporter. The mere fact that we have to apply the dump in certain instances is evidence of that fact.

May I point out to my right hon. friend, that whether this is a good or a bad tax the fact remains that the treasury of this country is in need of funds. We must raise revenue from some source, and if we do not raise it in this way we will raise it in some other way. In the last analysis the only money which comes into the treasury comes through taxation. That point therefore I do not think has any very marked bearing upon the argument. I can add very little, probably nothing, to what I said last night in reply to my right hon. friend with respect to the three per cent tax. Certainly I do not think it can be properly regarded as an added impost by way of customs when it is applicable to those commodities which are duty free. No one would suggest for a moment that a three per cent customs tariff would be any barrier worthy of consideration.

Mr. LAPOINTE: But it is added to the tariff.

Mr. RHODES: Yes; upon all goods in connection with which there exists an impost, and to which is added the excise tax, my right hon. friend's argument would have bearing. I would add, however, that it is applied to duty free goods. Furthermore I can add only what I said yesterday, namely that I do not think the other dominions within the empire have regarded this impost other than as a revenue tax.

Arising from the remarks of my right hon. friend, only one other thought occurs to me, and that is to assure him that if we enter the Imperial economic conference, as I think we all ought to enter it, with a desire in our hearts not to drive a bargain but to enter into undertakings which will be mutually advantageous—

Mr. LAPOINTE: Hear, hear.

Mr. RHODES: —we will be serving this country best. I think that is the attitude in which we are prepared to enter the conference. After conversations, if it is found that the three per cent tax requires further consideration I have not the slightest hesitation in saying to my right hon. friend that the government is not wedded to it, other than as a necessity of the moment, as a means of taxation.

Mr. BROWN: I should like to have an explanation so that hon. members may know the meaning of the section. It says that there will be an excise tax of three per cent on the duty paid value. I presume that means that in the case of an article valued at $100 already bearing a tariff of 35 per cent the tax will be levied upon the $100 plus the $35, making it an equivalent to a four per cent tax on the invoice price of the goods. That seems to be the only construction which could be placed upon the wording. Does "duty paid value" mean the duty set forth in the Customs Act, and not dumping duties which may be added. I think we may very readily conceive that if the policy which has been put into force by this government is followed—that of raising duties by order in council, and levying dumping duties to such an extent that they exclude trade altogether—and the tax is paid on such goods, a very high tax may be the result.

Mr. RHODES: The hon. member for Lisgar will find a definition of "duty paid value" if he will turn to section 85 of the Special War Revenue Act. At that place the definition is as follows:

> "Duty paid value" shall mean the value of the article as it would be determined for the purpose of calculating an ad valorem duty upon the importation of such articles into Canada under the laws relating to the customs and the customs tariff whether such article be in fact subject to ad valorem or other duty or not, and in addition the amount of the custom duties, if any, payable thereon: Provided that in computing the "duty paid value" of tea purchased in bond in Great Britain—

And so on. I think that paragraph clearly defines the term about which the hon. member has asked. I would say to him however that the three per cent excise tax upon imports is not applied to the valuation created by the dump.

Mr. ELLIOTT: I wish to direct a question to the minister with regard to the tax on telephone calls. As I understand it there is a general tax of six per cent. Does that apply to all calls, whether or not they are under twenty-five cents?

Mr. RHODES: Yes.

Mr. ELLIOTT: Does that mean that on a twenty cent call there would be a tax of six per cent?

Mr. RHODES: Yes.

Mr. ELLIOTT: And on a twenty-five cent call there would be a tax of five cents?

Mr. RHODES: No; the tax of six per cent is applicable upon customers' accounts. That is to say, at the end of each month their long distance bill will be subject to a six per cent tax. The five cent tax applies to public pay stations, whether or not they have attendants. obviously at those places the sales tax would not be applied.

Mr. ELLIOTT: I take it, then, that on a local telephone call where connection with some other telephone company is necessary, and there is a charge of say, ten cents, there would be a six per cent levy thereon.

Mr. RHODES: Yes; if that ten per cent charge is on a long distance call, there would be a tax of six cents on ten such calls.

Mr. ELLIOTT: I should like to urge upon the minister the fact that great hardship will be suffered by the people who are operating and patronizing local telephone stations. If there is to be a tax on calls on which the charges are only ten cents or fifteen cents, calls coming within the definition of "long distance calls" as described in the act, a great deal of bookkeeping will be necessary and very little revenue will be derived. The tax would be a nuisance to the people conducting telephone systems, and will constitute just that much more burden upon those who have to pay it. I am wondering if the minister would not consider eliminating taxes on telephone calls, unless the charges are over twenty-five cents, or even fifteen cents.

Mr. RHODES: I may state to the committee with the utmost frankness that the method I had in mind in the first instance was to tax no message under 25 cents, and then make it a graded tax. But the telephone companies themselves pointed out to me that this would bring about unequal taxation and would cause them more difficulty than would be the case if we applied the straight 6 per cent tax to monthly accounts. That idea had not occurred to me; it arose from a decision arrived at during a convention in Winnipeg. The suggestion was made the other evening, in committee on the resolution, that even in the case of the 6 per cent tax it ought not to apply except to messages over a certain amount. The companies pointed out to me that to attempt to carry this out would double the cost of collection to the company, and they stated that the cheapest, the simplest and the most effective method was the one which they suggested, that is, the 6 per cent tax.

Of course all taxation is a burden, but there is this to be said, that in the case of a 25 cent call made by a subscriber his tax would be 1½ cents, which is not an excessive sum. On the other hand, if you started out with a 5 cent tax on a 25 cent call the burden would be much more excessive. I admit that in the rural districts where conditions are not at all good every additional cent of taxation is a burden; but the difficulty in the imposition of a tax of this kind is to avoid some hardships, however slight they may be. I do not know conditions in the area in which my hon. friend lives, but I can speak of conditions in my native province, where there are many rural telephone lines owned by the farmers themselves, in many instances covering very wide areas. Those who use these lines will not pay any tax at all, because they have no long distance calls. When they install their telephone they have the run of the entire countryside covered by the system, so they at least will be spared. In any attempt to impose a tax such as this it will be found to impinge at some point, but taking it on the whole I think this is the fairest and most equitable method, which will result in the fewest injustices. At all events, after having had the tax in force for a year we will know a great deal more about it than we know now, and if we find that my hon. friend's fears were well founded we can remedy the situation next session.

Mr. ELLIOTT: I have here a resolution, of which no doubt my hon. friend has received a copy, from the Canadian Independent Telephone Association protesting against this six per cent charge. I was surprised to hear my hon. friend say that no objections to the tax have been raised by the telephone association. I know that in the section of Ontario from which I come there is the strongest objection, first as to the additional burden that is being imposed and also as to the difficulty of working it out on telephone messages where the charges are small, such as I have referred to. I do think it would not affect the revenue materially, and it would save a great deal of trouble, if my hon. friend could see his way clear to exempting from that tax even telephone calls costing less than 15 cents.

At one o'clock the committee took recess.

The committee resumed at three o'clock.

Mr. ELLIOTT: Just before the committee rose we were discussing the question of taxes on telephone calls of 15 cents or under. I hoped I had the minister practically converted to the idea that the cost of upkeep in connection with the levying of a tax on 15 cent calls, which would be about nine-tenths of one cent each at the six per cent rate, would amount to as much as the total taxes that would be collected as a result of this imposition. I would again urge upon the minister that this falls upon a class who are at the present time carrying about all they can bear in the way of taxes, and in many cases a little more. It will cause a good deal of friction and difficulty, and it cannot possibly bring much revenue. I was going to suggest to the minister that possibly he might see his way clear to do something in connection with the proviso in subsection 2 of section 25 of the act:

Provided further that the tax imposed by this subsection shall in no case be greater than 25 cents on any one call.

He might add, provided also that no tax shall be imposed on calls of 15 cents or less.

Mr. RHODES: Before the adjournment hour my hon. friend, inadvertently, I am sure, quoted me as having said something which certainly I did not intend to say, and which I do not think I said. If I remember correctly, he said that I had stated that no companies objected to this tax. I did not say that. What I said was that this form of taxation had been put forward because of representations made by companies. As regards the cost of administration, the telephone companies assured me that the method which is proposed in this measure is the one which will be most convenient, least expensive, and least difficult to handle. I do not assert my own views as of any value, but I may say that I approached the subject with an open mind. My idea was solely to tap a source of additional revenue. I do not think the fears of my hon. friend will be justified if the bill is passed in its present form, either as regards difficulty in collection or as regards the burden imposed. While, perhaps, it would be desirable from many points of view to exempt messages which pay a low toll, on the other hand, they are messages in respect to which the taxation is very light indeed. So that whatever method may be suggested, we are bound to encounter difficulties. I am satisfied, however, that on the whole the legislation which is now before the committee presents the minimum of difficulty.

Mr. MARCIL: Some time ago I had the pleasure of sending on to the minister a communication from the Gaspe and Bonaventure Telephone Company, a local concern operating in the counties of Gaspe and Bonaventure, connecting with the New Brunswick system at Campbellton. They object to the tax on small tolls. Under the present system, if you telephone to a municipality adjoining the one in which you reside you have to pay a toll, but I understand that if a user is charged a toll of one dollar he has to pay six per cent.

Mr. RHODES: Yes.

Mr. MARCIL: He may telephone six times at fifteen cents a call and pay only six cents.

Mr. RHODES: Yes. If he had 10 ten cent messages the tax would be six cents.

Mr. NICHOLSON: Can the minister give me an interpretation of what long distance calls might mean in circumstances like the following? I understood the minister to say this morning, with regard to local telephone organizations in his own province of Nova Scotia, covering a wide area, that there would be no long distance charge because of the fact that the citizens themselves controlled the system. They were local telephone companies with no outside or long distance connection. In the district of northern Ontario there are six or seven local township telephone organizations. The farmers themselves and the citizens in the villages group together into a small local system and there is a company that unites the whole group on Manitoulin island exclusively. One township connects with another through this non-metallic line, I may say. They have no chance of connecting with the Bell, no possible connection except in that district. Would a call from one township circuit to another township circuit by this company line come under the tax of six per cent in respect of calls of ten cents or fifteen cents, in one township or the other, as the case may be.

Mr. HEENAN: I have a letter from the commissioners of a system similar to the telephone system to which my hon. friend has referred. Along the Rainy river there are quite a number of municipalities and they all practically own their own little telephone systems, all of them being joined in a larger rural organization. A message from one of these municipalities to another some distance away would be regarded as a long distance telephone call; it is so now. These people are poor farmers who are clearing jack pine lots. They would not mind paying on a long distance call to Winnipeg, a distance of 200 miles, but when they communicate from one municipality to another, going through each other's exchange, it is hardly fair to burden the residents in that part of the country with the extra taxation. The letter is signed by A. Sutton, secretary of the municipality of Chapple. I thought I would bring this matter up, and perhaps the minister can give me an answer when he replies to the hon. member for East Algoma.

Mr. RHODES: As I understood it, if the annual charge which the individual subscriber pays for telephone use permits the unlimited use of that telephone, within the circuit owned by the company, no matter how far it may go, how wide an area it may cover, then none of these messages would be subject to the tax. But if the subscriber is called upon, by reason of connection with other companies, to pay what is known as a long distance toll, then that long distance toll would be subject to the tax. I cannot speak with regard to the situation on Manitoulin island; I shall have to make a more careful inquiry. It would be impossible to give a correct interpretation with regard to an individual district. If that is what is known as a municipal owned line and the subscribers have the unlimited use of the service, then they would not be subject to the tax, but if it involves an additional charge when they connect up with another area, the tax would be imposed.

Mr. SPOTTON: Mr. Chairman, I desire to express my appreciation of the change the minister has made. I think it is a very fair arrangement but I agree with the hon. member for West Middlesex (Mr. Elliott) when he says that you can scarcely call a ten cent toll a long distance feeder charge. I have in mind certain farmers' telephone companies who have their centrals located out in the townships. In some cases these centrals are six miles or more from the marketing towns. A line goes into town to connect up with the Bell telephone and there is generally a charge of five or ten cents for this connection. I do not think such a call can be called a long distance call. I know there would be probably many difficulties in working this out but I suggest that the minister leave the door open for the officials to use their discretion.

I have one case in mind of a telephone company with its head office in a town of about five thousand. A charge of ten cents is made for a connection with the Bell telephone. These companies are doing a country business which the Bell telephone has refused to do. I had something to do with the formation of a telephone company twenty-five years ago, and I know that at that time the Bell telephone was out to crush every movement for an independent telephone system. However, these companies finally got on their feet and now the Bell Telephone Company sends its representatives around to try to help them out. I am afraid an opportunity will be afforded to the Bell Telephone Company to buy these companies out; it will be another step towards a complete monopoly. If these switching charges and calls to marketing towns could be left out of the definition of a long distance call, I think a great deal of the annoyance would be eliminated. I do not think a ten cent call should be considered a long distance call.

Mr. RHODES: I stated at an earlier period, I think when we were in committee on the resolution, that it was my judgment that a switching or service charge as such would not be subject to the tax. That is my interpretation of the bill, but if the call is what is known in the terminology of the telephone company as a long distance call, then it would be subject to the tax. There may be instances where service charges are not to be confused with long distance charges, and in that regard I can see no difficulty. I may say that if the situation as just outlined can be dealt with administratively there will be no desire on the part of the government to work hardship upon those users to whom my hon. friend has referred.

Mr. SPROULE: Many of these rural lines are owned by the municipalities or are run under private ownership and the Bell Telephone Company will have nothing to do with them except to exchange calls, perhaps for a five cent charge, but this charge is listed as a long distance call. I assume the minister was referring to the Bell telephone people when he said that it would be easier to figure a six per cent tax, but I do not think this company deserves much sympathy. They have lowered salaries but they have not lowered rates, and I think it is about time they should do something to meet the needs of the agricultural people. I would not have so much objection to the tax being applied on calls costing from twenty-five cents up, but I do not think it should be applied to these five-cent exchange calls. Those people who have been economizing to build these rural lines are going to be directly hit by this tax. I can understand the minister's difficulty in raising revenue, but I think he must admit that this tax will cause a great deal of confusion. I suppose the Bell telephone people will expect remuneration for collecting this tax and when they are through with their charges I do not suppose the government will get very much out of it.

Mr. MORAND: There is another phase of this matter to which I should like to refer. The Bell Telephone Company has set up exchanges in the towns ten or fifteen miles out from many cities, and a charge of ten or fifteen cents is made on all calls. Most of the business in these smaller towns is done with the larger cities and although the yearly charge may not be so great, these ten cent charges mount up considerably. These charges are listed on the bills as long distance calls but in my opinion they should not be subject to this tax. These calls are made in the ordinary course of business, because of them the cost of the telephone is very high and if an extra six per cent tax is added it will make the cost exorbitant to these telephone users.

Mr. COOTE: I protest again against this tax and ask the minister if he will not drop it now, and not to entertain the idea of continuing it a year. In Alberta we have a government owned telephone system which is dependent for patronage principally upon the farmers. As everyone knows the farmers have had a very difficult time, the price of wheat having dropped to one-third its former level. The farmer has been advised to go into mixed farming, and many of these farmers are to-day producing more butter and eggs than they ever did before. They are finding great difficulty in paying their telephone bills with eggs at two cents a dozen and butter at thirteen cents a pound, and they will find it still more difficult if the government imposes a tax on telephone charges. These people must put in long distance calls when they want a doctor, hospital or other emergency service. The situation to-day is so bad that many of the farmers have been forced to take out their telephones and those who are endeavouring to retain their telephones should not be penalized at this time with a tax of this nature. It is absolutely foolish for the government at the present time to impose on the Canadian people a tax of this kind. They are in no condition whatever to pay it; the only way in which they can get their money is through the sale of those commodities of which I have spoken. Let me repeat, so that this may sink into the minds of some hon. members: with eggs at two or three cents a dozen at country points, these people cannot pay any more for their telephones than they are now doing, and it is not right for us to tax out of people's homes, those conveniences which they have been at great expense to install. That is what we are doing to-day and I want to protest very vigorously against it.

Mr. RHODES: I do not think a six per cent tax upon telephone tolls will have the effect of taxing telephones out of their homes.

Miss MACPHAIL: Yes, it will.

Mr. RHODES: I am not for a moment suggesting that a six per cent tax is not an additional obligation to be met, but I would ask that the question of the rate be deferred for a little while. I shall revert to it before we take the bill out of committee. I am making some inquiries with respect to the question whether we can meet this situation in an administrative way. If not, I shall endeavour to suggest an amendment which will, I think, meet the great majority of the objections of members of the committee.

Miss MACPHAIL: I could not hear the minister's last statement, but if the six per cent tax still stands, I want to say once again that it is a foolish tax, certainly from the government's point of view. May I point out that it will not endear the government to users of telephones, but the government, of course, must take that risk, no matter where it gets the tax. It is true that farmers are taking out telephones by the score, and this additional cost will persuade many more of them to take out their telephones. This is a very bad thing for the telephone companies, because in my constituency they are at present losing whole lines of telephones, and I presume this is only typical of what is going on in other places. If that is the situation, may I point out to the minister that we are just adding to our unemployment problem. Fewer people will be working on our telephone lines, and the whole process of tightening up business will continue. We take another turn on the spiral downward. Therefore I think this tax is extremely foolish; it will not bring in any appreciable amount of money and it will be irritating to those who have to estimate it, to the farmers and to the telephone companies. I am not sure whether the amount it will bring in will, even from the government's point of view, be worth all the irritation it will cause. I say to the minister quite sincerely: It will undoubtedly increase the number of telephones that will be taken out all over Canada.

Mr. RHODES: I can assure the hon. member for Southeast Grey that the government is labouring under no delusion on the ground of the popularity of either this or any other taxation measure. In fact, I do not know of any tax which is popular. The problem of all governments is to find a tax which may be least objectionable. But my hon. friend did not, I think, hear what I said. I said that I am making inquiries at the moment to see whether we can deal with the matter administratively so that the smaller tolls will not be subject to tax. If we find it cannot be met in that way, before the bill is taken out of committee I shall propose an amendment which, I think, will meet the objection.

Just one other word if I may. This is not a small matter, because the tax is estimated to bring in a minimum of three-quarters of a million dollars a year and in normal times it would bring in more than that.

Mr. ELLIOTT: My hon. friend is not referring to the tax the removal of which we have suggested?

Mr. RHODES: I am referring to the tax on long distance tolls. Whether it is a wise tax or not I cannot say, but our neighbours to the south, in meeting their difficulties, are imposing a similar tax, so we are not breaking new ground.

Mr. BOYES: I wish to make just a few remarks in connection with this tax on telephone calls. I have been interested in the observations made by several speakers in regard to local telephone companies and the transfer charges. I thank the minister for the change which he has made in connection with the tax on telephone calls. In the first place it was suggested that on all telephone calls from fifteen cents upwards we would have a tax of five cents. This is now changed to the present method. But the suggestion that I wish to offer and that, I believe, might be in some respects a solution, is that we eliminate the tax on all calls up to possibly twenty-five or thirty cents. It has been suggested that the exemption should be even higher than that. I understand now that the proposition is that calls amounting to fifteen cents and upwards shall all be taxed at the rate of six per cent. If we would eliminate from the tax all calls, say up to twenty-five or thirty cents, we might then eliminate those transfer charges which have been mentioned by a number on this side of the house.

Mr. RHODES: As a result of the inquiry I have made, I have not altogether satisfied myself that we can deal with this matter administratively, so I am going to propose an amendment to section 25 to read as follows:

By adding after the word "call" in line 30 on page 7, the words "costing more than fifteen cents."

That will eliminate from a percentage tax all tolls up to and including fifteen cents.

Mr. RYCKMAN: I move accordingly.

The CHAIRMAN: This amendment should come on section 25. We have passed that.

Mr. RHODES: We shall have to move reconsideration. The amendment is to clause 3 of the bill, paragraph 25.

The CHAIRMAN: Mr. Ryckman moves:

That clause 3, paragraph 25, be amended by adding after the word "call" in line 30, the words "costing more than fifteen cents."

Amendment agreed to.

Section as amended agreed to.

On section 12—Excise tax of three per cent on duty paid value.

Mr. NICHOLSON: I should like to draw the attention of the Minister of Finance to another excise matter. In this morning's Ottawa Journal, in the first column on the front page, there is an article headed "Canada stands to lose millions by United States action." The action is to place an excise duty on lumber and copper going from Canada to the United States and this virtually means a prohibition in relation to both of those commodities.

Mr. SPENCER: Reciprocity.

Mr. NICHOLSON: Yes. Before I get through, I intend to suggest reciprocity. As regards copper, we exported to the United States approximately $13,000,000 worth of raw or blistered copper and we imported from the United States in copper rods, copper plate and other lines of manufactured copper, $14,500,000 worth, while at the same time our own copper refineries were standing idle, the one, for instance, at Sudbury. This action of the United States is aimed directly at the Consolidated Mining and Smelting Company of British Columbia, the International Nickel Company of Ontario, and Noranda Mines of Quebec, to make it impossible for them to export their copper to the United States. I would suggest that we place an excise duty on copper entering Canada from the United States which shall be at least equivalent to the excise duty they have placed on Canadian copper entering the United States, and in addition I would put an export duty on nickel, which is produced by some of the companies which are hit by this action on the part of the United States Senate.

Coming to the question of lumber, as I said on Friday evening last, it is true that we have a balance of trade in our favour in lumber as compared with the United States. We exported last year about fifteen million dollars' worth of lumber and imported about six and a half million dollars' worth, but in addition, let me repeat, we imported very much more than our favourable balance amounted to in the way of lumbering equipment, saw-mill machinery, saws, and so forth, from the United States. At the present time lumber is being dumped into Ontario and Quebec, the only market virtually that is left, from Idaho, Wisconsin and Michigan, and it is southern pine, low-grade lumber which is getting the market in Ontario, Quebec, Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and British Columbia to the exclusion of our own Canadian lumber. In addition, within the last ten days or two weeks the American railways have reduced their freight rates from the south and from the west as far west as Idaho to Ontario and Quebec, coming in over the Michigan Central and the Pere Marquette railway, ranging from two to three and a half cents per one hundred pounds, or sixty cents to one dollar per one thousand feet board measure of lumber. When you take into consideration the excise tax also, it means that we are at a disadvantage of from $4.50 to $5.00 per thousand feet board measure. We have mills idle all over Canada and tens of thousands of workmen are idle. The mills in the Ottawa valley and in northern Ontario and northern Quebec are standing idle.

Mr. RHODES: I must ask my hon. friend from East Algoma to excuse me but I must rise to a point of order. If my hon. friend is to have the right to indulge in a debate which ought to be made either upon the budget or on a motion to go into supply every hon. member of this house will have that right. I submit that whatever merit there may be in my hon. friend's argument, and I am not questioning the merits in the slightest degree, he is dealing entirely with matters of tariffs. The bill before us has no reference to tariffs. It deals with taxation. It is a bill to raise revenue, and my hon. friend I am sure will not think me disrespectful if I do not reply to the argument he has made. It will be quite competent for him to make his argument at a later stage on a motion to go into supply, but by no stretch of imagination can it be brought within the four corners of this bill and much less of the section we are now dealing with, and it is only fair to the committee, Mr. Chairman, that I should bring that to your attention.

Mr. NICHOLSON: I have no desire to transgress the rules of the house but I submit that what I am dealing with is strictly an excise matter because I am dealing with the excise tax on our products entering the United States. I submit further that the right hon. leader of the opposition before the adjournment at one o'clock spoke for forty minutes and discussed everything within the scope of tariffs and taxation, the Imperial conference and arrangements that might be made for an interchange of commodities not only within the empire but with the outside world as well. However, I am content to leave the matter for the present until the house goes into supply, but I shall bring it before the house before prorogation.

Section agreed to.

On section 13—Monthly returns of taxable sales.

Mr. EULER: I notice that by subsection 3 the penalty has been reduced from twenty-five to ten dollars. What is the reason for that?

Mr. RHODES: There is no reduction, but a minimum penalty is fixed.

Mr. EULER: I note that the explanation on page 16 of the bill says that the section has been further amended to provide a minimum penalty of ten dollars instead of a maximum penalty of not more than twenty-five dollars.

Mr. RHODES: Discretion is left to the magistrate to impose a penalty ranging from ten to one hundred dollars.

Bill reported.

Mr. RHODES moved the third reading of the bill.

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Leader of the Opposition): Just before the bill is read the third time, Mr. Speaker, I should like to make another appeal to my hon. friend the Minister of Finance (Mr. Rhodes) and through him to the ministry with respect to considering if even yet it might not be possible to exempt from this special excise tax or customs tax, as it really is, goods being imported into Canada from other parts of the British Empire, thereby making self-evident to all parts of the empire and to the world at large the desire of our country to further inter-imperial trade by preferences. May I say to the government that "now's the day and now's the hour." This is Empire day. We are in the last hours of the session, and we are on the eve of an Imperial economic conference. Action of the kind taken by the government at this time would, I submit, create a very favourable atmosphere for the purposes of the conference and would be furthering in a concrete manner the introduction and extension of the preference.

There is one other aspect which I should like to call to the attention of hon. gentlemen opposite. There could be no finer evidence of the unanimous desire of members of all political parties in this House of Commons to further the development of trade within the empire by preferences than an action of that kind. I am sure if the ministry found it possible to take that step all hon. members on this side would support them, heartily. There would go out to all parts of the empire to-day, a declaration from this parliament, that all parties were united on a policy of empire preference, all united in action taken by the government which would give preference to all parts of the British empire. If done, it would anticipate as well the atmosphere which we hope will prevail while the conference is in session.

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Prime Minister): As the Minister of Finance (Mr. Rhodes) has already spoken in moving the third reading of the bill, I think it is perhaps appropriate for me to make a few observations. Those of us who have followed the proceedings in this house; those of us who followed the speeches throughout the recess of the right hon. gentleman who has just spoken, will realize that a very short word of four letters would describe the utterances to which we have just listened. But I shall not use that word; it may not sound well in this parliament. Those of us who read the speech delivered at Barrie, and the speech delivered at Winnipeg, and the utterances delivered in this house know just how much value to attach to the observations to which we have just listened. This gesture—this fine talk—this—

An hon. MEMBER: Say what you mean.

Mr. BENNETT: I shall say exactly what I mean. It is just calculated for external consumption, in the hope that someone may cable it to some newspapers, and have it noised throughout the world. Everybody in the house knows it; there is not a single member of this house who does not know it. Because, to rise on the third reading of a customs tariff bill and make a suggestion of that kind is only open to one construction. We are all familiar with it. The government has no intention at this stage of changing the policy which the Minister of Finance presented with his budget to this house, which has not only passed the resolution but has passed the bill now standing for third reading. And when it stands for third reading we have a repetition of what has been said at least three times in my hearing—I do not know how many times before—and there is an effort to add strength to it by repeating it. Does anyone think, anyone who is a serious member of this house—does a single hon. member think that the remarks of the right hon. gentleman are for any purpose but the hope of impressing someone?

Mr. LAPOINTE: It is a great answer.

Mr. BENNETT: But it is a true answer.

Mr. LAPOINTE: What a spectacle.

Mr. BENNETT: It is based on fact, and it seems to have disturbed the mind of the ex-Minister of Justice whose speeches in this house with respect to the empire are so edifying, but whose speeches made elsewhere are not so edifying. There has not been a single moment since this conference was suggested that hon. gentlemen opposite have not in every way in their power belittled it. They followed that course until they found it was an actuality. Now, confronted with the fact that it is an actuality they are endeavouring to make political capital out of it. The people of this country have intelligence; they understand. Everybody understands it, and everybody who reads the press reports understands it. If it is the desire of the right hon. gentleman, for the tenth time, to enter into a long discussion, to prostitute the glorious traditions of a great holiday for the purpose of making political capital out of it, I am content. No one believes for a moment that it accomplishes anything. The government in introducing this measure must have given some consideration to it; the Minister of Finance must have understood it when he presented it to this house. The budget was voted upon, and the number of votes recorded must give at least some indication of the general attitude of mind in this house and in the country.

Now, on the third reading, it is suggested that a change be made. No such change is contemplated; if it had been it would have been made before the bill was introduced. Having passed through this house, first as resolutions and now as a bill it will stand for third reading. Of course it will go through as it is, as it has been adopted by the house, without change.

Hon. ERNEST LAPOINTE (Quebec East): Mr. Speaker, I sincerely hope the people of Canada will read the answer the right hon. gentleman has just delivered.

Mr. BENNETT: So do I, so do I.

Mr. LAPOINTE: His remarks have been made in reply to a suggestion by the leader of the opposition that Canada should follow the example of Great Britain at the present time, before the Imperial economic conference, and exempt from this additional taxation on imports the products which might come from Great Britain or from the other dominions. The suggestion has been to follow Great Britain's plan with regard to products from Canada. My right hon. friend the Prime Minister has not given a single reason why this should not be done. He has merely thrown a heap of abuse on the head of the right hon leader of the opposition.

Mr. BENNETT: Hear, hear.

Mr. LAPOINTE: I myself have not been free from the lecture by the Prime Minister. Let me tell him only this, that after listening to his vituperations of to-day—

Mr. MOTHERWELL: That is the word.

Mr. LAPOINTE: —no one could wonder at the qualification applied to him two years ago by a member of the British government.

Mr. BENNETT: That is the reason we are having the conference.

Mr. LAPOINTE: If my right hon. friend opposite attends the Imperial economic conference in the same spirit he has exhibited to-day, and the same spirit exhibited two years ago, I am afraid it will be a failure.

Mr. BENNETT: You hope so, anyway.

Mr. LAPOINTE: I only hope that my right hon. friend will stabilize his nerves a little bit during the next two months and that he will be in a better position to speak intelligently and reasonably on the great problems with which he will be confronted.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Carried.

Mr. LAPOINTE: We will not stand this abuse any more.

Mr. BENNETT: I would not, if I were you.

Mr. LAPOINTE: And I won't.

Motion agreed to, and bill read the third time and passed.

MONTREAL HARBOUR COMMISSION

Hon. ALFRED DURANLEAU (Minister of Marine) moved the second reading of Bill No. 98, to amend the Montreal Harbour Commissioners' Act, 1894.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time, and the house went into committee thereon, Mr. LaVergne in the chair.

On section 1—Harbour property vested in crown.

Mr. COOTE: Will the minister say a few words in explanation of the bill?

Mr. DURANLEAU: On the first reading I gave a brief explanation, but if my hon. friend so desires I shall be very happy to supplement it. The object of the bill is to vest in the crown all the properties belonging to the harbour commissioners of Montreal. I refer to all those properties within and outside of the limits of the harbour of Montreal. Both shores of the St. Lawrence river are within the limits of the Montreal harbour. A few years ago, to cope with the developing trade, the harbour commissioners were obliged to extend their facilities beyond the harbour limits; for instance, the extension of No. 3 elevator is outside the boundaries of the harbour. By its original act, 57 and 58 Victoria, chapter 48, sections 20 and 21, the harbour commission of Montreal has the right to expropriate property outside its limits in order to extend its facilities. At present all the facilities within the limits are vested in the crown, and the purpose of this bill is to remove the anomaly of the facilities outside the limits being vested in the harbour commission.

Mr. GARDINER: Is there legislation limiting the area of the harbour?

Mr. DURANLEAU: Yes.

Mr. GARDINER: Are the limits defined therein?

Mr. DURANLEAU: Yes, the limits of the harbour were defined by statute 4 and 5,

George V. At certain points the property is too narrow to erect any building, so the commission were granted power, by expropriation or otherwise, to acquire facilities outside the limits.

Mr. GARDINER: Would it not be better to take into consideration some time in the future the possibility of extending the area of the harbour?

Mr. DURANLEAU: When we have acquired the necessary area for the extension of the harbour facilities we might ask parliament to extend the limits.

Mr. GARDINER: Are these facilities outside the present limits of the harbour commission?

Mr. DURANLEAU: Yes.

Mr. COOTE: This bill will vest in the government all property now owned by the harbour commission, elevators and everything else?

Mr. DURANLEAU: Yes.

Mr. COOTE: Then does not the government assume all the obligations of the commission?

Mr. DURANLEAU: We do not assume any responsibility. The properties are in the name of the crown, but they are administered by the harbour commission.

Mr. GARDINER: The corporation—the harbour commission—would have to be sued?

Mr. DURANLEAU: Yes.

Mr. COOTE: If the property is vested in the crown the commission will have no assets.

Mr. DURANLEAU: The harbour commission have no other assets than those which they are administering at the present time, and those are the assets of the crown.

Mr. COOTE: Then they are simply administering the assets of the crown?

Mr. DURANLEAU: Exactly.

Mr. COOTE: Then must not the crown assume all the liabilities?

Mr. DURANLEAU: Through the harbour commission, because the act constituting the commission makes them responsible, although the properties are vested in the crown.

Mr. COOTE: At the present time are all the liabilities of the harbour commission guaranteed by the crown?

Mr. DURANLEAU: The liabilities of the harbour commission which are guaranteed by the crown were guaranteed by special statute. For instance, the crown was authorized by parliament to endorse the bonds for the Montreal bridge. In the absence of express guarantee there is no responsibility.

Mr. COOTE: Has the minister any information as to the value of the properties owned by the harbour commission affected by this bill?

Mr. DURANLEAU: Yes; their value is about $2,500,000.

Mr. COOTE: Including the Montreal harbour bridge?

Mr. DURANLEAU: No; the property expropriated for the approaches of the bridge, but not the bridge itself. The main part of the bridge is within the limits of the harbour.

Mr. EULER: By this action is the crown assuming any greater liability than it would have had without this bill?

Mr. DURANLEAU: No.

Mr. EULER: Nothing more?

Mr. DURANLEAU: No.

Mr. EULER: They are not taking over any liabilities for which they were not responsible heretofore?

Mr. DURANLEAU: No. All the other properties have been vested in the crown for years, and we have never been troubled with any responsibility concerning those properties.

Mr. EULER: That is, any obligations entered into by the harbour commission were also obligations of the Dominion government?

Mr. BENNETT: As guarantors.

Mr. EULER: In all cases?

Mr. DURANLEAU: When we were guarantors.

Mr. EULER: Were any securities issued for which the crown did not guarantee payment; and if so, are they now taking over those securities for which before they were not responsible?

Mr. DURANLEAU: No. By this bill the crown does not assume any additional responsibility. The only responsibility it takes is under statute as in the case of the bonds for the harbour bridge.

Mr. EULER: But I presume that in future the crown will guarantee everything because it owns all the properties.

Mr. DURANLEAU: The crown has always held all the property of the harbour commission within the harbour limits, and that constitutes the bulk of the property.

Mr. EULER: When any obligations were issued by the Montreal harbour commission did the crown always guarantee payment, or did it do so only in some instances.

Mr. DURANLEAU: We do not guarantee the obligations of the harbour commission except by statute. The ordinary liabilities of the harbour commission were never guaranteed by the crown.

Mr. EULER: All right. In future by reason of the fact of taking over the property, will the crown become guarantor where formerly it was not? I am trying to find out whether the crown is assuming greater liability than ordinarily it had before.

Mr. DURANLEAU: I do not see that the crown is assuming any more responsibility than it has had up to date. We are only dealing with certain facilities that are not now vested in the crown.

Mr. EULER: Were there any obligations in connection with these additional facilities; and if so, does the crown now assume those obligations?

Mr. DURANLEAU: I do not think so.

Mr. EULER: It is rather important.

Mr. DURANLEAU: For instance, I do not see that there can be any liability with respect to these properties, because the harbour commission does not borrow money on them by way of mortgage.

Mr. MARCIL: As the minister represents the south shore of the St. Lawrence in the city of Montreal, naturally he is very much interested in the progress that is being made in connection with the harbour. If I understand correctly, the object of the bill is to cover certain purchases of land made by the harbour commission for the approaches of the bridge which are not now included in the limits of the harbour.

Mr. DURANLEAU: Not only those properties, but other properties which were purchased, for instance, in connection with the extension of elevator No. 3. This extension is outside the limit of the harbour. It has nothing to do with the approaches to the bridge.

Mr. EULER: Does this action with regard to the Montreal harbour differ from that with regard to the other harbours of Canada? Is an exception being made here?

Mr. DURANLEAU: No, it is the same thing.

Mr. MARCIL: I see a lot of complaints in the Montreal press that proper advantage is not taken of the Montreal bridge for the reason that the public have not the facilities they should have. I should like to know from the minister what kind of traffic goes over the bridge. Is a street railway system contemplated, and is there any access to St. Helen island's park, which is the most popular resort for the poor people of Montreal? Is any special inducement being held out to traffic generally? For many years before the construction of the bridge, the only communication between the south shore and the north shore was by means of a ferry running from Longueuil to the foot of St. Mary's current, but later on, with the enlargement of the Victoria bridge, a siding was placed on the bridge whereby some traffic was allowed to pass. That ultimately became insufficient and now I should like to know whether all the facilities which it is possible to give the public are being taken advantage of through the erection of this bridge, which has cost a large sum of money. I should think that the minister, representing that part of the province of Quebec which abuts on this bridge, would be delighted to give the public all the facilities possible. Will he give us an idea what kind of traffic goes over the bridge?

Mr. DURANLEAU: As is well known, there is a middle space on the bridge which is used by automobiles, and on each side there is a sidewalk for pedestrians. Between the sidewalks and the middle of the bridge used by automobiles there is a space for the installation of tracks for a tramway. Last year, instead of the tracks being installed, an agreement was entered into with the Montreal Tramways Company for an autobus service on the bridge, the fare being ten cents, with the right of transfer on the lines of the Montreal Tramways. A citizen leaving the south shore, Longueuil, for instance, pays ten cents and enjoys first class bus service; and when on the Montreal side he can travel on the main lines of the Montreal Tramways Company. The people of Montreal and on the south shore are quite satisfied with the service that has been provided. There is a five or six minute autobus service on the bridge. We had an eight months' agreement and at the present time there is under consideration another agreement for a certain number of years. I know that the city of Montreal some time ago requested the harbour commission to permit children to go to St. Helen island free. The matter is now under discussion, but this committee will realize that the expenses in connection with that bridge, as well as the interest to be paid on bonds, were so considerable that we must be careful about the revenues of the bridge. We must see that it will bring in as much revenue as possible in order to reduce and, if possible, to discharge the deficit.

Mr. MARCIL: Are horse-drawn vehicles barred from the bridge? Farmers do not own automobiles and they would like to cross.

Mr. DURANLEAU: Yes; such vehicles are allowed at a reasonable rate.

SOLDIER SETTLEMENT ACT

Hon. W. A. GORDON (Acting Minister of Immigration and Colonization) moved the second reading of Bill No. 100, to amend the Soldier Settlement Act.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and the house went into committee thereon, Mr. LaVergne in the chair.

On section 1—Transfer of lands to province or municipality.

Mr. REID: In the supplementary estimates there is an item of $394,497 for payment of taxes in three provinces only. Is there any item in the estimates in respect of other provinces?

Mr. GORDON: The item in the estimates to which the hon. gentleman refers is in fulfilment of an arrangement, sometimes called an agreement, which was entered into on March 29, 1930, among what is known as the Union of Western Municipalities, with respect to the payment of taxes on soldiers' lands. As I explained when the bill came up for first reading, it has been pointed out to the department that it is very questionable whether the department had the legal right to pay taxes other than taxes upon lands occupied by settlers as defined in the act. The item in the supplementary estimates to which reference has been made is to pay taxes in accordance with the agreement then entered into.

Mr. REID: Why was not British Columbia included? That province, a few years ago, made representations to the Dominion government and also to the Canadian Union of Municipalities. I notice that in the supplementaries the reference is to Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta.

[Mr. Duranleau.]

Mr. GORDON: This bill now has general application all over Canada. I cannot give any information with respect to the negotiations that preceded the entering-into of that agreement.

Sections 2 and 3 agreed to.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

WATERTON GLACIER INTERNATIONAL PEACE PARK

The house resumed from Monday, May 23, consideration in committee of Bill No. 97, respecting the Waterton Glacier International Peace Park—Mr. Murphy—Mr. LaVergne in the chair.

On section 1—Proclamation.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Mr. Chairman, the committee will remember that last evening I was in search of information with respect to this park, and I was able to obtain some from the remarks of the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Murphy). In justice to the bill and in justice to myself I do not think there is anything which would justify my opposition, in fact I think I will be obliged to support the bill but I regret very much the circumstances under which it was brought into existence. Why was it necessary to convert two previous national parks into an international peace park at a time when the Turtle mountain peace garden was just developing through the initiative of the people themselves? If ever a movement started spontaneously and with the real spirit of peace behind it, it was the Turtle mountain peace garden. When men put their hands in their pockets and get behind a proposition of this kind, it shows they have faith in the proposition. It is a comparatively easy matter for a body of Rotarians to shout for a park on the boundary line between the two countries when it does not necessitate their paying out any money. They appeal to the respective governments to go to it, they say they are behind it and forget the effect it may have on other proposals. There seems to be a desire on the part of larger bodies represented by the Waterton Glacier International Peace Park to thrust themselves into the front at this time regardless of the effect it may have on other similar enterprises. The government will have to change its attitude unless it wants to be considered guilty of pre-natal strangulation of the Turtle mountain peace garden. That is what it is, particularly when it is realized that the birth date is due in less than two months July 14. The government should attempt to retrieve itself from occupying that unenviable position. Why is it necessary to move at this time? Are either of these parks, Waterton or Glacier in Alberta and Montana respectively, going to run away in the meantime? They have been there from time immemorial and they will be there after we have all passed away. The government should have waited at least until the birth date of the Turtle mountain proposition instead of butting in at this critical time.

It would seem as though this government cannot do the smallest public service without putting its foot in it. It disregards entirely the biblical injunction to "let not their good be evil spoken of." This park in Alberta is a good thing but no one can contemplate it without feeling that it has been conceived in a wrong spirit, one quite contrary to the spirit of peace. It seems to me a most astonishing thing that no matter what this government does it seems to go at it in the wrong way. That may be due to some innate cussedness on our part over here, but—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: —I can refer to a dozen instances like this, although this is the most recent outstanding case of acting in haste and repenting at leisure. If ever a body of men went at a thing wrong end foremost, it has been hon. gentlemen opposite in connection with this park. I should like to read to the committee a telegram which shows how some of our Dakota friends feel about this matter. This telegram was sent by the representatives of the Protective Peace Garden Association of North Dakota to Hon. Gerald P. Nye, of the United States Senate. It reads:

The United States section of the International Peace Garden Protective Association comprising the towns of Saint John, Rugby, Dunseith, Bottineau, Souris, including all religious, fraternal and social service organizations of the entire Turtle mountain area in mass indignation meeting assembled, vigorously protest against the prior passage in the United States Senate of the Glacier-Waterton Peace Park bill being as it is a parasite originating in and subsisting upon the very life blood of the international peace garden Turtle mountain project from whose prior inception and organization the former has purloined its crest, motto, synonym and ideal and thus masked is invading an international field sacred in the arts of the school children and the men and women of both countries. It is a heart-thrust that must be averted. Surely Senator Walsh, an executive committee member of the peace garden project, will see the deception being practised, denounce it and withdraw the measure.

If the government could see its way clear to adopt that course without defaulting in its international agreement with the United States, that is what it should do in justice to itself and to the Turtle mountain proposal. If the government believes in having only one park between the Rocky mountains and Winnipeg, then it must continue with the one represented by this bill and pay no regard to the proposition at Turtle mountain. If it believes in two parks, why should not both parks be treated alike? In view of the international obligations which apparently have been entered into with respect to this Alberta foothill park, that is the only course which can be followed in fairness to the province of Manitoba and that part of Saskatchewan which was behind Manitoba. Turtle mountain should be made a national park and treated the same as the other one—Watertown glacier. Will the Minister of the Interior say that he will be good enough to take this matter under his, as we call it, very serious consideration? If it does not do that, then I am afraid he must be prepared to face trouble in Manitoba in the future. He will be preparing nails for his own political coffin. I have no such designs against the minister because for some reason or other I rather respect him. He is rather the opposite to some of the rest of us, he is a patient and mild mannered man. I know he would not tramp on a fly or a spider, and because of that I know I shall not receive the same kind of offensive reply as my right hon. leader did from the Prime Minister when he offered certain suggestions a few moments ago. In my opinion the only solution of this problem is to convert Turtle mountain peace garden into a national park, provided of course that the members of that organization of which I am a member—the international peace garden committee—are agreeable. Turtle mountain is being put in a relatively subordinate position to the park at the foothills of the Rockies, and nothing but disaster can result to the former unless some such proposal as I have suggested is taken up. The Prime Minister and the Minister of Finance naturally do not want to entertain any proposal that will involve further financial outlay at this time. Let them at least make the statement that possibly that might be the best solution and they will be pleased to enter into negotiations with respresentatives of the Turtle mountain peace garden with that end in view. I do not care a continental what the government does with the suggestion. That is the best proposal I can think of, and unless it or something better is followed, some hon. members from Manitoba are liable to be badly hurt as a result of the government's blundering action in this respect.

Mr. BENNETT: The ex-Minister of Agriculture is unduly concerned about this situation. The matter was first brought to my attention by a suggestion that the congress of the United States desired to name the park which is contiguous to the Waterton park in Alberta, a peace park, and as regards the use of the word "peace" between countries that are contiguous, it seems to me no harm can be done if the word is used many times. What I said to the Minister of the Interior was substantially what was read last evening by the ex-Minister of Agriculture from a letter of the Under-Secretary of State, namely, that if the United States congress enacted the legislation in question and gave to the park on the United States side of the forty-ninth parallel of latitude the name "Waterton Glacier International Peace park," we would be prepared to do so with respect to that portion of this area that comprises the Canadian park, now known as the Waterton park. But I made it clear that this action would not be taken until after such action had been taken by the United States and the bill had been signed by the president.

In order to show the good faith of parliament, the Minister of the Interior placed the bill upon the order paper and it stood there, not for any reasons such as the suspicions of the hon. gentleman suggested last evening, but until the president had signed the bill passed by the United States congress. That bill was signed, I think, some ten days ago. After it had passed the Senate and the House of Representatives, it stood for some time unsigned. When the Minister of the Interior was advised that the bill had been signed by the president, he proceeded, when the opportunity offered, with the introduction of his bill, and I am sorry that the hon. gentleman last evening suggested that the minister made no explanation, for he did make a concise and clear explanation of the reasons for taking the action. The bill now stands for further consideration by the house.

Waterton Glacier park is some 700 or 800 miles west of the suggested peace garden. It seems rather strange to suggest that an open park, through which runs the boundary line between two countries, which is to be maintained on the Canadian side as a park as heretofore and on the United States side as a park as heretofore, but bearing the name "International Peace park," and which is between 700 and 800 miles west of the peace garden, should be inimical or destructive to the value of that peace garden. For my part I cannot follow that reasoning. I cannot understand in the least how it can be said to interfere with the peace garden in any way, shape or form. One is a natural park, just as nature has left it, except that roads have been constructed, hotels erected and various means taken to render its natural beauties more available to those who visit it. That is the Waterton park; that is the Glacier park. Now that they are merely to be known as one international peace park for the purpose of indicating that a boundary line passes through the park and divides two great countries and two great peoples who have lived in peace for many years and who, we all hope, will continue ever to live in terms of amity, good-will and peace, how that can affect a peace garden between Dakota and Manitoba, I am unable to understand. The very fact that the Minister of Agriculture in this government and the ex-Minister of Agriculture, are both, I believe, members of the executive or directing body of the peace garden organization; that the peace garden park, if you call it a park, because it is a garden, is very near the constituency of the Minister of the Interior in the province of Manitoba and that this peace park is west of the peace garden not only by part of Manitoba but the whole of Saskatchewan and is well towards the mountains in Alberta, should, it seems to me, in itself indicate that the government is not endeavouring, to use the language which the hon. gentleman used last night, to play any favourites with regard to those organizations. In the one instance a name is given to an international park and the word that has been introduced is "peace" —international peace park—by the action of the congress of the United States and the parliament of Canada. In the other case a voluntary organization, much to be commended, has established a peace garden some 800 miles east of that, between the state of Dakota and the province of Manitoba. That is the position.

I have recited the circumstances under which this bill finds a place upon the order paper and the exact reasons for its introduction, and certainly so far as I am able to understand from any persons with whom I have talked and who know the circumstances, they find it a little difficult to realize why you should imperil the existence of the one by giving a name to the other.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I like the recital which the Prime Minister has given. If it had been given last night, it would have been news to me, but now that we have the information from the Minister of the Interior and others, there is nothing new in his recital. Still, I thank him for it. Apparently the Prime Minister is unable to enter into the conception of the Turtle mountain proposition. It originated four years ago with the spirit of peace within it, and the people who were interested in it were prepared to put their money behind it, the same in Dakota as in Manitoba. Just as this first proposition is on the point of being born—July 14—another project, international in nature, national at the present time, but proposed to be made international, has sprung into existence. It would be, if you like, a very commendable enterprise at any other time later than this; but not having by any means been born necessarily of a peace conception it is going to assert itself regardless of all consequences to the smaller enterprise at the Turtle mountain. I may be a fatalist or something of that nature, but I believe no great good can come of anything that is born of hate, jealousy, strife, or of any improper motive, and before this government can hope for any great results from any proposal they choose to designate a peace proposition, it should be originated with peace motives behind it. Whatever the present motive may be, there is no doubt what will happen to the Turtle mountain proposition unless it is sponsored by something stronger than private enterprise at a time like the present. Even supposing we had sufficient capital to take care of it at the outset how are you going to maintain it from month to month and from year to year when it has to live largely on private givings and under the shadow of such a great enterprise as the one proposed by this bill? Last night I used the expression "park at the foothills," as if on a parity with the Turtle mountain project, but I must admit I did not know then the extent of its present development. I have not one word to say against the proposition referred to in the bill, but it is coming into existence at a crucial time when it simply means the death of the other proposition. I speak of what I know from experience in such matters, and I speak of what the hon. gentlemen on the treasury benches must know. To finance privately a proposition of this kind now is one thing, but it was a vastly easier thing four years ago. Then it was thought nothing of to undertake a great proposition like that at Turtle mountain, but to do it now is an utter impossibility as I see it, and that is why I am urging the government to back up a little and start over again, and do for Turtle mountain what they are proposing to do in this bill for Waterton-Glacier peace park. Then you will really start on a peace basis with some chance of promoting peace, but as I indicated last night I do not see much object to be gained by precipitating disappointments and friction between the Canadian provinces for the sake of promoting peace between parts of Canada and parts of the United States. I am sorry if the Prime Minister cannot see that point of view. I can understand him refraining from entertaining any proposition which means more expenditure at this time. I do not know that my proposition would involve immediate expenditure. I do not even know if it would meet with the approval of the Turtle Mountain Peace Garden committee.

Mr. CAHAN: They have never applied for governmental action.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I know they have not, and that is all the more reason why they have my entire sympathy. I have been in undertakings, not so huge as that but of the same nature, where the undertaking depended upon the voluntary offerings of individuals and I know what has happened to some of them, and how some of them hit me. I know just about what the finish of this Turtle mountain peace garden will be unless the government metes out the same kind of financial treatment in the one case as in the other.

Mr. BENNETT: Might I assure the hon. gentleman that no commitments as to expenditures on this park as a peace park have been given or asked for—not any; and nothing has been added to the expenditures that ordinarily are made in Waterton park, nor has it been requested. It is merely the question of a name because the two parks are contiguous and are known as the Glacier park on the one side and the Waterton park on the other.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I am aware of that but a large expenditure has already been incurred and further expenditures will no doubt be incurred, for some development must take place in order to indicate and emphasize the international aspect of the park after this bill goes through.

Mr. COOTE: I would like to commend the government for their action in making Waterton park part of an international peace park. If I could I would gladly say something to allay the fears of the hon. member for Melville. I do not suppose I could do that except by assuring him that here are two parks lying opposite each other on the two sides of the international boundary, on the one side Glacier park, and on the other side Waterton park. Waterton lake itself, which is the reason for that district being preserved as a national park, lies in the centre of Waterton park and extends into Glacier park, with about half of it in each park. It is an ideal site for an international peace park. There are some seven or eight hundred miles between this new international peace park and the peace garden, and I would suggest to the hon. member for Melville that when he goes west this summer he come out to Alberta and we will take him down to Waterton and show him this new international peace park. I am sure that if he could only see the location and the surroundings he would withdraw all opposition to this bill. He might still press for some assistance for the peace garden, but that is an entirely different matter. I do not think that the formation of the park asked for in this bill should be held up in any way because the hon. member for Melville may think that some assistance should be given to the peace garden. The two do not conflict at all, and I think it was a very happy suggestion to make these two parks an international peace park.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Did my hon. friend hear the telegram that I read a few moments ago, sent to a United States senator by the people of Turtle mountain on the Dakota side? They feel about the same way as I do. I am not holding up this bill, and I have no thought of doing so. I would vote for it at once if it came to a vote. I think it is an excellent idea, but why should not similar treatment be meted out to Turtle mountain when nothing less will suffice to bring it into existence and maintain it under the new conditions occasioned by this bill. That is my view, and if my hon. friend will come down to Saskatchewan or on a visit to Turtle mountain I shall be very glad to accord him all the courtesies, but I am afraid that unless the government supports the proposition I shall not have that pleasure.

Mr. MURPHY: Just one word in regard to this project and I promise not to detain the committee or defeat the passage of my own bill. When the committee rose last night I was saying that along our international boundary we have many monuments and memorials to the peace that has existed between this country and the United States for one hundred years. One such memorial is located on the boundary line between British Columbia and the state of Washington, at White Rock, British Columbia, and at Blaine in the state of Washington. We have also the international peace bridge between Bridgeburg, Ontario, and Buffalo, New York, and we hope that this summer will see brought into being these two other memorials, namely, the international peace garden located on the boundary between Manitoba and North Dakota and the Waterton Glacier international peace park on the boundary line between the province of Alberta and the state of Montana. I do not share the fears of the hon. member for Melville that simply by naming this area as an international peace park we are in any way jeopardizing the success of the peace garden idea. I do not share those fears for this reason: The peace garden idea was brought into being through the voluntary efforts of citizens who are interested in promoting peace between the two countries, and in inculcating in the minds of the young the idea of peace for which all right-thinking people are striving. I do not see how, simply by naming an area some eight hundred miles to the westward as an international peace park, we are in any way jeopardizing the peace garden project. I agree with the Prime Minister that this does not interfere with the other project at all. It does not interfere in the slightest with the sentiment that has brought the peace garden idea into being. When we have people so much interested in bringing home to the minds of the young the ideal of peace, surely they are not going to cease their efforts now when their ideal has so nearly reached its consummation.

RADIO BROADCASTING

CONSTITUTION OF COMMISSION FOR ACQUISITION, OPERATION, REGULATION AND CONTROL

The house resumed from Wednesday, May 18, consideration in committee of Bill No. 94, respecting radio broadcasting—Mr. Bennett—Mr. LaVergne in the chair.

Mr. BENNETT: Several sections were left standing in order that the meaning might be clarified. I think the first two sections had been passed as they stand. The third section as to the salaries of the commissioners is standing. I looked into the suggestion made by the ex-Minister of Justice, and I find that the chairman of the railway commission receives a salary of $12,500, the vice-chairman $9,000, and the others $8,000. It is thought by those with whom I come more intimately in contact, hon. members on this side of the house, that that would be too large a sum to pay at the commencement of this enterprise. My personal views I indicated the other day, but the trend of opinion seems to be that we should name $10,000 and $8,000 as the salaries to begin with. Does that suggestion commend itself to the committee generally? If it does I will move that the figures be inserted as $10,000 and $8,000 respectively.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I think those would be generous salaries.

Mr. BENNETT: It all depends. I move that the blanks in subsection 2 of section 3 be filled in with the figures "$10,000" in the second line and "$8,000" in the last line thereof.

Amendment agreed to.

Section as amended agreed to.

Mr. BENNETT: The hon. member for Quebec South is not in the chamber, but may I say that after discussing the matter with my colleagues it was thought desirable, for this session at least, that the bill should stand without any provisions for superannuation, either payments or allowances. It was thought desirable to let it stand for this session.

The CHAIRMAN: Shall I report the bill as amended?

Mr. BENNETT: No; there are two other sections. I would ask hon. members to turn to section 14, subsection 2. It was thought that the language in subsection 2 was hardly appropriate, that it was not proper to say that "parliament shall not" do anything. The amendment proposed is, "the moneys appropriated for such purposes shall not exceed" the estimated revenue from receiving licences. I have handed the chairman a copy of the amendment. The words I have given, namely, "the moneys appropriated for such purposes shall not exceed," would take the place of the words "parliament shall not appropriate for such purposes any sum in excess of."

Amendment agreed to.

Section as amended agreed to.

Mr. MERCIER (St. Henri): The fee is two dollars?

Mr. BENNETT: Yes. I would now direct the attention of hon. members to section 16. After the word "All," the first word in section 16, it is proposed to add the words "revenues of and," to permit the Auditor General to audit the revenues.

Amendment agreed to.

Section as amended agreed to.

Mr. BENNETT: With the consent of the committee I purpose to add a new section 17, to bring the whole act under the operation of the Consolidated Revenue and Audit Act of 1931. I think the reason is obvious. As the expenditures are only such sums as may be voted by parliament, and as they are to be paid to the credit of the commission from time to time, it is essential that the Auditor General and the audit department should have control.

Mr. LAPOINTE: That is section 17?

Mr. BENNETT: Yes.

The CHAIRMAN: Has the amount of salary been placed in the bill?

Mr. BENNETT: I have asked that the figures be added. The new section 17 would read as follows:

The commission shall be subject to the provisions of the Consolidated Revenue and Audit Act, 1931.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: All right.

Section agreed to.

Mr. BENNETT: Owing to the fact that we have inserted a new section 17, the present section 19 will be section 20. It will be recalled that the hon. member for Quebec South drew attention to the fact, as did the ex-Minister of Trade and Commerce, that as it read the section might be open to a wrong construction. I shall read the suggested section which will meet those difficulties:

20. Each assistant commissioner shall devote such time as may be necessary to the performance of his duties under this act, and shall not (except in respect of the compensation received by him as an officer or employee under the commission) have any pecuniary interest, either direct or indirect, individually or as a shareholder, partner, officer or employee, in broadcasting or in the manufacture or distribution of radio apparatus.

I think that meets the difficulties pointed out by the hon. members I have mentioned. I move that the section I have just read, which will be the new section 20, taking the place of section 19 appearing in the bill, be accepted.

Amendment agreed to.

Section as amended agreed to.

Mr. BENNETT: If the difficulties mentioned by the hon. member for North Waterloo have been overcome, as I think they have, perhaps the house will consider the language of the oath which I shall now read:

I do solemnly swear that I will faithfully, truly and impartially, to the best of my judgment, skill and ability, execute and perform the office of chief commissioner (or as the case may be) of the Canadian Radio Broadcasting Commission, and that, while I continue to hold such office I will not accept or hold any other office or employment (add in the case of an assistant commissioner "except as an officer or employee under the commission") or have any pecuniary interest, direct or indirect, individually or as a shareholder or partner, or otherwise, in broadcasting or in the manufacture or distribution of radio apparatus.

I think that meets the situation about which my hon. friend spoke.

Mr. EULER: I think so.

Amendment agreed to.

Section as amended agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN: Shall I report the bill as amended?

Mr. EULER: There is a matter to which I should like to draw the attention of the Prime Minister. Perhaps it is not strictly in order, but as the estimates of the Minister of Marine have been passed I may be permitted to say what I have to say. One of the purposes in establishing the radio commission was to preclude any possibility of Canadian radio broadcasting stations passing under foreign control. I am told on very good authority that that principle has already been violated. A certain station on the border has been granted a licence; it is entirely under American control, and the whole purpose of the station is to broadcast in the territory of one large American city. I am informed that one of the new channels which we were so glad to obtain, instead of being used for Canadians, is used for the benefit of Americans. I make these remarks reluctantly, but if the report to me is true I certainly think action should be taken. Perhaps the hon. member for East Essex could give some explanation.

Mr. BENNETT: Does the hon. member suggest that this has happened since the measure was introduced?

Mr. EULER: Very recently.

Mr. BENNETT: I think my hon. friend is wrong.

Mr. EULER: While the officials of the company controlling the station are Canadians, I understand that all the capital invested in it is American, and the officers who have to do with the business part of the station are on the American side.

Mr. MORAND: You are wrong.

[Mr. Bennett.]

Mr. EULER: I am quite open to correction—but am informed that the programs are all originated on the American side, and what is supposed to be a newly-acquired Canadian channel is really being thrown back for the use of our American friends.

Mr. BENNETT: I think my hon. friend must be in error, at least with respect to the last part of his remarks, for I inquired of the minister whether any licences had been issued and he told me there had been no changes at all. So far as the first part of his observations is concerned, it is quite obvious that under this act the commission will have control.

Mr. EULER: Quite so. I am speaking only of the use that might be made of the station in the interval before the commission gets to work. The licence was issued a year or a year and a half ago, and no use was made of it until later on American capital was interested. The construction of the station, I am told, is by American capital, and all the officers live in the city of Detroit. I might as well be definite—it is the station at Windsor. The capital is entirely American; the management is entirely in American hands; any revenues will go into the United States. The district to be served is the American side—Detroit. The Columbia Broadcasting Corporation have acquired control, I understand. Their purpose is to serve the city of Detroit, where they cannot themselves obtain a licence. I should regret very much if it were true that a Canadian broadcasting channel—and we have not as many as we should like—had after all been turned back to our American friends. I am saying this entirely in the interests of radio, and I trust a satisfactory explanation can be given.

Mr. MORAND: The hon. member for North Waterloo (Mr. Euler) knows a great deal more about this station than I do myself. Channel 540 which is being used in Windsor was allotted some time ago to the city. It is a shared channel with Washington. Under this bill very definite power is given the commission to allocate channels to those parts of the country where they can be best used. It is certainly news to me that the station in Windsor is really a Detroit station, and I am quite sure it will also be news to those who are fathering the station. The station is built outside the city of Windsor, it is a Canadian station, and it will have to conform to all the provisions of the bill. Whoever is responsible for the broadcasting will have to submit to the rules and regulations of the commission.

Mr. EULER: Quite so.

Mr. MORAND: I do not know what capital has gone into the station. I do know the directors are Canadian, with the exception of one. The studio is in Windsor; I did not know there was a studio in Detroit. If it is the intention of these people to have a Detroit station in Windsor, undoubtedly they will find themselves obliged to comply with the rules and regulations of any commission that may be set up under this bill. I am quite satisfied that the intention is to give to that part of the country Canadian radio broadcasting—something which we have never had. In the city of Windsor we have never been able to get any programs from any part of Canada. It is no innovation for the Columbia company to give sustaining or advertising programs in Canada; they already have a station in Montreal—La Presse—and another in Toronto. I can assure my hon. friend that I am just as much interested in Canadian broadcasting as anyone can be, and I should be the first to resent the installation of a station in Windsor for the purpose of using it for Detroit.

Mr. BENNETT: I will ask the Minister of Marine to read the remarks that have been made when we are in supply, and an opportunity will be afforded to mention the matter.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

SUPPLY

UNITED STATES EXCISE DUTIES ON COPPER AND LUMBER

Hon. E. N. RHODES (Minister of Finance) moved that the house go into committee of supply.

Mr. G. B. NICHOLSON (East Algoma): Before you leave the chair, Mr. Speaker, I should like to draw the attention of the house and the government to a situation in which two of the major industries of Canada have been placed by reason of action taken by the United States Senate in imposing an excise duty on copper and lumber, as reported in this morning's Ottawa Journal.

First, in relation to copper, last year we exported to the United States approximately $13,000,000; we imported from them copper products, rods, plates, and so on, to the value of $14,500,000. In lumber we have a favourable balance of trade; we exported $15,000,000 against imports of $6,500,000. But may I repeat what I said last week, that in machinery, equipment, and everything that is used in the logging and saw mill industry there is a very substantial balance of trade in favour of the United States. In addition to the $4 excise tax imposed on Canadian lumber, prohibitory in its application, the American railroads have added from 50 cents to $1 a thousand by a reduction in freight rates on American lumber that comes into Ontario and Quebec.

So as the situation stands to-day Canada is absolutely shut out from the United States market in relation to lumber and copper, while so far as the two central provinces are concerned, it remains the dumping ground for low grades of United States lumber. At the present time no industry in this country is suffering so severely as is the lumber industry. There are tens of thousands of men idle all over the country, our milling and logging operations being practically at a standstill. Now, the industry will be crucified—if I may use the word—because the lumber miils in Idaho, Michigan and Wisconsin will simply use the Ontario and Quebec market—actually the only market left to Canadian lumbermen now—as a dumping ground for the products which they cannot dispose of in their own country.

I understand that last Friday evening it was stated to the house that we could not exclude imports of United States lumber because we must have the class of lumber they ship in here; in other words, we do not have the hardwood to take the place of the United States hardwood. But after all hardwood constitutes a very small portion of the lumber that comes into Ontario and Quebec from the United States. I have in my hand a statement from the New Brunswick Department of Lands and Mines giving the volume of standing hardwood timber in that province. I have not the quantities for Quebec and Ontario, although they are much greater than the hardwood resources of New Brunswick. I have not the figures for Nova Scotia, but the hardwood resources of that province are substantial. The province of New Brunswick alone has hardwood resources, including birch, maple, beech, walnut, ash, oak and elm, amounting to 11,385,000,000 feet. The only woods that Canada requires from the United States, and those to a limited extent, are perhaps gumwood and walnut.

Mr. EULER: And mahogany.

Mr. CHAPLIN: It does not come from the United States.

Mr. EULER: It comes through there.

Mr. NICHOLSON: Canadian birch, maple, beech and ash will make just as good furniture with as good a finish, in three-quarters of the uses to which they are put, as either mahogany or walnut. If you go into some of our best buildings recently put up in Canada you will find that they are completely finished with Canadian birch. As two illustrations I will mention the Royal York hotel and what is known as the east block of the Parliament buildings in Toronto; they are finished from top to bottom with Canadian birch.

The lumber industry as between the two countries has been on an equal basis; there has been no duty either way. My hon. friend from Macleod (Mr. Coote) suggested that this action on the part of the United States was reciprocal, being due to something that we had done. As a matter of fact, nothing has been done by the Canadian government in relation to either lumber or copper to bring this about.

I rose for the purpose of appealing to the government to take some action before this parliament prorogues to protect the Canadian industry as far as it is possible to do so. The opinion of the Canadian Lumbermen's Association is that if there is some evidence of determination on the part of the government to reciprocate, to use my hon. friend's word, it is possible that the bill will not pass the United States congress. It has passed the United States senate by a vote of three to two—36 against 24—and in the interests of Canadian workmen and of an industry which is second to no other industry in Canada in the matter of exports, I submit that proper action should be taken. The exports of forest products from Canada in 1930 and again in 1931, both in volume and in value, showed that lumber was the leading commodity in this country. Surely, therefore, under these circumstances it deserves some action when the United States senate or government, or whoever is behind the move, will deliberately set out to place an embargo against Canadian products.

Hon. W. D. EULER (North Waterloo): I would not yield to my hon. friend for East Algoma (Mr. Nicholson) in trying to protect a legitimate Canadian industry, but unfortunately we are here up against the proposition that what is one manufacturer's finished product is another manufacturer's raw material. I am speaking for the users of this raw material in my own city and in other parts of Canada. For example, the furniture makers in Kitchener, in the constituency I have the honour to represent, are having a very difficult time; some twenty-five furniture factories find it sufficiently hard now to make both ends meet. I should be glad to see the Canadian furniture makers use Canadian lumber. It would be a good thing if they could use more Canadian birch and maple, and I am surprised to hear that there is sufficent oak in Canada of the kind they require, because they have been importing from the United States oak, as well as gumwood, mahogany and walnut. If they could adapt themselves to the use of Canadian lumber I should be only too glad to see them use the home product, but I would suggest to the government that they go very slowly in making any tariff changes which at the moment would embarrass an industry that finds it exceedingly difficult to make both ends meet. I offer this suggestion to the government for serious consideration before they take any drastic steps in the direction suggested. I submit that they should consider how it would affect the furniture industry.

Mr. B. M. STITT (Nelson): I am in agreement with the hon. member for East Algoma (Mr. Nicholson). In my constituency there is one of the largest lumbering and manufacturing plants in western Canada, and owing to the American tariffs which were put into force two years ago this plant, which employs 1,000 men in the woods in winter and 500 in summer has had to curtail its activities considerably. Seventy-five per cent of its product is shipped to the United States, and I am fearful of what will happen under the new duty. Last winter 1,000 men were laid off and had to be kept by the federal and provincial governments. The domestic market in the west has about disappeared. Driving 300 or 400 miles through western Canada last year I did not see one building under construction, because the farmers have lost their purchasing power and cannot buy.

In connection with copper, I find myself in about the same position. We have the Hudson Bay Mining & Smelting Company, with an investment of $21,000,000, employing 1,200 men, working three shifts a day including Sundays. The Sherritt-Gordon mine in my constituency was forced to close down a week or two ago owing to the low price of copper, and I am afraid that this new duty on copper will result in the Hudson Bay Mining & Smelting Company taking the same course. If that happens, it will be nothing short of a tragedy.

I quite agree with the hon. member for North Waterloo that the government should be careful in whatever action it takes. It has occurred to me that it would be well for the government to approach the United States in a spirit of friendliness. Seeing that the books are about balanced in regard to copper; seeing that we import a little more than we export, we might enter into some friendly agreement. At any rate, I have confidence in the government and I hope that something satisfactory will be brought about without resorting to retaliatory tariff increases.

Mr. A. E. MUNN (Vancouver North): I am in accord with the hon. member for East Algoma (Mr. Nicholson). I am rather familiar with the lumber industry, and I can say that that industry has been hit harder than any other individual industry in Canada, not excepting agriculture during the present depression. We appreciate the farmer's troubles and we should all be very glad to see the farmer more prosperous because that means business for us. But the lumber industry has been hard hit, and I hope that the government will watch developments carefully and do everything they can to protect that industry in Canada.

I will not go into the question of hardwoods. As the hon. member for East Algoma has said, we could get along without some of the American hardwoods by using native hardwoods. On the coast in British Columbia the American market has been our best market for lumber and shingles, and if a duty is imposed on these it will put us out of business for the time being until we can find markets elsewhere.

The copper business has also been hit very hard. In my riding, Vancouver North, there is the largest copper mine under the British flag, giving employment to 1,200 or 1,500 people. They are still operating, but if this duty is put on copper they will be forced out of business, temporarily at any rate, and goodness knows for how long. I do sincerely hope that the government will take proper action in this matter. They have not heard very much from the poor lumberman; they have heard from the farmer and others; but as a lumberman I appeal to them to do everything possible to protect the industry in Canada.

BEAUHARNOIS POWER PROJECT

Mr. ROBERT GARDINER (Acadia): Mr. Speaker, before you put the motion to go into supply I should like to discuss a very important matter, and it is my intention before concluding to move an amendment to the motion. I regret having to deal with this question towards the end of the session; I realize that hon. members feel that the time has come when the business of the house should be concluded and we should get away as soon as possible, but I did not take it up earlier because investigations were being conducted by the committee of the other house as well as by a commission appointed by the Ontario government, and I did not feel that I would be justified in discussing the subject while these investigations were proceeding. In view, however, of the nearness of the close of the session I am afraid I shall have to proceed irrespective of the fact that the Ontario commission is still sitting and taking evidence. The matter I wish to discuss is in connection with the Beauharnois project, and I intend to deal with it more from its present position than from the point of view of anything which has taken place in the past.

I am desirous of discussing this matter primarily because of the statement made by the Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett) on April 18. On that occasion the Prime Minister gave us some information which had not been previously at our disposal, and I wish first to invite the attention of the house to some of the references made by the Prime Minister at that particular time.

The Beauharnois project was investigated last year by a committee of this house. Since then many things have occurred and the Prime Minister was good enough to give us certain information. I do not intend to go into the details of what the Prime Minister said, but I should like to call attention to one or two important statements. The statement with regard to the agreement entered into between the Beauharnois Light, Heat and Power Company and the Beauharnois Power Corporation appears at the bottom of page 2103 of Hansard. The following is a portion of section 6 of the agreement:

> (a) for the payment of any of the obligations and liabilities assumed by the corporation under the said agreement dated the 31st day of October, 1929, between the corporation and the Beauharnois power syndicate, which obligations and liabilities are hereby assumed by the company as hereinafter set forth, or
> (b) for the payment of expenditures from time to time made or proposed to be made, either by the company or by any subsidiary company or companies of the company.

The agreement continues over to the next page, but I think what I have read will suffice for the moment. In the agreement it is stated that the Beauharnois Power Corporation, the holding company, will turn over to the Beauharnois Light, Heat and Power Company the sum of $22,250,000. That is the amount which we understood had been turned over to the company after the sale of $30,000,000 worth of collateral trust bonds. Hon. members will remember that the information given to the house last year was to the effect that these bonds were sold to two companies for the sum of $27,000,000 plus a certain number of class A common shares. Out of that $27,000,000 the syndicate was paid $4,750,000, leaving a balance of $22,250,000, the sum stated in the agreement. The committee appointed last year investigated to some extent the designation of part of the money included in that $4,750,000, but the Prime Minister indicated in his statement earlier in the session that there had been expended out of this $22,250,000 a sum of approximately $4,000,000. I must confess that the Prime Minister's statement was the first knowledge I had of the fact that nearly $4,000,000 had been spent by the syndicate out of the $22,250,000.

The situation, outlined in as few words as possible, is simply this: There was turned over $22,250,000 less the $4,000,000 which the Prime Minister indicated in his statement made to the house on April 18. That leaves $18,250,000. Later on in his statement the Prime Minister indicated that out of the sums of money received from the sale of the collateral trust bonds there had been deducted for interest purposes the sum of $3,600,000. That leaves a balance of $14,650,000. Instead of having secured $22,250,000 to proceed with this project, we find that all that was secured was $14,650,000. In other words, after selling bonds to the value of $30,000,000, by the time the proceeds of this sale reached the company which was actually going to do the work, it had less than fifty cents on the dollar with which to carry on the undertaking. That is the way this project has been financed. I must confess that I was surprised when I heard the statement made by the Prime Minister in that regard, and I think it is only fair and just that this matter should be aired in the house in order that the government may take such steps as may be within its powers to look further into it.

Continuing with the Prime Minister's statement, we find that the banks had to advance money in order to keep the project going. When the special committee appointed last year was about to end its investigations it was intimated that the company had borrowed over $6,000,000 from the banks and that first mortgage bonds had been given as security. The Prime Minister's statement was to the effect that the advances by the banks up to date amounted to $6,495,000, for which the banks were holding as security first mortgage bonds to the value of $9,742,000. Of course that information was available last year to the committee.

[Mr. Gardiner.]

We come now to the financing of the concern since that time. It would appear that the government in its judgment had to take certain steps to see that this company had funds with which to develop the undertaking. As I understand the Prime Minister, arrangements were made with the banks that they should advance still further sums and take first mortgage bonds as security in the proportion of two to one. According to the Prime Minister, the advances made by the banks under this understanding amount to $7,951,500, for which the banks hold first mortgage bonds to the value of $15,903,000. This has been done in order to secure the government should anything take place of a nature which we hope will not occur.

Before I go further, I want to say a word with regard to the advances made by the banks. One who is familiar with the Bank Act knows that banks are not permitted to advance money on mortgages in the first instance. It is quite true that a bank, if a loan is not paid at the proper time, or if it feels that its security is not of the best, may demand security. But in this case we have the banks making arrangements with this company whereby it will lodge first mortgage bonds in sufficient proportions to secure the banks against advances. I submit that the action of the banks in this case was an absolute violation of the Bank Act. This, of course, is not by any means the first time our banking institutions have done the very same thing. The government, however, helps the banks to perpetrate another infraction of the Bank Act by making the arrangements which it did to assist the Beauharnois company in its financing operations.

Let me mention another important aspect just in passing. These advances are, in my judgment, at present absolutely frozen assets. I may be wrong, and I hope I am; nevertheless that is my judgment. Our banking institutions, when they are questioned on any matter of policy, always hold out to members of the house the important point that they must keep their assets liquid in order to meet the calls of their depositors when the latter need the money, and yet in this case they are deliberately financing a concern the assets of which, at least for a time, must be frozen, with no possibility of the banks recovering the loans which they have made to it. In these circumstances some substantial action should be taken, which I shall indicate later on in my address. Business people and farmers in this country who have ample or at any rate substantial assets who cannot under present conditions secure advances from the banks; nevertheless the banks can advance $13,000,000 or $14,000,000 to this company without any certainty as to its repayment, because the market at present will not absorb the bonds at a price which might warrant the company in offering them.

The Prime Minister in his address referred to another matter of importance, namely the position of the owners of collateral trust bonds. On page 2110 of Hansard the Prime Minister gives to the house the information with regard to the agreement between the Beauharnois Light, Heat and Power Company and the Montreal Light, Heat and Power Consolidated. He read into Hansard at that time the agreement with regard to the territory involved. I am not going to take the time to read in full section 10 of the agreement, but I may explain to the house that in so far as that part of the agreement is concerned, it confines the operations of the Beauharnois Light, Heat and Power Company to selling power to a very small portion of the province of Quebec. By this agreement, which was in existence before they sold their collateral trust bonds, the Beauharnois Light, Heat and Power Company cannot sell any electricity in Montreal or within a radius of thirty miles of the centre of the city, or in certain other sections of Quebec which are mentioned in this section of the agreement. What does that mean? If you take the trouble to read the advertising matter that was put out or the information supplied by the Beauharnois Light, Heat and Power Company in order that they might be able to sell their bonds to the Canadian people, what did they say? They indicated to the people at that time that there was a possibility of their securing from the government of Canada enough water to produce 2,000,000 horse-power at their power plant. That is what they stated, and the glowing terms which they employed in all their literature in order to induce the people of Canada to buy those bonds are such that when you come to read section 10 of the agreement between the Beauharnois Light, Heat and Power Company and the Montreal Light, Heat and Power Consolidated, you are forced to the conclusion that those people who are responsible for securing that money from the Canadian people, got it under false pretences. In my judgment, this government will be delinquent in its duty if it does not see that those who are responsible for that state of affairs are brought to justice.

What is the situation? This company, according to their estimate, will produce this fall something like 500,000 horse-power. Of that they have already sold 250,000 horse-power to the Hydro Electric Commission of Ontario and 150,000 horse-power to the Montreal Light, Heat and Power Company, making a total of 400,000 horse-power, and leaving on their hands 100,000 horse-power. The company, when that horse-power is developed, cannot sell the surplus 100,000 horse-power anywhere within the radius which is exempted by this agreement. Where are they going to get the funds to be able to meet their liabilities to the collateral trust bondholders? Where is there any possibility of their getting those funds? I suggest again that this matter needs investigation and needs it badly. When an hon. gentleman in the other chamber stated that this project screams for further investigation, I think he was quite right, particularly in view of the statement which was made by the Prime Minister in this house on April 18.

Last year this house passed two pieces of legislation dealing with this company; they are known as chapters 19 and 20 of the statutes of 1931. Chapter 19 is entitled "An Act respecting the Beauharnois Light, Heat and Power Company, Limited." I presume the Prime Minister has noted that is a mistake and has considered the question whether this legislation is of any value inasmuch as the Beauharnois Light, Heat and Power Company has not the word "Limited" in its name, it being incorporated in Quebec.

We come to the important sections of this act. The first one annuls order in council P.C. 422. Then it gives the right to divert water to the extent of 53,072 cubic feet, which, I presume, includes the 13,072 cubic feet which the company subleased from the Montreal Cottons. But the other section of importance is the one which provides that no further diversion can be approved except by parliament.

Chapter 20, however, is in my judgment a more important act because of the fact that it declares certain works of the Beauharnois Light, Heat and Power Company, Limited, to be for the general advantage of Canada. This is provided in section one, which I had better read for the information of the house. It is as follows:

1. The canal now being constructed by the Beauharnois Light, Heat and Power Company, Limited, a body corporate, incorporated under the laws of the province of Quebec, between lake St. Francis and lake St. Louis, on the south side of, or in or along the St. Lawrence river, and the works on lands or lands covered with water, excavations, embankments, retaining structures, remedial works, dams, locks and other works appurtenant to said canal, now executed or hereafter to be executed, are hereby declared to be works for the general advantage of Canada.

That, of course, is declared under a certain section of the British North America Act with which I shall deal later.

I hold in my hand order in council P.C. 504 which was approved by His Excellency the governor general in council on Tuesday, March 1, 1932. I wish to call the attention of the house first to section 26 of this order in council, which contains two clauses that I am going to read to the house and then point out their implications. The first clause of section 26 reads as follows:

(1) That in case it shall be judicially determined that His Majesty has any property right in or the right to use or to grant the use of the waters of the river St. Lawrence for the development of hydro-electric power by the diversion of said waters which is authorized by the first hereinbefore recited act of the parliament of Canada, then and in such event the company shall pay to His Majesty such compensation therefor by way of annual rental as the governor in council may from time to time determine, and shall comply with all orders, rules and regulations which may be made by the governor in council with respect to the rentals to be paid to His Majesty, the sale of such power, the regulation of the price thereof and all or any other matters dealt with by or under the Dominion Water Power Act or Acts in amendment thereof.

That first clause deals, of course, with the question whether His Majesty has any property rights in these waters. When we come to the second clause of section 26 we have another situation. That clause reads as follows:

(2) That in case it shall be judicially determined that the parliament of Canada has legislative jurisdiction over or in respect of the use of the waters of the river St. Lawrence for the development of hydro-electric power by the diversion of said waters, which is authorized by the first hereinbefore recited act of the parliament of Canada, then and in such event the company shall comply with all orders, rules and regulations which may be made by the governor in council with respect to the sale of such power, the regulation of the price thereof, and all or any other matters dealt with by or under the Dominion Water Power Act, or Acts in amendment thereof.

That clause deals with the legislative powers of parliament, and that is the distinction between the two clauses. It will be noted that both these clauses deal practically with the question of regulation and control, more particularly of the sale and the price of the power. When in May, 1930, I had the privilege of first bringing this matter to the attention of the house, the present Prime Minister waxed eloquent as he pointed out that in the order in council P.C. 422, which had been passed by the King government, there was no clause which had anything to do with or contemplated a restriction of the price which these people might demand for their power. Now, Mr. Speaker, in this order in council P.C. 504 the situation is exactly the same. There is only a slight difference between the two orders in council in that respect. The only difference is that this order in council P.C. 504 does to some extent contemplate the possibility that at some time a decision will be made on this matter, and if that decision is favourable either to His Majesty in the right of the dominion or by virtue of the legislative powers of this parliament, then it will be competent under this order in council for the government to take such action as may be necessary to regulate the price to be charged for this electricity. I merely wish to call the attention of the house in passing to the fact that so far as the control of the price of the electricity to be sold by this company is concerned we have nothing at the present time which gives the federal government authority to determine what that price shall be or whether it is a fair price or otherwise. That is the situation with regard to that particular order in council.

I come now to the question which is probably the most important of all, namely the question of ownership of this power. There is no doubt at all, Mr. Speaker, that the ownership of this power is in dispute. If anyone thinks that that is not so, all I have to do is to refer him to the factum prepared by the Attorney General of Canada and submitted to the Supreme Court of Canada in 1928. I have a copy of that factum in my hand, and I find on turning to the last page that it is signed by Messrs. Lucien Cannon, N. W. Rowell, Charles Laurendeau, H. J. Symington, C. P. Plaxton, Vincent C. MacDonald.

A colleague suggests that it was a good outfit, and I believe that it was. When I study the different arguments which were put before the supreme court I must admit that these legal gentlemen made a very good job of the case which they had placed before them by the government of the day.

Turning to the factum we find that there were ten different questions submitted to the supreme court. It is not my purpose this afternoon to deal with all these questions or with the argument which the Attorney General put up on behalf of Canada before the supreme court. I shall deal only with those questions which I think are pertinent to this Beauharnois project, and I am going to take the time to make a few citations in order that the house may be made acquainted with the argument and possibly see the reason why some action should be taken in the near future with regard to these matters.

This reference to the supreme court, as I have already said, was primarily for the purpose of securing from the court an opinion as to the rights of the dominion as against the provinces in so far as the waters and water powers are concerned. In order that the principles set out in this factum may be thoroughly understood it would be well for me to say at this point that in my judgment the St. Lawrence river is not merely an interprovincial river, but an international river. As the river flows through more than one province, it is an interprovincial river. It is an international river also because of the fact that we have certain treaties with the United States in regard to it, and one of the most important points in one of those treaties to which I desire to call the attention of the house is this: Article XXVI of the treaty of Washington of 1871 reads in part as follows:

The navigation of the river St. Lawrence, ascending and descending from the 45th parallel of north latitude, where it ceases to form the boundary between the two countries, from, to, and into the sea, shall forever remain free and open for the purposes of commerce to the citizens of the United States, subject to any laws and regulations of Great Britain or of the Dominion of Canada, not inconsistent with such privilege of free navigation.

It will be seen by that, Mr. Speaker, that the citizens of the United States have the right of free navigation on this river. That right arises by treaty between Great Britain and the United States. Therefore, when I make the statement that in my judgment this river is not only interprovincial but international in character, that is the ground for my statement. Furthermore, there is the treaty of Washington of 1909. By that treaty, an international board of commissioners was set up. When it comes to a question of navigation on the St. Lawrence river, any possibility of impediment, any question of free ascent or descent of that river by the citizens of the United States or Canada, must be submitted for decision, under the treaty of 1909, to the international joint board. Therefore on that ground also we have in the St. Lawrence not only an interprovincial but an international river.

The part of the factum which deals with the St. Lawrence river particularly, and can be read more or less in conjunction with the present development of the Beauharnois project, will be found on pages 53 to 91. I refer the committee more particularly to page 60, paragraphs 83 and 84; page 61, paragraphs 84 and 85, and paragraph 2 on page 62. At page 53 we find question 4, one of the ten questions in the factum. It is as follows:

By section 108 of the British North America Act, 1867, and the first item of the third schedule thereto, the following public works and property of each province amongst others, shall be the property of Canada, namely, "canals with lands and water-power connected therewith."

Has the province any proprietary interest in or beneficial ownership of or legislative control over the water-power which, though connected with the said canals, is created or made available by reason of extensions, enlargements or replacements of said canals, made by the dominion since confederation and which is not required from time to time for the purposes of navigation?

In attempting to argue in favour of the dominion in respect to the determination of this question the Attorney General of Canada made reference to section 108 of the British North America Act, which reads as follows:

The public works and property of each province enumerated in the third schedule to this act shall be the property of Canada.

There is reference here to items numbers 1 and 5 in the third schedule to the British North America Act. Number 1 is as follows:

Canals, with lands and water-power connected therewith.

And number 5:

Rivers and lake improvement.

It will be argued of course—or it could be argued,—that there may be some question whether this particular work might come under that section. I wish to place before the house the following argument: Under section 108 of the British North America Act, the canals and improvements owned at that particular time by the provinces became the property of the Dominion of Canada when confederation was completed. As example, one might mention the Trent canal in Ontario, or the old Beauharnois canal in Quebec. Incidentally the section in the British North America Act which deals with that question states that the waters incidental to these canals become the property of the dominion.

That is one phase of the situation. Some hon. members might even go so far as to say that canals constructed since confederation by the expenditure of either provincial or dominion public moneys, together with water powers connected therewith, should belong to the dominion and not to the provinces. Furthermore it is generally conceded that any replacements of the various canals existing at confederation which passed to the dominion, or enlargements or extensions thereof, shall also belong to the dominion, together with the water-powers in connection therewith. Let me given an example of that possibility. On the Beauharnois section we have what is known as the St. Louis feeder. The St. Louis feeder passed to the Dominion government at confederation, and for over thirty years it has been collecting rentals from the people who leased the feeder. Ii so far as the Beauharnois canal is concerned, one might argue that it is a replacement of the St. Louis feeder. If that point of view is taken there can be no question that the rentals from the water passing through the Beauharnois canal belong to the dominion. On the other hand it may be argued that the new Beauharnois canal is a replacement of the old Beauharnois canal which became the property of the Dominion of Canada by virtue of section 108 of the British North America Act.

Hon. members will recall that the old Beauharnois canal became obsolete, and was replaced by a new one, the Soulanges canal, on the north side of the river. Now it is proposed that because of the possibility of our entering into an agreement with the United States to provide a deep seaway on the St. Lawrence river, this new Beauharnois canal should become part of the deep seaway. Are we not justified in arguing that the new Beauharnois canal is a replacement of the old one, or a replacement of the Soulanges canal which to-day is the property of the Dominion government? That is the argument which the attorney general on behalf of the then government placed before the supreme court. So far as I can see, his argument in that regard was well taken.

There is another point of view I should like to bring to the attention of the house which arises out of the action of this parliament last year in declaring the new canal to be a work for the general advantage of Canada. In the order in council before me provision is made, further, that at some time in the near future title shall be granted in the canal by the Beauharnois Light, Heat and Power Company to the government of Canada. By that title the dominion will become owners of the canal. By virtue of the legislation passed last year declaring this work to be to the general advantage of Canada I cannot for the life of me see how any argument can be lodged against the contention that the dominion owns the waters flowing through that canal. Of that, in my judgment, there is no question. Let me deal with it under another part of the British North America Act—schedule 3. This schedule covers "provincial works and property to be the property of Canada." Paragraph 1 reads:

Canals, with lands and water-power connected therewith.

Paragraph 5:

Rivers and lake improvement.

I submit this would enable the government to contend that the water flowing through the new Beauharnois canal is the property of the dominion because of this work being first of all declared to be for the general advantage of Canada.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: Order. The hon. member has spoken forty minutes.

Mr. GARDINER: Mr. Speaker, it is my purpose to move an amendment before I take my seat, and it being equivalent to a want of confidence motion, I claim this exempts me from the application of the forty minute rule.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. member would be right if he had moved an amendment, but not having done so, it is for the house to decide whether he shall proceed.

Mr. GARDINER: It has always been the practice for the member to move the amendment before sitting down, but I will move it now and continue my remarks.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: I have no objection, but the hon. member's time has expired and he can proceed only with the consent of the house.

Mr. GARDINER: I must confess, Mr. Speaker, that the rule has never been so interpreted before. However, I am in Your Honour's hands. I will send you a copy of the amendment in order that you may satisfy yourself that I intend to move it.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: I do not desire to force the hon. member to cut short his observations, especially on this question, but standing order 37 reads:

No member, except the Prime Minister and the leader of the opposition, or a minister moving a government order and the member speaking in reply immediately after such minister, or a member making a motion of "no confidence" in the government and a minister replying thereto, shall speak for more than forty minutes at a time in any debate.

The hon. member has spoken forty minutes without moving a want of confidence motion. Therefore I must apply the rule. Having exhausted his time, only by unanimous consent may he move his amendment.

Mr. BENNETT: On the point of order, I understand that His Honour the Speaker has already ruled this session that unless a motion of no confidence is moved within the forty minutes, obviously the member who has the floor cannot proceed beyond that time. The rule says that "a member making a motion of no confidence in the government" may speak more than forty minutes. Having exhausted his forty minutes without having made such a motion, the hon. member cannot proceed further. So far as I am concerned, I have no objection, but the rule of the house must be clearly understood.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: By unanimous consent I suppose the hon. member may proceed.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Carried.

Mr. BENNETT: I suppose the reason is obvious. Non constat that the member would be excluded from the rule by the amendment he proposes to move. The amendment must be read first in order that the house may be seized of the matter under discussion.

Mr. J. L. BROWN (Lisgar): Mr. Speaker, on former occasions when a similar situation has arisen the motion of no confidence has been moved after the moving of the government order to go into supply, and therefore the forty minute rule did not apply to the hon. member moving such amendment. Had not the hon. member for Acadia been preceded by the hon. member for East Algoma, he would have seen the necessity of moving his amendment within the forty minutes.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: I have read the amendment to be moved by the hon. member for Acadia, which I understand is for the appointment of a royal commission. Of course, I have had to peruse it hurriedly, but I fail to see that it is a motion of want of confidence.

Mr. GARDINER: Will you permit me to read my amendment, Mr. Speaker? Then I shall be quite willing to place myself in the hands of the house.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: As the hon. member knows, I want to be as fair as I can, but I must apply the rules. He has exhausted his time and can proceed only by unanimous consent. As far as his proposed amendment is concerned, I fail to see that a motion asking for the appointment of a royal commission can be interpreted as a motion of no confidence in the government.

Mr. BENNETT: You might call it six o'clock, Mr. Speaker, so that the point may be considered during recess.

At six o'clock the house took recess.

41761—211½

After Recess

The house resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. GARDINER: Before the house rose at six o'clock, Mr. Speaker, a question was raised by the Deputy Speaker as to whether I was in order in continuing to speak—

Mr. SPEAKER: Is the hon. member speaking to a point of order?

Mr. GARDINER: No. I am bringing to your attention, sir, what happened before six o'clock, and I desire to have your ruling on the question. This afternoon, when the motion was made for the house to go into committee of supply, some other hon. members discussed a certain question but no motion was placed before the house. After they had finished discussing that particular question, I rose to discuss the Beauharnois project, and I intimated at the time I rose that I intended to move an amendment to the motion to go into supply. After I had spoken for forty minutes, the Deputy Speaker ruled that, inasmuch as that allotted time had elapsed, I was not in a position to continue. I thought that under the rules I was entitled to go on, inasmuch as I had intimated my intention to move an amendment. The question was left in that stage when the house rose at six o'clock, and I should like to have your honour's decision with reference to the Deputy Speaker's ruling in that regard.

Mr. SPEAKER: If, as the hon. member states, he had spoken forty minutes, it is not within the rule, standing order 37, for him to speak any longer, and he has no right to continue his address, even to move an amendment or to make a motion. Standing order 37 is explicit:

> No member, except the Prime Minister and the leader of the opposition, or a minister moving a government order and the member speaking in reply immediately after such minister, or a member making a motion of "no confidence" in the government and a minister replying thereto, shall speak for more than forty minutes at a time in any debate.

I cannot see that the hon. member comes within any of these exceptions.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Except by unanimous consent.

Mr. GARDINER: Would not the amendment come within the rule, in so far as a vote of no confidence is concerned?

Mr. SPEAKER: I have read the proposed amendment and I do not regard it as a motion of want of confidence.

Mr. ALFRED SPEAKMAN (Red Deer): In order to overcome this difficulty, and in order that the hon. member for Acadia (Mr. Gardiner) may again speak, being then within the rule, inasmuch as he will speak to the amendment, I propose, without debate, to move the aforesaid amendment. Seconded by the hon. member for Camrose (Mr. Lucas), I move:

That the motion be amended by striking out all the words after the word "that" and substituting the following therefor:

inasmuch as parliament by enacting chapter 20 of the statutes of 1932 declared the Beauharnois canal and the works appurtenant thereto to be a work for the general advantage of Canada it is the opinion of this house that the government should proceed without delay to determine the legality of the claim of the province of Quebec to own the water-power created or made available or to be created or to be made available by the diversion of water through the Beauharnois canal and to charge rentals therefor, and should it be determined that the ownership of such power is properly vested in the dominion—then this government should submit, at the earliest possible date, the necessary legislation enabling the government to exercise the said rights of ownership to nationalize the whole project in order to protect the national interest and for this purpose to create a federal hydro-electric commission.

And further in the opinion of this house that the government should without delay take all necessary and proper steps to determine whether or not the act passed by the legislature of Quebec granting the charter of incorporation of the Beauharnois Light, Heat and Power Company and the amendments thereto are ultra vires of the province of Quebec.

And further in the opinion of this house a royal commission should be appointed to investigate the reasons for and the manner of the payments made out of and ultimate disposition of all moneys derived from the sale of the $30,000,000 worth of collateral trust bonds issued by the Beauharnois Corporation Limited, and to investigate the prospectuses, statements, circulars and advertisements issued by and/or used with the concurrence of the first board of directors of the Beauharnois Light, Heat and Power Corporation Limited and which were used in the sale and disposition of the said $30,000,000 worth of collateral trust bonds, with all necessary and appropriate powers and to report back.

I have not prepared myself to speak on the subject, and I have no intention of further delaying the house, but I move the foregoing amendment in accordance with the rule.

Mr. CAHAN: I rise to a point of order. The proposed resolution involves a very large and almost unprecedented expenditure of money by way of nationalizing the Beauharnois power project and developing and extending it, and such a resolution can be introduced only by a member of the government, with the approval of His Excellency the Governor General, who should recommend it to the house.

[Mr. Speaker.]

Mr. GARDINER: Speaking on the point of order, Mr. Speaker, may I call your attention to the fact that in the amendment proposed by my hon. friend from Red Deer (Mr. Speakman) it is stated very emphatically that "in the opinion" of this house the government should do certain things. It does not command the government, which, of course, the house cannot do, to do those things, and with that proviso "in the opinion of this house," I submit that the resolution cannot be construed as one which involves the expenditure of money.

Mr. SPEAKER: In my opinion the objection raised by the Secretary of State (Mr. Cahan) is well taken. The amendment is a duplicate of the amendment sought to be moved by the hon. member for Acadia, and as I read it, it is not a mere abstract resolution which does not involve a future grant. It does not say that the government should consider taking the procedure outlined, but if carried is a direction of the house to the government to take proceedings necessarily involving grants of public moneys: First, to determine the legality of a claim of the province of Quebec; secondly, to determine whether an act of the legislature of Quebec is ultra vires or not; thirdly, to appoint a royal commission—all three of necessity involving the expenditure of public money.

For that reason, in my opinion, it is not in order for a private member to move the resolution, nor would it be in order for a member of the government to move it without following well-defined procedure relating to the presentation and discussion of such resolutions, as defined by standing order 60 of this house, which further safeguards the principle by prohibiting the consideration and debate of a motion which involves any public aid or charge upon the people, even when made by a member of the government, upon the day it is made, and provides that it shall be adjourned to a future day and then be referred to a committee of the whole house before any resolution or vote of the house do pass thereupon.

Bourinot, at page 406, quotes section 54 of the British North America Act, as follows:

It shall not be lawful for the House of Commons to adopt or pass any vote, resolution, address, or bill for the appropriation of any part of the public revenue, or of any tax or impost, to any purpose that has not been first recommended by a message of the governor general in the session in which such vote, resolution, address or bill is proposed.

The constitutional provision which regulates the procedure of the Canadian commons in this respect applies not only to motions directly proposing a grant of public money, but also to those which involve a grant.

And Bourinot says further:

No cases can be found of any private member in the Canadian commons receiving the authority of the crown, through a minister, to propose a motion involving the expenditure of public money. No principle is better understood than the constitutional obligation that rests upon the executive government, of alone initiating measures imposing charges upon the public exchequer.

In my opinion this resolution if passed would be a direct order from the house to the government to do certain things which would involve an expenditure of public money. Therefore, I say such a resolution is not in order when moved by a private member.

Mr. E. J. GARLAND (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, I think it is to be regretted that the resolution was not framed in the language which would permit Your Honour to rule it in order. However, I can imagine no question of recent years which has so stirred up public indignation and given rise to such scandal as this whole question of Beauharnois. "I believe that there is no government in Canada to-day that does not regret that it has parted with some of those natural resources for a consideration wholly inadequate and on terms which do not reflect the principle under which the crown holds natural resources in trust for all the people." That eloquent declaration of this basic principle is in the words of the Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett) uttered not long ago. I submit to Your Honour and to the house that this whole project, conceived in greed and born in political corruption, is now about to die of illegality. I propose to show, in the first place, that the act of the province of Quebec incorporating the Beauharnois Light, Heat and Power Company, and the amendments thereto, are completely outside the powers of the legislative assembly of that province and that therefore the acts themselves and everything permitted thereunder have no legal foundation, and any securities issued, works done or constructed under the authority of those acts are without legal backing. I submit further that the dominion parliament alone has the right to pass the necessary legislation to empower such works and undertakings as are involved in this development. I take as my authority the British North America Act, and I refer hon. members to section 92, which sets forth the powers of the provincial legislature. Subsection 10 of section 92 reads as follows:

Local works and undertakings other than such as are of the following classes:—

(a) Lines of steam or other ships, railways, canals, telegraphs, and other works and undertakings connecting the province with any other or others of the provinces, or extending beyond the limits of the province.

Clause "c" of this subsection reads as follows:

Such works as, although wholly situate within the province, are before or after their execution declared by the parliament of Canada to be for the general advantage of Canada or for the advantage of two or more of the provinces.

What is my authority for the statement that such works as these are outside the jurisdiction of the province of Quebec? I draw the attention of the house to a definition of that particular section of the British North America Act given in Clement's Canadian constitution, third edition, 1916, page 731. The paragraph is headed Companies' "Objects," and reads:

The purposes or objects to be served by incorporation are, like the possible subjects of legislation, numberless; but it may not be quite useless to consider some possible objects which touch closely the class-enumerations of the British North America Act. The "works and undertakings," for example, mentioned in section 92, No. 10, have been described by the privy council as physical things. Such of them as extend, actually or potentially, beyond the limits of a province are within the exclusive control of the parliament of Canada; and are manifestly not provincial objects for the establishment, control, and operation of which a provincial company could be incorporated. And the same remark applies to such undertakings as, though entirely located in one province, have been declared to be for the general advantage of Canada.

The act passed last year by this house put the whole development of this canal and all works and appurtenances thereto outside the jurisdiction of the province of Quebec. The principle declared in Clement's stamps it as an object other than provincial. Clement is clear and his opinion has been cited in privy council cases. I submit that this government should take into careful consideration the result of the legislative action in connection with this question. We should be careful in examining this matter to distinguish between works and undertakings and services. Businesses may be conducted for the purpose of service. The T. Eaton Company may be incorporated by a province and send its catalogues and ship its goods to other provinces. That does not constitute it an interprovincial company, nor does it place it outside the powers of a province to incorporate. But where a company is incorporated with powers to extend its own lines its own material physical works outside of a province, connecting one with another, or connecting with works that enter another province, then it falls under the scope of section 92 of the British North America Act and is outside the jurisdiction of that province.

Let us consider for a moment the legislation itself. What is there in the act which causes me to say that it is not within the powers of the province of Quebec? The statutes of Quebec, Edward VII, 1902, contain under chapter 72 an act to incorporate the Beauharnois Light, Heat and Power Company.

May I pause here for a moment to emphasize once more the point made by the hon. member for Acadia (Mr. Gardiner) when he spoke this afternoon? He pointed out to the Prime Minister and to the house that the legislation passed last year by the house is not legal because it concerns itself with a company which does not exist. The act passed by this house declares itself as being legislation for the Beauharnois Light, Heat and Power Company, Limited—there is no such company, it never was created or incorporated. Beauharnois Light, Heat and Power Company is the proper title granted by the legislation of the province of Quebec, but that is by the way.

If hon. members will take the trouble to study the provincial act they will find in section 12 of chapter 32 the following:

> The company may supply, sell and distribute light, heat and power in any direction within a radius of thirty miles from the town of Beauharnois, and for that purpose may set up and establish all necessary apparatus for transmitting such light, heat and power, by wires or similar means on posts or underground along public and private roads, streets and by-roads—

And so on. Let me emphasize again what this legislation says. It says that this company may sell light, heat and power within a radius of thirty miles from the town of Beauharnois, that it may set up the necessary transmission lines, posts and so on to distribute that power. If hon. members will take a map of the province of Quebec and take a pencil, placing one end of it on the town of Beauharnois and describing a radius of thirty miles, they will find that this company is authorized to sell power and to extend its works into the state of New York and the province of Ontario. Surely that ought to be sufficient evidence that this act is not within the power of the Quebec legislature. But that is not all. By subsequent amendments in 1910 to the same act, that radius was extended. Section 12 was amended by section 10 of the amending act to read:

> The company may supply, sell and distribute light, heat and power in any direction within a radius of forty miles from the town of Beauharnois.

As I have said, under a radius of thirty miles the operations of this company may extend into the state of New York and the province of Ontario. By this amendment adding ten miles, how much further will they extend? These statutes have no basis in law and under the constitution of this country they are absolutely invalid. As further evidence of that, I propose to show to the house to-night that on appeals, the privy council decided again and again that such works and undertakings as are involved in this project are entirely outside the jurisdiction of the province of Quebec. I propose to show in regard to railway, telephone and radio that the privy council has decided against the provinces in matters of this kind.

By the way, just before I proceed with that, may I submit this point? While so far I have suggested that because of the interprovincial character of the company it was outside the jurisdiction of the province of Quebec to pass such an act, I have also shown that potentially the company penetrates the state of New York and is therefore an international company which any legal member of the house knows, it is not within the power of the province to incorporate.

The first supporting decision I propose to give to the house is, as I have said, in connection with railways. Under the British North America Act, a railway which exists solely within the boundary of a province and does not extend beyond that boundary or connect with another line extending beyond it, is within the jurisdiction of the province; but the moment a line of that character connects with a line extending beyond the boundary of the province—it does not itself have to extend beyond that border line—the privy council has decided that it is no longer provincial but interprovincial in character. In the case of Luscar Collieries versus MacDonald, Supreme Court Cases, page 932 of Law Reports Appeal Cases, Privy Council, 1927, their lordships, in handing down their decision in the matter, had this to say:

> Their lordships agree with the opinion of Justice Duff that the Mountain Park Railway and the Luscar branch are, under the circumstances hereinbefore set forth, a part of a continuous system of railways operated together by the Canadian National Railway Company, and connecting the province of Alberta with other provinces of the dominion. It is, in their view, impossible to hold as to any section of that system which does not reach the boundary of a province that it does not connect that province with another. If it connects with a line which itself connects with one in another province, then it would be a link in the chain of connection, and would properly be said to connect the province in which it is situated with other provinces.

I take a further case, that of a telephone company. Obviously there is a very close analogy between a telephone company and a power company in respect of the fact that they both use wires to transmit their works or services. In this particular case the extension beyond the province had not actually taken place and yet their lordships found that because the act of incorporation gave them power, that is, gave them the potential right to extend beyond the province, therefore that act was not within provincial jurisdiction. I quote from the now famous case of the Toronto Corporation versus the Bell Telephone Company of Canada as reported at page 57 of Law Reports, Appeal Cases, Privy Council, 1905. The actual hearing took place in 1904. Their lordships said:

It can hardly be disputed that a telephone company the objects of which as defined by its act of incorporation contemplate extension beyond the limits of one province is just as much within the express exception as a telegraph company with like powers of extension.

They had in a previous case decided that telegraph companies, extending as they do potentially beyond a province, were not within the jurisdiction of a provincial legislature. Supposing the question should arise: Well, in this case no connections have been made and therefore no infraction of the British North America Act has actually taken place; the company has not its physical works or undertakings outside the boundary. Then what would the position be? Again I refer hon. gentlemen to the same privy council decision in which their lordships held:

"The question of the legislative jurisdiction must be judged of by the terms of the enactment, and not by what may or may not be thereafter done under it. The failure or neglect to put into effect all the powers given by the legislative authority affords no ground for questioning the original jurisdiction."

If authority be wanted in support of this proposition, it will be found in the case of Colonial Building and Investment Association v. Attorney-General of Quebec, to which the learned judges of Appeal refer.

The final case I wish to draw to the attention of the government and of the house is the quite recently decided radio case. This is one where neither rail nor wire connection was involved. It is a question of air connection, something that would appear to the ordinary individual to be intangible and hardly capable of the definition of a physical connection. Yet in fact it is a physical connection and it was so decided by their lordships for, in the case of the privy council appeal on radio on February 9, 1932, their lordships determined what the physical work or undertaking was. They said that these works, that is a transmitter and a receiver, are physical things, not services; that they cannot be separated; that they are links in a chain even though connected but by air. They say:

Their lordships have therefore no doubt that the undertaking of broadcasting is an undertaking connecting the province with other provinces and extending beyond the limits of the province.

Surely I have given sufficient cases to indicate that so far as privy council appeals are concerned, all the probability, nay, more, the absolute certainty, is on the side of those who contend that the act to incorporate the Beauharnois Light, Heat and Power Company is not within the competence of the province of Quebec; that it is therefore ultra vires and that all the works, undertakings, investments and so on are completely without legal foundation or standing. The situation is extremely serious; it is one that has arisen owing to the hasty greed of unscrupulous promoters and the negligent complacency of legislative bodies.

Mr. POULIOT: Does not the same question apply to the Ontario hydro?

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I would not be at all surprised if it did. In regard to the power and canal works on the St. Lawrence river, I am absolutely convinced that as they are interprovincial, nay more, international in character, they are not within the competence of either Quebec or Ontario. There is no doubt in my mind on that point and I am glad the hon. member raised it.

A further fact in connection with this case is this: it was referred to by the hon. member for Acadia this afternoon. This canal is not an isolated canal. It is not a canal in the sense that some canal, say, down in the maritimes would be, or possibly a canal out in the province of Alberta. This canal is already declared to be a link in the great waterways project, the deep seaway. Have I authority for that? May I submit to the house that the original incorporation of this company under section 11 of chapter 72 of the statutes to which I have referred stated that the company shall be empowered to construct a canal not exceeding 150 feet English measure in width. Such a canal might have been regarded as so unimportant as possibly to be within the competence of the province of Quebec, but subsequent amendments, as in section 6 of the act of 1910, entirely changed this and gave the company power to widen the canal to 300 feet or to build a new canal 1,100 feet in width. It is getting bigger all the time, you see. Finally the act of 1930 gave the company power to construct a canal of the magnificent capacity of approximately 4,000 feet in width, capable of taking the entire flow of the St. Lawrence. This clearly indicates to me, and I hope to hon. members of this house, that the scope of the work was not a mere provincial canal or an irrigation ditch or anything of that kind, but a work to fit in with and be a part of the great deep seaway of the St. Lawrence. This view is upheld by many authorities. Almost every engineer who has been called upon to advise upon the matter has declared that it is such a link in the deep seaway and must be so regarded. Engineer Holgate, Engineer Acres, the report of Mr. St. Laurent to the minister of that day, have so held. But I do not have to go back to the opinions of these men. This government has decided it, and the previous government has decided it. I quote from the words of the right hon. leader of the government as reported at page 2113 of Hansard of April 18, 1932. He said:

> We have indicated, as I said at the very threshold of my observations, that as the project was by common consent, alike by the late administration and by this, treated as an undertaking that was a link in the St. Lawrence waterway and that the canal should be a canal that would be available to navigation if as and when that undertaking is proceeded with—

A link, mark you. Again on the same page he says:

> But having regard to the relation of this enterprise to navigation and to its being a unit in the development of the St. Lawrence waterway,—

And so forth.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I have no objection to my hon. friend stating that the present government have designated it as a link in the canal system, but he is under a misapprehension in asserting that that was definitely stated by the previous government. If my hon. friend will look at the agreement he will see that I am correct.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): If there is any hon. member in this house who has any doubt as to the intentions of the company or as to the knowedge on the part of those who were interested in granting the lease as to the intentions of the company, then I shall be glad to hear an explanation from my hon. friend from West Edmonton (Mr. Stewart). No public man of intelligence who studies this thing will be deceived in that matter. There is no question that the late administration did know that the Beauharnois Power Company did actually offer to the late government this canal free of charge to be a part of the deep seaway, and hon. members know it was so and it was accepted as such.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I do not wish to interrupt my hon. friend, but they did not definitely state it was to be accepted as such although constructed for the purpose.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I will leave my hon. friend to explain it. The Beauharnois Company itself had no delusions in the matter, for in many of its prospectuses it stated definitely that the canal would be a link in the deep seaway. I have here, for example, the best known of these prospectuses, entitled Physical Facts and Financial Figures. They are well worth reading, especially the financial figures. They are very illuminating. Some time in the future, politicians and historians will look back upon this whole affair as one just as fantastical as any fairy tale that came out of the Arabian Nights. At page 6 of this prospectus the company says:

> In providing deep water navigation in its power canal the Beauharnois Power Corporation is providing one of the major links in the deep waterways by canalizing all the wholly Canadian section of the river, save for the stretch around the Lachine rapids at Montreal.

It must be clear already to hon. members who have been studying this question, and most of them I presume have been, more or less, that an undertaking such as this, anything that is so interconnecting, provincially speaking, as this, anything that is so international as this, obviously is not within the power of the province of Quebec to decide upon, nor can it be within the power of the province of Quebec or for that matter the province of Ontario, to legislate in respect to such matters. If further support of my argument in this regard is required I would refer hon. members to the factum presented, as the hon. member for Acadia (Mr. Gardiner) stated this afternoon, on behalf of the late administration to the Supreme Court of Canada. At page 106 of the factum, paragraph 135, we find the following:

> Under section 91, No. 29, and section 92, No. 10 (a), of the British North America Act, actual or constructive extension beyond the limits of a province is a necessary feature of the work or undertaking in order to confer legislative jurisdiction upon the dominion parliament concerning same or to incorporate companies with objects in relation thereto, but as to the latter, it is now well established that it is the potential scope of the authorized objects and not the area of their actual exercise or operation which determines the character of the work or undertaking as being federal and where the authority conferred covers works or undertakings which may extend beyond the limits of a province, such works or undertakings are therefore non-local and fall to the exclusive jurisdiction of the dominion by virtue of section 92, No. 10 (a).

Then they cite certain cases. That was the position taken by the late administration and presented in the form of a factum by the Solicitor General for the Dominion of Canada before the Supreme Court of Canada. These legal gentlemen who made up the representatives of the government further stated at page 107, paragraph 137, of the factum:

The attorney general—

What attorney general? The Attorney General of the Dominion of Canada, the former attorney general:

The attorney general, therefore, submits that the parliament of Canada has legislative power under section 92, No. 10 (a) to authorize the Dominion government to construct and operate power works in interprovincial rivers provided the authority so conferred contemplates works which by themselves or their transmission lines physically extend beyond the limits of a single province or physically connect with works or lines in another province or which, though locally situate within a given province, form part of a general power undertaking authorized by the legislation and which includes, in fact or contemplation, similar works or lines or operation in one or more provinces and that for such purposes the Dominion parliament may confer power to purchase or expropriate provincial crown lands whether lying in the bed of an interprovincial river or otherwise.

There are clauses innumerable in the factum which bear out my contention that in the opinion of the late government, in the opinion of the attorney general and the group of lawyers who pleaded this factum before the supreme court, this parliament and this parliament alone had rights to legislate both in respect of power and canalization in connection with this project. By the way, the question of connection, the connecting work or undertakings comes in at this point. We see that in the act of incorporation the company has the potential right, or is supposed to have the potential right, to extend its works and undertakings into another province. But is there any evidence that it intends to use that right? All I have to do is to refer to the statement made to-day by the hon. member for Acadia that already the company has entered into contracts with the Hydro Electric Commission of the province of Ontario for the sale of power to them. How can they supply power? The only way under heaven power can be got from the Beauharnois development to the province of Ontario is by wires, and those wires must connect. If they connect even within the province of Quebec with the Ontario power line they become interprovincial in character.

Mr. LAVERGNE: The contract is sufficient.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): That is quite true; the contract alone is sufficient to prove definitely the interprovincial character of this company. As I have already indicated, the fact that this is a link in a deep seaway canalization scheme also removes the project from the ambit of provincial legislation. A study of the map will reveal that this canal connects lake St. Francis with lake St. Louis. Lake St. Louis is a provincial lake, situate wholly within the province of Quebec. Lake St. Francis, however, is not only an interprovincial lake but it is international. A part of that lake is within the boundaries of the United States of America; a large part of it is within the province of Ontario. This canal, when completed must breach the dyke on the shore of lake St. Francis, and the minute it does that it becomes an interprovincial and international connecting link, a part of the connecting whole. It cannot be separated. When a project of this kind cannot be separated by itself within the limits of a province it ceases to be provincial in character, and becomes interprovincial.

Many authorities are at my disposal. I have not time to quote at length, but would refer hon. members to a case previously mentioned to-day. I refer to the argument of the late administration through the mouth of its attorney general. It is all there. But, more than that, the plans of the joint board of engineers show, as I have just indicated, that this project is interprovincial and international. To what extent? One third of lake St. Francis—that enormous amount, Mr. Speaker—one third of lake St. Francis is within the province of Ontario; almost the same amount is within the United States of America. Any movement of water from that lake via a canal such as the one proposed interferes with treaty obligations, and by virtue of that one fact becomes a matter within the sole jurisdiction of the dominion parliament.

I now come to the matter of treaty obligations, and the question whether or not they are important. I could cite case after case, report after report, dealing with this matter, but I have not time to do so. I shall refer only to the remarks of the present chief engineer of the Department of Railways and Canals, Mr. McLachlan. This gentleman gave evidence before the committee of this house which last year investigated the Beauharnois project. He was interrogated concerning difficulties involved in the project, and his evidence went to show that there was a certain current running crosswise at the entrance to the canal at lake St. Francis which would render exceedingly dangerous the navigation of ships at that point. In answer to the inquiry, "Is it a serious question?" he was referring to the matter of navigation and interference with treaty obligations, he answered, "Well, it is serious enough for me to feel that some change ought to be made to mitigate conditions, otherwise I am sure we will have trouble both in using the waterway we have built under those conditions and in satisfying the American engineers when they come to approve of what we propose to do in Canadian territory." Then the question was asked, "And this change was never approved?" to which he replied, "This change was never approved." To my knowledge, so far as my information goes, the plans for this international work have not yet been approved. I submit that before work can be commenced, before navigation can ensue, there must be approval granted by the International Joint Commission under the Boundary Waters Treaty of 1909.

There are other points to which I should like to draw the attention of hon. members. In summing up this phase of the matter, however, I suggest that the granting of authority, or the purporting to grant authority, to extend these works and undertakings as proposed in the charter to which I have referred is not, I assert definitely—and I challenge legal correction, because after all I am only a layman, and am willing to listen to legal opinions in the matter—within the competence of the province of Quebec; the charter is ultra vires and illegal, and should be cancelled.

What about the interests involved? Serious—very serious. Not only should the charter be cancelled, but if the situation is left in its present position I hesitate to picture to the house what the possibilities may be. The federal government, however, can protect the public interest, and it is for that reason the amendment has been moved to-day. We have offered it humbly and respectfully, with no wish whatever to dictate, but simply to offer suggestions as to the manner in which the present federal administration should deal with the matter. In my opinion the federal government at this time can and should reorganize the whole project. Both in respect to power output and canalization it should be declared a work in the national interest. There should be set up a federal hydro-electric commission to deal with the vast water power of this great international river.

On his oration in connection with this matter during the session of the year 1930 the Prime Minister, the leader of this government, asked the following question, "Do hon. members realize what this power development means? Do they realize that it means the future welfare and interests of not thousand or tens of thousands, but milions of people in the great valley of the St. Lawrence?" I say the whole St. Lawrence project comes within the scope of his statement. The whole St. Lawrence river scheme, involving as it does the development of 5,000,000 horse-power, 4,000,000 of which would belong to Canada, justifies and necessitates the creation of a federal hydro-electric commission to be operated in the public interest.

I opened my remarks to-day with a quotation from a speech by the leader of the government in which he said that governments regretted having given away for nothing, or next to nothing, valuable resources. Here is an opportunity for this government to save to the people of Canada one of the greatest and most powerful resources. They can declare this work to be in the national interest; they can create a federal hydro-electric commission. I submit if a part of the scheme can be developed in the national interest, the whole of it can be. The legality of the present situation should be decided. Let them take the matter to the privy council. I am satisfied as to what the decision will be.

The project cannot be left in its present state without grave dangers—yes, grave dangers—to the legitimate investments of Canadians and others. There is the further risk, worse than the one I have mentioned, that the great power interests may now seize upon the project, in its dying days, and grasp it to themselves, with the result that within a very short time this country would find itself under the absolute control of the Holt monopoly, the great Montreal Light, Heat and Power Company. There is no question in my mind as to the grave danger of that condition arising, if something is not done. In any case, Mr. Speaker, if this government does not act, if it merely leaves this company operating in the hands in which it now is operating, pouring into its coffers, as it has already been doing, millions of the taxpayers' money and on top of that proposing to make a loan to the tune of $15,000,000 or $16,000,000 more without deciding the question I have raised, why, the whole investment is liable to be lost. For it is certain that a valuable resource of this character is not going to be left in this questionable legal position. There will be, as I feel almost certain, case after case before the courts to determine the legality of it. There will be a definite fight—in fact I believe it commenced some time ago—it will continue, and other interests will combine and conspire to seize control of this project. If this government does not want to leave our investments in danger of being utterly lost it is time now for it to take over the whole project, and protect the rights of the people of Canada.

Mr. SPEAKER: The hon. member for Bow River has spoken forty minutes.

Mr. J. S. WOODSWORTH (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, after the very excellent presentation of this subject by those who have already taken part in the debate, it does not seem necessary to enter any more fully into its legal and constitutional aspects. For two years when this subject has been under discussion I have had the honour of supporting the contentions of the member for Acadia (Mr. Gardiner), the member for Bow River (Mr. Garland), and I should like once again to give whatever support I may to their point of view. Further than that, my colleague from East Hamilton (Mr. Mitchell) in his election campaign promised the electors that if possible he would press for a further inquiry into this whole matter. Up to the present we have not been able to bring the matter before the house, and unfortunately my colleague owing to another engagement is not able to be present this evening. So I should like on his behalf to say a few words with regard to the question.

Last year when I returned to my own city of Winnipeg I found myself the subject of a good deal of criticism, not because I had participated in debates on this question but rather because I had not gone far enough in urging immediate action. So far as the press represents public opinion, I may say the Manitoba Free Press urged that the matter should not have been left where the committee left it last session; and the Tribune—which generally supports the Conservative government—came out very strongly indeed with the view that some plan had been hatched in the committee to prevent the public getting at the real facts of the case. The two papers were inclined to denounce some of us Independents because we had not done more in attempting to force action on the part of the government. I should like to read the statement which I gave to the house last session on the 31st of July, just after the report of the committee was presented:

> —to-day the public demand several outstanding things. First of all the punishment of (a) those who have defrauded the public; (b) those who have been guilty of bribery, and (c) those who have betrayed public trust.

I think undoubtedly the general public did believe there was going to be some sort of justice in regard to these matters in which corruption had been shown. I submit that although these months have gone by there has been no punishment of the guilty parties.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Hear, hear.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Unfortunately last year the reference was so narrow that the committee could not follow up its investigations as far as they should have been followed; further, I suppose owing to the party warfare it was not possible for the majority of the committee to be free to go very far; also, as members will recognize, there were several representatives from the provinces present, who as soon as anything that touched the provinces came before the committee objected strongly on the ground that these were provincial matters; and so the inquiry did not go very far. The same thing happened to some extent, I believe, in the provincial inquiry; it stopped before the fullest investigation had been made. I think the same criticism may be made with regard to the investigation in the Senate, which was largely confined to the conduct of certain senators. So that so far as meting out punishment is concerned, the only action taken has been to force one senator to resign his position.

Mr. LAVERGNE: He committed suicide.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Last July I also said:

> Second, I think the public demand a further investigation,—

I am still of that opinion. It seems to me that in attempting to move his amendment to-night, the member for Acadia was along right lines when he suggested a royal commission. I do not believe parliament is a suitable body to make an investigation of this character. We all recognize that party feeling runs high, that the past government had a good deal to do with this matter, that the present government may or may not have administered it in just the right way, and so party considerations undoubtedly enter into any parliamentary investigation, and certainly would enter into the report of any special committee. It would seem to me that there ought to be a judicial investigation.

I submit, Mr. Speaker, there is a very grave danger at the present time that the public will lose all confidence in parliamentary institutions and will come to the conclusion that parliament is intent on shielding rather than exposing corruption when it involves the great corporations. Since no subject has aroused greater public interest than this Beauharnois scandal, interest extending over the past two years, it seems to me that the government would be well-advised to accept this suggestion to appoint a royal commission to go into every aspect of this affair, and particularly, as the attempted amendment puts it:

> Especially with regard to all moneys derived from the sale of the $13,000,000 of collateral trust bonds issued by the Beauharnois Corporation Limited.

I suggested thirdly:

> —a very large section of the people demand government control of the whole Beauharnois enterprise.

I know there are those in the province of Quebec who have been very strong in their advocacy of provincial rights in this matter, and who at the same time have been very strong—until recently at least—in urging private ownership.

Mr. LAVERGNE: They are not very numerous.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Possibly, as the hon. member for Montmagny (Mr. LaVergne) suggests, they are not very numerous. But I do believe there is a growing number of the people across Canada who are convinced that the only way to settle this matter properly is by government control of the whole Beauharnois enterprise. Then I suggested:

> Further, at least the more thoughtful part of the public demand legislation that will prevent similar occurrences in the future.

I believe that that too is an increasing demand on the part of the public. So far we have had no legislation. When on various occasions this session some of us have raised the question of watered stock we have been told that it was practically impossible for the government to do anything in the matter. The lid has been lifted a little bit in this Beauharnois question, and we have seen how the public has been defrauded and exploited. But those who know anything about the way a great many corporations have been carried on will recognize that Beauharnois is not by any means an isolated example of exploitation and corruption, and whether or not these other cases are investigated as fully as Beauharnois, at least we should have such legislation as would prevent this kind of thing in the future. It is, however, very difficult for any private member to introduce legislation of that kind. Only to-night we had an example of how strictly the rules of procedure are interpreted, in that no matter may be brought up by a private member if it involves in any way the expenditure of public moneys, nor even any resolution which expresses the opinion of the house on a certain course that might involve the expenditure of public moneys. Under these circumstances it is next to impossible for any member to propose legislation; all we can do is to appeal to the government to take action along this line.

In concluding my speech on this question on May 26 last year, I ventured to summarize the points which I had been trying to make, and as I have not the time to-night to argue the case, I should like to read this summary, which I think is in line with the presentation just made by the hon. member for Bow River (Mr. Garland):

> The claims of this corporation are based essentially on the old claims of the Roberts. The Dominion government owns the Roberts' works, as is shown by the fact that the present corporation is paying a nominal rental charge to the Dominion government.

That fact was brought out very clearly in the factum to which reference has been made; indeed, it was the reading of the factum that largely converted me in the matter. I could not read that presentation as made by the Attorney General and others on behalf of the late administration without believing that there was a very strong case for the dominion ownership and operation of the water-powers of the St. Lawrence.

> Under the British North America Act, public works on the St. Lawrence were definitely put under Dominion jurisdiction.

It was a surprise to me when I read the British North America Act. It may be said—I know it has been said—that the clauses cited related to certain particular powers, but I am still of the opinion that, since the claims of the present corporation are based entirely on the rights of the Roberts, from the legal standpoint these powers are still within the jurisdiction of the Dominion government. I further urged:

> Moreover, the province can incorporate only such companies as contemplate distinctively provincial objects,—and the objects of the Beauharnois corporation are decidedly not provincial but, in fact, interprovincial in character.

That is one of the points just discussed by the hon. member for Bow River, and the other point I have mentioned is also elaborated by him.

> The St. Lawrence system is essentially a great dominion project, and if we are ever to carry it through successfully we cannot allow anything to stand in the way. Finally, this whole question involves our international obligations.

I still believe I was right in the position I took a year ago. I quite admit that there is ground for dispute as between the dominion and the province. As a matter of fact, it is rather curious that in this particular instance the jurisdictional dispute arises with respect to two distinct aspects of the same enterprise. The province claims the water powers, which claim a great many of us cannot concede and which the factum already quoted disputes. But the province claims—

Mr. CASGRAIN: May I ask the hon. gentleman a question? I understand that my hon. friend refers to the factum that was presented on behalf of the Attorney General of Canada. Has he been made aware of what the decision of the supreme court was on that factum as presented? If my contention is correct, the point of view of the provinces was upheld.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Oh no; as a matter of fact the weight of opinion was against the province.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: As I understand it—

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Could you understand it?

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I was going to say that the decision, as I understand the matter, was left very indefinite. But the point I was emphasizing was that the case as presented by the representatives of the Dominion government still stands. There is nothing to offset that, and it still stands. While the province has claimed the water-powers, and while the Dominion government at that time put in a claim for them, there is no doubt that the canal comes exclusively under the jurisdiction of the Dominion government. So that at best we have the dispute relative to merely one aspect of the project.

I am inclined to think that the province of Quebec secured a great strategic advantage when, apparently without consultation with the dominion, and without waiting for any judicial decision whatever, it granted a charter to a company to go ahead and develop the water-powers the possession of which was under dispute.

Mr. LAVERGNE: It is assuming a lot to say that there was no consultation.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: The hon. member may know more about that than I do; at any rate, nothing has been brought out in public to show that there was such consultation. I was giving the late administration—

Mr. LAVERGNE: The benefit of the doubt.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Yes, the benefit of the doubt, especially after reading the strong presentation in the factum. However, I say that the province of Quebec undoubtedly secured a great strategic advantage in immediately granting the charter and permitting a company under provincial charter to develop these water-powers. But we have reached the stage where this corporation is not able to carry the enterprise through. It is in difficulties to-day, and here it seems to me is the Dominion government's chance. Up to the present time the Dominion government has not done a very great deal in the matter, but one thing that has been done is this: the 80,000 shares issued to the Sterling Corporation have been turned in for cancellation in accordance with the demands made by the government. I give the government credit for that. I do not know just how much these shares are worth, nor do I know under what pressure they were turned in, but I do think that is a good thing, more especially as it seems to me to establish a precedent for the confiscation of watered stocks. I should like to think that this will be done with other shares in this corporation, and with shares in other corporations as well. However, that much has been done, for which I give the government credit. Further, the government has declared that the ownership of the canal is with the Dominion government. That too is a good thing, although I do not know that in reality it amounts to a great deal, because the canal, although it was not owned before by the government, had to operate under the supervision of the Dominion government. I do not know that there is any financial change involved, and it seems to me that in this matter the government has not made anything more than a technical gain.

On the other hand the government have assumed enormous responsibilities; they have backed the banks, they have, as it were, underwritten the scheme. Since the bondholders do not appear to be in a position to carry through the enterprise for themselves, there is a great danger of the whole undertaking falling into the hands of some one person capable of putting it through. The name of that one person is on the lips of all—Sir Herbert Holt. It would be a very sorry triumph indeed if the net result of the exposures in this house is that the Dominion government will be obligated to carry the canal through to completion, whereas under the old arrangement it would have been completed without any government financial responsibility, and further that the enterprise is to be taken out of the hands of a financially small man like Mr. Sweezey and thrown into the hands of a big financial man like Sir Herbert Holt. If that is the net result of it all, it will be most unfortunate and disappointing.

It does seem to me that it is now quite possible for the government to take over this whole scheme as a dominion enterprise; in fact I do not see any other way in which it can be saved. Even if we conceded the claims of the province of Quebec to the water-powers, the government might still take over the enterprise, considering the financial obligations they have already incurred. They undoubtedly have the right to construct the canal. If it were found that Quebec had certain rights in the water-powers, those surplus powers not needed by the dominion for canal purposes could be turned over to that province for distribution. The same thing could be done in connection with the water-powers in the province of Ontario. If it is found that the dominion has not the rights which many of us think it has to the water-powers, let the dominion continue this undertaking as a great public work; let it carry on the development; let it use what power it needs for canal purposes, and then turn over the residual amount to the provinces.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): On proper terms.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Certainly, on proper terms. That could be done even if the provincial rights are conceded, but I do not see why those claims should be conceded without a reference to either the supreme court or the privy council. When the Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett) was making a statement a few weeks ago I asked if it were not possible to present another case to the courts. I do not know that I am sufficiently familiar with legal terms to state properly what I have in mind, but it seems to me that if the Dominion government went ahead and quietly assumed control, they could then go to the courts and have a better chance of a decision being arrived at. I think the chances would be better than if a hypothetical case were presented, as was done the last time the matter was referred to the supreme court. Let us go ahead and seize this undertaking; let the government go ahead with its canal project—that will involve the development of the dams and other facilities necessary in the development of water-power—which it has an absolute right to do, and then, if the provincial government challenges the government's action, there would be an actual case to be presented to the supreme court or the privy council.

In the few moments that remain to me I should like to run over very briefly one or two of the points contained in the amendment which the hon. member for Acadia (Mr. Gardiner) was not permitted to place before the house. There is no doubt a good deal of public money is involved and more that will be needed before this project is completed. That in itself seems to me to warrant active interference on the part of the government. Only the other day I was approached by several bondholders who were anxious to know what the government could possibly do in the matter. The affairs of this project are now in rather a critical state and the government by taking a strong line of action could settle the matter without any great difficulty.

I have already urged the nationalization of the whole project, and I do not know that it is necessary to say more in this connection. The hon. member for Bow River has quoted the words of the Prime Minister in connection with radio. If it is necessary to prevent radio from being exploited, it is surely necessary to prevent our water-powers from being exploited. If it is wise that radio should be maintained as a heritage for our children, it is surely wise that these great water-powers should also be retained as a heritage for our children. The suggestion is made that a federal hydro-electric commission be appointed, and I cannot see why that suggestion would not be feasible. With our transportation systems in such serious condition, it is highly desirable that there should be a correlation of all our various means of communication and transportation.

Another point is in connection with the question whether or not the act passed by the province of Quebec which granted the charter to this company is ultra vires.

Mr. LAVERGNE: There is no doubt it is.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: The hon. member across the way says that there is no doubt it is ultra vires, and that expression of opinion is on the lips of a great many people to-day. That should afford a legal basis for the carrying out of other definite and constructive measures. If I may venture to speak not only for my own constituency but to express what I know is the feeling prevailing in the western provinces, I would say that the people of the prairies realized very keenly that Beauharnois is a matter which concerns not only the east but the west as well.

Mr. LAVERGNE: That is also the opinion of Quebec.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I am glad to hear that it is also the opinion of Quebec. If that is true, then there seems to be no reason why we could not get action along these lines. Further than that, I know that the west as a whole will stand stoutly behind public ownership and will back up any action on the part of the present government which will give us control over this great national heritage.

Hon. C. H. CAHAN (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I do not think it is necessary to follow the hon. gentlemen in all the extreme and exaggerated statements which they have made. The argument contained in the factum presented by the Attorney General of Canada to the Supreme Court of Canada seems to have convinced hon. gentlemen of the third party as to its sanity, soundness and logic but it failed utterly to have that same effect upon the supreme court. Fortunately it was the supreme court that had jurisdiction in the matter as well as the duty and obligation of rendering a decision in the premises. But I should be very reluctant that either this house or the country should take its final opinion on legal questions from either the hon. member for Acadia (Mr. Gardiner) or the hon. member for Bow River (Mr. Garland). The hon. member for Acadia this afternoon endeavoured to show, without any supporting argument, that it is illegal in Canada for our banks to make a loan on the bonds of an incorporated company—that was his suggestion—especially if that incorporated company held real estate or immovable property. No more absurd opinion, I suggest, could possibly have been rendered, and if the contention of the hon. member for Acadia were to be accepted, we would have very many financial problems added to those with which we are now faced. There can be no doubt that under the provisions of the Bank Act loans may be legally made by a bank on the security of bonds of an incorporated company.

But the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Woodsworth) professed to be anxious to have the waters of the St. Lawrence within the province of Quebec declared to be a national interest and taken over and administered by the federal government of Canada. He suggested that all the provinces of the west were entirely in favour of such action. Such advocacy would have had more influence upon my opinion had it been publicly made some years before the water-powers of British Columbia within the railway belt, which water-powers were undoubtedly within the jurisdiction of the dominion, were, at the request of western members, transferred to that province, they contending day in and day out that British Columbia demanded that the water-powers within its borders should be administered by the provincial government. In recent years I have been in the house during two or three sessions when members from the provinces of the middle west, Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta, have demanded most vociferously that the natural resources, including the water-powers, of those three provinces, which were undoubtedly vested in His Majesty in the right of the dominion, should be transferred to those provinces, not merely as a property right but so as to bring those water-powers within the legislative jurisdiction of those respective provinces. I did not hear the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre raise his voice against that transfer to his own province of Manitoba, which he then represented, nor did I hear a voice raised from either of the other two provinces, Alberta and Saskatchewan, against such a transfer. It was made with the almost unanimous approbation of both sides of the house, and it remains to-day as a transfer which vests those natural resources, including water-powers, in His Majesty in the right of these several provinces.

The provinces are rather jealous of their rights. Ontario has persistently claimed that the right to develop one-half of the flow of the St. Lawrence river within the international section is vested in the crown in the right of that province, and public and legal opinion in that province has almost unanimously approved that contention. In our province of Quebec, we are rather sensitive with regard to our rights. That province has insisted not only that the water-powers on the great rivers within its borders are vested in the crown in the right of the province, but that the water-powers on the St. Lawrence where it flows through Quebec are vested in the crown in the right of the province. It is not for me to say that that contention is valid until it is finally passed upon by a judicial court of final appeal. But when the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre suggests that we should take that property and that right, leaving the province to contest our taking of its property, that is simply making the appeal which the ordinary burglar makes when he enters a house and takes property which he knows does not belong to him, leaving it to the householder to put the burglar out and to protect his chattels. I feel sometimes in sympathy with the hon member for Winnipeg North Centre when he suggests, in regard to the protection of labour in this country, certain social improvements, but that proper end cannot be attained by burglary and theft such as he has advocated in this house to-night.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I rise to a point of order. The hon. member has suggested that I have been advocating burglary in the house to-night. I have not advocated anything of the kind. I have suggested that the Dominion government has certain rights. The hon. member differs from me. He has a perfect right to differ, but he has no right to say that I have advocated burglary, and I ask him to withdraw that expression.

Mr. CAHAN: Perhaps I should withdraw my nomenclature for the subject matter which the hon. member advocated, but he and I differ as to what burglary and theft mean. What is clear to me is that by reiterating scandal when it serves no good purpose, what my hon. friend has in mind is not the preservation of national rights. If that preservation were his sole object, I could approve it, but it seems to me, from time to time when his argument is brought home, the hon. gentleman deliberately, earnestly and persistently seeks to break down parliamentary institutions and responsible government in this country. In that end and purpose I certainly cannot agree with him.

First, I shall deal with the argument that simply because section 12 of the act incorporating the Beauharnois Light, Heat and Power Company provides that "the company may supply, sell and distribute light, heat and power in any direction within a radius of forty miles from the town of Beauharnois," and assuming that forty miles from the town of Beauharnois would extend across the United States border, therefore, it is asserted, this act is ultra vires of the province, because it provides that a provincial company may transmit its power across the border. I do not think that either the Supreme Court of Canada or the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council will place that interpretation upon it, which was clearly not the interpretation placed upon it by the government and the legislature at the time the act was passed. I would suggest that the Supreme Court of Canada or the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council might well interpret that section to mean that the company is authorized to supply, sell and distribute light, heat and power in any direction within the legislative jurisdiction of the province of Quebec within a radius of forty miles from the town of Beauharnois. But to suggest to this house that the whole act is ultra vires because of the extreme and exaggerated construction placed upon that single section seems to me to be absurd.

With regard to Beauharnois, I regard this debate as exceedingly inopportune. This house has decided by the statements made by the leaders of opinion on both sides that no active step should be taken to prevent the holders of the collateral trust bonds of the Beauharnois Company from realizing upon the security which they have for their bonds, or from placing themselves in a position where they can approach the government of the province of Quebec and also approach this parliament, so far as it has legislative or its government administrative jurisdiction, to procure our sanction for measures whereby they may carry on to a conclusion and a completion the undertaking of that company. These bondholders have had to wait while another house of this parliament has been considering the Beauharnois scandal. They have had to wait until a commission appointed under the legislative authority of the province of Ontario had finished its investigation into certain features of the so-called Beauharnois scandal. But now I say to hon. gentlemen, give to these bondholders an opportunity without further obstruction or further reckless and immature criticism to meet together, as they seek to do, to form their proper committees, and take such measures as are within their jurisdiction as bondholders in order to place this undertaking on a sound and secure basis. The trustee for the bondholders at their request has called a meeting at Montreal for the tenth of June, 1932, and these bondholders are meeting there for the purpose of examining into the undertaking, business and affairs of the company and of taking such measures as will enable them to preserve their rights and interests. It would be, I think, not only inopportune but improper for the government of Canada, while we ask them and have asked them to take these measures to protect their own interests, to intervene and obstruct and preclude them from taking those measures which are necessary in order to preserve their property rights.

The hon. member for Acadia suggested that all the Beauharnois legislation we have passed is utterly illegal and invalid because the word "limited" is used after the name of the Beauharnois Light, Heat and Power Company. Well, Mr. Speaker, that is so frivolous that one finds difficulty in dealing with it. Anyway I will say this, that in drafting the statute, chapter 20 and chapter 19 of last year, the Beauharnois Light, Heat and Power Company was described as a limited company. It is a limited company in effect although the word limited is not in its name, but that that statute did not definitely describe the company incorporated and organized under the legislation of the province of Quebec, which was therein referred to, I absolutely deny; and I doubt if my hon. friend could find a sane and sound lawyer throughout the length and breadth of this country who would say that that statute is invalid in consequence of the objection my hon. friend has raised.

The hon. member for Acadia suggests that because this canal has by section 1 of chapter 20 of the statutes of 1931 been declared to be a work for the general advantage of Canada, therefore the government of Canada is entitled to go in and take possession of the company's property and confiscate it and forfeit it to the crown in the right of the dominion. Otherwise his argument seemed to me to be absolutely without effect.

Mr. GARDINER: I object to that statement, Mr. Speaker. I never suggested that this government go and confiscate the property. My hon. friend is drawing upon his imagination too much.

Mr. CAHAN: So far as my imagination extends, if I could reach anywhere near the limits of the mind of the hon. member for Acadia in his discussion of this afternoon, I should abandon my robe and profession as a lawyer for the writing of extravagant poetry or romance.

Mr. GARDINER: It is a great pity the hon. gentleman has not that much imagination.

Mr. CAHAN: Let us stick to the facts. Section 1 of chapter 20 says:

> 1. The canal now being constructed by the Beauharnois Light, Heat and Power Company, Limited, a body corporate, incorporated under the laws of the province of Quebec, between lake St. Francis and lake St. Louis, on the south side of, or in or along the St. Lawrence river, and the works on land or lands covered with water, excavations, embankments, retaining structures, remedial works, dams, locks and other works appurtenant to said canal, now executed or hereafter to be executed, are hereby declared to be works for the general advantage of Canada.

That simply means that the canal and the approaches to the canal, the walls of the canal and the locks and other works appurtenant thereto, which may be useful for navigation now or in the future, are declared to be within the legislative jurisdiction of the parliament of Canada; but it so far leaves untouched the power house and power works and the hydro-electric installations in the power house and other works. Then to show the meaning clearly, section 2 of chapter 20 says:

> The governor in council is hereby authorized from time to time to make any orders, rules or regulations which may be deemed necessary or convenient with respect to any diversion of waters of the St. Lawrence river by said company or appertaining or relating to the protection of the paramount rights and interests of navigation in and through said canal and connecting waters.

So that we have taken authority by order in council to protect our paramount rights in respect of water flowing through the canal or ditch which has been or is being constructed by the Beauharnois Light, Heat and Power Company. But then, in order that it might be made clear that we had no intention to encroach upon the exclusive jurisdiction of the province of Quebec this parliament enacted in section 4:

> Nothing in this act contained shall be deemed to affect any right that may be vested in the province of Quebec over or in respect of the use of the waters of the river St. Lawrence for the development of hydro-electric power.

Since the arguments which were included in the factums from which the hon. member quoted so freely this afternoon failed to persuade the Supreme Court of Canada or the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, this constitutional question which has been raised as to legislative jurisdiction is not yet finally and conclusively decided. It can be decided in only one of two ways, either by a final decision of a judicial body, through litigation arising with regard to the subject matter, or by agreement between the dominion and the province with confirmatory legislative and parliamentary enactments.

It so happens that the Prime Minister and my colleagues committed to me, in conjunction with the representatives of the province of Quebec and of the Beauharnois Light, Heat and Power Company, the drafting of the order in council P.C. 504, of March 1, 1932, to which reference was made to-day by the hon. member for Acadia. If need be, although forty minutes is not sufficient time in which to enter into so lengthy a discussion, I am prepared to vindicate and support the terms of that order in council as being to my mind perfectly fair and equitable as between the parties, and within the legislative jurisdiction of the parliament of Canada under the terms of the acts to which I have just referred.

Chapter 19 of the acts of last year provided that the Beauharnois Light, Heat and Power Company has the right to utilize 53,072 cubic feet of water by the diversion now being made. That right, whether it was founded upon an invalid or a valid enactment of the province of Quebec, was ratified last year by the unanimous vote of the parliament of Canada. Section 2 of chapter 19 reads:

> The Beauharnois Light, Heat and Power Company, Limited, its successors or assigns, in so far as it may be within the competence of parliament, is hereby granted the right to divert from lake St. Francis up to but not exceeding 53,072 cubic second feet of water of the flow of the river St. Lawrence, to be returned to lake St. Louis and to be used for the development of hydro-electric power between the two said points, in such manner, upon such terms and conditions and with such limitations and reservations as may be prescribed by order of the governor in council.

Then section 3 of chapter 19 provides:

> The governor in council shall not consent to any further or additional diversion by said company of water of the river St. Lawrence except with the express approval of parliament.

That is what parliament demanded, and what parliament reserved. Therefore I do not think there can be any solid ground for the legal contention that the right to use 53,072 cubic feet of water is not vested in the Beauharnois Light, Heat and Power Company at the present time. The company has that right, in so far as such right could be conferred by the legislature of the province of Quebec. It has that right, in so far as it could be conferred by the parliament of Canada, exercising its proper and recognized legislative jurisdiction.

For the present it seems to me that the one aim and object of this parliament should be to enable these people, who for good or ill have invested some $27,000,000 in the securities issued by the Beauharnois Light, Heat and Power Company, to meet together and take appropriate action so as to place the company in a position whereby its financial stability will be assured, and where it will be enabled to approach the parliament of Canada and, if need be, the legislature of Quebec, for such additional diversions as parliament in its wisdom may be prepared to grant. When those additional diversions are authorized, parliament may, within the limits of that legislation, place any terms and conditions upon the grant that it may see fit. First, however, we must have a company able to function in a proper and efficient manner. All this government has done is to give the company time, so that it may function, and to that end my personal opinion would be that further judicial investigations are not now opportune.

If the hon. member for Acadia really desires to know the financial structures which at present exist, he will have no difficulty in obtaining that information. Where the money went is well known. He cannot read the report of the committee upon which he sat without gaining that information, and if he wishes further information I am sure I could give it to him, as a result of my own investigations, so that there will be no necessity for a royal commission in order to elicit the facts.

Mr. GARDINER: Can the minister give information to the house as to where the $4,000,000 went about which the Prime Minister spoke?

Mr. CAHAN: Yes, I can, but I did not wish to be led into discussing that phase of the subject, because there were some of the other tergiversations of the hon. gentleman with which I wished to deal. The amount payable and paid to the Beauharnois Power Syndicate by the Beauharnois Power Corporation Limited, under the agreement dated December 17, 1929, to which the Prime Minister referred, for the purchase of the assets and undertakings of that syndicate, amounted to $4,750,000. By payment of that sum of money the company acquired the property and assets of the syndicate. That property and those assets were acquired by the syndicate's expenditures, for which the Beauharnois Power Corporation Limited received dollar for dollar in value to the amount of $2,500,000. Of the balance, $2,250,000 was used by the syndicate for its own purposes. One of those purposes was to take $1,000,000 in cash and pay for the capital stock of the Beauharnois Power Corporation Limited for which they had subscribed to the extent of 1,000,000 shares of a nominal value of one dollar each. Those, I think, are the facts beyond a doubt. But in the length of time available for a discussion such as this, right on the eve of the prorogation of parliament, one cannot go into all these details, and for the present I ask this house to believe that the Prime Minister and his colleagues have been giving a great deal of anxious thought to devising the ways and means by which this great undertaking, of so much importance, not only to the province of Quebec but to the adjoining province of Ontario, may be brought to fruition on a proper basis, so that it may function for the future to the advantage of Canada as a whole.

Now, in view of these considerations I ask whether this parliament is not prepared to give the government its confidence in working out this very grave problem, which is not of our making, which was thrust upon us, but to which we conscientiously and sincerely are giving our time and attention in the hope that this great project may not be destroyed, and that the money invested in it by so many of our people throughout the length and breadth of Canada may not be entirely lost.

Mr. GARDINER: Before the hon. Secretary of State sits down may I point out to him that the $4,000,000 I referred to was the sum which the Prime Minister mentioned in his statement to this house on April 18, and is not the $4,750,000 which my good friend the Secretary of State dealt with.

Mr. ARMAND R. LAVERGNE (Montmagny): It is very seldom, Mr. Speaker, that the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Woodsworth) and myself agree, we are generally at the antipodes—

Mr. WOODSWORTH: It is very serious for us to be burglars.

Mr. LAVERGNE: —but I wish to put myself on record as endorsing what has been said by him and by the member for Acadia (Mr. Gardiner). I like doing a little housebreaking for the purpose of preventing the house being burned down by the people who have gone into it. I desire to put the question on a higher plane. I am not so much concerned with those who have lost millions of dollars in this project. It is all very unfortunate, but it is a story we hear very often in these days. I shall not attempt any legal quibbling as to whether the Beauharnois canal or the water-power belongs to the province or to the dominion. I have my own legal opinion; I have not a shadow of doubt that it belongs to the dominion. But that is not the question; it is higher and more important. I think if the common people of Quebec have one opinion on the matter it is that that the St. Lawrence is a national asset which belongs to the confederation of Canada, not to the Beauharnois corporation or the Beauharnois Light, Heat and Power Company, or some other corporation. This is the last natural resource which is left to the people of Quebec; the others have been sold, given to, or robbed by, the great corporations. I repeat, this is the only natural resource left to the people of the province of Quebec, and in that way to the people of the dominion. Our only hope, our only salvation, is that the federal government will treat this great public work as a public ownership undertaking, so that the people of Quebec and of the dominion shall come into their share. And it is about time they should.

AGRICULTURAL CONDITIONS

Miss AGNES C. MACPHAIL (Southeast Grey): Mr. Speaker, even though the session is in its last hours, we feel we must once again draw the attention of the house and the government to the distressed condition of the agricultural industry. I think it is true that there are still great numbers of people in Canada who do not know how terrible are the conditions under which the farmers of Canada are struggling. It is very easy for those who are living comfortably not to realize the distress of the agriculturist. So I ask the house to bear with me for just a few minutes while once more I outline those conditions.

The farmer is bearing much more than his share of the depression. We know that the price he gets for his products has fallen much more than the price of those things which he must buy. The price of what he sells has fallen sixty-four per cent, while the price of what he buys has fallen not quite fourteen per cent. Farmer's debts and interest charges, insurance premiums, and so on, are fixed in terms of dollars. These dollars cannot be secured by him in any way but through the selling of his commodities. In other words he must sell his commodities in order to secure the dollars with which to pay his fixed charges. Therefore when his debts are measured in commodity prices, we find they have doubled and trebled in the last three years. I think every member must conclude that this condition cannot go on, that either the price of the farmer's commodities must be raised to something like the level on which the debts were contracted, or the debt level must be lowered to something like the commodity price level—or a little of both. As it is at the moment, the farmer in every province is on a buyer's strike. True, it is an unorganized strike, but it is none the less effective. He is on a buyer's strike because almost his whole output is needed to meet his fixed charges, and he has no money left with which to buy many things not only that he would like to buy but that he actually needs. The last census showed that forty-seven per cent of our population are on the land. We cannot cripple the buying power of such a large percentage of our people without paralyzing the commercial life of Canada, and adding great numbers to our unemployed. I think the house will agree with me that there will be no return to prosperity in this country until the purchasing power of the farmer has been restored. The agriculturist in Canada faces peculiarly difficult conditions. He sells at wholesale prices and buys at retail; he sells in a free market and buys in a protected market, and the continued effort of governments to shut out imports certainly tends to destroy the farmer's markets. He sells as an unorganized individual in a highly organized world, and buys as an individual from organized trade. Then the farmers pay higher interest rates and they have a higher per capita overhead than any other class with an equal net income.

For many years, ever since I came to this house until this last year, the farmer's whole problem has been made more complex by our immigration policy. We spent very large sums of money, which finally the farmer had to pay, for the purpose of bringing into this country immigrants who became competitors with our established farmers. Then, added to all these conditions which have prevailed for many years, the farmers of Canada to-day are finding life almost impossible because of the exchange problem between Great Britain and Canada. Great Britain provides, if not the only market, almost the only one in which the Canadian farmer can sell his surplus products; but when the farmer places his products on the British market and is paid in British currency he loses on exchange. In converting that British currency into Canadian currency, eighteen per cent of the price of his product is lost. The farmer has many other difficulties to face, and they are taking the heart out of him. The result is that the Canadian farmer feels he cannot go on, and those who have not been close to agriculture in the last three or four months can scarcely know how discouraged the farmer in this province is, and I dare say that applies to farmers in every other province. But it is not only in the exchange as between British and Canadian currency that the farmers are faced with difficulty; the fact is that the nations that are our greatest competitors in agricultural products are in a more advantageous position with respect to exchange, and this makes it all the more trying for our farmers. For instance, the Danish farmer, with his money at par with the pound sterling, has, when the British pound is converted into his own currency as much in Danish money as his products brought in British currency, whereas we are at a disadvantage to the extent of eighteen per cent. And the Argentine, Australia and New Zealand enjoy an even greater advantage. So that the Canadian farmer simply has not a chance as things are, and we who represent agricultural constituencies, whether we sit in this corner of the house or in either of the two great parties, should not allow this session to close without urging upon the government that steps be taken to ameliorate the condition of the Canadian farmer.

From time to time during this and previous sessions almost every phase of agriculture and the difficulties of the people who are engaged in that industry in its various branches have been dealt with by one member or another, and therefore I am not going to take up the time of the house to-night enlarging upon those difficulties. It has often been said in this house that although we in this corner discuss the difficulties of the farmers we do not suggest any remedies. I propose, therefore, to move, seconded by the hon. member for Macleod (Mr. Coote), an amendment which does outline remedies, and in a most respectful and helpful way we offer this government these proposals for what they may be worth. I move:

That all the words after the word "that" in the first line be struck out and the following substituted therefor:

"this house regrets that the government has not made any pronouncement of a policy calculated to meet the depressed conditions of the agricultural industry.

Further, this house is of opinion that the government should take into consideration the following suggestions as means calculated to improve the agricultural industry:

(a) the national control and regulation of currency and credit;

(b) a measure of controlled inflation having for its object increase in commodity prices, and as a first step towards this end bringing our currency to par with the pound sterling;

(c) a substantial reduction of farm indebtedness and interest rates;

(d) financial assistance in creating processing plants under farmer control;

(e) international agreements on tariff matters;

(f) the creation of an export marketing board;

(g) that farmer cooperative selling organizations be permitted to import goods received in other countries in exchange for Canadian agricultural products without the imposition of customs or dumping duty;

(h) relieving the farmer of some of the indirect taxation and substituting heavier direct taxation based on the ability to pay.

Mr. A. W. NEILL (Comox-Alberni): The matter to which I wish to refer is a little different from the subject matter of the amendment, but it has something in common with it. It is altogether different and rather an anticlimax to the long drawn-out debate on Beauharnois which dealt with great issues involving millions of dollars. The matter with which I intend to deal affects only the poor, ordinary toiling people and the effort they have to make to obtain a livelihood for themselves, their wives and children. It has been said by a cynic that the Beauharnois matter is a titanic battle between two groups of financial pirates for the control of a huge money-making power development, but this matter is one which comes home to the poorest people in our land. I would not have spoken to-night had I not received a few hours ago a couple of petitions revealing such serious conditions that I feel compelled to put them before the house. Before doing so perhaps I had better make the situation clear by reading from a brief which I prepared a few weeks ago in connection with this matter. I think this brief will explain the situation and less explanation of the petitions will be required. It is dated Ottawa, May 3, and reads:

Ottawa, Ont.,
May 3, 1932.

R. C. Matthews, Esq., M.P.,
House of Commons,
Ottawa, Ont.

Dear Mr. Matthews:

In accordance with our arrangement yesterday I beg to present to your committee a statement on behalf of the Pacific coast fishermen in connection with the prices of gasoline.

You have had a lot of evidence in connection with the price of gas as used in cars, etc., but I would point out where a car will go twenty-five miles on a gallon of gas, a boat will only go six or seven. Also the use of a car, except in the case of a jitney, is often only a convenience to a man in business, but in the case of the fisherman a boat using gas all the time is absolutely essential in his business.

The fishing of which I am speaking is mostly trolling for what are called spring salmon, and later for cohoes, and some gill netting as well, practically all individual fishermen. The larger boats, owned by canning companies and packers, etc., generally have diesel engines and use a cheaper grade of fuel having a lower duty.

The market for springs caught at this time of the year is practically entirely in the States, and at the present time the market is very limited and the price very low. On fish caught by our fishermen going into Seattle there is a duty of two cents per pound, which did not seem very much when fish was selling at sixteen cents a pound, but it is a very substantial handicap now when fish is bringing five cents and even three cents a pound.

The United States fishermen, fishing in the same grounds as our men, mostly outside the three mile limit, can get their gas in Seattle for less than half what it costs our men. It has been estimated that the cost of gas and oil constitutes from 35 to 70 per cent of the cost of operating. Not only do our boats have to go out a long distance to the banks, sometimes twenty miles off shore, but the engine has to be operated all the time they are fishing, as the boat has to be kept moving slowly. The United States fisherman sells his fish in Seattle and gets two cents a pound more than our men do for it, and he buys his gas at the reduced price I have mentioned.

I might give a specific instance of what occurred last spring, that is, a year ago. Gas was being sold in Seattle at six cents a gallon, wine measure. Our customs department considered that the proper price was eleven cents, wine measure, and the difference, five cents a gallon, was held to be dumping duty. Therefore, we had a

Cost price of.. .. .. 6 cents
Dumping duty of.. .. .. .. 5 cents
Making a total cost of.. .. .. 11 cents which, translated into imperial gallons is 13·2 cents. To this was added the regular duty of 2½ cents per gallon, imperial, making 15·7 cents as against 7·2 cents, the latter being the equivalent in imperial gallons of six cents per gallon, wine measure. At the same time the price on our side of the line was around 22 cents. At the present time the spread seems to be even greater.

I would like to quote briefly some telegrams and letters I have received. One telegram reads:

14-15 March, 1932.

"To A. W. Neill, M.P.

Salmon prices Seattle ten cents to-day this means five cents here. Vancouver unable move fish. Unless gas prices dropped considerably the whole west coast fleet must tie up and rely on government for support halibut fleet already quit. Gas selling Seattle waterfront seven cents Canadian fishermen at great disadvantage. Can anything be done situation becoming critical?

A letter reads:

March 15, 1932.

"To A. W. Neill, M.P.,
Ottawa, Ont.

Dear Mr. Neill:

You of course appreciate that in so far as we are concerned we are not very much interested in the price of gas, but being familiar with the situation on the west coast I can readily see that if the government is handling other matters that we are vitally interested in the same as they are handling this gasoline question, then it is just too bad for Canadian industries to ever hope to overcome these obstacles.

I was talking recently to a man very vitally interested in the business and he stated to me that in his opinion it is very likely, within the next thirty days, owing to market conditions, that the entire trolling fleet on the west coast of Vancouver island will have to tie up. I can readily understand this, knowing that alongside of our Canadian boats the American trollers are trolling in the same waters, and whereas the American boats are only paying 6 cents per gallon for their gasoline, the Canadian trollers are paying 24 cents an imperial gallon which is 19 cents an American gallon—or in other words, it is costing them three times as much for their fuel oil cost, which item represents at least 70 per cent of their total cost of operating their boats.

On top of this the Canadian trollers, as you know, are burdened with an additional tax of 2 cents per pound for the fish that is sold in the States, and owing to the limited market in Canada 90 per cent of the spring salmon they catch are sold in the United States. Only a few days ago, I understand, one of Nelson's packers delivered 20,000 pounds of spring salmon in Seattle, on which they only received a net return, after paying the tax, of 5 cents and 3 cents per pound, and one of the largest fresh fish houses in Seattle intimated to me a few days ago that it was only a matter of a week or two before there would be an additional cut in prices.

So you can see that the situation for the trollers on the west coast is really serious, unless something is done."

An extract from another letter reads:

March 29, 1932.

"Re the price of gasoline to commercial fishermen in British Columbia to-day.

Our organization of trollers embodying 200 members of white fishermen will in the near future be striving to keep off the bread line; fishing at low prices for their fish and still paying the same price for their gasoline as they did when they were getting 400 per cent more for their fish. This is not logic, it cannot be done; you cannot carry on this way. Our boys are willing to fish for lower prices knowing that world conditions are such that the public cannot be expected to pay a premium on their article alongside the farmer who is getting a low price for his beef, at the same time the government cannot expect this industry to carry on with a burden imposed on them through tariffs or protection to the oil industry of Canada.

If the price of gasoline holds at the present level, our fishermen will be forced to quit and seek unemployment relief. It would be far better for the government to pay the fishermen's gasoline bill rather than force them out of business as then they would earn at least part of their keep. The country would be far ahead doing this providing they cannot get the duty down on gasoline so that the fishermen in British Columbia could import their gasoline at a price at half of what the oil companies are charging them in British Columbia to-day. This is not a case of party politics and should be thoroughly gone into by both parties of the house, the outcome of which should be pressed at Ottawa.

Salmon prices for the future are going to be below the present cost of production and the only hope of keeping going is for cheaper operating costs which cannot be done unless you get some quick action. Better this than unemployment."

Mr. SPEAKER: Do I understand the hon. member to say that he is reading from a speech prepared by himself?

Mr. NEILL: No.

Mr. SPEAKER: From what document is the hon. member reading?

Mr. NEILL: From a brief on behalf of the fishermen submitted to the committee investigating the gasoline situation.

Mr. SPEAKER: A brief prepared by the hon. member?

Mr. NEILL: I am about to read a petition presented to the Prime Minister. It reads as follows:

[Mr. Neill.]

To the Right Hon. R. B. Bennett, Prime Minister of Canada,
Ottawa, Canada.

Dear Sir:—

We, the undersigned fishermen, citizens of British Columbia, do herewith petition the government of Canada to remove the dumping duty imposed on gasoline entering Canada from the United States of America, which is used in the fisheries.

1. That in marketing our trolled caught salmon, we have to export 80 per cent of our catches to the United States of America. Canada is only able to buy 20 per cent. By marketing our fish in United States of America, we have to compete with the United States trollers. This above mentioned dumping duty makes it unfair competition.

2. That the United States troller has other advantages. We have to pay 2 cents per pound on our salmon going into U.S.A. We also pay a duty of 2½ cents per gallon on gasoline entering Canada from U.S.A. ordinary duty.

3. That the price charged by the oil companies for gasoline on our west coast, and the low price received for our fish makes it impossible for us to operate at a profit. If this dumping duty is not taken off, we will be forced to stop operating, and ask the government for relief.

4. That if the dumping duty on gasoline is removed and we could take advantage of the cheaper fuel, it would help relieve the serious condition existing amongst the fishing fleet on our west coast of Vancouver island.

The point I wish to make on behalf of the fishermen is this, that they are not in the least concerned as to what the oil companies show in connection with profits or losses. The ramifications of the business are so great, it would be quite easy for them, as one government official stated in evidence, to buy from a parent or subsidiary company in the United States, an interlocking concern as we would say, at a price that would show a loss in the Canadian importations. That would be a mere matter of bookkeeping. One of the witnesses who gave evidence before the committee said that prices had been depressed as a result of excessive crude production; or in other words, there had been more gas produced than the consumption demanded. That may be correct, but what has that to do with the starving fishermen on the west coast of Vancouver island? It is simply the same as saying that the production exceeds the demand, a statement which applies equally to the lumbermen, the coal miner, the wheat growers, the fisherman and every other producer of a basic product. None of those industries has come to the government and demanded that we shall make its price such that it can earn even a moderate profit. All have had to take the reduced prices. The producer of one basic commodity, handicapped as he is by his miserable price, his low wages, his infrequent employment, has this advantage, small as it may be, that he can buy the other man's stuff also at the low cost. When, however, we come to the oil people, the government says: Thus far shalt thou go and no farther. We say to the fisherman, the coal miner and the wheat grower: You must sell your stuff in competition with the world, that is below the cost of production; you can buy your wheat, coal and fish at that price; but when you buy oil, we insist that it shall be at such a price as will produce a good profit to the oil company.

The fisherman's contention is that the oil companies have taken advantage of the legislation that was passed in September, 1930, which imposed not only a bigger duty but a dumping duty on gasoline. Any relief that could be obtained in this regard would be of great benefit to the fishermen. It would keep them out of the bread line, from demanding relief from the government, because I suppose a destitute man can demand relief, a miserable dole, a few dollars a month for working at something for which he is unfitted. It would pay even the oil companies if a reduction were made in the price of gasoline, because they would sell more, they would cut down their overhead and so on. They tell us: Our overhead expenses are heavy. I can point out where a considerable saving could be made, and that is if they ended the senseless competition with other companies. You can go into any village and see three or four rival concerns—I am not talking of service stations—with four or five big stationary tanks and the usual tank delivery equipment, where there is room for only one, and of course the consumer has to pay the cost. I want to read just two short petitions that I received a few hours ago. This letter, which is addressed to me is the result of a meeting held at Kyoquot, British Columbia, on the trolling grounds, in Walters cove on May 7, 1932:

Dear Sir:

Kindly present this petition to the proper authorities, viz:

Whereas the prices on salmon have now dropped to unheard of low levels, in fact to three cents per pound for No. 1 and one cent for number twos on the fishing grounds, and whereas it is not possible to operate and make our daily bread, selling our production for those prices, and whereas the Dominion government is helping out unemployment by appropriation of funds, therefore we the undersigned fishermen petition the Dominion government to take off the dumping duty and all other duties off gasoline from the United States for use in commercial fishing, as a special measure to give us a chance to make a livelihood and not become a burden to the taxpayer of the country. Gasoline from the United States can be obtained for half price that we are paying here if the duties were removed.

That is signed by some hundreds of men. This is a short one from the Kyoquot Trollers Cooperative Association, which is a very fine body, well managed, sensibly organized by the fishermen themselves, with no expensive overhead. Up to date it has been successful, but now it is in trouble. This is a resolution passed at a meeting of the board of directors at Kyoquot, British Columbia, on May 15:

Whereas the depressed condition throughout Canada and the United States have brought food products to the present low level, the market for salmon fresh or cured has suffered more than other products, and

Whereas according to the books of our association the gross earnings per fisherman per week for the last four weeks have dropped to $9.59, and

Whereas there is no other buyer on the west coast of Vancouver island able to pay any better prices, and

Whereas our association are unable to give financial assistance, the fishermen now find it impossible to continue operating, as the average daily expense per fisherman is $2.50 per day when operating,

Therefore be it resolved that in order to give the fisherman a chance to continue to make a livelihood and be a producer and not become idle and a burden on the government, we respectfully ask the power that may be to use their influence in an endeavour to get all duties and taxes on gasoline used for commercial fishing purposes lifted.

This is a brief note that I have received and I am going to read only one sentence, as follows:

Mr. Neill:

I wish to tell you that all the Canadian trollers on the coast are tied up—

That is a fulfilment of the prophecy I read dated a month or two ago.

—owing to so low a price that they cannot operate without a loss; even some fishermen of Ucluelet going on to relief and these are good fishermen.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Carried.

Mr. NEILL: No, it is not carried. We have done little all day but listen to academic discussions. This is something real and practical, coming home to the flesh and blood of human beings.

While nothing was said in the committee's report about the fishermen's end of the matter, yet I am informed, on authority I know to be sincere and, I trust, well informed, that the big oil company out there, because there is practically only one, has inaugurated an arrangement whereby the fishermen on the Pacific coast can secure a considerable reduction in the price. They propose to put in what I take to be some kind of what is called stepped-up distillate, that is, improved distillate, which they will be able to sell at five cents a gallon less than the present price of gasoline and which they guarantee will be absolutely suitable to the fishermen's engines. Further, they propose to give the fishermen a two-cent cut in the price of ordinary gasoline below current prices. If that is so, and if it is continued, it will be satisfactory. It will help the fishermen to help themselves; also it will help the oil companies, of course, by enabling them to sell more; but until I have definite knowledge that this is really in existence and at least some expectation that the arrangement is permanent, I must continue to press for the request of these men, so desperately near destitution, that the duty and dumping duty on gasoline should be removed.

To these men, hoping against hope that something will be done, what a hollow mockery it must be to be told that the committee has decided that the price of gasoline is reasonable! I am willing for the moment to grant it is reasonable so far as the Imperial Oil Company is concerned, but I contend that neither we as parliament nor the government are under any obligation to see that the Imperial Oil Company makes either a good or a reasonable or any profit in these times. In better times that is a matter we should consider, because we want industry stimulated, but in these days we are in a world-slashing competition, where everything is being sold below cost, and each can buy the other's product below cost. That is not desirable, and we would not grudge paying more for the other fellow's commodities so long as he was paying more for ours. But when we have to accept a lower price on our product, we should not have to pay a high price or even a reasonable price to the oil companies. That is where the error comes in. The premises are wrong when we are told that this must be applied only to oil. If for oil, why not for wheat? Let us carry the thing further. Let us be consistent. Either let all buy at low prices or let us have fictitious prices created by law for the benefit of us all. If I had had anything to do with the investigation of gasoline prices I would not have worried about costs at all. I would have said to the oil companies: What are your prices? If you like to give us your costs, well and good. That is a matter of interest, but it does not greatly affect this issue. We want your prices. Then I would have easily checked them up, yes, and checked them up without spending ten thousand dollars. Then I would have taken steps to ascertain what genuine competing companies were prepared to put gasoline down at, not companies ostensibly competing in Canada but actually engaged only in distribution, because it was admitted in the evidence that one company dominated the prices of them all. Then I would have gone to some foreign country, if there was no competition in Canada, to Peru, the United States, the West Indies, Roumania, even to Russia if that were necessary, and I would have asked for their prices and I would have got them. Then I would have come back to the big company in Canada and I would have told them that the law of trade is the law of the survival of the fittest. I would have said: These are the competing prices you must meet. We would like to see you get the business at these prices. Meet those prices inside of two weeks, or we shall recommend the government to take the dumping duty off. If that had been done, we would not have the situation we have in Canada to-day.

That, Mr. Speaker, is practically the case for the fishermen. I have put it poorly; I have not had time to do it justice. Their situation is desperate. Are we going to help these men to help themselves, or are we just going to give them this miserable dole, letting their boats deteriorate—and they deteriorate very quickly when tied up—letting their nets deteriorate as they do even more rapidly when not in use; letting their gear go down and letting the morale of the men go down, because a fisherman working with a pick and shovel on the road is like a fish out of water. Better give him a little help and encourage him to go on and let someone else go in the bread line if he has to.

I very much regret to have had to take up time at this late hour, because I know the desire of hon. members to get home, but I felt it was my duty to bring this matter to the attention of this house and of the government. The situation of the fishermen is desperate, and I fear for the future because desperate men will do desperate things. There is the situation, and I put the responsibility up to the government. If the oil companies would help along the lines of the suggestions made to me it might help, but it is only a supposition. If we cannot get some definite assurance, let us take some steps to reduce the duty and take off the dumping duty and thereby fulfil the promise made to us by the Prime Minister in September, 1930, when he said—I could quote Hansard, I have it here—there will be no increase in prices because of an increase in the tariff. When my hon. friend from Shelburne-Yarmouth (Mr. Ralston) and myself pleaded with the government to exempt the fishermen the Prime Minister said that it was unnecessary to talk of such a thing because there was not going to be any increase in prices. Possibly there has not been, but the other side of it is that there has been no reduction in prices when there should have been. That possibility was put up to the Prime Minister and he said: If there are substantial reductions in prices elsewhere and none in Canada when there should be, we would consider that a breach of the agreement. I maintain, Mr. Speaker, that it has been abundantly proved that the agreement has been broken, that faith has not been kept, and I say that it is up to the government to live up to the promise made by the Prime Minister on that occasion.

Mr. G. G. COOTE (Macleod): I think possibly I might make use of some words of the speaker who preceded me (Mr. Neill) when I endeavour to bring this discussion back to the amendment moved by the hon. member for Southeast Grey (Miss Macphail), draw the attention of the house to the condition of agriculture in Canada, and say that some measures must be taken to improve the situation now existing.

Agriculture is Canada's most important industry. Through agriculture forty-seven per cent of our people secure their living. Agriculture gives employment to more Canadians than any other industry, and the condition of agriculture is vitally important to every other industry in Canada and I think to every financial interest and financial institution in Canada.

It might be enlightening to members of the house and possibly to members of the government to give the total value of the agricultural production in Canada last year. In 1931 our agricultural production was valued at nearly one billion dollars less than in 1928. In other words, the value of our agricultural production last year was approximately only forty per cent of its value in 1928. Agriculture in Canada took a drop last year of sixty per cent as compared with 1928. May I quote the figures very briefly?

	Total value of agricultural production in Canada
1926	$1,714,000,000
1927	1,825,000,000
1928	1,806,000,000
1931	880,000,000

I doubt if any other industry could carry on for another year if the value of its production had dropped sixty per cent, and the only reason that agriculture is carrying on to-day is that the farmers are working without wages and in many cases are living on sums earned and saved in previous years. I think, Mr. Speaker, it is evident that something must be done to take care of agriculture. May I quote just one or two paragraphs from Farm and Dairy of April, 1932?

> Many people who are making money out of farmers appear not to realize how serious is the situation. When farmers, as thousands of them are doing, find it necessary to give up the use of their automobiles, to disconnect their telephones and to make many other similar economies, it is because they are reaching the limit of their resources. They know that they must save every cent if they are to pull through this time of crisis.

I would like to emphasize the first words of that quotation, "Many people who are making money out of farmers appear not to realize how serious is the situation." I repeat that many other industries in Canada are dependent on the success of agriculture for their success and continuance.

Before I leave this question of the condition of agriculture I would like to quote the actual price of a few of our basic commodities. Ontario farmers at the present time are receiving for their milk which they are sending to the cheese factory, so I was told last week, less than fifty cents per one hundred pounds, which works out at five cents a gallon or 1¼ cents a quart of milk. That does not pay for the labour involved in taking the milk from the cow. Eggs in Alberta at country points, I am told, bring three cents a dozen. In other words, it takes one dozen eggs to pay for a postage stamp to mail a letter. How can the farmers of Canada continue under those conditions?

I regret very much to have to take up the time of the house at this late stage of the session, but we have been here between three and four months, and nothing that I can think of has been done for agriculture except to reduce the estimates of the Department of Agriculture by about one-third. If anything had been done for agriculture I would not be speaking on this amendment to-night. We have waited to the very last week of the session hoping that the government would do something for agriculture. If agriculture was not in need, I would not be stressing the urgency of the situation at the present time. There is no industry in Canada that has borne the burden and heat of the day to the same degree and so patiently as agriculture. For three years prices of agricultural products have been steadily declining. I notice in the Canadian Countryman, which gives prices of butter in Toronto, that in January, 1930, butter was worth 39 cents per pound and that in February, 1932, it had fallen to 17 cents, in spite of the efforts of the government to assist agriculture. I will admit it is perhaps a little difficult for the government to find the necessary measures to assist agriculture. In the amendment there are a number of suggestions. If we may judge from the record of previous governments in Canada with reference to their assistance to agriculture, I have no doubt the program outlined in the amendment will stand for some years before it is completely adopted. I do suggest to the government, however, that they take action on one or two of these matters before the house again assembles.

The vital question to the farmer to-day is that of prices, and the exchange value of his commodities. Before dealing with exchange values, may I say that on an average about thirty-five per cent of the farmer's income must be paid out for debts, interest, taxes, insurance premiums and other payments fixed in terms of dollars. The farmer can pay these liabilities only through the sale of his commodities. When the price he receives from such sales drops to the extent of sixty per cent we will readily understand that he must sell two and one-half times the amount of commodities to pay his debts, interest, taxes, insurance premiums, and so on. I agree with the suggestion made by the Prime Minister some time ago that the people of Canada should hang on to their insurance policies as long as possible, and keep the premiums paid up. But to-day the majority of farmers find it impossible to pay the premiums. There is one thing the government could do for the farmer, and that is to increase farm commodity price levels in Canada. There is a possibility of increasing those price levels.

May I point out that practically all our basic commodities are to-day on an export basis? I refer particularly to wheat, cattle, hogs and dairy products. The export market which fixes prices is in England. The net price at which we sell practically all our wheat—and I am using wheat only as an example—is fixed by the price of that wheat in Liverpool, in English currency, less the carrying charges for taking it over there. That price applies to every bushel of wheat we sell. Therefore the price to the Canadian farmer depends upon the amount of Canadian money we receive for the British pound. Last September we were receiving $4.87.

Mr. BENNETT: Is it not the other way about? It is the amount of money they have to pay to meet the Canadian dollar—just the reverse of the hon. member's suggestion.

Mr. COOTE: I think I can prove to the Prime Minister that my contention is correct. The price of wheat is fixed in Liverpool, when we sell, we sell at Liverpool prices.

[Mr. Coote.]

Mr. BENNETT: No, we sell at our prices.

Mr. COOTE: The price is quoted in Liverpool at so many shillings per quarter, and we sell at that price. Then we bring the British currency over here.

Mr. YOUNG: No, we do not.

Mr. COOTE: The exporter is paid with a bill of exchange on Liverpool or London. To-day he receives for the British pound only $4.17, or thereabouts; the rate varies from day to day. Were our currency at a par with English currency he would be receiving $4.87. The same applies to the sale of cattle and hogs. I am sorry I have not the article before me, but may I inform hon. members that in the monthly letter for October of the Packers' Association of Canada they state definitely that the cause of the low price of hogs in Canada is due to the fact that we have a surplus, and are now definitely on an export basis. Not only that, but we are suffering from the disadvantage that whereas last September we were receiving $4.87 for the pound, at the time this letter was issued we were receiving only $4.17. In other words there was a loss of 70 cents on every pound sterling. That situation is brought out clearly in letters of the Packers' Association.

Mr. BENNETT: The hon. member must be wrong. He knows that when the Englishman buys our wheat he buys at the seller's price, namely 63 or 64 cents. He may have to pay more shillings than he had expected, but the fact remains he has to pay it in our money.

Mr. COOTE: Ever since I can remember, we have been told that the price of wheat was set in Liverpool, that we could not set the price of Canadian wheat. I understood that we sold or kept it, just as we wished, but that when we sold it was at the Liverpool price.

Mr. BENNETT: We sell at our own price.

Mr. COOTE: And our prices are determined by Liverpool prices.

Mr. BENNETT: That is another matter altogether.

Mr. COOTE: One reason our price is higher than it was a year ago is that to-day we are twelve per cent or thirteen per cent off gold prices. The same applies to cattle. Some of the Prime Minister's friends in Calgary are probably still in possession of cheques they received for the sale of steers shipped to the old country last October or November. By the time the shipments had reached the old country and the drafts had been sent back here in payment for the cattle the shippers could get only $4.40 per pound sterling. They held the drafts, believing that our dollar would come back to par. Some of them may still hold the drafts, and we know that to-day they are worth only about $4.17 per pound sterling. That has brought down the price of cattle in Canada. The price of hogs is down in this country. Only a few days ago I quoted a despatch from Montreal by a representative of the Canadian press pointing out that when Canadian butter was shipped to England we took a discount on the British price,—that is, when it was translated into Canadian currency. On the other hand the Danish farmer, dealing in a currency at par with the pound sterling, took no discount, and the New Zealand and Australian farmers were receiving very handsome premiums in the funds of their own countries owing to the fact that the British pound is at a premium in those countries. I am speaking only from memory, but I believe that in Australia the British pound is at a premium of about 25 per cent.

While I am on this subject I should like to refer to a copy of the New Zealand Dairy Produce Exporter, dated Saturday, February 27, 1932. This journal is issued at Wellington, New Zealand, and it carries a report of a committee of experts who had been dealing with conditions in New Zealand, who gave particular attention to the farming industry. I should like to read their findings to the house. Before doing that, however, may I quote one or two paragraphs from their report in which they deal with the dangers of inaction:

> It is true that, if no action is taken, farm costs will eventually be brought into line with selling prices, but the present economic and financial system would be in danger of collapse in the process.

I think that is absolutely true in Canada. Our financial institutions are too dependent upon agriculture to ignore the situation prevailing in that industry. The article continues:

> Those who prefer to adopt a policy of inaction, or who talk easily of "getting costs down" are completely out of touch with the realties of the situation. If internal prices in New Zealand are to be brought into conformity with our overseas prices by means of a direct attack on costs, it will be necessary to reduce interest, wages, rents, salaries and all payments for services by about 37 per cent, unless export prices rise.

The findings of this committee are very significant and should be of particular interest to this house and government. The first proposal of the committee is:

> As a first step the exchange rate should be raised to twenty-five per cent, and held at not below that level until conditions stabilize overseas. The currency should then be revalued in terms of sterling at a level to be determined by an expert committee.

As I said a few minutes ago, I believe at the present time exchange is at a rate of about ten per cent. This committee would have it raised to twenty-five per cent. That would increase the price of agricultural commodities in New Zealand by fifteen per cent. This committee also suggests:

> A reduction in all interests and other fixed charges should be imposed, subject to exemption in the case of hardship.
> The government and the banks should agree to a lowering of deposit and "over the counter" rates.

May I once again draw the attention of the house and the government to the findings of this expert committee, the first of which is:

> That the exchange rate should be raised to twenty-five per cent and held at not below that level until conditions stabilize overseas.

They mean until price levels overseas rise to the point where the export price of these commodities in terms of British sterling will be sufficiently high to return their cost of production to the New Zealand farmer. This committee consisted of H. Belshaw, M.A., Ph. D., Professor of Economics and Dean of the Faculty of Commerce, Auckland university college, and four other economists from New Zealand universities. I am sorry all members could not read this illuminating article. It deals very fully with the situation facing New Zealand. That situation is a good deal similar to the situation facing the Canadian farmer, but it is better there by at least twenty-five per cent, due to the difference in the value of the pound in the two countries; in New Zealand the British pound is worth somewhere about $5.25, as against $4.18 in Canada. I do not see how we are going to compete with New Zealand in the butter market of the old country with exchange at its present level.

May I point out to the committee that this morning's Citizen carries a despatch from London reporting an address by Sir Josiah Stamp before the Canada Club in London. I believe when the Prime Minister introduced Sir Josiah Stamp to us a couple of months ago he referred to him as one of the world's greatest economists; therefore I quote him with great pleasure, but of course, only briefly. Dealing with Canada's currency dilemma, Sir Josiah is reported in these terms:

> Canada's economic dependence upon world prices was greater than ever, Sir Josiah continued. It was sometimes thought her decision to adhere to some fixed relation for her currency to the New York dollar as distinct from the opposite course of adopting sterling or some intermediate level rested upon the importance to the dominion of avoiding payment of substantial premiums on her heavy New York obligations. It had been said Canada could not possibly afford this premium or its general effect upon her credit.

This dilemma was more apparent than real in the opinion of Sir Josiah. Even if Canada left her present dollar standard and her internal price level rose, she would still have to pay her New York obligations, and with gold prices raised abroad for her wheat, the relation between the Canadian dollar and the New York dollar would become immaterial for the purposes of payment.

Although it was important Canada should raise her internal price level for successful prosecution of her industries and the balancing of her provincial budgets, he believed the dominion might be no more successful than England if the advantage gained by exchange depreciation continued to be offset by falling gold prices abroad.

Mr. BENNETT: Hear, hear.

Mr. COOTE: The report continues:

It might well be better, Sir Josiah said, for the dominion's internal price level to remain practically the same as at present than for it to fall continuously in relation to the price level of the United States.

I agree with that, but I think it would be much better for the price level of Canada to rise. Of course, I am talking of the commodity price level. The report concludes:

The United States, he stated, was far better balanced internally than Canada and consequently better able to stand price depreciation.

Canada cannot stand that price depreciation, because it is affecting directly forty-seven per cent of her people engaged in agriculture; it is not affecting the remainder of the population to the same degree, and consequently you have this unfair relation of prices. This question of price stability is one on which I think Sir Josiah Stamp is an authority. He has written a book lately entitled Gold and the Price Level. I quote this one paragraph from it:

The problem of the price level is the most important single problem of the age. . . . With business men there is still a sneaking feeling that references to the price level are academic and highbrow, not practical and immediate, . . . and yet it is the most bitterly practical of all questions.

The farmer cannot continue with the present price level. In fact there is no level about it. The price of what he sells has dropped sixty per cent, while the price of what he buys has dropped only fourteen per cent. Surely that cannot continue in Canada.

[Mr. Coote.]

Mr. BENNETT: To say that the price of what he sells has decreased sixty per cent, while the price of what he buys has decreased only fourteen per cent, is hardly correct, for you are taking into consideration insurance, taxes and other items of that character which are a constant factor to all parties in the state.

Mr. COOTE: The actual figures I quoted are I think approximately correct. I based them on figures supplied by the Labour department and the bureau of statistics. Certainly they indicate the change in the different price levels. Mr. J. M. Keynes, one of the most prominent economists of the world, says:

Modern capitalism is faced, in my opinion, with the choice between finding some way to increase money values towards their former figure, or seeing widespread insolvencies and defaults, and the collapse of a large part of the financial structure.

It is that collapse which I am anxious to avoid. I urge the government very respectfully but very earnestly, to take action to raise price levels for the farmers of Canada.

Mr. BENNETT: How?

Mr. COOTE: By allowing our dollar to depreciate.

Mr. BENNETT: How?

Mr. COOTE: I think the Prime Minister knows very well how to do it. On one occasion he stated in this house—

Mr. SPEAKER: It being eleven o'clock this house stands adjourned until eleven o'clock to-morrow morning.

At eleven o'clock the house adjourned without question put, pursuant to standing order.

Wednesday, May 25, 1932

The house met at eleven o'clock.

IMMIGRATION ACT AMENDMENT

Mr. J. S. WOODSWORTH (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I move for the introduction of this bill on behalf of my colleague, the hon. member for North Winnipeg (Mr. Heaps)?

Mr. SPEAKER: The hon. member in whose name the bill appears upon the order paper will have to make the application himself.

Order stands.

CRIMINAL CODE AMENDMENT

Hon. HUGH GUTHRIE (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I have decided not to proceed with this bill, and with the consent of the house I ask that it be dropped.

Bill withdrawn.

QUESTIONS

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk).

MR. VICTOR GARIEPY

Mr. TETREAULT:

1. How long has Mr. Victor Gariepy, veterinary surgeon of Waterloo, Quebec, been in the employ of the Dominion government?
2. On what date did he pass the examinations?
3. Was he qualified as a veterinary surgeon?
4. If so, on what date?
5. Is he, at present, in the employ of the Dominion government, in county of Shefford, if not, is he permitted to carry out tuberculine test on cattle, in the county?
6. Was Mr. Langevin authorized by the government to employ Mr. Victor Gariepy?
7. If so, by whom was he authorized?

Mr. WEIR (Melfort):

1. Dr. Victor Gariepy was employed in the Health of Animals Branch, Department of Agriculture, during the following periods:

March 5, 1928, to September 30, 1928.
November 14, 1928, to January 31, 1930.
June 9, 1930, to September 8, 1930.

2. He passed the civil service examination for veterinary inspectors in April, 1922, and was offered a position in August of the same year but did not accept it. He is not eligible for permanent appointment now; not until he passes the examinations again.

3. Yes. He was a graduate of the University of Montreal.

4. 1918.

5. No. Dr. Gariepy is an accredited veterinarian and as such can test cattle for export to the United States but his certificates must be endorsed by a veterinary inspector of the Health of Animals Branch for acceptance by the American authorities. He, in common with other accredited veterinarians, is remunerated for his services by the live stock owner engaging him to conduct the test.

CAPE ST. IGNACE, QUE., POST OFFICE

Mr. FAFARD:

1. Has the municipality of Cape St. Ignace, Quebec, requested that the premises of the post office be in the parish hall?
2. If so, what are the reasons for the delay in carrying out the request of the municipality?
3. Why is not that post office occupied at present by the postmaster?

Mr. SAUVE:

1. Yes.

2 and 3. The postmaster at Cap St. Ignace is required to provide post office quarters out of the remuneration he receives from the department. Post office now in charge of an acting postmaster, who keeps post office in quarters he provides himself—and which are satisfactory.

RADIO LICENCE FEES

Mr. WHITE (London):

1. How many radio receiving set owners paid the licence fee in 1929, 1930 and 1931, in each of the following cities, Ottawa, Toronto, Hamilton, London and Windsor, Ontario?
2. Are firms selling receiving sets required to report separate sales to the department when such sales are made?
3. If so, how many sales were reported in the above cities in each of the years 1929, 1930 and 1931?

Mr. DURANLEAU:

1.

	Fiscal years
	1929-30	1930-31	1931-32
Ottawa	9,528	12,226	15,073
Toronto	61,863	81,078	83,094
Hamilton	15,490	17,593	20,391
London	8,888	9,815	9,898
Windsor	9,447	10,644	9,440

2. No, but draft regulations in this regard are under consideration.

3. Answered by No. 2.

UNOPPOSED MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

PUBLIC BUILDINGS, MARITIME PROVINCES—COAL CONSUMPTION

Mr. RALSTON:

For a return respecting the supply of coal used in public buildings in the maritime provinces for the year 1931-32, showing the name of the contractor, the location of the public building concerned, the quantity of coal, the date of the contract and the price paid.

MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

ILE AUX COUDRES—LES EBOULEMENTS FERRY SERVICE

Mr. CASGRAIN:

For a copy of all correspondence, letters, telegrams, petitions and other documents in connection with the contract to be awarded by the trade and commerce department, for the ferry-boat service between Ile-aux-Coudres and Les Eboulements, in the county of Charlevoix, since the 1st of January, 1932, together with the evidence taken in writing of all the witnesses heard at the hearing held by Mr. F. E. Bawden, of the trade and commerce department, at Baie St-Paul, in the month of May, 1932, and his report upon such matter to the minister, and the decision arrived at by the minister.

Mr. SPEAKER: Does the objection to this motion being premature still prevail?

Mr. CASGRAIN: I have been told that the decision of the minister has been arrived at and I should like to have the production of the papers.

Mr. BENNETT: Surely this motion cannot pass as the contract has not yet been awarded and the information is not available.

Mr. CASGRAIN: I have been told on good authority that the contract has been awarded to certain parties and I should like to have the papers in connection with the investigation made and the decision arrived at.

Mr. STEVENS: The contract has not yet been awarded.

Motion stands.

ST. LAWRENCE WATERWAY

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, as it is altogether likely that parliament will be prorogued to-day, I should like to ask one or two questions of the right hon. the Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett) with respect to which I imagine the public would desire to have such information as he may be in a position to give. The first question is as to whether or not my right hon. friend is in position to intimate to the house what progress has been made with respect to the negotiations concerning the St. Lawrence waterway and to indicate when the treaty is likely to be presented to the public.

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, negotiations in this regard have proceeded but they have not resulted as yet in the completion of a treaty. Certain questions between the province of Ontario and the dominion have yet to be disposed of. The province of Ontario is the only province interested in the international section, the river being wholly within the province so far as the province of Quebec is concerned. Negotiations with Ontario have proceeded, shall I say very satisfactorily, but there are one or two questions still outstanding. I cannot express an opinion as to the exact time when they may be disposed of; it may be ten days, it may be two weeks and it may be even two months. The completion of a treaty will depend upon satisfactory arrangements being made between Ontario and Canada but the negotiations between the United States and this country are in a most satisfactory position.

Hon. W. D. EULER (North Waterloo): The Prime Minister has stated that it is impossible to conclude the waterways treaty with the United States until after an agreement has been reached with the province of Ontario, and I think he indicated that an agreement has been reached or at least matters are proceeding satisfactorily on certain points. Might I ask him whether an agreement has been reached between the dominion and Ontario as to the ownership of the water-powers in the international section, or is there any policy with regard to the matter?

Mr. BENNETT: As was stated in the house, both yesterday and on previous occasions. there has been no decision of any court of last resort upon that question, but for the purposes of the agreement water-powers in the international section in Ontario are regarded as being the property of that province and those in the national section in Quebec as being the property of Quebec.

TRANSPORTATION COMMISSION

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. MACKENZIE KING (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to inquire of my right hon. friend with respect to the report of the transportation commission and as to whether or not he is in position to indicate when it may be expected. In the event of the report being presented before parliament reassembles, will it be given out immediately to the public?

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, it is perhaps within the knowledge of the right hon. gentleman and hon. members of this house that Lord Ashfield came to Canada a short time ago and after discussion between members of the commission it was decided that it would be impossible for them to conclude their labours in time to have a report available at an early date, that is, it will not be available within the next few weeks. As I understand the matter at the moment, and I have no definite information upon the point, it is not probable that a report will be completed for some months. The question as to whether or not the report when completed should be published before being presented to parliament is a matter which the government has not considered. I can see strong reasons for either course being taken and I have an entirely open mind upon the matter. The inclination would be to do whatever is thought best under the circumstances considered from the standpoint of the public, but depending to some extent upon the terms of the report itself. At any rate, no conclusion has been arrived at in that regard.

MEETING OF PARLIAMENT

INQUIRY AS TO PROBABILITY OF A FALL SESSION

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Leader of the Opposition): One remaining question I wish to ask my right hon. friend is with respect to the probable date of the reassembling of parliament. There has been an idea in some quarters that parliament might reassemble this year in the fall rather than at the beginning of the new year. If the Prime Minister is in a position to indicate what is possible or probable in that regard, hon. members might be enabled to make their plans with respect to the remainder of the year in a more satisfactory way than would otherwise be possible.

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Prime Minister): I would regard it as my duty to communicate to the house any conclusion that had been arrived at in that regard, for the convenience of members, as the right hon. gentleman has said, must be considered in a matter of that kind. But no conclusion has been reached, nor has the government seriously considered the question. As the right hon. gentleman is aware, the fiscal measures in Great Britain provide that, after November 15, the 20 per cent duty imposed upon importations would, unless action were otherwise taken by that parliament, apply against importations from the dominions, and until after the conference has concluded its labours, I am not in a position to make any statement in that connection. If, however, it is concluded, immediately or shortly after the conference, to call the house together during this year, I shall endeavour to see that the longest possible notice is given so that the convenience of the right hon. gentleman and members of the house generally may be fully considered.

PROPOSED ST. LAWRENCE BRIDGE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. PAUL MERCIER (St. Henri): I should like to ask the Minister of Public Works whether any understanding has been reached between his department and the province of Quebec regarding the construction of a bridge over the St. Lawrence river at a point between Lachine or Ville La Salle and Caughnawaga.

Hon. H. A. STEWART (Minister of Public Works): I can only say that negotiations are proceeding, and I hope we shall soon arrive at a satisfactory arrangement with the province of Quebec. We have arranged for a discussion on Friday of this week.

UNEMPLOYMENT STATISTICS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. S. WOODSWORTH (Winnipeg North Centre): May I call the attention of the Minister of Trade and Commerce to some rather startling figures given on Monday before the Canadian Political Science Association in Toronto, to the effect that, based on government statistics, there were some 726,594 unemployed in March last. May I ask whether the Minister of Trade and Commerce can place on the table before the close of the session the figures as available from the last census, and also any later reliable figures with regard to the unemployment situation?

Hon. H. H. STEVENS (Minister of Trade and Commerce): The hon. member was good enough to indicate to me yesterday that he might ask this question. In regard to the very unusual figures quoted in Toronto at the meeting of the Political Science Association of something over 700,000 as the number of unemployed in Canada, I have not the faintest idea where those figures were secured. They were certainly not official; they were not secured from the bureau and my inquiries indicate that they were very wide of the mark.

The unemployment figures of the census are as follows:

June, 1931: in towns and cities of 5,000 and over, 286,874.

Another indication—and this is as near as I can give it at the present time—of the situation as it is to-day, is as follows: Taking the year 1926 as 100, these are the employment figures for the first four months of this year:

Month—	Index figure of employment
January	83·9
February	85·9
March	87
April	87·3

We have also the figures of industrial employment from some 5,000 firms of which the record is kept. While this indicates a falling off during 1931, it shows a gradual, although not very marked, increase during the present year. For instance, in December, 1931, the figure was 414,824, and in April of this year, this had risen to 424,030. This is as near as I can give the situation to the hon. member. I would say that the indications from the figures I have on actual employment are that there is a gradual diminution of unemployment during the present calendar year. I would most emphatically say that the figure of 700,000 odd has no foundation in any authority of which I know.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: When will these census figures be available to the house and to the public?

Mr. STEVENS: They are available now. I think I can have a copy sent to my hon. friend.

HYDROGRAPHIC SURVEY SHIP

On the orders of the day:

Mr. ANGUS MacINNIS (Vancouver South): On Monday I asked a question of the Minister of Marine in reference to the hydrographic survey ship being built in Collingwood. I wonder whether he has an answer for me to-day.

Hon. ALFRED DURANLEAU (Minister of Marine): The answer is that the cost of taking the boat from Collingwood to the western coast is included in the contract for the building of the vessel.

INCOME WAR TAX ACT

CONCURRENCE IN SENATE AMENDMENTS

Hon. E. N. RHODES (Minister of Finance) moved the second reading of and concurrence in amendments made by the Senate to Bill No. 92, to amend the Income War Tax Act.

He said: These amendments are purely verbal, with one exception which adds a provision that those persons who are hereafter appointed to office shall be subject to a deduction of ten per cent per month.

Motion agreed to; amendments read the second time and concurred in.

SUPPLY

AGRICULTURAL CONDITIONS

The house resumed from Tuesday, May 24, consideration of the motion of Mr. Rhodes that Mr. Speaker do now leave the chair for the house to resolve itself again into committee of supply, and on the proposed amendment thereto of Miss Macphail.

Mr. G. G. COOTE (Macleod): Mr. Speaker, when this matter was under debate last night the Prime Minister was good enough to follow my remarks and at one or two points he raised a question as to the figures which I had quoted. I would like very briefly to refer first of all to the index price of agricultural products which I mentioned last night.

Quoting from the monthly bulletin issued by the Bureau of Statistics for January, 1932, I find that in the province of Alberta the index number of agricultural prices which stood at 100 in 1926 was in 1931 down to 40. There was a drop of 60 per cent in all farm commodity prices in Alberta during those few years, and from the index figure of 100 for 1913 the index figure has dropped to 49 at the present time. Taking the prices for all Canada, I find that based on the index figure of 100 for the year 1926, prices had dropped in 1931 to 46.9, or a drop of 53·1 per cent. Last night I gave that figure as approximately 60 per cent. I would point out that these figures are, I understand, based on wholesale prices of farm commodities. The net prices which the farmer receives are considerably less than the prices quoted. The cost of moving these things from country points to the central markets must always be deducted, and there has been very little drop in the transportation costs. So I think, Mr. Speaker, that the figure I quoted last night of a 60 per cent drop in farm commodity prices would be well within the mark.

In regard to the cost of retail goods which the farmer now buys, I find that the Labour Gazette for the month of April, 1932, gives the average prices from 1913 up to date. The figure for foods in 1926 stood at 156. It is now down to 99, a drop of 57 points or 36 per cent. But as the farmer buys very little foodstuffs, the drop in the price of foodstuffs does not enter very much into his cost of living. Fuel and light have dropped from the figure of 166 in 1926 to 150, a drop of 16 or 10 per cent. Rent stands at exactly the same figure in 1926 and 1932, but the farmer as a rule does not pay rent, so that does not enter into his cost of living. Clothing has dropped from 157 in 1926 to 123 in 1932, a drop of 34, or 21 per cent. Sundries have dropped 3 per cent and all commodities 18 per cent. Within that 18 per cent, as I said before, there is included the cost of food, and as the farmer buys very little foodstuffs I think that the figure I quoted last night of a drop of 14 per cent in the retail cost of the things the farmer buys was also approximately correct.

I would like to refer very briefly to the price of wheat. It seems to me that it does not matter whether the price at which we sell our wheat is set by Liverpool or Winnipeg. The Winnipeg price must conform to the Liverpool price, and certainly the Liverpool price is the guiding price in the case of wheat, regardless of whether the price of wheat when we make sales, is really set in Liverpool or Winnipeg. Quoting from the Commercial Intelligence Journal for September, 1931, from the despatch of our trade commissioner in Australia, and this despatch, of course, was sent before England went off the gold standard:

> The exchange premium in Australia gives wheat growers an apparent gain of about 6½d. (13 cents) per bushel on all wheat exported.

If our dollar could be brought to par with the pound sterling within the next month it would increase the price of wheat in Canadian funds. I should also like to quote one sentence from the annual address of Mr. Robinson, president of the National Dairy Council of Canada. Referring to the rate of exchange, he said:

> I wish to make it very clear that the whole question of future prices in our industry is bound up in the question of sterling exchange and its relation to our currency and to that of the United States.

Mr. BENNETT: If my hon. friend will allow me to interrupt, the last three words that he read, "of the United States" are the key to his difficulties. You cannot have a pound value in dollars in the United States and then fix another standard here without having the difficulty referred to.

Mr. COOTE: Our difficulty at the present time is that our currency is nearer the value of that of the United States than it is to the value of the pound sterling, and it would be very much to our advantage to forget all about the United States currency and get to par with the pound.

Mr. BENNETT: Our obligations are paid in the United States.

Mr. COOTE: Our obligations in the United States are not paid in Canadian dollars.

Mr. BENNETT: They are paid in gold.

Mr. COOTE: We discharge our obligations in New York by buying foreign exchange if we do not renew them, and the only way we can pay for our obligations is by exporting goods, selling these goods for foreign exchange, which foreign exchange is then available on the market for governments to buy to meet their obligations in the United States. That is the only way in which foreign obligations can be met. I am urging the government to allow our dollar to go to a lower level in the United States, which will increase the price of export commodities in Canada and encourage production. Our exports will bring the same amount in foreign currency whether our dollar is up twenty per cent or down twenty per cent, and by increasing our exports there will be more exchange on the market available for governments to buy.

In addition to that, if this policy were carried out, it would raise commodity price levels in Canada, and as trade is dependent upon the amount of money in circulation it would increase trade. There would be more purchasing power in the hands of the farmers and of those engaged in export industries. That would increase the receipts of the government from the sales tax, the stamp tax and all other nuisance taxes, and from the income tax. I have no doubt in the world that had our dollar been at par with the pound since last September the revenues of the government would have been increased sufficiently to take care of the additional premium for foreign exchange which so worries the Prime Minister.

May I also point out that in some of our provinces which depend primarily on agriculture, the tax-paying power of the farmer has practically disappeared, and the provincial governments are unable to collect the revenue they must have. I am sure that if our dollar were brought to par with the pound and the prices of agricultural products increased in that way, the provincial governments, particularly in western Canada, and the same is also true of the east, would secure from their taxpayers enough additional revenue to far more than meet the added premium that they would have to pay for New York funds to meet their foreign obligations.

Then, too, the unemployment relief burden which every government in Canada is bearing to-day would be lessened to some extent because more people would be employed. As I said last night, there is no question that the price level is the most important question in Canada to-day, whether you consider it from the standpoint of the farmer, from the standpoint of the nation, or from the standpoint of the Minister of Finance, who has to balance his budget if he can. But how can he balance it at the present price levels? I am afraid that it is impossible.

The Prime Minister asked me last night how our dollar could be brought to par with the pound. I am sure that he knows just as well as I do, perhaps better, the methods of bringing our dollar down to par with the pound. I feel that if last September the Prime Minister had said: We will not endeavour to maintain the gold standard in Canada but will link up our currency with sterling—surely the old British pound should still be good enough for us—our currency would have been at par with the pound and commodity price levels would have been raised. There are many ways of bringing our dollar to par with the British pound. Only two months ago the Prime Minister said that if a certain suggestion made in the house had been adopted our dollar might go to twenty cents. Well, I think the Prime Minister was exaggerating a little bit. I believe however that a small step in that direction would perhaps bring our dollar down to the desired point.

May I suggest another way? If the Prime Minister would take $50,000,000 worth of dominion notes now printed and waiting to be put out, lying in the vaults of the east block, and loan the money at a low interest rate to school districts requiring new schools, to public utilities corporations desiring to complete power plants and to municipalities to engage in housing schemes, he would soon bring our currency in line with Britain. May I add that construction costs are down nearly thirty per cent as compared with what they were when the last housing scheme was embarked upon in this dominion. Finally may I say to the Prime Minister that if he does not care to do any one of these things he knows perfectly well that the price of foreign exchange, outside of the question of confidence, is determined by supply of and demand for bills of exchange. There are plenty of Canadian bonds on the United States market,—federal, provincial, municipal and corporation bonds—and all he needs to do is to instruct the bankers to buy a sufficient quantity of those bonds maturing in the next few months. I do not think there is any doubt that he could control the rate of exchange easily enough, so that our dollar would be brought down on a par with the pound. May I point out the action taken in England recently. According to press despatches they have provided a fund of $150,000,000 to stabilize the rate of exchange in New York. There is no doubt stabilization can be effected within certain limits, if it is stabilized at a natural level. I think at the present time our dollar at par with the pound sterling would have reached a more natural level than if it were at a par with the American dollar, and such a condition would be very much to our advantage. Compared with Canada Great Britain is a wealthy country, and there is no reason why our currency should be at a higher level. At this point may I refer to the evidence given last year by James Richardson before the agricultural committee of this house. When he was asked a question with regard to the price of wheat in relation to the exchange situation in Australia and the Argentine, he said:

> Australia's position in the Orient had been secured through the commonwealth's depreciated currency, he told the committee, and agreed that if Canada depreciated the currency of this dominion it would enable the farmer to sell more, to get more of that currency for his produce and enable him, at least, to pay his debts.

What a wonderful thing it would be to-day if the farmer could pay his debts. Mr. Richardson represents the oldest, the longest established grain firm in Canada.

In the moment or two left to me may I emphasize to the Prime Minister the importance of this matter. I notice in the last summary of Canada trade issued in the month of April that the exports of Canada for that month were valued at $26,000,000. A few years ago our exports in a corresponding month would have been valued at approximately $100,000,000. I know the Prime Minister is anxious that Canada should meet her foreign obligations in the terms and on the dates they fall due. I too am anxious to see that done, but we can meet them only if we have sufficient exports.

Mr. SPEAKER: The hon. member has spoken forty minutes.

Hon. W. R. MOTHERWELL (Melville): Mr. Speaker, I understand that the discussion on the amendment is to be confined to the amendment.

Mr. BENNETT: It should be.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: In other words, we cannot wander off to a debate on the Beauharnois project. I may say however that I should like very much to do so. Having regard to the late stage of the session and the desire to get through I shall have to be content to confine myself to the amendment.

To begin with may I say I think the amendment was drafted in such a way that whether or not we agree with all contained therein, at least we can agree to inquire into the practicability of some of the suggestions with which we do not agree. I believe in the good old scriptural teaching to prove all things and to hold fast to that which is good. I am going to try to prove all the enunciations in this amendment, to cull out all unpractical parts of it, and to hold fast to those which prove to be good. In doing that I think I am on sound ground.

Mr. BENNETT: Hear, hear.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Irrefutable ground.

Mr. BENNETT: Hear, hear.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: With those reservations I shall support the amendment. There are two phases to it, one of which laments the absence of policy on the part of the government. I am sure the government must lament that fact itself; I do. I have one reservation there also, however, and that is with respect to the Minister of Agriculture, concerning his initial attitude towards the establishment of an export marketing board. I do not wish to include him in what I am going to say in regard to that phase of the matter. The Minister of Agriculture has shown that he is acquiring some wisdom, because he indicated the possibility of appointing a commission to inquire into this matter. I hope the commission is given powers sufficiently wide and comprehensive to inquire into a good many other matters; there is no doubt many inquiries could be made. Probably he has changed his mind since he made his somewhat notable speech during the discussion on the estimates. My view, however, is that in dealing with special matters commissions cannot be dispensed with; that has been the experience of all governments in all countries. Of course, there are commissions and commissions; there are ghastly foolish ones sometimes.

In the lamentation in the amendment concerning the absence of policy on the part of the government, I join in all sincerity with the hon. member (Miss Macphail) who drafted it. Let us consider the estimates for the Department of Agriculture. They are not only a cause for lamentation, but they are a tragedy. They represent a massacre of agriculture, a slaughter of the agricultural estimates. We have all heard of the massacre of Glencoe which took place in Scotland during the reign of William and Mary. We have heard of the Sepoy massacres in India, of the massacres of natives in North America, but we have never witnessed such a massacre of agriculture as is now evidenced in the estimates of that department. I defy anybody to challenge the correctness of my statement. Who can show any justification for it? Let us consider the vote with respect to the health of animals upon which the health of human kind is so dependent, especially in regard to the use of milk and dairy products—this vote is cut down so they can hardly wink an eyelash; they can simply maintain their staff, retest old restricted areas, and mark time till a better day. Then take the administration of the Destructive Insect and Pest Act. It has been one of the characteristics of the Tory party when in opposition to make great fun of the Liberal Minister of Agriculture with respect to this vote. I remember on one occasion—it was some time after the war—I made the prediction that the next great war would be between man and insect pests, including fungus. We are facing that war right to-day in western Canada. How is the government preparing for that great fight? Are they stacking up ammunition and getting ready for the fray? No, they are cutting equipment and war supplies in two by cutting the vote to that extent. What a heroic fight they are going to put up! I suppose my friends opposite will try to make fun over the threatened invasion of grasshoppers. I would expect that to be their attitude, for they are not the knee-height to a grasshopper themselves in their knowledge of agriculture; that is about their measurement, and I shall expect them to poke a lot of fun at this subject. They will not be running true to form if they do not make merry over this, and I shall be surprised accordingly. Here is the way they are preparing for the grasshopper invasion in the United States, which was predicted there last fall, and as it was predicted also in western Canada:

> Washington, D.C., March 7.—Advised by its biological experts that there will be an enormous hatch of grasshoppers this spring in the western states, including those along the Canadian border, congress has voted $1,450,000 for "grasshopper control" by the distribution of poison-bran bait.
> According to the chief entomologist at the Department of Agriculture, the succession of dry seasons was favourable to the spread of the grasshopper plague, and in 1931 the insects destroyed small grains, corn and other crops over large areas. Surveys, taken in Minnesota, Montana, the Dakotas and states to the south of these, show that the grasshoppers were exceptionally active in egg-laying last summer and fall.
> The cost of the projected war on the grasshoppers is estimated at about $3,000,000 and the states concerned are expected to match the federal appropriation with a like sum.

According to that report the federal government in Washington and the state governments are working in unison to meet this invasion of insect pests. What are we doing? So far as the western provinces and the municipalities are concerned, they are nearly bankrupt and little financial fight left in them. While I understand from the press that they are preparing poison bait to cope with this grasshopper invasion, their financial energy must be greatly crippled in this respect. There is no indication here that the Dominion government is going to help them, although at Washington the federal authorities are going fifty-fifty with the state authorities in their preparations for this great war—a war which is not confined to the south of the international boundary. Grasshoppers are no respecters of imaginary boundary lines; they fly hither and thither as the wind blows. I have before me a grasshopper map prepared by the entomological branch of the Canadian Department of Agriculture, and I refer to it merely to show the extent of the invasion. Won't a smile now crack the countenance of the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Ryckman)? This map shows that the Minister of Agriculture's own constituency is menaced. So apparently this invasion is going to cover a great deal of Saskatchewan and a considerable part of Manitoba and Alberta also. What are the members of the government doing with respect to this menace to our agriculture? They are limp, lifeless and inactive. Either they do not know anything about this predicted invasion, or they do not know how to meet it. Apparently they are going to leave it to the prostrate financially crippled provinces of the west to take care of this menace. No wonder the member for Southeast Grey (Miss Macphail) is full of lamentations—

Miss MACPHAIL: Hear, hear.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: —over the uselessness and helplessness of the aggregation opposite with respect to agriculture. Now I have got a smile from the ministry at last but not one of belief. Let us see to what extent I am justified in making this wholesale, sweeping statement with regard to the lack of knowledge and experience of agriculture on the part of this government. The hon. Secretary of State (Mr. Cahan)—I am going to start with him—was on absolutely sound ground last night as to the ownership of the Beauharnois water and power, and I am quite with him with regard to some of his strictures concerning certain members to the left of me; but on agriculture he is a babe in arms. It is true that at one time he owned certain lands in Mexico, but that does not qualify him to be an up-to-date adviser on Canadian agriculture. Then as far as the Minister of National Revenue is concerned, about all he knows of agriculture is to shoot up the valuation on imported commodities for duty purposes. He is certainly a whale at that, so he has found his spot in the sun. As to my good friend the Minister of Finance (Mr. Rhodes), I must give him some commendation because he has showed his sympathy with agriculture in the supplementary estimates, he has shown that in some way or another he knows the relationship between successful agriculture and the national status, peace and prosperity, and he has tried his best to remedy the niggardly defects of his immediate predecessor, the Prime Minister, in that respect. But I do not think that even he (Mr. Rhodes) will claim to be much of an authority on agriculture. However, he does realize how closely connected is the condition of our agriculture with our national prosperity, and to that extent I want to give him all the credit I can, for I do not wish to miss any member of the government where merit exists, even ever so little. Then the Prime Minister—I am sorry he is out because I have a word for him. If there is one hon. gentleman in this house or in the whole of Canada who knows less than nothing about agriculture, it is the Prime Minister. His knowledge of the subject is represented by a minus sign. It cannot be otherwise. How could I know what he is familiar with in the financial world? I am just as ignorant of banking, of finance and of match factories, and things of that kind, as he is of agriculture. Then my good friend the Minister of Justice (Mr. Guthrie); I had a run in with him on the grading of eggs some years ago and the fact that he has said nothing more on the subject shows that he has since gained wisdom. Indeed, he or his government has retained the Liberal policy of grading not only on eggs, but nearly all farm products. He will probably adorn the bench some day, and I should like to see him there—

Mr. SPOTTON: We cannot do without him.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: —but as for his knowledge of agriculture, save us! The Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Stevens) is a very versatile gentleman and can throw in the stuff about bimetallism and all that when he wants to throw out a smoke screen. But what he knows about agriculture would make quite a book—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Rather what he does not know about agriculture would make quite a book, and I do not look to him to improve our agriculture or assist his colleague the Minister of Agriculture in doing so. In fact I do not think the Minister of Agriculture can get much inspiration from any of these sources. Then what of my good friend the Minister of Railways (Mr. Manion)? He used to invoke us to stimulate the red corpuscles in our blood, but he does so no longer; apparently his blood corpuscles have either become white since entering the ministry or some other objectionable colour resembling yellow. I know my good friend the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Stewart) is sympathetic to agriculture. He lives in a splendid dairy country and knows that not only our national prosperity but also our national health is in large degree dependent upon agriculture and the condition in which its products are put on the home market. As to my three good friends from Quebec who adorn the treasury bench, they are of different racial extraction from my own, but I respect them none the less, in fact I respect all my friends from Quebec, that great, old historic province.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I am going to take the Quebec members of the ministry as I find them. They have all used me right since I came into this house. But they will not take exception to my stating that so far they have shown no particular evidence of any knowledge of agriculture. True, my good friend the Minister of Marine (Mr. Duranleau) has withdrawn his bill to amend the Canada Shipping Act with respect to the coasting trade, and that is all in his favour and may indicate a desire to consider the western farmers' viewpoint on this question. Then we have my two good friends of the medical fraternity, the Minister of Pensions and National Health (Mr. MacLaren) and the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Sutherland); they are both good doctors and I think they will be all right where they are until the electors decide otherwise. I have nothing to say against them.

Mr. CHAPLIN: The electors recently decided that.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: All these interruptions are lost upon me; I hear some hon. members, but the chirp of the others resembles a lot of chickadees. Sometimes it is an advantage to be partially deaf. The Minister of the Interior (Mr. Murphy) showed a glowing desire to help agriculture last year when he decided to close the two forestry farms in Saskatchewan in the midst of the most ghastly hurricanes we have ever seen on those plains, but I do not hold that against him. He retreated gracefully into the arms of the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Weir) and left the farms to be administerted by that hon. gentleman, but with no additional vote to take care of them. They were tacked on to the experimental farms as an adopted child of some promise. As I have said, I have a reservation with regard to the Minister of Agriculture who, since he cannot get agricultural information from his colleagues, is showing an inclination to seek that information elsewhere. There has been mention even of a royal commission, and to that extent the minister is on sound ground, from which I sincerely hope he does not retreat.

I ask the hon. member for Southeast Grey (Miss Macphail) what she could expect as to Canada's present standstill agricultural policy other than what has already happened as a tree is usually known by its fruit. The electors of Canada are responsible for putting the right hon. Prime Minister in power, and he is responsible for choosing his many non-agricultural colleagues. That is the position, and no one can give redress except the electors. We do what we can by expressing our disgust with the government's lack of agricultural policy, but after all is said and done the electors are responsible. Of course they were bamboozled, misled by false pretences and stung generally, and to some extent they must be excused on that account. The electors wanted a change in 1930 and in all conscience they got it. Now many are holding up both hands for another change and that right speedily.

Then we come to that part of the amendment dealing with suggested reforms. It explores ground on which I am none too solid myself, and which I would not like anyone to think I favoured fully just now. But we must explore these grounds. If there had been no explorers in the world the continent on which we live never would have been discovered. Without explorers the human race would have been segregated in a very small part of the world's area, so I am in favour of exploration. Agriculture is in a distressing economic condition at the present time. So far I have succeeded in keeping out of gaol, but if ever I were put in a gaol cell, with the windows all safely barred and the door securely locked, and I saw a gleam of light in one corner, certainly I would explore that gleam in the hope that it might lead to a wider opening through which I might escape. There is just a gleam of light in these suggestions of the hon. member for Southeast Grey, and I want it explored. If it is no good we can throw it into the discard, but we can hold fast to that which proves to be good. All reformers were explorers; when they once got it into their heads that they were right on any given subject, all h— could not stop them from going ahead.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): What does h— mean?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: It means hades, though I will say the other word if anyone wants me to do so. I do not know that there is any necessity to deal with this question at greater length.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I am going to stop when I like, within the forty minute limit. I should like to read some of the suggestions contained in the amendment in order to place them on Hansard once more:

Further, this house is of opinion that the government should take into consideration the following suggestions . . .

I think it shows a great deal of courage and bravery on the part of the hon. member for Southeast Grey to make a suggestion to this government at all, after the way suggestions have been received recently. My right hon. leader was given a slap in the face yesterday for making a most timely suggestion, by the Prime Minister who, however, was squared up by the ex-Minister of Justice. That is the way our suggestions have been received. Last session, and during the early part of this session, members of the government side howled because we were not making constructive suggestions, but when we do make them this is the way they are received. Of course all members of the government do not act in that way, but yesterday the Prime Minister was in one of his mad fits, and he proceeded to castigate us as already indicated. The amendment proceeds:

(a) the national control and regulation of currency and credit;

Is that not going on now in some countries? I do not believe any metal as a basis of currency in the earth or on top of the earth will stand the test of the times through which we are passing now, nor any combination of metals. I agree with Sir Josiah Stamp, who indicated in his recent Ottawa speech that as long as men and women are so unstable in their emotions and business activities we cannot have anything stable in regard to currency, but we can make it as stable as possible. The stability of currency depends in large measure upon the stability of men, and in turn the stability of men depends upon what anchorage they are tied up to, what kind of a rock they are standing upon. I do not know whether or not that needs any interpretation to the hon. gentlemen of the treasury benches, but I am not going to just now interpret it further—

(b) a measure of controlled inflation having for its object increase in commodity prices. . . .

Anyone who ever had any experience in selling goods in a country where the currency was higher than the currency in our country must know the advantage of that situation, but this is a sword that cuts both ways, as

[Mr. Motherwell.]

I understand it. I am only a student in matters of currency; I recognize that no matter what you do with our currency you must earn your share of it; you cannot get your share by lying down and howling or loafing.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): A good many men got it without doing any work.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: That is quite right, but I was referring to the walk of life of my hon. friend and myself. I know I have never been in that other financial world, though I am not going to say too much against it. I know that we need big interests, but they should be well harnessed. We need capital, but it should not run riot without control. I think we are nearing the day when these things will come under more control, not with the idea of damaging capital but to see that the best possible use is obtained from it and that no public harm is done by its illicit or unbridled use.

Apparently I have again obtained silence, although that does not necessarily mean consent. I have been speaking longer than I intended but I think by this time the hon. member for Southeast Grey (Miss Macphail) knows what I think of and how I appreciate her amendment.

Mr. H. A. MULLINS (Marquette): Mr. Speaker, I have listened to the harangue of the hon. gentleman, and I ask this house and hon. members opposite why agriculture is in its present position? It is due to the hon. gentleman who has just given his criticism, the like of which I have never heard in this or any other parliament. Apparently he is showing a kindly feeling to the opposite side, the farm group, in the expectation of being able to get them later on. Agriculture has suffered in western Canada because of the actions of the hon. gentleman who has just spoken. There are hon. members on this side of the house who have forgotten more about agriculture than he ever knew. If I had a farm in western Canada that looked like his I would get rid of it at once. I am sorry I have not the references before me, as I had not intended to speak again during this session, but I should like to read an article and a letter which deal with this matter. The letter was from Mr. Arkell, whom the hon. member had travelling over the country as live stock commissioner. He came to my farm and then wrote me a letter, and yet the hon. member says there are numbskulls here who do not know anything about agriculture. From his remarks one would think we were all ignorant and knew nothing about agriculture. I have been farming just as long as the hon. gentleman.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I was speaking of the ministry.

Mr. MULLINS: The hon. member was not speaking of the rank and file?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: No.

Mr. MULLINS: The hon. member was looking directly at me when he was speaking. However, there are men on the ministerial benches who know just as much about agriculture as does the hon. gentleman.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Who are they, outside of the Minister of Agriculture?

Mr. MULLINS: Take any one of them. It is just such harangues as we have been listening to that have ruined agriculture in western Canada. What have we been hearing in the agriculture committee of which I have been a member? We have been hearing of nothing but Garnet wheat. This mongrel wheat was introduced into western Canada after Marquis and Reward wheats had been grown for years. I did not take any interest in the hon. member's remarks with reference to wheat because there was nothing to be learned therefrom.

The hon. member for Southeast Grey (Miss Macphail) has said that the price of hogs is down, but I tell her that thousands of pounds of shoulders and hams are being brought in from the United States to ruin the hog industry of Canada.

An hon. MEMBER: Why don't you stop them?

Mr. MULLINS: Only a short time ago two carloads of shoulders and hams came into Toronto from the United States, paid a duty of six cents per pound and broke the hog market by two cents a pound. The hon. member should look into these matters and get a practical knowledge. Export cattle are selling for six and six and one-half cents per pound.

Miss MACPHAIL: The hon. member has stated that the low prices for hogs are due to importation, but I should like him to explain why in January, 1930, when we imported 7,000,000 pounds, butter was selling at 39 cents while in January, 1932, when we imported only 44,000 pounds, butter was selling at 17 cents?

Mr. MULLINS: The only thing I can say is that as far as butter and eggs are concerned, when they are scarce the hens scratch all the harder, and over production takes place.

An hon. MEMBER: The people are not eating them any more.

Mr .MULLINS: I permitted hon. members opposite to make their speeches and I ask them to let me make mine. I ask the hon. member for Southeast Grey why she does not look into the local live stock question to discover that this industry is being ruined by the importation of canned meats from the Argentine. Ten million pounds of canned meats have come in from the Argentine and have affected the local live stock industry. The duty should be raised three times as high to give protection to the farmer. But not a word is said about that. We hear the stock speech which comes out every Wednesday or Thursday, the speech to which I have listened until I am tired.

I am here in the interests of farmers just as much as the hon. member for Southeast Grey. I represent a constituency in which there is not a single smokestack, and I am proud of it. That constituency has sent me here to represent agriculture, and I do not intend to pay heed to a harangue from an hon. member who can see no good on this side of the house. There are hon. members on this side who have forgotten more about agriculture than he ever knew. Agriculture would not be in its present condition of stagnation if he had not left such an appalling situation upon our doorstep. He does not commend the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Weir) for getting a $12 rate on our export cattle. I came all the way from Manitoba and was ready to support the hon. member in an effort to get the rate lowered from $25, but he was able to make no reduction during all the time he was in office. I am sorry to have to take such strong exception to what the hon. member has said, but I feel I must do so. Unless we get the farmer back into live stock, unless the cattle trains are again thundering over the railroads, we will never get back to our former position. The hon. member should give a little credit to this side of the house for having some common sense.

Mr. H. E. SPENCER (Battle River): Mr. Speaker, owing to the lateness of the session I do not intend to take up a great deal of the time of the house, but I cannot let a subject of this importance go without saying a word in support of the amendment before the house. The amendment reads in part as follows:

. . . this house regrets that the government has not made any pronouncement of a policy calculated to meet the depressed conditions of the agricultural industry.

The only pronouncement I know of is a one-third cut in the agricultural estimates. If the money spent in former years did some good, surely money spent this year would do some good. If it did not do good in previous years, it should not have been spent; if it did good in previous years, there should have been no cut in a year like this. I hope the hon. member for Marquette (Mr. Mullins) will forgive me if I do not follow him too closely, but he made one remark to which I shall refer. He said that the western farmer would be all right if he would go into live stock, but I remind him that proportionately there is more live stock in western Canada than in any other part of the dominion. That is sufficient answer to the statement he has made. It is true in regard to all diversified farming and the figures have more than once been put upon the record of the house.

The hon. member for Macleod (Mr. Coote), when speaking last night, referred to the fact that agriculture production in Canada amounted in 1926 to $1,714,000,000, but that a year ago, 1931, it had dropped to the much smaller figure of $880,000,000, or, in other words, nearly $1,000,000,000 less. That, of course, is what is wrong with agriculture, and incidentally what is wrong with the business of Canada, because, as the hon. member for Macleod pointed out, agriculture is represented by 47 per cent of the Canadian people and if, by having to sell their products at a loss, they have no purchasing power, this will have a natural effect on the whole of the business of this country. I should like to remind the Prime Minister and the cabinet that the reason the prairie provinces particularly (for only one other province came) had to come to the federal parliament for help last year, was because of lack of purchasing power in the hands of the farmers. They could not meet their taxes; taxes could not be collected by the provincial governments, and as certain liabilities were coming due, those governments were forced to come to the federal government for financial assistance.

Only a week ago I had a letter from my constituency giving me some of the prices that were being received in that part of Alberta, and I take it that those prices will be pretty well typical of those prevailing throughout the prairie provinces. They may be a little higher in eastern Canada, but we know from what we have heard, that in spite of prices being a little better in eastern Canada, possibly taxes are higher here, so that no greater profit is being made in any part of Canada than is being made in the west. Prices given me are as follows:

Hogs, $2.75 per 100 pounds for bacons.
Eggs, 5 cents per dozen.

I may say I have had further letters since then and they indicate that the price of eggs had dropped down to two cents a dozen in certain areas. Imagine having to sell eighteen eggs before you can buy a stamp to put on a letter.

Special cream, 12 cents per pound for butter fat.
Wool, 3 cents per pound.

I notice one of the farmer senators the other day, speaking in the Senate, gave the prices he had received for some 800 pounds of wool and he showed a net loss after counting his various expenses.

Top beef steers, $4 per 100 pounds.

No industry can carry on at those prices; we all recognize that fact. But this is the gem of the whole information sent me by this man: He said that on the same day he went into the local town and bought four hame straps. Everybody knows what they are: they are very small pieces of leather. He paid $1 for those four hame straps, but he said that four beef hides were sold on the same day in the same town and they brought in the price of $1. Therefore, he gave four beef hides for four hame straps, or one hide to the hame strap.

Mr. COOTE: It was lucky he had the hides to trade.

Mr. SPENCER: They certainly took it out of his hide anyway.

I wish most heartily to support the hon. member for Macleod in his claim that we should have some inflation. The fact that prices have dropped some 60 per cent on farm produce since 1926 is a reason we are having such difficulty in meeting our debts to-day, for we well know, if you halve prices, you automatically double debts. That is the position the farmer is in and, incidentally, it affects all business.

I said at the beginning of my remarks that I could not see any policy which the government had brought forward this year except a cut of about one-third in the amount of the agricultural estimates. This reminds me of a speech I heard the Prime Minister make in 1930 in Winnipeg when he said that agriculture was going to be looked after by his government if he got into power. Speaking to the farmers listening to him over the radio, he said:

Furthermore, I will make the tariff fight for you.

That is for agriculture. I should like to know of any one product of agriculture that has been benefited by the way in which the tariff has been increased since 1930.

Mr. COOTE: How about wool?

Mr. SPENCER: Unfortunately, instead of having better prices for agricultural products, we have had very much lower ones. We had great hopes when the new Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Weir) was appointed. He is a man of considerable ambition, vigour and ability and we had great expectations of something being done. Of course, I suppose he is not alone; he cannot do anything without the rest of the cabinet, and therefore he must take the blame with the rest of them for nothing except a few minor matters here and there having been done for agriculture. The fact that agriculture is to-day in a worse condition than it has been for the last fifty years is surely enough to make any minister or any government realize that it is the one problem which should have first attention.

What has the government done with regard to financing the farmer? I have mentioned on several occasions in the house that we have in Canada no real system whereby the farmer can be properly financed. We know farming pays on an average a smaller percentage of profit than does any other business in Canada. Yes, under the system whereby our farmers have been financed through the ordinary banking houses, interest rates have been too high; loan terms have been too short and the renewal of loans has been too uncertain. This year, when the farmers have been suffering more than usual in paying large amounts of interest, when I introduced in the house a bill to restrict the banks from charging more than the legal rate of interest of seven per cent, I found the whole of the government forces voting against any change being made, and, indeed, supporting the action of the banks in charging eight per cent or any other amount they could get away with.

What has the government done with regard to processing plants? I have often thought, as far as the live stock industry is concerned, until the farmer gets at least some control over the processing of his products, he will not prosper. The processing plant in private hands stands to-day between the producer and the ultimate consumer; live stock is bought at as low a price as possible; it is put into cold storage and doled out at just as high a price as can be charged to the consumer. A good deal could be done by the government to assist the farmer in this matter. Why cannot the government advance loans at a reasonable rate of interest? Why cannot they cooperate with the cooperative live stock enterprises and help them in some systematic way of auditing their accounts? Surely we have the officials in the Department of Agriculture who can give very valuable help in this respect, and I rather have the opinion that the present Minister of Agriculture is somewhat sympathetic in this regard. Unfortunately we have this solidarity of the cabinet with which to contend, and if the minister cannot get a majority to think with him, agriculture has to go by the board. We have heard a good deal lately not only from the Prime Minister but also in the press of an export marketing board being formed, and legislation was going to be introduced for the purpose, but apparently something has gone wrong; the cabinet apparently cannot agree and the result is that there is not a word on the order paper to indicate that a marketing board is going to be formed. I shall therefore look forward very much indeed to a statement from the Minister of Agriculture because he realizes just as keenly as I do the serious condition of this basic industry, and until this basic industry is built upon a firm foundation where people will stay on the land willingly as volunteers, until they can carry on in this industry at a profit so that they will wish to stay on the land instead of wanting to try their luck in other callings, we cannot expect any big improvement in general business in Canada.

Mr. JOHN T. SPROULE (East Lambton): I did not intend to say anything but I cannot allow to go unchallenged the statement of the last speaker (Mr. Spencer) that the hon. Minister of Agriculture has done nothing for agriculture. I come from a rural district myself and no one has more sympathy with the condition of agriculturists than I have. I am sure that the Minister of Agriculture sympathizes just as keenly with the condition of the agriculturists as does any member of this house, and I want to say that he has done great things for agriculture this year and also last year. For instance, he has secured space for cattle going to the old country for ten and twelve dollars a head, and our cattle would be selling for one dollar per hundred pounds less but for that. The minister is doing much more than that for agriculture. It is not for me to say what he has in his mind, but I am sure that everyone will agree that the minister is very industrious and that he is doing his very best. When members complain of the price of agricultural products I would ask them to point to any country where the prices of agricultural products are higher than they are in Canada. It is easy to criticize the government, but I repeat there is no other country that is obtaining better prices than we obtain in Canada for our agricultural products. Hogs in Chicago, for instance, are quoted at $3.60, and are bought in Michigan at 2½ cents a pound. What is the cause of this?

Miss MACPHAIL: High tariffs.

Mr. SPROULE: The tariff has nothing to do with it. I believe that my hon. friend from Southeast Grey is doing her best for her constituents and she is entitled to her views, but still the fact remains that the tariff is the only weapon we have to keep a lot of commodities out of this country. After the Imperial conference we all hope that there will be some improvement in conditions.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: May I ask the hon. member a question? He stated that the freight rates on cattle had been reduced to twelve dollars as the result of the intercession of the Minister of Agriculture. I would be only too glad if that were so, but I would point out that ocean passenger rates were reduced at the same time. Was that due to the intervention of the minister or was it merely the policy adopted by the North Atlantic Shipping Conference of their own accord?

Mr. SPROULE: I was speaking of the cattle industry and what I stated is perfectly correct. Rates have been brought down not merely to twelve dollars but ten dollars, and ten days ago what were they asking? They were asking fifteen and twenty dollars. The Minister of Agriculture is responsible for bringing about that great improvement.

Hon. ROBERT WEIR (Minister of Agriculture): Realizing, Mr. Speaker, that the house is getting impatient I shall be very brief in any remarks I have to make. Taking first a few minutes to deal with the addresses given by hon. members opposite, there was one point in which they seemed to be in accord, and that was the regret with which they viewed the cut in the agricultural estimates and the great damage they apprehended to agriculture in this country in consequence. I think perhaps the majority felt that way. We have spent some time discussing the agriculture estimates and I do not think any hon. member opposite has shown that in any item we have discussed agriculture in this country has lost or will lose anything in the year 1932-33 due to these cuts. If, then, we can make a cut in the Agriculture estimates with no detrimental effect on agriculture in this country, I think that is all gain. No one will welcome more than I any suggestion on the estimates still to be discussed as to where I can improve agriculture by an increase in the estimates alone.

Much has been said regarding cooperation, and it was urged that this government give more support to cooperative movements. I myself am a member of the cooperative live stock pool, of the wheat pool, and of the Saskatchewan registered seed grain pool. I have always taken a very keen interest and active part in these cooperative organizations, but because I do belong to them is no reason why I should shut my eyes and say that they are right and everybody else is wrong. There is no country in the world that has been boosted more or has done more in the way of cooperative processing and cooperative marketing in agriculture than Denmark, and at the present time conditions in agriculture in Denmark are as bad as they are in this country, and even worse. Therefore cooperation is not the solution. The fact that Denmark has a lower tariff has not saved agriculture in that country. On the other hand, the fact that the United States has a high tariff has not been of as great assistance as it was thought it would be to the agriculturists. I believe there has been a greater depreciation in land values and in values of farm products in the United States than there has been even in Canada. So, on the one hand, we have low tariff with agricultural conditions in the low tariff country worse than they are in this country. On the other hand, we have countries with high tariffs, and with agricultural conditions worse than they are in this country. On the one hand, we have countries that are very far advanced and developed in cooperative movements, and yet the conditions of agriculture there are worse than they are in Canada. I shall refer to this again before concluding.

The one thing that I am sure has appealed to every hon. member of this house, as it has appealed to many farmers throughout the country, has been this, that no sooner did the former government go out of power and this government come into power than member after member, farm members and others, on the opposite side of the house began a demand for an agricultural policy. After they had been nine years in office they insisted that what this country needed was an agricultural policy. Hon. members in the far corner who had been in the house for years before we took power cannot surely congratulate themselves on what they have accomplished because it has also been the refrain of their remarks ever since we took office that what this country needed was an agricultural policy. I agree that what we did need was an agricultural policy, and immediately this government took power we outlined and formulated very definite policies in agriculture. The attitude that I have taken towards agriculture since this government took office has been exactly the same as I have taken in connection with my own farm or that I would take if this country were my farm. I think the sound farmer begins here: First he lays the best foundation he can regarding live stock, grain and so on, to produce and raise the best stock he can at the lowest possible cost. It was with that end in view that we evolved policies known as our live stock policies, and we have made it possible, without any restraint so far as this government is concerned in the matter of finance, to put into the hands of farmers in the outlying districts—and not altogether in outlying districts—herd sires and other stock which makes it possible for them to improve their herds, a step they could not otherwise take except at big expense to themselves. That has been one of our fundamental policies with regard to agriculture; it has been very far reaching, and of course would have been more beneficial if prices for agricultural products had been better.

Next, during our first twelve months in power we were able to obtain the services of perhaps one of the best agrostologists on the North American continent, so that the farmers of this whole country might receive benefit from his knowledge and research work concerning the production of forage crops, and the like. I maintain we have laid a sound foundation for agriculture throughout this country.

What is the next step which confronts the farmer? It is this: He wishes a market for his product. This government carried out its election promises by giving the Canadian market to Canadian farmers. Our farmers receive the full benefit of our market. Although I realize hon. members are somewhat impatient to get away I believe I should take a few moments to outline some of the benefits reaped by Canadian farmers in various branches of agriculture as a result of obtaining the benefit of the Canadian market. First let us consider butter. After imposing a duty which kept out butter from Australia and New Zealand and other countries in 1931 Canadian butter in Montreal brought the following premiums over the export, or world value:

January	8·69
February	7·87
March	7·82
April	6·33

An estimate by an independent authority showed that in the first nine months of office this government as a result of its tariffs had put into the hands of the dairy farmers of Canada over $12,000,000. The officers of my department when asked to check up the estimate given by the president of the National Dairy Council, and to predicate the result on a conservative basis, gave an amount in excess of $14,000,000 for the first nine months.

We will now consider the value of Canadian butter as compared with that of Australia and New Zealand. During the month of January, 1932, our butter was worth at Vancouver 3½ cents per pound higher in price than Australian butter. On January 23, 1932, the finest New Zealand butter which sells at a premium of ·74 cents per pound over Canadian butter was equal to 17·22 cents per pound Canadian funds, which would leave Canadian butter on the same day at 16·48 cents on the London market. Allowing for transportation and handling charges, Canadian butter on that date would have netted back 13·98 cents at prairie points. On the same day, however, No. 1 pasteurized Alberta and Saskatchewan butter was quoted at Vancouver at 21 cents. That indicated a difference of approximately 10 cents a pound if we consider transportation due I think, entirely, to the protection afforded by our tariffs in preventing the importation of butter from New Zealand and Australia. This statement regarding the various markets will be of interest to those who evidently still have the opinion—perhaps not the opinion—but would like to give the impression to the country that it is their opinion that our tariffs have not improved the condition, so far as butter is concerned. On March 19, 1932, the price of butter at Montreal, namely 28 cents per pound, exceeded the value for export to London by 11·05 cents per pound, which, on one day's Canadian consumptive requirements of 833,333 pounds, amounted to $92,083.30. On the same day the value of butter at Montreal exceeded the value at New York by 5 cents per pound, equivalent on one day's Canadian consumptive requirements to $41,666.65. On the same day the value of butter at Montreal exceeded the value at Chicago by 5¾ cents per pound, equivalent on one day's Canadian consumptive requirements to $47,916.64.

I should like to speak longer concerning butter, and the additional returns to the Canadian farmer in connection therewith, due to our tariff. I find, however, that I must turn to other commodities. Let us now consider lamb and mutton. During 1931 the total imports of lamb and mutton were 1,185,327 pounds, compared with 4,411,771 pounds in 1930, a very notable reduction, particularly useful in view of the unstable condition of the world's markets. It is safe to say that during the early part of the year prices were maintained on an average of 2 and 3 cents a pound above what would otherwise have been the case, and during the autumn when the flush of the runs was coming forward, prices were held higher by one cent per pound. On the average, then, the market was held at 1½ cents higher which, on inspected slaughtered sheep alone, at an average of 86 pounds per head, contributed the revenue of $1,059,000. Inspected slaughterings represented only 45 per cent of the total farm sale, so that the total revenue saved would be well in excess of $2,300,000. May I repeat at this point what I have said on other occasions that wool is the one farm commodity on which there is no duty. Yet there has been a much greater depreciation in the price of wool, a commodity which has no tariff placed upon it, than there has been on any commodities with tariffs.

Next I shall touch on the increase in cattle prices, these increases being brought about by our tariffs. Much has been said regarding the benefit accruing to the farmers as a result of the reduction in ocean freight rates. In addition to that we have made it possible, by arrangements with the railways, that the farmers in Alberta and Saskatchewan and Manitoba who have a good deal of coarse feed and wish to purchase feeder cattle shall receive a 50 per cent freight rate from the ranches to their farms. In that way they save the stock yard charges and local freight, as well, because without the arrangement we have made, the special 50 per cent reduction in the rate there would be a local rate into and out of the stock yards. We made the endeavour, and to a certain degree were successful, to have mail orders filled by the Beef Producers' Council for farmers in the north who wanted cattle, so that they might be saved the expense of coming down and hunting for cattle and the expense involved.

That saving amounted to about $100 a car load. We did everything within our power to develop the export of our cattle to Great Britain. The result has been that as a result of the increase in price we have netted back to the Canadian farmers a sum not less than $7,500,000. The cattle that were shipped netted back over the local market price, Calgary $17.29 per head; in Moose Jaw $21.18 per head; in Winnipeg $18.11 per head and in Toronto $17.50 per head. Our hopes in this connection however were very badly shattered when Great Britain went off the gold standard.

Next we come to bacon and pork. During 1931 the imports of pork and pork products were 5,138,400 pounds as compared with 19,631,645 pounds in 1930. This is due almost entirely to the effect of the tariff. However, in January, 1931, in spite of our tariff against bacon, the Danes felt our domestic price was so much higher than theirs that they could very well export bacon to this country. The only way we could stop the bacon coming in was by passing a ministerial order excluding importations on the ground of the danger of an outbreak of foot and mouth disease, which was done in one case at least in England when this disease had undoubtedly been introduced through the importation of Danish bacon. By this action we excluded from our domestic market 20,000,000 pounds of Danish bacon. These are matters of legislative acts, and perhaps we should have given them more publicity, but since I accepted my portfolio I have felt that as minister of farming I should, by laying down a sound fundamental policy, direct the energies of my department to putting more money into the pockets of our farmers and not worry about who should know.

The last speaker challenged me to show how this government had in any way benefited our farmers by improving the price of the products they have to sell. I will take a commodity that has not been very much discussed—fruit. All hon. members are aware of the advantage that the American fruit grower has over the Canadian. Due to favourable climatic conditions he gets his crop on the market before ours, when people have a taste for fresh fruit and prices are high, and if our domestic market was not protected it would be impossible for our fruit growers to carry on. The dumping duty we put into effect has been so much criticized that no doubt hon. members will be interested to know the results of this action on the 1931 fruit market. Let me give the committee the figures of car arrivals of seven commodities on the twelve principal markets for 1930 and 1931. These figures cover domestic and imported fruit:

Car Arrivals of Seven Commodities on Twelve Principal Markets

	Domestic			Imported
	1930	1931	Diff.	1930	1931	Diff.
Apples. . .	3,032	3,476	+444	476	436	— 40
Celery. . .	190	235	+ 45	810	405	—405
Grapes. . .	72	350	+278	1,056	541	—515
Lettuce. . .	15	27	+ 12	1,304	862	—442
Onions. . .	617	886	+269	725	431	—294
Pears. . . .	52	59	+ 7	515	415	—100
Plums. . . .	9	12	+ 3	96	58	— 38

It will be observed that there has been a heavy increase of domestic shipments with a still heavier decrease of imported shipments. I do not think anything could more clearly demonstrate the benefit which our tariff measures have proved to the fruit growers of the dominion. The most pronounced effect was observable in Ontario with respect to grapes. Grapes were not bringing any price at all in Ontario because the wineries were virtually not operating, and if we had not preserved the markets of the prairie provinces for the Ontario grape producers they would not have been able to dispose of their crop. This did not raise the price to the purchasers in the prairie provinces over what it was a year ago. In fact the price was a good deal lower than the preceding year, but it was slightly over the price across the line. However, if it had not been for this tariff it is doubtful if the American grape growers would not have taken advantage—as they have done in the past—to exact a higher price for their product in this country than in their own. There was also a marked benefit to the fruit growers in British Columbia. Due to lack of protection they had had a very unprofitable market, and as a result their fruit ranches were being neglected. A survey undertaken by the provincial authorities in the fall of last year shows that there has been a decided increase in the planting of all the small stone fruits. For instance, in the Okanagan valley there have been the following plantings during the year: Peaches, 14,874 trees; apricots, 3,546; plums and prunes, 2,289; cherries, 4,024;—or a total of 24,731 trees. Indications point to similar or even greater plantings during 1932, and although fruit prices in British Columbia have been lower than they were last year, the fruit growers, because of their good crop and their protected home market, have been more than satisfied. No doubt hon. members will be interested to hear some of the expressions of appreciation which we have received from the fruit organizations of British Columbia. These organizations of course, are absolutely non-political. Mr. MacDonald, president of the British Columbia Fruit Growers' Association, states in part:

> The greatest stabilizing influence upon the marketing activities of the growers during the past season (1931) was the establishing of the fair market values by the Dominion government; it enabled the growers to market crops which previously rotted in orchards and gardens. It is estimated that $184,000 had been saved by the fruit growers of the province which otherwise would have been lost had the growers been compelled to meet the competition from the United States. A specific instance was rhubarb from the Hatzic-Mission district. As a result of the fixing of four cents per pound on rhubarb this district shipped over eighty cars of rhubarb to the prairie markets formerly supplied by the state of Washington.

Mr. Somerset, chairman of the Ontario Marketing Board, in a conversation emphatically stated:

> The establishing of the fair market value saved the Ontario growers from receiving ruinously low prices during the past season and prevented the marketing situation from becoming a chaotic condition, and prices dropping much lower than were realized.

Mr. James E. Johnson, manager of the Norfolk Fruit Growers' Association, Simcoe, Ontario, stated:

> The policy of the government in regard to the fixing of fair market values for fruits and vegetables has been of considerable benefit throughout the whole season in the marketing of the apple crop.

Mr. Johnson represents an organization handling three hundred thousand barrels of apples, controlling three thousand acres of orchard of one hundred thousand trees, and paying out in labour in connection with the production and harvesting of apples $110,000 annually. Mr. Johnson is recognized as one of the foremost apple growers and dealers in the province of Ontario.

Mr. E. J. Chambers, president of the Associated Growers of B.C. Ltd., said to the members of the Penticton Cooperative Growers, recently:

> The reason for considering this section in a relatively good position was because it had done fairly well with soft fruits during the past summer.
> A dump duty has given us good protection on the markets so let us be careful not to overdo the matter of price.

I have here a large number of other letters along the same lines, but as I wish to finish before one o'clock I will not detain the committee with any further quotations.

Mr. BENNETT: Go on and complete the story.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Carried.

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): In answer to the criticism directed against this government that its tariff policy has restricted trade, I desire to put on record figures showing increased exports of farm products since we came into office. This is to show the relative exports of farm products comparing 1929-30 and 1931-32:

		1929-30	1931-32
Canned fruits	lbs.	4,254,466	7,263,489
Onions	bush.	26,422	195,813
Canned vegetables	lbs.	17,249,042	22,477,523
Barley	bush.	14,817,071	24,337,678
Buckwheat	bush.	186,558	741,041
Oats	bush.	6,406,181	13,841,300
Peas	bush.	43,808	66,056
Rye	bush.	1,526,368	4,359,813
Wheat	bush.	177,006,369	191,315,933
Bran, shorts and middlings	cwt.	1,988,356	2,018,332
Oatmeal and rolled oats	cwt.	407,050	798,840
Maple sugar to United Kingdom	lbs.	13,212	29,284
Clover seed to United Kingdom	bush.	41,794	97,146
Flax seed	bush.	772,831	1,046,474
Tobacco leaf	lbs.	6,811,391	8,222,922

There was also a large increase in 1931-32, as compared with 1929-30, in horses, fox skins, mink skins, hides and skins to the United Kingdom; fresh beef to the United Kingdom; pickled pork to the United Kingdom and to the United States; poultry to the United States; butter, condensed milk, fish oils, lard and compounds of tallow, and honey. There are also others, all of which show that in spite of the statements that have been made to the effect that our trade has been restricted because of the tariff, there has been a great increase in our exports of agricultural products, particularly to the United Kingdom.

At one o'clock the committee took recess.

The house resumed at three o'clock.

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): Mr. Speaker, when the house rose I was concluding a few remarks with reference to marketing. This morning the hon. member for Battle River (Mr. Spencer) referred to the price of beef cattle in the west being only $4.25 per hundredweight. The amendment says that the government has taken no steps or has no definite policy to relieve the agricultural depression, but I would have thought that the hon. member, coming from the part of the country from which he does, would have known something about the efforts made by this government in connection with the marketing of beef cattle. Shortly after taking office, and when our cattle had been shut out from the United States, we succeeded in having buyers come from the old country. They visited Montreal and Toronto and were on their way home when I persuaded them to come to Ottawa to pay me a visit and discuss the cattle situation. They were very much disappointed in the export cattle they had seen as they felt that there would be a big supply of choice cattle available with the American market shut off. I suggested that they go to western Canada, particularly to the provinces of Saskatchewan and Alberta to inspect the cattle there. However, they were so decided in their prejudices against Canadian cattle that they could not be persuaded to make the trip. My idea was not to encourage them to buy western cattle instead of eastern cattle, I was trying to persuade them to buy western cattle because I knew if they were not lifted off the market they would flow into and depress the markets in eastern Canada. So far as eastern Canada was concerned it made no difference whether these cattle were lifted from the west or from the east. However, the buyers would not go west because of their prejudice.

The government then had some carloads of standard type cattle, representing the different grades, shipped to the old country markets. With these cattle was sent a real live cattleman, a man who was vitally interested himself because of the extent of his own holdings, to demonstrate the good points of these cattle to the English buyers. The result was that in the following spring old country buyers came not only to eastern Canada but to western Canada. Personally I feel that the soundest line to be adopted is to have buyers from the old country come here to make purchases. These men have a knowledge of the old country markets and the result of their visits this spring was that they contracted for practically all the cattle in western Canada available for export at from $5 to $5.25 per hundredweight. Since that time further orders have been received and the prejudices against western cattle have been overcome. I do not think we can overestimate the work done by the government in this connection.

I think it would be well to put on record a brief summary of the benefits accruing to agriculture through the legislation passed by this government. In the first place, agriculture has benefited to the extent of $592,040 in connection with fruit. This sum does not take into consideration the value to the industry of new plantings as a result of the government's policy, nor does it take into consideration the possible break in the market which would have occurred had fruit been allowed to come in from the United States.

In connection with butter, agriculture has benefited to the value of $12,862,000. This sum takes into consideration only the benefits to the dairying industry as far as butter is concerned during the first eighteen months in which this government was in power. In the case of lamb and mutton the benefit is valued at $2,300,000, and in the case of cattle, $7,500,000. This latter figure has to do only with the marketing of commercial cattle. In the case of swine, the benefits are valued at $2,200,000. The sire loaning policy is valued at $1,000,000. This is a very conservative estimate as it does not take into consideration the indirect benefits which would accrue in connection with pure-bred cattle. In connection with the wheat bonus, there has been expended in western Canada $10,000,000. Altogether, there has been put into the pockets of the farmers a total of $36,454,040, or an average of over $50 per farmer by legislation alone more than there otherwise would have been.

In addition, loans have been made to the provincial governments in connection with the drought-stricken areas, which loans total over $12,000,000. I do not think even those hon. members who have been most critical of the government in connection with agriculture will refuse to admit the importance of the assistance given to the wheat pools of the west. The government has guaranteed the banks up to a certain amount per bushel, and this year it has guaranteed the wheat pools in connection with the holding and marketing of wheat.

I believe that those of us who were present this morning realize that the remarks of the hon. member for Melville (Mr. Motherwell) were not so much a criticism of my colleagues and their attitude towards agriculture as a confession of the disagreements he had perhaps had with his colleagues during the time they were in office. I would not be fair if I did not reciprocate his kindly wishes, and I desire to thank him for the compliment he paid me when he said that what agriculture needed at the present time was a completely new foundation. The fact is that we started laying that foundation some twelve months before he paid me that compliment. As I said this morning, we have laid what I believe to be a sound foundation for agriculture. In addition we have given the farmers our own markets, but we are now faced with another problem even greater than this, that is, to extend the effective range of our tariffs to take care of the marketing of those products which reach a point of production that puts them on the export market. This applies especially to those products where the surplus is small compared to the total production. Last week a delegation from the province of Quebec attended on the government and asked that something be done in the way of a marketing board. It is interesting to note that on that day hon. members opposite were speaking with grave suspicion of such a board, feeling that the whole matter would be put into the hands of private interests. The members of this delegation were thoughtful men, engaged in the dairying business, and one of them summed up the situation in the most effective manner I have ever heard. He said: I am a creamery man; I make one hundred pounds of butter and then I make another pound, and it is that extra pound which causes the whole difficulty. The difficulty is caused by the small surplus over what is needed for home consumption. We have given a great deal of consideration to the question of extending the effective range of our tariffs in extending markets.

There are two ways in which this surplus can be lifted. One is by the setting up of a federal farm board as was done in the United States and the purchasing of all surpluses to be held or resold on the world markets. The other way is to set up a marketing board and put machinery at the disposal of the farmers in order that any branch of agriculture desiring to place a levy upon its products may create a fund to be used by the marketing board to absorb any loss which would be necessary in removing the surplus stores. In this way, more life could be given to the home market. However, there are many difficulties in the way, especially in view of the forthcoming Imperial conference. It is realized that our great world market is the United Kingdom and it was felt that the representatives from the old land should be consulted regarding their attitude towards any system of levying or bonusing. There are also many practical difficulties to be overcome in the working out of a marketing board of any kind.

I assure hon. gentlemen that we have given more attention and thought to this question than to any other, and in this connection I have received excellent cooperation from hon. members irrespective of party. Because of the reasons I have stated it has been thought best to appoint a commission to study the whole problem of marketing, and the government intends to appoint such a commission to study this question, especially in connection with export marketing. It will study the problem of supply and demand and perhaps more particularly the spread in the processing of the major farm products.

I believe I have dealt with most of the items coming under this amendment. The first is:

The national control and regulation of currency and credit.

This subject has been discussed in this house on so many occasions during the present session that no useful purpose would be served by taking time now for a further discussion of it.

The next paragraph is:

A measure of controlled inflation having for its object increase in commodity prices.

Much has been said both for and against inflation. The hon. member for Macleod (Mr. Coote) yesterday, in speaking to this amendment, stated that the price of eggs in his constituency was three cents a dozen or just sufficient to buy a postage stamp. I am sure he would not feel that any reasonable price for eggs would be less than twelve cents a dozen. This would mean that the dollar would have to be increased to four times its present value. That would mean, on a similar basis, the price of steers would be twenty-four cents a pound on the hoof and wheat would be $2.70 a bushel. If we follow that further in connection with the man who owns his property, with the labouring classes who are hit perhaps even worse than are the farmers, we find ourselves getting into grave practical difficulties.

Mr. COOTE: I am sure the minister does not want to misrepresent what I said. I was speaking about the average price level of agricultural commodities and contending it should be raised.

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): The next paragraph reads:

A substantial reduction of farm indebtedness.

That comes under the jurisdiction of the provinces, and it would therefore be a waste of time to discuss it here, although I realize fully that that is perhaps the greatest load which the farmers of Canada have to carry at present.

Financial assistance in creating processing plants under farmer control.

This is a matter which has been given a good deal of consideration. Personally I believe in the principle of cooperative marketing, but if cooperative marketing is sound, as I consider it is, it should stand on its own feet. If the purpose is to cut out the middle man or excessive profits by private interests and the cooperative enterprise will have those profits to play on and still have the prices charged by private interests as well as the good will of their big clientele or members of their pool or cooperative organizations, I do not see why they cannot stand on their own feet and I believe they can. Marketing in connection with live stock has perhaps made greater progress and undergone greater changes than the marketing of any of the rest of our products. Fifty years ago less than 18 per cent of our population was urban and live stock processing and marketing took place on the original farm. A few years later beef rings were started; farmers got together in cooperative groups and killed their stock cooperatively. Then, as small industries started up in the towns, farmer butchers or regular butchers started business and the tendency was that the stock would be driven to the town butcher and slaughtered there. From that we have the jump to our packing plants as the urban population grew in comparison with the rural population. Therefore now we are in this position that the rural and the urban populations are practically the same.

With reference to the packing plants, I stated before that the purpose of this commission would be to study the problems of marketing and in that connection also study in particular the spread in the processing of the major farm products. I believe we should have cooperative marketing and cooperative industry, but at the same time I think we would be unwisely advised if we tried in any way to destroy the efficiency of private interests and industry set up by the capital of people who are just as much Canadians and interested in the welfare of Canada as are we in agriculture. We should have both, and I believe it will be quite possible, with a thorough survey and investigation, to work out a spread which would ensure the farmers that no undue profits were taken from them. That would be the standard for the cooperative enterprise. The latter, on the other hand, would act as a balance wheel against the private enterprise, and at the same time it would be a standard by which the private enterprise could measure its work.

Another paragraph reads:

That farming cooperative selling organizations be permitted to import goods received in other countries in exchange for Canadian agricultural products without the imposition of customs or dumping duty.

If we agreed to that, we would also have to agree to give the consumers in this country an opportunity to make use of farm products such as fruit and so on, which are dumped into this country from the United States. It cannot be two ways; it must be one way. In my constituency, which is a purely rural one, the largest urban place in it having a population of about 1,600, although the farmers at the last election voted that Canadian markets be given to the Canadian farmer, I think I heard given, almost on a par with this, reasons by those farmers, some of them from Norway, Sweden, Denmark, the United States, as well as from Anglo-Saxon countries, that they wanted as well to protect the urban industries of this country, so that when their children grew up they would not have to go to another country to work if they did not wish to take up farming. They still hold that view.

In conclusion, I would not have hon. members consider that I thought everything was well with agriculture; far from it; but I do not think the situation can be remedied by the adoption of policies that have been in vogue in other countries and that, before this economic crisis arose, were more or less successful but now have failed. We must study, investigate, the problems of our own country and work out our own solution and salvation.

Mr. T. F. DONNELLY (Willow Bunch): Mr. Speaker, even at this late hour in the session, I believe I would be neglecting my duty if I did not say a few words in connection with the amendment now before the house. First, I want to congratulate the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Weir) upon the moderate tone of the speech which he has delivered here to-day; it is entirely different from those which he has delivered in the house on previous occasions. I should like also to congratulate the former Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Motherwell) on the spirit of forgiveness and conciliation which he has shown towards hon. members opposite regarding the severe personal criticism which they have levelled at him from time to time. He has shown a spirit of forgiveness and a willingness to work hand in hand with the present government and the Minister of Agriculture for the uplifting and benefit of agriculture throughout the country. He knows the serious condition in which agriculture now finds itself.

Probably the Minister of Agriculture has wondered why in the past from time to time he has been subject to such severe personal criticism from this part of the house. Let me say this to him: From the time he first spoke in this chamber he courted such criticism. In the first speech he delivered here he went out of his way to criticize our leader and to brand him as an outcast. He also spoke of the former Minister of Agriculture as a spreader of foul seeds and weeds throughout Saskatchewan. Both of these hon. members are respected and looked up to by us on this side of the house, and we resent such personal criticisms and are willing and ready to hurl them back to the man who uttered them. If he comes looking for war, he will find war. In the last speech he made in this house the Minister of Agriculture went out of his way to refer to two hon. members on this side, two outstanding representatives of western Canada, whom he branded as backbenchers. Now if we stop and think we will realize that even the present Minister of Agriculture is where he is only by a turn of the wheel of fortune which has brought him to the front. When a man goes out of his way to criticize severely members on this side of the house, he must expect the same treatment from hon. gentlemen on this side. As to me, I do not ask for any quarter and I do not give any, but I am ready and willing to cooperate with other hon. gentlemen for the good of agriculture at the present time. I reserve the right, however, not to indulge in personal criticism, but to criticize policies that may be put forward by the government. I think hon. members should at all times be ready and willing to give constructive criticism of policies that are put forward by the government for the good of agriculture or for any other purpose.

We listened this morning to some hon. members opposite saying that the former Liberal government had no policy with regard to agriculture. That showed a woeful ignorance on their part of what the former Minister of Agriculture and his department did during the years of the Liberal administration. Last year in this house I put on Hansard a record of the achievements of the former Liberal administration with regard to agriculture, and in case some hon. members did not hear it or have not read it or looked up the agricultural literature for the past few years, perhaps it will be wise for me to put it on Hansard again in order that they may become acquainted with what the Liberal government actually did do for agriculture during the years they were in power.

First I would mention that the former Liberal government made it possible for the farmers of western Canada to secure two new varieties of wheat, Garnet Wheat and Reward wheat. They placed these two new varieties in the hands of our farmers. I see some hon. gentlemen opposite smiling. If they went to the farmers out in the Peace River country or in northern Saskatchewan and told them that this was something to laugh at, they would not be laughing before they got off the farm, because Reward and Garnet wheat have been a wonderful boon to the western farmer who has been having frozen crops for the last ten or fifteen or more years. It has meant hundreds of millions of dollars to western Canada to have Reward and Garnet wheat. It has made it possible to raise wheat in the northern parts of Saskatchewan, Alberta and Manitoba where formerly we thought we could never raise wheat. Farmers had previously been raising piebald Marquis wheat, which had been cursed by every importer in the old country for years, or they had been raising frozen wheat and getting little or nothing for it for years, but these early varieties of Reward and Garnet wheat have made it possible to extend the boundaries of the area in which we can raise wheat for over one hundred miles further north.

The next thing the Liberal government did was to participate with the provincial government of Ontario in a scheme for erecting a new live stock building at the Royal Winter Fair, Toronto, by granting a sum of $35,000 per annum for twenty years. Hon. members for Ontario are well aware of the value of the Royal Winter Fair.

The former government also organized work throughout the country with a view to finding a rust-proof wheat. Farmer members from Manitoba know what rust has meant to them in the growing of wheat for many years. It has ruined our western crops to the extent of millions of dollars. The government started research laboratories and experts working on this problem of rust control and such great progress was made that we now have a wheat which is almost free from rust, and in this way one of the big problems which the farmers of western Canada have had to contend with for years has been practically eliminated.

I will leave that matter as time is passing and go on to the next. The former government also established restricted areas for the eradication of bovine tuberculosis. The work that has been done in that respect has been of incalculable advantage to the farmers of Canada and to our citizens in general. These restricted areas were established throughout the country under the Liberal administration, and the work is still being carried on at the present time to the great benefit not only of the live stock industry of this country but of the health of the human race.

Another thing which the late government did was to enlarge the present central experimental farm at Ottawa by taking in a few years ago a large tract of land.

Another thing was the grading of our products and the establishment of standards looking towards improving the quality of our products and their better marketing. That system has been of great importance both to our domestic and export trade in agricultural products. The results of this system have been to improve the quality of our products, to increase their monetary value, and to add to our reputation for such commodities as butter, cheese, eggs, bacon, fruits and vegetables. This question of grading of different products was examined by the agriculture committee last year, and although there was some adverse criticism from some quarters it was decided by the committee, after investigation, that this system of grading and standardizing of our agricultural products should be continued because it was to the advantage of agriculture and in the public interest as well.

Next was the establishment of an agricultural economic and cooperative farm marketing branch. That has now been established for some time. Another thing which the former government did was to create a system of inspection of fruits and vegetables at the different shipping points. The Minister of Agriculture also inaugurated a system of precooling or refrigerating of fruits and vegetables.

Next was the establishment of a seed-cleaning and storage elevator at Moose Jaw.

Initial steps were also taken by the former government to hold the world's grain conference and exhibition at Regina. We hope that this will materialize in the future. It was called off last year owing to conditions in western Canada, but we hope and trust that conditions will be better in the future and that this world's conference will take place at Regina.

The former government also established three new plant pathological laboratories, at St. Catharines, Edmonton and Sydney, and the representatives from those districts in this house I am sure appreciate the value of those laboratories.

Then the former government also abolished the manufacture and importation into Canada of oleomargarine. It will be remembered that some years ago we endeavoured to put through legislation prohibiting the importation of oleomargarine. To-day we are the only country in the world that does not allow the use of oleomargarine. This question became more or less of a political issue at the time and the leader of the opposition of that day and the former Minister of Agriculture voted for the importation of oleomargarine. They were anxious to have it brought into the country. But the Liberal government refused the importation of oleomargarine. If oleomargarine were imported into Canada to-day it would undoubtedly replace some thirty or forty million pounds of butter, so that step by the former government means a great deal to the dairy farmers of this country at the present time. We come next to the assistance of live stock industries and the establishment of live stock arenas in cooperation with the provinces and cities interested. Several of those arenas are distributed throughout the dominion at different centres where fairs are held, and are used for the accommodation of live stock. Next we come to cooperation with other nations of the British Commonwealth in the establishment of an agricultural research bureau. These are some of the things the Liberal government did for agriculture during its term of office.

Mr. PORTEOUS: Did that cooperation increase the exports of agricultural products?

Mr. DONNELLY: We believe it did.

Mr. PORTEOUS: Well, it did not.

Mr. DONNELLY: My word is as good as the hon. gentleman's. May I now refer to the policy of the Conservative government since coming into power.

An hon. MEMBER: It might not mean much either.

Mr. DONNELLY: If what I shall have to say did not mean more than the statements of some hon. members opposite I would not say anything; I would not get up and make speeches at all.

I shall now refer to the policies of the Conservative government. I have before me twelve points which the present Minister of Agriculture propounded as his policy:

1. A national marketing board.
2. Lower costs of production to be attained by increased yield of wheat per acre.

We have endeavoured to increase our yield of wheat for a great many years, and I do not know whether or not at the present time we are meeting with more success than we did before. All farmers try to increase their yield.

3. Sewing of land with crop best suited to it.

I do not know how that will be worked out, and I am not familiar with the activities along that line, or whether very much has been done in connection with the matter.

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): Mr. Speaker, I rise to a point of order. On what does the hon. member base his statement that that is the agricultural policy outlined by me?

Mr. DONNELLY: This statement was issued by the Department of Agriculture, and I have read the same twelve points published in MacLean's Magazine. I received a pamphlet from the Department of Agriculture outlining the twelve points shortly after the minister took office, and accept them as his policy. We return to them as follows:

4. Research work to discover fertilizers required for different soils. No fertilizer to be recommended unless of moderate cost and available in the particular area.

I do not know what has been done, or of any particular activity, in that connection.

5. Immediate survey of seed grain—wheat, oats, barley—and of seed vegetables and fodder crop.

I leave that for the consideration of hon. members.

6. Creation of bull clubs.

This has been done for many years by all governments. Bull clubs have been established throughout the country for a long time.

7. Immediate improvement of quality of our swine; government to buy every good sow which comes on the market.

For years the Liberal government had the same policy; I can remember that for fifteen or twenty years that practice has been followed.

8. Eradication of disease among poultry.

About the year 1916 or 1917, under the Union government, if I remember correctly, this policy was begun and still continues.

9. Increase of efforts to eliminate parasites.

Apparently efforts along those lines are not being greatly increased because we find that the estimates for the entomological branch have been decreased. Apparently they are going to restrict their activities.

10. Transformation of experimental farms into local educational centres.

We have not seen any great activity along that line.

11. Cooperation with provincial governments in carrying out policies and bringing to the farmers the discoveries of government scientists.

There may have been some activities along that line, but I do not know of them.

12. Research work in feeds to inform farmers of best balanced ration available in each area.

Of these twelve points, eleven have been clipped from the policies of former governments and have been the policies of past administrations. There is only one new one, namely, that referring to the national marketing board. We have heard a great deal about this board which is still in process of being formed. I am in happy cooperation with the idea, and hope it reaches formation. I should like to say to the minister, however, that such a board may be fraught with great difficulties and troubles, especially owing to the fact that an economic conference is shortly to be held in Ottawa. Those in charge must be careful concerning any steps taken towards the formation of such a board.

I have endeavoured to outline the policies of Liberal and Conservative administrations. What has been done with regard to them? May I say that in 1930, the Liberal government passed an estimate for $25,000 to set up a commission to investigate live stock and live stock products. That commission was never formed, and the investigation never took place. After two years have elapsed we find that at the present time this government is going to do a similar work. In the meantime, however, it has allowed two years to pass before beginning the program.

In his speech to-day the minister referred to the amount of farm products we have exported. He did not, however, tell us about the prices we received for them. If we cannot sell products abroad at our present prices, when will we be able to sell them? If an hon. member were running a shoe store he could sell his shoes at $1 a pair much more quickly than at $5 a pair. It would be much easier to sell wheat at 50 cents a bushel than at $1.50 a bushel. At the present time wheat is being sold for about 45 or 50 cents a bushel and eggs at four cents a dozen, whereas at an earlier time we received $1.50 or $1.65 for our wheat and 25 cents or 30 cents per dozen for our eggs. To-day the farmers in the west are saying, "We are not selling our products; we are giving them away." Certainly if we cannot give them away we must be passing through very hard times.

The other day I said to a farmer, "How much do you get for eggs"? He said, "Four cents a dozen." I said, "They cannot go much lower than that," "Oh, yes they can" he said, 'they can go four cents lower." Probably that man was a pessimist, because he believes that the price can drop four cents more. We hope it does not, and that it begins to recover. It is impossible to imagine conditions much worse than they are to-day.

The minister referred to a reduction of ocean freight rates on cattle shipped to the old country. Yes, that is true; they have been reduced. I presume the government is taking credit for that drop. But, surely if it takes credit for a reduction in freight rates on cattle shipments it will give the Liberal government credit for in the year 1926 or 1927 reducing freight rates on cattle $15 or $20. Surely we can give the Liberal government credit for that. Is the minister also taking credit for having reduced ocean passenger rates? The shipping companies have reduced the freight rates on cattle; they have also reduced their passenger rates. Why? Well, any hon. member knows the reason—it is good business. The shipping companies are out for the business; that is all. If this North Atlantic shipping combine figured it was good business to put up the freight and passenger rates to-morrow, they would put them up. I hope they will not. They are not looking after the farmers' interests; they are looking after their own. If the minister was instrumental in bringing about the reduction in freight rates, I should be willing to give him credit for it, but I do not think there is any credit coming to him. But if he has been responsible for that reduction, I do hope he will be able to get a still further reduction.

With regard to farm conditions generally, I agree with everything that has been said by the hon. member for Macleod (Mr. Coote) and other hon. gentlemen who have preceded me, in depicting the terrible conditions that to-day exist among our farmers throughout the dominion. In my opinion nothing more adversely affects the Canadian farmer to-day than the low price he is receiving for his products. That price has been reduced from one hundred down to about thirty-seven; whereas the price of the commodities he has to buy has been reduced only to about eighty-six. If the price levels were even the condition of the farmer would not be so bad. I submit the government should take immediate steps to try to adjust these price levels so as to get them somewhere about even. I take issue with the Minister of Agriculture that tariffs have no influence upon prices; I contend they have a very material influence; and I believe that with the present high tariff policy of this administration we are bound to have a continuation of those uneven price levels. The only way to adjust them to something like an even basis is by lowering the tariff. If you bring down the tariff the price of manufactured products will come down to about the level of the price of farm products. "Oh, yes," you say, "but if you do that you will put the manufacturer in the same miserable condition as the farmer is now experiencing." No, you will not do anything of the sort. In the first place, you will make the condition of the farmer better. You will admit that. But you will not put the manufacturer in the desperate condition of the farmer, for the very reason that the moment you begin to bring down the price of manufactured products you will have more markets. You will grant that. Our people will begin to get busy, our transportation companies from one end of the country to the other will get busy. What will follow immediately after that? We shall have an unfavourable trade balance. Just what our Prime Minister does not want at all I do want; I want an unfavourable trade balance. The moment you get an unfavourable trade balance the value of your dollar will go down—just what the hon. member for Macleod was referring to—but the price levels of our manufactured and our farm products will go up. I repeat, an unfavourable trade balance will depreciate our dollar. As a result our manufacturers will receive more protection, they will get a better price for their goods; and so will our farmers for their products. After we have a depreciation in the value of our money, and we are importing and exporting more freely, if we find our price level is not high enough, then I am ready and willing that we go off the gold standard and issue more paper money. "Oh," you say, "this is terrible, to issue more paper money." But we have done it in the past. In 1917, I think it was, we issued $26,000,000 of paper money, with nothing behind it at all, only the country. It did not hurt the country any, we went on financing just the same. In 1927 we issued another $46,000,000 of paper money without any gold back of it. We had prosperous times. We can do it again if necessary. We have all the resources of the country behind us. If having lowered our tariff we have an unfavourable trade balance and depreciated money, and we do not find the price levels high enough, we can issue more paper and depreciate our money still further, This is necessary to be done in the interests of agriculture and of the other primary industries all over the country.

We should, if possible, endeavour to reduce production costs, but this government has done more than any other government to increase these costs. Their action in issuing the national service loan did more to increase the cost of production than the action of any other government that has preceded them. I ask any hon. member: If you had $10,000 in your pocket what commercial enterprise would you put it into?

Mr. MULLINS: A good farm.

Mr. DONNELLY: I thought that, too, some years ago. I may tell the hon. member for Marquette (Mr. Mullins) that I once put $125,000 into good farms, and I will take $25,000 for them to-day. He may think it a good investment now; I did some years ago. But no one who stops to think seriously—and the people are thinking seriously—is very well aware that there is no commercial enterprise to-day into which a man can put his hard-earned cash and feel assured that it is safe and he will get a good return on his investment. For that very reason our financial men had their money stored in the banks not knowing what to do with it. They were willing to take the ordinary rate of interest allowed by our banks rather than invest their capital in any commercial enterprise. When the national service loan was floated naturally these men would have been anxious and willing to buy national bonds that would return them four per cent interest. But this government said, "No, that is not enough; you shall have more than that, you shall have $5.12 to $5.17 for your money." Thereupon they raised the rate of interest and gave a splendid opportunity to these moneyed people. By taking this action the government forced our provinces in western Canada to pay six and a half per cent on bonds that they issued immediately afterwards—bonds exempt from municipal and provincial taxation, which means that they give a return of somewhere in the neighbourhood of seven per cent. What has happened as a result of this? To-day the western farmer has to pay nine and ten per cent interest on loans. He simply cannot pay that rate of interest under present conditions. I repeat this government is responsible for that state of affairs. From the point of view of our farmers nothing worse could have been done. I have maintained, and I still maintain, that what we farmers in western Canada have always wanted was not easier money—we have had too much of it—but cheaper money. Every time our banks lend out money they should see that their loan is secured; then they would be able to lend their money to our farmers in western Canada at a low rate of interest. Therefore I would urge the minister to intercede with his government to see if something cannot be done in order to secure for western farmers not easier but cheaper money, in order to enable them to carry on, and with this criticism I will conclude my remarks.

Mr. V. C. PORTEOUS (North Grey): Mr. Speaker, I rise because of the challenge issued by the hon. member who has just taken his seat, who said that his word had greater value than mine. I do not say that my word is worth more than his, but I have under my hand a return tabled by the Department of Trade and Commerce which does say so. I should like to place on Hansard a few figures with regard to the value in dollars of the exports of agricultural products, comparing the years 1921 and 1930, in dollars:

Meat products. . . .	$ 89,628,963	$ 48,143,948
Dairy products. . . .	52,863,867	27,484,354
Wheat.	310,952,138	215,753,475
Other agricultural products.	299,732,518	212,599,039

It will be seen that in every case there has been a decrease under the Liberal government. While I am on my feet I should like to make one comment on the amendment. May I say if those who have suspicious minds with regard to the monopolies of this country were to capitalize their suspicions as much as they capitalize the position of the country to-day in order to improve their position as members of the opposition, I should pity the shareholders in that capitalization.

I may say that it is generally known in my party that I entertain some ideas that are somewhat similar to those expressed by the hon. member for Macleod (Mr. Coote) with regard to our currency. I say, however, that in view of the fact that the hon. member has been promised that this matter will be discussed at the coming Imperial conference, I cannot see that any benefit will be derived by bringing it up for discussion here on the very eve of the prorogation of parliament. I believe many things will be accomplished at the Imperial conference that will prove beneficial to the farmers, and I think the hon. member who moved this amendment would do well to withdraw it.

Some parts of the amendment have no importance at all. For example, one suggestion has to do with the national control and regulation of currency. I would suggest to hon. members who criticize our present banking system that if they have any funds to spare the field is wide open. They can go into the banking business any time they wish, and if they think the rates of interest now charged are too high let them loan money at a lower rate on the same security required by the banks. Another suggestion is that a substantial reduction be made in farm indebtedness and interest rates. I should like to know how any government can reduce the indebtedness of farmers to private individuals. Another recommendation has to do with international agreements on tariff matters. I should like to know what government has gone further than this government has gone, and contemplates going, with regard to trade agreements. The Imperial conference has been called; it is contemplated that this question will be discussed, and I believe what will be accomplished there in regard to international agreements will be an example to all nations. I do not see that any benefit will be derived by the farmers if this amendment is adopted, so I must vote against it.

Mr. ALFRED SPEAKMAN (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, I should like to take this opportunity of speaking very briefly on one particular phase of the amendment now before the house. I am not confining myself to this one matter because I deprecate the importance of other points contained in the amendment, but because there are two or three other good reasons.

I should like to speak for a few minutes upon the proposed marketing board. This, of course, is not altogether a new idea; it is one which the minister had in mind before he was appointed to his present position. For many months many of us have been studying this question and hoping for the creation of this board. May I say here that just as the minister spoke of the cooperation offered by other hon. members and of the absence of partisan party politics in the consideration of this matter, so I wish to express my appreciation of the attitude of the minister in welcoming that cooperation and assistance and in meeting on common ground those who are sincerely interested in agriculture and who believe that by this means some good may be done.

It has been announced that for certain reasons this policy cannot be initiated at the present time, but we have been told that a commission will be appointed to study this question and perhaps settle some of the doubts and meet some of the difficulties which are now apparent. It is hoped that this will make it possible at some future time—I hope in the very near future—to establish such a board. Naturally, with others who have been thinking along these lines, I am disappointed that it is not possible to proceed with the creation of this board at this time. I have no doubt the minister shares that disappointment, but I quite understand that there are three distinct difficulties which stand in the way of the actual appointment of such a board and the carrying out of such a plan at the present time. First, there is the question of whether the plan itself is absolutely sound. Personally I am convinced that it is, but that does not necessarily mean that I am right and all who think otherwise are wrong. Then there is the question that undoubtedly has occurred to the government, as to the reception such a board would receive on the part of those who it is hoped will be the chief beneficiaries of the plan, the farmers themselves. Again I say that as far as I have been able to ascertain the farmers in general are not only prepared to enter into such an arrangement but they are also prepared to make it self-supporting and semi-cooperative, and their only regret is that they have not been able to do so before this time. But again I can only speak for that part of the farming population with which I am intimately acquainted.

The most serious aspect of all, and the consideration in which, in spite of my own disappointment, I believe possibly wisdom has been shown in this delay, is the relation of this plan to the coming Imperial conference. In connection with any plan of marketing, two main factors must be considered, the producers who wish to sell their goods and the consumers whom it is hoped will purchase those goods. We must consider our own experience and the experience of other countries. For example, Australia is working under the Patterson scheme, which this proposal might resemble, but they are not permitted to send their butter to this country because of the dumping clause. It would be fatal to this plan if we were to find out too late that that was the attitude of Great Britain. I believe there is a general misapprehension as to the details of this proposal; I cannot indicate what the bill will contain because that is in the hands of the gods, but I can indicate what is in my mind and in the minds of many others who have discussed this matter.

Throughout the years under successive ministers much good work has been done by the Department of Agriculture, but in the main the work has been along the lines of improving marketing methods and the farm products themselves. In this field much good has been accomplished. I believe that this country has been fortunate in the past and is at the present time in the quality of its ministers of agriculture. They have been men who have had a wide and intimate knowledge of farming matters, they have had a sincere desire to do what was best for agriculture. Under their administration and partly with the assistance of the department, a foundation has been laid without which no marketing plan could succeed. We have a foundation of good products, good live stock and poultry; we have our systems of grading. These things have made it possible at this time to say that in the main we can supply that class and quality of farm products which is essential if we are to enter the British market in competition with other countries, principally Denmark. While good work has been done, this work is set at naught unless the product can be sold at a price which will at least meet the cost of production and leave a small profit for the time and labour expended and to cover the capital costs represented by the plant. That this is not the case at the present time is so well known that I do not need to add further arguments.

The hopelessly disorganized condition of the farmer and the low prices which he is receiving for his products have made it obvious that some action must be taken along the lines of better marketing methods. This condition is tragic because the population of our farms is slowly but surely moving towards bankruptcy. It is not only a bankruptcy of fortune, of bank account and pocketbook but a bankruptcy of ambition and morale. Although it must be admitted that it is no small misfortune which can discourage the splendid type of man and woman we have on our farms, there is a limit to endurance and if this drain upon reserves, financially and morally, continues, that limit will be reached. I speak from an intimate knowledge of the men and women in western Canada, with whom I have worked and lived for the greater part of my lifetime, but I am prepared to believe that the same is true of our brother farmers in the central and eastern provinces. I feel sure that they are of a strong and courageous character and willing to work under overwhelming odds, but that cannot go on forever.

What is the reason for these conditions and the low prices which prevail? It is due in part to general conditions and also to the fact that the farmer has increased his production along other lines because of the continued low prices being paid for wheat. Local consumption of farm products in this country has decreased due to widespread unemployment; there is a lessened purchasing power and as a result of all these things we find ourselves upon an export basis not only with respect to wheat but with respect to live stock, dairy products, poultry, eggs, and all those products which are generally designated as mixed farming products. This attainment, if it may be called an attainment, instead of being a matter for congratulation has had far-reaching and most unfortunate consequences. One of the reasons for the conditions which now prevail, a reason which has been proved so often as almost to attain the status of economic law, is the fact that even a small percentage of farm products produced in excess of the home requirements will set the price for the entire production, whether sold in this country or abroad.

My time is too short to go into the details of this matter, but I shall refer to one instance, that of hogs. A little less than a year ago we reached the export basis on hogs. Within a few weeks of that time, without any other factor entering into the matter, the price paid to the farmer for hogs dropped from an average of eight cents per pound to four cents per pound. The same was true of our beef cattle, and I am sure it was also true, perhaps not to the same degree, of our egg production, our butter production, and the production of those various articles to which I have referred. That being the fact, I think it would be most deplorable to throw up our hands and say that the only remedy would be to keep our production down to domestic requirements. That would be admitting an abject failure, and I do not think we are ready to do that. If we are to succeed in this country—and I am certain we shall in the future—and if the farmers are to succeed, they must raise more of their class and kind of product than can or will be consumed in Canada during the succeeding years. It would be a tragedy were that very energy, that very production itself to be, through the force of circumstances, the power that damned all their efforts. We must find some other way out of the situation.

What has been done to meet this condition? During the past years, by private initiative and cooperative endeavour, an effort has been made to place upon the markets of other countries and particularly of Great Britain, some of that surplus. That effort, speaking in the large, speaking as a matter of continuity of policy, has failed. The reason given is fairly obvious. Before we can enter the British market—let me use it as an illustration as it is the greatest market open to us at the present time—and maintain our trade within that market, we must assure the purchasers of those goods there of two things: first, that the goods which we sell have uniformity of quality and that they may depend upon that quality as continuing month by month and year by year. Beyond that we must assure them of continuity of supply. The British importer is not going to take the trouble to advertise and develop a market for Canadian live stock, bacon, butter or other commodities, when he is not certain at any time, having developed that market, he will be able to get those goods to meet the demand thus created. So far he has not had that assurance, and for this reason: In almost each year there are periods when live stock and butter may be sold upon the British market at a price which, in comparison with our Canadian price, will realize a profit. There are other periods when almost certainly a loss will be involved, and it is too much to expect any private shipper will keep on shipping month by month when he is losing money. But unless we can establish that continuity, why should the British importer bother with us, particularly when he can receive from other countries, notably from Denmark, the class and kind of goods he requires, with the absolute certainty that those goods will be delivered as and when wanted week by week and month by month throughout the entire year? That is a point in regard to which we must take some action.

I have neither the time nor the knowledge to go in detail into what might be done, but may I suggest two or three main principles under which such a board as has been suggested might function, and the work it might do? In the first place, such a board should be given fairly ample powers, to be exercised in connection with regulations passed, I should suppose, with the approval of the governor in council. Those powers should, I think, include one of having some control over the quality of the products which we export. This may sound to some as dictatorial, but it would be intolerable if, during the process of developing an export trade, any individual through short-sightedness, greed, selfishness or mere ignorance, were to be permitted to destroy our hopes by shipping abroad some trashy product of a kind of which we still find too much in this country, but which is in no way typical of this country's products as a whole. You cannot over-estimate the damage which might be done to our reputation or the financial loss that might be incurred by such a thing. Just as we guard the quality of our wheat as it is distributed throughout the world and also as we guard that of our eggs, poultry and other products, so should such a board have power to exercise some control, and for the same reason, over the quality of our goods sent abroad.

In the second place, the board should have some control over transportation facilities, particularly the ocean space, in relation to beef cattle and other items. It should have, as was intimated by the minister, the power at least to inquire into the spread which prevails as between the producer of farm products and the ultimate consumer. In that connection it should have and eventually I think it must have, control over a fund out of which losses incurred in our overseas trade in farm products may be met. As to that—and I imagine it is one of the greatest difficulties—so much has been said on one side or the other, I hesitate to say more. But two questions are being and should be asked in respect of such a fund: How is it to be financed? How are you going to get the money? Second, how will it be expended in order to bring about the greatest results? I suggest—and this is no suggestion emanating from myself; it has been indicated already by the minister as a possibility—that such a levy should be placed on the goods themselves, on the total production in this country of that class or kind of farm commodity, in such a way as to impose no great hardship, and that could easily be done.

Let me take live stock as an illustration: last year we exported something like five per cent of our total production and that five per cent, hanging over our heads at this time, is sufficient to depress our market. A levy of one-tenth of a cent per pound according to the weight of the animal, placed upon our total production, would prove approximately sufficient to pay two cents a pound, or $20 a steer on all the animals exported. Further, this is obvious and it is most important: This assistance should not be given by way of a fixed bonus. If you do that, you defeat the very object you have in view, because if this is paid by way of a fixed bonus, it is obvious it would be to the interest of the buyer or shipper to keep the Canadian price as low as possible in order that the bonus might add to his profit and not to that of the producer. I suggest that it should be used to pay the actual loss involved in the shipment of those goods. This would be a varying amount. In this way two difficulties would be met: first, it would in no way induce the shipper to depress the Canadian price, and, second, it would in no way put us in the position of attempting, by bonusing articles, to undersell our competitors in foreign markets, neither of which actions would be sound.

Other items might be attended to similarly. Owing to the time of the day and the desire to prorogue, I am not going to go into this as I might and perhaps should. The main object of the whole thing is this: to replace this chaotic, disorganized condition under which this modicum of exportable goods becomes a curse which crashes the price of all, with an organized, systematized method of controlled marketing, semi-cooperative in character, financed by the industry itself and having in mind as an objective, as a watchword: continuity of supply, uniformity of quality and stabilization of market conditions and of price levels. Create that slight shortage; permit to be created or reestablished that healthy competition, which, under our present system, is the life of trade, and you go some distance in solving the marketing problem of the farmer and in placing his domestic as well as his export prices upon a reasonably stable basis. You put hope into his heart, and while no one could expect that this would solve all his problems, because it would be wrong to think the millennium would come. I believe it is one step which could be taken towards the solution of these problems and the placing of agriculture upon a basis which would bring reasonable returns to those engaged in the industry and put hope into their hearts. I believe that it would be one factor in raising the cloud of depression under which we are labouring at the present time.

Mr. H. J. BARBER (Fraser Valley): I wish to pay a compliment to the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Weir) and to his department for some great work that his market extension division has done for certain fruit and vegetable growers in my district during the last season. The minister referred briefly to a shipment of rhubarb. The fruit and vegetable growers in my district wish me to express their gratitude not only to the minister but to the government for the protection which has been afforded to this industry during the last two years. Just to show the house the work which the market extension division of the Department of Agriculture can do, I would point out that rhubarb is produced in the Fraser river valley a few weeks earlier than in the rest of the dominion, and we were successful this year in marketing our rhubarb not only on the prairie but in eastern Canada. When the first shipment of field rhubarb was due to be shipped to Ontario on April 27, the Department of Agriculture put on a broadcast over the eastern section of the Canadian National Railway System announcing that Canadian field rhubarb had arrived, dilating on its qualities and on the medicinal value of rhubarb, and urging the people to purchase it. The result was that from that one district in the province of British Columbia we have marketed this year close to one hundred cars of that product. This work I think might be enlarged.

I must express disappointment that something in the way of a marketing board has not been brought into existence this year, but the minister has announced that it is the intention of the government to set up a commission. I hope that that commission will be clothed with powers not only to encourage our export trade but to assist some of our industries in reducing the great surpluses that exist to-day. The Minister of Agriculture told us the other day that owing to a surplus of some fifteen million pounds of butter in Canada the price had dropped from 28 to 17 cents. It is the belief of the dairymen of my district, and I believe throughout the dominion, that if that surplus could be removed the price of butter would advance four or five or six cents immediately. This is a matter that I have no doubt the commission will take into serious consideration, and I hope that they will have powers conferred on them so that they may assist our producers. Another important matter is the distribution of Canadian products within our own country. This is very important. I was hoping that the marketing board would have power to deal with this question, but now that a commission is being appointed I trust that it will be clothed with power to encourage and assist towards the orderly marketing of products within our own country. I am reminded particularly at the present time that large quantities of Alberta butter are coming into the province of British Columbia. We can absorb large quantities in that province because we do not produce sufficient to meet the demands of the domestic market, but the trouble is that many of the creameries in the province of Alberta are small, with no selling agency, and they ship their product to some broker in Vancouver, and he unloads it as soon as possible and cuts the price in order to dispose of it. The result was that butter on the Vancouver market was reduced by five cents a pound in one day. That also applies to eastern Canada as well as to the prairie provinces, and if something could be done to encourage the orderly marketing of our products within our own country it would be a great work. I trust that the commission which is being appointed will be able to do something along that line. I am not going to say anything more with regard to the marketing board. The last speaker (Mr. Speakman) has expressed my views in that regard. All I wish to add is that I know there will be great disappointment in certain branches of agriculture that that board was not set up this session.

Another matter that I wish to take this opportunity of bringing to the attention of the house concerns another branch of agriculture and one that is confined to my district. But even if it is confined to one district in the Dominion of Canada there is no reason why we should not all be interested in it. We have in Canada to-day certain resources limited to certain districts, and we are all interested in their development. I am speaking particularly of the hop-growing industry. Canada is the only hop-growing country in the world that is not producing a surplus. Furthermore, we are producing the finest hops in the world. The Canadian hop stands high on the world's market. I have some evidence here which I wish to produce very briefly. Samples of the Canadian hop have been submitted to the brewers' academies, not only in Great Britain but in the United States, and I should like to quote from a letter from the National Brewers' Academy of New York to whom nine samples were submitted:

> Replying to your inquiry of even date, we desire to state to you that British Columbia hops are considered an entirely suitable brewing material for the production of ale, lager and stout, and that in our experience, owing to the pronounced aroma of this type of hops, it may be used in the proportion of fifty to seventy-five per cent in the production of lager beer, whereas for the brewing of ale, stout and porter British Columbia hops may be used exclusively in order to impart to the finished beverage a distinct hop-aromatic flavour and a pleasant hop-bitter taste.

I do not think it is necessary for me to dilate further on the quality of this product. We find that even with the large surplus of hops in England we have been able, owing to the high quality of the Canadian hop, to export small quantities to that market. What I wanted particularly to deal with is the serious condition in which that industry finds itself at the present time owing to the fact, not that the whole Canadian product could be consumed in Canada, but that the consumers will not purchase this product. It is quite evident that the reason is because this industry some time ago was very active in approaching the late government and also this government in regard to some protection, and in retaliation the consumers, the brewers of this country, with the exception of one, have discriminated against and carried on a boycott against the Canadian hop. One of the largest growers has been boycotted for being active along these lines since 1925, and he states:

Our company has been under boycott for many years, and nearly all of our $500,000 investment in British Columbia remains idle for that reason. Furthermore, our losses in the past few years have totalled $174,294 because of the boycott.

The efforts that have been made to sell not only direct to brewers but through brokers have been more or less unsuccessful. I have under my hand a letter written by a broker in the city of Toronto referring to his efforts to place some of the Canadian product with consumers in that city. He points out that owing to the effort of the growers to have an embargo placed on imported hops they refused even to look at the samples. I have represented the interests of this industry in the house, and have appealed both to the Department of Agriculture and the Department of Trade and Commerce. May I say that the industry has received great assistance from both sources. I know, however, that there was never any effort made to effect an embargo. In fact the industry is in this position: They are very fair; they do not even suggest that there should be a high tariff. They suggest only that some working agreement should be made between the consumers and the growers, and they are prepared to enter into such an agreement for a term of years. I thought that some arrangement might be made between those two bodies through the marketing board whereby the growers might receive something near the cost of production plus a fair margin of profit. They would be satisfied with that arrangement. I had hoped that there might be some organization through which it might be possible to bring the consumers and growers together, and it is my hope that the board, when set up, may have that power.

As we are approaching the end of the session I shall not take further time but should like to take this opportunity to congratulate the minister upon his efforts to assist the mixed farmers of Canada. I could not for one moment support the amendment, because when we compare the conditions in Canada with those of other countries we must feel fortunate that we are living here. I wish briefly again to thank the Department of Trade and Commerce and the Department of Agriculture for their efforts in helping to market the products of British Columbia.

RELATIONS WITH THE UNITED STATES

Mr. C. B. HOWARD (Sherbrooke): Mr. Speaker, before the main motion is put may I be permitted to make this statement. Some three years ago the government of the United States imposed a duty against our cream and milk. It was one of the main causes of the serious depression in the dairy industry in the eastern townships of Quebec. This week the American government has imposed a duty against our copper and lumber. If there is one industry in Canada whose prosperity would help substantially to settle our unemployment situation it is the lumber industry, and I wish to stress the adverse effect of this duty on this industry. Another outstanding circumstance that to my mind affects Canada very seriously is the taking of the water from the St. Lawrence and diverting it into the Mississippi river; that is, the Chicago diversion. This 8,500 cubic second feet is being taken through the Chicago drainage canal in spite of adverse judgments rendered even in Washington. In view of these circumstances, and in view of the remarks of the Prime Minister this morning in connection with the treaty that is soon to be signed for the deepening of the St. Lawrence river, I would humbly request that before the treaty is signed or we have any further dealings with the United States government, he will see to it that these four matters are settled favourably to Canada.

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I think it appropriate to say that the proposed legislation to which the hon. member for Sherbrooke (Mr. Howard) has referred has not yet been passed; and further, as to whether it will or will not pass is highly problematical.

Mr. HOWARD: You mean as to lumber?

Mr. BENNETT: And copper.

Mr. HOWARD: The other two are also important.

Mr. BENNETT: As to milk products, the duty was imposed some years ago and the language the hon. gentleman has now used would have been most appropriate on that occasion. As to his last observation, I can only say that the interests of this country will be adequately safeguarded with respect to the alleged diversion of water into the Mississippi river. I am bound to say that the hon. gentleman's statements are hardly in accord with the facts.

Main motion agreed to and the house went into committee of supply, Mr. Ross in the chair.

SUPPLY

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE

Health of animals, administration of the Animal Contagious Diseases Act, and the Meat and Canned Foods Act, $1,654,000.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I wonder if the minister would be good enough to move down a little further. We would like to hear his voice.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Carried.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Ross): Carried?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I do not believe this is a proper way to consider estimates, to jump from one to another. You would require the alacrity of a cricket to keep up this speed.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Ross): Carried?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Surely we can get through these estimates by conducting them properly; we need not make a horse race out of it.

Mr. RHODES: I think my hon. friend in under a misapprehension. We have called the first item of those which remain unpassed, and it is proposed to take them in order.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I remember what happened last year at the close of the session; I know exactly how the estimates went through the last day, and I suspect the same unseemly thing now—rip through any old way.

Mr. SEGUIN (Translation): Mr. Chairman, I cannot allow this item to pass without registering a strong protest against its reduction and, on the whole, against the government's policy of cutting, this year, the appropriations of Agriculture by one-third.

It is truly deplorable that this government, while endeavouring to cut down expenditure, thought fit of making agriculture bear a greater proportion of this reduction than the other departments. One cannot too strongly protest against the government's policy of simply reducing by 10 or 12 per cent the appropriations of National Defence and other departments, which I may designate of a lower order, while those of Agriculture are cut down 33⅓ per cent.

Far be it from my thought of placing too much blame on the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Weir), who I am aware is animated by the very best intentions. I am rather inclined to pity him owing to the shabby way he was treated by the cabinet when the estimates for the current year were prepared. I wonder whether the hon. Minister of Agriculture was supported as he should have been by some of his colleagues who show so much sympathy for the farming class, at election time. Of what help, for instance, was the hon. Postmaster General (Mr. Sauvé), he who, during the election, proclaimed himself the champion of the farming community. Bewailing the sad situation of agriculture, he stated that should his party assume power, prosperity would reappear in all farm homes. And the hon. Minister of Marine (Mr. Duranleau), who made such a fuss over the consequences of the New Zealand treaty on Canadian dairy products; he also, I think, let slip an excellent opportunity of proving his sincerity by not forcing the cabinet to make a more generous grant to the industry which is the foundation of national prosperity.

The government had recourse to a blank signature in order to provide for the requirements of agriculture and the maintenance of order and peace in Canada; instead of indulging in fine speeches and including agriculture in that blank signature, it would have been preferable to grant the Department of Agriculture the whole amount required for the current year.

The funds placed at the disposal of the government to help the farmers, pursuant to the famous blank signature act, judging from last year's experience, was not distributed to the Quebec farmers, and the millions of dollars expended under this item rather went to the western farmers. I challenge the hon. Minister of Marine and Post Office to deny this fact.

I feel in no way jealous of what has been done for the west which, I have no doubt, was greatly in need of help, however, I must point out the injustice of not assisting the eastern farmers who also greatly feel the pinch of the crisis we are undergoing.

May I, sir, specially draw the attention of the Minister of Agriculture on the altogether embarrassed position in which a certain number of farmers of the county of l'Assomption are placed. Owing to the proximity of the city of Montreal, the farmers of a number of parishes in my county sell their milk and cream in Montreal; they have always derived the greater part of their revenue from that source and, notwithstanding the low prices obtained, this industry permitted them, at least, to meet the daily needs. Certain regulations adopted last year by the Municipal Council of Montreal, oblige the dairies who wish to trade with that city to establish that their cattle have passed the tuberculine test.

At a time when distress prevails not only among the workmen of towns, but also among the farmers of this country, the government is not justified in not having recourse to all the means at its disposal to relieve the so deserving farmers who certainly form the basis of our national prosperity. In December, 1930, pursuant to an order in council, No. P.C. 2879, the government set aside as a restricted area for the eradication of bovine tuberculosis, the county of l'Assomption. However, since December, 1930, the tuberculine test on cattle has not been carried out and only special private tests have been undertaken. In December, 1931, a delegation numbering about forty farmers came to Ottawa to interview the hon. Minister of Agriculture, so as to request him to have the provisions of the order in council carried out, without further delay. The reply of the Minister of Agriculture was that he could not have this work undertaken immediately, but that as soon as the 1932 estimates were approved, these tests would be proceeded with.

Since that date, I have more than once written at the request of those interested, to the hon. Minister of Agriculture, and I have here the answers to my correspondence. First, on April 6, he expressed his regrets of having to inform me of the decision of the department, to simply complete, this year, the second tuberculine test of cattle which, had passed the first test—except under special circumstances.

As, in a previous letter, I reminded the hon. Minister of Agriculture that he had promised the delegation to carry out as soon as possible the tuberculine test of cattle, he replied that he could not implement his promise until the Director General of Veterinary Service, had informed him of the amounts which would be at their disposal, in 1932, for the tuberculine test of cattle. In another letter, dated April 7, the hon. Minister of Agriculture informed me of his decision not to proceed to new tests, either under the regulations governing certified herds or under those with reference to restricted areas for the eradication of bovine tuberculosis, except under special circumstances, and the Minister further added, even in such cases, the farmers should accept the tuberculine test of their cattle without requesting compensation from the government.

Not only, sir, do I think I am justified, but I deem it a paramount duty, in connection with the vote asked under item 47 Health of Animals, administration of the Animal Contagious Diseases Act, $1,654,000, namely a reduction of $896,000, on the previous year—also with reference to item 49, Administration of Destructive Insects and Pests Act—a cut of half the previous amount—I deem it, I state, a paramount duty to protest, on behalf of the farmers I represent here, against this unjustified decrease, and especially in connection with the item which particularly affects the farmers. Although the government through bonuses and other gifts of all kinds gives to the farmers of the western provinces the greatest advantages possible, it does not seem to realize that the eastern farmers, just like those of the west, have a right to protection and relief from this government.

The Quebec farmers are suffering from the present crisis, just as much as those from the west, and the ridiculously low prices they obtain for their products are hardly sufficient to enable them to subsist with their family. If those who, especially, have depended heretofore on the products of their cattle as their main source of revenue, are to be deprived of the tuberculine test granted to them pursuant to the order in council just referred to, they will find themselves in a very critical situation. That is why, seeing that the hon. Minister of Agriculture—whose kindness I acknowledge—mentioned in his letters that, except under special circumstances, the promises made to cattle owners would not be implemented, I again address myself with confidence to him and I insist that he should reconsider the sad plight of those who surely are to be looked upon as under exceptional circumstances; and if he is unable, owing to the cut in his estimates, to carry out a general tuberculine test of cattle in the county of L'Assomption, let him at least, without further delay, undertake the test of the cattle of farmers who sell milk and cream in Montreal, and from which markets, at present, they are debarred. Needless to say that, when requesting the hon. Minister of Agriculture to carry on such tests, I mean that they should be done according to the provisions which govern restricted areas, such as my county, and that the indemnity granted by the Act be paid to farmers whose cattle react, even if the payment of the indemnity be deferred. In connection with the delegation to which I referred a moment ago, my opponent, in the last election, who came to Ottawa with it, having noticed that I had also joined the delegation, immediately took every possible step to prevent the delegation being received by the Minister of Agriculture. He went from the Postmaster General's office to that of the Minister of Marine, to induce them to use their influence with their colleague in order that the delegation be not received or, at least, that the results be nil.

Notwithstanding his trips right and left, which hindered this defeated candidate of being of any help to these farmers and many of his friends who formed part of the delegation, I must say, greatly to the credit of the hon. Minister of Agriculture, that the delegates and myself received a most cordial welcome, and that we all left with gratitude in our hearts and filled with the hope, that the minister's promise would be implemented.

Having returned to their homes, the delegates learned that Mr. Jeannotte, repeated everywhere that the delegation having been taken in hand by the Liberal member for L'Assomption-Montcalm, notwithstanding the promise given by the minister, no results would follow, and that the tuberculine test requested would not be proceeded with. I take this opportunity, sir, to denounce this undignified attitude of my opponent and to repeat to the hon. Minister of Agriculture that I have too high an opinion of him to believe that he would lend himself to such intrigues.

I therefore, pray the hon. Minister of Agriculture to dissociate himself from such idle talk originating with the defeated candidate in L'Assomption, and to do the right thing by the farmers and milk producers of the county of L'Assomption, and especially, to assist, without delay, the milk and cream producers, heretofore, doing business in Montreal, and who, since May 1, are deprived of their only livelihood. The question is too serious and momentous not to depend on the broadmindedness of the hon. Minister of Agriculture to definitely settle this question of tuberculine test which is most important to those interested.

In conclusion, I desire to make a pressing appeal to the minister. The producers of milk and cream in my constituency find themselves in a painful and even disastrous position in shipping their products to Montreal because of the action taken by the municipal authorities as a health precaution. These men will be unable to continue their trade unless their animals are tested. I request the hon. minister to come to the relief of these people by authorizing without delay the testing of their herds. I should like the minister to give orders for the payment of the indemnity which the law allows should the county of L'Assomption be put in a special zone. Does the minister intend to assist the milk producers of L'Assomption by giving them the help they need so badly?

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): There is a strong possibility that we may carry on some work in the county of L'Assomption, and immediate consideration will be given to those who ship milk to the city.

Mr. RHEAUME: Can the minister tell me when he is going to retest the herds in St. Johns-Iberville? These herds were tested two years ago. The herds in Missisquoi county were retested last year and they were first tested after the herds in Iberville had been tested.

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): The first work to be done will be that of retesting herds.

Mr. CASGRAIN: Mr. Chairman, I would like to say a few words along the same line as the hon. member for L'Assomption (Mr. Séguin). I deprecate also the reduction in this vote covering the administration of the Animal Contagious Diseases Act and the Meat and Canned Foods Act, and more so when I am told that the testing of animals for tuberculosis comes under this vote. I was made aware some time ago that representations had been made by people in the county of Charlevoix-Saguenay asking for the establishment of a zone in that district, and in December I communicated with the minister and asked for the establishment of this zone. The answer I received was that this work was not being proceeded with because of the scarcity of money. I have received a communication from a representative of the provincial government who is interested in this county, in which he deprecates the fact that this work was not gone on with last year. Is the minister able to assure me that this work will be proceeded with this year and that the zone promised will be established?

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): The retesting of herds will take up the entire time of the staff, and no new areas will be opened up until these retests have been completed.

Mr. LUCAS: A number of years ago a system of grading of dressed beef was established in the abattoirs. I think it was a voluntary system, with what were known as red and blue labels, which gave the consumer some idea of the quality of the beef he was receiving. Can the minister say whether or not any success has been achieved along this line?

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): That would come under live stock, and there has been no curtailment of the work in that branch.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Can the minister give the committee some idea of why such a large reduction has been made in this important vote? Will it result in any of the veterinary staff being demobilized? Will it result in no new work being undertaken in regard to restricted areas? Will it mean the attention of the department will be confined to retesting herds in the various districts, for instance, Nova Scotia? That province is an excellent place to test out the restricted area policy because it is practically an island, almost as much an island as is Prince Edward Island; with its natural water boundaries it provides the least possibility of recontagion. That province has not been retested, if I remember rightly, for three years or possibly more. I know there was a reason for that and I can excuse my hon. friend for keeping away from that area as long as there is any considerable remnant of the 1928 row still existant. But now I think the good sense of the stock owners of that province has prevailed. There were only three or four persons who made the row; ninety-five per cent of the stock men were quite satisfied with the free area policy. This only indicates what a tremendous racket a few men can make. I do not think the province as a whole should be penalized because of the recalcitrancy of four or five men whose good sense, I am sure, must have returned by this time. My hon. friend will forgive me if I cannot hear him at this distance, but I shall read Hansard for his reply to me.

As regards the area adjacent to this capital city, a few days ago everybody took great delight and pleasure in having an area here that could be looked upon as free from tuberculosis in dairy herds. When the dairy herds are clean, it is not long until the hog herds are clean, and when the hogs are clean, it is only a matter of time until you have the poultry clean of T.B. Therefore it will be nice to have a city not only beautiful to look upon, but healthy to live in, free from possible infection of this nature. As long as there is a number of untested localities in the triangle formed by the St. Lawrence and the Ottawa rivers and the Rideau canal, consisting of some eight or ten constituencies, there is a tremendous danger of reinfection in the herds that have been cleaned up of bovine tuberculosis. It is to avoid such reinfection that restricted areas have been established, especially this one south of Ottawa with its splendid natural boundaries. If my hon. friend the Minister of Agriculture can see his way, say this fall, to test these odd untested spots that are left as festering sores which facilitate recontagion among the clean herds, I shall be glad as one responsible for the establishment of this area in 1930. I am not blaming him in any way, knowing what difficulties he has to encounter, but I can assure him that unless he takes a firm stand, there will always be in that area some objectors who do not want to have their herds tested. If there is any difficulty in connection with the matter, I may say we had difficulty in Nova Scotia, where two or three stock owners actually resorted to force to stop the government veterinaries doing their duty. We avoided the necessity of force by exercising diplomatic treatment in the case of those cantankerous men who had their herds so badly infected that they did not want them tested. The same situation may arise here adjacent to Ottawa and I can assure my hon. friend he will receive plenty of support in the country and in the house even if he has to tramp on somebody's toes in order to get those festering spots of possible recontagion in bovine tuberculosis cleaned up.

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): It is not contemplated to reduce the staff in any way. The work of retesting will, it is felt, take the time of the whole staff. The first retest that will be commenced will be in Nova Scotia. Regarding the area around Ottawa, the great percentage of that work has already been done and we are gradually cleaning up the small areas referred to by the hon. member.

Item agreed to.

Administration of Destructive Insect and Pest Act, $328,300.

Mr. GARDINER: Has the minister any further word in regard to the grasshopper and cut-worm plagues in the west?

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): There is no further information.

Item agreed to.

Farm economies, including agricultural co-operative marketing, $8,600.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Does the minister think it is quite fair to this new branch to reduce its vote so severely at this time? I know there is an item of $1,000 in the supplementary estimates for it, but that is not very much when you consider that cadet training is going to get $260,000 more. If one considers the relative importance of the two supplementaries, $1,000 looks very small as an addition to the main vote for this important purpose. I know no change will be made now, but I should like the minister next year to try to get the appropriation back to where it was, plus a little more. The subject of farm economics and the cost of production is very important at this time; we have the nucleus of a great farm economics branch there and it cannot operate on wind or hope or faith. It must have money and moral support. I believe it is getting the latter from the minister. I know he can administer only what the Minister of Finance and his other colleagues give him. May I appeal again to the Minister of Finance?—formerly I have not appealed to him in vain. He has responded rather slimly in this vote, it must be admitted, but he has responded. This is a very important branch of agriculture at this time and the ministry should surely appreciate that.

Item agreed to.

Contributions to Empire Bureaux, $21,000.

Mr. GARDINER: Will the minister explain what this empire bureau is?

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): It is a bureau combining agricultural information and research work in agriculture, so that whatever research is done or information obtained along the lines of research or values in connection with agriculture, it is gathered there and disseminated throughout the various dominions of the British Empire.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Are most of the other countries that have entered into this agreement with us, as we have with them, pretty well living up to their financial obligations with respect thereto?

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): So far as we know, yes.

Mr. HEENAN: I see the Minister of Finance is in his seat. Perhaps what I am going to speak of refers more to his department than to that of agriculture. I see this is a contribution to empire bureaux. I was wondering why the government has eliminated from the estimates the grants for health in Canada. For instance, the Canadian Social Hygiene Council used to have a grant of $20,000, which is entirely eliminated from the estimates, and another grant which has been eliminated is one of $100,000 to the provinces to help in the fight against venereal disease. We have just been talking about the health of animals. While that is all right, we ought to be just as much interested in the health of the citizens of Canada. I understand the Prime Minister has said that this is a provincial matter. If that is correct it is another direct turn-about-face on the part of the government, because, speaking in this house on March 3, 1930, to a resolution with respect to extending our activities in the matter of health, the present Prime Minister had this to say:

> There is, however, a field in which the province may not, it seems to me, properly function, and that is the creation of national wealth by ensuring the health of the Canadian people. Some one has said, "A nation's health is a nation's wealth." We as a parliament are concerned in the health of the Canadian people as a whole. To the extent to which men are able to labour, free from disease, we have added to the national wealth; to the extent which citizens by studying preventive medicine obtain knowledge, from clinics and other methods, for which the nation might well pay, we have added to the national wealth of Canada.

At the conclusion of his remarks the present Prime Minister said:

> Let us approach this problem not as a problem of jurisdiction, not as a problem as to whether or not under the British North America Act, it is a matter of provincial responsibility; let us look upon it as a national problem. This parliament has the power to appropriate any part of the national revenue for any purpose for the interest of Canada as a whole. Make the appropriation not for provincial purposes, but to the provinces to carry forward a great national undertaking—the ensuring of the health and thereby the happiness and prosperity of the Canadian people.

I was wondering in view of those remarks by the Prime Minister if the Finance minister could not give us some assurance that the government will assist in carrying on this work of maintaining the health of the Canadian people by restoring the grants of $20,000 to these societies.

The CHAIRMAN: I want to call attention to the fact that we are on item No. 55.

Mr. HEENAN: My understanding was that we could ask any questions on this item.

[Mr. Heenan.]

The CHAIRMAN: Within the department.

Mr. HEENAN: The government promised to retain one item in each department, but it is quite evident that they did not retain one for this department.

Mr. RHODES: The understanding has not been violated at all, because one item was retained in each department; but finally we arrive at a point where it is necessary to pass the items if we are ever to close the session of parliament. If my hon. friend were logical in his contention we would never conclude the business of the session, because we would always have one item remaining in each department. If the committee does not object, I certainly take no exception to my hon. friend asking a question at this stage. There is no question that the cause for which my hon. friend speaks is an extremely worthy one. At the same time it is a provincial matter, but I do not think that that point would be stressed if we were in funds. As a matter of fact, we are driven to the necessity of reducing our estimates to the lowest possible point and a number of very worthy items have had to be eliminated and others materially reduced. That is the only answer I can make at the moment. If we come to better times the answer might be different.

Mr. SPENCER: I should like to take the opportunity of supporting the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River in the contentions he has made. The Minister of National Health is not in his seat, and my remarks are largely for the benefit of the Minister of Finance as he is the one who probably has more to do with cutting out this grant than anyone else. There have been two grants cut out this year, the one which the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River mentioned for the Canadian Social Hygiene Council, and the other a grant of $100,000 which from 1920 up to this year has been given to the provincial government to help fight venereal diseases. The cutting out of these grants will be a tremendous hardship to the provinces. I believe that the house generally is behind these grants. Petitions were signed largely in this house and I believe sent to the Minister of Finance, but unfortunately we have not heard what became of them. The excuse is being made that as this is a health matter it is one for the provinces to deal with. I cannot hold with that in the slightest degree. Disease cannot be confined to one province. It is certainly interprovincial. The burden on the provinces is increasing tremendously, and now they have this extra burden thrown on their hands, and less money to spend. I notice that this year we are spending $360,000 for cadet training, yet we have to cut out a vote of $100,000 to help fight venereal disease. Instead of making a speech, as I intended to do, I will put on record a short editorial, from Toronto Saturday Night, printed in its issue of May 7, 1932. It is headed Penny Wise, Pound Foolish, and reads:

It is to be feared that the federal government is pursuing a penny wise pound foolish policy with regard to expenditures in connection with public health. In its endeavours to effect small economies it is endangering the work for preventive medicine in this country, which every physician who is not an antediluvian shellback knows is the most profitable expenditure any country could make. Last year the annual grant of $20,000 for educational work by the Canadian Social Hygiene Council was dropped from the estimates and has not been reinstated this year. In addition it appears that the grants to provinces for administrative work in preventive medicine have vanished.

These grants were established in 1919 when the whole country was alarmed by the increase of venereal disease as a consequence of the war. The economic benefits of the work then instituted by the social hygiene council are demonstrated by two citations which can be paralleled all over Canada. In 1918, 12·8 per cent of all patients in Toronto General Hospital gave a positive Wasserman reaction showing the presence of syphilis. In 1929 this had decreased to 3·7 per cent. In the Toronto hospital for sick children, an incidence of five per cent, has been reduced to one per cent. So remarkable have been the beneficial results of a program originally confined to venereal disease that it has been enlarged to include toxoid immunization against diphtheria, pasteurization of milk (in centres still backward in that field), periodic health examination, mothercraft,—all calculated to save Canada millions of dollars in the future. Preventive medicine reverses the favourite and traditional policy of governments everywhere, that of locking the stable door after the horse is stolen. Conditions such as we are now suffering always increase the public danger from communicable disease. It will be a national calamity if the government permits the machinery created by the social hygiene council to fall to pieces for lack of support.

I put that on record to show what public opinion in Canada is with regard to this question. I think it is very short-sighted on the part of any government to be penny wise and pound foolish in spending money on the care of public health.

Item agreed to.

Grant to executive committee of the World's Grain Congress, $150,000.

Mr. GARDINER: Would the minister please explain the vote? Has there been any report from that congress?

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): The sum of $150,000 was the amount decided upon by the executive of the World's Grain Congress as being the amount necessary to complete the world's grain exhibition.

Mr. GARDINER: Does this refer to the grain exhibition at Regina?

Mr. MERCIER (St. Henri): Yes.

Mr. GARDINER: What is being done this year? Is the exhibition to be held?

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): Next year.

Mr. GARDINER: In view of the fact that the grain exhibition will not be held this year, why the necessity for the vote?

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): This is a vote to carry on until the time of the exhibition next year.

PUBLIC WORKS

Harbours and Rivers

Under contract—
St. John—channel improvements, $350,000.
Toronto—harbours improvements, $168,000.
Upper St. Lawrence river—channel improvements, $45,000.
Burlington channel—improvements, $50,000.
Not under contract—
Fort William and Port Arthur harbours, $21,000.—Total, $634,000.

Mr. REID: I should like to draw the attention of the Minister of Public Works to a condition existing on the Fraser river. As the condition is very serious I feel that I must take up the time of the committee, so that the minister may have the facts before him.

The port of New Westminster has been gradually developing. Last year 297 large ocean going vessels, with a net registered tonnage of almost 1,000,000 tons left the port. From that port there is shipped a considerable volume of exported goods, the lumber alone being to the extent of about 188,000,000 board feet. There was also shipped 105,039 tons of bar metal, lead and zinc, and 63,125 boxes of apples. Hon. members may be interested to know that 120,564 cases of liquor, and 23,425 cases of canned salmon left the port. The business of the port has grown considerably, and in the past ten years there has been an increase from 55 to 297 ocean going vessels.

When the estimates were under consideration last year I drew the attention of the minister to the necessity of keeping the river dredged. He said that owing to economy the dredging activities had been curtailed. Last year dredging was discontinued in the river, but as a result of my appeal to the minister by telegram it was resumed. I should like to draw his attention to the fact that I intimated last year there would be no economy in discontinuing dredging operations. At the widest point in the river the silt is still deposited, and if dredging operations are not continued at this time they will have to be, ultimately. I made that statement last year, and I must report to him now that the river has become silted, due to the dredge not having been kept constantly at work there.

During the last year the S.S. Gracia, the S.S. Moravia and the S.S. Danisterdyke were in the port of New Westminster and could not take their cargoes aboard because of the depth of water in the river at the lower end near buoy No. 26; consequently they had to make two calls at Vancouver, which necessitated doubling the expenses on the ships. I might explain to the minister that buoy No. 26 is opposite the south Steveston jetty which has just been completed, and in my opinion that jetty has been built in the wrong place. The jetty was built with a view to keeping the river clear, but at the point of location the river is about 5,000 feet wide. That means that with slack water the river is so wide that the silt is deposited. The engineer tells me it was expected the river would become narrower in time. Wherever the jetties have been built and the river narrowed it has kept clear of silt. At this point, however, it is too wide, and many years may elapse before it will become narrow enough to keep itself clear. It is too wide at this point, and we cannot look for any effect from the jetty until the river at the point where it is erected becomes as narrow as other parts of the river.

The boats to which I have referred had to make two calls at Vancouver, necessitating doubling expenses on the ships. Four hundred and twenty tons of flour could not be loaded at New Westminster and had to be transferred to Vancouver. On the week beginning May 9 the Tyndareaus, of the Blue Funnel line, which was to make her first call at the port of New Westminster, could not do so on account of the depth of water in the river, although she required only twenty-eight feet of water to get out with her load. This ship was to take 450,000 feet of cottonwood logs and two and a half million feet of lumber; also 250 tons of lead. On account of the silting up in the river the logs had to be transferred by scow to Vancouver at a cost to the ship of $450. Consequently the lumber order has been lost to the lumber mill. This is a serious matter for the port, and it also means a loss of labour to the citizens. In fact some of the mills have cut down the number of men and hours because of their inability to fulfil orders.

On May 12 the ss. Vernon City, drawing twenty-two feet three inches of water, had to spend an extra $400 on overtime to finish loading, in an effort to catch the high tide at 2.30 in the morning. May I point out that in the summer time the tide is in the early morning or during the night; in the winter time the reverse is the case; the high tide is during the day, consequently ships leaving port have to go out early in the morning. Moreover, at this point where the river is silting the river bottom is five feet higher than at the sand heads. Consequently when we have high tide, although the water may be a certain depth at the mouth, it is five feet less at the silted point. The owners intended to take out the Vernon City in the morning, as it would be clear moonlight and they thought navigation in the river would be safe. They believed the moonlight would give them light enough to see any driftwood which might interfere with the propellers. About two o'clock in the morning a heavy fog came up and sailing was impossible. For that reason they were tied up for another day, involving a further loss of between $300 and $400.

I shall now give the names of some vessels, with a description of their loads, which because of the shallow draft will not call at the port of New Westminster. First there is the ss. Stensky, which was to load 10,000 cases of liquor and 200,000 feet of lumber; secondly, the ss. Neptunian, which was to load 500,000 feet of lumber, and thirdly, the ss. Bronloy, which was to load lumber and lead. These cancellations involve a loss to the port in longshoremen's wages, and a loss in revenue to the Pacific terminal and to the lumber mills. The bookings on these ships had been made and the cargoes arranged, but owing to the condition of the river, cancellations had to be made. This condition is very detrimental to the rapidly growing port of New Westminster, which is situated on a river in which the Dominion government have spent large sums of money. This is a very serious condition indeed, and remedial steps should be taken immediately to remedy it.

On May 13, the Canadian Western Lumber Company announced that they would be compelled to work only six hours a day and four days a week, on account of the cancellation of these orders. The river is in a condition worse than it has been for some years, a condition due in great measure to the government taking off dredge No. 303. I should like to point out that the other dredge, the King Edward, is working only part time, and that although the expenditure on that dredge may continue from month to month, owing to rough weather its operations would not be continuous. If the dredges had been kept continuously at work the shallow places would have been taken care of, and shipping would have continued. The two per cent per ton charge on shipping which was passed by order in council is also very detrimental to the port, and had the effect of causing vessels to use Vancouver port instead of New Westminster. This to my mind is discrimination, and the charge should be suspended until such time as conditions on the river are safe and the river deep enough for all ocean traffic whether by day or by night.

I have received a letter from Messrs. Balfour, Guthrie & Company (Canada), Limited. I think a similar communication has also been sent to the Minister of Marine and to the Minister of Public Works. These people make very serious complaint with respect to conditions on the river. One of their ships had to make two voyages from Vancouver to New Westminster. They say:

> SS. Gracia, which arrived last week, faced the same problem, and in this connection we are having to pay diversion charges on 400 tons flour booked for loading at New Westminster in this vessel, as it was found that with this cargo on board and her draught having to be limited to 22 feet 6 inches, it would be impossible to navigate the Fraser river in safety.
> In addition to the question of draught, there is also that of the inadequate aids to navigation on the river which, in foggy weather, is often responsible for most serious and lengthy delays to vessels, even though the conditions during the course of the fog may at times permit sufficient visibility to enable a vessel to navigate the river if the channel were reasonably well provided with buoys or other suitable aids to navigation.

I will not read further because I know the committee is anxious to rise. But this is a very serious matter. Probably more silt will be deposited this year than usual due to the very heavy spring freshet. The river channel is so wide, from 4,800 to 5,000 feet, that in slack tide silt is deposited; consequently a dredge will have to be kept there all the time to maintain a clear channel. After all the expenditure made on the river it will be a lamentable condition for the port of New Westminster if traffic is to be diverted to other ports, and already several vessels have ceased calling at New Westminster in favour of the port of Vancouver. I should like to have an assurance from the minister that this very serious condition will be attended to.

Hon. H. A. STEWART (Minister of Public Works): The hon. gentleman, Mr. Chairman, told me that he proposed to discuss conditions in the Fraser river, and therefore I had an opportunity of reviewing the file and looking up the facts. I can assure him that the officials of the department are fully aware of the importance of the matter. It has been very carefully studied by the engineers and in the last few years large expenditures have been made. These are being continued, necessarily so, until the plan which was devised for the improvement of the river is completed. This plan necessitates the construction of jetties, as my hon. friend says, for the purpose of narrowing the river and controlling the flow in order to help it clear itself of the silt. These jetties are being constructed. It is hoped that when they are completed the amount of dredging which would otherwise be required will be very much decreased. I think my hon. friend agrees with that. The dredge Fruehling is being sent to endeavour to relieve the condition of which my hon. friend complains. I can only say that we fully appreciate the importance of the port of New Westminster, but the conditions are very difficult; the river carries enormous quantities of silt and, as my hon. friend says, dredging would be required almost continuously to keep the river open. The funds at our disposal have not permitted that expenditure. However, I am hoping that this year we shall be able in very large measure to relieve the condition of which he complains. We will do our best with the funds available. I will call the attention of the engineer to my hon. friend's statement and urge him to do the best he can to afford this very much needed relief.

Mr. CASGRAIN: Has an arrangement been finally arrived at by the department with Price Brothers with reference to the wharf at Baie Ste. Catherines which was to have been improved?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): No. At one time the proposition was to turn over the wharf, which is a very large one, to the dominion for a considerable sum of money. Later on an amended proposition was made for its transfer for a nominal consideration of one dollar, but the transfer would involve very heavy expenditures to make the wharf at all suitable for traffic. My hon. friend has urged the claims of this particular point for the construction of a wharf, but it would involve the expenditure of between $100,000 and $120,000, and no funds are available for the purpose. However, we are studying the location to see if some temporary relief cannot be granted.

Representations have been made in the past week, and the engineer is pursuing it along that line.

Mr. CASGRAIN: Is the department still considering improving the wharf at Shelter bay on the north shore of the St. Lawrence, or has a decision been reached?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): I have not the information here with regard to that particular proposition. There is nothing in the estimates for it this year. It has been urged for some considerable time. Again it involves a large expenditure on a new undertaking, and as my hon. friend knows, as these expenditures are made from revenue, and the revenues have been falling, the policy of the department has been not to undertake a new work except where the circumstances render it absolutely necessary. Shelter bay will not be lost sight of, and probably some day we shall be able to take care of it.

IMMIGRATION AND COLONIZATION

Soldier and General Land Settlement—amount required for soldier land settlement advances, for advances under the British family schemes recoverable from the British government, for the cost of administration of soldier settlement and general land settlement and for the cost of administration of soldier settlement staff performing investigations for the war veterans' allowance committee, $1,500,000.

Mr. SPEAKMAN: I should like to have from the minister an explanation of the lease rental system on a third share crop basis which is being put into force, not generally but in individual cases in western Canada. I have discussed this with the minister and received reasonable satisfaction, but for the sake of those in the country who are interested I would ask the minister to give an explanation of the system.

Hon. W. A. GORDON (Acting Minister of Immigration and Colonization): The soldier settlement board has endeavoured to conform to the law of the provinces and to their practice with respect to taking a third or a quarter or some other portion of the crop to apply against indebtedness. I believe Alberta has introduced and passed legislation that decreases the amount of the percentage of the crop which they will take from the settler-farmer from one-third to one-quarter, but only in areas to be prescribed by the province. So far as soldier settlement is concerned, I think it desirable that we pursue a course in conformity with the policy of the province. I think it would be unfair to have a certain class of settlers follow a course that is different from the course pursued by their neighbours, but so far as I know the province of Alberta has not proclaimed any areas.

Mr. SPEAKMAN: May I ask if the policy of signing these agreements is generally in practice, or is it followed only where the settler has fallen in arrears so far as to make his future position extremely uncertain? In other words, is this a rental system that is taking the place of an agreement for sale and permitting the man to carry on as a renter instead, or is it simply an agreement by which a maximum portion of the crop will be set as that which may be taken in payment of his annual interest and principal charges?

Mr. RHODES: Mr. Chairman, this is Wednesday, and unless we have a motion we shall not be able to sit and conclude our business this evening. That motion will have to be made while Mr. Speaker is in the chair. Therefore I move that the committee rise, report progress, and ask leave to sit again this day.

Progress reported.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

WEDNESDAY EVENING SITTING

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Prime Minister): I have refrained until the last minute from making a motion, hoping against hope that we might conclude by six o'clock. As it is now clear that we will not do so I beg to move, seconded by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Rhodes) that this house be not adjourned at six o'clock this day. Then we can resume this evening at eight o'clock and the rules prevailing will be those for Tuesday. Of course this must be done by consent.

Mr. J. S. WOODSWORTH (Winnipeg North Centre): I have no objection whatever to sitting this evening, and I presume that the business can be easily concluded before eleven o'clock, but for my part I should like to have a distinct understanding that if the business is not concluded by that hour the house will then adjourn. It seems useless to sit up all hours of the night in an attempt to finish the business. I should like to make a special plea that some consideration in these circumstances should be given the Hansard staff, who I happen to know are almost at the end of their endurance, working these long hours, morning, afternoon and evening. If it is understood that we will adjourn not later than eleven o'clock, in the regular way, I am quite willing to sit this evening.

Mr. BENNETT: I think perhaps the hon. gentleman is not aware of the fact that after passing the motion I have just made, this house cannot sit to-night beyond eleven o'clock, except by unanimous consent.

Mr. LAPOINTE: I am sure if the Hansard staff were consulted they would rather sit after eleven o'clock than come back to-morrow morning and finish the work.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I doubt that very much. If we give consent now it should be on the distinct understanding that under no circumstances shall we sit after eleven o'clock. I for one do not care to give consent without an undertaking of that kind.

Mr. BENNETT: I think the hon. gentleman has not yet realized that we cannot sit after eleven o'clock without a motion, and since that motion would have to be made by unanimous consent his objection at that moment would preclude the possibility of the house sitting beyond eleven o'clock.

Motion agreed to.

SPECIAL WAR REVENUE ACT

CONCURRENCE IN SENATE AMENDMENTS

Hon. E. N. RHODES (Minister of Finance) moved the second reading of and concurrence in amendments made by the Senate to Bill No. 102, to amend the Special War Revenue Act.

Mr. SPEAKER: Order. The time for the house to rise has not come, and hon. members are out of order in moving about the chamber and making a noise.

Mr. RHODES: This amendment reduces the tax payable on insurance premiums by outside mutuals from fifteen per cent to ten per cent. This reduction has been made in consequence of representations which were made after the bill passed this house, and the amendment was made in the Senate at our request.

Mr. HOWARD: Is the amendment acceptable to the government?

Mr. RHODES: Yes, under the circumstances.

Motion agreed to; amendments read the second time and concurred in.

FISHERIES ACT AMENDMENT

CONCURRENCE IN SENATE AMENDMENTS

Hon. ALFRED DURANLEAU (Acting Minister of Fisheries) moved the second reading of and concurrence in amendments made by the Senate to Bill No. 10, to amend the Fisheries Act.

He said: There are only two slight amendments in the phraseology; I believe there are two words added.

Motion agreed to; amendments read the second time and concurred in.

MESSAGE FROM THE GOVERNOR GENERAL'S SECRETARY

PROROGATION OF PARLIAMENT

Mr. SPEAKER: I have the honour to inform the house that I have received the following message:

Ottawa, May 25, 1932.

Sir,—

I have the honour to inform you that the Right Hon. F. A. Anglin, acting as the deputy of the governor general, will proceed to the Senate chamber on Thursday, May 26, at 11.30 a.m., for the purpose of proroguing the present session of parliament.

I have the honour to be, sir,
Your obedient servant,
James F. Crowdy,
Assistant Secretary to the Governor General.

At six o'clock the house took recess.

After Recess

The house resumed at eight o'clock.

SUPPLY

IMMIGRATION AND COLONIZATION

Soldier and General Land Settlement—amount required for soldier land settlement advances, for advances under the British family schemes recoverable from the British government, for the cost of administration of soldier settlement and general land settlement, and for the cost of administration of soldier settlement staff performing investigations for the war veterans allowance committee, $1,500,000.

Mr. SPEAKMAN: Could the minister advise whether the practice now in vogue in connection with settlers is to apply generally, or is it an exception being made of settlers who are hopelessly behind in their payments and are now practically on a rental basis instead of a purchasing basis?

Mr. GORDON: As these cases arise they are dealt with on their merits. The idea of the department is to assist the settler who is trying to get along, in the hope that he will stay on the land and make good.

Mr. SPEAKMAN: I have received a great many letters from empire and civilian settlers who find it impossible to make their principal and interest payments and they want to know if there is any prospect of their cases being taken into consideration and deductions made in the price which they are being called upon to pay. A number have asked me to request the minister to give some consideration to reducing the interest rate, eliminating the interest for a certain term or cancelling arrears of interest which have accumulated during the years they have been unable to pay. I am not going to speak at any length to-night on this matter as the minister understands the situation, but I make this plea on behalf of these men.

Mr. DONNELLY: I notice part of this grant is for advances under the British family schemes to be recoverable from the British government. Some years ago an agreement was entered into between the Canadian Pacific Railway Company and the British government to bring out a certain number of settlers to settle in a colony known as the Coal Creek colony. I understand that the British government was to look after these people for a couple of years, but for the past three years they have had crop failures and at the present time are very hard up. Will any part of this grant be used to care for the people in this colony?

Mr. GORDON: The hon. member was good enough to speak to me about the situation to which he has referred, but all I can say is that I understand the agreement was between the Canadian Pacific Railway Company and the British government or some society in Great Britain, and this government was not a party thereto. I am not acquainted with the terms of the agreement, but I shall be glad to look into the matter and advise the hon. member if in any way we are a party to the agreement.

Item agreed to.

DEPARTMENT OF LABOUR

Annuities Act, $32,000.

Mr. CASGRAIN: Is an investigation being carried on in connection with the fruit basket manufacture, and if so, has it been completed?

Mr. GORDON: The investigation in connection with fruit basket and container manufacturers is still being pursued and I expect a report thereon in a short time.

Mr. CASGRAIN: In the Citizen of May 14 there appeared an article headed as follows:

Cut Production of Canned Goods
Ontario and Quebec Cooperatives Agree to Sell at Fixed Price

There would appear to be a combine in connection with these commodities and I should like to know if an investigation is to be carried on.

Mr. GORDON: Whenever the proper steps are taken in connection with price fixing, an investigation follows. I am not acquainted with the situation to which my hon. friend refers, but if the proper steps are taken, an investigation will follow.

Mr. HEENAN: Is the minister considering the appointment of additional fair wage officers? As the minister knows, in many cases these officers act in a dual capacity. They inspect the different public works being carried on to see that fair wages are being paid, and at times they act as conciliators in wage disputes. There are very few of these officers throughout the country, and in my opinion more should be appointed. I have in mind the fact that we have very few fair wage officers throughout Canada. The minister will recall that in 1930 we passed a Fair Wages and Eight Hour Day Act which, if carried out, as I am sure the government wishes it to be, would require, in my opinion, the employment of additional men in order to see that the act is complied with. I was wondering whether the minister did not have that in mind and whether he intended appointing additional men for that work.

Mr. GORDON: If it becomes apparent that more officers are necessary in order to carry on the work to which the hon. member has referred, undoubtedly that will be done.

Mr. HEENAN: I understand a conference of provincial premiers was held here recently. I was wondering whether on that occasion the government took the opportunity to discuss the question of the establishment of an unemployment insurance system for Canada.

Mr. BENNETT: They did not.

Mr. HEENAN: And whether or not they discussed the question of the eight-hour day being made general throughout Canada.

Mr. BENNETT: They did not.

Mr. HEENAN: With respect to old age pensions, can the government or the minister give the committee any idea when they contemplate the establishment of a system of old age pensions for Canada on a national basis?

Mr. GORDON: The payment of old age pensions is, of course, determined by the laws which parliament has passed. I do not know exactly what the hon. member means when he speaks of placing the system on a national basis. The legislation now in force with respect to old age pensions is well known

Mr. HEENAN: Probably I did not express myself properly. The minister knows there is on the statute books at present a law under which the federal government offers to pay fifty per cent of the old age pension cost in connection with that paid by any province that will come in on the scheme.

Mr. BENNETT: Seventy-five per cent.

Mr. HEENAN: The original legislation was fifty per cent, and five provinces came in under that scheme. The present government increased the federal contribution to seventy-five per cent. My understanding is that even under the seventy-five per cent contribution no more provinces have taken part in the scheme, and inasmuch as the federal government promised to take it over on a national basis and pay one hundred per cent, I understand New Brunswick and Nova Scotia have passed measures accepting the old age pension scheme but have not so far proclaimed their acts, waiting for this government to take it over one hundred per cent. That was what I meant when I asked whether the government could give the committee any information as to when they proposed to pay the one hundred per cent, so that all the provinces could participate.

Mr. GORDON: The question to which the hon. member refers has been the subject of debate and comment for some years. It is quite true that the former government established the law on the basis of a contribution of fifty per cent towards old age pensions, and last year the act was amended so as to provide for a seventy-five per cent contribution. How this matter appeals to the provinces is a question pretty well for them to determine. The statute is very clear and plain. The subject is a large one and will command the attention of those who have to do with matters affecting old age pensions. That is the position as it stands at present.

Mr. HEENAN: I am not now going to argue that point further. I am wondering whether the government could tell us whether they have dropped the idea of establishing a national council for the civil service of Canada. It will be recalled that a committee of this house recommended the establishment of such a council, and in conformity with that recommendation, the government of the day passed an order in council providing for a drafting committee to draft a constitution. The order in council can be found on the file. Since that time I have not heard whether the present government intends to proceed with the matter or to drop it entirely.

Mr. BENNETT: The matter stands just where it was left by the hon. gentleman. He passed his order in council and stopped. The stop still stands.

Mr. MITCHELL: Is it the intention of the government to appoint any official advisers representing labour in connection with the forthcoming Imperial economic conference? I understand the British government are going about the business of this conference in their careful and practical way by appointing four official labour advisers from names submitted to them by the British Trades Union Congress. I understand that questions, such as migration, which vitally affect labour, may be discussed at the conference, and I should like to know the attitude of the government in that regard. I understand Australia and South Africa have taken the same step.

Mr. BENNETT: In Great Britain, prior to the formation of a national government, a Labour government was in office. A number of members of that Labour government are members of the national government, and in the formation of committees regard was had to that fact. This government will call to its assistance those capable of rendering such help on every subject on which it may require to be aided. That will include labour if labour questions are being discussed, and similarly for any other questions affecting the state. Furthermore, the committees that are dealing with the economic conference were advised that the British government intends to ask representatives of labour organizations to come in the capacity of advisers, and I believe they are coming as such. If advisers are necessary, they are always available from the ranks of labour as well as from other quarters.

Mr. MITCHELL: The question was raised by a previous speaker of the payment out of the federal treasury of the full one hundred per cent of old age pension benefits. The hon. member stated that Nova Scotia and New Brunswick had not passed measures to bring their respective provinces within the sphere of this legislation. Should, however, the federal government implement the promise it made at the last election, that would hardly be necessary, because no cost would be entailed by the provincial governments.

In connection with the eight-hour day, labour has for many years petitioned the various governments requesting that they ratify the convention of the International Labour Office ratified at Washington in 1919.

At present there is a congressional committee sitting at Washington considering the practicability of the six-hour day on the railroads of the United States. We are all agreed as to the influence of mass production in industry and the problems arising therefrom, and one of the first things the government should do at the next session of parliament is to appoint a special committee to investigate the possibility of introducing the six-hour day in this country.

Mr. BENNETT: Make it four.

Mr. MITCHELL: I think the day will come when it will be four, and there are only too many in this country who would be glad indeed to work four hours a day if they had the opportunity. I appreciate the gravity of the situation, and I have known ever since I first entered a trade an apprentice boy, the problems that are involved. I have watched the development of industry and the influence of mass production on the lives of men and women engaged in industry, and in my judgment, whether we like it or not the time is not very far distant, when the parliament of this country, in the face of absolute necessity, will have not only to recognize the convention agreed to by our delegates to the international labour office convention at Washington in 1919, but by legislation to reduce further the hours of labour in industry. I make that suggestion in view of what I think is a practical and a pressing problem, and I would like the government to take it seriously into consideration during the recess. At least a study should be made of the problem with the resources which the government have for undertaking a study of that kind. Some leadership might be given to the government of the day by the recommendations of such an investigating body. At all events it would give this country some idea as to the practicability of the introduction of such legislation.

Mr. BENNETT: Mr. Chairman, the government has not any present intention of appointing a commission for that purpose, nor can I see that there is any reason in anything that has been stated here to-night or at any other time that would warrant the government in taking any such action. It has been stated so frequently in this house on the other side, and very strongly by those with whom the hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat (Mr. Mitchell) is associated, that Canada's export business is the great matter for consideration, and that the retention of our place as an export country is of primary importance to the development of this dominion. If the hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat will explain just how a country working six hours a day is to compete in the markets of the world, on the basis suggested by himself and his friends, with a country whose workmen work eight or ten or twelve hours a day, and sometimes longer in soviet Russia, he would be doing something which no one else has yet been able to do. The question is very simple: Is Canada desirous of engaging in export business or not? If so, must she meet the competition to which I have referred? If so, can she lessen her hours of labour to six and expect to pay the same wages for a six-hour day, and compete with a country whose workmen work for half that wage and toil for ten hours a day? Notwithstanding all that has been said with respect to the willingness of men to work, my observation has been that recently in Vancouver men who were employed, led on by agitators, left their work and joined in a procession of people not desiring to work any time at all, but rather desiring to be free from work and be supported by the state. There is a tendency abroad in the world to see how little work can be done, not how much, and to see how few hours can be worked, not how many. The purpose of regulating hours of labour by the state originally was that there might be hours of leisure and opportunity for self-improvement, and that men should not be mere machines nor labour a commodity, but when the end that has thus far been reached was attained it was amazing the willingness with which some people began to contend that eight hours a day was too long and that six would be a better number of hours to labour. Some put it on the ground of mass production, some on the ground that after all, eighteen hours for sleep and enjoyment was preferable to twelve hours, and doubtless they were right; but I think it will be a long time before the parliament of Canada passes a statute fixing the six-hour day.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: The Prime Minister did not state in what countries men were working eight, or ten or twelve hours a day. As the Prime Minister I think knows, in most of the European countries the number of hours of work is rather less than the hours that are worked in some of the industries in Canada. I do not know just which the countries are to which the Prime Minister referred with which we would be in competition. Further, I regret exceedingly that the Prime Minister would seek to imply that there is any large number of men who do not want to work. I am quite aware that the present policy, which simply gives relief without requiring work and without providing work, is absolutely demoralizing. One thing that a great many of us have been urging upon the government at this session is that the policy of providing relief work in some form or another should be instituted, not merely because we believe it to be economical in the long run, although it would entail a certain amount of capital outlay, but because it is in the interests of the unemployed men themselves. The Prime Minister is inclined to scoff at the idea of a six-hour day. Under modern conditions it is not altogether unreasonable to cut down production, and that can perhaps most readily be done, as is admitted by a good many employers, by reducing the hours of labour. Figures were given in Toronto on Monday with regard to unemployment in Canada. The Minister of Trade and Commerce, of whom I asked a question, said that he thought those figures were very wide of the mark. But I must call his attention to the fact that they were given on the platform of the Canadian Political Science Association by a group of men who had been investigating this matter for some months past—Mr. H. M. Cassidy, Mr. A. G. Heakes, and Mr. G. E. Jackson, of the University of Toronto. These are capable men pursuing lines of investigation similar to those carried on in Dominion government offices, and taking their data from Dominion government reports. According to their figures, instead of a decline in unemployment there has been an increase. If their figures are anywhere near the truth they reveal a serious condition. Taking a group of eight of the largest industries—manufacturing, logging, mining, communications, transportation, construction, service and trade—they show that in March, 1932, the last month for which data is available, an average in these eight industries of 35·9 per cent of the men are unemployed. In view of the fact that over a third of the men in the main industries are unemployed, it might be well to cut down production and absorb this third in productive labour. I do not think that suggestion can be brushed aside by the assertion that a lot of men do not want to work. Without going into details, I should like to make a comparison to show where we stand so far as unemployment is concerned. These gentlemen assert that in the month of March, 1929, there were in these eight industries 262,941 unemployed. A year later, in March, 1930—and I believe that is a fair month to take—the number was 328,154. In March of this year, 1932, the number was 726,594.

Mr. BENNETT: What was it for 1931?

Mr. WOODSWORTH: The number was 513,599; I am sorry I omitted that when reading the other numbers. These figures indicate a steady increase during the last three years. Approximately the same is true of the different months of the years. I note that the census figures are taken for the month of June, and for the information of hon. members I shall give figures of unemployment for that month:

June, 1929	114,337
June, 1930	243,424
June, 1931	476,688

Mr. STEVENS: Those are figures given by the group of gentlemen to whom the hon. member has referred?

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Yes, concerning eight of the leading industries. Then, the percentages may be of interest.

Mr. CHAPLIN: Would the hon. member give us all the information on one item? Take logging, for instance.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Shall I begin with January, 1929, and go forward to each year?

Mr. CHAPLIN: No; let us have the figures for January of each year, or for March of each year, as the hon. member pleases.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: The following are the figures in the logging industry for the month of March in four consecutive years:

March, 1929	5,676
March, 1930	4,715
March, 1931	18,983
March, 1932	22,946

Mr. CHAPLIN: Yes, those figures for the whole of Canada.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Yes, for the whole of Canada, and I was about to give the percentages of unemployed in these eight industries during those four years. They are as follows:

	Per cent
March, 1929	13·7
March, 1930	16·8
March, 1931	25·8
March, 1932	35·9

Probably it would be well to give the estimates of the average number of workers unemployed in Canada from the years 1929 to 1931 inclusive.

Mr. BENNETT: I understand the figure 13.7 per cent represents the percentage of unemployed?

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Yes.

Mr. BENNETT: That is what the paper said.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Yes. I shall now give the estimated average number of workers unemployed in Canada from the years 1929 to 1931 inclusive. These are the aggregate figures concerning the eight industrial groups to which I have referred:

1929..	163,835
1930..	295,085
1931..	497,007

Then, the estimated percentages of all workers unemployed in Canada from the years 1929 to 1931 inclusive in these eight industrial groups, are as follows:

	Per cent
1929..	8·5
1930..	15·0
1931..	25·0

If desired it might be possible to place these tables on Hansard.

Mr. BENNETT: Not those tables.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: In view of these figures it does not seem unreasonable that we should ask ourselves whether or not there should be a wider distribution of work already available.

Mr. BENNETT: Mr. Chairman, I should like to say one or two words in this connection. The month of March, in the very trades mentioned by the hon. members, is in each year the month of seasonal unemployment. I have not had an opportunity to analyze the figures carefully, having seen them only recently, but if those figures are to be relied upon I am led to the following conclusion: If in March, 1929, 13·7 per cent of the logging employees were unemployed, and that percentage represents 5,676 people, and if 35·9 per cent were unemployed in March of this year, representing 22,946 people, then the number of employees has certainly kept pace with the unemployed, and there are many more people employed now than there were then. I trust the hon. member appreciates the effect of that statement, as he has just given it. He has said that in March, 1929, there were in the logging industry 5,676 unemployed, and he stated that that number constituted 13·7 per cent of those engaged in the industry. Therefore, roughly speaking, 100 per cent would be eight times the number he has given, or about 44,000 people employed in the industry in 1929. If 22,946 people were unemployed in 1932, and that number represented 35·9 per cent, it follows that over 60,000 people were employed in the industry. Therefore there was an increase of about 16,000 in the number of men who made logging their vocation or work in the year 1929; therefore the margin of unemployment was larger. It would mean that in designating their employment they indicated logging, otherwise there is something vastly out of ratio with the figures. I do not know just what they mean. I saw them roughly, but I am not going to enter into a discussion, because they will be analyzed in due course. We all know the transportation industry at the moment is greatly disorganized on account of lack of traffic, and you could get a large number of people who would say at once they were at present unemployed, although they might get two days' work a week. As I saw the report it did not indicate whether or not allowance had been made for that fact.

[Mr. Woodsworth.]

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I have not studied the figures either, having just received them. Possibly it would be of interest to the Prime Minister if I ran through the manufacturing industry for the month of June. According to this statement, in 1929 there were 6,907 unemployed; in 1930, 53,740; in 1931, 127,810.

Mr. MANION: What were the railway transportation figures for the month of March in the same years?

Mr. WOODSWORTH: For 1929, transportation, 22,994 unemployed; 1930, 29,176; 1931, 43,209; and for this year 64,099.

Mr. MANION: My recollection is that before the railway committee Sir Henry Thornton said that on the Canadian National Railways there were 20,000 fewer employees this year than in 1928. If that is so, the figure would be still lower for the Canadian Pacific. If my recollection is correct the total would be something under 40,000. Therefore the figures quoted by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre would seem to be about fifty per cent too high.

Mr. CHAPLIN: I would say the figures quoted for the logging industry are altogether astray; they are not worthy of any credence whatever.

Mr. MacINNIS: I believe these figures were prepared by the bureau of statistics.

Mr. STEVENS: No, no.

Mr. MacINNIS: Where are they from?

Mr. STEVENS: From a group of gentlemen—good estimable people no doubt—who discussed this question before the political science conference in Toronto. My information is that the bureau of statistics do not support the figures given here.

Mr. BENNETT: They certainly do not.

Mr. MacINNIS: I thought the member for Winnipeg North Centre was quoting from figures furnished him this afternoon by the Minister of Trade and Commerce.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Oh, no.

Mr. MacINNIS: I rather regret the statement made by the Prime Minister in reply to the member for East Hamilton (Mr. Mitchell) in connection with the six-hour day. It is not that I expected the Prime Minister would give any assurance that we might look for any legislation on the subject, but the implication of his remarks that there are a great many people in the country who do not wish to work is in glaring contrast with his statement in 1930, when he went all over this country directing attention to the fact that there were so many unemployed, and that all they wanted was an opportunity to work. If since 1930 the unemployed have deteriorated possibly the government is more or less responsible for this lamentable condition. The right hon. gentleman also said that the general tendency to-day was not to see how many hours we could work, but how few hours. I believe that is quite true. If it is not true, I believe we might well despair of the progress of the human race. It is rather significant, I think, that we have the unemployed at the two extreme ends of society. Those at one extreme end seem to enjoy their unemployment very much. As a matter of fact they live on the best while they are unemployed. They go to the mountains in summer and to the seaside resorts of the southern states in the winter. In short, they are well looked after—by those who work and produce.

While the government at the present time state they have no intention of bringing down legislation with respect to a six-hour day, let me say that this administration are doing many things that they had no intention of doing in 1930, and they will do many things in the next few years that they have no intention of doing this year. And still they will not be able to keep ahead of the game. We are in a fast moving world, and he is a bold person who will say what he will or will not be prepared to do in the next few years. We must never forget the fact which is drawn to our attention so often, that the situation in which we find ourselves is a world situation. Let us not forget that in the industrial world at the present time, without including India, China, Russia or Japan, there is a population of 30,000,000 unemployed. Yet we are improving our machinery every day and restricting the opportunities for work. That cannot go on without some adjustment being made in industry itself. A few days ago I read a report in the press that in Ontario men had offered to go to work for five dollars a month and their board. I do not think that is any indication that the people of this country do not wish to work. If there was any reason to suppose that such was the case I think it could be disposed of very easily by pointing out that when there is work available there is no difficulty in this or in any other country in reference to unemployment. Sooner or later the hours of labour will have to be reduced. This has never been done by legislation. When under certain conditions the workers had the power to reduce their hours of labour it has been done. Possibly some day they will come to the conclusion that if they are to get what they want they will have to organize and take the necessary measures themselves.

Mr. MITCHELL: Some time ago the Minister of Labour mentioned that the government were going to send men to Jasper park and another national park in the west to work at five dollars a month. What policy has been decided upon in this regard, and how many men are likely to be employed?

Mr. GORDON: With respect to the national parks under our control, I have no recollection of stating that we were going to hire men to work in them for five dollars a month and their board and lodging. Certainly if occasions arise where men have no employment and are going to suffer hardship, if representations are made by those more intimately concerned, such as the provinces, this government will take such appropriate action as would seem necessary in the circumstances.

Mr. MITCHELL: May I ask whether the government are still determined to employ men in these parks during the coming summer? I have had a number of communications from the west, from Calgary and Edmonton in particular, asking as to the conditions surrounding work in these parks.

Mr. GORDON: Undoubtedly men will be employed in these parks during the summer.

Mr. HEENAN: The Minister of Railways gave some figures with regard to the employment of railway men. I have some figures here taken from government reports, which I should like to give the committee. In 1929 the number of persons employed on all Canadian railways was 187,846, while in 1931 the number was 154,000, a decrease of 33,846.

Mr. MANION: The other figure was just double that. These figures agree with what I just stated.

Mr. HEENAN: These are railway figures only. It might be interesting, since railway operations are a fairly good barometer indicating the trade of the country, to give the results of the operation of Canadian railways for the two years. In 1929 the railways moved 115,187,028 tons of freight, while in 1931 they moved 73,830,000 tons, a decrease of 41,357,028 tons. The number of passengers moved in 1929 was 39,070,893, while in 1931 the number was 26,400,000, a decrease of 12,670,893. Here is a point I want the government, and especially the Minister of Railways, to realize: while the railway men had to take a ten per cent reduction in wages this year, the wages paid railway men in 1931 were $62,492,500 less than 1929.

I do not know whether or not I am quoting the same figures referred to by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre—I think he dealt with unemployment; my figures are with respect to the number employed. I have the report of the government with regard to the month of March from 1926 to 1932, covering the 7,700 firms regularly reporting to the government. The index figures as of March 1, 1926, stood at 92·6, and the figures for the following years are as follows:

1928	102·6
1929	111·4
1930	110·2
1931	100·2
1932	88·7

On a report of this kind it would be hard to figure that more persons are employed now than last year.

Mr. SPOTTON: I wonder if the hon. gentleman could give us the figure for 1492.

Mr. HEENAN: I would if the hon. member could understand it.

Mr. MITCHELL: I would like to ask the reason for the reduction of $43,000 in the appropriation for the annuities branch.

Mr. GORDON: If the hon. member would look at the supplementary estimates he would see that there is really very little reduction. I had, and still have, under review a possible reorganization of the annuities branch, but I found it impossible to carry out that reorganization during the current year.

TRADE AND COMMERCE

Mail subsidies and steamship subventions—additional amount required to provide, as authorized by the governor in council, for postal subsidies and to meet obligations under existing contracts, $82,497.50.

Mr. REID: There is a matter connected with this item to which I should like to direct the attention of the government, a matter about which I have felt very keenly for years. Perhaps I should have discussed this question when the estimates of the Minister of Trade and Commerce were under consideration, but I think it might come up here very well. In view of the fact that this government pays large subsidies to steamship companies for the carrying of mail, I think it is about time we took note of the crews employed on those ships. It is true that ships come to this country from foreign nations, and probably it would be too much to expect that Canada should interfere with them, but when we pay huge sums to Canadian companies I think we should see whom they employ. In this connection I should like to read an article which will explain the situation:

White Seamen Idle, Jobs Go To Orientals
Alleged Discrimination in B.C. Shipping
Draws Protest; 2,573 Foreigners

Aroused by widespread unemployment among white seamen while Canadian ships plying from this Canadian port have hundreds of Chinese on their payrolls, the Canadian Association of Seamen has begun a new campaign to eliminate or at least reduce the number of the orientals.

C. P. O'Donovan, secretary of the association, estimates that ocean lines, coastwise companies and tug-boat concerns operating from Vancouver employ 2,573 orientals.

And 2,000 white seafaring men, he declares, spent last winter trudging the streets of Vancouver looking for jobs.

Public bodies in Vancouver and leading members of parliament at Ottawa are being asked by the association for support.

The question has been taken up with the deputy Minister of Labour at Ottawa.

This week, Mr. Donovan said to-day, the association is appealing to Premier Bennett.

Some of the workless men were absorbed by ships recommissioned for spring service, according to Mr. O'Donovan, but the gravity of the situation as a whole he said is still shown by the records of his own association, which out of a total membership of 612 has had 410 men out of work for eight months—67 per cent unemployed, many of them married, 52 of them naval reserve men.

Despairing of getting work here, he said, 65 seamen left Vancouver this week, beating their way by freight train to the east, hoping for jobs on lake or river boats there.

These men had an average of five years' service as seamen in British Columbia.

An analysis of crew lists made by the association attributes approximately 1,995 oriental employees to one large ocean steamship line.

I am informed that this company is the Canadian Pacific steamship lines.

Another deep-sea company is credited with approximately 300 orientals of all ratings with the exception of white officers.

Altogether the analysis shows 2,573 orientals on vessels registered here and operating here, distributed as follows:

Ocean vessels	2,295
Coastwise ships	286
Tugs	82

"We don't say the companies should get rid of all these men, but we do think they should take on a percentage of white men," said Mr. O'Donovan.

"We say so of all departments, including the galley. Most of the Chinese on the coast boats and the tugs are cooks but we are prepared to supply cooks and particularly we do not see why the coast boats cannot carry three or four each.

"It is absurd to say white sailors are not dependable. The 'drunken sailor' of popular saying is just hearsay. The white seamen and firemen and oiler is a hard-working conscientious fellow in whom full confidence can be placed.

"And it isn't for our own members we are campaigning particularly. We do not care whether they belong to our association or any association so long as the men employed are white men."

For the first time in forty years the Canadian Pacific boats are being overhauled in the dry dock at Esquimalt. An editorial which appeared in one of the newspapers reads as follows:

In The Right Direction

Ever since the first white liners came out from England 40 years ago the Canadian Pacific Railway Company has given them their periodical dry docking in the orient. It was very much cheaper to employ Chinese labour on the work of refitting and reconditioning than Canadian labour.

It is still much cheaper—a considerable saving in labour costs being effected.

But the company has changed its policy in part. For their summer overhauls hereafter the Empresses will go into the big dry dock at Esquimalt instead of that at Hong Kong.

This has been made possible by wise concessions in the matter of fees on the part of the Dominion government, a bit of constructive statesmanship for which the federal administration may fairly be given reasonable credit.

But the new policy might, with advantage, be carried farther. Large numbers of orientals are employed on the Empresses. Nevertheless, this port is simply swarming with white seamen who have nothing to do. The anomaly is one that it needs but an extension of the principle already invoked to rectify. A few hundred more white seamen on Pacific liners would mean hundreds of thousands of dollars more business for Vancouver.

It may be said that the government has no right to dictate as to who shall be employed on these ships, but when $860,000 is being paid out for subsidies I think the government should at least intimate that in the interests of our own country white seamen should be given more consideration in manning these ships.

Hon. H. H. STEVENS (Minister of Trade and Commerce): It might have been more to our advantage had my hon. friend given me this information some days ago. It is well to remember that these crews largely are recruited either on the Pacific coast or in Hong Kong, the other terminal point of the service. The committee will recall that Hong Kong is a British colony and such members of the crews as are Chinese are Hong Kong citizens and British subjects. As British subjects they are entitled to employment as much as anyone else. A large proportion of these crews are white, being of Scotch and English descent. The hon. member says that the company has changed its policy with regard to the docking of its ships but it must be remembered that the government is permitting the free use of Esquimalt dockyards. Generally speaking, the overhauling of a ship is a costly proposition and this permission given by the government makes it possible to dock the ships at this end.

Mr. REID: The government is to be commended for allowing the use of that dry dock.

DEPARTMENT OF MARINE

Ocean and River Service—Radio service—further amount required, $500,000.

Hon. ALFRED DURANLEAU (Minister of Marine): Mr. Chairman, I think I should say a word or two of explanation with respect to certain statements made yesterday by the hon. member for North Waterloo (Mr. Euler). The hon. member stated that a certain station on the border—I assume he meant the radio station at Windsor—was entirely under American control and that the whole purpose of the station was to broadcast in the vicinity of one large American city. The hon. member stated that he was informed that one of the new channels which we were so glad to obtain instead of being used for Canadians was being used for the benefit of Americans. I take exception to that statement. I think the hon. member was entirely mistaken. The licence for this station was first issued to Mr. Campbell and Mr. Morgan-Dean of Windsor, the application for licence stating that a company would be incorporated and the licence would be transferred thereto. In November, 1931, that company was incorporated under the laws of Canada by the Secretary of State, and I notice that the directorate is as follows:

Malcolm G. Campbell, Sandwich, Ont.
William F. Morgan-Sean, Windsor, Ont.
William R. Woollatt, Walkerville, Ont.
J. W. Brien, Essex, Ont.
Malcolm S. Clapp, Tecumseh, Ont.
L. R. McDonald, Windsor, Ont.
Leon Lalonde, Windsor, Ont.

As far as the department is aware, the company is a bona fide Canadian company and is under Canadian control. There is no thought that it is going to be operated in a manner detrimental to Canadian interests, and should such prove to be the case, the committee may rest assured that the licensee will be promptly checked up and if necessary the licence will be cancelled. With regard to the station selling some of its time to United States advertisers, there is no regulation forbidding this practice. A similar practice has been followed for some years by two stations in Toronto, the Rogers-Majestic (CFRB) and Gooderham and Worts (CKGW), and also by the Canadian Marconi Company (CFCF), and La Presse (CKAC) of Montreal. As far as the department is aware there is nothing happening as was stated by the hon. member for North Waterloo.

Mr. CARDIN: How many hours a day does the Windsor station broadcast the programs of the Columbia broadcasting system?

Mr. DURANLEAU: I cannot say, because these statements were made only yesterday and I have had no time to inquire. However, I can say that there is no regulation prohibiting the granting of time to an organization like the Columbia broadcasting system. If it was brought to the attention of the department that practically the whole time of this station was being leased to American companies for the advertising of American goods in Canada, the department would take the necessary steps to see that such a practice did not continue. My hon. friend is aware of the legislation adopted by this house to bring into being a radio commission. This commission will have control of all stations in Canada, including the one at Windsor, and the leasing of hours to different advertising companies will be controlled and regulated.

Mr. CARDIN: In justice to the hon. member for North Waterloo (Mr. Euler) I must say that his statement was based upon information which had been given to him. He was informed that the case he cited was a fact. In the information which came to him it was stated that one of the new channels obtained from the United States had been given to this station. Is that so?

Mr. DURANLEAU: As was stated by the hon. member for East Essex last night, the channel which was allotted to the Windsor radio station is channel 540. That channel has been used by Canadian stations since 1928; it was not a new channel for Canada. It was allotted in 1928 to Brandon, Manitoba. Some months ago the latter was transferred to shared channel 930, and channel 540 being available, it was assigned to Windsor. I am told it is a very good channel and they are well satisfied with it.

Mr. GARDINER: Has the minister any information as to the amount of capital invested in this particular broadcasting station and who are the owners of the capital? If I properly understood the hon. member for North Waterloo, I believe he stated that while there were Canadian members on the board, the bulk of the capital was held or subscribed for in the United States.

Mr. DURANLEAU: We have not the actual information on that point. All that concerns my department is that the company which is operating that station is one incorporated under our laws, and so long as it conforms with the laws of this country and the regulations of our department, I do not think we should be concerned with the amount of United States or other foreign capital invested in the company.

Mr. GARDINER: Can the minister give any explanation as to the various items that go to make up this amount of $500,000 for radio service?

Mr. DURANLEAU: At the present time there are no details covering that amount. It will be used to give a better service to Canadian listeners and will also be used by the new commission. It will be derived from licence fees.

Mr. GARDINER: Under those conditions it is not possible to estimate the detailed amounts.

Mr. DURANLEAU: That would be hard to tell at this time. The program is not yet completed.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

Geneva—Canada's contribution to the expenses of the League of Nations for 1932, including secretariat, International Labour organization and Permanent Court of International Justice, $220,613.94.

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Prime Minister): This item stood in order that if any hon. members so desired, they might mention the work of the League of Nations. I fancy, since the item stood, the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre has read in the press what he was asking me about at that time, but if he wishes to ask any questions I shall endeavour to answer.

Mr. RALSTON: On this item might I say a word with regard to the negotiations which I understand are now going on with the United States with regard to a possible treaty, the terms of which I believe will be laid on the table of the house after the treaty has been passed, at least by the executive. Naturally one cannot discuss it fully, because in the early days of the session the Prime Minister indicated that instead of a discussion on any resolution on which a treaty might be founded, the intention was that the treaty itself should be approved and signed by the executive, and later submitted to parliament.

But I cannot let this opportunity pass without reminding the government that in connection with negotiations with the United States there are many matters which I at least think—and I am speaking personally and as the representative of my constituency—should not be lost sight of when questions affecting those two countries are being considered. I am not one of those who understand why a St. Lawrence waterway treaty has to be gone on with just at this stage. I do not understand what the rush is. I do not understand why the expenditure of any large amount of money should have to be made just now, neither do I understand why a suggestion is on foot which is bound, to some extent at any rate, to provide competition in regard to traffic for our railways, which are already hard pressed. I know this: if my right hon. friend were on this side of the house and we were on that, a suggestion at the present time for a treaty with the United States with regard to the St. Lawrence waterway would immediately be met in the press which supports my right hon. friend and by him with very severe criticism and the intimation that we were being entirely dominated by the country to the south of us and that we were being ruled, as the expression went in 1911, by Uncle Sam. It seems, however, that my right hon. friend feels he can freely conduct negotiations which were supposed to be quite beyond the pale when we were in power.

Mr. BENNETT: Can the hon. gentleman show me anything which declared that they were beyond the pale?

Mr. RALSTON: The 1911 reciprocity campaign was based upon the fact that we were being swallowed up by the United States, becoming the adjunct of that country, and that there should be no truck or trade with the Yankees. Not very long ago ministers opposite intimated in the house that the reason for the urgent necessity for the St. Lawrence waterway treaty was that if we did not conclude it now, we might forever lose the chance, because the United States were discussing the project of a waterway from Oswego to Albany. The apprehensions in regard to that suggestion have been exploded by the press and I do not propose to discuss it to-night.

I do not see why a treaty should be proceeded with at this time; but if it is—and we have this only from newspaper reports and from what the right hon. gentleman has said to-day—I submit there is an opportunity for the government to come to some arrangement and understanding with regard to matters which are certainly creating very great difficulties for the primary producers in this country. I refer for one thing to what has been called the modus vivendi, that is the use of our ports by United States fishermen and the use of their ports by our fishermen. For many years we afforded those privileges to United States fishermen and we received no reciprocation from them. We continued to afford those privileges in the hope that some day the United States would grant us similar privileges in return. Instead of that, what we got was a very sharp increase in duty on fish and on the products which our fishermen produced. As a result we considered that patience had ceased to be a virtue and we withdrew those privileges. The result is a situation which is, I think, mutually disadvantageous, at least in some respects. I believe that this matter should be taken up with the United States authorities. There is also now being discussed in the United States the matter of a further restriction on the importation of live lobsters from Canada by the imposition of a size limit. Greatest of all, there is an opportunity of a market in the United States for the export of our fish, which market would afford a profitable outlet, and that market is very largely restricted because of high tariffs against our fish. Our friends from the west are in about the same situation regarding their cattle; their exports to the United States are seriously restricted by reason of the high tariff of the United States. I am going to submit—perhaps it may be regarded as having nothing to do with the waterway treaty—that if we are in extremis and have to give concessions to the United States, it is at least fair that we should discuss with them these matters which are giving difficulty to the people in the east and in the west. Therefore, I ask my right hon. friend when he is conducting these negotiations to keep these matters in mind and to realize that a very fine stroke can be done for the primary producers in Nova Scotia, and no injury done to the consumers in the United States, if in connection with any arrangement which is made, and which he proposes to submit to parliament, the interests of the fishing industry in connection with these matters are protected.

Mr. BENNETT: I suppose, Mr. Chairman, I should make at least a few observations in answer to what my hon. friend has said. When this government came into power it found that negotiations had been initiated by its predecessors for a treaty between the United States and Canada with relation to the deep waterway to the sea. It will be recalled that despatches were sent by this government to the government of the United States, and by the government of the United States to the Canadian government. There then intervened a discussion as to the position of Canada on the one hand and the provinces on the other with respect to the ownership, if I may use that broad term, of the water in the national section of the St. Lawrence river, and on the Ontario side of the international section. The matter had been in abeyance for some time after the decision of the supreme court. When this government came into power it was again taken up just where it had been left off, and negotiations are proceeding as I indicated this afternoon.

To precede treaty negotiations with a resolution would seem to be somewhat difficult, and to talk about a treaty being submitted to the house for approval before it is signed suggests a negation of the use of the word "treaty" itself. This the hon. gentleman, as a skilled lawyer, well knows.

So far as the bargain is concerned, a treaty is a contract between states; it is a question not of concession but of agreeing upon terms. If concessions are granted or not granted, they are the subject matter of the bargain or contract or agreement between the parties, and it would be premature indeed to undertake in any sense a discussion of what might be involved in the agreement between the parties to the contract that we call a treaty.

So far as the other matters to which the hon. member has referred are concerned, it is obvious from the terms of the despatch that was sent by the Canadian government—not the present government—to the American government, in which reference was made to the effect of American fiscal policies upon the production and distribution of Canadian products, that it was in the mind of the then executive that the matter should be considered. But the reply indicated that, after all, the making of a contract with respect to the use of water which constitutes the international boundary between the two countries—the only necessity for a treaty being the fact that it is an international body of water, the state of New York affected on the one side and the province of Ontario on the other—is not the appropriate occasion to discuss the questions to which the hon. gentleman has just now referred. If he says that there was any attack against the late administration because negotiations had been initiated, I think he is not speaking by the book. I gathered from what he said subsequently that what he had reference to was the observations made at that time by Canadians on both sides of politics with respect to the reciprocity agreement of 1911. It will be recalled that the terms he used were employed not only by Canadians but by Americans of high repute. I daresay he remembers the jocular observation of a former president of the United States in that regard, speaking at a great gathering in this country, and the equally, shall I say, pregnant observations of one of his opponents, who, as it subsequently developed, did not intend them to be taken too seriously, but which were taken very seriously by Canadians in various parts of the country. I daresay the hon. gentleman will also recall what I have so frequently said, and said at that time with as much strength and vigour as I could that the difficulty lies in developing between two countries a channel of trade that is subject to interruption or destruction without the interests of the one being considered by the other. That a channel of trade which has been established should, after a country has got into the habit of carrying forward its trade through that channel, be subject to destruction without reference at all to the interests of the other party is something which I have always condemned and I still think is injurious to the welfare of any country. A fair bargain on trade matters which gives benefits to both on terms that prevent the possibility of injury if the agreement lapses by the effluxion of time or after reasonable notice has been given, is an altogether different matter, and one about which I think the hon. gentleman and myself entertain no great difference of opinion. I feel quite satisfied that if, as and when any agreement is arrived at in the form of a treaty between the United States and Canada, it will be on such terms as will not involve this country in such capital expenditures as those to which the hon. gentleman refers, or involve us in the acceptance of obligations in any sense out of keeping with the benefits that will accrue to us.

Mr. RALSTON: What I feel about my right hon. friend's reply is this. He suggests that it is premature to discuss this matter before a treaty is made. My point is that it is not premature for us as one party to the contract to discuss between ourselves what might be fair and proper matters of consideration in connection with what my right hon. friend is pleased to term the bargain. My contention is, and since I have made it I do not think I should take up any further time of the committee, that when my right hon. friend is talking of mutual benefits, one of the benefits that might well accrue to us is a benefit with regard to these matters of which I have spoken, namely, the matter of entry for our products into the United States. As he has stated, the matter of fiscal policies had already been mentioned to the United States in correspondence by the previous government, and I regret that the answer seems to have discouraged my right hon. friend entirely from pursuing the matter further. I hope that that will not be so, and that when the time comes to get down to grips and discuss these matters which will be of benefit to us in return for the known benefits we will be conferring upon the other party to the bargain, the matters I have spoken of will not be overlooked.

Mr. BENNETT: I do not desire, in view of the lateness of the hour, to take up the time of the committee. I think the observations of the hon. gentleman as to the perfect propriety of offering suggestions as to what the government should keep in mind in considering the negotiation of a contract or agreement with another state are quite sound, and I do not wish for a single moment to have him think that I did not so regard them. But to contemplate the discussion of the terms of a prospective treaty is an entirely different thing, and I think my hon. friend will agree that there is a vast distinction between the two.

So far as the waterway itself is concerned, the hon. gentleman has an entirely erroneous opinion if he suggests that the benefits to be conferred are benefits to one country, and that country not our own; for it is fairly reasonably established by engineers that certain benefits might accrue to either country, without uniting their forces for the purpose of securing common benefits, because the waterway extends from lake Superior to the sea. The benefits common to the United States and Canada are covered by the terms of a treaty ensuring to both countries the free use of the waterway itself under conditions that are well understood and appreciated. It means merely the overcoming of rapids by the construction of canals and locks, thus rendering possible a continuous voyage from the lakes to the sea rather than one broken by rapids and shoals. So if the observation suggested that there were benefits to be conferred upon one party and not upon another, it was not fair.

Mr. RALSTON: That continuous seaway exists now.

Mr. BENNETT: But not for sufficient depth.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Mr. Chairman, it is unfortunate that questions relative to our imperial or external relations are so often left until the last days of the session, a time when most members are tired and impatient to get away. In the dying hours of the session we have a very inadequate opportunity of entering into full discussion. Some hon. members seem to regard foreign affairs as so remote from us as to have no immediate concern for the majority of our people. I need hardly remind the committee, however, that to-day we are struggling with debts, pensions and all sorts of post-war troubles which came to us because of our entry into world affairs in 1914, and if in the years to come we are to avoid a similar if not a greater catastrophe we ought to be alert to the necessity of taking a more active interest in world affairs.

When, on April 7, the item concerning Canada's contribution to the expense of the League of Nations for the year 1932 came before the committee, I asked the Prime Minister a question concerning conditions in the far east, in Manchuria. His reply at that time was as follows:

> I did not think it would be wise, and I certainly accept the responsibility for having so advised our delegates, that we should endeavour, with the slight knowledge that we possess as compared with those who are constantly in touch with the situation at Geneva, and those who are responsible for the investigations in Manchuria, either to blame or praise this country or the other in connection with matters so serious as those involved in the then differences between Japan and China.

I can hardly accept the attitude of the Prime Minister as outlined in that paragraph. He seems to take for granted that the League of Nations is something apart from ourselves, something that has a more or less independent existence, and that we must stand aside and wait until the league takes action. When we come to consider the matter we must recognize that, after all, the league is only a sort of forum; it is an exchange. It cannot have a life apart from that of its members; it cannot make decisions apart from the decisions of its members. We must bear in mind that we are an integral part of the league. It may be that Canada, in the size of its population, is not a great nation. I submit, however, that we are sufficiently important and have held a sufficiently responsible place in the league, being for a time a member of the council, not to adopt the attitude of a junior partner or, if I may use a parliamentary term, a back bencher. In the person of Doctor Riddell, Canada has a representative at Geneva. We are in as good a position as any other nation to keep in touch with what is going on in the league, and it seems to me we should make up our own minds with regard to our attitude on the various events which from time to time come before the council or the assembly. I do not think we can be true to our responsibilities under the treaty unless we follow that course.

I had intended to refer hon. members to some clauses in the treaty, but at this stage of the session I shall content myself by giving a very brief summary concerning our international commitments. This I find in the issue of the Canadian Forum for the month of March, 1932, and to save time I shall read the following:

By the league covenant every member binds itself to respect and preserve as against external aggression the territorial integrity and existing political independence of all members of the league. If disputes arise between members which are likely to lead to a rupture, they promise to submit the matter to arbitration or judicial settlement or to inquiry by the council; and they agree in no case to resort to war until three months after the award by the arbitrators or the judicial decision or the report by the council. Should any member of the league resort to war in disregard of its covenants it shall ipso facto be deemed to have committed an act of war against all other members of the league who undertake immediately to subject it to the severance of all trade and financial relation.

Those are very concrete and definite responsibilities. I know the statement may be made that Japan did not resort to war. Technically that may be so, but to all intents and purposes it was a war, and the most offensive kind of war—and I use the word "offensive" in a double sense. It was an unjustifiable resort to force. Yet we, following the example of a majority of the members of the league, remained very largely quiescent. I continue with the quotation:

By the nine-power Washington treaty of 1922 (signed by Sir Robert Borden for the Dominion of Canada) each of the contracting powers agrees to respect the sovereignty, the independence, and the territorial and administrative integrity of China; to provide the fullest and most unembarrassed opportunity to China to develop and maintain for herself an effective and stable government; to maintain the open door in China, and to refrain from taking advantage of conditions there in order to seek special rights or privileges for itself. And they also agree to full and frank communication among them if a situation arises which, in the opinion of any one of them, involves the application of the stipulations of this treaty.

If I understand correctly, the United States was willing to intervene, and did make a very effective protest against the action of Japan in China. It seems to me that this country might very well have joined the United States in making a strong protest, but we remained silent. We are sometimes told that Canada might perform a very useful function in seeking to interpret for Great Britain the opinions of the United States. In this particular instance we gave no lead whatever, abstained from action, and waited until somebody else came to a decision. I read on:

By the Kellogg Pact of 1928 (signed on behalf of Canada by Mr. Mackenzie King) the high contracting parties solemnly declare that they condemn recourse to war for the solution of international controversies and renounce it as an instrument of national policy. They agree that the settlement of all disputes of whatever nature which may arise among them shall never be sought except by pacific means.

Japan, as well as Canada, was a signatory to that treaty, and yet Japan openly and flagrantly did resort to other than pacific means for the settlement of a dispute between herself and China. If I may be permitted to read—for I should like to bring to the attention of the house the opinions of some of those who are in a position to judge with regard to these matters—Mr. Norman Angell's article in Foreign Affairs, for April 2nd. He writes;

Whether Japan has been wronged by China is not the issue. The issue is whether Japan shall be the judge in the case; alone entitled to decide what measures shall be taken to vindicate her rights; entitled to use her power as she sees fit; to be litigant, judge, executioner of the judgment, all in one.

He goes on to say the basic principles of the league are as follows:

That frontiers cannot be modified by force at the will of one interested member of the community; that a threat to peace occasioned by such defiance of the law is the concern of all nations; and that all are under obligation to cooperate to restrain such illegality.

My feeling is that in the last few months Canada has not taken that stand which she might have taken under these international committees.

Mr. BENNETT: Might I ask the hon. gentleman does he consider Canada has any armed force with which to carry out the sanctions that are involved?

Mr. WOODSWORTH: We might have used certain sanctions. I am well aware that economic sanctions in the far east have been regarded by Japan as equivalent to war. I do not know, however, that that is generally recognized in international affairs, and I think there could have been certain economic sanctions taken that would not have involved war. But we did not propose to take those sanctions, we did not even make any strong protest in the matter. There is my point. I am not saying whether Canada acting alone could have taken any economic sanction, but I think we might very well have joined with other nations in taking such sanction, and in that case I do not think a general war would have been precipitated. But I would point out that through our inactivity we are laying the foundation for a war in the future. There is not much doubt that Japan has ulterior designs in Manchuria. One of her great generals said not long ago that the frontier of Japan was the western boundary of Manchuria. That boundary is Russia. We cannot ignore the very delicate situation that will prevail when Japan faces Russia. I think it is generally recognized that under these conditions Russia has behaved admirably, that she has refused to be drawn into war—not that I am imagining that she is doing that through any altruistic motive, not at all, but I believe probably she is not ready for war and will bide her opportunity. Probably she needs time to consolidate her position.

Mr. BAKER: Do you know all about it?

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I do not, but I would tell the hon. gentleman that I have tried to read what some people have said in regard to the matter, and what he will find in almost any reputable journal of international affairs to-day.

Mr. BAKER: I rather think you know all about Russian affairs.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: No. My point is the danger of neglect by the European nations may lead to the precipitation of a war between Japan and China, and I have said that so far it seems to me that Russia has avoided that conflict. I will not say whether or not we have been rather abetting Russia in this matter, for unless I mistake, some of that grain which was shipped recently from Canada to Russia would in case of conflict be used to feed Russian troops.

Mr. BAKER: If the hon. member would tell us all he knows about it, it might help us.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I am trying my best to tell all I know about it, because I have nothing to conceal in the matter.

Mr. BAKER: I hope not.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Nothing whatever.

Mr. BAKER: I doubt it.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: The gentleman may doubt as much as he pleases. It is an astonishing thing that one can hardly talk in this house about international affairs and come within range of certain countries without some hon. gentlemen becoming rather hysterical.

Mr. BAKER: I am not hysterical.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I hope, Mr. Chairman, that we may have order for a few minutes. I will not weary the house but, I have waited months in the hope that we would have some suitable occasion to present certain matters relating to the international situation. As I have said, it seems to me that the European nations at Geneva through their activities are opening the way to still further trouble in the east. I know that at the present moment it would seem as if the situation has been somewhat bettered. It would appear as if the pressure of the League of Nations has led to the withdrawal of Japan from Shanghai. But Japan still appears to have her ambitions in Manchuria, and that would involve the destruction of the territorial integrity of China, which we have pledged ourselves to preserve. I desire to read a few paragraphs from an appeal from the Chinese government—a statement communicated by the Chinese delegation in conformity with article 15, paragraph 2, of the covenant of the League of Nations:

> The gravity of the issue thus presented can hardly be exaggerated. A great country with a population of approximately 400,000,000 inhabitants is here virtually staking its national existence on the practical application and enforcement of the league's covenant. The supreme test of the effectiveness of the league in a capital emergency is at hand.

Again:

> That Japan launched the attack, that her armed forces have relentlessly advanced for nearly five months, and that they are now in occupation of a vast extent of Chinese territory in two widely separated parts of the country cannot be controverted. A formidable invasion with all the terrible concomitants of war has taken place and is going on. The scale of the operation and the period of time over which it has persisted have removed all possibility of characterising it as casual or incidental.
> Article 10, the very corner-stone of the covenant, is being shattered. That article reads:

"The members of the league undertake to respect and preserve as against external aggression the territorial integrity and existing political independence of all members of the league. In case of any such aggression or in case of any threat or danger of such aggression, the council shall advise upon the means by which this obligation shall be fulfilled."

Japan is a member of the League of Nations solely by virtue of the fact that she has acceded "without reservation" to this as well as the other articles.

China points to the forcible occupation of 200,000 square miles of her territory, to the attack on Shanghai, to the bombing of Nanking, her capital, and to numerous other specific acts of armed violence as constituting external aggression (and not merely the threat or danger of it) against her territorial integrity and political independence in plain violation of article 10. The proposition appears so axiomatic as not to fall within the domain of argument.

One other brief paragraph:

The basic feature of Japan's plea which calls for notice at this point is the extraordinary contention that the sending of an army to take forcible possession of the territory of a foreign state is divested of all aggressive import if the invading power issues a simple disclaimer of permanent territorial ambitions and of any intention to stay longer than seems to itself necessary. This position cannot be ignored because it strikes at the root of the whole matter. The league must either reject the Japanese contention or write its covenant down to a pious declaration that aggression depends upon the self-asserted state of mind of the aggressor, thus converting the covenant from a guarantee of peace into an invitation to war.

The case of China is convincingly presented. The conclusion is incontrovertible. I ask, then, that Canada, a nation of course far removed from the immediate scene of action, a nation that, as I have said, is small in numbers but is yet a part of the powerful British Empire, and a nation standing side by side with the American republic, should take a more active part than it has taken in matters of this kind.

The league may be said to be on trial. A great many people believe the league offers no guarantee of peace, and some regard it as an impracticable sort of organization. I spent a month at Geneva last year at the time of the meeting of the assembly, when I had the honour to be a temporary collaborator in the league. One cannot sit day after day watching the sessions of the league without feeling on the one hand that in the present situation it is next to impossible for the league to do any real work in the larger matters that affect the world. An enormous amount of good work is being done in minor matters, but when it comes to affairs that affect the greater nations of the world, undoubtedly the league seems almost impotent.

[Mr. Woodsworth.]

Yet on the other hand one could not be there even for a month without realizing that there were wonderful possibilities in this organization. The very fact that men gathered around a common table to discuss matters instead of immediately flying to arms is a very great advance. I think even in the case of China and Japan the very fact that the matter was brought to the league and there discussed was a considerable advance over what would have been possible in the past. But I submit that the future of the league and of international peace demands that we all become more actively conscious of and more definitely interested in international affairs. It may be that the league as now constituted will disappear in time, but I do urge that to-day we cannot get along without some sort of world court and world council —I almost said world parliament. At present we are dreadfully afraid of surrendering our sovereignty to any central body; in the last resort we, as nations, reserve the right to decide things for ourselves. After the great war the machinery of the league was set up in the hope that we might avoid another great catastrophe. I submit, however, that if that catastrophe is to be avoided we must be true to the principles of the league and must be more active in our interest in it, and we must assume a larger responsibility than we have done in the past.

I would urge upon the Prime Minister and the government that they should not be too hesitant in instructing delegations to go just as far as possible in carrying out the obligations which we have assumed under the treaty.

Mr. BENNETT: I assume the hon. gentleman expects me to make a very few observations on this matter, because I would not want my hon. friend to charge the government with any effort to prevent the fullest and freest discussion of the League of Nations. I am conscious of the fact that many people are convinced that the League of Nations has failed, to some extent, at a critical time to discharge the responsibilities which were expected of it. On the other hand, I am free to say that as I read the documents I cannot see that the League of Nations could have done very much other than it did do, under the circumstances which then existed.

We have to ask ourselves this simple question: If there had been no league of nations what would have happened? It seems to me that the test is not whether the league has accomplished all that we expected it to accomplish; rather we should ask ourselves whether or not it has accomplished something that has prevented another great conflict. I believe that had it not been for the League of Nations there would have been a very serious war in the far east, and to the extent to which this body, set up by almost universal consent, functioning it is true under great difficulties, has been able to prevent the outbreak of a great war, it is entitled to the sincere thanks of every peace loving man in the world. I measure its worth not entirely by what it has done but also by what it has prevented being done, and I think that is not an unfair test to impose upon an organization of that kind.

On the last occasion on which we discussed the Manchurian situation I ventured to point out to my hon. friend that at that moment a meeting of the assembly of the League of Nations had been called. Those who are familiar with the attitude of deliberate assemblies will agree that if a crisis arises the executive may not always function without the authority of the assembly behind it as successfully as otherwise would be the case. The executive, acting upon the request of China, immediately convened the assembly, which met on March 3, 1932. When that assembly met we had a full and complete representation of the whole League of Nations for the purpose of determining what future action should be taken, and also to prevent, so far as possible, the continuance of preparations for hostilities, if I may use that word in a broad and comprehensive rather than in a narrow sense. At that meeting of the assembly Canada was represented by one of its elder statesmen, Right Hon. Sir George Perley, who has had a very considerable experience in attending gatherings of this kind. If I am not trespassing too much upon the time of the committee I should like to read just a few sentences from what Sir George Perley said on March 8 last, as indicating the attitude of Canada towards the problems then under consideration. He said:

> During the last twelve years the world has been endeavouring to build up, through the league, a system of outlawing war and settling disputes by reason rather than by force. The way in which this assembly deals with the question before it will go far to show how successful we have been in this effort. Certainly, if the assembly meets satisfactorily the test which now confronts it, it will mean a long step forward in the realization of the league ideal.
> To the Canadian delegation it seems that the work of the assembly must be based primarily upon the following considerations:
> (1) We should stop further bloodshed and bring about a real and effective armistice.
>
> (2) We should distinguish between the rights of a case and the maner in which those rights are realized and enforced.
> (3) We should affirm as solemnly as possible the fundamental truth that no infringement of the territorial integrity, and no change in the political independence, of any member of the League of Nations which is brought about by force in disregard of the undertakings of article 10 of the covenant can be recognized as valid and effective by the other members of the league.
> We believe that this assembly, the instrument through which the common concern of mankind for the maintenance of peace can find expression and make itself felt, should proceed in its work with the above considerations always in view. We hope that by so doing it will arrive at a solution of the difficulties before it, which will be just, peaceful and permanent.

I do not think any good purpose would be served by reading further from that admirable address. On March 11, at the close of the discussion, a resolution was unanimously adopted with which I will not trouble the committee. But while it did deal in carefully measured terms with the whole situation in a manner perhaps not wholly in accord with what my hon. friend suggests, nevertheless I believe its influence was very far-reaching. The resolution asserts the juridical competence of the league to deal with the Chinese-Japanese dispute, recalls the obligations assumed by the parties to the dispute as members of the league and signatories of the Paris pact for the renunciation of war, affirms the binding nature of the principles and provisions of these instruments and declares:

> That it is incumbent upon the members of the League of Nations not to recognize any situation, treaty or agreement, which may be brought about by means contrary to the covenant of the League of Nations, or to the pact of Paris.

Without reading the lengthier resolution I have beside me, which resulted ultimately in the agreement executed by China and Japan by which the armistice came into effect, I think it would serve all useful purposes if I made merely one observation. A gentleman who has had much experience in attending the meetings of the League of Nations indicated this thought to me not long ago: It has always been the case that the representatives of smaller nations or states have made speeches, sometimes of considerable length and of great vigour, while the older, more powerful, and shall I say experienced nations, have remained silent because they recognize that there is a tremendous responsibility in matters of this kind. When committees are set up, when discussions take place across the table and resolutions are arrived at, then the real work is completed. In this instance the lengthy resolution I have mentioned, the sense of which is indicated by the second paragraph just read, had in my judgment a profound effect in influencing the conduct of both China and Japan. I do not believe it is doing justice to either party for any one of us to express a decided opinion as to the merits of the case now under review by a commission headed by the British statesman Earl Lytton. This commission is attempting to determine all the circumstances antecedent to the recent outbreak, including the terms of the treaty between China and Japan and the methods on the one hand, by which it is contended provocation was given and, on the other, by which defence of national rights was set up. I am not prepared to express an opinion with respect to it. It may well be that there is much more than can be readily seen in a matter of this kind, involving as it does, treaties, the consideration of local conditions, and all the surrounding circumstances. So little were the parties, removed, as they were in Geneva, from the sphere of activities, able to pass upon it that they set up a commission to make an investigation on the ground. One Canadian, a gentleman with much experience in connection with railways, was attached to the commission at the instance of Sir Eric Drummond, the secretary general of the league. That commission is now carrying on its duties. I for one, despite what the hon. gentleman has just said—in my opinion this indicates the conclusions arrived at by one school of thought as distinguished from another—am not prepared to express any settled conviction upon the question except this: Any recourse to arms involving bloodshed is, in my opinion, at variance with the terms of the provisions of the covenant of the league as well as of the pact of Paris.

When I am asked, as each one of us is asked, why this country did not take a more leading part in the matter, I think all I have to do is to refer to the terms of the league itself, to examine the sanctions which are provided and to ask myself this question: Would you in a position of responsibility accept what is involved in endeavouring to put these sanctions into force against either China or Japan? For my own part, I confess I would not. I would be content to pursue the course which I believe commends itself to the thoughtful statesmen of the world who have had wide experience, where I have had none. Happily the representatives of this dominion, being in Geneva at the time in connection with another matter, were able to attend these meetings. I believe that the extracts which I have just read from the statements made on March 8 last by the Right Hon. Sir George Perley to the assembly of the League of Nations in Geneva represent the convictions, the hopes and aspirations of the Canadian people with respect to the success of the great experiment embodied in the setting up of the League of Nations.

I fear at times when I contemplate the work of the league that there is great danger of its efforts failing, not because it has not striven earnestly but because there is sometimes on the part of critical persons an inclination to expect it to be able to produce the millennium just as the magician produces a rabbit out of a hat. There is no such power given to any sons of man, whether they be the League of Nations or any other league in the world. These representatives, the governors and the executive council, I believe have striven as earnestly as men ever have striven in the history of Christendom to do a constructive work for the preservation of the world's peace. I always get back to this thought—and it has the effect of making me think well rather than ill of the work this organization is acomplishing: what would have happened had we not had this world organization to which to appeal to create a public opinion, limited to no one country but extended to all, favourable to the outlawry of war, and to prevent aggression by one nation against another, no matter how great might be the provocation?

Item agreed to.

MISCELLANEOUS

To provide for expenses in connection with the Imperial economic conference, $250,000.

Mr. IRVINE: Mr. Chairman, I had hoped that I would have had the opportunity of offering some extended observations on the approaching economic conference, but obviously at this time of night, when we are attempting to finish the business of the committee before eleven o'clock, it will be impossible for me even to attempt to cover the ground I had intended to cover. However, when this subject was last before the house for discussion an opportunity did not offer to any hon. member in this corner of the house to express an opinion on the matter, so perhaps I may take a few moments, even at this late hour, to say that we in this corner have hopes of some results from the Imperial economic conference. We realize that the people of Canada have great expectations of this conference; that, in fact, the hope of the nation is centred upon it, and that even if it were as successful as we hope it will be, there is bound to be considerable disappointment, for it is scarcely probable that there will emerge immediately any definite, recognizable economic benefits to be extended over the wide area represented by those who will be present at the conference. Nevertheless the hopes, not only of the Canadian people but of all peoples in the British commonwealth of nations, are very high, so high that if failure should result, it would materially affect the morale of the entire British people. Therefore it becomes the duty of every unit of the commonwealth and of every individual in each to do everything possible to make that conference a success.

Something was said about the importance to the success of the conference of the attitude of mind in which the various delegations approached each other. That is true. It was suggested that the Canadian delegates might jeopardize the result of the conference if they met in a spirit of bargaining. I do not think there is much in that observation. All trade is bargaining, and yet trade has been carried on for centuries to the mutual advantage of those trading. I would rather have a frank bargaining proposition, where each individual to the bargain recognized the necessity of making a just bargain, than have any vain altruism which it would be impossible to make effective.

I want next to observe that the conference presents great possibilities. The economic expansion in the commonwealth of nations which might result from such a conference goes far beyond the imagination. The resources of the commonwealth in raw materials, mechanical and scientific skill, experience in industrial pursuits, in finance and so forth, are great indeed. In fact, within the empire, or the commonwealth of nations, if you like, we lack nothing which is necessary to the very highest standard of living in modern times. If the conference can arrange to distribute the products of the commonwealth amongst its own people, I do not think we need to concern ourselves very much from now on about the foreign markets to which we have given so much attention in this house.

The failure or success of the conference, it must also be said, depends not upon the Canadian delegates alone, but upon all delegations equally. But its failure or success will depend almost entirely upon the primary objectives sought by the conference as a whole. If the conference attempts to keep things going in the same old course; that is to say, if it deliberates with a view to paying all debts in gold values, to maintaining the debt creating monetary system, to aim at becoming rich in debts, to scheme to capture foreign trade, to strive to stimulate production without making definite arrangements to ensure the proper distribution of what has been produced, then I have no hesitation in saying that it will be a failure, no matter what else may be done. But if, on the other hand, the conference is burdened with the conviction that the commonwealth of nations can do with ease that which no single part of it could ever do alone, and if in that conviction it recognizes that it is privileged to lay the foundation stone of what perhaps may be a new economic era, a new era in which the British commonwealth of nations in cooperative unity shall once again lead the world, then great things may be done.

It is true that at one time the British Empire led the world, and if we study that leadership in the setting in which it appears, the setting of its time, we shall find it was a leadership worthy of British pride. Britain led in manufacturing, shipping, finance, naval and military supremacy, great conquests, colonization, civil government and the arts and sciences. But leadership in these matters does not to-day count for so very much. The smallest of the nations, as will be observed, as well as the greatest, can produce more than can be distributed. It knows how to trade, how to fight, even to the last man, and is highly practised in the arts. But the world is looking for a leadership that will be greater and more to be desired than that given by Great Britain in the past, a leadership out of the debris of a civilization which, having been built upon the sand, has tumbled around our ears, a leadership recognizing the necessity of utilizing the wealth, the leisure and all the achievements which are possible to-day for the one great, single purpose of human happiness. If this will be the objective of the conference, it will succeed, not perhaps spectacularly, but nevertheless really, and it will lay the basis for what I believe will be in fact a new economic era.

Let me conclude by making a suggestion or two as regards subjects that we in this corner of the house believe should be discussed and settled definitely at that conference. We think the conference should discuss and decide ways and means of dealing with the world's debts and with our own debts to other people. It should come to the conclusion that if our debts are to be recognized as most British people wish to recognize them, they will have to be paid in goods; that is, we should undertake at such a conference to declare to the world that British debts shall be paid in goods: that such goods shall be delivered wherever they may be desired by our creditors, in whatever quantity it may be arranged to deliver them, and at whatever time delivery may be required, and that such goods shall be delivered to our creditors at the values of the goods which we borrowed; for in practically every case what we have borrowed from other nations has been borrowed in actual goods.

Next, every branch of the commonwealth of nations should have the right to decide to control the social credit within its own boundaries. In that regard I wish to quote very briefly from Lord Beaverbrook. He is a great Canadian, a wealthy man, and a lord, and so no doubt what he says will have more weight than what I have been saying for years in this respect. He says:

> Let us begin by making it clear to the public that there are only two forms of money—what you have in your pocket, and what you have in the bank. Money does not depend on gold stocks or on any other metallic foundation.
> It should be our policy to make money both plentiful and cheaper. It may be fairly cheap at the moment. I do not deny that. It is certainly not plentiful. Until we have made it plentiful we will not be able to maintain the standard of wages here.
>
> How can it be made plentiful?
>
> Send the Bank of England about its business! Let it continue to perform the functions of a joint-stock bank.
>
> Establish a central bank, owned by a nation, equipped with all the powers necessary to provide abundant credit and hedged about by all the restrictions required to safeguard the permanence and stability of the structure.
> That is the solution.
> Give us the right to establish reasonable credit and sufficient banking facilities for the people, and you will get the present wage-level, stability of commodity, prices and prosperity for our people.

That is what Canada should decide to do.

Next we suggested that there should be stabilization of the British currency. That would be in line with the resolutions which have been passed by very representative bodies of men in Great Britain and the necessity of which has been recognized by similar bodies in this country. Without parity of currency within the commonwealth, adequate exchange of goods cannot be effected.

Finally we suggest that trade should be arranged within the commonwealth with the least possible restrictions. Let me finish by saying this, that even if the Imperial conference should fail to be the doorway to a new prosperity, that is no reason that Canada should lose heart. The mere fact that we cannot sell our surplus wheat to anybody else is no reason that any Canadian should die of starvation. The mere fact that we cannot ship our surplus lumber to any other country does not mean that our Canadian people should not have homes. The mere fact that we cannot get rid of the boots and shoes Canada can manufacture, that we cannot sell them abroad, does not mean that people should go without footwear in this country. So that if there should be failure Canada must go on in her own way and be a success. She must learn how to distribute her products first to her own people. I do not think we should make goods to sell but rather to use, and if we get that idea we can be content to let foreign trade look after itself for the present. Canada cannot afford, even in the name of trade, to export its products to any country below cost as she is now doing. We in this section of the house wish the greatest possible success for the coming conference, and if the government proceeds as capably in the conference as it has done in arranging for it, we have great hopes for its success.

Mr. SPEAKMAN: As the hon. member for Wetaskiwin has said, we are looking forward to this conference with hope, although not with over-optimism, believing it to be a great opportunity but an equally great responsibility. The suggestion I have to offer is this: Every part of Canada, every industry in Canada, every individual in Canada is keenly interested in this conference, the farmers, industrialists, financiers, everyone, not only those who support the government but those who for the time being must be represented by the government in whom we have to place our trust.

In the three western provinces, and possibly in other provinces, conferences have been held and are now being held and will be held between the farming bodies, commercial bodies and different branches of the government, particularly along agricultural lines, in a great endeavour to unify thought in this direction. I am speaking particularly for the agricultural element, than which none is more keenly interested in the success of this conference. There is an endeavour to unify thought in respect of agriculture at least as between the various provinces. If they can do that I understand that the Prime Minister will certainly make it possible for these bodies to send their representatives to Ottawa and to send memoranda and give advice. I understand that accompanying some of the delegations will be small supernumerary bodies of advisers who, while not taking any part as delegates, will be able to discuss with the delegates matters which are of particular import to the different interests they represent. May I suggest that it be made possible by this government, once these different provinces have unified their thought on certain lines, to have a sort of council representative of those provinces and bodies here, not as delegates, but to watch and consider the proceedings, and to discuss with the government and with the delegates representing the government matters of interest, in order that we may help one another and that the decisions arrived at may be the decisions not of the government alone but of the thinking men and women of Canada. We can act only through the government, and we hope that the government will accept, so far as it may be offered, the assistance of others, and make it possible for these representatives to speak through the government in the conference on matters which are of deep concern to them.

Mr. BENNETT: Notice has been sent to each of the premiers of the provinces, as I promised the right hon. leader of the opposition, asking them for any suggestions they might desire to make to the conference through the government, as well as to agricultural and other organized bodies in the state—not the manufacturers' association alone—for the purpose of having representations made.

Item agreed to.

To provide for the administration of the Royal Canadian mint, including salaries, contingencies, retiring and other allowances, and general expenses, $182,400.

Mr. BOULANGER: May I ask the Minister of Finance why there is an increase in this vote?

Mr. RHODES: There is no real increase in this vote; as a matter of fact, there is a decrease. The apparent increase is due to the fact that we have recently taken over the mint.

Mr. BOULANGER: May I ask the minister if dominion notes are engraved at the mint?

Mr. RHODES: No, only coins.

Mr. BOULANGER: May I express the hope that some day the Minister of Finance will give us dominion notes and coins with the two languages that are spoken in Canada? Last year the Canadian government did something that was very flattering to our national pride when they took over the control of the mint from the government in London. I hope that they will do something equally flattering to our Canadian pride by putting the two official languages of this country on our dominion notes and on our coins so that they will proclaim to the four corners of the earth the name of Canada. At this late hour of the session, a few hours away from prorogation, I am not going to go into a detailed expose of the reasons, historical, national and otherwise, which I could bring forward in support of my suggestion. Let me simply say this, that this move would be flattering not only to one-third of the Canadian population which speaks the French language, but also to the great majority of English-speaking Canadians who know the history of this country, and who know the contribution that French speaking Canada has made to our national life.

Mr. RHODES: I have only this observation to make, that the considerations which have moved my hon. friend in making his suggestion this evening must certainly have been apparent to him during the preceding six sessions he has sat in this house, and with the bright mind that he possesses I am surprised that it is only at this late date that he makes this suggestion. So far as the coins are concerned I think his suggestion has been fully met because our coins to-day are distinctly bilingual in character, in fact trilingual, because in addition to bearing words in both the French and English languages they carry a motto in Latin. Whether or not it is desirable to alter the character of our dominion notes is a matter which can well be considered as, if and when new designs are before the government for consideration.

Mr. BOULANGER: I hope the minister is not reproaching me for giving the government an opportunity to do a good deed.

Mr. RHODES: Certainly not.

Mr. LAVERGNE: There can be no reproach against me because twenty-eight years ago I asked in this house for this very thing. It could only be some very narrow prejudice that would operate against this reform, which is in accord with the letter and spirit of our constitution, as contained in section 133, clause 2, of the British North America Act. All acts of parliament must be printed in both languages, and I would point out that dominion bills and coins are acts of parliament as well as the legislative bills that we pass through this house. But there is something higher in this idea. I think it makes for national unity. If we intend to build up a Canadian confederation we cannot build it up by keeping one-third of the population in a reserve in the province of Quebec, and then stating that everything is satisfactory so long as the Indians of Quebec keep in the reserve which has been given to them. I understand to a certain extent the fears of those who feel that there should be only one language in this country, but they are at least a hundred and fifty years late in giving expression to those fears. Belgium is a nation with two languages, and a nation which has preserved its liberty. Switzerland, a nation with three languages, has for twelve hundred years preserved its liberty in Europe. The preservation of languages is so natural and just that Great Britain, when she took over Palestine, used both Arabic and English on the coins and bills of that country. South Africa, also, uses the two languages.

Mr. LAPOINTE: What about the Irish Free State?

Mr. LAVERGNE: And the Irish Free State, and Malta,—in fact all over the British Commonwealth with the exception of Canada, we find dual language adopted. At this late hour I shall not take the time to speak at length; but may I say that if we want to build a nation, if we want Canada to be preserved as a separate and distinct entity, my opinion is—and I think it is based on sound common sense—that first of all equal justice must be given to all races, in compliance with the thought of the fathers of confederation. Their views were well expressed by Sir John A. Macdonald, who said in the House of Commons that there were no victors or vanquished, but only two races having the same rights and the same privileges so far as language and civil rights were concerned.

I have only one further statement to make; I could discuss this matter for a long time, but I shall not do so. If we want Canada to survive as a nation we must build in it something different from the United States. We should have here a dual civilization and dual traditions, for it is only on that basis that we can build up a free, prosperous and happy country.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Mr. Chairman, it is too late for me to offer any lengthy remarks, but I should like to say that I am in full accord with the remarks of the hon. members for Bellechasse and Montmagny. I wish only to place before the committee an example of the different spirit which exists even in Great Britain concerning the languages. A couple of months ago I received at my office in Quebec a letter from Great Britain which had been sent by air mail. The words "by air mail" and "par avion" in English and French respectively were on the letter. On the same day I received by air mail a letter from Alberta. The service which carried that letter was of course in Canada, but the letter had no French notation on it. In Canada some people see red when they hear the French language; elections are fought on the language question. I hope we will pass over that crazy period of Canadian history, and that everybody will realize it is not a shame in Canada to know, speak and understand two languages.

Mr. CHEVRIER: Mr. Chairman, I agree fully with the remarks of the three speakers who have preceded me.

Mr. SULLIVAN: I concur fully in the remarks of the previous speakers. I believe both languages should be spoken in the province of Quebec and throughout the whole of Canada. The words of the mottoes of British sovereigns, namely, "honi soit qui mal y pense" and "Dieu et mon droit" do not prevent the people of the British Empire from being loyal to the British crown. A few days ago I had occasion to look into the files of a very dear old friend who has now passed away. He was a man against whom I had occasion to contest a constituency, and in that election the people decided he was a better man than I. I refer to the late Hon. Mr. Robb. Many petitions and circulars on this subject were sent to him, as a member of the Liberal government, but they were not acted upon. However, the fact that the late government did not grant the request now repeated by the hon. member for Bellechasse is no reason why the present government should not do so. Two wrongs do not make a right. Therefore, leaving all petty political consideration aside, I am free to concur in the remarks of the hon. member for Bellechasse.

Mr. CASGRAIN: Mr. Chairman, I also concur in the remarks made by the ex-Minister of Justice, the hon. member for Montmagny and the hon. member for St. Ann. I say to the committee that if such a resolution had not been brought down this year by the hon. member for Bellechasse I myself would have made a similar motion. Representing a county of the province of Quebec and as a citizen of that province I ask the government seriously to consider the suggestion.

Mr. GAGNON: Mr. Chairman, I am pleased to add a word in support of the contention of the hon. member for Bellechasse. It is true that the first hon. member who moved that bank notes and currency be printed in the French language was the hon. member for Montmagny, in the year 1907. At that time he and the hon. member for Labelle were the only members who were in favour of a resolution to that effect. To-night however we hear a great many members on both sides of the house express similar views.

Mr. LAPOINTE: My hon. friend is mistaken concerning the support given to the measure in 1907.

Mr. GAGNON: Byron, once said that "a small drop of ink fallen like dew upon a thought produces that which makes millions think." It would seem that the drop of ink the hon. members for Labelle and Montmagny dropped thirty years ago upon the thought of bilingualism has produced what millions of Canadians think to-day.

Mr. LAPOINTE: I think if my hon. friend reads Hansard of that day he will find he is mistaken.

Mr. GAGNON: No, I do not think I am.

Mr. RYCKMAN: Well, don't begin quarrelling about it.

Mr. LAPOINTE: An amendment was moved by Sir Wilfrid Laurier to the effect that in principle the two languages are equal in this country. No division was taken.

Item agreed to.

To provide for payments in connection with movements of coal under conditions prescribed by the governor in council and for the cost of administration thereof, $1,100,000.

Mr. RALSTON: I should like to know how many more tons of coal will be moved this year than last as a result of this assistance.

Mr. GORDON: The assistance granted to the coal miners of Nova Scotia, for which provision is made in this item, has been the subject of many conferences and discussions between the Department of Mines and the operators in Sydney and elsewhere. I believe if the mine operators of the province of Nova Scotia will be astute enough to take advantage of the markets which this assistance will make available, they should, when the full force of the assistance is felt, get upwards of 1,000,000 tons of coal. I am hopeful of it.

Mr. RALSTON: Does my hon. friend say a million tons more than last year will be produced?

Mr. GORDON: Yes, I am hopeful they will be able to get a million tons extra.

Mr. RALSTON: Generally speaking, I think the subvention, although drafted in somewhat different terms, is in effect the same as was in force last year, save in two respects; one, in regard to waterborne coal, that is coal moving further up the St. Lawrence to Kingston and Toronto; the other, in regard to railway coal. I do not anticipate a great deal of extra coal will be moved up the St. Lawrence to Toronto. I did hope the railway coal would produce a substantial additional tonnage, but I am afraid a condition has been imposed by the order in council which will materially lessen the amount which they might otherwise move under this subvention. That condition is that the only coal which will receive the subvention is the excess over the amount which was purchased by the railways last year. That is a very serious condition, and one which of course, in the case of the Canadian National Railways, means that no subvention at all will be payable, as I understand it, for the reason that their consumption this year is considerably less than it was last year. Last year they were assisted under the Unemployment and Farm Relief Act; whereas, so far as I know, there will be no such assistance this year. Therefore the only inducement to them to continue taking Nova Scotia coal is that offered by this subvention, and that inducement is negatived by the condition that I have stated. As to the Canadian Pacific, they will get the subvention because they used practically no Nova Scotia coal last year. That is the difficulty, and I am afraid my hon. friend will find his hopes regarding extra tonnage far from being realized.

Item agreed to.

Mr. RHODES: I move that the committee rise and report the resolutions.

Mr. CASGRAIN: Mr. Chairman, before the committee rises, I desire to direct attention to the dismissal of Francois Harbour, Indian agent at Oka, in the county of Two Mountains, a position to which he was appointed in 1923. An investigation was ordered a year after the election of 1930, on account of the fact that this man had apparently attended political meetings during the course of the campaign of 1930. The investigation was started, stopped, and started again. A peculiarity of the investigation is that the government appointed a prosecuting attorney to represent the department under the title of "procureur du département." I wish to direct attention especially to this fact. I hold in my hand all the evidence in the case. I will not deal with it fully now as I may have an opportunity to refer to it at another session. The plaintiff produced five witnesses, one of whom desired the position. The defence produced fifteen witnesses. Of those whom I may term the main witnesses for the prosecution, one, Mr. Marinier, when asked if the political meeting that Mr. Harbour was accused of attending was a Liberal or a Conservative meeting, answered:

A Liberal meeting? you confuse me; I cannot answer you; I rather think that it was a Conservative meeting.

It was upon the testimony of this and other witnesses that the commissioner based his decision to dismiss Harbour. In the evidence of another witness named Binette we find the same question put to him, and he is not certain that it was Harbour himself who gave the sign of approval of the speech that was being delivered by the Liberal speaker, Mr. Geoffrion. This is the question put to him by the prosecutor:

Between you and Harbour there were some taller than Mr. Harbour and some of his height.

He aswered:

Yes, sir.

To another question:

Q. Was Mr. Harbour wearing a hat or a cap?

He answered:

I did not notice this particularity.

So the evidence of two of the most important witnesses produced by the prosecution certainly is not very specific as to the fact that Mr. Harbour himself was the man who signified his approval of what was said at that time by the Liberal speaker. We have also the testimony of one of the witnesses that he did not know whether it was a Liberal or a Conservative meeting. In his defence Mr. Harbour testified that he had never uttered any signs of approval, neither clapping his hands nor in any other way signifying that he approved what was said by the speaker.

Mr. BENNETT: The hon. gentleman knows it has not been charged that any fraud was practised. A wholly impartial tribunal heard the witnesses and the accused, if that term may be used. The commissioner reported against him. The hon. gentleman is only delaying the supply bill by proceeding further.

Mr. CASGRAIN: That may be so, but we have the evidence of Harbour himself and his fifteen witnesses, all of whom testified that to the best of their knowledge in the election campaign of 1930 they had never heard of Mr. Harbour mixing up in politics at all. Then we have the evidence of the two witnesses produced by the complainant, one of whom, Mr. Cadieux, is the principal Conservative organizer in the county, and the other Mr. Eustache Varin, is also a strong supporter of the Conservative party; they both testified that during the course of the election campaign of 1930 to their knowledge, Mr. Harbour had never done anything in the interests of the Liberal party. We have also the evidence that at that time a gentleman named Chéné testified that the man who had given signs of approval of the speech made by Mr. Geoffrion was none other than himself, Chéné, and not the accused, Mr. Harbour. I desire to draw attention especially to the fact that there must have been a conspiracy on the part of certain persons to oust Harbour from his position. I do not know to what extent it is true that the government, before dismissing Harbour, although the report had been submitted to them, considered the question very seriously, and it was only upon a certain minister taking the responsibility upon himself that they decided to act upon the report. I strongly protest against the way the investigation was conducted, because I think an injustice was done to this man Harbour.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I wish to delay the house for only about two minutes in order to keep the record accurate. When this item was under discussion some evenings ago, close to the time for adjournment, the minister, in replying to some interrogations by myself, stated that the person in Gleichen to whom had been awarded the contract for the supply of coal to the Indian reserve at a price which I showed was $1.10 more than the price at which the coal could have been secured if tenders had been solicited in the proper way, was a dealer in coal according to the letterheads on file. As my information had been to the contrary I immediately wired to Gleichen in order to ascertain whether or not my statement had been correct. The wire I sent on May 6 read:

Your letter states McConnell not a coal dealer. Minister states McConnell's accounts bear heading dealer in coal, oils, etc. Please wire full statement.

Mr. BENNETT: To whom was that wire sent?

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): That was sent to a person whom I knew to be a coal dealer and who would be in a position to inform me, Mr. R. S. McQueen of Gleichen. His reply was:

I reaffirm statement McConnell not in coal business irrespective his billhead. He has no scale shed or coal equipment. I have been Gleichen fourteen years and McConnell never received car of coal in that time. Check up with Canadian Pacific Railway for verification. My letter correct in detail.

R. S. McQueen.

Subsequently I received a letter from the same gentleman amplifying his telegram. In order to be sure that I was not relying upon one witness who might have been prejudiced I also wired Mr. Bentley, of Gleichen, a very reliable person and a member of the local legislative assembly, who wrote me under date of May 10 as follows:

Since coming in to town and mailing my letter to you I have learned that McConnell claims he is a coal dealer. This is not true and never was true. He has it on his bills, etc., but I never heard of him shipping in a car of coal. I believe the contract was worked between him and the Crown Lumber Company. You should insist on getting the names of those who did tender, and I think you will probably find the Crown Lumber Company put in a tender higher than his. They supplied the coal although he got the contract and rake off.

I am not accusing the minister or the administration of wrongdoing in this matter, but I have drawn their attention to what in my opinion is a scandalous method of awarding contracts. If that method is current throughout the various departments there is a wild and extravagant over-expenditure of money in the securing of supplies. I ask the minister to investigate this matter thoroughly, and make sure that in future tenders are called for in the proper way, by open advertisement.

Mr. RALSTON: The other night in connection with this item I brought to the attention of the minister the question of a dismissal in Shelburne county, but at that time the minister had not brought down the return with regard to the dismissal of Doctor Captain Churchill as Indian doctor at that point. Since that time I have received the return.

I simply wish to place these facts on record: In the first place the return shows that, as far as the record goes, the minister simply dismissed Doctor Churchill with no recommendation of any kind. In the second place the minister was warned at the time by his officer that the additional cost per visit to the Indians residing at Shelburne would be approximately $20. In the third place the first bill submitted by the new doctor for the month was $153, as against an average monthly bill of the previous doctor of something like $18. In the fourth place it seems to have been just at the time I called the minister's attention to the fact that these costs had run up so absurdly that instructions were given that the new doctor should not receive any more than the former doctor had received. In the fifth place, notwithstanding the recommendations of the officials of the department to the effect that Doctor Churchill be allowed to do the work at Shelburne, the minister was adamant and absolutely refused to change the appointment. Lastly, to indicate the kind of man who was thus summarily dismissed without either complaint or notice. I have here Captain Churchill's citation for the award to him of the military cross, which is as follows:

During the fighting east of Arras, 26th-28th August, 1918, he was continuously on duty under heavy shell fire, and had absolutely no relief during the whole period. He kept in touch with all his R.A.P. and was responsible for the rapid evacuation of his wounded from the forward line. His zeal and devotion to duty were admirable.

That is under the authority of the London Gazette. This is the man who was dismissed by the minister with absolutely no recommendation, with the result as I have shown that in one month the department might have had to pay to the new appointee about seven times what was paid on the average to Captain Churchill.

Item agreed to.

Resolutions reported, read the second time and concurred in.

WAYS AND MEANS

SUPPLY BILL

Hon. E. N. RHODES (Minister of Finance) moved that the house go into committee of ways and means.

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee, Mr. MacDonald (Cape Breton South) in the chair.

Mr. RHODES moved:

Resolved, that towards making good the supply granted to His Majesty on account of certain expenses of the public service for the year ending March 31, 1932, the sum of $2,242,474.83, and for the year ending March 31, 1933, the sum of $161,768,299.87, be granted out of the consolidated revenue fund of Canada.

Motion agreed to.

Resolution reported, read the second time and concurred in. Mr. Rhodes thereupon moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 101, for granting to His Majesty certain sums of money for the public service for the financial year ending March 31, 1932, and the financial year ending March 31, 1933.

Motion agreed to, bill read the first and second times, considered in committee, reported, read the third time and passed.

ADJOURNMENT—BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. BENNETT moved the adjournment of the house.

He said: Mr. Speaker, in the morning the Secretary of State (Mr. Cahan) will make a short statement with respect to reparations and the Minister of Marine (Mr. Duranleau) will make a statement with respect to a bill which he will ask the house to permit him to withdraw. I should like to take this opportunity to thank the opposition, both official and unofficial, for the way in which they have contributed to-day to the transaction of business and the disposition of matters which we have had under discussion.

Motion agreed to and the house adjourned at 11.05 p.m.

Thursday, May 26, 1932

The house met at eleven o'clock.

QUESTION

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk)

*KAMOURASKA COUNTY—COLLECTION OF NEW TAXES

Mr. BOUCHARD:

Was any appointment made in Kamouraska county in connection with the new taxes on telegrams and telephones?

Mr. RYCKMAN: The answer is no.

MONTREAL HARBOUR

On the orders of the day.

Hon. FERNAND RINFRET (St. James) (Translation): Mr. Speaker, I wish to put a few questions to the hon. Minister of Marine (Mr. Duranleau) in connection with the Montreal harbour. May I first inquire whether the report of Commissioner Gibb on Canadian ports has been printed and translated?

Hon. ALFRED DURANLEAU (Minister of Marine) (Translation): Mr. Speaker, the report of Sir Alexander Gibb, I think, has now been printed in the two languages.

Mr. RINFRET (Translation): I wish to thank the hon. minister. May I further inquire whether the government intends, previous to prorogation, to make known its policy with reference to legislation or measures to implement the report.

Mr. DURANLEAU (Translation): It has been impossible owing to the arduous work of this session to discuss the details of Sir Alexander Gibb's report which is voluminous and, as all know, covers all Canadian ports. The governement intends to closely study this report between now and next session and then to state its policy.

[Mr. Bennett.]

Mr. RINFRET (Translation): I thank the hon. minister for his information. I have but one other question to ask, I make a request under the form of a question so as to comply with the rules of the House, however, in truth, I wish to persuade the government to grant my request. Is it the intention of the Montreal harbour commission during the summer season to give all the work possible to the working population of Montreal and to restrict as much as possible this assistance to the people of Montreal?

Mr. DURANLEAU (Translation): The Montreal Harbour Commission, sir, this season will carry out its usual work. If it is possible to extend such work so as to stem unemployment, we shall do so. I am aware that lately, the commission has started the construction of wharves in the eastern part of Montreal, and I think that before long other works will be undertaken.

Mr. RINFRET (Translation): I again wish to thank the hon. Minister of Marine, and to also inform him that I made all these inquiries for the purpose of co-operating.

REPARATIONS

STATEMENT BY SECRETARY OF STATE AS TO RECEIPTS AND PAYMENTS IN COMPENSATION FOR INJURY AND LOSS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. C. H. CAHAN (Secretary of State): Several hon. members on both sides of the house asked me at a late date in the session if I would not make a statement to the house with regard to reparation payments made by Germany and the right of soldiers who saw service in the war to obtain not only pensions but also certain awards by way of compensation for physical injuries suffered while they were prisoners of war. As a great deal of misapprehension seems to exist in the minds of many throughout the length and breadth of the country, with consent of the house I should like for a few moments to make a statement as to the facts.

Under articles 231 and 232 and annex I to article 232 of the treaty of Versailles, Germany agreed to pay for certain loss and damage, particularly to the civilian population. Article 231 reads:

> The allied and associated governments affirm and Germany accepts the responsibility of Germany and her allies for causing all the loss and damage to which the allied and associated governments and their nationals have been subjected as a consequence of the war imposed upon them by the aggression of Germany and her allies.

As regards article 232 I shall read the first two paragraphs:

The allied and associated governments recognize that the resources of Germany are not adequate, after taking into account permanent diminutions of such resources which will result from other provisions of the present treaty, to make complete reparation for all such loss and damage.

The allied and associated governments, however, require, and Germany undertakes, that she will make compensation for all damage done to the civilian population of the allied and associated powers and to their property during the period of belligerency of each as an allied or associated power against Germany by such aggression by land, by sea and from the air, and in general all damage as defined in annex I hereto.

In order to make my statement clear I would ask the house to permit me to place upon Hansard annex I instead of reading it, as the time is very short and with consent I shall hand it to the reporter. Annex I reads:

Compensation may be claimed from Germany under article 232 above in respect to the total damage under the following ten categories:

(1) Damage to injured persons and to surviving dependents by personal injury to or death of civilians caused by acts of war, including bombardments or other attacks on land, on sea, or from the air, and all the direct consequences thereof, and of all operations of war by the two groups of belligerents wherever arising.

(2) Damage caused by Germany or her allies to civilian victims of acts of cruelty, violence or maltreatment (including injuries to life or health as a consequence of imprisonment, deportation, internment or evacuation, or exposure at sea or of being forced to labour), wherever arising, and to the surviving dependents of such victims.

(3) Damage caused by Germany or her allies in their own territory or in occupied or invaded territory to civilian victims of all acts injurious to health or capacity to work, or to honour, as well as to the surviving dependents of such victims.

(4) Damage caused by any kind of maltreatment of prisoners of war.

(5) As damage caused to the people of the allied and associated powers, all pensions and compensation in the nature of pensions to naval and military victims of war (including members of the air force), whether mutilated, wounded, sick or invalided, and to the dependents of such victims, the amount due to the allied and associated governments being calculated for each of them as being the capitalized cost of such pensions and compensation at the date of the coming into force of the present treaty on the basis of the scales in force in France at such date.

(6) The cost of assistance by the governments of the allied and associated powers to prisoners of war and to their families and dependents.

(7) Allowances by the governments of the allied and associated powers to the families and dependents of mobilized persons or persons serving with the forces, the amount due to them for each calendar year in which hostilities occurred being calculated for each government on the basis of the average scale for such payments in force in France during that year.

(8) Damage caused to civilians by being forced by Germany or her allies to labour without just remuneration.

(9) Damage in respect of all property wherever situated belonging to any of the allied or associated states or their nationals, with the exception of naval and military works or materials, which has been carried off, seized, injured or destroyed by the acts of Germany or her allies on land, on sea or from the air, or damage directly in consequence of hostilities or of any operations of war.

(10) Damage in the form of levies, fines and other similar exactions imposed by Germany or her allies upon the civilian population.

In respect of these several categories mentioned in annex I, Canada has paid prior to January last:

Under categories 1, 2, 4 and 9, to claimants who were resident or domiciled or carrying on business in Canada.. ..	$ 8,084,069 50
Under category 5..	562,178,569 00
Under category 7..	134,649,834 00
Total..	$704,912,472 50

That is what Canada paid out prior to January last as compensation to Canadian nationals for loss or damage as defined in the categories set forth in annex I to article 232 of the treaty of Versailles. Prior to January last Canada had received from Germany by way of reparations only $26,672,246.06. That is, Canada had received from Germany less than four per cent of the amount which Canada had paid out under those several categories for damage in respect of which Germany, under the treaty of Versailles, agreed to make full payment.

But the treaty of Versailles was revised in 1924 by the so-called Dawes plan, which was prepared by a committee of experts of which General Dawes was chairman. Subsequently, in 1929, an arrangement was made with Germany in respect of an experts' plan, known as the Young plan, dated June 7, 1929. The Young plan was confirmed by the Hague agreement of January 20, 1930, which was executed on that date at the Hague by representatives of the creditor governments, the Hon. Peter Larkin signing on behalf of Canada. By this agreement Germany accepted the experts' plan, known as the Young plan of June 7, 1929, "as a complete and final settlement so far as Germany is concerned of the financial questions resulting from the war." Thereby the German government gave "a solemn undertaking to pay the annuities which were provided in the Young plan." All the members of the house are aware that last year Germany ceased paying the annuities established under the Young plan, and during the present fiscal year we have received nothing from Germany on that account. A conference is to be held at Lausanne in June next to reconsider the whole matter. The report has been spread throughout Canada, and I have seen many circulars and letters to the same effect, appealing to soldiers who served in the war and who were made prisoners of war to make applications for reparations to the present commissioner, Mr. Errol M. McDougall, K.C., for compensation for physical injuries and disabilities suffered while they were prisoners of war. The statement has been circulated that there is a fund, and many times it was represented as a vast fund, in the treasury at Ottawa received from Germany out of which such awards might be paid. The financial statement which I have just given to the house shows that there is no such fund, and those members of this house who vote from year to year the grant in respect of reparations know that reparations are now annually appropriated by vote of parliament out of the consolidated revenue fund. It is a fact I think that cannot be contradicted that men who either suffered while they were soldiers in actual service at the front or were subjected to physical disabilities as the result of their treatment in Germany may apply, and in most cases they have applied, to the pension tribunals for pensions, because no discrimination is made by the pension board between disabilities suffered by soldiers as a result of active service and disabilities suffered by them as a result of maltreatment while prisoners of war.

In England no soldier and no sailor of the military or naval forces was permitted to make application under the special clauses of the treaty of Versailles relating to compensation for maltreatment as prisoners of war. The reparations were granted in Great Britain by a royal commission appointed on August 15, 1921, called The Royal Commission on Compensation for Suffering and Damage by Enemy Action. This commission on reparations was presided over by one of the most distinguished jurists in England, Baron Sumner. The royal commission appointing this commission recites:

> Whereas we have deemed it expedient that a commission should forthwith issue to consider cases in which there is a moral claim by British Nationals (other than those belonging to parts of the Empire to which a separate share of reparation receipts has been allotted) for compensation for sufferings or damage arising out of the action of the enemy during the war within Annex 1 to Part 8 of the Treaty of Versailles; and to make recommendations as to the distribution of a sum of not more than > £5,000,000 out of the first receipts on account of reparation allocated to the exchequer of the United Kingdom in ex gratia payments to such persons.

It will be noted that the commission issued to the Sumner commission authorized it to consider claims for compensation for sufferings or damage arising out of the action of the enemy during the war within annex 1 to part 8 of the treaty. The several commissions which have been issued to the Canadian commissioners, I think four or five in number, contain a similar recitation. This annex 1 to part 8 of the treaty of Versailles is that provision of the treaty which is specifically referred to in the commissions issued to the several Canadian commissions on reparations and in the several orders in council which have been passed, which are to be found in full in part 1 of our own reports on reparations. Paragraph 22 of the first report of the Sumner commission, dated January 22, 1923, reads in part as follows:

> The terms of reference which incorporate the Annex to Part 8 of the Treaty of Versailles, also exclude military and naval forces of the crown on the general construction of the Annex, and the commission have here been guided by the test, whether or not such persons were employed on the terms of being amendable to discipline and subject to orders as members of the forces, in whatever capacity they were employed, and whether under special contract or by regular enrolment.

On the other hand, the Canadian commissioners have interpreted the same provision of Annex 1 to mean that in case members of the military or naval forces of Canada suffered permanent disability by reason of being made prisoners of war, which was not covered by the compensation which they had received from the pension tribunals, they might in extraordinary and special cases apply to the reparations commissioner, who would hear the evidence again, and awards have been made accordingly from time to time by the several commissioners, but these awards have been very limited in number. Article 232 of the treaty of Versailles provides that Germany—> —will make compensation for all damage done to the civilian population of the allied and associated powers and to their property during the period of belligerency of each as an allied and associated power against Germany by such aggression by land, by sea and from the air, and in general all damage as defined in Annex I hereto.

This article of the treaty to which annex 1 is attached confined said damage in terms to damage done to the civilian population. But the fourth category of annex 1 says:

> Damage caused by any kind of maltreatment of prisoners of war.

The Sumner commission has interpreted that clause as covering damages done to the civilian population while they were made prisoners of war, and the Sumner commission has so held. But to clarify any doubt as to the attitude of the British commission a cablegram was sent to the Canadian government office in London on November 22, 1930, reading as follows:

Ascertain from British reparation authorities what action if any was taken with regard to claims put in by military prisoners of war for injuries coming within section four Annex I article two three two treaty Versailles. Obtain particulars of any awards made and basis of settlement.

To this we received the following reply from the London office:

Your cable twenty-second. Ministry Pensions state all departments agreed in 1914 claims for personal injuries should be dealt with by Pensions ministry under ordinary provisions orders in council warrants relating soldiers and seamen. No further provisions to be made from public funds for special compensation. No difference made between injuries received prisoners of war or enemy action. Separate records claims while in captivity not available.

That was followed by a letter from the British ministry of pensions, referred to in this cable, reading as follows:

In reply to your letter of the 26th instant, I am directed by the Minister of Pensions to inform you that it was agreed in 1914 by the government departments concerned that claims for personal injuries sustained by members of the armed forces of the crown while in captivity in Germany should fall to be dealt with by the Ministry of Pensions under the ordinary provisions of the royal warrants, orders in council, et cetera, relating to soldiers, seamen, et cetera, and that no further provision need be made from public funds by way of special compensation on this account. It was not considered necessary to differentiate between injuries received by prisoners of war and those sustained otherwise as a result of enemy action, and separate records of claims in respect of injuries sustained while in captivity are not available.

It is therefore perfectly clear that no special allowances, compassionate or otherwise, were made to any members of His Majesty's forces in Great Britain who were made prisoner of war. Members of the Canadian forces, if they had been members of the British forces, would not have been permitted to make applications for reparations. They would not have received compensation in England except through the ordinary pension tribunals. Exceptional cases have been entertained by the Canadian reparations commissioners, and the awards to soldiers who were prisoners of war have been comparatively small as compared with the awards made to civilians who were prisoners of war. A great deal of complaint is made throughout the country that civilians are receiving better treatment than those who were serving in the naval and military forces of Canada when made prisoners of war. The circumstances of the naval and military claimants, and those of civilians, are entirely different. An enlisted member of the naval or military forces received his service pay, and if he was injured he received a pension. If he was captured by the enemy and detained in Germany as a prisoner of war his dependents were maintained at the public expense, and on his return to civil life he received his arrears of service pay, and a gratuity. If while a prisoner of war he suffered permanent physical injury he was entitled to receive a pension for life, just the same as if he had suffered physical injury on the field. On the other hand a civilian who became a prisoner of war was in a quite different position. If through misadventure he fell into the hands of the enemy and was taken prisoner his personal effects were lost, and his dependents received no compensation. On being allowed freedom he had no back pay to collect, and if maltreated or if he suffered injury while a prisoner of war he could not apply for pension, as could a member of the naval or military forces.

The differences in the situations when thus considered readily disclose that it is impossible to make any reasonable comparison between awards in civilian cases and in the cases of those in the naval or military services who became prisoners of war. For example, let us consider the merchant seaman who was captured at sea and interned or made prisoner of war in Germany, and possibly maltreated while a prisoner. He should be dealt with differently from the men engaged in the naval or military services. While a prisoner of war the merchant seaman received no pay; his dependents received no compensation; he received no service allowance or back pay; neither could he receive a pension from the public treasury. Therefore several of the reparations commissioners have felt that members of the merchant service resident or domiciled in Canada, who were made prisoners of war, should receive larger payments than the soldiers who were already receiving pensions ranging from thirty to ninety per cent for disability, and who were entitled from year to year throughout their lives to receive very considerable compensations.

Some of the lawyers throughout the country have been suggesting that those who were dissatisfied with the awards made should apply for a rehearing. In some cases the suggestion has been made that rights of action lie against the crown. I am informed that such representations have been made to some of the soldiers who were prisoners of war in an effort to obtain authority from them to bring actions for compensation against the crown. I should like to refer those lawyers to a case recently decided by the House of Lords in England.

The case of Civilian War Claimants Association, Limited, and The King was finally decided by the House of Lords in November, 1931. The decision will be found in 1932 Appeal Cases, page 14.

By a petition of right the suppliants, as assignees of civilian claimants, who had suffered loss and damage by German aggression during the war, claimed on their behalf payment of compensation out of moneys paid or payable by Germany under article 232 of the treaty of Versailles and the provisions of annex I thereto.

The case made by the petition was that the claimants had sent particulars of their claims, first, to the Foreign Claims Office and, afterwards, to the Reparation Claims department in accordance with the instructions of His Majesty's government, that these claims had been duly verified by the government, and were included in the agreed total of claims for reparations which Germany was required to pay under the treaty, and that the crown in inviting the claimants to submit their claims had constituted itself an agent or a trustee for the claimants in respect of any money received by it from Germany on account of reparations, and that any such money was money had and received by the crown to the use of the claimants.

Held, on demurrer by the crown, that the petition afforded no ground for the contention that the money received under the treaty was received by the crown as an agent or a trustee for the claimants, or as money had and received to their use, and was had as disclosing no ground of claim cognizable by the court.

Rustomjee v. The Queen (1876) 1 Q.B.D. 487; 2 Q.B.D. 69, was approved and followed.

Lord Buckmaster, in delivering the opinion of the Lords, said:

First, in article 231 there was an affirmation by the allied and associated governments, accepted by Germany, that Germany was responsible for causing all the loss and damage to which the allied governments and their nationals had been subjected, and by article 232 it was provided that compensation should be made in the following words: "The allied and associated governments recognize that the resources of Germany are not adequate after taking into account permanent diminutions of such resources which will result from other provisions of the present treaty to make complete reparation for all such loss and damage. The allied and associated governments however require and Germany undertakes that she will make compensation for all damage done to the civilian population of the allied and associated powers and to their property during the period of the belligerency of each as an allied or associated power against Germany by such aggression by land, by sea and from the air and in general all damage as defined in annex I hereto."

It is known that associated with the specific damage caused on the sea and by aircraft and bombardment to our people at home during the war there were included in the claims for damages against Germany large sums representing the damage that was suffered in payment of pensions to soldiers' widows and similar matters, which were in a different category from the damage of the nature I have already mentioned; but the whole was collected into one group claim, and there was no separated and specific claim under one head or another, so that one whole claim was put forward and approved by the reparations commission to represent the total claim against Germany under that head. Moneys have undoubtedly been received in respect of that claim, and it is in respect of those moneys that the present proceedings are brought.

In the first place, to establish that any one was a trustee of that fund under the circumstances I have mentioned is, to my mind, to attempt an impossible task. I can see no evidence whatever of an acceptance of trusteeship on the part of the government, or assertion of trusteeship on the part of the people who suffered damage, nor anything up to the time when the money was received to show that the conception of trusteeship was in the minds of anyone in any form whatever. Indeed, the original statements that were made were made of the readiness to compensate out of the national funds at home, and nobody suggests that the government were trustees of those funds for this purpose.

Finally, when the moneys were received, it is said that from and after that moment the crown became a trustee. I have pointed out in the course of the argument, and I repeat, that if that were the case, unless you are going to limit the rights which the beneficiaries enjoy, those rights must include, among other things, a claim for an account of the moneys that were received, of the expenses incurred, and the way in which the moneys have been distributed. Such a claim presented against the crown in circumstances such as these would certainly have no precedent, and would, as it appears to me, invade an area which is properly that belonging to the House of Commons.

That the money was received by the crown as agent seems to me can no more be established than that the money was received by it as trustee. In fact, the trusteeship is the agency stated in other words. If the crown was not a trustee, neither was it an agent; nor can I see that in any sense the crown received these moneys as money had and received to the use of the people whose claims were made. The people whose claims were made were not considered by Germany on making the payment at all. The terms of the treaty were that Germany should pay the sum necessary to satisfy the claims of various people who had suffered, and it was left to the governments themselves, as between them and their nationals, to determine how that money was to be distributed. Therefore, my Lords, on general principle, I should have thought that the petition must fail but the general principle is immensely strengthened by the case of Rustomjee v. The Queen (1 Q.B.D. 487; 2 Q.B.D. 69), for there a case similar in many respects to this, although of course not exactly identical, arose for consideration in the Queen's Bench Division.

Lord Atkin followed with a short opinion entirely in line with that which I have just read, so I may assure hon. members that the assumption by some of the younger members of the legal fraternity that soldiers have a right of legal action against the crown in the right of the Dominion of Canada for such compensation, when it has been refused both by the pensions' board and by the reparations tribunal, is not a sound opinion, and that soldiers who contribute their funds for the purpose of paying the expenses of bringing such action are doing so without any possible hope of securing a return.

PROROGATION OF PARLIAMENT

A message was delivered by Major A. R. Thompson, Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod, as follows:

Mr. Speaker, the deputy of His Excellency the Governor General desires the immediate attendance of this honourable house in the chamber of the honourable the Senate.

Accordingly, Mr. Speaker with the house went up to the Senate chamber.

In the Senate chamber the deputy of His Excellency the Governor General was pleased to give, in His Majesty's name, the royal assent to the following bills:

To these bills the royal assent was pronounced by the Clerk of the Senate in the following words:

In His Majesty's name the deputy of His Excellency the Governor General doth assent to these bills.

Then the Honourable the Speaker of the House of Commons addressed the Deputy of His Excellency the Governor General as follows:

May it please Your Honour:

The Commons of Canada have voted supplies required to enable the government to defray certain expenses of the public service.

In the name of the Commons I present to Your Honour the following bill:

An Act for granting to His Majesty certain sums of money for the public service for the financial year ending the 31st March, 1933.

To which bill I humbly request Your Honour's assent.

To this bill the Clerk of the Senate, by command of the Deputy of His Excellency the Governor General, did thereupon say:

In His Majesty's name the deputy of His Excellency the Governor General thanks his loyal subjects, accepts their benevolence, and assents to this bill.

GOVERNOR GENERAL'S SPEECH

After which the Deputy of His Excellency the Governor General was pleased to close the third session of the seventeenth parliament of the Dominion of Canada with the following speech:

Honourable Members of the Senate:

Members of the House of Commons:

I desire to thank you for the careful attention you have given to the various measures submitted for your consideration during the present session of parliament. The zealous discharge of your duties manifests alike, a deep concern for the welfare of Canada and an unshaken confidence in its future.

It is gratifying to observe that the program of economy for the current fiscal year will ensure relative equalization of revenues and expenditures, and that the additional moneys necessary to provide for the public service will be obtained without adverse effect upon the cost of living or impairment of the national credit.

My government's policy of unemployment and farm relief, consistently and vigorously pursued, has already achieved an amelioration of conditions and forecasts steady and continued improvement in both agrarian and industrial communities.

The means by which a larger area of distribution has been secured for the coal production of the maritime provinces will do much to relieve conditions heretofore prevailing in that part of the Dominion.

The measure for national ownership and control of radio broadcasting provides the necessary assurance against foreign interference with broadcasting from Canadian sources, and ensures to our people, without regard to class or place, equality of service from the new broadcasting system to be inaugurated as soon as practicable.

The commercial agreement negotiated with the Dominion of New Zealand and ratified by parliament is a further step towards closer empire economic association based upon the principle of reciprocal benefits.

The enquiry by a committee of the House of Commons into the operation of the Civil Service Act prepares the way for a reorganization of the Civil Service Commission and the better administration of matters pertaining to the civil service.

Among other important measures enacted were bills respecting The Patent Act, Unfair Competition in Trade and Commerce, the Export of Gold, Insurance, The Fisheries Act, The Judges Act, The Excise Act, The Companies Act, The Soldiers Settlement Act and The Railway Act.

Approval has been given the British Commonwealth Shipping Agreement, The International Convention for the Amelioration of Conditions of the Wounded and Sick in Armies in the Field, The International Convention relative to the Treatment of Prisoners of War, The International Convention for Limiting the Manufacture and Regulating the Distribution of Narcotic Drugs.

Members of the House of Commons:

I thank you for the provision you have made for the public service.

Honourable Members of the Senate:

Members of the House of Commons:

I do sincerely commend the fortitude and patience with which the Canadian people have endured the trials and hardships of these troubled times. Those attributes have equipped them to surmount whatever difficulties may yet be encountered before prosperity returns. Recurring disturbances in world conditions have hindered our progress. The prosperity we rightly expected before this time has been by them delayed. For no nation can alone resist the influence of the universal disruption of financial and industrial conditions.

Near at hand are the means by which this country, organized and prepared, may hasten its economic recovery. Within two months' time an economic conference of the countries which compose the British Empire will meet at Ottawa. From that conference may arise a power which will bring enduring harmony out of economic chaos, and provide the wise and courageous leadership which in other times of universal stress the world looked for and obtained from the British peoples. Canada believes that the closer economic association of the British Empire will herald the dawn of a new and greater era of prosperity both for ourselves and for all the nations of the earth.

In relieving you from attendance upon your parliamentary duties, I pray that Divine Providence may guide and bless you.

This concluded the third session of the seventeenth parliament.
