> The final scheme produced was a compromise from the original submission by the Vancouver Chinatown development association. It still had the same unique oriental environment but eliminated technical problems which violated many principles laid down by city council for all development.
> You may not be aware, but the V.C.D.A. group will be given an apportunity to participate in town house development elsewhere in the redevelopment area and there is no reason why this should not have the same oriental aspect as their original scheme.

In view of the fact that we now have a submission from the director of planning of the Vancouver planning department which is going to meet the desires of the Canadian Chinese in this area of Vancouver, a plan which, I understand, has met with the approval of the Vancouver city council, I certainly hope there is to be no further delay on the part of Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation, and I sincerely hope this will tie in with the simultaneous development of the Chinese business district. I feel the minister has the same sense of pride as I have in this wonderful group of Chinese Canadians which is shared between his constituency and mine. I know he will be glad to see that these citizens, who were prepared to move two years ago with regard to housing development, are issuing a challenge to their own people to move ahead with the business development. I was interested to read in the Chinatown News of May 18 an editorial on the front page which is a challenge to its readers and an example to people elsewhere who live under conditions such as those under which these people have, unfortunately, been living for so many years. It says:

> Now that the Vancouver city planning department has come up with concrete proposals to rejuvenate Chinatown, will our businessmen and property owners seize this opportunity to embark on a major rebuilding scheme?
> Among the community minded citizens we have talked to, many are genuinely alarmed over the steady decline of Pender St. as evidenced by the growing number of restaurants forced to curtail their hours of operation or go out of business altogether. What is the answer?

We need more tourists. One way to attract them is keep this area growing. In other words, revitalize Chinatown. This can only be achieved by a major renovating or rebuilding job.

The suggestion might sound drastic, but a start will have to be made somewhere. The time is here and now.

The writer points out that they have the architects and are familiar with what is being done in San Francisco and Honolulu, along these lines. So they are prepared to move, and I, for my part, am requesting that we see a little more life and activity—a little more co-operation from Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation in moving along the lines proposed by the people in this area, so that something may be done not only to rebuild the area and construct new homes there but to bring into being a new business centre as well.

Speaking of construction, I recall the remarks of the minister this afternoon to the effect that municipal control is necessary to stop structural deterioration. I want to express the hope that Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation will see to it that new construction is of such a nature that there will not be deterioration. I think the specifications which are now followed by that corporation are an absolute disgrace. I worked for the construction industry for many years, and one of my major tasks was the reading of specifications, regulations and blueprints. For the life of me I cannot figure out how contractors who work with Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation, or how inspectors of that corporation can make head or tail of the regulations and specifications in that little book which contractors are supposed to follow and which the inspectors are supposed to enforce. It is bad enough reading the specifications, but when one has to read amendments to the specifications and then read amendments to the amendments to the amendments of the specifications, heaven only knows how one is supposed to build a house. I do not know who draws up these regulations and I cannot for the life of me figure out who approves them, because they are a disgrace to the whole construction industry.

I speak as one who has worked most of his life in that industry. I do not know how some of these homes stand up. It is amazing to me why the first floor does not collapse, having regard to the new regulations as to the spacing and the size of joists. If it were not for the spreaders, I think they would collapse. I have been over many of these homes. I have read through the specifications and regulations time after time and they certainly lay down the poorest building code I have come across in my whole life. My own home, built 54 years ago, was better constructed than homes constructed today under these regulations. So let us not tear down slums for the purpose of putting up homes which will be slums themselves in a few years. I ask most sincerely that not only shall we have vision and action with regard to new home and apartment construction but that our regulations shall make sure they are modern and well built. That is the responsibility of Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation.

I should like to see more initiative shown by the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation under the National Housing Act in the construction of homes and apartments for the aged in Canada. In the past few years big strides have been taken in this field, but they still do not deal adequately with this problem. One can visit these homes and apartments for the aged and find that for each one there is a waiting list hundreds long. Some have been waiting, not months but years, to get the comfort of a home or apartment in their declining days, at a rate they can afford to pay, so as to live in decency as the pioneers of this country. I feel strongly on this matter as one closely associated with my late father who initiated the first senior citizens housing project in Canada. When we speak of subsidized housing and low rental housing I fear we are not giving enough thought to the needs of the senior citizens of this country and I hope the vision and the dream which I know was in the mind of the late Jack Garland will not be allowed to disappear. I trust that, to revere his memory the government will bring in, if they have not already the authority, a measure to give them the power to provide an impetus to the construction of homes for our senior citizens.

That was all I wanted to add to the very wonderful address given by the hon. member for Greenwood this afternoon. I want to conclude by saying that wishful thinking is not enough; generalities are not enough; good intentions are not enough; legislation which is on the statute books is not enough. We require a vital, vigorous and farsighted central mortgage and housing administration. I hope we will be getting it in the future, and if we do not see signs of real activity in the immediate future perhaps we will have to place a bomb under them; and the best bomb I can think of would be either a special committee or a committee of this house composed of those who have a vital interest in housing, and those who know and understand construction. Then we could let them go at both the act and Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation. I say this, Mr. Chairman, because security does not mean very much to the people of this country unless they have comfortable homes and comfortable apartments in which to live, at prices they can afford to pay.

[Translation]

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Chairman, this resolution deals with certain amendments the government wants to make to the National Housing Act under which the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation was set up in 1954.

We feel that those amendments are not only necessary but urgent and that the government could have extended the list of paragraphs which appear in the resolution under consideration.

Mr. Chairman, when C.M.H.C. was established in 1957, it was to benefit the workers and small farmers, in other words it was to help the small man build himself a home.

C.M.H.C. has helped in the construction of housing centres in several parts of Canada, in Montreal, Quebec city, Toronto, Ottawa, Hull, in the larger cities and even in certain small communities, but with quite a bit of trouble.

It does not seem to be interested, for instance, in going too far in the Lake St. John and Abitibi areas, or in northern Ontario. Some work was done a few years ago in the Elliot Lake area, which is represented by the Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Pearson). We have seen the results of these buildings and housing centres in Elliot Lake, as we will soon see them in Bancroft. We are witnessing the casting aside of small properties which were valued at $12,000, $15,000 or $18,000 at the time they were built. If we go to Elliot Lake today, we see these nice little houses—gems of houses indeed—with the windows boarded up. People are not living in them because they had to leave in order to earn their living elsewhere since Elliot Lake was closing its mines.

In other cities, in Montreal for instance, thousands of houses were built without proper consideration. If you go to St. Vincent de Paul today you will see hundreds of empty houses. Why? Not because the plant workers do not want to live in them but because payments are too high for an ordinary family. When a worker can pay $50 or $60 a month for rent and the houses built under C.M.H.C. come to $125, $135 or $150 a month, it is not surprising then to see a great number of empty houses.

The amendments to the 1954 act do not seem to do much to help the average family, with an average income, who cannot inhabit one of those houses.

Paragraph (a) concerns mainly the provinces and municipalities. The resolution provides:

> That it is expedient...
> (a) to provide further assistance to provinces and municipalities carrying out urban renewal programs by authorizing Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation (hereinafter referred to as "the corporation") to make contributions and loans to provinces or municipalities to assist them in meeting the costs of such programs, and for the purpose to provide for the payment out of the consolidated revenue fund of amounts not exceeding in the aggregate one hundred million dollars;

What can the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation do with $100 million for all of Canada at this time, when the municipalities are contending with huge debts? Will this help the municipalities to pay their debts or, at least, to pay the interest on their debt which now takes up 40 and even 60 per cent of their annual budget?

Does the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation want to help the municipalities by making them sink deeper and deeper into a debt which they are unable to repay by demanding exorbitant carrying charges or interests?

Mr. Chairman, this may be a temporary help for the municipality, but in future we shall again be faced with the same situation as now; there will be absolutely no change. This may, for the time being, help give work to the unemployed in our municipalities. That is, no doubt, the minister's aim when he puts his name to such a resolution: to help relieve unemployment in this country and allay distress, by making loans to the municipalities for periods of 20, 25 and 30 years.

Suppose a municipality borrows $550,000 for 25 years at 5¾ or 6 per cent. In 25 years, that municipality will have to pay back almost $3.5 million for a $550,000 loan made this year, that is, it will have to pay three times the amount in 25 years.

Of course, 25 years from now it is likely that most members of parliament will no longer be sitting in this house because they will have disappeared, but our children, who will then pay the capital and interest, will probably wonder, and rightly so, if their parents were intelligent or if they suffered from a terrible lack of grey matter between their ears? If we are still here 25 years from now, we will probably hear such remarks. Why? Because we continue with the same system.

The government probably thinks that it is helping municipalities. If it sincerely wants to help municipalities, there is nothing at all, no federal legislation which prevents the minister from acting along those lines. By using the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation, it could supply funds created by the Bank of Canada without interest for municipalities, so that when we build a sidewalk, we will not have to pay for two sidewalks, one for the finance company and one for the people who use it.

When we build a road, when we pave a city street, or when we improve municipal services, we should not have to pay twice the price of those services, once for the finance company and once for the users of those services.

This resolution will get us nowhere. I understand that the whole financial or monetary system is faced with concern and uncertainty. We must pass and approve such a resolution so that the bill can be introduced as soon as possible.

As I said, the present problem will not be solved for the provinces or the municipalities, regardless of the intention of this resolution presented to us today. In that resolution, it is also proposed, in paragraph (b):

To authorize the corporation to make loans and to ensure loans made by approved lenders to owners of existing houses in areas included in urban renewal programs.

There again, it is the same thing. The act will be extended so that people who own houses which have been occupied can sell them with the financing of Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation or of insurance companies to be guaranteed by C.M.H.C., which is a crown corporation.

In paragraph (c):

To authorize the corporation to make loans and contributions to provincially or municipally owned housing agencies...

To assist individuals or families of low income.

What does that mean? As I said a while ago, in 1954, that is exactly ten years ago, it was said and repeated that low rent and low cost houses would be built. Today, we realize that the rent of those houses is $80, $85 or $90. When the instalment payable to the corporation or to the insurance company does not go up, municipal taxes double, school taxes triple or quadruple as we have seen in so many places in the province of Quebec. Then, everything is added up to make a monthly assessment which increases the cost of rents every six months, and, after six, eight or 15 years of payments on a house, we now see people who bought a small home in 1954 unable to face their liabilities any longer, just because municipal taxes have doubled and school taxes trebled or gone up five times their former amount.

Those people are today destitute, after having for six, eight and even 15 years, made payments or paid rent with regard to those small houses, believing that they would one day be the owners of a modest home. After ten years of work, the man who was 30 when he bought his home, is now 40 years old and, if he happened to lose his job, or were to experience financial stress, after having invested all his life's work and all his savings in his property to settle his wife and children in their own home, he would be without shelter.

Now, in 1964, the government introduces some amendments to the act to help those people remain in their own home, and others in the same circumstances or conditions. But will that fill the purse of the family head who is 40 or 45, at this time, and has trouble finding employment? That is the kind of security all those bills or amendments are bringing to the Canadian workers, to human beings in Canada.

Paragraph (d) is to help housing projects to include hotels or boarding houses or homes for older citizens and others.

In paragraph (e), it is proposed to authorize the corporation to make once more loans to families of low income. It is about what we find in paragraph (c), or about the same aim.

In paragraph (g) the resolution proposes:

to authorize the corporation to make loans to provinces to assist in the construction or expansion of sewage treatment projects and to authorize the corporation to forgive repayment of 25 per cent of the principal and interest—

Here, I believe the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation, as well as the government, could include in paragraph (g) the following: "to assist also in the expansion of hospitals not only in this province but also in the whole of Canada, and especially as concerns the province of Quebec". For instance, to provide the provinces with the necessary funds to expand hospitals; indeed, there is a need for additional hospital beds throughout the province of Quebec. Why is there a shortage of beds? Why is it not possible to expand those hospitals? It is always for the same reason: the provincial government has no money, it is like the United Nations, it cannot even meet its commitments.

The provincial government is grappling with an exceedingly urgent problem in the hospital field. Why not allow the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation to provide the provinces with funds at a nominal interest rate, using funds created by the Bank of Canada? Because here, again, if we have in Canada the physical means, if we have the minds, the brainpower to build something, why do the government and the ministers not order the Bank of Canada to make financially possible what the Canadian nation can do and is able to realize materially in Canada for the general welfare of the population?

In paragraph (h), the resolution proposes:

to increase from two billion dollars to two and one half billion dollars the maximum charge on the consolidated revenue fund for direct loans by the corporation;

From $2 billion to $2.5 billion. Another financial game. Physical possibilities are not taken into account. The needs which actually exist in Canada are not considered. We lose a great deal of time here, in this house, on all sorts of questions, without attempting to find a solution to the main problem, which is that of finance in Canada. This is what ails everybody, including the government.

I am quite convinced that the government would be willing, if it had the financial possibilities, to help the people as a whole, the unemployed, the mothers whose families are in need, as well as those who are hungry and thirsty for justice in Canada. But the government is not taking the means to serve the purpose for which economic policies are set up, that is the human being.

to provide for the establishment of a special account in the consolidated revenue fund out of which amounts not exceeding in the aggregate one hundred million dollars—

One hundred million dollars. Money again. Always money, from start to finish. That is the question. But where will C.M.H.C. obtain those funds? It is being said and suggested most clearly: C.M.H.C. will underwrite finance companies, insurance companies, lenders who may or may not be recognized today but will be tomorrow; it will underwrite them in respect of the loans granted.

Once again it is a poultice on a wooden leg. It will not cure the ill. It will only spread it. It will only entrench it and confirm it for another five years, because in five years the government—it may be that the present government will no longer be there but will have been replaced by another which will have to make new amendments to those amendments submitted to us in June 1964, because those amendments will not solve the problem.

I see that my good friends opposite are shaking their heads. They will have to open their wallets five years from now and they will find that I was right about what I am saying tonight in this connection. They are mistaken and they know it.

Mr. Côté (Longueuil): We will still be here in five years.

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Chairman, I would ask the hon. member opposite to repeat what he just said.

Mr. Côté (Longueuil): We will still be here in five years.

[Mr. Caouette.]

Mr. Caouette: Do not deceive yourself, you will no longer be here in five years, not with that.

Mr. Chairman, this legislation will not solve the problem. The government merely goes around the difficulty and covers it with chocolate as one does with a pill. One day, the people will come to realize the bitterness of a financial system which is not adapted to the true possibilities of our country.

Let the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation have the power, indeed let it be ordered to use without interest the money created by the Bank of Canada, and then not only C.M.H.C., small house owners, industrialists, municipalities or the provinces, but all the people will get a dollar's worth for every dollar borrowed from the corporation. That is what we want. We advocate a happy equilibrium between the monetary system and our physical potential I see that the minister is looking at me. As long as we do not adopt such a monetary policy to make financially possible in Canada what is physically desirable, we will be running around in a circle and we will be losing our time as the minister is bound to find out within a few years.

[Text]

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Chairman, we heard the minister's opening speech explaining the policy of the government, or at least what seemed to be the policy of the government. I think it is a sad commentary on the attitude in our country today that when we are discussing what I believe could be one of the most important programs yet put forward by this government or by any government, if this government means business as the minister seemed to indicate, we have had in the press gallery one, and at the moment, two reporters furnishing the news to the public. This afternoon at five o'clock when we were discussing a resolution having to do with the flag—and I am not suggesting for a moment that the flag is not an important issue—there were a dozen or more reporters in the press gallery.

I am not being too critical of the press, Mr. Chairman, because the press is a rather good mirror of public opinion. Unfortunately the public are not very interested in this subject. After all, we have bought the image which has been sold to us by the image makers, the public relations people, and we like to think we live in an affluent society in this country. We do, in so far as housing is concerned, if we happen to be fortunate enough to be earning $6,000 a year or up. If you can afford to pay $15,000 for a house, if you can afford to pay $100 or $150 a month rent for an apartment, you have no difficulty.

There are hundreds of apartments in Ottawa, Montreal, Toronto, Winnipeg or Vancouver which can be rented tonight if you can pay that amount of money.

However, Mr. Chairman, if you are unfortunate enough to be earning $50 per week or if you are unfortunate enough to have four or five children and you have to live in one of the many slums or semi-slums which are a blight on the face of every city in this country, then of course you are out of luck. The majority of people and, I am afraid the majority of the members of this parliament, are not very interested. We have done an excellent job of building hundreds of thousands of homes in Canada since the end of world war II. But what have we built for the people who really need assistance? What have we built in the way of subsidized, low rental housing units? We have built less than 10,000.

I should like to think the minister's speech indicated a new policy and that the resolution outlined a real program that would be pushed ahead. We have lived with this kind of policy ever since world war II. The act, as it has been up until now, has not been a bad one. If you compare it with the legislation in European countries or in the United States, it is not much worse. Yet, these other countries have been able to build houses for the people who really need them, while we have done virtually nothing. One of the reasons we have done virtually nothing, Mr. Chairman, is that the federal government has merely prepared an act and said to the provinces or municipalities, "Yes, we are prepared to help; yes, the money is there". The federal government has been prepared to pay a substantial part of the subsidies required for financing housing units for people who cannot afford to pay an economic rent themselves. Having done that, the federal government has forgotten all about it.

What we will not face up to is the fact that in most provinces the provincial governments have shown very little interest. In most cities, I think I could say in all cities, the city councils are to a large extent made up of men who come from the professions of law, insurance, or real estate. I speak with some knowledge on this matter, having served on the Winnipeg city council and having attended a number of conferences of mayors and municipalities. These members represent on the city council those people who have already purchased their own houses and who are already living quite comfortably. So we tend to ignore the people who just cannot afford to pay for decent accommodation. It is easy to drive away from this building, to drive down Carling avenue and quickly get to the west end where the new housing developments are located. We ignore the fact that two blocks off Wellington one can see houses—I should not call them houses—one can find accommodations which are a disgrace in a country that has the wealth of Canada.

The minister gave some statistical information in his speech the other day. I should like to enlarge on some of the figures which he used. I have taken these illustrations from the 1961 census figures. Of the 4.5 million homes that we have in Canada, over 400,000 have only cold water facilities; over 200,000 of these are in the city. Almost 400,000 homes have no installed bath or shower, and 168,000 of these are in urban areas. This is in the year 1964, in a country that has the wealth of Canada, a country which has all the resources needed to provide homes for the people. Of the 4.5 million homes, over 200,000 in urban areas have shared toilet facilities which are shared by two or more households. Of the 4.5 million houses over a million and a half were built before 1920 and therefore, in most cases, need major repairs. Of the 3¼ million urban homes, over 900,000 were built before 1920.

In my own province, almost one third of the urban homes were built before 1920. We do not have the brick houses that you have in eastern Canada, so many of these homes need major repairs. Of the 4.5 million homes in Canada, only three million are heated by a furnace while a million and a half are heated by stoves, space heaters or less. Of the 3¼ million homes in urban areas, over 750,000 were heated by a stove, a space heater or worse. If you look at the refrigeration facilities, you see the same situation. Almost 400,000 homes have no refrigeration facilities at all. Of the 3¼ million urban homes, over 100,000 have no refrigeration facilities.

Now, Mr. Chairman, it is easy to get lost in statistics. When one talks about a million homes, he tends to forget the individual case. We have heard from the member for Greenwood, from the member for Vancouver East and from the minister about some of the conditions in which some of the people in this country live.

My own city of Winnipeg is far from being the worst, but I wish that all members of parliament could have a look at some of the conditions which we permit to exist at this time. I know the minister has had the chance to do so.

A couple of years ago a Winnipeg newspaper carried an article dealing with the conditions. They listed the fact that in one home, of many which they visited, the only way in which the rats could be kept out was by boarding up the holes through which they came. They pointed out that children had been seen playing in houses condemned a year or more ago by the city but which had not been pulled down and had been seen coming out of these condemned houses swinging rats by the tail.

A family of seven lived in a house 12 feet wide which had only two tiny bedrooms. The father, mother and one baby slept in one bedroom and the other four children slept in the other bedroom, three of them sleeping in one bed. They had to live in that kind of house, of course, because the father was only making $200 a month and the most he could afford to pay for rent, unless the family cut down on its food bill, was $50 a month. So this was the kind of house in which they were living. Around the corner there were two families living in three rooms, with no closets, no bathtubs, no hot water.

In a survey made of one of Winnipeg's oldest areas in 1960, and I use this survey because nothing has been done to improve conditions in that area since, the welfare council of greater Winnipeg found that of 309 residential buildings only 1.76 per cent could be classified as being in good condition, 25.6 per cent in fair condition, 27.2 per cent in poor condition and 45.26 per cent in very poor condition. According to the report, in the same area 20 per cent of the houses have toilets shared by more than six people, 27 per cent have no baths, 32 per cent have no washbasins and 34 per cent are heated only by stoves.

Finally, after years of the kind of haggling to which the hon. member for Vancouver East has just referred, after years of planning and discussions between the city of Winnipeg, the province of Manitoba, the government of Canada and Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation, a beginning has been made in the city of Winnipeg. The first redevelopment project in Winnipeg is now under way. As a matter of fact, the minister has issued an invitation, which I and other members from Winnipeg will certainly accept, to go to Winnipeg toward the end of the month for the official opening. I have had the opportunity of seeing the houses in which the people were living, and they were living under the same kind of conditions which I have already described, although I was referring to a different area in which no redevelopment is yet planned. I have also had the opportunity of seeing the housing units into which these people are moving.

I could criticize the plans which were made; I could criticize some of the details of the new project, but it is a fantastic improvement for the people who are moving in there. But, Mr. Chairman, let us face the fact that this housing project of which I am speaking, which the minister has mentioned and of which we can all be proud, will only house a couple of hundred families. When you realize that Winnipeg has literally thousands of substandard units, to say that we in Winnipeg have finally begun to meet the problem by rehousing a couple of hundred families is merely to indicate that we have barely begun, and how little we have done to meet the problems which face us.

In the redevelopment area in which close to 2,000 people had been living most of the houses were over 50 years old. A house built in 1889 to accommodate two people was found in a recent survey to be housing seven. A house that had a single family back in the early 1900's was occupied by three families with a total of 16 people. Of the 337 families in the area, 129 had five or more children and most lived in cramped, poor quarters, some without bathtubs and hot water.

Such was the shortage that tenants in rooming houses in these areas were taking in roomers. A high percentage of the people there, who were by no means paying low rents, were receiving welfare assistance. In other words, the people of Canada through their municipal, provincial and federal governments were and are in fact subsidizing slum landlords. This is true in every city in Canada. It is true of Ottawa; it is true of Montreal; it is true of Toronto; it is true of Vancouver. This is something of which we should all be thoroughly ashamed. As I have said the accommodation they are moving into is fantastically better.

A very good reporter in the city of Winnipeg wrote an article in the Winnipeg Tribune of December 28 last in which he describes the contrast and I should like to read a couple of paragraphs. He says:

> Next spring Mr. and Mrs. E. are going to plant flowers in front of their home....All their married life they had lived in the slums of Jarvis ave. Two months ago they moved to the city's first low rental housing development at Burrows-Keewatin. In the slums the snow is grey with dirt and grime from crowded living. At their new home the snow is as clean as the neighbourhood.
> In front of their apartment is a wide expanse of sod, waiting for the shrubs and trees in the spring. At their old home their five children were strangers to grass and flowers. It had no yard and the front boulevards were ground to dirt from use....
> At Jarvis the lights are naked bulbs, with cords hanging from the ceiling. Mrs. E. needed no more persuading. Their apartment has two storeys and a basement. There are three bedrooms. The kitchen is bright and efficient with new equipment and ample cupboards. It is not elaborate, for an eye was kept on costs. But there is nothing of the appearance of cheap row housing. It has an air of solidity. And it has more breathing space outdoors than many commercial blocks.

I could go on, Mr. Chairman, but I think I have indicated what can be done and what the minister talked about so eloquently the other day. But how many units of this type have we built in this great country? I have already mentioned that Winnipeg is just building its first project for less than 200 families, and we need several thousand. I doubt that we have built 10,000 public housing units altogether in Canada, despite the fact that we probably need 200,000 units in our cities alone.

We are doing almost as bad a job in the field of supplying adequate housing for our old people. Tens of thousands of our old people are living in the central parts of the cities of Canada in single rooms. They are cooking on a hot plate and reading by that little naked bulb which hangs from a cord in the centre of the ceiling.

We have seen what can be done. The service organizations and the Legion branches should be given a great deal of credit for the work they have initiated in every city in Canada, for the units they have built in which old people in receipt of old age pensions can live at a relatively modest rent. They are to be congratulated and the government which encourages this should be thanked; but when you compare what has been done with the existing needs we can see how little we have actually done.

It has been estimated in my own city that despite the efforts of the service clubs and the Legion we have accommodated just 700 of the 4,200 people who need special accommodation, and for the rest we are still giving them the kind of talk which the minister gave us this afternoon.

I do not want to be too critical of Toronto, as probably half the public housing units built in Canada are in Toronto; but if you compare what has been done in Toronto with what has been done in the United States, really it puts us to shame. I say this, even though we in Canada like to think the Americans are pretty callous and business minded, and we do not like to follow their lead in everything.

For the past four years Toronto has been talking about redeveloping the tumbledown section south of Queen street, opposite the new city hall. In the same period of time the city of Hartford has spent almost $45 million redeveloping a similar downtown area. Boston, which has a population about the same size as Toronto, has a 300 man redevelopment staff, while Toronto has a staff of just four people. In New Haven, which is about a quarter the size of Toronto, they have allocated 1,000 acres for redevelopment. That is as if Toronto had tackled the whole area bounded by Bathurst, Yonge, Bloor and Queen Streets. In Baltimore one in every five houses in that city has been marked for redevelopment.

Similarly, if one goes to Europe and looks at Great Britain, Sweden or any of the other western European countries, he can see projects for housing tens of thousands of people, projects which make ours look absolutely sick.

I was happy to hear the minister's speech and I am looking forward to having a chance to examine the bill in detail. But I suggest to the minister, and to the government, that the best bill in the world will not do the job which is required because too many of the provinces and the cities have wanted to ignore the problem. They seem to feel that if they ignore it, it will go away by itself. The minister can have the best bill in the world, and have virtually unlimited money available, but if it is only theoretical it will not accomplish very much.

If we are going to get on with the job of clearing out the slums, putting the people in the low income groups and the people who have reached retirement age into the kind of houses we would like to see them in, then it will be the job of the minister, his deputy, and central mortgage and housing to explain to the public, to the provincial governments and to the cities of Canada what can be done, what needs to be done, what should be done; and to explain how little this will cost in money, and certainly how little it will cost in comparison to the ills which are the results of the ignoring of horrible housing conditions which has gone on all these years.

I hope we will give less thought to the housing of people in the upper income brackets, people about whom the hon. member for Greenwood spoke, because they have been able to get housing accommodation and will be able to get it. It is time we thought about the people who need housing and who, until now and under previous governments, have been almost completely ignored.

[Translation]

Mr. Côté (Chicoutimi): Mr. Chairman, while we are at the resolution stage of a measure to amend the National Housing Act, I would like to make a few remarks in order to help families who may take advantage of this act. Indeed, one can say that up to now, the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation is an organization that has rendered prominent services to Canadians. In fact, I have had the opportunity of taking advantage of it myself, and I have been very pleased with it. Nevertheless, there are surely many improvements that could be made to this act.

First of all, I would like to call the attention of the minister responsible for the administration of this corporation to the fact that there is only one French Canadian on its board of directors.

I do not think that is being fair to French Canadians, who represent 30 per cent of the Canadian population. I suggest there is room for improvement there, because it is not by giving them one member out of ten that we are giving French Canadians a fair deal.

Mr. Chairman, I notice also that the balance sheet shows an accumulated reserve in the mortgage insurance fund, etc., of $122,-440,000. And, once again, I do not think the main purpose of the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation is to accumulate reserves, but to serve the Canadian people and to try and grant as many loans as possible in order to promote the building of family housing units.

For instance, if I am not mistaken, the minister stated the other day that 100,000 dwelling units were needed in Canada. It is a truly extraordinary number of dwellings and when considering the needs of, families it is therefore urgent to take the means to facilitate the construction of housing units for all families who wish to take advantage of this legislation.

Mr. Chairman, I also note that the money will be drawn from the consolidated revenue fund, that is from taxes. I wish to point this out, because I consider that it is an extremely serious anomaly to tax Canadians once again in order to increase the assets of this corporation. In my opinion, owing to the power held by parliament, such a situation could easily be corrected by returning some regal rights the Bank of Canada. The latter could make some funds available to the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation at a nominal cost instead of levying them by means of taxes, as this bill seems ready to do.

That would make a truly substantial change and it would make capital directly available to the consumer, because it is said that activity in the building trade is a sign of prosperity. It is a fact that a great activity in the building trade is profitable to the whole nation.

On the other hand, when the building trade slows down, thousands of businesses are affected and thus, thousands of people are thrown out of work. Therefore, the federal government should take back its legal rights and grant the credit required to the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation at a nominal or administrative cost, because the system as it is actually advocated, is basically incorrect and fundamentally wrong.

[Mr. Côté (Chicoutimi).]

Mr. Chairman, I should like to point out that in the development of residential housing, it is important to consider that the majority of houses built today for families are a bit too small. Plans should be taken into consideration to provide for the building of larger houses to meet the requirements of families.

Another very important point is that the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation should not only grant loans in urban areas, but also in rural communities, because many family heads and individuals do not like to live in urban centres, but would like to build their own homes or have them built on contract. And if C.M.H.C. could grant them a loan, the social condition of a large number of families would be improved as a result.

Finally, I call the attention of the minister to the fact that the Quebec government grants a 3 per cent rebate on family houses in accordance with some rather strict standards. The federal government, in my opinion, should consider the possibility and feasibility of granting a rebate of at least 3 per cent to all the borrowers who took advantage of the National Housing Act because, as some hon. members mentioned, it is a difficult problem today for thousands of family heads to meet their monthly instalments, because the interest rate is too high.

Therefore, that advantage of a 3 per cent rebate should in fact be extended to all parts of Canada and not only to a special area of our country. It would a wonderful opportunity to be of assistance to the Canadian people.

[Text]

Mr. Macdonald: I should like to address a few words on this subject, as one who comes from a constituency which has within its limits not only one third of the existing public housing in Canada but also substantial areas of ground which should be redeveloped for public housing or otherwise included in an urban renewal program.

I should like to make a few comments on what was said by the hon. member for Winnipeg North. He referred to the fact that in the city of Toronto we have been dilatory over the years in developing the south side of Queen street. He was critical, I gathered, because this project is not going forward. I would point out that the development proposed for the south side of Queen street is not a housing development but a commercial redevelopment. In my opinion housing has a priority which should be well ahead of the kind of civic monument which is in the minds of those who are contemplating this redevelopment.

One aspect of the speeches made by both the hon. member for Winnipeg North and the hon. member for Vancouver East was an exhortation to the minister to get on with this particular job. Both of them ignored the fact that responsibility for the primary initiative has under the constitution of our country been given to the municipalities. It is with the municipalities that the initiative in this field lies. It is they who must decide how the downtown areas are to be redeveloped, how land is to be used, and so on. It is they who must put up the basic equity which will make these developments possible.

However, I agree with the hon. member for Winnipeg North that there have been serious shortcomings from the municipal standpoint. He gave a number of examples from Winnipeg and I will give one from my own riding. In an area not a mile away from where Toronto is proudly raising its new city hall, down a narrow laneway with broken sidewalks can be found a row of 15 or more houses about 75 years old, leaning at a precarious angle, with windows broken and the refuse deposits of several weeks lying outside uncollected. My visit was made in January of this year in response to a request for assistance. In the house I entered there was no running water in the bathroom, the toilet had fallen off the wall on to the floor, the ceiling had fallen in in several rooms and in one, immediately above the kitchen, it was possible to see right through the floor. The furnace was not operating and had not been operating since October. I remind you, Mr. Chairman, that my visit was in January and that the city of Toronto has a specific bylaw requiring landlords in these circumstances to heat buildings. I was advised subsequently by the public health inspector for Toronto that he had had to issue an order requiring the tenants to clean out the lice and cockroaches in this building. Yet for this hovel the occupants were paying $55 a month, a substantial amount of what they were receiving from city welfare sources. Once again, this is not something out of Oliver Twist in 19th century Britain, nor is it mid-depression Britain pictured by George Orwell in "The Road to Wigan Pier". These are conditions which exist in metropolitan Toronto in 1964; I may have mentioned an extreme example, but many other such cases exist.

The root of the problem is failure on the part of the general public to realize that there are these pockets of bad living conditions and it is our responsibility and that of the public generally to recognize that they do exist. It rests with the municipalities to assume their responsibility in this connection. First of all, something must be done at the municipal level to enforce the bylaws already on the books. I brought the particular example I have just given to the attention of several municipal councillors in Toronto and they looked with horror on my suggestion that the bylaws should be enforced, pointing out that the enforcement of bylaws was unpopular politically. I am not suggesting that this problem will be solved by mass housing developments of the kind which have been referred to by one or two hon. members. In 1949, with assistance from the federal government, the Regent Park North project was built in Toronto largely at the instance of the late Mayor Robert Saunders. This was followed in 1956 and 1957 by the Regent Park South project, the two together making up about 3,500 units. These particular projects, which led to the congregation of a large number of residents in a relatively small area, engendered social problems all their own. It is reassuring to note from the resolution on the order paper that the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation has learned from the Regent Park experience that it is far better to partially dehabilitate an area, using some of the existing structures where possible, as opposed to the mass levelling and reconstruction which was carried out in the case of Regent Park. In the case of Regent Park South, the land cost over half a million dollars an acre. With the adoption of the policy set out in this resolution, more and more adequate housing can be achieved for low income families with the same expenditure of the tax dollar. Equally, by retaining some of the houses in private ownership and by selective redevelopment we can also avoid the segregation of many welfare cases into a small area, which has inclined to create its own type of social problem in some of our developments.

I would also like to bring to the attention of the minister some further requirements which in the future I would like to see added to the National Housing Act. First I would like to see provision made in the National Housing Act to provide mass developments such as Regent Park South, and area redevelopments with recreation centres and facilities for children so that some of the social problems which have arisen in mass housing projects in which there are insufficient recreation facilities can be overcome.

I would also echo the sentiments of the hon. member for Greenwood earlier this day, when he pointed to the work of one of the vice presidents of my association, Mrs. May Birchard, toward providing daytime shelters for out of work and unemployable men. I would like to see in time a resolution introduced into this house to amend the statute to make it possible, in those areas where residential redevelopment is not possible, to clear the land and then have the city sell or lease it on a long term basis for commercial or industrial purposes in order to improve the economics of housing development elsewhere in the city. Perhaps our cities could be assisted in this way. In the example I have mentioned the project is within a quarter of a mile of major rail lines and of the new Gardiner expressway. Very obviously land is of great value there for commercial or industrial purposes. It should be possible for Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation to assist in the development of that land for commercial purposes and then to use the profit gained to subsidize improved housing development elsewhere in the city. We have heard a great deal in the last year or so about Michael Harrington's "hidden poor", that group which in one way or another our existing social measures fail to reach. Better housing will not answer all the problems of the hidden poor, but without providing better living accommodation for them none of the other social measures we might have can hope to be successful. I therefore hope that this resolution will soon pass and C.M.H.C. will be empowered by the provisions included in the resolution, to support the municipalities in engaging in this type of urban renewal project.

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Chairman, it was not our intention to hold up this resolution at all at this stage. No member of this party has risen this evening, in the hope that the committee would pass the measure through the resolution stage and we would have the bill before us. The minister informed me in a discussion I had with him that the bill has been printed and is now ready for distribution, and we have been hoping all day that the resolution would pass and we could have the bill before us so we could offer some substantive contribution to the specific measures to be enacted. Now, since several members of the parties to my left, and a government member have entered the debate I think it is only fair, even though in all likelihood there will be no acknowledgement of the co-operation we are endeavouring to give the government in this matter, to say a few words on this subject. None the less, we are eager to see the resolution stage dispensed with, and I would submit to all members of the house through you, Mr. Chairman, that more constructive contributions can be made to the debate once the bill is before us and once we have the specific proposals before the committee, particularly as they concern problems in connection with the operation of the act in local constituencies.

I could say, Mr. Chairman, that the last government, the Progressive Conservative government, when it was in office did more in that short time to improve the operation of the National Housing Act than any other government since the act was first introduced in 1935. But I will not say that because I do not want to take up the time of the house in doing so. I could, too, say that the provisions of the resolution the committee has before it are substantially the provisions of the measures that were proposed by the former government or an extension of those measures that were brought in by the former government. But I will not take up the time of the house in doing that tonight either; I think it is important that the resolution stage be proceeded with and dispensed with so we can have the bill before us.

On behalf of this party, the official opposition, I will say that we endorse those remarks that have already been made with respect to the late minister, Jack Garland, and Mr. Stewart Bates. I knew Mr. Bates personally and I received nothing but co-operation from him, and always a dedication to the operation of the act for the benefit of all Canadians. Suffice it to say that the resolution itself substantially contains provisions which were proposed by the former government, with one or two exceptions, the loans to existing homes, and so on. These are very good provisions and ones which would have seen the light of day had we not been faced with the obstructionism of the then opposition whose members now sit on the government benches.

The minister has made reference to the Winnipeg urban renewal scheme. This is a project to which he attached great importance as one of the largest in Canadian housing history. We, of course, are bound to agree with him. Here again, the Winnipeg scheme was conceived, generated and commenced by the previous government and we have nothing but praise for that scheme. I am sure the minister wants to be fair and will immediately concede that this is so. Also the provisions with regard to the extension of loans for the construction of accommodation for university students was another measure with which the former government was concerned. So I could go on, Mr. Chairman, but I do not want to take up the time of the committee in going through them item by item.

However, there are one or two provisions in the resolution which are of interest and we will have to wait until we see the bill before we can be constructive in our contributions with respect to these matters. I would hope, once again, that we can get the resolution through this evening and have the bill before us. It has been printed and is ready for distribution. Once we have it before us I am sure we will all be in a much better position to make some constructive contribution to the debate.

Mr. Stenson: Mr. Chairman, I would like to make a few remarks about this resolution. After looking through the different items in it, it is my belief that we should be attempting to give more aid to municipalities, especially those municipalities with large national housing projects and those considering urban development. I would like to speak for a few minutes this evening on the question of land assembly or the federal-provincial development which we have in Peterborough. This development was set up in 1952 by the federal government, the provincial government and the municipality of Peterborough. It includes 660 acres and the intention was to have a continuous supply of lots, but from 1952 to 1957 there was very little accomplished with regard to this development. Since 1957 a total of 692 lots have been developed and built on; but this has been accomplished over a period of 12 years, with most of the development taking place after 1957.

This is one of the largest developments in Canada at the present time. This development was divided into four or five phases but it has not given contractors and individuals a steady supply of serviced lots. I do not know whether this fault lies with the federal government, the provincial government or the municipality. This type of planning when there are no serviced lots for contractors or individuals to purchase is not good for the city. I should like to point out to the minister that this is the type of development that hinders any private developer competing in such a project. This is where I feel the federal government should consider more assistance to municipalities if this type of development is to continue.

I should like to read part of the agreement which the federal and provincial governments have signed with the city of Peterborough, and I imagine other municipalities have also signed similar agreements. This is what is required by the city in regard to services:

> At its own expense, to provide all trunk services which may be required to the edge of the project.

This item alone I feel adds a considerable burden to any municipality's tax structure. These services entail main trunk sewers, water mains and storm drains. I would also mention that traffic arteries must be built to service large land assembly projects.

Another item to which I should like to refer asks the city that no municipal tax rate or charges of any nature whatsoever be levied by the city while the lots are owned by or on behalf of the corporation. In 1952 the city turned over to the corporation 660 acres of land to develop. Since that time the city has received no taxes from this property unless it was developed and sold. This has been a subsidy that the city has been asked to carry. No private developer has ever had such concessions.

I consider that in the case of the city of Peterborough the city has lost thousands of dollars in taxes over the past 12 years. On checking with the municipality I understand that this land assembly at the present time which is owned by the corporation is assessed at $500,000. With a mill rate of 70 mills on the dollar, this amounts to $35,000 being lost by the city in taxes. Spread over 12 years means that close to $400,000 may be owed to the city of Peterborough by the corporation. I do not feel that these concessions should be granted the corporation.

Right now in this land assembly there are only ten lots available and there will be no more available this year. There are no services in there at the present time. When this site was chosen for the project I do not think consideration was given to the distance to the sewage plants. It has been an expensive drain to the city, which services the area with trunk sewers. The corporation is authorizing help for municipalities with sewage treatment plants. I think they should consider main trunk sewers, especially for this type of project. If the municipality is responsible for supplying these services it may be a reason why they are not advancing with these projects as fast as they should. The trunk service which went to this land assembly a few years ago cost over $1 million. I do not feel that all of this amount went into services in this area, but most of it did, and I understand that another trunk sewer service will be needed there shortly.

Therefore, Mr. Chairman, I think the corporation should add to paragraph (g) of the resolution, along with sewage treatment projects, main trunk sewers, water mains and storm drains which will service housing projects. We must also consider main arteries for traffic with which municipalities such as mine find themselves saddled. For this reason I think the government should consider assistance for main streets or thoroughfares which are going to service this type of development.

In the agreement to which I referred there is also an item regarding the engineering of the project. The city is asked to carry out engineering designs of all services required by the project. Such engineering design is to include field investigation, surveying, preliminary and final planning and preparation of all plans, working drawings and specifications. After they are finished the city is allowed to pick up 3 per cent of the cost of this project from the corporation. Any businessman realizes that any engineering or consulting firm would get at least 10 per cent on this type of work. I imagine that this government would not want to pay anything less, and here again I feel that the cities are subsidizing the corporation.

Another feature I should like to bring out regarding this project, something which the contractors must contend with, is that when lots are being purchased in land assemblies the builders must pay double price. If the lot is selling for $1,500 to individuals a builder must pay $3,000; and on completion of the home, if the builder sells it at the price set by C.M.H.C. he is refunded the extra $1,500 which he paid for the lot. This is referred to as an end price. I realize that this clause was inserted to protect the public from speculators and builders, but at the present time I do not think that these controls are desirable or necessary. Competition among contractors building this type of home makes it very unlikely that prices will rise. It might also encourage builders to put better workmanship and materials into the homes if this selling price is not applied. This set price tends to make builders cut corners and thus lower the standard of the homes which people are purchasing today.

I have spoken to the minister regarding this matter and I feel that he is going to have an answer for me. I feel that the corporation should take a careful look at the Peterborough area and other similar areas with a view to seeing that more lots are made available for builders, so that cities such as Peterborough are not left to pick up all the cost of these subsidies. I understand that the federal and provincial governments lose no money in this type of development, but I feel the municipalities are certainly subsidizing them. I feel that if these subsidies are needed they should be carried out by the government. Before I sit down, I should like to say that I am not criticizing this development in Peterborough or this type of project. I am criticizing the financial burden that is being loaded upon the municipalities.

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Chairman, I think it is a long time since we witnessed such an unwarranted display of parliamentary self-righteousness as that demonstrated by the hon. member for Yukon a few minutes ago. He occupied the time of this house in complaining that some members were obstructing the passage of this resolution. Then, he spent seven minutes making inconsequential remarks.

Since I am a great respecter of the rules, I wish to make a few remarks which are more appropriate at the resolution stage—

Mr. Winkler: That is a matter of opinion.

[Mr. Stenson.]

Mr. Herridge: —than on the bill. I do not know what is happening to my right, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Winkler: I was saying that was only a matter of opinion.

Mr. Herridge: Yes, that is generally the case in this house.

Mr. Knowles: That is what this house is for.

Mr. Herridge: I want to say that I rise to support the resolution. Personally, I am very pleased to note the provisions relating to further assistance to provinces and municipalities in carrying out urban renewal programs authorized by Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation. This is a very important aspect of this question to a number of communities in my constituency. I am very glad that the measure will provide for the inclusion of existing houses in urban renewal programs. Then there is the matter of providing loans to co-operative associations and charitable corporations to assist in the construction of accommodation for university students and their families. The resolution also refers to authorizing the corporation to make loans and contributions to provincially or municipally owned housing agencies for public housing projects or subsidized housing accommodation for families of low income. I believe that that is very necessary indeed.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I wish to make a few remarks. I must say that I appreciated the tone and the tenor of the minister's remarks.

I thought his opening statement introducing this resolution was most appropriate. It is obvious some considerable thought has been given by the minister and the officials of Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation to the particular needs in Canada at this time which make these amendments necessary. I have a few suggestions to make. In contrast to the hon. member for Yukon, I do attempt to have ideas.

First of all, I suggest to the minister that greater consideration should be given to the smaller communities, especially in the unorganized districts. I am not underestimating what corporation officials have tried to do in the past. The insurance companies have overlooked these isolated villages, incorporated or unincorporated, because I understand they do not like the cost of administration from a central office in Vancouver, or some large city. There is also the difficulty that ensues as a result of their distance from the investment and the lack of opportunity to oversee it periodically. Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation has the staff and the facilities to render these services and to give advice to the organizations and people in these smaller communities who are anxious to take advantage of the provisions of the act and who will be more anxious to take advantage of the amendments that are indicated now.

I make this suggestion, Mr. Chairman, to the minister that there should be more visits by officials of the corporation to the smaller communities. I realize that this is not always easy, but they should contact the proper organizations which, in some cases, will be the city council, the chamber of commerce, the Rotary club, the Legion, farmers' and women's institutes or other organizations. The corporation officials should advise them as to what can be done under the act, and the policy of Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation with regard to the administration of the regulations relating to the various sections of the act.

Now, I believe it is necessary that there be a wider understanding of the purposes of the act and of the opportunities that are provided under the act. If I may give an illustration, last year one or two communities in my constituency were quite put out about the fact that organizations and individuals could not obtain loans from the corporation in areas that were outside the accepted or, shall I say, the ancient boundaries of the village. I discussed this with one of the senior officials. I forget his name, but he was the least bureaucratic type of person I have ever met. He came up to my office and explained the whole situation. I asked him to write me a letter outlining the policy of the corporation in this respect. Then I was able to send this letter back to the organizations concerned and to the builders concerned. They were quite satisfied because they realized they were not being picked on. They were under the impression at the time that this little community was the subject of some discrimination. Once they understood the situation, the feeling of indignation passed away. There has been a local official visit this district and give a talk to the chamber of commerce, but he dealt with the situation on a purely local basis without indicating to them that this was a national policy and there was no discrimination.

I believe that there should be a great deal done to increase the understanding of the act and the advantage that can be taken of it. In this way, a good deal of misunderstanding would be avoided. I want to support what previous members have said in respect of the need for the extension of homes for senior citizens. In my opinion, it is pathetic to witness the distress of older people who are wrenched away from their friends and familiar surroundings because they have to go to a larger centre to live in one of these homes for senior citizens. I do urge that special consideration be given to this problem by the officials of the corporation. They should go to these smaller communities and inform interested local organizations such as chambers of commerce, women's and farmers' institutes, the Legion, Rotary clubs and so on, who may be interested in sponsoring one of these projects, what can be done under the act. Their advice in planning a project like that would be most useful indeed.

I have been asked to bring to the attention of the minister the need for increased accommodation in the city of Nelson. I am not going to speak at length; I am going to give him the details of these complaints later. I have been asked to mention this in the house—

Mr. Francis: I wonder if the hon. member would consider making some of these remarks at the bill stage so that we can get this resolution through now.

Mr. Herridge: I am watching the clock. I said I was not going to detain the passage of the resolution. However, when I have been asked by my constituents to rise in this house and speak, I do so, and nobody stops me.

In any event, I have been asked to raise the question and I want to deal very briefly with the correspondence. I have a letter here from the editor of the Nelson Daily News, who is very concerned about this situation that exists in Nelson.

He says:

> A private concern by the name of Transco Development Limited has indicated their intention and desire to construct a large high rise apartment building in Nelson with accommodation for slightly over 70 families. Financing is being attempted through Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation.
> There seems to exist in the minds of C.M. and H. officials some doubt as to the need for decent accommodations in the city of Nelson to the extent proposed. From my own personal experience in Nelson I can truthfully state that there is a decided lack of decent rental accommodation in Nelson from the standpoint of housing or apartments. Most of the available rental facilities are of ancient construction and many of them stand vacant for this very reason. Many people are unwilling to accept substandard accommodation and poor living conditions when their income would provide much better if only the proper type of facilities were available.
> It would be a shame if the city of Nelson were to lose this opportunity to provide a mere handful of families a decent place in which to live. As member for Kootenay West you can do your constituents a great service by bringing this matter to the attention of the proper authorities in Ottawa and perhaps it would be a good idea if Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation was informed that the people of the Kootenays will not sit still much longer waiting for development and progress which only easier financing can attract. Perhaps it is time that people of the Kootenay investigated the possibility of bringing American development funds into the province. I trust that you will give this matter your early attention, sir.

Then I have a letter from the corporation of the city of Nelson in somewhat similar vein. I have another letter from Nelson school district No. 7 about a survey. I have another letter from the Nelson chamber of commerce in similar vein. I also have numerous letters from various firms in Nelson interested in the building of these apartments and quite a large number of letters from persons employed in Nelson who are seeking accommodation. I urge the minister and his officials to give further consideration to the need for increased accommodation in Nelson to meet the increase in employment, population and economic activity.

I have one other matter to mention and I am quite sure that if the hon. member for Port Arthur was here he would say that this is a Victorian idea. I am accused by my colleagues on some occasions of having some Victorian ideas. I have raised this question before but I have not had a very sympathetic response from any former minister or the officials. However, I expect a more sympathetic response from the present minister because he knows something about the lumber industry. He has been closely associated with it and he knows all about forest materials.

I suggest that when houses are being built in a district where lumbering is the major industrial activity, every consideration should be given to using wood in its various forms in the building of houses, instead of shipping in asbestos shingles. If they are put on the side of a house and a boy happens to throw a rock at them they break up in a year or two. I urge that every consideration be given to permitting the building of houses from local materials as far as possible, and in our district of course they are wood products.

My second suggestion is that consideration should be given to loans to persons who wish to build log homes. This is a point about which I can well understand the hon. member for Port Arthur might snort, but I think the suggestion offers some scope for the officials of Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation to investigate. In the Kootenays we have young men who are building homes and are importing synthetic materials. They are putting asbestos roofs on their homes. At the same time Californians are coming up to the Kootenays and taking pictures of the exterior and interior of log homes. Then they are going back to California and buying logs, and these very men who are buying asbestos for the roofs of their houses are making shakes to be sent to California at a terrific price.

I happen to be one of those persons who are interested in the production of shakes, and if the minister or his officials will read the literature with respect to the value of shakes they will realize that they make the most efficient roof that has been devised by mankind to date. I have shakes on the roof of my office which were put there in 1898, and they are almost as good today as the day they were put on.

I do ask that consideration be given to the granting of loans to persons who can prove that they can have nice log homes built. We have plenty of first class timber of the right type. We have plenty of cedar for the production of shakes. I should like to see some variety in homes. I am not suggesting that this type of home would be suitable in the suburbs of a large city, but this type of home is very suitable in small communities and rural areas. I do urge that consideration be given to introducing some variety into housing designs. I am one who is not much given to conformity. I should not like to live in a house that was exactly the same as my neighbour's, and like hundreds of others in the same suburb. I like variety, and I think most people do if they get the opportunity to take advantage of it. I do urge that consideration be given to the granting of loans to persons who want to build log homes.

We have a lot of young men in our district who are quite capable axmen. They are interested in it, and once they see log homes and see the possibilities for beauty both on the exterior and the interior they are very taken with them. They would like the opportunity to use their own skills and local materials in order to build homes that would be most suited to the district in which they would be built, and would be something a little different from the uniform houses that are produced today, and I suppose necessarily so because of the attempt to reduce costs. I see that you are looking at me with a rather anxious eye, Mr. Chairman, so at this point I will conclude my remarks.

Resolution reported and concurred in.

Mr. Nicholson thereupon moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-102, to amend the National Housing Act, 1954.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the house leader what the business will be for tomorrow and Wednesday.

Mr. Favreau: Mr. Speaker, tomorrow we shall proceed with the debate on second reading of the bill to amend the Farm Credit Act, after which we will take item No. 5 on today's order paper, a bill to authorize the construction of a bridge across the St. Lawrence river between Ste Foy and St. Nicolas. If there is time left tomorrow we will take second reading of the bill to amend the National Housing Act although, beginning Wednesday, unless some other arrangements are made after consultation with the house leaders, we will be taking the resolution, which will be printed tomorrow on the notice paper, for the purpose of obtaining the ratification of the Columbia river treaty and protocol.

Mr. Churchill: If there is some urgency about the bridge across the St. Lawrence would it not be wise to take it first? I doubt if it is controversial although I do not know what the facts are.

Mr. Favreau: This is an excellent suggestion and we could take it first; I think it was not controversial. That would be a proper order of business, I think.

Mr. Knowles: For the convenience of members can it be definite? We will take it either way, but let us be definite.

Mr. Favreau: If the parties agree, as suggested, let us make it definite and take it tomorrow afternoon.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

(Subject matter of questions debated under adjournment motion).

A motion to adjourn the house under provisional standing order 39A deemed to have been moved:

CANADIAN FLAG—SUGGESTION FOR ONE DISTINCTIVE DESIGN

[Translation]

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): Mr. Speaker, on May 6 last I asked the following question of the Prime Minister:

> In view of the fact that Canada has been an adult and independent country since the Statute of Westminster, could the Prime Minister assure the house that his government will give us but one distinctive national flag, without union jack or red ensign, so that Canada may not be mistaken for some foreign country as happened at the time of the Suez crisis?

Mr. Speaker, personally I object entirely to the inclusion of either the union jack or the red ensign in any bill for, in my opinion, both flags represent imperialism and foreign domination.

I would prefer a bill establishing a single distinctive flag bearing, for instance, a single maple leaf.

Those who are against the inclusion of such a symbol because there are no maple trees in certain parts of the country should remember that the coat of arms of Canada includes lions and yet, I have never seen one in our forests.

The government is asking us to take illogical action when it invites us to accept two flags.

Mr. Speaker, what would you think of Napoleon if, when he was crowned emperor of the French, he had proclaimed the tricolour as the official flag of France to please the revolutionists and if, at the same time, he had kept the white flag fleur-de-lis to keep the support of the Bourbons and the aristocrats?

Mr. Speaker, I hope the Minister of Justice will have another try at it, for he failed in his duty by accepting two flags, including the union jack; I hope he will make amends, so that we may have one distinctive flag which will be a symbol of unity and not a symbol of division in the country.

Mr. Speaker, I am in favour of only one flag, without any foreign symbol, because we are a sovereign nation which, on the domestic level, is self-governing and, on the international level, is not subservient to any other country.

> Sovereign does not mean absolute, for every country is subject to public international law.
> We can state with pride that our country enjoys today the eight main attributes of a sovereign state.
> These are the right to legislate; the right to give our legislation extraterritoriality; the right to have diplomatic representation abroad; the right to have Canadian courts of last appeal; the right to declare peace, war or neutrality; the right to amend our constitution according to our wish and our decision; the right to negotiate and sign our own treaties; and finally, the recognition of our sovereignty by the other countries of the world.
> Many factors and events have enabled the realization of such a maturity. But the most outstanding was the Statute of Westminster passed on December 11. 1931—

Mr. Speaker, I took my inspiration for the foregoing from a speech made in the house a few years ago by the former member for Sherbrooke, Mr. Maurice Allard.

Mr. Speaker, I hope the government will reconsider the matter and make amends.

We have seen tonight on parliament hill a scene of division which reflects to some extent the picture of our country today.

I hope that the government will give us only one distinctive national flag and not two. Personally, I would rather see it wait a few years instead of giving us two symbols, two flags representing two Canadas, that is the complete destruction of national unity.

Mr. Habel: The last chance.

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Speaker, I ask you to call to order the hon. member for Cochrane (Mr.

Habel) who, behind the curtains, is making remarks—

I ask you, Mr. Speaker, to call to order the hon. member for Cochrane.

[Text]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The hon. member for Port Arthur.

[Translation]

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Speaker, parliament is waiting for the government's answer. It is illogical to refuse it that answer.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION— WITHDRAWAL OF FILM RESPECTING PRIME MINISTER

Mr. D. M. Fisher (Port Arthur): Since I raised this question in the house I had an opportunity to make remarks about it the other night in the grievance period, but there was no answer from the government benches. I intend to put the question again with some added information. I see the Prime Minister's valuable, emotional and colourful parliamentary secretary is here and I am looking forward to a brilliant response to my question, such as he gave last week when he entertained us all with that wonderful reading from one of the Prime Minister's speeches.

The question is really the relationship between the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson), the Prime Minister's office, an independent producer of films, Intervideo Productions Limited and its head, Richard Ballentine. I should like to begin by putting on record some opinions of one George Hogan which appear tonight in the Toronto Telegram because in this case I agree with the opinions expressed and I think they set out the points I wish to make. Mr. Hogan says:

> The C.B.C. has the right not to show the film if it so wishes. And I personally think the country's Prime Minister ought to have the right to ask that a film about himself not be shown if he feels it will be personally or politically harmful.
> But surely neither has the right to achieve these purposes by hiding behind charges which may well destroy the career of a man who has done his job in good faith.

That seems to be the problem. The latest news in this case is that the C.B.C. has informed Mr. Ballentine that it refuses to pay him for the services rendered in connection with this film unless he gives up the slash prints which he feels he will have to show in order to vindicate his reputation. Well, I am making an effort in association with some other members to arrange for the railway committee room to be available some night so that Mr. Ballentine can show the film there and be sure of an audience of people who will perhaps be most expert in judging whether the film is good or not. We shall put it on and see what led Mr. Reeves Hagan of the C.B.C. to say that it was just a peep show and that the production showed a lack of intellectual grasp.

I have been trying to find out something about the Prime Minister's lack of intellectual grasp, or his intellectual grasp, by reading some of his material and I have not yet arrived at any decision because it is a hard thing to decide whether a person lacks intellectual grasp or not. I want to begin this part of my comment by saying, though, that the Prime Minister obviously is not very decisive if he has to bring in every Tom, Dick and Mary to give an opinion as to whether this is a good film and puts him in a good light or not. I think one of the real unfortunate aspects of this is that though we have a minister of culture, the Secretary of State (Mr. Lamontagne), he was not even called in to look at the film. Instead, we have Tom Kent saying it is brilliant, Mitchell Sharp saying it is an astounding document and Keith Davey telling us it is absolutely brilliant. And still it was turned down.

I want to ask whether it was turned down because it showed the Prime Minister trying to make a difficult decision about whether he wanted to watch the world series game or hear from the Minister of Labour (Mr. MacEachen) about the S.I.U. problem which was forcing itself forward into a crisis. This may seem picayune but it is important. Why, after six months preparation, after all these screenings, after all this enthusiasm by the C.B.C. and its public affairs department, was there this sudden switch? Either the Prime Minister, after all this advice from his coterie, who gave their decisions as to whether it would show him in a favourable light, so informed the C.B.C. and they switched, or we need an answer from the C.B.C. as to how they can be so wasteful and extravagant and so much off on the wrong track to spend six months and $35,000 on something that at the last minute they say is not technically good enough. The question arises whether Mr. Hagan, the public affairs representative who was dealing with this matter, was overruled by the senior people in the C.B.C. If they did overrule him, does it come down to the fact that the senior executives of the C.B.C. overrule the heads of their departments? Or did they get a message from the Prime Minister's office? We do not know. All we know is that this is one of the silliest, most wasteful affairs imaginable. On the one hand, they spent all this time and money to find out that something was technically inferior at the end, and so publicly slur the producer; or it is a really tragic situation of inadequate liaison between the Prime Minister's office and the C.B.C.

I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that we have to have answers to these questions, and we need good, clear answers. Questions have been put on this subject and I think we should have a reply from the government now. Before concluding, I would like to say a word about this aspect of the matter. I hope we can prevail upon the government so that we can see this slash print that the C.B.C. demands back and which they want to suppress. I hope we can see it right here on parliament hill, so we can get the whole story on the world series and see whether its producer is so technically incompetent as the C.B.C. has had the nerve to say.

Mr. Jack Davis (Parliamentary Secretary to Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, with reference to the film "Mr. Pearson—the man and the office", two things, I think, should be made quite clear: first, that the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation thought up the idea; and second, it was the C.B.C. which finally decided not to release the film. This was to be a candid camera production; it was to cover a day in the life of a Canadian prime minister; it was to cover private discussions with cabinet ministers; it was to show policy being formed. As some of this material was bound to be confidential, and because the dignity of the office of the prime minister had to be protected, the Prime Minister asked for the right to review the film. The right was readily granted and work began.

During the editing stage the film was viewed on four separate occasions. On two occasions the Prime Minister himself was present; the first was in December in Toronto, to see the earliest assembled version, and the second was in Ottawa after substantial editing but without the advantage of a sound track. All discussions as to content were carried on with the C.B.C. by members of the Prime Minister's staff, principally Mr. O'Hagan. Every effort was made to protect the editorial prerogatives of the producer.

The office of the Prime Minister is content that there was no transgression in this area. At no time was any judgment as to the quality of the film transmitted to the C.B.C., formally or informally, by any member of the government or any representative of the Prime Minister.

NORTHERN AFFAIRS—ALASKA HIGHWAY—INQUIRY AS TO NEGOTIATIONS WITH UNITED STATES

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, the question that stands in my name concerns the Alaska highway, and I am glad to see that of all the responsible ministers who were supposed to be here tonight to answer questions, the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources (Mr. Laing) is at least in his seat. The question arises out of a press report I read in the Montreal Gazette concerning a speech the minister made in Vancouver to the Vancouver chamber of commerce. The Gazette refers to the minister as having at last caught the vision, which they term the bold, booming vision. The contents of his remarks to the chamber in Vancouver inferred, according to the press article at least, that there had been some discussion with the government of the United States with respect to a joint cost-sharing project for the paving of the Alaska highway. The minister knows that I have asked several questions on this subject in this house over the last year of the Prime Minister, the Secretary of State for External Affairs, the Minister of Public Works, and of the minister himself.

I should like to read to him now a copy of a letter which I have in my possession written by Mr. Frederick G. Dutton, the assistant secretary to Mr. Rusk of the United States. The letter is headed up on department of state stationery of the United States government and is addressed to congressman Rivers, with whom I have co-operated for some time in regard to the paving of the Alaska highway. The letter is dated March 11, 1964, and reads as follows:

Dear Congressman Rivers:

I refer to my letter to you of November 15, 1963 in response to yours of November 5 requesting that this department open discussions with the government of Canada to ascertain whether or not Canada is sufficiently interested in the idea of blacktopping the Alaska highway to consider some joint cost sharing arrangements.

As I said in my previous letter, the department felt it necessary to review the matter with other interested agencies prior to opening any discussions with the Canadian government. In the absence of a United States government initiative in support of such a proposal, the department did not feel that a direct approach to the Canadian government requesting their views was appropriate. However, the department has taken the opportunity of calling to the attention of the Canadian government the bills recently introduced into congress, H.R. 9667 and H.R. 9716, and S. 2417, relating to this proposal and providing copies for its information.

The minister is also aware that last February 21, 1964 I asked a question in this regard of the Minister of Public Works, and his reply indicated that until an economic assessment had been completed on the economic feasibility of paving the Alaska highway the Canadian government did not intend to proceed further with it.

My specific question last Friday, I believe it was, to the minister asked for his comments with respect to the press article, and whether the Canadian government had had any discussions with the United States government, formal or informal, which would justify the minister stipulating in Vancouver that if the United States government offered to pay the whole cost of the paving of the highway the Canadian government should accept such a proposal. That is the way the press printed the story. It may have been distortion, because apparently several ministers have been complaining about being given unfair press treatment of late, and perhaps the minister of northern affairs did not say that in Vancouver. However, I am sure that I and certainly the house would be interested in this matter.

I am also wondering whether the minister would tell us whether or not any negotiations are now under way, formal or otherwise, with the government of the United States or any agency of the United States government with respect to any paving program on the Alaska highway; whether it is to be a joint cost sharing program or whether it is to be paid for in whole by the United States; or whether the Canadian government intends to pave the highway on its own.

The other question I am interested in and I am sure the house is interested in is this. If such discussions have not yet taken place, when does the minister anticipate they might take place? The minister seems to have had this information at his fingertips when he addressed the Vancouver chamber of commerce, and my constituents in the Yukon are very vitally interested in this highway, since it contributes substantially, as the minister well knows, to the economic well-being of the Yukon throughout the length of the highway in the Yukon. Since the army will be moving out almost entirely by the end of this month, with the Department of Public Works taking over the maintenance operation—I am sure they will do an excellent job—there is a reduction of approximately $1,200,000 a year in the army payroll in the Whitehorse area alone. Therefore we are all extremely interested in what are the plans for the paving of the highway, and I would suggest that the minister take this opportunity of giving some information to the people of the Yukon regarding the government's plans for the paving of the Alaska highway. Since the minister has made certain statements to the Vancouver chamber of commerce, I think this is the least the people of the Yukon are entitled to from the minister this evening.

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): I am quite certain that there is no subject of greater interest to the people in western Canada, nor one of any greater economic interest to the people of the whole of Canada, than having a modern Alaska highway. This highway was built in 1944 as a war measure by the United States at an estimated cost at that time of $125 million. In 1946 it was turned over to Canada without cost by the United States government. Since that time it has been improved on the southern end, from mile zero at Dawson Creek, by about 83½ miles of paving northward. I am very proud to be able to say that the paving was done by a government represented by this side of the house and not the other.

If my hon. friend from Yukon is somewhat jealous and envious of the further activity we have undertaken in respect of the Alaska highway, I can understand that. We have been extremely energetic to see to it that we can amass public opinion, not only in British Columbia, in Alberta and in the prairie provinces, but particularly in the western tier of the United States which, as the hon. member will realize, notably Montana, would profit most from the use of this highway. We happen to be the corridor through which access by land is necessary if two parts of the United States are going to be put together. It seems to me that as a good friend and neighbour of the United States we owe it to them to provide better accommodation for a land connection as equitably as we possibly can. At the same time, I believe we owe ourselves the responsibility of seeing to it that we exploit the advantage we have as far as we possibly can.

Mr. Nielsen: How about negotiations?

Mr. Laing: I am coming to that, if I have time. We have been in negotiation. First of all, the Department of Public Works embarked upon a cost review. They are working on that at the present time. Lately there has been an indication from the United States that they believe that tourism is the future of Alaska. It is quite obvious in discussions that took place here in Ottawa not very long ago with Mr. Udall, that the United States is desirous of making this a comfortable highway for traffic to Alaska. Negotiations through my colleague, the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Martin), have been begun through the ambassador who is at a comparable level in Washington, to get some idea of their idea of cost sharing. In the meantime we are embarking upon a cost benefit analysis which will be announced very shortly, parallel to the one undertaken by the Battelle institute.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order; I regret to inform the hon. minister, but his time has expired.

Motion agreed to and the house adjourned at 10.25 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Tuesday, June 2, 1964

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

CANADIAN FLAG

AUDIENCE WITH HER MAJESTY THE QUEEN BY TRANSPORT MINISTER

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, would the Prime Minister be willing to tell the house the circumstances under which the Minister of Transport had an audience with the Queen? Was that at the request of the Canadian government, and had it to do with the flag question?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the minister was in England on a private visit and, as is quite normal for ministers of the crown, he asked for an audience with the Queen and was granted an audience. He informed Her Majesty of the terms personally, as she had been informed by cable, of the resolution which will be before the house shortly.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Did the Prime Minister tell the premier of Newfoundland that the Minister of Transport was going to London in order to consult with the Queen on this question?

Mr. Pearson: No, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Then, Mr. Speaker, so there will be no mistake about it, I would like to ask the Prime Minister to table the correspondence between himself and Premier Smallwood, and in particular the wire dated May 27 in which Mr. Smallwood received information on this question. I would like to direct the Prime Minister's attention to Premier Smallwood's words. The following is a report appearing in the Evening Telegram of May 29:

> Premier J. R. Smallwood told an A.Y.P.A. gathering in St. John's last night—

That was May 28:

> —that the Newfoundland representative in the federal cabinet, transport minister J. W. Pickersgill, was in London Thursday night to see Her Majesty the Queen on the flag issue.
> The premier said he was informed of this by Prime Minister Lester B. Pearson.

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Transport did not go over to London to see the Queen on this or any other matter. He was in London and asked for an audience with the Queen to inform the Queen of the terms of the resolution, as I have just said, which was on the order paper and of which she had been informed by telegram. Surely, Mr. Speaker, that is a normal and courteous procedure to adopt.

Mr. Diefenbaker: That is not an answer to my question, which was whether the Prime Minister told Mr. Smallwood, when he had not told parliament, that the Minister of Transport went over there for the purpose of discussing with the Queen the question of the flag.

Mr. Pearson: I have just said that he did not go over for that purpose.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Did the Prime Minister tell Mr. Smallwood that? The answer is silence.

Mr. Pigeon: Yes or no.

Mr. Woolliams: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I asked a question yesterday—

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Lapointe.

[Translation]

Mr. Gilles Grégoire (Lapointe): I should like to put a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker—

[Text]

Mr. Woolliams: A supplementary question—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I have recognized the hon. member for Lapointe.

Mr. Woolliams: This is a supplementary question in reference to one I asked yesterday.

[Translation]

Mr. Grégoire: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Could the Prime Minister tell us whether the union jack constitutes the royal standard of England, Canada, Australia and other countries of the commonwealth or whether the Queen has her own standard and colours?

[Text]

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, the union jack is the royal union standard. The Queen also has a personal standard.

[Translation]

Mr. Grégoire: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Could the Prime Minister tell us what other countries of the commonwealth of British nations have provided in their statutes that the union jack could be flown as a symbol of their adherence to the commonwealth of British nations?

[Text]

Mr. Pearson: I will have to make inquiries about that, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Diefenbaker: You certainly will.

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister and is asked in view of his answer to the Leader of the Opposition. Did he have that knowledge yesterday when he answered me and said he did not know why the Minister of Transport went to Great Britain and why he had an audience with the Queen?

Mr. Pearson: I do not yet know why the Minister of Transport went on a private visit to Great Britain.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Pearson: Hon. gentlemen may laugh, but the Minister of Transport informed me a week or ten days ago that he would be in Great Britain on private business if that were agreeable to me, and for the days involved I agreed. I suggested that when the Minister of Transport was in England if he wished to have an audience with the Queen on this matter it would be quite proper to do so, and I do not apologize for that at all.

[Translation]

Hon. Léon Balcer (Three Rivers): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Prime Minister whether he will take into consideration the statement made by the parliamentary secretary to the Minister of Trade and Commerce who, according to a report published in the June 1 issue of the Sherbrooke La Tribune, said the following:

I do not like the idea of two flags.

[Text]

Mr. Pearson: I will be glad to take that statement into account, Mr. Speaker.

[Translation]

Mr. Réal Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Prime Minister a supplementary question. In view of the answers he has just given, could he tell us if the Minister of Transport was sent to London to meet Her Majesty after some kind of consultation had taken place between the Prime Minister of Canada and the premier of Newfoundland, because apparently, during his stay in London the Minister of Transport wishes to obtain the Queen's approval, and this seems to agree so much with what Premier Smallwood will impose or try to impose on the Canadian government?

Did the Prime Minister of Canada have talks with the premier of Newfoundland in anticipation of a consultation between the Minister of Transport and Her Majesty the Queen?

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I had hoped that I would not have to refer to this matter again, but I cannot restrict the hon. member for Kootenay West and then allow other hon. members to ask far too long questions. The question which has just been asked, if I may again refer to the reasons I gave yesterday, would seem to conflict with at least three of the new rules; namely, that the question is far too long; that it contains observations which might lead to debate; and it refers to a debate or to answers given to questions during the current session. If I worked diligently I suppose I could find a few other reasons. May I call to the attention of hon. members the fact that we have had a long series of questions. The opportunity to debate this important matter will be given before too long, I suspect, and I would counsel hon. members to phrase their questions in as short a manner as possible and directly to the point.

[Translation]

Mr. Caouette: With all due respect, Mr. Speaker, I shall make my question much shorter. Did the Prime Minister of Canada send the Minister of Transport to London after having consulted with the premier of Newfoundland, to achieve the results we have now?

[Text]

Mr. Pearson: The premier of Newfoundland had nothing to do with the arrangements regarding the audience of the Minister of Transport with the Queen, nor did he make any effort to have anything to do with them.

Mr. Woolliams: As a further supplementary question, if the Minister of Transport went on private matters would the Prime Minister now disclose to the house whether he went over at government expense or at his own expense?

Mr. Pearson: I cannot answer that. However, I shall be glad to find the answer. The hon. member is asking me questions of detail which he knows cannot be answered at this time, but I will be very glad to find out the answers.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I want the words of this question to the Prime Minister to come strictly within the rules, as I thought they had earlier. I ask the Prime Minister, in view of Premier Smallwood's statement regarding this matter, also in view of the fact that he said it was an honour that a Newfoundland minister had been chosen for this mission to the Queen, will he table the telegrams that passed between him and Premier Smallwood, his reply being dated May 27, at 10.22 p.m.? Can we also have the telegram from Mr. Smallwood so that we can resolve this apparent dispute or uncertainty as between the views of the Prime Minister and the premier of Newfoundland?

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, I would be glad to ask Premier Smallwood for permission to table his telegram, and I would certainly be very glad to table my own.

Hon. Michael Starr (Ontario): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Prime Minister and ask him can he tell us whether the Minister of Transport made this trip on a commercial flight or whether he used one of the government's planes.

Mr. Pearson: The Minister of Transport will be in the house tomorrow and he will be able to answer this.

Mr. Diefenbaker: A man on a mission.

[Translation]

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a supplementary question to the Prime Minister. Can he tell us whether, before the passage of the resolution respecting the Canadian flags, we will have to rescind the order in council of 1945 respecting the red ensign?

[Text]

Mr. Pearson: We will be able to deal with these questions when the resolution is debated. On the point just raised by the Minister of Labour and others in regard to the method—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Pearson: This just shows my continuing regard for the hon. gentleman. In regard to the curiosity displayed as to whether the Minister of Transport paid his own fare, I have just been informed that the Minister of Transport went to England by T.C.A. commercial flight, accompanied by his wife and daughter. He will be returning alone today. He bought his own tickets and the visit had been arranged some time ago, long before the question of the Queen's audience arose. I hope my hon. friends' curiosity into the affairs of the Minister of Transport is now satisfied.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, now that we have that information, could the Prime Minister pass it on to Mr. Smallwood, who claims great honour was done to Newfoundland in having a Newfoundland minister chosen?

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, I think it is more important to pass it on to my right hon. friend.

Mr. Pigeon: As a supplementary question—

Mr. Speaker: May I ask the hon. member what the supplementary will be on? It seems to me the matter has been debated at length.

[Later:]

[Translation]

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): On the flag issue, Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask the Prime Minister a question. If the Prime Minister refuses to split his resolution on the flags and if his motion is defeated by a majority of members, can he tell the house—

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: Order. This question was asked yesterday; therefore it is repetitious and out of order.

[Translation]

Mr. Marcel Lessard (Lake St. John): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister. Can he tell the house on what occasion he thinks the Canadian government will hoist the union jack on its buildings? In what circumstances will the union jack be raised here in Canada?

[Text]

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, I will be glad to do that when the resolution is debated. It is quite obvious these questions are out of order now.

USE OF OTHER NATIONAL EMBLEMS ABROAD

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Réal Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. At this time when there is more and more talk about national emblems, we are getting in the mail here, in parliament, from an organization whose name I do not know, literature telling us about another national emblem, that is the Eskimo ookpik. I quote:

[Text]

> This wise but humorous little character has been adopted by the government of Canada as one of its emblems, and is rapidly becoming established as a symbol of Canada.

[Translation]

Is it true that, to make matters worse, another national emblem will represent us at Philadelphia in the United States?

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Under the rules given to me a question should not inquire whether statements made in a newspaper are correct.

FLOODS

BRITISH COLUMBIA—POTENTIAL DANGERS ON SKEENA RIVER

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I wonder if I could divert the government's attention to something a bit more important, and ask the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources whether his attention has been drawn to the fact that the Skeena river is at least approaching the levels of the 1948 flood; that it is flooding in the Bird's lake area; that some bridges are in danger of being washed out by potential floods, not only there but in other parts of B.C.; and may I ask the minister if he would use his good offices to work in conjunction with the provincial government to prevent any disaster occurring in that entire area.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Yesterday we had a question on the Fraser river and it was allowed because it was very urgent and I understood the flood conditions could be quite serious. This question does not seem to have the same urgency. Would the hon. member put it on the order paper?

Mr. Howard: It has precisely the same urgency, because the lives and property of people are involved in the flooding of the Skeena river just as dangerously as in the flooding of the Fraser river in 1948.

Mr. Speaker: Would the hon. member put it on the order paper; and may I quote the rules of the house which have been furnished to me, and of which the hon. member must know?

Mr. Howard: I must decline your invitation to put it on the order paper, Mr. Speaker.

LABOUR RELATIONS

GREAT LAKES—NATIONALITY OF S.I.U. NEGOTIATORS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Michael Starr (Ontario): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Minister of Labour. In the present negotiations between the S.I.U. and the shipping companies operating on the great lakes, are all those who are negotiating on behalf of the S.I.U. Canadians?

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I will be glad to make inquiries and advise my hon. friend.

[Mr. Caouette.]

AIR CANADA

WINNIPEG MAINTENANCE BASE—REMOVAL NOTICE TO EMPLOYEES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Prime Minister. Is the Prime Minister aware that Air Canada has given notice to a number of its employees at Winnipeg that by June 4 they must choose between transferring to Dorval and forfeiting their seniority rights? Is this in keeping with the undertaking given by the Prime Minister that the employees would not be forced to move?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I have no information to that effect but I will look into the matter immediately.

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT

USE OF MAILS FOR DISSEMINATION OF RACIAL DISCRIMINATION LITERATURE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Barry Mather (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Postmaster General a question. Is the Postmaster General aware of the fact that a new batch of what we commonly call hate literature has arrived in Ottawa and is being circulated to members of this house, postmarked Winnipeg, and seeking among other things to vilify the Prime Minister by linking him with an alleged international plot to have alien troops occupy Canada? I have the material here.

Hon. J. R. Nicholson (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend gave me notice of this question but I must say I have received no such literature. I have made inquiries and my department has received no such literature. If my hon. friend or any other member of the house has any such literature and will send it and the envelope or container in which same was mailed to me or my department, we will look into the matter.

INDUSTRY

CONSTRUCTION OF PULP MILL IN CANADA BY YUGOSLAVIAN FIRM

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Industry. Is the Export Credits Insurance Corporation contemplating making an advance of some $21\frac{1}{2}$ million to a Yugoslavian firm for the construction of a $40 million pulp mill in Canada?

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Industry): Mr. Speaker, the Export Credits Insurance Corporation reports to parliament through the Minister of Trade and Commerce, and I would refer the question to him.

Mr. Douglas: May I direct the question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce.

Mr. Speaker: Would the hon. member put the question on the order paper?

Mr. Douglas: This is not a detailed question, Mr. Speaker. I am simply asking for a yes or no with respect to whether such an advance is under consideration.

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, negotiations have been going on for some time between the Yugoslavian government and the Canadian government with respect to the financing of a pulp mill. I am not quite certain at what stage the negotiations now stand.

POWER

PEACE RIVER—AUTHORITY FOR FLOODING BEHIND DAM

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I have a question of great urgency to the conservationists of British Columbia because they are interested in what the federal minister's decision will be, and I address it to the Acting Minister of Transport. Has the B.C. hydro and power authority asked the minister for his approval for the flooding of the reservoir behind the Peace river dam without the removal of forest growth and vegetation except for the partial clearing of certain channels necessary to meet the requirements for very limited navigation?

Mr. Speaker: Order. This seems to me an ideal question for the order paper.

Mr. Herridge: I should like to expand on it at ten o'clock, Mr. Speaker.

AGRICULTURE

REPORTED DEPLETION OF FARM CREDIT LOAN FUND

On the orders of the day:

Mr. A. D. Hales (Wellington South): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Agriculture. Is it a fact that the Farm Credit Corporation is refusing to grant loans because the fund is depleted?

Hon. Harry W. Hays (Minister of Agriculture): No, this is not correct.

SOYBEANS AND SUGAR BEETS—REQUEST FOR ANNOUNCEMENT OF SUPPORT PRICES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Danforth (Kent, Ont.): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Agriculture. I wonder whether the hon. gentleman is now in a position to answer my question, taken as notice by the parliamentary secretary on April 9, regarding 1964 support prices for soybeans and sugar beets which are now planted.

Hon. Harry W. Hays (Minister of Agriculture): I can probably answer the question now. As far as soybeans are concerned, we have not crossed that bridge as yet. We hope to do so very soon. As far as sugar beets are concerned, the government will be supporting them at $13.72 a ton, the same as in the last few years.

EGGS—STEPS TO IMPROVE REPORTED LOW PRICES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. A. D. Alkenbrack (Prince Edward-Lennox): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Agriculture. Last week eggs sold in Napanee for 21 cents a dozen. What is the minister doing to improve the ridiculously low price for this product now being produced at far below cost by the poultrymen of Canada?

Hon. Harry W. Hays (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, we have a stabilization board, with which I am sure the hon. member must be very familiar, which supports eggs at 34 cents a dozen. I would suppose that in this case if these people keep their tickets they will be receiving a deficiency payment when the year is completed. It might be of interest to hon. members to know that last year the price of eggs was very, very high and consequently the demand for chicks was also high. In some provinces we had a 30 per cent increase in poultry, hence the large amount of eggs. But we do have a support program at 34 cents a dozen, and I suppose these people will be receiving a deficiency payment.

Mr. A. D. Hales (Wellington South): Mr. Speaker, would the Minister of Agriculture advise the house whether he has given any consideration to paying these deficiency payments on a quarterly basis?

Mr. Hays: We have been considering this, Mr. Speaker, but no decision has been made.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

SYDNEY, N.S.—USE OF "MAPLE LEAF FOREVER" BY LOCAL STATION

On the orders of the day:

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Robert Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): May I pose a question to the minister who reports to the house for the C.B.C. Yesterday morning between six and six thirty I listened to radio station CBI, the C.B.C. station at Sydney, Nova Scotia, at which time they commenced their programming with the playing of a song entitled "The Maple Leaf Forever". May I ask the minister if this song has been adopted by the C.B.C. as a new national anthem?

Mr. Speaker: Would the hon. gentleman put this question on the order paper.

REQUEST FOR SHOWING OF FILM RESPECTING PRIME MINISTER

On the orders of the day:

Mr. D. M. Fisher (Port Arthur): I wanted to ask the Secretary of State a question, Mr. Speaker, arising out of the decision of Intervideo Productions to screen a slash print of the Pearson story next week in Ottawa at Crawley Films. I wanted to ask the minister if he would consider asking the C.B.C. if it would show one of the good prints of this particular film to parliamentarians at approximately the same time, so we could see this film at its best and get a better idea as to the decisions that were taken in regard to it.

Hon. Maurice Lamontagne (Secretary of State): I will put the request of the hon. member to the C.B.C. and advise him later.

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): I have a supplementary question for the Prime Minister. I had considered raising it as a question of privilege, but perhaps this is as good a place as any to raise it. The Prime Minister will recall that on May 21 he indicated to the house that he had not previewed the film in question in his office. Last night his parliamentary secretary, when answering a question raised by the hon. member for Port Arthur at the adjournment, had this to say as reported on page 3829 of Hansard:

> On two occasions the Prime Minister himself was present; the first was in December in Toronto, to see the earliest assembled version, and the second was in Ottawa after substantial editing but without the advantage of a sound track.

Can the Prime Minister now say whether or not he saw the film in his office in Ottawa, and if not where he did see it in Ottawa?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): I did not see it in my office. I saw it in Toronto at a studio, and it was shown in an office in the east block. I saw part of it there but the sound track was so bad I left after a few minutes because it could not be understood.

Hon. Paul Martineau (Pontiac-Témiscamingue): I have a question supplementary to the previous question asked of the Prime Minister. I was wondering if, as a sophisticated critic of art, he would tell us what he thought of the film "Mr. Pearson" when he saw it?

Mr. Pearson: I found it exceedingly interesting, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Revealing?

REPORTED SMALL CANADIAN COVERAGE IN NEWS BROADCASTS

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Réal Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Secretary of State?

I appreciate that he has nothing to do with the C.B.C., but I would like to know if there are any reasons why, for example, the C.B.C., on its nightly television news, gives us about five minutes of Canadian news and ten minutes of foreign or international news. Would it not be possible for the Secretary of State to suggest, at least, even if he is not responsible for the C.B.C., that we get Canadian news over the C.B.C. network?

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: Would the hon. member put this question on the order paper.

[Translation]

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Speaker, I think the Secretary of State was ready to answer my question.

Would you allow him to do so?

Hon. Maurice Lamontagne (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, all I have to say is that I shall be very glad to pass on to the C.B.C. the views of the hon. member, and I shall inform him of their answer.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

SOUTHEAST ASIA—POSSIBLE CHANGE IN CANADA'S COMMITMENTS

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): When the Prime Minister was in New York on the week end, according to the press he discussed with President Johnson the functions of the Canadian truce teams in Laos, Cambodia and South Viet Nam. Would the Prime Minister be prepared to tell parliament whether there is in contemplation any further authorization or enlargement in the functions of the truce teams; and was there any discussion or consideration given to the enlargement of Canada's role or any new commitment contemplated for Canada in this area?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): No, Mr. Speaker, there is no consideration being given to the enlargement of Canada's role in that area, nor was this matter discussed in the talks I had with the President in New York. The President did bring up the question of Southeast Asia, which is a very serious area in terms of peace and security, and at the same time expressed a hope that we would be able to get our new commissioner out to Viet Nam with a minimum of delay. The Canadian representative on the commission left Viet Nam some weeks ago. He was to have been replaced by a senior officer of the department, but that officer's wife took seriously ill and this postponed his departure. The President expressed the hope that a Canadian would be out there as soon as possible, and I think the new commissioner has left for Viet Nam today.

PRIVILEGE

MR. LANGLOIS—USE OF FRENCH AT DORVAL AIRPORT RESTAURANT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Raymond Langlois (Mégantic): I rise on a question of privilege. I had intended to bring up this matter on the orders of the day, but in view of the nature of the subject I now think it is more fitting to raise it as a question of privilege. It was to have been addressed to the Minister of Transport but in his absence I will address it to the Prime Minister in order that the departmental officials may correct the situation now.

[Translation]

My question of privilege is in reference to a crown corporation, more especially Air Canada. I received yesterday by mail a letter from Mr. Roger Laplante, 80 Bennett street, Thetford Mines, Que., who in the evening of May 16, stopped at the Dorval airport and went to the dining room called "Le boulevardier". He then ordered a meal for himself and his family and, after having greeted the waitress, he simply asked her whether she spoke French. This is what she answered:

[Text]

"No, sir. I am sorry. We can serve in any other languages but French. We have no use for it here."

[Translation]

I would ask the Prime Minister to see that unfortunate incidents of this kind be avoided in the future, not only for this gentleman and his family, but also for all those who might receive similar answers. Could the Prime Minister also suggest to this person to make sure that such incidents are never repeated?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I shall inquire about this matter and give the hon. member an answer soon, I hope.

MR. WINCH—REFERENCE TO FLAG BY MEMBER FOR JOLIETTE-L'ASSOMPTION-MONTCALM

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Harold E. Winch (Vancouver East): I rise on a question of privilege. I know that according to normal procedure a question of privilege should be raised at the time it occurs. The matter to which I refer occurred last night between ten and ten thirty, during which period we operate rather strict rules, so this is my first opportunity, as I see it, to rise on a question of privilege with regard to it. It is something which I cannot ignore.

I wish to draw to your attention, Mr. Speaker, a statement made in this house after ten o'clock last night by the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm (Mr. Pigeon). It is to be found reported in Hansard on page 3827 in the left hand column, almost the last paragraph. It reads:

> Mr. Speaker, personally I object entirely to the inclusion of either the union jack or the red ensign in any bill for, in my opinion, both flags represent imperialism and foreign domination.

Sir, I may be a sentimentalist, but I wish to rise on a question of privilege and say this; that we have been living under a flag for many years and developing our country under that flag for many years—

Mr. Caouette: Which flag?

Mr. Winch: The red ensign.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Winch: —and for a member of this house to get up in his place and say that this flag—until we have a new one, perhaps—is representative of imperialism and the domination of our country is, in my opinion, entirely wrong because it is completely untrue; it is false; it is despicable, and I think any man who would say that, in this House of Commons, requires psychopathic treatment.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

[Translation]

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): Mr. Speaker, as far as the question of privilege is concerned, I wish to make it clear that I gave my personal opinion according to my own convictions and conscience. If I offended some hon. members, I beg their pardon, but I wish to repeat that I maintain my statement.

I would not like anyone to think that I intended in any way to offend the feelings of any hon. member who is not in agreement with my opinion. This is a democracy, we have a bill of rights and if I made such a statement, I assume the whole responsibility and I would not like any other hon. member of the house to take offence at the statements I made.

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. These matters are highly emotional and they are charged with feeling. I do not think the Chair should try and improve the atmosphere at the moment, except to say that we have a lot of important business before the house and I suggest that we get on with it.

TRANSPORT

MONTREAL—REQUEST FOR REMOVAL OF TRACKS

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Hon. Léon Balcer (Three Rivers): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Public Works.

Since I had the pleasure of listening to him on television Sunday, although, unfortunately, I missed a portion of his speech, I should like to ask him if within a few months the problem of the railway in Montreal East is not settled, he still intends to submit his resignation as Minister of Public Works?

Hon. J. P. Deschatelets (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend from Three Rivers seems concerned. However, in order to put his mind at ease, I shall tell him that the consideration of that problem is getting along very well and we think that we can find a solution. I also take this opportunity to say that the management of the C.N.R., of which Mr. Gordon is president, showed a lot of understanding in looking for a solution.

For the benefit of the former minister of transport, could I add that it is a problem that could very well have been settled over six years ago?

Mr. Balcer: Unfortunately, the hon. member for the riding in that district of the city of Montreal has never resigned.

INQUIRY OF THE MINISTRY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): My question is directed to the Secretary of State. In view of the fact that today's press carries an announcement that Sir Guy Powles, the New Zealand ombudsman, will be visiting Canada in September to address the Canadian Bar Association, would the minister consider inviting him to Ottawa in order that he might discuss a similar topic with the committee on privileges and elections?

Some hon. Members: Order paper.

CROWN ASSETS

MANITOBA—DISPOSITION OF FORMER RADAR STATION SITES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Robert Simpson (Churchill): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Industry. I wonder if the minister could inform the house whether any decision has been made in relation to the possible disposal of the sites at Cranberry Portage and Bird, Manitoba, which were formerly occupied by installations of the mid-Canada radar line.

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Industry): We have been holding discussions with representatives of the government of Manitoba in an effort to make the most beneficial use of these sites now being given up by the Department of National Defence. No final decision has yet been reached.

Mr. Simpson: Has any offer been made to turn these sites over to the Manitoba government?

Mr. Drury: We are not negotiating on a basis of firm offers. This is a discussion with the object of putting this land to the most advantageous use.

CANADIAN CONSTITUTION

REPORTED REMARKS BY CANADIAN HIGH COMMISSIONER TO U.K.

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Maurice Côté (Chicoutimi): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the right hon. Prime Minister?

Following this statement made at Lennoxville last Sunday by Hon. Lionel Chevrier, as reported in Le Devoir of June 1, 1964:

> If we want our two linguistic groups to cooperate satisfactorily, we will some day have to amend the constitution.

Could the Prime Minister tell the house whether those views reflect the intention of his government and, if so, if that objective will soon be reached?

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: These are statements made by private individuals outside the house, and it seems to me such questions are out of order at this time.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

PROVISION FOR UNEMPLOYED NOT RECEIVING UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE OR SOCIAL ASSISTANCE

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Lucien Plourde (Quebec West): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Minister of Labour a question?

What does the Minister of Labour intend to do for the unemployed getting no unemployment insurance or social assistance?

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: While the question is very interesting, it certainly raises a matter far too large for the hon. member to expect an answer on orders of the day.

[Translation]

Mr. Plourde: Mr. Speaker, may I transfer my question for debate at ten o'clock this evening?

[Text]

QUEBEC—STEPS TO PROVIDE WORK FOR UNEMPLOYED

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Hon. Théogène Ricard (St. Hyacinthe-Bagot): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs.

Does the minister have a few projects which he could submit to his colleague, the Minister of Labour (Mr. MacEachen), in order to provide work for the 150,000 unemployed in the province of Quebec?

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: Would the hon. member put this question on the order paper.

HEALTH AND WELFARE

VANCOUVER—REPORTED CONTAMINATION OF MILK SUPPLY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, I have wanted for some days to ask a question of the Minister of National Health and Welfare. I recognize that she is still convalescing, so I would like to ask the question of her parliamentary secretary, who probably could take it as notice.

An hon. Member: He is convalescing too.

Mr. Douglas: I would like to ask the government if they will give some information to the house and the country as to what action is being taken with reference to the fact that the milk supply in the city of Vancouver has now reached a serious stage of pesticide contamination, to the point that a great many citizens are apprehensive and are not sure whether they should continue to allow their children to drink from the milk supplies in that city.

Mr. J. C. Munro (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I would like to take the question as notice, if the hon. member will agree, and I will try to give him an answer tomorrow.

EARTHQUAKE DAMAGE

CLAIMS ON DISASTER FUND BY FEDERAL AGENCIES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. G. L. Chatterton (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask a question of the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources. Is the minister aware that a federal government agency, namely the Port Alberni harbour commission, has made a claim of some $55,000 on the disaster fund; and if so, is the government considering increasing its grant so there will be no danger of federal agencies taking money that should rightly go to private people who suffered from the tidal wave?

Mr. Speaker: It seems to me this is a question for the order paper.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

REQUEST FOR EARLY CONSIDERATION OF BILL S-26

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Thomas M. Bell (Saint John-Albert): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister with respect to Senate Bill No. S-26 introduced yesterday, concerning the Roosevelt-Campobello park. Will the government give consideration to moving this bill forward quickly, because similar legislation has been passed in the United States; it is non-controversial and it would be a help to have this program ready before summer. I ask this question because it appears it is going to be a long summer if we are to deal with all these other matters, and the Minister of Transport is the only one who has had a holiday.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the minister's holiday was a short one and I hope the rest of us will get a longer one. But in view of the fact that it is likely to be a long summer, I hope we can get this non-controversial bill through quickly and at an early date.

Inquiries of the Ministry

PUBLIC WORKS

NOVA SCOTIA—REQUEST FOR RECONSIDERATION OF HARBOUR PROJECTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Donald MacInnis (Cape Breton South): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Public Works. In view of the statements made over the week end by the Minister of Labour in reference to the step-up in public works projects throughout Nova Scotia, would the minister take into consideration reactivating the projects in Cape Breton South, especially those concerning harbours?

Mr. Speaker: Would the hon. member put this question on the order paper. I realize its importance, but it is a question for the order paper.

ROYAL CANADIAN AIR FORCE

OTTAWA—U.S. PARTICIPATION IN AIR FORCE DAY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): I have a question for the Minister of National Defence, who I see has just stepped out of the chamber, sir. It arises out of information I have received in connection with the air force day program this Saturday at station Rockcliffe. Can the minister inform the house whether any arrangements have been made, either by his department or by the government, for participation in the proceedings on air force day this coming Saturday; because we are told that the majority of that participation is to be by personnel and equipment of the United States air force rather than the Canadian air force.

Hon. Lucien Cardin (Associate Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I would prefer to take that question as notice and answer it tomorrow.

Mr. Nielsen: We will have no more air force then.

GRAIN

PRINCE RUPERT, B.C.—INCREASE IN ELEVATOR CAPACITY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether I can direct a question to the Minister of Agriculture. In order that we might have in the city of Prince Rupert a brand spanking new edifice over which to fly our national flag, can the minister announce when he will authorize the expansion of the grain elevator facilities there?

Hon. Harry W. Hays (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, we still have this under very serious consideration.

[Mr. Pearson.]

ROYAL VISIT

POSSIBLE CANCELLATION DUE TO BRITISH ELECTION

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Gilles Grégoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, yesterday afternoon I put a question to the Prime Minister and he replied that he would get the necessary information. I asked him if, in the event of a general election in England next fall the Queen would be prevented by regulations or protocol from coming to Canada.

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: It seems to me that this question is completely out of order.

HOUSING

REPORTED DECREASE IN CONSTRUCTION IN ATLANTIC AREA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. Russell MacEwan (Pictou): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Postmaster General, who reports to parliament for Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation. I want to ask the minister whether he has any plans for amendments to the National Housing Act which will be placed before parliament, in view of the report of the corporation that housing construction in the Atlantic area has decreased 23 per cent so far this year compared with last year. If not, I wonder whether the minister would ask the officials of C.M.H.C. to look into this matter, which is one which provides so much employment for that area.

Hon. J. R. Nicholson (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, in answer to the hon. gentleman's first question may I say that the proposals which the government have to lay before the house are incorporated in a resolution on the order paper. With regard to the second part of his second question, I will be glad to look into the matter.

BRIDGES

AUTHORIZATION OF CONSTRUCTION BETWEEN STE. FOY AND ST. NICOLAS, QUEBEC

Hon. J. P. Deschatelets (Minister of Public Works) moved the second reading of Bill No. S-21, to authorize the construction and maintenance of a bridge across the St. Lawrence river between the city of Ste. Foy, in the county of Quebec and the municipality of St. Nicolas, in the county of Lévis, both in the province of Quebec.

He said: Mr. Speaker, this is a bill authorizing the construction and maintenance of a bridge over the St. Lawrence river, between the town of Ste. Foy, in the county of Quebec, and the municipality of St. Nicolas, in the county of Lévis.

This bridge will be situated very near to the present Quebec bridge, perhaps a thousand feet up the river from the present bridge. The purpose of this bill is to comply with the Navigable Waters Act, which requires an act passed by parliament. If hon. members will pass this bill, I can assure them that the work will not begin until the plans and specifications have been examined by the experts of the Department of Public Works and the Department of Transport. If, after examination of those plans and specifications, no impediment to navigation is found, an order in council will be passed so as to permit the province of Quebec to proceed with building the bridge.

The same procedure was followed, a few months ago, with regard to the Boucherville bridge, and I do not think it necessary to add any further detail at this stage, because this is just an authorization. It will not cost the Canadian government a single cent, for either the construction or the maintenance of that bridge. This is simply to give an authorization, and if hon. members want further information about this matter, I shall be happy to give it to them when we reach the committee stage.

Hon. Léon Balcer (Three Rivers): Mr. Speaker, I am glad, on behalf of the official opposition, to give my support to the proposal just put before the house by the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Deschatelets).

Under the Navigable Waters Protection Act, all works carried out on or above the St. Lawrence river must be approved either by the Department of Public Works or the Department of Transport. Such approval takes the form of an order in council passed by the Canadian government.

As pointed out by the Minister of Public Works, the bridge will be parallel to the present Quebec bridge. The tremendous increase in traffic in that area has made it absolutely necessary to build this new bridge, and I believe it will be of very great service to the people.

Of course, that decision rests with the provincial government and I am not in a position to discuss the amounts that will be spent by the provincial government for those various undertakings.

However, I hope that the Minister of Public Works, when the various clauses of the bill are under consideration, will be able to give us information of interest to the federal authorities because, in short, the responsibility of the federal government is to make sure that nothing will interfere with navigation or ice movements.

Moreover, I understand that it is a suspension bridge. In my opinion, it is most important to know if piers will be built in the St. Lawrence river, and if they will be located in the channel of the river. Moreover, it must be known also if those piers could eventually delay the normal flow of ice or create ice-jams. As a matter of fact, the minister might tell us if the construction of that bridge will entail the services of an icebreaker during the winter months.

We know that at the present time there is an icebreaker in service in Quebec harbour. The job of that icebreaker is to make sure that there are no jams around the piers of the Quebec bridge so that the bridge is not affected by the ice. I hope the minister will be in a position to give us that information a little later.

Mr. Speaker, there is another matter which I do not wish to labour very long, but in which I am greatly interested. I refer to a bridge spanning the St. Lawrence river and built by the provincial government.

Just recently, I had the opportunity to be present at the formal beginning of the construction of the Three Rivers bridge, a most important bridge, since it links the most important city in Canada to the south shore.

Mr. Grégoire: Order.

Mr. Balcer: Well, unfortunately, last Saturday La Presse published an article on the bridge at Three Rivers, in which Mr. Gérard Pelletier, the chief editor, asked the provincial authorities very pertinent questions which, I hope, will soon get a reply.

As my hon. friend for Lapointe (Mr. Grégoire) was so happy to point out, I am out of order. Consequently, I shall say nothing else about the bridge at Three Rivers, which will cost $35 million I believe. However, I should like to ask the minister to tell us later on this afternoon the approximate cost of those works and the date of their completion, if he has that information.

Mr. Deschatelets: In committee.

Mr. Balcer: I do not wish to insist, but I hope we will get that information.

Mr. Guy Marcoux (Quebec-Montmorency): Mr. Speaker, it was only to be expected that the hon. member for Three Rivers (Mr. Balcer) would congratulate the government which will do for the Quebec area what it has done lately for the Three Rivers area.

However, in spite of the fact that this problem does not come under our jurisdiction, since part of the bridge will be situated in the Quebec-Montmorency constituency—in the bill, Quebec is probably mentioned because it refers to a provincial constituency, but the federal riding is Quebec-Montmorency—and since especially the mayor of Lévis mentioned some time ago and has repeated quite often since that the project is absolutely fantastic and ridiculous, I wonder whether we should not try to stop it.

However, that is none of our business, and it will be up to the people of the province of Quebec to judge the actions of the provincial government.

That bridge is located only a few hundred feet from the present Quebec bridge. The purpose of building that bridge is to alleviate traffic, but its approaches will be those now used for the Quebec bridge. Mr. Speaker, I wonder really what the provincial authorities were thinking about when they decided on building that bridge which, no doubt, will afford better facilities to cross the river, but people will not be able to use it because traffic before reaching the bridge will be too heavy during rush hours.

A few years ago the Quebec board of trade as well as other organizations prepared a brief in which it stated that the best way to alleviate traffic to and from Quebec would not be to improve the situation on and around the Quebec bridge, nor to build a tunnel between Lévis and Quebec city; it would be better to build a bridge more to the east, that is between the island of Orleans and the municipality of Beaumont which is located on the other side of the river. That would make it possible to solve the traffic problem for the people coming from the lower St. Lawrence region who want to cross at Quebec city to go to Chicoutimi, the Saguenay area or the north shore. That would also enable the people coming from the Saguenay area or the north shore who want to go to Gaspe or the south shore, to get there directly, without having to go right through Quebec city to its western limits in order to take a bridge that will not be more efficient than the first because of its access roads.

Mr. Speaker, we do not want to stop this bill because the federal government has simply to make sure that the new bridge will not interfere with navigation in any way, will meet all the requirements of the Department of Transport and will not interfere either with the free flow of ice in winter.

If all those conditions are met, of course we will accept it. But since a part of this bridge will be in my riding—and even if it had been logically placed between Orleans island and Beaumont on the south shore, it would also have been in my riding—and as I am very much interested in this question, I want to point out, that in my opinion, the purpose which was stated by the provincial authorities is quite wrong. And I know, from a very reliable source, that some people bought land in the neighbourhood of the proposed bridge and that they will be in a position to sell those lots for the construction of the bridge, a thing which they would not be able to do if it were built on the east side of Quebec city.

I shall quote, once more, the statements of the mayor of Lévis, to the effect that it is absurd to build a bridge near the other one, because they would be too close, and also because the second one would lead to a municipality much less important, St. Romuald—I understand that, like for the city of Three Rivers, it is for its inhabitants the greatest city in the world, but on the south shore, the economic complex actually surrounds the city of Lévis. Besides, that is the opinion of the mayor of Lévis who feels he is managing one of the largest cities on the south shore. However, as far as I am concerned, I would go much farther to the east, that is between Orleans island and Beaumont. The bridge would then achieve the specific purpose for which it is being built.

Once again, I want to call your attention to the fact that individuals may have bought land near the site of the proposed bridge in order to take advantage of the sale of those lots. Indeed, can any level-headed person imagine the reasons for the construction of a bridge about 1,400 feet west of the first one. If any one can think of a good reason, I would be glad to hear it, and to admit that this project is sensible.

Mr. Caouette: Political patronage.

[Text]

Mr. D. M. Fisher (Port Arthur): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member who has just finished speaking is interested in this from a constituency point of view and I, and I am sure my colleagues, were interested in the matters he raised. He reminded us, as did the preceding speaker, of the question of the Three Rivers bridge and of the doubts that were put in our minds by some of the information we got last session about the costs to the federal government, and of the repairs to ensure that navigation was possible.

It is quite apparent that this is not a money bill in any sense; that it is just enabling legislation, and that all it does is protect the federal interest, but I am rather shocked that the hon. member indicated that property buying was taking place. It almost sounds as though the bad old days are back in Quebec.

Under the new regime of purity and magnificence it is almost unbelievable that this kind of thing would go on.

Mr. Pigeon: Patronage.

Mr. Fisher: I cannot believe that there is any patronage in Quebec any more, not with the government of Jean Lesage. That is one of the reasons I feel it is most unfortunate that the hon. member raised this, because in a way it is irrelevant to the bill but it does cast a bit of a slur on this great government of Jean Lesage, incorruptible and set off on a new course in Quebec provincial politics.

The hon. member for Lapointe tells me Lili St. Cyr is no longer there but that there still is patronage. Actually Lili St. Cyr was a foreign element, and I am sure patronage is also a foreign element under the great government of Jean Lesage. The predictions concerning this bill are that federal jurisdiction and federal responsibility will not come under any particular difficulty or strain, always remembering of course that so far as the Three Rivers bridge was concerned, depending which argument you supported, the federal government might have responsibility for up to $60 million as a result of something that had been entered into by the federal Department of Transport.

We are going to support this bill, Mr. Speaker, but we confess that we do not know a great deal about the implications that are involved, as referred to by the hon. member in whose riding it is going to be built. These definitely raise certain doubts in our minds which I hope the minister can allay. If, as the mayor of Lévis has said, this is a ridiculous and silly kind of business, the minister should let us have his reactions to this. He should tell us whether he is approaching it simply from the point of view that the province is within its rights to ask for this, and ours is not to ask the reason why but to do or die. I take it that is his attitude. If he gives us the assurance that the insurance provisions of the bill are adequate, we are prepared to support it.

It seems to me there is really not much more one can say in this kind of thing except to make certain that the engineers of the federal government have looked at the situation and have ascertained that the provincial government cannot get involved in some kind of projection that will cause navigation difficulties. I suppose that in regard to anything connected with the Quebec bridge everyone always remembers the history of the structure, the disaster that took place there many years ago, and the fact that it was one of the great political incidents in our parliamentary history. Because there is no question in this particular case of a federal contribution I would hope that this situation never develops with this bridge. We wish the provincial government well, although I cannot say the same so far as these property holders are concerned if the hon. member in whose constituency the bridge is to be located is correct in his facts.

[Translation]

Mr. Réal Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, I only wish to say a few words on this Bill No. S-21, authorizing the province of Quebec to build a second bridge across the St. Lawrence river between the city of Ste. Foy, in the county of Quebec, and the municipality of St. Nicolas, in the county of Lévis.

In section 3, subsection (2), we read:

> Construction of the bridge or works ancillary thereto shall not be commenced until such time as the plans and drawings referred to in subsection (1)...have been approved by the governor in council—

Now, I should draw the attention of the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Deschatelets) on the fact that works have already been undertaken last year, to make way for this second bridge which will be only 300 to 400 yards from the old bridge. Although the legislation has not yet been passed and the bill has just been put before us, work has already started in connection with a second bridge in Quebec.

Mr. Speaker, I avail myself of this opportunity to tell the minister and the government that we will not object to the construction of a second bridge. However, it would have been easier, it seems to me, to widen the existing bridge, which was built so that it could be widened. The government could have suggested to the province of Quebec, and vice versa, to construct a tunnel between Quebec and Lévis. The traffic is heavy now close to the existing bridge. The second bridge will certainly help to relieve that traffic, but we are still left with an urgent need.

Between Quebec and Lévis, there is a possibility to build a tunnel and that project would be much easier to carry out than a new bridge, for instance, between the two cities.

Traffic is very heavy between Quebec and Lévis. Lévis people have to go all the way around, drive nine miles and back, that is 18 miles, to return to Quebec right across from Lévis. The same thing applies for Quebec people who want to go to Lévis. Why? To avoid the cancellation of a ferry which is said to belong to prominent Liberals in the region and which makes a trip across every 20 or 25 minutes during the day and every hour during the night. Thus, difficulty on difficulty impedes free movement between the two cities of Quebec and Lévis.

Ste. Foy-St. Nicolas Bridge

I call the attention of the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Deschatelets) to that fact because, besides being a member of the Liberal party, he is a man who, in philosophy and action, is an authentic liberal, which means he also thinks of others and not only of himself.

I am sure that the minister can pay attention to those many requests which were presented to him in the past asking, not only for a new bridge on the site of the present bridge, but also for a tunnel between Quebec and Lévis. That would probably not cost the government any more than the new bridge. And the traffic improvement would be much greater than that anticipated by the building of a new bridge near the existing one.

We should also safeguard the provincial rights. The province requests permission from the federal government, since the St. Lawrence river, which is a navigable river, a national and even an international river, must be crossed. It is especially on that account, I believe, that permission is being asked of the federal government; second—it should be first but it is second—it is because the province does not feel financially able to build this bridge by itself. So, it applies to the federal administration for assistance in the building of this bridge.

However, the bill says that the province of Quebec requests only authority for construction and maintenance of this new bridge, which is to be located close to the old Quebec bridge.

I believe the minister should rather study the opportunity of seeing to the building of a tunnel between the cities of Quebec and Lévis. This would assist not only the people coming from outside Quebec or Lévis, but also the residents of those two localities, who number about half a million people. This tunnel would render a tremendous service to people on both sides of the river and would also be of considerable assistance to visitors whether in summer, or winter.

Mr. Reynald Guay (Lévis): Mr. Speaker, following hon. members who spoke before me, I must say that I am also particularly interested in the building of that second bridge in Quebec.

I had the opportunity—as the people of the county of Lévis know—of being responsible as president of the chamber of commerce of Lauzon for some research work with regard to the building of direct means of communication between Lévis and Quebec.

Moreover, I also attended during the week end the convention of the chambers of commerce of Chaudière and Etchemin, which unanimously voted a resolution asking for a meeting with the provincial government to discuss those means of communication between Lévis and Quebec.

I do not object to the building of that bridge, Mr. Speaker, far from it, because it would be most useful for the people of metropolitan Quebec. However, there is still an urgent need, that of some direct means of communication between Lévis and Quebec, either by means of a tunnel, as the hon. member for Villeneuve (Mr. Caouette) said earlier or by means of another bridge.

But the problem will not be solved, because the studies made either by the committee of the city of Lévis or by the bureau for commerce and industry of metropolitan Quebec, thoroughly prove that the greater part of the traffic which now uses the Quebec bridge does not come from the west, but from the east, and has to put up with the heavy traffic crossing Lévis, either going through the town itself or using the trans-Canada highway which is now located right in the middle of that locality.

Therefore, although it is a solution, I do not believe it is the real solution to the problem of communications. The problem will remain. A small part of it will be solved.

So, I ask the provincial government to continue all its research to find as soon as possible, a real solution, I repeat, a real solution to that most urgent problem, the solution of which is a necessity for the development not only of the constituency of Lévis but of the Quebec metropolitan area as a whole.

Consequently, in closing, I say again I have no objection to this bill being passed here, as several hon. members have said before me.

All we have to do is to authorize the government. We are not too much concerned with building or other specifications. I repeat that the provincial government must take the necessary steps to find a solution to this most urgent problem, for the benefit of the people of my riding in particular and of the province of Quebec in general.

Mr. Balcer: Mr. Speaker, would the hon. member allow me to ask him a question? Does he really believe that it would be reasonable for the provincial government to build a second bridge or a tunnel at the same time as that one, simply to comply with his request?

Mr. Guay: I will say this to the hon. member for Three Rivers. In my opinion, the construction of a second bridge would not be a futile expense. I know that the minister of highways and the minister of public works in Quebec have made statements on that subject. Expenditures made for that purpose are justified, as far as I can see, because, as we know, a steel complex will be set up on the south shore and other industries will eventually be established west of the Quebec bridge, which will justify the construction of a second Quebec bridge. But that does not solve, I repeat, the real problem.

I do not know, whether the provincial government, when it decided to build this second bridge, had future industries in mind, but I know that, for the people of Lévis, the problem has been there for several years and it is that problem which, for the people of Lévis, must be solved.

Mr. Robert Beaulé (Quebec East): Mr. Speaker, we are not against the building of a second bridge between Quebec city and the southern shore of the river, but I agree with the hon. member for Quebec-Montmorency (Mr. Marcoux) when he says that we should have a bridge to the east, that is at Beaumont, connecting Orleans island; that would greatly alleviate traffic congestion at the Quebec bridge.

I think that it is not so much the Quebec bridge that created traffic congestion. Of course, I am not an engineer to say that, but when you think that we have a four-lane highway to the Quebec bridge which motorists have to use to cross the river and, on the other side, traffic going only one way, you know why we inevitably have a traffic snarl.

I think that the building of a second bridge up the river from the existing one is but a half-measure.

If it is impossible to improve traffic on the other side of the bridge, on four double lanes, then I suggest that the bridge is useless and several million dollars invested for the construction of this bridge will be spent, uselessly, if it is impossible to relieve traffic on the other side of the bridge. I do not think that the construction of a bridge at such a place would be the ideal solution, besides the fact that the minister stated a moment ago that work would not be undertaken as long as the plans have not been approved by the department.

Well, as the hon. member for Villeneuve said, power cranes, power shovels and the complete machinery are already at the site of the bridge to build the approaches. Therefore, I ask the minister to secure the necessary information, so as to know if all that machinery will be used for the construction of the bridge which is discussed here.

With regard to the traffic going towards the Quebec bridge, a lot of it comes of course from the Saguenay region. It goes through Quebec city and crosses the bridge to take the trans-Canada highway leading toward the lower St. Lawrence region. It was claimed that the traffic comes from the east and not the west. I do not understand why the government of the province of Quebec discarded the possibility of building a bridge, or better still a tunnel, between Quebec city and Lévis. In my opinion, that would make it possible to get the traffic moving much faster than it does at the present time.

Indeed, as the hon. member for Villeneuve pointed out, the Lévis ferry service is owned by a company whose shareholders are mostly Liberals, and it is to please those people that the government is trying to do without the construction of a tunnel. At any rate, I should like to ask the minister whether the Quebec engineers truly intend to provide a double lane so that the traffic may move smoothly on the other side of the bridge.

It is useless to build a second bridge if it will not speed up traffic on the other side. In my opinion, the minister should get in touch with the Quebec authorities as soon as possible to ensure that traffic will move faster on the other side of the bridge.

Mr. Speaker, if the engineers who took part in the building of the roads on the other side of the bridge, had considered, instead of directing the traffic towards one area only, the building of a double lane west of the present bridge, towards an area accessible to the trans-Canada highway, we would not have to face this problem today.

Most of the traffic is not on the bridge but on the other side, on the south shore, where all the traffic has to go the same way, on a one-way road. That is why I do not understand the engineers who accomplished this feat of skill, that is a four double-lane road leading to a one-way road.

I hope then that the minister will be able to give me an answer later on, when the bill is considered in committee.

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): Mr. Speaker, I am somewhat sceptical about accepting this bill, following the statements made by the hon. member for Lévis (Mr. Guay). In other words, the federal government must approve a bill concerning the construction of that bridge which will be undertaken by the province at the estimated cost of $50 million. The initial problem will not be solved, as mentioned by the hon. member for Lévis. We, on this side of the house, do not want, by accepting this bill, to entail, for the Quebec government almost unnecessary expenditures in order to solve a problem which is not really the essential one. Moreover, as the hon. member for Lévis so aptly said, the chambers of commerce have also protested to the government of the province of Quebec, in order that this bridge might be constructed between Lévis and Quebec, and not between Ste. Foy and St. Nicholas, in Lévis county.

Therefore, I believe that the argument presented to the house by the hon. member for Lévis is a want of confidence motion in respect of the Quebec government. In other words, it will not settle the major problem as desired by the people of the towns of Quebec and Lévis.

I am wondering what we are going to do. Shall we accept criticisms of the hon. member for Lévis who claims that the acceptance of this bill would not solve the major problem pointed out by the chambers of commerce of the area or else, should we accept, on this side of the house, to approve a bill which will result in a capital expenditure of $50 million for the province of Quebec without solving the major problem at all?

Hence, Mr. Speaker, I believe the member for Lévis was right in presenting to the Quebec government an ultimatum to solve the present problem by building a bridge, or better still a tunnel between Lévis and Quebec. So, we take into consideration the notice given by the hon. member for Lévis, and I am asking the minister whether it would not be possible to postpone the discussion on this bill, since the hon. member for Lévis maintains that it will entail almost useless expenses and will not solve the major problem.

In other words, this bill will be a disapointment to the citizens of Lévis, whom he has the honour to represent in this house, as well as to the population of Quebec city.

I think it would be better if the provincial government went back on its decision, and I ask the minister to help it so that a tunnel can be built between Quebec and Lévis. I am convinced that the hon. member for Lévis will be the first to congratulate the government for the decision it will have taken then. The chamber of commerce and the people of the ridings of Lévis and Quebec will be very grateful to him for having forced the provincial government to change its decision in order to solve the problem it is facing today. In the public interest, I think the minister should postpone the study of this project, to prevent the wasting of $50 million, especially since we know that this solution will not solve the major problem.

Mr. Guay: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm has very badly interpreted my words.

Mr. Caouette: Order.

Mr. Guay: On a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker. I want to correct the words uttered by the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm.

[Mr. Pigeon.]

He quoted me as saying that this second bridge will bring no solution whatsoever to the present situation.

I never said this would not bring any solution; on the contrary, in answer to the hon. member for Three Rivers (Mr. Balcer), I said that would be a solution for the time being.

Mr. Caouette: A half-measure.

Mr. Guay: The provincial government should study the advisability of solving the most urgent problem, that is the means of communication between Lévis and Quebec.

I never said that, in taking this decision, the provincial government had not taken a good decision.

Here, we only have to approve the principle of the construction of that bridge.

Mr. Balcer: Mr. Speaker, on the same question of privilege the hon. member for Lévis tells us that the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. Before the house starts a debate on the question of privilege that was just raised by the hon. member for Lévis (Mr. Guay), I must inform the house there is no basis for a question of privilege.

As far as the hon. member for Lévis is concerned, he will have another opportunity, if the debate is protracted or if the house goes into committee, to speak again and to give the explanations he wants.

However, there is certainly no question of privilege, and I do not believe the house should discuss at this time, at any greater length, the interpretation of the words uttered by the hon. member for Lévis.

Mr. Lucien Plourde (Quebec West): Mr. Speaker, if we go by his remarks, the hon. member for Lévis (Mr. Guay) does not seem too interested in this bill. Indeed, to judge from the number of Liberal members who are in the house at present, 11 out of 35, the question does not seem to interest them too much either.

It is a pleasure for me to take part in the debate on Bill No. S-21 to authorize the construction and maintenance of a bridge across the St. Lawrence river between the city of Ste. Foy, in the county of Quebec, and the municipality of St. Nicolas, in the county of Lévis, both in the province of Quebec.

As members of the federal parliament, we merely have to authorize the construction of a bridge over the St. Lawrence and we should be glad to do so even if we feel that it would have been better to build the bridge in the eastern rather than the northern part of Quebec city as provided in this bill, considering that the new structure will be quite close to the Quebec bridge and that it would have been more useful to residents of the eastern part of Quebec city, since it would have saved them a detour to reach the city.

Naturally, the new bridge will help solve the traffic problem on the existing bridge, but the usefulness of the structure and the convenience of the people must also be taken into account. In my opinion, the most pressing need is the construction of a tunnel to connect Quebec city and Lévis. I hope the provincial authorities will submit such a request shortly since it will be a pleasure for us to give them our authorization.

In my opinion, the most important problem should have been settled and this new tunnel should have been built before considering the building of this bridge, but I think that the province is already committed, some work has already begun on the north shore of the St. Lawrence. Moreover, section 3 of the bill provides that:

—the province shall, before commencing the construction of the bridge or ancillary works, submit to the governor in council for examination and approval—

Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether the province has complied with this provision of the act since, according to the information I have received, it would have proceeded to more than the appropriate surveys. In fact, it seems that the building of the approaches is already started.

And the provincial authorities will have to inform the Canadian parliament of the location of all other bridges in the area, as section 3 of Bill S-21 so provides.

It is easy to give this information, as there is only one bridge connecting the two shores.

In their place, I would be embarrassed to propose the building of another bridge about a thousand feet above the existing bridge, especially when one is aware of the urgent needs of Quebec city's eastern section.

Use could perhaps be made of Orleans island, which seems to have been placed there by nature for this purpose, so that a bridge connecting the two shores could be built, half bridge, half tunnel. This would be easy to build and I think that this would ease considerably traffic in Quebec city and the vicinity and, by this very fact, traffic in the Saguenay area and eastern Quebec.

However, since I am not an engineer, I am not in a position to give any advice on this matter. Nevertheless, from what I have been able to note, I am of the opinion that asking to build this bridge does not show much imagination. And if I were sure that the approval of this bill for the construction of a bridge would delay the construction of the tunnel, I would be one of the first to try and stop the passing thereof, in order that the city of Quebec might be able to get a tunnel, a project which the citizens of Quebec are entitled to.

Accordingly, I accept today the construction of this bridge as an improvement, for the time being, while waiting for the construction of the tunnel, as we have accepted a temporary one at Three Rivers.

Hon. Théogène Ricard (St. Hyacinthe-Bagot): Mr. Speaker, I may not have many suggestions to offer in regard to the Quebec bridge, but I cannot let this opportunity go without making a few comments.

When travelling to Quebec city, in summertime or during the Quebec winter carnival, the motorist soon realizes that the traffic problem, when approaching Quebec city, is a matter which should be taken into consideration by the public authorities.

Especially during rush hours, even on week days, there is heavy traffic on the Quebec bridge and it is most difficult to get through.

A few years ago, it was decided to build another bridge in order to ease the situation which is most harmful to the city of Quebec, especially during the tourist season. Visitors become so annoyed that they finally get discouraged and forget about seeing the old capital. The building of a new bridge should ease traffic to Quebec city, and we should be glad that such a decision was taken.

However, if we look closely and logically at the situation, taking into account the fact that the heavy traffic comes from east of Quebec bridge, we cannot but conclude that the ideal place to build such a bridge would be between the cities of Quebec and Lévis.

I appreciate the position of the hon. member for Lévis (Mr. Guay). I know that the question of a second bridge which would be built elsewhere than between those two cities would be most embarrassing for him, because his constituents would ask him why he did not exert more pressure to have the bridge built between Quebec and Lévis.

As the hon. member for Lévis has pointed out, the construction of a bridge at St. Nicolas will only solve the problem in a temporary way. That is why I ask the hon. member for Lévis and his colleagues of Quebec city to exercise all the influence they have in order to convince the government of the province of Quebec to make sure that this problem will be solved as soon as possible and in the most sensible and permanent way.

I think that the chambers of commerce and the various public bodies are in favour of the proposed building of a bridge between the two cities, which seems to be the most appropriate location.

Consequently, Mr. Speaker, I ask the other members from the province of Quebec to make representations to their half-brothers of the provincial government in order that this matter of prime importance be settled to the satisfaction of all concerned, from the financial point of view as well as in the interest of the city of Quebec.

Mr. Gilles Grégoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, I should like to make a few remarks on Bill No. S-21. I will not deal with the traffic aspect because I feel that this problem has been well put before. The hon. member for Quebec East (Mr. Beaulé) and the hon. member for Quebec West (Mr. Plourde) have shown that the chosen site was not the best location for the bridge and the hon. member for Lévis (Mr. Guay) himself, stepping on his pride, has admitted that his colleagues of the Liberal government of Quebec were wrong. As far as I am concerned, I will deal with another aspect of the problem which is just as important, in my opinion, that is the aesthetic value of the present site.

Quebec bridge was well designed and constructed. It was built by engineers who were bent on achieving what is called the seventh wonder of the world. We had, in that part of the Quebec region, a wonderful site, a beautiful bridge. We have postcards which illustrate this very well, and we are proud to show this magnificent spot to our visitors. We are glad to have postcards and pictures which show the scenic beauties of the Quebec region.

And now, Mr. Speaker, against the most elementary notions of aesthetic values, we are going to build a new bridge right next to the one which already exists. That means people coming from the west will no longer be able to admire the beauty of the site as it exists now and those coming from the east will see a monster rising at the side of the magnificent Quebec bridge.

That new bridge is being built by the provincial government and the department of cultural affairs, which normally should protect the scenic and aesthetic wealth of our province, has shown in the past that it did not have the required competence to look after such matters and to assist in the development of such resources in the province of Quebec.

I see the hon. member for Outremont (Mr. Lamontagne), the Secretary of State, is laughing, because the minister of cultural affairs in the Quebec government is also a member for Outremont. It must be in that riding that they usually try to have elected those who could not get elected elsewhere—

Mr. Lamontagne: Order.

Mr. Grégoire: I notice that one was sent to cultural affairs in Quebec and the other to the C.B.C. in Ottawa. There must be some relationship, Mr. Speaker, because both are assigned to the same field of endeavour.

Now, the minister of cultural affairs of the province of Quebec never had anything to do with that in the past. Previously he had been appointed attorney general, and it was said that that department was the least well-organized.

As for the member for Outremont who is responsible for cultural affairs in Ottawa, he was more of a pseudo-economist.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member knows very well that he is getting away from the matter under consideration. I urge him to come back to the study of the bill now before the house.

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Speaker, in my opinion, it is very appropriate to talk of bridges about the hon. member for Outremont and the hon. member for St. Jean-Iberville-Napierville (Mr. Dupuis) because it is the bridge between Quebec and Ottawa with regard to co-operative federalism.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I do not share the view of the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm.

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Speaker, I do believe my remarks were outside the question but I must say that I could not let pass this wonderful opportunity, all the more so since the Minister without Portfolio (Mr. Dupuis) seemed to agree with what I was saying about Quebec's minister for cultural affairs.

Mr. Speaker, you will tell me that there is a difference between the artistic value of the present Quebec bridge and the construction of a new bridge. That is true, it is not the same thing. But I think that it would be advisable just the same to ask the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Deschatelets) to make sure that the new bridge will hold its own with the present one and that the aesthetic value of that site as a tourist attraction will not be impaired by the construction of another bridge which, according to the hon. member for Lévis, will solve only part of the problem.

In my opinion, the artistic and tourist aspects must be seriously considered before a new bridge is built and we must make sure that the value of the present site is not diminished.

Mr. Speaker, I think that the fact they want to build two bridges one beside the other is a sign of the Liberal philosophy as we see it now: two flags, two national anthems, two bridges. They want to give everything twofold when we need only one. Mr. Speaker, I think that it is agreed to fly a flag over each bridge—

Mr. Deschatelets: Two Social Credits.

Mr. Dupuis: Two Creditiste parties.

Mr. Lamontagne: Two leaders.

Mr. Grégoire: Incidentally, Mr. Speaker, I think it is worthwhile to point out that the Minister without Portfolio just uttered his first remark since Christmas. I think that deserves a round of applause from all members of the house.

In concluding, I should like to add that, as one living in the Quebec area and in the city of Quebec, I think that the proposed bridge will not settle the traffic problem, because most of the traffic is between Quebec and Lévis, where all the traffic from Gaspé peninsula is going to Quebec. I think the best solution would be a tunnel between Quebec and Lévis. A bridge between those two cities would somewhat spoil the scenery and it would not be as useful as a tunnel. It would be easier to build a tunnel and it would do a lot more to settle the problem.

There is also the traffic between Montreal and Quebec. So, I think that instead of building a second bridge right next the first one, it would be better to go a few miles farther up and build another bridge so that the traffic coming from Montreal and going to Quebec or vice-versa would cross that new bridge without having to tie up the traffic coming from the Beauce region to cross the Quebec bridge.

Those are a few suggestions we had to make, and I hope the Minister of Public Works, whose artistic and tourist sense of value I know and appreciate highly, will take them into consideration and will recommend to his Quebec colleagues to spare the present scenery.

[Text]

Mr. B. S. Mackasey (Verdun): Mr. Speaker, I rise basically to speak on the Quebec bridge, although I am perhaps motivated by nostalgia more than anything else because, as most hon. members know, I was born in Quebec city and spent the greater part of my years in the district known as Sillery, which has very close historical ties with the Quebec bridge. I realize that a previous speaker mentioned the historical significance of the bridge, of which I am greatly aware having had friends and relatives killed in the building of that particular bridge. I also remember survivors of the collapse of the Quebec bridge telling me of the tremendous feats of heroism and also the tremendous hardships which those unfortunate victims who were imprisoned in the steelwork suffered. I think it is also of passing interest to the house that one of the greatest spies of the first war, the German von Ribbentrop, I think his name was, worked on the Quebec bridge until the outbreak of the war.

The previous speaker, the hon. member for Lapointe (Mr. Grégoire), talked about the dual nature of our party—two flags and so forth. I would imagine that of all people in the house aware of the advantages of doing things in pairs the members of his party should remember the great year they had last year when they had two heads, the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Thompson) and the hon. member for Villeneuve (Mr. Caouette). Fortunately, I think—

[Translation]

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. The hon. member has just mentioned that there are two leaders in our movement. Last year there was only one leader, there was an assistant leader, a deputy leader. The hon. member has no right to ascribe motives to us, and he knows that very well. At that time, there was no question of two flags. We could walk together under the one and only flag.

Mr. Knowles: What has this to do with the bridge?

[Translation]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. May I remind all hon. members that we are now discussing the construction of a bridge between Quebec and Lévis.

[Text]

Mr. Mackasey: I agree to call a truce on the subject, Mr. Speaker. However, I would point out that there are lots of precedents in the province of Quebec for locating bridges within a few thousand feet or yards of each other. We had an identical situation on the island of Montreal when the previous government, and I commend them for it, built the magnificent Champlain bridge, which is situated only a few thousand yards upstream from the Victoria bridge and downstream from the Mercier bridge. I think the construction of the Champlain bridge has contributed greatly to the development of the south shore, and I humbly suggest to the members of this house that the construction of a new bridge in the general area of the present Quebec bridge will have at least as one of its side effects the hastening of the development of the south shore of the Quebec city area.

I agree, of course, with my hon. friend for Quebec-Montmorency (Mr. Marcoux) that the problem of communication does exist in his particular part of Quebec. There again bridges are needed, and I think it is the general conclusion of those who are familiar with Quebec city and its problems of communication and development that the area needs to be serviced by more bridges or possibly more tunnels. I think the hon. member for St. Hyacinthe-Bagot (Mr. Ricard), whom I respect, touched on a very significant point when he emphasized that one of Quebec city's greatest attractions is its characteristic beauty, and of necessity this must be shown and made as convenient as possible for tourists to reach. The tourist trade as it is developing at the moment flows into Quebec city usually from New York state and from Montreal, and first contact with the city of Quebec is generally made in the vicinity of the present Quebec bridge. So from that aspect if no other I think it is high time that a new bridge is built in that area.

I also agree, as a student in and friend of Quebec city, that the time is coming when construction of other means of communication between Quebec and Lévis, Montmorency and through to the island of Orleans must be provided. I think that this bridge is the first step only in the eventual development of communications on the island. In this regard I congratulate the members from Quebec who are normally so very jealous in this house of provincial rights and jurisdiction and who feel it is almost a sin to criticize the province of Quebec. I am glad to see so many Quebec members assuming their rights as federal members of parliament and passing judgment on what is happening in the province of Quebec. That is a healthy sign because it makes one realize that the members from Quebec are beginning to act as federal members of parliament and starting to realize that they were elected to the Canadian parliament, not to the Quebec legislature. I think that their criticism has been a constructive side issue, but I hope that we pass this bill as fast as possible.

[Translation]

Mr. Jean Berger (Montmagny-L'Islet): Mr. Speaker, I have no apology to make to the hon. member for Port Arthur (Mr. Fisher), because I am much more interested in this subject than he might be. As a matter of fact, every week end I use the existing Quebec bridge as well as the ferry service. I can tell you that the area I represent here and also the Montmagny-L'Islet county in particular, are interested for many reasons in the construction of this new bridge. Of course, maybe we would have a tendency to complain because we, the people of the lower St. Lawrence area, would perhaps like to have an easier way of communication before getting to the Quebec bridge.

However, the insistence shown by some impetuous provincial autonomists is a strange thing. The government of the province of Quebec, its engineers and others who are interested in the project, have decided this for several reasons. The premier of the province of Quebec, Mr. Lesage, has recognized the future importance of another bridge to relieve the metropolitan centre of Quebec city and Lévis. I know very well that the premier of the province of Quebec has given careful consideration to the bridge question. He has explained why it has to be built at that particular place.

If we look at the highway system at the entrance of Quebec city or on the Lévis shore, and at the way the laying-out normally develops, we can understand much better, if only we take the trouble to study these things, the reason why the contemplated bridge we are now discussing will be built exactly where the present engineers have advised to build it.

I am consequently in favour of the passing as soon as possible of the bill now before us because this is most urgently required. I rely upon the probity and honesty of the premier of the province of Quebec, who has assured us that as soon as the project will be economical—it will necessarily have to come to that—we shall have a bridge that will provide better transport facilities to my own constituents as well as to the people in the adjoining counties. At present and under existing circumstances, the bill is the only solution we have to improve the highway system we now have in the province of Quebec.

I have faith in the future but I believe that we shall have to keep on defending provincial autonomy. I was surprised this afternoon to see that certain impetuous members, who are in favour of provincial autonomy, had not shown great respect for that in the house—yet it is not a holiday today. Fortunately, I find however that there are still courageous members who keep a watchful eye on the provinces' autonomy and I hope they will keep up the good work, as I will myself, and as we have given proof of it in the past.

Mr. Gérard Perron (Beauce): Mr. Speaker, perhaps I might have refrained from bringing my contribution to this debate after those which we have already heard concerning the advisability of authorizing the construction of this second bridge above the one which is now handling road traffic from Lévis and Quebec as well as from many other ridings in eastern Quebec, such as the constituency of Montmagny-L'Islet.

Quite recently we found out what a traffic tie-up could be like on the Quebec bridge and even off the bridge. Fifteen days ago the hon. member for Montmagny-L'Islet, the hon. member for Lévis and myself shared that experience when we almost missed our plane for Ottawa, not because of the Quebec bridge itself, but on account of some minor work being carried out on the approaches to the bridge. I am therefore somewhat surprised to find that, because of his respect for provincial autonomy, the hon. member for Montmagny-L'Islet seems to have made himself the defender of this bill which authorizes the province of Quebec to build this second bridge on a site which, as the hon. member for Lévis said, answers neither the present traffic needs of the counties extending eastward along the lower St. Lawrence nor the traffic coming from the densely populated area of Saguenay-Lake St. John and going to the eastern part of the province.

I wonder whether we should not more specifically ask the Minister of Public Works to see whether it would be appropriate not only to plan or build a bridge according to the principle of co-operative federalism, but to consider the building of a bridge which will truly answer the traffic needs in those counties.

I live in a rather sparsely populated area, counting from 75,000 to 80,000 people, the greater part of whom, because of their trade, business, cultural needs and medical care—they sometimes have to resort to the hospitals in Quebec city—have to contend almost daily with bottlenecks on the approaches to the present bridge.

With regard to the highway which would better ease the traffic coming from the east Quebec city, I think the best solution would be to review the matter, while respecting the rights and autonomy of Quebec, but in accordance with logic.

For several years I was president and vice president of chambers of commerce, and the hon. member for Lévis just remarked, in his brief speech, that only last Sunday the chambers of commerce of Beauce, Jonquière, Dorchester and Lévis held a meeting to ask for this highway problem to be settled so as to help commercial and agricultural traffic between Quebec city and the farming and business communities of the neighbouring counties who are in almost daily contact.

Therefore, I think that the argument advanced a while ago by the hon. member for Quebec-Montmorency is a good argument.

As concerns arguments put forward by other hon. members, I do respect their opinions, but I do not believe the hon. member for Montmagny-L'Islet can say the representations of the newspapers on this problem, following Mr. Lesage's statements, justify the exorbitant expenses that will be incurred for the building of this bridge.

A year ago it was learned a tunnel between Lévis and Quebec was out of question. However, that project was studied by engineers and experts as well as by the Lévis council and other councils of neighbouring and eastern Quebec municipalities. That project had been seriously studied—even the financial possibility of building this tunnel as an easier means of communication between Lévis and Quebec.

It was a surprise for everybody, as well as for public bodies such as chambers of comference, Richelieu clubs and other associations which had advocated this construction, to learn that a tunnel or a second bridge that could have easily served that area through Orleans island and Beaumont was to be replaced by a bridge located at a distance of a few hundred feet from the present bridge.

We are all somewhat surprised, for, even if we are federal members of parliament, we represent a Quebec population, and, personally, I represent the Beauce population. Now, when the first statements were made to the effect that a second bridge would be constructed about 200 feet above the existing bridge, it was a surprise for the inhabitants of the neighbouring counties.

I therefore believe it my duty to express this amazement before the house and to ask the Minister of Public Works to think the project over and to try establishing new contacts, in the name of co-operative federalism for it is a delicate step for us to oppose the authorization requested by Quebec. I think it is normal that we should ask the Minister of Public Works to suggest to provincial authorities to think the matter over before implementing this bill, which does not meet the present needs.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: If the minister speaks now, he will close the debate.

Hon. J. P. Deschatelets (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. members for their very interesting remarks, especially those specifically concerning the bill under consideration.

I would like to answer all the questions, but I think that it would be easier to answer directly the questions asked when the house will be in committee.

Mr. Caouette: Agreed.

Mr. Deschatelets: I hope that my hon. friends will agree to proceed immediately with the second reading, since no objection has been raised against the principle of the bill. My advisers will then be here and I will be in a position to answer the questions of the hon. members. This is a project of the Quebec provincial government which selected the site of the bridge and our only responsibility is to see that this structure will not hinder navigation on the St. Lawrence river.

According to all preliminary plans studied by our engineers, this construction will not create any difficulty and will not impede navigation as a result of ice, because the free space between the central piers of the bridge will be much greater than in the present bridge. As far as its height is concerned, it will be the same. All things considered, our experts have declared that there would be no difficulty at all about it, and I am sure that what has been pointed out by the hon. members will be examined by the province of Quebec and undoubtedly appreciated accordingly.

Now, I hope that the house will give second reading to this bill and, along with the departmental experts, I shall try to answer all the questions.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the motion carried?

[Text]

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and the house went into committee thereon, Mr. Lamoureux in the chair.

On clause 1—Short title.

[Translation]

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Chairman, I should like to direct a few questions to the Minister of Public Works so as to know whether he shares the opinion of the hon. member for Lévis (Mr. Guay) who feels that it would have been more desirable that a tunnel be built between Quebec and Lévis to solve the present crucial problem and that this bill has been rejected by the hon. member for Lévis and the chambers of commerce of this region.

Mr. Deschatelets: I would have a very interesting answer to give to the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm but it is not our practice to deal with purely provincial matters.

The construction of that bridge is strictly a provincial local matter, and I think that we would be ill-advised to assess the pros and cons, namely if this bridge should be located farther upstream from the site now selected and so on. For all those reasons, I believe that it is not desirable for me to express any opinion. Besides, I could say this: Technically speaking, nothing is impossible so far as the construction of a tunnel or a bridge is concerned. Anything can be done. Only the cost has to be considered, but as we have now before us a bill from the province of Quebec —and I would say the same thing for any bill presented by other provinces—we take it as it is and we must only see if, from the navigation point of view, it might be a source of problems.

Mr. Pigeon: Would the minister agree if the province of Quebec decided to build a tunnel between Quebec and Lévis, or would he seriously object to a different project?

Mr. Deschatelets: I shall answer in this way: we would act exactly as we did in the case of the Boucherville tunnel and bridge project. Plans and specifications which were examined, when the matter of building a tunnel came up, did not present any difficulty as far as navigation was concerned. Consequently, we authorized it and any other project presented by the province of Quebec would be treated in the same way.

Mr. Balcer: Mr. Chairman, I should like to ask the minister when the work on the bridge will start and when will it be finished? I would also have two or three other questions to put to the minister.

Mr. Deschatelets: Mr. Chairman, I am sorry but I am unable to answer that question. The former minister of transport, the hon. member for Three Rivers, is well aware of this: If a private company were building that bridge, the order in council that would be signed would give a time limit within which construction should start, but when we deal with a province, if there is no problem with regard to navigation, we just issue an order in council.

I regret to be unable to say when the work will start and will be completed. On the other hand, I am under the impression that work will start as soon as that order in council is issued.

Mr. Balcer: Mr. Chairman, may I ask a supplementary question? I understand very well that the minister is not in a position to answer my question and, furthermore, it is not essential to the said bill.

However, there are a number of other essential questions. What will be the number of piers in the St. Lawrence river and what will be the distance between them? Will those piers narrow the channel in the St. Lawrence?

Mr. Deschatelets: Mr. Chairman, it is a suspension bridge. It will have two main piers and the distance between them, as far as I know, will be approximately 1,800 feet, that is a little longer than the distance between the two main piers of the present Quebec bridge.

In view of the fact that the profile of the new bridge will be practically the same as that of the old bridge, icebreakers will have all the space required to do their job on the St. Lawrence river, just as they do now, as far as the old bridge is concerned.

Mr. Balcer: A last question, Mr. Chairman. Can the minister tell us whether or not it will be a toll bridge?

Mr. Deschatelets: Mr. Chairman, I regret that I am not in a position to answer this question. In fact, the hon. member for Three Rivers will admit that his question is not directly connected with the problem under consideration.

Those are matters of details which will certainly be disclosed when the order in council is approved.

Mr. Marcoux: Mr. Chairman, I should like to direct a question to the minister, since we are still considering clause 1.

It is obvious that the new bridge will not be named "pont de Québec". It will also probably not be named "pont de Lévis". Will it be named "pont de Sainte-Foy" or "Saint-Nicolas" or will it be given the name of a prominent member of the federal or provincial Liberal party?

Mr. Deschatelets: Mr. Chairman, the question of naming that bridge never came up. It will certainly have a name, but it is a matter for the provincial authorities to decide and if the hon. member for Quebec-Montmorency has a favourite name, he only has to submit it to the Quebec provincial authorities.

An hon. Member: The Deschatelets bridge.

Mr. Pigeon: The Balcer bridge.

Mr. Beaulé: Mr. Chairman, I simply want to ask the minister one question.

I said earlier that what slowed down the traffic was the fact that the motorists coming from north and south were converging in the same direction. Can the minister tell us whether the construction of four-lane highways has been provided on the other side of the bridge, so that the traffic can be directed more quickly on the south shore?

Mr. Deschatelets: Mr. Chairman, the hon. member is talking about the access roads. I must tell him this. I believe it is a six-lane bridge, three on each side, each 36 feet wide for a total width of 72 feet. On the other hand, I understand that the bridge will have an over-all width of about 90 feet.

Now, with regard to access roads to the bridge, I have no information on that.

A while ago one or two hon. members said that the work had begun. The construction work cannot begin until the order in council has been signed and approved. It will not be signed until the engineers of the Department of Public Works and the Department of Transport have examined the plans in detail. It is at that time only that the order in council will be signed and the work can begin.

I have the impression that work is being done at the present time along the approaches in the province of Quebec. There may be equipment or machinery for that work, but I do not think that this work has any relation to the building of the bridge. I must say to the hon. members that I am convinced that the work has not begun. In fact, it cannot be started before legislation has been passed by the government and an order in council has been approved.

Mr. Beaulé: Mr. Chairman, could the minister inquire concerning the work in progress concerning the approaches of the bridge which is to be built under this bill?

If the minister wishes me to do so, I will bring him next week proof of the fact that work is being done at present in connection with the bridge.

Mr. Deschatelets: Mr. Chairman, I think this question is covered by sections 2 and 3 of the bill under consideration.

What the Navigable Waters Protection Act forbids is the construction of the bridge and the execution of any related work.

Moreover, according to the act, the federal government has no jurisdiction a quarter of a mile from the bridge, or on provincial property. Indeed, I feel that we would be quite ill-advised to tell the provincial government that they must stop their machinery and equipment approximately 50 feet from the bridge and that they must not continue with the preparation of the approaches to the bridge.

I think that this should answer the question asked by my hon. friend but, at all events, I will inquire so as to be sure I am not making any mistake when I tell him that the work has not yet begun.

Mr. Beaulé: Mr. Chairman, a while ago I asked the minister whether he knew about the highway system that we are going to have on the south shore as the traffic at present is not as heavy on the bridge itself as it is on the other side of the bridge.

Does the minister know about the proposed highway system that motorists will be able to use to reach the bridge, because at present north and south traffic converge in the same direction? That is where the actual problem lies, not the bridge.

Mr. Deschatelets: Mr. Chairman, in view of the fact that the hon. member no doubt knows this area much better than I do, I suggest that if he has any representations to make—and they are no doubt very interesting ones—he should make them to the government of the province of Quebec.

The federal government has no jurisdiction over the approaches. I inquired about this a moment ago, and I was told that the road to this bridge is not linked in any way with an access road to the trans-Canada highway.

However, the hon. member's remarks should be brought to the attention of the government of the province of Quebec, where they would certainly be given due consideration.

Mr. Beaulé: Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask a question which may not be related to the bill now under consideration, but I wonder if the minister could tell us what will become of the existing bridge?

Mr. Deschatelets: Mr. Chairman, the present bridge will be used for the purposes intended.

However, one must not forget that this bridge was built many years ago, that traffic has substantially increased and that Quebec city is facing the same traffic problems as all other large cities of North America. This proposed bridge will probably be followed by others to meet the present requirements. In fact, it is possible that my remarks will not be directly related to the bill which is now before us but we must not forget that when we are talking of a six-lane trans-Canada highway, we should have in mind an eight or ten-lane highway. Unfortunately, the financial aspect does not permit us to do everything we would like to.

Mr. Perron: Mr. Chairman, I would like to direct a question to the hon. minister.

Since there was mention of the trans-Canada highway, whether this request is refused or granted, could the minister tell us if that would affect in any way the existing routing of the trans-Canada highway from St. Etienne, in Lévis county, towards Quebec city?

Mr. Deschatelets: Mr. Chairman, the present route will in no way be affected.

Mr. Marcoux: Mr. Chairman, one more question. I see that it is one minute to five o'clock and I would not want to delay the passing of this bill.

Could the minister tell us what will be the exact distance between the existing bridge and the proposed bridge. Could the minister also tell us if the distance between the two bridges will be sufficient so that the Quebec bridge, which is federally owned, will not lose any of its appearance or its soundness, for instance?

[Mr. Deschatelets.]

Mr. Deschatelets: According to my information, the new bridge will be 1,650 feet up the river from the present bridge, and I am told that—

Some hon. Members: Carried.

Mr. Latulippe: Mr. Chairman, I should like to direct a question to the minister. Could he tell the house what financial assistance the federal government intends to grant toward the building of that bridge?

Mr. Deschatelets: Not a penny, Mr. Chairman.

Clause carried.

Clauses 2 and 3 carried.

On clause 4—Regulations.

Mr. Balcer: Mr. Chairman, I should like to ask the minister if subsection 2 of clause 4 is necessary. It reads:

> All persons affected by any regulation made under the authority of this act shall comply therewith.

In my opinion, that subsection is superfluous. Ignorance of the law is no excuse for anybody, and I cannot imagine why subsections such as this one should be written into the statutes of Canada.

Mr. Deschatelets: Mr. Chairman, the hon. member's comment is taken very seriously. With his permission, we shall take it into consideration. But, as this subsection is identical to the one incorporated in other measures we have already passed, I would suggest we adopt the clause in its present form. However, we shall certainly take the hon. member's comment into consideration as regards future bills.

Clause agreed to.

Bill reported.

Mr. Deschatelets: Mr. Chairman, I thank all the hon. members.

[Text]

Bill reported.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: When shall the bill be read a third time, now?

Mr. Knowles: By leave.

Mr. Deschatelets moved third reading of the bill.

Motion agreed to and bill read the third time and passed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being five o'clock, the house will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely private bills and public bills.

PRIVATE BILLS

MONTREAL BOARD OF TRADE

Mr. B. S. Mackasey (Verdun) moved the second reading of Bill No. S-18, respecting the Montreal board of trade.

An hon. Member: Explain.

Mr. Mackasey: Bill No. S-18, an act respecting the Montreal board of trade, is in essence similar to hundreds of other such bills which have come before this house in previous sessions.

I would beg the indulgence of hon. members for a few moments to draw to their attention that at a time in our history when we are more than ever aware of our heritage the Montreal board of trade is requesting a minor adjustment in its charter to assist the development of an organization which was formed not 50, or 100 years ago, but in 1822, 142 years ago. It is significant, I think, that human nature rarely changes. Back in 1822, a group of merchants, dissatisfied with the chaotic conditions of the time, banded together to improve the trade and commerce of the island of Montreal by some form of organization. Trade at that time was impeded by laborious methods of communication which necessitated decisions being made and bills being regulated in England; it often took three months before decisions could be rendered. Twenty years later, in 1842, these merchants were granted a royal charter which gave them certain powers on the island of Montreal. I do not intend to discuss these powers in detail, but they have some history attached to them. For instance, members of the board of trade were given the task of policing weights and measures and controlling the quality of flour, meat and so forth. They grew in reputation and respect and were eventually granted exemption from jury service, in those days a mark of esteem granted only after careful deliberation. I think, however, that the Montreal board of trade will best be recognized, at least by members from my area, for the fact that it was directly concerned with the establishment of the great port of Montreal and directly responsible for the system of canals which permitted trade to flow up the great lakes into what is now Canada.

In those days the board of trade took an active part not only in the expansion of trade and commerce but in the field of education both of its own members and of the citizens of the island generally. Since then, of course, the work of the board has changed considerably. Many of the functions that were performed at that time have been taken over by municipal, provincial and federal organizations. However, the board of trade is still of tremendous usefulness in the business world of Montreal and it maintains direct relationship with trade matters. For instance, it has developed one of the most complete libraries in the world on the subject of exportation and importation, and today it renders a most useful service to its members by providing information on tariffs and so forth. The Montreal board of trade has continued to serve the community for 142 consecutive years and today it is as vigorous as it ever was. Some 2,800 firms in the Montreal area, both large and small, are among its members.

Unfortunately its present premises in the historic centre of Montreal, on St. Sacrament street, were built between 1900 and 1903 and are no longer adequate. Moreover, the efficiency of the board is lessened by the fact that the geographical face of Montreal has changed. Today, St. Sacrament street is no longer the hub of the world of enterprise in the city. Business has a tendency now to move uptown, as it is commonly called. In order that the board may become more efficient and serve its members better, it is desired to move to what is commonly known as uptown. Such a move is presently being held up, and one of the reasons is the fact that in 1890 a minor change in the board's charter limited the real holdings of the board to $1 million. Certainly, in 1890, $1 million was a considerable sum of money and it stood the board in good stead until the present day. As all members who are familiar with the city of Montreal know, the cost of buying land and erecting a building on a suitable location is such that this limitation to $1 million is proving an impediment; it is holding the board back. A similar problem affecting the Toronto board of trade was, I believe, placed before this house some time ago.

In these circumstances, the board is seeking to end the limitation imposed upon it in 1890. It is asking that the restriction to physical holdings of $1 million be removed so that it may feel free to move to a new location and thus continue its fine work for the business community of Montreal. I would humbly ask that this request be acceded to, and if the bill should pass second reading today that it be referred to the standing committed on banking and commerce where witnesses may be called for or against the proposal.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and referred to the standing committee on banking and commerce.

Private Bills

SIR JOHN A. MACDONALD

PROVISION FOR ESTABLISHMENT OF LEGAL HOLIDAY

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Queens) moved the second reading of Bill No. C-31, respecting Sir John A. Macdonald day.

He said: I invite the attention of the house with my usual brevity, of course, to a bill the passage of which would I believe do something to strengthen our sense of national purpose and mark at least one step away from those long years of Canadian neglect of the great men whose labours and vision have made our land great.

One is appalled to note how little is known about Sir John A. Macdonald. The minister of education in the great province of Ontario was alarmed when he discovered that many school children, otherwise well informed, knew not the name of the father of our country. And I have noted on a certain radio program emanating from Ottawa where they question listeners about the names of various characters—and they do not always get them right—there is no alacrity of response when they inquire about Sir John A. Macdonald. Indeed, in Canada, while thousands would know the birth date of Abraham Lincoln or George Washington it would require a little research to find the birth date of Sir John A. Macdonald. We recognize St. Patrick's day and St. Andrew's day, as is right and proper. We recognize Robert Burns day, too. But I am inviting the house to set apart a Sir John A. Macdonald day. In doing so, no party here represented would suffer and I think all would gain something by recognizing what the great Joseph Howe said long ago—I shall quote his words, as many hon. members have done before me.

> A wise nation preserves its records, gathers up its muniments, decorates the tombs of its illustrious dead, repairs its great public structures and fosters national pride and love of country by perpetual reference to the sacrifices and glories of the past.

My hon. friend from Prince Edward-Lennox (Mr. Alkenbrack) did a real service when in connection with an earlier bill brought before this house he dealt with the career of our great first, first minister who was born on January 11, 1815. His holiday, if we should proclaim one next year, would mark the 150th anniversary of Macdonald's birth.

I am sure parliamentarians know Sir John A. Macdonald's life. They know what manner of man he was—the great John A., the lovable John A., the puckish John A.; although at times he was plunged into the loneliness of despair and the unhappiness of frustration, beset by doubts and anxiety—and, heaven knows, he has reason enough for both. And he was not a teetotaler; I think that is now part of the record. He was quite a hard drinker. Indeed, he said in those memorable words:

> The people of Canada would rather have John A. drunk than George Brown sober.

He demonstrated the accuracy of his prophecy, if not the virtue of his habits. He was a man who, entering public life in 1844, remained in public life for nearly half a century; a cabinet minister for a third of a century, and prime minister for nearly 20 years. A gay man was John A.; a popular man; a beloved man, but also a great man. What were the secrets of his greatness and what in his life, in his record, is of value to us today? I think much. First he was a nation builder; a practical man of common sense and shrewd judgment. In one of his first speeches in the old legislature of Canada he stood up and said:

> In a young country like Canada I am of the opinion that it is of more consequence to endeavour to develop its resources and improve its physical advantages than to waste the time of the legislature and the money of the people in fruitless discussions on abstract and theoretical questions of government.

We do not have many political philosophers in Canada, and we Conservatives can claim that John A. Macdonald was one of them. Yet with all his hardbitten common sense he was a visionary. He saw a greater Canada. When others saw only narrow, small confines for the little political communities of what was then British North America in the middle of the 19th century, he saw a transcontinental dominion and he made his vision a reality. Of him Laurier said:

> His actions displayed a far reaching vision beyond the event of the day, and, still higher, permeating the whole, a broad patriotism, a devotion to Canada's welfare, Canada's advancement and Canada's glory. It may be said without any exaggeration whatsoever that the life of Sir John A. Macdonald, from the day he entered parliament, is the history of Canada.

That is what the great Laurier said about the great Macdonald. It was not easy for him to pursue his vision of a transcontinental dominion. We think at times in our political life today that we have bitterness, but the days in which Sir John A. functioned were replete with invective and political suspicion of motives which were not always quite above reproach. The suggestions involved in his new state were so difficult, but resisting alike the blandishments of those who would surrender supinely to incorporate them with the great republican neighbour and those whose range could not transcend a weak, inglorious colonialism, he and his associates built a country monarchical and free, American yet not republican, dedicated to the British institution from which it sprang but destined surely for independence, with its own unique political institutions, the greatest of which is that in which we are all functionaries. It is well known that in his last great campaign, when he faced what he thought was a great danger to Canada's continuing independence he made this stirring statement. He was not the greatest orator of his time, but he said:

> Shall we endanger our possession of the great heritage bequeathed to us by our fathers, and submit ourselves to direct taxation for the privilege of having our tariff fixed at Washington, with the prospect of ultimately becoming a portion of the American union?...As for myself, my course is clear. A British subject I was born—a British subject I will die. With my utmost effort, with my latest breath, will I oppose the "veiled treason" which attempts by sordid means and mercenary proffers to lure our people from their allegiance.

It was almost his "latest breath", because the election of 1891 killed Sir John A. Macdonald. But he was something else, and I think this is of interest to all of us. He was a party man. Macdonald always said his greatest work was done before confederation. Some historians would question that. But he did see, like Bryce and many other students of politics saw later, that political parties are actually older than democracy and that no great free country can exist long without them. In 1854, with great finesse, with infinite patience, with broadmindedness, with understanding, with good fellowship, with a sense of purpose, he joined the Progressive Conservative party, then called the Liberal Conservative party. Then in 1864, the year of the Charlottetown conference, through the great magnanimity of a man who was not always magnanimous, George Brown, he formed a coalition and so came to Charlottetown with a united political group in 1864. There again the gifts and abilities of the man when he built a party were applied to creating a nation; and we know what emanated from that great meeting in the city which I have the honour to represent in this House of Commons.

The architect of confederation was also the father of Canada's great historic parties. He did in his time what Sir Wilfrid Laurier was to do a few years later. He created, inspired and led the second great national party, and when we reached that stage we reached a mature political society, broadly based, with a unified course. In any country such as ours where regional feelings and backgrounds are strong, differences are never too far below the surface, differences of religion, ethnic background, economic inequality, geographic separation. In spite of all these discordant forces Canada, first under the great Liberal Conservative party and then—and I cannot pretend that it is quite as good as the one I have just mentioned—under the Liberal party of Laurier, was brought together with a great degree of unity and there was progress in this country.

He was something else than a party man. He was a moderate. In an age when it was so easy to ring the welkin on particularism, on regionalism, and indeed on bigotry, he took another course. Macdonald, in his close association with Cartier was surely an essential factor in confederation and the building of the party which became the vehicle ushering in confederation. In a day of bigotry and bitterness he avoided both. As a great Canadian historian—I think not a Conservative one; I was a student of this man—Professor Lower, has said:

> His stand with respect to the race question was consistent throughout his life whatever the cost to himself...he refused to raise the race cry at a time when he was in low political water.

His words to Brown Chamberlain, editor of the Montreal Gazette, further clarify his attitude:

> The trouble is that you British Canadians can never forget that you were once supreme, that John Baptiste was once your hewer of wood and drawer of water. You struggle for ascendancy. If a Lower Canadian Britisher—

That is quite an expression, Mr. Speaker, but it was recognized in those days:

> —desires to conquer he must stoop to conquer. He must make friends with the French without sacrificing the principles of his race or lineage. He must respect their nationality. Treat them as a nation; and they will act as a free people generally do—generously. Treat them as a faction and they will become factious.

So he wrote many years ago. As the professor says:

> Wise words—the beginning and the end of our Canadian puzzle but by few indeed taken to heart. Can the man who wrote them and who lived them be accused of having been a "mere opportunist".

Then at another time when his own party was torn because of excessive religious particularism, if I may use the euphemism, although it is more than that; when the country was being torn apart by one of the greatest of all political ills, and the identification of an ethnic region and a geographic region within a political party line became threatening he said:

> Let us forget this cry and we shall have our reward in seeing this unfortunate fire which has been kindled from so small a spark extinguished forever and we shall go on as we have been going on since 1867 as one people with one object, looking to one future and expecting to lay the foundations of one great country.

Macdonald was always a one-Canada man; he was always a strong-Canada man; and he did not hesitate to use the greatness of the national political apparatus to further national aims and to strengthen national purpose.

There is much one would like to say about this man whom we should honour more, but I can only conclude my remarks, so inadequate to the greatness of my subject, by calling on the members of this house. We are at this moment in danger of embarking upon another sea of discord. Let us find out whether out of our historic past and our common tradition there is something to symbolize greater unity, something around which we as Canadians and we members of this house as legislators may find a rallying point.

We Canadians are perhaps not very picturesque people. We are not terribly emotional. We are a bit casual about many things and certainly about our history. I would invite the support of this bill to honour the founder of our country, which sets aside a day when we, like him, can move our thoughts in the direction of unity and of greatness, away from discord and those matters which would separate us and undo those things which would bind us together. Because only thus can that land which he and his associates built up and is called Canada be worthy of his name.

Mr. J. J. Greene (Renfrew South): Mr. Speaker, it is an honour for me to follow and to support the urbane, erudite and always affable member for Queens (Mr. Macquarrie), whose presence in this house has ever provided an aura of grace and decorum in an often times tempestuous place. I would point out that the hon. member, in presenting to the house a bill whereby we might pay some homage and honour to the attorney general for Canada west, as he was prior to confederation, is doing something which many of us in this house feel is important. He is doing something which should have been done before and something to which we should all give our very serious and considered attention. I would certainly agree with the hon. member when he states that too often in the past in this country, and in this house in particular, we have ill honoured our past. We have not paid sufficient homage to our history, and in so doing we have probably failed to strengthen that foundation for this nation which can only be made strong, and on which we can build a greater future, if we honour and strengthen our past as the hon. member would have us do.

With respect to Sir John A. Macdonald, whom the hon. member would have us honour here, I would point out that certainly some considerable tribute has been paid to him in the biography of Donald Creighton, who I understand to be of a similar political vintage both of the hon. member and to Sir John A. Macdonald, as a result of which his two-volume biography may have been somewhat coloured but is nevertheless a great tribute to Sir John A. Macdonald. It is one which is worthy of him and the contribution which he made to Canada.

I think that in this biography of Mr. Creighton's we have a precedent, which we hope will be emulated in the future by our writers and historians, whereby a very great and important source of history and of honouring our past traditions will be found. I think many of our heroes of history have not been sufficiently written about and reported upon, particularly in popular, readable histories of the style of Mr. Creighton's. I may say in this regard that having read this to a very large degree panegyric of Sir John A. by Mr. Creighton, I had a few qualms in doing a little research into the political affiliations of its author, and I thought possibly I would get a view from the other side. Subsequent to reading this biography I read Sir Richard Cartwright's biography of Sir John A., and if one treads a road between the two he might possibly achieve the true picture of Sir John A. I would not suggest to hon. members of the party of which the hon. member for Queens is a member that they would find the complete truth according to their liking in Sir Richard Cartwright's biography. The social graces of the attorney general for Canada west are given more preeminence in that biography than they are in the biography of Mr. Creighton.

With respect to honouring other days, there is only one remark of the hon. member's to which I would take exception, and that is the inference he drew that we honour St. Patrick's day and that St. Patrick's day in his view, I gathered from his remarks, should not have the honoured place that it does have in the annals of our celebrations. Coming from the Ottawa valley I must take great exception to any such suggestion. I would suggest to the hon. member that in honouring St. Patrick's day we do no less honour to Sir John A. Macdonald, except that we possibly honour St. Patrick's day with a little more revelry and a little more boisterously.

I would also point out with respect to the 1864 cavalcade to Charlottetown, which is being celebrated this year and which we sincerely hope will be celebrated with honour and broad acclaim throughout the nation—because it was certainly this meeting which ultimately led to confederation—that this was originally to be a meeting, as the hon. member for Queens no doubt knows far better than I, only to discuss maritime union. In fact, the meeting had virtually been abandoned when the members from Canada east and Canada west embarked on their jolly cruise, and the meeting ultimately became one for confederation of all the colonies of British North America. I understand that the maritime papers in particular paid considerable tribute to the social graces not only of the attorney general for Canada west but to the many members who came from the parliament of Canada to Charlottetown, and their convivial ability to carouse well into the night was apparently one of the many reasons why the maritimers took so gleefully to the idea of confederation. May it be that this summer, when we are all celebrating that momentous event of the Charlottetown crusade, that we will enjoy the festivities as did our parliamentarians of those days.

I would point out in regard to the subject of our history generally that we have not paid sufficient heed or tribute to our history in the past, and there may be good reason for this. I think from the very nature of the diversity of our foundation, and by virtue of the fact that there were two basic founding races and languages at the root of our confederation, it may be that in the past—and I think politically this has been the case in the past—we tended to steer away from our history because that history would have pointed out the very differences that exist. There was a tendency to bury our heads in the sand like an ostrich and to say in the non-French parts of Canada: "We will study our history and you study yours, and never the twain shall meet". I think this is the reason we have paid insufficient heed to our history. We have not sufficiently glorified our heroes because we were, on both sides of the coin, afraid of the past.

I think that is the situation in which we find ourselves today it is self-evident that in fact this has been a tragedy, that we should have paid greater heed to our history. Perhaps the very differences of our foundation, had we come to know each other better through a more pervasive knowledge and wider acceptance of our respective histories and heroes, would have been resolved and made our foundation the stronger today. In this regard I have a few quotations which I think may be pertinent.

The hon. member for Queens (Mr. Macquarrie) has very aptly brought before the house a quotation from Joseph Howe in regard to history. Here is something that Benjamin Disraeli said in the House of Commons in 1849:

> The memory of a great name and the inheritance of a great example is the legacy of heroes.

I commend that thought to the house. Here again surely the memory of our heroes, such men as Sir John A. Macdonald who helped to found this nation, would give a great inheritance and a great example to those who come after them, and should be better known.

I might say in this regard that we on this side of the house can take particular pride and honour in any suggestion to honour Sir John A. Macdonald because I think even those who know little history appreciate the fact that there would have been no confederation if George Brown had not made a very great personal sacrifice. Maurice Careless in his recent biography certainly gives credence to the belief that possibly Brown gave up his place in history to a very considerable degree by affiliating with Sir John A. Macdonald in the confederation movement. At that time it was the only thing that could be done to avoid the stalemate that existed, and certainly we would have had no Canada today had not Sir John A. and Sir George Brown worked together to bring about confederation.

I would also point to a quotation from Pliny the Younger found in book 5 of his "Epistles" where he says:

> I hold it a noble task to reserve from oblivion those who deserve to be eternally remembered.

So I think we can see that historically all nations who have been worthy of the name and who have contributed something to the progress of mankind have heeded the admonition of Joseph Howe. On the other hand, we have those who decry the need for history and with whom I do not personally agree. But it may be of interest to the house to know that there are some who feel it is not necessarily important to record and honour the past in order to create a great nation. Among the great iconoclasts in this regard was Henry Ford, who said when he appeared as a witness at Mount Clemens, Michigan, when he was suing the Chicago Tribune in a libel suit in July, 1919, and I quote from the record of the trial: "History is bunk".

That may be, Mr. Speaker, but I suggest that, bunk or no, it should be recorded and given a place of honour in our annals. Again, Thomas Jefferson said in his "Writings":

> History in general is only as infamous as what is bad in government.

Thomas Carlyle said:

> Happy the people whose annals are blank.

Montesquieu said:

> Happy the people whose annals are tiresome.

Again, this view of history was probably summed up best by Schiller in his "Tablets" when he said:

> How the best state to know? It is found out like the best woman—that least talked about.

According to these gentlemen the less you talk about your history the better it is, but I think most of us would decry this view and accept the fact that what is very much needed in this country today is a greater appreciation and a wider knowledge of our history.

Not too long ago I had the pleasure to be in Washington during the Easter period, and I was very much impressed with the enthusiasm and the great thirst there is on the part of the people of the United States of America for their history and their past. One could not go to the Washington monument or the Lincoln memorial without coming away with a great awareness of the sincerity of the people of the United States, of their keen desire to know more about and feel their past and their history. Surely monuments such as these and also the Jefferson memorial in Washington are something we should think about very seriously.

When one sees thousands of boys and girls climbing the stairs or taking the elevator to the top of the Washington monument and then coming away with a deeper knowledge and appreciation of their past, when one sees in that great monument the contributions brick by brick and stone by stone by the various states, from various churches, from various groups throughout the length and breadth of that nation who have contributed funds and materials to that monument, he cannot but wish that we had memorials of this kind, great achievements in architecture and construction but, more than that, great achievements commemorating the past history of the United States and its heroes, which is something that we do not appear to have accomplished here.

I had the pleasure and honour of visiting the Lincoln memorial just at sunset and reading the second inaugural address which is completely inscribed on the walls of that great memorial. When one sees the figure of that great man with the second inaugural address facing it, one cannot help but reflect on the very great part that Abraham Lincoln played in their history and one cannot help but wish that we here in Ottawa had memorials to commemorate at least Sir John A. Macdonald and Sir Wilfrid Laurier in the same fashion, to the same degree and with the same dignity and exaltation that accompany the Washington monument and the Jefferson and Lincoln memorials in Washington.

True, we have memorials and statues. I think that the memorial chamber of the House of Commons is something we should all be proud of and cherish, but I think we need to do something on a wider scale and of greater stature, something to indicate that we are very proud of the heroes of our past, be they of French or Anglo Saxon origin, or be they of the other peoples who have contributed so greatly to this land. I think we need to honour our past and our heroes more now that we have ever needed to before, because if this nation is to survive it can only survive if we appreciate our roots, if we appreciate our antecedents and if we take gladly now the very fact of our differences. If we try to hide our differences, if we are a little diffident about the fact that in our past we have different founding races and nationalities, then indeed we will not thrive and we may not even survive.

So, Mr. Speaker, may I commend the hon. member for the thought he has expressed in this bill. I take great honour in supporting the thought he has expressed. I should like to go a great deal farther than he has suggested. I believe the time is ripe not just to spend public moneys on bridges and other utilitarian things. If we have found out nothing else in the past two or three years, surely we have found that a nation does not survive by bridges, roads or public buildings alone which have utility as their only purpose. We need monuments. We need heroes. We need to look proudly at our roots of the past.

In supporting the hon. member's bill I suggest that not only should we have a Sir John A. Macdonald day, but that as a start in honouring our past history we should build here in Ottawa, the capital of this nation, the place where all people should come who wish to honour our history, two great memorials of the same stature and the same architecture as the Washington monument and the Lincoln and Jefferson memorials. We should build two great memorials honouring Sir John A. Macdonald and Sir Wilfrid Laurier. Let us start from there and then let us build other monuments to our past so that all who come after us may be proud of the antecedents of this nation and of our past history.

Mrs. Jean Casselman (Grenville-Dundas): Mr. Speaker, I have listened very closely to the hon. member for Renfrew South (Mr. Greene) and welcome indeed his support of Bill No. C-31. It is probably no surprise to any member of this house that I too wish to support this bill. Unlike those young people who have not yet heard of Sir John A. Macdonald, I cannot remember a time when I did not hear of him very frequently, if not daily. Sir John A. Macdonald is synonymous with Conservative, in fact, with Tory, and no matter how many times I am called a Tory I have always, however it is meant, taken it as a compliment. I am a Tory. However, it is quite obvious that that is not the reason I am supporting Bill No. C-31, an act respecting Sir John A. Macdonald day. It would not be reasonable to invest this bill with political overtones or party ambitions. It would seem to me to be an insult to our historical growth to do such a thing.

First of all, I would support it because I am sure of the basis of this bill, because of the character of the hon. member for Queens (Mr. Macquarrie) who has introduced it. There is no more intelligent or sincere member in this house. He has not been known, to my knowledge, in this chamber or outside of it to make statements that have not been well thought out and always moderate. Second, I feel that in reaching this almost unbelievable standard of living that our country enjoys, in spite of our short age, our geography, our climate and our relatively small population, we have of necessity concentrated on material and physical demands. We must beware of neglecting the intangibles which would probably have come automatically through development under slower conditions of growth.

Every country has had its national figures and history is more meaningful, more real and more alive when we see it through personalities. Those who follow can identify themselves with other human beings in many different ways. It seems to me that this is the purest link with our past, with what may be unfamiliar and increasingly obscure as the years and the decades go by. Every Canadian should have a deep feeling for the process of compromise, conciliation, diplomacy and the enormous effort that went into the confederation of 1867. How better to develop this feeling than to set aside a day which will recall the successful results? By calling this day after Canada's first prime minister, we will also recognize a factor that must not be lost sight of in the dust of the political arena, and that is the factor that the office of prime minister warrants respect on all occasions. It is a permanent position not to be overridden by new theories or even by rebellions. Respect does not develop automatically. The respect accorded Her Majesty, Queen Elizabeth II has not come about by accident. Into it goes many years of attitudes, changing, maturing, sometimes weakening and sometimes strengthening.

Victoria day goes all the way back to 1845, and now incorporates Elizabeth II's birthday as well as that of the early Queen Victoria. Victoria day and Dominion day are really the only two of our nine statutory holidays that can be completely designated as historical. Although Remembrance day has a close connection with our national history, it is none the less more personal. That day our minds dwell most on the courage and service of Canadians and their individual and personal sacrifices.

It seems to me the time has come when we should guard the legends, the memories that deepen and strengthen in any country as the years go by. We can well afford at this time when our need for unity is so great, when our desire for unity is so often expressed, to make every effort, take every possible step that will lead us in that direction. I feel that a national holiday named for our first prime minister would be good for Canada and good for Canadians. It would remind us of our history and our form of government in a pleasant, relaxed way. Citizens need not always be reminded of government by taxes, ponderous speeches or by the political thrust and cut, which is sometimes tiresome to those who do not follow it closely.

Let us give Canadians a holiday by means of this act, thereby reminding ourselves that, overriding the problems that come and go in any country, is the fact that we are glad that confederation took place in 1867. We are glad that we have a system of government headed by a prime minister, and all that that means in protection against rigidity, against oppression and rule by force.

Mr. Gerald A. Regan (Halifax): Mr. Speaker, it is with considerable hesitation that I follow the outstanding contributions made by the hon. member for Queens (Mr. Macquarrie), the hon. member for Renfrew South (Mr. Greene) and the gracious lady member for Grenville-Dundas (Mrs. Casselman). I want to say that I am wholly in sympathy with the aims of the hon. member for Queens, namely that we should do more to protect the records of our past and to see to it that all Canadians are aware of the accomplishments of the statesmen who helped, as a team, to make Canada possible. I am not sure that I would be wholly in accord with the idea of a holiday specifically set aside as John A. Macdonald day. Certainly this prime minister, our first, was a remarkable Canadian and a man who contributed a tremendous amount to the development of the nation.

I thought perhaps one of his greatest accomplishments, and I am not sure I wholly applaud it, was the fact he was able to break the back of Nova Scotia's opposition to confederation by enticing Joseph Howe into the federal cabinet in 1869. I am not just sure how that was accomplished. There have been suggestions from time to time that the social graces that were mentioned at an earlier stage of this debate may have had something to do with that accomplishment. It was said by Sir Wilfrid Laurier on June 8, 1891, at the time of the death of Sir John A. Macdonald, that Sir John A. Macdonald now belongs to the ages and that it could be said with certainty the career that had just closed was one of the most remarkable careers of the century. I think this tribute from Sir Wilfrid is the measure of the mark Sir John A. Macdonald made on Canada.

While he has been one of the truly great Canadians of the past, I suggest that we must find a way somewhat between the neglect of the past for public figures and the extreme cult of the personality with regard to historic figures that has been shown in the United States and some other areas. We must find a middle path. We must find recognition for all of the great statesmen and prime ministers that followed John A. Macdonald I think that that recognition cannot be best found necessarily in national holidays. I feel that at the present time our July 1 holiday is a holiday that marks the memory of John A. Macdonald, Laurier, Joseph Howe and of all of those men collectively in something like a typically Canadian approach to our memory of the past.

I believe that our broadcasting systems, radio and television, and our schools could do far more than has been done in the past toward honouring the memory of our great men. Some of us had occasion, a year or two ago, to see a documentary on C.B.C. television concerning the life of Joseph Howe. It showed only the picture of a man that was a bit on the seedy side at the end of his career. It showed little of the greatness of Joseph Howe or his accomplishments. Coming from a province that has sent forward as prime ministers Sir Robert Borden, Sir John Thompson and Sir Charles Tupper, and a province which educated Right Hon. R. B. Bennett, I must say that I feel all these men and many others who served this nation should be recognized by the publication of concise and readable biographies. If necessary, government action should be taken to commission a number of concise biographies which could then be part of the curriculum of the schools of our country. I suggest this plan, if it would not be considered an invasion of provincial rights. Certainly, there is a great deal that can be done in that direction. I know of nothing that puts it better than the words that were read by the hon. member for Queens (Mr. Macquarrie) in which Joseph Howe said that it was the wise nation that preserved its record.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order; the hour appointed for the consideration of private members' business has now expired.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It is my duty, pursuant to provisional standing order 39A, to inform the house that the questions to be raised at ten o'clock p.m. this day are as follows:

The hon. member for Bow River (Mr. Woolliams), the administration of justice, the holding of Mr. Eric Hooper, a United States citizen in a Toronto jail for an undue length of time; the hon. member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow), the administration of justice, representation by counsel of persons detained for deportation; the hon. member for Swift Current-Maple Creek (Mr. McIntosh), transport in the prairie provinces, the closing of railway stations and the removal of agents.

At six o'clock the house took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The house resumed at 8 p.m.

FARM CREDIT ACT

AMENDMENTS INCREASING AUTHORIZED CAPITAL, MAXIMUM LOAN LIMITS, ETC.

Hon. Harry W. Hays (Minister of Agriculture) moved the second reading of Bill No. C-100, to amend the Farm Credit Act.

He said: First, speaking about the substance of this bill, I should like to say I appreciate—and I am sure the farmers of Canada will also appreciate—the co-operation of all members in getting through the resolution stage so that we could have the bill before us during our discussion today.

The bill proposes a substantial increase in the public funds available to the Farm Credit Corporation and a doubling of the maximum amount of loans available to farmers from the corporation.

In discussing the bill I would like to explain why the government believes these changes are necessary to help farmers establish economic farm units and to assist them in building better houses and other buildings, and in buying the livestock and equipment they need to operate efficiently. The Farm Credit Corporation was established in 1959 as a revised version of the old farm loan board. The corporation's authorized capital was set at $8 million. The Minister of Finance was then authorized under section 13 of the Farm Credit Act to lend the corporation up to 25 times the authorized capital, or $200 million. This was increased to $300 million in 1961 and $400 million in 1962. But the volume of the corporation's lending has continued to increase so rapidly that it is in danger of running short of funds unless parliament fairly quickly approves the further extension of its resources proposed in this bill. The corporation had its busiest year ever during the fiscal year ended March 31, 1964. It approved 8,689 loans for a total amount of $108,009,100.

I have here a brief table summarizing the growth of lending by the corporation since its inception and I would ask permission to have these figures printed in Hansard. They are provided by the corporation.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is that agreeable?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Editor's note: The table above referred to is as follows:]

SUMMARY OF LOANS APPROVED BY THE FARM CREDIT CORPORATION

Fiscal Year	Number of Loans Approved			Amount of Loans Approved
	Number of Loans	Increase over Previous Year		Amount Approved	Increase over Previous Year		Average Loan
		Number	% Increase		Amount	% Increase
				$	$		$
1959-60*	5,339	534	11%	40,031,250	9,886,300	33%	7,550
1960-61	5,597	258	5%	60,704,050	20,672,800	52%	10,120
1961-62	5,885	288	5%	68,574,850	7,870,800	13%	11,900
1962-63	7,438	1,553	26%	90,924,300	22,349,450	32%	12,200
1963-64	8,689	1,251	17%	108,009,100	17,084,800	19%	12,430

* Under the Canadian Farm Loan Act until October 4, 1959.

Mr. Hays: The money available to the corporation is used much in the nature of a revolving fund. Principal repaid by farmers which in the last year amounted to about $25.5 million is available for re-lending, thus reducing the net amount the corporation must borrow from the Minister of Finance.

As I indicated a moment ago, because of the increased lending in recent years the present funds are not going to be enough to meet the needs of farmers this summer. The corporation has commitments to the Minister of Finance or to farmers in the form of loan approvals of about $378 million. This leaves only $22 million, besides principal repayments by farmers who already have loans, to cover new loan commitments. Based on current demands for loans and the rate of repayment on existing loans by farmers it is estimated that the additional $200 million in funds which this bill proposes to make available should be enough to keep the corporation in loan funds until late in 1966.

Before discussing the other amendments to the Farm Credit Act which are proposed by this bill I would like to point out that these are not all the changes we are considering in farm credit legislation. Because of all the changes taking place on farms, changes are taking place in the requirements for farm credit programs. The federal government is involved in farm credit in various ways. The Department of Veterans Affairs through the Veterans Land Act administration provides credit to full-time and part-time farmers who qualify as a result of military service. Intermediate term credit is available to farmers through loans from the chartered banks guaranteed by the government under the Farm Improvement Loans Act. The Department of Forestry in administering the Agricultural Rehabilitation and Development Act is also vitally interested in farm credit, and the use of credit in furthering its programs. All the provinces are also involved one way or another in providing credit to farmers.

For all these reasons we have decided that there is a need for co-ordinated study and research in this field to provide a basis for a more comprehensive farm credit policy which will take into consideration all forms of credit needed by farmers.

We want to find out where the gaps are in existing credit facilities and what role should be assigned to each of the various agencies in the farm credit field. We have, therefore, established an interdepartmental committee on farm credit. It is under the chairmanship of the director general of my department's economic branch. It has representation from the Veterans Land Act administration, the Department of Finance, the Department of Forestry and the Farm Credit Corporation. It has been established on a continuing basis. Its function is to appraise the total credit needs of Canadian agriculture, arrange for studies and research for that purpose, and consider and report on submissions and representations to the government about farm credit matters. From its appraisal of credit requirements this continuing committee on farm credit will make recommendations to the Minister of Agriculture about existing farm credit services and any new services considered necessary for the proper development of Canadian agriculture.

One of its first responsibilities will be to consider and recommend ways in which the provinces and the committee might best co-operate to ensure that federal farm credit policies are co-ordinated with the programs and the needs of individual provinces. We recognize that existing farm credit programs are doing a good job for farmers within their respective bounds. But I believe this committee will provide the basis for bringing about greater co-ordination of existing programs and ensure that we keep right on top of new credit problems arising from the dynamic changes now taking place in agriculture. In the meantime, however, there are new farm credit needs which must be met now, and in the legislation proposed in this bill we are trying to meet them in so far as they refer to long term mortgage credit.

The Farm Credit Corporation recently reviewed government sponsored farm credit programs in 11 principal agricultural countries. It has made a more detailed study of two national farm credit services in the United States, and it has also made a survey of a cross-section of 2,600 Canadian farmers, to see just what their present uses of credit are, what they think they will need in the immediate future, and any shortcomings they think exist in present services. The complete results of this survey are not yet available, but it has already been shown that many of the farmers consulted felt that existing limits on loans from the corporation are too low. So we want to move on this now. We want to do everything we can to make sure the corporation fulfils its role in the long term mortgage credit field.

Since the corporation started its operations in 1959 the percentage of farmers taking maximum loans has gradually increased. In the last fiscal year 11.3 per cent of those who borrowed under part II obtained maximum loans of $20,000, and 15.6 per cent of those borrowing under part III took maximum loans of $27,500. In other words, about 1,000 farmers last year borrowed the maximum amount available to them under the Farm Credit Act. In many cases these maximum loans were not enough to meet the farmers' needs for long term mortgage credit. As a result, instead of having long term loans to carry debts which should have been carried by long term loans, many farmers had to carry this type of debt on short term, or intermediate term loans, often at interest rates much higher than the corporation's or, for that matter, at rates much higher than would be considered an economic or unsubsidized rate of interest for the corporation. There has also been an increasing number of farmers operating good family farm units who have not borrowed from the corporation because the present maximum loans would not have been enough to meet their minimum needs.

Canadian farmers have established an excellent record with the Farm Credit Corporation. They have shown that they know how to use credit to increase the efficiency and productivity of their farms; they have shown a willingness to use good advice from the corporation, and they have also shown a willingness and an ability to repay their loans. If we are going to make it possible for them to go on producing more efficiently and to improve their standards of living, and in doing so to continue improving their service to the Canadian consumer and the general economy of the country, then I believe we have got to do everything we can to ensure that they can get the credit they need.

The present limits are $20,000 under part II of the act, which covers standard loans not supervised by the corporation, and $27,500 for loans under part III of the act, which covers loans that are supervised by the corporation. Hon. members know, of course, that the maximum term in each case is 30 years. Rapid changes have taken place in agriculture since that time and it is evident that the present limits on loans are no longer adequate to establish efficient, viable family farms in many sectors of Canadian agriculture. By doubling the size of the loans, as proposed in this bill, the government believes an important step will be taken toward improving the corporation's capacity to help farmers in the way they need help and in a way that enables them to help themselves. That is the kind of help all our farmers want—a chance to make the best possible use of their time and energy and the resources of their farms. I want to point out also that the proposed increase in the maximum loans obviously will not prevent the corporation from continuing to make small loans to those farmers who do not need or want big loans.

Now I would like to say a few words about interest rates. Hon. members will be aware that the royal commission on banking and finance has recommended that loans made by the corporation should be at an economic rate of interest. The present statutory limit of 5 per cent is, in effect, an uneconomic or subsidized rate. The present cost of money to the corporation, based on a 20 year term, is $5\frac{3}{8}$ per cent, and the cost of administration was a little less than 1 per cent during the past fiscal year. The government recognizes, however, that the primary objective of credit from the corporation is to help farmers to build up their farms to an efficient economic size so that they will have an adequate standard of living and be able to repay their loans.

We have taken the position that in order to assist the smaller farmer to expand his enterprise to economic size and improve his standard of living we should be willing to provide him with the required credit up to the amounts available under the Farm Credit Act at the present time at a rate of 5 per cent. However, when the farmer borrows amounts above the present limits, we believe it would be reasonable that he should pay for this additional money at an economic rate which will vary, of course, from time to time according to the cost of money to the corporation. I might say here that this economic rate is the price that the federal government will have to pay for money. It is proposed that this rate will be fixed by the corporation, subject to approval by the governor in council, and will not be more than the interest charged to the corporation for this money, the cost of administration and a reasonable reserve against loss.

I do not believe farmers will object to paying this economic rate. They are getting this additional capital now at costs much higher than will be charged them by the corporation, and on terms which are much less satisfactory to them. Many farmers have said, "Make the credit available to us so that we can establish good, efficient farming enterprises, and we will pay the interest rate that is required". The additional cost, when spread over a number of years, will certainly be less than the additional income the farmers will be able to earn by getting this additional credit on proper terms.

Some of the other amendments proposed, while they may not seem significant at first glance, can be of real importance in the operation of the corporation. One amendment will make it possible for the corporation to lend to the executor or administrator of an estate of a deceased farmer, and thus the corporation will be able to assist the farmers' heirs to continue to operate and develop their farms, even though the estate may not yet be fully settled. Another amendment will make it possible for a father or an uncle to borrow money to assist a son or nephew or other relative to buy a farm. This particular amendment will be of great assistance to the corporation in its efforts to establish young men in farming. Many of these young men being started in farming obtain loans under part III of the act. As the act now stands, when a farmer borrows money under part III, part of the loan is secured by chattels and that part must be repaid within ten years. This means that payments during the first years of the loan, when the young man has the least equity and the least income and is trying to develop his farm, run as much as 30 per cent higher than they are during later years. So we are proposing that the corporation be permitted to amortize a loan under part III of the act throughout the entire 30 years. This will eliminate the large payments during the early years while the young farmer is struggling to build up his farm. This particular proposal will make it much easier for farmers just getting started.

I think we would do all farmers a favour in considering this bill if we remembered that the Farm Credit Act is intended to serve only the long term credit field. Intermediate term credit for the purchase of livestock, machinery and other such purposes is provided for under other legislation and we can discuss these other credit problems when such other legislation is before the house for consideration. I would not wish to leave the impression that the present bill represents all the changes we will eventually want to make in the operations of the Farm Credit Corporation. The government is concerned, and I am sure hon. members are concerned, about the welfare of those farmers who are unable to qualify for loans under the Farm Credit Act, either because of the limited production from their farms or because they do not have the required equity.

The Farm Credit Corporation has done a lot to assist the small farmer to enlarge his unit to the point where he can make a good living for himself and his family. About 45 per cent of the money lent by the corporation last year went to help farmers to buy more land. Unfortunately, there are many faced with problems which credit by itself will not solve. Others who want to start farming, and have not the capital they need to get going, could not afford to borrow and pay back all the money needed to buy a good farm together with the livestock and equipment, particularly with the price of land in some parts of Canada today.

To solve these and other problems of a similar nature requires the co-ordination of the resources of several agencies. We need to get all of the people who are involved in agricultural development to work together to develop and to apply the policies and programs to get at the roots of the problems.

One of the principal purposes of the farm credit study committee we have set up will be to determine how credit can best be used as one of the means to assist these people. As the committee's work gets under way we can expect further improvements in our program to help farmers. Meanwhile, the amendments proposed by this bill will do a lot to improve the capacity of the corporation to reinforce and strengthen the family farm in Canadian agriculture. They are amendments which we believe are needed right now. I think there is a lot to be said for doing everything we can to keep the family farm. As the communist countries have learned all too well, there is nothing like the pride of ownership to encourage a farmer to do his best. After all, why should he not do his best when he knows he is doing it for himself? But besides the obvious benefits to all Canadians that arise from this pride of ownership on our farms, there is the feeling of independence and self-reliance which farmers get from working for themselves. This is something which cannot be measured in dollars and cents, but I do not think any hon. member would argue that it is not a very valuable extra commodity that this country gets from its farmers.

This measure, Mr. Speaker, is in two parts. We are now considering the farm credit bill, and then there is the administrative side of the act. The annual report of the Farm Credit Corporation is now in the hands of the queen's printer and we will be tabling it in the house before the end of June. If hon. members wish to question the administration we would be quite happy to have this report referred to the standing committee on agriculture and colonization for consideration. The officials of the corporation would welcome this opportunity to discuss the administration of the Farm Credit Act with the agriculture committee in the hope that improvements may be made, because hon. members represent the different views and problems of all of the provinces. We are trying all the time to improve the administration of the act, and I think this would be an opportunity for hon. members to bring forward their ideas on the administration of the act. I spoke to the manager of the corporation this evening and he said he would welcome the opportunity to have this report before the committee where we could probably learn a great deal more. In the last few months we have been able to cut the time for servicing these loans by days. At the moment we are lending something like $1 million a day and we have about $22 million left. Some days it is a little more than that, but I am sure hon. members can see the urgency of getting the bill approved by the house so that credit to the farmers is not held up.

[Translation]

Mr. Clément Vincent (Nicolet-Yamaska): Mr. Speaker, before speaking to Bill No. C-100, to amend the Farm Credit Act, I wish to congratulate very warmly the officials responsible for the administration of that act. We now have throughout the country a group of civil servants who are truly a credit to the legislation passed by this house in 1959 and who have worked hard in each of the provinces to bring their essential contribution to the development of agriculture in Canada.

Of course, this legislation, passed in 1959, may not have been perfect. It had to be amended and what we heard tonight is the logical follow-up to the legislation passed by the federal parliament.

We remember that when the Progressive Conservative party took office in Ottawa, in 1957, it realized that Canadian farmers needed sufficient credit to make their enterprises economical. Today, farmers, the Liberal government and its supporters here have come to understand that credit is useful, indeed, absolutely necessary on the farm. We commend the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Hays) for introducing tonight the first piece of legislation concerning agriculture since the present government took office on April 22, 1963.

In his remarks, the minister stated that this act has been most beneficial to Canadian farmers. Yet, one must remember what happened here in that connection in 1959.

To begin with, the first measure that the former government introduced was to transfer the administration of the Farm Credit Corporation which, in the past, came under the minister of finance to the Department of Agriculture, which was absolutely necessary in our opinion.

Second, when that legislation was passed in 1959, the limit of loans was raised from $15,000 to $20,000. Moreover, part III of the act was included, raising that limit to $27,500.

In the third place, the interest rate was established at 5 per cent in 1959.

And in the fourth place, the object of the act was to establishing regional offices in various provincial centres, to have the farmers meet the farm credit advisers, and discuss credit advances with them, in the same way as the businessman meets with his bank manager to discuss his affairs.

May I tell you, Mr. Speaker, that to my mind those local offices have, until now, answered the wish of the former government to have the farmers meet and discuss their credit problems with those officials. We would like those offices to continue the work they have started, making a contribution which the farmers lacked but too often in the past and which today, enables them to obtain the valuable advice they need for setting up their farm.

Moreover, when certain improvements were made in the Farm Credit Corporation Act in 1959, it was able—if we look at what happened during the former administration, from 1958 to 1963—to land an amount of $290,379,400 in a six-year period. Let us compare this sum of over $290 million with the amount of $110,667,349 loaned to the Canadian farmers under the former Liberal rule over a period of 22 years. Which means that since 1959 farm credit has played its part in our economy and more particularly in our farm economy.

As a member from Quebec, I must say that in that province, 804 loans for a total amount of $11,434,700 were granted in 1962-63. As far as 1963-64 is concerned, we have, as yet, no official figures available, but another increase is foreseen, which means that for 1963-64 alone, half of what was lent during the period from 1930 to 1959 was awarded in the form of loans.

Now, Mr. Speaker, as I said before, the legislation introduced by the government in the house concerning farm credit will not be perfect and it certainly ought to be improved. The effects of the 1959 act is still felt today because, in 1959, the maximum was, after due consideration, established at $20,000, which meant some progress. When the maximum of supervised loans was raised to $27,500, it was just another step forward. Now, today, the Minister of Agriculture announced that a committee was formed to proceed with research in farm credit matters. Well, we know that such a committee was also set up in 1958. That committee went from one Canadian province to another to enquire about credit facilities for our farmers and made a report to the minister of agriculture which resulted in the 1959 legislation.

That other committee now being set up will do more research, even in foreign countries, in order to bring about improvements which I think are necessary. Because of the continued development of agriculture, it is necessary to accept improvements to give more assistance to the Canadian farmer.

However, I would have liked, before discussing Bill No. C-100, to have an opportunity to study the amendments to be brought to the Farm Improvement Loans Act. Of course, there will be some, because under part III of the act, you can go to a maximum of $55,000. The Farm Improvement Loans Act will have to be amended to increase the maximum from $7,500 to $15,000.

We do not know what the amendments to the Farm Improvement Loans Act will be, but we greatly hope—and I say this on behalf of farmers—that the interest rate will remain at 5 per cent up to the amount of $15,000.

I come back to that maximum which was of $20,000 under part II and which will now be increased to $40,000. We heard the minister say, a while ago, that the interest rate will be 5 per cent on the first $20,000 and that, on the balance of the loan, the rate will be the actual cost to the Farm Credit Corporation, plus administration cost. If I understand correctly, it means that the farmer, on that amount in excess of $20,000, will pay an interest rate of some 6½ per cent, which I think will not be accepted by Canadian farmers.

The minister said that Canadian farmers would not object to the suggestion by the Department of Agriculture. Well, as far as I am concerned, I say that it is a door open to the possibility of raising the interest rate on the farm credit in the near future. You first give an inch and, within a few months or maybe next year, the Minister of Agriculture will tell us: Now, we will accept the recommendations of the royal commission on finance and ask Canadian farmers to pay a flat interest rate of 6 or 6½ per cent. That is the main reason why I object to the fact that this government should charge an interest rate higher than 5 per cent for the amounts over $20,000 that farmers will get on loans.

Moreover, this means that in the province of Quebec we can get from the provincial government an interest refund of 2½ per cent, up to $15,000. So the farmer pays 2½ per cent for a federal loan of $15,000. If the federal loan is $20,000, the Quebec farmer pays 2½ per cent on the first $15,000, 5 per cent on the other $5,000, and if there is, thanks to this new legislation, a $25,000 loan, we will have a rate scale as follows: 2½ per cent on the first $15,000, 5 per cent on the next $5,000 and 6 or 6½ per cent on the additional $5,000. This means that farmers will have to pay three different rates of interest on the same farm loan. As I said a while ago, I am more and more convinced that this is an open door which will enable the minister to tell us next year. Let us increase the interest rate in order to make it uniform on all loans, namely 6 or 6½ per cent and let us accept in that way the recommendations of the royal commission on banking.

The minister said that he was ready to help small farmers with an interest rate of 5 per cent. In my opinion, this interest rate of 5 per cent, if we figure it out on a 10 year basis, is enough to meet fluctuation on the interest paid by the Farm Credit Corporation. Some loans may be made at 4 per cent, others at 4½ per cent, others at a lower interest.

I am convinced that over a 10 year period, the Farm Credit Corporation can, with a 5 per cent rate, meet its obligations without having to be subsidized by the federal government and the Department of Agriculture.

Moreover, even if the Minister of Agriculture grants a subsidy of a few hundred thousand dollars for the farm credit administration, that is worthwhile because this legislation enables our farmers to organize their farms on a basis which gives them a decent living.

There are improvements in the legislation now under study. For instance, we see that apiculture will be included in the description of the word agriculture; this new description which extends the meaning of the word agriculture will be accepted by several persons as an improvement. But it will be necessary for the Farm Credit Corporation to pay special attention to those who will apply for a loan, because we must not forget that agriculture, in certain area, operates on a commercial basis.

Moreover, there are in this legislation changes concerning loans under Part III of the act. Formerly, an amount of money was loaned and had to be repaid within 10 years. With this new legislation, authority is given to spread the repayment over a 30 year period.

Looking at that, a question immediately comes to mind which I should like the minister to answer. That question will also be asked by all farmers already having a loan under part III. What will happen to those who already have been granted a loan by the Farm Credit Corporation and who have to pay back the amount, under part III, on a 10 year basis? Will the Farm Credit Corporation be authorized to extend those payments from a 10 year to a 30 year period?

No reply was given to that question, that is, in his statement the minister did not deal with this aspect of the question. So, on the farmers' behalf, I ask him to consider the possibility of having those borrowers benefit from that amendment and placed on an equal footing with the new ones who will be entitled to pay back their loans under part III over a 30 year period.

Mr. Speaker, although we are discussing this evening the first amendment to a piece of legislation introduced by the previous government, I find once again that there are not too many Liberal members in the house. The fact is to be noted, because each time we speak of agriculture, each time we are dealing with a farm problem, the same thing happens. Our good friends the Liberals show little interest.

Mr. Choquette: That is not true.

[Mr. Vincent.]

Mr. Vincent: If you wish, we shall figure out how many government members there are in the house now.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I should like to call the hon. member to order by asking him not to stray from the subject now before us.

Mr. Vincent: Mr. Speaker, with all due respect, I wish to point out that my remarks fall within the limits of this debate because we are discussing a very important measure, and if our friends the Liberals do not want to discuss it or hear about it, it is because they are not interested in the part this government must play to help agriculture in Canada, especially in eastern Canada—

Mr. Choquette: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order. In my opinion, what the hon. member for Nicolet-Yamaska (Mr. Vincent) is saying is entirely incorrect. Nothing could show better the interest the Liberal members take in agriculture than the fact that we are studying tonight an excellent bill introduced by the government. Therefore, agriculture is close to our hearts.

Mr. Vincent: I thank the hon. member for Lotbinière (Mr. Choquette) for saying that this is an excellent bill, because it is simply the logical follow-up to the legislation we passed in 1959. That is partly the reason why I pointed out that there are only 16 Liberal members in the house; I wanted the hon. member for Lotbinière to rise and praise the merits of this act passed by the Conservative government in 1959.

Mr. Habel: Would the hon. member allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. Speaker, I am sure that the hon. member wants to be fair to his colleagues. He must read the papers and he knows very well that most Liberal members are attending a banquet tonight. Therefore, I ask him to show his colleagues the same respect we have for the members of his party when they have party meetings.

Mr. Grafftey: Is that a question or a statement?

Mr. Vincent: I thank the hon. member for calling my attention to the fact that tonight 116 Liberal members are attending the banquet of the Liberal federation and are, therefore, more interested in Liberal banquets than in agriculture.

Mr. Habel: Just like you, when you have meetings.

Mr. Vincent: Now, Mr. Speaker, we will have the opportunity of examining the bill thoroughly, section by section.

As I said, we approve of several of the proposed amendments since they will improve the legislation enacted in 1959.

Yet, we will have criticism to offer concerning other amendments such as the possibility of charging more than 5 per cent interest on certain agricultural loans.

Members of our group advocate the establishment of a uniform 5 per cent interest rate. We feel the federal government can authorize the Farm Credit Corporation to grant loans to Canadian farmers at no more than 5 per cent interest.

We would also ask the government and the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Hays) to consider the possibility of providing in the legislation that existing loans, which were granted under part 3 of the act and which are to be repaid within ten years, be revised in such a way that those borrowers may be on the same footing as those who borrow from the corporation in the future.

A while ago the minister stated that the official report of the Farm Credit Corporation will be referred to the agriculture committee after its publication. We welcome that announcement because corporation officials will surely be in a position to give us information which will be useful not only to hon. members but also to all farmers in Canada. However, before accepting the minister's proposal outright, I must tell him that the committee on agriculture must first of all study the question of feed grain before tackling any other matters.

To conclude my remarks, Mr. Speaker, I repeat what I said at the beginning. We shall approve Bill C-100 with some reservations, as I pointed out earlier.

[Text]

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, this is a most important piece of legislation, which will affect the lives of a good many Canadian farmers across the country, their families, the communities in which they live and the nation as a whole. I rise on behalf of this party to support the principle of the bill. We will have some suggestions to make in respect of one or two amendments when we get into committee of the whole. But, Mr. Speaker, I wish to congratulate the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Hays). Knowing of his firm belief that free enterprise should extend from here to eternity, I wish to congratulate him for introducing this socialistic piece of legislation which gives effect to socialist philosophy as preached by this group throughout the years, to the extent that it provides for co-operation between the government and individual farmers by way of long term low interest loans to the advantage of the government, to the advantage of the farmer and to the advantage of the state. This is the gospel that we preached in this house ever since this party was formed. I sincerely congratulate the minister. Honestly, Mr. Speaker, I believe that if the minister were in this house for 40 years he would finally apply for membership in our party.

This party, as its predecessor the C.C.F., has for many years urged the need for long term low interest loans to farmers. There is quite a long history of long term low interest loans in European agriculture. However, it has only been developed in satisfactory form in recent years in Canada. I remember well that I made my first speech on behalf of this party on this subject in 1945. It has taken a long time for this party and farmers organizations to create a public climate that would affect the opinion of old line parties in this house to the extent that we saw this legislation introduced initially by the former government.

For years farmers organizations across Canada have been urging the need for this type of legislation. For years we have known that the private credit sources could not meet the need, would not accept their responsibility, would not provide loans for a sufficient length of time, would not provide loans at low enough interest and would not condition those loans with satisfactory security for the farmers' tenure. I cannot help mentioning at this time that I am sure there are a good many people in Saskatchewan who rejoiced when a C.C.F. government was elected there and prevented the private lending agencies from collaring their farms because they were behind in their payments a year or two as a result of poor crops and low prices.

Mr. Patterson: And they rejoiced when it went out.

Mr. Herridge: I hear some muttering from the hon. member for Fraser Valley (Mr. Patterson). Honestly, I believe that is a most unkind remark coming from one who is entitled to prefix his name with the word "Reverend".

As a result of this agitation years ago, as a result of the agitation of the old progressive party, which had an influence on the Liberal government of the day and which was later absorbed by the Liberal party, the old Canadian farm loan board was established and functioned for many years. It was an improvement over the previous years, but the legislation was too restrictive and the administration of the act was too rigid. I can illustrate this by citing several cases in my own constituency. I am thinking at the present time of one farmer who made application to the old Canadian farm loan board on three occasions for a loan. All he received was a letter from New Westminster—nobody visited his farm—informing him that the area in which he lived was not a suitable area for farming, would not provide a satisfactory security for a loan, and so on. On his first application to the Farm Credit Corporation he received a loan in the amount for which he asked, $17,500, and he is doing well now.

This shows the improvement in the act passed by the last government. I admit freely that these amendments are a further improvement of that act. Now, a lot of the research, shall I say, in connection with the problem was done under the Veterans Land Act by the Veterans Land Act administration. I think we should give them credit. They had an opportunity, because of the nature of the legislation which was given effect shortly after the conclusion of the second world war, and they made good use of it. For the first time we had loans on a certain basis and counselling from the administrators of the Veterans Land Act. I think we should pay particular tribute to the work done by Brigadier General J. T. Rutherford, who was chairman of the Veterans Land Act administration, the vice chairman, Mr. G. Owen, the senior officials and the officials in the country.

I would say that I have had quite a long experience in dealing with farm problems, the farmers' need for credit and that sort of thing. I can tell you that my family needed it. If it had not been for relatives dying in the old country we could have starved to death at one time. We could not get credit at that time, but circumstances are somewhat different now. These gentlemen were pioneers in this field, and this new approach to farm credit took advantage of the experience gained by the administration of that act when they not only did research at the head office but co-operated with the officials in the field.

I do want to mention what I think should be considered the lending policy bible. It was prepared by the two officials I have just mentioned. I believe it is an excellent document and I think every member of this house should keep a copy in his files and refer to it. Mind you, the situation will change as we acquire additional experience and the results of more research into this problem, but I do think this publication lays the foundation for the philosophy of farm credit in Canada. I wish to quote briefly from this book which deals extensively with the whole question. Dealing with lending policy, it says:

> The Farm Credit Act, which was proclaimed on October 5, 1959, replaced the Canadian Farm Loan Act. It set up the Farm Credit Corporation, reporting to parliament through the Minister of Agriculture, to take over from the Canadian farm loan board which had reported through the Minister of Finance.

I think that was a wise improvement. When administration is in the hands of a minister of finance the approach is different from that which becomes evident when administration is in the hands of a minister of agriculture—and I am not blaming ministers of finance. They, naturally, concentrate on an entirely businesslike approach whereas a minister of agriculture is in touch with farm requirements and farm organizations. When the minister of agriculture of that day was introducing this legislation he defined its object as follows:

> To assist Canadian farmers in the voluntary reorganization of their industry into economic family farm units, each of which will be of sufficient size to produce, under the operation of the owner, the farm income necessary to meet all operating and maintenance costs, provide an adequate livelihood for the owner-operator and his dependants, and retire any required credit, with interest, within an appropriate term.

I think this is a good definition of the economic family farm unit. All that is required for its success is, first, good land, then markets, and then long term loans at low interest to be repaid out of the production of the farm. The publication goes on to deal with the part this legislation will play in rural development and the author mentions that the legislation is a calculated risk. He says:

> There is no doubt that in bringing down the Farm Credit Act when it did, and in its present form, the government was relying to a very considerable degree on its being efficiently and fearlessly administered in line with its objective of helping to create economic units suitable to, and which could operate profitably in, each agricultural area of the country. This is your job and mine. It is a big responsibility, a great trust, and an inspiring challenge.

He goes on to assert that farmers should be informed of their rights under the act. I think this is a wise observation. Then he deals with the initial interview in connection with counselling, and indicates situations in which loans would not appear to be indicated and situations in which loans would appear to be indicated. Later, he discusses administration in general, and finally he winds up the preamble to this excellent publication by noting the need for co-operation. He states:

> It is most important, therefore, that there be close liaison and co-operation between the corporation at head office, branch and field levels and these other agencies at concurrent levels in order that we may be of mutual assistance to one another in the attainment of a common over-all objective.

Then he urges co-operation between the different branches of the government service, the farm press and radio, national farm organizations and their branches, the Veterans Land Act administration, the extension services of the provincial department of agriculture, provincial farm credit agencies and agricultural colleges, faculties and schools. Further on, he deals with the need for public relations. Once again, I wish to say that this is an excellent résumé of the basic philosophy of farm credit as applied to Canadian conditions.

Although the act as it now stands is an excellent piece of legislation, the farm organizations, as a result of changing conditions and new experience ever since 1959, have been urging amendments and I wish to quote briefly from a speech made by president J. M. Bentley of the Canadian Federation of Agriculture at Charlottetown, Prince Edward Island on January 21. This is what he had to say:

> In the field of farm credit, I would like to pay tribute to the work of the Farm Credit Corporation. It has been instrumental in enabling many farmers to secure economic farm units and has ensured a higher standard of living for many farm families. However, not all the problems of farm credit can be met by the Farm Credit Corporation as it exists today. Agriculture is changing so rapidly through mechanization that the credit needs of farmers are changing as well. I would like to suggest that we should consider establishing means of thinking the problem through by study and analysis and arriving at new and sound proposals. There are a number of areas in which farm credit needs are not now being adequately met:
> 1. Loan limits are probably inadequate under present conditions.

He mentioned this need first, and I see that the request is now being met in the amendments proposed in this bill. The list continues:

> 2. Adequate arrangements for meeting the problem of transfer of farms on the retirement, or death, of the present owners.

I have personal knowledge of a number of cases where this type of amendment is needed.

> 3. Operating, or intermediate credit needs, are not being adequately met by the farm improvement loan program or the present banking system.

We are looking forward to amendments to the Farm Improvement Loans Act. Then the president goes on to deal with the need for emergency or disaster credit which, I trust, the minister is considering. I am one of those who believe that a disaster suffered by a farmer as a result of floods or other natural agency should be borne by all of us, not by the individual alone, and this could be done at very slight cost to the nation or to the farm population as a whole. Then, Mr. Bentley continues:

> In the study and analysis of the above areas, the advisory committee of the Farm Credit Corporation should be given more status and authority so that it can perform a most useful and important function. The advisory committee should not merely confine its activities to matters arising under the act or to matters referred to it by the minister, or the corporation. It should be able to initiate study into the legislation itself and be able to advise the corporation on emerging problems and needs as they arise from time to time.

I read that paragraph because I should like the minister to comment on this suggestion by the president of the federation of agriculture. I judge from conversations I have had with farmers and with officers of local farm organizations that there is great merit in the suggestion. It is one which I think could be put into effect simply by means of administrative changes; there would be no need for any alteration in the legislation, and no doubt this will come about as a result of the minister's more socialistic approach to life.

As I said earlier, the purpose of this legislation was to maintain, improve and develop the economic family farm unit in Canada. Before concluding, I would suggest that changing circumstances in the future will lead to further amendments being required—changes in administrative forms, and so on. I believe there is a great need for continued research on the part of officials of the corporation and the related agencies of the federal and provincial governments, in order that we may make these adjustments from year to year if necessary so as to make the act as satisfactory and as useful as possible. I noticed an article in the current issue of the Family Herald. I am a simple sort of soul—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

An hon. Member: Explain.

Mr. Herridge: —and I enjoy reading farm publications. I enjoy reading the letters from people asking how they can cure mammitis in dairy cows, or asking how they can solve some legal problems. These are all human problems to me. I am sure the minister reads them as well and I am sure he would be a very excellent person to answer these questions. Anyway, Mr. Speaker, there is an article in the Family Herald of June 4, which publication came on my desk just today. I notice that these farm publications are getting like the others now; they are issued before the date they are supposed to be published. However, Mr. Speaker, this article is entitled "Credit. One economist: Banks don't know farm needs". I shall quote from this article because I think it is worth while:

> For the bulk of Canada's farmers the higher ceilings for Farm Credit Corporation loans asked for in agriculture minister Harry Hays' first measure before Commons will not make much difference. Only 13 per cent of farmers who have received F.C.C. loans so far qualified for the present maximums of $20,000 and $27,000. F.C.C. officials estimate that only some 80,000 or 90,000 of Canada's farmers will be able to take advantage of the bigger loans when the present ceilings are doubled.

I think that is a pretty healthy number, to start with. The article continues:

The new amendments fall into line with one of the recommendations of the royal commission on banking and finance: That with the high cost of farms today present F.C.C. ceilings simply are not high enough to ease the transfer of many of our farms from one generation to another. The amendments would increase the ceiling on part II loans from $20,000 to $40,000 and on part III loans (for younger farmers under supervision) from $27,000 to $55,000.

The whole question of farm credit has been under review for some time by F.C.C. and departmental offices.

Then this article goes on to indicate the need for continuing studies in this direction. This, Mr. Speaker, is a farm journal indicating that these private sources of credit are simply inadequate under present circumstances. Before concluding I wish to say a word with respect to public relations. I do think that everything possible should be done to inform the farm organizations and the farmers of the terms of this act, its administration and the requirements that have to be met to qualify for loans, and so on. On occasion I have met farmers who were quite uninformed in this respect. I have just been informed by my colleague to my rear that the minister is now writing a weekly column. I had overlooked that. I suggest that the farmers, when they read the publications for which he is writing, could be informed through that column. The farmers organizations and other organizations should be kept well informed in this regard.

An hon. Member: Perhaps your colleague could use his column.

Mr. Herridge: I find that in this type of society these people are too segregated anyway. One finds a small town or village surrounded by a farming community, and very often the organizations have no idea of the detail of this type of legislation and how it is being administered to serve the farmers and producers of the area. I suggest that the officials of the minister's department could very well take time out now and again to give talks, on this and other subjects relating to agriculture, to farm organizations and other organizations in the towns and cities around the countryside that are concerned with agriculture. These talks could be given to Rotary clubs, chambers of commerce, labour organizations, and so on. I suggest it would be a good idea for the minister's officials to make a point of talking to some of the meetings of local labour organizations and letting them know of the farmers' problems and what the government of Canada is doing in an effort to meet these problems. The more we understand one another's problems, the more we will march together. I am a firm believer in this respect, Mr. Speaker, in so far as the differences that are supposed to exist between Quebec and the rest of Canada are concerned. These differences are supposed to be very sharp indeed. When the young hon. member for Lotbinière (Mr. Choquette) has spoken he has sometimes said some quite unpleasant things from my point of view; but actually he is a thoroughly decent type when you get to know him. The point is, you must get to know him.

My point, Mr. Speaker, is that this information can be given through farm periodicals and the press in general. This is about all I am going to say at this time. We will have some comments to make on the various clauses of the bill when we are in committee, and we propose to introduce one or two minor amendments in an effort to improve it somewhat, particularly the lowering of the interest rate to 5 per cent so that it is 5 per cent across the board. In conclusion I congratulate the Minister of Agriculture for the introduction of these amendments, which we in this group consider to be another step forward in the march toward a Canadian co-operative commonwealth.

Mr. H. A. Olson (Medicine Hat): Mr. Speaker, I am sure that every member of this house wants the farm units in Canada to be economical. We take the position, as has been stated by other hon. members of this house from time to time, that land values are continuing to rise, that machinery prices are continually going up, and therefore for farmers to maintain, or first of all establish, economic units it is necessary for the amount of available credit to be increased in line with these increased costs. I want to say at the outset that there are a number of amendments to the Farm Credit Act included in this bill, but I suggest that the main one is to increase the maximum amounts available.

I want to say to the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Hays) and to the government that simply increasing the limits—the maximum limits, if I can put it that way—to an individual farmer is not going to solve all the problems respecting farm credit. As the Minister of Agriculture pointed out earlier this evening, and as the hon. member for Kootenay West (Mr. Herridge) repeated, only some 13 per cent of the loans granted now are for the maximum amount available. In my experience in discussing this matter of credit with farmers, the limits have been part of the problem in their view, but in addition to that there are many other regulations and points of administration that require review and amendment as well.

Dr. J. C. Gilson, associate professor of agricultural economics of the University of Manitoba, made a rather exhaustive study of farm credit and farm credit requirements in 1958. He had this to say:

> Farm credit is a two-edged sword, make no mistake about that. Used wrongly it can cause grief and financial disaster. On the other hand, credit can be one of the most powerful "tools" of production in modern farming. It takes money to make money, and credit is frequently the starting point.

I want to agree with many of the assertions the Minister of Agriculture made this evening, particularly with respect to the matter of increasing the limits from $20,000 to $40,000 under one part of the act and from $27,000 to a maximum of $55,000 under another part.

There are, as I said at the outset, a number of other measures. Dr. Gilson points out six of these problems which arose in 1958, many of which are just as valid today because the legislation which has been passed through this house and the consequent amendments have not in fact met the problem. In the first place, he says it is practically impossible to estimate the number of farmers who need credit at the present time. There are several types of situations, however, where it is safe to assume that greatly increased amounts of farm credit are needed. The first item he lists is the situation where a father transfers his farming business to his son—in other words, the family farm. Dr. Gilson points out that in this area there was practically no legislation in 1958 to deal with this very serious problem of farm families losing their equity in the family farm owing to a death in the family and a transfer having to be made. The bill before us tonight meets this problem to some extent because it does allow for the administrator of an estate to carry on and have credit made available to him, so that the land and other assets do not have to be sold.

In addition to that another amendment allows a borrower to acquire farmland or to advance money to a son-in-law, daughter or other relative. I think that is a very important improvement. As a matter of fact, the province of Alberta recognized this question of transfers within the family in 1959 and brought in an act specifically designed to take care of such matters when a father had reached retirement age, and so on. I think that what is in the bill is definitely a step in the right direction, although the bill does not go far enough. The reason I say that is because the major responsibility for farm credit rests with the federal government rather than provincial governments. We all know that under the constitution of Canada the federal government is charged with, and given full responsibility for, the control of currency, credit and matters dealing with monetary and fiscal policies in the nation. I think farm credit is primarily one of such activities. Whenever any of the provinces have needed to move in the direction of farm credit it is because the federal government has failed to recognize the need and to pass legislation to fulfil that need.

I believe there are at least four general considerations which should be taken into account in arriving at a sound credit policy for the Canadian farmers. First of all—and this is provided for partly but not completely—there should be provision made for supervised credit primarily for young farmers in low income families. We know there are many very ambitious and capable young men who have the talent to go into the business of farming as a lifetime occupation but are unable to do so because there is not enough credit available for them at the outset to set up an economic farm unit. The raising of the maximum limit alone will not solve this problem.

Another matter not dealt with by the bill is that debt repayment schedules should be tied to rises and falls in farm incomes. I think that most members from the rural areas will agree with me when I say that quite often, in fact in the majority of cases, loans made to farmers are spread over a 20 or 30 years period. There are only a limited number of years when the annual income falls below that level which makes it impossible for him to meet the loan repayments and interest, and it is in that limited number of years that the farmer gets into difficulty. What happens is that he is usually forced to go to other markets and lending institutions outside the Farm Credit Corporation and farm improvement loans legislation and borrow money, not only to carry on his operation but also to meet the required repayments as well. I think there should be some provision made to make it possible to extend the term of repayment by one year when a farmer's income in one year drops below his ability to make the payments required.

I also think it is desirable that the complete financing of farm units be undertaken by one lender. For example, Dr. Gilson says that farms should be financed as a whole unit in contrast to a piecemeal approach. Under the terms of the Farm Credit Act and the farm improvements loans legislation it is possible, or will be when this bill passes, to borrow up to $55,000 both for farm equipment and for land. If we are to make this farm credit administration comprehensive and complete, there should be some provision in the act for these disastrous years when a farmer is simply unable out of his current income to make the payments he is obliged to make for those years. Quite often these secondary loans, if I may call them that, are taken at substantially higher rates of interest, which only adds to his burden further down the road. I say that because I think that if arrangements were made for these disaster years it would keep the security for the loan made by the Farm Credit Corporation in better standing. With a secondary loan the farmer would be saddled at some later time with higher interest rates and would find them difficult to meet.

I agree with increasing the amount of loans so as to keep pace with the increasing price of land, farm equipment and so on.

The reason I urge the minister and the government to take into consideration this matter of providing some provision for these bad years is because I think, if we look at farm land values over the years, we see we really do not have depreciation at all. In fact, if history is to repeat itself for the next 20 years concerning what we have had during the past 20 years, there will be an appreciation or an increase in the values of all farm land, rather than depreciation, and no one is going to be able to run away with a farm. If the Farm Credit Corporation takes security in a farm, that farm will be there. The dollar value of the farm will be higher, five years after a loan is made, than it is at the time the loan is actually made.

I think the government should also give consideration to increasing the percentage of loan available in relation to the appraised value because, as I pointed out, the farm is there. It consists of land and is a very solid and substantial security. Also, Mr. Speaker, I think that some of the methods and the values that are allowed at this time respecting land are completely out of line with the market price.

We know that F.C.C. and other lenders are very conservative in their appraising of land values, and in many cases when a young farmer is getting started, if he can only obtain something like 75 per cent of the appraised value, this amounts to less than 50 per cent of the actual purchase price. I think that the supervisors, appraisers, assessors—whatever you want to call them—while they have been doing a commendable job have been prevented from using realistic and up to date valuations. For this reason I would urge the government to take another long, hard look at this matter.

The minister referred to what he called an economic rate, when he talked about the interest rates that are to be charged on the added amounts to the maximum limits. I am not sure where that term, economic rate, comes from, but I think that 5 per cent is probably a maximum economic rate and, from the connotation left on that term by the minister, it seems to me he was talking about the cost to the government of the money that is going to be provided. I think that charging a rate above 5 per cent is anything but an economic rate and, if it carries very much beyond that, it will be uneconomic for farmers to purchase land.

Looking at farm costs over the past few years—and the minister has admitted this—depreciation and the other costs of maintaining machinery on farms are not only getting to be, but are now, the major cost factor. He referred to some cases where farm costs studies showed that depreciation and machinery costs amounted to over 50 per cent of the total cost of operating farms. Mr. Speaker, it would be easy to take the position that one could lay all the responsibility for this on the farm machinery companies for increasing the price of their farm equipment. But that is not quite accurate because farmers, by and large, are buying bigger equipment, more complex equipment, and therefore it follows that the price of this equipment increases. In many cases if it is used properly, and used often enough, it will pay for itself in spite of the increased cost; but nevertheless I think it is another important field that could be investigated, and we could have some action with respect to this matter of farm machinery costs.

During the last session of the legislature, the Alberta government passed a bill that in fact allows the province to underwrite the cost of certain pieces of equipment bought by a farm machinery co-operative. In my view this is another example of the provincial governments being forced to move into an area of legislation because the federal government has failed to meet its responsibilities.

There are many pieces of farm equipment which are used on a farm for but a few days each year, and it would certainly be an economic advantage for several farmers to own one of these pieces of equipment and use it for a few days in rotation. I could name a number of these pieces of equipment, but I am not going to do so because I may leave some out. In other words, I would not be able to cover the whole list.

If we accept the premise that the federal government should be primarily responsible for farm credit, then the federal government should also be prepared to accept the responsibility for providing some farm credit to small co-ops of farmers who want to buy some of this expensive machinery that could be used by more than one farm unit.

I do not want to detain the house much longer tonight because I think there are many things in this legislation that are improvements. However, at the same time I would not like either the Minister of Agriculture or the government to think that they have solved all of the problems of farm credit in the country, simply by raising the limits and making these very few minor amendments which are proposed in Bill C-100, the bill before us tonight.

Mr. Speaker, there is also a need of land levelling with respect to large irrigation systems which have been developed over the past number of years in western Canada. One of the most desperate needs, that has not been met to date, has been for some kind of credit to be available over a long period of time so that this land can be levelled to the point where farmers can spread irrigation water economically. Once this land levelling is done, and is done properly, it enhances the value of a farm almost into perpetuity, and it never has to be done again.

It is true that at the present time there is provision under the Farm Credit Corporation to borrow money for this specific purpose, but I think we need to recognize that almost 100 per cent of the money needed for this specific purpose should be supplied through the form of credit. I say this because it enhances the value of the farmland. It immediately increases the productivity of a farm, and there is no depreciation on it at all.

As a matter of fact, Mr. Speaker, right at the present time I am having a little difficulty with the income tax department concerning some farmers who have in fact done this work, because the income tax department takes the position that there is no depreciation on farm land, that is, on this levelling; and I agree. At the same time the farmers have in fact paid out some money to do these improvements, but the income tax department will not allow them to charge it up as an operating expense because it is a capital improvement. Therefore the income tax department, or the Department of National Revenue, will have to take another look at it, and have it one way or the other. It is simply unfair for them to suggest there is no depreciation and therefore farmers cannot claim a deduction from capital cost while on the other hand suggesting it is not an operating expense.

As far as this party is concerned we are going to make one or two suggestions as we go through the clause by clause study of the bill. We think that the bill contains some improvements in the present act, but at the same time we believe that smaller borrowers should have been given consideration along the lines I suggested with respect to a different kind of appraising, and particularly by making provision in some way for those years when the farmer's income is insufficient to make the payments demanded of him for the year in question.

Mr. C. A. Gauthier (Roberval): Mr. Speaker, it is with great pleasure that I rise to speak on Bill No. C-100 amending the Farm Credit Act. I must congratulate the Minister of Agriculture for having introduced in the house this bill which involves some rather interesting amendments. We can congratulate him now to make up for the times we criticize him, because tonight he deserves it. I do not know whether it is due to the fact that his attendance in the house has been more regular that he felt more deeply the needs of the farmers, but we notice that he is getting to know his department better and that he has a fuller understanding of the subject. I want to congratulate him personally for that.

The proposed amendments will not solve all the problems besetting our farmers. But when we take action like that, we encourage our farmers to become more interested in the land.

I was listening a while ago to the minister when he said that the Farm Credit Corporation will have granted 9,875 loans in 1964. We can say that this is a progressive step when, two years ago, we find that 5,885 farm loans had been granted by the Farm Credit Corporation in 1962 and 7,438 in 1963. This year, we have 9,875 loans.

Our pace is rather normal. I believe that, with the amendments introduced this year by the minister, the year 1965 will register a new expansion of farming, in general.

Then, I see in clause 1:

> The definition of "farming" is to be broadened to include bee-keeping.

That provision pleases me above anything else because, for the past three or four years, many farmers in my riding have been trying to get by as well as they could on their farms. I realize that they will welcome that amendment which will allow them to operate on a more economic basis that sector of agriculture which was forgotten by all previous governments. I understand this field of agriculture is sufficiently important to interest many bee-keepers, Mr. Minister, and I am glad you thought of them.

The same thing can be said of the word "farming" in the explanatory notes. In that amendment, it seems that more emphasis is given to the real meaning of farming. I notice also in the second paragraph that the word "farmer":

> —means a person whose principal occupation is farming. This amendment would enable the corporation to deem the executor or the administrator—

How often have I seen, Mr. Minister, farms where the father had died and all the children had to leave the family home, because only the head of the family was recognized as a farmer. Now, under this amendment, the executor of the estate can administer the estate of the deceased farmer, that is to say he is considered as the farmer just like the deceased himself, no matter if the executor of the estate is the son of the deceased or a relative of the deceased. In other words, this amendment will protect and preserve many of our farms which today, after 10, 15 and 20 years, have yet to find somebody to resume farming.

Clause 2 would increase the capital of the corporation. Here again, this will permit the corporation to take another step forward. It will perhaps permit 2,000 or 3,000 more farmers to resume work on their farms, operate new farms or save old farms. In the province of Quebec, as I said earlier in the house, the question is not to take over new land at the present time, but the biggest effort is rather to get back into production abandoned land which represents a proportion of 30 or 35 per cent of all farm land.

Mr. Speaker, I was told by officials of the Farm Credit Corporation in Roberval that at the rate things are going at present, we will have granted this year from 125 to 130 loans in the Roberval constituency alone. I hope that, following the proposed amendments, we will be able to grant 200 or 250 loans next year, for even 500 loans would not be too great a number in my constituency.

Provision of clause 3 will enable a farmer to borrow from the Farm Credit Corporation to advance money to a member of his family desirous to acquire farm land. This is of great interest to farmers' sons and there are many of them in my constituency.

In fact, my constituency includes large families of farmers and the majority of the sons in those families have tried to work in industry, but since they do not have the required training, they have to come back home after five, six and even eight years of work in an industry and they try to buy land.

I have discussed this problem with the agronomist of the Roberval constituency who told me that the applications of some 40 sons of farmers who wished to buy these lands where they would have amply provided for their needs had been refused. In fact, I know these farmers; they are hard workers and the new provisions of Farm Credit Act will allow this group, which could not do so last year, to take advantage of the Farm Credit Corporation.

I am sure that, as a result of that amendment, it will be easier to help young sons of farmers who wish to return to farming.

As for the rate of interest, I hope that it will be reduced and, above all, that it will not be over 5 per cent.

The minister said a while ago that loans of $40,000 to $50,000 would be more costly. I do not think so, Mr. Speaker. I do not understand why someone who can borrow from $15,000 to $20,000, at a rate of interest of 5 per cent would have to pay more to borrow $40,000 to $50,000. No, I cannot understand that.

And if the rate of interest is set at 6 or 7 per cent in order to improve the standard of living of someone, it will certainly not be the standard of living of farmers. It will be that of the lender, of the chartered bank, or of any other lending company. If we really care to propose amendments in the interest of the farmer, let the interest rate remain at 5 per cent, while increasing the amount of loans to $40,000 and $50,000.

Mr. Speaker, I would have wished for a little more time to deal with other subjects, but a friend of mine asked me three or four minutes to make known his own point of view. I shall therefore give him the floor, but before doing so, I would like to deal with the operation of the Farm Credit Corporation. That is mainly at fault in my electoral district. But those who are dissatisfied are those who have not been able to avail themselves of such loans, because the personnel in charge of administering the act was not competent.

I already said to the house that the personnel was not competent, whether because its members were too few or because some lacked the required knowledge. There is a proverb that says: One cannot give what one does not have. If a young counsellor does not know anything, what can he do? How can he assess a land? I have found that out by myself in my own riding, and that is the reason why I asked the minister to keep his eyes open and send an investigator into the field. I am sure that this investigation will prove the truth of my allegations.

Last year I asked for an increase in the number of advisers in the province of Quebec. I am sorry the last report does not give these details, as did the report for 1962, because no comparison can be made with other provinces.

We wholeheartedly hope for an increase in that personnel and for the updating of their knowledge.

Mr. Auguste Choquette (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, I shall say but a few words. I do not want to miss this opportunity of discussing the bill before us.

After the speeches made by the hon. member for Nicolet-Yamaska (Mr. Vincent) and the hon. member for Roberval (Mr. Gauthier), I wish to point out that we should congratulate warmly the minister on the presentation of this bill. This clearly indicates—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. Does the hon. member want to direct a question or to take a substantial part in the debate?

Mr. Choquette: No. I wanted to take part in the debate, not in a substantial way perhaps, but in an ordinary way.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. In the circumstances, I must recognize the hon. member for Carleton (Mr. Francis).

Mr. Choquette: Excuse me, Mr. Speaker. I had not seen the hon. member for Carleton. I know he is more competent than I am to speak about agriculture.

[Text]

Mr. Lloyd Francis (Carleton): I think that the tributes which have been paid the minister in regard to this bill tonight have been quite unusual and well deserved. I was a little overwhelmed by the reference made to him by the hon. member for Kootenay West (Mr. Herridge) who said he thought the minister's thinking was 40 years ahead of the thinking of his party. Certainly, in my opinion there is no question but that the philosophy of the bill is just plain, common sense and I would not embellish it with any label like socialism or anything else. It is a philosophy which will enable farmers to do a job which is today increasingly difficult for them to perform in an age in which capital is more and more important.

There is no question but that this act, which is under the administration of the Department of Agriculture, is the proper machinery for the extension of farm credit. I am very happy with the amendments which are coming forward and which will mean, in effect, that instead of the industrial development bank getting increasingly into this area, as it has been as a result of vertical integration, the administration will be in the hands of the department whose orientation is more in the direction of service than it is in the direction of straight financial administration. I believe the hon. member for Kootenay West made this point and made it very well in the course of his speech.

The transfer of the administration of the Farm Credit Corporation from the Department of Finance to the Department of Agriculture does represent a fundamental change in the philosophy of that act, and the amendments which are coming forward are in keeping with that spirit.

I presume it is ten o'clock, Mr. Speaker.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Churchill: I would like to ask the acting house leader if we will continue with this bill tomorrow or do we shift to something else?

Mr. MacNaught: Tomorrow, we will take up the government notice of motion which appears on Votes and Proceedings as the last item on page 2, that it is expedient that the houses of parliament do approve the ratification of a treaty between Canada and the United States of America relating to cooperative development of the water resources of the Columbia river. When that is concluded, we will go on with second reading of an act to amend the National Housing Act. The next item will be the continuation of this debate.

Mr. Churchill: And what about Friday?

Mr. MacNaught: On Friday we shall not be considering estimates. We shall be going on with legislation, very likely the amendments to the National Housing Act.

PROCEEDINGS OF ADJOURNMENT MOTION

(Subject matter of questions debated under adjournment motion).

A motion to adjourn the house under provisional standing order 39A deemed to have been moved.

TRANSPORT—PRAIRIE PROVINCES—CLOSING OF RAILWAY STATIONS AND REMOVAL OF AGENTS

Mr. Jack McIntosh (Swift Current-Maple Creek): The question I wish to debate tonight is a simple one. Although Mr. Speaker ruled the other afternoon, it should be put on the order paper, he did not state why it should be put on the order paper rather than answered in the house. I suggest it is an urgent question and it is one which is directly related to rail line abandonment.

At the present time there is on the prairies, as hon. members know, an agreement between the railway companies and the government that no action will be taken to proceed with rail line abandonment until a complete survey of the situation has been made. I understand that such a survey is under way at the present time. My question to the government was this: Will the government consider freezing the action of the railway companies at the present time in making application to the board of transport commissioners to close certain branch line stations and do away with station agents? Steps of this sort are very similar to abandoning the line itself. As there is no minister to speak for the Department of Transport in the house tonight and since the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) is not here—

An hon. Member: The parliamentary secretary is here.

Mr. McIntosh: —I would ask the parliamentary secretary, then, to request the minister to give this matter his serious consideration. As I have just said, this action by the railway companies is tantamount to rail line abandonment. I have had experience of these applications by the railways and it is my personal opinion that the companies know what conditions should exist before the board of transport commissioners will entertain applications for abandonment. In my opinion the railway companies do everything within their power to see that these conditions exist before they make applications. In one case I have in mind they even took the telephone out of a station so that the people in the area could not telephone to the station agent to find out when a train was due to arrive. I might say that on branch lines trains seldom run to schedule. People would not know when perishable goods were coming in. Moreover, there are no modern facilities in many of these stations. They are of old vintage. Some of the old prairie towns have been modernizing themselves in latter years, but the railway companies do nothing at all to introduce people to patronize their mode of transportation. In other words, it would appear to me, as one who comes from the prairies, that the railway companies are only concerned with making money out of handling grain; they are not concerned with the service they can give the people on the prairies.

I would ask the parliamentary secretary if as soon as possible he would request the board of transport commissioners or the minister to give early consideration to preventing the consideration of these applications until the survey has been completed. I do not wish to say more at the present time. I hope the hon. gentleman has got my point. It is one which is directly related to rail line abandonment and it amounts to practically the same thing, particularly in areas where permission is given by the board of transport commissioners.

Mr. Jean-Charles Cantin (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): The agreement between the railway companies and the government did not embrace the removal of stations or agents, but all representations by hon. members, and by the hon. member for Swift Current-Maple Creek in particular, will be given due consideration and we shall be glad to follow up his remarks.

Motion agreed to and the house adjourned at 10.07 p.m.

PUBLIC ACCOUNTS—CONCURRENCE IN SECOND REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, in the anxiety of the house to learn the present standing of priorities I missed an opportunity to catch Your Honour's eye on presenting motions. Perhaps I may have leave to revert to motions.

Mr. Speaker: Agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Baldwin presented the second report of the standing committee on public accounts, and moved that the report be concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

STATEMENT ON PRIORITY OF LEGISLATION

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, as requested I should like to make a statement to the house on the business before the house.

The government hopes to complete as soon as possible some important measures which are now in hand and which are before the house. These are the bill on farm credit, the national housing legislation and the approval of the Columbia river treaty. We will proceed as soon as we can, Mr. Speaker, with the constitutional amendment to section 94A of the British North America Act making it possible for the pension plan to include supplementary benefits. All the provincial governments have agreed to this amendment in principle, but we have to await the full agreement on the exact wording of the amendment by all provinces, and I think there are three which have not yet replied to our request for agreement on the formula. I am hopeful, however, that we will be able to move on this matter next week. The constitutional amendment may therefore come ahead of the resolution relating to a Canadian flag. Certainly we will not let anything delay that amendment, because we want to make sure it is dealt with at Westminster before the parliament there dissolves.

Subject to this consideration we intend toward the end of next week to proceed with the resolution relating to a Canadian flag, and we shall follow that with the resolution on a national anthem. If progress on all the matters I have mentioned is not very fast it may be necessary to interrupt the debate in order to ask for interim supply and, of course, we hope to make progress with the consideration of the estimates. When the constitutional amendment has been made we wish to proceed with the early stages of the pension legislation so there will be ample time for this complex matter to be studied by a parliamentary committee and by the public generally.

Next in order of urgency we place legislation for extending family allowances and to deal with certain aspects of federal-provincial fiscal arrangements. It would not be possible now to give an exact order for other items, but I will mention the following to which we attach priority importance and others which have already been mentioned to the house: legislation to provide loans to students; the completion of two measures which are now before committees in the house, namely the amendments to the National Defence Act and the legislation on a 12 mile fishing zone; a measure to assist Canadian magazines; the legislation on electoral redistribution; the establishment of a treasury board with a separate minister, and the creation of a department of forestry and rural development.

I do not need to go any further in order to indicate that there is plenty of work ahead of us. Indeed, so that members need not give up all hope of some kind of break this summer, the government intends shortly to propose to the house a measure for the lengthening of the hours of sitting.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): As far as the constitutional amendment is concerned, the amendment which will be asked for, we in this party said a year ago that such an amendment would be necessary if survivor benefits were to be provided under the pension legislation. I am glad the government intends to proceed now, after having made several indefinite motions in the direction of pension legislation; it brought these things forward and then withdrew them.

With reference to the flag situation, apparently the meeting of the Liberal council has slowed up the Prime Minister a little and he has decided that the day of politicking and polemics is over. As a matter of fact, if I might make reference to a statement he made last evening, it is very obvious that he had in mind the calling of an election. He wanted to blame the opposition for obstruction; then he proceeded to say that 40 different matters had been passed and he proudly exhibited them as evidence of the activity of the government.

Let me say this. That excuse of obstructionism on the part of the opposition is simply a smokescreen designed by the Prime Minister as an excuse for the election he is trying to force on the people. The very fact that 40 pieces of legislation were passed is indicative of the degree to which parliament has applied itself. When the government proceeds to place before parliament legislation which is beneficial to the people, then, as always, we will give it support; and the measures to which reference has been made, the measures which are to come up, deserve consideration and priority. But I say this to the Prime Minister: do not let him think he is bluffing anyone when he endeavours to place a charge of obstructionism against the government—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Diefenbaker: —against the opposition. The responsibility rests on the government, whose chameleon-like changes, legislation brought in one day and postponed or withdrawn the next day, have brought about uncertainty. If, following the meeting of the Liberal council, the government now knows where it is going and will bring worthy, acceptable and necessary legislation before the house, we will give it every support to bring it into effect—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Diefenbaker: —as has always been our course. Now that we have a change of front on the flag, a withdrawal, a retreat, and we find on the other hand an end of indecision and inaction, of fumbling and uncertainty in the presentation of legislation, I hope that parliament will be more effective. All the government has to do is to give leadership rather than indulging in politicking and polemics.

An hon. Member: The chickens home to roost.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, after this excellent example of abstaining from politicking and polemics may I say just a word. I do not think the public interest is served at this time by any party in any part of the house talking about the imminence of an election. I think the people of Canada expect members of parliament to get down to work and do some of the things they were elected to do.

The first few items which the Prime Minister has outlined as requiring immediate consideration, the Farm Credit Act legislation, the National Housing Act legislation, the Columbia river treaty and, if it is ready, the constitutional amendment to permit survivor benefits to be paid under the Canada pension plan, should, of course, be dealt with at once. But I do want to point out to the Prime Minister that other items—the Canada pension plan itself, student loans, the legislation to give some measure of protection to Canadian magazines, the redistribution legislation and the extension of family allowances—are all very essential pieces of legislation.

I must say on behalf of the party for which I am speaking that we consider these pieces of legislation much more important than a debate on the flag. We feel that the question of the flag could quite easily have been left until next fall. It could have been left until these very pressing legislative matters had been dealt with. The people of this country are concerned about bread and butter issues. They are concerned about pensions, family allowances and loans to students, and we feel that parliament would be better occupied dealing with these legislative matters first.

The Prime Minister and the house know that I and most of my colleagues are quite prepared to support legislation for a distinctive national flag for Canada, but we do not think this is a matter of such paramount importance that it should delay the discussion and implementation of some of the important legislation I have just enumerated.

I do hope the Prime Minister will give some thought to the advisability of giving higher priority to the legislation which he said would be discussed after we had disposed of the flag resolution or that, from time to time, the debate on the flag resolution may be interrupted in order to consider such things as student loans, the Canada pension plan, family allowances and so on. I point out to the Prime Minister that there are hundreds of students across Canada who ought now to be making their arrangements for returning to university next fall. Unless these student loans are made available fairly soon they will be of no value whatever for the academic year 1964-65.

It seems to us, therefore, that we would be doing our duty as a parliament if we were to forgo a discussion of the flag resolution at this particular stage and deal with such matters as student loans, the Canada pension plan, family allowances and these other items I have enumerated, and leave the matter of the flag resolution to a later date, probably next October or November.

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): The Prime Minister has outlined some of his opinions regarding priority. I think that to put first things first, we in this house have a very special, collective responsibility. We are very much aware that we are a minority house. I am convinced that a minority parliament can work, and work effectively. In fact it can work even more effectively than a majority parliament can work or has worked during recent parliaments, if only members who make up this house would put their priorities in the right place.

I am sure this need rests not only in the hands of the opposition but in the hands of the government as well. I suggest to the right hon. Prime Minister that he look very carefully to his responsibilities in the government so far as priorities are concerned, and that we in the opposition should do likewise, in so far as getting work done is concerned and not just naming work that has to be done. In a very special way the eyes of Canadians right across this country are on us as they have never been before. It is expected that as representatives of the Canadian people we produce some results. I believe it is this which should have first priority.

A minority parliament can work and it will work if we make up our minds that is what we are going to do. There are several suggestions I should like to make to the right hon. Prime Minister. One is that I feel it is the responsibility of the government in bringing legislation before the house to leave it there, not to put it out and then pull it back but to leave it before us until completed. A great deal of our time is wasted going back over the same ground that has been covered before, simply because there has been a time interval between debates on the subject.

Then I would hope the special committee on procedure could bring in a report and lay before us their recommendations for speeding up the work of the house. These recommendations should be adopted on an interim basis. One of the things which is most important is that we should come to an agreement on the length of debate in reference to any particular piece of legislation that is placed before us. So I would urge the committee to bring in their final report as quickly as possible and let us give it a temporary trial.

Again I come back to this particular point, that it is not good enough to be naming pieces of legislation which we must deal with before we have a recess. A recess is a very necessary and essential thing, not only for the government but for each individual member of the house in connection with his constituency responsibilities. The first priority should first of all be to make up our minds that we are not just going to talk about the work that has to be done, but that we intend to make every effort to do it.

Mr. Réal Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, all the points raised by the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) this afternoon as business before the house were mentioned in the speech from the throne which was read to us in the middle of last February: farm credit, amendment to the Central Housing and Mortgage Corporation, Columbia treaty, amendment to section 94; the only measure which might not have been included at that time deals with the national flag and the national anthem. But if my memory serves me right, I think it was. The following were also included: national estimates, family allowances to young people 17 and 18 years old attending school, loans to students. All those measures were proposed to us exactly three months ago.

In spite of what was announced in the speech from the throne, the government has not seen fit until now to introduce such legislation, and today the Prime Minister comes up with some 20 items. Well, even if we were to spend only three or four days on each, we would still be sitting in six months. Why? Because the government waits too long before bringing forward its measures.

Yesterday, for instance, the Prime Minister stated that if the opposition persisted in practising obstruction as it was doing he would have to go to the people and hold the opposition responsible for a new election.

As for us, Mr. Speaker, this threat of a new election does not scare us one bit.

A moment ago I heard the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Diefenbaker) say that he was guilty of no filibuster. We heard the same thing last year when he was prime minister and the present Prime Minister was leader of the opposition. At that time the then prime minister accused the opposition of doing some obstruction by opposing the legislation laid before the house.

Mr. Speaker, let the government face up to its responsibilities concerning the introduction of legislation. We are here to examine it and vote on it.

Now, we have just been told that some items might be more interesting than the question of the national flag. Obviously the Prime Minister must withdraw or, at least, seem to withdraw his resolution calling for the adoption of two flags and two national anthems for Canada, because that proposal does not appear to be acceptable to the vast majority of Canadians.

Wherever objections may come from we are favouring one and not two flags. If the resolution had been a simple one the Prime Minister could have had it passed a week ago. Instead, we are faced with procrastination, delaying tactics, we witness some fancy fence sitting and are getting nowhere.

Mr. Speaker, I contend that the government must introduce its legislation so that we may consider it, instead of finding excuses and saying that the opposition is holding up the business of the house.

We are ready and anxious to examine and pass any legislation submitted by the government.

[Mr. Caouette.]

CANADIAN FLAG

TABLING OF TELEGRAM RESPECTING PROCEDURE AFTER RESOLUTION ADOPTED

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I would like to table a telegram that I sent to the premier of the province of Newfoundland in reply to a request by him for an explanation of the procedure which would be followed if the resolution regarding the national flag were adopted.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, would the Prime Minister say whether he would table the communication he had from Premier Smallwood?

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, there is no other correspondence. The request for this information was made by telephone, and this is the only correspondence dealing with the matter.

THE MINISTRY

TRIP TO ENGLAND BY TRANSPORT MINISTER

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, while I am on my feet, and as a matter of privilege, may I clarify a question which was raised in the house yesterday about whether the Minister of Transport went to England at government expense or at his own expense. The hon. member for Bow River asked that question, and the hon. member for Ontario asked whether the trip was made on a commercial flight or on a government plane. My reply is to be found at page 3833 of Hansard:

> —I have just been informed that the Minister of Transport went to England by T.C.A. commercial flight, accompanied by his wife and daughter. He will be returning alone today. He bougnt his own tickets and the visit had been arranged some time ago, long before the question of the Queen's audience arose.

The Minister of Transport, who arrived back in Ottawa last evening and is in his seat today, has informed me this morning that he bought tickets for his wife and daughter. However, like all his predecessors he is provided with transportation on T.C.A., and used the transportation so provided. Because his visit was a personal one, he has assured me that he has submitted no account to the treasury for any expenses incurred.

An hon. Member: As yet.

POWER

COLUMBIA RIVER—APPROVAL OF RATIFICATION OF TREATY

On the order: Government notices of motion:

June 1—The Secretary of State for External Affairs—The following proposed motion:—That it is expedient that the Houses of Parliament do approve the ratification of the treaty between Canada and the United States of America relating to co-operative development of the water resources of the Columbia river basin, signed at Washington on January 17, 1961, and the consequent coming into force of the protocol thereto annexed to the exchange of notes signed at Washington on January 22, 1964, and that this house do approve the same.

Mr. Speaker: Pursuant to section 2 of standing order 21 this government notice of motion is transferred to and ordered for consideration under government orders later this day.

QUESTIONS

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

HOUSE COMMITTEE ON CENTENNIAL SYMBOL

Question No. 767—Mr. Prittie:

Concerning the competition announced by the Secretary of State for a centennial symbol for 1967, does the government plan to establish a house committee on artistic design to make the final selection?

Mr. Lamontagne: It is not the intention to establish a house committee on artistic design to make the final selection for a centennial symbol for 1967.

*ADVISORY COMMITTEE ON FIREARMS

Question No. 933—Mr. Fisher:

1. Is there any committee of, or named by the Department of Justice, designed to advise on the law and regulations regarding the use of firearms and, if so, when was it constituted and who are the members?

2. Is the chief constables association of Canada represented on the committee?

Mr. Favreau: Because of the wide interest that attaches to this matter I think I should explain the situation in a little detail rather than attempt a "yes" or "no" answer. I should perhaps remind hon. members that I spoke to this matter very briefly in the house on March 9 last in reply to a question from the hon. member for Esquimalt-Saanich.

The firearms sections of the Criminal Code have for a long time been the subject of great interest and representations on the part of those who, on the one hand, think they are not strict enough and those who, on the other hand, think they are too strict.

Early in 1960 an informal committee was set up to study such provisions comprising representatives of the legal branch of the Department of Justice, the Department of National Revenue, the R.C.M. Police and the Canadian association of chiefs of police. This committee has given the matter considerable study as has also the criminal law section of the conference of commissioners on uniformity of legislation in Canada, but no decisions have been reached by the department as to what amendments should be put forward because, mainly, of the conflicting views and representations above referred to. That informal committee has been inactive since last fall and there are no plans for reconvening it. In the meantime my department continues to study these provisions in connection with the continuing Criminal Code amendment program.

I wish therefore to assure all persons who are interested in the subject matter that it is completely open for consideration of any views that anyone desires to place before the department. I hope that, besides answering the question, this reply will serve to quiet the fears that appear to have been aroused that the department intends to recommend far reaching amendments which will have an unduly restrictive effect upon the legitimate activities of sportsmen and antique collectors.

HIGHWAY PAVING, GUYSBOROUGH COUNTY, N.S.

Question No. 978—Mr. Armstrong:

1. Where are the 46 miles of highway in Guysborough county, Nova Scotia, which are still to be paved under the roads to resources program?

2. Which stretches of this highway are to be paved in 1964-65?

3. If any contracts have been made, with whom have they been made?

Mr. Laing: 1. Approximately two thirds of the 67 mile Goldborough loop has, at the request of the province, been approved for paving; of this, work is already largely or entirely complete on the section from Goshen to a point just east of Seal Harbour, leaving a balance of approximately five miles under the present arrangements.

2 and 3. The planning and scheduling of construction is the responsibility of the province, subject to the approval of contract awards by the federal government. In July, 1963, a contract to Warren Maritimes Limited was approved for paving from Drumhead to the Torbay road, a distance of approximately 15 miles. It is expected that the balance of this contract, covering the five mile section from Seal Harbour to the Torbay road junction will be completed in 1964-65.

WINTER CONSTRUCTION BONUS APPLICATIONS, MANITOBA

Question No. 1,050—Mr. Stefanson:

1. How many applications were received for the $500 bonus under the winter home construction program for homes built in the province of Manitoba?
2. How many qualified for the bonus?
3. How many qualified in (a) metropolitan Winnipeg (b) Brandon (c) Flin Flon (d) Portage la Prairie (e) Selkirk (f) Dauphin (g) Gimli, and (h) Stonewall?

Mr. MacEachen: 1. Under the winter house building incentive program, 1,468 applications for certification were received in respect to structures built in the province of Manitoba.

2. Out of this number of applications 1,255 qualified for the incentive payment.

3. The numbers of qualified applicants in the specified municipalities are as follows: (a) metropolitan Winnipeg, 934; (b) Brandon, 69; (c) Flin Flon, 4; (d) Portage la Prairie, 14; (e) Selkirk, 36; (f) Dauphin, 3; (g) Gimli, 1; (h) Stonewall, nil.

SHAUGHNESSY HOSPITAL, VANCOUVER

Question No. 1,053—Mr. Douglas:

With reference to the Shaughnessy hospital in Vancouver, British Columbia, operated by the Department of Veterans Affairs (a) how many beds does it contain (b) how many pensioners' cases were re-examined in 1963 by the board of directors (c) how many veteran bed-patients were treated in 1963 (d) how many veteran out-patients were treated in 1963 (e) how many R.C.M.P. and armed services out patients were treated in 1963 (f) how many sick mariners were hospitalized in 1963 (g) how many R.C.M.P. and armed services personnel were hospitalized in 1963 (h) how many prisoners from penitentiaries were hospitalized in 1963 (i) by what amount, if any, did the B.C. hospital insurance plan contribute to the revenues of this hospital during 1963?

Mr. Teillet:

	Rated capacity	Beds set up
(a) Active treatment	572	578
Chronic care	378	374
Domiciliary care (George Derby wing)	215	211
Total	1,165	1,163

(b) There were 2,911 medical re-examinations of pensioners carried out by pension medical examiners during 1963.

Note—The figures shown in parts (c), (d), (e), (f), (g) and (h) refer to episodes of treatment. Statistics are not kept in a form that would show the number of different patients treated.

(c) 6,590.

(d) 90,858.

(e) R.C.M.P.	4,400
Armed services	1,647

(f) 371.

(g) R.C.M.P.	109
Armed services	260

(h) 34.

(i) $2,261,052.

DEFENCE RESEARCH BOARD—REMOVAL OF HOUSEHOLD EFFECTS

Question No. 1,064—Mr. Southam:

1. Were tenders called by the chairman of the defence research board for the removal of the household effects of Mr. R. D. Hanson, Mr. A. J. Craig and Mr. I. R. Gordon, all of Prince Albert, Saskatchewan, in 1963 and, if so, what were the estimated weights and the costs submitted by each and all of the tenderers?
2. To whom was the tender given, and what was the actual weight and price for removal of the said effects?

Mr. Cardin: 1 and 2. No, tenders were not called by the chairman, defence research board. The contract was made in each case by the employee with the moving company in accordance with the procedures established by the removal expense regulations. Details of estimated weights and costs and actual weights and costs are as follows:

Name	Weight (lbs.)	Cost $
R. D. Hansen
(a) Estimates
Northern Cartage Co.	9,000	1,508.50
North American Van Lines	8,000	1,313.75
(b) Actual

I. R. Gordon
(a) Estimates
City Cartage Co.	6,000	1,039.75
North American Van Lines	4,400	717.60
(b) Actual
North American Van Lines	4,770	824.20

SOCIAL INSURANCE APPLICATIONS BY CIVIL SERVANTS

Question No. 1,070—Mr. Horner (Jasper-Edson):

1. Are employees of the dominion government compelled to fill out an application for a social insurance number and, if so (a) what happens if an employee refuses to do so (b) will such an employee lose any superannuation benefits (c) will he be deprived of any old age security benefits should be become eligible?

2. If an employee is not now paying unemployment insurance, and completes an application form, would he then be eligible for unemployment insurance?

Mr. Lamontagne: 1. (a) All employees covered by the Unemployment Insurance Act, including those of the dominion government, are required to complete an application for social insurance number. Section 107 of the Unemployment Insurance Act provides that every person who contravenes or fails to comply with any of the provisions of that act or the regulations made by the commission with the approval of the governor in council is guilty of an offence. Section 80 of the unemployment insurance regulations, approved by the governor in council, requires an employee to register. Registration by employees not covered by the Unemployment Insurance Act is entirely voluntary. (b) No. (c) The Old Age Security Act provides for a flat rate benefit to be paid to everyone in Canada who can meet the age and residence requirements. There is no provision in any legislation whereby a person can be deprived of old age security benefits if he has met the eligibility requirements.

2. No. In order to become eligible for unemployment insurance benefit, a person must have been in insured employment and have had the requisite contributions made on his behalf in addition to fulfilling the other conditions of entitlement.

TEA ROOM CONCESSION, GREEN GABLES, P.E.I.

Question No. 1,079—Mr. Macquarrie:

1. Were tenders called for operation of the tea room at Green Gables house in the Prince Edward Island national park and, if so, how many tenders were received?

2. Were said tenders advertised in the daily newspapers of Prince Edward Island?

3. Was Mrs. Donald Lamont, former concessionnaire, offered a renewal of contract or invited to tender on a new one?

4. Who will operate the concession in the summer of 1964?

Mr. Laing: 1. Yes, in March, 1959 (six tenders); cancelled and called again in May, 1959 (seven tenders).

2. Yes.

3. Not for the 1964 season.

4. Miss Vivian Woodside, the low tenderer on both occasions in 1959, and Mr. Wilfrid Pickering.

*RELEASE OF SHORT TERM COMMISSIONED OFFICERS

Question No. 1,087—Mr. MacEwan:

1. How many short term commissioned officers are to be released from the (a) army (b) air force, and (c) navy, as a result of the integration of the armed forces, and what are the various categories in which these personnel are listed?

2. What is the estimated cost of training of the above officers for each of the three services?

3. What is the estimated cost of training an officer for air crew for the R.C.A.F.; an officer for the army; and an officer for the Royal Canadian Navy?

Mr. Cardin: 1. It is not possible at this time to determine the number of short term commissioned officers in the armed forces who are likely to be released as a result of integration.

2. Is answered by answer to No. 1.

3. To train an officer to wings standard in the R.C.A.F. costs approximately $85,000. Dependent upon the method of entry and the tasks to which officers are assigned, the cost of training an officer in the three services varies. However, under the Canadian services colleges plan, the estimated cost to graduate an officer cadet from R.M.C. is $36,753.

"MILE OF HISTORY", OTTAWA

Question No. 1,104—Mr. Nugent:

1. Has the government abandoned plans to locate a "mile of history" on Sussex drive in the city of Ottawa and, if so, for what reasons?

2. If not, what in detail are the plans, and when will they be brought to fruition?

Answer: 1. The government has not instructed the national capital commission to abandon plans for acquiring properties and improving buildings on Sussex drive.

2. No detailed plans have been worked out. The national capital commission has had to devote its attention to matters of higher priority in the Ottawa and national capital development. A number of the existing buildings are being cleaned, some painting done and other similar improvements made to the exteriors in order to give these government owned buildings an acceptable appearance. Major structural changes to the interiors of the buildings are therefore not being carried out at the present time due, in part to other heavy capital commitments for new buildings and other improvements in the capital.

RECREATION OF RICHMOND LANDING, OTTAWA

Question No. 1,108—Mr. Nugent:

1. Have plans for the recreation of Richmond Landing at the foot of Chaudiere falls in the city of Ottawa been abandoned and, if so, for what reasons?
2. If not, what, in detail, are such plans and when may it be anticipated that they will be proceeded with?

Answer: 1. No.

2. Detailed plans have not been worked out but in general, the plans are for the development of a community similar to that which existed about 1830, at the foot of the rapids, and associating this with a park development. All such work is to be related to the proposed new construction in Lebreton flats.

BARNEY'S RIVER, N.S.—MAINTENANCE OF POST OFFICE

Question No. 1,113—Mr. MacEwan:

1. Has the Postmaster General received a petition from patrons of the Barney's River, Nova Scotia, post office asking for continued maintenance of the post office at that location?
2. What is the total number of patrons and how many of these patrons signed the petition?
3. When is a decision expected on this matter?

Mr. Nicholson: 1. Yes.

2. For postal purposes, information of this type is gathered in terms of the number of householders. There are 61 householders served by this office. The petition contained 69 signatures. In some instances more than one member of the family signed the petition.

3. As soon as our present inquiries on the matter have been completed.

[Mr. Nugent.]

AVONDALE STATION, N.S.—CONTINUATION OF POSTAL SERVICE

Question No. 1,114—Mr. MacEwan:

1. Was a questionnaire circulated to the patrons of the Avondale station post office, Pictou county, Nova Scotia, during 1963?
2. What is the total number of patrons of this office?
3. How many patrons of the post office were in favour of continuing service in and from the post office?
4. How many were in favour of a change?

Mr. Nicholson: 1. Yes.

2. For postal purposes, information of this type is gathered in terms of the number of householders. There are 87 householders served by this office.

3. 48 householders.

4. 30 householders.

Note: Nine householders did not express any opinion.

CANADIAN INTERVENTION IN INDONESIA-MALAYSIA DISPUTE

Question No. 1,118—Mr. Latulippe:

1. Has the Canadian diplomatic service intervened, in any way, in the dispute between Indonesia and Malaysia and, if so (a) in what manner (b) in what capacity, and (c) what was the general nature of the intervention?
2. Does Canada have a permanent diplomatic representative in Kuala Lumpur who is specifically concerned with the dispute between Malaysia and Indonesia and, if so (a) who is the representative (b) since what date (c) what are his duties and prerogatives?
3. If Canada has no officer specifically designated for this purpose who, in the office of the Canadian high commissioner in Malaysia is concerned with making known the Canadian government's attitude and opinion on this question?
4. Has the United States made diplomatic representations on the subject of this dispute to the Canadian Department of External Affairs and, if so (a) who made such representations (b) what was their general nature?
5. Has the president of the Philippines made diplomatic representations to the government on this subject and, if so (a) what was their substance (b) what was the Canadian answer?
6. Have representations of any sort been made by Mr. Salvador Lopez, special envoy and mediator of the president of the Philippines in the dispute between Indonesia and Malaysia and, if so (a) what was their nature (b) what was the Canadian answer?
7. Has Indonesia made diplomatic representations concerning this dispute and, if so (a) what was the general nature of those representations (b) what was the Canadian government's answer?

[Translation]

Answer: 1. The present dispute between Indonesia and Malaysia is under discussion by the proper Canadian authorities and representatives of several countries, including those of Indonesia and Malaysia. The general purpose of those discussions was to put forward the Canadian attitude regretting any confrontation policy.

2. No.

CANADIAN POLICY RESPECTING INDONESIA AND MALAYSIA

Question No. 1,125—Mr. Latulippe:

1. Has the Department of External Affairs examined newspaper reports to the effect that President Sukarno had stated that Malaysia would be crushed before sunrise on the 20th of May next year and, if so, is Canada at present revising its policy concerning the conflict between Malaysia and Indonesia, and in what respect?

2. Is Canada or any organization of which Canada is a member presently considering the possibility of sending, at a future date, United Nations troops which would be assigned to maintaining peace during the negotiations between Djakarta, Manila and Kuala Lumpur?

3. Did Canada exchange any correspondence whatsoever or diplomatic notes with President Sukarno, the president of the Philippines or any other political leader directly concerned in this conflict respecting the sending of troops?

[Translation]

Answer: 1. The Department of External Affairs examined those newspaper reports and other statements made by Indonesian leaders in the last few months to the effect that Malaysia must be crushed or gobbled up. Canada expressed its support to Malaysia when that federation was proclaimed on September 16, 1963, and has reaffirmed it several times since.

CANADIAN AMBASSADOR TO VATICAN

Question No. 1,133—Mr. Latulippe:

Have representations been made to the Secretary of State for External Affairs, during the past two years, on the subject of naming a Canadian ambassador to the Vatican and, if so (a) when were such representations received (b) from whom were such representations received (c) what was the department's reply in each case?

[Translation]

Answer: (a) According to its files, in 1963, the Department of External Affairs received three letters concerning Canadian representation in the Vatican. No letter has been received this year.

(b) Two of the letters received in 1963 came from private individuals and the third one from a religious organization in this country.

(c) In each case, the department's reply was as follows: "The question of accrediting a Canadian representative to the Vatican is reviewed periodically in the general context of Canadian representation abroad. That review covers several aspects: the financial aspect, staff problems and the order of priority to be followed in the opening of new posts. In the case of the Vatican, all those factors are reviewed at regular intervals, although no decision has yet been taken."

REQUESTS FOR WINTER WORKS EXTENSION, COMPTON-FRONTENAC CONSTITUENCY

Which municipalities in Compton-Frontenac have asked for the extension of winter works beyond April 30, 1964?

Mr. MacEachen: Copy of a resolution passed by the council of the municipal corporation of the town of Lac Mégantic at a meeting held on February 18, which requested an extension of the period of the municipal winter works incentive program for 1963-64 to May 31, 1964, was received in the Department of Labour on February 26.

ATOMIC ENERGY LTD. EXPORTS TO IRON CURTAIN COUNTRIES

Question No. 1,141—Mr. Latulippe:

Is Atomic Energy of Canada Limited presently filling orders for the U.S.S.R. or other countries located behind the iron courtain, and, if so, of what nature is each one of the orders, in what amount and for what country, and what use is to be made of the Canadian made equipment in the importing countries?

Mr. Drury: In so far as Atomic Energy of Canada Limited is concerned:

To World Health Organization, Geneva, for delivery to the ministry of health in Albania, one cobalt 60 source of radioactivity, approximate value $18,000, to be used for medical purposes.

The following orders in the course of being filled may be considered relevant:

To the People's Republic of China, Tientsin, one beam therapy equipment and radioactive source, value approximately $39,000, for treatment of cancer.

To the international atomic energy agency, Vienna, for delivery to institute for application of nuclear energy in agriculture, veterinary, and forestry, Zemun, Yugoslavia, a special gamma beam irradiator and radioactive source, approximate value $10,000. It is understood the end user is an organization supported jointly by the government of Yugoslavia and I.A.E.A.

ROBERT BURNS COMMEMORATIVE STAMP

Question No. 1,149—Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria):

Does the Post Office Department intend to issue a postal stamp, as has been done in the U.S.S.R., in honour of the great Scottish poet Robert Burns, which would recognize the contribution made to Canada by those Canadians of Scottish origin; help better to promote national unity and mutual understanding; and, serve as a tribute to a minority people who have helped to develop the vast frontiers of this great nation?

Mr. Nicholson: No. Members of the royal family, Canadians and others who have had a direct and specific association with Canada are the only persons whose likeness may appear on Canadian postage stamps.

*RECOMMENDATIONS OF UNIVERSITY TEACHERS RESPECTING SECURITY AND ACADEMIC FREEDOM

Question No. 1,152—Mr. Orlikow:

Has the government given consideration to implementation of the recommendations made by the Canadian association of university teachers in respect to security and academic freedom contained in a memorandum to the Minister of Justice on July 31, 1963 and, if so (a) does the government intend to launch, as soon as possible, an investigation by an independent and qualified commission into the present jurisdiction, procedures, records, qualifications, and training, of the S and I section of the R.C.M.P. (b) has the government given consideration to what steps should be taken immediately to guarantee that a person denied security clearance shall be advised promptly of his disqualification, and (c) does the government intend to establish a tribunal, perhaps like that in Great Britain, to which appeals may be taken by persons who feel that they have been wrongfully accused, where they may confront their accusers or the material on which an accusation has been based, and before which they may be heard in their own defence?

Mr. Pearson: The government has given very careful consideration to the recommendations of the Canadian association of university teachers. I personally met with the vice president and the executive secretary of the association on July 31, 1963 and again on November 15, 1963. The then minister of justice was present on the first occasion, but was unable to attend the second meeting. There was a very full discussion of the views and recommendations of the association concerning Canadian security policies and procedures, including those set out in a memorandum to the minister of justice dated July 31, 1963. In many respects the statements of policy of October 25, 1963 reflect the benefits derived from the first of those discussions.

With regard to the specific questions: (a) No. (b) and (c) The government's policy with regard to informing government employees in cases of denial of security clearance, and to ensuring an opportunity to such employees of presenting all considerations that they consider to be relevant, as well as the action taken to ensure a careful review of cases before final action is taken, was clearly stated in the House of Commons on October 25, 1963 as shown in the House of Commons Debates for that date at pages 4043 to 4048.

TAX EXEMPTION UNDER SECTION 2, BILL C-91

Question No. 1,161—Mr. Laprise:

1. What is the approximate number of persons who will benefit during 1964-65 from the tax exemption provided in section 2 of Bill C-91?
2. What are the national origins of persons who will benefit from such tax exemption during 1964-65 and (a) what is the estimated number of persons in each group (b) what estimated benefit will each group receive?
3. What is the estimated reduction in tax revenue resulting from such tax reductions during 1964-65?

Mr. McIlraith: 1. The information which would allow an estimate to be made of the number or origin of persons affected by this legislation is not available and cannot be obtained unless recipients of such benefits make themselves known.

MARMOT BASIN DEVELOPMENT, JASPER, ALTA.

Question No. 1,163—Mr. Horner (Jasper-Edson):

1. Who were the tenderers for the development of the Marmot basin in Jasper?
2. What were the tenders?
3. Does the government intend to reimburse Toby Raynor for development to date?

Mr. Laing: 1. Marmot Basin Ski-Lifts Ltd., and Marmot Territory Development Ltd., both of Edmonton, Alberta.

2. Marmot Basin Ski-Lifts Ltd., tendered to instal a T-bar lift 2,685 feet in length, a chalet for day use and related facilities estimated to cost $94,710. Marmot Territory Development Ltd., tendered to instal a pomalift of 2,500 feet in length, a chalet for day use and related facilities to a total value of $93,500.

3. No; when the Rayner concession was granted in December, 1962, it was made clear that it conveyed no exclusive possessory rights. The crown has accepted no obligation to protect Mr. Rayner's situation in the event of other developments in the Marmot basin. Mr. Rayner has explicitly accepted this position.

QUESTIONS PASSED AS ORDERS FOR RETURNS

INSTRUCTIONS TO SURVEY PARTIES

Question No. 687—Mr. Smith:

1. What are the directions, instructions, regulations or orders given to survey parties regarding (a) purchasing of materials and supplies used in their duties (b) hiring of men?

2. Within the last year, have these regulations been changed and, if so, in that particular way?

SERVICE CONTRACTS, CAMP GAGETOWN

Question No. 968—Mr. MacRae:

1. What service contracts have been awarded by the Department of Defence Production for Camp Gagetown for the fiscal year April 1, 1964 to March 31, 1965?

2. Who submitted tenders and what was the amount of each tender?

Return tabled.

PURCHASE OF MATTRESSES FOR ARMED FORCES

Question No. 1,195—Mr. Côté (Chicoutimi):

1. How many mattresses were purchased for the three armed services by the Department of Defence Production in 1962 and 1963?

2. What were the sizes and specifications required?

3. What price was paid for each category of mattress and were they purchased through tender, or otherwise?

4. Who manufactured the mattresses?

GOVERNMENT ORDERS PLACED WITHOUT TENDERS

Question No. 182—Mr. Pigeon:

What is the total amount of all the contracts awarded or orders placed without public tenders, since April 22, 1963, for each individual government department and crown corporation?

Return tabled.

Inquiries of the Ministry

CANADIAN FLAG

PROCEDURE TO BE FOLLOWED AFTER ADOPTION OF RESOLUTION

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, would the Prime Minister advise the house whether the unofficial official visit of the Minister of Transport to Buckingham palace had anything to do with the flag question? Would he also advise whether consideration has been given to the fact that use of the union jack, being the flag of the United Kingdom, by any other part of the commonwealth as a commonwealth flag would require the consent of the British government, and possibly statutory action in that connection?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the first part of the question I answered yesterday. The second part of the question I will be glad to deal with when the resolution is before the house.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, we do not have to wait for three or four weeks. The Prime Minister has tabled a telegram which he sent to the premier of Newfoundland. Surely parliament is entitled to the information made available for placatory purposes in connection with the premier of Newfoundland. According to the telegram the Prime Minister said:

> We have not yet decided whether there should be a royal proclamation to establish the national flag and a separate proclamation to recognize the union jack as the symbol of Canada's membership in the commonwealth of nations and our allegiance to the crown but there is no question of our intention to recommend that both be proclaimed by the Queen.

Has the Queen been made aware of the undertakings given by the government, through the Prime Minister, to the premier of Newfoundland?

Mr. Pearson: Yes, Mr. Speaker. The telegram to the premier of Newfoundland dealt solely with procedure, a procedure which has been followed in the past in matters of this kind by which the government passes an order in council and the order in council is followed by a royal proclamation. This was the procedure followed in the establishment of a Canadian coat of arms and on similar occasions, and is the normal procedure in these matters.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Does the Prime Minister say that ever before the flag of one of the co-equal members of the commonwealth has been made the flag of another member of the commonwealth, as representing the commonwealth and as one of the two flags of that second country?

Mr. Pearson: I will be glad to deal with that in detail at the appropriate time.

Mr. Diefenbaker: The Prime Minister says it has been done before. May I ask him where? One has just to ask the question to call the bluff.

[Translation]

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct my question to the distinguished Secretary of State for External Affairs who is the Acting Prime Minister. I should like to ask him whether he intends to suggest to the government to reconsider the decision taken and to accept the request made by the hon. member for St. Jean-Iberville-Napierville (Mr. Dupuis) on January 23, 1961, for a referendum respecting the choice of a flag?

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: Order. I wonder if the hon. member would put this question on the order paper.

[Translation]

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. I have for some time directed many questions to the Prime Minister and today I am directing one to his representative, but no answer is ever given me. I am denied answers to my questions. As the Secretary of State for External Affairs is well aware of the high regard I have for him, I would like him to answer in the negative or the affirmative, by yes or no; thus, the house and the whole Canadian people will be satisfied.

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member is completely out of order, and he must know it. There is no question of privilege. There may be a point of order, but there is no question of privilege.

[Translation]

Mr. Pigeon: In that case, Mr. Speaker, I will put my question to the Acting Prime Minister in a different way—

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: Order. I am quite well aware that the hon. member does not wish to cause the Chair any extra trouble.

[Mr. Diefenbaker.]

Mr. Pigeon: No, Mr. Speaker, I do not want trouble with you.

[Later:]

Hon. Léon Balcer (Three Rivers): I should like to ask the Minister of Transport if he is in a position to report to the house on his recent trip to Great Britain and on his mission to Her Majesty the Queen when he conveyed to Her Majesty the decision of the Canadian cabinet to bring forward a two-flag resolution in this house?

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member, who like me is a privy councillor, has no doubt read the privy councillor's oath and will know quite well why it would be improper for me to make any kind of reply to this question, certainly beyond anything that was said yesterday by the Prime Minister. Therefore, I have nothing whatever to say about it.

Mr. Balcer: I wonder if the minister would agree that the same rules should apply to the premiers of the provinces as well as to members of parliament? I do not see why Mr. Smallwood should be informed about these things before any members of this house.

Mr. Pickersgill: Nor do I.

Mr. Pigeon: May I ask a supplementary question. Did the government consult Mr. Lesage concerning its two flags?

[Translation]

Mr. Gilles Grégoire (Lapointe): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I should like to ask the Minister of Transport if, during his audience with Her Majesty the Queen, the possibility of postponing the royal visit to Canada was discussed.

[Text]

Mr. Pickersgill: I have nothing whatever to add to what I have already said.

[Later:]

Mr. Harold E. Winch (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, may I be granted the courtesy of asking this question. Could I ask the Minister of Transport, as a great historian—

Mr. Pigeon: The question period is over now.

Mr. Winch: I have the floor at the moment. Could I ask the Minister of Transport, as a great historian, if he will bring us up to date on history. We all know why Dick Whittington's cat went to see the queen, but why did Jack Pickersgill go to see the Queen?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

NATO—NOMINATION OF CANADIAN AS DEPUTY SECRETARY GENERAL

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Harold E. Winch (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, may I change the subject. I desire to ask a question of immediate urgency of the Prime Minister. Will the Prime Minister confirm or deny the report that the government has now nominated Mr. Roberts, deputy minister of trade and commerce, to the position of deputy secretary general of NATO? If so, what are the qualifications of this person to hold this important post?

May I further ask the Prime Minister whether this nomination is not a political manoeuvre to remove from government service the only remaining deputy minister appointed by the previous Conservative government?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I realize the general interest and importance of this question, but the urgency of it does not impress me very much. If the minister is prepared to give an answer to part one of the question he may do so, but part three is strictly out of order.

Mr. Winch: May I have your permission, because the matter is urgent, to say it is my understanding that on Monday of next week an announcement is going to be made by the Prime Minister. I now ask with regard to the second part whether Mr. Roberts has been nominated by the government for this important position in NATO, and what are the qualifications of this nominee.

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, in view of the question and its implications for a distinguished public servant who has served Canada well under the former and under the present administration, I think I should point out that at the request of a number of countries Canada was asked to put forward the name of someone for the post of deputy secretary general. This suggestion, in the final analysis, could only be realized if the name put forward were accepted by the new secretary general of NATO.

Canada acceded to the request of a number of countries and put forward the name of Mr. Roberts. There was no manoeuvre whatsoever involved. Mr. Roberts was prepared to accept this very important and heavy responsibility, if his name was acceptable to the new secretary general.

Until such time as the latter has taken public and official action, I would not propose to say more, except that I do not believe my hon. friend would want to leave the impression that Mr. Roberts might be assigned to this particular post as a result of any improper or undesirable action on the part of the government of Canada. If this post is accorded to Mr. Roberts, it will only be because he accepted it out of a sense of public duty and because his government considers that, great as his services have been to Canada, they may be needed more in this very important assignment which may be offered to him.

Mr. Winch: A supplementary question. We appreciate the answer of the Secretary of State for External Affairs but would he now, free from generalities and pleasantries, in view of an appointment of such importance, give to this house the qualifications of the man the government has recommended?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, I am sorry that my hon. friend has put this second question. I can say that there is no question about Mr. Roberts having every qualification for this important responsibility which may be extended to him.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. May I ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs whether Mr. Roberts prior to this nomination indicated any desire to have his name placed before NATO?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): No, Mr. Speaker. It was only as the result of a suggestion which the Prime Minister and I made to him that in the national interest and in the interest of NATO, if this post should come to Canada, we thought he would be eminently qualified to fill it. I cannot say too strongly, in the light of discussions which are now under way that it is not fair to this eminent public servant to have it suggested that he is taking this post because he is not wanted in the public service of Canada. As a matter of fact, the Minister of Trade and Commerce and one of my other colleagues argued very strongly for his retention for reasons which could soon become obvious.

Mr. Winch: I think the minister will understand the importance of one question. He will admit, I think, it is most extraordinary that the government of Canada should recommend for a position of this importance a man from the Department of Trade and Commerce instead of from the Department of External Affairs.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I am sure the Leader of the Opposition would confirm the judgment of the government. Mr. Roberts has had outstanding experience in matters having to do with international affairs. There are few men in this country who have had as wide a contact with as many countries as he has had during the past four or five years.

NORTHERN AFFAIRS

QUEBEC—ADMINISTRATION OF ESKIMO AFFAIRS

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Réal Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources.

Is there any truth to the statement made yesterday by Quebec natural resources minister René Lévesque to the effect that the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources systematically blocks the negotiations with Quebec concerning the transfer of jurisdiction over the Eskimos of new Quebec?

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: Order. Under the rules given to me a question should not inquire whether statements made in a newspaper are correct.

[Translation]

Mr. Gilles Grégoire (Lapointe): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Without any reference to the newspaper article, I should like to ask a question of the right hon. Prime Minister. Now that negotiations between Ottawa and Quebec concerning the transfer of Eskimo affairs to the province of Quebec have been broken off, does the Prime Minister intend to appoint another negotiator with whom it will be possible for the province to discuss?

[Text]

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Negotiations are continuing.

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): I think yesterday Hon. Mr. Lévesque sought and obtained from his legislature permission to make an extended reply to a question asked by Mr. Daniel Johnson. An assertion of bad faith has apparently been made and that is important to me. Further I think this question is of sufficient importance to this house and to the public, for me to seek the indulgence of hon. members to make a somewhat extended reply, if I may.

Mr. Speaker: Does the house give consent to the minister's suggestion?

Mr. Knowles: In view of the fact that this is Wednesday, when questions are limited to half an hour, should not any time taken up by a statement which is, in effect, a statement on motions, be made outside that 30 minute limit?

[Translation]

Mr. Grégoire: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Can the Prime Minister tell us that there has been no breaking off of negotiations between Ottawa and Quebec on the transfer of control of the Eskimo affair, and that Mr. René Lévesque made an erroneous statement on that matter?

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: Does the house give unanimous consent to the minister making this statement?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Nielsen: Perhaps by unanimous consent we could revert to motions so the statement would not impinge on time allowed for questions.

Mr. Speaker: Is it agreed that the house should now revert to motions?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Laing: I have not yet seen the text of the remarks attributed to Hon. René Lévesque in the Quebec legislature yesterday on the subject of the Eskimos in Quebec. Neither have I received any communication from Mr. Lévesque in connection with his reported statement that further negotiations looking toward a transfer of the administration of services to Eskimos in Quebec were pointless at this time.

It is the policy of this government to enable the indigenous people of Canada to take advantage of the programs and services enjoyed by all other Canadians. I believe that to achieve our policy the federal government and the provinces must share responsibility and find ways to work together. We were pleased to agree to the request of the province of Quebec for negotiations.

The federal government has not in any way departed from its announced policy as contained in the memorandum of understanding which I announced in the house on March 4 last. The Leader of the Opposition asked me in the house on May 29 whether certain comments attributed to me in press reports amounted to a change in policy, and I stated that the reports of my remarks were inadequate and that the policy had not been changed.

Following the memorandum of understanding the officials of the federal government and of the province of Quebec proceeded with a detailed examination of the problems. Discussions were held frequently throughout the months of March, April and May. Serious differences of outlook between the two governments were made apparent early in the discussions between officials, and in an endeavour to try to overcome these differences Mr. Lévesque and I met in Montreal on April 28, 1964. On May 22 I wrote to Mr. Lévesque to propose that early discussions between he and I to review the work of the officials would be desirable, and on June 1 I received a reply from Mr. Lévesque, dated May 26, agreeing that this course would be satisfactory. On May 22 a meeting of officials was held in Quebec city and telephone discussions have occurred since then. On the afternoon of June 2 a letter reviewing official discussions to date was forwarded by my assistant deputy minister, who has been the senior federal official involved in the negotiations at the official level.

Although points of difference had developed between us, I believed these differences could be resolved. Indeed, further proposals had gone forward as late as yesterday. In the memorandum of understanding of February 29, 1964, it was stated that the governments of Canada and Quebec undertake to consult jointly the Eskimos of nouveau Quebec. The provincial government has insisted that the principle of transfer does not fall within the subject matter of consultation with the Eskimos, and that the range of discussions with the Eskimos rests in the area of techniques of implementation. Our own view has been firmly that the widest range of consultation with the Eskimos must be allowed and the federal government cannot be placed in a position where, because of any agreement with the province of Quebec, we would be forced to impose our views on the Eskimos no matter what the conditions. I do not see that we have any room for departure from the important principle we have maintained.

A second substantial area of difference has been in the insistence of the provincial authorities on a schedule setting up times by which the transfer of various aspects of administration must be carried out. In our view the transfer must depend upon the confidence of the Eskimos whom we seek to help. An abrupt change is unthinkable without the assent of the Eskimos, and I candidly admit to the house that such assent does not appear immediately forthcoming. There were these and other reported difficulties when Mr. Lévesque and I met on April 28, 1964, in Montreal.

At the meeting I proposed that a study be made by the officials of those areas of administration in which the provincial government could become involved immediately. The Montreal meeting concluded on the basis that the officials would consider this approach thoroughly and report to their respective ministers, after which a further ministerial meeting would be held.

If Mr. Lévesque is rightly quoted as saying that I have personally intended to place a road block in these discussions, then I can only say that it is not so. Mr. Lévesque made an announcement on the basis of newspaper reports which attributed certain remarks to me. On May 29 and on June 1 I was asked questions concerning these reports in this house, and I stated that I was inadequately quoted. Mr. Lévesque made no effort to confirm what I had said, and neither I nor my officials received the benefit of any query from Mr. Lévesque. I can only assume that Mr. Lévesque may have had reasons external to these discussions for his reported announcement.

In the patient and protracted negotiations which have been carried forward by my officials with those of the province of Quebec a positive understanding, forbearance and resilience has been demonstrated worthy of the finest traditions of the civil service of this nation. The impasse to which we seemed repeatedly to return was the definition of consultation with the Eskimo people. We have insisted that consultation be, in fact, consultation. Anything short of this would destroy their sense of personal dignity and human worth. One of the more sacred trusts of this nation is the development to full stature in the nation of its indigenous people.

I hope, Mr. Speaker, that before long Mr. Lévesque and I will be able to again carry forward our discussion of this difficult problem. We must do so if the benefit of the Eskimo people is to be kept in mind.

[Translation]

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask for the unanimous consent of the house in order to revert to motions so as to hear the statement of the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources, in view of the great importance and urgency of the matter.

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Speaker, since the standing orders allow a member to speak on a motion, I should like to say a few words in regard to the statement just made by the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources (Mr. Laing). He did not undertake nor conduct his negotiations properly—

Mr. Speaker, I hear the boos of the Liberals, but when negotiations are underway and a minister takes the liberty of making statements along the lines of those made by the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources at Winnipeg, I agree with what the Prime Minister himself recently said to the effect that it was a lack of judgment to make statements when negotiations are underway. I believe this statement by the Prime Minister may apply to the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources.

Now, negotiations are indeed underway and we see one of the negotiators making statements and throwing a monkey wrench into the proceedings.

Mr. Speaker, after listening to the statement just made by the minister it appears obvious that the kind of consultation carried on with the Eskimos is only an excuse to delay the negotiations now underway.

There is no doubt about one thing and the minister is aware of it: if there is any government in the country who has respected minority rights, it is the government of the province of Quebec, and one hundred years of history are there to prove it.

Mr. Speaker, the manner in which the federal minister has just replied to the Quebec minister was enough to reveal in what sort of atmosphere the negotiations are carried out. Instead of taking his share of responsibility, the one thing the federal minister insisted on doing was to accuse the Quebec minister. Only one thing must be taken into account. It has become impossible for the Quebec minister, Mr. Lévesque, to continue his negotiations with the federal minister, because the latter is indeed blocking those negotiations personally.

That is why, Mr. Speaker, I think the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources should withdraw from the present negotiations and be replaced by someone better qualified than he is to bring to a final conclusion the transfer of the administration of Eskimo affairs into the hands of the Quebec government.

Those citizens must become full-fledged citizens, as residents of the province of Quebec, and I can assure all members of this house, including the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources, that the province of Quebec has always respected, more than any other province, the rights of minorities concerning language, religion, etc.

[Text]

Mr. D. M. Fisher (Port Arthur): Mr. Speaker, we appreciate the statement made by the minister. We are sad that it does indicate a complete lacuna in the relationships between the two governments. I should like to point out that a very important dominion-provincial conference with regard to the Indians has already been postponed until the fall, and it is not a very happy augury to have one of the governments that will be involved in this later discussion taking the position that it is worthless to talk to the federal spokesman.

Having made these remarks, may I say that we still have a certain sympathy with the minister, and as much as we can appreciate his outline we agree with the position he has taken. The only other comment I should like to make from a party point of view is that it is very apparent that one of the greatest propaganda hoaxes of our time has been that the federal Liberal government and party are the only ones capable of getting along with the provincial Liberal government and party.

Mr. Grafftey: The cold war now.

[Translation]

Mr. Marcel Lessard (Lake St. John): Mr. Speaker, I also wish to comment on the statement just made by the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources (Mr. Laing) because I feel that the temperature has gone up a little across the house. If I take, on one side, the remarks made by the hon. member for Lapointe (Mr. Grégoire), which were in a sense rather strong, I think that I can establish a parallel with some applause the minister got from the Conservative side when he said that he did not want to do anything, take any step, before making sure that the Eskimos in northern Quebec would get all the guarantees that their rights will be protected and respected by the Quebec government.

Mr. Speaker, I entirely agree with that point of view according to which the Eskimos of Quebec must be assured, before being transferred to the province, that their rights and prerogatives will be fully protected.

On the other hand I am asking myself the following questions. Why are we questioning the good will of the province of Quebec in granting this protection? What are the reasons for the minister, the government, or any other member of this house, to question the intentions of the Quebec government in this matter?

Personally, I have followed this debate and I fail to see on what grounds we can disagree with this transfer of jurisdiction over the Eskimos to the province of Quebec. In my opinion, the whole history of Quebec is there to prove, beyond all doubt, that we are respectful of the rights and privileges of the residents of our beautiful province of which we are proud.

In closing my remarks, Mr. Speaker, I would like to make a suggestion which I hope to see accepted.

It is perhaps slightly humorous, but I think just the same it is worth taking into consideration.

I would ask the Prime Minister, who is not here at the moment, or his spokesman whether he could not, in view of the present conflict —the breaking off of negotiations between the federal and provincial ministers—delegate as a negotiator in Quebec, the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pickersgill) or Mr. Tom Kent from the Prime Minister's office who managed, as we have seen, to negotiate an agreement in the deadlock which followed the last federal-provincial conference in Quebec.

Following that conference there was a deadlock and everyone wondered where it would lead us. It seems to me that the Minister of Transport, during one of his short trips, as the one he has just made to London, for example, with the assistance of Mr. Tom Kent, managed to find a solution which, even if it was not acceptable to everyone, has at least eased the situation.

I hope the Prime Minister will delegate the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate to Quebec city who, in a short trip, probably in a Department of Transport jet, will bring back our two opponents, Messrs. Laing and Lévesque, on more favourable ground toward full co-operation in the interest of our fellow citizens, the 2,500 Eskimos of northern Quebec.

Hon. Paul Martineau (Pontiac-Témiscamingue): In his statement, Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources (Mr. Laing) has listed the safeguards which must be granted if we want to be assured that all the interests of the Eskimos will be respected when they are transferred.

On this side of the house we are in favour of such safeguards and we showed that very clearly when this matter was discussed.

In his statement, however, the minister did not refute the very specific charges which had been made in the Quebec legislature by a minister of the province of Quebec.

Here are these two charges:

1. The Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources has allegedly lifted the veil of silence which he had himself imposed and which had been agreed upon as far as the progress of these negotiations was concerned, by making, first, a public statement in Winnipeg and other statements in the house.

2. That in his new statement the minister has completely and openly violated the agreement in principle concluded on February 29 between himself and his officials on one hand and the Quebec minister of natural resources and his officials on the other hand.

The minister must necessarily supply us with an explanation on that matter.

How can the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson), in reply to a question directed to him today, claim that those negotiations are still going on when, according to the statement of one of the main parties involved, namely Hon. René Lévesque, they were broken off deliberately due to the personal intervention of the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources?

It is really a pity that such a deadlock occurred. I believe that it is desirable, in order to settle that question and especially in the interest of the Eskimos themselves, that the Prime Minister step in directly with the head of the Quebec government and that he appoint, as of now, a new federal negotiator, in view of the total failure registered by the present Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources.

[Later:]

Mr. Lessard (Lake St. John): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Justice in his capacity as leader of the Quebec Liberal members in the house.

Could the federal government's reserve concerning the transfer of jurisdiction over Eskimos from the federal to the provincial authorities be interpreted as a lack of confidence of the present federal government toward another Liberal government, that of Quebec?

Hon. Guy Favreau (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I do not think I have the right to give an answer in the house in the capacity mentioned by the hon. member for Lake St. John. Moreover, I want to point out that the question period having already lasted 35 minutes, I cannot answer this question.

[Later:]

Mr. Caouette: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. First of all, we have not yet spent 35 minutes on questions.

This is my supplementary question. Could the Minister of Justice inform us of the requests submitted by Quebec, to which the Canadian government cannot or does not wish to accede, concerning the transfer of jurisdiction over 2,500 Eskimos of northern Quebec? Could we know the reasons why the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources and the Quebec minister of natural resources cannot come to an agreement?

[Text]

Mr. Martineau: May I ask a supplementary question.

Mr. Speaker: There has to be some semblance of order in this chamber. I had already recognized the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre on two occasions.

[Later:]

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): I have a supplementary question to ask the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources in connection with a statement of Mr. Lévesque as it appears in this morning's issue of the Gazette. Mr. Lévesque said that part of the agreement which the minister read into the record—

[Mr. Martineau.]

Mr. Speaker: Order. Would the hon. member rephrase his question?

Mr. Nielsen: Well, I had considered raising the matter as a question of privilege and I have to state the question at some length in order to get across to the minister what I am asking.

Mr. Speaker: My objection to the form of the question was that the hon. member was quoting from a statement in a newspaper.

Mr. Nielsen: Very well, Mr. Speaker. As recorded on page 506 of Hansard for March 4, the minister made a statement in this house, the first paragraph of which is at direct odds with what Mr. Lévesque is quoted as having said in this morning's Gazette. I am asking the minister whether or not the agreement was as he stated on March 4 or whether it was, as Mr. Lévesque says, that the government of Canada was prepared to cede all administrative rights over the Eskimo people to the province of Quebec?

Mr. Laing: Surely, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member would not expect me to accept responsibility for the utterances of another person.

Mr. Nielsen: As a supplementary question, I am not at all suggesting that, but what I am suggesting is that the minister owes an explanation to this house as to why it would seem that what he said on March 4 is at direct odds with what Mr. Lévesque has said.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Justice a few moments ago called your attention to the fact that under the new procedures today was a day when questions were limited to half an hour. Have we not reached that period today?

Mr. Speaker: On the point of order, and in order to clear up any doubt, we interrupted our half hour question period to revert to motions. The minister will recall that we restarted our question period at 3.43, and we should conclude it at 4.02.

Mr. Donald MacInnis (Cape Breton South): Mr. Speaker, on the point of order raised by the Secretary of State for External Affairs, I would first call your attention to the fact that he was not recognized; and further to this point of order, it involves the use of the question period which has been experimented with in the house under the new rules.

I find that the question period is not being applied to each and every member with the same fairness, and in support of that contention I would call your attention to the fact that a number of questions asked were of a similar nature to ones I have asked and answers to which the Chair has permitted. The last one was the question raised by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre yesterday, when he inquired about the welfare of workers at the Winnipeg air terminal, which question the Chair permitted while at the same time ruling out my questions of a similar nature concerning 400 workers in Cape Breton.

In further support of my contention that the rule is not applied fairly is the fact that the hon. member for Carleton (Mr. Francis) has had occasion to rise and ask questions about road conditions in Ottawa.

Third, and this is the one which irks me most, the question period in the last few days has devoted much time to the interests of human rights, particularly the welfare of a convicted American dope peddler, whereas the questions I asked about the human rights of 400 workers in Cape Breton have been denied.

Answers have been provided to the house at the will of the ministers. This afternoon a question by the hon. member for Vancouver East (Mr. Winch) was ruled out of order, but when the minister indicated he was willing to answer, then that question was permitted. This was indicated again quite clearly this afternoon on another question concerning the Eskimos. It was also ruled out of order but, because of the minister's willingness to provide an answer, it was permitted.

I fail to understand how questions involving 400 workers in Cape Breton can be continually ruled out of order, with no answers provided, particularly when questions of that nature are allowed in the interest of human rights concerning a convicted American dope peddler. Those same rights are denied to workers in Cape Breton.

Mr. Speaker: There are now a few minutes less in our question period; but in reply to the hon. member, if he is not satisfied with the conduct of the Chair there is a procedure open to him under the rules, and he may take that procedure. On the other hand it might be a very useful experiment to give the hon. member an opportunity of occupying the chair during some of the procedures of the house.

Mr. MacInnis: Mr. Speaker, you maintain there is a procedure open to me. If I thought there was a hope of carrying it, I would put the appropriate motion.

[Later:]

Hon. Léon Balcer (Three Rivers): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask a question of the Minister of Justice as senior minister from the province of Quebec.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, a little earlier the Prime Minister stated that discussions or negotiations between the province of Quebec and the federal government were being proceeded with, concerning the transfer of Eskimo affairs up north; but, on the other hand, according to Mr. Lévesque's statement these negotiations have broken off.

Could the Minister of Justice tell us who is the minister, deputy minister, official, or federal government representative who is continuing negotiations, as implied by the Prime Minister?

Mr. Favreau: Mr. Speaker, it is obvious that, should I answer that question, I would do so as a member of the cabinet. Moreover, I feel that it should be directed to the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources (Mr. Laing), since he is responsible for that matter at this time.

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): Mr. Speaker, may I ask a supplementary question?

So that the transfer of the administration of Eskimo affairs may be made to Mr. René Lévesque's satisfaction, can the minister tell the house if he will take charge of those negotiations to ensure that Mr. Lévesque's wishes and requirements are met, and take that responsibility away from the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources?

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

[Later:]

[Translation]

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. Following certain remarks made in connection with the manner in which discussions are conducted in this house, I must say, on behalf of our group, that we do not agree with the remarks made about the Chair a while ago and that we are satisfied with the manner in which the Chair is conducting the proceedings of this house.

LABOUR RELATIONS

NORTHLAND NAVIGATION LIMITED—SIGNING OF AGREEMENT WITH S.I.U.

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): I should like to address a question to the Minister of Labour. My question is based on a lengthy telegram I have just received from the president of the Canadian brotherhood of railway trainmen and general workers, local 400, Vancouver, B.C.

In view of the caustic comments contained in the Norris report with regard to the sweetheart deals made between management and the seafarers international union, and in view of the fact that the S.I.U. have signed a memorandum of agreement with Northland Navigation Shipping Company Limited, would the minister inform the house if it is the role of the maritime trustees to approve substandard agreements entered into by the S.I.U. that make it difficult for Canadian unions to obtain satisfactory settlements? Will the minister look into this question?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I have grave doubts that this question is in order. The last two lines of the question in my opinion are not asking for details. The question is very long. In my opinion the question is just on the edge of being out of order. However, in order to accommodate my hon. friend, upon whom perhaps I have been a little rough the last two days, may I suggest that he put it on the order paper.

Mr. Herridge: I am quite willing to withdraw my opinion and leave the rest of the question.

INTRODUCTION OF LEGISLATION RESPECTING LABOUR CODE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question was for the Prime Minister, but in his understandable absence perhaps I may put it to the Minister of Labour. When the list of business was given to us today, was it an oversight that the proposed national labour code was not included? Can the minister say whether this legislation will be on the order paper this month?

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of Labour): It was not an oversight, because the government attaches a great deal of importance to this particular legislation. Most of the policy decisions with regard to this legislation have been made and it is now in the course of preparation, and will appear on the order paper just as soon as this stage is completed.

Mr. Knowles: When will that be, this month or next month?

NATIONAL DEFENCE

CRANBERRY PORTAGE, MAN.—ASSISTANCE FOLLOWING CLOSING OF RADAR STATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Robert Simpson (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Defence Production or possibly the Minister of Finance. Can either of the ministers inform the house whether the government is considering financial assistance to the residents of Cranberry Portage, Manitoba, in relation to the very heavy debts with which they have been saddled in the matter of school debentures, which were negotiated in good faith on the continuance of the mid-Canada radar site at that location? If not, will the government assure the house that full consideration will be given to this matter at an early date?

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Defence Production): Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order. This is surely a question for the order paper.

IMMIGRATION

ADMINISTRATIVE CHANGES RESPECTING PERSONS HELD FOR DEPORTATION

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Hon. René Tremblay (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, in reply to questions a few hon. members have asked concerning administrative measures taken by the department to prevent people from being held in custody too long, I should like to give the house the following information:

1. Information concerning any person held under the Immigration Act must be sent promptly to the central immigration office—

[Text]

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Winnipeg South Centre): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, this is the second time the minister has attempted to make a statement purporting to be in answer to questions in the house. We should either revert to motions, when this statement could be made, or questions, if answered at the time they are asked, should be left at that stage. The other day the minister made a lengthy explanation of incomplete answers. Is he now about to do the same thing?

Mr. Speaker: Is the statement of the minister a long statement or a short statement in answer to a question?

Mr. Tremblay: Mr. Speaker, it is in answer to a question. It is a short statement.

Hon. Léon Balcer (Three Rivers): Is it long or short? On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I think it is extremely important that we know if it is a very long answer that would constitute a statement on motions, or whether it is strictly an answer, by yes or no, to a few questions asked yesterday. If the minister is anxious to answer questions he should answer them when they are asked, and not wait until another day and make a full statement trying to cover up his first one.

Mr. Speaker: I would advise the hon. member that I asked the minister if his statement is long or short and he has assured me it is a short statement.

[Translation]

Mr. Tremblay: 1. All information concerning a person detained under the Immigration Act will have to be forwarded promptly to the head office of the department in Ottawa.

2. Such information will be placed on file in Ottawa where it will be checked daily by senior officials of the department.

3. Report will also have to be made immediately to Ottawa concerning the progress of any action taken against a person detained under the Immigration Act or otherwise. That will enable the officials entrusted with the supervision of such cases in Ottawa to know exactly how matters stand at any given time.

4. Any person against whom a deportation order has been issued will be deported as soon as the necessary arrangements can be made concerning transportation and reception by the country where the person is being deported (unless charges have been laid under the Criminal Code).

SHIPPING

CONSIDERATION OF ESTIMATES PROVIDING FOR EMERGENCY ASSISTANCE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. G. H. Aiken (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, may I ask what is apparently to be the last question today of the Minister of Public Works. This is an urgent matter, because almost a week ago the minister said he would shortly be tabling supplementary estimates relating to the low water problems. Can the minister give us an indication now of how soon they will be tabled?

Hon. J. P. Deschatelets (Minister of Public Works): Very shortly, Mr. Speaker; and may I add that probably tomorrow I will make a statement covering this important matter.

Mr. Aiken: On motions?

Mr. Deschatelets: As usual, Mr. Speaker.

POWER

COLUMBIA RIVER—APPROVAL OF RATIFICATION OF TREATY

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs) moved:

That it is expedient that the houses of parliament do approve the ratification of the treaty between Canada and the United States of America relating to co-operative development of the water resources of the Columbia river basin, signed at Washington on January 17, 1961, and the consequent coming into force of the protocol thereto annexed to the exchange of notes signed at Washington on January 22, 1964, and that this house do approve the same.

He said: Mr. Speaker, the committee on external affairs, which dealt with the Columbia river treaty project, made its report to this house, and this will be found in Votes and Proceedings for May 28 last. I am sure that all members of the house who were not on that committee would want me to say to the chairman, to the vice-chairman and to all the members of that committee how grateful we are for the thorough way in which this subject was considered by the committee, not only by those who supported the treaty and the protocol but by those who took issue with both those instruments. Certainly, as the minister responsible, I want to add my own personal gratitude for the fact that this committee, which held 50 sittings, did such a thorough and responsible job. I am sure the country will be grateful.

Columbia River Treaty

On March 3 I moved that the Columbia river treaty and protocol should be referred to the standing committee on external affairs. The committee reported, as I have just observed, on May 28 with a statement of clarity that I think deserves to be repeated. The substantive part of the report says:

> Your committee has considered and approved the abovementioned treaty and protocol.

In moving the present resolution, which is based on the committee's report, I would hope to be brief because I made an extended statement when this matter first came before the house and I made two statements in the committee. My remarks will be brief because the entire situation relating to the treaty and the protocol has been set forth fully and in detail. In addition, all hon. members, those on the committee and those who are not, received the white paper which set forth the relevant documents. All hon. members, have also received the "Presentation", a book of 172 pages giving a complete background and explanation of the negotiations, the arrangements finally concluded and the advantages that flow from them. I made a thorough survey of the whole matter in my statement on March 3, and again in concluding the debate on the motion to send the document to the committee on March 9. I believe this house had a useful debate on the entire treaty arrangement and the changes made by the protocol.

The committee on external affairs has examined the Columbia river treaty with a thoroughness that has been accorded, I believe, to very few subjects in the history of this parliament. It held, as I observed a moment ago, 50 meetings between April 7 and May 21, and its proceedings, up to the last issue I have received, cover some 1,407 pages. In addition, briefs have been received and witnesses have been heard and cross-examined; indeed, every aspect of this great plan has been examined, checked, assessed and set forth. There is, it seems to me, little that need now be said.

The critics of the treaty have been heard and their arguments have been probed with care. In my statement to the committee on May 21 I summarized and commented on the points that have been made by those who criticize the treaty and the protocol. All the arguments dealt with questions that had been raised in one way or another before or while the protocol was under negotiation. All were weighed then with care, and all have been examined again. They do not in any way alter the judgment which I, as the responsible minister, and the government as a whole had made. In my statement of May 21 I gave the reasons why the arguments of the critics cannot be accepted as in any way invalidating the case that has been presented on the outstanding advantages of the two instruments concerned. In the statement which I made in this house on May 3, 1964, I summarized them as follows:

> 1. We will be able to instal over 4 million kilowatts of capacity at points in the Columbia river basin in Canada capable of producing annually about 20 billion kilowatt hours of energy for Canada at an at-site cost of approximately two mills per kilowatt hour. This installed capacity is nearly one and a half times the total present hydro-electric installation in British Columbia and about one fifth the total for all of Canada, all at the very low cost of two mills.
> 2. We will secure prevention of floods in settled areas on the Kootenay and Columbia rivers.
> 3. We will have the continued production, at the end of the 30 year sales contract, of downstream benefits in the United States with a potential value to British Columbia of $5 million to $10 million per year for the life of the treaty and possibly thereafter.
> 4. We will be entitled to additional payments of up to $8 million by the United States for extra flood control if it is required during the treaty period.
> 5. Construction of the projects will require a peak labour force of about 3,000 men. An average of some 1,350 will be employed on the dams alone during the nine year construction period of the treaty storage projects. Expenditures by this labour force and by industries across Canada on the production of materials and equipment for the dams will create a great many more jobs.
> 6. Following the construction of Duncan, Arrow and Mica there will be a continuing building program for a further 10 to 15 years for other large dams on the Columbia river.
> 7. Canada will secure an increase in foreign exchange resources from the payment by the United States of $319 million in United States funds, of which $254 million will be paid in 1964.

These are tremendous advantages, Mr. Speaker. They cannot be secured except in a co-operative arrangement. It is quite clear that the cost of power would be much greater and the results to Canada infinitely less beneficial if we tried to develop the Columbia alone. No one seriously suggests this should be tried. It is equally clear, I think, that the arrangement worked out is no second best. Careful engineering studies show that the arrangement is better than any alternative sequence of development. This was clearly emphasized by all of the engineering experts who appeared before the committee and by all of the notable engineering firms represented before the committee; and I think I can say that nothing has been produced to the contrary from an engineering viewpoint which has not been controverted. It would be utter folly not to proceed with the plans that have been so meticulously worked out by two governments of Canada over so many years.

The advantages of the treaty and protocol can be realized without in any way impairing our sovereignty or our ability to draw full advantage for Canada from the waters of the Columbia system. We have also established explicitly and clearly our right to make diversions within the basin or consumptive diversions outside the basin if and when they are needed.

In concluding my remarks on March 3, as reported at page 489 of Hansard, I said:

> —we have before this house a treaty that should, and will, commend itself to the members of this house, as I am sure it will to the great majority of the people of our country. The plans that have been prepared are good plans. The engineering is nearly finished. The money to be paid by the United States will be raised in the coming weeks. It is for us to decide whether the fruit of years of effort is to be gathered for the benefit of the people of Canada now and in the years to come. I have no doubt, on the basis of the record, what the verdict of this parliament will be.

The results of the consideration by the committee on external affairs have amply confirmed the conviction I then expressed. Witness after witness, either in chief or in response, clearly indicated that there was no exaggeration in the position put forward by those who believe that this treaty and the protocol are in the interests of the owner of the resource, in the interests of Canada and in the interests of responsible and good relations with our neighbour.

I would hope, Mr. Speaker, that on a matter of this kind, which is not partisan in any sense, we might move quickly, even unanimously. Work can be done this summer. It will be started even in advance of ratification if the decision of parliament is clear. We will begin to feel the good effects at once, and they will benefit our country for generations.

As I have said, I think it has been demonstrated beyond reasonable doubt that the treaty and protocol constitute an arrangement that will redound to the enormous advantage of this country for years to come. They represent the efforts of 20 years of careful consideration and the considered policy of two governments of Canada, as well as the viewpoint and the wish of the owner of the resource itself, the government of the province of British Columbia. The treaty and the protocol are the fruit of two decades of careful study, mature consideration and hard negotiation. We can all take satisfaction from what has been accomplished. The time has now arrived for action.

I commend the present resolution to the favourable consideration of this house in order that such action may begin at once.

Mr. Stuart A. Fleming (Okanagan-Revelstoke): Mr. Speaker, the minister referred to the 20 years which have elapsed since the first discussions and initial negotiations on the Columbia river development began. Since that time perhaps millions of words have been written and many more spoken about this development. Probably at this particular moment in time there is very little more that is either new, or which can add to what has already been written and said on the subject. The exhaustive hearings of the external affairs committee over the past two months on the subject of the Columbia river development have brought forward many briefs. Hours of testimony in answer to questions by members of the committee were given. As the minister has stated, every aspect and facet of the development has been probed, analysed and assessed. We now come to the point where a decision is to be made by this house. It is therefore appropriate to endeavour to summarize, at least briefly, where we stand, where our respective parties stand, and how individuals who have been concerned directly or indirectly with this matter over the years feel at this point when a decision is to be made by this house.

As one who has lived most of his life within the Columbia basin and who has heard of the dreams of people who have foreseen the development of the river, I can say that many generations have passed since the first of our pioneer citizens looked at the immense water flow of the Columbia and realized how its energies might be harnessed. We now come to the point where it is no longer a speculative matter. It is no longer a question of what might be done: We now know what can be done, and we are to make the decision whether it will be done.

During the period of negotiation it was always the objective to establish a foundation for a treaty under which the full power development of the river in Canada could be achieved. So we have a treaty that includes three dams, which are referred to by the treaty primarily as storage dams—or the general reference to their function is as storage dams. Because this is so there has developed across Canada over a period of years, since the treaty was signed particularly, the impression that this was the whole, and the all, with regard to the Columbia development in Canada; that three storage dams were all that the Canadian people could anticipate from the Columbia; that they would provide for the generation of power in the United States and for flood control protection in the United States, and that would be the end of it.

Of course, Mr. Speaker, if that were so then there would be no justification for this house to waste very much of its time on this treaty. But it is not the case and never has been. I, and I imagine all of those who supported the former administration when the treaty was negotiated, appreciate the fact that the present administration has come around to the viewpoint that this treaty is a good one and does provide the foundation which is sought for the development of the Columbia in Canada. By creating storages on the river, by regulating its flow and by securing a 50 per cent return, as the treaty did, of downstream benefits either for power or flood control, a means was secured by which the construction of immense power development in Canada could be made economic on the most favourable terms—not at just favourable rates but at preferred rates, some of the lowest cost power in the world. We have had these assurances in the committee both from the minister of lands and resources of the province of British Columbia and from the chairman of the British Columbia hydro authority, that they saw the treaty as one which provided this potential and that it was a policy of the hydro authority to proceed with the further developments which make the project so attractive.

The installation of generators at Mica Creek, which Dr. Keenleyside said could take place very shortly after the construction of the dam at that point will lead to most substantial benefits. At one point we were told that 1.8 million kilowatts of power producing capacity would be made available at site at 1.5 mills. In order to appreciate this one has only to recall that in British Columbia now the average cost of power is somewhere in the region of five mills at site. Second, as the Columbia is developed this immense reserve of power incorporated in the B.C. power and hydro system will bring about a great reduction in the cost of power throughout the province. We should also realize that the Mica creek development is not the only one possible. Downstream from Mica at Downey creek, Revelstoke canyon, Murphy creek, on the Kootenay river and, possibly, at sites in east Kootenay, to mention only some of the possibilities, further installations can be built until some four million of kilowatts of capacity are generated in Canada at an average cost of two mills on site.

This, of course, was the objective throughout—to create for British Columbia the possibility of the total utilization of the river in Canada resulting in the production of power at low cost in order to make industry more competitive and enable industries which are high consumers of electric power to locate in the area, as well as providing electric power at low cost to agricultural users in those large farming areas where irrigation is the life blood of their existence and where the cost of pumping water is now so high.

There would be over the years throughout every aspect of life in British Columbia a new advantage gained through the availability of immense stores of power averaging in cost in the neighbourhood of two mills.

This was the objective, and this is what the treaty achieves. This is what the present administration is now prepared to recognize. Since the treaty was signed and the disagreement arose between the federal and the provincial governments after the signing, a new element has been added to our consideration of this question. This element has been added as a result of the decision of the government of British Columbia to proceed with the development of the Peace river project, its intention that the Peace river should provide British Columbia with its domestic power requirements for the next ten years and that the downstream power available under the treaty should be sold to the United States rather than returned to British Columbia in the form of power. This party when in government advocated strongly that the benefits be returned to British Columbia as power to serve the needs and industrial growth of the province over the next 10 or 15 years. However, that contention did not prevail.

In September last this question was taken to the people in a provincial election. The present administration in British Columbia put forward its argument in favour of a two-river development, and that policy prevailed. The present government won its new mandate and the Peace river power project is going ahead. It will provide power for the domestic requirements of the province over the next ten years or so and, therefore, the benefits downstream on the Columbia become surplus to provincial requirements. Unless a favourable sales agreement could be made in the United States with respect to this downstream power the Columbia development was at an end. This was the only conclusion that could be reached after September 30 of last year when the provincial government decided to proceed with its Peace river development. For this reason a favourable sales agreement had to be achieved, otherwise all the work which had gone into the surveys and planning of the Columbia scheme would probably end up in pigeonholes with only historical interest attached to them.

But a sales agreement has been negotiated. Many questions have been asked by myself and by other members of the external affairs committee seeking assurances that the sales agreement does provide the provincial government with the money necessary for the construction of the three storage dams and also, as contended, leave a surplus sufficient to provide part of the cost of installing machinery at Mica creek. Assurances have been given to the committee to this effect by the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Martin) reinforced by the testimony of the chairman of the British Columbia power and hydro authority. There are some complex equations in these computations. Interest rates are used which we have to assume will be the correct ones, and so on; but on the face of the testimony given I feel the committee received assurances that the sale agreement will provide the benefits claimed for it in the white paper. This being so we can proceed confidently on the assumption that the development of the river will produce power at the very low costs which are claimed for the project. The assurances which we sought have been given and these assurances have been reinforced by government spokesmen and by statements from the engineering witnesses. So, in my judgment, we are able to support the ratification of this treaty.

I am, of course, fully aware that many of the critics remain critics; they have not changed their position. They have come to their decision honestly and earnestly. In many cases they hold their viewpoints passionately. They feel something has been done which could have been done otherwise and better. I suppose it would have been possible to have written a better treaty in one set of circumstances. If there had been no boundary settlement in 1846 and if the Oregon territory had not wound up in the United States, and if there had never been a British North Amercia Act separating the jurisdiction of the federal and provincial governments, especially in the field of resource development—in these circumstances we could have written an excellent treaty. Of course, in these circumstances we would not have needed a treaty; we could have developed the river ourselves.

However, those circumstances do not prevail. There has been, throughout, a realization that there would have to be a reconciliation of the rights and interests, not just of Canada and the United States but of the federal government in Canada and the provincial government in British Columbia. There was a realization that inevitably there would have to be compromises made, but always seeking to secure a net advantage for Canada and to make sure that the advantages derived would be far greater than could be achieved by any other means. Mr. Fulton explained very clearly in his testimony several times that it was the purpose of getting the maximum net advantage for Canada that motivated him and the other federal negotiators at that time.

We have heard about many alternative sequences of development. Undoubtedly those who claim that there are better methods of development feel that the government of Canada could have disregarded the wishes, interests and rights of the provincial government and imposed its will on that government in order to secure development along other lines. Surely if there is any validity in the federal system of government, surely if there is any validity in the claims of the provinces with regard to their jurisdiction over their lands and resources, the federal government must take into account the wishes of the province concerned in negotiating an agreement of this kind.

The immense magnitude of the program is most apparent, as are the changes in the face of the land that are bound to take place. It was known from the beginning that, regardless of what sequence of development was chosen the changes would be of such magnitude that the face of the land in the Columbia basin would be altered, that immense areas would have to be flooded, that there would be dislocation and that new conditions of living would be imposed in that region. However, there had to be the assurance in the minds of the negotiators, both federal and provincial, that although these changes were necessary the benefits would be far greater and sufficiently great to justify the changes both in the land and in the lives of numbers of people. There had to be the assurance that no one would suffer loss, that there would be alternative programs of settlement and redevelopment on available lands, that there would be redevelopment of communities affected together with compensation to those who would suffer loss sufficient to provide them with a stake to re-establish themselves.

All of these assurances had to be given. All of these factors had to be in the minds of the negotiators throughout the period of preparation that led up to the signing of the treaty, and the submission of the treaty and the protocol to the external affairs committee for a recommendation.

In the immense volume of testimony before that committee assurances were given on all of these points. In my view some of the statements by the government of British Columbia do not go far enough yet. Their plans have not yet been revealed in sufficient detail. But Dr. Keenleyside did go into some detail in his submission. On page 15 of the brief he submitted to the committee he referred to the special organization established within B.C. hydro which has been working on the over-all redevelopment plan, the additional plans they have in mind and the path which they will follow. We have also been given the assurance by the provincial minister of lands and forests that these matters are of first consideration to the government of that province.

Having secured these assurances, we in this house have gone as far as we are able to go. We have gone as far as we have a right to go in regard to these questions which affect primarily the rights and responsibilities of the province. If answer are still to be secured they must be secured in British Columbia from the provincial government, and the B.C. hydro and power authority. I believe we have arrived at the point where we must be prepared to accept the assurances of men of distinguished public service such as Dr. Keenleyside, and a man such as the minister of lands and forests of that province who has consistently been returned by the people of British Columbia to positions of high authority. We must be prepared to accept the assurances of these people that they are going to provide for these essentials. I think it remains for the people of British Columbia within British Columbia to secure from the government of the province and B.C. hydro the details of how they are going to undertake to fulfil their commitments to the people whose lives and property will be affected by this development.

[Mr. Fleming (Okanagan-Revelstoke).]

A relatively new factor has been injected into the consideration of the treaty during the past year. It has to do with the possible diversion of water to the prairie region. A submission was presented by the previous administration of the province of Saskatchewan. It was an interesting one, not one that could be thrust aside and not given proper scrutiny and examination. But as a British Columbian who lives in the dry belt where a great part of the area is totally dependant upon the utilization of water in irrigation systems, as one who knows something of the cost of bringing water to the land and of the low cost that must be maintained in moving water so that it is economically feasible to use it when you get it to the point where you need it, I have had considerable doubt throughout with regard to diversion over the main range of the Rockies as a means of securing additional water for the prairie region at this particular time. Some evidence was submitted to indicate that there are other rivers more readily accessible from which water can be drawn.

There may come a time when it will be necessary to exert our right of diversion in order to move water over the main range into the South Saskatchewan and on through Alberta, Saskatchewan and possibly into Manitoba. This day may come. In my view article XIII of the treaty provides that this may be done. It does not say so specifically, but I believe it is far better that the right be provided in the treaty and that we leave the specifics to negotiation when the necessity arises. Do not tie the hands of the government of Canada at this point, but leave it with the freedom of movement that it will probably require when specific diversions are to be made. But diversion for consumptive purposes is guaranteed and assured under the treaty, and the principal reason for diverting water from the Columbia basin to the prairies or to another part of British Columbia would be for consumptive purposes or, as it is defined, domestic or agricultural purposes.

I believe that the treaty in its original form, and now supplemented by the protocol, provides a basis upon which the development of the Columbia in Canada can take place to the advantage of Canadians in general and the people of British Columbia in particular. I believe the opportunity is presented to us now to realize the dreams of half a century. I believe that the treaty should be ratified. I believe that as time goes on the wisdom of this decision will make itself more and more apparent.

I also realize, of course, that all of us who are interested in this project must maintain our vigilance to see that those people whose lives will be at least temporarily disrupted by this great development will not suffer as a consequence of the benefits conferred on other citizens. Provided this is done, I am sure that the benefits will far outweigh the temporary inconveniences of change. But because change is inevitable, because change is a fundamental factor in any development of the Columbia, we must accept that fact and now proceed with the ratification of the treaty which will not only bring about these changes but will confer benefits on the province really too great for us to contemplate or endeavour to measure at this time.

There will still be opposition. There will still be objection. I do not believe this could have been avoided under any scheme of development. This scheme, as envisaged in the treaty, represents the work of a great many dedicated public servants and political leaders. I feel that it will confer the benefits that British Columbia and Canada seek. I trust the resolution will receive the approval of the house.

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I should like to say at the very outset that we propose to oppose this resolution with all the vigour and determination that we can muster. We are under no delusion whatever about the fact that the decision has already been made, although it has not yet been registered. It is our belief that although to some people it would appear to be an exercise in futility to oppose that which is inevitable, nevertheless we believe that even if we stand alone in this house it is in the interests of Canada that opposition to this treaty be expressed, and that our objections be now heard.

It may well be that the reason there are so few members in the house at the present time and so few representatives in the press gallery, when we are dealing with a treaty which in its significance far outweighs 99 per cent of the matters which come before this house, is that there is a feeling of inevitability. The government has spoken. The government has said that this treaty will be passed in this form. After all, this treaty contains, in our view, only very minor changes from the treaty approved by the former administration. Perhaps it is because there is an atmosphere of inevitability that, when we are asked in this parliament to perform the solemn act of approving, of ratifying a treaty of such tremendous significance to Canada, there are so few apparently concerned enough to be here to deal with this matter.

So far as we are concerned, Mr. Speaker, it is our hope that if we point out as clearly as we know how what we believe to be the serious errors in judgment contained in this treaty, perhaps they will not be repeated in the future. An awareness of what we, and any other individual Canadians believe to be the defects of this treaty may help to insure that in the future the interests of Canada will be safeguarded more effectively than we believe they are in the present treaty.

To some members in this house, it may seem strange that our party which has a very large, and if I may say so, a very capable representation from British Columbia, should have as its first spokesman on this treaty dealing with a river that runs through the province of British Columbia, a member from eastern Canada. Perhaps this is symbolic of our conviction that the Columbia river treaty affects national as well as provincial interests and deserves the most careful scrutiny of every member in this house, because it concerns every Canadian.

I speak as one who tried to follow carefully the evidence before the external affairs committee, and it is our conviction that, in the words of a very distinguished Canadian, this treaty is a very bad treaty for Canada, and parliament should know it. I am quoting the words of General McNaughton who, I suggest, is not only a very distinguished Canadian but better qualified to express an opinion on this treaty than any other Canadian. It is true, I suppose, that those who listen to evidence pick out those things that suit their preconceived views. Nevertheless, I say that, having listened to the evidence, we endorse, support and accept that characterization of the treaty, that it is a very bad treaty for Canada.

It may well be, Mr. Speaker, that the provisions of this treaty, which extend into the future for 60 years and in some respects even beyond that time and deals with many highly technical engineering matters, are necessarily so complex that to debate them in detail would require many weeks or many months. However, we are going to try to highlight and emphasize what we believe to be the main issues. Let me make it clear at once that we are not opposed to all treaties. We are not against the co-operative development of this international river. We are not in favour of going it alone. It is this particular treaty that we regard as not being in the best interests of Canada. We are not anti-American, but we do not believe that our friends in the United States will respect us one whit less because we stand up firmly for what we believe to be in the interests of Canada.

Now, Mr. Speaker, since I have spoken in these fairly definite terms about our view of the treaty, what are the major aspects of the treaty we criticize? I do not propose, but some of my colleagues will, to go into a careful analysis of the treaty in so far as it affects two important aspects. One of these is flood control. One of the purposes of this treaty, in part, is to provide for flood control by dams on the Canadian part of the river, and we are to receive certain payments for that. Whether or not the details of the treaty in that respect are satisfactory or adequate, some of my colleagues will outline later. I do not propose to discuss the matter. I do not propose to discuss the question of whether the projects proposed in this particular treaty or the projects envisaged by sequence 9A, commonly known as the McNaughton plan, will provide most satisfactorily for the generation of hydroelectric power. We recognize that the generation of hydroelectric power is extremely important, now and in the future, in relation to any proposal for the development of the Columbia river on an international basis or on any other basis. I do not propose to discuss whether or not we have been paid adequately for the downstream benefits that the projects proposed by the treaty will make possible, or whether other projects were more suitable in the interests of Canada. I will leave discussion of these matters to my colleagues.

I want to say this, that our major objection to this treaty can be summed up in a single word: water. We believe that the future interests of Canada in the use of water for purposes of irrigation and other consumptive purposes, have not been secured by this treaty. In fact, we believe they have been given away without a cent being paid for them by our friends in the United States. This is the underlying issue—the future importance of water to future generations of this country; and that, we say, is the core of our objection to this particular treaty.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I think my hon. friend will recognize that there are those who take strongly the view that there is no basis for that statement.

Mr. Brewin: I appreciate that, and that is why I am going to develop it and try my best to demonstrate to this house, within the time limit available, why we say the right of diversion for these consumptive purposes is not adequately protected by this particular treaty.

Let me first of all state—and I am not an engineer and I do not propose to give engineering evidence—that the use of water is increasingly important to the maintenance and development of our civilization, and the demand for flows of water for irrigation and other consumptive purposes, and multiple purposes, is a sine qua non. It is a necessary condition of the growing development of our country, and it is because this treaty does not —and I repeat the word "not"—in our opinion provide adequately for the potential diversion, perhaps 20, 30, 40 or 50 years from now, into the prairie provinces arid area, and because in our view it shuts the door to that, we say this treaty is not in the interests of Canada as a whole.

I am fully aware—because I spent a good deal of time listening to the Secretary of State for External Affairs and other witnesses assert, with the force with which the Secretary of State for External Affairs usually makes his assertions—that in fact this treaty contains in article XIII adequate provision for diversion. I want to deal with that particular matter at this moment. It is perfectly true that the treaty explicitly provides for diversion for consumptive purposes, but lying within that phrase is an ambiguity which has never been cleared up in the evidence and which I believe cannot be cleared up. This is where the difficulty lies. "Consumptive purposes" are defined explicitly in the treaty so as to exclude the use of diversion for the generation of power.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the evidence before the committee that was produced by representatives of the government of Saskatchewan and its hydro engineer, Professor David Cass-Beggs, a very well known engineer in this field, and whose view I support, was that any practical form of diversion could not be exclusively for the purposes of consumption alone—for irrigation and other related purposes—but in order to be practicable it would have to involve within it the generation of power, not only to pump the water over the Rockies but in order to make the whole development economical; and as the water flowed through the South Saskatchewan river, from which it could be diverted in Alberta and Saskatchewan for irrigation and other purposes—industrial purposes that are becoming growingly important in those provinces and to the development of those provinces—it would inevitably flow through the power plants erected on that river, and must therefore from the beginning be contemplated as for the generation of hydroelectric power. But the definition of "consumptive use" exclusively excludes its use for the generation of hydroelectric power. The real thing therefore is that the use is not merely for consumptive purposes. It is not a use merely for the generation of electric power. It is a multiple use, and that is the only practical use involved.

The Secretary of State for External Affairs, and others putting forward the argument for the government, kept on repeating that if the main purpose is for consumptive use, if this is the real purpose, the primary purpose, or some other sort of clarifying purpose, then Canada has a right to this diversion, but they produced no single opinion to back that up. They refused to inquire from the representatives of the United States whether they agreed with this interpretation, and I challenge that interpretation as being inconsistent with the evidence given, the clear meaning of the words used, and the definition of the words in the treaty.

If perchance I am wrong, if perchance my own view of the clear meaning of these words should be in error, at the very least there is an ambiguity. I see the hon. member for Coast-Capilano (Mr. Davis) sitting in the house, and he put this very frankly in the debate. He said there was an ambiguity in the use of these words. Of course there is an ambiguity, if not worse than an ambiguity.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): But after he heard the Secretary of State for External Affairs he changed his view on that point.

Mr. Brewin: I think his opinion, when he spoke in this house just a few months before he heard the siren tones of the Secretary of State for External Affairs, was a little better and nearer to the facts than any change of opinion he may have had since, although I do not know whether he has changed his opinion since then or not.

I frankly confess, myself, to be shocked by the fact that when a treaty of this consequence was being negotiated, dealing with a matter so vastly important as the use, the diversion for consumptive purposes, for the benefit of the people of the prairie provinces, no satisfactory legal opinion was prepared, presented or ever put in writing at all so as to guide the government and the negotiators.

We have heard a lot about the 50 sittings which the committee had. I now tell the house and the country that during all those 50 sessions only one reasoned legal opinion was presented, and that was by Mr. Strayer of the University of Saskatchewan in Saskatoon, who gave a reasoned exposé, with authorities and analysis of the treaty, to indicate that in his view, and I share it, there was no provision for the diversion for multiple purposes.

But, Mr. Speaker, let us assume for a moment that there is some doubt about this. What we say is that that doubt should be cleared up before any treaty is ratified. Before I conclude my remarks I propose to move an amendment which will clarify that matter, so that the people outside the province of British Columbia can be assured that what the minister asserts, namely that he has secured this right of diversion for these multiple purposes, which is the only practical diversion, is in fact acceded to by their fellow negotiators in the United States signing this treaty.

Mr. Speaker, may I call it five o'clock.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being five o'clock the house will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely notices of motions and public bills.

TRADE

PROMOTION OF TRADE WITH EASTERN CARIBBEAN FEDERATION

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Queens) moved:

That, in the opinion of this house, the government should consider the advisability of establishing free trade between Canada and those West Indies islands comprising the proposed eastern Caribbean federation.

He said: Mr. Speaker, it is not often vouchsafed to a humble backbencher to have in immediate sequence two "brief gaudy" hours on the private members' hour, and perhaps because of some of the remarks passed about me yesterday I should have stopped when I was slightly ahead! However, I am sure the subject matter of this motion is of importance to all hon. members, and I would like to discuss some of the aspects of trade with that part of the former British West Indies federation.

It is perhaps appropriate that a citizen of an island province should initiate the discussion on this matter concerning communities made up of islands. I also have a particular interest in this area, not only because I am a maritimer but in my years of lecturing at certain maritime universities it was my pleasure to have in my classes many fine young people from the part of the world to which this resolution directs our attention.

I recall so well that on July 21, 1958, parliament had before it a motion by the President of the Privy Council (Mr. McIlraith), as he now is, which under the rules at that time we discussed for a full day. I thought I could do no better than model my motion on the wording of his, except that I altered the geographic area as a result of what has happened with the break-up of the former federation, that political community for which we all had such hopes but whose collapse did not surprise us so greatly; certainly it did not surprise many of the people living there. The geographic area which we are discussing here comprises the seven islands, Barbados, Antigua, St. Kitts, Montserrat, St. Lucia, St. Vincent and Dominica. This is the little group sometimes called the outer seven, or the left out seven, now that the greater islands, Trinidad, Tobago and Jamaica have become independent states. Grenada has perhaps a special destiny in that it plans to become a part of the Trinidad and Tobago entity.

This collection of small islands is populated by less than three quarters of a million people. The land area is something like 1,300 square miles; but while the area is small, their problems are large: poor soil, shortage of water, lack of proper facilities, roads and airports, shortage of skilled labour, a crying need for capital in their effort to approach something like self-sufficiency, a pressing problem of overpopulation. Indeed, any economic study of these small islands demonstrates why the study of economics has often been described as a dismal science. Yet these small and beautiful islands could have a fairly bright future. There is tremendous opportunity in tourism, and it is no doubt as tourists that most Canadians know this part of the south. Fun in the sun often takes Canadians to this part of the world. A possibility of broadening their industrial base and diversifying their agricultural industry is of course to the forefront in the planning of the people of these islands.

It is so clear that such small communities with such difficult economic problems and with such a limited economic base must require substantial assistance from outside. From whence shall it come? The United Kingdom has done much and its program of development there is impressive. The United States has helped. Some private developments have brought benefit to the indigenous population although one does not always expect, nor is he disappointed when it does not happen, that business enterprises are necessarily geared to the improvement of the people who live in the area of the enterprise. But Canada comes, I think, into this picture and presents a splendid opportunity for this area. We have historic ties with this part of the country, especially we maritimers. In our days of glory, the days of the wooden ship, the iron men and the golden prosperity —long before the time of any of us, I must say, alas—we had close ties. Ships from Prince Edward Island and all parts of the maritimes carried goods to and from the West Indies. As early as 1855 efforts were made to establish a preferential trade agreement with these areas. This was thwarted by the British colonial office. This was in the days before Alexander Galt asserted our economic independence from our former mother country. In 1898 we had the first sugar agreement. In 1912, under the government of Robert Borden and under the auspices of that great maritimer Sir George Foster, we initiated our first trade agreement on a reciprocal basis. This was extended in 1920 and 1926. And so on over the years. I am not going to take the time of the house by going into the figures, Mr. Speaker, but there has developed a substantial trade between Canada, especially eastern Canada, and all the West Indies islands, including of course the islands to which this resolution directs our attention.

In 1962 our trade in exports to Barbados was something like $4½ million. That is a substantial sum. Barbados is, of course, a very small community. Our imports were $3,170,000. These figures are in Canadian dollars. There are some commodities which are of special interest to us. Sugar has always been of interest, and molasses too. Maritimers grew healthy, strong, brilliant and brainy by eating bread on their molasses.

An hon. Member: Bread on molasses?

Mr. Macquarrie: I am glad, Mr. Speaker, that someone has noted the inversion there. Of course, we were so poor that it was the other way around; it was molasses on bread. Yesterday mention was made of the social graces, and I think part of the social graces is based upon another commodity which drew close together the maritimes and the West Indies. I have just noticed a news item in the Halifax Chronicle-Herald. It is a report on a businessman discussing trade, and he says:

"We don't import much into Nova Scotia from the West Indies—just rum and fruit juice with the emphasis decidedly on the rum", said one Halifax shipper.

I am sure this was not a matter of taste or preference, but just one of the economic facts of life as that man saw it. It is encouraging that we have seen in recent months —certainly since I had this motion placed on the order paper and hoped it would eventually be reached for discussion—a reawakening of Canadian interest in this matter. I think all hon. members received a very impressive publication from Mr. W. J. F. Kontak of St. Francis Xavier University, who has also written for maritime newspapers, on the result of his study on this part of the world. The Canadian Institute of International Affairs have issued a report of a most impressive study in this connection. A conference on commonwealth partners in the West Indies, sponsored by the institute and the University of New Brunswick was held last fall, in which participated prominent people from the West Indies islands. The study group of the Canadian Institute of International Affairs to meet in Charlottetown, as has been the case with all respectable national bodies this year, will take up the whole question of relations with the West Indies and the hemisphere generally. A week ago a most impressive group of people, the young Progressive Conservatives of Ontario, held a week end conference at McMaster University, where they brought together outstanding scholars, brilliant politicians and fine young people and discussed, among other things, Canada's relationship with this part of the world. If any hon. member of the house, of any party, would be interested in receiving some of the very valuable reference papers produced at this conference, I should be glad to make arrangements for their distribution.

There has been a development too of what one might call an altruistic concern. We Canadians with all our material blessings seem to look altruistically at this small community whose economic and political viability is somewhat questionable. There are a few brave souls who suggest that it would behoove Canada to offer the outer seven provincial status. A very able professor from the University of Toronto—this shows my ecumenical nature as a McGill man to quote a Torontonian—David Gauthier not long ago wrote in the Toronto Telegram for February 26, 1964:

The Caribbean islands are poor, and several of them are becoming poorer. Their natural resources are severely limited. Their populations are expanding rapidly—

Perhaps it's time to do more—to do something radical. Let us offer to accept the smaller islands, which still remain British colonies, as our 11th province.

Confederation would automatically confer two benefits on the Caribbean. First, a Caribbean province would qualify for the same equalization grants, the same federal assistance programs, which now assist the poorer provinces of Canada.

Second, the inhabitants of the Caribbean would have the right to emigrate to other parts of Canada, thus alleviating the pressure of population in the islands.

Then he goes on to discuss, as a good professor should, some of the reasons which might mitigate against such a course, and he ends up in this way:

The most effective criticism we could make of the racial policies of South Africa, or of southern whites in America, would be to invite a Negro community to become Canadian—

On the other hand, perhaps we might best strengthen ourselves by turning our attention to others. We might achieve a true unity by unitedly assuming a new responsibility.

I am inclined to think that Professor Gauthier's suggestion will not be immediately seized upon, but I think we should expect something more to be done. I think we should congratulate the government for such steps as it has taken to renew our contacts with this area and to improve our assistance programs in respect to this part of our hemisphere.

When we discussed the question back in 1958 the statement of the present Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) on the matter was quoted by the mover of the resolution, and is to be found at page 2480 of Hansard, July 21, 1958:

Perhaps it would be worth considering whether we cannot tie that new part of the commonwealth, as it soon will become, more closely economically and financially to our own country, Canada, by exploring the possibility of free trade between the West Indies and Canada, or a freer trade area, and by tying up our two currencies which would encourage trade and transport between us.

Mr. Kontak, to whom I have referred, after spending a good deal of time in the West Indies came back and reported that the friendship one finds toward Canada in the Caribbean is unbelievable. "This friendship gives a feeling of both pride and embarrassment; pride because Canada has conducted her affairs in such a manner as to produce this feeling, and embarrassment because she has done so little compared to what she is capable of and can afford to do".

It is perhaps no longer common to expatiate on the glories of the commonwealth, yet I believe that the commonwealth still serves as a mighty force for good in the world, is a unique political experiment, and should remain a vital cornerstone in our foreign policy considerations. It is as a senior member of the commonwealth in this part of the world that Canada can assume a greater responsibility for the commonwealth. It is not easy to suggest what should be done. It is certainly not incumbent upon us to rush into the area we are speaking about and suggest how they can make their economy viable. It is not for us to say to them what form of government they should adopt and what should be our relationship to it. But it is, I think, incumbent upon us, and it would behoove all Canadians, to make readily available any financial aid or technical assistance, or a greater exchange of personnel and Canadian ability, to assist them. Because certainly we have that ability, Mr. Speaker.

Some of us were impressed and a bit shaken when at the University of New Brunswick conference last fall the very outspoken prime minister of Barbados laid down some pretty unpopular statements about our country's attitude toward his island and toward those islands near Barbados. He said that the Canadian government has failed miserably to recognize that they are partners in the commonwealth. According to the Fredericton Gleaner for October 26, 1963, Prime Minister Barrow said:

Canada, participating in the Colombo plan of aid for eastern countries which had made no contribution to the dominion, had not seen fit to do anything similar for the closer West Indies. It would be better for both Canada and the United States to help their friends than "fritter away taxpayers' money" in eastern communities.

That is very interesting and thoughtful, but pretty critical. He also said that while Canadian trade with the West Indies is increasing, the traffic is in one direction only; and he went on to say that the West Indies sorely needed investment capital. He went on to say this:

"Canadians arrive with tennis racquets and in Bermuda shorts, spend 17 to 21 days and return with a nice tan". He invited them to combine business and pleasure and make some contribution to the islands' economy.

So often, of course, closer economic ties either imply or involve closer political ties, and the outspoken prime minister did not hesitate to discuss the question of immigration. He spoke of the fact that the only people which our laws would allow into this country were the very types which his country needed most, namely those skilled personnel so essential to a growing, developing and diversified industry.

Mr. Pierre André Boutin (Dorchester): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I should like to point out to you that there are only 19 members in the house. Now, there must be at least 20 members present so that the house may carry on its business. Since there is no quorum, I would ask you to kindly adjourn our discussions.

[Text]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Batten): Order. The Chair will count the house.

A quorum is present. The hon. member for Queens (Mr. Macquarrie).

Mr. Macquarrie: Well, Mr. Speaker, I am happy to say I have concluded my remarks. Otherwise you might have lost your quorum.

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): While I agree with your mathematics, Mr. Speaker, and we do have a quorum, I wish to say that I am ashamed there are not more members of the house present who should be interested in the very important subject brought up in the resolution before us.

I heartily agree with the hon. member from Queens (Mr. Macquarrie) who is responsible for this resolution and I appreciate his scholarly remarks with regard to the points he has made. I do not intend to attempt in any way to compete with him in dealing with the matter on the level he has, but I do speak from practical experience in this area. It so happens I act in a consultant capacity for a small project which might be termed as commercial external aid. It is sponsored by a number of Canadian companies which operate in the West Indies and which feel their responsibility to the area is so great that they should put some of their money into a program to help this very area to which the resolution refers, that is, the Windward and Leeward islands. Thus I have an intimate experience in each of the islands referred to in this group, as well as experience in a wider sense with the entire West Indies area.

I believe we in Canada have a particular responsibility to do more than we are presently doing to assist these smaller territories in their multitude of problems. Few of us in Canada realize just what historic connection and background there is for us there. I have been interested in English Harbour on the island of Antigua and the ruins, now partially restored, of the Nelson dockyard. It was here Nelson based the administrative headquarters of the West Indies fleet and he sailed from this harbour when he left the area of the West Indies to take part in the battle of Trafalgar. I must commend the few Canadians and the larger number of West Indians who have taken the initiative in restoring this historic place. But this is only one example of the many interesting aspects of these islands; and if for no other reason than making them the natural refuge of Canadians seeking relief from the rigours of our northern climate, this area certainly has tremendous value.

The hon. member for Queens (Mr. Macquarrie) has just spoken about provincial status for the West Indies, for the proposed eastern Caribbean federation. I think this is a very worthy goal to which we may look at some time in the future. It involves, of course, most specifically the attitude of the people who inhabit these territories and it is my impression that this is not what they are looking for at the present time. The West Indies federation has collapsed, and with the lack of concern or active interest on the part of the colonial office toward these areas at the present time I think they are looking hopefully first of all to the development of their own federation. In fact if it were not for the critical situation which presently exists in British Guiana no doubt they would be much further along in their negotiations at the present time.

I agree entirely with the suggestion that free trade should first be established between Canada and these areas. I wonder why the hon. member for Queens (Mr. Macquarrie) did not include in his statement Trinidad, Tobago and Jamaica. While these independent countries have now made much more progress than the eastern Caribbean area, they are certainly a part of the larger picture of the West Indies, particularly that which is part of the commonwealth, though it also includes, of course, the French territories as well. I believe it would be an excellent step forward, something worth while and beneficial, if the government would consider the basis of this resolution and begin negotiations, with the intention of developing a free trade area or, at least, an area of much freer trade.

Many might ask: What is there in this Caribbean area other than tourism and sugar? From a trade aspect there is a tremendous opportunity for markets for many of the things we are so well equipped to supply. This applies to housing in particular. One of the greatest needs in each of these territories is housing. A few of the islands have large timber supplies available; others have none at all. Whether it is to utilize the raw materials available in the area and develop them for use in housing or whether it is to supply housing from this country, here is one of the greatest opportunities that we have. This includes industrial development; it even includes certain basic food items. I have assisted in the last few months in setting up one of the first milk reconstitution stations in the Leeward group, and there is a second one which has recently come into production. Milk is urgently needed in each of the territories. We have large supplies of milk powder and there is no reason why we should not be moving to assist these people in their efforts to provide adequate food supplies for their population.

I do not intend to prolong this debate but I should like to mention several other points, particularly one which has been referred to already. It relates to the positive side of things. The Leeward and Windward group definitely are within the British commonwealth. Here is an opportunity for us to show that we have not forgotten all that the British commonwealth represents to us, not only as far as the privilege and heritage we have is concerned but also as far as the responsibility we have to those members, and parts of it, less favoured than ourselves. On the negative side there is another aspect. It is simply this: What will happen to these areas if Canada does not come in and share this responsibility? It is obvious that Britain regards this general area as being within the realm of Canadian or United States influence and that she is no longer in a position to spend large sums of money on it. Therefore the area is more or less at loose ends. Traditionally the connection has been with Canada. Through the shipping service prior to the war a close connection was built up and there is still a tremendous wealth of good will toward Canada. Many of their citizens have come to study in Canada and many of our educators have gone down there to assist them.

This is being carried on today, as a team of Canadians in the medical and educational field continues to work in the general area. But if we do not continue and strengthen these contacts, then someone else will come into the vacuum. It may be the United States. More likely it will be some of those cross currents which today are so evident in the area and it will be a tragedy if those cross currents should begin to take hold because we neglect our responsibility there. It is well known by all of us that today there is a communist government in Cuba, in the West Indies area, and the effect of the ideological struggle which goes on between those who respect freedom as the basis on which society should be built, and those who belong to the dictatorial or the totalitarian type of government, threatens that area. The area is only going to be saved as we in Canada move in for personal reasons, on the one hand, because there is a tremendous opportunity there, and for a definite moral reason, on the other hand. I am convinced we have a responsibility there. They are just on our doorstep and regard us with good will. If we do not move in, somebody else is going to do so. Thus I support the resolution, and I trust that it will be supported in every part of the house because I think this is something that is not only of national interest, but of national concern to all Canadians who look beyond our own personal problems within Canada.

Mr. John Mullally (Kings): Mr. Speaker, I am very happy to participate in the discussion initiated by my friend and fellow islander, the hon. member for Queens (Mr. Macquarrie). I must say that I certainly share his concern for those other islanders who live some miles to the south of us. First of all, I commend the hon. member for Queens (Mr. Macquarrie) for bringing this important matter to the attention of the house and initiating the discussion we are having today. I assure him that I support very strongly the opinion he has expressed. The first time I spoke in the house during the first session of this parliament I said, as found on page 427 of Hansard of May 29, 1963:

> The geographically natural trading routes for the Atlantic provinces lead us to the eastern seaboard of the United States, the Caribbean area and, indeed, in the broadest view to the entire European Atlantic community. I believe, therefore, that more efforts should be made, first of all, to establish a greater volume of trade between the Atlantic provinces and the West Indies and other areas in the Caribbean.

This is still my view. I strongly endorse any efforts directed toward the establishment of more and freer trade between our country and the West Indies. Anything done to expand our trade in this regard will be of benefit to our country and of parallel or even greater benefit to the West Indies.

We have certain advantages which should contribute to and assist trading between the two areas. First of all, and this applies particularly to the Atlantic area of Canada, we can take advantage of much cheaper water transportation between our Canadian ports and ports in the Caribbean. Second, we have been traditional trading partners for many years and we have built up a mutual respect for one another which should provide an excellent framework on which to build or expand our future trade. As the hon. member for Queens (Mr. Macquarrie) has mentioned, many years ago we began trading with this area. For over 200 years our country has been engaged in trade with the Caribbean area.

Third, and I think this is a very important factor, the economy of our country and that of the West Indies is complementary, and as such there is a sound basis for commercial relations between the two areas. I might also add that our climates are complementary and this, of course, has contributed to a very great extent to the development of the tourist business in the West Indies which has been of a very considerable benefit to that area.

I mentioned that our economies are complementary. In this respect the principal products of the Caribbean area, such as sugar, molasses, cocoa and other foodstuffs, are all products which our country has to import. On the other hand, the main requirements of the Caribbean area are products which we have in abundance such as wheat flour, fish, meat, lumber, newsprint and other consumer goods.

Of course, Mr. Speaker, free trade of this nature requires the consent and co-operation of both parties. I would urge our government to give high priority and the most active consideration to the proposal to establish a free trade area embracing Canada and the West Indies. However, it does not seem that government officials in the West Indies are as favourably disposed to this proposition as we are. From what I have been able to learn it seems that their leaders have been reluctant to commit themselves to such a trading arrangement. This is understandable from their point of view because tariff duties are a very important source of revenue for their governments. Furthermore, the balance of trade between the two areas is very much in their favour.

I am slightly disappointed, Mr. Speaker, that the hon. member has restricted the terms of his motion in these words: "Those West Indies islands comprising the proposed eastern Caribbean federation". The hon. member mentioned that the proposed federation includes the Leeward islands, the Windward islands and Barbados. This does not include, of course, as the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Thompson) has mentioned, Jamaica, Trinidad and Tobago, Bermuda, the Bahamas, British Guiana or British Honduras.

In my calculations I included Grenada, which I understand is leaning toward union with Trinidad and Tobago but is still maintaining an observer status in the negotiations between other members of the proposed federation. I tabulated the area of the proposed federation and arrived at a figure of 1,196 square miles, which is roughly 10 per cent of the total area of the West Indies. On a population basis I have also arrived at certain figures. They are not up to date but they may be the latest that are available. The figure I have arrived at is a population of 601,127 out of a total population of 3½ million, or about 16 per cent. So the area under consideration is really a small portion of the total area of the West Indies. As the hon. member mentioned, the federation proposed in 1958 was formally dissolved in 1962, but I had hoped that he would include in his resolution the other areas in the Caribbean.

To come back to the more restrictive sense of the resolution, I would point out that there are a few considerations which have to be taken into account in any discussion of a free trade area between Canada and the proposed federation. I will mention three of them. First of all, since the federation is not yet in existence or operation as an economic unit or as a governmental unit, it is probably not in a position at this time to enter into negotiations or to address itself to or even consider very seriously trading relations with Canada or other countries. If and when this proposal is accepted and a federation is formed, this area will then be in a much better position to carry on active negotiations with our country.

Second, as I mentioned earlier and for the reasons I have given, recent indications are that the West Indians themselves are not very enthusiastic about entering into a free trade area or a customs union at this time. They are actively engaged in promoting economic growth and industrial expansion and therefore they are preoccupied with the idea of using tariffs as an instrument for the development of new industries under their new legislation.

Third, in considering a free trade area with the proposed federation we would have to have regard to the present trading relations between Canada and the other countries of the West Indies, not only commonwealth countries but non-commonwealth countries as well. Any arrangements which we might eventually make with the proposed federation, if and when it does come into existence, would have to take into consideration all the arrangements we have at present with the other parts of the West Indies.

It might be useful, Mr. Speaker, to consider for a moment the volume of our trade and the pattern of our trade with the West Indies or the Caribbean area in general. In 1962, Canada exported to the Leeward and Windward islands, who are components of the proposed federation, an amount which equalled 5.9 per cent of our total trade with the Caribbean area. Imports into Canada from the areas comprising the proposed federation represented only 1.4 per cent of Canada's total imports from the area. In 1962, exports to the members of the proposed federation accounted for only 16.2 per cent of our exports to the commonwealth Caribbean, and only 5.9 per cent of Canada's imports from the commonwealth Caribbean came from the Leeward and Windward islands and Barbados.

I have a table outlining Canada's trade with the Caribbean and showing Canada's exports to the Caribbean, to the commonwealth Caribbean and to the proposed Caribbean federation. If I could have permission to have the table included as part of my remarks, I could move along much faster and allow someone else to participate in this discussion.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Batten): Does the house give consent to the incorporation of this table in the remarks of the hon. gentleman?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Editor's note: The table above referred to is as follows:]

Canadian Trade with the Caribbean

Exports

	1958	1963
	$ million
(1) Canadian exports to the Caribbean	155.2	193.2
(2) Canadian exports to the commonwealth Caribbean	46.1	68.2
Of which to the proposed eastern Caribbean federation	8.5	12.1=6.2%

(3) Principal exports to the commonwealth Caribbean: wheat flour, fish, meats, motor vehicles and parts, lumber, newsprint and cotton fabrics.

Imports

	1958	1963
(1) Canadian imports from the Caribbean	335.5	347.5
(2) Canadian imports from the commonwealth Caribbean	64.4	83.1
Of which from the proposed eastern Caribbean federation	5.5	4.9=1.3%

(3) Principal imports from the commonwealth Caribbean: bauxite, alumina, raw sugar, molasses, crude petroleum, fuel oils, rum, cocoa butter and cocoa beans.

Of which the eastern Caribbean federation supplied: sugar, molasses and rum.

Even if free trade is not possible, if free trade cannot be established between our country and the West Indies or the proposed federation, I think we should make every effort, should give every attention, to the development of greater trade between Canada and the West Indies generally. Other members who have preceded me in this discussion have spent considerable time speaking of the great need for Canada's participation in, and more generous assistance of, the economic expansion of this area. I feel we should make a determined effort to develop the economy of these islands. We should give every assistance we can to raising the standards of living and providing more sources of employment for the people in this part of the western hemisphere. We should also take a more active part in the substantial movement towards assisting in the establishment of new industries in the West Indies and in the area of the proposed federation.

I should like to close my remarks by saying that I strongly support the proposition put forward by the hon. member for Queens (Mr. Macquarrie). Although I feel it has been restricted somewhat by limiting it to a certain area, I think the hon. member is to be commended for bringing this important matter to the attention of the house. I am sure he has the support of everybody on this side of the house.

Mr. Thomas M. Bell (Saint John-Albert): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure to support the motion put forward by the hon. member for Queens (Mr. Macquarrie) suggesting free trade between Canada and certain of the West Indies islands. This has been a favourite subject of many of us on both sides of the house for some time. I have spoken about it on numerous occasions both inside and outside this house. I understand there are some other members who want to take part in the debate, so I am going to be brief.

We were encouraged by an answer to a question given by the minister of external affairs the other day, as recorded on page 3402 of Hansard. I asked whether or not consideration was being given by this government to participating in a large scale, top level conference that was suggested by the prime minister of Trinidad to be held later this year concerning closer ties with Canada. This conference would, of course, encompass the matter of trade. While the minister of external affairs was quite loquacious, there was an element of hope in his answer that the government would be moving on this matter. I think it is a timely topic and something should be done about it.

There are compelling reasons and the first is the break-up of the federation. Then, too, there should be consideration given to the inroads of communism in the Caribbean area generally. I only want to put on the record two of the main reasons for my support of this resolution. First, there is the great benefit that would accrue to the maritimes, which is in such close proximity to the West Indies. This whole section of Canada, I mean the maritimes, is in a period of transformation and is searching for new industries, new communications. We could orient these plans with the West Indies. I think that Halifax and Saint John, which are facing many problems because of the movement inland of navigation as a result of the seaway, would benefit greatly from any expansion of relations with the West Indies.

Then, there is the undisputed fact that the West Indies themselves are counting on us for assistance. There may be disagreement as to how this assistance would be given, but certainly that statement is true. Those of us who spent time in the West Indies on parliamentary business realize that this is true. I see the Clerk Assistant following this debate closely, and I was on one such conference with him. We certainly got to know the problems of that area. We who have been on these conferences realize that transportation difficulties and the lack of natural resources have caused these people to turn to their wealthy northern commonwealth friends here in Canada, whom they value most highly, for assistance. There is the pertinent fact too that with communist inroads in the Caribbean, the benefits would be far reaching in the ideological battle that is taking place.

I do feel that I can answer one contention that has been put forward. I want to say that the remarks that have been made by the previous speakers have been well informed and thoughtful and I certainly could not improve in any way on the details. However, I believe the main reason the proposer of this motion has merely suggested particular islands in the West Indies and excluded Trinidad, Tobago and Jamaica, is that the two larger islands I have mentioned feel they are self-sufficient. They have indicated they want to go ahead on their own. While we can assist them, they may not be so interested in free trade relations. The smaller islands are in extreme difficulties and we would be assisting them greatly.

In closing, I welcome this opportunity of supporting the motion put forward by the hon. member for Queens (Mr. Macquarrie) in such a statesmanlike way. I will not compliment him, because last night during the debate on Sir John A. Macdonald he was complimented so much I wondered whether they were talking about Sir John A. or the hon. member for Queens (Mr. Macquarrie). Nevertheless, the motion is timely. I hope the government will move on this matter in some way, and help these islands in the West Indies in the way that has been suggested here.

Mr. Gerald A. Regan (Halifax): Mr. Speaker, I think there can be no question but that the hon. member for Queens (Mr. Macquarrie) has done a fine service in bringing this matter to the attention of the house and of the government.

The eastern portion of the British West Indies that would constitute the proposed new federation are about as lovely a group of islands as one could imagine, a delightful land of sun and sand, and much more. Their products have been mentioned by previous speakers, and I think this is a land with which we should develop much closer ties for quite a number of reasons, some of which have also been mentioned this afternoon.

I am not at all sure that free trade with this area would begin to solve the problems that exist as regards its economy and as regards our relations with the area. The problems are much more complex, but we must make moves towards closer relations with the area.

Last month I had the honour to represent the Canadian branch of the commonwealth parliamentary association at a parliamentary course in London, and during my time in England I had the opportunity to meet daily with representatives at that course from Dominica, Montserrat, and the Virgin islands, as well as some of the other areas in the West Indies. I was reminded by the remark of the hon. member for Queens (Mr. Macquarrie) concerning the quality of the young men from those areas he had known in maritime universities, and I am quick to say I seldom had the opportunity to spend time with more delightful people or with men who were more interested in the ultimate welfare of their areas.

I would also associate myself with the remarks of the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Thompson) concerning the British commonwealth. These islands are not economically able to stand alone as yet. It may be some time before they will be able to do so, but because of the heavy nature of Great Britain's commitments across the world in bringing dependencies to the point where they are ready for independence; because England has been reluctant, and rightly so, to cast off many of these heavy responsibilities before the areas concerned are ready for stable independence, and because England has been unable to devote as much time and money to the development of areas such as the eastern Caribbean as would perhaps be necessary, I would reiterate what I had occasion to say in England. I said that if we in Canada are to believe at all in a future role for the British commonwealth, and in our participation in the commonwealth, if we see this commonwealth as being an organization which, with the growth of African and Asian countries toward prosperity, can be a major force economically and politically in the world, then there can be no better way for us to participate in the development of the commonwealth than by being willing to take on some of the responsibilities for the development of the West Indies area, an area with which we have had long and close relations.

The port of Halifax has long been the central point for shipments to and from the West Indies. I am told by the secretary of the port of Halifax commission, Ray Marsh, whom I see in the gallery at the moment and who has always shown great interest in the West Indies area, that the port of Halifax probably handles more tonnage to the West Indies in general than any other port in Canada, and possibly more than any other port in North America.

We have seen a lot of people coming back and forth between those islands and Halifax over the years. There is an awareness in the maritime provinces, that is not common across Canada, of the importance of the West Indies area. If the West Indian islands were not developed properly under the guidance of other portions of the British commonwealth, they could well end up in communist hands, because geographically they are very near to Cuba, and if that happened it would not be any great help to the security of North America.

We have a very vital interest in the West Indian area. These islands have had a British connection. Their citizens want to remain within the commonwealth, and surely it is Canada which can show the lead and help Britain in keeping them inside the commonwealth as they develop to independence. I am not an economist, but I have suggested upon another occasion that there might be considerable merit in having at least a portion of the area proposed, or perhaps the entire eastern Caribbean federation, brought into the area of the Canadian dollar and have them eventually leave the sterling block. At present we send many tourists south in the wintertime to escape the rigours of our climate, and whether they go to Florida or the West Indies this constitutes a drain on our international exchange payments. If the West Indies were operating on Canadian dollars this would be a great advantage to us as regards that drain.

We in the Halifax and Nova Scotia area would like to see the development of direct flights by T.C.A. to improve communications between the maritime area and Bermuda, the Bahamas and the southern area of the British West Indies. I hope T.C.A. will be able to do this in the not too distant future.

Mr. Caouette: Air Canada.

Mr. Regan: Excuse me, Air Canada; and I may say I think this is a much more suitable name since the air line operates more than trans-Canada now. But returning to the subject, while an air line connection in itself does not do too much for developing trade, nevertheless contacts between businessmen and citizens in general normally result in an increase in trade. In the West Indies area there is a great friendship for Canada. The island of St. Kitts, in particular, has many citizens who for a long time have wished for very close ties with Canada. The same is true of Dominica, the Virgin islands and other areas.

While this motion cannot be fully discussed in the short time left today, nevertheless I hope the government will recognize that the hon. member for Queens (Mr. Macquarrie) has done a service in bringing this matter to the attention of the house. I hope it will be a signal for increased attention to the development of the West Indies area as regards relations, economical and cultural, between that area and Canada in the years ahead. I have some more remarks I would like to make on this subject but it appears to me, Mr. Speaker, that the hour of six o'clock has arrived and I shall have to wait until another occasion.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Batten): The hour for the consideration of private members' business has expired.

At six o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Thursday, June 4, 1964

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

PRIVILEGE

MR. DOUGLAS—PRESS REPORT OF SPEECH BY LEADER OF THE OPPOSITION

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege which affects all members of the house. It has to do with a Canadian Press dispatch of this morning regarding a meeting which was held in the Toronto area last night and addressed by the right hon. Leader of the Opposition. It says in part:

> Noting that Prime Minister Pearson had threatened an election if parliamentary business does not progress, Mr. Diefenbaker suggested this was a ruse.
> "The Prime Minister knows he stands in no danger from his allies (the Social Credit, Creditiste and New Democratic parties)...because of the increase in (M.P.'s) indemnity to $18,000 a year".

Some hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. Douglas: The report continues:

> "It had a wonderful effect on third party support".

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Douglas: It continues:

> "On the flag vote", he said, "the attitude would be, not that I love the red ensign less, but $18,000 more".

Mr. Pigeon: The same old bunch.

Mr. Douglas: Mr. Speaker, the rules of this house assume that every member has a right to take whatever position he or she wishes on any question on the basis that they are acting in accordance with their convictions and their conscience, and it does not lie within the power of any member to impute motives to other members or to insinuate that they are acting from ulterior or sinister motives. I suggest that this statement is a reflection not only on the three parties which sit to the left of the official opposition but impugns the motives of all members of this house who may disagree about the design of the proposed flag. The great bulk of the Conservative members in this house, with the exception of a small handful, voted for an increase in the sessional indemnity, and the implication would be that any of them who vote for a design other than the red ensign are also doing so out of considerations based upon the sessional indemnity.

I do not raise this on any basis of personal resentment, Mr. Speaker. I say this is a reflection on the integrity of all members of the house. What is to my mind even worse, it helps to feed the cheap cynicism that is all too prevalent with reference to parliament and its membership.

I recognize that the right hon. Leader of the Opposition may have been misquoted, and if so I hope he will make that clear to the house. Or it may be that he spoke in the heat of a campaign meeting and that he will want to retract his statement. All of us have had the experience of being carried away by the exuberance of our own eloquence and having said things that we later regretted. If that is true, then I hope the Leader of the Opposition will make a retraction.

The right hon. gentleman is an old and experienced parliamentarian. He is a former distinguished prime minister of this country, and no one knows better than he that he cannot impugn the motives of other members. He may call in question their judgment, but he cannot reflect on their integrity. I ask him to give this house either an explanation or an apology.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, in so far as the statement made by the hon. member is concerned, may I say that there were no motives imputed whatsoever or in any way. I have consistently taken a stand against the increase that was voted. I made that clear again last evening when I spoke. If that is imputing motives to hon. members of this house I do not know what motives are. I took a strong and very definite stand against the circumstances under which the increase took place. I took the stand that no such increase should be made effective by members of the house voting for it. I pointed out at the time the dangers inherent in that course. I am unchanged in that view and will remain so, and any suggestion on the part of the hon. member that motives are imputed is entirely without foundation.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Citation 154, paragraph 6, of Beauchesne, fourth edition, is very clear. It reads as follows:

> The words "purchased by legislation" applied to a member of the house are unparliamentary. An appeal was taken from this decision of Speaker Lemieux who was sustained by a vote of 87 to 71.

The reference given for that citation takes one to February 8, 1926, when a Conservative member of that day, Mr. Sutherland of South Oxford, referred to the then member of Winnipeg North Centre, Mr. Woodsworth, and his support of certain things the government of that day was bringing in by using the phrase "purchased by legislation". The clear implication of the words used by Mr. Sutherland was that Mr. Woodsworth and others associated with him were voting in support of things the government was bringing in because they had got certain things from the government of that day.

Mr. Woodsworth raised a point of order and the matter was debated at some length. Mr. Speaker Lemieux ruled very clearly that to say that a member's vote was purchased by legislation was out of order, and he called upon the member to apologize and withdraw. The ruling by Mr. Speaker Lemieux was appealed by Mr. Meighen and the ruling was sustained by a vote of 87 to 71. Mr. Speaker Lemieux then called on Mr. Sutherland to withdraw the remark he had made.

It took debate extending over a couple of pages of Hansard for this to be achieved but I submit, Mr. Speaker, that the precedent is a clear one; and that a former member having been told by the Speaker that he must withdraw any suggestion that a member's support had been purchased by legislation applies today, so you, sir, should rule that the Leader of the Opposition should withdraw or apologize for the statement he has made about members of this house.

[Translation]

Mr. Réal Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, before you give your decision on the point of order just raised by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), I should like to say a few words on the question of privilege raised by the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam (Mr. Douglas).

[Mr. Diefenbaker.]

If the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Diefenbaker) really did make the statement attributed to him concerning the members of the three minority groups in this house, to the effect that the indemnity increase voted last year is one reason why those three minority parties vote with the government to maintain the government in office, in order to avoid a general election, I want to say that I dissociate myself entirely from that statement of the Leader of the Opposition.

In view of the important post he holds at the present time, I am of the opinion that he made last night's statement without thinking or through lack of competence or honesty.

As far as we, in this corner of the house, are concerned, we voted more often against the government than for it, political partisanship aside. We voted according to our conscience, in the interest of the Canadian people. We voted, at times, with the government, but when it came to voting against it, we did not shirk our responsibility.

The Leader of the Opposition is free to make a spectacle of himself in Toronto, but he certainly has no right to do so at the expense of the three groups which sit to his left.

Furthermore, I wish to point out to the Leader of the Opposition that some of his own followers in the house do not share his views and that they are the first ones to condemn such boasting and say that they personally disagree with such statements as he made yesterday in Toronto.

Mr. Guy Marcoux (Quebec-Montmorency): Mr. Speaker, just a few words to say that I am in complete agreement with the remarks made by members of the smaller opposition parties.

Personally, I introduced in the house a bill affording all members the opportunity to refuse their indemnity raise, if they so wished.

I can therefore say, on behalf of the members of my party and myself, that the indemnity raise never had any bearing on any decision we were called upon to make in the past. If there are some who are opposed to the bill, if it is ever introduced, I would ask them to vote against it.

[Text]

Mr. Colin Cameron (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): I am rising on a point of personal privilege to say that I do not propose to sit quietly under a slanderous lie stated by any preposterous mountebank who will seize upon anything in his desperation; and that if a case of this kind occurs again outside the house, I shall take the matter to the courts myself.

Mr. G. H. Aiken (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, in connection with this matter that has arisen, I think the house must first look at the question that is before it. This is not an allegation concerning a statement made in the house, and the quotation which the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre has read, and the various authorities I have been able to look up in the very few minutes we have had, refer only to statements made in the house on which questions of privilege arise.

The hon. member who raised the question stated that he was merely quoting from press reports. I suspect, Mr. Speaker, that is actually what we are now attempting to discuss, and it is very difficult if not impossible to discuss a matter which is subject only to press reports and which has been raised on press reports. If it had been a statement made in the house there would be a question of privilege which could be raised.

Some hon. Members: Deny it.

Mr. Aiken: I do not know what all the heat is being raised about on my left. Surely we can discuss this matter in some sensible manner. The right hon. Leader of the Opposition stated that no motives were imputed in the statement he made last night and that no motives were imputed here in the house. I do not think we can take up this question of privilege on the information that is before us at this time.

Mr. Speaker: I do not think it is unfair to say that the Chair does appreciate the position it is in at the moment. It is a very delicate one, but nevertheless the Chair has its duty to perform.

I would like to point out that if hon. members will refer to page 133 of May's Parliamentary Practice, sixteenth edition and edited by Sir Gilbert Campion, they will find that:

> Alleged breaches of privileges or contempts committed out of the house or in the precincts of the house but not in its actual view may be brought to the notice of the house (1) by a complaint from a member——and various other examples are given; by communications, etc. Therefore I do think the hon. member is right in bringing this to the attention of the house.

While it is not exactly on the point may I refer to citation 134 of Beauchesne's parliamentary rules, fourth edition, paragraph 2:

> In the House of Commons a member will not be permitted by the Speaker to indulge in any reflections on the house itself as a political institution; or to impute to any member or members unworthy motives for their actions in a particular case; or to use any profane or indecent language; or to question the acknowledged and undoubted powers of the house; or to reflect upon, argue against or in any manner call in question the past acts and proceedings of the house, or to speak in abusive and disrespectful terms of an act of parliament.

This is not precisely on the point but it does seem to me to give me general directions. I have obtained a copy of the words which I understand were used. They are in a quotation published in this afternoon's Ottawa Journal also, and if they are as stated it does seem to me that the right hon. member, who must take his responsibility, of course, has gone too far.

This afternoon the right hon. member mentioned the fact that he was against a certain pay increase. Well, that is his privilege, to be for or against; but we are not discussing whether he was for or against the pay increase. We are discussing the words which were used, and the words in the quotation which I have before me are:

> "not that I love the red ensign less, but $18,000 more."

—and these are applied to three parties in this house. Further the quotation reads:

> —the Prime Minister knows he stands in no danger from "his allies"—the Social Credit, Creditiste and New Democratic parties—because the government voted M.P.s a pay increase to $18,000 a year. "It has a wonderful effect on third party support."

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I understand, as do all hon. members, that at political meetings emotions run sometimes cold, sometimes hot and sometimes too hot. Statements are made on occasion in the enthusiasm of the moment which carry the orator or speaker or guest of honour along, and he is sometimes carried away. But if those words were used I must come to the conclusion that they are very serious words if they are to be applied to every member of the house. They affect every member of the house, and in the circumstances I am going to make a personal appeal to the right hon. the Leader of the Opposition to withdraw those words or take other steps which will amount to a withdrawal or an apology to the house. I appeal to him to help us out of a very difficult situation at the moment.

Question of Privilege

Mr. Diefenbaker: I have always been a House of Commons man, and I made it clear there was no imputation. Your Honour still believes there was. That being so, following your ruling as always, I withdraw.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

[Later:]

MR. NIELSEN—REPORTED STATEMENT BY PRIME MINISTER

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. My question of privilege comes a little late because I did not have the material before me when the question of privilege was raised by the leader of the New Democratic party. It is based on the same ground, sir, as that raised by the leader of the N.D.P. and supported by the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre.

Mr. Churchill: No, not "south".

Mr. Nielsen: I am sorry; "north centre".

Mr. Churchill: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I do not want to be confused at any moment with the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles).

Mr. Knowles: Hear, hear.

Mr. Nielsen: Neither, sir, would I want to ever confuse the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre with the constitutional conscience of the House of Commons. The question of privilege I raise arises out of statements made by the Prime Minister to the Liberal council at a meeting he attended the day before yesterday. I have before me the Ottawa Citizen of Wednesday, June 3, where the words that were used by the Prime Minister are set forth in quotation marks on the first page. This is what was said by the Prime Minister, according to this newspaper report:

> —"if the public's interest is made secondary to partisan tactics—no doubt by filibuster and by blocking public business, by politicking and polemics".

Further on it says:

> "Today there is day after day of repetition and obstructing debate and raising of useless questions of order and privilege"—

An hon. Member: This is an example of a useless question of privilege.

Mr. Nielsen: I hear an hon. member say "This is an example of a useless question of privilege".

[Mr. Speaker.]

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Nielsen: I am sure there are many who share my view that the question raised a moment ago has the same basis of privilege as this one, because what the Prime Minister said to that meeting of the Liberal council imputed irresponsible motives to every member of this house.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Nielsen: No member of this house, I submit to you, sir, let alone the Prime Minister, based on the precedent you yourself have established, can impute irresponsible motives to any member of this house. It seems to me, on the basis of the precedent you yourself have just set, sir, that the Prime Minister should have at least that much grace and that much understanding of the rules of the house as was exhibited by the leader of the official opposition, and should rise in his place now and withdraw the remarks he made, or assure this house that there was no imputation of motive, as did the leader of the official opposition; and he should inform the country accurately as to the rights of all members to exercise their duties. I appeal to you, sir—

Mr. Speaker: Order. Is the hon. member concluding, because I think I get the drift of his argument?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Nielsen: I appeal to you, sir, to treat this question of privilege with the same degree of seriousness with which you treated the question of privilege that was raised a moment ago.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Nielsen: Perhaps hon. members opposite will cease their catcalling and allow me to make my closing appeal to you, sir, to make your decision on the basis of the precedent which has just been set in this house. The Prime Minister should be called upon to withdraw the imputations that he left, not only at this meeting of the Liberal council but as well in the minds of Canadians all across this country.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I congratulate the hon. member for his gallant diversionary activity. I am glad to confirm the words he has quoted, and

I ask you, Mr. Speaker, whether any question of privilege is involved.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

An hon. Member: Arrogance.

Mr. Speaker: Order. For the second time today I have to reach a decision on the question of whether there is a question of privilege. I may say, without going into a long harangue, that in the first case I did see a question of privilege; in the second case, I do not.

Hon. Michael Starr (Ontario): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I think the Chair should prepare itself in the same way as it prepared itself for the former question of privilege, and should not try to decide this matter and give an off the cuff decision such as has just been given.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. It seems to me that the argument the Chair used to reach the conclusion in the second case is very simple. If we are to have no political commentary at all we might as well fold up and go home.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. There is quite a difference between making a political speech and charging hon. members with certain activities which on the face of it are just not so. That is the difference. I do not want to overstress this matter, but it should be self evident to all hon. members, and I am sure it is.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: I would urge the hon. member for Yukon not to continue along this line. I do not see where it does the slightest good. If it were a question of privilege, yes; but this is an argumentative statement, and I do not think anyone has been hurt by the decision rendered in the second case.

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, it was not my intention to make a substantive motion with respect to this question of privilege, which I submit should have been the case with the last question of privilege that was dealt with, but I suggest to Your Honour—of course I bow to your ruling—that perhaps it would have assisted Your Honour had you read the words that I quoted.

Mr. Starr: Yes, to prepare yourself.

SHIPPING

LAKE HURON—SUPPLEMENTARY ESTIMATES TO PROVIDE FOR ADDITIONAL DREDGING

Hon. J. P. Deschatelets (Minister of Public Works): There have been many questions recently about the problem of water levels in the great lakes, and the government has indicated the seriousness with which it views this problem. I am now in a position to advise the house that as a result of surveys completed to date I will be including in the supplementary estimates, to be presented shortly, provisions for dredging at some of the main commercial harbours and channels in lake Huron.

Major projects will be undertaken at Collingwood, Owen Sound and Midland. In addition it is proposed to proceed with dredging at fishing harbours at Kincardine, Saugeen river, Bayfield, Stokes Bay, Port Elgin and Oliphant. We are continuing our surveys at other locations, and these surveys may well produce additional areas for increased operations in the near future.

To this end I am also proposing in the supplementary estimates some increase in our general dredging allotment. I hope hon. members will appreciate that we do not look upon this as a final solution to the water levels, but it is emergency action we feel justified in taking in order to ensure the continuity of navigation in the main channels.

This dredging in the lake Huron area is over and above our original dredging program in such areas as Grand Bend, Goderich, Howdenvale and Wiarton. The government is conscious of the importance of this emergency program and it will be given high priority.

Mr. G. H. Aiken (Parry Sound-Muskoka): It is certainly a matter for satisfaction that the government has finally recognized and come to grips with the very serious low water problem. The minister mentioned a number of places where emergency work is being done and I am sure, as he has stated, that there are still a number of others which must be investigated and assisted. However, we appreciate the statement of the minister as evidence of a first timid step toward meeting the emergency.

An hon. Member: Oh, oh.

Mr. Aiken: I repeat, a first timid step. I say this because there are many, many locations which urgently need assistance, and they are not included in the list given by the minister. I understood him to say more were being considered. I wish the parliamentary secretary would not become so annoyed about my statement.

There is still another problem in the area, and it concerns the plight of the smaller private operators who have suffered severely. A week ago today I made a suggestion to the minister regarding assistance in the reconstruction of water access facilities on behalf of certain of these people. It is necessary to keep these people in business, not only in their own interests but also in the interests of the highly concentrated tourist business in the Georgian bay area. I hope the minister has recovered from the surprise I gave him last week without notice of this proposal, and I hope the cabinet is giving some consideration not only to providing additional public facilities but to assisting private businesses.

CRIMINAL CODE

AMENDMENT TO MAKE WIRE TAPPING CRIMINAL OFFENCE

Mr. L. T. Pennell (Brant-Haldimand) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-103, to amend the Criminal Code (wire tapping, etc.)

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. Pennell: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this bill is to make the wire tapping of telephone communications an offence under the Criminal Code, except in the case of law enforcement officers acting pursuant to an order of a judge of a superior court of criminal jurisdiction.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

PRIVILEGE

MR. CAOUETTE—PAYMENT OF TELEPHONE BILLS OF MEMBERS

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Réal Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege concerning all hon. members and which, I believe, has been drawn to the attention of everyone.

I refer to a piece of legislation passed in August last year, namely Bill No. C-91 which provides in section 4:

> The purpose of this amendment is to provide that each member of the Senate and House of Commons will be allowed such actual moving or transportation and travelling expenses between his place of residence and Ottawa and such actual telecommunication expenses while in Ottawa as the respective houses may prescribe for their members.

Here is my question of privilege. For some time now we have been receiving calls from the Bell Telephone Company asking us to pay certain bills. Now, according to the act which was passed and which is retroactive to April 8, 1963, the internal administration of the House of Commons should have paid for those telephone calls and those telecommunication charges from our ridings.

I want to raise this matter so that we know where we stand in the future.

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: The question raised by the hon. member is a very important one, and has been under consideration and discussion for some time. However, if I understand the act correctly it authorizes or instructs, if I may put it that way, the internal economy commissioners to determine the time, place and conditions of any payments which may or may not be made. Up to the present time the commissioners have not decided that long distance telephone calls should be paid for, and until that decision has been reached by the commissioners it is not legal for the government to pay such accounts. Consequently the accounts remain the personal debt and charge of the individual member concerned for which the government is not responsible.

Now, I do not say that the question should not be studied carefully again. It is under constant study, but until a decision has been reached the legal position is that members are responsible for their own long distance telephone calls.

[Translation]

Mr. Gilles Grégoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, if you will permit me I would have a remark to make on this subject.

Clause 1 of the bill provides that it will be retroactive to April 8, 1963. According to clause 1, retroactivity applies to all clauses mentioned in the bill, including the one concerning telecommunication charges.

Mr. Speaker, this measure was voted on a year ago. We believe that the year granted to members of treasury board is a fairly long period of time. Besides, this bill was passed in order to set up a system whereby all members would be on an equal footing, that is those who live far away and those who live nearby. It is true that travelling expenses and telephone charges incurred by members living in Halifax or Vancouver are higher than of members living in Montreal or Ottawa, or still nearer.

I think it would be advisable for the house to recommend to the members of treasury board to make a decision as soon as possible on this point and to make their decision consonant with section 1 of the bill which is retroactive to April 8, 1963.

[Text]

Mr. A. D. Hales (Wellington South): Mr. Speaker, speaking to the point of privilege may I say I hope that when the internal economy commissioners discuss this matter, they will give no consideration to accepting the request which has just been made.

FLOODS

BRITISH COLUMBIA—ACTION TO PREVENT POSSIBLE DAMAGE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, with every passing hour the flood situation in British Columbia gets that much worse. I wonder if I might pose a question to the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources and ask whether he has any up to date information to relay to the house on the action taken to prevent very serious damage in that province.

Mr. Speaker: On the grounds of urgency I realize that flood conditions out west are really a very serious matter in the Fraser valley, the Skeena area, and so on. If the minister has anything to say, let him say it.

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): Mr. Speaker, we have some information on the condition of the rivers in British Columbia as of about yesterday noon. This is the time of the year when great concern is felt in the valleys of a number of our rivers. I think the Fraser river is rising at the rate of about one foot per 24 hours, and this will be reflected at the gauge at Mission in about three days. There has been some flooding already in the case of the Skeena at Cedarvale, about 65 or 70 miles east of Terrace. The flow in the Columbia drainage basin is rising much less rapidly. We are particularly concerned over the fact that precipitation has been somewhat higher and run-off has been greatly delayed. The chief concern in the province of British Columbia to date, of the provincial people and those in areas that are organized, is the outlook for the weather. Yesterday the weather was in the 60's and low 70's in the interior of British Columbia; today it is expected that the temperature in most of the interior areas will rise to 80 degrees and that there will be a temperature of 75 degrees at Prince George.

My hon. friend from Skeena is fully aware of the problems that situation poses for us. We have every evidence that the officials of the province of British Columbia and the civic authorities, wherever they are stationed, are aware of the situation and are doing their utmost to prepare for it.

Mr. Howard: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Could I ask the minister, or perhaps the minister responsible for E.M.O., whether any agency of the federal government is prepared to assist in any way if the situation does get out of hand?

Mr. Laing: Mr. Speaker, I am quite certain that the government of Canada would act, in the normal course of events, upon application of the government of the province of British Columbia.

PARLIAMENT HILL

REQUEST THAT R.C.M.P. IN ATTENDANCE BE BILINGUAL

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Gilles Grégoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, I wished to direct a question to the Minister of Justice, but in his absence maybe the Prime Minister could answer.

As the number of tourists coming from all over Canada to visit parliament increases with the coming of the summer months, and as the parliament buildings themselves should be an example and a model as far as integral bilingualism is concerned, could the Prime Minister give us the assurance that he will see to it that all R.C.M.P. constables on duty on parliament hill are bilingual, that is are able to understand and to make themselves understood in both languages?

[Text]

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): I will be very glad to look into that matter, Mr. Speaker.

Inquiries of the Ministry

INDIAN AFFAIRS

READINESS OF PROVINCES TO ATTEND CONFERENCE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Robert Simpson (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration. In relation to the planned federal-provincial conference on Indian affairs, can the minister inform the house which provinces have signified that they are prepared to meet now and which provinces have indicated that they will need more time to consider this matter?

Hon. René Tremblay (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration): I will take this question as notice, Mr. Speaker.

CANADIAN FLAG

REQUEST FOR TABLING OF TELEGRAM FROM PREMIER SMALLWOOD

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, may I refer the Prime Minister to the answer he gave me on June 2 relative to the telegrams passing between Premier Smallwood of Newfoundland and the Prime Minister with regard to the two flags, or to one of those flags. At the page in question I asked for the production of this telegram, which was tabled yesterday. I also used these words, as reported at page 3833 of Hansard:

> Can we also have the telegram from Mr. Smallwood so that we can resolve this apparent dispute or uncertainty as between the views of the Prime Minister and the premier of Newfoundland?
> Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, I would be glad to ask Premier Smallwood for permission to table his telegram, and I would certainly be very glad to table my own.

When I asked for the production yesterday, Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister said there had been no correspondence. I would ask him what he meant the day before yesterday when he stated that he would find out whether the telegram from Premier Smallwood could be tabled and his consent secured thereto.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, when I answered the question to which my right hon. friend has referred I was of the impression that Mr. Smallwood had made the request by telegram for information as to the procedure to be followed if and when the resolution were adopted. When I got back to my office I found that the request had been made by long distance telephone. I am very sorry if I have misled my right hon. friend and the house, but it was a telephone call, not a telegram. The telephone call was asking for information, and when I sent back the telegram "In reply to your request" I was referring to that telephone call.

REPORTED THREATS TO SUPPORTERS OF RED ENSIGN

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Robert C. Coates (Cumberland): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. Has the Prime Minister been informed that the life of the organizer of the red ensign march on parliament hill was threatened; and further, that the lives of the members of her family were included in the threat; and still further, that only one retail outlet in downtown Ottawa was willing to sell the red ensign, the remainder apparently being in fear of reprisals—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Coates: It is very kind of hon. gentlemen opposite to laugh when the lives of individual Canadians are being threatened.

Mr. Speaker: Order. Has the hon. member finished his question?

Mr. Coates: No, I have not finished yet, Mr. Speaker—and of the proprietor of that establishment having his life threatened for selling the red ensign?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I have no such information. If the report is accurate I know how they must feel, because I have been getting some threats myself.

Mr. Coates: Mr. Speaker, it is all very well for the Prime Minister to slough off threats that are being made against the lives of Canadians because they are interested in flying the flag that is designated as Canada's flag.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm.

Mr. Coates: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Prime Minister. Will the Prime Minister assure the house that every possible step will be taken to assure that threats of this type will not be made against any Canadian citizen, and will he inform the house just what has taken place with regard to these threats made by hoodlums, no doubt?

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, if the hon. gentleman will send me a copy of his report I will be glad to examine it, and if the circumstances warrant it can be passed on to the police and to the mayor of Ottawa.

Mr. Coates: Mr. Speaker, I would think that the Prime Minister—

Mr. Speaker: Order. This is no time for argument.

[Later:]

Mr. John Loney (Bruce): My question is for the Minister of Justice, but in his absence I shall direct it to his parliamentary secretary. Will the minister inform the house whether the R.C.M.P. were instructed to restrict or restrain spectators and non-participants who entered the grounds of the parliament buildings on Monday evening during the flag demonstration? Will the minister investigate the situation in which a member of this house was forcibly restrained and asked to identify himself as a member of parliament before he was allowed to proceed?

Mr. D. S. Macdonald (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Justice): I would be glad to bring this matter to the minister's attention.

REQUEST FOR REPORT ON AUDIENCE OF TRANSPORT MINISTER WITH THE QUEEN

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister concerning the recent trip to London of the Minister of Transport and his audience with Her Majesty the Queen, and also concerning the government's delay in starting a debate on Canada's two flags. Could the Prime Minister tell the house whether it is true that Her Majesty the Queen explained that the union jack was the flag of the United Kingdom and its colonies, while Canada was rather a sovereign country? Could he also explain whether that is the reason for the government's delay in introducing its legislation?

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: This question is out of order. It is hypothetical.

[Translation]

Mr. Grégoire: Ten o'clock.

Some hon. Members: Ten o'clock bogeyman.

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege—

[Text]

REQUEST THAT NEW DESIGN BE FLOWN ON PARLIAMENT HILL

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Prime Minister, and I have given him notice of it. In view of the evident interest of the members of parliament, as well as the general public, in the subject of a flag for Canada, can or will arrangements be made to have the flag proposed in the resolution flown on the flagpoles in front of the parliament buildings which are used from time to time for flying other than official flags, so that members in making their decision can have the advantage of seeing for themselves the proposed flag flying as it will appear if adopted?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): We would be glad, Mr. Speaker, to arrange to have that done.

Mr. Brewin: May I ask a supplementary question. Will the Prime Minister consider at the same time also flying in the same manner a design with a single maple leaf on it?

Mr. Pearson: Well, Mr. Speaker, I think there would be some responsibility on the government to show to members the flag which is described in the resolution so they would have it before them before they decide. We have not, of course, the same responsibility in regard to any other design. However, I will be glad to look into this suggestion.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Possibly the Prime Minister would enlighten the house as to the number of hours, approximately, that this flag was flying out at the Prime Minister's summer home?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I am sure the people of Canada would like to know how long it took before he arrived at the decision that it was, to use his word, "wonderful".

Mr. Pearson: This flag was flown for some hours over the summer cottage of the Prime Minister, on private property where there was no main road and where it was not normally possible to see it, so I could get a very good view of it.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I ask the Prime Minister again, does he think he was justified in doing that at the Prime Minister's house?

Mr. Pearson: Yes, Mr. Speaker, entirely justified.

POWER

COLUMBIA RIVER—TELEGRAM FROM GROUP OF ENGINEERS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Prime Minister. Has the Prime Minister received a petition signed by 19 Canadian engineers who attended the recent annual meeting of the Engineering Institute of Canada, urging that in view of the serious differences of opinion that exist with respect to the Columbia river treaty, before the government commits the country to an irrevocable course of development it take further steps to ensure beyond reasonable doubt that this treaty will serve the best interests of Canada now and in the future? Would the Prime Minister inform the house of his reply to these distinguished engineers?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, this is an important question and it deserves a detailed reply. It is true that on Monday morning of this week I did receive the telegram to which my hon. friend has referred, attributed to a group of very distinguished Canadian engineers and asking that "steps should be taken to ensure beyond reasonable doubt that any treaty on the Columbia truly serves the best interests of Canada now and in the future".

On Tuesday I sent a reply to the originator of the telegram and addressed copies to all the other engineers named in the telegram. The same day I received the following telegram from one of the most distinguished persons on the list, the president of Calgary Power, Mr. G. H. Thompson:

> I have received a copy of your telegram to Dr. L. Austin Wright in reply to his telegram to you of May 31 regarding the Columbia river treaty. Having noted from your reply the thorough study already given to this treaty I would request that my name be deleted from those listed in Dr. Wright's telegram to you.

Yesterday I received a telegram from another distinguished person on the list, namely

Mr. J. B. Sterling, chancellor of Queen's University and a former past president of the Engineering Institute of Canada. The following is the text of his message:

> Thanks your telegram June 2 re Columbia treaty. Regret did not have complete information last week and now withdraw completely any objection.

This morning I received a somewhat longer telegram from Mr. P. M. Sauder of Lethbridge, Alberta, whose name was also listed on the original telegram. Mr. Sauder begins his telegram by saying:

> I do not understand how I got involved in the discussion of the Columbia river treaty, while I talked with Dr. Austin Wright I do not remember discussing this subject with anybody at the Banff meeting of the Engineering Institute of Canada.

Mr. Sauder goes on to raise some question about possible diversions for consumptive uses on which I have commented to him in a telegram this morning. I do not know what further messages may come in on this matter, as I understand that many of those whose names were listed in the original telegram have not yet arrived at their homes after the conclusion of the Banff meeting. It seems clear, however, that in general the signers of the telegram were expressing their interest in this important subject. As indicated in my reply to them, the government and many outstanding engineering authorities who testified before the external affairs committee are satisfied that the existing treaty and protocol will serve the best interests of Canada now and in the future.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. The Prime Minister has read a number of telegrams, but I do not believe he has read the one containing his reply to the original telegram.

Mr. Pearson: It might be desirable if I tabled the original telegram, my reply and any telegrams that have come in in reply to my reply. I would be glad to do that tomorrow.

Mr. Douglas: Except for the fact that telegrams from various engineers have already been quoted by the Prime Minister, and it seems to me that the record should also contain the Prime Minister's reply.

Mr. Pearson: I will be glad to table all telegrams that have come in later in the day when I will get them in my office.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): There are some more coming in now.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

RECOGNITION OF QUEBEC DELEGATION IN PARIS

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Maurice Côté (Chicoutimi): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Could he tell the house whether France has unofficially expressed the wish to recognize the Quebec delegation in Paris as the permanent delegation of a sovereign country and whether he will soon accede to that request?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): The answer is definitely no, Mr. Speaker.

[Text]

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

ALIEN INFLUENCES IN TERRORIST ACTIVITIES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Heward Grafftey (Brome-Missisquoi): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Prime Minister. Has the government taken definite steps in order to investigate whether organized alien influences are behind and have infiltrated terrorist activities within our country?

Mr. Speaker: Order. It does seem to me that this is a question requiring very careful consideration before an answer is given, unless the Prime Minister has already considered the question or received notice of it.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): I was going to say, Mr. Speaker, that I would be very glad to look into that matter.

NORTHERN AFFAIRS

QUEBEC—ADMINISTRATION OF ESKIMO AFFAIRS

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Hon. Paul Martineau (Pontiac-Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister.

In view of the failure of the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources in his negotiations with the province of Quebec as regards the transfer of jurisdiction over the Eskimos, has the government given consideration to the appointment of another federal negotiator?

[Text]

SOCIAL INSURANCE

INQUIRY AS TO CONTINUATION OF ADVERTISING CAMPAIGN

On the orders of the day:

Mr. A. D. Hales (Wellington South): I should like to address a question to the Minister of Labour. Has the minister taken any steps to withdraw or cancel the extravagant advertising campaign to create the impression that registration for social security is the obligation of everyone?

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of Labour): No, Mr. Speaker, I have taken no steps to alter the advertising in any way.

HOUSING

ASSISTANCE BY C.M.H.C. TO POINT EDWARD NAVAL BASE EMPLOYEES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Robert Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the minister who reports for Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation. According to press and radio reports special measures are being taken by Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation to assist the unemployed in Elliot Lake, in the riding of Algoma East which is represented by the Prime Minister. Will the same assistance be provided to the workers at the Point Edward naval base in my constituency who have been thrown out of work by the actions of this government?

May I also ask the Prime Minister if he would devote just a fraction of his time to this problem, rather than spending it in playing around with flags?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Would the hon. member put the first part of his question on the order paper?

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): I am sorry, sir, but I did not hear you.

Mr. Speaker: If I remember the hon. member's question correctly it was in three parts. The last two paragraphs were opinions, but the first question, it seems to me, is one which should be put on the order paper.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): With all due respect, Mr. Speaker, I asked a direct question of the minister who reports to the house for Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation. I asked him to confirm reports that something is going to be done for those who are unemployed at Elliot Lake, and if something could not be done for the unemployed in my riding. Surely they are as important as the people who reside in Algoma East.

Mr. Speaker: Order. This is not the time for debate.

REPORTED DECREASE IN CONSTRUCTION IN ATLANTIC AREA

On the orders of the day:

Hon. J. R. Nicholson (Postmaster General): On Tuesday last the hon. member for Pictou asked me, as the minister who reports to this house on behalf of the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation, about a reported decrease of 23 per cent in housing construction in the Atlantic region.

I believe, after checking, that the figure to which the hon. member referred relates to the number of dwellings under construction in urban centres at the end of April. Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation have assured me, since the question was asked, that the volume of housing construction in urban centres in the Atlantic region so far this year was substantially higher than a year ago, due in part, of course, to the winter housing program.

The actual figures are as follows. The number of dwellings brought to completion in the Atlantic region, during the period in question, totalled 1,302 units in the first four months of the year as compared with 835 units in the corresponding period in 1963, an increase of 55.9 per cent. The corporation has also assured me that while during the same period, that is the period when completions were up substantially, housing starts in the same region were down somewhat as compared with the previous year, the figures for May show an increase of 5.4 per cent over the corresponding month of last year.

Mr. H. Russell MacEwan (Pictou): May I express the hope that the reports of the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation are clarified before being given to the press in future.

Mr. Robert Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): May I ask the Postmaster General what arrangements he has been able to make to assist the unemployed workers from the Point Edward naval base to pay their rent?

Mr. Nicholson: I will take the question as notice.

[Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria).]

URANIUM

REQUEST FOR CHANGE IN FORM OF U.K. CONTRACT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. A. Webb (Hastings-Frontenac): I have a question for the Prime Minister. It seems that the present contract forms in connection with the United Kingdom's offer to purchase 1,200,000 pounds of uranium oxide are so worded that only the wealthy Consolidated Mines and Denison Mines can tender on these contracts. Will the Prime Minister have new contracts prepared in order that our own, small, wholly Canadian companies can tender on this contract?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the offer was made in terms which did not discriminate against any producing mine.

[Later:]

Mr. Webb: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Prime Minister whether representation has been made to him or to the department by representatives of the smaller mines, stating that due to the wording of the present tender forms for the uranium it would be impossible for these small firms to tender?

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, I have received representations. The offer made to the producing mines was in a form to ensure that the maximum amount of employment would result from the successful bidder.

TRANSPORT

ST. LAWRENCE SEAWAY—REQUEST FOR REPORT ON TOLL INVESTIGATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Thomas M. Bell (Saint John-Albert): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport, and may I say that we are all delighted to see him back in his place so relaxed after his family holiday in the United Kingdom. In view of the statement which was made yesterday about seaway revenues, will the minister give an interim report, as he said he would, before July 1, the deadline for the investigation of tolls on the seaway? Will he also tell us how the investigation is coming on alongside that of the United States and what we may expect in the way of further hearings?

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): I very much hope to be able to make a report before the deadline. I thank the hon.

gentleman for the rather belated welcome. I was here yesterday.

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): I have a question supplementary to the one asked by the hon. member for Saint John-Albert. When the Minister of Transport visited Buckingham palace, did he have an interview with Sir Basil Smallpiece with a view to improving the efficiency and organization of house business in Canada?

THE MINISTRY

NATIONAL REVENUE—APPOINTMENT OF MINISTER

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. R. Southam (Moose Mountain): I have a question for the Prime Minister. Instead of dangling the bait of a cabinet post before the voters of Saskatoon, Saskatchewan, would it not be in the best interests of Canada to fill the vacancy of the Minister of National Revenue at once with one of the qualified Liberal back benchers?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): I am grateful to my hon. friend for his advice.

HEALTH AND WELFARE

VANCOUVER—REPORTED CONTAMINATION OF MILK SUPPLY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): May I direct a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare of which I gave notice in the house two days ago. It has to do with an announcement by the officials of her department regarding the significant level of contamination of milk due to pesticide poisoning in the Vancouver area. I wonder if the minister could give the house a report on whether action is being taken regarding this serious situation.

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Minister of National Health and Welfare): I noted in Hansard that my hon. friend suggested I was convalescing, whereas in fact I have been conducting the business of the department for four or five days. However, I thank my friend for his solicitude.

In reply to the question which he posed to my parliamentary secretary I should like to state that trace amounts of pesticide residues were detected in market milk during a routine survey carried out by the food and drug directorate in dairy products in British Columbia. The levels found do not represent any immediate hazards to health; therefore there is no justification at the present time for a reduction in the consumption of milk by either adults or children.

However, there is no question but that such residues are undesirable and could represent a potential hazard if milk containing these residues were consumed over long periods of time. Therefore the federal department is working closely with the provincial departments of health and agriculture in order to bring about an improvement in the situation. The regulatory program of the food and drug directorate is continuing, and I also understand that the province is planning to establish a laboratory to examine food products as well as animal feeds for pesticide residues.

I should like to assure the hon. member and the house that if the levels found in milk are considered in any way and at any time to be hazardous or deleterious to humans, immediate action will be taken to have such milk removed from the market.

Mr. Douglas: Before asking a supplementary question may I say I am sure all hon. members are delighted to see the minister back in good health. I understand she had some trouble with her spine but I want to tell her I know there is nothing wrong with her backbone.

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. Douglas: Mr. Speaker, I want to assure the house that that was an allegorical expression and not a personal opinion. May I ask the minister what level of contamination was found and what is the level which is estimated to be dangerous.

Miss LaMarsh: Mr. Speaker, may I say I am sorry that it was not a rather more personal remark that my hon. friend made. Since I am unable to give the statistical information which he now requests I should be happy to see him privately and discuss both matters with him.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

REQUEST FOR SHOWING OF FILM RESPECTING PRIME MINISTER

On the orders of the day:

Mr. D. M. Fisher (Port Arthur): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Secretary of State. I understand that the C.B.C.

today issued a press release in connection with the Pearson film, but after having it read to me by a C.B.C. official I find it is no answer to the question I raised with the minister as to whether the C.B.C. would be prepared to arrange a showing of this controversial film for members of parliament. Has the minister his reply yet?

Hon. Maurice Lamontagne (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, in answer to the request made to me by the hon. member, I am informed by the C.B.C. that tentative plans have been announced by the national press club for the showing of the film in question. If there is such a showing it will be carried out solely on the responsibility of InterVideo Productions. The C.B.C. does not plan any private showings of this film which has been rejected for the C.B.C. television network. For the additional information of the hon. member, the corporation has announced today that it is releasing two prints of the film to InterVideo Productions.

Mr. Fisher: The conditions under which the films have been released are that they be shown only to film societies. Would the minister press very strongly that the C.B.C. give permission to Mr. Ballentine to show the films they are going to release on a wider basis so that all of us, including members of parliament, can get an easy chance to view them?

Mr. Lamontagne: Mr. Speaker, I am certainly not going to press the C.B.C. on anything with regard to programming.

Mr. Fisher: My question had nothing to do with programming. I am talking about giving a demonstration, on parliament hill for parliamentarians, of the film in the railway committee room, using 16 mm. film and a projector.

ROYAL CANADIAN AIR FORCE

OTTAWA—U.S. PARTICIPATION IN AIR FORCE DAY

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Lucien Cardin (Associate Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, on Tuesday last the hon. member for Yukon who is, I understand, a former member of the R.C.A.F., asked whether any arrangements would be made for participation of the R.C.A.F. in the air force day program—

Mr. Speaker: Would the minister restate his answer? I was not able to hear the beginning of it.

[Mr. Fisher.]

Mr. Cardin: Yes, Mr. Speaker. On Tuesday last the hon. member for Yukon who is, I understand, a former member of the R.C.A.F., asked whether any arrangements would be made for participation of the R.C.A.F. in the air force day program taking place at R.C.A.F. station Rockcliffe this Saturday. He alleged that the majority of personnel and equipment participating were from the United States air force rather than from the Royal Canadian Air Force.

I can inform the hon. member that, as is not unusual, he has his facts wrong. Actually over 90 per cent of those participating and over 90 per cent of the equipment being shown is R.C.A.F. It is true that both the United States air force and R.A.F. aircraft, in limited numbers, will take part in the fly past saluting the 40th anniversary of the R.C.A.F., thus showing on the part of our allies a more sincere appreciation than that expressed by the wording of the hon. member's question of the contribution the R.C.A.F. has made, and continues to make, to the defensive alliance of the west. As a joint partner in NORAD the United States air force is also contributing to the static display at Rockcliffe.

I understand that as a member of the special committee on defence the hon. member has received an invitation to attend the air show, and I hope he avails himself of the opportunity in order to see for himself just how wrong he was.

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, I can tell the minister I fully intend to attend the air show, but I would ask him to be fair when making comments on my question. If he will read it carefully he will see that no allegations were made by me whatsoever, that I said my information was that the United States air force was participating openly in the air show, and I simply wanted the minister to confirm or deny whether this was so. I made no such allegation and I suggest it is improper for the minister to impute motives to the question I asked.

Mr. Cardin: Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. member should be satisfied now. He told me what his information was and I have told him what my information is today.

Mr. Nielsen: I am not—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I do not want to be laying down the law all afternoon, but it does seem this is a good time to point out to both hon. members that according to the instructions given me this is a very good illustration of the following; that answers to questions—and this would include questions too—should be as precise as possible, should deal with the matter raised and should not provoke debate. I think, in order to be strictly impartial and fair, it should apply to both parties.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

CANADIAN PARTICIPATION IN UNITED STATES MILITARY EXERCISE

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Associate Minister of National Defence whether he has an answer to a question which I put to the Minister of National Defence on May 26, and to which I have received no answer up to date.

Hon. Lucien Cardin (Associate Minister of National Defence): I am not aware of that particular question.

LABOUR RELATIONS

BRITISH COLUMBIA—FREEDOM OF WORKERS TO JOIN UNION OF CHOICE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. S. Barnett (Comox-Alberni): I have a question for the Minister of Labour, of which I have given him notice. I view of the fact that MacMillan, Bloedel and Powell River Limited, the largest industrial concern in the province of British Columbia, is currently trampling upon the principles of the I.L.O. convention respecting the right of workers freely to enjoy the protection of the union of their choice, will the minister use his good offices with Mr. J. V. Clyne, the head of that company, to alter the course of action presently being pursued by his company?

Mr. Speaker: Order. This is a question for the order paper.

AIRPORTS

DORVAL—ALLEGED RESTRICTION ON ACCESS BY TAXIS

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport.

Does the government intend to allow taxi drivers of the Montreal area to have access to Dorval airport, thus taking away that monopoly from the Murray Hill Company?

[Text]

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): If the hon. gentleman will put his question on the order paper I will be glad to seek an answer.

POWER

COLUMBIA RIVER—APPROVAL OF RATIFICATION OF TREATY

The house resumed, from Wednesday, June 3, consideration of the motion of Mr. Martin (Essex East):

That it is expedient that the houses of parliament do approve the ratification of the treaty between Canada and the United States of America relating to co-operative development of the water resources of the Columbia river basin, signed at Washington on January 17, 1961, and the consequent coming into force of the protocol thereto annexed to the exchange of notes signed at Washington on January 22, 1964, and that this house do approve the same.

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): When the debate was adjourned last night I was discussing the right of diversion for consumptive use—

Mr. Davis: On a question of privilege. A few minutes last evening before the hon. member for Greenwood remarked that it was five o'clock, he referred to a statement which he attributed to myself. He said that with respect to rights of diversion from the Columbia pursuant to the treaty there was ambiguity. He used the word "ambiguity" and chose, also, to attribute it to me. May I say I have never used the word in that connection.

Mr. Brewin: I will, of course, accept what the hon. member has just said. He did not use the word "ambiguous". However, he used a similar word having the same meaning.

What I was discussing when the debate adjourned last night was the view which we hold that the right of diversion for consumptive use provided for in article XIII of the treaty and paragraph 6 of the protocol was illusory as far as any practical diversion to the prairie provinces was concerned because any such diversion, to be economic, would have to be for multiple use including the generation of power, which is explicitly excluded under the terms of the definition of consumptive use in article 1(e) of the treaty. I also pointed out that the only reasoned legal opinion presented to the committee—an opinion which I believe to be correct—was to the effect that the permitted consumptive use contemplated by the treaty was riparian use, that is, use within the Columbia basin itself.

I am aware that the Secretary of State for External Affairs has asserted from time to time, with his usual tone of absolute assurance, that diversion is permitted for purposes of power generation, provided such use is only incidental and that the other uses are, as he has put it from time to time, the primary or main uses—the real and the genuine uses of the water diverted. It is significant that no reasoned legal opinion is presented to justify the addition of those words to the clear language of the treaty.

If this interpretation is so acceptable, why not submit it to the United States and get their approval of this clarification? When the Secretary of State for External Affairs and other proponents of the treaty are backed into a corner on this question of diversion they reply that the matter is of little practical consequence in any event, as the proposals for diversion are either too expensive or are far away in the future. Indeed, they say there are other sources of water for diversion which can be used more cheaply and which are more accessible. This is not the view of those who are most concerned. We heard a brief presented by the government of Saskatchewan supported in detail by the evidence of Mr. Cass-Beggs, general manager of the Saskatchewan Power Corporation and a hydro engineer of distinction. He said that a Columbia prairie diversion might well be an exceedingly important component of a water plan for the prairie provinces. It is this right of diversion, so described by Mr. Cass-Beggs, and conferred by the Boundary Waters Treaty Act of 1909 which, we say, is being given away without the payment, if I may use such an expression, of a plugged nickel.

It is true that article XIII contains provision for the diversion from the Kootenay into the Columbia of a specific amount of water after 20, 60, 80 and 100 years from the date the treaty comes into force. But this right, in the opinion of General McNaughton and others who gave evidence before the committee may also be illusory, because the building up of vested interests on the completion of the Libby dam will make the exercise of these rights impracticable, even though the legal right is there.

[Mr. Brewin.]

The essential difference between the McNaughton plan and the treaty plan is that the treaty plan includes Libby in the United States, and the construction of Libby precludes, in fact, the effective diversion of the upper Kootenay. The treaty storages are near the border. The storages proposed by the McNaughton plan are as high up on the rivers on the Canadian side as possible. The essential difference, therefore, is that under the McNaughton plan there is maximum flexibility and control of Canadian water in Canada.

The treaty plan throws away the most effective bargaining counter which Canada would have for the future. It will be necessary for us to deal again in the future with the United States but we will be deprived of our most effective bargaining power. There is no doubt that the Canadian negotiators preferred the plan which excluded Libby and had succeeded in persuading their United States counterparts to negotiate on the basis of giving up Libby, which was indeed an expensive project though significant because it ensured flow of water from the Kootenays. Why, then, did the Canadian negotiators suddenly switch from the McNaughton plan to what they themselves have described as a second best plan, a plan which included Libby and limited control over Canadian water?

The answer to this was made very clear in the evidence which was given before the committee on external affairs. As reported at page 1147 of the report of the proceedings Mr. Fulton, the chief negotiator for Canada, was asked about a press statement accredited to him and which reads as follows:

> Justice minister E. Davie Fulton, in a series of frank speeches in B.C. recently, put it in this way: "Under our constitution, B.C. is the owner of natural resources lying within provincial borders... and has therefore the right to designate which resources should be developed and in what way. This is the basic reason why High Arrow is included, and the major dams and diversion of the Kootenay river are not included in the treaty projects".

That passage was in quotation marks and Mr. Fulton acknowledged that he had said that. Then the press report went on to say:

> He also publicly admitted the salvage nature of the negotiations from that point: "B.C. having made these decisions, it was then the federal government's task to negotiate with the U.S. within the pattern thus determined...We then had to ask ourselves the final question, does this arrangement still represent an advantage to Canada?"

Mr. Fulton also acknowledged that this accurately represented what he had said, and indeed that the final treaty was to be negotiated within the pattern set by the premier of British Columbia. Mr. Green and the hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Harkness) have said the same thing, in effect that Canada accepted a second best treaty because of the veto of the province of British Columbia.

The Secretary of State for External Affairs acquiesced in the theory that the McNaughton plan was in fact vetoed by the British Columbia government. Indeed, in correspondence with General McNaughton and in his evidence he seems to accept the theory that under our constitutional system the fact that the provinces have the ownership of the water and land affected by the development of an international river confers on them the right to veto a project. In a letter dated August 6, 1963 to the secretary to General McNaughton, the Secretary of State for External Affairs explained his rejection of the general's plan and said that the province of British Columbia selected the present treaty project. I would ask the house to note the word "selected". The province of British Columbia selected the treaty project, and he said the federal government were bound to accept this dictation. We in this party repudiate this surrender and abdication of jurisdiction over an international river.

Mr. Gelber: Would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Brewin: Certainly, although I do not have too much time.

Mr. Gelber: As I understand it, the hon. member says that the original proposal put forward by the government of Canada was the McNaughton plan. I think that if he refers to the government submissions he would find that the original plan which the government undertook to put forward included high Arrow, and is it not a fact that General McNaughton never accepted the high Arrow project?

Mr. Brewin: Well, I do not propose to go into irrelevant details of that sort. The facts are very clear. As Mr. Fulton and many others have said, a project which excluded Libby was rejected at the dictation and veto of the province of British Columbia, and that is the point I am trying to make.

Mr. Gelber: Did the hon. member say a few minutes ago that the location of high Arrow was probably one of the weaknesses of the present sequence, and—

Mr. Brewin: Mr. Speaker, I imagine the hon. member will have his chance to make a speech. I have not even discussed high Arrow. I have a good deal to say and I want to get on and make my own speech, if I may.

We in this party repudiate this surrender and abdication of jurisdiction. The theory of the government that the government of Canada cannot make treaties for the development of international rivers without the consent and concurrence of the provinces is dangerous, unsound and is an unconstitutional doctrine which should be repudiated by this house. This doctrine confuses ownership with legislative jurisdiction, and I suggest that the acceptance of this doctrine would seriously weaken Canada's bargaining position on all future occasions of this sort.

I do not propose to detain the house with a lengthy lecture about the British North America Act. I will content myself with a quotation, which is undoubtedly a correct statement, by the Hon. Jean Lesage, made in 1955 when he was minister of northern affairs. At that time he was officially putting forward the view of the government of the day with regard to jurisdiction in this matter and he said this:

> According to the Canadian constitution, works built on rivers in Canada and having an effect outside the country fall under the jurisdiction of parliament even if they are entirely located in one province.

This difference of opinion about the power and responsibility of the federal government was clearly set out by General McNaughton in a letter to the Secretary of State for External Affairs dated September 23, 1963. General McNaughton said:

> I do not—

—and the word "not" is underlined—

> —agree that the government of British Columbia is the government responsible for the final selection, by which I understand you mean the ultimate decision.

I will not quote at length but this matter was clearly considered in this correspondence.

Notwithstanding that, the Secretary of State for External Affairs persists in speaking of the right of veto of the province of British Columbia and the fact that there is no alternative to the acceptance of the pattern set by that provincial government. I say there is no doubt that the government of Canada had the constitutional power if it had the will to proceed with whatever project it believed best for Canada, and if need be it could have declared the whole project a work for the benefit of Canada both as to the power and the water. I am not saying for one moment that in these days of co-operative federalism a province which undoubtedly has the proprietary right in the power to be produced should not be consulted and its views fully taken into account. What I am suggesting is that in a matter which affects the welfare of more than one province and is unquestionably within the legislative jurisdiction of parliament as determined by the B.N.A. Act the government of Canada has a duty to assert firmly that Canada will be master in its own house and will not submit to dictation or veto in international negotiations from any province.

In other words, what the government of that day and the government of today should have said to Mr. Bennett in relation to this matter is, to use a colloquial phrase, "Go jump in the lake", or if not in the lake, in the river. We all know that as we approach Canada's one hundredth birthday we are doing some soul searching about our constitutional set-up and the relations between the federal and provincial governments. We in this party do not believe that the policy of abject surrender to provincial veto evidenced by the history of this treaty will help to build a strong or united Canada. We ask parliament to reassert the jurisdiction claimed for parliament by Mr. Lesage, a jurisdiction which it undoubtedly has.

While dealing with parliament I want to make a final comment on the way the treaty has been submitted to parliament. This treaty was subject to ratification by Canada and the United States. Before the last election the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) promised that the treaty would be submitted to parliament and scrutinized by the external affairs committee, which would hear evidence and then make its recommendations.

After the election, and before submitting the treaty to parliament, the protocol was negotiated and signed. The committee then met, as the house knows, and many days were spent in hearing evidence. However, the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Martin) attended on the committee and made it clear that while the committee had the theoretical power to do what it liked, in fact the treaty that was before it was before it on a "take it or leave it" basis; no changes were to be accepted; the existence of the government was put on the line in support of every dot or comma in the treaty and protocol.

I must say that I found it hard to see, in the circumstances, how any supporter of the government could express any views or hesitations about the treaty, whatever the evidence happened to disclose. In this situation the review by the external affairs committee was a mere formality; the verdict had been given before the evidence was heard. Indeed, the hon. member for Coast-Capilano (Mr. Davis) described the process in a statement made on December 12, 1962, and reported in the Globe and Mail, as follows. This is to be found in the evidence at page 260 and I want to read it to the house. He said this:

> The Columbia river treaty, the government tells us, is to be brought before the House of Commons and there it will be promptly referred to the house committee on external affairs. Various experts and a number of publicly minded citizens will be asked to testify before that committee. They must be heard and their suggestions will be treated seriously—so seriously, in fact, that the treaty may have to be changed in certain important respects. To ignore these witnesses and to brush aside their recommendations would be folly; not only that, but it would make a mockery of parliament. Why bring the Columbia treaty before your elected representatives if it cannot be changed in any way? And why shy away from making changes which are in our national interest? After all, we have to live with certain aspects of this treaty for a long, long time.

The hon. member made that statement in late 1962 and it is just as applicable now as it was at that particular time.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): You should read the whole speech.

Mr. Brewin: If the minister will make sure that I get extra time, I might think of reading the whole speech; I think it would be very helpful to the house.

Mr. Herridge: Get the hon. member for Kootenay East (Mr. Byrne) to read his, too.

Mr. Brewin: The issue is this, and it is an important one, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate the fact that it is constitutional practice in this country that the treaty-making power is vested in the executive, but the Right Hon. Mackenzie King, who I suppose would be regarded as something of an expert or an authority by members of this house, had this to say. I am quoting from "The Art of the Possible", a book by Professor James Eayrs, at page 106. He was quoting Mr. Mackenzie King in the House of Commons:

> The day has passed when any government or executive should feel that they should take it upon themselves, without the approval of parliament, to commit a country to obligations involving any considerable financial outlays or active undertakings.
> In all cases where obligations of such a character are being assumed internationally, parliament itself should be assured of having the full right—

I underline those words:

> —of approving what is done before binding commitments are made. I would not confine parliamentary approval only to those matters which involve military sanctions and the like. I feel parliamentary approval should apply where there are involved matters of large expenditure or political considerations of a far reaching character.

I know the Secretary of State for External Affairs will say, "Oh, well; we have submitted this to parliament"; but it was submitted to parliament under conditions in which parliament could have no opportunity, unless it wished to throw out the government, to do anything more than rubber stamp the treaty. I suggest it is time serious consideration were given to deciding whether or not, before the final details of a treaty of this sort are negotiated, this treaty should be submitted to a committee for external affairs and examined, so that, the evidence having been taken, parliament and its representatives would be free to suggest changes and would have some meaningful participation in that treaty. This is the situation, of course, in the United States, where the Senate can attach riders. We think there should be the same situation here.

I think I have only a very few minutes left, Mr. Speaker, and I do not propose to go into any detail in describing this particular treaty. As a matter of fact, it has been described very much better than I could describe it by the hon. member for Coast-Capilano and will see if I can find the words that he used in speaking of this particular treaty. Because he was a little sensitive and said I did not quote him correctly before, I will try and get the exact words that he used.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): This was before the protocol, was it not?

Mr. Brewin: Yes.

Mr. Orlikow: And before the election.

An hon. Member: That is more important than the protocol.

Mr. Brewin: If the Secretary of State for External Affairs will be patient, I will deal with the protocol.

An hon. Member: The protocol was as a result of the election.

Mr. Brewin: I entirely agree with the hon. member who suggested that this was before the protocol and before the election; that is absolutely true. I am having a little difficulty finding the particular reference that I have in mind, Mr. Speaker, but I can remember what the hon. member said with perfect clarity, and he can tell me later if I have not quoted him exactly. What did he say? First of all he said this treaty was a fiasco; second, he said that the treaty was one of which no government could be proud; third, he said the treaty was a sell-out; fourth, he said it was an embarrassing treaty. Those are the words he used. I think I can give him the exact reference later, but I do not seem to have it in front of me at the moment.

Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, would the hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Brewin) accept a question—just one question?

Mr. Brewin: My time is nearly up.

Mr. Davis: Would the hon. member say that a treaty which involved obligations and no conceivable source of revenue was other than a fiasco, a sell-out, and so on?

Mr. Brewin: I will say this to the hon. member, Mr. Speaker, that the points to which he objected have not been in any way changed by the protocol.

Mr. Davis: And the sale.

Mr. Brewin: The only difference in relation to the sale is that instead of getting power we are getting cash; but the basic objections the hon. member had—and I think they were good objections—have not been altered by the protocol at all. I say that even though his words were used in different circumstances, they are absolutely applicable today. We accept them and we ask this house to reject a treaty which has been described by one whom I think is the best qualified member on the Liberal side of the house to deal with this matter as a sell-out and a fiasco. In addition to that, Mr. Speaker, this treaty is one that should be renegotiated.

I just wish to conclude by moving, seconded by the hon. member for Kootenay West (Mr. Herridge), the following amendment:

> That the resolution before the house be amended by adding thereto the following words:

acre feet annually from the Columbia river for the beneficial use of the prairie regions and for multiple-purpose use of water so diverted".

I would say in conclusion, Mr. Speaker, that this amendment will clarify the right of diversion which the minister says already exists but which is of very serious concern to many Canadian citizens.

Mr. Turner: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I want to take the position that the amendment is out of order and should not be accepted by Your Honour, and I have two main arguments in support of this contention. The first is a constitutional one which, before I go into it further, might be summarized as follows, that the treaty making or treaty negotiating function is an executive act, that it is a prerogative of the crown going back to the very early days of British parliamentary democracy and is now exercised by Her Majesty's government both in the United Kingdom and in Canada; that to suggest an amendment to a treaty or protocol or to suggest a further protocol or exchange of letters, as my hon. friend suggests in his amendment, is not within the competence of parliament; that parliament's rights in respect of the treaty making function are limited to the general matter of confidence, that is to say, either rejection or approval of the resolution, and that any such amendment is an infringement of the executive power as recognized under British parliamentary traditions.

My second argument is a procedural one based on what I submit to you is parliamentary practice. It is that the amendment of such a resolution in the form introduced by the hon. member for Greenwood is in effect a negativing of the resolution, the resolution being simply one calling for either approval or rejection, and that any conditions attached to it would in effect negative it. Since under the rules of the house it is not admissible to introduce an amendment which negatives the main resolution I submit that Your Honour should not admit it.

I should like to expand on these arguments and quote my authorities. I said that the treaty making or treaty negotiating power is an executive act and that in Canada the power to negotiate and conclude treaties having to do with acts of an international character is a part of the executive prerogative which in Canada is exercised on the advice of the Secretary of State foı External Affairs.

[Mr. Brewin.]

As the negotiation and conclusion of treaties is an executive act there was, strictly speaking, no legal obligation upon the government to consult parliament because legislative approval is not constitutionally a part of the ratifying process. Nevertheless it has been the practice of Canadian governments for many years to ensure that all treaties, other than minor administrative arrangements, are brought to the attention of parliament in one way or another. This has generally been done by tabling the treaty and, in the case of particularly significant agreements, referring the treaty to the standing committee on external affairs. After approval of the standing committee on external affairs, if this is forthcoming, the committee report is tabled in the House of Commons as has been done in this case, and then a joint resolution of the house and the other place such as the one before us is moved by the responsible minister asking for approval of the treaty.

I might say that since the standing committee on external affairs was set up in 1945 only nine treaties have come before this house, of which eight were approved and one was withdrawn by the government. In no case, to the best of my knowledge, was there any amendment to the resolution calling for approval of ratification, and therefore no such amendment was accepted.

My authority for saying that the treaty making process is purely an executive act may be found in a book by Professor Hendry, professor of law at Dalhousie university, entitled, "Treaties and Federal Constitutions", published in 1955. On page 62 Professor Hendry states the position clearly in these words:

In Canada, the executive power in the central government in foreign affairs is indefinite.

At page 74 he says:

Legally, the capacity of the executives of the states of Canada and Australia is unrestrained except by the limits of the prerogatives, the doctrine of "acts of state" and their constitutions. In neither state is there any rule of law or convention which requires the executive to seek prior approval from any organ of government before initiating negotiations, signing, and ratifying treaties.

McNair in his classic, "The Law of Treaties", says at page 68:

Our constitution is the net result of the operation of the common law, of a number of important statutes, and of a large and still growing body of constitutional usages or 'conventions' (not in the treaty sense), as they are usually called. The organ in which, constitutionally, the treaty making power resides is the crown, that is, Her Majesty, acting upon the advice of her ministers. It is the crown which in virtue of the royal prerogative issues full powers for the negotiation and signature of treaties and ultimately ratifies them when ratification is necessary, or grants the necessary authority for the negotiation and conclusion of the less formal types of international agreements. As we have already seen, the monarch, being a constitutional monarch, for more than two centuries has possessed no power, except upon the advice of his ministers, to bind his country by treaty.

Then on page 115 of the same treatise he says:

Generally speaking, the law and custom of treaty making which have prevailed in the United Kingdom for many years—

I might interject that this law and custom have been accepted and appropriated by Canada.

—have now been adopted by the other commonwealth countries; their constitutions for the most part mention treaties either barely or not at all; and upon such questions as when the approval of parliament or new legislation is required, or when a treaty should be ratified, for the most part they share the views of the United Kingdom.

In other words, Mr. Speaker, in citing United Kingdom precedents I submit I am on good ground. I should like to refer to a Canadian book, the fourth edition of R. MacGregor Dawson's, "The Government of Canada". At page 102 the late MacGregor Dawson has this to say:

There has been no uncertainty regarding the powers of the dominion and the provinces so far as the negotiation of treaties with foreign countries is concerned. This was originally the function of the crown acting through the British government, and with the growth of dominion self-government it has gradually come under the control of the government of Canada.

At pages 221 and 222 Dawson had the following to say:

Finally, the cabinet performs collectively a wide variety of explicit executive acts, usually in the name of the governor in council and on the immediate initiative of the prime minister. A number of the more important of these acts are listed below:

The fourth on the list is the following:

The participation in international affairs by the appointment of plenipotentiaries, the issuing of instructions to those plenipotentiaries, the ratification of international agreements and treaties, etc. Parliament may be consulted and even asked to approve international agreements and treaties, but this is largely a matter of convenience and political strategy; the actual ratification is purely an executive act.

Some agreements and treaties (such as a commercial treaty to alter the tariff) will, of course, need later legislative action to carry their terms into effect.

My first argument, in summary, is that by suggesting an amendment to the resolution, by making ratification subject to the negotiation of a further protocol or a further exchange of letters clarifying what the hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Brewin) considers to be the lack of clarification about the right of diversion, which we on this side do not accept, the hon. member is in effect moving an amendment which is, in my view, an invasion of the traditional parliamentary prerogatives of the government under our British parliamentary system. It is, therefore, out of order.

Mr. Knowles: Will the hon. member permit a question? If such a move is an invasion of the prerogatives of the executive, is it not an invasion of the prerogatives of the executive to discuss it at all even on a motion in the name of the government? Why is it before us?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Because that was the commitment of the government.

Mr. Turner: May I say that the fact the treaty and protocol are before parliament has been a waiver, to that particular extent, of the prerogative to which the government, in terms of practice and convenience, is entitled. The waiver of that prerogative for the purpose of submitting the protocol in this form does not, in any way, waive the prerogative of the government in negotiating treaties.

In addition, as the minister has suggested, there was a commitment of the government so to do. In answer to the hon. member's specific question, although the prerogative was waived so as to present the treaty to the scrutiny of parliament and a standing committee, that waiver does not go beyond the submission of that treaty or protocol.

Mr. Douglas: It is just window dressing.

Mr. Turner: This is my argument on the first of the two branches of my argument, Mr. Speaker, that is the constitutional position.

The second branch of my argument relates to parliamentary practice. If I may, I should like to refer Your Honour to Beauchesne, citation 202. It is clear, looking at the 12th paragraph of that citation which appears on page 170, that an amendment proposing a direct negative, though it may be covered up by verbiage, is out of order. I suggest that since this resolution calls for approval or rejection, any contamination of the resolution is, in effect, the negativing of the resolution.

I should like to draw attention to paragraph 14 of the citation. I quote:

> An amendment which would produce the same result as if the original motion were simply negatived is out of order.

The effect of the amendment proposed by the hon. member for Greenwood would be to negative the resolution because the resolution calls for either approval or rejection of the treaty. Any contamination of the resolution is a negativing of it.

Then, if I may, I should like to draw Your Honour's attention to paragraph 15 of that same citation. I quote:

> An amendment approving part of a motion and disapproving the remainder is out of order.

I suggest, with respect, this is what the hon. member's amendment is trying to do. It approves the treaty and protocol subject to certain further clarification so, by inference, it approves part of the resolution and disapproves another part. The citation goes on to refer to an incident which occurred in this house on October 20, 1932 when the prime minister at that time moved that the house approve a trade agreement entered into between Canada and the United Kingdom. An amendment was moved that the house welcomed certain terms of the agreement and condemned several features of it. I quote:

> The Speaker ruled it out because (a) the portion of the amendment which approved the agreement was useless as it suggested no change in the main motion, and also, (b), an amendment to disapprove what the main motion approves is nothing but an expanded negative.

This incident occurred in 1932, Mr. Speaker, and I should like to refer to Hansard containing the debate at this time. It is found in volume I of the session of 1932-33 at pages 386 and 387. At that time the trade agreement between Canada and the United Kingdom was before the house and the Hon. J. L. Ralston, who was then the member for Shelburne-Yarmouth, moved an amendment to the resolution which called for ratification of the agreement, but amended it in five ways. Paragraph 4 of the amended resolution was similar in form to the resolution introduced by the hon. member for Greenwood and stated, in effect, that the house was not satisfied with the ratification of the agreement and suggested some additional assurances be sought. Mr. Speaker said:

> Paragraphs 4 and 5 affirm general principles which cannot be moved as amendments to motions of this sort but which could be moved on other occasions.

[Mr. Turner.]

Now, Mr. Speaker, basing myself on these two arguments and also on the fact that before the committee the hon. member had a full hearing of the particular argument which he has introduced in the house this afternoon, I would ask Your Honour to rule the amendment out of order and inadmissible.

Mr. Brewin: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. The contention put forward by the hon. member would have the effect of seriously limiting the sovereignty of this parliament. What he says is true, that the executive has initially the treaty making power, but in accordance with the very salutary observation of the former prime minister Mackenzie King, governments of the day have not exercised that prerogative and have seen fit to submit to parliament for ratification or approval the treaties that the executive can make. I concur in the view that they are not bound to do so. However, once they have done so, there is no limitation upon the power of parliament to deal with the matters submitted to it. It can accept them, reject them or attach whatever terms it likes. To argue in any other way makes a mockery of the submission to parliament.

I, for one, contend strenuously against the argument that once a matter is laid before parliament, then parliament's hands are to be tied; we are not even to be allowed to suggest to the government a formula amending the resolution for clarification of the treaty that is being made. I suggest that if the words of a former prime minister of Canada, Mr. Mackenzie King, which I quoted earlier, are to be taken seriously, namely that parliament should have the full right to inquire into these matters, then the arguments my hon. friend made are wrong.

Now, Mr. Speaker, he said that in a number of cases where treaties were introduced into parliament, where approval had been asked for from parliament, there has been no instance of an amendment having been made. The answer to that, then, is that there is no precedent in respect to it and you, Mr. Speaker, are faced with the obligation of deciding this as a new matter; and I urge that you should not make a decision limiting parliament's rights.

The second point is that the amendment negatives the original resolution. I submit there is nothing in that point at all. The amendment accepts the resolution, and it merely adds a proviso which is well within the terms in the acceptance of the original treaty. It is provided for in article XIII of the treaty that there should be no diversion, except those specified, without the consent of the other party, evidenced by an exchange of notes.

All that this amendment asks is that within the terms of the treaty an exchange of notes be sought in order that the particular problem of diversion—one of very grave importance to many hundreds of thousands of Canadians —be clarified within the terms of the treaty as they stand. There is no negative; there is no rejection of the treaty, and I suggest that the very learned authorities which my hon. friend has given to you, Mr. Speaker, while interesting have no relevance to the particular problem that faces us here.

We have a new situation—a treaty submitted for the approval of this house; and if consistent with that treaty we as a parliament are not allowed to suggest an amendment which would clarify and develop something within the treaty, then we might as well not bother with the formality of submitting treaties to parliament at all.

Mr. Baldwin: On the point of order, Mr. Speaker, I am reluctant to go all the way with the parliamentary secretary on the first point he raised as to the powers of the executive. He and I have already parted company in that connection during a debate in the house with regard to the federal government as opposed to the federal parliament on the Eskimo issue.

Again I am driven back to section 12 of the British North America Act which defines what are the powers of the executive. I shall just give the gist of it. It simply says that the powers of the governor in council of Canada shall be equivalent to those of the lieutenant governors in council or of the parliament of the United Kingdom as of the time of the enactment of the British North America Act in 1867, and the section ends up by saying that it shall apply until "abolished or altered by the parliament of Canada".

So, to find out what are the limitations of the powers of the executive we are compelled to look at the situation which existed in the respective legislatures of the provinces which formed confederation, and of the parliament of Canada, and I would be reluctant at this time to agree wholeheartedly with the parliamentary secretary on that particular point.

However, I think he is on much sounder ground on the second point he raised with regard to the practical difficulty facing the hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Brewin) in moving an amendment. The citation referred to by the parliamentary secretary is quite correct. In effect it says that in a resolution of this kind any attempt to amend, by introducing a suggestion of what is included in the original resolution, is quite wrong, because you secure that effect by voting for it. Any attempt to alter, change, modify or in any way divert from the original resolution is wrong because you are in effect attempting to negative that part of it, and you achieve that effect by voting against the resolution. This is one of the very unfortunate difficulties for anyone proposing to move an amendment to a resolution of this type, and it may well be that in considering our procedural problems we may have to give some consideration to this.

I sympathize with the hon. member for Greenwood who said if what the parliamentary secretary says is correct we are in a dilemma in this house because we have no means, no method, of trying to arrive at amendments of this kind. However, this is not the point now. Your Honour is faced with the established rules and practices of the house, and I submit that the argument made by the parliamentary secretary is quite correct. May I just add to that one or two citations on the second point. This is from Beauchesne's Parliamentary Rules and Forms, third edition, as I have not got the current one. On page 580 the head note reads:

> On the motion that an address be presented to the King for amendments to the British North America Act, it is out of order to propose amendments dealing with other matters than those mentioned in the address.

I think this is generally along the same point. The amendment here states:

> Subject to the negotiation of a further protocol or an exchange of letters clarifying the right of Canada to divert up to 6,000 c.f.s. or 5 million acre feet annually from the Columbia river for the beneficial use of the prairie regions and for multiple-purpose use of water so diverted.

Apart from the merits of this, which may serve a very excellent purpose, my submission, from what I have read and examined in the treaty and protocol and the documents which follow it, is that this would achieve an effect distinct from the effect the protocol provides, and as such it is proposing something completely distinct. I submit that the only resource which the hon. member has is to vote against the treaty. It may be unfortunate that that is all he can do, but under our rules as they now exist this is the situation, and to that extent I support the position taken by the parliamentary secretary.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Brewin) has already stated that you are faced with a ruling on a new situation, for if the hon. member for St. Lawrence-St. George (Mr. Turner) is correct, that on no previous occasion of this kind has any amendment been offered, then this is the first time the Chair will have had to rule on this point.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): In this debate.

Mr. Knowles: According to the parliamentary secretary this will be the first time in Canadian history.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): No, no.

Mr. Knowles: The Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Martin) shakes his head and says no, but if he knows of an occasion when a resolution to ratify a treaty was subjected to an amendment he should so inform the hon. member for St. Lawrence-St. George.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): On four different occasions.

Mr. Turner: On the point of order, I would draw to the attention of the house that an attempt was made to amend the agreement between the United Kingdom and Canada in 1932, and the Speaker rejected the amendment.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): There were three other occasions before that.

Mr. Knowles: The parliamentary secretary said this was the first time in the history of the country, in the case of a treaty.

Mr. Turner: The first time since 1945, when the standing committee on external affairs had been set up.

Mr. Knowles: All right, that creates a new situation for Mr. Speaker. The parliamentary secretary to the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources says that the full power to make and ratify treaties rests with the executive and that the executive does not need to bring the matter before parliament. He quoted MacGregor Dawson on this point, and apparently he quoted with approval Dawson's suggestion that this is sometimes done for convenience and political strategy. I suppose it is under that heading that this has been done.

[Mr. Baldwin.]

Mr. Martin (Essex East): No.

Mr. Knowles: At any rate the hon. member for St. Lawrence-St. George rests his case on the proposition that the executive did not need to bring this matter before parliament.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): In law.

Mr. Knowles: Then he said that the executive had waived its prerogative, that it had waived its right to do it on its own. I submit that either the executive should have done this entirely on its own without bringing the matter before parliament at all or, if the question were brought before parliament, parliament should be allowed to decide whether or not it has the right to express an opinion. This, it seems to me, is the point with which Your Honour has to deal. It is not for you to accept the word of a parliamentary secretary as to how far the government is prepared to waive its rights. Let parliament express an opinion. The government says parliament may say yes or no. But the matter is before parliament and surely it is in our hands to decide how far parliament may express an opinion.

I have a copy of Beauchesne here and I am interested in what is said on page 232. This is the second paragraph of citation 284, and it reads as follows:

> When a treaty, which does not involve fiscal changes or the expenditure of public moneys,—

And, presumably, this would include the present one because we have had no motion involving the expenditure of public moneys placed before us.

> —has to be approved by parliament, a bill to that effect must be passed—

If this is a treaty to be brought before parliament, then obviously we need a bill, not just a resolution. However, the citation goes on:

> —as parliament can only express its opinion by the joint consent of its three constituent parts, namely the crown, the Senate and the House of Commons; but the adoption of a resolution is not required before introduction of that bill.

That last phrase is obviously precautionary, since the bill in this case refers to a treaty not involving the expenditure of public money. The quotation continues:

> Notice is given under standing order 41 and the bill goes through its ordinary stages. On the second reading a member may move either the six months hoist or an amendment declaratory of some principle adverse to, or differing from the policy of the bill or expressing any opinion as to the circumstances connected with the conclusion of the treaty. The main debate on the treaty should take place on this motion for the second reading of the bill. As to the other stages of the measure, procedure follows its ordinary course.

I recognize that we do not have a bill before us; we have only a resolution.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Oh.

Mr. Knowles: The secretary of state says "Oh". Why does he not stand up and say what he has to say so as to get it on the record a little better?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): This is an absurd argument.

Mr. Knowles: Despite the discomfort which the Secretary of State for External Affairs is suffering, may I point out that in this paragraph which refers to the bringing before parliament of a treaty there is a reference to ways in which parliament may express its opinion and, further, the suggestion is made in this paragraph of Beauchesne that when a treaty is brought before parliament in the form of a bill members have the right to move amendments on second reading so as to express opinions on the action connected with the adoption of that treaty.

Surely, this same right should apply if this is being done in the present foreshortened way? What we have before us now is not a bill. If the Secretary of State for External Affairs will possess his soul in patience he will see I am not pressing that we should have a bill. But I am saying that the rights which we would have if the government had brought in a bill, the right to put forward amendments expressing an opinion, should surely not be taken from us as a result of this device of bringing in a simple resolution.

Mr. Herridge: That is why this was done.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): You are hurting the argument of the hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Brewin).

Mr. Knowles: Does the hon. member for Greenwood feel that way? No, he does not.

Surely, if there is any point at all in bringing this measure before parliament, parliament should be able to express its opinion. I do not know exactly what would happen if we were to turn down the resolution in the light of the statement made by the hon. member for St. Lawrence-St. George (Mr. Turner). He says the executive has full power. Well, the resolution reads:

That it is expedient that the houses of parliament do approve the ratification of the treaty—

And so on. Suppose we do not. If the executive has this power it could, surely, go ahead and ratify this treaty anyway. So the whole course, according to the author quoted by the hon. member for St. Lawrence-St. George, is being carried out for the convenience of political strategy—unless, of course, we are to be allowed to express our opinions.

It seems, therefore, that Your Honour should look at this point of order in the light of what is assumed to be the purpose of bringing this measure before parliament, namely to give an opportunity for parliament to express its opinion. The opinion which parliament expresses might be yes, or it might be no, or it might be "yes, subject to the government doing certain things". I submit that this is a legitimate opinion for parliament to express and that it has the right to do so, a right which should not be eliminated simply because the hon. member for St. Lawrence-St. George says the government will waive its rights, but waive them only so far.

Mr. Turner: Perhaps if I might reply briefly—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member has already spoken and I am afraid he cannot speak again at this point.

Mr. Knowles: Perhaps he could ask me a question before I sit down.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Yes; perhaps he could put his contribution in the form of a question to the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre.

Mr. Turner: Thank you. I should like to ask the hon. member whether he does not think importance attaches to the first paragraph of the citation from Beauchesne to which he referred—the paragraph which begins:

When it is required, either by statute or by the terms of a trade agreement, that the agreement be approved by parliament—

This is what leads to the necessity for a bill—where the measure falls within those terms because the bill involves a statutory duty on the part of the government, or a fiscal change arising from an imbalance of ways and means. I ask the hon. member whether his argument is not altered accordingly? When a bill is presented which involves an imbalance of ways and means it would be subject to all the openings for amendment which are possible with regard to a bill of that type, whereas in this particular case we have a simple resolution before us.

Mr. Knowles: There were two reasons why I read only the second paragraph of citation 284 rather than the whole of it. The first is that the citation is very lengthy, and the other is that the first paragraph had to do with trade agreements, while the second had to do with treaties. What is before us is not a trade agreement, or at least I do not think it is. Maybe it is. What is before us now is a treaty, and it seems to me that while paragraph 1 does not apply, paragraph 2 of the citation does apply. However, as I pointed out, I was not arguing that we should have a bill. I was pressing, though, that we should have in a resolution the same right as is accorded in the case of a bill, namely, the right to express the opinion of parliament, whatever that opinion might be.

Mr. Gelber: It seems to me that the rights of parliament—

Some hon. Members: Five o'clock.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Does the house wish to call it five o'clock?

Some hon. Members: Yes.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Or do hon. members prefer to hear a ruling?

Mr. Scott: I have some remarks to make on this point. I would prefer that you call it five o'clock.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being five o'clock, the house will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper.

PRIVATE BILL

CONSIDERED IN COMMITTEE—THIRD READING

Bill S-11, to incorporate Canadian Conference of the Brethren in Christ Church—Mr. Greene.

MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

MODELS FOR CANADIAN FLAG

The house resumed, from Thursday, May 28, consideration of the motion of Mr. Smallwood:

That an order of the house do issue for the production of all flag designs or models which have been received by the Prime Minister, members of the cabinet or the government, as models for a Canadian flag.

[Mr. Turner.]

Mr. J. B. Stewart (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, this motion is one in which I know the hon. member for Battle River-Camrose (Mr. Smallwood) is deeply and intensely interested. I think we ought to explore the implications of the motion rather fully before we take a vote on it. The argument on which he based his motion was that it would be desirable to empanel a committee of the house, made up of the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson), the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Diefenbaker) and several members from both sides of the house, that these gentlemen would screen the designs or models submitted, and then take a few of the designs or models submitted to a federal-provincial conference. I do not wish to attempt to negate that particular argument in favour of passing this motion. The truth of the matter is that a great number of designs and models have been submitted. Many of these are obviously the result of a great deal of interest in the question of a new Canadian flag. One has only to inspect some of these designs and models to see what loving care has been lavished on this particular project which is so dear to so many loyal Canadians both in this house and throughout the land. Many of our citizens are keenly concerned with the establishment of a Canadian flag, as the large number of designs shows. The models are elaborate in many instances, and they appear on all kinds of fabric. They appear on paper, on bunting, on nylon, and, as the Minister of Justice (Mr. Favreau) told us last week, even on plywood.

It is true that a committee of this house has not examined all those designs and models, but no one should think that the keen interest displayed by these patriotic Canadians has not contributed greatly to the development of the discussion on a new flag to the point which that discussion has now reached. These artists have been interested in a new flag, and they have displayed their interest in a most tangible and useful way. I think we are all deeply in their debt.

Last Thursday, when arguing against the adoption of this motion, the Minister of Justice was particularly concerned with one of the two possibilities raised by this motion, namely that copies or reproductions of these designs and models should be made.

Mr. Churchill: Why?

Mr. Stewart: I am asked by the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. Churchill) why the minister should be concerned with this possibility. Well, Mr. Speaker, this possibility was raised by the hon. gentleman who sponsored this motion. It was raised as one of the ways in which the object of this motion could be satisfied. As reported in the middle of page 3697, interpreting his own motion—and I assume he is the one most eligible to interpret it—he said:

> Possibly it would be difficult to make copies of all of them and table them—

In other words, he is admitting that that is a possibility.

> —but I would suggest that the originals be tabled.

Therefore we have two ways of interpreting this motion, and the Minister of Justice was dealing with one of them, namely that they should be reproduced.

The minister argued that this would not be desirable, and I think that the sum of his rather elaborate argument—not being a lawyer I do not pretend to understand it all —is to be found at page 3703 of Hansard, where he is reported as saying:

> In other words, it is clear that if I, in the first place, were to create a work of art or make a design and if I submitted it as a suggestion, as long as I do not waive my copyright, as long as I do not grant permission to issue that design, I keep my copyright. It is not to be published. I am the only one entitled to decide whether or not the said design will be published or issued.

I think that was the sum of the argument made by the Minister of Justice a week ago. It was an argument against the reproduction of these models and designs.

Still on that same possible interpretation, I want to suggest to the house, when the house is considering the possibility of passing this motion, that great cost would be involved. I have inquired into this matter, and I am informed by the national film board, which proved to be the agency most suitable to undertake this kind of reproduction, that a rough estimate of the cost of reproducing approximately 3,000 flag designs in their original colours would amount to $45,870. The rough breakdown of the cost is as follows. There would be photographing with a 4 x 5 negative at a cost of $12,000. There would be proofs costing $3,450. There would be prints at $10 each, totalling $30,000. Then there would be the charges for a photographer at $60 a day for seven days, which would amount to $420.

Mr. Clancy: What are you selling—shares in a new company? Get on with the business. We don't want the cost.

Mr. Stewart: The hon. gentleman says he is not interested in the costs, but I am sure many hon. members of the house are.

Mr. Clancy: I asked, are you selling shares?

Mr. Stewart: An alternative procedure for reproduction would be to have the flags reproduced on slides. This would reduce the cost to approximately $18,000; but of course, if eventually actual prints from these slides were desired, the cost would mount again to something like the figure I mentioned previously. Consequently, I do not think that any hon. member, on consideration, would wish to propose this extensive expenditure in order to reproduce these models and designs.

I come now to the second possibility, which is that the originals be brought here in response to the motion now before the house. This would be a cumbersome process perhaps, but it would be physically possible. We could bring in the bales of designs and models. We could even bring in the plywood model.

But there would be, as I am sure you realize, Mr. Speaker, a great difficulty, which is a procedural one. Many of the authors who own these designs have requested that these designs be returned to them.

Mr. Clancy: Hear, hear.

Mr. Stewart: At page 180 of Beauchesne's fourth edition we find the following words:

> The custody of all papers and files is entrusted to the Clerk of the House and it is "at his peril" if he suffers any of them to be taken away without leave of the house. As the number of reports and returns laid on the table is too large for the Clerk to handle, a special branch was set up for that purpose in 1929. It keeps a register of all papers tabled and records the names of the members of parliament who may take them out. The general public may consult these papers in the presence of these clerks. Every member who takes out a report or return must sign the register. There are on the ground floor of the parliament building three large vaults with iron doors and combination locks for the safe-keeping of these papers. Once a document has been placed on the table and recorded in the Journals, it becomes the property of the house.

It is true, sir, that some of these designs and models do not appear on paper, but since this is a motion for the production of papers we are regarding these models and designs as being governed by the rules that would apply in the case of normal papers. As the citation to which I have just referred says:

> Once a document has been placed on the table and recorded in the Journals, it becomes the property of the house.

If these models and designs were produced as the result of the passage of this particular motion, they would undoubtedly become the property of this house, and would be in the unchallengeable possession of this house. In what position, then, would the Secretary of State be? The Secretary of State has been requested by many of the authors, who have been thoughtful enough to create these designs and models and transmit them to him, to return those designs and models; but if this motion passes the Secretary of State will not have those designs and models under his control—they will have passed into the control of this house. Obviously, sir, this would contravene the request of the authors who own the designs and models. This is the procedural difficulty against the production of the originals in this house.

Realizing the keen, intense interest of the hon. member for Battle River-Camrose (Mr. Smallwood) in seeing these designs and models, I have a suggestion. I suggest to him through you, Mr. Speaker, that the Secretary of State will be very pleased to display these models and designs to him in any number that he wishes to see. I expect he will wish to make a fairly close analysis of the nature of these designs and models. When this question of a new flag was before the house in 1945-46 some 2,695 models and designs were then considered. Since 1946 and up to May 15, 1964, 3,013 models and designs have come in. I ought to say that others have come in since the middle of May. There have been, since the middle of May, many displaying three maple leaves in various artistic arrangements. I think the hon. member for Battle River-Camrose, if he examined these 3,013 models and designs, would report that of these 359 bear the design of the fleur-de-lis, 408 bear in some point a union jack, and 389 display a beaver. There are some displaying various coats of arms, and 2,136 display a maple leaf design.

Mr. Winkler: Single, double or triple?

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Speaker, may I ask the hon. member a question?

Mr. Stewart: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Churchill: Has the hon. member himself examined these designs, to give us the information that 2,136 display the maple leaf, or from where did he get that information? Also, is it the maple leaf only that is on these designs?

[Mr. Stewart.]

Mr. Stewart: I cannot say, Mr. Speaker, that I myself tabulated the number of flags displaying the maple leaf design.

Mr. Churchill: Would the hon. member permit a supplementary question?

Mr. Stewart: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Churchill: Is the hon. member aware that the committee, which met in 1945 and 1946 and examined the 2,695 flags that he mentioned, reported that over 50 per cent of them had the union jack displayed on the flag in some place or other?

Mr. Stewart: I was not aware of that fact, Mr. Speaker. Obviously there has been a considerable change of opinion in certain sections of the country. I have one further point to make, and that is that anyone who accepts the invitation, which is cordially offered, to inspect this large number of excellent designs will be deeply impressed by the keen interest of many of our loyal Canadians in this matter of a new and distinctive Canadian flag. I am sure that even the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. Churchill) would realize the keen interest of these people in this important matter, and would wish to joint all hon. members in applauding the zeal with which these good citizens have devoted their time and energies to this most important subject.

Mr. Eric A. Winkler (Grey-Bruce): Mr. Speaker, I would like to take up a few minutes of the time of the house in contributing to this debate and supporting the request as contained in the notice of motion for the production of papers. You will note, Mr. Speaker, as will all hon. members, that the motion calls for an order of the house for the production of all flag designs or models. I believe that my colleague did not have in mind the reproduction of any of these symbols, but rather the originals. The hon. member for Antigonish-Guysborough (Mr. Stewart) suggested that it was an extremely costly procedure, involving some $45,870. I suggest to him through you, sir, that the government did not hesitate to spend $35,000 in pushing aside a film made by the C.B.C. about the Prime Minister, and therefore surely this small, additional sum of money for the information of the entire country could be spent, if need be. However, that is not the case. The hon. member, I know, asked for the production of the originals, and therefore I think this is what we must demand from the government at this time.

The parliamentary secretary suggested that it would be a cumbersome and difficult procedure to produce all these originals. Let me tell you, Mr. Speaker, that the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) also finds himself in a rather cumbersome position today in regard to his stand and because of the fact that his design was, very properly and technically, leaked at the right time. Perhaps now we could have a little leakage in regard to these 3,013 designs that are now on record. I say this because of the way the whole issue is taking shape in the country. Of course, the government side would have us believe public opinion is all their way. Perhaps we, too, believe that the whole country is seeing it our way. But for goodness sake, surely the country has the right to see all these designs, as well as the Prime Minister's design. Is the Prime Minister above the rest of the citizens of Canada in producing a design? I suggest that with the production of this number of designs—they could be displayed in the railway committee room, room 200, or some other suitable place—something of aesthetic value would result that would be more pleasing even to those on the government side of the chamber. Although the government is a little blinded right now by their own imposition of this design, I think they would see the light of day and would have a change of heart in regard to this question. As a matter of fact, I think they are having a change of heart right now. However, Mr. Speaker, I think the entire matter could be settled to the satisfaction of the house and the country if these designs were placed at our disposal, so we might look at what Canadians have seen fit to produce.

The hon. member for Antigonish-Guysborough went to great lengths in dealing with this matter. He mentioned the zeal and the great effort that was put into the production of these designs. This is all the more reason why we should see them. Canadians are very, very jealous of their position as citizens of this country, and therefore I do not think any of their suggestions should be cast aside for something that the Prime Minister in particular wants to present, together with a few of his cabinet colleagues. It is a difficult thing for a member of the opposition to rise and make a very pointed, critical argument about something we might have forced upon us because that might eventually become our national symbol.

I will tell you that the production of these designs is equally important to this country in that, within them, may lie the solution to problems that exist between the two founding nations, solutions of which the Prime Miinster (Mr. Pearson) has never thought. This argument applies to many other items of legislation that have been introduced into the house. The Prime Minister brings in his own ideas and then defers to somebody else. I will tell you that I believe somewhere in this group of 3,000 designs we may find something that may lend itself to the solution of the problems that are before us. I suggest to you, Mr. Speaker, that all of these people who submitted designs did so as a result of great feeling within their hearts. I do not suggest the Prime Minister did not have the same sort of feeling; but these people did not hire designers to do the job, although some of them may be designers, nor did they have consultants to say that this will suit this situation or that will suit that situation. They did it themselves.

I believe that this is all the more reason for the government considering the passage of this motion and producing the designs in their original form. We are not asking for anything that would be illegal. It has been made very clear that simply because these designs are copyrighted, they are not secret. I think the government should avail themselves of the opportunity of producing these designs and allowing the members of the house, the members of the press gallery and the people of this country to have an opportunity of seeing them, and thus perhaps solving the problem that faces us today.

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, this motion is of great importance to the house and to the nation. It is quite obvious the government had something to hide or conceal or they would have immediately agreed to the passage of this motion when it was presented two or three weeks ago. What is wrong with having a public display of the designs for a national flag which are in the possession of the government? There is nothing wrong with it at all. However, the government will not let the people of Canada see these designs. We have to be satisfied with the one selected by the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson). This is a form of dictatorship to which we are not going to submit in this country.

The design submitted by the Prime Minister, which has been leaked in advance, and so on, was knocked together over a period of nine days by a few people. Some of the other designs that are in the possession of the government, and therefore in the possession of parliament, are the result of much greater care than that. Anyone who will take the time to read the committee report for 1945-46 will find out that a great deal of care and attention was put on the various designs that were submitted to that committee. Some of them, of course, were carelessly done, but others were done with a great deal of care and attention.

The hon. member for Antigonish-Guysborough (Mr. Stewart) has told us that there were 2,695 of these designs put on display in the railway committee room. They were seen by the members of the House of Commons at that time. They were examined, checked and voted upon until they finally eliminated all but two. There was a final vote and they made a choice of one. Surely, when this issue has been raised again in this country we should have a look at the designs that were produced in that period, in 1945-46.

What is the government attempting to hide? I suggest they are concealing from the people of this country designs that are superior to the one that was concocted just a little while ago and selected by the Prime Minister. I think there was faulty advice from the so-called experts in heraldry.

Mr. Bell: The hon. member for Leeds (Mr. Matheson), for example.

Mr. Churchill: The hon. member for Leeds, for example, who was written up as the parliamentary expert on heraldry. I am glad he knows a little bit about that. A very distinguished person, a man who has made a study of heraldry, has indicated that the present design is faulty. Mr. Beddoe, who is responsible for part of the design—he was not responsible for the blue border—misread or misinterpreted the proclamation setting out the coat of arms for Canada. So, you have experts in the field disagreeing. An attempt is being made, which I prophesy will fail, to foist upon the Canadian people a spurious flag improperly designed and based on a false interpretation of the proclamation determining the coat of arms of this country. If you can select from the coat of arms a sprig containing three maple leaves and say this will constitute Canada's flag, why can you not similarly and with equal reason select other designs from that coat of arms and make them into flags? It is just nonsensical reasoning that any portion of the coat of arms is automatically the design for a Canadian flag.

This is what we are being subjected to by this autocratic government. I regret very much that the hon. member for Antigonish-Guysborough should have endeavoured to leave the impression in the minds of members and of the public that of the over 3,000 flag designs submitted, two thirds of them showed the maple leaf. He would not go further until I asked him a question and discovered his ignorance of the committee report for 1945-46, and say that over 50 per cent of the designs submitted contained somewhere on the flag the union jack. When he mentioned that two thirds of them contained the maple leaf he should have said in conjunction with the union jack, and that would have been a clear statement of fact.

Mr. Stewart: I rise on a point of privilege, Mr. Speaker. I think the hon. member has misunderstood what I said. I was giving a breakdown, not of the designs submitted in 1945-46, but rather a breakdown of the designs submitted between 1946 and 1964. I am certain the hon. member did not understand.

Mr. Churchill: I do not want to misunderstand the hon. member. I thought he gave us the official figure and there were over 3,000 designs for flags in the possession of the government. Is he now telling us these have all come in since 1946?

Mr. Stewart: No, if the hon. member had bothered to listen he would have known precisely what I said.

Mr. Churchill: I was listening very carefully to the hon. member. Let us be quite fair about this thing. Am I right in assuming, and are hon. members of this house right in assuming that, including the designs submitted in 1945-46, there are now in possession of the government over 3,000 designs for a national flag; is that right?

Mr. Stewart: There are more than 3,000. If you include those two groups, those that came in between 1945 and 1946 and between 1946 and 1964; you would have a total of over 5,000.

Mr. Churchill: Well, now he has raised it to over 5,000.

Mr. Stewart: I have not raised it at all. If the hon. member had listened or if tonight he will read the record, he will find precisely what I said.

Mr. Churchill: We have got the figure up to 5,000 now. This is all the more reason why we should see these flags. Let us see the ones that were produced in 1945-46 and that were on display in the railway committee room.

Mr. Stewart: May I ask the hon. member a question? Does he know what happened to the flags submitted in 1945-46, concerning which he pretends to know so much?

Mr. Churchill: We have put a motion on the order paper for the production of these flags.

An hon. Member: Answer the question.

Mr. Churchill: Have they been destroyed? I do not know where they are. I do not know why the government is concealing them. Why are they concealing the choice in 1946? Why are they concealing this?

Mr. Stewart: Mr. Speaker, I want to know if the hon. gentleman is telling us he does not know that this house passed a resolution authorizing the return of those designs that came in during the period 1945-46?

Mr. Churchill: Well now, we are actually getting bits and pieces of information from the government. You have to drag it out of them. They won't come clean with anything. There is evasiveness, concealment and a lack of answers to questions. Now he tells us all these designs have been returned, so we have not 5,000 in the possession of the government. A minute ago he said that all those in before 1945-46 were returned, and they have only those that came in subsequently. Well, let us have a reproduction.

An hon. Member: Let us have a referendum on that reproduction. That will fix everything.

Mr. Churchill: These hon. gentlemen opposite are making just as much fun of the flag issue as the Prime Minister made of the threat to the lives of women and children this afternoon. Let us have a reproduction of the flag design that was chosen by the committee in 1946. That flag design had the union jack in the upper left hand corner, the red fly, and instead of the shield of the coat of arms it had a maple leaf with a white border around the leaf.

That committee sat for a great many weeks and looked at between 2,000 and 3,000 flag designs. It reduced the number of flag designs, first to 76, and then on down until it had six, then five, and right down to two, and after the most careful examination recommended the adoption of a flag similar to the present red ensign with a change in the shield. Why is this flag not produced so that we may have a comparison with the present flag, which has been flying in Canada for almost 100 years, and with this monstrosity which the Prime Minister has selected and blackmailed his party into accepting, and is trying to blackmail the people of Canada into accepting?

It may well be that the flag selected by the committee in 1946 would be a satisfactory flag under present circumstances. All the people who want the maple leaf on the flag have it in that flag, and those who want a little more white on the flag have it in the flag selected by the committee in 1946. Why cannot we see it? Oh no, you ask them to produce something and the Minister of Justice gives a legal argument, goes away back for a reference to 1884, and then says anything that has lasted for that long is sacred. How about the Canadian flag which has been flying in this country for almost 100 years and should have the respect of all Canadians, instead of being discarded in the way the Liberal party is discarding it, throwing it into the dust bin, and at the whim of a Prime Minister who is acting more and more like a dictator?

I am supporting this motion for the production of the flag designs in the possession of the government, for a reproduction of the flag design that was selected by the committee in 1946, and then let us see if we cannot get a solution to this problem. There are a great many people in this country who are greatly concerned over the Canadian flag. There are a great many people in the country who would not oppose a slight modification of the present flag with regard to the coat of arms, and if a suitable design, with the maple leaf there instead of the coat of arms, has been designed it could be produced and might find general acceptance.

But no, this government says to the Canadian people and to this house, take it or leave it. The Prime Minister says, "This is my design. I have flown it for two days up at Harrington lake and I think it is wonderful, and therefore everybody else must think it is wonderful." I say this is the wrong approach to an issue which will divide this country as no other issue has divided it. Here is our very modest request. Let us in on some of these secrets.

The government is dealing with the flag of Canada and it has thousands of designs. Some of them may be better than the one I have mentioned. I do not know, I have not seen them, but why should we not see them? Why should the people of Canada not have a chance to see these flags, or reproductions of them, and make their choice? Then perhaps according to the general attitude that has prevailed in Canada for so many years some compromise might be worked out, and not this frightful atrocity which the Prime Minister like a sawdust Caesar reminding me of Mussolini, is attempting to ram down our throats, trying to force this country to accept his personal choice for a flag.

All we are asking is, let us see the designs of the flags in the possession of the government and give the house a chance to formulate an opinion with regard to this issue. But that is denied by this government that denies so much information to this house and to the Canadian people.

Mr. Stewart: I wonder if the hon. gentleman would permit a question. I wonder if he would tell me if I am correct in assuming that he did not understand me—that would not surprise me—when I suggested to him that he, along with any other hon. members, could come along and inspect these flags which are in the possession of the Secretary of State? There is no objection to this whatsoever. Am I correct in understanding he did not see through what I said?

Mr. Churchill: Well, I understood the hon. member, but he seldom speaks very clearly. Fortunately I was alert enough to understand him. He is suggesting, "Go and call on the Secretary of State and privately he will show you the flags." Why not invite everybody? It would be simpler for the Secretary of State to come over here with his flags than for use to go individually to see them. This is one of the silly suggestions which I thought would not come from an hon. member for whom I had a high regard.

Mr. Stewart: I will drive you over in a car; you won't have to walk.

Mr. Churchill: So little concerned is the government with this issue, so bent is it on forcing this on the Canadian people that the ministers are not even in the house when the question of the production of flags is debated. This is a complete disregard for parliament, reminiscent of the days of 1956, an autocratic, arrogant, Liberal party that wants to destroy parliament.

Well, Mr. Speaker, at least that produced one minister, but it is under compulsion. That is the way we have to drag them in.

Mr. Sharp: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister called me to the telephone. I regret my absence.

Mr. Churchill: Well, it is not abnormal for people to have calls to the telephone when they want to get out of the house, because a debate is going on which they do not like. Because I was criticizing the government the minister did not defer the telephone call, as he might have; but no, he had to rush out. However he has come back under compulsion and we are glad one person is here representing this ineffective government. There is one confused member of the government present, instead of the whole crowd.

An hon. Member: Here they come.

Mr. Churchill: We are glad to see them. To get back to what is really a very serious matter, the production of these designs is desired by this house and I think this would be desired by people generally across Canada. Let us not just discard a flag which we have known and loved, which has been flying in this country for 100 years, and substitute another flag, the personal choice of the Prime Minister, without seeing these other designs on which the hon. member for Antigonish-Guysborough (Mr. Stewart) said people had worked with loving care. Why should we not show our appreciation of their interest by seeing the designs?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Batten): I must interrupt the hon. member and advise him that the time allotted to him has expired.

Mr. D. S. Macdonald (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, surely the speech just concluded has been one of the most foolish we have heard—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Macdonald: One does not expect very much from the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. Churchill) but we can be assured that when a poorer speech is made in this house that hon. member will make it.

Mr. Churchill: I don't want to compete with you.

Mr. Macdonald: It is distressing to hear a long standing member of this house, a privy councillor, a former member of a government—not a very illustrious member, but a former member—get up and suggest to the government that it should break the law, that it should trample on private rights by disclosing designs which have been submitted to the government in confidence.

Mr. Bell: Well, you did in 1946.

Mr. Macdonald: I would point out to my hon. friend that in 1946 the designs which were submitted to the parliamentary committee were submitted subject to the express right of that committee examining them and making them public.

Mr. Bell: Is the hon. member not aware that some other designs were made available to that committee that had no connection with the actual presentation of the committee? Some old designs that were around were also brought forward at that time, in 1946.

Mr. Macdonald: I do not really see that the hon. member's question is relevant. May I point out that the Minister of Justice referred last week to the fact that there was a copyright vested in these designs. May I also point out that there is a further property right arising at common law and in addition to copyright and that there would be ground for action by the individual concerned against the government if these designs were produced without consent in writing from the owners. I might refer to the Canadian law on copyright as discussed by Dr. Fox on page 53 where he points out:

> Copyright, which is statutory, and the right of property in original works at common law, are two quite different rights.

And at page 67 he says:

> It is clear that an author's incorporeal copyright in an unpublished work is something quite separate and distinct from the physical manuscript itself.

And it is further pointed out:

> That the right of an author of an unpublished literary production is not confined to the paper or other material on which the work is written. "His right is an exclusive right to publish or refrain from publishing it, as he may please, and anyone who publishes it without his consent infringes his legal right, and does that which is actionable per se."

As I say, it is shocking to hear a former minister of the crown, a privy councillor, get up in this house and say we should ignore private rights and abolish private property—that the government should forget the law and do what this motion requests. I submit to all hon. members that they should take the opportunity this afternoon of voting this detestable motion down.

Mr. J. J. Greene (Renfrew South): With regard to the address of the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. Churchill) I will only say, at the outset, that I was surprised to hear that the hon. gentleman had declined to attend at the office of the Secretary of State (Mr. Lamontagne) in order to view these flag designs, as he was so cordially invited to do.

I would point out that the Secretary of State now has various aspects of culture in our country in his domain and I can think of no member who could benefit more from rubbing shoulders with just a little culture than the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre. If he does finally accept the cordial invitation extended to him, may I suggest he take with him the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm (Mr. Pigeon) who would also have a great deal to gain from an encounter with a little culture.

Mr. Pigeon: On a question of privilege. In our party we express our opinions and we are not slaves, as they are on the Liberal side.

Mr. Greene: If sitting on this side of the house is slavery and if following the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm is freedom, then thank goodness for slavery. He is free to be foolish.

I was also more than a little surprised to hear the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre use the words "a frightful atrocity" with reference to the proposed flag, a flag which has embodied in it the royal coat of arms for Canada as designated by His Majesty King George V in 1921. I never thought I would see the day when a member of this house would refer to Canada's coat of arms as a frightful atrocity.

Some hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. Churchill: I rise on a question of privilege. I never mentioned the coat of arms as being a frightful atrocity. I said the flag design selected by the Prime Minister was a frightful atrocity. It is only the flag of Guatemala with a superimposition on it.

Mr. Greene: The hon. member is splitting hairs, or splitting the flag, or what have you.

An hon. Member: He has no hairs left to split.

Mr. Greene: Quite correct. If the hon. member were splitting hairs he would not have much to split. Nevertheless, I do suggest it is a most disgraceful exhibition for a former minister of the crown to refer to a flag which is essentially composed of Canada's royal coat of arms, given by royal decree, as being a frightful atrocity. Then, too, when the hon. gentleman referred to this flag as being someone's personal choice he is again denying the fact that the essential component of the design is Canada's royal coat of arms. It seems to me the hon. member is suggesting that the best of all possible worlds could be enjoyed by taking these 3,000 suggested designs all of which, no doubt, are very worthy, and putting them before the house so that people of supreme artistic taste, such as himself, can make a selection from them. Really, I can think of nothing worse which could be foisted upon the country than that this question should be decided in accordance with the artistic abilities of the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre or of his cohort from Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm aiding and abetting him in this supreme artistic endeavour. If it comes to a matter of artistic taste—

Mr. Pigeon: Would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Greene: As I was saying, if it comes to a matter of artistic taste, I would prefer that of the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson).

Mr. Pigeon: Hey.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Greene: Inasmuch as the main component of the flag was selected by His Majesty King George V when he selected the coat of arms, I, for one, would much prefer that a choice be made of this symbol of Canada's history, one which has its roots deep in our past, than that the selection be left to people such as the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre.

I was also a little surprised to hear that the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre was so anxious to have the union jack perpetuated as Canada's royal emblem. I think all of us here have as great a respect for our past and for our heritage as has the hon. member. I think this is certainly evidenced by the fact that the royal emblem of Canada, authorized by royal decree, is an essential part of the suggested flag. But most of us in this house and, we believe, most people in this country, feel the time has now come for the selection of a unique Canadian emblem without reference to our antecedents in the United Kingdom or elsewhere. I wonder if the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre, since he is so anxious to preserve the past exactly as it was, without recognizing the evolution which has taken place, would also like to revoke the Statute of Westminster? I think this would be in keeping with his chain of thought expressed with regard to our emblem. It is possible he feels the colonial office should still operate in control of the affairs of Canada. I hope he will be consistent in his representation to this house. What we are witnessing today is a mere gentle backwater of the flag debate which will shortly be commencing. When that debate opens I hope the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre and his cohort from Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm—

Mr. Pigeon: May I call it six o'clock?

Mr. Greene: Will be consistent and ask that the Statute of Westminster—

Mr. Pigeon: You will vote for two flags. It will be—

Some hon. Members: Sit down.

Mr. Churchill: Afraid to vote.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Batten): Order. The hour appointed for the consideration of private members' business has now expired.

Mr. Knowles: So have we.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Batten): It is my duty, pursuant to provisional standing order 39A, to inform the house that the questions to be raised at ten o'clock p.m. this day are as follows:

The hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm (Mr. Pigeon), legal action respecting the program "Twenty Years Later"; the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Howard), floods in British Columbia and potential dangers on the Skeena river; the hon. member for Quebec West (Mr. Plourde), labour conditions, provision for unemployed to receive unemployment insurance or social assistance.

At six o'clock the house took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The house resumed at 8 p.m.

POWER

COLUMBIA RIVER—APPROVAL OF RATIFICATION OF TREATY

The house resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Martin (Essex East):

That it is expedient that the houses of parliament do approve the ratification of the treaty between Canada and the United States of America relating to co-operative development of the water resources of the Columbia river basin, signed at Washington on January 17, 1961, and the consequent coming into force of the protocol thereto annexed to the exchange of notes signed at Washington on January 22, 1964, and that this house do approve the same.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Does the house wish the Chair to deliver a judgment or opinion at this time?

Mr. Scott: Mr. Speaker, just before you give your judgment I should like to say a few words on the amendment moved by my good friend the hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Brewin). I want to suggest to you that the amendment he has moved has really raised a very fundamental problem for your consideration. In many ways it seems to me that the issue posed by the amendment is of such importance to the rights of parliament that it should not be disposed of without the fullest possible consideration. As has been pointed out, there are not very many precedents on this matter and in many ways you are breaking new ground. In view of this we wish to lay before you our submissions.

Briefly our position is this. We are not quarrelling in any way with the right of the executive to negotiate treaties. This is their right and a responsibility which they exercise. Nor have we quarrelled with the original contention that legally they are not obligated to submit these treaties to parliament for parliament's acceptance, rejection, ratification or consideration. But we do say that once the executive waives that right, once it divests itself of that protection, once it brings before parliament the measure in question, it cannot reserve unto itself some form of qualified acceptance of the rights of parliament.

What the executive is attempting to do here is to bring this matter before parliament for consideration and then attempt to qualify the rights of this parliament to deal with this measure. I say that once they have waived that right they cannot take it back when the measure comes again before the house. Once the executive surrenders to parliament jurisdiction to deal with the matter, parliament then becomes the master and the executive becomes the servant; and it does not lie in its mouth to come into the house and attempt to qualify and to cut down the rights of parliament to deal with this measure. It cannot now start telling parliament that all we can do is to say yes or no; that we can either approve the treaty or not approve the treaty.

Surely parliament has the right to move amendments to show our position on various aspects of the treaty and to test the feelings of the house on the parts of the treaty with which we disagree. Otherwise the whole idea of bringing this treaty and protocol before us is a charade; the whole debate becomes a meaningless exercise if all we are to do is to have a series of speeches, but are given no right to register protests and suggest amendments to the treaty now before us.

It seems to me that what is really involved is an interference with the basic rights of parliament; that the executive is trying to come into parliament and tell us what are our rights, and to qualify those rights and privileges which have grown up through tradition over many years. If we accept the position that all we can do on this treaty is to talk about it and vote yes or no, then I should like to suggest that we are permitting parliament to be muzzled in these proceedings, and as I have said the debate itself becomes a meaningless exercise in debating technique. So I suggest to you that in making your decision you are really deciding the basic right of parliament to deal with this measure once it is brought before us.

I thought the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) made an interesting observation when reading from the rules and procedures of this house. He outlined the fact that in the case of treaties which do not require the expenditure of money—and I presume this treaty falls into this category—the correct procedure might well have been the introduction of a bill. If that procedure had been followed we would have every right to move amendments and to test the feelings of the house on various aspects of the treaty. Because another method was adopted, rightly or wrongly we do not know—

Mr. Douglas: Deliberately.

Mr. Scott: Perhaps deliberately, although I am not saying that in that way. But because this other route has been taken we are being deprived of the very rights which would have been ours had the procedure of introducing a bill been followed.

I do not know why this present procedure has been adopted. No one has ruled on the rightness of it, but in any event the government is depriving the members of this house of the historic right of parliament to deal with a measure without qualification, and without any limitation of our rights by the cabinet or the executive. Therefore, I should like to suggest to you that this amendment really raises for your consideration the very grave and serious problem of the rights of parliament, and the degree to which parliament can be muzzled and its rights abdicated by the actions of the executive.

Mr. Fleming (Okanagan-Revelstoke): Mr. Speaker, with respect to this amendment, quite apart from the constitutional and legalistic questions which have been raised, we must also take into account the substance of the motion itself in deciding whether the amendment can be accepted by this house at this time.

The amendment requires a specific diversion of water for a specific purpose. It asks this house to make a decision to instruct the government to undertake to secure, through an exchange of notes with the United States, the right to divert waters from the Columbia system to the prairie region in a certain amount.

The resource which is encompassed in this amendment is a resource which comes under the administrative jurisdiction of a province of Canada. The effective use of this resource belongs to the people of the province of British Columbia. If we here are required to impose the will of the federal government, by the acceptance of this amendment, upon that province and upon its people when they have already given an indication of what they want, then I feel we are going beyond our jurisdiction. I submit this has to be taken into account. The external affairs committee have had some 50 hearings, and have examined exhaustively and carefully—

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, may I ask whether the amendment has been ruled as in order and whether we are debating the substance of the amendment? If so, others might like to do so.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): No; he is giving additional reasons.

[Mr. Scott.]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. It is my understanding that the hon. member is speaking to the point of order.

Mr. Fleming (Okanagan-Revelstoke): Certainly; and I am speaking to it because the substance has some bearing on whether the amendment should be accepted for consideration by the house at all. The substance, as well as the form, is of some consequence here. If we were to vote and accept this amendment, we would be accepting as a fact that, without prior consultation, we can in effect impose, our will on one of the provinces of Canada with regard to a resource which lies within its jurisdiction constitutionally.

Mr. Douglas: Not at all.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Certainly.

Mr. Fleming (Okanagan-Revelstoke): I hear an interjection from my left, "Not at all", Mr. Speaker. I wonder what the feeling would be in other provinces if there were this intrusion on the right of a province to have at least some voice in the utilization of a resource that it has the right to consider within its jurisdiction and available for its development. I feel we must take this into account. Article XIII of the treaty does provide in general terms and very precise terms for diversion for consumptive purposes, that there shall be this diversion wherever we want to divert. But if we accepted an amendment that limits this right, without first consulting the province concerned, in my opinion this would be wrong. There is no suggestion in this amendment that we should consult the province; it simply says that we should exchange notes with the United States, and I claim that we would be going beyond our jurisdiction and responsibility in accepting the proposal contained in the amendment.

Mr. Douglas: Speaking on the point of order, Mr. Speaker, I am wondering whether the hon. member for Okanagan-Revelstoke (Mr. Fleming) has looked very closely at the amendment which is being proposed. There is no suggestion in the amendment that if we were to pass it parliament would impose its will upon the people of British Columbia or the government of British Columbia. All this amendment says is:

> Subject to the negotiation of a further protocol or an exchange of letters clarifying the right of Canada to divert up to 6,000 cubic feet per second or 5 million acre feet annually from the Columbia river—

This does not instruct that there shall be placed in the treaty a provision that 5 million acre feet or 6,000 cubic feet per second of water shall be diverted annually from the Columbia river, but only that the right of this diversion shall have been agreed to by the governments of Canada and the United States; so that if at some future time the government of British Columbia wants to exercise that right, it will have the legal power to do so. As a matter of fact, yesterday the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Martin) told the house that the right of diversion was in the treaty and the protocol, and before the external affairs committee government witnesses said repeatedly that this right of diversion is safeguarded.

All this amendment does is seek to have that right spelled out not only by the Canadian government but also by the United States government, so that the right to divert water will be clear beyond any shadow of doubt. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, the amendment does not impose any burden or onus on any government. It does not deal with anything beyond the jurisdiction of this parliament. It merely suggests that it be made clear by an exchange of letters that the right to divert, which the government says is there, is in fact there—which we seriously doubt.

Mr. Nielsen: Does Premier Bennett have any doubt?

Mr. Douglas: Whether Premier Bennett has any doubt or not does not meet the situation. We are dealing here with a treaty. Unless the government of the United States and the government of Canada are agreed as to the legal meaning of this treaty, then of course difficulties may arise in the future.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): There is no doubt about it.

Mr. Douglas: The Secretary of State for External Affairs says there is no doubt about it. If there is no doubt about it, let him accept this amendment to make it clear beyond any shadow of doubt.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): May I point out, Mr. Speaker, that the protocol does that very thing.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. May I be allowed to interrupt the hon. member for just one moment. It seems to me that this discussion is to some extent out of order. We are now discussing the merits or demerits of the amendment itself. This is the type of discussion which I think would be in order if the Chair had ruled the amendment in order and acceptable. Therefore I would suggest that hon. members limit their contributions to the question of whether this amendment should be accepted by the Chair.

Mr. Douglas: I quite agree with Your Honour, but in view of the fact that you allowed the hon. member for Okanagan-Revelstoke to deal with the substance of the amendment I felt that some reply was in order to deal with the point which he raised. Further on the point of order, I think the house ought to be fully aware as to what a serious decision you, Mr. Speaker, and the house are about to make. According to the hon. member for St. Lawrence-St. George (Mr. Turner) the government is apparently now taking the position that a treaty is really the sole prerogative of the executive, that they do not have to submit it to parliament—

Mr. Macdonald: That is right.

Mr. Douglas: —but that they have waived their right in this regard, and with graciousness of heart and great condescension have agreed to allow parliament to say something about it. But what we are allowed to say about it is exactly what Hitler allowed the Reichstag to say. They can say "ja" or "nein"; they can say "yes" or "no", but—

Mr. Turner: On a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker, I gather that the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam (Mr. Douglas) is embellishing the statement I originally made.

Mr. Douglas: I am interpreting the statement which the hon. member made, Mr. Speaker, and I think anyone who reads it will agree with my interpretation.

Mr. Nielsen: Would the hon. gentleman permit a question, Mr. Speaker? On the point of order, will the hon. gentleman tell the committee whether he feels that the effect of the proposed amendment will be to provide something which the treaty does not itself provide now?

Mr. Douglas: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Nielsen: Then I have a following question, if the hon. member will permit it. Does the hon. member not agree, then, that if this is the case surely this is something the committee cannot consider.

Mr. Douglas: This is not a committee; this is the House of Commons.

Mr. Nielsen: Well, the house.

Mr. Douglas: We have proposed this amendment because we seriously question that the present treaty and protocol provide for the right of diversion; as a matter of fact, we think it specifically denies the right of diversion where the generation of hydroelectric power is involved.

Mr. Nielsen: If this is the position the hon. gentleman takes, surely the whole treaty has to be renegotiated.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Absolutely.

Mr. Douglas: No, Mr. Speaker. What we are arguing is that this amendment calls for a new protocol or an exchange of letters to make it perfectly clear that the government's contention, that the right of diversion is contained in the treaty and protocol, is in fact contained there. If the government is satisfied that the right of diversion is there, all it needs is a protocol signed by the United States government and the Canadian government to that effect and our fears would then become groundless.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): It now has that very thing.

Mr. Douglas: I want to return to the point I was making, Mr. Speaker. We are now having a demonstration of the Liberal party's belief in the supremacy of parliament, namely that parliament is supreme only to the extent of being able to say yes or no to a treaty, but having no power to declare its opinion with respect to any particular aspect of the treaty. This is dictatorial arrogance of the very worst kind. This makes the pipe line debate look like child's play.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Douglas: Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I hope Your Honour will realize that from our point of view this is a most serious decision which has to be made, that parliament has to decide this evening whether or not a treaty introduced by the executive is so sacrosanct that this house may not even pass a declaratory amendment stating its opinion with respect to any part of the treaty.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. In the course of the debate on the government resolution calling for the approval by this house of the ratification of the Columbia river treaty, the hon. member for Greenwood introduced an amendment as follows:

> Moved by Mr. Brewin, seconded by Mr. Herridge, that the resolution before the house be amended by adding thereto the following words:
> [Mr. Nielsen.]
> "Subject to the negotiation of a further protocol or an exchange of letters clarifying the right of Canada to divert up to 6,000 c.f.s. or 5 million acre feet annually from the Columbia river for the beneficial use of the prairie regions and for multiple purpose use of water so diverted."

The validity of the amendment has been questioned by the hon. member for St. Lawrence-St. George, the hon. member for Peace River and also this evening by the hon. member for Okanagan-Revelstoke. On the other hand, the hon. members for Winnipeg North Centre, Greenwood, Danforth and the leader of the New Democratic party have argued in support of the amendment's legality.

The hon. member for St. Lawrence-St. George has expressed the view that the amendment is out of order because it encroaches on the government's exclusive prerogative in the treaty making field. I do not think that anyone will question the validity of the principle itself, and I would suggest that it is not diluted or altered by the government's action in seeking approval of the treaty's ratification. The very narrow and limited question before the house is not approval or disapproval of the terms of the agreement but approval or disapproval of the ratification of the treaty. I would hesitate to rule that, in seeking this approval and in placing this very limited question before the house, the government ipso facto abdicates its prerogative in the realm of treaty making, a prerogative on which the proposed amendment would seem to encroach.

In any event, if there can be some doubt about the acceptability of this constitutional argument, it appears that the validity of the amendment proposed by the hon. member for Greenwood is open to question on other and firmer grounds. As has been pointed out by the hon. member for Peace River, it is extremely difficult to produce an acceptable motion in a situation of this kind. There are first the limitations of standing order 44 which, of course, are well known to hon. members; but perhaps I should quote the standing order at this time:

> When a question is under debate no motion is received unless to amend it; to postpone it to a day certain; for the previous question; for reading the orders of the day; for proceeding to another order; to adjourn the debate; or for the adjournment of the house.

Then in turn an amendment is limited by the rule of relevancy. On this point I should like to quote from May, sixteenth edition, at page 421:

The fundamental rule that debate must be relevant to a question necessarily involves the rule that every amendment must be relevant to the question on which the amendment is proposed. Stated generally, no matter ought to be raised in debate on a question which would be irrelevant, if moved as an amendment, and an amendment cannot be used for importing arguments which would be irrelevant to the main question.

The difficulty, of course, is that if an amendment proposes nothing new it is a nullity and if it does introduce a new proposition not covered in the motion it becomes irrelevant. In this instance the proposed amendment does import a new argument and thus contravenes the rule of relevancy.

Another point made by the hon. members for Peace River and St. Lawrence-St. George is that the amendment is an expanded negative. It seems to me that acceptance of the amendment negatives approval of ratification of the treaty, since it proposes re-opening negotiations with a view to changing the terms of the treaty itself. Our rules provide a way to negative a question, and this must be done not by way of amendment but simply by voting against the main proposal.

Futhermore, the Chair agrees with the suggestion made in the course of argument this afternoon that one cannot propose an amendment which does not oppose or alter the main motion but attempts to approve of it on a conditional basis. The reference made this afternoon was to citation 201 of Beauchesne, fourth edition.

Lastly, it would appear to the Chair that the amendment proposed by the hon. member for Greenwood is in the nature of a substantive motion requiring notice.

Perhaps in concluding I should refer hon. members to a very similar situation which is reported in the Journals of the House of Commons and which rebuts the suggestion made this evening that we are now breaking new ground. I would refer hon. members to the Journals of the House of Commons for Wednesday, the 11th day of June, 1958, at page 132. On that occasion the house was considering the following motion:

That it is expedient that the houses of parliament do approve an exchange of notes constituting an agreement between the government of Canada and the government of the United States of America...and that this house do approve the same.

At the time an amendment was proposed by Mr. Howard, seconded by Mr. Martin (Timmins), as follows:

That the motion be amended by adding thereto the following words:

"And in the opinion of this house consideration of the interests of collective security and the principles of the United Nations make it advisable for the government to give consideration to the taking of such steps as are necessary to integrate these agreements within the structure of NATO."

Mr. Speaker Michener made the following ruling:

I concur the view he—

—the Acting Speaker—

—tentatively expressed as to the irrelevance of the proposed amendment which I think is apparent from a consideration of the motion itself which calls for two things; first, that it is expedient that the houses of parliament do approve the agreement and, second, that the house do approve the agreement. That is all that the motion puts forward. In effect, if the motion is affirmed it will approve the agreement and if it is negatived it will disapprove the agreement. If the amendment has the effect of denying the motion it is unnecessary and irrelevant because those members who wish to disapprove the agreement have only to vote against the motion as it stands. If the amendment adds something to the motion in a positive way it is a declaration of principle.

Then, a few lines further on:

Assuming that the amendment and the motion were accepted you would have the agreement approved but you would have added to it a declaration of this independent principle which is not related to the motion nor is it necessary for the decision of the motion in question.

That view is reinforced by a consideration of the limited number of cases where it is possible to introduce a principle by way of an amendment.

Speaker Michener here refers to a ruling of a previous Speaker, to which the hon. member for St. Lawrence-St. George referred this afternoon, in which he said:

May, Bourinot and Redlich indicate that the only motions upon which amendments declaratory of principle may be moved are motions for an address in reply to the speech from the throne, motions to go into committee of ways and means and supply and for the second reading of public bills.

For these reasons and on these grounds I must declare the amendment out of order.

Mr. Brewin: Mr. Speaker, in view of the importance of the matter, and with the very greatest of respect to you, I must appeal your ruling.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The house has heard the decision of the Chair from which the hon. member for Greenwood has appealed to the house. Those in favour of sustaining the decision of the Chair will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

Division

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion the yeas have it.

And more than five members having risen:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Call in the members.

The house divided on the question: Shall the Speaker's decision be sustained? And the decision of the Chair was sustained on the following division:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I declare the decision sustained.

Mr. Bert Leboe (Cariboo): In addressing the house for a few minutes on the measure before us for the ratification of the Columbia river treaty, may I first of all take this opportunity to express on behalf of the members of my group and, I think, on behalf of all the members of the committee on external affairs, appreciation of the way in which the chairman of that committee sat through 50 sittings of evidence. I think the hon. member for Leeds (Mr. Matheson) did a very commendable job indeed and I think the members of the committee were very proud of the effort he put forward to make himself acquainted with those matters with which it was necessary he should become familiar. In any case, his conduct of the committee was such as to stand him in good stead as a future chairman of many other committees of this house.

I should like to mention, also, that in my opinion the negotiators of this treaty did an excellent job of probing into the finer points under discussion. I think they were firm. I think they were fair. I am certain that those who sat on the committee were aware of the tremendous ability that these gentlemen possessed in their own right as individuals. I think we can be very proud of the work they did.

Negotiation of any type of treaty is a two-way street and there has to be, I think, a certain amount of flexibility in the final result. There are those, I know, who would like to see every "i" dotted and every "t" crossed so as to have everything spelled out. But I believe that if we were to take an extreme position of this kind we should get not only the other side but ourselves, too, into a straitjacket in which it might be very difficult to move. I believe our negotiators have taken into account all the factors, human and otherwise, which were in the minds of those concerned with this matter both here and in the United States. I believe they have achieved an excellent treaty.

In the course of the hearings before the external affairs committee more than 1,500 pages of evidence were presented. We heard many witnesses and many long briefs were put forward. Many probing questions were asked. I do not object to the position taken by those who oppose this treaty and the protocol. If they felt there was need for probing I give them credit for doing the probing which they thought was necessary. No one is any the worse for this probing having been done, because it gave an opportunity to those who supported the treaty to clarify the opposing views and bring the question into proper focus. We dealt with the financing of the dam. We dealt with the agreement between British Columbia and Canada concerning financing, and this was the most important part of the treaty negotiations; as a matter of fact as far as British Columbia is concerned it was the most important part—the part for which British Columbia will be responsible. The government of British Columbia has now expressed its delight in the fact that the negotiations have now made progress to such an extent that we have before us today a treaty which will bring about the building of three major dams, with money to spare as far as the cost is concerned. This money will be used for installing machinery at some of the power dams in British Columbia.

It has been said that the cost of damming the Columbia will be much greater than the estimated cost. I, for one, do not hold this view and I say this because of evidence which came to us very recently in connection with the Peace river project. Estimates for the cost of construction of the main dam on the Peace river were in the neighbourhood of $90 million, but the actual contract let was for an amount of $25 million less—some $73 million. The reason for this downward trend in cost is to be found in the extensive use of the conveyor system for moving material. At the present time there is under construction in the Peace river area a conveyor which will be over three miles long. It will have a belt five and a half feet wide; it will travel at 12 miles an hour and it will deliver 12,000 tons of material to the dam site per hour. Anyone who can visualize the pile of material which will be moved in one day can readily understand why there is a reduction in the cost estimates which were previously made with regard to the building of the dam.

We in the committee discussed the responsibility, and the angles of this responsibility, of the province of British Columbia in connection with the treaty. We discussed the safeguards taken by the federal government with respect to this responsibility. We discussed at length the safety of the dams which will be built. We probed into the matters relating to foundations, material, engineering reports, and we found no reason for alarm; as a matter of fact we were well assured as to the quality of the dams which will be built. We even probed into matters which were not actually before the committee. We dealt with the question of labour relations in connection with the building of the dams. This was dealt with clearly and succinctly, which meant that most of us at least were satisfied, as I think are the people who expect to do the job, that we have gone a long way towards a peaceful construction project with the least amount of disruption either on the part of labour or management.

We also dealt with the British Columbia power policy with regard to the dams on the Columbia and as the policy related to the Peace river dam. It seems to me in this connection that it would be well if I were to remind the house that we in British Columbia have a power policy which delivers electrical power to all parts of the province at equal cost. There is an equalization rate. People living at Fort Nelson, for instance, pay the same price for domestic power as people in the city of Vancouver or Victoria. In considering the Columbia river power project and the cost of electricity delivered, we must take into account the whole network of power which is delivered from all sites in British Columbia in the over-all cost of electricity on a uniform basis. This power policy is one which can lend itself very well, I think, to any part of Canada.

We have heard a considerable amount about the possibility or impossibility of diversion for consumptive uses, and we had an amendment moved in this connection. I think it would be well for me to read at this time an extract from the transcript of the proceedings before the external affairs committee. At page 299 appears a preliminary study of the possibilities of additional water supply for Saskatchewan rivers. This study was prepared for the Saskatchewan Power Corporation in March 1962 by Crippen-Wright Engineering Limited, and the summary of their report reads, in part, as follows:

The following observations, without consideration of any planning by the province of Alberta, can be made:

(a) Diversion of the upper North Saskatchewan river into the Red Deer and South Saskatchewan rivers suggests substantial savings in power development costs within Saskatchewan as it would take advantage of regulation provided by the South Saskatchewan dam reservoir and the additional 150 feet of fall available within the province. Diversion at Rocky Mountain House is very low in cost and appears to be an attractive first increment to supplement irrigation, domestic and power requirements.

(b) The diversion of the Athabasca as a first stage of an eventual Peace river diversion, is feasible and seems attractive during or following construction of power projects on the North Saskatchewan river.

(c) Diversion of at least 20,000 cubic feet per second from the Peace river was found to be economical. Even greater quantities are available with upstream regulation.

They are referring there to the Peace river dam at Portage mountain. The study continues:

(d) Diversions of the Kootenay, Columbia, or Fraser river water are high in cost. Water from the Fraser costs the least of that obtainable from the western slope.

As well as keeping ourselves out of a straitjacket in connection with the treaty and protocol, the contention that we need to take water from the Columbia and bring it over to the prairies, according to the report produced by Crippen-Wright, is absolutely ridiculous. To waste the time of this house with something which, as I see it, according to engineering reports is valueless is almost bordering on irresponsibility.

Reference was made this afternoon to the fact that the federal government should stop British Columbia building dams. This can be done by refusing to give permission which was asserted by the government of Canada in Bill No. 3 which was passed, I believe, in 1955. The point I should like to make here is that there is no way in which the Canadian government can force British Columbia to build dams. I think this is very important. As a matter of fact, one of the matters in the original Bill No. 3 of 1955, if I recollect correctly, was that under clause 9 all of the watershed of the Columbia and other rivers drained into foreign territory which was under federal jurisdiction. But, Mr. Speaker, before this bill was passed clause 9, if that is the clause I am thinking of, and I am sure it is. was deleted, and there was a very good reason why the government of the day deleted that clause from the bill.

The business of centralization and of bringing about federal powers and jurisdictions of this kind may appeal to some. But I want to say on behalf of this party that we are not inclined to pass over the natural resources of a province to federal government jurisdiction. I am sure that if the hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Brewin) had been in the external affairs committee of that day he would have realized that the position of the government of that day, and the position it took in eliminating clause 9 of the bill to which I have referred, was a wise one indeed.

Reference has been made to downstream benefits, flood control, and so on. Those matters are part of the record and there is no need for me, or for anyone else as far as I can see, to dwell on them. Surely after 1,500 or more pages of evidence, 50 sittings of the external affairs committee when witnesses were subjected to the most searching questions, and the committee having come in with a report that this treaty and the protocol should be ratified, we in this house, after hearing a member from each party giving the position of his party on this issue, should pass the treaty and get along with the business of the house.

I would like to see the treaty ratified by this House of Commons at the earliest possible time so that we can get on with the job in British Columbia. I am sure the people of British Columbia would appreciate it very, very much. Therefore I would urge, Mr. Speaker, that if possible even yet tonight we should pass this treaty.

[Translation]

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Chapleau): Mr. Speaker, I should like to take this opportunity to make a few remarks on this motion concerning the ratification of the Columbia river treaty. Even if I intend to be brief, I should like to follow the example set a few minutes ago by the hon. member for Cariboo (Mr. Leboe) and congratulate the chairman of the external affairs committee, the hon. member for Leeds (Mr. Matheson), who did a splendid job and who greatly facilitated our task. He was helpful to me in this sense that he provided me with a truly competent interpreter who made it possible for me to follow with great interest the evidence given and the statements made at the 50-odd meetings of the committee during which we heard the pros and cons of the project.

Unfortunately, Mr. Speaker, I cannot say as much for the internal organization of the house, for here I have the English version of the external affairs committee's report, number 29, dated May 27, while as far as the French version is concerned, I only have report number 3, dated April 9. This seems to indicate a fairly wide gap between the publication dates of the English and the French versions of the committee's reports.

Sometimes it is necessary to review the evidence which was given and I could not take advantage of that opportunity in view of the fact that the French reports always arrive long after the English reports.

I raised this matter myself a few days ago in this house, on May 13. Besides, it had been done on previous occasions, many many times, but unfortunately we do not see any sign of improvement.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I did not intervene while the hon. member was making his comments, but I am afraid that he cannot keep on dealing with the question he just raised. He should, as much as possible, confine his remarks to the subject now under discussion.

Mr. Laprise: In any case, I had completed what I wanted to say on that matter, but I simply wanted to point out the time elapsed between the two versions.

Mr. Côté (Chicoutimi): The injustice.

Mr. Laprise: Mr. Speaker, during the study in committee, I was able to see the wonderful work which had been done for several years by the engineers and technicians who have been in a position to see the pros and cons of that extraordinary project which will no doubt go down in our country's history—control hydraulic power and put it at the disposal of mankind and the people of this continent.

About that power which we try to harness more and more for our own use, I read the following:

> Power was defined thus: "Substitution of mechanical energy for human energy, of mechanical action for human labour".

Electric energy is really such a power.

> In his "Geography and World Power", Fairgrieve states: "The power with which Greece achieved such great things in every sphere of human progress was mainly provided by slaves. Each Greek, each Greek family, had five helots about whom we do not think when talking about Greeks; however, they were the ones who accounted for the main power of the Greeks".

We are fortunate enough to have great water power in Canada; the Columbia river is one of the greatest in the country. I feel, we should commend the government of British Columbia, which wants to turn this resource to account, and do everything in our power to help and to hasten the fruition of this plan. Indeed, during this debate, I have heard nothing which could hurt the prerogatives of any region of this country. Now, in my opinion, we have nothing to lose by using a natural resource of which we can take great advantage.

The opposition of some people prevented hasty action and prompted us to be careful. I feel, Mr. Speaker, that those critics were necessary, even if they did extend the debate. But it seems to me that the Canadian people and, to a certain extent, the American people should be able to take advantage as soon as possible of those resources which are being wasted.

The Columbia river has always flowed and will always flow through part of the United States; whether we like it or not, we can do nothing about it. Now, in view of the fact that we have no doubt the advantage of carrying out the necessary work in co-operation with the United States, I think that the Canadian government and parliament should ratify this agreement as soon as possible, so that the work may start quickly, be successful and help the Canadian people through the creation of a labour market, so that our workers may also be able to take advantage of it. I feel that not only the citizens of British Columbia, but many workers outside of that province will take advantage of it.

Mr. Speaker, on behalf of our group I say that we agree with this project.

Besides, the evidence which was given indicates that the government of British Columbia also agreed. If that project included some objectionable features—but I do not believe such is the case—then some day it would be that province which would suffer. But since it is in favour of that treaty and since the headwaters of the Columbia river are located in that province, although it flows into the United States, we ought to support British Columbia and ratify as soon as possible that treaty, in order that work could start and the long awaited results might materialize.

Mr. Reg. Cantelon (Kindersley): Mr. Speaker, the two previous speakers said they intended to be brief and I intend to be brief too. There is just one main point I hope to make. This treaty has been a subject of very violent debate in the past and, as we have seen this evening, the violence of the debate is not entirely ended. Nevertheless I now believe that it is the best treaty which could be negotiated under the circumstances. Of course the applicable circumstances were created by the government of British Columbia which owns the resource.

As has been pointed out on other occasions by other speakers, the Liberal party, while in opposition and while the treaty was being negotiated by the Conservatives, opposed the treaty with very strong attacks on the negotiators as being incompetent, and on the treaty as a selling out of the interests of Canadians. However, once the Liberals came to power they did a right about face and now maintain that it is the best treaty possible. It seems to me in the face of this, and with the two main parties of the country now supporting the treaty, that one can be sure that it is indeed the best treaty possible, and so I intend to support it.

Nevertheless there is one question that as a Saskatchewan member I believe needs clarification. Are the water diversion rights of the three prairie provinces protected by the treaty? The chief negotiators of the treaty, Hon. Davie Fulton for the Conservatives who negotiated the original treaty, and the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Martin) for the Liberals, who negotiated the protocol, maintain that the water diversion rights are adequately established. General McNaughton is their chief opponent and the main critic of the treaty. Yet he took a leading part in negotiating the treaty as it is today. He says that he opposed the final draft and refused to join in recommending it to the cabinet.

[Mr. Laprise.]

Mr. Fulton says that the general was at the final meeting and never had a word to say against the treaty. I should like to quote in substantiation of this opinion the Ottawa Citizen of May 12, 1964, where John Walker of Southam news services reports as follows:

> But Mr. Fulton was most emphatic on this point, however, saying that he had asked all those on the negotiating team whether the treaty as drafted —including the high Arrow dam to which General McNaughton has taken strong exception and excluding the McNaughton dams on the upper reaches of the Columbia river—should be recommended.
> "All agreed. General McNaughton said that while he was opposed strongly to certain of the physical aspects of the treaty, he did not oppose the recommendation to cabinet. He then said something to the effect that he must maintain his freedom of expression for the future".
> Mr. Fulton then made a strong attack on the major criticisms which have been raised against the treaty. He reviewed the communications between Ottawa and the B.C. government before signing of the treaty to show that the B.C. government had given "the clearest and most unequivocal assurance" of its intent to proceed with the treaty as drafted, only to indulge in "a surprising contortion" a month later.
> The former member from Kamloops, rubbing in the former McNaughton stand, stated in his 30 page brief that "at every stage the views of General McNaughton and the Canadian section, international joint commission, were obtained; and at no stage did they or General McNaughton withdraw or refrain from the discussions."

And further:

> Mr. Fulton insisted, despite General McNaughton and others, that "the present treaty is far from a second best choice. It is, on the basis on which it was negotiated, a completely fair alternative."
> He argued that without the treaty plan the development of the Columbia river would not have been possible at all. Once this was possible it would provide the "springboard" for further developments on the Canadian side.
> He lashed out at those, like General McNaughton, who had told the committee that "despite the black and white provisions" in the treaty (for diversions, for instance), Canada would not exercise them. The right to divert the Columbia to the prairies—

To me this is the important point I want to make.

> —or to divert the Kootenay, or to divert the Columbia into the Fraser, were all possible either immediately or in the long run.

From this it is quite plain that Mr. Fulton is confident that, first this is the best treaty that could be negotiated and, second, that water diversion rights for the prairies are protected. The Secretary of State for External Affairs corroborates Mr. Fulton's opinion. In his report to the external affairs committee he had this to say near the beginning of his evidence, as found on page 29, volume 2 of the reports of the standing committee on external affairs:

> In my judgment the treaty and protocol represent the best possible arrangement from Canada's point of view. I believe that this agreement, this arrangement, will serve well the national interest. At the same time I think it is important to emphasize that it reflects the wishes of the province of British Columbia where the river is located. It is also far better for Canada than anything we could do on our own without United States co-operation. In fact, one engineering report after another has indicated that without co-operation with the United States the economics of developing the Canadian stretch of the Columbia would be doubtful indeed. Whatever else may be said in these hearings, I hope that these basic facts will be kept in mind.

Further, on page 40 he comments as follows on article XIII of the treaty, the provision which permits diversion, and again this is the particular point I want to make:

> Now, there is not any doubt in my mind that under article XIII of the treaty there is a clear right of diversion for consumptive uses, and what has to be read with this is the fact that the province is the owner of the resource.

I would suggest that, in saying that, he thinks that whatever is to be done has to be done with the consent of the province. Later, in commenting on the protocol to the treaty, which he was mainly instrumental in negotiating, he re-emphasizes this view by saying, as found on page 65 of the same report:

> Doubt was also expressed whether article XIII (1) of the treaty in a positive enough way gave Canada the right to make diversions of Columbia waters for consumptive uses such as irrigation, domestic and municipal needs. Argument will be prevented on this point by this item's re-affirmation of Canada's right to make such diversions. In connection with the definition of "consumptive use" in the treaty it should be pointed out that the fact that water being diverted for a consumptive use such as irrigation also produces hydroelectric power en route either as an integral or incidental part of the total operation—

Again I should like to emphasize these final words.

> —does not result in that diversion ceasing to be a diversion for a consumptive use.

I should like to re-emphasize that last idea. The water may be used for the development of electric power on its way, if its prime use is for irrigation or other consumptive use. Since the prairies will want the water for consumptive uses primarily and not mainly for power, there should be no trouble at all with diversions.

None of us in this house can fail to respect the intelligence and capacity of Mr. Davie Fulton and the Secretary of State for Exterial Affairs and their interest in the future of Canada, and in this instance I am compelled to agree with their opinions. Saskatchewan's opportunity to use the water they want in the future is in my view established in the treaty. This being so, I intend to support it.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the house ready for the question?

Mr. Colin Cameron (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Since the government members who are so enthusiastic about this treaty are so coy about taking part in the debate, I will proceed now. I have no illusions about the outcome of this treaty. I am well aware that it is going to be ratified. I am quite well aware that the opinions and attitudes displayed in the external affairs committee will be reflected in the House of Commons. One may perhaps ask, why take part in what is essentially an exercise in futility, in butting one's head against a stone wall? I feel it is the responsibility of those who have been members of the external affairs committee during these hearings to place on the record some of the story as to the manner in which this treaty was brought before parliament and before the external affairs committee, and some account of those who gave evidence to that committee. I think also it is as well to put on the record some account of the manner in which the government of Canada has protected the rights of the Canadian people for whom they are responsible.

I should like to deal first of all with the nature of the government's presentation to the external affairs committee. Without in any way implying even the slightest suggestion of incompetence on the part of these witnesses called by the government, I think it is only right to point out that all three engineering firms, who were described in the proceedings of our committee as independent witnesses, are involved in the construction program of the British Columbia hydro and power authority on the Columbia project. Each one of them is a parti pris to the treaty plan and to call them independent witnesses is, I think, stretching matters rather badly.

Then, we had another technical expert brought before the committee by the government. He was a young man, I am sure of great intelligence, who in the course of time will undoubtedly become an eminent figure in his profession. However, when we discovered that this young man had graduated from university only ten years ago and since that time had been exclusively employed by the water resources branch of the Department of Northern Affairs and National Resources and had no experience at all as either a consultant or an assistant in the planning of a major complex scheme of hydroelectric power such as is involved in this treaty, then we were forced to ask ourselves some questions as to why he was brought before the committee as the government's sole technical witness. We were faced with two alternative interpretations, Mr. Speaker. Either the government was treating the committee with contempt and not producing the most important of their technical advisers before that committee or this young man, brilliant no doubt but with very scant experience, was in actual fact the chief technical adviser to the government of Canada and to the negotiating committee. I lay no claim at all, Mr. Speaker, to any knowledge or expertise in the field of engineering. However, as the son of a man who was of considerable eminence both in Europe and North America in that field, I have some idea of the length of experience that is required before an engineer can be considered as a competent adviser to a government in connection with a scheme of this magnitude and complexity.

When in the course of examination it came out that this young man, brilliant no doubt as I say, was in actual fact the chief technical adviser to the government of Canada and to the negotiating committee, one could only have very grave misgivings as to the adequacy of Canada's representation in these negotiations. When we find that this is the only engineer brought before the committee, then one can only be dismayed at the attitude of the Canadian government, at the care that the Canadian government has exercised in performing its functions in protecting the rights of the people of Canada.

Now there were, sir, some independent witnesses of technical competence who came before the committee about whom there can be no possible doubt of either their special interest or the pressure from their employers. I have in mind two of them in particular, one of them an economist and the other an engineer. They came before the committee at their own expense and in defiance of the disapproval of their employers. I have no hesitation in placing their names on the record because I think their conduct was admirable, an admirable display of courage and public spirit that should earn the admiration of everyone who sat in those hearings. I refer to Mr. Larratt Higgins, an economist of the Ontario hydro authority, who came to Ottawa at his own expense, prepared a brief at his own expense for the use of the committee, and came here in defiance of the disapproval of his employers, who finally made it a condition that he only come here as long as he made it clear he was not representing the Ontario hydro authority who had, understandably, misgivings about being involved with affairs concerning another provincial hydro authority. The other is Mr. Richard Deane, the chief hydroelectrical engineer for the West Kootenay Light and Power, a subsidiary of the giant Cominco concern, supported as my colleagues have said by 23 other engineers in that district, who came here at his own expense and again in defiance of the disapproval of his employers. I think, sir, the status of these men in the eyes of their employers is signified by the fact that they were able to insist on their right to do their duty as they saw it as citizens, no matter how much their employers may disapprove.

Some hon. Members: Carried.

Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): I hear that the government members are very anxious to have this carried before they hear something said about it.

There was a third witness with whom I shall deal because I feel very disturbed about the treatment that witness received from the various committee members. This was an elderly gentleman from Vancouver, a man who for many, many years has enjoyed a reputation in the engineering field second to none. I happen to have met Mr. Bartholomew many years ago in my father's office in Vancouver when I was a very young man newly returned from the war.

I can recall the high opinion my father had of this engineer who, at this time, was also a comparatively young man. I am sure Mr. Bartholomew would not object if I suggest that due to his age he was unable to withstand—and I am going to use the word "harry," because it was—the harrying tactics of some government members in their cross-examination; but no one should run away with the idea that Mr. Bartholomew, 79 years of age though he be, is not an extremely intelligent, well trained and experienced engineer with experience not just in

B.C., not just in the water resources branch of the Department of Northern Affairs and Natural Resources, but with experience all over the world as a consulting engineer on major hydroelectric installations.

I can tell you I was greatly disturbed, in fact ashamed, at the manner in which this courageous old gentleman was treated by certain members of the committee. No attention was paid to his evidence.

No attention at all was paid to the evidence of Mr. Larratt Higgins, who presented a brief which most members of the committee, certainly implied in private conversation with me, was in all respects the most comprehensive and effective brief presented to that committee. My regret is that I was unable to persuade the committee to include that brief as a historic record in the proceedings of the committee for future reference.

Not only, sir, were all the engineering witnesses produced by the government involved in the construction program of the British Columbia hydro and power authority under the terms of this treaty plan, but they were also given extremely restrictive terms of reference when they were engaged by the government. They were constrained to examine solely the aspects of hydroelectric power. One of them indeed was confined merely to a comparison of the financial returns of alternative schemes. Not one of them was commissioned by this government to examine and investigate what is probably the most serious aspect of this whole project and treaty, that is, the aspect of water per se.

I am astonished, Mr. Speaker, that neither the government nor most of their witnesses, nor the members of the committee seemed to be aware of the relative importance today, and the greater importance tomorrow, of water per se as a resource, in distinction to water as a means of producing electric power. It is estimated by the United States department of commerce that the consumption of water in the United States increases by from 35 per cent to 40 per cent every decade.

I was astonished when I read the brief of the government's chief engineering witness, a witness who, we were assured again and again, had competent authority beyond question, the Montreal engineering company, to see his astonishing estimate of the modern consumptive requirements of an industrial society, set at 150 gallons per capita per day. This is a Victorian estimate of the water requirements of a modern industrial society. We had evidence presented to us by another witness, a man whose job it is to deal with matters of water consumption, in which he gave us some figures of the real consumption requirements today, and he pointed out that in the adjacent United States the average per capita consumption runs as high as 3,500 gallons per capita per day.

This report from the Montreal engineering firm was brought forward and presented to the committee as evidence that could be accepted with a figure of 150 gallons a day. Now, 150 gallons per day might perhaps, and it is a "perhaps", satisfy the requirements of the individual domestic consumer. It cannot come within miles of satisfying the requirements of a modern business community, certainly not a modern community engaged in industrialization. To present such evidence before that committee, with all the prestige that was accorded to this particular concern, I think was grossly misleading to the committee.

I was also interested to see the cavalier manner in which this major witness of the government, the government's most important witness, dismissed the idea of there being in the arid prairie provinces of this country any real desperate shortage of water or likelihood of it in the future, particularly, sir, when we can find no evidence—and I sought for it and asked for it—that this concern had ever made even the most cursory examination of water requirements in the prairie provinces. This again I suggest was in effect causing great misapprehension in the minds of the members of the committee.

I would like to refer to some of the requirements of the prairie provinces as presented to us in the brief brought here by Dr. Cass-Beggs, the head of the Saskatchewan Power Corporation, in which he points out that the needs and requirements of water on the prairie provinces are becoming acute and shortly will be desperate.

He deals with the alternatives that were suggested lightly by the Montreal engineering firm, and even more lightly referred to by the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Martin), who has stated of course that even in the unlikely event of the prairie provinces needing to have further water, there are other places from which they could get it more cheaply.

I would like to quote from the brief of the government of Saskatchewan of that day, a brief which I presume was endorsed by the incoming Liberal government of that province, otherwise Dr. Cass-Beggs would not have appeared before us. It had this to say about the behaviour of the government of Canada in this regard. It spoke of the various possibilities:

> As noted above, neither the feasibility nor the costs nor the benefits of any of these alternatives

—these alternatives to the Columbia river diversion—> have been evaluated in detail. The diversion routes have been identified on paper only, with little or no on-site investigations of terrain or soil conditions. ...It is interesting that this does not prevent the government of Canada from quoting unit-cost figures from the same Crippen-Wright report in order to "prove" that alternative sources are considerably less expensive. These figures, of course, are meaningful only when considered in the light of the location of our future needs for water, the volumes involved, the diversion routes and the possible benefits....It should be equally obvious that one cannot compare the unit-cost of a diversion of 26,000 c.f.s. into the North Saskatchewan with the unit-cost of a diversion of 6,000 c.f.s. into the South Saskatchewan basin or even into a higher point in the North Saskatchewan basin, whence it could more easily be diverted to the south.

> Only the most general conclusions can be drawn safely from the investigations made to date that these conclusions clearly support the view that a Columbia prairie diversion may well be an exceedingly important component of a future water plan for the prairie provinces, considering the location of future water requirements, the volumes involved and the potential benefits to the prairie region and the whole of western Canada.

In his evidence before the committee, Dr. Cass-Beggs had a few things to say with regard to the estimated cost of the various alternatives which were so kindly suggested to him and to the prairie provinces by the knowledgeable Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Martin) by other government witnesses before the committee, and by members of the committee. He pointed out that it might be advisable to take note of the relative distances involved. Whereas the Columbia waters would be some 300 miles from where they were to be used in the prairie provinces, the Peace river was some 950 miles away; that no estimate had been made at all of transmission costs and that, moreover, it would require the immediate investment of many times the sum required to build installations permitting the diversion of the Columbia river to the Saskatchewan basin; that the payment of interest on this vast investment to be undertaken many decades before it would be needed would in itself constitute a burden far in excess of any of the costs involved in the Columbia diversion scheme. These matters, however, were not the subject of careful consideration by government witnesses. They had not been asked to consider them. They had only been asked to consider power and, in one instance, specifically the matter of finance; evidence narrowed almost to the point of disappearing.

We were told repeatedly that there was no danger whatever of losing control of our water to the United States. Doubts were cast on some admittedly second or third hand evidence that plans were being dusted off for the diversion of Columbia river water to the southwestern states of the United States. But only a while ago there were press reports of even more ambitious plans being produced by the Parsons Engineering Company for diverting the Athabaska, the Peace and the Mackenzie along with the Columbia and the Fraser to satisfy the thirst of the southwestern states. Members may say that these plans are grandiose and not likely to be fulfilled, but it would be a bold man who would today place any limit on man's ingenuity. And I do say this: At least they illustrate the fact that there are thirsty eyes in the United States fixed on Canada's water resources while at the same time we have thirsty eyes at home which have been looking to the government of Canada to protect their future water requirements.

I am fully in agreement with the idea that we must co-operate with the United States; no one in his right senses would have any other attitude toward this development. I have been surprised at the manner in which government witnesses and government members on the committee have erected a straw man composed of the suggestion that if we did not go along with this treaty the Americans will pick up their marbles, go home and refuse to play. Nothing could be more ridiculous or more absurd. We are told, in spite of all the evidence to the contrary, that the Americans have alternative storage basins for flood control. But the slightest examination of the evidence shows that all the storage basins they have are subject to the most severe pressure from local interests for other use and even if they were available they would not be of sufficient size to satisfy flood control requirements. The very suggestion that the Americans are only casually interested in the treaty and have merely signed it in order to accommodate their good Canadian friends is too difficult for me to swallow, particularly after conversations I had in Washington with Senator Mansfield of Montana.

I went down to see Senator Mansfield to find out one or two things from him. I wanted to know, for instance, whether it was correct that at some point in the proceedings the Americans were prepared to drop the Libby project from the treaty. Senator Mansfield made no bones about it. He said: I told them on more than one occasion that I was quite prepared to drop my demands for the Libby dam if that was the price we had to pay for the treaty. This, in spite of the fact that the Libby dam was, as he said, extremely important to him politically as the senator from Montana, the state in which the dam would be situated. It indicated something else to me. It indicated that the Americans are much more in need of this treaty than Canada is, and to have gone into the bargaining room under the impression that the Americans had to be coaxed to come here was a piece of infantile nonsense and a complete misreading of the situation facing the United States today both with regard to their water requirements and with regard to their requirements in the field of flood control. I am convinced that had we been represented by more resolute and, perhaps, better equipped negotiators it might have been possible to have returned with a treaty which would protect the rights of Canada much more effectively than this document does. May I call it ten o'clock?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I wonder if I could suggest to the hon. gentleman who is making a very interesting speech, although he would not expect me to say that I agreed with it, that he continue his remarks until they are completed? Perhaps we could allow the hon. member to go on until half past ten?

An hon. Member: No, they are on a filibuster.

Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): No, I am not going on tonight, thank you.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Churchill: May I ask if we are continuing with the Columbia river debate tomorrow, and what is the prospect for Monday and Tuesday?

Mr. MacNaught: Tomorrow we will go on with the Columbia treaty question, and if it is finished we will take up the second reading of the measure to amend the National Housing Act. If that should be finished tomorrow we would then take up the second reading of the measure to amend the Export Credits Insurance Act. But if it is not finished until Monday, the second reading of the act to amend the National Housing Act will be followed by consideration of the measure to amend the Farm Credit Act.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

(Subject matter of questions debated under adjournment motion.)

A motion to adjourn the house under provisional standing order 39A deemed to have been moved:

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION—LEGAL ACTION RESPECTING PROGRAM "TWENTY YEARS LATER"

[Translation]

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): Mr. Speaker, on May 21 last I directed the following question to the Secretary of State (Mr. Lamontagne) who is responsible for the C.B.C.:

> Does the minister intend to recommend that the government take legal action against the C.B.C. following the program "20 ans Express" presented on Saturday, May 9, which was an insult to religion and which questioned the value of religious teaching in Quebec?

Mr. Speaker, following that broadcast, I received several letters of protest—

An hon. Member: How many?

Mr. Pigeon: —including that of Mr. René M. Coderre of Joliette, who wrote an article in the May 13, 1964 issue of L'Action Populaire, from which I wish to quote a few extracts:

> A recent program on CBFT (20 Ans Express, on Saturday, May 9) left us aghast.
> Leading questions to the people interviewed gave the audience the impression that religion is on the way out in Quebec: the young would be about to lose their faith because their convictions are based on prohibitions and occasions of sin. Reportedly, religious teaching after grade school would be worthless. It would consist of a more subtle indoctrination carried out by teachers who place themselves at the level of their students and who hypocritically pretend to be on the side of our youth to instil them with the principles of a lost cause.

Mr. Coderre continues as follows:

> Have we, Roman Catholic French Canadians, no pride; no company or political party would tolerate such a program without taking legal action against the responsible parties. And this is our public broadcasting, subsidized with our money, which gives us such outrageous and perfidious disservices. I can hardly believe it.

And the author adds:

Could a teenager not try on his own to find the religious enlightenment which he lacks?—instead of accusing his teachers. And could not the C.B.C. show a little better judgment in the choice of some masters of thought which it suggests to our young people?

Mr. Speaker, it is high time that something be done to stop the C.B.C. from showing certain programs and certain films. Many protests are now heard in this respect, and I wonder whether it would not be proper for the government of the province of Quebec to assume its responsibilities, as the censorship is under its jurisdiction, or else, whether it would not be possible for the minister in charge of the C.B.C. to suggest to its management without impinging on the corporation's business the setting up of an organization of parents, educators, and even religious authorities, who would supervise the programs and films shown on television.

In order to allay the doubts which now exist in the minds of Canadians with regard to the C.B.C.'s activities, I think that now is the time for the government to set up a royal commission in order to satisfy the public. There has been abundant criticism, and rightly so.

I do not wish to launch a direct attack against the C.B.C. personnel, because there is some good in that corporation. It employs most distinguished columnists to inform the Canadian people. But I think that there is some abuse in the showing of films and programs by the corporation, and a royal commission might clear up the situation, correct abuses and, by that very fact, result in appreciable savings, by eliminating some expenses which, in some cases might be unwarranted.

When the money of the Canadian people is used to present films which should not normally be shown at hours when young people are watching television, I feel that the Canadian people are complaining, with reason, because they do not wish that their taxes be used to exercise a baneful influence on young people.

I hope that the minister who is responsible in the house for this corporation will assume his responsibilities. By all rights, I think that it would be advisable to institute a royal commission in order to examine the activities of that crown corporation which is now subjected to so many criticisms on account of certain films and programs.

[Mr. Pigeon.]

[Text]

Mr. J. B. Stewart (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I should like to assure the hon. member that his views will be transmitted to the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation.

I am informed by the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation that the series of programs to which the hon. member makes reference is designed to be an informative series for young people. Each program deals with current topics of interest to the young people of French Canada. In the program in question many of the students interviewed were members of Roman Catholic youth organizations, which, along with some student newspapers, had conducted surveys into the practice of religion by young people and the teaching of religion in schools in the province of Quebec. The interviews gave these young people an opportunity to set forth their reactions to the results of these surveys and the opinions expressed by those who were interviewed.

FLOODS—BRITISH COLUMBIA—POTENTIAL DANGERS ON SKEENA RIVER

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, many of the residents in British Columbia, particularly in valleys through which run large rivers, are facing one of the most serious situations in the past 16 years, namely the potential flooding of those areas because of the cold weather and late run-off of snow in the mountains. This question was initially raised a few days ago by the hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. Mather), who has a great interest in this matter, as does the leader of our party, of course, coming from the constituency of Burnaby-Coquitlam; and so far as the Fraser valley is concerned, I know the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources (Mr. Laing), whose birthplace was right along the banks of the Fraser, being a native British Columbian is also very seriously concerned about the potential flood danger. In fact, I do not think there is a member in the house who may have knowledge of it who is not vitally concerned about it.

We have had floods before in British Columbia from the same causes, the last one being in 1948 and the one before that, in the memory of my contemporaries anyway, in 1936. It seems that on each occasion this flood damage occurs governments look at it from the point of view of hindsight rather than foresight. This has been the case with previous floods and it looks very much as if it is the case now. Following the damage that was wrought to the river valleys of British Columbia in the 1948 flood there was established a diking board for the Fraser river area, financed 75 per cent, I believe, by the federal government and 25 per cent by the provincial government. It engaged in an extensive diking program. Since that time the dikes in that area have been allowed to deteriorate, regardless of the fact that the Fraser river board, which also was appointed following the 1948 flood, in 1958 in its preliminary report, I believe it was, or one of the interim reports pointed up this seriousness and recommended that the amount of some $17 million be spent to bring the dikes in the valley up to the 1948 flood peak level; but nothing has occurred.

Unfortunately we in the northern part of the province, particularly along the Skeena valley, did not have the benefit of any such board to study and survey the situation, but it does not appear to matter much because we there, too, are faced with equally as disastrous a situation as they are in the lower Fraser valley regions, perhaps the only difference being one of population. In a situation such as this, communities large or small should be protected to the full. There are millions upon millions of dollars of land value, of investment by people, of homes, and their savings and lives involved. Very easily all these could be wiped out of existence. Yet we get the sort of answer, in regard to dealing with this situation, that we got earlier today from the minister. I am not blaming him for having given that answer; under the circumstances it was obviously the only one which he could give. I asked whether any federal agency was going to be able to assist or step into the picture, and in reply the minister said he was quite certain that the government of Canada would act, in the normal course of events, upon application of the government of the province of British Columbia.

To my mind it is high time that we quit looking upon the British North America Act and its jurisdictional barriers as an instrument to prevent action on the part of the government to save the lives and property of people of this nation. We are in the midst of a great controversy about amending the British North America Act. Surely this is one of those things that we should be able to get immediate agreement upon in order to allow such organizations as the emergency measures organization, which is relatively useless for any other purpose, to be able to assist people and work with them to preserve their property and prevent damage taking place.

Surely to heaven, on the heels of the disaster that befell the Albernis and other parts of the west coast of Vancouver island, we should have learned that it is necessary to move quickly. I urge the government: Please do not wait for Premier Bennett to send a letter asking for help. Offer it immediately. Show some courage and determination at the federal level to indicate that the government of Canada is also interested in the preservation of lives and property. Let us start from that point and forget about the barriers that the B.N.A. Act may present. Let us take the initiative and make it clear that we are willing, able and desirous of offering all possible help because, after all, the people who live in the Fraser valley and in the Nass and Skeena valleys are equally important as those who live in other parts of the nation and we should not allow the whims of the premier of a province with regard to whether he should wire, write or phone for assistance to be the guidepost with respect to whether or not we should help.

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): Mr. Speaker, I think that the hon. member for Skeena has made a very worth-while contribution tonight in his review of the situation in our province of British Columbia. We are a province with a very great proportion of the area set on end, and when we have snowfalls out of the ordinary, as we have had during the past winter, we are always troubled when the spring thaw sets in. With temperatures exceedingly low up to the present time and freezing remaining at a very low level of about 2,000 feet on the hills, a sudden change in temperature at this time causes the people of these valleys to worry.

We are fortunate that in spite of a somewhat higher snowfall during the winter the water content of the snow does not seem to be higher than normal and is probably even lower than normal. The hon. member made special reference to the Fraser valley and the great flood of 1948. There was a much greater flood in 1894 but there were very few people in the Fraser valley at that time. But in 1948 the losses incurred amounted to $18 million to $20 million, and it is quite obvious that if a disaster of the same magnitude occurred today the losses, due to the tremendous increase in the value of the improvements on the flood plain, would probably be $80 million to $100 million. We are aware of these things.

The hon. member makes the charge that hindsight instead of foresight has been used. I cannot agree with him entirely in that respect. He will recall the fact that we tabled the final report of the Fraser river board not very long ago. I wrote immediately to the responsible minister in British Columbia, Mr. Williston, suggesting that we should do one thing or the other, that we should use the report which had cost us a lot of money or we should discard it. I wanted to speak to him at once and he came to Ottawa immediately thereafter.

He is already investigating the engineering in respect of an expenditure of about $5 million to strengthen the dikes, which is the first requirement in the Fraser valley. After that we propose to use the Canada Water Conservation Act to build some dams in the tributaries of the Fraser which, if properly built, should take care of that area for all time. He makes the further suggestion that there should be a permanent organization and I think it has much to commend it. However, that is a suggestion which I think might well be a matter for discussion between the federal government and the provinces the next time we meet.

I think the first suggestion made in that regard was made by Reeve Emmett of Burnaby who, when his municipality was asked for a contribution toward Alberni, suggested that this was improvident and we should have a permanent organization—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order; I regret that I have to interrupt the minister but his time has expired.

LABOUR CONDITIONS—PROVISION FOR UNEMPLOYED NOT RECEIVING UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE OR SOCIAL ASSISTANCE

[Translation]

Mr. Lucien Plourde (Quebec West): Mr. Speaker, my question was directed to the Minister of Labour (Mr. MacEachen). I was asking him what action he intends to take concerning unemployed persons receiving no unemployment benefits or assistance.

If I asked such a question, Mr. Speaker, it is because I get letters every week from many heads of family and hundreds of young men who are out of work and who receive no unemployment benefits or assistance from the province.

I ask the minister what he intends to do for those people without any income, because their families live in the most dreadful poverty.

There is the case of a young man of 22 who was told "Go to such school and you will get a cheque at the end of the month". Imagine his disappointment when at the end of the month he got a cheque for $10 only, since he had had to dress better and incur transportation and other expenses.

Mr. Speaker, the unemployed are convinced that the government does not care about their condition and that we forget about them. The government must do something for those hundreds of unemployed without income. Wherever they apply, they are told: "No work; full staff".

My riding is mostly made up of workers. Those people are willing to work, but we must find them jobs. That is all they are waiting for to get rid of poverty in their homes.

I agree with what Mr. Firestone said, as reported in today's Le Droit:

> In a lecture he gave Wednesday at a seminar on the organization of labour held in Manitoba, Mr. O. Firestone, vice-dean of the faculty of social sciences at the University of Ottawa, stated that one Canadian out of five was living in poverty.
> A former economic adviser in the Department of Trade and Commerce and a member of the royal commission on health services, Mr. Firestone pointed out that 21 per cent of Canadians are quite poor, but that much greater attention was being paid to the 300,000 unemployed than to the 3.8 million people who are living in a constant state of poverty.
> Mr. Firestone added that poverty is one of the four major economic problems which Canada must face...
> To overcome poverty would not only serve the poor but "would also contribute to strengthen our economy, increase economic growth and raise the level of employment and everyone's income".
> The lecturer recommended also to increase the means which would allow youth to receive a better education and take advantage of technical training. Mr. Firestone believes that social assistance programs ought to be developed.
> Moreover, Mr. Firestone advocated an increased assistance to farmers and industry so as to improve the income of employers concerned in those enterprises.

Mr. Speaker, the crucial problem in this country is not the Canadian flag or the national anthem, but rather unemployment. The house should without any delay grapple with this evil.

Let us help the financing of new industries and guarantee employment to Canadians. That is what they want first. Then we can take the necessary time to talk about the government's flags.

When Mr. Firestone said that the government paid more attention to the 300,000 unemployed than to the 3,800,000 people living in constant poverty he was right, since most of the applications for jobs which were sent to me came from that group of 3,800,000 people, and the government does nothing for them, because they are not unemployed registered under the act.

I am not so sure that the government is taking care of the 300,000 registered unemployed, because I read recently in an article on this subject that it seems as though this number is quite normal, considering the population of the country.

I think it is high time that the minister should take action in this regard. I would be happy indeed if he would tell the house, tonight, what he intends to do to help the unemployed who receive no assistance, in order to put an end to this shameful unemployment in our country which is supposed to be so wealthy.

The first freedom of every citizen, in my view, should be the right to work, and the state should promote this freedom of our citizens in making available to them the opportunity of earning a certain income.

[Text]

Mr. J. A. Byrne (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, the objectives of the hon. member for Quebec West (Mr. Plourde) are certainly of the highest order. I can assure him they are the objectives of the government, and that the government has not lost interest in or concern for those who are unemployed and living in the circumstances described by the hon. member.

One of the best ways we could assure that our program to help these people can be placed in effect is to get a little more cooperation in the house in order to implement the program. Last June the minister announced a ten point program of manpower development, and the hon. member cannot ignore the fact that the federal government pays 50 per cent of the assistance, that is, in addition to the unemployment insurance, when the unemployment insurance runs out, to an employee or head of a household entitled to unemployment assistance.

The hon. member's question of June 2 indicated that this person was deprived of certain assistance. I think perhaps that is an error. Social assistance is not terminal unless of course it has been determined by a welfare officer that a person is simply not entitled to social assistance by virtue of the fact that he may not be spending it in the manner for which it was intended. If a person loses the right to social assistance, this is a matter for the welfare officers of the municipalities and the provinces.

We have the Unemployment Assistance Act and in addition we provide pensions to those who are handicapped by one reason or another, and who are unable to earn a living. Then again we have the training and retraining program. We have endeavoured to bring in legislation that would provide an extension of family allowances to young people who wish to continue their studies. We will return individuals to school, even those who have families, and I am sure the hon. member cannot say that the government is not doing as much as it can to alleviate the circumstances of these people.

Motion agreed to and the house adjourned at 10.26 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Friday, June 5, 1964

The house met at 11 a.m.

PRIVILEGE

MR. NIELSEN—REFERENCE TO RULING BY MR. SPEAKER

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, may I raise a very brief question of privilege having to do with Your Honour's ruling yesterday on the two points of privilege raised. The precedent set by Your Honour's decisions yesterday gave me a good deal of concern, and for the future I should like to refer Your Honour to Beauchesne, fourth edition, 1958, page 57, where at the foot of the page in a very brief paragraph these words appear:

> The Speaker's jurisdiction does not extend to words outside the house.

There is a reference there to May's Parliamentary Practice, thirteenth edition. I simply draw these words to Your Honour's attention because of the rather far reaching implications, in my view, that arise out of Your Honour's decisions yesterday on the two questions of privilege that were raised.

Mr. Speaker: I thank the hon. member for bringing this to my attention. Obviously I have not had a chance to read the reference he has just made, but I would point out that my quotation yesterday was from the sixteenth edition of May, and I believe he has referred to the thirteenth edition. However, realizing the importance of this matter I should like to take it under consideration and try to prepare a legal brief for my own satisfaction, if not the house.

Mr. Nielsen: For the future guidance of members, when that brief is prepared would Your Honour inform the house?

Mr. Speaker: Yes. The point is important and in order to render general satisfaction, I hope, I will be very glad to do so.

MR. RONDEAU—RECEIPT IN MAIL OF OBJECTIONABLE LITERATURE

[Translation]

Mr. Gilbert Rondeau (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege.

I want to protest most strongly against the insidious, foul, pernicious and deceitful propaganda, entitled "Quebec 1967, a Canadian province or a clerical state", by Reverend Wilson Ewin, a Baptist minister of Jarvis street, Toronto, which we received in this morning's mail. That document, Mr. Speaker, is the most insulting I have read to date about the French Canadian nation, the Roman Catholic religion and the Roman Catholic clergy of Quebec.

In the name of all our Roman Catholic institutions, our clergy, our French Canadian entity and our Canadian history, I protest, and I want it to be known that I totally disagree with those comments, which can only be harmful to good understanding in Canada.

[Later:]

Mr. Gilles Grégoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Postmaster General. Does he intend to inquire into the hate literature which is being distributed through the Post Office Department, as for instance the pamphlet sent by Reverend Wilson Ewin and which we received today in our offices?

[Text]

Hon. J. R. Nicholson (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, I will take the question as notice.

D-DAY

ANNIVERSARY OF LANDING OF CANADIAN FORCES IN NORMANDY

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, 20 years ago tomorrow the men of the armed forces of Canada, along with the troops of our allies, assaulted the beaches of Normandy, beginning the end of a war that had tortured this world for five long years. I am sure that all members of this house want to take a few moments to recall and honour the heroism of the men who participated in that historic day, the longest day for all of them and the last day for many.

Anniversary of D-Day

We can best pay tribute to the hundreds of thousands of men and women who served in varying degree in the struggle of the second world war by remaining faithful to the purposes underlying the cause for which they fought and worked, and died.

On this occasion, however, I think it is appropriate to single out for special honour two men who provided outstanding service and who are in a very real sense, I believe, symbolic of the great contribution made by our people in the war in civil and military roles. I have accordingly, Mr. Speaker, with the approval of my colleagues in the cabinet, submitted today to His Excellency the Governor General advice that General H. D. G. Crerar and Mr. M. J. Coldwell be chosen and summoned to be members of the Queen's privy council for Canada. The Governor General has approved that advice and General Crerar and Mr. Coldwell will be sworn of the privy council in the course of the next few days.

General Crerar had a brilliant military career and was in command of the Canadian forces that landed on the coasts of France on June 6, 1944. He remained as general officer commanding in chief of the first Canadian army until the end of the war. He made a great contribution, along with the gallant forces he so ably commanded to the ending of the struggle.

Mr. Coldwell was, of course, for 22 years an outstanding member of the Canadian House of Commons. A veteran of the first war, during the second, his wisdom, industry and patriotism were an example of public and parliamentary service in the highest degree. I can think of no one who has better exemplified the standards that we hope to see embodied in the public and parliamentary life of our country.

I trust, Mr. Speaker, that all members of this house will find it appropriate that we honour these two men and, through them, the people of this country whose military and civil efforts of 20 years ago made possible the victory of freedom over totalitarianism and gave us the chance to work for, and the hope to achieve, a better world of peaceful progress for all men.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, on this occasion the house will be a cathedral of devotion to those who served, and to so many who died, in the service of their country 20 years ago. In this house there are quite a number of members who were present on that day when Canada took its place once more in the legions of freedom.

[Mr. Pearson.]

In honouring General Crerar, Canada will honour itself. It is well to remember that, according to the press dispatches of the time when General Crerar received the thanks of the Canadian people at the hands of, and from the lips of, the then prime minister of Canada, Mr. King, he reported that as he left the House of Commons and looked up at the red ensign floating over the tower, he heard from Mr. King the words that a national flag had been created—or words to that effect—as a result of the service and sacrifice of those whom we honour today.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I do not know the reason for the interruptions. I am simply reporting the facts.

So far as Mr. Coldwell is concerned, he is a fine parliamentarian who gave generously of his time, energy and ability. I know all of us would join with the government in the action taken in honouring him and honouring the privy council by his inclusion.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, it is most appropriate that the members of the House of Commons should pause in their deliberations to pay tribute to those Canadians who, 20 years ago tomorrow, took part in the landing on the beaches of Normandy. This was the greatest amphibious military operation in world history, and Canada is proud that Canadians participated in that great event. They took part not for military aggrandizement or for any territorial ambitions, but because the people of Canada were convinced that we had to devote all our efforts to destroy nazi tyranny and to prevent the spread of totalitarianism throughout the world.

Many brave men sacrificed their lives on that occasion and in the bitter and bloody battles that followed. Whether or not we are worthy of their sacrifice will depend on the extent to which we are able to build a world in which men can walk the earth with peace and dignity free from racial discrimination and religious intolerance. If we in this House of Commons, in concert with men of good will everywhere, are able to build a world in which there will be peace under the rule of law then these men whom we honour today will not have died in vain.

I want to commend the right hon. Prime Minister for the tribute which is being paid to General Crerar. During the latter months of the war it was my privilege to visit Saskatchewan troops in Great Britain, France, Belgium, Holland and Germany. I had the good fortune to visit General Crerar's headquarters and, if I remember correctly, slept one night in his trailer out in the field. He was a courteous host, and I was very proud of the high morale of the troops who fought under his command.

This is a well deserved tribute which the government is paying to one of the great soldiers of the last war and I am sure, in accepting this honour, he is doing it on behalf of all the men who fought under his command.

I want to thank the Prime Minister for the honour which is being paid to Mr. M. J. Coldwell, who was the national leader of the C.C.F. and today is honorary president of the New Democratic party. As one who came into the House of Commons with Mr. Coldwell in 1935, as one who has long been a close, personal friend and associate of his, I deeply appreciate this honour which is being conferred upon him.

Mr. Coldwell was a man of peace. I think the Prime Minister was in error in saying he was a veteran of the first world war; I do not think he was. During the years immediately preceding the war he was one of those who advocated that the free nations of the world should take collective action against nazis and fascist aggression, and when the war came he gave his support in this house and throughout the country in the struggle to establish the kind of freedom upon which we could build a social democratic world. All who love and respect Mr. Coldwell will, I am sure, be grateful for the well deserved honour which the government has conferred upon him.

[Translation]

Mr. Guy Marcoux (Quebec-Montmorency): Mr. Speaker, 20 years after the landing in Normandy, it is appropriate to make a pause to pay a tribute to the army, air force and navy men who fought in that French zone.

On this occasion I would like to recall the memory of the Chaudière regiment which was the first to land in Normandy, where many of our French Canadian fellow citizens from the province of Quebec were covered with glory.

As the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam (Mr. Douglas) said, we sent our troops to protect a way of life which we believe to be the best and especially to guard against another system which we felt was the opposite of the one prevailing here.

I hope those years of war during which we fought against nazism will not come back, but if we have to fight against another totalitarian system, socialism, we will be able to do so by peaceful means, without being forced to take up arms in order to keep on benefiting by the system we always had and appreciated on the American continent.

Mr. Gilles Grégoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, on the eve of the 20th anniversary of the landing of the allied forces in Normandy, it is appropriate indeed to join the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) in paying tribute to all those who took part in that landing and who probably lived through one of the most dreadful and longest days of the century, giving their all for the triumph of civilization in the western world.

Mr. Speaker, I also want to add my wishes to those the Prime Minister and the members who spoke before me addressed to General Crerar, whose memory remains unforgettable to those who fought under his command in Normandy, France and Germany, and to Mr. Coldwell, who sat formerly in this house and proved to be a very able parliamentarian, for the honour bestowed upon them today.

GENEVA CONVENTIONS

APPROVAL OF CONVENTIONS FOR PROTECTION OF WAR VICTIMS

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs) moved the first reading of Bill No. S-25 (from the Senate), respecting the Geneva conventions, 1949.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

CANADIAN FLAG

REQUEST FOR TABLING OF FORM LETTER REPLIES BY PRIME MINISTER

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): I wonder whether the Prime Minister would table copies of the form letters under the heading "Prime Minister" and "Premier Ministre" and over a photocopy of his signature, which are going out to Canadians who communicated with him as Prime Minister of Canada with regard to their views on the flag.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): I have been getting a good many thousands of letters, and I am sure the right hon. gentleman would not want me to table the replies to all of them.

Mr. Diefenbaker: No; the form letters.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Pearson: I am sending out different kinds of replies to different letters, but I will be glad to table the replies in order to give the right hon. gentleman the information he wants.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I would also like to ask the right hon. gentleman why it is that people who are definitely opposed to his flag design are receiving from him letters purporting to be signed by him "with kind regards" and saying "I wish to thank you for your warm support for a distinctive national flag". Why are people who are opposing the model that he has produced, or anything in the nature of a change, being subjected to letters on his part purporting to signify an approval of that which they condemn?

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, I wish to satisfy the right hon. gentleman's curiosity about my correspondence, but the right hon. gentleman has been among the first to insist that the red ensign is a distinctive national flag.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Diefenbaker: You cannot wipe this aside that way.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I know that was the endeavour. But I asked him—and I have numerous examples that are being sent to me—about this because these people want to know why Lester B. Pearson signs a letter "with kind regards" and thanks them for the support of this flag that he produced, when in fact they have written him opposing it.

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, I told the right hon. gentleman that I would look into my correspondence and table it. It might be important, perhaps, if, as a salaried officer of the house, the right hon. gentleman would table some of the replies he is making to the letters he is receiving.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I can tell the right hon. gentleman, Mr. Speaker, that I do not send out an unsigned letter with simply a photocopy signature and "with kind regards" thanking people for that which they did not put before me.

PROCEDURE RESPECTING CONSIDERATION OF RESOLUTION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Prime Minister with reference to the arrangements being made for the flag debate.

I wonder whether the Prime Minister is aware of a short sentence on page 298 of Bourinot, fourth edition, which reads as follows:

> A motion which contains two or more distinct propositions may be divided so that the sense of the house may be taken on each separately.

I do not ask him for a definitive answer at this point but I wonder whether he would discuss this possibility with the Speaker in case it might meet with the desire of the house?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Yes, Mr. Speaker, I am aware of that rule and I will be glad to discuss it with Mr. Speaker.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Did the Prime Minister not say the other day that he was not going to divide the resolution, or has he changed his mind on this too?

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, I did say the other day that we were not going to divide the resolution, and we are not.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Oh, no? Another backtrack.

PUBLIC SERVICE

NATIONAL DEFENCE—BENEFITS TO CIVILIAN EMPLOYEES COMPULSORILY RETIRED

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Michael Starr (Ontario): Mr. Speaker, I would like to address a question to the right hon. Prime Minister and ask him if he can advise the house now whether the government has arrived at a decision on the request of the national defence civilian employees to have extended to them special benefits similar to those now proposed for the members of the armed forces upon severance of employment.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, it is my understanding that a decision has been conveyed on this matter, and I will be glad to deal with it on Monday.

NOMINATION OF LABOUR REPRESENTATIVE ON UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE COMMISSION

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Michael Starr (Ontario): I should like to ask the Minister of Labour whether the Canadian Labour Congress has as yet submitted a name for appointment to the unemployment insurance commission. If so, who is that person?

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of Labour): The consultations with the congress have not come to the point where any individuals have been proposed.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

STEPS TO MEET REPORTED DECLINE IN MANUFACTURING PRODUCTION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Finance, drawing his attention to the fact that there has been a 1 per cent decline in manufacturing production for the month of March, the first decline in eight months. In view of the fact that this decline is mainly in non-durable consumer goods, indicating a deficiency of purchasing power, is the minister contemplating any change in government monetary or fiscal policy to meet this situation?

Hon. Walter L. Gordon (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I do not think too much should be made of a 1 per cent decline in the statistics for a particular month.

An hon. Member: Yes; what's a million?

Mr. Gordon: I can assure my hon. friend that the economic situation in the country is being given daily attention, and I am also pleased to be able to tell him that it seems to me it is going very, very well indeed.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Gordon: I think the monetary and economic policies that have been pursued in recent months in fact within the past year have had very marked success.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Following our policies.

Mr. Douglas: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In view of the fact that this 1 per cent decline is in a specific area, and that this is the first decline in eight months when one would have expected an increase, does the minister not think this is a warning signal to which the government ought to be giving some attention?

Mr. Gordon: Mr. Speaker, I can assure my hon. friend that the government pays attention to all the monthly statistical figures, but I am not prepared to interpret it as a warning signal. I think everything points to a continuance of the present upswing.

Hon. Michael Starr (Ontario): Mr. Speaker, a supplementary question. In view of what the minister has said as to the present state of the economy, can he give us a promise that he will not interfere and mess up the new set-up?

Mr. Gordon: Mr. Speaker, I do not find that question a very helpful one. I can give my hon. friend the promise that if action is needed to stimulate the economy or to direct it in one way or another the government will not hesitate to act.

INQUIRY AS TO GOVERNMENT ACTION TO ABOLISH POVERTY

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Gilbert Rondeau (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Prime Minister. Can he tell us what specific steps his government intends to take to suppress poverty in Canada, a question much talked about at the last national convention of the Liberal party?

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. This question requires an answer far too long to be given on orders of the day.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

CONGO—CANADIANS REMAINING IN U.N. FORCE

On the orders of the day:

Hon. D. S. Harkness (Calgary South): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of National Defence. In view of the withdrawal of a majority of the United Nations force in the Congo and of the steadily deteriorating situation there, could the minister inform us as to the number of Canadian army and air force personnel still in the Congo and when they are to be returned?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I will take this question as notice.

RECOGNITION OF QUEBEC DELEGATION IN PARIS

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Maurice Côté (Chicoutimi): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs?

In view of the brief reply he gave me yesterday to a question I was asking concerning the Quebec delegation in Paris, could the Secretary of State for External Affairs today clarify his answer, which gave rise to confusion in certain circles? For instance, did Quebec request of the federal government that its delegation be treated on an equal footing with the Canadian representatives, or have similar questions been raised during his conversations with Mr. Couve de Murville?

His answer was no for both parts of my question.

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I do not think I have anything to add to what I said yesterday but I will examine the question once again and if I have additional information, I will gladly pass it on to the hon. member.

Hon. Paul Martineau (Pontiac-Témiscamingue): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker.

Could the minister say whether negotiations are going on between the Canadian and French governments to have Mr. Lussier, the representative of Quebec in Paris, enjoy the same status as Mr. Lapointe, as the province's delegate in that country?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I have nothing to add to what I said earlier. However, I would suggest that the hon. member examine the replies I gave this morning and the other day in that connection.

REPORTED DELAY IN NEGOTIATIONS RESPECTING U.S. FISHING RIGHTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): I should like to ask a question of either the Secretary of State for External Affairs or the Minister of Fisheries, whichever one may wish to answer. I should like to ask either one of these hon. gentlemen whether their attention has been drawn to certain remarks in the Congressional Record of the United States by Congressman Tollefson of Washington to the effect that Canada is dragging its feet or is not willing to proceed actively with the negotiations over the so-called historic fishing rights of United States fishermen in what are now Canadian waters.

Mr. Speaker: This is absolutely contrary to the rules according to the instructions given to me, under which it is improper to ask whether statements made in newspapers are correct.

Mr. Howard: With respect, sir, I am not asking about a newspaper; I am talking about the Congressional Record of the United States of America. I am not asking the minister whether he thinks the statements are true; I am asking whether they have been drawn to his attention and if he would comment upon them.

[Mr. Côté (Chicoutimi).]

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): They will be drawn to my attention now.

LABOUR RELATIONS

NORTHLAND NAVIGATION LIMITED—SIGNING OF AGREEMENT WITH S.I.U.

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Labour which I trust is in order. In view of the great dissatisfaction which exists among the membership of local 400, Canadian brotherhood of railway, transport and general workers with respect to the signing of a memorandum of agreement between the S.I.U. and Northland Navigation Shipping Company Limited and all the surrounding circumstances, would the minister bring this situation to the attention of the maritime trustees?

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I will be glad to do that.

GREAT LAKES—NATIONALITY OF S.I.U. NEGOTIATORS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Michael Starr (Ontario): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Labour if he has an answer to the question I posed to him a few days ago with regard to whether the S.I.U. negotiating team is wholly Canadian.

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I have directed an inquiry to the chairman of the board of trustees on this point but so far I have received no reply. As soon as I receive a reply I will give the information to my hon. friend.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

LEGISLATION RESPECTING DISSEMINATION OF "HATE" LITERATURE

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. With regard to the type of literature to which reference was made some months ago, literature of a particularly putrid nature against the Jewish race and people, the Minister of Justice advised the house that the question was being looked into with a view to determining what action might be taken, and particularly with regard to whether the law as it presently exists is sufficient for the purpose; furthermore, whether amendments to the Criminal Code would be brought in. Is the minister in a position to advise the house as to that?

Hon. Guy Favreau (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, with regard to the possible application of the law as it exists, and irrespective of what might be my own opinion, I have communicated with the attorney general of Ontario and it is understood that the Royal Canadian Mounted Police will place at the disposal of the Ontario authorities any material which will have been uncovered in this respect so as to make possible the testing of the present provisions under the Criminal Code.

As to the answer which I have already given with specific reference to a certain type of hate literature, I may say that the matter is still being actively pursued by my officers and myself, but a formula which will reconcile freedom of thought and expression and also provide for the necessity to cope with certain situations has not yet been evolved in a manner which is satisfactory to me.

Mr. Diefenbaker: One further question in that connection. Recognizing the great difficulty there will be in the drafting of such legislation to assure, on the one hand, the maintenance and preservation of freedom of speech, and at the same time to move against those who commit a crime against the state when they go beyond the limit of what is regarded as freedom of speech, has the minister sought the opinion of outstanding counsel outside of his department in this regard, and have there been any draft suggestions brought to him from such counsel?

Mr. Favreau: Mr. Speaker, I am not quite sure that I am at liberty to divulge the actual nature or type of consultations which have been going on in this matter, but I must say for the moment that I have had occasion to read an opinion which has been given by one learned counsel at least to the Canadian Jewish Congress.

Mr. Diefenbaker: That is by Mr. Robinette, Q.C.?

Mr. Favreau: Yes. But personally I have not yet sought opinions from outside the department; the discussions have been pursued under my responsibility as legal adviser to the government.

[Translation]

Mr. Gilles Grégoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Justice. Can he assure us that his department will take the same action against those distributing hate literature against Roman Catholic French Canadians in the province of Quebec, as mentioned this morning?

Hon. Guy Favreau (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I think the first characteristic of hate literature is discrimination. If, as regards this literature mentioned this morning and of which, personally, I had no knowledge, we did not take the same action as in the other kind of literature, then we would ourselves be making discrimination, which we do not wish to do. Consequently, the same procedure will be followed.

ALIEN INFLUENCES IN TERRORIST ACTIVITIES

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Heward Grafftey (Brome-Missisquoi): Mr. Speaker, I too directed a rather similar question to the Prime Minister yesterday and today I give notice of it to the Minister of Justice.

I feel that it is extremely important that I should ask this question.

Mr. Speaker, in view of the reports to the effect that world communism is taking a very special interest in the terrorist activities in our country, has the government ordered a thorough investigation and does it have in its possession evidence of organized foreign influences within those movements?

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: Order. It seems to me that this question was asked by the hon. member yesterday, or else this is a super refinement of the question which was asked yesterday. In any event, will he put it on the order paper.

Mr. Grafftey: Mr. Speaker, I should simply like to say that I recognize I asked a similar question yesterday, but the Minister of Justice is back in the house today. I gave him some notice, and I think we are both agreed that in view of the circumstances it is very important that a general answer be made. I believe the minister is ready to answer.

[Translation]

Hon. Guy Favreau (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. member for giving me notice of his question.

However, I must say that I handed it to the R.C.M.P. Allow me to add this. During any investigation made about other terrorist movements, each time the police forces co-operated very closely with the R.C.M.P.

All information was forwarded to the police authorities; but I must advise my hon. friend that when investigations are made about terrorist movements, it would not be in the public interest for me to disclose specific information about such investigations until it has been submitted to the courts.

Consequently, I will have to refrain from answering such questions.

DISCUSSIONS RESPECTING FUTURE CORRECTIONAL POLICY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Justice. Has the minister received a request for a meeting with the Canadian corrections association and associated organizations to discuss future correctional policy of the government before this policy has been finalized? If so, has the date for such a meeting been set?

Mr. Speaker: This is a question for the order paper.

CONTINUATION OF STUDIES BY FLQ MEMBERS IN PRISON

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Gilles Grégoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, I want to ask the Minister of Justice a question. Did he receive a request from the members of the group called the FLQ who are now purging a sentence in Canadian prisons, to the effect that they be allowed to pursue their studies during their imprisonment? Does he propose to grant this request?

Hon. Guy Favreau (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I shall just answer that such a request has not yet been brought to my attention, but that the question raised by the hon. member is a serious one.

Mr. Grégoire: I would like to ask the minister whether it is his intention to have the matter investigated, and also whether the request has really been made and forwarded to him.

Mr. Favreau: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

[Mr. Favreau.]

Mr. Auguste Choquette (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask a supplementary question. Is the Minister of Justice aware that the hon. member for Lapointe was frequently mentioned as the leader of the separatists in the province of Quebec?

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Speaker, I want to correct the statement of the hon. member for Lotbinière (Mr. Choquette). I must tell him that this is only a figment of his imagination, because there was no such suggestion with regard to me—even if I sympathize with some of their ideas—as head of the R.I.N.

Mr. Choquette: This was suggested, Mr. Speaker.

BROADCASTING

QUEBEC—REPORTED TELEVISION BROADCASTS OF SEPARATIST PROPAGANDA

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Auguste Choquette (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, my question is meant for the Secretary of State. In view of the fact that section 10 of the Broadcasting Act requires a network to be basically Canadian, I would ask the minister if he intends to take steps against a television station which has rented broadcasting periods to political parties of separatist allegiance or whether he is thinking of amending the Broadcasting Act, since such a thing runs counter to the provision of a basically Canadian network.

I see the Secretary of State is not here at the present time, so I would ask that my question be put off until Monday evening at ten o'clock, when I can join our ten o'clock bogeyman, the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm.

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. I have no lesson to take from the hon. member for Lotbinière. If I ask a question which is disallowed, I have the right to ask under standing orders that the matter be discussed after ten o'clock.

Instead of asking questions like the one he just put—I know he is a specialist in matters pertaining to the crown—the hon. member for Lotbinière should ask the Prime Minister to keep a little discipline among his followers so that none of them insults others.

CANADIAN CONSTITUTION

APPROVAL BY QUEBEC LEGISLATURE OF PROPOSED AMENDMENT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Prime Minister. In view of the press report from Quebec city to the effect that the Quebec provincial legislature may take a ten day break toward the end of this month, will the Prime Minister tell the house whether the government has any assurance from the government of Quebec that the resolution regarding approval of the British North America Act amendment that relates to the Canada pension plan will be dealt with by the Quebec legislature before it takes a break?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, we expect it to be dealt with next week.

NATIONAL ANTHEM

INQUIRY AS TO WORDS TO BE USED

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Robert C. Coates (Cumberland): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister which relates to the resolution on the order paper with regard to two anthems for Canada, and with regard to the "O Canada" anthem. I should like to ask the Prime Minister whether the words of this anthem will be the French version and, if not the French version, which one of the English versions?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, these matters will be discussed when we debate the resolution on the anthem.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

NEGOTIATIONS TO WITHDRAW FROM NUCLEAR DEFENCE ROLE

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. In view of the overwhelming nuclear power now in the hands of the United States for military purposes, as disclosed by President Johnson, will the Prime Minister inform the house whether the government is now negotiating out of its nuclear role in accordance with the promise made by the Prime Minister over a year ago?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, negotiations are proceeding, as has been announced to the house, regarding Canada's defence role in the years ahead.

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Prime Minister if he will disclose to the house the nature of the negotiations going on concerning Canada's future defence role. My question concerned getting out of the nuclear role, which the Prime Minister promised he would do.

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, this is obviously too large a question to answer satisfactorily on the orders of the day while negotiations are proceeding. My hon. friend has been a minister and he ought to know and does know, of course, that you do not disclose negotiations of this kind when you are in the middle of them.

REPORT OF COMMITTEE ON REORGANIZATION OF MILITIA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Associate Minister of National Defence whether he has yet received the report of the Suttie committee.

Hon. Lucien Cardin (Associate Minister of National Defence): No, Mr. Speaker. As hon. members know, the Suttie commission were asked to study the reorganization of the militia. They have finished their work and are now preparing their report. I understand that the first part of the report is now being translated and it should be available within perhaps a week. There will be a second part of the report, which I imagine will appear toward the end of the month.

HEALTH AND WELFARE

PRECAUTIONS AGAINST SPREAD OF U.K. TYPHOID EPIDEMIC

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. A. Olson (Medicine Hat): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. In view of the typhoid epidemic now raging in certain parts of the United Kingdom; also in view of the fact that large numbers of tourists and other people are travelling between the United Kingdom and Canada, is the government taking any special precautions to see that this disease does not spread into Canada?

Inquiries of the Ministry

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I regret I did not have notice of this question, but it is my understanding that we are taking note of every individual who comes to Canada from Britain. The federal department does not have jurisdiction to do other than what we are doing, namely to report to provincial health authorities the destinations to which visitors are going, so the provincial authorities will be able to keep a close check on whether anything is developing in these individuals.

TRADE

COTTON—DUMPING DUTY ON IMPORTS FROM U.S.

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Eric A. Winkler (Grey-Bruce): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Acting Minister of National Revenue. In view of the fact that the United States congress has taken action to provide a direct subsidy to the manufacturer of 6½ cents a pound on cotton, which means that the United States manufacturer will receive the full raw cotton subsidy paid to foreign buyers, does the Canadian government intend to give consideration to apply a dumping duty?

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Acting Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, I will be glad to take this question as notice.

WORLD FAIR

REQUEST FOR PROVISION OF THIRD ACCESS ROAD TO BRIDGE

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. Is it his intention to comply with the request made by Mr. Lucien Saulnier, of Montreal, on behalf of the city of Montreal, as regards the building of a third access road to the Champlain bridge in preparation for the world fair?

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: This is a question for the order paper.

Mr. Pigeon: I gave notice to the minister that I wished to address this question to him and he agreed. He is ready to answer the question.

[Mr. Olson.]

[Translation]

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege.

A moment ago I asked a fairly pressing question of the Minister of Trade and Commerce. I gave him notice of my question in order to co-operate with you and save the time of the house. Moreover, the Minister of Trade and Commerce was prepared to answer this urgent question which deals with the visit of Mr. Lucien Saulnier, chairman of the executive committee of the city of Montreal.

I gave notice of my question to the minister and he was willing to answer it. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I am asking you if it is possible to allow the Minister of Trade and Commerce to answer briefly, since I have already given him notice of my question.

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: I must confess I do not recall what the question was at this stage. However, if it is urgent and if the minister is prepared to answer briefly, he can do so with the consent of the house.

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, at noon and during the early afternoon I will be having a meeting with Mr. Saulnier and Mr. Gérard Lévesque, a minister from Quebec as well as officials of Expo '67 on the question raised by the hon. member.

URANIUM

REPORTED STATEMENT BY PRIME MINISTER CONCERNING STOCKPILING

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. A. Webb (Hastings-Frontenac): I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister. At a meeting which was attended by Liberal candidates, held in the Park Plaza hotel in Toronto just prior to the last election, did the Prime Minister state to the Liberal candidate for Hastings-Frontenac that he would see that the stockpiling of uranium would be continued until such time as it was required?

Mr. Speaker: Order. There is much doubt about this question being in order.

Mr. Webb: I should like to serve notice that I intend to debate this matter at the next opportunity.

Mr. Speaker: If a question is out of order I do not understand how the hon. member can debate it.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): I should like to ask why the question is out of order. This is a matter affecting many people in Canada and the Prime Minister, it so happens, was able to announce a contract for his own constituency. Why does the same rule not apply to other constituencies and the members elected therefor?

Mr. Speaker: Well, it seems rather obvious to me that if we were to report and discuss every private conversation in every private meeting held outside the house we would never get any business done in the house at all.

Mr. Webb: This matter has been discussed for some days in the house, and is an urgent matter. Last evening the Minister of Trade and Commerce took the opportunity as has been usual with this government, to announce outside the house the awarding of this contract. I say to you, sir, in my opinion it is obvious that there has been interference by the Prime Minister beneficial to his own riding and detrimental to the rest of Canada.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, that statement is entirely uncalled for and untrue.

ROYAL VISIT

ATTENDANCE AT CELEBRATIONS IN QUEBEC AND CHARLOTTETOWN

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Gilbert Rondeau (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. Following his visit to Her Majesty could he tell us whether or not Her Majesty will be present at the celebrations that will take place in Quebec city and in Charlottetown this year?

[Text]

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): I am afraid I will have to give the same answer to this question that I gave to the hon. member for Three Rivers the other day. Perhaps the hon. gentleman should read the privy councillor's oath.

Inquiries of the Ministry

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

CHARLOTTETOWN, P.E.I.—TRANSFER OF MANAGEMENT OF HOTEL

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Queens): Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for becoming aware of the far right wing of the opposition. I should like to address a question to the Minister of Transport arising out of a question asked him by the older member for Queens on May 25. Is he now in a position to give some indication as to whether the Charlottetown hotel will be transferred to management other than the Canadian National?

Mr. Speaker: May I suggest that this question calls for a detailed answer and should be put on the order paper.

PUBLICATIONS

FURTHER REPRESENTATIONS RESPECTING "TIME" AND "READER'S DIGEST"

On the orders of the day:

Mr. D. M. Fisher (Port Arthur): The other day following the demise of Liberty magazine I asked the Prime Minister whether he had had any contact with Maclean-Hunter or the Liberty publishers with regard to their situation, and I wondered if he had checked to ascertain what representations he has had or any that he is about to have from these publishers of consumer magazines which may be about to cease publication.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): I have had no contact with the publishers of Liberty magazine, nor have they recently asked for any such contact. Some weeks ago I did have a meeting with a representative of Maclean-Hunter Publishing Company in respect of the position of Maclean's magazine.

Mr. Fisher: May I ask a supplementary question. Has the Prime Minister any plans in the immediate future to meet those publishers who have put forward to the public the view that Time and Reader's Digest are the main threat to their continuation?

Mr. Pearson: Well, I have already received representations from them in the past, Mr. Speaker. If they have anything to add to those representations I would be glad indeed to receive them.

INQUIRY OF THE MINISTRY

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Hon. Théogène Ricard (St. Hyacinthe-Bagot): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. Would he tell the house whether the atmosphere of misunderstanding and distrust which actually prevails between the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources of the federal government (Mr. Laing) and the minister of natural resources of the province of Quebec, Mr. René Lévesque, is the new tactic used by the government to promote smooth relations between both governments?

IMMIGRATION

HAROLD NURSE—STATEMENT ON DETENTION AWAITING DEPORTATION

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Hon. René Tremblay (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, on June 1 the right hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Diefenbaker) asked for information concerning the immigration case of Mr. Harold Nurse. The delays required to carry out the deportation of Mr. Nurse, who had entered Canada illegally, were brought about by representations made in his behalf to prevent his deportation and by procedures taken before the provincial jurisdiction courts by Mr. Nurse himself.

Mr. Harold Nurse, aged 31, married, is a citizen of Trinidad by birth. In 1954 he went to the United States and tried to enter Canada at Windsor, Ontario, on July 31, 1956. His deportation was ordered because he could not meet the immigration requirements in force. Mr. Nurse stated that he entered Canada illegally a few days later and has lived in this country ever since.

In August 1959 he married a Canadian and they have a five year old child. The couple have been separated for about two years and a half and Mrs. Nurse has the custody of the child. Mr. Nurse did not provide for his wife and child, and I understand that Mrs. Nurse initiated divorce proceedings on March 25, 1964. The authorities of my department ordered Mr. Nurse, in Toronto, on March 4 last, to leave the country and, in the meantime, Mr. Nurse was placed in custody. His appeal against that deportation order was dismissed by the immigration appeal board on March 20 last.

Before arrangements for his departure from Canada could be completed, representations were received in his favour on April 2 from the high commissioner for Trinidad and Tobago and from his lawyers. Other representations were received on April 6 and April 27.

I revised and studied those representations and confirmed the decision to deport Mr. Nurse, on May 5 last. In the meantime his wife signed an affidavit confirming that she did not intend to live with him in future, and she stated that she had no objection to the deportation of her husband from Canada.

On May 8 last officers of my department endeavoured to proceed with the deportation of Mr. Nurse, but his lawyers applied to the provincial jurisdiction court for a brief of habeas corpus together with a brief of certiorari. That request was rejected by the supreme court of Ontario on May 26 last.

On May 29 Mr. Nurse's lawyers advised my officials that they intended to take further action before the provincial jurisdiction courts and that very long proceedings might follow. Following those representations, the arrangements for the deportation of Mr. Nurse were cancelled accordingly and he was freed on bail.

[Text]

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I thank the minister for the details. The man was taken into custody early in March and was held in custody until he was freed the other day. On what date was he freed?

Mr. Tremblay: May 29.

Mr. Diefenbaker: And how many days was he in jail before he was freed?

An hon. Member: Sixty days.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Sixty days of inaction.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

CANADIAN PARTICIPATION IN UNITED STATES MILITARY EXERCISE

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. I would like to know my standing with you. Am I to be recognized in this house or not? I would point out to you, sir, that you recognized three people from the groups in the far corner, and I have been on my feet half a dozen times. I recognize that the Speaker has the privilege of recognizing or not recognizing members, but I do not want to be put to the trouble of getting up and down if I am not to be recognized.

Mr. Speaker: I recognize, of course, that the hon. member, who is a very old and experienced hon. member here, is the house leader for the party with which he is associated, and during the course of proceedings this morning, if I am not mistaken, he was recognized at least three times. It is the duty of the Chair to recognize different members no matter which section of the house they may be sitting in, and if the hon. member was not recognized as quickly as possible I can only ask his indulgence.

Mr. Churchill: I simply suggest, Mr. Speaker, there are 95 members in the official opposition party.

My question is directed to the Minister of National Defence. Ten days ago I asked a question of the minister concerning a military exercise in the United States, and I am wondering whether the minister has had time to procure an answer to that question.

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of National Defence): Yes, I have, Mr. Speaker. The hon. gentleman was referring to a military exercise called "Desert Strike". I can confirm that there was such an exercise but no members of the Canadian armed forces were attending as observers.

Mr. Churchill: May I ask the minister why it took so long to get an answer to that question?

Mr. Hellyer: Well, Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. gentleman knows that I have had the answer for two or three days, but with the pressure of the long question periods it has not been easy to get the floor and give the answer.

Mr. Churchill: May I ask the minister why, for six days, he failed to rise to get the Speaker's attention to answer this question? I have kept a record of his attendance, and I have noted he made no attempt to answer the question.

Mr. Pigeon: The same old bunch.

POWER

COLUMBIA RIVER—APPROVAL OF RATIFICATION OF TREATY

The house resumed, from Thursday, June 4, consideration of the motion of Mr. Martin (Essex East):

That it is expedient that the houses of parliament do approve the ratification of the treaty between Canada and the United States of America relating to co-operative development of the water resources of the Columbia river basin, signed at Washington on January 17, 1961, and the consequent coming into force of the protocol thereto annexed to the exchange of notes signed at Washington on January 22, 1964, and that this house do approve the same.

Mr. Colin Cameron (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, in the few minutes I have left at my disposal I want to deal briefly with the sequence of events which led to the change in the plans of the government of Canada with regard to this treaty.

It was extremely difficult in the committee to get clear and unequivocal statements from government witnesses as to the course of events in the negotiations, but it did become clear that at one point at least the alternative plan of the Bull river-Luxor diversion, the elimination of the high Arrow dam and the construction of the low Arrow dam at Murphy was the basis of the plans presented by Canada to the United States. They were, incidentally, approved by both sections of the international joint commission.

It would appear that at this point the government of British Columbia made an intervention which prohibited the following of that plan. There were at the time press reports, which were never denied, of the complete disarray into which the Canadian negotiation team was thrown by this intervention on the part of the government of British Columbia.

I think it is well that we should examine what possible reason there could have been for this intervention. The plan which was presented at that time would have produced, according to the Montreal engineering company, the cheapest possible power production; it would have afforded adequate flood control to meet the requirements of the United States, and it would have supplied the basis for financial arrangements with the United States concerning downstream benefits. It seems strange that there should be this intervention on the part of British Columbia, and one has to look somewhere for the reason.

I think the reason can only be that at that time Mr. Bennett became fully taken up with his Peace river scheme, and it was essential to his purpose to make sure there would be no immediate production of electrical power on the Columbia system in spite of the fact that power from the Columbia system, according to all expert opinion, would be the cheapest power available to the industrial section of the lower mainland of British Columbia. Had Peace river power been available at a cost which would have enabled the provincial government to supply low cost energy to the southern areas of the province there might have been something to this. There were a number of rumours put about, never with any sound technical basis, that it would be possible to deliver power from the Peace river to the lower mainland at reasonable, if not cheap, rates.

In recent days, however, information has been getting out that the government of British Columbia now faces a crisis because it has become evident, as was known, of course, to many informed people before, that power from the Peace river cannot be delivered to the settled areas of southern British Columbia for anything like an economic cost. The figures now being quoted as tentative estimates of the cost run in the neighbourhood of 10 mills per kilowatt hour.

I suggest to you, sir, that what we are experiencing now with this treaty is nothing short of a fiasco. The settled areas of British Columbia are being denied low cost power. British Columbia is being saddled with the high Arrow dam which produces no benefits to the province except a quick sale of downstream benefits at the cost of flooding an important section of the interior of British Columbia. The inclusion of high Arrow, according to Mr. Fulton, was the result of intervention by British Columbia. Therefore one can only assume that Mr. Bennett was interested in a quick dollar return from the high Arrow dam without consideration for the long range effects of this development. In spite of the fact that it was most difficult to get firm figures from the British Columbia witnesses who appeared before the committee, it is well known that the cost of the high Arrow dam has at least doubled since the original estimates were made, and that the increase has completely destroyed the cost-benefit ratio which was presented to the committee.

The outlook for industrial development in southeastern British Columbia now is left in a very precarious and dim position. The opportunity for low cost power has been abandoned by this treaty, at least for some 10 or 15 years, and this has been done purely at the instance of Mr. Bennett. The door has been shut to any diversion of water to the arid areas of central Canada, and I suggest that quite apart from the legal aspects of the interpretation of this treaty which were put by my hon. friend from Greenwood (Mr. Brewin) yesterday, common sense and experience tell us that vested interests are sure to arise in the vicinity of the Libby dam which would render it politically impossible for Canada to proceed with the sort of development which will be required in our own arid central areas. This situation also is the responsibility of those who are insisting on this treaty.

[Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands).]

I should like to quote from an editorial in the Calgary Albertan of June 2 of this year, in which it is suggested that the three prairie provinces must stand shoulder to shoulder at this juncture and make all haste to present their case to the authorities in Ottawa before they lose their future by default. This is the attitude of fellow citizens in the prairie provinces which has been completely disregarded by this government and by the external affairs committee.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): That is not the case.

Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): The Secretary of State for External Affairs says this is not the case, but he has not answered the argument. He has consistently refused to present a reasoned legal opinion to answer the contention of my colleague from Greenwood. He has also, it seems to me, dismissed altogether the common sense argument that vested interests will of necessity develop in the neighbourhood of the Libby dam, and he persists in asserting something to be true, as he did throughout these hearings, without producing the slightest evidence to support his submissions.

I may say it was a sad spectacle to see certain members of that committee who, by their past statements, knew perfectly well the shortcomings of the treaty, obediently coming to the rescue of the government and asserting that all was well because of the signing of a protocol which, I may say, did not alter in any significant way the conditions of which they had been complaining until a few months ago. To me it was a melancholy spectacle, and I am not surprised at the reluctance evident on the part of some of the hon. members of that committee to take part in this debate; the careful figure skating necessary to avoid the soft spots in the ice created by their past statements, would have been quite daunting.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): On a point of order, may I say it is contrary to the rules to comment on the refusal or failure of a member to take part in a debate. The only reason other members have not taken part in this debate is because they feel there has been adequate discussion in the house. They recognize the importance of passing this measure, and it is a reflection on those members of the committee who have not spoken, to have it said, by the hon. gentleman, that they are afraid to take part in the debate because of the arguments he is using.

I can only say that the arguments used by the hon. gentleman were dealt with ad nauseam in the committee, and the hon. member knows it as well as any other hon. member who served on that committee.

Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): I would point out that if it is out of order for me to comment on the actions of other members of the house in this respect, it is equally out of order for the Secretary of State for External Affairs to put forward his explanation of their failure to take part in the debate. I quite agree with his use of the term "ad nauseam". It was precisely ad nauseam to hear the same assertions repeated and reiterated without the slightest jot or tittle of evidence to support them.

I have outlined the manner in which the government presented this subject to the committee, how every witness they brought before us is involved in the development of the treaty plan, every one. Not one of them could by any stretch of the imagination be called an independent technical witness. I must say I admired the words of the Secretary of State for External Affairs. I always derive great pleasure and great entertainment from his skill in weaving a web of words to cover up or get round, shall we say, embarrassing facts; and I can only conclude by expressing the hope that the hon. gentleman will be able to baffle the external enemies of Canada with the same ease as he baffled and obfuscated the committee on external affairs in the matter of this treaty.

I am aware that there are a number of members of the committee who sincerely believe that this treaty is a good thing for Canada. My regret is this, that they were afforded only the advice of those who were already committed to this treaty plan. They were not given the opportunity they might have been given of studying the matter objectively and reaching their own conclusions. The statements of the Secretary of State for External Affairs made that quite plain.

I am convinced, sir, that within a very short time developments in British Columbia will prove beyond a doubt that this treaty has been a disastrous fiasco for Canada, and I for one do not propose to have my name connected with it in the slightest degree; but I also intend to make quite sure that those who support it will have their names connected with it for the future record.

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): Mr. Speaker, I had hoped that this resolution might be approved by the house last night and it was for that reason that I hesitated to take part in the debate last evening. Unfortunately the resolution was not approved, and certain statements have been made during the current discussion which make it imperative for me to make a brief intervention in the debate at this time.

When the resolution was before the house for referral to the committee I spoke on that occasion and put my position on the record. In reviewing the words I used at that time, I can say that the viewpoint I held then is the viewpoint I still hold following the long period of deliberation and discussion that took place in the committee on external affairs. I summed up my remarks on that occasion by saying I was sure that the more questions that were asked and the more information that was revealed in the standing committee, the more the decision of the former government that this was a basically sound and good program for Canada would be vindicated.

I repeat those words, Mr. Speaker, because I still believe this is the case. In fact my opinion has been reinforced as a result of the careful examination that took place in the committee. I want to repeat, too, because I think this is important for the discussion, that I do not feel this is the perfect treaty so far as Canada is concerned. No treaty reaches the absolute peak of perfection when it involves negotiation in three sensitive areas of jurisdiction, and I refer to the federal-provincial area as well as that perhaps even more difficult area of negotiation, the Canadian-United States area. But this is a breakthrough in international co-operation as well as in federal-provincial co-operation, and notwithstanding the slight imperfections so far as the ideal arrangement for Canada is concerned, I stand firm in the view that this is a basically sound treaty; and furthermore this is the only treaty—and this has been said many times—that could have been negotiated. In other words, it was the treaty that we are hoping parliament will approve, or it was no treaty at all.

Certainly this is a more positive approach than that which has been taken by the opponents of the treaty, which would mean that the Columbia river, an international river, one of the great river resources of this continent, would continue to meander on its way to the sea without any of the important economic benefits being obtained that are being made possible by the treaty under discussion.

The reason I speak at this time, Mr. Speaker, is that I think it is perhaps still possible to persuade members of the house who remain critical that this is a good treaty. I was interested in the remarks made by the Prime Minister yesterday in response to a question asked concerning the petition of protest by eminent engineers in this country which was presented to the Prime Minister within recent days. The replies indicated that at least three of those distinguished engineers had changed their minds since signing their names to the petition. I recall the interjection of the Secretary of State for External Affairs that he anticipated there would be further withdrawals from the petition, and I am wondering whether there have been such further withdrawals since yesterday. Could the Secretary of State for External Affairs answer that question, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I think there have been. I will let my hon. friend know.

Mr. Dinsdale: The Secretary of State for External Affairs indicates that there have been further withdrawals. When you can convince men with the engineering qualifications that were indicated in the information given to the house—Mr. Thomson of Calgary Power, for example, who is an outstanding hydro engineer—that there has been certain misunderstanding concerning the treaty even at this late date, I am sure it is still possible in the course of this discussion to convert a few of the unbelievers.

Mr. Byrne: Don't be too sure.

Mr. Dinsdale: I think the greatest conversion, however, was that of the Secretary of State for External Affairs himself; because during the three years this treaty has been under discussion he himself has come to embrace the viewpoint of the former administration that this is an essentially good, basically sound treaty for the government and the people of Canada.

We spent some time in the committee discussions considering this particular point, and I am not going to rehash the discussion at this time. It is to be found in the voluminous evidence for posterity for those who wish to pursue the subject. But I was interested in getting clarification on this point because I had some slight part in the early negotiation. I think it was demonstrated to the satisfaction of all concerned that the treaty was basically sound and good, and the protocol, on which a great deal of emphasis has been placed by the new administration, was merely a clarification of the principles that had been laid down by this treaty.

I say, Mr. Speaker, that this represents a very significant conversion indeed, because if we were to rehash the record—and I have it before me—we could indicate that the Liberal party which now forms the administration—and I see the hon. member—

Mr. Byrne: There are conversions every day.

Mr. Dinsdale: —for Kootenay East (Mr. Byrne) smiling at me because he knows what I am talking about at the moment—we could put on the record the strong opposition that the Liberal party, when it was in opposition, took against the treaty that had been negotiated by the former Conservative administration. As I listened to the statements by members of the New Democratic party it seemed to me that the position they take now is very similar to the position the Liberal party took when it was in opposition.

Mr. Herridge: That is correct.

Mr. Dinsdale: The members of the New Democratic party still have not been converted to the viewpoint that this is a basically sound treaty. The amendment they put forward yesterday indicates, I think, that they take an attitude very similar to that adopted by the Liberal party when it was in opposition; they want every "i" dotted and every "t" crossed so as to spell out the specific details of the program. This is what the Liberal party, when it became the government, attempted to do in the protocol. It wanted certain points refined and certain ambiguities eliminated. It seems to me this is precisely the position which is taken by the amendment which was put forward yesterday by the hon. member for Greenwood, because it referred to the negotiation of a further protocol or an exchange of letters clarifying the right of Canada to divert, and so on. In other words the hon. member wants to pinpoint a specific aspect of the problem.

This is a complex matter. All the engineering witnesses who appeared before the committee and who had anything to do with the negotiation of the treaty say that this is the most complex instrument which has ever been negotiated in the history of Canada. It is politically complex, it is scientifically complex, and it is quite impossible to spell out in infinite detail every minute aspect in this matter.

In negotiations between Ottawa and a provincial authority and Ottawa and the United States government there has to be a basis of mutual trust, confidence and faith. One could go on drawing up protocols till doomsday and one still would not be able to guarantee that within the principles outlined by the treaty one would have the precise situation desired with regard to any particular facet of the agreement.

Mr. Douglas: Could I ask the hon. gentleman a question at this point?

Mr. Dinsdale: Yes, certainly.

Mr. Douglas: It is not a matter of dotting "i's" and crossing "t's". Since this is a treaty for 60 years and the legal terminology is important, are my hon. friend and the party with which he is associated satisfied that the treaty gives to Canada the right to divert water from the Columbia river if hydroelectric generation is involved in the consumptive use?

Mr. Dinsdale: I intend to deal with this specific point. In fact I am going to spend most of my time dealing with this right of diversion, if I can delay my answer until that time.

I come now to the criticisms which have been raised. I am not going to deal with the engineering aspects as to the relative advantages of the various sequences. This is another point which is debatable, and the decision has been made to accept the treaty sequence. Neither shall I deal with the merits of the high Arrow versus the low Arrow, because that matter has been dealt with. Notwithstanding the remarks of the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands, I feel that this question has been dealt with in a very competent and comprehensive way by the engineers who appeared before the committee. The hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands suggested that these witnesses were all prejudiced engineering witnesses inasmuch as they were from the respective governments which had negotiated the treaty. However, I would point out that the Montreal engineering firm is made up of a consortium of engineers of the widest experience.

With regard to the time factor, much was made of the fact that the engineer who appeared before the committee on behalf of the water resources branch was a comparatively young man of about ten years' experience.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Perhaps my hon. friend will agree that his testimony before that committee indicated his exceptional competence and his dedication to the task assigned to him by the government. I think it is only fair that we should say this, because of the suggestions which have been made that public servants have not discharged their duties conscientiously.

Mr. Dinsdale: Mr. Speaker, hon. members are taking my words right out of my mouth this morning and are anticipating everything I am going to say.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): This man is an outstanding public servant.

Mr. Dinsdale: However, the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands made something of the fact that this gentleman had only ten years' experience in engineering, and this was entirely within the framework of the water resources branch of the Department of Northern Affairs and National Resources. But I would point out that his opinion was strongly supported by this consortium of the most outstanding authorities who are identified with the Montreal engineering firm. I would say that the very fact that they confirmed the opinion of Mr. Gordon MacNabb shows his competence in the matter. As the Secretary of State for External Affairs has indicated, Mr. MacNabb performed in brilliant fashion before the committee. I worked with Mr. MacNabb when I was minister of northern affairs and when Mr. MacNabb was operating behind the scenes. I think this was the first occasion on which he had appeared in the lion's den in the form of the parliamentary committee on external affairs, and he demonstrated beyond shadow of a doubt that he was fully competent as an engineer to deal with the engineering complexities of this treaty.

I should like also to carry this question of criticism of the Canadian negotiators a little further. Some strong sentiments have been expressed that the Canadian team of negotiators were completely incompetent to wrestle with their more capable counterparts from the United States. We had the pleasure of listening to a former illustrious member of this house and member of the former government, Hon. Davie Fulton, who appeared before the committee to explain his role as chief negotiator for this treaty. I am sure that he too demonstrated a grasp of the subject that was more than impressive. He had been away from the treaty since he left this chamber. He had not been closely in touch with it for some two years, but he indicated it was no superficial knowledge that he had. He was able to pinpoint the trouble areas, the areas which had been criticized so repetitiously by the critics of the treaty, and I am sure he demonstrated that as the chief negotiator he had all the competence which was required.

Some remarks have been made concerning other engineers who appeared before the committee, remarks indicating a somewhat critical nature. I should like to compare—and I realize all hon. members have not had the opportunity to read the committee reports—the engineering competence displayed by the Montreal engineering representatives and by Mr. Gordon MacNabb as contrasted with that displayed by such critics of the treaty as Mr. James Libby and Mr. Larratt Higgins. It seemed to me that they were more concerned with political polemics than they were with the scientific engineering aspects of the treaty. I need only refer to a publication distributed during the course of the committee hearing, the Engineering and Contract Record, which bore on the front in bold red print the words "The Columbia River Scandal". This sounded more like an article in a lurid pulp magazine than an article in a scientific journal such as the Engineering and Contract Record. As I listened to these gentlemen I came to the conclusion that one of the reasons they had abandoned a strictly scientific approach to the problem and had begun to indulge in the sort of polemics demonstrated in this article was that they had been overwhelmed by the immense prestige of that distinguished Canadian, General McNaughton, who had in recent months taken a strongly critical view of the treaty.

Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, may I rise on a question of privilege. I noticed that the hon. member included the name of Mr. Higgins in his strictures with regard to certain witnesses before the committee. He also suggested that Mr. Higgins appeared as an engineering expert, but it was made perfectly plain that Mr. Higgins was an experienced hydroelectric economist, and it was in that role that he appeared before the committee. I think this should be made clear, and I object very much to Mr. Higgins being subjected to these strictures.

Mr. Dinsdale: Mr. Speaker, in addition to referring to engineering competence I believe I also referred to scientific competence, and I hope that term is broad enough to cover the representations of Mr. Higgins, who is a social scientist. He is a practitioner of the dismal science of economics. I was endeavouring to be fair. We thought he was going to give scientific evidence, and instead he indulged in polemics. I can give examples if you wish.

Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): I should certainly like to hear them.

Mr. Dinsdale: All right. I have in front of me a summary of an article by Mr. Higgins which appeared in the Globe and Mail on January 14 and 15, 1964. In that article he used words to the effect that "John Diefenbaker retained visions of immortality" and he "wanted to sign the treaty". This is Mr. Higgins' explanation of the signing of the treaty on January 17, 1961.

Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): May I suggest that this is quite irrelevant. It was not said before the committee.

An hon. Member: You asked for it.

Mr. Dinsdale: The hon. member asked for it.

Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): This is typical misrepresentation.

Mr. Dinsdale: If I may be allowed to continue, Mr. Speaker, I have been trying to indicate that there were political polemics involved, and I have been trying to demonstrate that fact from the article written by Mr. Higgins which appeared in the Globe and Mail on the dates I have indicated. That was Mr. Higgins' point of view.

Before the committee Hon. Mr. Williston, representing the province of British Columbia, was asked specifically why there was seeming haste in signing the treaty on January 17. I asked that question with Mr. Higgins' accusation in mind. Mr. Williston said that British Columbia wanted to sign the treaty because they were afraid the treaty would have to be negotiated all over again as a consequence of the imminent change of government in the United States. It will be recalled that President Eisenhower signed the treaty just before the change of government in Washington. I say that Mr. Higgins' opinion was hardly an engineering or economic one, and that he was indulging in political polemics.

To go on with my remarks, I think these gentlemen were impressed and overawed by the tremendous prestige of General McNaughton, who has been one of the most severe critics of the treaty in recent months. Indeed, the Prime Minister himself came under the influence of the prestige of the same gentleman. I have a statement before me extracted from the Globe and Mail of April 9, 1962, which reads as follows:

> In a statement issued earlier from his office at Ottawa following General McNaughton's charges Friday night, Mr. Pearson said the treaty should be renegotiated at once by a Canadian government which would pay sufficient regard to Canada's interests. General McNaughton would have been a most effective person to act for Canada in the renegotiation of the treaty, which is now more necessary than ever.

The Prime Minister made that statement in 1962, and it indicates that he too was impressed and overawed by the great reputation of General McNaughton, who is a distinguished Canadian. But the Prime Minister has changed his mind. Many competent engineers have changed their minds, and I am hoping that before the debate concludes all hon. members will agree that this is the best possible treaty under the circumstances.

On the subject of General McNaughton's evidence I want to make it abundantly clear that his major opposition to the treaty came after the signing of the treaty on January 17, 1961. This was brought out in the evidence because, as Hon. Mr. Fulton intimated, when it was put to the members of the negotiating team whether the treaty should be recommended to cabinet for referral to the house for approval General McNaughton, while he criticized certain engineering aspects of the treaty, did not disagree with its referral to cabinet to be followed by the approval of parliament. Indeed, he did not come out as a strong opponent of the treaty until April of 1962.

Before I move on to the diversion question to which I referred earlier, there is another aspect of this problem I should like to mention. I think Mr. Fulton demonstrated his basic integrity when he was asked whether he had been a critic of certain aspects of the treaty. He indicated that he was still a critic of certain aspects of the treaty, but he said that he took the matter to the people of British Columbia in the most direct way possible, by way of a direct appeal to the electorate, and the people of British Columbia had made their opinion known in no uncertain terms and in a democratic society we must, after all, accept the verdict of the people.

Mr. Barnett: I wonder whether the hon. member who has the floor, and who comes from another province, is aware that the question of the Columbia river treaty was hardly mentioned in the last British Columbia election campaign.

Mr. Dinsdale: I have only to take the word of Hon. Davie Fulton, who campaigned in the province of British Columbia.

Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Some of us campaigned, too, and we never heard him speak of it.

Mr. Dinsdale: Mr. Speaker, I think it was Winston Churchill who said that democracy is the worst form of government except all other kinds, and we must accept the verdict of the people.

I come now to the question of jurisdiction, which involves the problem of diversion. I am not going to give any legal opinions here, but where there is a resource which basically belongs to the provincial authorities, and especially where there are areas of joint responsibility, there is no absolute legal opinion that can be rendered to clarify this point. It was for this reason that the former Conservative government in 1961 called together the resources for tomorrow conference. One of the most difficult and critical areas of discussion was this problem of jurisdictional dispute.

To assist in resolving the jurisdictional difficulty a resource ministers council was set up with a secretariat to advise and undertake basic research. It is hoped that from this new breakthrough the continuing jurisdictional difficulties will be resolved.

The question of diversion, Mr. Speaker, is one that I want to dwell upon for just a moment, particularly diversion to the prairies. Here is what Hon. Mr. Fulton said on that particular question:

> The incredible thing here—as with the other criticisms with which I shall deal—is that those who make them show a blithe disregard for the specific, black and white provisions of the treaty —even after their attention has been drawn to them. Or at most they make a grudging admission—"Oh yes—you have safeguarded that right specifically in the treaty, but of course, because of the treaty we will never be able to exercise."

Then Mr. Fulton invited the committee to look at the facts in respect of three areas where this type of criticism is most often asserted. He dealt specifically with the alleged loss of the right of diversion to the prairies or for irrigation and domestic use there or elsewhere. Here is what Mr. Fulton, the chief negotiator, said:

> The fact is that the only restriction is with respect to diversion for power purposes, and then only for the duration of the treaty.

This answers the question that was posed just a moment ago by the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam (Mr. Douglas). Mr. Fulton indicated that he was fully aware of this problem of diversion, and the treaty was specifically negotiated to take care of all matters with regard to diversion with the exception of diversion for power purposes. Obviously this reservation had to be made because this was, after all, a treaty for the development of power, and there had to be a reservation of this character. There is no restriction on diversion for consumptive purposes—

Mr. Herridge: That is pure hypocrisy.

Mr. Dinsdale: —and that includes irrigation and all ordinary domestic uses.

Now, Mr. Speaker, there is just one other aspect with which I want to deal before my time expires. We must take into consideration the fact that this treaty was not negotiated in isolation. It was the hon. member for Greenwood who said that we wondered why he, a Torontonian, was taking part in this discussion. He has every right to take part in this discussion. The Columbia river treaty was part of a broad policy of national development of the former Conservative administration. A new policy enunciation to permit the export of power, was a breakaway from the old, outworn Liberal policy which had operated since after world war I. There was a decision to go ahead with plans for a national power grid which would make it possible to build, first of all on a regional and provincial basis and then on a national basis, long distance high voltage transmission lines which would make it possible to shunt power back and forth across the country. This makes power a basic consideration in relation to this treaty.

I have one final word, Mr. Speaker. I feel I should utter a word of caution about the importance of emphasizing the wise management and multiple use concept in any resource development. Critics of the treaty have indicated that there has not been sufficient provision for the intangible values in the treaty. I agree heartily and enthusiastically with this viewpoint. This is something that comes under the jurisdiction of the province of British Columbia. We have had repeated assurances from the B.C. hydroelectric authority and from the representatives of the provincial government that these matters are being taken into consideration. This subject, of course, lies within the responsibility of that province. I am sure that if we look at this objectively, if we look at this without any narrow political bias, if we look at this in terms of the long term economic importance of the development of this resource, we will all agree that the Columbia river treaty is a good treaty. It was negotiated, as will be revealed by a close examination of the evidence, with the new concept of the development of renewable resources, the wise management and multiple use concept, in mind.

I am not going to venture into the realm of prophecy as to how history will judge this treaty. This is beyond my ken and the ken of anyone. I think, having had the privilege of listening to such a large amount of evidence, I can safely say that within our capacity, within the capacity of the former government and the present government and the parliament of Canada, we need have no hesitancy in giving our approval to this treaty.

Mr. Pascoe: I have a few words to say on this subject. May I call it one o'clock?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Could we go on for a few minutes and complete this speech?

Mr. Herridge: One o'clock.

At one o'clock the house took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The house resumed at 2.30 p.m.

Mr. J. E. Pascoe (Moose Jaw-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, as I indicated at one o'clock I have a few remarks to make on the Columbia river treaty and two questions to ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Martin), before this very important international agreement passes through the house.

I represent an area of southern Saskatchewan that is vitally interested in assured, adequate water supplies for future development. Other hon. members have emphasized Saskatchewan's situation in this regard and it is not necessary to repeat their statements except to say—and say it very forcibly—that the Saskatchewan river basin is the only significant source of surface water for the settled portion of the prairie region. In the foreseeable future the south branch of the river, the South Saskatchewan river as we call it, in its present drainage basin will not fill all the demands that will be made on it.

My concern over the Columbia river treaty, and I know this concern is shared by my colleagues, is in regard to Saskatchewan's prospects for diversion of additional water where feasible, and when needed. In this regard, Mr. Speaker, I would like to read a portion of a report in the Moose Jaw Times-Herald of October 31, 1963, a report of a meeting of the Saskatchewan rivers development association. It states:

> Diversion of waters from western and northern Canadian rivers into Saskatchewan was advocated by two dinner speakers at the Saskatchewan rivers development association annual meeting here Friday.

One of the speakers was the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources (Mr. Laing), and the report states:

> Calling for a greater understanding and sympathy with the problems of all parts of Canada rather than just one province, Mr. Laing said the prairies would suffer a crisis water shortage unless flow is increased.
> In addition to predicted population increases, Mr. Laing added that to produce a ton of wheat, 1,500 tons of water are required. Water is essential for agriculture, domestic and industrial use, energy and transportation, he said.
> Saskatchewan and the prairie provinces in general have the lowest precipitation rate in Canada —16 inches per year, and as low as 12 inches. Evaporation and transpiration through plants takes up most of this, leaving only an approximate three inches for run-off into rivers, the lowest rate in Canada.

To add to this, Mr. Speaker, there is another report in the Times-Herald of May 26, 1964, which originated from Calgary. The opening paragraph of this report reads:

> Alberta proposes to retain some of the water now flowing through the North and South Saskatchewan river systems into Saskatchewan and Manitoba when the province needs additional supplies, R. E. Bailey, chief engineer for the Alberta water resources department, said Monday.

I think these news reports indicate why we are concerned in southern Saskatchewan over future water sources. In this regard I wish to read an excerpt from an editorial in the Moose Jaw Times-Herald of May 19, 1964, which deals with the brief that was presented by the government of Saskatchewan with respect to the Columbia river treaty to the standing committee on external affairs, on May 14. This excerpt from the editorial recalls that at page 82 of the brief it is stated:

> The government of Canada should insist that our rivers be viewed as a part of the total water supply of Canada and it has an obligation to ensure the best distribution and use of this water for the nation as a whole.

I want to obtain a definite assurance from the minister in direct language, not in his usual language which is sometimes very difficult to understand clearly, that the treaty does not deny the province of Saskatchewan the right to divert water from the Columbia river into the south Saskatchewan river if such a diversion is feasible and can be carried out in co-operation with the province and the authorities concerned.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): There is no doubt about it, no doubt at all.

Mr. Pascoe: Perhaps the hon. gentleman would give us that assurance when he speaks. As for the brief submitted by the government of Saskatchewan to the external affairs committee on May 14, let me say I am not a member of that committee but I did hear some of the presentations. The arguments in favour of Saskatchewan's right to economically feasible water diversions were clearly presented. There are two questions I should like the minister to answer. I represent the city of Moose Jaw and a large part of the city of Regina. These two cities depend almost completely on water from the south Saskatchewan river which has been pumped over a height of land down the Qu'Appelle valley but which will flow down by gravity when the South Saskatchewan river dam is complete and the huge reservoir is filled. As Moose Jaw and Regina continue to grow, will the Columbia river treaty deny them the right to have water diverted from the Columbia if, as I say, this is feasible? The hon. member for Brandon-Souris (Mr. Dinsdale) states that in his opinion the treaty does not deny this right. Will the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Martin) give us this positive assurance?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I have already given that assurance.

Mr. Pascoe: Well, I should like to have the hon. gentleman stand up and put it on the record.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): In answer to the hon. member's question, as was pointed out in the evidence by many witnesses, including the former minister of justice who was the negotiator with respect to the treaty signed in 1961, there is no doubt that article XIII (1) provides for a clear right of diversion for consumptive use.

Mr. Pascoe: Thank you. I wish to have that on record. I think I have heard the minister define what "consumptive use" means.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): That is provided for in the section on interpretation of the treaty.

Mr. Pascoe: My second question concerns the stand taken by the government of Saskatchewan. The brief which the external affairs committee considered was put forward by the Lloyd government. Has the minister or the government received the views of the new Saskatchewan government? I would appreciate an answer to that question, also.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): In reply to that further question—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. Perhaps I could direct the hon. member's attention to the fact that we are not in committee at this time and that if the minister speaks he will close the debate. I suggest that the minister reply to questions put by hon. members in the course of his closing remarks.

Mr. Pascoe: Thank you. That is the course I thought would be taken. Would the minister take note, then, of those two questions to which I would appreciate an answer.

Mr. Charles J. M. Willoughby (Kamloops): I hope to put on record one of the briefest speeches on this subject, though I hope it will not be the least pertinent, with regard to the resolution before us. I spoke on this matter on March 5, as recorded in Hansard on pages 585-588, and hon. members who recall that speech will recognize that as a member of the committee on external affairs which considered this treaty I entered the committee with a definite prejudice in favour of that treaty.

I did so because I had complete confidence in those who negotiated the original treaty. In particular, I had complete confidence in my predecessor, the former member for Kamloops, Hon. Davie Fulton. I had complete confidence, also, in the results of the 18 years of study which had preceded the negotiation of this treaty by the engineers, the legal advisers and the economists who helped prepare it on Canada's behalf. I had complete confidence, too, in the Department of External Affairs which negotiated the protocol, and complete confidence in the ability of the engineering staff led by Mr. Gordon MacNabb who looked into all the details of the negotiations.

For these reasons I entered the committee with prejudice. The question was studied during the hearings—there were probably 48 or 49 sittings through which I sat—and I came away more confident than ever that this treaty is in the best interests of Canada, of British Columbia and of everyone concerned. We studied it from the point of view of power, flood control and diversion. I do not intend to go into all these details; they have been adequately dealt with by other speakers. If any hon. member is still in doubt after listening to the speeches already made on this subject, I suggest he refer to the large volume containing the records of our hearings where he will find that the matters I have mentioned are thoroughly gone into.

As I have said, I came away more confident than ever that Canadian rights are protected, that our sovereignty is protected and that this treaty is in the best interests of everyone concerned. So I stand here as the representative of one of the constituencies in the interior of British Columbia, thoroughly endorsing the treaty because of direct interest as well as national interest. I conclude by saying to the house once more: Let us get on with the job.

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Before proceeding with the main portion of my remarks I cannot resist commenting on the observations made by the hon. member for Kamloops (Mr. Willoughby) with respect to his confidence in the terms of the original treaty—his confidence in the actions of the present government and in Mr. Fulton's magic. Does he not remember that when Mr. Fulton appeared before the committee and was asked if he still confirmed his previously expressed opinion that this was the biggest sell-out in history since Manhattan island was sold by the Indians, he did not withdraw those remarks?

Mr. Willoughby: May I ask the hon. member a question? Would he tell the house how those remarks originated? They were entirely in connection with the downstream benefits—the benefits being sold rather than returned to British Columbia.

Mr. Herridge: Quite right, and they are being sold today in the very circumstances about which the former minister of justice complained.

Mr. Willoughby: Different circumstances.

Mr. Herridge: I am not answering any more questions. I have a lot to say. The only answer the former minister of justice had to make to the committee with respect to his change of view is that there was an election and it was the second time this tragic figure in Canadian political history, the former minister of justice, bowed his head to the premier of British Columbia in defeat. Certainly, there had been an election, but the election in British Columbia was not on the Columbia question throughout the province.

Mr. Macdonald: On a question of privilege. Obviously, I hold no brief for the former minister of justice, but what I do say is that the hon. member for Kootenay West is misrepresenting the situation. The former minister made it clear to the committee that he had changed his opinion on this matter, because with Peace river power going into the British Columbia system there would be no market for the downstream benefits of the Columbia project. That was his reason; not what the hon. member said.

Mr. Herridge: The former minister of justice said he had not changed his opinion or the reasons for his previous remarks. He said there had been an election, and he mentioned the Peace power development.

An hon. Member: There was an election.

Mr. Herridge: There was an election, but the election was not on this issue; the election was on the issue of highways, home owner grants and so on. Where there was an election on this issue, let me tell you, Mr. Speaker, was in Kootenay West in the federal election of 1963; and the only candidate of the four running with me who came out in full support of all aspects of the Columbia river treaty was at the bottom of the poll, the Social Credit candidate, with something over 4,000 votes. The candidate from the hon. member's party came out against the treaty; he stood on the platform with me and that Liberal candidate and I were both denouncing this iniquitous treaty. That was an election where this was an issue, because I represent a constituency which is greatly concerned with this matter. I must get on, Mr. Speaker, or else the hatchet man from Rosedale will be taking my time, and I hope that if he does, Your Honour—

Mr. Macdonald: On a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member said I will be taking his time. I can assure him it would be much better used, if I did, than any use he would make of it.

Mr. Herridge: That is a matter of opinion; but that represents the quality of the hon. member's remarks to the committee. I would ask him to wait till I have finished what I have to say this afternoon.

Mr. Douglas: He has been very quiet throughout this debate, you will notice.

Mr. Macdonald: Why don't you follow my example?

Mr. Douglas: That is the worst thing I could do.

Mr. Herridge: I rise this afternoon, Mr. Speaker, to express our complete opposition to this treaty as a very bad treaty for Canada. I say that from a completely non-partisan point of view, which point of view is supported by prominent Liberals, by prominent Conservative and some members of the Social Credit party in my own constituency, plus a large number of my party fans who have continued to support me throughout the vicissitudes of 19 years of political life. In this connection, Mr. Speaker, I want to quote one of General McNaughton's recent statements which was supported and endorsed by Mr. Larratt Higgins, Mr. James Ripley, Mr. F. J. Bartholomew and other engineers. I am doing this, Mr. Speaker, in order to save my time and present in as few words as possible my basic argument. The question is, "What are the basic objectives for Canada?" In this connection General McNaughton said the following:

> —too many people have overlooked the basic purpose of the treaty, which, for Canada, is to secure the best possible development of the Canadian section of the Columbia basin. The United States has developed its section in its own way. Our essential objective must be to develop our section in our own best interest, then share with the United States the added benefits that stem from co-operative use of the water.
> No treaty on the Columbia can serve Canada effectively, unless it satisfies the following three principles:
> 1. As much of the water which is stored in Canada as possible must be stored at as high an elevation as supply permits. This allows the best physical use of this resource for both countries and provides the most flexibility for all time to adapt to changing needs as these needs develop.

The first of these will be an increasing need for irrigation.

> 2. Control of the waters stored in the Canadian part of the basin must remain in Canadian hands, just as the United States insists, rightly, on complete control of its flows.
> 3. Over and above the development that each country does for itself, the further benefits that can be achieved by co-operative effort must be shared equitably.

The next question, Mr. Speaker, is, "Does the treaty meet the basic objectives for Canada?" General McNaughton said:

> The...treaty offends...in almost every article.
> 1. Storage at the highest elevation means the fullest use of reservoirs at Mica and Bull river-Luxor. The...treaty does precisely the opposite by placing most of the storage along the United States border in high Arrow and Libby, which are at the lowest possible points available.
> 2. Control of the Kootenay flows is placed entirely in United States hands because Libby is in United States territory and Canada has no right under the treaty...to control the outflow. Control of the Columbia river flows is placed effectively in United States hands by...physically locating high Arrow at the border where it is of little use to Canada, and...making the criterion of operation of Canadian storage the optimization of benefits for the entire system and by requiring joint approval of any operating plans that depart from system optimization.

This gives the United States a veto over anything we do in our storages, Mr. Speaker:

3. The recompense we are to receive under the...treaty is far from equitable either for flood control or power. For power, we receive only 40 per cent of the downstream benefits and even this amount declines over the years while the actual value of our storage to the United States actually increases. For flood control, $64 million (in United States funds) is the payment for a service that would cost the United States $700 million to perform itself.

The next question is, "Has the protocol done much to improve upon the treaty", and General McNaughton said in this regard:

The servitude on Canada was serious under the treaty, as I have been at pains to point out and explain to Mr. Martin, and he has admitted the cogency of the warning I have given, but in the protocol he has indeed, in fact, made our position very much worse—

I was going to make a reference to Mr. Fulton on this subject, but the hon. member for Kamloops (Mr. Willoughby) provided me with an introduction along those lines. Once again let me say I have a great deal of sympathy for Mr. Fulton, who himself made this the issue in the provincial election, but that it was not the issue is clearly indicated from the results of his efforts.

We listened to the evidence presented to the committee by Hon. Paul Martin, Secretary of State for External Affairs, and I pay him a tribute as a great political engineer. I notice from the minutes of the committee proceedings that we heard evidence from the Secretary of State for External Affairs, officials of the various branches of the federal government, the government of British Columbia, with Hon. R. G. Williston, minister of lands, forests and water resources, Hon. R. W. Bonner, Q.C., attorney general; A. F. Paget, deputy minister of water resources, and Gordon Kidd, deputy comptroller of water rights. From the government of Saskatchewan we listened to one of the finest briefs that came before that committee. I am sorry that more hon. members have not read that brief thoroughly, or they would not be adopting the arguments of the Secretary of State for External Affairs with regard to the question as to whether the rights of diversion into the South Saskatchewan river are preserved. Certainly they are, for consumptive uses, but they should ask the minister whether they can at the same time produce the hydroelectric power necessary to make this economical. That is the complete question.

Then we had evidence from David Cass-Beggs, general manager, Saskatchewan Power Corporation; J. W. MacNeill, executive director, south Saskatchewan river development commission; Barry Strayer, associate professor, college of law, University of Saskatchewan. Then, from the British Columbia hydro and power authority we heard from Dr. H. L. Keenleyside, chairman of the hydro authority, and other officials. In the report of the committee there is also mention of special witnesses, General Hon. A. G. L. McNaughton, C.H., C.B., C.M.G., D.S.O., former chairman, Canadian section, international joint commission; Hon. E. D. Fulton, P.C., Q.C., former minister of justice and chief negotiator, Columbia river treaty. He gave what I would term his political sunset address before the committee.

Then we had engineering consultants and firms and many other interesting witnesses, including Mr. Larratt Higgins, Mr. F. J. Bartholomew, Mr. Richard Deane, and numerous representatives of labour and other organizations. I just want to mention in this respect, before passing on, that the great concern of many people who have been interested in this treaty has been from the water aspect of it. Power can be produced in other ways in years to come, but the evidence indicates that water is becoming more and more valuable. In this connection, Mr. Speaker, I want to quote from the Globe and Mail of Tuesday, June 2, 1964. The article is headed, "Water distribution feared crisis of future", and it says:

The problem of distributing fresh water to the people of the world has not yet reached the crisis stage but it must get priority attention if a serious emergency is to be avoided, a U.S. waterworks engineer told the American water works association in Toronto yesterday.

W. R. LaDue, who lectures foreign engineers at the University of Akron, Ohio, said 75 per cent of the world's people live in communities with contaminated water.

He told his audience of waterworks engineers from most parts of the United States and Canada that the total of all the world's water does not decrease through use, but, as world population increases, the amount per person falls off. Distribution is becoming a major headache, he said.

Since yesterday I have had brought to my attention as a result of the excellent remarks on this aspect of the question by the hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Brewin) a report entitled "Natural Resources in 1984" by Mr. Michel Batisse, chief of the natural resources research division, UNESCO, Paris.

Mr. Macdonald: Where is the hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Brewin) now?

Mr. Herridge: What is the hon. gentleman saying?

An hon. Member: Why don't you keep quiet?

Mr. Macdonald: I said, where is the hon. member for Greenwood today?

Mr. Herridge: I expect he is busy in his office.

Mr. Macdonald: He has not been in the house all day.

Mr. Douglas: Where have you been most of the time?

Mr. Macdonald: Unfortunately I must listen to your colleague.

Mr. Herridge: The hon. member has the opportunity to leave if he wishes, but he seems to be leaning over his desk with both ears flapping in my direction. Mr. Batisse has this to say:

> Leaving aside the need for hydroelectric power production, for inland navigation and for recreation, where no significant withdrawal or pollution of water is involved, the amount of water used, per capita, for domestic, industrial and agricultural purposes varies enormously from country to country. It ranges, at present, from ten gallons per day in some underdeveloped areas, to the impressive figure of 1800 gallons per day in the United States, where only 6 per cent of this is for domestic uses, the rest being shared by industry and agriculture.

Then Mr. Batisse goes on to mention the tremendous crisis which is developing on this continent with respect to water and how water will cost more and more. He continues:

> As a result, there will be many progressive changes in our habits of thinking about water, about its value, about the interrelation between its uses, about the interdependence of the people living in the same basins with all the legal and political implications this involves.

That is the situation in the Columbia river basin, and on the prairies.

> There will be no shortage of water. It will just cost more. And man will begin to realize clearly how much he depends on it. This will not be new in history, since the ancient Egyptians, the Romans and the Arabs knew the value of water. But for the first time, and forever, modern civilization will become water-conscious.

That is one of the reasons we are taking a close look at the treaty.

I also have an article which has been extracted from the Portland Oregonian of April 18, in which a former senator, Len B. Jordan, said, dealing with water resources:

> The best source of more water for the lower Colorado river basin is the Columbia river.

They realized that this is the great source of water for the future, and I do not blame them for their point of view.

I want to say that I wholeheartedly support the arguments advanced by the hon. member for Greenwood and the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands (Mr. Cameron), and I will not repeat, as far as I can avoid it, any of those arguments because this is a complicated and complex question but quite often one's argument goes from one aspect to another. However, I want to bring to the attention of the house something which happened during the committee meetings and which has come to my attention, because I see that the minister of northern affairs is now in his seat. Let me say that he was noticeable for his absence as head of a department which has control over water resources. But we overlooked that, Mr. Speaker, and I will tell you why. Whenever his absence was noted—and I do not remember seeing him attend one meeting of the committee while it was discussing the Columbia river treaty—even some of his own members said to me: "Well, I will tell you why it is; he is out praying for rain, so don't bother him at this time".

Then I noticed that Mr. Patterson, who is the director of the water resources branch, the man in charge, came in on occasion, but tiptoed out again. He peeped in to see what was going on, but left the defence of this treaty entirely to that young man whom I admire for his contumacy, Mr. Gordon MacNabb.

Anyway, during the hearings Dr. Keenleyside criticized the right of members of parliament to criticize civil servants. I raised this question in the house. He said that it was constitutionally improper, which is of course a lot of rot. I am glad, Mr. Speaker, that you sustained my right as a member of parliament to criticize civil servants. We have not criticized the ability of our civil servants. We have not criticized their integrity. We have only criticized the fact that they had not sufficient funds or staff, and there is not sufficient planning which springs from adequate funds to permit them to compete with United States army engineers in planning over-all basin projects, the development of hydro, and so on.

I might say in passing that this question was raised in the British house a week or two ago because some prominent members of the Labour party criticized some of the officials in the foreign office, an almost unheard of thing in Great Britain. They said they were hangovers from the Victorian era who should be booted out, and no one questioned their right to use that strong language in respect to civil servants. This subject may be developed in this house at a later stage in our discussions on estimates.

Now, Mr. Speaker, who has spoken the harshest words about the civil servants? The hon. member for Kootenay East (Mr. Byrne), the present parliamentary secretary to the Minister of Labour, said on December 13, 1962, as reported at 2642 of Hansard for that year, the following. Mind you, this is a man who now sits close to the seats of the mighty, and I hope that all those present who are interested will listen carefully to this. He said:

It will be remembered that the Canadian team consisted first of the minister himself—

That is Mr. Fulton.

—who has been described by some of the Conservative papers as a brilliant young man. With that I am prepared to agree in that he is a Rhodes scholar; but he is not a hydroelectric engineer and I am sure he has had very little training in engineering. Then there was Mr. Robertson, deputy minister of northern affairs and national resources. I question whether he has any training in electrical engineering or hydro development.

You should see, Mr. Speaker, the dozens of letters on complex engineering problems which Mr. Robertson signed, but I will come to that later.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Is my hon. friend referring to Mr. Gordon Robertson?

Mr. Herridge: Yes.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I am sure my hon. friend agrees that Mr. Gordon Robertson's knowledge of this subject—

Mr. Douglas: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order—

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I am saying this in fairness to a public servant.

Mr. Douglas: He is not referring to a public servant. On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member who has the floor is not referring to a public servant but is reading a statement made by the hon. member for Kootenay East (Mr. Byrne) with regard to a public servant.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Oh, I am sorry.

Mr. Herridge: I am quoting your own side.

Mr. Douglas: This is when you were on this side criticizing public servants.

[Mr. Herridge.]

Mr. Herridge: The hon. member for Kootenay East went on:

Another member of the team was Mr. Ritchie of the Department of External Affairs, a man with very little knowledge of hydroelectric development. Finally, there was Mr. Bassett, the deputy minister of lands and forests of the province of British Columbia.

I am not saying that, Mr. Speaker. I have talked to a number of dear old ladies in Ottawa who tell me that Mr. Ritchie is a wonderful young man and they are very fond of him. They speak of him in the highest terms and cannot quite understand why he has followed this path lately.

The hon. member for Kootenay East went on:

On the negotiating team for the United States there was Mr. Bennett, assistant secretary of the department of interior of the United States. In this capacity he has been working on power system administration for many years. He heads the branch that deals with and sells all federally generated power in the United States including such projects as the Tennessee valley authority, the Bonneville power administration and so forth. General Istchner has been concerned with the Columbia river since early 1950.

He is chief of the army engineers and head of the Pacific northwest division of the corps of army engineers, in which region the Columbia river is situated. In addition to being chief of the corps of army engineers he held the position of head of the United States section of the international Columbia engineering board, and he entered into the negotiations with complete and comprehensive knowledge of the subject.

He mentioned that to illustrate that he thought our people did not have complete and comprehensive knowledge of the subject.

Mr. Byrne: Will the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Herridge: Certainly, if I do not have time taken off because of it.

Mr. Byrne: Will the hon. member not agree that is the identical information General McNaughton supplied both to the hon. member and myself during those discussions and that I have subsequently said, having gained further knowledge, that I believe that the Canadian negotiators and engineers were some of the most important on this continent?

Mr. Herridge: Yes, that is quite correct since the hon. gentleman became a parliamentary secretary, but not before. Before, he tramped up and down Kootenay East telling the people that the McNaughton plan was the plan.

An hon. Member: Tell the whole story.

Mr. Herridge: I will tell the whole story. I have a lot more to tell, old boy. We did not make these personal remarks. We were just sympathizing. But what do we find is brought out in the evidence before the committee? There is this fine young Canadian, Mr. Gordon MacNabb, standing, with a shortage of funds and staff, almost alone facing his counterpart, General Istchner and the whole corps of army engineers. We can understand the circumstances in which he finds himself.

During the hearings of the committee we made an effort to obtain information as to what had transpired between the negotiators and we attempted to obtain the minutes of these meetings. They were denied on the ground that they were confidential to the cabinet and covered by the oath of secrecy. However, during the time that Mr. Barry Strayer was giving evidence before the committee for the Saskatchewan government, Mr. E. R. Olson of the Department of Justice sent a note to the hon. member for St. Lawrence-St. George (Mr. Turner) who read it and later tore it into 62 pieces. It was picked up and we have managed to piece them together again. I am going to read the note.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Herridge: Let me say this before I read the note. These gentlemen from the Department of External Affairs, the water resources branch and the Department of Agriculture, all federal departments, were sitting at the back of the room and were sending up notes and whispering in the ears of Liberal members. The members of the New Democratic party never got a single note from any one of these gentlemen and they never whispered in our ears once. We feel a bit slighted about this. We think that civil servants should provide the opposition as well as the government with information.

Mr. Macdonald: You were not looking for the facts.

Mr. Herridge: I have got the note here.

An hon. Member: You were listening to McNaughton.

Mr. Herridge: It is beautifully written. This note is addressed to the hon. member for St. Lawrence-St. George. Mind you, this was written after we tried to get this information. I have the original and I am going to put it in my museum. This is what Mr. Olson wrote:

> Could you ask him—

He is asking the hon. member for St. Lawrence-St. George to ask Mr. Strayer this question. The government did not bring Mr. Olson forward to give evidence to counteract what Mr. Strayer had said, the best legal evidence that was given. They thought it was best to keep Mr. Olson quiet.

Mr. Macdonald: On a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker, that is another misrepresentation by the hon. member. Mr. Olson was brought forward and was available for examination by the hon. member for Greenwood if he had sought to question him on this point. In fact, at page 136 of the proceedings the Secretary of State for External Affairs specifically invited the hon. member for Greenwood to examine Mr. Olson on this question, and I invite the hon. member to point out to me anywhere in the hearings where the hon. member for Greenwood took advantage of this opportunity and pursued with the authors of the government's legal opinion the basis upon which this opinion was given.

Mr. Herridge: After hearing this magnificent testimony from Mr. Strayer we fully expected that the government would bring forward its legal shock troops in the form of Mr. Olson, and we were surprised that it did not. Let us get on with this note.

Mr. Macdonald: Let us get on with the facts.

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Olson is asking the hon. member for St. Lawrence-St. George to ask this question of Mr. Strayer:

> Would your opinion re out of basin diversions be changed or subject to modification if it turned out that a prior draft of the treaty contained language supporting your conclusion but was subsequently replaced with the unlimited language of the actual treaty?

Then there is a note to the hon. member for St. Lawrence-St. George from Mr. Olson in these words:

> Such is the case in fact but if it is put hypothetically there is no disclosure.

The note is signed "E. R. Olson, Department of Justice". I mention this because we object to this disclosure of information that we were denied. I have inquired about the matter and I understand that the parliamentary secretary has no right to secrets that are held by members of the privy council. This information was asked for by the committee and denied on the basis that it was confidential, but then it was disclosed by Mr. Olson to the hon. member for St. Lawrence-St. George. We object to the information being given to one member and denied to others.

Before proceeding with related aspects of this development I want to quote the hon.

member for Kootenay East again because there are some good quotations from his past history. On December 13, 1962, the hon. member for Kootenay East made these remarks, and I refer to them because there has been some question as to what was the original development with respect to negotiations, and it has been mentioned by members on this side and by others that in the first instance the government of Canada started to proceed to negotiate on the basis of the McNaughton plan. I want to bring the hon. member for Kootenay East to my support again, and this is what he said as found on page 2642 of Hansard:

> These are the teams that came face to face in a highly technical discussion. Soon after the teams got to work it would appear, as I think the minister will agree, that they had come almost to the point of signing an agreement based on the original international joint commission principles which in effect comprise the preset McNaughton plan. They were about to sign what is now considered the McNaughton plan when Premier Bennett of British Columbia or one of his negotiators walked into the negotiations, pulled the rug out from under their feet and said that there would be no flooding of the Kootenays. This was the first doublecross.

We have proof positive from the distinguished member for Kootenay East of the basis on which the original negotiations started. I do not think there should be any further reference to that subject now.

I intend to deal with many of the aspects of this question as quickly as possible, and I wish to refer now to the telegraphed petition sent to the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) and signed by 19 engineers urging further consideration of the Columbia treaty prior to ratification by parliament. In reply to a question I asked him the Prime Minister informed the house yesterday that three of these engineers had withdrawn their names as a result of a telegram they had received from him. I wish to deal with this question for a few minutes.

I have a copy of the telegram to the Prime Minister from these 19 engineers. I have a photostat copy of the original signatures, but I am not going to take the time of the house to read the telegram. It urges the Prime Minister to reconsider this question before he commits the country to an irrevocable course of development for this river. I have a copy of the Prime Minister's telegram to these people. One can see from the length of the telegram that the Prime Minister was very concerned about these 19 prominent engineers urging delay in the ratification of the treaty.

Yesterday in reply to a question I asked he mentioned that Mr. P. M. Sauder had replied that he was not supporting the petition. He says in his telegram that he is going to leave it to parliament to decide the matter. He does mention that we should retain the right to decrease the allotments to the United States if Canada is short of water at any time for domestic, municipal, industrial or irrigation purposes.

Then, there is one from Mr. J. B. Stirling, vice president, and there is one from G. H. Thomson. I am not going to take the time of the house to read them.

However, the telegram from the Prime Minister is more ambiguous and more uninforming than the official statement made by the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Martin) before the committee. You can well understand, having received this assurance from the Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Pearson), that these people might respond in this way to his appeal.

I have a copy of the metropolitan issue of the Globe and Mail which came in about half past ten this morning. There is an article in it entitled, "Commons Rejects N.D.P. Move to Add Rider to Columbia Pact." This article may be some guide as to why people have withdrawn their names. I quote:

> The engineers, among 19 who signed the petition during the annual meeting of the Engineering Institute of Canada in Banff, Alberta, last week, were John B. Stirling, of Montreal, Chancellor of Queen's University; P. M. Sauder, a life member of the institute, and G. H. Thomson, president of Calgary Power Limited.
> Mr. Thomson is also a vice president and director of Montreal Engineering Company Limited—

Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Where did we hear that name before?

Mr. Herridge: Yes, in the committee.

> —a consulting firm employed by the government in support of its defence of the Columbia treaty.

I can well understand him withdrawing his name on an appeal from the Prime Minister. I continue to quote:

> The president of Montreal Engineering, G. A. Gaherty is chairman of Calgary Power.

You see why there can be reasons for these names being withdrawn on appeal from the Prime Minister that they should be withdrawn, knowing that if this treaty goes through the parliament of Canada the government of British Columbia or the B.C. hydro authority will be needing consultants on a very large scale. I just mention this to indicate possible reasons for the withdrawal of these names.

The people of Canada do not know what has gone on in connection with this treaty. I have had some experience with a professor at the University of British Columbia who sent a letter stating he was all for negotiation; that he wanted to see Canada get a better deal from the United States. Then, there was a communication to him from a certain person and he withdrew that paragraph of his letter. We have, too, the chancellor of Queen's University withdrawing his name from those who opposed the treaty. I wish I could tell this house what some of the employees of B.C. hydro and other organizations have told me in British Columbia. There has been a deliberate effort on the part of both governments to muster their forces in order to, shall I say, dampen down any technical opposition to this treaty.

Now before proceeding to deal with some of our objections to the treaty, I wish to emphasize the fact that while the government witnesses were either devoted civil servants or the representatives of mercenary institutions, all those who opposed the treaty were volunteers. In a good many cases, they were willing to serve Canada by giving consideration to this problem over a period of several years, and in some cases they spent their own money to inform the people of the circumstances surrounding this treaty. I wish to pay a particular tribute to the members of the trade unions, farmers organizations, chambers of commerce, women's institutes and rod and gun clubs in British Columbia, who have taken such an interest in this problem and in the various aspects of the treaty.

In contrast to that, I just want to make a short reference to a statement made to the press yesterday by Hon. James Sinclair, who is the leader of young Liberal thought in British Columbia. I never read such political cynicism in my life. I quote from this article:

> James Sinclair, the dynamic go-go-go backbench Liberal M.P. who staged parliament's only "sit-out strike" to win his way into cabinet, was back on his old parliament hill political stamping grounds yesterday.
> And with news.
> To wit:
> "Nobody, but nobody, believe me, on the west coast gives a damn about the flag."
>
> And this is strange, he admits.
> For only so very recently British Columbia was actually, as he describes it, "British British Columbia," almost rather an outpost of the old empire, or at least the commonwealth, than a Canadian province.
> But as British as British Columbia may have been, people out there on the Pacific, to hear Jimmy Sinclair tell it, have more to occupy their time than arguing over flags.
> "We're all too busy making money to be bothered by that flag jazz," he reported.
>
> "You can't beat a boom as a box office attraction, and we've got a dandy going for us."
> "Nobody's seeing maple leaves or even union jacks, their eyes are too full of dollar signs."

Did you ever hear so cynical a statement from a Liberal, one of the leaders of young Liberal thought in British Columbia? Now, you see what is behind this treaty, the thinking behind it, in some respects. That is the dollar sign and not the welfare of Canadians as a whole, not the welfare of this and future generations. I say this statement is completely untrue. This is a libel on the people of British Columbia. I respect anyone's view. He may want a distinctive national flag or may wish to retain the red ensign or see some other national flag. I respect the views of these people as Canadians so long as they are sincere and they believe in these things. When people take these views, it means they are not thinking of the dollar as the only sign. They have devotion to this country and loyalties that stir their sentiments and their motives. What Mr. Sinclair has said is not true of British Columbia in respect of flags, whichever side the people take, or on this question.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I am sure we all want the hon. gentleman to give his views on the Columbia treaty and not to confuse them with any other subject.

Mr. Herridge: The minister is trying to divert me. I have the river of criticism flowing in the right direction.

I mention this statement by Mr. Sinclair because I want to contrast that with the devotion of hundreds of thousands of trade unionists, members of farmers institutes, women's institutes, chambers of commerce and labour organizations, in B.C. and in Kootenay West. I want to mention the time they have spent dealing with this treaty, the meetings they have had, the literature they have published and the money they have donated to carry on a campaign against this infamous document, and I want to compare that with the cynicism of the leader of young Liberal thought in British Columbia. These people were not thinking about dollars, they were thinking about Canada and that is why we are objecting to this treaty at the present time.

I wanted to refer to something the hon. member for Brandon-Souris (Mr. Dinsdale) mentioned. He criticized Mr. Ripley in quite harsh terms, and Mr. Higgins. He made some reference to Mr. Ripley talking politics or polemics, something of that sort. He did not advance any arguments for or against the treaty; he just gave a sort of gospel bell sermon. In order to indicate that there are engineers who agree with this position, I may say that there have been thousands of copies of this special issue sold in Canada to engineers and other persons. I have been asked for hundreds of them. People write in and say they have heard about this article. An engineer sent me a copy the other day and said he wished to bring to my attention this magnificent article, "Scandal on the Columbia". He did not realize I had already read it.

The hon. member for Brandon-Souris criticized Mr. Ripley. The hon. member for Kootenay East (Mr. Byrne) talked about having him brought in front of the committee for contempt of parliament, as did the hon. member for Rosedale (Mr. Macdonald). What happened?

Mr. Byrne: The whole article was false.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Batten): I apologize for interrupting the hon. member for Kootenay West, but the time allotted to him has expired.

Mr. Herridge: May I just complete my sentence, Mr. Speaker?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Herridge: I was just going to say that I moved a motion to call Mr. Ripley before the committee. He came to the next meeting, and who voted against having him appear before the committee? The hon. member for Brandon-Souris did. After criticizing him, he was not willing to give him an opportunity to appear before the committee, and defend his article. He had the evidence with him to defend that article.

Mr. Byrne: He could not defend it because it was full of holes, full of lies.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, I was waiting because I thought that surely some of the Liberal members who have been interjecting so frequently would want to give the house the benefit of their views on the Columbia river treaty and protocol.

Mr. Haidasz: That was done in the committee.

Mr. Douglas: Apparently there is a conspiracy of silence among Liberal members. At the beginning of this debate the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Martin) made a very short statement, consisting mainly of categorical assertions, many of which were completely inaccurate with no substantiation whatsoever, and that has been the sole contribution of the government members to this debate.

I would have thought that they would want to tell us about this treaty and the protocol. The hon. member for Kootenay East (Mr. Byrne) says that Mr. Higgins' article was full of lies and inaccuracies—

Mr. Byrne: Mr. Ripley's.

Mr. Douglas: —that Mr. Ripley's article was full of lies and inaccuracies, but I notice he has not made any speech pointing out these inaccuracies and alleged lies. Their constituents will want to know why these Liberal members have taken no part in this debate. Certainly the constituents in Kootenay East will be extremely anxious to know why their member, who fought the last election condemning the Conservative administration for the Columbia river treaty, is now supporting it, and without saying one word in this house about why he has done a complete political somersault. I think the constituents of the hon. member for Coast-Capilano (Mr. Davis) will want to know why this champion, who wrote a series of articles for the Vancouver newspapers entitled, "The Sell-Out on the Columbia," has now completely reversed his position and is as silent as the grave when this matter is being discussed.

I have noticed the haste of hon. members opposite to keep saying carried.

Some hon. Members: Right.

Mr. Douglas: They say "right", but I would point out that this treaty binds the people of Canada for 60 years. Moreover, the disposition of water, once made, when certain vested interests have been developed will not easily be changed after 60 years. In many respects the approval of this treaty will commit Canada forever, as the hon. member for Coast-Capilano said over and over again when he was debating this matter in the house back in 1962. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, we make no apology for asking the house to take some time to consider what it is giving its approval to.

I want to express my amazement that on a matter so vital to the interests of people in British Columbia in particular and to the people of Canada in general, there has been complete silence on the part of hon. members opposite. Apart from the few trite words uttered by the Secretary of State for External Affairs, the Liberal members have said absolutely nothing. I hope they are prepared to go back and tell their constituents why they have taken the veil of silence on a matter that is of such vital importance to the people of this country.

It is advisable to look briefly at the history of the Columbia river treaty, to remember that the idea of harnessing the Columbia river has been under contemplation for two decades. It offered great possibilities for international co-operation between Canada and the United States because, on the one hand, harnessing it to generate power in Canada would be beneficial to us, and harnessing it to prevent flooding in the United States would be of great benefit to the citizens of that country. Therefore both countries had a laudable objective in working out some type of co-operative agreement for the development of the Columbia river basin.

One of the men who pioneered the work in this regard was General A. G. L. McNaughton and he was successful, let it be said to his everlasting credit, when he was the chairman of the Canadian section of the international joint commission. From time to time there have been some derogatory remarks made about the General. I say that those who make them in many cases are unworthy to untie his shoelaces, because he was the man who managed to get unanimous agreement, not only from the Canadian section of the commission but from the United States section, for the development of the Columbia river basin on the basis of sequence IX A which would have been of tremendous benefit to this country.

The finest tribute that has been paid to General McNaughton's plan was paid by a former minister of justice, Hon. Davie Fulton, who has repeatedly said that this was the plan the Conservative government would have preferred. As hon. members know, there was also a joint committee which submitted a report which was called, "The Report to the Governments of the United States and Canada Relative to Co-operative Development of Water Resources of the Columbia River Basin." That report was forwarded on September 28, 1960, and it laid out some of the basic principles upon which this international co-operation might be based.

Had the plan outlined by General McNaughton, approved by the international joint commission and laid out in principle by this joint committee, been followed, we would be extremely happy today to be standing up here in support of that treaty; but the first thing that happened was that the government of British Columbia objected to the McNaughton plan and very fundamental changes were made in it. I need not go into the details of those changes because this has all been thrashed out in the external affairs committee.

Hon. Davie Fulton, who was the minister in charge of these negotiations on behalf of Canada, admitted that the treaty as drafted by him was a second best, and on that basis the previous prime minister, Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker, signed the treaty on behalf of Canada in Washington in January, 1961, and it was also signed by the President of the United States.

That treaty was not submitted to parliament, although that government was in office for more than an additional two years after the treaty was signed. It was not submitted to parliament because the previous government found that the British Columbia government, who they thought were in agreement with the treaty, balked at the idea of having the downstream benefits delivered to Canada in the form of electric power. The basis of that agreement was that 50 per cent of the increased power delivered as the result of building the dams would be delivered to British Columbia at Oliver, B.C., but Premier Bennett of British Columbia wanted to sell the downstream benefits for a cash settlement either on a continuing basis or a lump sum. And let it be said to the credit of Hon. Davie Fulton that he balked at that. He went through the length and breadth of British Columbia speaking against the idea of selling the benefits. He said in a speech at Prince George that this would be an improvident deal—that it would make us the laughingstock of the world. He refused to submit to the pressure of the government of British Columbia.

I imagine it was with a good deal of chagrin that he found that the speech from the throne in the fall of 1962 announced the intention of the Conservative government to permit the bulk sale of the power out of Canada. This, of course, pulled the rug completely from under Mr. Fulton.

Mr. Dinsdale: Would the hon. member permit a question? I believe he is aware that the treaty itself allows for the sale of downstream benefits.

Mr. Douglas: It does not allow for them on the basis on which Mr. Bennett wanted them, and this is the reason why Mr. Fulton had refused to agree with the proposition which Mr. Bennett presented. This is why he said it was an improvident deal. This was the situation at the time the previous government left office.

Throughout the two years between the time the treaty was signed and the time the present Liberal government came to office, Liberal members opposite had criticized this treaty both in the house and throughout the length and breadth of the country. I do not intend to waste the time of the house by reading back all the horrendous speeches which were made in December, 1962. I see a speech here by the hon. member for Coast-Capilano (Mr. Davis) in which he criticized the government of that day for accepting a lump sum from the United States in respect of flood control, pointing out that this was of continuing value, and that to settle for a paltry sum represented negligence on the part of the government in looking after Canadian interests. In the same speech of December 12, the hon. member for Coast-Capilano said the whole treaty should be renegotiated, and that the Libby dam and a number of others should be completely out of the picture. He said:

> I believe that the treaty should be renegotiated in the matter of principles only, naming the entities responsible for the development on each side of the border, and naming the procedures, the sequences and the principles under which the results can be divided. But no more than that, and not naming projects, because we are getting into difficulties over the individual projects.

The hon. member for Kootenay East (Mr. Byrne) made a speech on the same day similar to those he had made in British Columbia, and I have newspaper reports here outlining some of the statements he made. In this speech he came out as a champion of the McNaughton plan. He castigated the Conservative administration for approving a treaty which, he said, was a sell-out of Canadian interests. I do not wonder the hon. member has left the house. With the record of the position he took in December, 1962 set off against the position which the government is taking today I can understand any member going out and hiding his head until this debate is over. But he will have to hide his head a great deal more when he goes back to his constituency and talks to the people who elected him, as they elected some other Liberals opposite, on the firm commitment that they would renegotiate this treaty and do away with some of its worst features.

The government itself, as represented by the present Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson), committed itself during the election campaign to renegotiation of this treaty. Many people having in mind their criticism of the Columbia river treaty, and having in mind the promise of hon. members now sitting opposite that they would renegotiate it, gave them their electoral support. What have they done? Their renegotiation consists of producing a protocol—a protocol, Mr. Speaker, which does not remove any of the defects about which they complained in this house in the debates of 1962; a protocol which in the main is window dressing, a protocol which does not alter any of the basic facts of the treaty. As a matter of fact, if it had done so, then in all probability the President of the United States would have had to resubmit it to the United States congress. He has not done this, which would indicate that the protocol does not change the treaty in any major particular.

It seeks by assertion to say certain things. For instance, much has been made of the fact that there is now to be a right of appeal should any dispute about the water flow for flood control arise. What is this right of appeal? Well, the protocol says that a permanent engineering board will be established upon which Canada and the United States will be equally represented. If Canada does not agree with any of the representations made by the United States regarding the control of the water it may appeal to the permanent engineering board. But if the permanent engineering board does not agree to intervene—and it is hardly likely to intervene when half the membership is American—then the decision of the United States stands, and Canada must carry out the instructions received from the United States authorities. Is this a right of appeal? This, Mr. Speaker, is flim-flam put in to deceive the Canadian people into thinking they are getting something when they are actually getting nothing.

The other part of the protocol to which members opposite refer frequently has to do with diversion. Yesterday, for instance, when I was speaking on a point of order as reported on page 3953 of Hansard I said—and the exchange is recorded as follows:

> We are dealing here with a treaty. Unless the government of the United States and the government of Canada are agreed as to the legal meaning of this treaty, then of course difficulties may arise in the future.
> Mr. Martin (Essex East): There is no doubt about it.
> Mr. Douglas: The Secretary of State for External Affairs says there is no doubt about it. If there is no doubt about it, let him accept this amendment to make it clear beyond any shadow of doubt.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): May I point out, Mr. Speaker, that the protocol does that very thing.

And a few minutes later, as reported on page 3954, I said:

If the government is satisfied that the right of diversion is there, all it needs is a protocol signed by the United States government and the Canadian government to that effect and our fears would then become groundless.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): It now has that very thing.

Mr. Douglas: Well, let us see what we have in the protocol. The protocol says in paragraph 6 (1):

Canada and the United States of America are in agreement that article XIII(1) of the treaty provides to each of them a right to divert water for a consumptive use.

Mr. Speaker, what is the definition of "consumptive use" in the treaty? Article I(1)(e) says:

"consumptive use" means use of water for domestic, municipal, stock-water, irrigation, mining or industrial purposes but does not include use for the generation of hydroelectric power.

Mr. Speaker, the fact that the protocol says that this country has the right to divert water for consumptive use is subject to the definition, and the definition limits the use of water for consumptive purposes to these things listed, domestic, municipal, stock-water, irrigation, mining or industrial purposes. It has left out many other items; it has left out the question of increasing water flow to deal with pollution problems; it has left out water replacement. It limits the uses to which water can be put for consumptive purposes. And it goes even further; it precludes the use of water for hydroelectric purposes.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Of course it does; that is the whole point of the treaty.

Mr. Douglas: Exactly. Now the minister says it is the whole point of the treaty—

Mr. Martin (Essex East): That has always been the point.

Mr. Douglas: —to prevent water being diverted for hydroelectric purposes.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): As the primary use.

Mr. Douglas: It does not say as the primary use.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Oh, yes it does.

Mr. Douglas: Now we are coming to the essential point, Mr. Speaker, that the Secretary of State for External Affairs has been trying to foist on the Canadian people for several months, namely that if hydroelectric generation is not the primary use but is an incidental use to which the water is being put, then of course it will be permissible. But where is that in the treaty; where is it in the protocol? If that is true, I am sure the Secretary of State for External Affairs would be here today with a letter from the United States government stating that, and he would be flourishing it in our faces. But he has not got it. I challenge him to produce one legal opinion from any responsible body or individual which will substantiate his claim that this definition of the term "consumptive use" will allow water to be used for hydroelectric generation purposes, provided there are other uses at the same time. No one knows better than the Secretary of State for External Affairs that you cannot divert water and transport it any great distance unless it is used for multiple purposes, unless along with domestic, industrial use and irrigation you can also pass it through turbines and generate power to help reduce the cost. Water cannot be diverted, as the Americans have demonstrated very ably, great distances unless it can be used for multipurpose projects. The only thing that made the South Saskatchewan river project economically feasible and practicable was the fact that it could be used for power, irrigation, domestic and industrial uses. There can be no diversion that makes sense or that is either practicable or economic unless that water can be used for many other things, including the generation of hydroelectric power.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, while the minister goes around saying, "Well, we now have under the protocol the right to divert water", he knows that in practical terms we have given up the right to divert water. We have given up the thing that the joint committee agreed to in their report to the governments of Canada and the United States.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): That is not accurate, and my hon. friend knows it. That is completely inaccurate.

Mr. Douglas: I will give my hon. friend a chance to tell me how inaccurate it is.

Mr. Ryan: Mr. Speaker, would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Douglas: No, Mr. Speaker. I will accept questions from any members in the other parties who have taken part in this debate, but if the members on the other side want to express their view, let them get up and take part in this debate.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Douglas: Let them not sit here in silence acting as they do, as the lackeys for the government and taking no part in the debate, their only contribution consisting of interruptions and rather insipid questions. As I was saying, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Basford: Why are you afraid to answer questions?

Mr. Douglas: I am not afraid to answer questions, to take part in this debate or to express what I think. That does not cover my hon. friend, I can assure you, Mr. Speaker. The report—

Mr. Basford: Then accept the question.

Mr. Douglas: Mr. Speaker, if my hon. friend has anything to say, will he please get off his conscience and stand up. He has been sitting on his convictions for three days, and it is hard on him. The committee representing the two countries made their report on September 28, 1960, and set out recommended principles upon which the drafting of the treaty should proceed, and I would ask the house to remember that this was agreed to by both countries. One of the stated principles provided in part:

16.(1) Subject to subparagraph (2), Canada and the United States to refrain during the term of the treaty from

(a) diverting from the Columbia river basin any of the flow of the Columbia river above the point at which it crosses the boundary between Canada and the United States;

(b) diverting from the Columbia river basin any of the flow of any tributary which has its confluence with the river in Canada;

This was the beginning. There was to be no diversion. Then, because of the outcry on the prairies even from Liberal newspapers like the Saskatoon Star-Phoenix the government said with regard to this clause, "Ah, of course you can divert, but for consumptive purposes". That is in article XIII(1); but then in the definition consumptive use is defined so that in effect you cannot divert water because it is made uneconomic and impractical to divert it. The Secretary of State for External Affairs seems to think that if he keeps on repeating again and again that the protocol gives the right of diversion, somehow or other he will get people to believe it. He is like a witchdoctor who believes that by repetitive incantations he is somehow going to turn black into white. The fact is that this treaty and the protocol prevent diversion in any practical or economic sense. It will allow some local diversion for stock-watering, but any large scale diversion is to all intents and purposes precluded the moment this treaty goes into effect.

What does this mean? This morning's paper carries a story of the concern on the prairies at the lack of moisture. On the prairies we have periodically gone through cyclical periods of drought. Water is going to be an increasingly scarce commodity on the great plains of western Canada, not only for irrigation but also for domestic and industrial purposes. Industries are growing up on the prairies. Water is needed if those industries are to survive and expand—water for petrochemical industries, water for solution mining of potash, which is rapidly becoming one of Canada's very important industries. I make the prediction that within the next two decades water will be the most precious commodity in western Canada.

Mr. Cooper: One decade.

Mr. Douglas: My hon. friend from Rosetown-Biggar (Mr. Cooper), who has made a long study of this problem, says one decade, and I think he is right. But this treaty is for six decades, and the house ought to know what the treaty is doing. I am sure the country will realize what it is doing. We are now effectively blocking any large scale diversion of water from the Columbia to the prairies of western Canada.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): That is not the fact.

Mr. Douglas: The minister keeps saying that that is not the fact. Only a few minutes ago he said that the purpose of the treaty was to prevent water from being diverted for hydroelectric purposes.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): As the primary purpose.

Mr. Douglas: How can we divert water to the prairies unless it is used for hydroelectric generation? The minister says, not as the primary purpose; but there is nothing in the treaty which says that this is precluded only when the primary purpose is hydroelectric generation. If the minister really believes what he is saying and if he is not just trying to deceive the public, he will surely produce a legal opinion or a letter jointly signed by the Canadian and United States governments to the effect that the diversion of water for hydroelectric purposes will be permitted, if generation of water for hydroelectric purposes is not the primary function. If he believes what he says all he has to do is to accept the amendment which we proposed yesterday.

The minister has put up the argument in correspondence with the government of Saskatchewan that, after all, this is not very important, because he said in a letter which he wrote to the premier of Saskatchewan on March 31, 1964, "alternative sources exist for obtaining water supplies for the Saskatchewan river system which on any foreseeable basis are considerably less expensive to develop than a Columbia river diversion into Saskatchewan." But all of the evidence presented by the Saskatchewan government indicates that if you take into consideration a cost benefit study the Columbia is probably the most economical means of bringing water to the prairies.

You cannot base the case on cost per cubic foot. You have also to examine it on the basis of where the water will enter the South Saskatchewan river basin and what benefits it will provide. It is not the function of this house to decide whether diversion of water from the Columbia to the prairies is less expensive or more expensive than diversion from some other river. That is not our business. It will be the business of whatever government is in Saskatchewan and whatever government is in British Columbia at the time to work it out, if they desire to do so. But it is the responsibility of this parliament to see that the right to divert water and the right is kept open for future governments in Saskatchewan and British Columbia to work out an arrangement for such a diversion. I say that this treaty precludes this happening. Because it precludes this happening I think it is a bad treaty, and that it will work great hardship on the people of the prairie provinces.

These people have been through cycles of drought. They have been limited by lack of water in the development of specialized crops. They have been limited as to industrial development. Already many of their urban communities have water shortage problems. Surely it is the function of Canada's parliament to safeguard water supplies so that these people may enjoy them in the years which lie ahead. If this treaty were only for five years I would not worry about it. But this treaty is for 60 years, and if sufficient commitments of water are made to the United States it is virtually forever. Because once we have made commitments and industries have been established in the United States on the basis of a stated water supply, we, or our children and our children's children, are not going to be able to divert water 70 or 75 years from now. I should have thought that members of the government would have given some consideration to an area of Canada which has suffered so much from drought and which fights against so many natural obstacles to its development, and would have seen to it that the right to divert water would have been retained, and not precluded as it is in this treaty.

I think my time is almost up, Mr. Speaker, and I should like to say in closing that in spite of the lack of interest in this resolution which has been taken by government members it is of vital importance to the people of this country. Whether we take an interest in it or not, I predict that within a few decades there will be a storm of public disapproval against this treaty when once the full implication of its terms is realized by people of Canada. Unfortunately when that time comes their fury cannot be directed against those who are responsible because they will probably have passed from the political scene. Future generations of Canadians will look back to this day and will have a feeling of regret that we have so far forgotten our sense of duty and responsibility as to allow a treaty like this to pass without taking adequate steps to safeguard the interests of future generations.

As far as we in this party are concerned we have made our protest, and we have made it repeatedly. We made it when the matter was first brought before the house. We made it when the minister asked that this matter be referred to the committee on external affairs. Our representatives on the committee, the hon. member for Kootenay West, the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands and the hon. member for Toronto Greenwood, day after day presented our point of view in that committee to the very best of their ability, and I think they did an excellent job. We have in this debate stated our position. We have made it crystal clear that we think this treaty and protocol ought not to be passed in their present form without some clarification of the right of diversion of water where the generation of hydroelectric power is involved. We have made our stand here, Mr. Speaker, and it is on the record. The other members of the house must accept their responsibility if approval is given to this nefarious treaty.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Batten): I must advise the house that if the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Martin) speaks now he will close the debate.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker,—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Batten): The hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar (Mr. Cooper).

Mr. C. O. Cooper (Rosetown-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, I should like to say a few words in this debate having regard to the fact that we on the prairies need water from the Rocky mountains. Other speakers have dealt with the water problems of the prairies. I have been vice president of the Saskatchewan river development association since 1943 and we have always had it in the back of our minds that we would have to divert water from the slopes of the Rocky mountains in order to maintain our water supply on the prairies.

I can remember that a few years ago water was rationed in the thriving cities of Moose Jaw and Regina. If you used municipal water to wash your car or water your lawn there was a penalty imposed. We have had these experiences on the prairies, and in the last 40 years I have seen the water level going down every year. Lakes and streams where we used to hunt ducks and which were also used for water supply have dried up and in many cases farming is being carried on in those locations today. So we must look to other sources for water.

I am all in favour of water conservation by dams, dugouts and every other means that will conserve water in Canada. So far as diversion is concerned I agree with what the hon. member who just spoke said with regard to the treaty. I object to the rider providing that we can use the water for domestic purposes and so on but not for hydroelectric purposes. So far as the South Saskatchewan river project is concerned, we expect to divert some water from the Columbia into the South Saskatchewan river and when that project is completed next year we will have a hydroelectric plant developing 475 million kilowatt hours annually. What I am afraid will happen with this rider in the treaty is that when we want to divert water in 10 or 20 years the United States will say that under the treaty water is not to be diverted for power purposes. That is the main objection I have to the treaty and I conclude by saying that I cannot support the treaty with that rider in it.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Batten): Order. Once again I must warn the house that if the Secretary of State for External Affairs speaks now he will close the debate.

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, at one point in this debate, one hon. member observed that this was one of the most important matters to come before the house in a long time. With that I fully agree. It was for this reason that, after the most careful examination had been made of the project by two governments of Canada the matter none the less was referred to the committee on external affairs for further examination by the membership of the house. At the same time the committee had the opportunity of inviting the presentation of expert testimony by people with special technical knowledge both in and outside the government service of Canada and the government service of the province of British Columbia.

There has been an exhaustive inquiry. Fifty meetings of the committee were held and I attended many of those meetings, although I was not a member of the committee myself. After a long period of service in this house, I must say that I am sure we have not had in many years a committee that addressed itself so thoroughly to its particular assignment as did this committee. This was due to the earnest way in which members in all parties applied themselves to the difficult task given to them. What I say applies to those on the government side, to those in the opposition parties who support the treaty and the protocol and in equal measure to those who were and continue to be opposed to the treaty and the protocol.

After we came into office a year ago I had the responsibility as Secretary of State for External Affairs of negotiating the protocol with the United States. This is a vital matter, and I do not think we prove the point by having it suggested that only those opposed to the treaty or the protocol really have the national interest in mind. I am sure that every member of the committee and every member of this house, regardless of the position he takes on this matter, is as concerned about the propriety, validity and integrity of this project as any other hon. member. If I may say so to the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam (Mr. Douglas), I find it a little difficult to accept some of the direct and indirect implications of his remarks. Usually he does not let himself go in this way, and I can only assume that there must have been influences operating today which affected the normally steady course which he takes in the house.

I have paid my tribute to the chairman and vice chairman of the committee. But because of things that have been said today and things that were implied earlier,—as this is the final statement before we vote—I should like to say that we have reason to be grateful not only to the members of the committee. All of us in the house and in this country have an obligation to recognize the contributions made by public servants in Canada's service and in the service of British Columbia over a long period of time, because this matter has been before the Canadian people in one way or another for 20 years.

Having in mind what I know about the work that has been put into the matter by devoted public servants, I would be failing in my duty if I did not pay tribute to those who have done so much over the years to enable us, the legislators, to form a judgment on this matter. I am sure members of the opposition who formed the last government will agree with me that we have every reason to be proud of our public servants, and particularly of those in our public service who advised this government and the former government in the consideration which they had to give to this matter. Because some names have been mentioned today, I want to say that we in this country owe a great debt to the clerk of the privy council, Mr. Gordon Robertson, a former deputy minister of northern affairs, to Mr. Gordon MacNabb of the Department of Northern Affairs and National Resources, as brilliant an engineer as will be found in this country, who made such an impression on every member of the committee; to Mr. Ed. Ritchie, the assistant under secretary responsible for the economic division of the Department of External Affairs; to Mr. Olson of the Department of Justice; to Mr. Parkinson of the Department of Finance; and to Mr. Kingstone of the legal division of external affairs. While he was not here, there was a young Canadian engineer from British Columbia, Mr. William Chin, the son of a Chinese, a very brilliant young engineer, who spent ten years working on this project. These are the men to whom we have every reason to express our gratitude. I have mentioned their names only because, in the course of debate, I regret to say there have been suggestions of incompetence, which I believe were very unjustly applied. Canada has never been served more ably than by these men and perhaps by one or two other public servants whose names I have not mentioned. The same thing is true of a number of engineers in the service of the government of British Columbia who had much to do with the negotiations long before I had any responsibility for them.

Now, Mr. Speaker, it is not my intention to cover all of the arguments that have been advanced in this particular debate. The evidence, as the hon. member for Brandon-Souris (Mr. Dinsdale) pointed out, is before this house, some 1,500 pages of it. This evidence deals with every point that has been discussed in the debate today and yesterday, as well with many more. I believe that every point made today, and others not covered today, have been answered and, according to the majority of the members of this committee, adequately answered.

One cannot expect full agreement on a matter so complicated and so vital as this. But I think one should, after the careful study that has been made, at least be prepared to recognize that the majority are entitled to the same consideration as those of the minority who take a dissident position. This has not been the viewpoint, however, of some of those who have criticized the treaty and protocol. The critical arguments that have been used against the treaty and protocol in this part of the debate were not those, for the most part, that were used when this matter first came before the house on March 3.

The hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam (Mr. Douglas) said that the members on this side have not taken part in this debate at all. He tried to imply that there were no members on this side interested in the subject. My hon. friend knows this is not the case. He will recall that there was a debate on March 3 when I made a very extensive statement, the length of which was criticized by one of my hon. friend's own supporters. Many hon. members, whose interjections today represented their enthusiasm if not always their full appreciation of the way to get things settled, took part in that debate and were very active members of the committee.

There are members in the official opposition who did not speak in this debate but took part in the debate when the matter first came before the house. Some of them were very active members of the committee. There are one or two of them sitting before me in the official opposition now who have not taken part in this debate but who applied themselves energetically in the committee to the study assigned to them. I feel it is only fair to those hon. members, that as the final speaker I should point out that the absence of speeches at this particular time is due only to the fact that we want to get on with the business of the house. If every hon. member were to speak, we would never be able to discharge the public business. This is particularly true in respect of a matter which has been so thoroughly discussed from every angle, as this particular problem has been.

Mr. Herridge: Then, why did you introduce the flag issue?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I am not going to quarrel with my hon. friend, who is my friend. I know he has taken this matter seriously. I think he will say that while I have not always agreed with him, I have tried to deal with him in this matter as fairly as I could. I am not going to make any interjection in the dying days of this debate that might sever the bonds of a deep and lasting friendship.

But, Mr. Speaker, what have we had today? The arguments against this treaty were not the arguments made on other occasions. Today, the argument was essentially with regard to the right of diversion. There was no suggestion made that, by this treaty and protocol, Canada does not get very substantial advantages. No mention was made of the sum of money involved. No mention was made of the fact that all of the projects involved at high Arrow, at Mica and at Duncan are going to be paid for and that there is going to be a surplus, which will be for 50 per cent of the cost of the installation of at-site power at Mica. No mention was made of the tremendous advantages that flow from what I believe is a sound and equitable agreement which Canada was able—on behalf of Canada and British Columbia—to obtain from the United States.

The whole argument today was essentially on the question of diversion. The hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam noted that what we had to consider was the problem of water, water for Saskatchewan, water for the prairie provinces. I agree with him, that is a vital consideration. However, the hon. gentleman continued to misinterpret or to ignore the clear implication of article XIII(1) of the treaty and more particularly the refinement of it in the protocol in which the United States reaffirmed in positive terms Canada's right to make any diversion of the Columbia basin water required for consumptive needs, such as irrigation and municipal use. There is no question about what this means; this was the view taken by the solicitors who appeared before the committee and the view of the former minister of justice, Mr. Fulton.

In answer to the member for Moose Jaw-Lake Centre (Mr. Pascoe) who put two specific questions, I can say that there is no doubt in the judgment of the government. That judgment means we have considered this situation in the light of the opinions given by these experts and in the light of the examination of the documentation. The treaty permits consumptive diversions if Canada should ever find them necessary. If a diversion is for a consumptive need, then the diversion is permitted, even if incidental power is produced. There can be no doubt about that.

Mr. Douglas: May I ask the minister a question? Will he quote that part of the protocol or treaty that corroborates just what he has said?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): My hon. friend is claiming that because there is not in the protocol or because there is not in article XIII(1), a provision specifically stating that you can have a diversion for incidental power, that you cannot have it. Well, that is a form of interpretation I would never accept. The treaty is clear and it says you can divert for consumptive use; whatever secondary use is made after that obviously follows. It did not require any special interpretation. He asked me questions, but if he would be good enough to read the evidence of General Istchner, instead of simply saying—

Mr. Brewin: Would the minister permit a question? Has there been any written, reasoned legal opinion either produced in evidence or made available to the committee which supports the interpretation he is now giving?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend asked me this question several times in the committee, and he knows the answer. He is too good a lawyer to expect me to take that question as representing a serious import on his part, because he knows that is not the situation at all. I refer my hon. friend to the presentation material—

Mr. Brewin: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, the minister is imputing that I did not ask the question in all seriousness.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): If I imputed anything I wish to withdraw it.

Mr. Brewin: If he can produce an opinion to controvert what I say, let him do so.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): My hon. friend is asking a question and he knows the answer to it. He knows I have taken the position that we do not need to have such a legal opinion. My hon. friend laughs. The loud laugh sometimes indicates the vacant mind. I am not suggesting that in this case, but I ask my hon. friend to remember what we did put in the evidence, which will be found in the presentation book at page 134:

> In connection with the meaning of "consumptive use" it should be noted that a diversion carried out for a true consumptive use, such as irrigation, does not cease to be an "authorized diversion" merely because the water while en route produces hydroelectric power, either incidentally or even as an integral part of the diversion scheme. The essential question will be: what is the real and genuine purpose of the diversion? If it is a consumptive purpose, it is provided for.

That is as clear as anyone has the right to expect in a treaty between two parties.

Mr. Douglas: Would the minister—

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I have just a few minutes and I want to finish. I have approached this question in the light of what I regard as a very important responsibility imposed on me as Secretary of State for External Affairs. In the judgment of the government this treaty is basically a good treaty. We have sought to make it a better treaty, and we were able to negotiate a protocol with the United States which we believe added important modifications and improvements in that treaty.

The hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam (Mr. Douglas) does not agree with my view about the importance of the protocol. Well, that is his opinion. I say that the engineers and those of us who spent a lot of time on this, believe we did get from the United States important improvements following the consultations which the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) had in the month of May last year with the President of the United States.

In addition, we were also able to get from the government of British Columbia, the owner of the resource—as my hon. friend, the hon. member for Okanagan-Revelstoke (Mr. Fleming) reminded us yesterday—an agreement which we regarded as indispensable before we could embark on substantial negotiations with the United States. We got that agreement with the owner of the resource after some negotiation. As a result of it, we were able to negotiate with the United States for a price which we felt was essential to enable the building of the three projects, so that Canada would be relieved of a basic financial responsibility, and so that the owner of the resource would be able to develop a system of hydroelectric power which I believe is going to be to the advantage of British Columbia.

I believe that this project of the Columbia river—whether it be by a provincial government with which I do not always agree—was a great concept. Further, I believe that government deserves credit for having taken the step it did with regard to this specific project. I believe the project at the Peace river is going to represent a development in that part of the country that will cause many of the critics of this treaty to regret that they did not approve a project which I believe will be of major consequence to the development of Canada.

When I introduced this subject on March 3, I said that, after the careful examination we had made of this treaty, we had every justification for commending it and the protocol to parliament. I do that again. I do it today, backed up by the overwhelming support of the external affairs committee which has recommended to the government that this treaty and the protocol should be ratified. When this matter reaches the other place, we shall have set in motion one of the great projects that will take its place along with projects like the St. Lawrence seaway, and other great national development schemes, which will assist greatly in stimulating the economy of this country, adding to its structural strength, and enabling us to provide for the industrial growth of this nation.

Mr. Brewin: Second best.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Someone says "second best". It is not a second best. This treaty is a good deal for Canada and I am proud to recommend it to the house.

Mr. Pascoe: In my address I asked two questions and the minister only answered one. I said the brief from the Saskatchewan government was presented by the Lloyd government. Has he had any reports of agreement from the new government in this regard?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): The delegation that came here came after the election and before the assumption of office by the present administration.

Mr. Pascoe: Does it recommend itself to the new government?

Division

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I cannot say.

The house divided on the motion (Mr. Martin, Essex East), which was agreed to on the following division:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. It being five o'clock the house will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely public bills, private bills.

COMBINES INVESTIGATION ACT

AMENDMENTS RESPECTING PENALTIES FOR VIOLATIONS, ETC.

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North) moved the second reading of Bill No. C-33, to amend the Combines Investigation Act (floor penalties, criminal joint tort-feasors, and moieties).

He said: Mr. Speaker, I am proposing this amendment to the combines investigation section of the Criminal Code because I believe the laws of this country should be fair and equitable and should treat every person in the same way whether he be rich or poor, whether he be in a position to obtain a high-priced, competent lawyer, or whether he is not. If a person is poor and, on going into a supermarket in the city of Ottawa or Toronto, or in my own city of Winnipeg, steals $5 worth of groceries and is apprehended, if it is his first offence he may get a suspended sentence on conviction. He would certainly be fined. If he committed the same offence a second time he would undoubtedly be sent to jail. If he committed it a third time he would go to prison for a fairly long term.

How different is the treatment we mete out in this country to individuals, most of them quite wealthy and important, who direct some of the largest companies in Canada and who have consistently ignored the laws of Canada prohibiting combines, not once but three or more times. These people have been prosecuted and convicted and have got off scotfree, the companies they direct being given a fine of a few thousand dollars, an amount which is insignificant when compared with the business done or the profits made. Not once in the history of this legislation has the provision in the code which provides either for a jail sentence or a fine been acted upon in the sense that judges have thought the offence important enough to impose a jail sentence on the directors or officers of the company which has been proven guilty.

Since that is true I am proposing that the law be amended to make it mandatory that where the offence has been committed a second or third time there shall be a jail sentence required. Section 31 (3) of the Criminal Code reads as follows:

> A court may punish any person who contravenes or fails to comply with a prohibition or direction made or given by it under this section by a fine in the discretion of the court, or by imprisonment for a term not exceeding two years.

That is a provision which has not once in the history of Canada been enforced. My amendment would provide that where such an offence has been committed a second or third time a jail sentence is mandatory; that there be a minimum jail term of one year for the second offence and a jail term of two years for a third or subsequent offence.

Our combines legislation has been with us for a long time. I have before me a pamphlet written by Mr. Grant Dexter, who is certainly not a wild-eyed socialist but a very respected member of the press gallery for many years as well as being a very prominent Liberal supporter, entitled "The Parties and the Combines Act". This pamphlet was published in 1959 and I should like to read a few sections from it to show how long we have had this law and who piloted it through parliament. He says that Mackenzie King introduced the first anti-combines legislation in the House of Commons in 1910, and goes on to say:

> From the outset, the Liberal party has insisted that there must be free competition in prices. All acts which lessen competition are unlawful and Liberal governments down the years have vigorously and successfully enforced this concept of combines control.

I will try to analyse briefly how successful this has been; but this is what Mr. Dexter says in his pamphlets:

> The success achieved by Liberal administration in uncovering, prosecuting and convicting combines is indicated by the fact that, between 1925 (when the first prosecution was launched) and 1957 (when the Liberals left office), 35 combines had been convicted in the courts and the fines imposed exceeded $1,600,000....
> Thirty five represents a substantial cross-section of Canada's big business, since a single combine might embrace scores of individual companies.

From a return to a question which I asked last session, which was tabled by the then minister of justice on July 10, 1963, and which listed the persons or corporations convicted by the court, the date of conviction and the amount of fine imposed, it will be seen that between 175 and 200 companies were convicted between January 1, 1939 and the time when the question was answered in 1963. To suggest, however, that this has in fact stopped the desire and the practice of big business to participate in combines is, of course, not true. In a book written by Professor G. Rosenbluth and H. G. Thorburn entitled "Canadian Anti-Combines Administration, 1952-60", the following appears at page 97 in connection with the way the law has been administered:

> Under the St. Laurent-Howe administration, the backgrounds and personalities of the government leaders, their natural desire for financial support from business interests for campaign purposes, the remoteness from the electorate caused by the duration of the Liberal regime, and the general economic prosperity all favoured a certain solicitude for the interests of large corporations. In the field of combines legislation, the logical development of government policy would have been towards reduction in emphasis upon activities that might disturb major business groups.

We can say, Mr. Speaker, that this is true because recently during this session I put down a series of questions which asked what the government has done or proposed to do about these specific recommendations made by the restrictive trade practices commission, which had investigated combines. This commission found that there were combines existing and listed about eight of them—there are probably about 25 which have not yet been reported upon—and in every case the answer, in effect, was: "We are looking into them and studying them". So there has been little, if any, action.

If anyone doubts that the practice of combines is continuing, let me refer him to a small news item in the Globe and Mail of June 3, 1964 headed "Bids Identical, Chance Decides Winning Firm". This article says:

> The Toronto transit commission found itself faced yesterday with three identical quotations of $8,425 on 8,000 bags of Portland cement.

I suggest that the possibility that this was a coincidence is virtually non-existent.

Let us take an example from my own city. In May of 1963 the city council of Winnipeg had before it a report from its committee on utilities and personnel having to do with the purchase of power cable. I should like to refer to five items. On item 1 there were identical bids to the penny in the amount of $5,568 by Canada Wire, Canadian General Electric, Pirelli Cables, Canadian Westinghouse, Northern Electric and Phillips Electric. On item No. 2 the same six companies bid $3,376. On item 3 the same six companies bid $4,128. On item 4 the same six companies bid $1,811. On item 5 the same six companies bid $4,815.

This is not an accident, Mr. Speaker. This is obviously a combine, and obviously not much is going to be done about it. I know that obtaining proof is difficult, but I suggest that the practice which the governments of Canada have followed of taking cases to court when they do get evidence and securing a fine of $3,000, $5,000 or $10,000 simply means that all we are doing is saying to these companies that this is a very cheap licence. We are saying to them: Once every ten or 20 years we will bring you to court, you will pay a very small fine and then you can continue doing business in the same old way.

There is no suggestion that we should issue an order to cease and desist. There is nothing in the law saying that people who have suffered can sue for damages, as is now being done and has been done very successfully in the United States. So we let this practice continue. I do not have too much time but I want to put on the record briefly just what happens.

In 1960 the Abitibi Power and Paper Company was fined $15,000 when their net profit was $15½ million in 1962, $13.7 million in 1961 and $12¼ million in 1960. What is a $15,000 fine to them? The St. Lawrence Corporation was fined $3,000 in 1958 and $20,000 in 1960. What were their profits? In 1959 they were over $6 million, in 1960 over $7 million and in 1961 over $7 million.

I want to mention some of the very respected and eminent directors of this company. One of them is Mr. Wilfred Hall who is not only a director of this company but a director of five other companies as listed in the directory of directories. Then there is Mr. C. M. Fellows who is a director of eight companies. Here is a real example, Mr. N. A. Timmins, Jr., a director of at least 20 companies covering banks, insurance, pulp and paper and food.

The Anglo-Canadian Pulp and Paper Mills Limited were fined $3,000 in November, 1958, and $20,000 in June, 1960. Their president, Mr. W. H. Howard, is a director of at least 20 companies. Mr. W. E. Soles is a director of nine companies and Mr. M. J. Foley is a director of six companies. This company has been fined $23,000 in the last three years and they have reported profits of over $4½ million in each of the years 1960, 1961 and 1962.

[Mr. Orlikow.]

Let us take the E. B. Eddy Company. In 1954 they were fined $10,000, in 1958, $6,000 and in 1960, $20,000. In 1961 their profit was over $2 million. Their chief officer, Mr. George Metcalf, is a director of 10 companies. Mr. W. D. Moffatt is a director of three companies. The Gair Company of Canada, which is a part of the Continental Can Company, had a net profit in 1961 of $36 million. The company was convicted in 1940 and paid a fine of $10,000. In 1942 they were fined $2,500, in 1958, $3,000 and in 1960, $8,000. Their chief officer, Mr. James Stewart, is a director of 10 companies.

The Goodyear Tire and Rubber Company was convicted twice in 1953 and paid a fine of $10,000 each time. In 1959 they made a profit of $2,300,000, in 1960 a profit of $2,900,000 and in 1961 a profit of $3,610,000.

Does the government think for a moment that fines of $10,000 are going to stop these companies for one minute? Of course they are not. And so it goes down the list. I am not suggesting for a moment that jail sentences are the only way combines can be controlled. I wish the government would take the time to read the recommendations made by the members of the restrictive trade practices commission and the officers of the combines investigation branch of the Department of Justice. If they have read them they have certainly ignored the recommendations that have been made.

But if we cannot get any basic changes which will tend to control the desire of some of the biggest corporations of Canada to steal from the public, I suggest that one thing we can do is to impress upon the directors of these companies that this law is just as important as the law which says that somebody cannot go into a supermarket and steal a couple of dollars worth of groceries. I suggest that the same kind of treatment should be meted out to the company directors, to the members of the Rideau club or the Manitoba club in Winnipeg, who are among the most respected people in this country. The same kind of treatment should be meted out to them as is meted out to poor people who find it necessary to commit much smaller crimes. Mr. Speaker, these are the reasons why I have moved this bill.

Mr. Marvin Gelber (York South): Mr. Speaker, whom the good Lord hath joined together let no man rend asunder is a wise warning, but certainly the Combines Investigation Act and the Criminal Code are mute evidence that all mergers are not made in heaven. It has been said, Mr. Speaker, that war is too important a thing to be left to generals and possibly the administration of this, one of the most sophisticated aspects of the Criminal Code, might be left to laymen. While I am not a lawyer I should like to say a few words about the interesting bill my hon. friend has introduced.

The growth of anti-combines legislation on this continent is a reflection of frontier society, the great democracy of the frontier, of the man who was prepared to hew out his fortune with his might, determination and good spirit and did not want any of it forfeit to great combines which existed many thousands of miles to the east of him. We also had during the period of the growth of combines legislation, particularly in the United States, great industrial complexes, and we had the era of the robber barons and the business buccaneers whose business ethics left a great deal to be desired. It is said about John D. Rockefeller, Sr., that he told his Sunday school class: "Don't be a good fellow; it doesn't pay". The record of his son and his grandsons in public generosity and public service is eloquent testimony that we have moved into a new epoch.

The most interesting qualification of this trend in the United States before the second world war, Mr. Speaker, was the N.R.A. by means of which an attempt was made to suspend some of the philosophy, some of the rules and the famous traditions of legal jurisprudence against combines in order to attempt to stimulate economic recovery of the United States. In our own time, during the second world war, the wartime prices and trade board was a most interesting interlude in the transformation of anticombines legislation. Price controls, wage controls and a very substantial element of planning were introduced in order to accelerate the mobilization of the resources of this country for our great wartime effort.

I should like to make two references, Mr. Speaker, to points raised by the hon. member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow). He suggested that the few investigations—he thought they were few—that had been undertaken under the Combines Investigation Act was a reflection of the relationship of the larger parties in this country to big business interests. I should like to point out to him that the act permits investigations to be initiated not only by the authorities but by six individuals. Any six individuals can oblige the machinery of government to start working and to carry on an investigation. I do not believe it is sufficient, therefore, to speak of this act as if one is on the stump. Certainly the act provides plenty of opportunity for the citizens of this country, should they become impatient with the administration of the act, to initiate investigations should they make such a demand.

Another question is raised by the hon. member in his reference to identical bids. This is a very difficult problem in the administration of the act. The people responsible for its administration have found that in dealing with homogeneous products it is most difficult for them to establish that a combine in restraint of trade exists. Where there are homogeneous products, the chances may well be that such a conspiracy does not exist.

I want to say, sir, that I am most sympathetic to the view of the hon. member. I know that the purpose of his bill is to strengthen the legislation existing on the statute books of this country. However, I do not believe it really deals with the fundamental problem. I do not believe it really deals with society in 1964. We are not in these days emerging from the frontier era and the great struggles of William Jennings Bryan, and the great progressive movements that emerged from the west in our own country. They relate to another day. It seems to me we are in a period where we have to examine again the laws on the statute books of this country, and to promote the new thinking which is being expressed in this house and in the country.

I should like to quote, Mr. Speaker, from an article by the dean elect of the faculty of law at McGill University, Professor Maxwell Cohen. This article appeared in the McGill Law Journal for 1963. Professor Cohen has had experience in the service of the government of Canada in this particular branch. He says this:

> Many pressures are now impinging upon the conventional wisdom of our anti-combines traditions and are compelling a re-examination of their validity. In a sense this policy has been paradoxically both a powerful and vulnerable instrument of indirect regulation of entrepreneurial activity and almost always it has been under a critical public and political eye. Then too, it is the one area where law and economic policy and theory touch with the directness of an embrace, for the objective of anti-trust law is the removing of restrictions on, and the preservation of "competition"; while, conversely, the existence of the "market", of competition from a general social point of view, is regarded as a substantial necessity for a free political order and social system. In no other field of legal studies, policy and practice—except for criminal law and criminology perhaps—is there such a frontal co-mingling of the disciplines as in this sustained effort to prevent, through law, "undue" restrictions on competitive behaviour.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I will deal a little later in my remarks with some of the problems which the entire question of combines regulation raises. I should like to say something particularly about the bill of the hon. member. He proposes, first, that we have obligatory minimum sentences for second and other offences under this act. I understand, however, that this is a practice contrary to the trends in the courts today. I think we want to be mindful of the current trends when we propose amendments to the Criminal Code. If the hon. member is critical of them, it seems to me he should have said so. This bill, Mr. Speaker, encourages the view that the policeman should be the agent of economic policy.

I believe this is one of the great weaknesses in our own system of law. We have, probably because of our constitution, a Combines Investigation Act which is an aspect of our criminal law. The United States practice has much to teach us. They have greater latitude by reason of the fact that the federal government can legislate much more broadly in the field of civil jurisprudence. When one talks about second and third offences, I think he should remember that the people with whom we are dealing, as the hon. member pointed out, are large corporations. If you are dealing with corporations, you are not necessarily dealing with individuals, and certainly not the same individuals for the second and third offences if there are such offences.

Mr. Orlikow: May I ask the hon. member a question?

Mr. Gelber: Yes.

Mr. Orlikow: Is a corporation an impersonal entity? Is there not someone who makes a decision that this action shall be taken, and is that person not responsible?

Mr. Gelber: Yes, certainly. I will deal with that. It is very easy for corporations, if these bodies get into difficulty as foreseen by the hon. member, to play an interesting game of musical chairs to avoid the particular regulation which he is asking this house to adopt.

Mr. Orlikow: They do not have to; but you will not put them in jail.

Mr. Gelber: I am just dealing with the regulations as they appear. I agree with the hon. member that we must have more definite administration within this area. I feel that the particular suggestion he put forward is not necessarily going to add to the chances we might have for getting more effective regulation. We not only have this problem of the corporation and the shifting of personnel by which it is possible to vitiate completely the proposal of the hon. member, but we have also this problem of second and third offences. The practice has been for the courts to regard offences on the basis of commodities and products, and a corporation having a number of different products to manufacture will be considered a first offender in so far as each product is concerned. This again vitiates the particular suggestion of the hon. member, and I feel that these offences, not being cumulative, the proposal really does not seriously advance the administration of the act.

Then there is the question of damages, and in this connection I would like to read from a judgment in the Supreme Court of Canada, in the case of Direct Lumber Co., Ltd. v. Western Plywood Co., Ltd. in which Mr. Justice Judson said this:

—this criminal legislation gives no civil cause of action for its breach—

Later on he says this:

The common law itself imposes liability for harm caused by combinations to injure by unlawful means but the common law never gave any cause of action for price discrimination unaccompanied by conspiracy.

Now, on the question of the next clause, I would like to read a section of the Criminal Code because I feel clause 8 of the bill is redundant. Section 21 of the Criminal Code says:

(1) Every one is a party to an offence who
(a) actually commits it,
(b) does or omits to do anything for the purpose of aiding any person to commit it, or
(c) abets any person in committing it.

For this reason I maintain that clause 8 of the hon. member's bill is redundant.

On two occasions in the past, parliament has attempted to depart from the criminal nature of this area of jurisprudence, in 1919 and in 1935, and this legislation was declared ultra vires by the courts. Criminal procedure definitely inhibits the government in administering the act. It definitely inhibits administering any combines legislation, and under existing law no civil proceedings are available to an injured party and there is no provision made for awarding damages. In addition, Mr. Speaker, there is no civil procedure for obtaining a cease and desist order, only a criminal injunction or order of prohibition against continuation or repetition of an offence.

There is no authority granted to administer any aspect of an industry. There is no provision for exceptions, discretionary or otherwise, to the operation of the law in particular cases. We all know that this is in very vivid contrast to the situation that exists in the United States, and we know that where there is a federal statute it certainly takes precedence over provincial statutes. The struggle for the right of labour to organize provided a definite exemption from the terms of this legislation, and we know that in England during the struggle for the right of association the common law was used to try to inhibit the formation of the trade union movement; but in our law we now have a definite exemption for labour. There is also the question of exemption for co-operatives, and exemption for the fishing industry.

In order to establish an offence there must be proven a tacit agreement. It is not necessary that there be an overt agreement, but a tacit agreement or understanding among the parties concerned, which would be considered sufficient to establish agreement. We also have to prove that a combine will unduly harm the public. That is also something which the courts require our authorities to establish.

Are the courts qualified to do the job which is required in terms of the administration of this type of act? I would like to read a statement from the judgment by Mr. Justice Spence in the Fine Papers case. He said this:

> Surely the determination of whether or not an agreement to lessen competition was "undue" by a survey of one industry's profits against profits of industry generally, and a survey of the movement of the prices in that one industry against the movement of prices generally, would put the court to the essentially non-judicial task of judging between conflicting theories of economy and conflicting political theories. It would entail the court being required to conjecture—and by a court, it would be nothing more than mere conjecture since a court is not trained to act as an arbitrator of economics—whether better or worse results would have occurred to the public if free and untrammelled competition had been permitted to run its course.

That is the main weakness of our situation, and you know, Mr. Speaker, in the amendments that were brought in a few years ago, in 1960, there are certain options open. The attorney general can have a case heard in the exchequer court and informed people believe—though it has never been tested in the Supreme Court of Canada—that by consent there can be an agreement in a case to dissolve combines. However, none of these cases has ever come to the Supreme Court of Canada and therefore the jurisprudence is not established.

It seems to me that the bill of the hon. member, being well intentioned, deals with details, in terms of the policeman filling the gap, when actually what we lack is an important development in this very important aspect of economic policy. We heard a great deal, when the bill to establish the economic council was introduced, about indicative planning. With the combines act on our statute books I do not think we can say all our planning is indicative, but we have to do a great deal more thinking in terms of planning, of obtaining greater efficiency, in terms of providing a greater stability for our economy in our battle for markets against important combinations abroad. It seems to me with the liberal background we have in this, and which we must strengthen, we must look for development in new areas, new departures and new channels.

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, in the pleasant and relaxed atmosphere of Friday afternoon it is a very great pleasure to rise in support of this excellent bill introduced by the hon. member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow). The hon. member for York South (Mr. Gelber) said we should have an important and significant development in this field. The passage of this legislation would be an important and significant development.

I quite agree with the hon. member for York South in what I understood to be implied in his remarks, namely that the regulations of trade and the monopolistic tendency in trade by the federal government are unfortunately confined to the application of criminal law. It is an unfortunate thing perhaps that head 2 of section 91 of the British North America Act which gave, in effect, exclusive power to the federal parliament to regulate trade and commerce, has been so whittled down by judicial interpretation as to be practically meaningless and that this parliament is therefore restricted in its ability to cope with monopolies, and the efforts made to cope with them have often been ineffective by reason of this constitutional limitation.

Perhaps it is for this reason that Canada, according to those who have studied the matter, is one of the most monopoly ridden countries in the world. I think it was Professor Reynolds in a book called "Competition in Canada" who documented that statement. Of course, as a consequence of being monopoly ridden the people of Canada have to face an ever-increasing cost of living. However, until we get a new look at the constitution of Canada—and I hope this will not be too far in the future—we should revivify the power of regulation of trade and commerce which was given by the fathers of confederation to parliament; and until we do this it seems wrong not to take advantage of a bill designed to strengthen the only law we have, in its application to the criminal law, with penalties to attack the most obviously anti-social forms of monopoly.

At the present time, as the hon. member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow) has pointed out, the penalties, which are monetary penalties in most cases, are so small as to be totally ineffective. They are like a slap on the wrist. They constitute nothing more than a licence to carry on. There is no doubt that most combines, the activities of which fall under the attention of the courts in the course of lengthy proceedings, get some advice from good lawyers after a fine has been imposed and continue to carry on the same practices—

An hon. Member: Good lawyers?

Mr. Brewin: Not morally good, but good in their skills and techniques of evading the law. As a result this law is totally ineffective. My hon. friend from Winnipeg North has presented in this bill a means of putting teeth into the act. I can imagine nothing which would cause more serious thought among many of these respectable people of great wealth who are so often involved in breaches of this branch of the law than the prospect of spending some time in jail. This would indeed cause them to consider with great care—and I have some sympathy for them, I must admit—whether they should continue to break the law for a second time. After all, the bill before us only applies to second and consequent offences. Once they have been convicted they will think twice before repeating the offence, and I suggest that if we mean business by our combines legislation the amendment proposed by the hon. member represents the minimum we should enact in order to ensure that the law is enforced.

The hon. member for York South (Mr. Gelber) indulged in some observations about the philosophy of the law, and said this bill was against it. Let me say that the purpose of punishment in any system of advanced jurisprudence is deterrence—to see that an offence is not repeated. The present penalty provided under the law is not in any sense a deterrent. There is nothing punitive about the proposal of the hon. member for Winnipeg North. All he is trying to do is to deter, and to make sure an offence does not happen again; and he has, I think, found an admirable way of ensuring that legislation passed by the government of Canada is taken seriously. Indeed, I believe this parliament and the other law-making bodies should spend less time making general laws and more time in making sure that the laws they pass are capable of enforcement, because otherwise we place a great number of laws on the statute books which are disregarded in practice. For example, we have laws against combines in trade in Canada, yet we have more combines in trade here than in any other civilized country, relatively speaking, in the world. The hon. member for York South says: Very well, the bill is all right, but let us wait until we can take a longer look, a better look, at what is involved; let us put it off until tomorrow. This philosophy of always putting off until tomorrow a step which could be taken today is one of the reasons some people think parliament is becoming futile.

I see the parliamentary secretary to the Minister of Justice (Mr. Macdonald) armed with a vast number of books and no doubt he has some learning on this subject. I suggest to him he would be aiding the enforcement of the act for which clearly and definitely his department is responsible if he were to get up in a moment or two and say: This is an excellent bill; we are behind it; we accept the suggestion and we shall acquiesce in the passage of this measure in the remaining ten minutes we have.

Mr. Macdonald: On a question of privilege; the hon. member has mentioned my name. May I suggest that if I were to get up and say that, it would be an almost fatal shock to the hon. member's system.

Mr. Brewin: If the hon. gentleman was directing his comment to me, and I think he was, I would reply that I think this would be an excellent way of ending a parliamentary week, and if I did have to take some time recuperating, it would be well worth it.

[Translation]

Mr. G. C. Lachance (Lafontaine): Mr. Speaker, I agree with the hon. member for York South (Mr. Gelber) when he says that he does not think the bill greatly improves the present legislation. I would like to deal more in detail with the few problems he has raised, if it is still possible, of course, although he did expound very well up to now several of the arguments I had put down about this bill.

Clauses 1 to 6 of Bill No. C-33 presented by the hon. member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow) deal with minimum jail terms for second offences. I feel there is no need to insist too much on the difficulties involved in the application of such legislation, were it adopted, especially for the following reasons:

1. Subsequent proceedings can hardly deal with an article of the same nature, as stated earlier by the hon. member for York South, in view of the fact that the courts decided a long time ago, as it should be, that each article had to be taken separately. For instance, in an industry which manufactures or sells electrical appliances, if proceedings are instituted with regard to a certain type of article, it is rather difficult to institute similar proceedings later on. That is why second offences, or at least prosecutions in this respect are a rare occurrence.

2. The people who are engaged in the handling or manufacture of those various products, or even the directors of those various companies, in the case of corporations, change regularly. We all know about the delays and extended periods between a prosecution and another; it can often take five, six, seven, and even eight years between two prosecutions. It would therefore be rather difficult to believe that the same individuals are performing the same duties in such a case.

Then, the application of such an amendment would be rather difficult especially since most of the time, as mentioned by the previous speakers, those proceedings are only instituted against corporations. It is difficult to sentence a corporation to a jail term.

[Text]

Mr. Orlikow: How about their officers?

[Translation]

Mr. Lachance: Mr. Speaker, I trust that I will be able to discuss this question of officers in a moment.

Section 7 raises problems of civil and criminal jurisdiction which give rise to a legal controversy so important that it would seem difficult to expect a solution, at least an immediate solution. Consequently, from the practical viewpoint, it seems to me that it is of very little importance, all the more so as the injured party can always sue for damages before civil jurisdictional courts.

I do not think that the government authorities should interfere with the freedom of the individual to exercise his rights. The more so, since there is no appeal against the judgments of commissions while there is an appeal from the judgments of civil jurisdiction courts.

Clause 8 of Bill No. C-33 has certainly much merit, because I fail to see why section 38, paragraph 3 of the act itself does not apply to some offences. I know that the hon. member for York South mentioned the case and even quoted the jurisprudence concerning section 21 of the Criminal Code as regards collusion in cases of criminal offences.

He quoted jurisprudence concerning a person abetting another to commit an offence, or part of an offence. That may be the reason why I said earlier that section 38(3) only applies to certain offences, since section 21 covers those cases. Perhaps the various offences should be explained further, but I think that under the circumstances section 21 meets the requirements.

The hon. member for Winnipeg North would have made a better and more objective contribution had he suggested amendments so that minimum penalties, not only for habitual offenders, but also in the case of first offences, would be proportionate to the amount involved or the seriousness of the offence committed and also proportionate to the assets of individuals or companies found guilty.

The hon. member for Winnipeg North spoke earlier of minimum fines for certain large companies. It is true that those large companies can often afford to pay those fines and that sometimes they are not heavy enough. That is the reason why I suggest it might be advisable to levy fines in keeping with the seriousness of the offence committed or with the assets of indivduals or companies found Then, if the offence involved a sum of, say, $3 million, then the minimum fine would be 5 or even 10 per cent of this amount. I think that before breaking the law, those corporations or individuals would then think about it twice.

Moreover, Mr. Speaker, I am reluctant to approve of jail sentences for statutory offences.

[Text]

Mr. Orlikow: Especially for the rich.

[Translation]

Mr. Lachance: Mr. Speaker, in view of what I said previously concerning appropriate fines and also the fact that I have considerable experience in the practice of law, I do not feel that a penalty of one or two years imprisonment is a sufficient deterrent to the commission of a crime. I know that there are two schools of thought in that respect and that both set forth strong arguments.

Mr. Speaker, I know, or at least, I think I do—and I am not the only one in that situation—individuals who have robbed banks or at least committed big robberies who would not mind to contravene this act and spend a year or two in jail after having collected $300,000 if they knew they could have an easy life afterwards.

Hence, there are two schools of thought in this connection, and a jail sentence of one or two years does not necessarily constitute an obstacle to the commission of a second offence.

Consequently, Mr. Speaker, I feel that my argument is as good as that of the hon. member for Winnipeg North. And when he speaks of the wealthy, I think it is my duty to tell him that wealth is always relative, the more so that usually action is taken against very wealthy and very strong companies whose shares are held by the general public. Moreover, Mr. Speaker, it is the directors of these companies who take the means—

Some hon. Members: Six o'clock.

Mr. Lachance: Mr. Speaker, I understand that I still have about 30 seconds to close my remarks.

As I said a while ago, I am against jail sentences, because the general public, under the law of supply and demand, is able to look after its interests; besides, that is what it does in most cases.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Batten): Order. The hour for the consideration of private members' business has expired.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Speaker, I would ask the house leader to record on Hansard, for the convenience of hon. members, the government's program of business for Monday and Tuesday of next week.

Mr. Favreau: Mr. Speaker, on Monday we will begin the debate on the second reading of the bill to amend the National Housing Act, after which we will take the second reading of the bill to amend the Farm Credit Act.

At six o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Monday, June 8, 1964

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

MARINE AND FISHERIES

CONCURRENCE IN SECOND REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. C. R. Granger (Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador) presented the second report of the standing committee on marine and fisheries, and moved that the report be concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

NATO—NOMINATION OF JAMES A. ROBERTS AS DEPUTY SECRETARY GENERAL

Hon. Paul Martin (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am sure the house will be pleased to learn that in response to a request that Canada nominate a candidate for the post of deputy secretary general of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization, the Canadian government has agreed to release Mr. James A. Roberts, deputy minister of trade and commerce for this important assignment.

This appointment is being announced today in Paris by Mr. Stikker, the secretary general of NATO, after consultations with the secretary general-designate, Signor Manlio Brosio. Mr. Roberts will take up his new duties with NATO on September 1 of this year. I am confident that he will perform them with the same efficiency and distinction that have been characteristic of the manner in which he has discharged his responsibilities throughout his tenure of high public office in Canada.

CROP INSURANCE ACT

AMENDMENTS RESPECTING REINSURANCE PROGRAM

Hon. Harry W. Hays (Minister of Agriculture) moved that the house go into committee at the next sitting to consider the following resolution, which has been recommended to the house by His Excellency:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure to amend the Crop Insurance Act to authorize the governor in council to enter into agreements for the purpose of establishing a crop reinsurance program to supplement provincial crop insurance plans; to provide for the establishment in the consolidated revenue fund of a special account, to be known as the crop reinsurance fund, to which shall be credited amounts paid by a province under a crop reinsurance agreement and out of which shall be paid amounts required for the payment of reinsurance claims; to authorize advances from time to time from the consolidated revenue fund by way of non-interest bearing loans to the crop reinsurance fund; and to authorize the rebate, to grain growers whose grain is grown on insured lands, of sums paid by way of levy under the Prairie Farm Assistance Act.

Motion agreed to.

RECOMMENDATIONS OF JOINT INDIAN AFFAIRS COMMITTEE

Question No. 870—Mr. Howard:

What action, in detail, has been taken with respect to each of the following recommendations of the joint committee of the Senate and the House of Commons on Indian affairs:

"(a) Indian affairs should be the subject of a dominion-provincial conference in order that such matters may be transferred to provincial jurisdiction as may be mutually acceptable to the Indian people, provincial and federal authorities.

(b) Another special joint committee of the Senate and House of Commons should be appointed within a period of seven years to review Indian affairs.

(c) A program of research into the economic, cultural and social concepts of the Indian people should be undertaken in conjunction with the provinces and universities.

(d) Community planning and development studies should be continued."?

Mr. Badanai: (a) The administration of Indian affairs was on the agenda of the federal-provincial conference held in Ottawa in November, 1963. It was agreed that a federal-provincial ministerial conference on Indian affairs be convened in 1964. Although the month of May was suggested as the most suitable time, it was not possible to complete the planning in time. However, planning is continuing and the conference will be held later in the year.

(b) No action is being taken to recommend another special committee of the Senate and House of Commons to review Indian affairs at this time as the seven year period referred to in this recommendation will not be reached until 1968. The establishing of such a joint committee will be a matter for parliament to decide.

(c) A national Indian research project to assess the participation by Indians in the social and economic life of the country is being undertaken by Dr. H. B. Hawthorn of the University of British Columbia as director and Dr. Adélard Tremblay of Laval University as associate director. The research will cover four major areas concerning Indians: economic development; advancement in education; responsibilities that exist at various government levels; and band councils and the development of self government. It is expected that the research project will be completed in 1966.

(d) Increasing attention has been given to community planning and development studies in recent years. An economic development study for the Blood Indian reserve has been carried out. This includes demographic analyses, studies on mineral resources, soils, range, agriculture, forestry, etc. Studies for the economic development of Indians in the Patricia district of Ontario have been carried out in collaboration with the provincial department of lands and forests. A preliminary inventory of Indian reserve resources is now in progress.

WORLD FAIR CAR RENTALS

Question No. 873—Mr. Bell:

Is it the policy of the world fair Canadian corporation for the 1967 world exhibition to use car rental service and, if so, each day for the period April 12 to 18, 1964, how many vehicles were hired and from what service?

Answer: For the period of April 12 to 18, 1964, arrangements to hire one vehicle had to be cancelled subsequently and no vehicles were hired in addition to those that are presently rented on a permanent basis by the corporation.

APPOINTMENT OF PILOTS, PUGWASH, N.S.

Question No. 893—Mr. Coates:

1. What are the names, residences, ages, and the experience, of the two new pilots appointed by the Pugwash pilotage authority?
2. What is the name of the examiner who approved the appointment of the pilots in question, and what are his qualifications?

Mr. Pickersgill: 1. Mr. Harold Allen, Pugwash, age 36, appointed pilot, one season experience as apprentice pilot. Mr. Otis Allen, Pugwash, age 30, appointed apprentice pilot, no experience.

2. Mr. Harold Allen was appointed pilot by the Pugwash pilotage commission in March 1964 on the recommendation of past pilot and pilot master H. E. Vanember. Mr. Otis Allen was recommended as apprentice pilot by the Pugwash pilotage commission.

RAIL INSTALLATIONS, PIER "C", PICTOU, N.S.

Question No. 904—Mr. MacEwan:

Is it the intention of the Canadian National Railways and/or the Department of Transport to carry out rail installations on other than the south side of pier "C" at Pictou, Nova Scotia?

[Mr. Badanai.]

Mr. Pickersgill: The management of Canadian National Railways advises that it is not the intention of the company to carry out rail installations on other than the south side of pier "C" at Pictou, N.S.

SOUTH SASKATCHEWAN DAM

Question No. 930—Mr. Francis:

1. On what date was the decision taken to build the South Saskatchewan dam?
2. What was the financial arrangement between the government of Canada and the government of the province of Saskatchewan?
3. What is the total value in dollars of contracts that have been let on this project to date?
4. What is the anticipated total cost of the project to each government?
5. What will be the installed capacity of power in the power section, and what will be the cost per kilowatt of installed capacity?
6. Did the provincial government undertake to supply and service 50,000 acres of farmland for irrigation?
7. Did the government of Saskatchewan in 1963 indicate it was no longer interested in supplying the acreage referred to in question 6 and, if so, what reasons did it offer for this decision?
8. If the irrigation project does not proceed, what advantages will accrue from the building of the dam other than power production?
9. Have there been any technical difficulties in the construction of the dam?
10. What is the anticipated annual interest and amortization cost of this project?
11. What plans has the government to meet the costs enumerated in question 10 above?

Mr. Hays: 1. The agreement between Saskatchewan and Canada was completed on July 25, 1958.

2. The cost sharing arrangement is as follows:

(1) By Saskatchewan: (a) 25 per cent of the cost of the reservoir with the provision that this amount is limited to $25,000,000; (b) all costs associated with the irrigation development, recreational development and powerhouse development, except that Canada pays 25 per cent of the construction costs for installing the penstocks.

(2) By Canada: (a) 75 per cent of the cost of constructing the reservoir for all costs up to $100,000,000; (b) all costs of constructing the reservoir in excess of $100,000,000. (c) 25 per cent of the cost of construction of the penstocks; (d) the cost of all engineering, administrative and legal services related to the construction of the reservoir.

3. Total value of contracts awarded to March 31, 1964, $95,211,909.37.

4. Current estimated cost; cost to Canada, reservoir and penstocks, $86,000,000.

Cost to Saskatchewan:

Reservoir		$ 25,000,000
Other developments:
Irrigation	$45,000,000
Power	$30,000,000
Recreation	$15,000,000	$ 90,000,000
Total		$115,000,000

5. Initial installed capacity will be 187.5 megawatts. The cost of this installation will be $132.00 per kilowatt. This figure includes 100 per cent of the cost of penstocks, power plant, and engineering, but does not include any costs of construction of the dam.

6. Yes.

7. There has been no indication from the government of Saskatchewan that it will not be proceeding with the irrigation development.

8. Project benefits other than irrigation and power:

(1) Urban and industrial water supplies: the availability of water directly from the reservoir and from the Qu'Appelle river diversion will assure domestic and industrial supplies for many towns and cities in southern Saskatchewan.

(2) River regulations: The storage provided in the reservoir and the associated river control will greatly increase power benefits downstream at all present and future sites.

(3) Recreation: The reservoir will be within 100 miles of 400,000 Saskatchewan people and lies in the area which is short of water for recreational purposes.

(4) Interbasin diversions: In the event of large scale interbasin diversions in the future, the South Saskatchewan river reservoir will become the hub of a major water supply system for storage and redistribution to water short areas in southern Saskatchewan and Manitoba.

9. There have been technical difficulties encountered in the construction of the tunnels as well as some parts of the embankment which in some cases have resulted in delays in the work schedule.

10 and 11. The cost of this project is not being amortized. Canada's share of the cost is considered to be in the form of a direct contribution for agricultural rehabilitation and development purposes.

Note: Information in regard to the provincial program and cost has been provided by the South Saskatchewan river development commission of the province of Saskatchewan and the Saskatchewan Power Corporation.

DEFENCE AND RESEARCH EXPENDITURES, B.C.

Question No. 966—Mr. Basford:

1. For the fiscal years 1962-63, 1963-64, what grants in aid of research were made by the defence research board within the province of British Columbia and, to whom, in what amounts, and for what projects?

2. For the fiscal years 1962-63, 1963-64, what expenditures were made within the province of British Columbia, under the development sharing assistance program of the Department of Defence Production and, to whom, in what amounts, and for what projects were such expenditures made?

Questions

3. For the fiscal years 1962-63, 1963-64, what contracts were let for production within British Columbia of military equipment and material under the auspices of the Canada-United States defence development and production sharing program, and with whom were such contracts made, the value thereof, and what was the equipment and material to be produced or supplied thereunder?

Mr. Lamontagne: In so far as the Department of National Defence is concerned.

1. 1962-63, $187,435; 1963-64, $190,005.

The amounts, projects and other details relating to these grants are classified military information.

In so far as the Department of Defence Production is concerned.

2. None.

3. Companies within British Columbia received contracts for military equipment and material under the auspices of the Canada-U.S. defence development and production sharing program amounting to $1,997,915 for the fiscal year 1962-63 and $1,327,426 for the fiscal year 1963-64. Details of contracts placed by the U.S. military services, or subcontracts thereunder, are provided to the Canadian government on a confidential basis as they have been awarded in competition with U.S. firms, paid for by the U.S. military departments and do not involve the payment of Canadian government funds.

*URANIUM STOCKPILING IN BANCROFT AREA

Question No. 983—Mr. Lamb:

Does the government intend to stockpile uranium in the Bancroft area in order to keep the Cardiff mine in operation?

Mr. Pepin: The answer is no.

PETITIONS RESPECTING CATV

Question No. 993—Mr. McBain:

1. How many letters, petitions, telegrams, etc., with total number of signatures, have been received by the Prime Minister and/or the Minister of Transport from viewers of CATV protesting the imposition of any discriminatory regulations on such service?

2. On what date will the government set up a special committee on broadcasting to which the matter of CATV service might be referred?

Mr. Lamontagne: 1. Number of letters, petitions, telegrams, etc., 1,719; total number of signatures, 2,155.

2. As indicated in a reply to a question in the house on May 25, 1964, the government does not propose the establishment of a special committee on broadcasting during the present session. (Hansard, p. 3522).

TRAIN SERVICE FROM NORTH TO MONTREAL

Question No. 995—Mr. Laprise:

In order to improve travel services, is it intended to shorten the time required for the rail trip between Cochrane and Montreal, and between

Questions

Rouyn-Noranda and Montreal and, if so, will the change allow travellers to make these trips, in either direction, at night?

[Translation]

Answer: The management of Canadian National Railways advises as follows:

The design of train schedules, of necessity, must also take into account the requirements of mail and express. As there is insufficient traffic volume to justify separate services for these needs in this particular area, no change in schedules is contemplated at the present time.

ABANDONMENT OF C.N.R. LINE, FREDERICTON-CENTREVILLE, N.B.

Question No. 1,028—Mr. MacRae:

1. Have any surveys been made by Canadian National Railways concerning their line between Fredericton and Centreville, New Brunswick, with a view to requesting abandonment of said line and, if so, what was the result of such survey?

2. Is it the intention of Canadian National Railways to seek permission to abandon the Canadian National Railway line between Fredericton and Centreville, New Brunswick?

Mr. Pickersgill: The management of Canadian National Railways advises as follows:

1 and 2. It is management's understanding that present plans for construction of the Mactaquac power development call for flooding of a portion of this line. This matter is the subject of negotiations between the parties involved.

LAND EXPROPRIATIONS, NATIONAL CAPITAL COMMISSION, OTTAWA

Question No. 1,043—Mr. Richard:

Does the national capital commission plan to expropriate property in the New Edinburgh area of the city of Ottawa subsequent to the forthcoming removal of the C.P.R. spur line between Beechwood avenue and Sussex drive and in connection with the proposed extension of the N.C.C. driveway along the Rideau river and, if so, what properties are involved and how soon after the track removal would expropriation notices be sent out to the property owners involved?

Answer: The national capital commission has no plans at present to expropriate property in the New Edinburgh area of the city of Ottawa subsequent to the removal of the C.P.R. spur line between Beechwood avenue and Sussex drive.

AIR POLLUTION RESEARCH

Question No. 1,065—Mr. Howe (Wellington-Huron):

1. Is the Department of National Health and Welfare conducting a program of research on air pollution and, if so, what have been the findings of this program as to its cause in connection with (a) the motor car, the truck and the bus (b) industrial and commercial enterprise (c) nuclear fall-out?

2. Have any conclusions been arrived at as to methods of control?

3. How much has this program cost to date?

[Mr. Laprise.]

Miss LaMarsh: 1. Yes.

(a) Motor car. The principal cause of air pollution from the motor car is the emission of unburned fuel or hydrocarbons, carbon monoxide, carbon dioxide, oxides of nitrogen, sulphur dioxide, organic compounds such as aldehydes, acids, alcohols, esters, phenols, carcinogens and others, smoke and particulate matter, including lead.

Truck and bus. Similar to above for those operating on gasoline. Diesel engines produce much lower or negligible concentrations of carbon monoxide for all operating conditions; except acceleration or other heavy load conditions. However diesel emissions of hydrocarbons and oxides of nitrogen, expressed in lbs. per hour, are greater in all cases than the values for gasoline engines. Odour and irritation of diesel exhaust are due principally to the content of aldehydes.

(b) Industrial and commercial enterprises. Causes of air pollution from this source are many and varied, depending upon the nature of the enterprise. Combustion products of solid fuels may pollute the air with smoke, fly ash up to 10 per cent of the fuel used, sulphur oxides, oxides of nitrogen, hydrocarbons, organic acids and aldehydes and many other products. Liquid fuels in combustion contribute very much less ash, but similar quantities of sulphur oxides, depending upon the sulphur content of the fuel, and products similar to those mentioned above. Gaseous fuels contain no ash or sulphur and produce the least quantity of contaminants during combustion.

Some of the major contaminants from industrial enterprises are sulphur dioxide from smelting of sulphide concentrates; odorous sulphur compounds from pulp and paper mills; fluorides from aluminium defining and phosphate fertilizer production; sulphur dioxide, other odorous sulphur compounds, hydrocarbons and catalyst dust from oil refining; arsenic from roasting of arsenical gold ores; oxides of nitrogen and ammonia from manufacture of nitric acid and nitration products; chlorine from electrolysis of salt; lead from battery plants and smelters; zinc from metallurgical plants; iron oxide dust and sulphur dioxide from iron and steel manufacturing; dust from cement manufacture and other crushing, grinding and sintering or roasting operations. Almost every industrial process gives rise to air contamination of one form or another.

(c) Nuclear fall-out. As part of its comprehensive radioactive fall-out study program, the Department of National Health and Welfare has, with the co-operation of the meteorological services branch of the Department of Transport, established a program of air and precipitation sampling and analysis for radioactive fall-out. A network of 24 sampling stations provides the Department of National Health and Welfare with: (a) 24 hour air filter samples, daily; (b) accumulated rainfall and snowfall samples, monthly. These samples are analysed for total fall-out activity and the precipitation samples are further analyzed for strontium 89, strontium 90 and caesium 137. Results are published monthly in Data from Radiation Protection Programs (a copy of the latest issue of which was tabled in the house on May 20). Fall-out levels at any station or any part of the country are governed by nuclear weapons testing programs and by meteorological conditions, they are not known to contribute to air pollution in the sense that motor cars and industrial and commercial enterprises do.

2. (a) Methods of control for motor vehicles. Intensive studies on various control systems have been under way in the United States by the public health service, the state of California, the automobile manufacturers association in Detroit and other organizations for some years. These systems include the design of new engine processes, improved carburetor design and catalytic or flame combustion of exhaust gas by means of an afterburner. The state of California has established performance requirements for the control of contaminants in exhaust of motor vehicles but no system has been approved for installation as yet. The Department of National Health and Welfare is keeping abreast of such developments.

A partial palliative has been found in the installation of a crankcase control device to prevent air pollution from engine blowby gas. This device is now manufactured for installation in the United States.

(b) Control methods for industrial and commercial enterprises. Remedial measures and control systems have been designed for the collection of dusts or mists and the absorption of many gaseous contaminants. Solid or liquid particulates may be removed from stack gases by electrostatic precipitation, venturi or other scrubbers, cyclone collectors, fibrous filters or sonic agglomeration. Sulphur dioxide from smelting and sintering operations may be converted to sulphuric acid and phosphate fertilizers. Fluorides may be removed by wet scrubbers. Odorous compounds and solvent vapours may be burned by catalytic combustion or removed by activated carbon. In some cases the recovered products can be returned to the process or converted economically to valuable by-products. However research is being conducted in many countries on the development of processes for the removal of sulphur dioxide, oxides of nitrogen and other contaminants occurring in low concentrations in flue gases, especially those from thermal power plants. The Department of National Health and Welfare is being kept informed regarding such developments.

(c) Control of nuclear fall-out in air can be effected by termination of atmospheric nuclear weapons testing.

3. The air pollution program was initiated in 1956 within the occupational health division of the Department of National Health and Welfare and has cost about $400,000 since that time. The program is closely integrated with air pollution control activities of provincial health departments.

The radioactive fall-out study program was initiated in 1959 within the radiation protection division of the Department of National Health and Welfare and has cost approximately $100,000 since that time.

FIREFIGHTING EQUIPMENT AT NORTHERN AIRPORTS

Question No. 1,093—Mr. Rhéaume:

1. Is the firefighting equipment now available at each of the following airports adequate to meet safety requirements (a) Fort Smith (b) Yellowknife (c) Inuvik and, if not, what additional equipment is required at each of the above locations to bring them up to minimum standards?
2. What plans, if any, have been made to obtain this equipment and make it available?

Mr. Pickersgill: 1. (a) Fort Smith, adequacy has been under review due to recent increases in air traffic. (b) Yellowknife, yes; (c) Inuvik, yes.

2. A new 400 gallon foam crash truck is being purchased in 1964-65 for Fort Smith.

LEUKEMIA—VALIDITY OF CURE CLAIM

Question No. 1,100—Mr. Monteith:

As certain news reports may have raised false hopes in those suffering from leukemia would the Minister of National Health and Welfare issue a press release giving the department's views concerning the validity or otherwise of any possible cure for this dreadful disease which appears to have been claimed by a Mr. Naessens now visiting Canada?

Miss LaMarsh: The Department of National Health and Welfare is watching this situation very carefully and if and when it seems desirable to issue a statement on the subject the minister would consider doing so.

REVENUE AND OPERATING COSTS OF FARMERS

Question No. 1,117—Mr. Latulippe:

1. What was the total gross revenue of Canadian farmers in the years 1960, 1961, 1962 and 1963?
2. What was the total net revenue of Canadian farmers in the years 1960, 1961, 1962 and 1963?
3. What were the total operating costs incurred by Canadian farmers in the years 1960, 1961, 1962 and 1963?

Questions

4. What was, by province, the average gross revenue of farmers in the years 1960, 1961, 1962 and 1963?

5. What was, by province, the average net revenue of farmers in the years 1960, 1961, 1962 and 1963?

6. What were, by province, the average operating costs incurred by farmers in the years 1960, 1961, 1962 and 1963?

[Translation]

Answer: 1 and 2. In dealing with this question, it must be made clear that all information concerning estimates of farm income or revenue represent only the farmers' income due to their farming operations. Out of farm revenues are not included.

1. 1960, $3,256,722,000; 1961, $3,054,429,000; 1962, $3,758,370,000; 1963, $3,896,278,000.

2. 1960, $1,340,364,000; 1961, $1,074,672,000; 1962, $1,678,772,000; 1963, $1,716,345,000.

3. 1960, $1,916,358,000; 1961, $1,979,757,000; 1962, $2,079,598,000; 1963, $2,179,933,000.

4, 5 and 6. The dominion bureau of statistics does not establish official estimates as concerns average agricultural income and expenses per farm, because of the difficulty of obtaining, on the number of farms or farmers, adequate figures which could serve in calculating all-purpose estimates. Usually, various figures are provided, allowing the user to choose the divider most appropriate to his needs.

According to the 1961 census, the number of farms, by province, in Canada is the following: Prince Edward Island, 7,335; Nova Scotia, 12,518; New Brunswick, 11,786; Quebec, 95,777; Ontario 121,333; Manitoba, 43,306; Saskatchewan, 93,924; Alberta, 73,212; British Columbia, 19,934.

The abovementioned farms were counted at the time of the 1961 agriculture census, according to a definition determining that a farm is an establishment of one acre or more, whose sales of farm products during the 12 months preceding the date of the census were evaluated at $50 or more. Newfoundland was omitted since no regular estimates of farm income are made for that province.

Moreover, the census established an estimation of the number of commercial farms in Canada, the supposition being that a commercial farm is a farm which during the 12 months before the date of the census sold farm products estimated at $1,200 or more. The number of such farms per province is as follows: Prince Edward Island, 4,530; Nova Scotia, 4,939; New Brunswick, 5,116; Quebec, 62,497; Ontario, 90,345; Manitoba, 33,522; Saskatchewan, 82,285; Alberta, 58,698; British Columbia, 10,902.

Since figures of that nature are collected only at the time of the census, there are no comparable figures for the years 1960, 1962 and 1963. However, the numerical variations during that period are probably unimportant. The use of those figures is based on the assumption that there is approximately one farmer per farm. The labour summary compiled by the dominion bureau of statistics gives annual information on the number of farmers in Canada, but not for each province.

The attached table indicates the provincial figures for gross receipts and operation costs for the requested years.

WORLD FAIR PUBLICITY

Question No. 1,121—Mr. Latulippe:

Has the Canadian world exhibition corporation completed the estimates relating to credits to be provided to the nine companies in charge of publicity for the corporation and, if so, what is the total amount of the credits and how much is available to each of these companies?

[Translation]

Answer: No credit allotments have been made and assignments to such associate companies are made as occasion arises in the light of special qualifications of the company selected for each specific project.

CANADIAN ARMY PERSONNEL AND EQUIPMENT

Question No. 1,126—Mr. Latulippe:

1. How many men were added as reinforcements to the Canadian infantry brigade in West Germany during the past two years?
2. How many soldiers belonging to the NATO mobile reserve are stationed in Canada?
3. How many M-113 armoured transports does the Canadian army have, where were they purchased and, at what price?
4. How many heavy transport helicopters does the Canadian army have, where were they purchased and, at what price?
5. What changes will be made in the organization of the Canadian troops attached to NATO following the revision of the defence cadres foreseen in the defence white paper?

[Translation]

Answer: 1. There has been no change in the general strength of our brigade in federal Germany during the past two years.

2. An infantry battalion group which can be air-lifted with its supporting elements has been chosen for integration into Saceur mobile troups.

3. At this time, the Canadian army has no M-113 vehicles. A contact was let to the Food Machinery Corporation of Sante Fe (California) and the delivery of M-113 to the Canadian army will start in September 1964. The unit price of those vehicles, f.o.b. United States, is the following: 450 M113-Al armoured troop transports, $25,805 each; 11 M577-El HQ vehicles, $33,289 each.

4. The Canadian army has no heavy transport helicopters. Twelve Vertol 107 helicopters have been ordered. The delivery of the first aircraft is to take place in August 1964. Two others will be delivered in September and October respectively, and the rest of the order will be carried out at the rate of one a month.

The contract, which was awarded to the Boeing Company, Vertol Division, Morton (Pennsylvania, U.S.A.) is dated February 14, 1964.

The price of each aircraft is $922,340, Fly Away-Field, Arnprior airport (Ontario), plus sales tax.

[Mr. Latulippe.]

5. The main changes contemplated in respect of the reorganization of Canadian troops in NATO will be to increase their mobility so as to allow maximum flexibility in deployment. The changes will be operated in agreement with the NATO authorities according to needs.

CANADIAN COASTGUARD COLLEGE

Question No. 1,135—Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria):

1. How many employees of the Point Edward naval base who have already been released or will be released as a result of the closure of the ship repair depot will receive employment at the Canadian coastguard college to be established at Point Edward, as recently announced by the Minister of Transport?
2. Is it the intention of the Department of Transport to have all vessels of the Canadian coastguard that can be accommodated at Point Edward repaired there?

Mr. Pickersgill: 1. Plans for the organization and staffing of the Canadian coastguard college to be established at Point Edward are not yet sufficiently advanced to know how many locally engaged employees will be required.

2. No.

NEW INDUSTRIES ESTABLISHED

Question No. 1,139—Mr. Latulippe:

1. Since the establishment of the Department of Industry how many new industries have come to Canada or been created in this country through the direct co-operation of the department?
2. What industries were involved and where is each situated?
3. What capital was invested in each case?
4. What taxes, municipal, provincial and federal, have these companies paid since their establishment?
5. How many persons are employed by each such company?

Mr. Drury: 1 to 5. The Department of Industry is assisting new industries in many ways to establish in Canada. This is being achieved by the introduction of incentives such as the automotive incentive plan and the designated areas tax incentives program, as well as by other forms of assistance to achieve better industrial design, more diversification and efficiency in production, and a greater degree of industrial research and development in Canadian industry, thereby providing better access to domestic and foreign markets. Statistics are not maintained, nor would it be practical to attempt to do so, on the number of new industries which have been assisted, their locations, capital costs, taxes paid and employment.

MONORAIL CONSTRUCTION, WORLD FAIR

Question No. 1,140—Mr. Latulippe:

1. Is a monorail planned for the 1967 exhibition?

2. Has Taylor Woodrow Canada Ltd. begun negotiations with the exhibition authorities with regard to the construction of a monorail?

3. Have other companies also undertaken such negotiations and, if so, which companies?

4. Will the Taylor monorail be financed by French interests and, if so, who are they?

5. Who would own such a monorail?

6. Who would control the monorail for the exhibition corporation?

7. Have tenders been invited for the construction of a monorail by the exhibition corporation and, if so, have any tenders been received to date and from whom and for what amounts?

[Translation]

Mr. Sharp: 1. Consideration is being given to the use of a monorail. However, no decision has been made to date.

2. Discussions have taken place with Taylor Woodrow, and others as a result of a public tender called for mass transit system, which was advertised internationally, which tenders were received on April 22.

One of the bids submitted was by Janin, Bédard-Girard with Taylor Woodrow as their subcontractor.

3. The C.C.W.E. has not entered into any contract negotiations with any company to date. Among the bidders who submitted tenders for the design and construction of a mass transit system, the following have submitted prices for the whole or part using monorail: Hawker Siddeley Canada Limited; Janin, Bédard-Girard, Joint Venture; Dufresne Engineering Company Limited; C. A. Pitts, Mechanical Handling System, Joint Venture.

4. Taylor Woodrow Canada Limited have a commonwealth franchise for Safege Monorail as designed by Safege Transport of Paris.

5. Industry has been invited to submit proposals for the supply and operation of monorail and other systems for secondary transportation on a concession basis. Several propositions have been received and are under study.

To date it has not been decided—(a) that a monorail would be a part of the exhibition; (b) that such a system would be better operated as a concession or purchased by the C.C.W.E. and subsequently sold.

6. This question has been answered under No. 5.

7. Tenders were called for the design and construction of the "mass transit system" on February 24, 1964 on the basis of plans and specifications prepared by Dillon Associates, consulting engineers to the C.C.W.E.

These specifications were of a broad nature and did not limit the type of system that could be proposed.

Basic criteria were as follows: (a) A primary system capable of transporting 30,000 people per hour from the island of Montreal to the exhibition site; (b) five secondary systems ranging in volume from 8,500 to 10,000 people per hour to provide inter-exhibition area transportation.

Tenders submitted included the use of monorail and other systems.

Of the six transportation alignments, bidders were permitted to submit prices on all or any of these with no limitation on type of system. Due to the broad range of systems proposed, concession propositions and potential salvage values, the bid prices shown on the tender abstract annexed hereto do not necessarily reflect a true comparison of the various bidders.

These bids are under intensive assessment and scrutiny at this time and have to date involved discussions with some of the bidders.

ELIMINATION OF INDIAN RESERVES

Question No. 1,179—Mr. Latulippe:

1. Is the Department of Citizenship and Immigration considering taking steps to gradually eliminate the Indian reserves?

2. Did the Indian affairs commission submit representations to the government on this matter and, if so, what was the general nature of those representations?

3. When Reverend Father J. Mulvihill, O.M.I., proposed the gradual elimination of Indian reserves at a meeting during a forum on the training of leaders of the Canadian students' association of the United Nations at Ottawa, was he talking on behalf of the Indian affairs commission, of which he is a member, or was he expressing his personal views?

Mr. Badanai: 1. No.

2. No.

3. Rev. Father J. Mulvihill, O.M.I., is associate director of the Indian-Eskimo welfare commission operated under the auspices of the Oblate Fathers. The department has no information as to whether Father Mulvihill was speaking on behalf of the commission at the meeting referred to.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE CLAIMS

Question No. 1,183—Mr. Laprise:

How many initial claims have been made by claimants to the unemployment insurance commission in each year since 1957?

Mr. MacEachen: Initial claims filed by fiscal year ending March 31: 1957, 1,256,051; 1958, 1,682,948; 1959, 1,792,864; 1960, 1,742,508; 1961, 1,814,326; 1962, 1,613,308; 1963, 1,507,802; 1964, 1,385,142.

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT EMPLOYEES, COMPTON-FRONTENAC CONSTITUENCY, QUE.

Question No. 1,186—Mr. Latulippe:

1. What are the names of all postmasters or of all persons under contract for the delivery of rural mail, the locality of service and the salary or the amount of the contract in each case, in the constituency of Compton-Frontenac?

2. How many persons empoyed by the Post Office Department have been employed by the department since June 18, 1962, and (a) what is the name of each and where does he work (b) what vacant position or what new position was each person hired to fill?

3. How many persons in the constituency of Compton-Frontenac were dismissed by the Post Office Department since June 18, 1962 and (a) what is the name of each (b) what were the reasons for the dismissal in each case?

4. How many changes in premises or administrative changes are foreseen by the Post Office Department in Compton-Frontenac during the coming year, following investigations already made or recommendations already submitted and what places or what persons are involved in each case and what are the reasons given?

[Translation]

Answer: As stated on December 4, 1963, in answer to question No. 1,677, this information is not readily available. Its compilation would necessitate a review of a great number of records and require undue labour and expense.

MINES AND TECHNICAL SURVEYS EMPLOYEES, COMPTON-FRONTENAC CONSTITUENCY, QUE.

Question No. 1,190—Mr. Latulippe:

Does the Department of Mines and Technical Surveys have any employees in Compton-Frontenac and, if so (a) what is the name of each (b) where does each work (c) how long has each been working for the department, and (d) what salary is paid in each case?

Mr. Benidickson: The Department of Mines and Technical Surveys has no continuing employees in the Compton-Frontenac area.

PURCHASE OF "PALISADES" PROPERTY, JASPER, ALTA.

Question No. 1,197—Mr. Horner (Jasper-Edson):

1. When did the government buy the property known as the Palisades in Jasper?

2. How much was paid for it?

3. Has the government received any representations with a view to making use of this property as a youth training centre?

4. What is the government's reactions to these representations?

Mr. Laing: 1. April 25, 1962.

2. $277,850.

3. Yes.

4. It was decided to use the buildings for other purposes.

NATIONAL PARK, FORT LATOUR, SAINT JOHN, N.B.

Question No. 1,199—Mr. Bell:

With respect to the proposed national historic park at Fort LaTour, Portland point, Saint John, N.B. (a) what are the results of the excavations there of last summer (b) have any approaches been made in France regarding the early French records and, if so, with what results (c) what is the present government thinking as to participation?

Mr. Laing: (a) The archaeological excavation showed that not enough evidence of Fort LaTour survives to make an authentic reconstruction possible. Although various artifacts were found, only scattered and disconnected fragments of wall remain from the fort itself. (b) A search for documentary material relating to Fort LaTour was made in France last year and during the past winter, without any success. (c) The government is prepared to consider financial participation on an equal basis with the government of New Brunswick and the municipality in the acquisition of the property containing the site of Fort LaTour, if this is the wish of those two bodies, and a suggestion to this effect has been forwarded to the provincial government and the county of Saint John.

ABSTRACT ART IN AIR TERMINALS

Question No. 1,201—Mr. Mather:

1. What is the cost, in dollars, of the abstract art forms in the new air terminal buildings at Winnipeg, Edmonton and Toronto?

2. Is it the intention to include this type of art display in the Vancouver international airport?

Mr. Pickersgill: 1. The cost, in dollars, of the fine art works at the new air terminal buildings at Winnipeg, Edmonton and Toronto was $270,000 which was one half of 1 per cent of the cost of the terminal projects.

2. A similar budget figure of one half of 1 per cent of the cost of the terminal project has been provided for fine art in the new Vancouver terminal building.

INCREASED IMPORTS FROM U.S.

Question No. 1,202—Mr. Mather:

What is the cause of the marked increase of Canadian imports from the United States in the first quarter of 1964?

Answer: The latest statistics available show that imports from the United States increased by 17.5 per cent from the first quarter of 1963 to the first quarter of 1964 whereas imports from all sources increased by 17.6 per cent. This rise in imports reflects sharply increased demands in Canada associated with the strong pace of expansion under way during the past year but is no doubt also attributable in part to the removal, effective the beginning of April 1963, of the remaining import surcharges which had been in effect since the exchange crisis of the preceding year.

WEIGHT OF PRODUCTS IN WAXED CONTAINERS

Question No. 1,204—Mr. Orlikow:

Have the weights and measures branch of the Department of Trade and Commerce and the food and drug directorate of the Department of National Health and Welfare been able to decide between themselves which department is responsible for insuring that the contents of products in waxed containers are as indicated on the containers?

Miss LaMarsh: No problem has existed in this area for many years. The correct declaration of the net contents of prepackaged foods, including food products in waxed containers, falls within the jurisdiction of the Food and Drugs Act and regulations which are administered by the food and drug directorate of the Department of National Health and Welfare.

QUESTIONS PASSED AS ORDERS FOR RETURNS

CANADIAN GOVERNMENT AIRCRAFT

Question No. 1,124—Mr. Latulippe:

1. How many aircraft does the Canadian government own?
2. How many different types of aircraft does Canada own?
3. What is the average cost of each of these types?
4. What was the average cost of maintaining each type in 1961, 1962, and 1963?
5. What personnel expenditures on the average were required for each of these types for these three years?
6. What is the average annual operating cost for each of these types?
7. What were the losses for each type during the last three years?

Return tabled.

*TOLLS CHARGED IN NATIONAL PARKS

Question No. 1,200—Mr. Woolliams:

1. When does the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources intend to amend the parks regulations and laws so that tourists infringing parking regulations in the Banff national park do not have to appear in court as if they had committed a quasi and/or criminal offence?
2. Is the government intending to remove the toll charged people who are using the trans-Canada highway and must pass through the parks en route to their destination, although they do not desire to remain in the parks?
3. What rates are charged to people using passenger cars or transport trucks when they must pass through the parks?
4. Under what authority is a charge made to a person using the trans-Canada highway when he does not intend to remain in the parks or visit the same?

Return tabled.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

REQUEST FOR ANSWER TO QUESTION ON ORDER PAPER

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Théogène Ricard (St. Hyacinthe-Bagot): I should like to ask the Minister of Labour when he will be in a position to answer starred question No. 1,192 which stands on the order paper in my name.

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of Labour): I will undertake to answer this question the next time questions are called.

PRIVILEGE

MR. CÔTÉ, CHICOUTIMI—SIMULTANEOUS INTERPRETATION FACILITIES—ENGLISH ANSWERS TO FRENCH QUESTIONS

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Maurice Côté (Chicoutimi): Mr. Speaker, on a question of privilege. Last week, in the standing committee on public accounts, the technical aspect of the interpretation system went wrong. And it was not the first time that this has happened in a committee. Therefore, I would urge the government to have the engineering system corrected. We have excellent interpreters, who are perhaps underpaid; but the system should be rectified if we are to benefit from a perfect interpretation. Moreover, I received lately, from two departments, answers in English to questions which had been put in French on the order paper, whereas I had the right to get them in French, and I would insist that every minister who gives me an answer from now on, do so in French.

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I have listened to the remarks of the hon. member for Chicoutimi with great interest. I am sure all members will appreciate that one of the reasons for bringing in a reorganization plan for the House of Commons was to step up the facilities with respect to interpretation, Hansard reporting and various other departments. We are making good progress here. We hope to establish a staff board within a few days and all these questions will be under constant review, particularly by the newly established staff board.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

SOUTHEAST ASIA—POSSIBLE ESTABLISHMENT OF U.N. PEACE KEEPING FORCE

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): I should like to direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs and ask him whether the appointment by the United Nations of a three nation committee to go to Cambodia indicates the probability that a peace keeping force will be established by the United Nations in Cambodia, South Viet Nam and southeast Asia generally.

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): It is not possible at this time to say what will be the consequence of the investigation to be made by the three nation committee. After the committee has made its report it may be possible to give consideration to what should follow.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Is any consideration being given, or has Canada been communicated with in any way, concerning the reaction on the part of Canada to the establishment of such a peace keeping force and a contribution by this country?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): No suggestion has been made as yet to Canada or, as far as I am aware, to any other country with regard to the establishment of a peace keeping force.

DOMINION-PROVINCIAL RELATIONS

CO-OPERATIVE FEDERALISM—INFLUENCE OF WORLD FEDERALIST ORGANIZATION

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Gilles Grégoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, I am addressing my question to the Acting Prime Minister, as well as to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. As three members of this government, that is, the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Hays), the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources (Mr. Laing) and the Minister without Portfolio (Mr. Dupuis) are attending the association for world federation, does the policy of that organization become, by that very fact, a policy or a principle supported by this government, that is to say the setting up of a future world government at the expense of national sovereignty?

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: Would the hon. member put this question on the order paper. It is a question requiring quite a lengthy answer.

CO-OPERATIVE FEDERALISM—VIEWS EXPRESSED BY ST. JEAN BAPTISTE SOCIETY

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Auguste Choquette (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Secretary of State?

In view of the fact that the St. Jean Baptiste society have inveighed against co-operative federalism which they claim is national suicide; in view also of the uncalled for reaction of the hon. members opposite, I should like to ask the minister whether he has any comments on the matter or whether it is the government's intention to do something about those attacks against the policy of co-operative federalism?

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: Would the hon. member put this question on the order paper.

[Translation]

Mr. Choquette: Mr. Speaker, I submit that this is an extremely important question, since it involves the present policy of the government.

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: Order. Would the hon. member kindly take his seat. This question should be put on the order paper.

[Translation]

Mr. Choquette: Mr. Speaker, I intend to transfer this question for discussion at ten o'clock tonight.

Mr. Gilles Grégoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question to ask the Secretary of State in accordance with standing orders.

Is he aware of the suggestions made by the St. Jean Baptiste societies of Quebec concerning co-operative federalism and does he intend to study the proposed suggestions made by these societies on this subject?

Mr. Pigeon: Yes, or no, it is easy.

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: It strikes me that if the first question asked, which is certainly delicate to say the least, is to be put on the order paper, the second question should also follow suit.

[Translation]

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Secretary of State.

As co-operative federalism would be tantamount to national suicide, is it the intention of the minister to bring forward a more logical formula?

Hon. Maurice Lamontagne (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, this question evidently does not come within my jurisdiction.

Mr. Pigeon: It is your proposition.

Mr. Lamontagne: Nevertheless, I should like to remind the hon. member that I am favourable to that proposition, just like Mr. Roblin.

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question. What is the minister's opinion of the statement made by St. Jean Baptiste societies which disapprove of this policy?

[Text]

TRADE

TARIFF CONCESSIONS TO AUTOMOBILE FACTORIES LOCATING IN QUEBEC

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Léon Balcer (Three Rivers): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask a question of the Minister of Trade and Commerce.

[Translation]

Could the minister tell us whether a final decision has been reached regarding tariff cuts in the case of the Renault and Peugeot companies, so that they might move into the province of Quebec?

[Mr. Speaker.]

[Text]

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I shall have to take this question as notice; I am not aware of these negotiations.

COTTON—DUMPING DUTY ON IMPORTS FROM U.S.

On the orders of the day:

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Acting Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, on Friday last, as recorded at page 3980 of Hansard, the hon. member for Grey-Bruce asked me a question which reads as follows:

> In view of the fact that the United States congress has taken action to provide a direct subsidy to the manufacturer of 6½ cents a pound on cotton, which means that the American manufacturer will receive the full raw cotton subsidy paid to foreign buyers, does the Canadian government intend to give consideration to applying dumping duty?

Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member will know, section 6A of the Customs Tariff provides that where, in the opinion of the governor in council, subsidied goods of a class or kind made or produced in Canada have been or may be directly or indirectly imported into Canada, such goods can be subjected to an additional duty on their importation equal to the amount of the subsidy. Whether imported goods are subsidized and the amount of the subsidy are questions of fact and the application of the section would depend on the circumstances of the individual case.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

CYPRUS—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON PRESENT POSITION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In view of the very critical situation centreing on Cyprus, has the minister some word for the house with regard to more recent developments than those recorded in today's press?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the situation over the week end was critical. However, I am happy to say that representations that were made to countries involved seem to have been observed, and the situation now seems to have eased considerably.

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In view of the recent statement by Right Hon. Duncan Sandys that the United Kingdom may withdraw from Cyprus if no progress is made, has the minister received any communication from the government of Great Britain in this respect, or given consideration to this aspect of the matter?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, I am not aware that the secretary of state for commonwealth affairs made that statement. What he did say, as I understood it, was that Her Majesty's government would give consideration to continued participation in the United Nations operation, depending upon the will and the attitude of the two communities toward the presence of British troops in the United Nations force. But there was no indication that they would not continue to participate in that force, given the satisfactory conditions outlined by the secretary of state for commonwealth affairs.

CONGO—CANADIANS REMAINING IN U.N. FORCE

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, on Friday last the hon. member for Calgary North asked how many Canadian army and air force personnel were still in the Congo and when were they to be returned to Canada.

As the hon. member knows, under the resolution adopted by the general assembly on October 18, 1963, the United Nations force in the Congo will be terminated at the end of this month. Repatriation of Canadian personnel has already started, with some 54 returning to Canada on May 27. At the present time there is a total of 179 Canadian servicemen in the Congo. Approximately 62 will be returning on June 17, 60 on June 27, and the remainder on the 30th of this month.

I am sure it would be of interest to all hon. members to know that since the United Nations force in the Congo was established in July, 1960, over 1,900 officers and men of the Canadian army and the Royal Canadian Air Force have served with distinction in that force.

SOCIAL ASSISTANCE

SASKATCHEWAN—PROPOSED REQUIREMENT THAT RECIPIENTS WORK FOR AID GIVEN

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of National Health and Welfare. In her absence perhaps an appropriate minister will consider it.

Is the federal government aware of the declaration made by a minister of the Saskatchewan government that it intends to require recipients of social aid to work for relief? Have any proposals been made to the federal government regarding this matter, and what is the attitude of the federal government toward such a proposal?

Mr. Speaker: This is a question for the order paper.

Mr. Knowles: Dix heures.

PUBLIC SERVICE

NOMINATION OF LABOUR REPRESENTATIVE ON UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE COMMISSION

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Michael Starr (Ontario): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address a question to the Minister of Labour and ask him whether the name of a Mr. Reamer has been submitted by the Canadian Labour Congress to the government for appointment to the unemployment insurance commission.

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of Labour): No, Mr. Speaker, there has been no name submitted as yet.

Mr. Starr: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Has the minister received any representation from affiliates of the Canadian Labour Congress supporting the reappointment of Mr. MacArthur to that commission?

Mr. MacEachen: Yes, Mr. Speaker, I believe there was at least one communication which arrived some time ago, but I would be glad to check and make sure of the extent of the representations received.

NATIONAL DEFENCE—BENEFITS TO CIVILIAN EMPLOYEES COMPULSORILY RETIRED

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Lucien Cardin (Associate Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, on Friday last the hon. member for Ontario asked a question of the Prime Minister with regard to special consideration being given to civilian employees of the Department of National Defence should their services be no longer required. In the absence of the Prime Minister perhaps I might be allowed to answer this question.

Serious consideration was given by the government to this matter, and I can inform the hon. member that it was decided that there should be no change in the benefits for civilian employees other than those set out by the Prime Minister when he communicated with the president of the civil service federation of Canada at the end of last month.

Hon. Michael Starr (Ontario): Mr. Speaker, this is a very serious situation so far as the civilian employees are concerned, and as a supplementary question I would like to ask what is the actual reason they are treated differently than those in the armed forces?

Mr. Cardin: Mr. Speaker, I would be in a position now to give the hon. member the reasons that motivated the decision of the government in this matter, but it is a very lengthy answer. I would hope the hon. member would put that question on the order paper.

LABOUR RELATIONS

GREAT LAKES—NATIONALITY OF S.I.U. NEGOTIATORS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I should like to answer a question asked the other day by the hon. member for Ontario with respect to the nationality of the bargaining committee for the seafarers international union. I have been provided with a list of the members of the bargaining committee, and all those on the committee are listed as Canadians with the exception of two persons. One is Mr. Patrick Flaherty, born in Galway, Republic of Ireland, and the other is Mr. James Madison, born in Copenhagen.

Mr. Starr: A supplementary question. Is Mr. Paul Hall not sitting in on these negotiations?

Mr. MacEachen: This is the information I received from the trustees. I did see in the newspaper, as likely the hon. member did, that Mr. Paul Hall did attend the meeting but I am not able to confirm that. As a matter of fact I have received information that he did not attend, although that other report was in the press.

HAL BANKS—RAISING OF FUNDS FOR LEGAL DEFENCE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Labour. Is the minister aware that members of the negotiating committee of the S.I.U. have undertaken to raise money for the legal defence of Hal Banks, and does the minister think this is a proper function for this committee?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The question is out of order.

[Later:]

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, I asked the Minister of Labour a question about the S.I.U. which you said was out of order. I wonder if I could be told how my question was out of order while the question about the S.I.U., which the hon. member for Ontario asked several days ago, was answered today.

Mr. Speaker: I will be glad to take the request of the hon. member into consideration.

[Mr. Cardin.]

CANADIAN FLAG

INQUIRY AS TO INTRODUCTION OF RESOLUTION

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should also like to ask a delicate question. Would the Minister of Justice, the house leader, tell the house what are the present plans as to the day when the two flag resolution will be introduced? We should like to know in advance.

Hon. Guy Favreau (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, there are no plans for introducing a debate on any two flag resolution.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that the Minister of Justice is apparently unaware of what the rest of the government is doing, may I ask him this. When will the resolution which provides for a flag bearing three maple leaves, as well as the union jack, be introduced?

Mr. Favreau: Mr. Speaker, with regard to the order paper I might say it is my belief, subject to a definite announcement tomorrow, that the debate on—

Mr. McIlraith: It is order No. 44.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. MacEwan: What a house leader.

Mr. Favreau: I said subject to confirmation tomorrow.

Mr. Starr: You mean subject to Paul Martin.

Mr. Favreau: The resolution which is on the order paper concerning a distinctive flag for Canada will commence to be dealt with on Thursday.

[Translation]

Hon. Paul Martineau (Pontiac-Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, in view of the minister's answer, should we conclude that the part of the resolution concerning the union jack will be abandoned?

Mr. Gilles Grégoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a supplementary question to the Minister of Justice.

Is it true that it is the intention of the government to redraft both resolutions that are now under study so that the first resolution would include the maple leaf flag and the national anthem "O Canada" and the second, the union jack and "God save the Queen"?

Mr. Favreau: It is obvious, Mr. Speaker, that these questions may be discussed at a proper time, that is when the resolution is introduced in the house.

[Text]

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I would not want any question to result in further collaboration among the Acting Prime Minister, the Minister of Justice and the Minister of Trade and Commerce, but does the minister say that the government does not know yet what course it is going to follow? Is that the reason for the uncertainty?

Mr. Favreau: Mr. Speaker, I am glad to advise the right hon. gentleman that there will always be the utmost collaboration among all ministers. The matter of the exact time of the introduction, subject to what I have just said, will be finally announced tomorrow.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, surely the house is entitled to know whether the government is going to divide this resolution in order to secure greater support.

Hon. Paul Martin (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, as the Minister of Justice has just pointed out and as the right hon. gentleman, who a few days ago said he was a great House of Commons man, should know, the rules of the house require that questions of this sort shall be debated at the appropriate time. In this case the appropriate time is when the resolution is before the house.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I would point out to the hon. gentleman that these gratuitous observations do not represent the attitude he took when he was over here and when he argued the very reverse.

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker, to the Minister of Justice or the Secretary of State for External Affairs or the Minister of Trade and Commerce, but since the Minister of Justice seems to need rescuing I will put it to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Can he tell us whether the design tabled at the time the resolution was printed in Votes and Proceedings is the design that is to be adopted by that resolution?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, this question is clearly out of order for the reason I gave a moment ago. When this matter is before the house my hon. friend will get the responses to which he will then be entitled. Until such time as that resolution is before the house, these questions are intended not to elicit information but to confuse, and they are contrary to the rules of the house.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Speaker: Order. Because of the general interest in this subject, which is putting it mildly, the Chair has been a little lenient today. However, in discussing a certain question asked by a member to my left the other day I ruled the question out of order on at least three grounds. I could have given eight but the three grounds were: (1) The question contains observations which might lead to a debate; (2) it refers to a debate or to answers to questions during the current session; (3) it anticipates an order of the day. I would respectfully suggest that we have had quite a few questions concerning the flag issue this afternoon, and we should leave it at that.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Always with deference, Mr. Speaker, I would point out this fact which apparently is not known to Your Honour. On Saturday the Prime Minister's office put out a new model flag, and surely we have the right to learn in parliament what is leaked from his office. We do not want to see controlled news items in this country, and that is the reason we ask this question. Apparently parliament is not to have certain information that the office of the Prime Minister makes available to the press.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, since the right hon. gentleman has not asked a question but made an observation, may I simply say that there is no basis whatsoever, as one might expect in this particular context, for the statement made by the right hon. gentleman.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, this indicates that the Secretary of State for External Affairs does not know the kind of stuff that is being sent out by the Prime Minister's office. In regard to the statement just made I raise a question of privilege. This afternoon's paper contains an article headed "Maple Leaf Flag 'Refined' ".

Mr. Martin (Essex East): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I must at least listen to what the question of privilege is before I can decide whether or not it is in order.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): With great respect, Mr. Speaker, there was no question of privilege raised by the right hon. gentleman, who knows that it is contrary to the rules of the house to frame a question as he was seeking to frame it, by means of a commentary. If the right hon. gentleman will frame his question in the appropriate manner based upon what is in this afternoon's paper, it can be considered. But I suggest to you, sir, that in the form in which the right hon. gentleman has proceeded this afternoon, this question is out of order.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I was proceeding with my question of privilege. While I know that the hon. gentleman is possessed of prevision and prescience to a high degree, he does not know the question of privilege I am going to raise. I now proceed following the interruption. This article is by the Canadian Press and it is also sanctified by the C.B.C.:

> Artists have "refined" the government's proposed maple leaf flag, a spokesman in the Prime Minister's office said Saturday. "The basic design has not been altered," he stressed. These are the changes:
> 1. The vertical blue bar at each edge of the flag has been widened slightly. The colour has also been deepened to "bring it closer to a royal blue."
> 2. The size of the three red maple leaves has been reduced slightly, and their colour also has been deepened. They will be close to scarlet.
> 3. The stems of the leaves have been straightened and made slightly thinner, removing the noticeable nodes that appeared in the original design.
> Some M.P.'s had called these nodes "a plumber's lament."

When I asked the question I was doing so on the basis of the most dependable information I could get. I now ask the hon. gentleman, is the information that was given by the Prime Minister's office on Saturday correct? Is parliament not entitled to know what has been leaked to the press, if you call it a leak?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman is seeking, of course, by every device at his disposal to get me to violate the rules of the house.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I should say to the right hon. gentleman, of course, that I have not seen the story in question. But it is clear from what the right hon. gentleman has read that there is no change in design, and when my right hon. friend is confronted with the resolution he will not only find that is the fact but he will also find that not only in this house but in this country there is nothing but approval for the stand taken by the Prime Minister.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I suggest that we have had enough questions on this particular subject, and that we move on to something else.

Mr. Nielsen: May I crave your indulgence? For the benefit of members of the house, can the Acting Prime Minister tell us whether the paper design that was produced in conjunction with the resolution is part of that resolution, so we will know what we are dealing with rather than being confronted with all these alterations?

[Translation]

Mr. Maurice Côté (Chicoutimi): Mr. Speaker, may I put a question to the Acting Prime Minister?

Is the minister aware that the future national flag, the one with three maple leaves, was raised and unfurled in Chicoutimi, before nearly 10,000 people, and also raised on city hall square, to the strains of O Canada, and that it was warmly acclaimed by the people?

PENITENTIARIES

PROPOSED LOCATION OF NEW WOMEN'S PRISON

On the order of the day:

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): I was going to direct a question to the Acting Prime Minister, but it is obvious I will not get a straight answer, so I will try my luck with the Minister of Justice.

Mr. Speaker: I understand that the last remark is meant to be facetious.

Mr. Howard: It was meant to be serious, Mr. Speaker. I wonder if I could ask the Minister of Justice whether it is a fact that the government has shelved its proposal to construct a new prison for women at Cornwall, and is going ahead with replacement of the present structure at its present site at Kingston.

Hon. Guy Favreau (Minister of Justice): The answer which I have already given on that point stands. I am pleased to advise the house, including of course my hon. friend, that I am going to meet the groups concerned on Saturday, July 11, to discuss the matter.

IMMIGRATION

JOHN THOMADAKIS—STATEMENT ON DETENTION AWAITING DEPORTATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): I should like to ask the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration if he can make a statement to the house on the case of John Thomadakis who, in a habeas corpus application, claimed he had been detained in the Don jail for 38 days without trial, then tried and sentenced to five months in jail with deportation to follow. He also claimed he was tried for an unknown offence and without a lawyer to defend him, although he had asked for one.

[Translation]

Hon. René Tremblay (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration): Here are the facts concerning the case of John Thomadakis.

Thomadakis is a citizen of Greece who was engaged as a shipmate in the United States, on January 1962, and who jumped his ship in Montreal on June 6, 1962.

He succeeded in escaping the searching efforts of immigration officers until March 3, 1964, when he was arrested in Toronto.

An investigation was held the next day under the Immigration Act. Contrary to some reports, Thomadakis was made aware of the purpose of the investigation and he admitted that he understood why the investigation was held. A Greek female interpreter was present and Thomadakis said he was certain she had the necessary qualifications to interpret his statements. He was informed of his right to be represented by a lawyer of his choice, and he stated under oath that he did not want to be represented.

The facts brought out at the investigation established that Thomadakis had entered Canada by avoiding the examination and that having come to Canada as crew member, he stayed here after the ship on which he had come went away. The special investigator then ordered his deportation, as required by the act.

Although Thomadakis stated that he did not wish to exercise his right of appeal, a stenographic copy of the evidence was sent to the headquarters of the immigration branch. The case was studied again in Ottawa and the deportation order was confirmed. Thomadakis was informed by letter, under date of March 18, that he would be deported to Greece as soon as it would be feasible.

Since Thomadakis had nothing to prove that he was a Greek citizen, steps were taken to get the document needed for the trip and arrangements were made for the trip.

Before those arrangements could be completed, however, Thomadakis had an interview with the R.C.M.P. They informed him that he would be charged with illegal entry into Canada and he received formal notification from them. Once again a competent interpreter was present and Thomadakis admitted that the statement read to him in Greek was accurate.

Thomadakis was served a summons on April 9, 1964, and on April 10 he was charged by the police with illegal entry into Canada. He was found guilty in magistrate's court in Toronto and sentenced to five months in jail.

Hon. members will notice that in that case appropriate legal action was taken by the immigration authorities within 24 hours of Thomadakis' arrest, that a competent interpreter was provided, that his right to be represented by counsel was clearly explained to him and that he was given the opportunity to appeal the decision of the special investigator. In my opinion, no justifiable criticism can be made concerning the handling of the case, and there have been no undue delays with respect to arrangements for deportation.

However, by entering Canada illegally, Thomadakis was not only liable to deportation; he had committed a felony. He was liable to prosecution in that respect as for any offence against the law of Canada. At present he is serving the sentence imposed by the court and will be deported upon his release from jail.

I could add that a certain number of prisoners in the Don jail have been convicted by a competent court for crimes they have committed and that they will be deported from Canada when they have served their sentence.

[Text]

Mr. Orlikow: May I ask a supplementary question. Will the minister investigate Mr. Thomadakis' complaint that he was told by immigration officials that he could have counsel, but if he did he would certainly be charged and tried for breaking the law, while if he did not bother to get counsel he would probably be deported immediately?

[Translation]

Mr. Tremblay: Mr. Speaker, I will take this question as notice.

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Trinity-Conception.

[Translation]

Hon. Paul Martineau (Pontiac-Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, a supplementary question. Could the minister give us as soon as possible the names of the other persons detained pending deportation? Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration could answer my question.

Mr. Tremblay: Mr. Speaker, I think that this question should be put on the order paper.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

ST. JOHN'S, NFLD.—STEPS TO SETTLE LONGSHOREMEN'S STRIKE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. R. Tucker (Trinity-Conception): May I direct a question to the Minister of Labour. Will the minister inform the house the present position of the strike at St. John's, Newfoundland, and if he sees any possibility of an early settlement?

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of Labour): The mediator is still at work in St. John's, Newfoundland. It is expected that a meeting may be held tomorrow with regard to this dispute. It is a very difficult one, and I can make no assessment as to the future. As my hon. friend knows, the prospects of settlement depend upon the attitudes adopted by the parties.

FISHERIES

REQUEST FOR EXTENSION OF CONSTRUCTION SUBSIDY TO WOODEN VESSELS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (Queens-Lunenburg): The Minister of Fisheries has announced a change in the formula for the payment of assistance under the regulations covering fishing boat construction and the lowering of the minimum size for eligibility to 35 feet. Will the minister also give consideration to the payment of the same percentage of subsidy for the construction of wooden fishing trawlers 75 feet and over that is presently paid to steel fishing trawlers, thereby ending the discrimination against the wooden shipbuilding areas in Canada?

Mr. Speaker: Will the hon. member put this question on the order paper.

INQUIRY FOR RETURN

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Eric A. Winkler (Grey-Bruce): I should like to address a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Will the minister table a return showing the number of returns to questions not yet brought down from the last session as well as from the present session?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Yes.

WORLD FAIR

REQUEST FOR PROVISION OF THIRD ACCESS ROAD TO BRIDGE

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce, to whom I have just given notice.

Has the Minister of Trade and Commerce acceded to the request of the authorities, or rather, has he accepted Mr. Lucien Saulnier's suggestion that another approach to the Champlain bridge be added to facilitate access to the world fair?

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: This is a question for the order paper.

Mr. Pigeon: I think the minister is ready to answer.

HOUSING

ASSISTANCE BY C.M.H.C. TO POINT EDWARD NAVAL BASE EMPLOYEES

On the orders of the day:

Hon. J. R. Nicholson (Postmaster General): On Thursday last the hon. member for Cape Breton North and Victoria asked me, as the minister through whom Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation reports to parliament, a question concerning the arrangements to be made to assist workers at the Point Edward naval base. I took the question as notice.

Since the question was asked I have gone into the matter with the officials of Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation and have been advised that the corporation has no rental housing units serving the employees at the Point Edward naval base, nor has the corporation any problems relating to arrears of mortgage payments in this area.

Mr. Robert Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): May I ask a supplementary question. I thank the minister for his reply; he is always a gentleman, unlike some of his colleagues.

Some hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. Speaker: I am sure the hon. member did not mean what he stated, just incidentally to his main question.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): I cannot hear you, sir, but the Postmaster General is a real gentleman so far as I am concerned. May I ask him a specific question. I was not specifically referring to central mortgage and housing, although that was included, but could he not with his cabinet colleagues look into the question of assisting those who have been put out of employment by this government in paying their rent? They still have to pay rent.

Mr. Nicholson: Mr. Speaker, that is a question for the order paper. I have looked into the central mortgage and housing aspect of it, and with regard to the other aspect, if it is put on the order paper I shall make inquiries.

DATE OF PAYMENT OF WINTER CONSTRUCTION BONUS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. W. Prittie (Burnaby-Richmond): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Labour. Is the minister aware that many persons living in houses completed before March 31 have not received the $500 bonus yet, and can he inform the house when these bonuses will be paid?

Mr. Speaker: Order. This is a question for the order paper.

Mr. Prittie: Mr. Speaker, I submit to Your Honour that the question of people waiting for $500 is rather more important to them than many of these frivolous questions on the flag.

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT

WINNIPEG—POSSIBLE USE OF MAILS TO DEFRAUD

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Postmaster General. On May 5, as recorded at page 2927 of Hansard, I asked him a question concerning the possible fraudulent use of the mails by a finance company in Winnipeg and he said he would look into the matter. I wonder if he could bring down an answer fairly soon.

Hon. J. R. Nicholson (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, I must apologize to the hon. member. The answer was supplied to me a few days ago, and I will be glad to give it to the hon. member during the next question period.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

POSSIBLE FURTHER REDUCTION IN DEPARTMENTAL EXPENDITURES

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Guy Marcoux (Quebec-Montmorency): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of National Defence?

Has the minister read the statement made over the week end by two economists to the effect that the first step the federal government should take in order to improve federal-provincial relations would be reduce considerably the expenditures of his department and, if so, what action does he propose to take himself?

[Text]

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of National Defence): No, Mr. Speaker.

Inquiries of the Ministry

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

ST. VINCENT DE PAUL PENITENTIARY—REMISSION OF CORPORAL PUNISHMENT

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Hon. Guy Favreau (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I should like to answer a supplementary question the hon. member for Three Rivers asked me on May 29, when he wanted to know the latest date on which the sentence of the lash had been carried out at the St. Vincent de Paul penitentiary.

Here is the answer: On May 11, 1964, in the case of three inmates.

Now, for his personal information, I have the data concerning the other dates in the other places of detention if he is interested.

NORTHERN AFFAIRS

QUEBEC—ADMINISTRATION OF ESKIMO AFFAIRS

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Gilles Grégoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources.

Could the minister tell us whether other meetings have taken place, in the last few days, between his department and the officials of the Quebec department of natural resources in order to operate the transfer to the province of Quebec of the administration of Eskimo affairs, and could he tell us also whether those negotiations have been broken off or whether there is still some ground for understanding and what is his department doing in that respect?

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: Order. Would the hon. member put this on the order paper?

[Translation]

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Speaker, I should like to put my question in such a way that it will be in order and ask the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources whether there has been any meeting lately between the officials of his department and those of the department of natural resources of the province of Quebec concerning the transfer of Eskimo affairs.

[Text]

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): Mr. Speaker, there has been no contact by myself with any minister of the government of the province of Quebec since I last spoke on this matter in the house.

[Translation]

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask a supplementary question. Does the minister intend to enter into new negotiations with that department of the province of Quebec about this?

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: I must interrupt the hon. member. We have had three questions on this same subject all asking for detailed answers and it does seem to me, inasmuch as this question has been raised every week for the last two or three weeks, that this is a question for the order paper.

NATIONAL HOUSING ACT

AMENDMENTS RESPECTING RENEWAL PROGRAMS, PUBLIC HOUSING PROJECTS, ETC.

Hon. J. R. Nicholson (Postmaster General) moved the second reading of Bill No. C-102, to amend the National Housing Act, 1954.

He said: My remarks during the resolution stage were extended, and in these circumstances I do not intend to make any further observations at this time. I will leave it to hon. members of the house to comment on the bill now before us.

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): As I said when I spoke at the resolution stage, it is the intention of the official opposition to encourage the speedy passage of this legislation, since the bulk of it was contained in the program of the previous government which would have been implemented had it not been for the extensive obstruction which the government of that day encountered from members who now sit opposite.

I will say that there are some features of this legislation which are deserving of critical and constructive comment and I intend to advance a portion of that comment, as do one or two other members belonging to this party. The first matter I should like to direct to the attention of the minister—I am not certain whether he is aware of it or not—concerns an undesirable practice which has come into being as the result of the drying up of mortgage moneys from independent mortgage sources. It would appear the practice is for builders to approach independent lenders and, since the independent lenders will not make an advance under the provisions of the act as it now stands, the builders offer them a bonus, in effect, of 1 per cent or 1½ per cent on the loan to be made, in this way bypassing the provisions of the act and obtaining money from independent lenders in circumstances under which they otherwise would not obtain it.

I think this practice is not in the best interests of the housing industry as a whole, and it is certainly one which deserves the attention of the minister. Officials of Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation must be aware of this undesirable practice and the house would, I am sure, be interested in hearing from the minister what steps the corporation has taken in order to prevent its continuance.

My remarks this afternoon will be confined mainly to the application of the housing provisions to northern housing because this is the area of the country with which I am most familiar. I wish to deal particularly with the provisions having to do with the development of low rental and low cost housing either by municipal authorities or by independent contractors. I also intend to devote a few of my remarks to loans in respect of the purchase of existing homes.

At the outset I can tell the minister that in my view the provisions of this bill which purport to amend the National Housing Act so as to provide mortgage money for the purchase of existing homes do not go far enough. The provisions contained in part III of the bill are too confining. In the whole of the Yukon Territory there is only one urban area, and in the Northwest Territories a similar situation exists. Thus an extension of the provisions of the act as far as northern housing is concerned would confer no benefits whatsoever in the direction of expanding home building in this vast area, which makes up 40 per cent of Canada.

There is a desperate need in the north for an extension of the provisions of the act, not only with respect to making loans available for the purchase of existing homes but for loans in themselves. As the minister is well aware, the provisions of the National Housing Act now impose—probably for good reason in the more southerly areas of Canada—certain standards which must be adhered to if money is to be advanced for the construction of new homes; I am thinking particularly of the existence of sewers, water facilities and the like. The original act remained unworkable in the northern areas of Canada until the government changed in 1957, and in subsequent years amendments were made to the National Housing Act which resulted in a substantial increase in home building in the northern area of Canada. The minister may be interested to learn, for instance, that prior to 1958 there were only two homes in the whole of the Yukon which had been built under the provisions of the National Housing Act, while in subsequent years, after the changes had been made and the terms of the act broadened, well over 100 homes were built in the city of Whitehorse alone. For the purpose of the Canada Elections Act, Whitehorse is now described as an urban area but really the greater Whitehorse area is not what could be called a truly urban centre in terms of southern urban centres. There still exists a great need for the development of sewer and water facilities in this district beside other amenities which are taken almost for granted in the more southerly areas of Canada.

The act does not work at all in places such as Dawson city, Haines Junction, Watson Lake, Beaver Creek, Porter Creek, Mayo. I am sure the minister is familiar with these centres because he recently made a visit to this region. A similar picture could be drawn with regard to the Northwest Territories. So there is a great need for broadening the provisions of the act so as to provide Canadians who reside in these northern areas with mortgage funds, access to which southern Canadians take almost for granted.

Perhaps if the officials of Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation were to concentrate a little on the problems of housing legislation as they affect northern home building a solution might be found so as to make mortgage funds available to these communities. For example, it is possible that exceptions might be made with respect to the standards which are required. I realize that since this is national legislation, certain national standards must be set. At the same time, if the provisions of the act are so restricted, having regard to the tempo at which these northern communities develop, that the legislation itself becomes completely unworkable as applied to individuals who wish to build their own homes and do not have the material resources with which to proceed, it is obvious that careful examination is called for.

I was interested in the remarks the minister made concerning the Winnipeg urban renewal scheme. This scheme, as I said on a previous occasion, was conceived and set in operation during the term of the former government, and it is one which sets an example for other urban areas in Canada to follow. It is a most ambitious undertaking and I am sure if other Canadian centres of a similar size and with similar problems were to take an object lesson from the Winnipeg project, housing standards generally would rise in the heavily populated urban areas of this country.

Again, the provisions of the urban renewal sections of the National Housing Act cannot be applied on all fours with northern centres. There is just as much urgency and need for urban renewal, if you want to use that term, in the north as there is in the more southerly areas; perhaps even more so because of the manner in which these northern areas develop, particularly in the Yukon, where you had a mushrooming development during the construction of the Alaska highway and as a result many temporary, army-type buildings which were erected have since been vacated and acquired by private enterprise, some of which have been improved and others of which have not.

As the minister is well aware, building costs run something between 30 per cent to 40 per cent higher in northern Canada than in southern Canada. That means for every dollar that the individual in Winnipeg or Edmonton would pay for a pound of nails, the cost would be $1.40 where I come from. Again, a similar situation exists in the Northwest Territories. It is an adjustment in this area that is needed for the down payment provisions, because the capital position of the borrower and all these factors change the further we go north because of the freight differentials that exist, because of the increased labour costs that exist, and the other cost factors which are brought to bear on construction costs generally in the northern areas.

I should now like to point out one of the big stumbling blocks to the ease of building in the north. I must say that this is a matter with regard to which I have received great co-operation from C.M.H.C. officials, particularly the late Mr. Bates. One of the largest stumbling blocks is the question of standards. What might be acceptable standards in the south with respect to stucco, outside finishing and this sort of thing, have to be gauged in an entirely different light when you judge these matters in the light of northern conditions. There are many who believe that because it is so much colder in the north—at least they make that assumption—and because of the longer period of winter—at least they make that assumption as well—the construction standards for outside finishing have to be that much higher for northern building; or conversely, they will not be adequate when measured by southern construction standards.

This is a false conception of the north because people who have been there will realize that the conditions that exist in my home town of Whitehorse and in Yellowknife are pretty well the same as they are in Winnipeg or any other southern prairie centre. As a matter of fact the average mean temperature in Whitehorse during the six winter months is one degree warmer than that in Winnipeg; yet the immediate assumption is made that the outside finishing standards for construction in the north must be that much higher because of the difference in the climate between the north and the south. People have an entirely wrong conception of living conditions in the north. But I would urge on the minister that our needs for housing are as great as or greater than those which exist in the southerly centres.

If the minister will ask his officials I am sure in 10 or 15 minutes there can be explained to him the history of the long fight which we waged from roughly 1950 through to 1958 for an amelioration of the restrictive terms of the housing act so that it would work in the Yukon Territory. He will then immediately understand just how difficult it was in that day for northerners to obtain loans at all. But with all credit to the previous government, the act was amended so as to permit building, and I think the significance of the statistic I have just cited to the minister will indicate that this is so; that is to say, where only two homes were built under the N.H.A. prior to 1958, in the next two or three year period there were well over 100 built in the Whitehorse area alone. But there is still no N.H.A. building going on in any other community in the Yukon.

The reason for this, of course, is that the standards are too high. Some communities have not water and sewer facilities; septic tanks are not allowed, I believe. I am not an expert on the housing standards that are required by C.M.H.C., but I do know that one of the greatest complaints as I travel around my constituency is that the people who want to build homes and settle down and make themselves and their families permanent citizens there simply cannot do so because they have not the wherewithal themselves with which to build, and N.H.A. is not working in their communities.

Therefore I would urge the minister to give these northern conditions particular consideration. The personnel of C.M.H.C. are not only dedicated people, but in my experience they are people of imagination who can usually find solutions to these problems if they really have a mind to do so. I am sure if a little bit of time is devoted to this particular problem they will be able to come up with suggestions to the minister for perhaps future amendments to the act which would allow home building to go on in these northern communities to the same extent as it goes on in the remaining parts of Canada.

The other matter I wanted to draw to the minister's attention is the lack of any inspection facilities in the Yukon; and the same situation, again, exists in the Northwest Territories. Usually, as the minister knows, inspection services are available in or close to communities that are doing any extensive C.M.H.C. building at all. The facilities that we are required to use in the Yukon are based at Prince George, so that there is a substantial delay between reaching the stage of construction that the act requires and its actual inspection, for which the inspector must travel from Prince George to Whitehorse, and then the approval and subsequent payment. So contractors sometimes have to wait as long as two or three months, and longer, for progress payments. Certainly it is wrong, I feel, to have contractors carrying the corporation or the government—the corporation in this instance—out of their own funds. That is what it amounts to. The mortgage advances are not made, and the contractor has to obtain a loan at the bank at 6 per cent in order to make the payment which C.M.H.C. should have made. If the inspection services were based on the spot this problem would be overcome.

I submitted a rather lengthy list of suggestions concerning standards to Mr. Bates before his death. Mr. Bates replied at length to me, and I understand that these matters are all under consideration in the corporation now so I will not take up the time of the house with the detail of those submissions. I have never had anything but the greatest co-operation from the officials of C.M.H.C., and particularly Mr. Bates with whom I was wont to deal most often. I am sure they will look at these submissions with respect to standards and perhaps, if it is at all possible, make the necessary proposals to have the standards requirements of their legislation or regulations amended so as to take into account northern conditions.

With those few observations with respect to northern housing, Mr. Speaker, I would urge the minister to take these specific matters under his personal care and attention. I know he will do that, and I know he will get the utmost co-operation from the officials of C.M.H.C., and perhaps we might see some further progress in northern housing development.

Mr. Reid Scott (Danforth): Mr. Speaker, as has already been indicated by other speakers from my party, we welcome this bill and are, of course, prepared to support it. It is particularly pleasant to be able to accept this measure with enthusiasm, because I recall that the last time the hon. gentleman brought some legislation before the house in connection with the post office we were not able to greet it with the same enthusiasm with which we welcome this bill, and that is a pleasant change.

I do not want to deal with the specific clauses of the bill. We had some discussion on this matter, and I want to leave the clauses until the committee stage where they will be dealt with in detail by the minister. One thing which is important in the discussion is this. It should be made clear that the problems of housing and urban development are in no way exclusively restricted to the large centres of population; the smaller towns in the rural areas are just as vitally affected by measures of this kind as the large city centres.

A report by the Ontario department of municipal affairs in 1962 set out this situation very clearly. For example, it pointed out that in Sault Ste. Marie 55 per cent of the structures were classified as less than good. The survey conducted in the city of Kingston again showed evidence of blight. The survey showed that many of the homes were seriously lacking in necessary facilities for good housing. Hamilton had pockets of substandard housing, which was also set out in the report. In Windsor over 25,000 structures were examined, 13.3 per cent found vulnerable to blight, 3 per cent totally blighted and others partly blighted. The report also discusses Ottawa, where out of 5,385 units examined there were 4,370 which had serious deficiencies in sanitary and housing facilities.

One of the worst places in the province of Ontario, and perhaps in all Canada, is my home city of Toronto, where very little progress has been made in the matter of public housing in the last five years. In 1958 the metropolitan council set itself a target of 1,000 units a year but now, five years later, they have only erected about 550 in total.

This is a situation which has developed all across the country; it is not restricted. It is in contrast to some other areas which have promoted this type of housing very adequately and have therefore been much more successful. The city of Newark in New Jersey has built twice as many as the whole of Canada, yet its population is only 500,000 compared with Canada's 18 million.

We were particularly pleased to hear in the minister's speech the emphasis he properly laid on the need for public housing and urban redevelopment, because these are two of the areas which have been tremendously neglected. The minister was very tactful in his speech, and admitted quite candidly that progress to date had been something less than perfect. That is a diplomatic way of putting it. I suggest instead that to date it has really been an abject failure. One of the problems we seem to have in this house and which I have experienced is that everyone seems reluctant to admit that problems exist in case they start an argument as to who created the problem, and we seem to spend as much time trying to allocate responsibility for a particular problem and in blaming the cause on a particular government as we do in trying to devise some sort of effective and realistic programs to deal with them.

My main interest in participating in this debate at the second reading stage is that I feel what we should be concerning ourselves with is not just the passage of this bill but with what is going to happen after the bill receives royal assent. Words and phrases do not build houses, and the good intentions expressed in the bill are absolutely useless unless they are carried out with tremendous initiative, energy and vigour. I think we should be more concerned about how this bill is carried into reality than with the clauses themselves, and I will suggest to the minister some proposals for his consideration which I think will enable us to make this an act really worth while and productive of concrete results.

The first thing I think the government should seriously consider is the creation of a ministry of housing which should be headed by a full time minister. For too long in Canada we have failed to recognize that good housing, at prices which people can afford, and good citizens are intimately connected; that the provision of good housing is every bit as important as the provision of family allowances, pensions, hospitalization schemes and other welfare measures. We have paid lip service to this principle in Canada, but I do not think we have ever really accepted it. Yet the connection between housing and good citizens is so obvious to me that I do not think it needs any documentation.

Governments in previous years have largely regarded housing as some sort of economic pump primer. When construction was dragging our governments have tended to turn on the tap and let some mortgage money flow out in an endeavour to stimulate the housing industry, not so much through a genuine belief in a housing scheme as an inducement to employment and as a means of attempting to stimulate the economy. We saw an example of that in the $500 winter construction bonus, which was primarily designed to provide employment and was not particularly concerned with housing itself. It is also significant that this scheme is not administered by Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation under the minister but is under the jurisdiction of the Minister of Labour.

Over the years our housing agencies have been shifted from one department to another, and they are now under the control of the present minister. Presumably when another minister is appointed after the by-election in Saskatoon there will be another shifting around. This has really lowered the whole approach to housing.

I do not think we have ever recognized the tremendous need in Canada for a genuine national housing program. I know it is difficult. I realize that housing problems have to be worked out in the context of the federal state, and that we have to deal with provinces which have been pretty darned apathetic over the problem. We have also had to deal with municipalities which are the creatures of those provinces. I realize that our municipal politicians in particular and people in general have always shown a great reluctance to get into the field of housing, and I am aware of the difficulties this creates for a federal minister who is trying to promote a proper housing scheme. But the best way to show the provinces and the municipalities that one really means business would be to give pretty serious consideration to elevating housing to its proper place. This is just as important as national health and welfare, it is just as important as fisheries and it is just as important as forestry.

I think it is about time that we Canadians establish and put into operation a new ministry of housing headed by a full-time minister. In view of the hon. gentlemen's speech at the resolution stage and the attitude he has shown, I think I would be quite happy if he were the minister in charge of this great undertaking. So my first suggestion is that we have a full-time minister of housing.

My second suggestion is that I think the minister should be prepared to take to the road and sell this measure to the provinces and to the municipalities. This is going to be one of the very big problems, to overcome what I described a moment ago as the apathy and indifference of the provinces and the municipalities in this field. I should like to see, for example, a series of provincial-municipal conferences organized by the minister in each province where the provincial governments and the municipalities could be brought together, and their needs examined and in particular specific goals and targets set so that we will have some rule by which to measure the success which is being achieved in this particular field. Again, if this is going to be done, if you are really going to get out, promote the act and overcome the apathy, there will have to be a full-time minister of housing. I do not see how you are going to get around that particular problem otherwise.

Third, I should like to see the minister stir up his own department, Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation, which at the moment is largely oriented toward private, single family homes and apartments built by private operators. This is not the department's fault. Successive governments have never really encouraged the department to activate itself in some of these other fields. But they are at the moment largely oriented in this direction, and it seems to me that one thing that really could promote the act would be if the minister could get the department all steamed up, and then C.M.H.C. officials right across the country could really sell the program to the municipal officials and local planners with whom they are in daily contact. This would go a long way toward active promotion of this particular scheme.

Fourth, I think the government should seriously consider sponsoring and financing courses on a university level for housing authorities, housing administrators, welfare authorities and, in short, anybody having anything to do with public housing, especially homes for the aged. If such courses were made available and the details, benefits and necessity of substantial action under this act were made clear, I think these officials would have a lot of information they do not have now. They would be a lot better informed and prepared to recommend schemes to their particular municipalities.

Fifth, I should like to see the minister promote this housing legislation by greater use of press conferences and press coverage. We simply must begin to make Canadians more housing conscious. We are obsessed in Canada with single family ownership and all of the advertising and promotion have been in this direction. Consequently a stigma has grown up against subsidized public housing, and I think the minister has a big job ahead of him if he is going to reorient Canadian thinking on this subject and make people realize that public housing is perfectly respectable, and subsidized housing is economically necessary. If he began such a campaign I think it would be most helpful.

For example, I should like to see a model city built somewhere in Canada so all Canadians could see the wonderful new things that are available in town planning, planning techniques and housing in general. We might even make it a part of our centennial celebrations; but a model city would encourage people to see it, make them realize the importance of housing in our daily lives and would put them a long way on the road to considering this as a major problem.

Sixth, I should like to see the government initiate a crash program for senior citizens, especially single pensioners. I know the minister has been on a cross country tour and has visited many areas. I am sure he has seen, as all of us have, the shameful and disgusting accommodation in which many pensioners live. All of us during election campaigns have had occasion to visit these individuals in their single rooms at the top of houses and have come away—I did at least—ashamed to be a Canadian, in that we were permitting our pensioners to live in such deplorable circumstances. While I realize there are other aspects of great importance, I should still like to see a crash program, for humanitarian reasons if nothing else, because these people are not going to be with us very much longer.

Seventh, we simply must find some method of streamlining and making less complicated the procedures and regulations required to initiate these proposals. At the present time it takes approximately 58 steps in number to bring a program into actual realization. This results in endless and needless delays, frustration and quite often eventual abandonment of the project because it just does not seem to be going to get anywhere.

Eighth, we have to try to convince municipalities that they must permit greater flexibility in building, greater flexibility in their bylaws, greater flexibility in the designing of the buildings involved. I think Toronto has the most archaic building bylaws in North America, and I am sure this sort of thing frustrates and defeats many of the purposes of the planners and many of the hopes of our legislators.

Ninth, finally, and most important, I think that everything devolves on the minister. It seems to me that the success or failure of the act will rest on his ability to marshal his energy and imagination and to give the country leadership in the field of housing, something that it has been badly lacking. The problems of urban communities are so immense that they are almost staggering. I do not suggest for a moment that we can expect any miracles in the next year or two, but it is time for action to commence, and it really is going to devolve on the minister himself. In fact, the minister has an opportunity that I would envy, because if he is able to do some of these things, if he is able to overcome the apathy, if he is able to get things moving in the housing field in a really big way, he has a chance to change the face of Canada and to begin now that process that has been long delayed and which would revive our urban centres and our rural regions as well.

These suggestions I make to the minister are obviously of a short run character designed to deal with this particular piece of legislation, but in concluding I want to suggest something else. I suggest to him that the real problem of urban life is, as I have said, enormously complicated because it involves all the needs of town planning, transportation, communication, industrialization, commercialization, as well as places for people to live. It creates great social and psychological problems which none of us really understands and we do not have enough information with which to deal with them. I propose that the minister should give consideration to a long run approach to housing in addition to this legislation. I suggest to him that the government should consider appointing a royal commission on housing that could begin to sit now and obtain the information we need to devise solutions to deal with the problems of urban Canada in the next two decades.

We all know that our urban areas are growing steadily in numbers and strength, and that it will not be too long before 80 per cent of our people will live in cities and 20 per cent in rural districts. This is going to pose problems of an almost staggering nature. I suggest that this royal commission should have wide ranging terms of reference. For example, I think it should establish the approximate housing needs of low income families. I should recommend a national housing policy to deal with all segments of society including the following: Housing for low income families, housing for moderate income families and housing for the elderly.

It should study and report on the kind of public housing programs required in large, medium and small communities. It should study and report on the place of government in land assembly and economic rental housing projects, because we have really never made up our minds what position the government occupies. It should study and report on a less complicated arrangement with respect to financial and accounting arrangements as between the participating groups. It should study and report on rental structures on all types of public housing. It should report on the present system of producing public housing; how effective it is, what the roadblocks are and what is the best way around them. It should report on the desirability of the senior governments acting as financial agents only, giving greater and greater autonomy to our municipal people, to the local agencies and corporations that will carry out these projects. It should report on the role to be played by private enterprise in urban renewal and public housing programs. We have really not delineated where the government stands and where private enterprise stands, and this is constantly muddling up and confusing housing projects.

This commission should study and report on the general planning of public housing projects with specific reference to design, size, provision of services, relation to urban development programs, conservation, rehabilitation and acquisition of existing housing, all the things that go into a massive plan. It should give some idea of the kind of local organization required to deal with urban renewal, public housing and relocation operations. I believe that as this act comes into force in the next two or three years, as it gets more active, we will have an organization. However, what we really need is a thorough study in depth. It should report on housing for the aged with specific reference to environment and site requirements and co-operation between the various levels of government, as well as economics, the plight of our pensioners and their needs.

These are only a few of the things I think this commission should study. If this commission were appointed and permitted to sit for the next two or three years gathering this information in the usual way, then I believe the government would have the necessary information with which to initiate, not a short term program which is of course essential at the moment, but a long term program that is really designed to assess the whole problem of the development of urban Canada and the best way in which we, as the government, can handle it. I know that is a big task and that is why I reluctantly suggest a royal commission. I do not usually like them. However, I think this is the type of work they can usefully do. If the minister would take this into consideration I think we could possibly come up with a long range program.

I just want to repeat what I said at the beginning. We are glad to have the act and we are relying on the minister to give the government the leadership it so desperately needs. I believe that if this is done, then despite the problems we may be on the way to a solution of them.

Mr. Bert Leboe (Cariboo): Mr. Speaker we, too, welcome the improvements that are going to be introduced as a result of this bill we have before us. Like everyone else, I suppose, we can always find more things to do than we have the means with which to accomplish them. I am well aware, as I think most members are, of the problems that confront the minister in connection with housing.

First of all I think we have to recognize that the number of starts, the number of units that we have in the planning stage, the goal to which we are looking forward, has to be related to the economic impact this will have. It is impossible to isolate large housing programs from their economic impact on the Canadian economy. We are considering the problems of growth, we are considering replacements and then we are considering the number of people who actually need new houses. Immediately we are confronted, I believe, with a very serious problem. Are we going to build more units for living quarters at the expense of other economic expansion? Is it possible to get the maximum number of starts and still avoid an inflationary tendency, an increase in the money supply and the economic activity? These are I believe the real problems.

I do not believe we can isolate these economic impacts from a house building program. In so far as the planning of a city is concerned, I think we can give consideration to what has happened at Kitimat in British Columbia. The city of Kitimat was built by the Aluminum Company of Canada and planned as a city that would accommodate 50,000 people. If you want to study the housing problem in relation to the whole question of churches, schools, transportation, and so on, I think we have a good example in Kitimat. This is an example of what can be done when you are starting fresh. However, when we have a situation in which a good many people are involved, a lot of expropriation, transport problems, churches, schools, hospitals and so on, then you will not find a solution overnight.

So far as I am concerned these problems are not going to be solved by any stereotyped planning. I think we will find that every town, every area will have to be considered individually because of the climate, soil conditions and other factors such as railways, highways and so on. There are many factors that are going to be involved, so I do not believe we can entertain any stereotyped planning.

I suggest there are two things for which we are striving in connection with housing, and both have been mentioned here. Along with those who are getting new housing, we are also getting economic stimulation. Economic stimulation is there because you have various component parts such as the lumber industry, that is interested in the number of board feet going into any housing plan; the cement, hardware, heating and furnishings. The furnishings are a great part of the economic impact that goes along with any housing program.

I should like to draw attention to one very important point. I feel very strongly on this matter of interest rates. I think there ought to be a steady interest rate. If we are talking about a subsidy at all, I think this is the one place we should give consideration to a steady interest rate. We should give some consideration to what is happening in the United States. I think it is very unfortunate that one person entering into a contract today and another person entering into a contract two months from today should be paying a different percentage in interest. I think we should be giving serious consideration to the establishment of a revolving fund. This idea was advocated in 1954, I think it was, and was discussed before the banking and commerce committee in 1955. It was suggested at that time that a revolving fund be set up for housing and that the operation of this fund should determine the interest rate.

It was suggested at that time and, as I recall it, Graham Towers, the then governor of the Bank of Canada concurred in it, that an interest rate based on the revolving fund, or a service charge, could be more appropriately considered. This would be in the neighbourhood of 1½ per cent to 2 per cent of the cost of the money supplied, and I believe this would be a step very much in the right direction and one which would decrease the over-all, long term cost of housing.

It would also have another effect, the effect of the impact on the economy of an extensive housing program. The extent by which we can reduce interest rates, thus reducing the over-all cost of a house after a 20 year period, will have an impact on the actual cost of the whole program, and we could give serious consideration to expanding the number of starts in our housing program without involving the expenditure of any more money. In my view this is important.

We shall have two or three questions to ask when we reach the committee stage, and so I shall conclude my remarks by saying I think the present minister is one in whom we have a great deal of confidence, and we are certainly looking forward to more action in connection with housing.

Mr. Maurice Rinfret (St. James): Mr. Speaker, the National Housing Act implemented in 1954 has contributed to improve the standard of living of thousands of Canadians and it is essential to continue in that direction.

The government should be congratulated for making available to provinces and municipalities an amount of $100 million for urban redevelopment programs. Governments at every level are responsible for the carrying out of a co-ordinated and progressive slum clearance program implying at the same time a low cost housing program.

In Montreal, civic and provincial authorities, in co-operation with various associations, have designated as an historic district, the south central area of the city.

The new policy of the federal government authorizing loans for the renovation of existing homes will stimulate further the efforts of those who want to keep, as monuments, those old buildings full of souvenirs.

Other cities have already undertaken such a campaign to save our old buildings and they will extend to a greater number of property owners the benefits that C.M.H.C. makes available to them.

Another advantage of that measure is to allow those with modest means to acquire a house which has fallen into disrepair, to repair it out of the family budget, and to become the owner of an attractive home.

At the present time, it is easy to see that, in great cities, there are sections where houses are in such a poor condition that they look like slums and where living conditions are unacceptable. The new legislation will enable to check the extension of slums in the older sections of our cities. After restoration, these houses will enable low income families to obtain accommodation at a reasonable rent and enjoy the privilege of living in a clean and comfortable house.

I commend the government for the co-operation it wants to give the provinces in building homes for the aged or the people without a family, for its assistance to non-profitable organizations in order to facilitate the building of houses for low income persons or families.

We appreciate the fact that the program of loans to universities will be continued since that will permit the construction of student residences.

Mr. Speaker, last November, the C.M.H.C. improved French Canadian representation within its ranks by changing the structure of its board and by increasing from four to six the number of its senior officials. Of the six executive directors, two are French Canadians, Messrs. Hector St-Pierre and Jean Paul Lupien. I hope the example set by C.M.H.C. will be followed by other crown corporations and federal departments. With a certain amount of goodwill, it is easy to give French Canadians a more equitable position within the federal civil service.

Anyone who goes over the reports of C.M.H.C. is bound to notice that Quebec does not participate in federal-provincial low rental housing projects. Between January 1, 1948 and October 31, 1962, out of a total 10,870 units built under that program, only 796 were erected in the province of Quebec, that is in the city of Montreal.

In Ontario, 37 municipalities benefited by that legislation. In Quebec, only Montreal took advantage of the program. Quebec municipalities and the provincial department of municipal affairs should co-ordinate their efforts and take full advantage of the National Housing Act in co-operation with Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation.

It should be remembered that the National Housing Act authorizes the federal government to give financial help to any municipality which has, within its limits, areas where housing conditions can be improved. Through an agreement with a municipality and with the approval of the provincial government concerned, the federal government can contribute 75 per cent of the cost of an urban renewal study on the whole city and up to 50 per cent of the cost of a study on any particular area.

If, after those studies, it is decided that an area is in a state of advanced deterioration, the municipality can acquire the existing properties and clear the land for new residential or commercial construction.

The federal government will contribute 50 per cent of the cost of clearing and 75 per cent of the cost for new residential construction. The provincial government is called upon to take part in every agreement by means of a financial contribution and through the services of technicians of the department of municipal affairs. The Quebec minister of municipal affairs is to be commended for the initiative he took on May 27, when he created the "province of Quebec town planning award", to be given each year to the municipality submitting the best town planning program. Such a gesture should give new life to town planning.

Consultation between the town planning services of our municipalities, the municipal affairs department of each province and the directors of the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation will improve living conditions for a greater number of Canadians.

Mr. Reynold Rapp (Humboldt-Melfort-Tisdale): Mr. Speaker, my remarks will be very short but I have a different case to present than most other members. As everybody knows, a lot of potash developments are taking place at present in Saskatchewan, and although the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation had given consideration to providing loans for housing where towns close to these potash mines needed them, nevertheless they have not gone as far in this direction as I and many others think desirable. I will mention, as an example, one town—the town of Lanigan. In Lanigan, or a few miles outside it, they are sinking a shaft and within a short time hundreds of people will be moving in. Before the potash mine comes into production new buildings and new houses will be going up—shops, businesses, schools, and so on. Later, hospitals will be required. But if these people cannot arrange a deal with the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation we may run into a situation similar to that which developed in the town of Esterhazy where a potash mine is now in operation. This town grew by 150 per cent, if not 200 per cent after work on the sinking of the shaft was begun, but no co-ordinated planning was undertaken and virtually no houses were built by arrangement with the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation—although I must say the corporation is prepared to give the same deal to Lanigan as to larger cities. Nevertheless, the limitations when dealing with one-industry towns still exist, and the corporation can go no further.

I believe the provincial government will be visiting Ottawa again to discuss this problem with officials of the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation. At the present time, as I say, they are doing as much as I suppose they are allowed to do under the existing regulations. The company itself is, probably, prepared to guarantee C.M.H.C. loans taken out by its own employees. But this town is concerned about those who are not employees of the company and who also have housing needs, and I should like the minister to assure us that consideration will be given to providing loans for business people and even municipalities in these circumstances. I should like the government to take another look at this situation together with the provincial government, and representatives of Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation, in an effort to work out some suitable arrangement, because this is a serious matter. If we were only concerned with the situation during the sinking of the potash shaft, perhaps the situation would be tolerable; but we must think in terms of three or four years time, perhaps even less than that, when the mine comes into production and the need arises for many homes, additional business, hospitals, new schools and so forth. According to the planning done by the provincial government it is estimated that within six or eight years this town will grow to a population of approximately 8,000, as compared with the present population of 1,000. One can imagine what will happen if there are opportunities for these people to work, but no means by which they can obtain loans reasonably so as to build homes and put up all the other buildings which will be necessary. Lanigan could develop into a shacktown, if Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation do not change the regulation.

I am sure the departmental officials are familiar with this case because I have made representations more than once on this subject. I must say they were very co-operative and that they understood the situation very well. But they can only go as far as the act will allow. The government finds itself in a similar situation, I believe, at the present time. I was given to understand that in the very near future this question would be taken up again. I may say that there is more than one company involved. At the present time there are about 20 companies with interests in the province. The big future which lies ahead for potash means that more of these companies will be prepared to go ahead with plans for development. As a matter of fact,

I know of one company which had no intention of sinking a shaft until a short while ago. They have now made up their minds and they intend to sink a shaft, too. It will not be far away from Lanigan—one is to the east and the other is to the west.

So, without holding up proceedings any further, I should like to repeat that consideration has been given to these problems up to a certain point, but that the action taken has not gone as far as is desired and it would be most helpful to these small communities if more could be done. Should the minister need any additional information I am sure he will be able to obtain it from his officials because they are familiar with this matter.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the house ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member for Grey-Bruce (Mr. Winkler).

Mr. Winkler: I will defer to the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Lloyd) if he wishes to speak, inasmuch as a speaker from our side had the floor previously.

Mr. J. E. Lloyd (Halifax): Mr. Speaker, I will be happy to yield the floor if there is any agreement that the house should afterwards proceed to give second reading to this bill, but I understand there are to be other speakers and perhaps, in the circumstances, in view of the observations made by the hon. member for Grey-Bruce, I might make some remarks on this subject.

This is indeed a piece of legislation with which, I am sure, everybody agrees. All I have heard so far are statements substantially in support of the bill. Statements have been made by spokesmen for the opposition to the effect that this is the kind of thing they had in mind. May I assure every member of the house that as a member of the mayors federation of Canada before I came to this place I recall appearing on several occasions over a period of three years before members of the cabinet to advocate legislation of this kind, not in its precise detail but as far as the broad principles are concerned. I think you will find, Mr. Speaker, that every mayor and every alderman of a municipality who has a genuine interest in the clearance of slums, in the prevention of the spread of blight and in the rebuilding of worn out downtown areas will be anxious for this house to proceed with the legislation now before us. It has been a long awaited and urgently needed measure. At the municipal level of government it will assist them to do the job they wish to accomplish, in co-operation with the national government and the federal government, so as to bring about a betterment of social conditions in the housing field. They want to make a contribution to the economic health of Canada by redeveloping blighted and worn out commercial areas.

We all see a new opportunity for employment in the capital goods sector of our economy. We find an opportunity here, while engaging in a social act, to provide employment for people in the building trades, both on the site and off the site, in the plants which produce building materials throughout the entire region of Canada. We also want to prepare for what everyone tells us is an increasing density of population in the urban areas of Canada. If the prognostications of our economists are correct, we will need this kind of urban renewal program on its way as rapidly as possible, because they tell us—I think they are substantially in agreement and I do not think anybody challenges this kind of economic thought—that more and more people in this world are finding a need to locate jobs and positions in the servicing sector of the economy, as compared with the productive side of economic activity, due first of all to population growth and second to the fact of automation in industry. So it is an inescapable fact that around the urban areas you will find continuing the oft described population explosion.

The bill attempts to make its contribution to the desires of the municipalities and the provinces by rewording the provisions of the act which have to do with the areas in which the federal government, through Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation, may participate. In the previous statute, as I understand it, there was some restriction with regard to the kind of area in which Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation could participate. I refer to that particular section which required that there be a substantial quantity of housing. I believe the present proposal will remove that particular restrictive clause. While it requires comprehensive planning, I believe it will remove that particular clause and enable the clearance of blighted commercial districts as well as blighted slum areas. This would be a great encouragement to those at the municipal level of government who found from their planning advisers that you could not hope to accomplish a good urban renewal program if you confined yourself to a very narrow block of clearance, and it would require a much more expanded area if you wished to encourage redevelopment in the region of residential as well as commercial redevelopment.

Then the proposal to assist financially the municipalities in providing the capital for their share of the programs in the field of urban renewal will also be welcomed. But the act, if you read it carefully, as it did before, attempts to encourage what is called comprehensive planning. What this means really is that the Canadian government, in giving assistance to municipalities through and with the co-operation of the provinces, want to be sure that the end objectives will be reached, and when we talk about the need for comprehensive planning in an act of this kind we are referring to proper land use plans, which are the product of some very serious and extensive planning by competent planning authorities. It means the existence of legislation which compels the observance of minimum standards. It certainly requires housing outside the area projected for redevelopment being subjected to examination to make sure that the blighted conditions will not develop outside the area being redeveloped. This requires a very rigid application of minimum standard laws at the municipal level of government. It also requires, in this field of so-called comprehensive planning, some very informed and extensive studies of the economic base from which the region derives its growth and development. Without that knowledge you might very well undertake a clearance program and then find land which you have cleared lying undeveloped for some years to come.

This observation of mine derives from a comment made by one hon. member this afternoon who was talking about the need for a ministry of housing. If he meant by this that we need to increase our interest in this field under whatever minister it may come, I heartily agree. As a matter of fact, comprehensive planning for a city requires a knowledge and understanding of the economics of the region in which it is located, and it requires some comprehensive planning of the entire region around it. This brings you into an understanding of what is the comprehensive planning of the ARDA program to be, and how it relates to developments within urban areas. I suggest that the two fields of activity, at least with respect to general, overall planning of land usage, are involved with the same kind of problem. So if we pass this legislation, the municipalities will have the challenge back in their hands to attack the bad social conditions of bad housing; to meet the challenge of helping to provide employment in the capital goods sector by redevelopment; and they will have to meet the challenge of preparing for the future growth and development of their urban areas by virtue of a population explosion which will continue because of the economic realities of our time.

Some reference was made by the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) to the need for Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation activities being expanded in the northern parts of Canada. I think this is a separate problem. Here the hon. member is talking about the need for government policy in urging, assisting and encouraging proper housing development in those great northern areas. This is really what you might call new development as distinct from redevelopment. There is no question that this requires the attention of government. However, I was pleased to find a member of the opposition appealing to the minister to give his attention to it, because no doubt he made the same appeal to the government he supported in the past few years, and had failed to achieve any success in this regard. Now he turns to the new minister and hopes this government will achieve the success which his government failed to obtain previously. In this regard, Mr. Speaker, I welcome his observation. I think I can assure him that this government will co-operate in reaching the objectives and solutions which he says are so badly needed.

Some reference was made by another hon. member to giving credit to Winnipeg for leading the way. I think I would be remiss in my duty, representing the constituency of Halifax, if I did not draw attention to the fact that in 1957 we began with a program, 75 per cent financed by the federal government, to make a study of the Halifax region. Then came a major clearance project; this was followed by building some 340 units and rehousing displaced people, and this was followed by development proposals being called for, not only from Canada but throughout the world. Then only a few weeks ago did we have an agreement signed for a redevelopment project amounting to some $35 million of new commercial and housing construction in that older city of Canada. In this regard, Mr. Speaker, I am happy to say that Halifax is in the vanguard in this connection, and received in this respect the co-operation of the former government and the former minister of finance, the hon. member for Digby-Annapolis-Kings (Mr. Nowlan) who is sitting opposite. I am sure that the government which is now in office will extend the same co-operation to all areas which have comprehensive plans and which have real, genuine needs to be met. I am sure such areas will receive the co-operation of this government to at least an equal degree, if not to a greater degree, than that accorded those seeking it on previous occasions.

Mr. Winch: Could I ask the hon. gentleman a question?

Mr. Lloyd: Certainly.

Mr. Winch: A few moments ago I gathered that the words of the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Lloyd) were to the effect that the passage of this bill would be a challenge thrown back to the municipalities to take action. May I ask the hon. member whether, in his opinion, the passage of this bill would in any way remove the red tape and roadblocks which, if my information is correct, stalemated the city council of Halifax at the time when the hon. member was his worship the mayor?

Mr. Lloyd: Mr. Speaker, my experience was that you removed the red tape and the so-called roadblocks by first informing yourself of what were your responsibilities. Then when you were fully knowledgeable of the problem with which you were dealing, you could easily get the co-operation you required. Granted, there were misunderstandings. This kind of legislation now before us did not exist. Had it existed we would have advanced much more rapidly. That is why I welcome this kind of legislation.

Mr. Eric A. Winkler (Grey-Bruce): Mr. Speaker, I would appreciate the attention of the house on this matter for a few moments. I was very interested in the remarks of the previous speaker, the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Lloyd), about the days when he was chief magistrate in the city, and how he negotiated the first piece of business for that city with regard to the act in 1957. I understand he suggested the renewal of the arrangement for additional consideration. This, it seems to me, shows the flexibility and general ability of Canadians in political life to get along, because I understand his successor in office today is of another political faith, which makes the entire situation balance out beautifully.

I also noted that the hon. member for St. Jacques (Mr. Rinfret) made mention of the situation with regard to taxation and the relief which would be given to certain areas in the province of Quebec. I suggest to the minister that the time is now here when, in considering suggestions which have been put forward on a national basis, the government should give consideration to allowing as an exemption from taxable income the interest paid on mortgages. The reason I say that to the minister, through you, Mr. Speaker, is that we are again entering a period of inflation. We are at a period in our economy when taxation is becoming terribly burdensome. In most cases I think we will find that this legislation has been, and will be in the future, of great benefit to the workers of the country, who are the backbone of the economy. In an era of inflation and high taxation I think consideration should be given to this particular suggestion so that these people will be in a better economic position, because they are the ones who spend the money and who keep our economy rolling. I think the minister would be well advised to take this suggestion under consideration at the earliest opportunity.

As has been stated, the amendments to the act in general terms are an extension of what had been provided previously by the former government. At this point I must say in reply to the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Lloyd) that I too had reason, as did other people, to make representations to the previous government when I felt it was necessary. I do not want him to feel that is anything out of the ordinary course today. We will continue to do so. Like the hon. member for Vancouver East (Mr. Winch), who might have included me in his remarks, I too am one of those who would be very grateful for the elimination of red tape which causes great annoyance and frustration to many people.

In this connection I have another matter to bring to the attention of the minister. The office which has jurisdiction over the constituency I have the honour to represent is coming under severe criticism now because one of the inspectors from that office does not offer in a co-operative way the services which are meant to be provided for the Canadian public, services which are meant to be provided for people taking advantage of this legislation. These departments are set up for the benefit of the country and the citizens, and no one man from these offices—I realize they are all human, as are the rest of us—should go out of his way to make the functioning of this act difficult in any area over which he has jurisdiction. But this has been the case. Let me assure the minister that I will not go into specifics in this particular instance because I think that the fewer the people who suffer prejudice the better, and I am sure the matter will be taken care of in due course.

With regard to the terms of the amendments, I believe that the adjustment in thinking regarding support for loans on older homes has resulted in a very excellent measure. It is one of those measures which I supported long before there was a change in government, and this thinking was under way at the time, I am convinced. However, there is one difficulty in the current amendments, and it concerns the designation provision. I feel that the benefits of this amendment should apply across the board without any provision for designation. We have now had some experience of designated areas by government, and it seems to me that we must be very careful in the way we consider the proposal which is before us at this time.

May I call it five o'clock.

Mr. MacNaught: Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether we could carry on for a few minutes to see if we could finish the debate?

Mr. Winkler: Mr. Speaker, I could easily finish in a very few minutes but there are one or two speakers from this side who are preparing their remarks now.

Mr. Grégoire: Filibustering.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Batten): Order. It being five o'clock the house will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely notices of motions.

INCOME TAX ACT

SUGGESTED INCREASED EXEMPTION IN NORTHERN AREAS

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon) moved:

That, in the opinion of this house, the government should consider the advisability of amending the Income Tax Act so that Canadian taxpayers residing in the high-cost northerly areas of Canada be allowed an increased personal exemption to that now allowed under the Income Tax Act in order to:

(1) encourage and accelerate population growth in Canada's northern areas;

(2) assist in creating a permanent population in Canada's north;

(3) remove the discriminatory tax burden which now exists as between the northern Canadian taxpayer and those taxpayers living in the more southerly areas of Canada; and

(4) eliminate the hardship now caused to families in the lower income group now residing, and to reside, in Canada's northern areas.

He said: Mr. Speaker, it will probably come as no surprise to hon. members to learn that the subject matter of this resolution was considered by treasury board in 1955, 1956 and 1957 during the last years of the Liberal government of that time. The evidence indicating this emerged in the discussions of the standing committee on mines, forests and waters in 1959, I believe.

The resolution is based on four premises: First, that it is desirable to encourage population growth in that 40 per cent of Canada lying above the 60th parallel and, indeed, the northerly portions of the provinces of Canada; second, that it is desirable as a principle to create a permanent population in Canada's northland as opposed to accepting the transitory growth to which the north has been subjected over the years; third, that there does exist discrimination in the tax burden which is now borne by residents of southern Canada compared with that borne by those who live in the more northerly areas of Canada; fourth, that there is recognition that there does exist hardship with respect to families in the lower income group who reside in Canada's north.

When I spoke earlier this afternoon I had occasion to refer to the higher costs of construction. Where a home can be constructed for $10,000 in the more southerly centres of Canada, that same home will cost $14,000 in the more northerly areas of Canada above the 60th parallel. Food costs in northern Canada, expressed in terms of percentage, are some 27 per cent higher than they are in the more southerly areas of Canada.

The government itself recognizes that it does cost more to live in Canada's north because several years ago they established the principle of compensating civil servants for the loss of wages that would occur by reason of the higher cost of living in the northerly areas as a result of their being required to move there. If a Department of Transport employee, an employee of the Department of National Defence or, indeed, an employee of any department of the government was required to move from say Vancouver, Edmonton, Winnipeg, Toronto or some other city to Whitehorse, Dawson City, Yellowknife, Inuvik or Alert, the government recognized that it would cost that civil servant more to live in those northerly areas. Therefore the government implemented a system of compensation known as isolated post allowances, which is still in existence.

Isolated post allowances are based on the assessment of four basic living factors as opposed to living in the southerly areas of Canada. The government takes into account the difference in cost of heating and lighting in the north as opposed to southern centres. The government also takes into consideration when paying these allowances the difference in the cost of food. This is a separate factor. In paying these isolated post allowances the government also takes into account factors of isolation, such as whether or not there are those social amenities available in the north as are available in the more southerly areas of Canada.

Upon these factors various positions in the north are graded, and in the case of a married man a maximum of $2,600 over and above his basic pay and allowances as a civil servant is paid to the civil servant who is posted to the north. Mind you, that civil servant still pays income tax on his isolated post allowance, and this has been a matter of complaint on the part of the civil servant for several years. On the one hand, the government pays him an allowance to compensate him for the difference in the cost of living in the north and, on the other hand, takes it away in the form of income tax. It has been argued, and supported by several public organizations in the north, that the same principle should be applied not only to civil servants who live in the northerly areas of Canada but also to other Canadians, because those other Canadians who are carrying out jobs on all fours with those of civil servants in the north are subjected to the same increased costs of living as the civil servant.

If the government recognizes the principle of paying isolation allowances to civil servants in the north, I suggest there is a good deal of merit to the argument that the same principle should be applied to all Canadians who live in northern Canada. Otherwise, instead of encouraging a permanent population growth, which in turn would stabilize the economy of northern Canada, a desirable objective, what we have is a transitory population, people who go to the north for a year or two years, perhaps longer but not much, and who then move away because they find they cannot cope with the increased cost of living. Only those members of the northern communities who are in the middle or upper income brackets find it comfortable to live in Canada's north.

This is one of the reasons why I suggested to the Postmaster General (Mr. Nicholson) that in revising the National Housing Act specific attention should be paid to existing northern conditions which prohibit buildings of a standard comparable to those in southern areas. Because of the pioneer and undeveloped nature of Canada's north it is essential that the government consider all national legislation in the light of northern conditions.

There are those who will say that the Income Taxt Act is a national act and therefore must have national application. Those who say this will put forward the view that if an increased personal income tax exemption is granted to northern residents justification can also be found to apply the same tax alleviation to people in Newfoundland and the maritimes, because their individual income earning capacity is less than that of people in Ontario. In the light of the greater unemployment in the province of Quebec, I suppose the same argument can be said to apply particularly there.

But this resolution is based fundamentally on the premise that it is desirable to develop Canada's northland so that it can make its full contribution toward national development. There are many today who took upon Canada's north in the same light as the opponents of the construction of the railroad to the west coast looked upon the western part of this country at that time. My friend, the member for the Northwest Territories (Mr. Rhéaume) mentions Great Slave lake. I can recall the vote in this house at that time when those who now sit on the government side voted against the construction of that railway.

Then, I saw a very interesting article in the Montreal Gazette reporting on a meeting the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources (Mr. Laing) addressed in Vancouver, a meeting of the Vancouver chamber of commerce, which indicated that the minister, at least as one occupant of the government benches, had caught the vision. He has caught something of the vision that had been so much ridiculed and derided by members on that side when they were in opposition. According to this newspaper article the minister had caught a vision which they described as a booming vision, which is indeed encouraging, particularly in the light of the vote on the Pine Point railroad, which hon. members did not seem to think was a good idea, and in the light of a certain pattern that seems to be emerging so far as northern development is concerned, since this government has been in office.

I will be quite candid and say that I endeavoured, as the committee will show, to have this matter reconsidered by treasury board, at the time the standing committee on mines, forests and waters was sitting in 1958-59. However, I did not receive too much encouragement at that time. I am hoping that if the minister has really caught the vision, as I think he would like to do—but I feel he is prevented from doing so by his colleagues in the cabinet—then I can count on him for support. I see his parliamentary secretary is in his seat, and I hope he will participate in this debate in support of this motion. I can inform the parliamentary secretary, as I am sure he knows after travelling in the north, this motion is supported by every northern resident. They are up there as the caretakers for Canada, the caretakers for 40 per cent of Canada, and if the proper approach is used this northern part of the country will make a substantial contribution to national growth.

One way in which we can encourage the growth and development of that part of the country is to adopt a policy for attracting people. The potential is there. The mining potential is there, and I do not think anybody will disagree with that, least of all the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources or anyone else associated with him in his department. Certainly he is selling this idea of northern development to private investment, but the government has a part to play. We had a policy when this party was in office, a policy of partnership, whereby government and private industry worked hand in hand in the development of the Canadian north. A pattern seems to be emerging now, and the position is that private enterprise seems to have the major part of the responsibility. Being a northener, I am of the positive opinion that government has a very definite part to play in the building of the north, and that is to create an atmosphere which will attract investment.

The manner in which the government creates that atmosphere is subject to varying points of view. I feel that the program which was followed by this party when it held office proved that long range programs for the establishment of communications, the construction of highways and the like, will assist in creating an atmosphere that will attract the necessary investment to open northern Canada. One of the best methods for attracting that investment and creating the atmosphere which will be conducive to the permanent development of the north is to make it a desirable place in which to live, to equalize the cost of living in the north with the cost of living in similar southerly areas. We do not have all the social amenities that exist in Ottawa, Vancouver and Winnipeg. These differences can be borne by the northern resident if his living conditions are reasonably comfortable and if he knows that the contribution he is making as a pioneer is being appreciated by the rest of Canada, and particularly by the government.

One of the methods which I suggest in the resolution is to equalize the tax treatment of northern residents. As I have said, treasury board refused to give such serious consideration to northern areas. However, the merits of this resolution indicate it is something that just cannot be sloughed off by the house or by the government. It may be that the government and the house are not prepared to accept this resolution and I have every reason to expect it will be talked out tonight. Perhaps there is justification for this, because it is something the house cannot accept within the space of one hour. I suggest to the government however that they resubmit the merits of this resolution to the treasury board in the light of the remarks made here and in the committee as well. I suggest they assess it in the light of the remarks that have been made in the various sessions of the Yukon legislative council and, although I have not checked them I am sure my hon. friend will, in the light of the remarks that have been made in the council of the Northwest Territories. I hope the parliamentary secretary to the minister will speak on the motion and give some indication of the government's feeling. Perhaps the parliamentary secretary to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Gordon) will speak as well. I should like to hear from my friend, the hon. member for the Northwest Territories. I do not want to occupy more of the time of the house, so I would commend to the house the merits of the resolution in the hope the government will see its way clear to investigate fully the suggestions set forth in the resolution.

Mr. Turner: May I ask the hon. member a question? I notice that he suggests as one of the purposes of the resolution the elimination of hardships, for families of lower income groups. I should like to ask him whether or not the increasing of the exemption for personal income tax in the north would be of any help to the great majority of people in the north, the Eskimos and Indians, who are not earning sufficient money to come within the income tax provisions?

Mr. Nielsen: Well, this gets to the root of the formula which would accomplish the objective set forth in the resolution. I purposely steered clear of suggesting a formula to the house because treasury board considered several possibilities. One possibility considered was basing such exemption on the same principle as the isolated post allowances are based, namely a sliding scale whereby at Alert full isolated post allowance amounts to $2,600 for a married man, whereas in Whitehorse a married man receives $1,140 as isolated post allowance. This is one formula. There was another formula under which every worker would receive a flat exemption of 25 per cent of the tax payable. This, perhaps, would not accomplish the equality that is implicit in the hon. gentleman's question, but the formula on the sliding scale would accomplish that objective.

I am not going to complicate matters by suggesting a formula this afternoon because I am sure the capabilities of the personnel making up treasury board—I am not speaking of the cabinet personnel but rather the civil service personnel—are much greater than my own, and if any formula is devisable it is those civil servants, highly qualified as they are, who are best suited to devise it.

Mr. Winch: May I ask the hon. member a question because I am inclined to be rather sympathetic to the principle of his motion. As he appears to have some knowledge of what goes on in treasury board, is he in a position to give the house any explanation as to why treasury board, under the previous government, rejected the principle of what he has now in mind?

Mr. Nielsen: I assure the hon. member I have no knowledge that he does not have of what goes on in treasury board, but while the evidence was being taken in 1958-59, in the standing committee on mines, forests and waters, if the hon, gentleman will refer to the evidence of the then deputy minister of northern affairs, Mr. Gordon Robertson, he will see he set out the reasons there, perhaps not fully, but certainly sufficient to indicate why treasury board did not accept the resolution.

My recollection is that one of the reasons given was that the Income Tax Act is a national act; it must have national application and there can be no difference of treatment between people who live in Vancouver and Halifax, and people who live in Inuvik and Whitehorse. I am suggesting that exceptions can be made and that we can set different standards in different parts of the country, as we did with the National Housing Act and other pieces of national legislation.

Mr. Winch: Would you also extend this principle not only to the Yukon and the Northwest Territories but to Labrador and Ungava?

Mr. Nielsen: Yes, the isolated post allowances system is not confined to areas above the 60th parallel. It is applicable to isolated positions as such, and is paid at several points below the 60th parallel in northern parts of the provinces, and my suggestion would be applicable to where isolated post allowances are properly paid. I do not want anybody to get the idea that I am against these allowances, because they bring the pay of a civil servant up to what it would be if he had been in a southern area. In areas where recognized hardship exists, and is recognized by the government, I am suggesting the same principle should apply to all citizens in those areas.

Mr. Benson: Could I ask the hon. member a question?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Batten): I can understand the hon. member's desire to ask a question, but the time allotted to the hon. member for Yukon has expired.

Mr. J. E. Lloyd (Halifax): Mr. Speaker, I rise to comment on this motion because some reference has been made by a comparison to a situation existing in the maritimes. I can only assume that the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) was referring to recent proposals to exempt companies and business entrepeneurs, willing to build industries in designated areas, from income tax for a period of years, and I suppose he was hoping to find some analogy to the situation he was describing in the north.

It is only fair to point out that the policy of the government in this regard to designated areas, wherever they may be, is to attempt to take advantage of existing capital investment by municipalities in schools, in public services such as sewer systems and water systems, indeed in a variety of public services, and to take advantage of a variety of public investment which could be well lost without this stimulant. It is a different kind of thing to talk about government policy with respect to encouraging redevelopment of a declining area with large capital investment, than it is to talk about opening up the development of a new territory and encouraging development there.

The hon. member has set forth some very worth-while objectives to be attained on behalf of the district he represents. Nobody can quarrel with these objectives, but it is the inadequacy of the tool with which he proposes to achieve them which bothers me. He hopes to encourage and accelerate population growth in northern areas by the simple device of a personal tax exemption.

Mr. Nielsen: Among others.

Mr. Lloyd: He does not say "among others" in his motion, and I must speak to his motion upon which I presume he has spent very careful thought. Within the limits of his understanding he has come up with a suggestion that may provide some answers. I am trying to help the hon. member perform his job a little better by pointing out to him that there is certainly nothing wrong with suggesting that people who find an opportunity in Canada's north to develop a resource will certainly examine the economics of the development before investing their private capital, and will find they must pay incentives to attract skilled workers to the region. You will find that the operator who knows what he is doing will attempt to fix his salary rates at a point where, after income tax, they will be attractive to the kind of skills he wants in that region.

There may be exceptions to this general rule, but generally speaking, if we have any kind of good common sense in the management of the private enterprise sector of our economy, the end result is bound to be that wage and salary levels will be fixed at that point where the private entrepreneur calculates he can induce the skills he requires for his particular undertaking in the north region.

I have no quarrel with the hon. member when he suggests that civil servants who are faced with additional costs in the north, and with expenses which they would not normally meet in the developed central and southern parts of Canada, should be adequately compensated to put them into a position of equivalence with their fellow civil servants in the particular department in which they happen to be engaged. There is no quarrel with that; but I think you can accomplish more for the development of the resources of the north in other ways, and with much more adequate tools of government at your command, tools that can be employed to accomplish these objectives.

We are learning much about the economic bases of regions. Only today we were discussing the matter of urban renewal. You cannot have good urban renewal development unless you undertake some practical studies of the economic base of the blighted region which you are redeveloping, and the same thing is true of the northern sectors of this country.

Preceding development, there must be economic feasibility to the development of a resource, and you must be able to demonstrate this to investors, whether it be investors from government in the field of social capital, or whether it be private entrepreneurs who invest their money and take the risks. This means a pretty extensive and well developed examination of a resource in a practical way, if one hopes to encourage and accelerate population growth in Canada's northern areas. You just do not put people there and then keep them there. There must be opportunities for work and employment.

Similar proposals have been brought forward from time to time over the years. In fact the hon. member referred to this being before treasury board in 1957, or in 1956.

Mr. Nielsen: It has never been before the house before.

Mr. Lloyd: It may not have been, but I would suggest to the hon. member that the proper place to bring the proposal is before the house. I put it to him: Why was it not brought before the house between 1958 and 1963? I do not know why. He had an opportunity in those five years to do so. I presume he tried, and I assume he will explain why he was not successful. He is always anxious to tell us about our shortcomings on this side of the house but I find he is inflicted with the same blindness as he accuses us of possessing.

Mr. Nielsen: On a question of privilege, I was my unusually nice self this afternoon and I did not accuse the government of any shortcomings in this regard. Indeed, I said quite frankly I had endeavoured to raise this matter when I was on the other side of the house, and if the hon. member will read the record—

Mr. Lloyd: I appreciate the entirely gratuitous comments of the hon. member for Yukon. They suggest to me that he believes he can hope for more to be accomplished in the way of financial assistance in the development of northern Canada by making representations to this side of the house than by any steps he might have taken when he was a government supporter, and it is for that reason he was so gracious on this occasion.

Mr. Nielsen: There has been no evidence of it yet.

Mr. Lloyd: Besides, I am only a backbencher. When you get down to the benches in front, there are men of great experience and ability to whom the hon. member can make his plea.

I understand the research staff of the royal commission is now examining this question and it is possible that the commission in its report will deal with the subject. I have no indication of the views of the commission, but I am informed that some former ministers of finance were not convinced of the efficacy of this proposal. This motion seems to assume that a person residing in northern Canada is at the present time being discriminated against under the income tax law as compared with a person living in southern Canada. He bases this on the assertion that a resident of northern Canada must incur higher costs which are not recognized by the income tax legislation. This would seem to suggest that personal exemptions under the Income Tax Act be directly related to some basic cost of living index, and increased where costs exceed a certain basic amount. I think this is the idea the hon. member was struggling with. If this were done, it would follow in logic and in equity that exemptions should be increased not only with respect to such high cost areas as there may be in the north but also with respect to high cost areas elsewhere in Canada, such as the larger metropolitan areas. There is certainly a notable differential in school teachers salaries in metropolitan areas as compared with areas outside. May I say that anybody who has served on a city council and who has dealt with tax matters knows there is a vast differential between salaries paid in metropolitan areas as compared with those outside the borders.

Presumably the exemptions would have to be established annually as a result of cost of living studies. Such a change would create anomalies which would bring the tax system into disrepute, cause confusion to taxpayers and tax collectors alike, and result in a significant reduction in revenue. If you need the revenue, then obviously if you forgo it in one place you have to find it somewhere else. Nowhere in the statement made by the hon. member was any suggestion made as to how the lost revenue would be made up, unless he thought that with the development of our northern resources there would be sufficient yield to the Canadian economy to make it worth while. If that is what he had in mind, I think he should have said so. But the hon.

member certainly did not say so in the course of his observations on the resolution. If the principle of relating the personal exemptions to the cost of living in particular areas were adopted and followed to its logical conclusion it might be reasonable to lower the exemptions for taxpayers who resided in low cost areas. I am sure most hon. members know from experience that some of these low cost areas are not at all remote from municipalities in which living costs are quite high. It seems to me that to allow different exemption levels to taxpayers in the same province, or indeed in the same country would be completely unacceptable, yet such a system would be almost inevitable if personal exemptions were tied to area living costs.

The motion alleges that the additional allowance would eliminate the hardship caused to families in the lower income group now residing in Canada's northern areas. I suggest that it would not have this result and, in fact, by increasing the disposable incomes of the taxpayers in the higher income brackets it might eventually drive prices higher, thus penalizing their less fortunate neighbours. Even if the change suggested in the motion could be confined to certain defined high-cost northern areas it would be of no help to people in the very low income groups, because they are not taxable.

Mr. Nielsen: Would the hon. member permit a question? Is he expressing the views of the Liberal government?

Mr. Lloyd: I very seldom have an opportunity on this side of the house to take part in our discussions—

Mr. Diefenbaker: Why?

Mr. Lloyd: It is because of the traditions of this house; a recognition of the opposition members. But the frequency with which the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) wishes in a pedantic way to display his knowledge of all things at all times in this house convinces me that he has already spent enough time on his feet. I suggest he needs to do a little more research work in his office so as to avoid wasting the time of the house.

I was saying that even if the change suggested could be confined to certain high cost areas it would not help people in the very low income groups, because they are not taxable anyway. Also it would give the greatest dollar relief to the wealthiest income taxpayers, and the least to the low income taxpayers. I do not think the hon. member realized this when he hastily put together his notes in support of this resolution to indicate his concern about the development of the Yukon—

Mr. Nielsen: Of the north.

Mr. Lloyd: —or of the north, as, I agree, he should be concerned. The motion also seems to assume that the higher costs said to be incurred by residents of northern Canada are not at present compensated for to a greater or lesser degree by higher remuneration in the form of salaries, wages, special allowances or fees that would be paid or charged in lower cost areas. I doubt if this should be assumed. Although I appreciate the problems referred to in the motion, I believe that the solution suggested would be neither practicable nor fair.

I will say this in conclusion: I do not quarrel with the objective, which is to encourage and accelerate the growth of population in Canada's northland. It seems to me however that proposals of the kind now being put forward are no substitute for the painstaking research work which is going on in the department of northern affairs and in the other departments of government. The hon. member for Yukon seems amused at this need for practical engineering studies designed to accelerate population growth in the north. I suggest it cannot be brought about by such a flimsy measure as the hon. member is proposing.

Mr. Nielsen: Ever been there?

Mr. Lloyd: It shows that the hon. member is more concerned with publicizing his own image than with accomplishing the purpose he has in mind.

Mr. Bert Leboe (Cariboo): As there are only 20 minutes left I will not take the time of the house for very long.

I have listened with a great deal of interest to the words of the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) and of the hon. member who has just resumed his seat. I think we should give credit to the hon. member for Yukon for bringing this matter to the attention of the house. I think it is a problem which certainly does confront the people who live in our northern areas.

There are, without doubt, some forms of relief which are given to the people in the northerly areas of the provinces. Speaking particularly of British Columbia I can refer to one important form of relief—the fact that we now have an equalization of power rates which makes electricity available at the same rates whether it is used, say, in Fort Nelson or whether it is used in the Vancouver area.

Consideration is being given, and I hope it will result in something being done in this respect, to the question of petroleum products. I would hope that the equalization of the cost of petroleum products, gasoline, fuel oil, and so on, would be a reality in British Columbia within a matter of a year or two. Certainly there is a great deal of work being done in that regard now, and I hope we will get to the point where this work will bear fruit. Other considerations are also given, in the form of freight rates on the provincially owned railroad.

The federal government, in the conduct of their affairs in relation to the Northwest Territories and the Yukon, have a particular responsibility to the people in those areas, and certainly they are going to have to find some way of solving this problem of equality, whether this is done by subsidized freight rates, by tax concessions—as is outlined in this resolution—or by some other form of compensation. Certainly the people who live in these northern areas are being discriminated against with regard to their cost of living. They are the pioneers who are opening up the country; they are moving as a vanguard into the far reaches of Canada and are developing very, very valuable raw materials and national resources. We would hope that the government, in giving consideration to the motion moved by the hon. member, will see fit to look at all the avenues in which relief can be given to these people who have taken it upon themselves to weather the hardships of the hard winters and the long nights. We would hope the government will be aware of their particular problems and will therefore bend themselves very, very urgently to providing some relief to these people who are pioneering the northern developments.

Mr. Gene Rhéaume (Northwest Territories): Mr. Speaker, if I may—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. Is the hon. member rising on a question of privilege, or a point of order?

Mr. Rhéaume: Mr. Speaker, I would like to speak on this resolution, if the opportunity were given to me.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member for Northwest Territories (Mr. Rhéaume).

Mr. Rhéaume: Mr. Speaker, it was a wonderful experience for me to be present this afternoon as the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Lloyd) delved into his extensive knowledge of northern conditions.

Mr. Nielsen: His abysmal knowledge.

Mr. Rhéaume: I feel a bit like a midwife at a time like this. I noticed the parliamentary secretary to the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources (Mr. Turner) smile with that great birth joy that swept over him as another great expert on northern affairs on the government benches was born. I would suggest we have an excellent example today of one of the reasons the northern people are pessimistic when they look to the present government to try and get anything done, and I sincerely urge the Liberal government to get rid of this vague sort of belief they have, that they need do nothing for the country at all but just remain in power, and that by some strange alchemy the ordinary people of the country are going to be more prosperous because of it. Come off it, I say to them; quit pretending God is some kind of Grit to work wonders, and you need do nothing. The government's record in the north has never been good; it has never shown any enthusiasm, any interest or any understanding. One need only think back a few years to that slogan of roads from igloo to igloo, which was designed to ridicule a very important program; or one has only to look back to a couple of months ago to the shoddy handling of the Eskimos in northern Quebec. This government is quite prepared to put them on the bargaining table and play some kind of Ungava roulette with Mr. Lévesque.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. May I please remind the hon. member that we are dealing with a resolution listed as No. 23 on the order paper.

Mr. Rhéaume: Certainly, Mr. Speaker; I am attempting to show that the government need not be complacent about what it has done in the north, and when a resolution does come along that offers some hope for making some important changes, they should consider it seriously and not subject it to the facetious and frivolous kind of statements that were made a little earlier by a member who supports the government.

We are perhaps a little pessimistic, too, when we realize that this resolution must be considered initially by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Gordon), whose record of enthusiasm for the Canadian north leaves something to be desired. I have in my hand the report of the royal commission which looked into tax incentives, among other things—

Mr. Nielsen: And the Gordon commission.

Mr. Rhéaume: —and the Gordon commission, certainly, on the prospects. We do not need to be very complacent about what kind of a reception anything to do with the Canadian north will get from the Minister of Finance. The minister, however, has written several books. No one has ever accused him of actually practising what he writes, or even believing in it himself; but I recommend this particular resolution to him and urge the government honestly and sincerely to consider it.

I for one do not take responsibility for anything that went on in this chamber prior to April 8, 1963, and I am not prepared to be put off by the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Lloyd) who, after 14 months of Liberal regime says, "Well, you fellows didn't do anything either" and adopts that kind of approach. I am not prepared to accept that, and I urge the newest of our northern experts not to say these things around the country about an important resolution like this.

I want to add my support in the strongest possible terms, as a northerner, for the principle that is recommended in resolution No. 23 and I want to urge the parliamentary secretary to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) to give it some consideration and not dispense with it out of hand.

Mr. Nielsen: Too bad the minister isn't here.

Mr. Rhéaume: I want to offer a few suggestions as to how it might be done, and how it might be done easily. Some reasons are listed in the resolution, or are obvious from its wording, but there are some others and I want to speak for just a moment about two of them. I am going to leave plenty of time for the house to approve the resolution, if that is its wish.

Mr. Nielsen: John is going to talk it out.

Mr. Rhéaume: The first important reason, I think, was touched on by the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) when he said the government has implemented a special program of allowances for federal officers in the Canadian north. This allowance gives upwards of $2,100 a year in addition to basic salary. The northern allowance, as it has come to be called in the country, is received monthly as a part of the pay cheque of federal government employees. They pay income tax on it, but that particular additional bonus is a recognition of higher costs in that part of the country. I can recall a few years back when I lived in the far north, around the mouth of the Mackenzie river, that it was not unusual for an individual to have to pay a fuel bill of $100 a month during the winter months for fuel oil. It is not an exaggeration to say that electricity may cost a private individual $50 or $60 a month during the dark days of the winter. Food prices were out of this world, to the extent that anyone not in the employ of the federal service just went without. I can recall talking to employees whose families had not had any eggs, apples, oranges, lettuce, tomatoes or fresh foods of any kind for well over 18 months, because apples were $3 a dozen, so were oranges, and fresh eggs were $1.65 a dozen. These are the facts of life, as any northerner will tell you. Any real northerner will not be put off by such statements as: "If you live in Toronto you have extra expenses too". I guarantee that that sort of thing will not only be rejected out of hand by true northerners, but it will also do the minister of northern affairs no good when I mail copies of Hansard to every person in the north.

The northern allowance does have quite serious drawbacks. It drives a wedge between federal government employees who are in receipt of it and others who are not. It is a critical issue because there is a growing rift between federal civil servants and those who are not federal civil servants, which is always the case whenever there are special benefits to civil servants which are not general throughout the whole populace. This, of course, is a completely arbitrary administrative decision. In some communities northern allowance was decreased. In some cases the employees were advised at the beginning of the month that the allowance would be reduced, and some employees lost $40 a month, with absolutely no recourse open to them. As I say, this is an administrative decision which was taken in an arbitrary manner and without consultation. Salaries in some cases were reduced by as much as $360 a year to $480 a year. This allowance, which recognizes the high cost of living in the north, was reduced without consultation, and from the point of view of the civil servants themselves they would prefer that their salary be not subject to revision or to the whimsical dictates of a government which is attempting to prune its costs. You could eliminate the northern allowance by allowing an increased personal exemption, with a 25 per cent cut in taxes across the board.

The suggestion which was made earlier today by the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Lloyd) I feel cannot be taken too seriously, and I do not think it was meant to be anything more than a time waster. There are ample precedents for the provision of special incentives for undeveloped areas. For example, one need only consider what happened in western Canada a few years ago when the federal government encouraged people to settle and to set up homesteads. For as little as $5 rent 160 acres was provided, and this proved to be a way to open up the country.

Another important reason why this resolution should be approved borders on a highly dangerous area of discussion. As the hon. member for St. Lawrence-St. George (Mr. Turner) suggested, many of the residents of the north are not taxpayers at all. For example, the Indian and Eskimo people do not earn enough to pay taxes. These are the people who require most of the services which are supported by taxation. There is a small minority of people in the north, who tend to be among the non-Eskimo and non-Indian group, who pay most of the taxes. They are such people as small businessmen, workers in the mines, successful trappers and fishermen. The civil servants are compensated through payment of northern allowance, but I would suggest that tax relief is absolutely essential if people are to remain in that part of the country. This resolution has suggested one compensation could be effected by increasing personal exemptions. I suggest it would be equally easy merely to allow people in the Canadian north—the Yukon and Northwest Territories—to compute their taxes using the same schedules and forms used by anyone else in Canada, and then having arrived at the computation of tax payable, deduct 25 per cent as bonus for having the courage to go into Canada's hinterland and help develop it. I reject the suggestion that would have to be done elsewhere. There are elsewhere provincial governments with various forms of tax relief which they can make available. In the Northwest Territories and the Yukon the federal government still carries the bulk of the investment and bears the bulk of the responsibility for developing those areas intelligently.

In conclusion, and to allow the house time to approve this resolution, I want to suggest to the government, though I realize they cannot pass the resolution, not just to reject it but to refer it to treasury board. There is general support for this measure in the Canadian north. The parliamentary secretary to the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources knows this is true. This would be a generally accepted measure in the north which would bring a great deal of relief to the people there. It is a measure which has been sought for many years, and it might even rewin a seat for the Liberal party at the next election.

Mr. John N. Turner (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): Mr. Speaker, I think no better way for us to rewin both seats at the next election has just been demonstrated this evening than by the two speeches made to the house by the hon. members for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) and the Northwest Territories (Mr. Rhéaume). I realize that we will not have time to discuss this evening in detail the question of cost equalization, but it could be raised on the estimates at some future time.

In the few minutes allowed to me this evening I should like to say that the reason we cannot accept this resolution in its present form is that, although its prime purpose is to eliminate hardship among the lower income groups in the north, its effect would be the contrary because it would benefit only those people in the north who are already within the income tax brackets. To increase personal exemptions would mean that those people in the higher income groups would also have an increased personal exemption, which would be of no benefit at all to thousands of northerners, particularly the Eskimos and Indians, who do not come within the ambit of the Income Tax Act because they do not earn enough money.

In terms of incentive, the incentive we should be looking for is the incentive to bring about industry in the north, to provide more employment for the people there. We should provide capital investment stimulus, a write-off in the case of new mineral and petroleum industries, equalization of transportation costs, and equalization of certain freight rates. That is the type of thing which would do much to equalize the cost of living in the north, rather than raising the personal exemption of those people now living in the north.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The hour appointed for the consideration of private members' business having expired, the house will revert to the business interrupted at five o'clock.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It is my duty, pursuant to provisional standing order 39A, to inform the house that the questions to be raised at ten o'clock p.m. this day are as follows:

[Translation]

First, the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm (Mr. Pigeon): Canada's centenary; appointment of a member of the national commission.

[Text]

Second, the hon. member for Kootenay West (Mr. Herridge): Peace river, authority for flooding behind dam.

[Translation]

Third, the hon. member for Lotbinière (Mr. Choquette): protesting the attitude of some radio stations.

[Text]

NATIONAL HOUSING ACT

AMENDMENT RESPECTING RENEWAL PROGRAMS, PUBLIC HOUSING PROJECTS, ETC.

The house resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Nicholson for the second reading of Bill No. C-102, to amend the National Housing Act, 1954.

At six o'clock the house took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The house resumed at 8 p.m.

Mr. Eric A. Winkler (Grey-Bruce): Mr. Speaker, when this debate was adjourned at five o'clock because of private members' hour I was referring to the action being taken by the government respecting the application of N.H.A. loans to older homes, and I should like to elaborate on that point for a few moments. May I reiterate that I am quite sure this bill will receive rather speedy consideration by the house, so the minister may be at his ease and not be concerned about the few brief interventions that will be made this evening. I note that so far 28 government measures have been adopted. I think we are doing very well in the house, and this measure will receive the same approval.

With regard to the application of mortgage funds to older homes, I think the minister has made a very notable step in the right direction, but I think the approach is wrong in that this provision will apply only in designated areas and where the federal, provincial and municipal governments have entered into an agreement. I recognize readily the reason for moving in this way and I think everyone on this side of the house recognizes this point. Had such action been taken many years ago prior to the rapid urban growth following world war II, I believe many of the situations that have arisen would not have occurred. For instance, there was the great sprawl of the urban areas away from the central concentrations of population, which created educational and commercial problems, and the housing problem, of course, with all its complexities so far as municipal services are concerned and other matters pertaining to this growth. I feel that some of the areas that will now be affected by this provision would have maintained their position. I think that money would have been spent to maintain and improve them and therefore, so far as the taxpayers are concerned, the cost would not have been so great.

But let us move on to the situation as it is today. As I said this afternoon, certainly I was aware of the problem when we on this side formed the government, and I did make representations in this regard at that time. But that does not stop me from expressing myself this evening and endeavouring to impress the minister. Many older homes in smaller municipalities and towns would benefit if this measure applied, but the thinking, of course, involves a much different type of area. In other words, an area within a large urban centre has to be designated a slum area before the amendment to the act can be applied. As I say, the minister is certainly moving in the right direction, but in making this change he has not in my opinion gone far enough. I know that not only my own home town, which is small in relation to the areas he is thinking of in this regard, but hundreds of others would benefit greatly if this provision covered them.

I am thinking this evening of the working people of the country who could have taken advantage of this provision in a most beneficial way, but who have availed themselves already of the opportunity to build new homes. In my view this has not provided the greatest benefit to the economy because some of these people have had to jeopardize a great many years of their lives in order to carry the charges that go along with the construction of these new homes under the terms available to these people.

I also mentioned this afternoon the matter of tax abatement. I will include that in my summary, but at this time I will move along to another phase of the legislation which I think is also very good and which we will probably find satisfactory when the minister explains it. I refer to the new section 36B where reference is made to the acquisition of existing buildings in order to convert them for school or university uses. I have discussed a specific problem with the minister and I believe this particular section will apply. I am sure it will be a very valuable measure in this regard.

With the rising costs of education and the increasing demand for higher education, universities and their boards in most cases find themselves in difficult circumstances in fulfilling the programs they have laid out for themselves and meeting the goals which must be attained in order to keep pace with the educational requirements not only of today but of the future. As the directors of these universities plan their program for the coming years, I hope the minister will see fit to expand the application of this section respecting the acquisition of property, because in many cases property that is available today will not be available five or ten years hence at which time the property, if acquired now, will be very valuable to the functioning of these institutions. As the clause is framed I think it will probably meet this situation, but I think it should be clarified in the minister's own words.

Then, the situation to which I have made reference involves a national housing subdivision of some years ago, and I think the disposition of this land by the corporation will be entertained in the not too distant future. Where such circumstances exist, I think it would be wise for the minister to go on record and say that such an institution of learning will have priority for the acquisition of this land and the buildings existing thereon.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I should like to present a brief summary of my points before I resume my seat. I would say this:

1. The loans for the purchase of older homes should have general application rather than the specific application referred to in the amendment.

2. The interest on the mortgages should be allowed as a reduction from taxable income. I should like to add a word here. We are well aware, as I am sure the minister is, of the application of recent legislation in the United States. It is generally on a much broader base than I suggested here, but certainly we must start somewhere. In this regard, I am making this recommendation to the minister because of the situation I outlined with regard to the worker who has to prejudice his income position for so many years to purchase a home and who, we all consider, is the backbone of the Canadian economy. We must do everything in our power to keep that man in a strong and flexible position. This is one area in which the federal government could make a valuable contribution by following my suggestion.

3. I should like the minister to explain, perhaps not now but when we get into committee, the situation with regard to section 36(b).

4. I would recommend to the government the establishment of a department of urban growth and development for the benefit of the planning of communities such as the hon. member for Danforth (Mr. Scott) referred to earlier today. I believe that in a country such as ours, with the potential growth we have, with the great wealth we have and the future everyone knows stands before us, we should be prepared to do everything in our power to see that this growth is established on a proper basis for the citizens of Canada.

Mr. Lloyd Francis (Carleton): In introducing this legislation the minister indicated that it represented a substantial shift in the philosophy of the legislation, and in its emphasis, by the program which Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation, as the instrument of government, will be undertaking in the period ahead. I am sure that people who review this period, in writing the history of social legislation and social development, will mark this series of amendments to the housing act as one of the most significant developments in terms of the obligation that lies upon us today. So far, as the minister pointed out very well, the emphasis has been on new, single family housing built in the suburbs to satisfy the immediate demand for housing accommodation, which has been accumulated as a result of a long period of under construction, and to compensate for the new family formations that have taken place.

This phase, which has occupied something like 90 per cent of the units constructed so far, is coming to an end. The emphasis is now shifting to urban renewal and public housing, and properly so. As the hon. member for Danforth (Mr. Scott) said this afternoon, there is no greater challenge ahead for any government or for any party than to meet the problem of the development of our cities and the redevelopment of the core of the cities, and to provide a proper balance of the required housing accommodation for different types of families in our society. The people who did the forecasts of population trends for the royal commission on Canada's economic prospects indicated that in something like two decades approximately 80 per cent of our population will be living in a fairly small number of large metropolitan centres. This is just one way of expressing what the obligation is.

We are now beginning to see the consequences of this tremendous overemphasis on single family accommodation, the three bedroom bungalow in the suburbs. One result has been the creation of some very fine, attractive new suburbs. This is where our children are being born and a large part of our population is being reared. However, the suburban communities which have been built this way do not have an adequate cross-section of the population. There has been a tremendous demand in these communities, for example, for schools. I predict that this demand is in excess of the long term requirements of many of these areas. This, in turn, comes back to the defect in the legislation, which should have placed a proper emphasis on multiple accommodation and proper emphasis on public housing in particular, which is needed.

These amendments mark a milestone in the development of our philosophy in terms of what our legislation is devised to do. We all know that in this country a matter like housing, as the minister so well indicated, involves a co-operative partnership of municipal, provincial and federal authorities working together to solve a problem which must, in the first instance, be initiated at the municipal level. There is, as other members who participated in the debate before me have indicated, a reluctance, which is frequently difficult to understand, by the municipal authorities to initiate public housing projects. There are many reasons for this. In many instances, the starts that have been made have not been as good as they should have been.

Some of the starts on public housing, and I am referring to the city of Ottawa, have been made without adequate planning of recreational areas adjacent to the public housing. Some of the projects that have been undertaken have not been properly inspected in the course of construction, so the standards of construction dropped. The accommodation which now exists is not as good as it should be. These are technical defects which we can remedy as we go along.

The important thing at this stage is to set the legislation in perspective to create the initiatives to do the things that have to be done. There is an obligation on the municipal authorities at every stage, as the minister indicated. There is the problem of acquiring land, the problem of the rehabilitation of existing housing, the conservation of housing before it deteriorates beyond hope.

The legislation and the amendments are specifically directed towards the older housing within the designated urban renewal areas. The corporation is now permitted to participate in the cost, not only of acquiring the land but the actual replanning of the services that have to go with the land. Frequently, the services have to be improved in order to meet the new demands placed upon them. The sewer mains and water mains have to meet the demands of the use of the land after redevelopment.

The municipalities must show initiative. They must go ahead with legislation to create housing standards boards and to set up standards for the maintenance of existing housing, and procedures for the condemning of housing which is below standard. The province is usually ready to contribute by providing a legislative base to back up the municipalities, so that this type of legislation does not become challenged in the courts. I was pleased to note, Mr. Speaker, that the city of Ottawa, which has pioneered a piece of legislation, was upheld in the Supreme Court of Canada. This legislation permitted the municipality to levy a high rise charge on new buildings in older areas which would create new demands on services which are inadequate to sustain them, when the tenements in the older areas constructed half a century ago are replaced by high rise buildings. The sewers that were laid down 50 years ago are not adequate; the water mains which were laid down 50 years ago are not giving sufficient pressure. The services which are below ground, in addition to the services above ground, have to be replaced.

For the first time the legislation will now permit Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation to participate in the costs of redevelopment, but the municipality has a responsibility—as I think the city of Ottawa has obviously done, and as a result of which other municipalities will follow—to seek the sources of revenue that are adequate to participate in the opportunities now offered it.

We heard some very interesting comments from the hon. member for Danforth (Mr. Scott) in terms of guidance, what might be short term and what might be long term policy. I for one followed his comments with a great deal of interest. There were some assertions he made with which I could agree, but there were other comments which he made that I found a little bit academic and on the theoretical side, with which I could not agree.

I would like to make some comments on one aspect of the bill which is not covered in the amendment, but which I am sure will be reviewed in years ahead. I am thinking in terms of land assembly projects. The hon. member said such a project was a very good example of the type of difficulty in basic thinking, and in trying to decide what our objectives should be. If we are shifting our emphasis to multiple units or public housing, to me it is quite clear that public housing should be built first in land assembly projects.

If we permit a land assembly project to be sold off in lots at a subsidized rate to a number of buyers in the middle income bracket, the experience all too frequently has been that the purchasers come back and lobby against public housing being built on land assembly projects. The people who buy these sites are under a misunderstanding as to what public housing involves. I believe there is an obligation to put the priority first on the building of public housing sites, and then sell the rest of the land assembly project sites for single family homes to private purchasers.

As an observer of some of the land assembly projects I could not help but notice that there is perhaps a real question whether the objectives of good, low cost, economical housing are achieved. It is clear now that the industry is moving to larger and larger units of production. A builder who puts up fewer than 100 units a year is not able to take advantage of the economics of large scale purchasing, and when you take a land assembly project and make it available to individual purchasers they in turn negotiate with a wide range of builders, and this means we have an uneconomical type of operation involved. More and more the industry today calls for plans not to put up a single home but a neighbourhood of homes, a cluster of homes, harmonious in design, to give a balanced neighbourhood and a balanced community.

In making the sites available from the land assembly projects I submit it is very much in the public interest that we should look in terms of the number of builders who are going to operate there, and make restrictions to ensure that the finest type of neighbourhood development takes place within our land assembly schemes.

One other concept advanced by the hon. member for Danforth gave me a fair amount of concern. He spoke in terms of a model community. This is the great dream of the past. In the model community everything is ordered, everything is according to plan, but you will find very few of those who have had practical experience with the industry who feel that this type of community can be created in the way the planners think it can.

What is going to be the core of the community? If it is industry, how are you going to have public control of the industry? In a socialist economy it would be possible to formulate policy so that you could direct this core and work out from the industrial locations to the residential sections, and thus achieve a balance; but in our society it would be very doubtful if you could do this.

Was the hon. member thinking in terms of industrial communities on the fringe of large residential areas? If so, he must think in terms of what is involved, how many builders are going to be involved; because if it is open to everyone, this is to the detriment of the land assembly project. If you restrict the number of builders, by what principles do you allocate the lots and erect the homes? How do you assign plots of serviced land and put on the type of controls which are flexible enough and yet sufficiently minimum to be adequate?

I believe we are now entering a phase in construction in North America, and in Canada in particular, in which private industry is rising to a high level of achievement. I think the satellite communities which we now see springing up are the best planned towns, the kind we now see rising in southern Ontario, on the outskirts of Toronto, and which we see planned on the outer fringe of the green belt beyond Ottawa. In many cases a single large developer, or combination of developers, has reached to the satellite community, and set up within the framework of private enterprise its own controls, its own planning, and its own objectives.

I do not think this calls for anything more than proper balance and the guidance of legislation, but one of the things which has been involved so much with our legislation so far has been this monstrosity of emphasis on the three bedroom, single family bungalow in the suburbs. This has distorted the community's attractiveness and has created onerous and unnecessary demands on school boards and others. It has created what I think in many cases is an unequal disposition of new classrooms and other new facilities, especially when we come to add up the cost of this type of inadequate planning.

I think the amendments which have been proposed today are a stepping stone in a change of thinking, in a change of philosophy, in a change of emphasis which is in keeping with the obligations ahead of us. There is no question that the greatest job to be done in housing today is to provide houses for those in the lower income brackets, to provide housing on the most economical terms, whether it be in forms of town houses, apartment dwellings or multiple units which are beautiful, which are economical, which provide the necessary minimum standards of community facilities and which, I submit, will have to be financed with the kind of assistance which single family homes got through the previous legislation. I am very pleased to welcome these amendments and to support them in this house.

Mr. Clancy: I have one or two questions for the hon. member, after listening to his very eloquent speech. What does he think about the low rental housing area which is causing so much trouble in part of his constituency? Second, what about our schools and a bypass over the Queensway? I think he was very eloquent, but why not get a little bit local and get something for the people who live in his constituency? I happen to be one member of parliament who spends his time in Ottawa living in the hon. member's constituency.

Mr. Francis: I welcome the hon. member's intervention, and I am delighted to say I can vouch for the fact that the hon. member who has spoken is an excellent citizen and a well known resident of a very fine riding. The hon. member was attentive to what I was saying and I am sure he will recall I said there were some instances of standards of construction which are not as good as they should be, and I also referred to lack of adequate balance, of recreational facilities and lands adjacent to public housing sites. I feel very strongly that this is one particular example where the planning was not good enough, and I believe that what we will have to do in future will have to be a great deal better than was done there. But by the same token we all know we have to have public housing. This is what is needed, and this is what is called for within the terms of public initiative.

We have, by and large, solved the problem of the development of the single family house. Eighty per cent of what has been done under the act has concerned this type of accommodation. But I have worked very conscientiously to try to improve the conditions of that development, and as an alderman of the city of Ottawa representing that area I have expressed on a number of occasions, as the hon. member may know, and as certainly his wife will know, my concern about the lack of recreation space afforded to a project which has 120 units and houses well over 500 children.

Mr. Clancy: The hon. member has just said he was an alderman of the city of Ottawa, and he was an alderman when I moved into the area. There has been no decision made. Land was set aside for recreational use and still, after five years, no decision has been reached. If the hon. member wants to be local about the thing, fight it out here, or else go down to city hall.

Mr. Francis: The hon. member has, I think, answered his own question. The mayor of the city of Ottawa is a member of his own party and he should carry more weight in influencing her decision than I have been able to do.

Mr. Clancy: I would accept the mayor of Ottawa as a member of our party any day of the week.

An hon. Member: You can have her.

Mr. Clancy: I will take her. She is a fighter. She has more brains than all the rest of you.

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): In addition to the compliments paid by the hon. member for Carleton (Mr. Francis) to the hon. member for Yorkton (Mr. Clancy) I think he forgot to say he also had good voting habits.

I think the quality of this debate has been excellent. This is a very important subject and it has been dealt with, I think, in a constructive and useful way by all members who have taken part. I should like to say this because in recent weeks it has been the habit to be extremely critical of this parliament. Yet here we have legislation dealing with real problems, and there is no doubt the house can rise to the occasion and deal with these problems in an effective way.

I wish to go on record as agreeing with the remarks made by my hon. friend from Yukon (Mr. Nielsen). I also come from a northern constituency, not quite as far north as he does but far enough north that to a limited extent the problems which his people face are those faced by the people of my area, too. I do hope that the minister, who I saw paying close attention when the hon. member for Yukon was speaking, will pay regard to his reasonable suggestions.

I should like to make one further observation, though it is not completely pertinent to this legislation before us. The $500 bonus program is one which does not apply in the north in the fullest way, northern winters being what they are. When the cut-off date comes we too often find that the weather has been so inclement that it has been impossible to reach the stage which could be expected in areas of Canada further to the south. This is very important. I have received a number of letters from people in my area who are anxious to take advantage of this provision, but unfortunately they have not been able to do so. While I agree there cannot be flexibility in legislation of this kind sufficient to satisfy the requirements of all the areas of Canada, I think the situation which arises in the northern regions should be given special consideration.

I listened with interest, too, to what was said by the hon. member for Danforth (Mr. Scott). I agree with much of what he said but I do not go along with him when he suggests that this matter might be the subject of a royal commission. This problem of housing and urban redevelopment is one which is extremely rapid in its occurrence and its changes and I do think that if you set up a royal commission, by the time this commission were to draw its conclusions the assumptions upon which those conclusions were based would no longer be valid. I am sure those members who have played any part in municipal government will bear with me when I say that frequently, from the time a municipal project is conceived, financed and carried through the necessary levels of government to the day of its conclusion, a considerable time has elapsed, and the end which the project was initially planned to serve has also extended.

So it would be with a royal commission. I would make this suggestion, however, and it is one I have made before. The standing committees of this house—and this, of course, is a subject for a committee which Your Honour and I are concerned with also—no longer are related to the exigencies of present day needs, and I should like to see a standing or select committee dedicated to the problem of urban redevelopment and housing. This is a need which could be met by simple means at this time and, in conjunction, rather than a royal commission I should like to see a permanent committee composed of the representatives of the three levels of government, federal, municipal and provincial. This would be a committee sitting continuously with a permanent secretariat to study these problems which arise from day to day, from week to week and from month to month. Liaison between that committee and the three levels of government would, I think, enable the machinery of government to be directed to at least a partial solution of the problems which have to do with housing and urban redevelopment.

Several years ago a measure of this kind was before this house. I had the honour to speak on that occasion and I want to repeat what I said then. I am going back, very briefly, to the amendments made to the National Housing Act in 1960, and I do this because the very problem I referred to then still exists; it has not been disposed of. We are still dealing with what, I submit, are the results and the effects of the problem and not with the real cause. At that time I was quoting from an article which appeared in Time magazine of August 29, 1960 and I should like, with permission, to quote part of this article again. The article was called "The Costly Earth" and it went on to say this:

The man who faces inflation's cruellest bite is the United States home builder—

And this can certainly be applied in this country.

—who starts off in search of land for his dream house.

Since 1950 the price of U.S. land for home building has soared anywhere from 100 per cent to 3,760 per cent—while building material prices have climbed a less spectacular 24 per cent and building trade wages 60 per cent.

I would imagine that this same comparison might well be made today. I did not secure statistics, because I did not know I would be speaking; but I think the same general trend would still apply. The article goes on:

In city and suburb alike, says House and Home the present tax structure harnesses the profit motive backward; it abets speculation, penalizes development. Underdeveloped land and vacant city lots are taxed, on the average, at less than 25 per cent valuation across the U.S. v. 40.8 per cent for business properties. Land, comprising one third of the U.S. national wealth, carries less than 5 per cent of the total tax load. Not surprisingly, land speculation has made more millionaires since world war II than any other form of U.S. business or investment.

If the U.S. is to avoid an even bigger land bust than in the '20s, concludes House and Home—

And this could certainly be applied in our country.

—cities and towns must act fast. Most experts agree that the first point of attack should be to ease the too-heavy tax burden on houses and other improvements, multiply the too-easy tax load on unimproved land, and make the unearned increment in land prices provide much more of the taxes needed to provide the streets, water, sewer and schools without which unimproved land would be neither liveable nor saleable.

I had the honour of being present yesterday at the opening of an important conference having to do with the family, and I also heard the eloquent and articulate words which were spoken at that time to open the conference. Surely at the very root of this problem is the provision of adequate housing for the family. How can you have a family which fits into our civilization as we would like it to fit without having that family housed in suitable and reasonable circumstances? I do not know to what extent this conference is going to direct its attention to this problem, but I would hope that we in this house have an opportunity to do something about it, and we might well march with our proposals parallel to what is being done at the conference.

I am not being critical of the bill itself, because I support the principle and I think it will do a great deal to help solve the consequences which have flowed from the problem I mentioned; but I do not think it gets to the root cause. What runs in my mind, Mr. Speaker, is what the minister has said—and I agree very much with what he did say—along the same lines as the words spoken by the minister several years ago, when a companion piece of legislation to this was before this house and was passed. It is in my thinking that in the not too distant future we will be called back here to vote even larger sums of money to deal in an even more impressive way with this very grave problem of urban redevelopment, urban sprawl, the slums which continue to grow despite what is being done to dispose of them, the construction of schools, streets and sewers to facilitate servicing the houses which are required for our people. I am quite satisfied as I stand here and speak tonight that within a few years legislation of the same kind will be before us again. I recognize that the question of land taxation, of municipal taxation is one which lies, under our constitutional division of powers, exclusively within the jurisdiction of provincial governments, as does, of course, this business of housing and slum development. But by one of these flexible arrangements which our constitution permits between the three levels of government, we are tackling the one problem, and I hope in the course of the discussions the minister and his officials will be having from time to time with provincial governments they will have a look at the suggestion I am going to lay before him at this time. There have been for many years those who have advocated a different type of municipal tax. One school of thought with which I have some sympathy advocates the approach of Henry George which, as it is related to municipal government, can be described as a method of tax by which the emphasis is shifted and the incidence is shifted from improvements to the land alone.

I am simply going to leave this thought with the minister and refer him to two studies which have been done in the last few years in connection with specific municipalities. One was done in the United Kingdom and was completed quite recently. It was published by the united committee for the taxation of land values. The survey was made on a voluntary basis by the rating and value association, and it was done in connection with the city of Whitstable in the United Kingdom. Then there is a research monograph completed in 1959 by Miss Mary Rawson, who I think comes from the same city as does the minister. This is entitled "Property taxation and urban development". It covers a detailed analysis of urban development and taxation in the municipality of Burnaby, which of course is an area with which the minister is quite familiar. I am just going to read very briefly from this latter document; time will not permit me to do any more. But I would like the minister to give some attention to the summaries and conclusions contained therein.

This study was done very carefully. It was not a theoretical and philosophical discussion of the subject but, as is said in the foreword, it is——an able and well documented case study of what would happen in terms of land use and development in a municipality if the local ad valorem tax were shifted from land and improvements toward a land value tax.

The author comes well qualified, as the minister will know, for this sort of study. She is a native of British Columbia, a graduate of the University of British Columbia in economics and Slavonic studies, and was attached to the national research council of Canada for a period of years. In addition, she completed her master's thesis at the department of city and regional planning of the University of North Carolina. Let me conclude, Mr. Speaker, by just reading very briefly some of the conclusions, which I adopt as my wording and which I think are worthy of consideration. I shall read from page 27 of the monograph, which I will be glad to furnish to the minister if he is interested. First, dealing with the question of urban sprawl and the importance of increased land taxes, this study points out:

The importance of increased land taxes can probably best be appreciated in relation to the problem of sprawl—its extent and its cost to the community.

Sprawl is not a new phenomenon. Emil O. Jorgensen, writing in 1925, calculated that half the potential farming area and over half of our urban centres then consisted of vacant land.

There have been changes here, but I think that as related to value precisely the same proposition could be made:

It cost enough to build and maintain public improvements past all this unused land to reach people who were living further on, he said, but the amount of capital squandered, labour wasted and time consumed in passing and repassing these innumerable gaps of vacant land—daily, monthly, yearly—was "something appalling" and, for the nation as a whole, "beyond all calculation or conjection".

This passage continues:

In 1938 Edmund Bacon described similar costs to the community in a study of Flint, Michigan. He counted 28,526 vacant lots (of which 43 per cent were tax delinquent) which were serviced with water and sewer at a cost of some $1,700,000.

Then later on:

The sprawl problem is almost purely the result of land speculation at work. Thousands of vacant service lots lie within our cities while thousands of new urban lots are offered in patches scattered about in the suburban and rural rings. The services which are sometimes said to be rendered by speculators in land pale into insignificance when judged against the resulting pattern of costs to the community.

I just put it in this way, that this can be seen by anyone who has been involved in the construction of houses in the last 10, 15 or 20 years and who has watched with interest the increase in the percentage of the cost of land as contrasted with the cost of the building itself which has gone into new homes. I can recall that when I first built a house I think probably 5 or 6 per cent of the cost was land. In the case of the last house I built it was nearer 25 per cent to 26 per cent; and there is no stopping this trend. Then dealing with slum clearance the study says:

In the slum, the process of natural renewal by private action has come to a stop, hindered, among other things, by speculation in land, and by the taxation of improvements.

It is my simple submission, Mr. Speaker, that the application of at least this principle in part would do more than anything else that I know of to compel the owners of what are now described as slum areas to bring into production those parcels of land in order to pay the taxes which would be necessarily involved in a scheme of this kind. Then we see:

To exempt improvements and at the same time to tax land more heavily would provide a double incentive to the owners of derelict buildings to demolish them and to use the land more intensively. Here surely is a golden key to urban renewal, to the automatic regeneration of the city—and not at public expense.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, we have in this country an active and efficient housing industry. I think that more than any other industry in this country we are geared to do the sort of things which should be done, yet we find it necessary to come back time after time to the government for the kind of help which this legislation is going to give. This report continues:

> To relieve dwellings of taxation removes a brake on investment which might take the form either of repair or of new construction. How great an improvement in the housing situation would result over time from this changed pressure, it is not possible to calculate.

This is, of course, a long range program. It may be four, five or six years before he or some other minister—and I expect it will be another minister—is going to ask the house for the passage of similar legislation. Therefore I would urge upon the minister and his officials the need to take a look at the problem. While I acknowledge the fact that it is completely out of his control to put into effect this type of tax situation, certainly at a conference he could bring it to the attention of municipal and provincial governments. He could also bring it to the attention of his colleague the Minister of Finance (Mr. Gordon) who, when urged for further funds by provincial governments, might well be able to point out the tremendously large amount of tax dollars going down the sewer from taxation of land speculation.

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, my intention is to speak very briefly to the bill we have before us and to bring up several points which I think are gross injustices with regard to the outworking of this legislation which is provided under the National Housing Act, the amendments to which are contained in Bill No. C-102. Shelter is of equal importance to the well-being of an individual in a free society, as is food itself. In fact, I am convinced that one of the best assurances for the continuance of a free way of life in a democratic society is the provision made within that society for direct home ownership. Much has been done in Canada in this regard, but we are yet far short of the desirable ideal so far as making it possible for individual citizens to own their own homes.

While it is not directly related to the amendments before us at the present time, I think we all agree that our tax system is antiquated so far as the home owner is concerned. Too often is he penalized for improving his own home and property, instead of being given the incentive to do this very thing. Second, the cost of financing home ownership is far too high. We speak about social capital and the need to provide capital without the heavy load of interest which we must pay today for the development of certain of our social capital needs. I am convinced that home ownership fits into this category as well. I believe that one of the reforms which must be brought about in the future is the classification of capital, so far as that which is required to provide for the construction of homes for our citizens is concerned, on the same basis that we are coming to regard social capital used for general social development needs.

As an illustration of this present problem a $12,000 mortgage on a home costs a homeowner after 20 years $21,326, on the basis that he is paying 6¼ per cent interest on the money. After 25 years it costs him $24,114. It means that in just 25 years the cost of financing his home is more than the cost of the construction of his home. At the end of 30 years this amount has been raised to $27,060. This does not include many of the other charges which are part of financing a home under the provisions of the National Housing Act, which is the authority which sets up Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation.

It is not my intention to go into detail on this subject because I want to bring into focus several injustices which are included in the present operation of the act about which I do not think very many of us have thought too much. Therefore, I will briefly deal with certain procedures established by Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation and followed by mortgage companies in Canada which appear to me to be contrary to the law and which work a considerable injustice upon many of our Canadian citizens whose homes are subject to these mortgages.

One of the requirements of a mortgage authorized by the corporation is that the monthly instalments shall be increased by an arbitrary amount, to cover the cost of insurance on the mortgaged property; likewise that amount which is intended to cover the municipal taxes to be paid on the property. This amount is always estimated and is always in excess of the actual amount of the taxes levied and the cost of insurance involved.

A more serious objection, however, is that Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation is endeavouring to interfere in a way which I think transgresses provincial laws in attempting to set itself up as a compulsory agent between the mortgagor and mortgagee with respect to taxes imposed by a municipal authority. It is not possible for C.M.H.C. to make the mortgagor the agent of the taxing authority, so therefore it must endeavour to make the mortgagee the agent of the mortgagor. It is a rule of law that agencies may be terminated by the principal at will subject to the payment of any damages for breach of agency contract if such damages in fact exist; but no contract of an agency can be made irrevocable. In this case the mortgagee is attempting to claim the right to intervene between a taxing authority and a taxpayer against the wishes of the taxpayer and to occupy a position distinct from that of the agent of the taxpayer. This position is unknown in the normal procedures of civil law. For many centuries it has not been constitutionally possible to farm out the collection of taxes to anybody.

A further serious objection to the system is that the agent of the mortgagor can only be a trustee holding moneys on behalf of the taxpayer until the time they are paid to the taxing authority. During this period any interest earned by the money actually belongs to the taxpayers and should be credited to his mortgage account. The appropriation by the mortgagee of such interest constitutes legalized embezzlement. It is not difficult to see that the present system provides the mortgagee with large sums of the taxpayer's money for its own use to the date of payment of the taxes, and it has apparently been the practice for many years for all lending institutions to appropriate, or perhaps it is better to say misappropriate, the interest on such moneys.

There can be no objection to the mortgagor adopting such an arrangement when he so desires, but to have it forced upon him is another question altogether. There should be no way of depriving him of the right to refuse such an arrangement or to terminate it in order to pay his taxes himself directly to the taxing authority whenever he sees fit to do so. But this is not his prerogative under the present arrangement. From my own experience in this regard the lending institutions will exert every pressure possible, by intimidation or otherwise, to discourage the mortgagor from exercising these very fundamental rights.

A further abuse to be found in the regulations of Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation, and which is related to the particular amendments before us at the present time, has to do with the fact that the mortgagor is obliged to carry fire insurance to the full face value of his mortgage. The mortgage, however, is secured by both the building and the land, and I do not think any insurance company will ever issue insurance coverage on land itself. Usually this represents an increasing proportion of the mortgage starting at approximately one third. It can be readily seen that by this means the premiums are greatly and artificially inflated over and above the cost of financing the mortgage itself, as I referred to in my earlier remarks. Since insurance companies flatly refuse to value a structure by itself for insurance purposes and will accept coverage only on the full face value of the mortgage. The mortgagor is thus effectively prevented from determining how much fire insurance should equitably be carried on the building subject to the mortgage.

These may seem to be minor points, Mr. Speaker, but in my opinion they amount to the robbing of those who finance their homes under the provisions of this act of many millions of dollars a year simply because of the fact that under these regulations the financing institution is able to carry on these unfair and inequitable practices. The public are left wholly without protection in this situation since few can afford the cost of litigation and in most cases the cost of litigation would far exceed the amount taken from the home owner through the application of these procedures.

I think something ought to be done to correct this situation. I urge the government to look into the matter because while the point may appear a minor one in many respects, it is a fundamental right of the home owner that is being transgressed. What we ought to be doing in this legislation and through the whole policy involved under the national housing administration is to encourage rather than discourage the private ownership of homes.

Mr. A. D. Hales (Wellington South): Mr. Speaker, I should like to make one or two observations in taking part in this very useful debate that has been going on this evening. The subject of homes in which people live affects the lives of a great many in this country. I well recall my first session in the house in 1957 when the Conservative government introduced legislation to increase the funds available to Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation in order to make it possible to build more homes and to create more jobs. We all recall what wonderful effects this action had on the creation of jobs throughout Canada. I should like to commend the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) for his suggestion with regard to setting up a standing committee of the house on housing. I think this is an excellent idea and I hope the house will give consideration to the suggestion.

There are only two or three sections about which I should like to ask the minister questions at this stage of the bill. The first has to do with urban redevelopment. I apologize for not having been able to follow the minister too closely, and I hope he will correct me if I am wrong in what I say. I understand that first of all a city has to designate the area. First, who designates the area?

Is it the city itself, the province or the corporation? When an area is designated, does it have to be a slum area in order for a person to be able to get a loan on an existing house? In my own city there is an area three or four blocks wide where some of the oldest and finest homes of the city are situated. These are homes that people would like to buy if they could get a loan with which to purchase them. At the present time it is very difficult to get loans on such houses. However, if this area is designated I understand that C.M.H.C. will grant loans on the existing houses so that people can buy these fine old homes and convert them into duplexes or live in them as they are, or perhaps fix them up to their former condition and appearance.

If it is not made possible for people to get loans on older houses, then in view of the development of the urban sprawl in all cities across Canada I am sure almost anyone can visualize that some of the fine old sections of the cities of Canada will become slum areas. I hope the new provision is not set up in such a way that the area has to be designated a slum area before people can get loans to buy these houses.

In June, 1960, the former minister of public works, Hon. David Walker, made it possible for universities to get loans at the rate of 5⅛ per cent in order to build dormitories on university campuses. This provision has been used to a great extent. I am sorry I do not have the figures for 1964 but as of June, 1963, some $49 million had been advanced for this purpose. I am sure the amount must be nearly double by now. I commend the minister for improving this section so that student co-operatives will now be able to obtain loans under the act. With the great development of universities throughout Canada and the tremendous difficulties that universities are having in providing accommodation for their students, I am sure that student co-operatives will use this provision to a great extent.

There are many student co-operatives on campuses throughout Canada. In my own community of Guelph there is a student co-operative at the university which is most anxious to see the bill passed so that it can make application for a loan to build a student dormitory. In many of these co-operative residences students are able to work a few hours each week toward the cost of their accommodation. I am sure this provision in the act will fill a long needed want.

Another point I should like to make has to do with loans to non-profit organizations to build residences for senior citizens. This provision has been in the act for some time and in my view there has been a little window dressing in making reference to it in the resolution. However, I should like to see this section of the act used to a greater extent because it is really appalling to see the rooms in which some of our senior citizens have to live. There is a great opportunity here to provide better accommodation for our senior citizens.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, I should like to draw the minister's attention to the inspection aspect of C.M.H.C. operations. I know they sell what are called approved homes, but quite often purchasers of N.H.A. homes have brought to my attention flaws and poor construction in their homes. Only this week end a constituent told me that he had bought an N.H.A. home. I believe he is the second or third owner. It is a split level design and in the construction the builders failed to use enough gravel in the back part that is built on the ground. The result is that the whole floor has caved in and the plumbing, baseboards and flooring have caved in or deteriorated. This house is only eight years old. So this inspection of buildings is most important. I am sure the corporation will give every attention to this very necessary part of the construction of homes for the safeguarding of our Canadian people. I commend the minister on opening the National Housing Act for amendments, and this party is most happy to see these amendments put into effect.

[Translation]

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): Mr. Speaker, we are very happy, on this side of the house, that there are to be changes in the National Housing Act, and I wonder whether it would not be possible for the minister also to amend the act by making its provisions more flexible.

Everybody knows that the climate in the eastern provinces, including Quebec, the maritime provinces, Newfoundland, the Northwest Territories and the Yukon is entirely different from that of the western provinces and British Columbia, and that it is therefore more expensive to build a home in eastern Canada that in western Canada. I wonder whether it would not be possible to amend the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation act to make it more flexible and put home building in eastern Canada on the same footing with home building in western Canada, where there is practically no winter.

Mr. Speaker, I believe that this is a constructive suggestion, as it would contribute to render the act setting up the corporation more flexible and fairer to Canadian taxpayers.

I know that it may be difficult to insert in this act some provisions to that end, but I also know that the minister's officials are entirely qualified to establish a certain distinction between the climate in the western provinces and in the eastern part of this country.

Mr. Speaker, we will soon celebrate the centenary of confederation, and I wonder whether the government could not exempt from interest the towns and municipalities which would want to take advantage of the services offered by C.M.H.C. to demolish slums within their limits and replace them by new, cleaner and healthier housing.

We know that slums are a liability for this country because, first of all, investigations have revealed that they mostly are a breeding ground for juvenile delinquency, for it is there that we find the highest delinquency and crime rate. Second, municipal assessment is very low in slum areas and, consequently, municipalities stand to lose a lot; third, insurance rates are higher in slum areas which are considered a bad risk. Fourth, there are more frequent and more numerous fires in such areas. Consequently, slums constitute a liability for cities and towns and, therefore, for the whole country.

If the minister could convince the cabinet to exempt from paying any interest charges cities and towns undertaking urban renewal programs, such a policy would be welcome by the Canadian people.

I wonder how much it would cost the federal government if, for example, those cities and towns which want to clear their slums and build new housing were exempted from paying interest for ten years?

Mr. Speaker, the problem of water pollution which faces this country is of capital importance. To my mind, all provinces would have some interest in forcing their cities, for instance, Montreal, for the province of Quebec, Toronto for Ontario, Vancouver for British Columbia and Halifax for the maritime provinces, to pass specific legislation providing that municipalities in the same territory are to co-operate in building water processing plants to counteract water pollution.

Mr. Speaker, in a few years we will celebrate the centenary of confederation; in Montreal, we will have the world fair, which will attract about 50 million people. May I stress, once more, that the St. Lawrence river is, at this time, the server of all its tributaries. One has only to sail on the St. Lawrence river to see all summer long a permanent oil layer stagnating on its waters.

Are we, Mr. Speaker, as the world fair will take place in Montreal, willing to have visitors see that the waters of the majestic St. Lawrence are polluted because the federal government, which has jurisdiction on that river, as it is a navigable water, has not taken the necessary action? To my mind, Mr. Speaker, the federal government has a great responsibility in this field and should set an example—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I hesitate to interrupt the hon. member, but perhaps he would tell the Chair how the remarks he just made are related to the bill before us.

Mr. Pigeon: With great pleasure, Mr. Speaker. When I say that the water in the St. Lawrence river is polluted, it is due to industries, to the city of Montreal, to the surrounding municipalities and also to the oil plants as regards the oil sheets which foul the waters of the St. Lawrence river all through the summer. It is a blame I am indirectly casting on the oil plants in Montreal east which allow their tankers to spread oil on the St. Lawrence river.

I think it would be in the interest of private enterprises such as Montreal oil plants themselves to build sewage treatment plants—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I listened to the explanation given by the hon. member, but I must tell him that he has not satisfied me, because I do not think the comments he is making are related to the bill now before the house.

Mr. Pigeon: In section (b) of the bill, I see, referring to the explanatory notes:

For sewage treatment projects.

The city of Montreal and the surrounding municipalities authorize industries to dump into the St. Lawrence river chemical products which contaminate the water. I think, Mr. Speaker, that this is indirectly related to the bill now before us.

In concluding, Mr. Speaker—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Pigeon: —I have not concluded, Mr. Speaker, and this is an encouragement for me to go on until ten o'clock.

Mr. Speaker, I think it is important that in the constituency of Joliette-l'Assomption-Montcalm and more specifically in Joliette city, a home should be built under C.M.H.C. to enable our old couples to end their lives in peace and together.

I hope that the authorities concerned will take this action for the construction, within the limits of the city of Joliette, of a large building containing apartments big enough to accommodate couples. I am also convinced that if such a building were erected in L'Assomption, the population would be very happy.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I come back to this point. In view of the centennial celebration of confederation, it seems important to me that the government should amend the legislation, if necessary, so as to exempt from interest, for a number of years, the municipalities and cities which want to clear away their slums.

For some months Canada has been hard pressed, there is hardly any slum clearance or construction in towns and cities because costs are too high on account of the 11 per cent on building materials. I am aware of the influence of the minister in the cabinet, and I hope he will convince the Minister of Finance to abolish this tax which discourages private enterprise and hinders, by that very fact, municipalities and cities in the clearance of slums to be replaced by healthy dwellings.

Mr. Speaker, I hope the minister will have the authority and the faith necessary to convince the cabinet to abolish this infamous tax, which is a nightmare for all builders in Canada, in order to permit the great expansion which construction would experience if the Canadian population and municipalities were to avail themselves of the legislation governing the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation, to clear slums and replace them by healthy and modern houses.

Mr. Speaker, I trust that these remarks will be taken into very serious consideration, knowing that the minister has only one aim, that is to work in the interest of all Canadians.

As far as the 11 per cent tax is concerned, I would ask the minister to say something about it tonight, so that it may be abolished completely and enable us to return on the road of progress, so that workers will find work to do and that we can have healthy and modern housing in Canada.

Mr. G. L. Chatterton (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, my remarks will be very brief because, as should be obvious now, this side of the house has been anxious to get these amendments through as soon as possible. As a matter of fact, we were prepared to let the resolution go through without debate. However, there are a few general remarks I wish to make, and I reserve the right to make comments on specific clauses of Bill C-102 when it reaches the committee stage.

First of all, I want to say that Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation, the administering agency for the National Housing Act, is the orphan of the government, and in my opinion has found a very poor home in the Department of National Revenue. This is the last place where it should have rested—certainly the Department of Public Works would be a more fitting and proper place for it.

[Mr. Pigeon.]

I have one or two general comments about the existing operations of the National Housing Act which I want to bring to the minister's attention. The first is with regard to the general policy of making individual loans only in the case of sewered areas.

Mr. Nicholson: Does the hon. member think that the administration of Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation is now with the Department of National Revenue?

Mr. Chatterton: It is presently with the minister, but I think the proper place for it is the Department of Public Works.

Mr. Nicholson: It is not with the Department of National Revenue, and I hope the hon. member understands that.

Mr. Chatterton: Yes, at the present time I understand that. I wholeheartedly agree with the policy that loans should be made not only where sewers are available, but there are places where this policy creates hardship and there are anomalies involved in setting an arbitrary rule as to whether the policy should apply or not. I suggest to the minister that he might consider establishing some kind of tribunal or appeal body to which individuals can refer when their particular cases are considered to be discriminated against by the present policy.

My second point is with regard to the policy of lending for apartments. I have in mind a recent case in the city of Victoria where C.M.H.C. decided there was overbuilding of apartments and therefore would not insure any more loans. There might be a valid reason for that attitude, but what I consider unfortunate is that when they decide the type of apartments being built they do not consider the quality and the particular need of an area for a special type of apartment.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I want to use again a document which I have used quite frequently in the house and which I will continue to use. This is a full page advertisement, published in the Victoria Daily Colonist of Sunday, March 31, 1963. The date of course denotes that this was during the last election campaign. This document is headed, "Policies of the Liberal Party". Of course I could spend all night reading the promises made and telling how they were not fulfilled, but I will restrict myself tonight to the amendments to the National Housing Act. I read:

> Extend national housing legislation to provide insured mortgages for the purchase of existing homes as well as for building new homes.

It is a far cry from the provisions in the proposed legislation to that promise. The present legislation provides for loans on existing houses on a very limited scale, only in the area of urban renewal, but this promise of the Liberal party was definitely to provide insured loans for all existing homes.

Mr. Nielsen: Deceived the public.

Mr. Chatterton: Yes definitely, deceived the public. The second promise made was this:

> A new Liberal government will extend national housing legislation for the improvement of farm homes and other dwellings in rural areas.

I do not see any reference in the proposed legislation to that promise. In general terms, we are in favour of the proposed legislation and we are anxious to get it through. We are not going to delay it; but I want to point out that this legislation was taken almost in toto from the policy of the previous government.

I would refer hon. members to a speech made by the former prime minister at the annual meeting of the Progressive Conservative association of Ontario on February 19, 1963. I will not read all of it, but wish to point out that almost everything in Bill C-102 was forecast by the previous government in its proposed legislation, except in one very important area, and this is my main criticism of this legislation. We will not oppose it on these grounds, but I would point out to the minister that the bill does not really touch the real problems of urban growth and development in Canada.

In my opinion some of the major problems we have in Canada today are really unimportant compared with the real problem Canada will be faced with in the next two or three decades, namely that of urban growth and development, and this bill does nothing to prevent the increasing difficulties that urbanization is causing. What it does is to lessen some of the difficulties that have been created. It tends to remove the blight that exists. It tends to prevent further deterioration of the area which is degenerating, but it does not prevent blight that will follow in new areas, in the growing areas of the urban centres. In this respect the policies of the previous government made an important proposal, and that was, with regard to the outside areas of the metropolitan cities, to provide for further federal assistance to prevent some of the deterioration that will surely occur in the next decade or two in these areas.

I would urge the minister to get his staff, perhaps in conjunction with the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation and the national research council to consider these measures which might be taken to prevent what has happened, and what is happening now in the older parts of our cities, from occurring in the suburbia which is developing so rapidly. This is where the blighted areas of the future will occur, and deterioration will come about much more rapidly than has been the case in the cores of our existing centres.

Mr. W. H. A. Thomas (Middlesex West): I wonder whether the minister when he rises to wind up the debate would mind discussing the limits placed on this urban renewal program. In clause 23 we find a definition of the term "urban renewal area". It is defined as a blighted or substandard area of a municipality for which a government of a province in whose area it is located has approved the implementation of an urban renewal scheme. What about the limitation placed on the term "municipality"? Does it apply only to our large cities? Does it apply to a community of 10,000? Does it apply to a community containing 5,000? Does it apply to a community containing 1,000? And so forth.

Perhaps the minister will explain whether or not municipalities containing older villages and smaller settlements of 500 to 1,000 population can qualify under the urban renewal program. I will leave this question with the minister.

Mr. J. E. Pascoe (Moose Jaw-Lake Centre): Other members have spoken at some length on the proposed amendments to the National Housing Act outlined in Bill No. C-102. I think we are substantially in agreement on at least those proposals which are in line with the policies initiated by the previous government. I have a few short comments to make on a situation of great interest to my home city of Moose Jaw, Saskatchewan. It concerns adequate housing accommodation for a large number of air force personnel being transferred to Moose Jaw R.C.A.F. station in the next few months in connection with the changeover in pilot training from Harvards to Tudor jets.

According to a statement by Group Captain Hunt, the officer commanding Moose Jaw R.C.A.F. station, there will be some 90 jet trainers at the station within a year. In addition to flying instructors and students there will be a large increase in maintenance staff. All these men and their families will require homes. Moose Jaw is very pleased to receive such an influx of important new residents. City officials wish to provide them with adequate housing. Although, with the expansion of the city in recent years, a great many new homes have been built, there will still be a need for more when the additional R.C.A.F. personnel arrive.

On an earlier occasion I discussed this matter with Mr. Garland, the late minister of national revenue. In a letter to me dated June 20, 1963, he stated:

Dear Mr. Pascoe:

In reply to your letter of June 10th concerning a housing project at Moose Jaw for accommodation of R.C.A.F. personnel, I am advised that no formal application for any additional accommodation has been received by Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation.

You also request information as to Central Mortgage and Housing's policies concerning financing of projects to provide low rental housing. Some years ago, treasury board directed that for defence establishments located in reasonable proximity to organized municipalities that rental housing should, if possible, be provided by private enterprise within the organized municipality. Housing provided under these circumstances has become known as urban military housing and Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation, as agent for national defence, designs the project and invites competitive proposals. Mortgage financing is provided by the Department of National Defence to the owner under terms comparable to those of the limited-dividend section of the National Housing Act. Approximately 3,450 units in 16 locations have been provided under this plan, and of these 600 are still under construction. The final decision as to the method of procuring rental housing rests with treasury board.

The late minister indicated that this arrangement was planned as an alternative to building additional permanent married quarters on military bases.

As I stated, this letter is dated June 20, 1963. The question I ask the Acting Minister of National Revenue is this: Is this arrangement for urban military housing still in operation and, if so, what procedures are necessary when applying for C.M.H.C. plans? I realize that these arrangements may not come directly within the minister's own field, but I did give him notice of my intention to ask this question and I trust he will give an answer when he closes the debate.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: If the hon. minister speaks now he will close the debate.

Hon. J. R. Nicholson (Postmaster General): I intend to make my remarks very brief since I would like to get into committee for the clause by clause discussion of the bill itself. Certainly some of the questions which have been asked this afternoon and this evening could, I think, be answered more effectively on the particular clauses concerned. I refer for example to the question asked by the hon. member for Middlesex West (Mr. Thomas). He asked if I would deal with a certain phrase in a particular clause. Since this clause is part of a long series of amendments I think it would be much more effectively and easily dealt with in committee.

However, there are some matters which could properly be dealt with at this stage. The hon. member for Moose Jaw-Lake Centre (Mr. Pascoe) was thoughtful enough to tell me in advance that he wanted certain information. I can say briefly, this: While it is expected there will be additional air force personnel in the Moose Jaw area, should the Department of National Defence feel that additional housing is required either for single men or for married couples they can make a request to treasury board and provision can then be made. Our information is that despite the fact that additional personnel will be transferred to Moose Jaw the Department of National Defence does not intend to make any such request to the treasury board. However, Moose Jaw is in the same position as Petawawa and other cities to which military personnel are being transferred. Equal opportunities and facilities are open. Within the last few weeks a private builder has applied to Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation for a loan in connection with a project in Petawawa. It is progressing very nicely. The facilities and machinery of Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation are available in Moose Jaw, as they are in any other city. But the type of housing about which the hon. member is inquiring is, I think, that normally arranged by the Department of National Defence through treasury board. Did the hon. member have a question?

Mr. Pascoe: Would the minister outline what terms are available to a private contractor contemplating taking on the construction of homes like that?

Mr. Nicholson: It would be difficult to give that information now because it would involve outlining the entire procedure. I assumed from what the hon. member had said about his discussion with the late minister of national revenue that he was already in possession of this detail. I would be glad to give it to him if he would come to my office at any time.

One matter which was raised by the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) does deserve a comment. He said certain builders were bypassing or getting round the regulations of the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation and he wanted to know what steps were being taken to prevent this practice. I am sure the hon. member is familiar with regulation 20 of the national housing regulations which provides that an approved loan shall be made by an approved lender to a borrower at no less than the par value thereof, and that the borrower shall not be subjected to a charge in the nature of a discount or commission.

I am informed by C.M.H.C. that there has been the odd case within the last few months —that is to say, one or two cases—where it has been alleged that a builder-borrower has been subjected to a commission. These cases are being investigated. I might say that this act, as hon. members know, has been working for many years and we have had no difficulty whatever with the approved lenders who have been functioning for any appreciable length of time. There have been difficulties with new lenders who have been approved recently and our present information is that the incidents referred to by the hon. member are cases involving new approved lenders. I can assure him that we will take action in this regard.

I would like at the outset, Mr. Speaker, to thank all hon. members for their kind words of appreciation of the co-operation they have received from the officials of C.M.H.C. It bears out the opinion I have formed of them in the two and a half months I have been the minister reporting for the corporation to the house. I also want to thank hon. members for their kind references to myself, and I can only express the hope that I may be able to live up to the expectations some of my hon. friends have put forward on my behalf. I will do my best.

I must say that I was very impressed with the remarks of the hon. member for Danforth (Mr. Scott). He made a number of constructive suggestions. I think the most important comment he made was, "The question is not what is going to happen here as to the passing of this bill, but what is going to happen after the bill becomes law". I agree with him. The proof of the pudding will be in the eating, what counts is what is done after the amendments are accepted by this house, as I hope they will be at a very early date. The hon. member suggested that a royal commission might be set up to have a look at urban Canada, as he described it, and study the problems of the low income families and our senior citizens or elderly people. I would rather give that suggestion some thought.

Another hon. member of the official opposition suggested that we have a permanent committee of this house do the same thing. I can assure the house through you, Mr. Speaker, that these suggestions will receive careful consideration.

The hon. member for Grey-Bruce (Mr. Winkler) and one hon. member, who preceded him, complained about red tape. I practised law long enough before I went into business to know something of the difficulties caused by red tape, and I can assure the hon. member that I will do my part to see to it that if there is any red tape that is interfering with the sound administration of this act, I will do my best to see that the red tape is cut. With regard to the suggestion that a separate department of urban growth and development be set up, my only comment is that I know both hon. members who suggested this appreciate the difficulties that lie in the way. They said they appreciated there were difficulties. Having regard to the difficulties that you run into when you try to get the provinces to accept amendments such as are incorporated in this bill—and the course agreed upon represents months of careful negotiation. Hon. members will recall some of the difficulties we ran into with the municipal loan development fund. With property and civil rights in the background—the field in which a minister responsible for urban growth and development could work would be rather restricted, I would think. However, the matter will be considered, but I do not want to offer hon. members too much encouragement at this time. The hon. member for Grey-Bruce raised a question with regard to section 36(b). That is something that I think could be more effectively dealt with in the clause by clause discussion.

I would appreciate it if the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) would send me the second of the two studies to which he referred, namely the research monograph. It sounded like interesting reading. The hon. member for Wellington South (Mr. Hales) asked, "Are loans under the proposed legislation limited to existing houses in designated areas?" The strict answer is yes, but loans are not limited to slums or near slum areas. A designated area, as I explained in my opening remarks, and as will be seen from the provisions of the act, could be a blighted area or an area in which there has been an indication that blight may or is likely to set in. Under those circumstances either the province or the municipality designated by the province could designate a blighted area—not necessarily a slum area. I think this is what was troubling the hon. member.

I see that the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm (Mr. Pigeon) has left the chamber, but he referred to the fact that he wanted to put housing in the west on the same footing as it is in the east. He overlooks the fact that we have some cold weather in the west, too. I can refer him to the interior parts of British Columbia and to the Yukon, Saskatchewan, Alberta and Manitoba. He will find that we have problems there which are even greater than they have in parts of eastern Canada.

With regard to one of the two points raised by the hon. member for Esquimalt-Saanich (Mr. Chatterton), I would say this. He referred to the fact that the government promised to extend loans to existing houses. I think, in fairness, the hon. member will agree that while we have not extended them to existing houses in all parts of the country, we have made an encouraging start at least by including existing houses in areas that are designated as needing attention. Any other questions, Mr. Speaker, I will try to deal with in the clause by clause discussion.

Mr. Thomas: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if I might ask the minister whether he could relate his idea of a blighted area to loans for used houses. I mean, does it apply to the villages and smaller towns throughout our rural areas?

Mr. Nicholson: I dealt with that matter at some length in my opening remarks, Mr. Speaker. I would, with the best of faith, refer my hon. friend to the remarks I made on that occasion.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and the house went into committee thereon, Mr. Lamoureux in the chair.

On clause 1.

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Chairman, just one question. Will the government soon appoint a new president of Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation to replace the one who died?

Mr. Nicholson: The matter is receiving consideration at the present time but no decision has yet been made.

Mr. Pigeon: But the new president will be bilingual?

Mr. Nicholson: We will appoint the man we consider best fitted for the job.

Clause agreed to.

Clauses 2 to 6 agreed to.

On clause 7.

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Chairman, I directed a good portion of my remarks to the application of extending loans to existing homes in rural areas. Is there any hope of relief in this regard to areas such as those in northern Canada, which are largely rural? In fact, 40 per cent of Canada is rural. Is there any hope that those areas will ever be able to participate as a result of this amendment?

Mr. Nicholson: In answer to the hon. member he will note that the scheme of this amending bill is tied in with the idea of the working program for all the provinces. One of the key words in section 23 of the act is "municipality". There is no difference between cities and smaller municipalities. Municipalities of the type of area to which the hon. member referred would be included, but smaller unincorporated units would not be covered by the act.

I might say that this is a very important step forward which we are taking. We are pioneering in this legislation, as I said in my opening statement. We have to learn, I will not say to crawl, before we can walk, but certainly to walk before we can run, and I should think that we would want to see how this scheme works out in some cities and municipalities where the stagnation and slum conditions to which I referred are presently existing. We should make an attempt to clean this up before we branch out into too wide a field. As I also said in my opening statement, the government is firm in its objectives, and if we do not attain the objectives we are seeking in the act, as enunciated in the statement I made on behalf of the government, then I hope hon. members will get after us and needle us to make the necessary changes which will bring about the desired objectives. But I do not think we should embark on too wide a course at the outset.

Mr. Nielsen: Just on that point, I should like to compliment the minister and the government on following in the pioneering footsteps of the previous administration in this regard. But may I draw to his attention, as I am sure he already knows, that there are only two municipalities in the Yukon, and I know of only one in the Northwest Territories—there may be more but I know of only one. In the Yukon there are the municipalities at Whitehorse and Dawson City. Dawson City is a municipality, as the minister knows, which is experiencing great difficulty and I am sure that these provisions will not benefit the people there. They cannot even get an ordinary loan under the National Housing Act. So here is an act which is supposed to be national in application but which really is not applied to northern areas at all.

I would simply urge the minister to take into consideration possible review of the matter, with the objective in mind of bringing the act into some sort of line so that it will apply to and work in the northern areas of Canada.

Mr. Nicholson: I have not forgotten the remarks of the hon. member which he made this afternoon, and also those of the hon. member for Peace River on the same subject.

Mr. Thomas: Can we assume then, Mr. Chairman, that any municipality within a province, provided they can persuade the provincial government to designate them an area under the act, can participate with no limitation population-wise or otherwise?

Mr. Nicholson: That is made perfectly clear in section 23(a) of the act. That is the same passage to which I referred when replying to the hon. member for Wellington South. This provision applies to substandard areas, not just slum areas of a municipality, in connection with which the government of a province has approved the implementation of a scheme of urban renewal.

Mr. Thomas: According to the section a plan may designate buildings and works in an area. Does that mean that the municipality, with the agreement of the province, could pick out certain buildings along a street and set up plans for urban renewal in regard to those particular buildings or streets?

Mr. Nicholson: Mr. Chairman, I think the language is clear. A designated area would not be just three or four houses. Some of the houses in a designated area may need improvement and some may not. If they come within the area, some house or buildings may have to be torn down completely. Others, if they are in keeping with the over-all urban renewal scheme, could be improved or new ones built with funds made available through Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation, or an approved lender.

Mr. Thomas: And some of the houses could be left standing?

Mr. Nicholson: Some of the houses could stand. If they needed improvement, funds could be made available.

Mr. Thomas: It is just improving what is necessary.

Mr. Gray: Mr. Chairman, I am just wondering whether the minister could clarify for me whether the act will leave the right to the municipalities to acquire land for commercial purposes, which lands is now being used for commercial purposes?

Mr. Pigeon: Please do not embarrass the minister.

Mr. Nicholson: The hon. member may not have been here, but if he will read the remarks I made when the resolution was introduced he will see that that is quite possible.

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Chairman, I am not quite sure whether I am asking this question under the right clause, but I do want to ask whether consideration has been given to providing loans for persons who want to build properly constructed log homes with shake roofs. These can be very substantial, long lasting and very artistic houses.

Mr. Nicholson: All I can say in answer to that is that I am sympathetic to the suggestion contained in the hon. member's remarks. I too have a soft spot for shakes, having regard to my background. This is a matter of detail which must be left to the municipalities concerned and Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation—but it has the sympathetic support of the minister, I can assure the hon. member.

Mr. Herridge: I do just wish to bring to the attention of the minister that there are hundreds of thousands of dollars worth of split shakes being sent to California from my district to be used on homes costing up to $150,000, and the men making these split shakes would like to use them on their own homes. However, under central mortgage and housing they have to buy the rubberized or some other artificial form of roofing. Therefore I ask the minister and his officials to give this matter consideration, because the cedar shake is the most long lasting and is the most efficient roof for its cost of any roof devised by man to date.

Mr. Peters: I would like to ask what consultations have been undertaken by the department in relation to the provinces. Are all the provinces behind the program of urban renewal outlined in this clause?

Mr. Nicholson: Again the hon. member may not have been here, but in answer to a question put by another hon. member I stated that the program outlined in this bill has been cleared with all the provinces and we have their assurance that they will co-operate.

Mr. Nielsen: Don't forget the territories.

Mr. Hales: Just one question on this clause which relates to section 23. In one city there could be any number of designated areas, I take it, provided the province concerned agreed. Perhaps there would be half a dozen streets in one area of the city, and then 10 or 12 streets in another part of the city. Would that be a designated area?

Mr. Nicholson: That is within the concept of section 23, the unnumbered part. It is the main clause of section 23.

Clause agreed to.

On clause 8.

The Chairman: Shall clause 8 carry?

Mr. Peters: Ten o'clock.

Mr. Nicholson: Is it at all possible to finish the bill? We have done 7 of the 16 clauses and I understood that all parties were in sympathy with the principle of the bill.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chairman: Is it agreed?

Mr. Pigeon: We agree on our side.

Mr. Peters: Ten o'clock.

The Chairman: I understand we do not have unanimous consent.

Mr. Monteith: The member for Timiskaming.

Mr. Crouse: Obstruction from the N.D.P.

Progress reported.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Speaker, I would ask the acting house leader what the business will be for tomorrow and, if he can give it, for Wednesday.

Mr. MacNaught: Mr. Speaker, tomorrow we will continue with the committee stage of the bill to amend the National Housing Act. When that is completed we will resume debate on the second reading of Bill No. C-100, to amend the Farm Credit Act. At the conclusion of that measure we will consider the second reading of Bill No. S-26, respecting the commission established to administer the Roosevelt Campobello international park. I may say that this measure was considered and passed in the other place. There is some urgency that it be passed by this house as soon as possible, and I understand from conversations I have had with the house leaders on the other side that it will pass with a minimum of debate. After that is finished we will take the second reading of Bill No. C-101, to amend the Export Credit Insurance Act.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

(Subject matter of questions debated under adjournment motion).

Motion to adjourn the house under provisional standing order 39A deemed to have been moved:

CANADIAN CENTENNIAL—APPOINTMENT TO COMMISSION OF WIFE OF CABINET MINISTER

[Translation]

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): Mr. Speaker, on May 22 last I asked the Prime Minister the following question:

> Does he approve of the appointment to the conference on the centennial of confederation of the wife of the Minister of Forestry, who is already an employee of the C.B.C. and who did not even take the trouble of attending the meeting held in Charlottetown last April 25 and 26?

Mr. Speaker, the wife of the Minister of Forestry (Mr. Sauvé) is the moderator of many programs of opinion for the C.B.C. I cannot do otherwise than denounce this family compact. The Minister of Forestry has emoluments of $35,000 a year and his wife receives from the C.B.C. approximately $15,000 a year. Moreover, she is a member of the national centennial commission.

Mr. Speaker, in the opinion of the great majority of C.B.C. listeners, it is a scandal. And yet, Mr. Lesage, who was elected to office in Quebec, ordered royal investigations on peccadillos.

[Mr. Crouse.]

Mr. Speaker, the majority of listeners of the French C.B.C. network feel that we are faced with a real scandal, since it is the same family which controls and receives from a crown corporation and the government a very large amount of money.

Mr. Speaker, the wife of the Minister of Forestry embarrasses the employees of the C.B.C. and her presence in that corporation represents another type of blackmail for the authorities of the C.B.C., who do not dare dismiss her. In fact, what would happen if the head of the service concerned would dare dismiss the wife of a minister of the crown? The C.B.C. is wrongly considered as a den or the Mecca of the Liberal party on account of the wife of the Minister of Forestry.

When the Minister of Forestry discusses with his colleagues during a meeting of the cabinet the budget of the C.B.C., how do you want him to be unbiased and to protect the interests of the C.B.C. when his wife collects fabulous fees from that corporation.

Mr. Speaker, Caesar's wife must be beyond reproach. Caesar Sauvé, save Caesar. Caesar's wife should not be open to suspicion, even if these suspicions amount to $15,000 to $20,000 per year collected from the C.B.C. while her husband, Caesar Sauvé, gets $35,000 a year as minister of the crown.

Mr. Speaker, over the week end His Excellency the Governor General opened a conference on the Canadian family. We are all in favour of clannishness, but after all, is the family compact of Caesar Sauvé not making a great deal of money at the expense of the 600,000 unemployed of Canada? Mrs. Jeanne Sauvé, wife of the Minister of Forestry, will perhaps become the Cleopatra of the twentieth century.

Mr. Speaker, it is time the government took a position. Most Canadian taxpayers object to the wife of the Minister of Forestry collecting fabulous fees from the C.B.C. while her husband is a minister of the crown and a member of the cabinet.

How do you expect the situation not to be embarrassing for the C.B.C. officials who dare not dismiss her for fear that their own heads might roll as a result of their action, since they are faced with a powerful man, a powerful government which intervenes often directly and indirectly in the affairs of C.B.C., as we found out lately.

Mr. Speaker, the 600,000 Canadian unemployed are justified in complaining about that situation, and I hope that the Canadian government is going to face up to its responsibilities and break off that family compact which is so shameful for our country.

[Text]

Mr. J. B. Stewart (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State): I had thought, Mr. Speaker, that the appointment complained of was the appointment of Madame Sauvé to the national conference of the centennial. I can only conclude from the rambling remarks of the hon. gentleman who has just resumed his seat that the question put down was not to the point.

The national conference on the centennial is made up of 60 persons, 20 appointed by the provinces and 40 appointed by the governor in council. These 40 represent a broad cross-section of Canadians in the sciences, the arts, the learned professions, business, communications and so on. They are individuals who have made a contribution to our national endeavour. Members receive no honorarium, but are paid a per diem allowance to cover expenses when attending meetings. They serve during good behaviour.

Madame Sauvé was appointed to the conference on October 15, 1963. She had participated actively in numerous regional and national organizations. She had been active in radio, television, and other forms of communications. She has a good knowledge of Canadian public affairs and, Mr. Speaker, she is bilingual.

Mr. Pigeon: Yes, but she is the wife of a minister of the crown.

Mr. Stewart: The remarks now made by the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm (Mr. Pigeon) respecting this appointment, even although more restrained than those which we are accustomed to hearing from him, are surprising in view of the fact that this appointment was made several months prior to the date on which the hon. member for Îles-de-la-Madeleine (Mr. Sauvé) was sworn of the privy council. Incidentally, the pages of history are not devoid of illustrations of men and women who have made great contributions to national affairs, each in his or her own way. I would hope the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm (Mr. Pigeon) would not wish to deprive his illustrious province of sharing that record of proud cultural achievement.

POWER—PEACE RIVER—AUTHORITY FOR FLOODING BEHIND DAM

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, my question is not of quite such a personal nature as the previous one, but it is one which concerns national interests. The other day I asked the minister the following question:

> Has the B.C. hydro and power authority asked the minister for his approval for the flooding of the reservoir behind the Peace river dam without the removal of forest growth and vegetation except for the partial clearing of certain channels necessary to meet the requirements for very limited navigation?

I asked that question because of the concern of a number of people in British Columbia in the conservation of our natural resources, and because we are quite reliably informed that the B.C. hydro authority, because of certain expenses and circumstances that exist, intends to destroy several billion feet of timber without removing it from the basin. With this will go a certain destruction of fish and wildlife, with certain impediments to navigation, and also with a great destruction of the aesthetic values, or what I should call the intangible values, which we have discussed in recent weeks in the external affairs committee.

This matter was brought to my attention by a friend of mine who was very close to the B.C. hydro authority, and I notice several questions have been asked by the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands (Mr. Cameron) of the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Deschatelets), with respect to the same question as to whether a licence had been issued for the building of this dam.

As recorded at page 2832 of Hansard for May 1, the Minister of Public Works said this:

> Hon. members will recall that months ago we had secured an opinion from the Department of Justice to make sure that at the point of dam construction the Peace river was navigable. The question has also been raised as to whether the legislation as it stands is binding on the crown in the right of a province. These are questions of legal interpretation as to the precise terms of the Navigable Waters Protections Act. There are a number of amendments to that act that would be desirable, and when they are brought forward action will be recommended to remove the uncertainty to which I have referred, and to make clear the extent of the application of the act. In the immediate case, as the project is now under construction, a licence cannot be applied for, under the terms of the act, until the work is completed.

Then he went on to say, as recorded on the next page:

> It is intended to review this information with the British Columbia hydro and power authority to make sure there is no risk of prejudice to navigation and, as I said previously, amendments to the act would be desirable to remove the uncertainties; and we intend to introduce such amendments. In the meantime there exists complete co-operation with the British Columbia hydro and power authority to ensure security of navigation in the area. I hope this information will be found satisfactory by those hon. members most interested in the matter.

As a matter of fact, the matter is still in uncertain circumstances. When I received this information from Victoria I got in touch with the Department of Public Works and they informed me they had received certain communications from the B.C. hydro authority. I told them I intended to ask this question, but just before coming into the house at 2.30 I was advised I should ask this question of the Department of Transport, as it was now handling the matter. I did ask the Acting Minister of Transport and my question was ruled out of order. That is why I am speaking now. Tonight I see the genial minister of northern affairs (Mr. Laing) is prepared to leap to his feet to answer my question, but this all indicates, shall I say, a sense of ambiguity as to who is responsible for this information. I am sure that when we have heard from the minister we will have more information than we have had to date.

I want him to answer the following questions. (1) Has the British Columbia hydro power authority applied for a licence to build a dam, and when? (2) What are the specifications of the procedure to be followed in clearing the basin of its timber resources, and are they intending to issue a licence and permit B.C. hydro authority to destroy billions of feet of merchantable timber; did they apply for a licence to flood this timber and at the same time to cut various channels needed to permit navigation on certain areas in this long basin which, I understand, is close to 250 miles in extent? (3) Can the minister report any progress with respect to the application of B.C. hydro for this permit?

We are concerned about this. We should like to get answers and we intend to follow it up closely. We are of the opinion that what happens on the Peace river will establish a pattern to be followed on the Columbia, and we want to make certain that these resources are properly dealt with. We want to protect our wildlife by making certain that the natural resources of the Peace river are protected and that an application for a licence is not complied with until this government has an assurance that the basin will be cleared according to standards proposed by the fish and game federation of British Columbia, and the rod and gun clubs of the interior of British Columbia, the west Kootenay and the east Kootenay. I look forward to the minister's reply and perhaps we will go away better informed than we are to date.

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): I wish I could remain as genial as indicated by the hon. gentleman in answering this question. I would point out he can understand how I was confused with his question because he has brought in two questions, permission to construct the dam and protection for river traffic down valley.

Now he has introduced in his question of June 2 the matter of whether or not permission has been sought by the government of British Columbia to flood the timber behind the dam. I think there are some 680 square miles about to be flooded when the dam is completed and I will accept the hon. member's figure that there are probably three or four billion feet of timber there. I remember distinctly the government indicated that it intended to harvest this timber before the dam was flooded. I imagine the hon. member thinks that the action he believes is about to be taken is in contradiction of the process used in the case of Buttle lake, where I believe the roots were removed and grass seed planted on the side of the lake.

Mr. Herridge: As is quite right.

Mr. Laing: I do not know whether this will be done or not. I have not seen a statement in the press that it is the intention of the government of British Columbia to flood the timber and leave it there. It was certainly stated that they intended to harvest the timber in the basin. I assume the hon. member knows that the timber there is crown provincial timber and therefore the province of British Columbia has the right to do anything it wishes with the timber without seeking a permit from the government of Canada.

BROADCASTING—QUEBEC—REPORTED TELEVISION BROADCASTS OF SEPARATIST PROPAGANDA

[Translation]

Mr. Auguste Choquette (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, it is a very serious question that I should like to submit to the house. It concerns the Quebec T.V. station CFCM which rented weekly programs to separatist parties and also authorized adepts of the RIN and other movements such as the Phalange, to use its facilities to speak in abusive language.

Of course, I would not want this admonishment to be considered as a direct attack on a personal friend, Mr. Jean Pouliot, a very brilliant man, who is director of the Quebec division and also the son of Dr. Adrien Pouliot, one of the great pioneers of French broadcasting in western Canada.

However, a very serious problem arises. One party, namely the RIN, intends to run candidates at the next election and, for that reason, it proposes to use television to make its views known.

Section 10 of the Broadcasting Act stipulates that programs must be essentially Canadian. This means that all programs must be essentially Canadian. But American programs are allowed. There is nothing against so-called Canadian programs. This section does not prohibit such programs over a fundamentally Canadian network. But it is exaggerated to allow anti-Canadian programs, programs that split the Canadian confederation, and I feel that this is a flagrant violation of section 10 of the Broadcasting Act.

Because we must avoid at any cost throwing our country into another political crisis when demagogues will have the opportunity to be heard as much as they want, to condemn confederation and try to destroy Canada.

Such a thing must be prevented. That is why I ask tonight the minister or his representative to be kind enough to call the attention of the board of broadcast governors to that problem, so that it will investigate, consider and listen to the recording of the speeches which were delivered in order to determine the extent to which the law was violated and what kind of sanctions can be imposed.

Mr. Speaker, I insist. Everywhere we hear talk of separatism. Mayor Jean Drapeau and the minister of natural resources of Quebec speak of two associated states; the St. Jean Baptiste societies condemn co-operative federalism. We wonder where we are going with all that.

We must avoid, at all cost, another phenomenon like Caouette, emerging in this country, because I even say I am sure that there are separatist members sitting in this house. We must prevent such a phenomenon, such an attack against confederation, and we must avoid such a political upheaval.

I will point out, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Gilbert Rondeau (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, on a point of order—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. Has the hon. member for Lotbinière completed his remarks?

Mr. Choquette: No, Mr. Speaker. I stopped because of the point of order being raised. However, I wish to continue my remarks. I would ask the hon. member to be kind enough—

Mr. Rondeau: Mr. Speaker, I raised a point of order.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. Is the hon. member for Shefford rising on a point of order?

Mr. Rondeau: Yes, Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. The hon. member referred to the RIN and to separatism.

I would ask him to keep to his text and to the question under consideration because right now he is the best example of a demagogue one could imagine.

Mr. Choquette: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member's argument is both childish and stupid.

I say we must prevent another upheaval and the appearance of another Caouette. We must prevent government instability and accuse separatists of openly flouting the law when they condemn confederation and call for its dissolution. We are threatened and that is what I want to prevent.

I would ask the minister or his representative to have an investigation carried out in connection with those programs and to ensure that the latter are no longer carried over the Canadian network. We have a right to insist on the application of section 10. We have a right to insist on a basically Canadian network.

[Text]

Mr. J. B. Stewart (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I should not like anybody to be misled by the interpretation of section 10 of the Broadcasting Act adopted inadvertently by the hon. member. That section does not refer to the political views enunciated by speakers on Canadian radio or Canadian television. Now that the hon. member for Lotbinière (Mr. Choquette) has identified for the house the particular program and the particular station that has caused him distress, I can assure him that his comments will be drawn to the attention of the board of broadcast governors, which board has the right to review the log of a station to ascertain if its policy with respect to equal treatment for political and controversial views is being respected. I say this merely to reassure the hon. member, and not to imply in the slightest degree that the program in question, which I did not see, was unfortunate.

Motion agreed to and the house adjourned at 10.27 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Tuesday, June 9, 1964

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

LORD BEAVERBROOK

TRIBUTES ON PASSING OF EMINENT CANADIAN

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I hope the house will permit me, in the Prime Minister's name, to do something which is rather unusual, about a man who was certainly unusual. I refer to the death of which we learned, in some cases, just a few moments ago, of Lord Beaverbrook who, like many a native of Ontario, was perhaps rather more attached to another part of Canada than to his native province, but whose attachment to Canada throughout his long and remarkable life gives us a reason for referring to his death after that long and very full life.

All of us recall, either in our own experience or as students of what has happened in the past, the great services Lord Beaverbrook rendered to the cause of his adopted country, to the cause of his native country and to the cause of freedom in two world wars.

We also acknowledge that he was one of the foremost native sons of our country, and I am sure we would all wish to express our sympathy to Lady Beaverbrook and all members of the Aitken family.

Mr. J. Chester MacRae (York-Sunbury): The death of Lord Beaverbrook will come as a great shock to all Canadians, but especially to those of us who live in the province of New Brunswick. Lord Beaverbrook was one of four men who came from that little province and who made their mark—Bonar Law, R. B. Bennett, James Dunn and himself. At one time three of them studied in the same small law office in Chatham, N.B.

For more than 30 years his benefactions to his native province were many, especially in the fields of education and the performing arts. Recently he built in the city of Fredericton a new theatre, which has not yet been officially opened. Hon. members will, of course, be aware of the Beaverbrook art gallery which he established. Lord Beaverbrook was especially interested in the field of education for more than 35 years, during which time Beaverbrook scholarships helped hundreds of young men and women to better lives. I join with all other hon. members in paying tribute to the memory of this great man.

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Queens): As a former professor at the University of New Brunswick who knew and appreciate the benefactions of Lord Beaverbrook, and as one whose ancestors were, a long way back, those of Lord Beaverbrook—I remember talking to him a number of years ago and he said that at one election campaign some of his political opponents said that this man's forebears were poor peasants from the isles of Mull and Ulva—so were mine—I should like to join in the tribute being paid today.

I should like to say, as an educationist, how much all of us who are interested in education appreciate what Lord Beaverbrook did himself in this field, and how by his example he prompted other men of largesse to do the same for all good causes, the first of which was education. I join with the Minister of Transport and my hon. friend from York-Sunbury in mourning today a great Canadian who was always prepared to support great causes vigorously, effectively and courageously, whether they were popular or not. I should like to add my voice to those of the two members of the house who have preceded me in expressing my regret at the loss of a great Canadian, a great friend of scholarship and, above all, a great friend of the maritimes.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): The members of this party would like to associate themselves with those who have paid tribute to the late Lord Beaverbrook. He was a man who made a great impact on the business life of Canada and upon the world of journalism in the United Kingdom. It is to his credit that he never lost his interest in Canada and that he spent much of his wealth in furthering education and learning in the province of New Brunswick, where his heart always remained.

He leaves behind him a recollection in the minds of all who knew of him of a man whose colourful and flamboyant career in the field of journalism left an indelible mark on that profession. We join with those who have spoken in extending our deepest sympathy to his family.

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): I join with other members of this house who have spoken regarding the passing of Lord Beaverbrook.

He was a man dedicated to his convictions, courageous and charitable in a truly Canadian way; a man who was not always right, but a man brave enough to fight for what he thought to be right.

As one who knew him as a personal friend, I count his passing as a great loss. It is, indeed, a loss to Canada, to the commonwealth and to the world which will surely not soon be forgotten.

Hon. J. R. Nicholson (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, as a native son of Newcastle, New Brunswick; as one who studied law in the same office to which reference has been made, in Chatham, New Brunswick, and in fact used the same desk and the same chair; as one who entered the university on a Max Aitken scholarship before there was a Lord Beaverbrook; as one who received a cablegram from his lordship within the last 72 hours expressing appreciation for a message I sent him on his birthday, I would like to associate myself with other hon. members of the house in their tributes to this great Canadian.

SUPPLEMENTARY ESTIMATES, 1964-65

A message from His Excellency the Governor General transmitting supplementary estimates A for the financial year ending March 31, 1965, was presented by Hon. G. J. McIlraith (President of the Privy Council), read by Mr. Speaker to the house, and referred to the committee of supply.

VACANCY

Mr. Speaker: I have the honour to inform the house that I have received a communication notifying me that a vacancy has occurred in the representation, namely Sherwood Hayes Rideout, Esq., member for the electoral district of Westmorland, by decease. Accordingly I have addressed my warrant to the chief electoral officer for the issue of a new writ of election for the said electoral district.

[Mr. Douglas.]

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

CYPRUS—REPORTED DANGER OF OUTBREAK OF WAR

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Secretary of State for External Affairs I am wondering to whom to direct a question respecting the situation in Cyprus, in particular the observation made by a Greek official that that country is in imminent danger of an outbreak of war. I hope there is some minister here today who will be able to enlighten the house in this regard.

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, the situation is being very closely watched by the government, and I would be pleased to take this question as notice so that a fuller reply may be given by the Secretary of State for External Affairs when he is in his place.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, is the minister able to tell the house whether, in view of Cyprus being one of the countries within the commonwealth, the Canadian government has brought to the attention of President Makarios its strong feelings against his utterances, which were reported to have been that assistance would not be unwelcome from the U.S.S.R.?

Mr. Hellyer: Mr. Speaker, I am sure the Secretary of State for External Affairs, on behalf of the government, has taken all reasonable steps to maintain peace in that strife-torn island and to exercise his responsibility in a most efficient fashion.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, the question of efficiency and the like does not enter into an occasion as serious as this. I ask the minister this. Has the Canadian government, as a government which has made a great contribution to Cyprus in the peace keeping force, made clear to President Makarios its strong feelings at his reported statement—and I am going to keep within the limits of parliamentary speech—that he would be calling upon the U.S.S.R. or would welcome the U.S.S.R. to settle a matter which is particularly dangerous at this time?

Mr. Hellyer: Mr. Speaker, on the specifics of the question I think it would be wise to leave it until the Secretary of State for External Affairs, who has been conducting the negotiations on behalf of the government, is in his place and is able to give a full reply.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Will he be here today?

Mr. Hellyer: Yes, he may be here later. He is out at the airport now meeting the German chancellor, but he will be back as soon as it is reasonably possible for him to do so.

[Translation]

Mr. Marcel Lessard (Lake St. John): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of National Defence whether his department, in view of present developments in Cyprus, has taken special steps to ensure the safe withdrawal of our Canadian citizens from the island should an open conflict occur between Turks and Greeks?

[Text]

Mr. Hellyer: Mr. Speaker, the department has tried to take all possible contingencies into consideration.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I understand the minister of defence is planning to visit Cyprus fairly soon. In view of the concern which the Canadian people feel about the situation in Cyprus, has the minister given any thought to the idea of a small non-partisan committee, such as the steering committee of the defence committee, visiting Cyprus, with the double intent of helping to boost the morale of the Canadian forces who are there in knowing that members of parliament are interested in the service they are performing, and also of allaying any fears which the Canadian public may have that the status of the U.N. force is not being fully recognized?

Mr. Hellyer: I can assure the hon. gentleman, Mr. Speaker, that the morale of the Canadian troops serving in Cyprus is high. In respect of the suggestion that a small group of parliamentarians visit the island, we will be glad to take that into consideration.

CONGO—REPORTED REQUEST FOR CANADIAN MILITARY ASSISTANCE

On the orders of the day:

Hon. D. S. Harkness (Calgary North): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of National Defence. Did the government of the Congo request direct military assistance from Canada? If so, what form of assistance was requested, and what answer was given to the Congolese government?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, as some hon. gentlemen know, the Congolese originally asked the United Nations to arrange a training program. When the secretary general, after consulting the Congo advisory committee, replied in the negative, Prime Minister Adoula asked five countries to give training assistance on a bilateral basis. Those countries were Belgium, Italy, Israel, Canada and Norway.

Prolonged consultations were held with the Department of National Defence about the Congolese request. It was decided there were not sufficient instructors available in the Canadian army to undertake the task of training. It was felt also it would not be appropriate to undertake training assistance outside the United Nations when the request had come to and through the United Nations. It was for that reason decided not to accede to the request.

Mr. Harkness: Mr. Speaker, the minister did not answer one part of the questions concerning what type of assistance was requested.

Mr. Hellyer: It was understood the Congolese authorities were primarily interested in Canadian assistance in the field of military communications training.

IMMIGRATION

JOHN THOMADAKIS—OPPORTUNITY TO OBTAIN LEGAL COUNSEL

On the orders of the day:

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration. Yesterday I raised the question of the treatment of a Greek seaman, Mr. Thomadakis. I should like to ask the minister how he can square his statement yesterday that Mr. Thomadakis was informed of his right to be represented by a lawyer and that Thomadakis was satisfied with the qualifications of the interpreter who works for the department, with Mr. Thomadakis' habeas corpus application filed with the Ontario supreme court in which he states:

> On April 9, 1964 I got a letter saying I would go to court next day. I had not a chance to get in touch with anyone as the letter came in afternoon and jail regulations say I must put in requests in the morning.

Mr. Thomadakis' application further states:

> No one told about legal aid....I went to court on April 10 (38 days after my arrest) for the first time. I had no lawyer and interpreter for immigration told me to plead guilty and I go home. If I make trouble and plead not guilty I go back to jail until the case comes up again and maybe I get a heavy prison sentence.

This is a pretty serious allegation. I wonder whether the minister can make any statement on it.

[Translation]

Hon. René Tremblay (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the case is now before the court. Moreover, I think that the allegations just made by the hon. member are part of a document which has just been submitted to an Ontario court. I wonder if it would be in order for the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration to comment on that matter at this stage of the proceedings.

[Text]

Mr. Orlikow: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I should like to explain to the house that the hon. member came to my office this morning to discuss this question. I thought it was a very serious matter in principle and that if he would ask a question, even if it was slightly longer than usual, he would be justified in the circumstances rather than trying to adjourn the house under standing order 26 or raising a question of privilege.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the minister this question. If he feels he cannot make a public statement, will he at least investigate what kind of advice Mr. Thomadakis was given by the interpreter, and whether he was in fact informed that he could get free legal aid?

[Translation]

Mr. Tremblay: Mr. Speaker, I made a statement in the house about this and I think the answer was given at that time.

[Text]

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. When the minister is looking into this particular case will he also look at the much wider question which has been raised by legal aid lawyer Allan Mintz, who has made the statement that he visited the Don jail and that he finds there are 20 prisoners there, all of whom have informed him they were never told at any time that they were entitled to legal counsel? The names of ten of them are listed, and he is investigating nine others he has found are in Don jail. Could the minister give us a report on this matter at an early date?

[Translation]

Mr. Tremblay: Mr. Speaker, I am informed by officials of my department that, in every case, detained persons were told that they could secure legal counsel to present their case.

As for the report purporting that my statement to the house was contradictory in so far as the number of persons detained under the Immigration Act and the number of persons imprisoned in the Don jail in Toronto are concerned, I wish to point out to the house that, when I mentioned those cases, I was referring to detained persons awaiting deportation and not at all to those who had sentences to serve and who, therefore, are imprisoned for relatively longer periods according to sentences passed by the court.

[Text]

Mr. Orlikow: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Would the minister consider the suggestion made the last time we discussed this matter and which we make again today, that he arrange to have inquiries made about this very serious matter by people outside of his department, who can be somewhat more impartial than the officials who are involved in these cases?

[Translation]

Mr. Tremblay: I have full confidence in the officials of my department in that connection.

[Text]

Mr. Peters: Nobody else has. It's about time you guys over there smartened up or you won't be there long.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): I should like to direct a question to the minister of immigration and ask him this. In view of the very serious allegations that have been made against conditions in his department which, if true, ought not to exist, will he not, in the public interest, have an investigation made into these questions? I suggest a one man royal commission. It would not take long. The minister smiles about protecting the subject in this way. I am very surprised to see him smiling and sneering.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I ask him this. Does the liberty of the subject mean nothing to him? If it does, will he appoint a one man commission, perhaps a member of the bar? There will be a lot of them available to look into this and ascertain if this type of tyranny does exist.

Some hon. Members: Answer.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I ask the minister, is this the answer he gives when the liberty of the subject is at stake; silence?

[Translation]

Mr. Tremblay: Mr. Speaker, the principle of the freedom of individuals and of Canadians is respected by every official of my department, and I do not need any outsider to inquire on that matter. It would be an insinuation that we, in my department, are not respecting that principle. All the officials of my department are guided by this principle. Besides, every time a mistake is made I call it to the attention of my senior officials, as I am responsible for this department.

NORTHERN AFFAIRS

QUEBEC—ADMINISTRATION OF ESKIMO AFFAIRS

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Gilles Grégoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources?

Is the Quebec department of natural resources being approached with a view to renewing negotiations on the transfer of the administration of Eskimo affairs?

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. It seems to me that this question has been asked during the last two days. I do not believe there is that pressing urgency that requires a detailed answer at the moment. Would the hon. member put it on the order paper?

[Translation]

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question on the same subject.

Would the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources inform the house whether the Minister of Justice is now in Quebec to carry on negotiations on behalf of the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources?

[Later:]

Mr. Speaker, I am sorry to extend the question period but, in my opinion, my question would allow the house to be informed first of a fact, before it appears in the newspapers of the country.

Inquiries of the Ministry

I direct my question to the Acting Prime Minister. Can the minister tell us whether it is true that the Minister of Justice (Mr. Favreau) went to Quebec today in order to resume negotiations with the province of Quebec regarding the transfer of the Eskimo administration?

[Text]

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I have no idea why the Minister of Justice is in Quebec. I was in Winnipeg when he left, and I did not ask him. I suggest that the hon. member wait until the minister comes back and then ask him.

AIRPORTS

BRITISH COLUMBIA—REPORTED STATEMENT AS TO HAZARDOUS CONDITIONS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I wish to transport a very serious question to the Minister of Transport. In view of the very serious statements made by the minister of highways in British Columbia to the effect that numerous airports in British Columbia which come under the minister's jurisdiction are in a hazardous condition and unsafe, has he had this question looked into? This is a serious charge which a minister of the crown in British Columbia makes.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): I did notice the statement, sir, and I have caused an inquiry to be made into it. I hope it is not based on that minister's piloting of planes if it is anything like his driving of cars.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

REASON FOR RETIREMENT OF SENIOR OFFICER

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Guy Marcoux (Quebec-Montmorency): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Associate Minister of National Defence?

Is the decision taken by General Bernatchez to resign from the armed forces related directly or indirectly to the minister's decision to reduce the army establishment?

Hon Lucien Cardin (Associate Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, if my hon. friend read yesterday's press release, he knows the reasons which brought about General Bernatchez's retirement.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): Mr. Speaker, may I ask a supplementary question?

Could the minister tell the house what position had been offered to General Bernatchez?

Mr. Cardin: As General Bernatchez refused the offer, I do not think it would be fair to the person who will accept the position to make this information known to the public.

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. I think the house is entitled to know—

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: Order. There is no question of privilege.

[Translation]

Mr. Pigeon: That is discrimination. Mr. Speaker, may I deal with that question after ten o'clock?

[Text]

INQUIRIES FOR RETURNS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. B. Stewart (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State): Yesterday the hon. member for Grey-Bruce asked that a list be tabled showing the number of returns still to be made from the last session and this session. With the permission of the house I should like now to table such a list. This list will show one return outstanding from the last session and 26 outstanding from this session, a session in which 119 orders for returns have been made.

Mr. Speaker: Does the house give consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

TRADE

TARIFF CONCESSIONS TO AUTOMOBILE FACTORIES LOCATING IN QUEBEC

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Léon Balcer (Three Rivers): I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Finance. I wonder if the minister can state whether the government has reached a decision on tariff concessions to be made to the Renault and Peugeot car manufacturers so they can establish themselves in Quebec?

Hon. Walter L. Gordon (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, no firm proposal has been received upon which the government could take a decision. Any proposal that may be received will be given careful and sympathetic consideration.

Mr. Balcer: May I ask a supplementary question. Can the minister tell us whether he or the government has received any representations from the Quebec government on this matter?

Mr. Gordon: I would be glad to take that question as notice, Mr. Speaker, but I repeat that the government has received no specific proposal.

[Translation]

Mr. Gilles Grégoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Finance. Can he tell us whether his department would be ready to give French automobile firms the same tariff reductions as those granted to the Volvo company which established itself in Nova Scotia?

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. This question, it seems to me, is out of order.

THE MINISTRY

APPOINTMENT OF EXECUTIVE ASSISTANTS IN HOME RIDINGS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State. In view of the recent order in council which authorizes the appointment of civil servants to the personal staff of certain cabinet ministers to serve in their home ridings, could the minister explain on what basis such appointments were made?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of National Defence): I am sorry, Mr. Speaker, I was engaged in—

Mr. Starr: If the cap fits wear it.

Mr. Thompson: If the Secretary of State is unable to answer the question, could the President of the Privy Council answer it?

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I will certainly look into the question and see what answer can be brought forward.

Some hon. Members: The truth.

Mr. McIlraith: The question contains certain allegations of fact, and I am certainly not prepared to admit those allegations without examination.

[Later:]

Mr. Terry Nugent (Edmonton-Strathcona): I have a question for the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration. As the minister has just seen fit to appoint a special assistant to work in his riding, I wonder if he can tell the house whether there was ever before an office of the Department of Citizenship and Immigration in Baie des Sables; and since this man is to be paid $7,500 by the taxpayers of Canada, can the hon. gentleman tell the house what job he is going to carry out?

Mr. Speaker: I am not sure whether this question is in order. In any event, would the hon. member kindly put it on the order paper.

Mr. Nugent: The hon. member for Red Deer has already asked a question of the President of the Privy Council along these lines, and this is a specific question on the same subject. I intended to ask the Minister of National Health and Welfare a further specific question, both of which would provide the basis—

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member knows there are other means of getting this information.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

POSSIBILITY OF CHANGE IN HOUSE LEADERSHIP

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Acting Prime Minister, who I take it is the Minister of Transport, whether the announcement of the Minister of Justice last night that he was apparently being relieved as house leader, or wanted to be relieved, has any foundation in fact.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I do not know whether the right hon. gentleman, who I believe is a greater amateur with respect to television than I, saw the program last night, but I did happen to see it and I heard what the Minister of Justice said. He was asked whether it was possible for him to carry on for any length of time with the multifarious duties he has undertaken; and he did indicate, as I listened to it, that he was considering asking the Prime Minister, if at a convenient time he might be relieved of the position of house leader.

I can understand his feelings in that regard because I shared them not very long ago, but of course this is a matter between my hon. friend the Minister of Justice and my right hon. friend the Prime Minister, on which I would not presume to give an answer.

CANADIAN FLAG

PROCEDURE RESPECTING CONSIDERATION OF RESOLUTION

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): The hon. gentleman having spoken with that voice of experience that applies to all departments, may I ask him as Acting Prime Minister, and one experienced as house leader, whether there is any foundation for a statement made by an hon. member of another place that the government's intention is to proceed on Thursday with the flags resolution and then, after discussion for one day, to postpone further discussion—indeed, almost to leave the matter in cold storage.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, notwithstanding the vast experience I have had in many fields, of course I have had nothing like the experience of the right hon. gentleman. I have never been prime minister, and I imagine any prime minister would realize that, in this house, we do not debate the proceedings in another place.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I did not say it was in the other place. I said it was said by an hon. member belonging to another place. I now ask the minister, is it a fact that the government intends to go ahead for one day and then take no further action for several months on the flags resolution?

Mr. Pickersgill: That is a supposition, and I am very glad the right hon. gentleman did not deny himself the privilege of his usual flag question for the day.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I am trying to find out if the government is going to put its flag up to the mast, or pull it down even before it has been put up.

Mr. Pickersgill: Well, it is not going to fly it at half mast, as the right hon. gentleman did in this country for six years.

[Translation]

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): Mr. Speaker, in order to please members on the government side I wish to ask the Acting Prime Minister whether the government drew its inspiration from the proposal made to the house, on March 21, 1946, by Mr. Bona Arsenault, a member of parliament at that time, in which he suggested two flags, that is the union jack and the maple leaves?

[Text]

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, I congratulate the hon. gentleman on his futile researches.

Mr. Pigeon: As a supplementary question, I ask the Minister of Transport if Mr. Smallwood knows something about that.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Nicolet-Yamaska.

[Translation]

Mr. Clément Vincent (Nicolet-Yamaska): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Transport. Could he tell us whether resolutions 44 and 45 listed on the order paper today will meet a fate similar to that of the resolution concerning the appointment of an eastern and western minister of agriculture, which stood for eight months on the order paper last year and was never considered?

[Text]

[Later:]

Mr. H. Russell MacEwan (Pictou): I have a question for the Minister of Transport. In view of the lack of exact information as to when the flag resolution will come before the house, I wonder whether the hon. gentleman has yet prevailed upon the Prime Minister and the cabinet to take away the two-flag resolution and replace it with the three-flag resolution for which he expressed a preference—

Mr. Speaker: Order. This question is out of order.

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT

WINNIPEG—POSSIBLE USE OF MAILS TO DEFRAUD

On the orders of the day:

Hon. J. R. Nicholson (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, on May 5—

An hon. Member: Over a month ago.

Mr. Nicholson: —the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre inquired about a possible fraudulent use of the mails by a finance company in Winnipeg, which allegedly resulted in severe financial losses to a victim. I thank the hon. gentleman for having sent me a copy of the newspaper in question which gave him the information.

[Mr. Pigeon.]

I have looked into it, and I might say that a month has not elapsed, because I communicated with the hon. gentleman within two weeks and advised him what was being done. I believe that the important consideration in this case, based on the information I have received, does not lie in the mailing of the circular as referred to in the newspaper article. Rather it arises out of a series of conversations that took place between representatives of the organization in question, the First Financial Federation, and one Benjamin Ivison, the victim, and transactions did take place as a result of these interviews rather than as a result of the use of the mails.

No action could be initiated by the Post Office Department with regard to an alleged misuse of the mail unless we were in a position to prove that the transactions arose out of the use of the mails rather than a personal interview. As a result we have not been able to take action. I have been informed, and this information has been passed on to my hon. friend the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, that the attorney general of the province of Ontario, whose responsibility it is, is looking into the matter to determine whether any action can possibly be considered against the firm or its representatives.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I assume the reference was to the attorney general of Manitoba, but that was not my point in rising at this moment. Was it not established that the victim in this case received his first invitation to approach this firm through the mails?

Mr. Nicholson: That is not my information, Mr. Speaker.

INQUIRY AS TO POSSIBLE CHANGES IN POSTAL RATES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. W. Prittie (Burnaby-Richmond): I realize that Your Honour pointed out that the question period was very long, but I have been trying to get the floor for 45 minutes. I have a question for the Postmaster General concerning his statement on postal rates at Charlottetown. Does this mean that the government intends to drop its plans to increase local first class rates and increase the rates of second and third class mail?

Hon. J. R. Nicholson (Postmaster General): No, Mr. Speaker.

FLOODS

YUKON—INQUIRY AS TO STEPS TO MEET SITUATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. M. J. Moreau (York-Scarborough): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources. In view of the very serious flood conditions in Mayo and elsewhere in the Yukon, could the minister inform the house of any action the officers of his department might be taking, or are taking in this regard?

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): I thank the hon. member for having asked this question, because I am quite certain that if the hon. member for Yukon had been in the house today he would have asked it.

An hon. Member: He is out looking at the floods.

Mr. Laing: If he is on the way there, then I commend him. The circumstances of the flood at Mayo are that this is an occurrence not unusual in the area but of more than usual severity this year. I have been talking within the last hour to the commissioner of the Yukon, Mr. Gordon Cameron, and find that he not only took immediate action but that he took action beforehand inasmuch as he set several men to repairing dikes a number of days before the occurrence.

Certain people have been moved out. Mr. McIntyre, our mining recorder in the area, is in complete charge and he has authority to make all commitments and to spend funds which are necessary for the protection of the people and to relieve the situation as quickly as possible.

WATERTON LAKES PARK—STEPS TO ALLEVIATE SITUATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. D. R. Gundlock (Lethbridge): I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources. It arises from reports I have received only in the last hour or two by long distance telephone of disastrous flood conditions in Waterton Lakes national park. This is, I believe, the first serious flood in more than 50 years. Would the minister indicate what steps his department intends to take to alleviate this disaster?

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): I have been talking within the past hour to Mr. B. I. M. Strong, our regional supervisor in Calgary, who reports that this flood has occurred as the result of an unprecedented downpour of more than seven inches in 24 hours.

An hon. Member: You prayed for rain too hard.

Mr. Laing: We might possibly get a transfer made. We are faced with a very serious overflowing of Cameron creek, and considerable damage has been done. Mr. Strong has been in touch with our superintendent there, Mr. F. C. Browning, who is now accompanied, and has been since yesterday, by Mr. Tom Fenton, the regional engineer of my department and by the regional engineer of the Department of Public Works.

It would appear that considerable damage has been done to bridges and, again, Mr. Browning has been authorized to make whatever commitments are required to take care of the situation. Happily the crisis is now over, and there has been a reduction in the water level by some 10 inches in the last four hours.

Mr. Gundlock: Would the minister indicate whether funds will be available to help those residents and businessmen who suffered as a result of flood damage?

Mr. Laing: I do not wish to make any comment on that until an assessment has been made of private damage.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

COMPARABLE EXPENDITURES ON ENGLISH AND FRENCH TALENT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. D. M. Fisher (Port Arthur): I wish to ask the Secretary of State if he can find out from the C.B.C. whether the corporation plans to make any kind of public reply or response to the claim put forward by the association of Canadian television and radio artists that $4 million more a year is being spent by the C.B.C. on French talent than on English talent.

Mr. Speaker: Order. This is a question for the order paper.

Mr. Fisher: I suggest that you look at the question, Mr. Speaker. I was not asking for specific information; I was asking if the minister could get a reply. I have not been able to get one from the C.B.C. on this matter.

Hon. Maurice Lamontagne (Secretary of State): I will certainly make an investigation and give a reply. In the meantime, I understand that the C.B.C. itself intends to issue a statement, or perhaps has already done so.

CONSUMER CREDIT

SALARIES OF ADVISERS TO JOINT COMMITTEE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. A. D. Hales (Wellington South): I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Finance. Has the minister authorized the payment of salaries to the extent of $250 per day and $100 per day respectively to Mr. John J. Urie, a lawyer, and Mr. Jacques L'Heureux, an accountant, who are acting as advisers to the joint committee on consumer credit?

Mr. Speaker: It does seem to me that this question is important but not so pressing as to require an immediate answer.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Speaker: I wonder if the hon. member would put it on the order paper.

Mr. Hales: With all due respect, I think this is a matter of great interest at the moment. I think we should know, before we proceed, whether it is correct.

Hon. Walter L. Gordon (Minister of Finance): I will be glad to look into the situation and report tomorrow.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

INQUIRY AS TO STEPS TO DEAL WITH UNEMPLOYMENT

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Marcel Lessard (Lake St. John): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Labour. Following a certain statement to the effect that he must reconsider unemployment problems and measures to cope with them, is the minister able to inform the house as to the measures he intends to use against unemployment, one of our main antagonists?

Mr. Pigeon: Remove the 11 per cent tax.

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: It seems to me that this question has been asked several times this session. In any event, would the hon. member put it on the order paper.

[Translation]

Mr. Lessard (Lake St. John): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask a supplementary question. This statement was made recently and it appeared in yesterday's newspapers. I believe that it indicates progress in government research to solve unemployment problems. It seems important to me that the members of this house should be informed of such progress, since we have all been waiting a long time for these solutions.

Mr. Pigeon: Remove the 11 per cent tax.

[Text]

LABOUR RELATIONS

LIVING ALLOWANCE OF JUDGES ON CONCILIATION BOARDS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Labour. Can the minister say whether it is true that federally appointed judges serving on conciliation or arbitration boards are now allowed living expenses of up to $100 a day? If so, by what authority are these payments made?

Hon. A J. MacEachen (Minister of Labour): No. My information is that this is not of general application. Such an allowance was made to one particular justice because of the extraordinary demands made on his time and the additional expenses he had to incur. I refer to the conciliation procedure respecting non-operating employees of the railway companies. In that case an additional allowance was made. The regular allowance was paid in all other cases.

Mr. Knowles: Could the minister confirm what is that regular maximum allowance?

Mr. MacEachen: To my knowledge the amount is 60 a day, but if that proves to be incorrect I will advise the house tomorrow.

Mr. Knowles: Would the minister advise the house by what authority even that amount is paid?

Mr. MacEachen: That involves a legal opinion which I would hesitate to give in the house. I understand the background of this question; I know the Auditor General has made some comments on this matter. But it is a legal question.

Mr. Knowles: Is there an order in council providing for this?

Mr. Speaker: May I suggest that these questions be put on the order paper.

TRANSPORT

NEGOTIATIONS RESPECTING SATELLITE TRACKING STATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Robert Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): I have a question for the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate in his dual capacity as Acting Prime Minister and Minister of Transport. I wonder if the hon. gentleman could bring us up to date regarding the negotiations which I hope are still going on between the telecommunications branch of the Department of Transport and the United States weather bureau and the national aeronautic space agency with regard to the proposed Nimbus satellite tracking station, about which we have not heard anything for some time.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): I do not think I could embark on so large a question on the orders of the day.

Mr. Speaker: Exactly.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): With all due deference to you, sir, this is not a new question. Precedent has been set for it. This is both a national question and an international question. I realize the minister may not have everything in his nimble mind at the moment, but even so he could take the question as notice.

Mr. Pickersgill: I believe that under the rules the proper place to give notice of questions is on the order paper.

SOCIAL ASSISTANCE

SASKATCHEWAN—PROPOSED REQUIREMENT THAT RECIPIENTS WORK FOR AID GIVEN

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Guy Marcoux (Quebec-Montmorency): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare.

Since the new minister of welfare in Saskatchewan has decided that people now receiving social assistance and able to work would be assigned to public work projects specially designed for them, could the minister tell us whether her department was consulted by the new welfare minister of Saskatchewan before he announced that decision?

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: Would the hon. member put this question on the order paper. Orders of the day.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Speaker: I wonder if I might point out to hon. members that we have been on questions now for just short of one hour, and the question period seems to be lengthening each day. It is not up to me to stop questions, but on the other hand we do need the co-operation of all hon. members if we are to carry out the business that is before the house.

TELEVISION

REMOVAL OF FREEZE ON PERMITS FOR CABLE TELEVISION SERVICE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Bert Leboe (Cariboo): I would like to ask my second question of the session if you don't mind, Mr. Speaker. I would like to ask the Minister of Transport whether he has anything to offer the house in connection with a report on the lifting of the freeze as far as community antennae and closed circuit television are concerned.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I hope there will be a possibility of making a full statement on that subject before the end of the month.

Mr. A. D. Hales (Wellington South): I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Transport, Mr. Speaker. On May 12 the minister gave that exact answer to me, or at least an answer along that line, and said that within two weeks he would make an announcement.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. gentleman is mistaken. I think I said that I hoped to do so, and hope springs eternal.

EDUCATION

LOANS TO STUDENTS—INQUIRY AS TO LEGISLATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Charles Lamb (Victoria, Ont.): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister, but in his absence I would direct it to the Acting Prime Minister. As I have had many inquiries, and time is important, I would like to ask the Acting Prime Minister if he could say when the loans will be available to students so they can make arrangements for their university enrolment.

Mr. Speaker: I believe this question was asked about two weeks ago. I realize the importance of trying to find out by a certain date, but would the hon. member put his question on the order paper for a detailed reply.

Mr. Lamb: Mr. Speaker, this question has been asked before and we have received no answer. It is a very important question and I would like an answer today if I could get it.

Mr. Pickersgill: Perhaps Your Honour would permit me to answer this question since the hon. gentleman very rarely asks questions and also because there is a great deal of interest in this matter of student loans. The government is making every possible effort, but it will be appreciated that there has to be discussion with the provincial governments. We hope to get the necessary motion on the notice paper just as quickly as we can, and after that it will depend on the house.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Could I ask the minister whether he has now received the consent and acquiescence of all the provincial governments with reference to the legislation which the government has in contemplation in this regard.

Mr. Pickersgill: I understand not, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Douglas: Then could the minister tell us how many provinces are still withholding agreement?

Mr. Pickersgill: I do not think it is a matter of consent at all; it is a matter of the discussion of arrangements which are in their essence rather complicated.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

READINESS OF PROVINCES TO ATTEND CONFERENCE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Robert Simpson (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration whether he is now in a position to answer the question which I posed to him last Thursday in relation to which provinces have signified they are ready to attend the federal-provincial conference on Indian affairs and which provinces are not ready to do so until October.

[Translation]

Hon. René Tremblay (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I shall answer that question tomorrow.

NATIONAL HOUSING ACT

AMENDMENTS RESPECTING RENEWAL PROGRAMS, PUBLIC HOUSING PROJECTS, ETC.

The house resumed, from Monday, June 8, consideration in committee of Bill No. C-102, to amend the National Housing Act, 1954—Mr. Nicholson—Mr. Lamoureux in the chair.

The Chairman: Order. House again in committee of the whole on Bill No. C-102, to amend the National Housing Act, 1954. When the committee rose last evening we were about to consider clause 8 on page 9 of the bill. Shall clause 8 carry?

On clause 8.

[Translation]

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Chairman, I merely wish to ask the minister further information concerning the designated areas mentioned yesterday.

I should like to ask the minister whether he means by designated areas the 35 areas designated by the federal government as depressed areas and whether they will have to be designated by municipalities or the province following agreement with the federal government. Is it one or the other?

The Chairman: Does the question of the hon. member refer to clause 8 of the bill?

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Chairman, it refers to it generally. I meant to ask it last night. I simply want to know who will designate those areas.

[Text]

Mr. Nicholson: Mr. Chairman, in answering the hon. member's question I would say that it does not refer to the 35 designated areas. It refers to areas that may be designated after a municipality has conferred with the province, and in some instances with Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation. This would be done only after the province has approval of the designated area. There could be any number of them within a province.

Mr. Brewin: Mr. Chairman, I want to ask the minister whether in clause 8 of the bill, consideration was given to meeting the request of a committee from the city of Toronto to include day care centres within the realm of housing projects under the act.

Mr. Nicholson: Mr. Chairman, in answering the question put by the hon. gentleman I would say that I explained to the delegation that was here that full consideration had not been given to that particular subject, but that it was an important one and merited serious consideration; that if we had to open up negotiations with all ten provinces we might lose several months' time, and I understood that the delegation were in agreement that we should proceed with the resolution that was on the order paper and give consideration to their proposal perhaps next year or at a later date.

Clause 8 agreed to.

Clauses 9 and 10 agreed to.

On clause 11—Loans for university housing projects.

Mr. Nicholson: Mr. Chairman, in the course of the discussion yesterday I assured the hon. member for Grey-Bruce that I would deal with his question in the clause by clause discussion. If hon. members will look at clause 11 they will see that provision is made for loans to universities, co-operative associations and charitable corporations for the purpose of assisting in the construction of a university housing project or the acquisition of existing buildings.

Answering the hon. member's specific question, technically it is possible for C.M.H.C. to lend money for the purpose he has mentioned, but in view of the continuous demand for the money of C.M.H.C. and the criticisms which have been made in the past in the case of properties which have been acquired with C.M.H.C. funds and allowed to stand idle, I doubt whether too much help will be made available under this section for the purpose suggested by the hon. member.

However, I would point out that, in the same clause in the bill, provision is made for the acquisition of existing buildings to be used for such a purpose. I have had discussions, both before and since the question was asked, about the possibility of universities acquiring existing buildings for such a purpose, using the new provisions of the bill when they become law, and at a later date either remodelling these buildings or replacing them with new ones. In my view that is the only practical way in which this provision is likely to benefit universities at the present time.

Mr. Hales: Is the interest rate spelled out a little later on in the bill; and what percentage can universities borrow on the cost of an existing building?

Mr. Nicholson: The interest rate is dealt with in the act as it now exists. Provision is made in this amending bill, in one of the clauses which were approved last night, to ensure that the rate would be no higher for new undertakings, whether they be university housing projects or homes for senior citizens, than it is under the original act. The rate is flexible. It is tied in with the rate at which the federal government borrows money. But the assurance is given in one of the clauses approved last night that there would be no increase in the rates for any new projects covered by this bill over rates for existing projects.

Mr. Winkler: Mr. Chairman, I appreciate the explanation of the minister, but he was certainly non-commital with regard to the acquisition of lands for the purpose I referred to yesterday. I think the minister realizes, because of the understanding which was inherent in his words, that it is not always possible to budget within a given year or two years with regard to the projected plans of a school or university, a difficulty to which I referred in my remarks last evening. However, I believe that the points I have in mind can be dealt with privately with the minister, since he appears very amenable regarding the jurisdiction of this particular clause, so I will deal with these points on that personal basis.

Clause agreed to.

Clauses 12 and 13 agreed to.

On clause 14.

Mr. Starr: Mr. Chairman, I have a few remarks to make on this clause with respect to the sewage disposal program. This program was initiated for two purposes: one, to provide the facilities which were so lacking in municipalities, and two, to assist in their financing. I am referring to the construction of sewage disposal plants which would help alleviate the pollution of the waters of this country. Originally the intention was that in order to speed up the construction of these sewage disposal plants, a date was set by which a plant had to be completed in order to qualify for the forgiveness clause. I notice that in the amendment on page 15 of the bill the government is prepared to forgive 25 per cent of the moneys advanced up to March 31, 1967 irrespective of whether a plant has been completed. I am wondering what is the thinking behind this. Does the minister not think this might slow down this construction program to the extent that it would be negligible?

Mr. Nicholson: Originally, Mr. Chairman, it was hoped that this forgiveness feature would encourage the municipalities to take advantage of it and thus provide employment. However, experience to date has shown that the utilization of this section is even more important than the incentive to employment at a time when the low employment feature is important. The pollution of water and other matters have now superseded the urgency of providing employment. There are a number of municipalities which are realizing, as the result of the experience of others about which they have heard, that they should take advantage of the facilities, as provided under the act, and rather than chop it off, it is the government's decision that municipalities should be allowed until this date in 1967 to complete such works.

Mr. Starr: In view of the fact that this date is now extended to March 31, 1967, which in fact provides a further three years of opportunity, does the minister not think that since a plant does not necessarily have to be completed to qualify for this forgiveness clause it might in fact retard construction? I am not thinking of the employment aspect here because in fact there is very little labour content, in my estimation, in these plants; but it would help the pollution problem in this country.

Mr. Nicholson: The advice I have received from the experts advising me in the matter is that the Canadian public have become so conscious of the dangers of pollution that that need in itself will take care of the situation. They feel that it is more important to encourage people to use the facilities and provisions of the act to install pollution control and sewage facilities than to chop off loans at the earlier date, or at least to eliminate the forgiveness feature at an earlier date.

Mr. Starr: Is not the minister saying that in accordance with the present provisions this program only is extended to March 31, 1967? In other words, that is the chopping off date in any event.

Mr. Nicholson: That is right.

Mr. Starr: Is the minister saying that the intention of the government, or the intention of the experts in his department, when that date expires, is to extend the time still further?

Mr. Nicholson: No. We have no intention of holding out any hopes that there will be any extension beyond that date. We intend to give adequate publicity to the fact that it is now being extended to 1967, assuming that this bill passes, in the hope that municipalities in every part of Canada will be anxious to take advantage of it, and to take advantage of the forgiveness feature before the extended time expires.

Mr. Hales: Would the minister not agree that there seems to be some overlapping here? The government instituted the municipal loan fund, which itself seems to provide these facilities which are outlined in this provision of the bill. Why is this necessary when use can be made of the municipal loan fund?

Mr. Nicholson: It is quite possible that these facilities could be provided under the municipal loan fund procedures, but Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation have been doing certain work for other agencies of government as well as this particular work since Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation embarked upon a sewage disposal program, and for that limited period, whether it be March 1965 or March 1967, it was felt better to leave it in the hands of an organization which we think has done a very good job for Canadians in years past.

Mr. Hales: I quite agree with the minister, but it does appear that the municipal loan fund is superfluous in this regard.

Mr. Nicholson: As regards sewage, possibly, yes.

Mr. Pugh: In view of the extension of time I wonder whether the minister can tell me how many projects are now actually under construction.

Mr. Nicholson: I cannot answer that, Mr. Chairman, but I will be glad to get the information and see that it is furnished to my hon. friend.

Clause agreed to.

Clauses 15 and 16 agreed to.

Title agreed to.

The Chairman: Shall I report the bill?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Starr: That is an example of how a good minister can get legislation through the house.

Bill reported.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: When shall the said bill be read the third time? Now, by leave?

Some hon. Members: By leave.

Mr. Nicholson moved the third reading of the bill.

Motion agreed to and bill read the third time and passed.

FARM CREDIT ACT

AMENDMENTS INCREASING AUTHORIZED CAPITAL, MAXIMUM LOAN LIMITS, ETC.

The house resumed, from Tuesday, June 2, consideration of the motion of Mr. Hays for the second reading of Bill No. C-100, to amend the Farm Credit Act.

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, I understood that another member adjourned the debate the last time this matter was before the house. However, if he is not prepared to speak at this time I should like to say a few words. There seems to be a feeling that bills have to be passed in a hurry for fear that one may be accused of holding up legislation. However, with the record set by the government of introducing legislation and having to withdraw some of it after scrutiny, I feel I should say a few words at this time.

My first words are of commendation of the farm credit advisers within the department. They have done a fine job with the existing legislation. In the last year some 21,000 would-be applicants consulted with the advisers. Of these some 9,800 completed the forms. Some 3,000 did not complete the forms, but they were either ineligible or were merely seeking some advice in respect of financing. This in itself is an invaluable service to the farming community.

In the few years that the Farm Credit Corporation have been in existence they have made a substantial number of loans. In 1959-60 there were 5,339 loans made. There were 5,597 loans made in 1960-61, 5,885 in 1961-62, 7,438 in 1962-63 and 8,689 in 1963-64. This indicates that there is increasing interest in the availability of loans to farmers. But what is remarkable is that of some 24,000 loans that have been made in the last five years, only eight properties are at present being held by the corporation. This in itself speaks very highly for the farm credit advisers and for the farmers who have obtained these loans.

In the fiscal year 1962-63 some 94.3 per cent of the loans were in good standing. It is understandable that there may perhaps be certain cases where the payments could not be made at the required time because of circumstances that may have arisen. However, a record of that type should commend itself to the house. It arises out of the fact that the legislation makes it quite easy for farmers to repay their loans, and at the same time the legislation performs a great service for the farming community.

As I listened to the Minister of Agriculture when he introduced the bill on June 2, I noted that he said there was some $22 million still available in the fund. This is running fairly close to the line. He also indicated that loans were being made at the rate of about $1 million per day. It would seem, therefore, that as of today there should be some $14 million available in the fund. To me this is reminiscent of the Easter recess that never was, because a similar situation arose with regard to the unemployment insurance fund. In the rush to get the legislation through at that time the government wanted the opposition to close its eyes to some of the weaknesses inherent in the legislation and in the organization and operation of the unemployment insurance fund at the present time.

It is interesting to note that this is the first legislation the Minister of Agriculture may hope to have passd by the house. I can recall other days when one of the suggestions made by those who form the government today was that bold and imaginative legislation would be forthcoming. I fail to see that there is anything of that nature in this instance when the government waits until a few days before the deadline and then introduces legislation in the hope that no opposition members will speak for fear they will be criticized on the ground that they are holding up legislation. I fail to see that there is any imagination when all the minister is doing is doubling the amount of money available in the fund. Not only is he doubling the amount of the fund; he is also increasing the interest rate under this legislation.

I would have thought that the minister would have come forth with something revolutionary, something new, something that the farmers did not even expect from the government. However, he has to rely on amending a piece of legislation that was introduced in 1959. Because it was a new venture in farm credit at that time, naturally certain things came up which could not have been foreseen. Amendments were introduced in 1962. Because the minister now finds himself short of funds and because he wants to make it appear that he is really doing something for the farming community, he introduces an amendment to double the amount of money available in the fund and then claims that he is really doing something for the farmers.

While many may express the hope that this legislation will do a lot for the farming community, I fail to see it from that point of view. My point of view may differ from that of some who have already spoken, but I feel I should point out certain things that will arise as a result of this type of legislation. I have always been one who has believed that credit is essential. Having used it myself, I am a believer that it can be helpful to the farming community. However, one can reach the point of diminishing return.

I asked question No. 981, which was answered by the Department of Agriculture. At this point I should like to incorporate in my remarks the table that the department provided to me in their answer, so that I may refer to it as I go along. If I may have the permission of the house I should like to incorporate this table in Hansard. I have also added to the table figures showing the percentage of loans made under $20,000 and the percentage between $20,000 and $27,500.

Mr. Hays: Where does this report come from?

Mr. Korchinski: It was an answer to question No. 981, supplied by the Department of Agriculture. I am just asking permission of the house to have it incorporated in my speech.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Korchinski: This table shows the number of loans in each of the provinces in certain categories.

[Editor's note: The table above referred to is as follows:]

	Less than $10,000	$10,000 but less than $15,000	$15,000 but less than $20,000		$20,000 to $27,500		Total
British Columbia	58	81	111	71%	105	29%	355
Alberta	576	693	487	86%	287	14%	2043
Saskatchewan	1115	686	359	93%	172	7%	2332
Manitoba	258	193	123	92%	51	8%	625
Ontario	463	555	412	80%	366	20%	1796
Quebec	486	373	225	90%	137	10%	1221
New Brunswick	43	20	10	88%	10	12%	83
Nova Scotia	37	14	8	80%	15	20%	74
Prince Edward Island	113	25	12	97%	5	3%	155
Newfoundland	1	2	—	60%	2	40%	5
National	3150	2642	1747	87%	1150	13%	8689

Mr. Korchinski: From this table, it can be seen that only 13 per cent of the loans that have been taken out have been in the order of $20,000 to $27,500. This means that 87 per cent of those who have taken out loans were quite satisfied with less than $20,000. In my opinion, this indicates that up until now a large group of farmers who have not had economic units have benefited. It seems to me that from now on those farmers who will benefit will be those who have larger holdings. They will benefit at the expense of the smaller farmer.

Perhaps the minister, in drafting this legislation, had in mind the fact that he has had a tremendous success in his farming ventures and he felt there were others in the same category. Perhaps he feels that this is the only answer to the problems of agriculture. I fail to see how this type of legislation will benefit the smaller farmers who, up until now, have not had economic units and who, when they have applied to the farm credit advisers for a loan, have been turned down simply because they did not have an economic unit. There is nothing in these amendments which would take care of that situation. As I have said only 13 per cent of the farmers have taken out loans between $20,000 and $27,500. Even if I were inclined to be generous, I would say that in the future no more than 10 per cent of all loans would be in the category above $20,000 under part II of the act or over $27,500 under part III of the act.

I have another answer here which was provided for me by the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Sharp). This was an answer to question No. 982. If I may, at this point, I should like this answer incorporated in my address, and I should like to refer to it as I am going along. May I have the permission of the house?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Perhaps I should bring to the attention of the hon. member the fact that it is against the general practice and traditions of this house for individual members to table documents or tables of this kind. Perhaps the hon. member might want to read this table into the record and then it would become, ipso facto, a part of the record. On the other hand, in order to save time, it may be that the house would want to consent to the tabling of the document to which the hon. member is referring. However, I think hon. members should be cautioned that, generally speaking, only official documents proffered by ministers of the crown can be tabled. I suggest that we try to follow the practice as much as possible.

Mr. Starr: I should like to speak to this point of order, Mr. Speaker. I think that to expedite proceedings an hon. member should be permitted to incorporate lists of figures in his speech without reading them. I think the house should give permission that they be taken as read. I believe the practice has been to give general agreement to this course.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: That is quite correct, but I thought this word of caution should be given because I feel that, in recent years, perhaps we have been getting away from a practice that goes back many years, as I am advised. Hon. members making speeches in the house should make their own speeches and, as little as possible, quote from articles or newspaper reports or tables of this type. I am in full agreement that it would probably save the time of the house if in this particular case the hon. member were allowed to incorporate this table in his speech rather than read it.

Mr. Korchinski: All I was trying to do was save the time of the house by not reading this table into the record. However, in view of the amount of time that has been taken I might just as well have read it. Since this was just going to form part of my speech, I did not feel it was necessary at this moment to read all these figures. It would save a lot of time if I had permission to incorporate it in my speech.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: This is what I was suggesting, that to save time, if hon. members will agree, the hon. member for Mackenzie be allowed to incorporate these figures as part of his speech.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Korchinski: The following tables show the number of farms by selected size groups, and their average capital value.

[Editor's note: The table above referred to is as follows:]

1. Number of farms by selected size groups, Canada, 1961—

Size group	Number of farms
Under 70 acres	67,183
70-239 acres	204,159
240-399 acres	82,626
400-559 acres	44,764
560-759 acres	31,860
760-1,119 acres	27,642
1,120-1,599 acres	13,091
1,600 acres and over	9,578

2. Average capital value of farms classified by size group, Canada, 1961—

Size group	Average capital value per farm
Under 70 acres	$ 17,052
70-239 acres	20,936
240-399 acres	24,627
400-559 acres	30,037
560-759 acres	37,104
760-1,119 acres	46,758
1,120-1,599 acres	61,911
1,600 acres and over	113,468

It will be noted that according to the 1961 census report there were some 480,000 farms in Canada. There were some 430,000 of these farms with acreages of less than 750 acres. In fact, there were 400,000 farms with acreages of less than 550 acres. Now we come to the average capitalization of farms of 750 acres or less and we find that the average capitalization was $37,000. The minister is increasing the availability of funds by making loans in the order of $40,000 to $55,000 available. If one takes into account the fact that a loan may not exceed 75 per cent of the appraised value, he finds that a farmer will have to have to farm with a capital value of at least $50,000 to $60,000 to take advantage of these amendments. According to the 1961 census table, farms with an average capital value of $61,000 contain 1,120 acres to 1,600 acres. I suggest to the minister that despite the fact he may wish to say he is doing a lot for the farmers, I am suggesting that he may be doing something for those farmers in the higher income group, but he is not really helping out the ones who are in difficulty at the moment. The minister may be able to produce statistics in a few years which will indicate that the average farm income has gone up as a result of an increase in the number of these bigger farms, because the cost of production on these farms will naturally be far less than the cost of production of the average smaller farmer.

However, the minister has not yet solved the problem of the average farmer. It is interesting to note, as I said earlier, that there are some 400,000 farms with less than 550 acres. The average capital value per farm of less than 500 acres was $30,000. At the moment there are provisions making loans available to this type of farmer. I repeat that the minister, in introducing this legislation, is not helping the small farmer. There may be specific types of agriculture that might require this type of legislation. However, I do not want the minister saying in the future that he is doing something for everybody. I think we will find that there will be specialized farm groups who will perhaps require this type of loan. I do not want the minister expanding it to include everybody.

One other thing we will have to guard against in the future is the fact that these larger farms are going to be incorporated. In the last few years, we have heard a considerable amount about vertical integration. I point out that according to the poultry market report for June 5, the price of eggs in Saskatchewan on May 30, 1964, was 14.8 cents per dozen. Why were these eggs sold at this price? It is for the simple reason that some farmers who have gone into egg production in a big way have over-produced, and the end result is that the smaller farmers cannot compete against these bigger producers.

In the field of turkey production those with capital available and who are already established have also gone into it in a big way. I can point to many farmers in my constituency, as I am sure other hon. members can in theirs, who have had up to 1,000 turkeys. If they got $5 per turkey this gave them $5,000 at the end of the year, but this was not $5,000 profit. They had to depend on the sale of their eggs, wheat and other produce to make an adequate living for their families.

Credit may now become available to establish these large farms which the minister has been used to, and which in his experience he has found to be profitable operations. If a farmer has 60,000 turkeys and makes 25 cents on each turkey, he has $15,000 profit, but the return to a man with less than a thousand turkeys is $250, which is very little. He has to have additional income. The minister and the farm credit advisers must take this fact into account when they are making this credit available, so that we will not end up with a group of land barons, a select few owning all land while all the rest have to work for them.

If the minister does this, then he will create another problem. There will be a greater demand for unemployment insurance to be paid to these people, something which the government is not prepared to pay now. The Gill commission did not recommend it. If the government is not prepared to subsidize agricultural produce it will have to take other measures such as providing unemployment insurance. I hope the minister will take note of these remarks because I feel very strongly about this thing.

Another problem which I feel will arise is that land values will increase. If this happens, then those who are already established on economic units will be able to outbid those others who would like to establish themselves on economic units. In other words, they will be quite prepared to take a lower return per unit than those seeking to make their present units economical, and these smaller operators will be forced out of farming.

A practice has been established whereby, for example, if a man wants to purchase land valued at $10,000, the Farm Credit Corporation is prepared to give him the money, but if he makes a deal for land valued at $15,000 he has to put up $5,000 of his own. It is unreasonable to expect a small operator to be able to put up $5,000. The larger operator will, and he will outbid the small farmer who will be driven out of the business; and if he is driven out of the business the government will have to provide a subsidy for him in some other form.

There will have to be a complete review of all existing farm legislation. One point that bothers me is the 5 per cent provision on loans up to $20,000 under part II, and loans up to $27,500 under part III. This is one of the stipulations we fought for and placed on the statute books because we felt it was a fair amount to charge.

You will find that over the years the interest rate will fluctuate, and the amount the corporation might be expected to lose, while it might appear great at the moment, if interest rates go down will not be so great, and in the end will balance up. Now, under the proposed amendment, the charges will be—> —an amount equal to the cost of the corporation of any money borrowed for the purposes of the loan and the expenses of the corporation in respect thereof, including a reasonable reserve against loss.

There are two reasons why I would object to this. I feel this may be a deterrent to small farmers, and I feel that any person who finds it necessary to take a loan of over $20,000 under the new provisions, or over $27,500, may have to carry in his interest charges sufficient for all the losses which may be incurred with respect to loans that were formerly made up to $20,000 and up to $27,500.

If $10 million in loans were outstanding, in order to recover this amount in some cases you would have to charge up to a rate of 10 per cent, and it is estimated that $1 million is lost every year under the provisions as they exist now. If as I believe only 10 per cent of the farmers will be in a position to borrow over $27,500, and if they are to make good this loss, you will have to charge them a rate of over 10 per cent.

Mr. Hays: Perhaps, Mr. Speaker, I should explain this because I think the hon. member is interpreting it wrongly. We say that the first cost up to the present limits is 5 per cent. The cost of operating the corporation and the cost of obtaining money is one thing, and for loans above the existing limits, $20,000 and $27,500, we say they shall be made at an economic rate. That is the price that the government has to pay for money; but the loans will be made with exactly the same conditions as the other loans, and the costs of operating. There are no provisions made, or intended to be made, in an extra amount to take care of losses to the corporation.

Mr. Korchinski: It is not the intention of the bill now before us that any money which may be lost under existing provisions should be recovered under the new provisions?

Mr. Hays: No, this is not the case.

Mr. Korchinski: If that is right, then I have no particular argument with it. We will then still end up with a loss of approximately $1 million a year.

Mr. Hays: We have an operating loss—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: May I be allowed to bring it to the attention of the minister that we have not yet reached the committee stage. Unless it is the desire to have the minister reply to points as they come up, I feel it would make for orderly procedure if he answered these points when he closes the debate.

Mr. Korchinski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I wish to clarify one thing so that I might not persist unduly, if that were not the case.

There is another problem which arises. Apparently, the minister hopes to get the corporation into a position where it will suffer no losses. However, there will still be a loss. If I am correct in assuming that only 10 per cent of the people affected will take loans over and above the amount presently available, there could conceivably be added another 10 per cent to the $1 million presently being lost by the corporation. This, in itself, would amount to $100,000. It seems that to recover a loss of $100,000 we go to a lot of trouble. But this, in itself, is not the point. If the minister feels the royal commission on banking and finance has recommended such action, and it is essential, he may be relying on this recommendation to strengthen his argument. But I say that if this is a first step toward a move which will unjustly penalize farmers, it cannot be supported. I am afraid the minister will say that if interest is not being charged at 7½ per cent, or 7 per cent, or anything above 5 per cent we will lose money. And in a few years he will suggest to the house again that we should withdraw the 5 per cent provision and charge according to the rate which the corporation must pay in order to get it.

I suggest strongly, for this reason, that a first step should not be taken in this direction. I do not want the minister to say at a later date: We have found out we do not have to lose money on the Farm Credit Corporation. The commission on banking and finance told us what was the practice to be followed. If we continue to do this we shall find ourselves in another awkward situation. Someone will want a loan, and will be charged 7 or 8 per cent. In a few years we shall be able to borrow money for less than that. As the minister well knows, interest rates have gone up—from 4½ to 5 per cent to 5½ per cent and so on. If a farmer has agreed to pay interest at 7 per cent and then finds the corporation is able to lend him the money at a lower rate of interest he should be able to recover the amount he is overpaying. I think provision should be made for this, and I do not see any such provision in the bill before us enabling a farmer to recover any funds to which he may rightly be entitled.

I see my time is running out, but there is one other matter with which I should like to deal briefly. It appears there were some 77,000 farm improvement loans taken out last year while there were 8,000 which might be considered long term loans. I think the minister will have to introduce legislation to make provision for an increase in farm improvement loans, because this is an area where I feel availability of credit can do far more good than action in other directions which might tend to create land barons at the expense of small farmers.

[Translation]

Mr. Guy Marcoux (Quebec-Montmorency): Mr. Speaker, I am not an expert in agricultural matters and I will not speak about them very long either.

I wanted to add to the reason you gave for preventing the minister from answering questions addressed to him the fact that he does not occupy his seat now, thus being forbidden to speak. If you examine Bill No. C-100, you will find that beekeeping has been added to the special agricultural fields, which will enable beekeepers to take advantage of the Farm Credit Act.

I am very pleased with this amendment because there are in my riding some well-known beekeepers, and I am convinced that they will be happy to find that they can benefit from the advantages offered by the Farm Credit Act.

As far as the increase in the amounts specified by the legislation is concerned, I believe that the minister tried to sit on the agricultural fence. That is good, very commendable to try it, but I believe that in increasing the amount of the loans, we want to help those who, in theory, should be well off since we include them among the most prosperous farmers. While helping them, at the same time we tell them: You have enough money to pay the additional interest. Therefore, we will lend you the $27,500 and we will charge you for the cost of the loan.

This means that the Farm Credit Act would be no longer a legislation intended to assist the farmers, but simply a measure replacing the banks and other finance companies.

In my opinion, the government should not substitute itself for the banks in such cases. The purpose of the act is to help farmers and if it is felt that farmers who need as much as $40,000 or $55,000 should be helped because they are not rich, then the rate of interest on their loans should not exceed 5 per cent. On the other hand, if some farmers are rich enough to pay more than 5 per cent interest, they should not be allowed to borrow as much as that under the act.

One of the recommendations of the Porter commission on banking deals with the removal of the maximum rate of interest applicable to bank loans so that banks may raise their rates. If an individual borrowed more than $27,500 because he thinks he will be charged about 6 per cent interest on the amount outstanding and if that recommendation of the Porter commission is acted upon by the government, the borrower will find that he is actually paying 10, 12 and 15 per cent interest.

I submit that this provision can lead to difficulties and I would ask the minister to give it full consideration before putting it into practice.

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): I know many people will be very interested in the bill now before us which contains provision for increasing the amount of money which can be made available under the act. However I think there are many who begin to wonder if credit is really being considered in terms of assuring the agricultural future of our nation.

Canada is of course a young nation, and I presume we have much to learn from what has been done elsewhere. In the last 40 or 50 years a problem has been facing other countries which is not dissimilar to that which faces Canada. In Great Britain, over the years, it was felt that the democracy of the nation hinged on the English countryside. However, as the small farms disappeared over the years, democracy was considered to be no less prevalent in that country. France, on the other hand, went to the other extreme. Larger and larger farm units were developed in that country, as we are developing them in Canada, until there was a very large and easily controlled agricultural population. It could also be said that by developing themselves on a family farm scale they were in the process, because of government control, of losing real democracy in the agricultural field.

The United States has also been concerned with this subject and it is interesting to note in a book "Farming and Democracy" by Griswold that the author, speaking of the Truman economic report, states:

> Thus, it completed the definition of a policy that had begun with farmers in general and ended with farmers in particular, that in the beginning had taken the family farm for granted and in the end had made it a specific item of national interest. On this high level it was incorporated in President Truman's economic report of 1947.

The cycle of policy thus concluded sets the United States apart from both England and France. It shows a national concern for agriculture as a state of society, for private property in land, and for family farming as their mainstay, that has simply not existed in England—a concern that played little part in the development of British democracy and almost throttled its development in France.

He goes on to say:

The British experience shows us that it is possible to reduce the farm population to an irreducible minimum, and small, owner-operated family-size farms virtually to extinction, and still have democracy. The French contrast shows us that it is possible to maintain a maximum farm population and carry family farming to its extreme logical conclusion, and all but lose democracy in the bargain.

I believe it is very simple to change the rules and regulations of farm credit, but I think the government certainly has some responsibility in deciding what is to be the basis of agriculture in Canada and just what we are trying to work toward. I believe that the agricultural development of Canada, which is extensive and has been the mainstay of our economy for many years and has probably been the basis of our development, has been and has to be in the future a partnership of three large groups, the farmer and the rural community, the markets and the marketing agencies and their operations, and government itself, because government policies play a great role in where agriculture is going. One might ask why we should discuss this when we are deciding on the extension of credit, but it seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that if we are not willing to take a look at it we are being very unfair to agriculture and we may in effect bankrupt it.

I would like to give an example, Mr. Speaker. If tomorrow a car manufacturer was able to find a credit agency that would grant credit on a new car on a ten year basis, you might think this was a very reasonable way of buying that car. But if you were doing very much travelling as a salesman or in many other fields, you would find the profitable lifetime of that car to be probably only three years. So during the last seven years of the loan you would be paying for a car that had long disappeared, and the problem would arise at least twice following that situation. This applies to farmers in particular. I am sure there are dairy farmers today who, knowing the changes the minister has made in agriculture, will be worried about whether some of the commodities they are producing have remained economic. If the government is going to lend this large amount of money to a farmer in order that he may develop an economic farm unit, the government also has an obligation to take some action in the marketplace and in the direction of the national economy in order to provide some protection for the farmer to whom they have lent money to set up an economic farm unit; that is to say, protection so that this economic farm unit will not be destroyed by their allowance of change in these other two fields.

I suggest this has already happened in vertical integration. The farmer was given an unlimited amount of credit; he was given so much credit that it was only a matter of a year or two before he lost the farm, and in many cases these farms are no longer in operation. This was repeated in the field of poultry farming, in the production of pork, and it has been repeated in regard to many other crops, such as potatoes and, I understand, tobacco in some areas. So vertical integration provided a very large amount of money, too large an amount of money to be economical for the operation and the maintenance of the farm for the farmer who borrowed the money. The government has responsibilities in the field of crop failure which may be general or local. It has a responsibility when it withdraws support prices for a particular commodity, and it has a responsibility when a change takes place in the rural aid development programs. Each of these have a reflection on the ability of the unit to remain an economic farm unit and each makes all the difference between whether or not the borrower of the money under farm credit is able to make a success of his venture.

It seems to me that if the government, the market place and the farmers are not brought together and the matter discussed, a problem is going to develop with regard to many of these farmers that has not been contemplated.

I also read further from this book called "Farming and Democracy". This relates to an incident which took place when the small, non-economic units were being removed to make way for progress, and much more suitable economic units. The book quotes the famous colloquy between one of Steinbeck's Okies and a tractor driver whom he has threatened to shoot for knocking over his buildings and plowing up his land and shows the direction, if not the precise location, in which the blame lies. The conversation is quoted in this way:

"It's not me. There's nothing I can do."

This is the tractor driver talking:

"I'll lose my job if I don't do it.—And look—suppose you kill me? They'll just hang you, but long before you're hung there'll be another guy on the tractor, and he'll bump the house down. You're not killing the right guy".

"That's so", the tenant said. "Who gave you orders? I'll go after him. He's the one to kill".

"You're wrong. He got his orders from the bank. The bank told him—'Clear those people out or it's your job' ".

"Well, there's a president of the bank. There's a board of directors. I'll fill up the magazine of the rifle and go into the bank".

The driver said, "Fellow was telling me the bank gets orders from the east. The orders were, 'Make the land show profit or we'll close you up' ".

"But where does it stop? Who can we shoot...?"

The Okie could not shoot the industrial revolution. He could not shoot our failure to devise a public policy that would put that revolution to the advantage of our whole population. But he could, and did, testify to the fact that, in his case, and the cases of a million or more of his fellows, agriculture by itself had performed no democratic miracles.

The previous speaker mentioned the fact that this may do just what the tractor driver was going to do to the Okie's shack; it may eliminate many of the small farms in the community as increased loans are provided. It would seem to me, Mr. Speaker, that in order to do something about this the minister should suggest that supervisory boards be set up that are, again, made up of three parts: government policy, represented by government representation; the farm problem, represented by the rural agricultural groups, federations, farmers' unions, and so on; and the market place has to be represented, because unless the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Sharp) is going to sell the products we manufacture, we are dependant upon our domestic market, with its rapid fluctuations.

I know that increasing the amount of money that can be borrowed is a very easy way for the minister to make himself popular, and it is probably an easy way for me, speaking in opposing it, to make myself unpopular. I am not really opposing it, because I am sure there is a certain merit in classified cases; but it is very easy to go out and offer somebody a lot of money. Household Finance is doing it every day successfully, at a very high rate of interest, and the people who are borrowing this money know that by doing so they are just putting themselves further into debt.

I think we should guide some of the thinking in this regard. I refer to not only the thinking between the farmer and the advisory board that we now have, but between the agriculturists of Canada and the government, in terms of what we want agriculture to provide Canada.

It is all very nice for us to say, "Maintain the family farm", but this is not maintaining the family farm. A $55,000 loan means a repayment, at the end of 30 years, of well over $125,000; that is what a person will have to pay back. If you look at the statistics for Canada and the amount of money being received in the way of farm income, you will understand that this type of loan will be limited to very few people on an economic basis. Therefore this is not a general policy; it is not going to apply to too many people. The previous speaker also mentioned that 87 per cent of the people receive less than $20,000 in loans; that this was a very satisfactory arrangement for many people. I am not suggesting there should be no extension but I think the government must take some responsibility to provide a loan for those who want it.

I am sure everyone is aware that many of the farmers who want to operate an economic farm unit today, perhaps in the $40,000 or $50,000 class, will not be able to operate that unit, if we provide them with enough money to make the expansion allowed under the terms of this act, unless as an agency we are willing to provide them with managerial training to handle such a large business. Everyone is aware that some small businesses in a small town operate successfully until the boss becomes unaware of the names of his employees and of what is going on. I did some negotiating with one company, and the boss said to me that he did not trust the accountants or any of the people working for him, because he asked them for an inventory check and was told that there were no parts in stock which were not included in the inventory. Yet he told me that he could produce some parts not in the inventory at all. Therefore, in an expansion of this kind one requires managerial training, which I am sure many farmers have not had.

We are not being fair to many of these people, if as a national policy we try to increase the size of the farms to provide a more healthy agricultural economy, unless we provide this type of training; and the government shirks its responsibility in this as in many other fields. An agricultural unit of $100,000 or $150,000 could be made completely uneconomical if tomorrow the government increased the tariff on farm machinery and the farmer had to pay 30 to 35 per cent more on the cost of a combine. If the farmer has economically geared his operation to the costs of today, then obviously the government will play an increasing role in what he does. But we must try to meet rural sociological problems and provide solutions for them.

In offering the farmers more money we are creating a hazard in many areas. I am sure that the government receives more requests for money from people in the lower income groups than from those in the higher income groups. It may not be a good thing, but it it true that some farmers seem to get along with a reported income of $1,000. The majority of farmers in many areas are reporting incomes to the income tax department of around that amount. If that is so, and if these units appear to provide the basis of our rural economy in many areas, I suggest that that minister take a look at the other extreme in considering this matter of credit, and gives some of the farmers in my area who are asking for $2,000 or $3,000 a little more consideration. There is a kind of grand and glorious attitude on the part of many officials that if a farmer wants the maximum they will consider it; but if a farmer is interested in only a minimum amount he obviously has an uneconomical farm unit. I believe there are considerations at both ends of the picture. We want to expand the economic farm unit, and in many areas that unit is some 160 acres whereas in others it is 320. There are many places in western Canada where a unit would not be considered economical unless it exceeded a section of land. Many of my farm friends in western Canada have said that if a unit is not at least three sections it is not sufficiently large enough to carry the capital expenditure for the type of equipment they have on their farms.

The sociological change in rural Canada is a factor in the decision to grant and extend credit. I believe the government has completely failed to give guidance and leadership in this field. It has been said that to grant a large sum of money only means the extension of the principle of vertical integration; that one farmer who has proved competent to have his farm paid up will have enough land to enable him to borrow the maximum amount from the government, and this will enable him to squeeze out all his neighbours because he can outbid them in the marketplace as a result of the money he borrowed under the act. This creates a social problem which the government has a responsibility to meet.

I imagine that the minister has not enough knowledge of the whole subject to understand this particular problem. I imagine it has been very hard for him even to understand some of the problems put to him which contradict the principle of extending credit, particularly at the lower end of the scale. But there are those in the universities of Canada, as there have been in the United States, who have been appointed to commissions to study the problem and have made recommendations not in keeping with the recommendations now being made regarding the extension of large amounts of credit. The Canadian Senate over the years has discussed land use problems and the maintenance of our rural economy. Representations have also been made by other bodies, including this house, to the effect that owing to the distribution of seats this house had a predominantly rural representation. Yet I wonder whether many rural representatives have really considered what the extension of those large amounts of credit has meant to the rural communities. The farm communities themselves are tending to disappear, and in some areas just one or two farmers own a whole township. People nowadays prefer to sell ice cream along the highway on Sundays rather than general hardware, groceries and other commodities in a rural oriented economy.

It is easy for the Liberal party, as was the case in the last election, to offer to extend credit to every Tom, Dick and Harry whether or not it would be of any value to them, to the community or to the nation. But I believe the minister has an obligation to bring in legislation to relate the total development of rural Canada to the credit needs of the nation so that we do not continue to give credit to those who do not really need it, such as the type of person who could put up his own collateral at the bank. We should give more consideration to the little farmer on the back concession who only wants a couple of thousand dollars to buy the farm across the road. It may not be an economical farm unit, but it has probably supported his father and his grandfather, as well as providing for the education of three or four generations of Canadians, and with a small expansion will be able to continue to support a family for some years to come. In my experience very little consideration has been given to this aspect of farm credit.

It seems to me that this is one of the areas in which the Farm Credit Corporation has failed to function to advantage. Some farmers with managerial ability will be able to take advantage of the increase in the maximum amount of loans to $55,000. There are many farmers who, before they borrow $55,000, would be well advised to think about retiring the debt in an organized manner, because I am aware of the fact that without supervision, without the support of a government that is prepared to look 30 years ahead, many of those who will borrow larger sums of money from the Farm Credit Corporation will find themselves in difficulty.

Those who do not realize the vast change in agriculture that will take place in the next few years need only look back 30 years when almost all agricultural work was done with horses. Today the horse is an oddity that is shown at agricultural fairs throughout rural Canada through grants being made to entrepreneurs in other fields to maintain the heavy draft horse breed. I think this indicates the changes that have taken place and it is prophetic of the changes that will take place in the future. Unless the government is now prepared to make known an agricultural policy that will make it clear what the government hopes to get out of agriculture in Canada and what the future for agriculture will be, I and many farmers will interpret the increase in the maximum amount of loan, together with the fact that the minister has tied with this an interest rate in keeping with the full costs rather than the original rate of 5 per cent, to be a trend in the development of rural Canada that is not designed to maintain the family farm and the family farm unit.

Mr. Jack McIntosh (Swift Current-Maple Creek): Mr. Speaker, I have only a very few questions that I wish to ask the minister arising out of his speech on June 2. I know he cannot answer them right away but I would appreciate it if he would take note of the questions on which I seek clarification and answer them when he closes the debate.

First of all I should like to compliment the chairman of the Farm Credit Corporation and his staff upon the excellent work they have done. I can speak from personal knowledge of the officials in my own area. I think they have done a marvellous job, and I think the house will agree that any advancement in the administration of this program must be brought about by means of changes in the act. I am very pleased to see that the minister has taken these requirements into consideration.

[Mr. Peters.]

In the minister's speech the other day he made reference to an economic unit. I should like him to define what he means by an economic unit, and indicate how it is determined. I should also like him to relate that to the reference he made to a family farm. Are an economic unit and the family farm the same thing? I would also ask the minister to say a few words with regard to whether he has given any consideration to the idea that loans should be based on the ability and record of the applicant. At the present time they are based on the security of land. I suggest to the minister that the aspect of security could be covered by the applicant taking out life insurance.

At the present time we find that the difficulty with the Canadian Farm Loan Act is that the present high market value and the conservative agricultural production value reduce the number of qualifying farmers considerably, and to obtain the maximum amount of loan requires a fairly large unit. A farmer operating a large farm cannot obtain a loan, since he already owns what the officials consider is an economic unit, and the smaller farmer cannot obtain a loan large enough to purchase even a quarter section since he has not sufficient land.

I understand that Ontario has had a scheme for a number of years under which a young farmer can apply for a loan from the provincial government. His application is then referred to a board consisting of his neighbours or the municipal authorities in that locality to determine whether this man will be a good risk, and on the basis of their recommendation he is allowed to obtain a loan. I also understand that under this system there have been very few losses in the province of Ontario.

The difficulty that members of parliament encounter with regard to loans from the Farm Credit Corporation is that the officials are hamstrung by the restrictions in the act. This issue has come up time and time again. However, most members know that these applicants are conscientious people with good farming records, but because of the lack of capital they do not have what is considered to be an economic unit. I refer again to that term, "economic unit", because it seems to vary according to localities.

I was very interested in what the hon. member for Mackenzie (Mr. Korchinski) had to say with regard to interest rates. To my mind the proposal in the amendment to the act is discriminatory. I say this because the minister has not actually laid out what the interest rate can be. As I read the legislation it can be based on three different qualifications. It is set forth that the rate will not be more than the interest charged to the corporation, plus the cost of administration and a reasonable reserve against loss. That could vary anywhere from 6 per cent up to 8 or 9 per cent, and that is why I say this provision is discriminatory.

If it is necessary to increase the rate from 5 per cent I think it would be more advisable to set out the rate in the bill. Then there would be no danger of one farmer taking a loan this year and because of these three factors having to pay 8 per cent, and another farmer taking a loan next year and finding that a rate of 6½ per cent will cover the loan on the basis of a period of 30 years.

I should also like to ask the minister what he means when he refers to the interest rate as an economic rate. That is a very elastic phrase. As I said before, economic farm units can vary from locality to locality. Would the same rate apply to loans in Ontario and loans in Saskatchewan? Would there be a different interest rate?

May I call it five o'clock, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Batten): Order. It being five o'clock the house will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely private bills and public bills.

PRIVATE BILLS

SEICHO-NO-IE

Mr. S. Perry Ryan (Spadina) moved the second reading of Bill No. S-23, to incorporate Seicho-No-Ie.

He said: Mr. Speaker, Bill No. S-23 is somewhat unusual in that it seeks to incorporate a religious body of Japanese origin. For that reason my explanation may take a little longer than would otherwise be the case. The religious movement from which this religious body emanated was known as Seicho-No-Ie and was founded in 1930 by Dr. Masaharu Taniguchi, who lived at that time in the town of Sumiyoshi, Japan. Taniguchi was a scholar who was born in Kobe, Japan in 1893. He majored in English literature at Waseda university in Tokyo. When he started Seicho-No-Ie, he was a translator for a subsidiary of an American oil company in Japan.

He was a student of many religious philosophies. It was his aim to seek the truth wherever it may be found. He named the religious body that he founded Seicho-No-Ie, which means in English, "The home of spiritual growth and prosperity" and is sometimes also referred to as "The house of life, wisdom and abundance."

This Bill No. S-23, is in the usual form of a bill incorporating a religious body. It is the first incorporation by the parliament of Canada of a religious body having its origin in Japan. However, there is a precedent for the incorporation of a religious body from another area of the world. In 1949, the parliament of Canada passed a bill which is now chapter 25 of the statutes of that year, to incorporate The National Spiritual Assembly of the Bahá'ís of Canada. This bill was assented to on April 30, 1949.

This organization has a membership of two million people, although it should be noted that all of its members are free to belong to other religious faiths as well, and many do. Japanese religious ideas are somewhat different from those prevailing in Christian countries and one is not tied down in the matter of membership, as is the custom in Canada. Originally, the founder, Taniguchi, was more interested in proclaiming his religious and philosophical ideas rather than in setting up a religious system as such. He started out first by publishing a monthly magazine that he called Seicho-No-Ie.

Taniguchi was influenced by Mary Baker Eddy, Ralph Waldo Emerson, Ernest Holmes and other writers of that group, and he acknowledges openly his debt to them. His ideas on religion resemble the ideas of Christian Science and of the unity school of Christianity. He has, however, made a very distinct contribution to Japanese religious thought by introducing Christian ideas developed in the nineteenth century in the United States into Japan in a form that proved acceptable to Buddhists, Shintoists and other Japanese who would not normally be inclined to subscribe to foreign religious ideas.

In order to get his ideas across to the Japanese public, in addition to this monthly magazine, Taniguchi encouraged visitors to come to his home to consult with him. Eventually he set up regular subscribers meetings, as he called them, in his own home. He then proceeded to give lectures in various centres at the request of people who were sympathetic to his ideas. He developed a form of meditation called Shinsookan, which might be described as a form of prayerful meditation, with the purpose of bringing the individual consciousness of the practitioner in contact with the absolute. The members of this organization regard this approach to religion as analogous to the approach of the mystics of medieval Christianity. This is the way they look at it.

Taniguchi has written several religious poems which may be recited in approximately 20 minutes to half an hour. These have come to be used as texts for common recitation in the study groups and subscribers groups of the religious body. These poems actually summarize Taniguchi's doctrinal position.

Within five or six years after he started his organization Taniguchi added another magazine which was meant more entirely for women, and in a few years more he added a magazine edited for children and for people who were incapable of understanding very difficult Japanese. He also added a magazine for educators, and another which has a strong philosophical orientation.

He has always welcomed people from other religious groups and assured them that they do not have to sever their connections with their family religions. In fact, he has persuaded them to continue holding their funeral and marriage services in the religions to which they belonged before joining his group. In order to get away from the traditional religious atmosphere of Japanese religions, he refused to call his congregation churches, temples or shrines. Instead, he talked about subscriber groups, fellowship groups and branches. As this religious movement grew, he eventually transferred its headquarters to Tokyo.

The leaders of groups are called lecturers, not ministers, priests or anything that would remind one of traditional churches. He was at all times trying to emphasize content rather than form. However, the Japanese ministry of education was at a loss as to how it should consider or treat this organization for administration purposes, and eventually his organization was persuaded to register as a religious body in Japan. Today it is so registered, and it includes shrines within its branches. It accepts donations and it operates as a religious organization in Japan. It is recognized as such, although its earlier spirit of emphasizing content rather than outer form has remained.

Dr. Taniguchi is referred to as the president of the organization. The affairs of the organization are managed by a board of directors, under his chairmanship. The Tokyo head office pretty well controls the entire religious activities which are carried out in Japan, Brazil, Peru, Germany, France, the United Kingdom, Sweden and Canada. There are approximately 1,200 members in Canada with groups in Vancouver, New Westminster, Richmond, Slocan, and Steveston in British Columbia, and others in Hamilton, Montreal and Toronto. The organization is incorporated in California, Japan, Hawaii, Brazil and Mexico. Its main centre in North America is Los Angeles. Its head office, as you will see from section 3 of the bill, will be in Toronto.

A point which will be of interest to all hon. members is that during the last war, when Japanese activities in the United States were carefully watched and controlled, the Seicho-No-Ie organization was permitted to function by the government of that country, and its books were allowed to be published and distributed in normal fashion. I believe this should be some guarantee.

The movement seeks a world of perfect harmony for all men. It is non-denominational. It neither bars nor excludes any true religion, be it Christianity, Judaism, Buddhism, Shintoism or otherwise. In a sense, it may be said to seek to be an umbrella over all true religions. It seeks a world describable as the kingdom of God on earth and endeavours to have man recognize his own perfect and divine nature, and to steep himself with the conviction that he is a child of God.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I have made no great personal study of this religion, and I do not intend to go further into its teachings and characteristics. However, I should like to say that the members of this organization consist of well educated and highly respected people. Included among their members is a former prime minister of Japan, lawyers, school teachers, doctors and university professors. Personally, I believe it to be a peaceful, non-violent and sincere religious movement and that in the spirit of the Canadian Bill of Rights it is a movement that is entitled to incorporation in this country.

I would ask that the bill be given second reading and then referred to the standing committee on miscellaneous private bills where all members of that committee will have a good chance to ask questions and obtain more detailed answers.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and referred to the standing committee on miscellaneous private bills.

PUBLIC SERVICE

PROVISION FOR PREFERENCE OF BILINGUAL APPOINTMENTS

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm) moved the second reading of Bill

No. C-34, respecting employment of bilingual persons in the public service and in crown corporations.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to introduce Bill No. C-34 entitled:

An act respecting employment of bilingual persons in the public service and in crown corporations.

Allow me to read a few excerpts from this bill:

...it shall be the duty of the person or persons responsible for such appointments to give a preference to bilingual persons so that there shall be in the public service, in crown corporations, in works, undertakings and businesses above mentioned, a number of bilingual persons proportionate to the number of French speaking Canadians throughout the country. The purpose of this bill is to correct, in so far as it is possible to do so, the discrimination which now exists in the public service and in crown corporations in the recruiting and employment of persons of French origin, and to give a preference to bilinguists.

In other words, Mr. Speaker, this bill requires that a third of the employees in all government services, including crown corporations, be bilingual.

To give you an example of the present shortage of bilingual employees in those services, allow me to quote from a brief published by the Conseil de la vie française. Concerning the Department of External Affairs, the linguistic knowledge is as follows:

Knowledge of languages among officials of the Department of External Affairs in Ottawa.

		Bilingual
Total number:	217	56
English speaking:	174	13
French speaking:	43	43

Knowledge of languages among Canadian representatives abroad.

		Bilingual
Total number:	387	92
English speaking:	325	30
French speaking:	62	62

Heads of missions abroad.

		Bilingual
Total number:	44	19
English speaking:	30	5
French speaking:	14	14

Mr. Speaker, the law provides that all French Canadians must be bilingual in every government department, including crown corporations. However, this provision does not apply to other elements in our country.

The Secretary of State (Mr. Lamontagne) promised that a bonus would be paid to bilingual civil servants. Besides, this was included in the platform of the Liberal party during the last election campaign, according to a newspaper advertisement. I am very much surprised at the position taken by the present government in an attempt to improve the situation and to place it on a more logical basis.

I have here copies of notices of competition issued by the civil service commission of Canada.

For instance, the Department of Agriculture is looking for someone to head its information division in Ottawa; the position carries a salarly of $8,760 to $10,300. Even though the successful candidate will be working for the information division of an important department, that of agriculture, posters advertising the position do not require applicants to be bilingual.

Another competition advertised by the civil service commission concerns building construction inspectors in Vancouver, Edmonton, Winnipeg, Montreal and Ottawa, positions to which a salary of $6,300 to $6,960 is attached. I notice that in that case also, applicants are not required to be bilingual.

As for the competition for the position of co-ordinator of transcription, typing and reproduction services, administrative services, Department of Public Works, in Ottawa, which carries a salary of $5,760 to $6,210 candidates do not have to be bilingual. Knowledge of English is sufficient.

Another poster has to do with senior positions in nursing, public health and hospital services which command a maximum salary of $6,240 a year. Applicants will have to work in various provinces including Quebec, and yet they are not required to be bilingual.

The civil service commission has also announced a competition for foreign service stenographers for the Department of Trade and Commerce and the Department of External Affairs. The starting salary ranges from $3,150 to $3,750 a year and, there again, applicants are not required to be bilingual.

The civil service commission also requests a head for the information service of the Department of National Revenue. Now, this head of the service must meet the requirements of the public, those of French Canada as well as those of English Canada. It was stipulated in the qualifications required of the candidates that it was essential to know both languages; but following this competition, the person who got the position is unilingual. I asked a series of questions in the house on this matter; yet, it was spelled out, in the competition notice, that candidates should have a knowledge of both languages.

I have also before me another competition notice from the civil service commission, in which applications are invited for the position of "head of the editing section of another department", and there again, it is the same thing. In fact, for hours, I could list competition notices published by the civil service commission and in which it is not required that applicants have at least a knowledge of both languages. Yet, these civil servants have to work in the public interest throughout the country.

Mr. Speaker, on March 5 last, in Toronto, the Minister of Justice (Mr. Favreau) lashed out at the civil service commission, which he charged with bringing about separatism among French Canadians. But I wonder what action this government means to take to remedy the present situation in the civil service commission. Reforms in this respect had been promised in order that French speaking Canadians might be on an equal footing with English speaking Canadians, as concerns civil service positions.

Mr. Speaker, at a meeting of the committee on privileges and elections, we heard some witnesses, and more particularly Mr. Keith Davey, chief organizer of the Liberal party. I asked Mr. Davey whether he received a government salary; he answered no. However, following a question I put on the order paper, as reported on pages 3354 and 3355 of Hansard for October 9, 1963, the answer given to me was that Mr. Kent was attached to the office of the Prime Minister and that his salary was $20,000 a year. On the other hand, in the committee on privileges and elections, Mr. Keith Davey said his main responsibility was—

Mr. Choquette: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm is out of order; his remarks have nothing to do with the matter under consideration.

Mr. Côté (Longueuil): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm mentioned Mr. Keith Davey, and now he speaks about Mr. Kent. I think he is confusing the two men. Mr. Davey does not receive a salary from the government.

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Speaker, I want to be frank with hon. members. I made a mistake, I confused Mr. Kent with Mr. Davey, and the hon. member who just sat down is quite right.

The Secretary of State spoke of measures to improve the situation, and some government employees are now attending courses in a Hull school. Now, those courses are paid by the federal government, and I am asking hon. members whether they think it fair and reasonable that the Canadian government, under the pretext of helping our English speaking fellow citizens, should put at their disposal, during their working hours, teachers paid out of public funds.

French Canadians had to pay out of their own money to take courses after working hours in order to learn the English language, while our English speaking compatriots are learning French at the expense of all Canadian taxpayers during hours which should be used for their office work. I wonder whether that is fair or whether it is essential, to settle the bilingualism problem existing in the federal civil service. We know that the minority Therrien report is quite explicit on that matter. In fact, Mr. Therrien stated:

> French Canadian civil servants cannot freely use the French language as a means of communication within the federal administration.

Federal civil servants from the province of Quebec asked for a special consideration and indemnity, in other words, that a bonus be paid to them because they are bilingual. I wonder when the government will take action and give effect to its promise, because we who sit on this side of the house are despairing and we wonder if this will not be another promise put off indefinitely, as the government did when it promised to appoint two ministers of agriculture, one for eastern Canada and one for western Canada.

Mr. Francis: Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the hon. member?

Mr. Pigeon: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Francis: Mr. Speaker, can the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm tell us whether he considers himself a bilingual person, as stipulated in the bill he is introducing?

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Speaker, I must tell the hon. member for Carleton that I am not perfectly bilingual, but that I speak English well enough to make myself understood. If all English speaking civil servants in Canada were able to speak French as I speak English, that is well enough to be understood, I think that the situation would be greatly improved in this country.

Mr. Dupuis: Mr. Speaker, I wish to put a question to the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm. If I am not mistaken, he said a while ago that the present Minister of Justice stated in Toronto that he held the civil service commission responsible to a certain degree for separatism, did he not? In that case, is not the hon. member surprised to see that the French Canadian ministers at the time of the Conservatives, for six years, did not have the courage of the present Minister of Justice to put the record straight?

Mr. Valade: Mackenzie King never said a word of French in 25 years. He never spoke French in the house.

Mr. Dupuis: I have no interest in what you say. I am directing my question to the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm.

Mr. Valade: That is the Liberal party for you. Hypocrisy—

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Speaker, I do not want to use wounding words about the hon. member for St. Jean-Iberville-Napierville. I wish to congratulate him on his remark, because it is his first since he was appointed Minister without Portfolio—

Mr. Dupuis: Another lie.

Mr. Pigeon: When we were in office we had distinguished ministers who could express themselves in both languages more easily, I think, than the hon. member for St. Jean-Iberville-Napierville.

Mr. Dupuis: The hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm is not answering my question. I am asking him why, in six years, under the Conservative administration, the French Canadian ministers did not show the same courage as the present ministers. The hon. member is not answering my question.

[Text]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Batten): Order. I should point out that we are now on second reading of this bill. If there are some members who would like to ask questions of the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm there will be an opportunity for a reply to be given to those questions when the hon. member closes the debate on second reading.

[Translation]

Mr. Maurice Rinfret (St. James): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm (Mr. Pigeon) has been a member of the government for six years and he never suggested any positive approach to improve the recruiting of French Canadians for the civil service. In fact, I wish to draw to the attention of the hon. members of the house the fact that the previous government refused to set up a commission on bilingualism in Canada—

Mr. Choquette: Hear, hear.

Mr. Rinfret: We know that the Leader of the Opposition is now persistently reproving the work of the commission on bilingualism.

Mr. Speaker, bilingualism is the characteristic of a country where two languages are spoken and officially recognized. Bilingualism in Canada is a fact arising out of historic circumstances; two linguistic communities have lasted side by side.

The French community has taken root in the soil of North America 350 years ago. Today, descendants of that ethnic group exceed 6 million in Canada, that is 30 per cent of the total population. They have succeeded, in spite of difficulties, in maintaining and developing the integrity of their culture. The English community settled later in Canada and it expanded through immigration from the British isles.

The English as well as the French communities have rights that are recognized under the confederation pact, which was an agreement between two provinces, but also between the two founding groups. Today, Canadians of good will are trying to find ways and means of developing within the Canadian confederation a partnership of two nationalities sharing equal rights and equal opportunities.

Every Canadian citizen has the right to speak his own language and also the right to be served in his own language by every administrative body in his country.

The Civil Service Act confirms this principle under section 47, as follows:

> The number of employees appointed to serve in any department or in any local office of a department who are qualified in the knowledge and use of the English or French language or both shall, in the opinion of the commission, be sufficient to enable the department or local office to perform its functions adequately and to give effective service to the public.

While we are considering this bill, we reiterate the principle of French Canadian representation and we say that this representation is not, at present, what it should be as far as number and appointment to key positions are concerned. Mr. Eugène Thérrien, member of the Glassco commission on government organization, gives us some revealing figures. In 1961, out of 5,000 civil servants paid more than $8,000 a year, there were less than 600 French speaking Canadians—

Mr. Choquette: Shame on the Conservatives.

Mr. Valade: Could you give us figures for previous years under Mackenzie King?

Mr. Rinfret: I have here the figures for 1961.

In 11 departments, six French Canadian civil servants out of 163 were paid $14,000 or over a year. Several departments do not have a single French speaking high official. The same applies to crown corporations.

Nobody can blame French Canadians who try to improve their lot when it is a known fact that the federal government employs 334,000 persons and pays salaries amounting to $135 million a year.

The present government, through the cabinet, the Secretary of State and the Civil Service Commission of Canada is conscious of the situation and has taken immediate steps to create within the departments and the civil service, a state of mind and an awareness designed to promote a greater participation of the French element and a higher proportion of French Canadian high officials.

In order to promote bilingualism throughout Canada, the government has set up a commission to conduct a survey among the public with regard to this problem. The present government has recognized the principle of bilingualism by establishing a commission made up of an equal number of French Canadians and English Canadians, speaking both official languages. The terms of reference of this commission are specific with regard to bilingualism in the federal civil service.

May I be permitted to quote from order in council No. 1106, of July 19, 1963, the following:

> —to report on the state and practice of bilingualism in all federal government services and institutions, including crown corporations, as well as in their contacts with the public, and to make recommendations to ensure the bilingual and basically bicultural character of the federal administration.

Mr. Speaker, here is a firm and resolute expression of the government's intention to respect the equal status of the founding groups of this country, and to add thereto the contribution of other ethnic groups living in Canada.

The government is building hopes on the practical findings of the Laurendeau-Dunton commission, but is adopting immediate reforms.

To permit higher level employees to learn a second language, either French or English, the civil service commission has established in Hull a bilingual school, where 460 civil servants followed a three month course. Moreover, every department offers in service courses in French and English.

Under the leadership of the Secretary of State, a cabinet committee is endeavouring to establish, on a practical level, an equal status for French and English as regards the printing of documents in every department.

To back up this cabinet committee, an interdepartmental committee composed of high officials from departments and crown corporations has been set up to bring forth concrete recommendations concerning the recruiting, the examination system, the training and promotion of personnel, to fulfil the requirements of bilingualism. To attain that objective, the government gets the full cooperation of the civil service commission and high officials.

The government is anxious to promote the recruiting of French speaking employees. The civil service commission has invited about 20 professors of the four main French speaking universities in order to give them information concerning working conditions and careers opened to university graduates.

In addition to that meeting, officials of the civil service commission go to universities and classical colleges to create interest in federal civil service jobs among the professors and students. Our French language universities and teaching institutions must increase their efforts to guide our graduates towards careers in the federal civil service. The civil service commission did make some changes in the examination procedures to take into account the Quebec education system. It must keep on playing its part by giving training and promotion opportunities to French speaking civil servants.

Mr. Speaker, there is a new determination to get a proportion of French Canadians within the federal civil service. In the present circumstances, the French speaking members of this house have to look up the civil service competition notices and encourage people to apply for these competitions by going around the teaching institutions in their riding or area, and advising their electors of the employment opportunities.

Under the leadership of our religious and civil authorities, the candidates will be more numerous and more qualified and our representation within the civil service will increase in numbers and influence.

It is the responsibility of all Canadians, from all parts of this country, to fully realize the benefits of bilingualism, to try and practice it ourselves, to encourage our young people to learn the official languages of our country, and to make known everywhere the benefits of bilingualism.

It is true that treaties, agreements, laws lay down a policy about the status of the official languages in this country, but it is above all a spirit of understanding and justice that must dictate the efforts of those who want to see the development in Canada of a spirit of greatness and unity, so that, as stated by the present Prime Minister:

> All Canadians can feel confident that, within our nation, they can, protected from all discrimination and enjoying the status of full partners, build a wonderful future for them and their descendants.

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Speaker, could I ask the hon. member a question?

[Text]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Batten): The hon. member for Burnaby-Richmond (Mr. Prittie).

Mr. Pigeon: Just one question, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Batten): I think the proper procedure during the hour from five to six is to allow, as far as possible, one member from each party in the house to speak. We have now had one member from the official opposition and one from the government side of the house. The Chair now recognizes the hon. member for Burnaby-Richmond.

Mr. R. W. Prittie (Burnaby-Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I listened in French but I will speak in English during this debate. Very frequently in this private members' hour we have very little to guide us by way of party policy, but I did take the trouble to check our policy on this matter concerning bilingualism in the federal civil service. I find it is this, and I quote from our program:

> Within the federal civil service the equality of both cultures should be established and the following steps taken to that end:
> (a) after a reasonable period of transition, bilingualism would be a qualification of appointment or promotion to higher posts of the federal civil service;
> (b) a language school would be set up for federal civil servants wishing to become bilingual which could be attended during working hours;

I know that this has been done, but the Liberal party are always doing a year or two afterwards what we have advocated.

Mr. Byrne: What you have advocated after we have done it.

Mr. Prittie: No, that is never the case. You are the greatest platform stealers there are. But I will go on, Mr. Speaker.

The requirement that people in the higher grades of the civil service, particularly those who aspire to positions in Ottawa, should be bilingual is, I think, a good one. I refer to those people who are, or may in time become the heads of departments, directors, their assistants, chiefs of branches, ministers, deputy ministers, and so on. These people should make it their business to become bilingual. I am very glad the government have established the school that has been established, and send certain civil servants of executive rank to this school in order to effect an ability in the other language. The hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm (Mr. Pigeon) referred to this school and seemed to indicate that only those who are English speaking and wish to learn French are attending the school. But this is not the case, as I understand it, because there are young people from Quebec and from the other provinces who speak French only and are perfecting their English at this school.

Unless you live in a bilingual atmosphere in this country, acquiring the second language is very, very difficult. If you live in Calgary, Vancouver or Halifax, to learn the French language is an extremely difficult process; and I know because I have been working at this for many years I must say that in the atmosphere of Ottawa, in two years I have learned more than in my years of high school and university in Vancouver. But, Mr. Speaker, it is not easy. I know this applies more to the English speaking civil service than it does to the French, but not entirely. The people who are attending this school are expected to become top flight civil servants. If they are going to be really bilingual, this means more than mere conversational ability; it means the ability to write letters and prepare reports in both languages. I suggest that many of the graduates of French universities coming into the civil service, who may be able to speak English but have not that ability to which I have referred, will perhaps be helped by this school.

However, the point of the bill is that all persons in the civil service who are bilingual should receive additional pay because of this ability. With this I do not agree, and for this reason. I would suggest that where the job requires two languages, yes, they should receive additional pay. This would require a determination as to where the two languages are required. Throughout Canada there are many places where a civil servant will never have any occasion to use the French language or be required to use it. A person working in a post office in Victoria, for example, or at a border crossing point between Alberta and British Columbia would use the French language only on very limited occasions.

Similarly there are many places in the province of Quebec where very little English is spoken; I believe in the Saguenay region and the lower St. Lawrence around Rimouski. If the English speaking people in that region did not know French originally they would have learned it by this time. There are other places, such as Ottawa, Hull, Hawkesbury and Sherbrooke, where postal clerks or custom inspectors should know the two languages, and in this case such persons should receive extra pay for the extra qualification.

The definition of bilingualism given by the hon. member is not sufficient. You have to define bilingualism for the particular job. Let us consider the persons working around parliament hill, the constables, elevator operators, the people in the cafeteria. To be reasonably proficient in conversation in both languages is sufficient if you do not have to write letters or to draft memoranda. In a great many other positions the ability to write letters and to prepare reports should be a bilingual requirement. Many people who consider themselves bilingual cannot write complex letters or prepare draft memoranda in both languages.

Mr. Choquette: What about the page boys?

Mr. Prittie: I will not comment on that. So that we have to set up a standard of testing. If only conversation is required, there would be one test. If conversation and writing ability is required, there would be another test. A person should be required to pass a test for a particular job. If we are going to give them extra pay they must pass an extra test. They must meet the requirements in order to receive extra pay.

My main objection to the bill is that it really does not mean completely bilingual persons. In the definition part of the bill, under clause 2(a) the following appears:

> 2. In this act,
> (a) "bilingual persons" mean persons who are capable of speaking and writing fluently in both the English and the French languages;

That in itself is all right; but clause 3 goes on:

> —it shall be the duty of the person or persons responsible for such appointments to give a preference to bilingual persons so that there shall be in the public service, in crown corporations, in works, undertakings and businesses above mentioned, a number of bilingual persons proportionate to the number of French speaking Canadians throughout the country.

[Mr. Prittie.]

In the explanatory note the following appears:

> The purpose of this bill is to correct, in so far as it is possible to do so, the discrimination which now exists in the public service and in crown corporations in the recruiting and employment of persons of French origin, and to give a preference to bilinguists.

This is making a French speaking Canadian synonymous with the word "bilinguist". I realize that the great majority of civil servants who are bilingual are of French speaking origin; but not all, and the two should not be made synonymous.

Another point has come to my attention, and it is that there is a general tendency on the part of some French speaking Canadians to regard only people of French origin as bilingual. I have heard a couple of civil servants with European background, from Poland and Czechoslovakia, speaking French very well, but they are not considered bilingual because they do not have a Canadian accent. This is a form of snobbery which we could do without.

To sum up, as the bill stands I do not agree with it; but I do agree that we should recognize that there are certain bilingual jobs, and where bilingualism is required there should be a proper test. In such cases persons should be paid for their extra ability and for being proficient in the other language.

[Translation]

Mr. Guy Marcoux (Quebec-Montmorency): Mr. Speaker, the subject matter of the bill introduced by the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm (Mr. Pigeon) is quite complex and requires, I believe, a more elaborate study than that provided in the bill. I have a great respect for the hon. member and for his remarks and speeches which often make his colleagues' hair stand on end. But in my opinion, the problem should be considered from another point of view.

Incidentally, I wish to congratulate the hon. member for St. James (Mr. Rinfret) for his splendid contribution as well as the hon. member for Carleton (Mr. Francis) who was, himself, a distinguished bilingual official.

To ask for a proportional representation of French Canadians within the civil service regardless of competence is perhaps to venture a little too far. Of course, it must also be recognized that the civil service commission often requires for certain positions qualifications based on personal characteristics, competence and schooling of the applicant. It must be kept in mind that the Civil Service Act, as provided in chapter 48 of the Revised Statutes of Canada, 1952, as well as in regulation 21 of March 30, 1962, allows practically full discretion to the civil service commission.

I would be much more in favour of an investigation being conducted within the civil service commission as such, regardless of the matter of languages, so as to know what qualifications are required and what standards are applied before a position is given to an applicant.

There would also be the question of salaries. When we know, for instance, that someone in Quebec or in Ontario may earn $6,000, $7,000 and $8,000 in a certain position and that someone, with the same qualifications, in the maritime provinces or some of the western provinces may be satisfied with a salary of about $5,000, we realize that the Quebec candidates, who might be bilingual, may not be interested in applying for those positions. This means that it would be extremely difficult to find some empirical common ground as suggested. In my opinion, it would be necessary to study that matter in depth, rather than on the single aspect of bilingualism.

There is, for instance, in Quebec, a crown corporation whose name I shall not mention and whose English speaking employees, after attending French classes at university, are the proud holders of a certificate showing that they are proficient in the French language and therefore eligible for a salary increase or a bonus because they are bilingual. However, nothing has changed in their own attitude. They do not speak a word of French in their work and all correspondence is done by all employees in English only. Even when they do business with French Canadians who speak to them in French, they do not try to answer in French; they give negative replies or even answer in English to French Canadians.

All this means that the problem is very complicated and that we should dig much deeper.

I would now like to deal with another aspect of the matter but, as I have the impression that the hon. member for Carleton wants to take part in the debate, I will shorten my remarks. In spite of the government's good intentions, in spite of some policies it might want to convey to the civil service commission, I think that, in many cases, it will become obvious that the government is unable to realize its objectives. However, there are certain cases where it may succeed. For instance, out of the 25 ministers, 15 are English speaking, including one who died recently and nine are French speaking. This indicates that the proportion has been well maintained, and I wish to commend the government for that.

On the other hand, what surprises me the most is that the Minister of Industry, Mr. Drury, who is bilingual, does not seem to be willing to recognize that French speaking Canadians can be competent enough to perform certain duties in his department. Quite recently I was reviewing the different positions granted to French speaking Canadians in the Department of Industry and I saw only two French names on a total of approximately 25—I speak from memory—including one French speaking Canadian from Sarnia, Ontario, so that we can assume he is probably more proficient in English than in French, and another from the Montreal area.

I wonder why the minister has been unable to find more than two French Canadians to hold key positions. Those positions were filled through a competition of the civil service commission, I know, but I am also aware of the fact that the qualifications were undoubtedly set by the commission at the request of the minister. It is the minister who should have insisted, since he is bilingual and especially since he comes from French Canada.

If my understanding of the bill introduced by the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm is correct, the purpose is not to have all English speaking officials become bilingual, but to provide that about one third of all civil servants must be French Canadians. Naturally, that would not stop French speaking officials from being bilingual, in the sense that they would know English; on the other hand, the remaining two thirds of our civil service, the English speaking employees, would be able to speak French. I wonder why the Minister of Industry has not seen fit to demand a greater use of French in his department, especially as he is from Montreal.

Mr. Speaker, there are so many things I should like to say that I hope a further similar bill will come up at some later date, so we can go further into the matter, as I am not at all anxious to kill this bill. I shall leave that job to others. So let me point out once again that this is a very complex problem indeed, and that all I have said so far can be summed up in one sentence: let a thorough inquiry take place within the civil service commission, not only to look into the matter of bilingualism in the civil service but also into the operation of the commission itself.

If we study the legislation, we always find some little chapter which enables one to evade the law or to create an exemption of some kind, such as an order in council, to get round the act. I feel the government should make a thorough investigation of the civil service—therein lies its basic work.

Hon. Théogène Ricard (St. Hyacinthe-Bagot): Mr. Speaker, I only have a few words to say about the measure now before us.

First, I should like to congratulate my friend, the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm (Mr. Pigeon) for introducing a measure intended to increase bilingualism in the civil service.

I would not let such an opportunity go by—that is why I rose to speak—without making a few remarks following those of the hon. member for St. James (Mr. Rinfret) and the hon. member for Burnaby-Richmond (Mr. Prittie).

For the few minutes he took part in this discussion, the hon. member for St. James upbraided us. He said that when we were at the helm, we did very little to favour bilingualism. Now, I should like to point out to the hon. member for St. James and to all hon. members the initiatives we took in this respect. For instance, we introduced simultaneous interpretation and bilingual cheques, we corrected the forms of the last census in 1961; we appointed a French Canadian governor general. Moreover, I avail myself of this opportunity to remind the house that, when I came here in 1957, practically all notices on parliament hill, inside as well as outside, were in English only. I took action to obtain the required change and, today, we can see that all, or almost all, such notices are bilingual.

And I shall ask those who might question what I am now saying to give a telephone call to the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Deschatelets), to whom I recommended as recently as last week to replace a unilingual by a bilingual plate.

As far as the hon. member for Burnaby-Richmond is concerned, I think that his way of looking at bilingualism would result in encouraging separatism.

According to his theory, bilingualism should be confined to the province of Quebec, or to those localities where French is needed. Now, Mr. Speaker, how could bilingualism be favoured throughout the country if you adopt an attitude which would limit bilingualism to a single area?

Those are the few remarks I wanted to make, and I beg the hon. member for St. James not to look for any bitterness where he is concerned. I wanted simply to remind him of some facts which he probably knew anyway.

Mr. Lloyd Francis (Carleton): Mr. Speaker, it is now three minutes to six o'clock. There are many things I should like to say about the bill but the time remaining to me unfortunately does not permit. Many points have been made in the debate concerning the development of a bilingual policy in the public service. I should like to say at the very beginning that I do not think there is any doubt whatsoever in the minds of the overwhelming majority of members of the house that we are determined to promote the highest possible degree of bilingualism so that a person communicating with any department of the government will have the right to receive full and complete information in whichever official language the correspondence is initiated. I am sure that every department is actively recruiting with this in mind to make sure that the service which is the right of every taxpayer is rendered, according to fundamental respect for this principle.

But, Mr. Speaker, it seems to me there is a great gap between this principle and the legislation before us. The legislation before us would in effect adopt a quota system. It would say that within a quota the language requirement would take precedence over all other requirements for appointment. I have serious doubts whether this is administratively feasible. If it is feasible, there are certain absolutely minimum requirements which would have to be respected by the civil service commission.

The first of them, Mr. Speaker, is the definition and determination in the language of the bill of who is competently bilingual, which language refers to people "who are capable of speaking and writing fluently in both the English and the French languages". I ask my good friend, the mover of the bill, if he considers himself to be a bilingual person and I understand that his answer is yes. I respect his competence in the two languages, but I would point out to the hon. member that I know there are circumstances where he has some difficulty with the English tongue, just as I have some difficulty with the French tongue. I have made an effort as a member of the house and as a citizen of Canada to try to understand the two languages as best I can.

Mr. Pigeon: If you will use your brains you will see what I mean by bilingual.

Mr. Francis: Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member will bear with me, I simply wish to say in the very short time remaining that it is not easy to say who is bilingual. There must be some objective measurement, both written and oral, which means that the civil service commission has to adopt certain procedures which are beyond any question of not being objective. This is what has not been done in this measure.

I want to say one other thing, Mr. Speaker. I know I am stretching my time, but under this legislation the number of French speaking Canadians throughout the country has to be determined. How is this to be done? Are you going to take the last census? Will you accept mother tongue according to the census as the basis of the proportion? If this is to be so, then in the last census of June, 1961, 28.1 per cent of all those in Canada replied that their mother tongue was French.

Mr. Ricard: Don't ask questions; give answers.

Mr. Francis: Mr. Speaker, I think at this stage I have to face the fact that it is now six o'clock.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The hour appointed for the consideration of private members' business has now expired.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It is my duty, pursuant to provisional standing order 39A, to inform the house that the questions to be raised at ten o'clock this day are as follows:

The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), income tax, hospitalization plan payments by employers treated as income; the hon. member for Comox-Alberni (Mr. Barnett), labour relations, British Columbia, freedom of workers to join union of choice; the hon. member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow), discussions respecting future correctional policy.

At six o'clock the house took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The house resumed at 8 p.m.

FARM CREDIT ACT

AMENDMENTS INCREASING AUTHORIZED CAPITAL, MAXIMUM LOAN LIMITS, ETC.

The house resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Hays for the second reading of Bill No. C-100, to amend the Farm Credit Act.

Mr. Reynold Rapp (Humboldt-Melfort-Tisdale): Mr. Speaker, I have just a few remarks to make on this bill before it is considered clause by clause in committee. At the outset, I should like to say that I welcome the amendments which have been introduced, especially the provision whereby loans under part II are to be increased to $40,000 and under part III to $55,000. There is only one reservation that I have and that is, since the interest rate is not spelled out in the bill it could mean that the interest rates charged could vary from 6 to 7 or even 8 per cent. I do not believe this is a desirable thing to have. The interest rate is set at 5 per cent in the act now. However, when the bill comes before the committee for clause by clause discussion I shall be urging the minister to make provision for a definite interest rate in these regulations.

Another matter which I should like to bring to the attention of the minister is that the definition of a farm is being broadened sufficiently to include beekeeping. I come from a province where beekeeping is a secondary industry for many farmers. In Saskatchewan we have the Saskatchewan honey co-operative which produces the so-called Sasco honey. This provision will be welcomed by the beekeepers, because they will be classified as farmers and will be eligible for loans, the same as the grain farmer or the livestock raiser.

This beekeeping industry is a very important one. In the three western provinces we have the interprovincial honey sales co-operative. It may be of interest to note that the exports of this honey amount to something like three million pounds a year, most of which goes to Britain. Since this is such a valuable source of income to the farmers, even though to some of them it may be a secondary industry, I think provision should be made in this act whereby, although a farm may not be classified strictly as a beekeeping farm and even though it is secondary to some other branch of farming such as livestock, these beekeepers should be able to obtain loans.

As I said before, this beekeeping industry is a very important one and brings in quite a bit of income. As time goes on, I am pretty sure that this interprovincial honey co-operative will expand. At the present time it is more or less the sole supplier of the market in Britain. The United Kingdom has long been an important market for Canadian honey and at the present time we are the exclusive suppliers of Canadian bulk honey. In my opinion, this is the appropriate time to have the beekeepers included in this clause under which they would be classified as farmers and be eligible for loans just as other farmers are.

There are many other points about which I should like to speak when we come to the clause by clause discussion. I should like to stress the fact that these loans will be increased, but since the minister will not be setting the interest rates for the loans they will not be of any help to the farmer. For instance, there might be a time when interest rates are high. After all, these loans are not taken out for only four or five years; they are taken out for 20 years or more. After some time has passed, for some unknown reason interest rates may be lower and the farmer who obtained a loan on which the interest rate is 7 per cent will be out a great deal. Therefore I urge the minister to give serious consideration to having the interest rate set the same as it is at present, namely 5 per cent.

Mr. E. Nasserden (Rosthern): First of all, Mr. Speaker, I should like to say it is now over a year since the government assumed office and we have looked forward to the presentation of legislation as an indication of the direction it would take in regard to agricultural policy. The production of any particular piece of agricultural legislation gives an indication of the direction the government is taking, and it also affects other legislation that might be brought forward from time to time.

The bill before us, if it indicates anything, indicates that the government is going for larger and larger farms, and for the ultimate elimination of the smaller farms in this country. For that reason I am deeply disturbed at the effect this legislation will have among those vast numbers of smaller farmers in my own province of Saskatchewan, farmers who have been unable to make use of the Farm Credit Corporation up to the present, and also at the effect it will have on small farmers in other areas of Canada, of whom there are great numbers in parts of the maritimes and the province of Quebec. These people at present are unable to utilize the Farm Credit Corporation under the regulations now in effect.

If I might have the minister's attention I would like to suggest to him that before the limits on the amount of loans are increased, a good long look should be taken at the plight of those farmers who are unable to benefit from the legislation we have. These farmers are very numerous and form the bulk of the community known as the agricultural community of Canada. They have a great part to play in the orderly development of this nation in the years ahead. I do not believe the government should forget them in its haste to bring forward some legislation so that it can say it has done something with regard to agricultural problems.

Hardy farmers who at present are unable to benefit from existing legislation must know that raising the limit of loans to $55,000 is not going to mean anything to them at all. Yet these people remain the source of the greatest problems facing the nation and the Department of Agriculture.

The other matter which engages my attention is that of the interest rates, which was raised by the hon. member for Humboldt-Melfort-Tisdale (Mr. Rapp).

Mr. Herridge: By the hon. member for Kootenay West.

Mr. Nasserden: That may be so, but unfortunately I was not in the house this afternoon when he made his speech. When the Farm Credit Corporation was set up a few years ago, interest rates became a subject for discussion, and at that time it was felt a 5 per cent interest rate represented a fairly good average of what interest rates might be over a long period of years. For that reason, and after a great deal of discussion as hon. members will recall, the corporation was set up and the interest rate set at 5 per cent.

The bill before us does not change the interest rate on the existing loans, but it does open the door to increased rates. I believe it will also be an incentive for an increase of interest rates in other aspects of the economy. For that reason I would like the minister to take this matter into consideration before that part of the bill is debated in committee. Most people borrowing money like to know what they are going to have to pay for it.

As the bill presently reads, a situation could be created where one farmer would be paying one interest rate and his neighbour paying another rate, depending on when each took out his loan. This would lead to some inequities that would be very difficult to explain.

I hope the other legislation that the minister has promised will be a little more productive than this because, after all, this bill hardly touches the problems of agriculture as they exist today. All it will do is aggravate some of the problems. The man who presently can qualify for a $27,500 loan is in a good position to help himself, and it is the position of the other farmers which we should be concerned about.

The record of the Farm Credit Corporation has been a good one, but some of the risks that might have been taken have not been taken. It may not move as quickly as some of us would like, but we hope it and the government, stage by stage, will try to make loans available to the people who require them. I may have further remarks to make later on, but that is all I have to say at present.

[Translation]

Mr. Maurice Côté (Chicoutimi): Mr. Speaker, under this bill to amend the Farm Credit Act, it will be possible to increase the operating capital of the Farm Credit Corporation out of the consolidated revenue fund. The maximum amount of loans will also be revised upwards.

As far as the first point is concerned, that is, taking money out of the consolidated revenue fund, I feel that such a step is not an innovation. It does not take a genius to think of that. The inventor of the wheel rendered a greater service to the human race than those who think of drawing on the consolidated revenue fund.

Everybody is aware of the iniquitous scheme which consists in taxing the Canadian people more and more as, for instance, in the case of the 11 per cent excise tax on manufactured goods.

We know that once it has reached its destination, in the hands of the consumer, that tax has already cost over 40 per cent to the consumers, according to calculations made by eminent accountants. To increase the operating capital of the Farm Credit Corporation through the proposed method is the same, all in all, as digging a hole to fill another. Such a step is both sterile and infantile. By resorting to the sovereign powers of the Canadian parliament, we could take back the regalian prerogatives to issue credit that were handed over to chartered or commercial banks and transfer them to the appropriate government agency, that is, the Bank of Canada, which, under the high authority of the national credit council, would supply the Farm Credit Corporation with the credit required for the smooth operation of that undertaking. This could be done at a nominal cost. Thus, the Canadian farmers could be allowed loans at a reduced rate in order to sell their production at a profit.

The great problem in agriculture at the present time is that farmers do not make profits. They leave their farms and give up their land for the simple reason that it is not a paying proposition. Let us give them the opportunity to make profits as any other normal enterprise. Is there anyone who likes to work for nothing? Profit is the rightful purpose of all transactions and undertakings.

According to the latest statistics, the net income of Canadian farmers has decreased by 5.4 per cent, which represents a loss of $80,700,000, while the Quebec farmers have lost more than $3 million in net income.

Those figures speak clearly and are a good indication that agriculture is now in a state of regression. It is not by increasing the debts of farmers that we will be able to develop agriculture.

It must be considered that agriculture is the most important branch and even the basis of the Canadian economy. If that branch of the economy is in a state of regression, what will happen? Will we be able to continue the development of the national economy? At the present time, this slackening is caused by the high inflation pressure on our monetary system. Canadian finances are really in an incredibly bad shape.

With this measure and similar ones which have been presented to us for some time or will eventually be introduced, the government is increasing monetary inflation. That does not solve the basic problem; it only helps to displace it.

I read the other day in Le Soleil of May 29, 1964, a newspaper of my area, that farmers were complaining, through the Saguenay federation of the U.C.C.; and they had reason to complain, because the federal Department of Agriculture had eliminated a subsidy to dairy products. This question was asked:

> Strangely enough, we are told that two years ago, one of the biggest cheese dealers in Canada had a lot of cheese to export. Now, the export subsidy for that year was 4 cents a pound.
> At the present time, that same firm would sell all its cheese on the national market.
> Is it by a mere coincidence in the federal policy that the cheese export subsidy is high when capitalist concerns have cheese to export, and that the subsidy is low when producers export their cheese themselves?

Those are rebukes which are justified. I am deeply convinced that increasing the debts of the farmers will not help us settle those problems.

During the discussion on agriculture estimates, I observed, on several occasions, that it was practically only with subsidized products that the farmers could make good, while as regards non-subsidized products, farmers lose too much money and give up production.

In concluding, I should like to raise another point which to my mind is extremely important. Looking into the balance sheet of the Farm Credit Corporation, I noted that among the ten members of the board, there was only one French Canadian. I feel that here again racial discrimination prevails; it is an odious and revolting treatment, and I hope that this inequality will be corrected.

It is amazing to see how, in all businesses, crown corporations, all kinds of corporations concerned with farm credit or anything else, that systematic ostracism has been applied for a number of years. And yet there are parliamentarians and Canadians who are amazed to hear about separatism or to receive representations from the province of Quebec, against that sort of treatment applied to French Canadians who are full-fledged Canadians.

I hope that such an absolutely inconceivable situation will be corrected.

Mr. J. E. Pascoe (Moose Jaw-Lake Centre): The hon. members for Mackenzie (Mr. Korchinski) and Rosthern (Mr. Nasserden) gave a clear outline of possible defects or weaknesses in the farm credit program envisaged in Bill No. C-100. I agree with their contention that the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Hays) has apparently made very little attempt to tackle the main problem confronting agriculture which is, of course, the increasing cost of farm operations. What the minister has done is to double the amount which can be lent to farmers by the Farm Credit Corporation.

Bill No. C-100 might be described as a grandstand play by the government. I am expressing my own opinion when I say that loans of $40,000 or $50,000 may assist some farmers. Indeed, I would go as far as to say that loans of this size will greatly help a certain proportion of our farmers. But they are not the answer to rising farm costs. Although the minister has almost raised a club over our heads by indicating that there is very little money left from which to make farm credit loans, I think he is moving too quickly with regard to this bill. On occasions he has indicated a move to lighten the load of farm machinery costs. I think he should have revealed these plans first, because they could cut operating costs and thus reduce the need for large amounts of farm credit.

If farmers could be assured in the years ahead of $2 wheat, as promised by the government, the need for farm credit would be reduced. If they could be assured of wheat markets in the years ahead, the need for large farm credits would similarly be reduced. My main objection to this bill is that, though credit facilities are so greatly expanded, little action has been taken by the government to guarantee that farmers will be able to repay their loans. Credit, in the absence of a definite, long range economic program for agriculture, will not provide for family farm security.

In this connection I found the following report as to the plans of the agricultural economics research council of Canada most interesting. I may say that this council is supported by the federal government, provincial government, farm organizations, cooperatives, and business and industry associated with agriculture. If I may I should like to read a few excerpts from this report. It states:

> The first project will be a study of the relationship between Canadian agricultural policy and what is generally referred to as the farm problem. The purpose of the study is to analyse the objectives of past and present farm policies and relate them to the programs which have been implemented to achieve these objectives. The emphasis will be upon determining the economic effects of current policies. Furthermore, the study will try to add to knowledge of why a fundamental problem of major significance to the economic well-being of farmers continues to persist.
> The third project—

And I think this is a very interesting one in connection with Bill No. C-100:

> —is a study of the capital supply for Canadian agriculture...The study will assess the earning power of capital and relate it to the problem of creating new forms of credit which will be adequate for modern farm businesses.
> The fourth study is designed to study the place of agriculture in the national economy...The purpose of this study is to analyse the position of agriculture in present-day Canadian society with a view to providing information which would assist agriculture, the general community and government to cope with the strains imposed by the changes which are taking place.

Mr. Speaker, the minister does not appear to be very interested in these remarks. I would draw to Your Honour's attention that we are speaking of Bill No. C-100, and if I could have the minister's attention for a few moments I would appreciate it. In the light of these research projects I say again that the Minister of Agriculture is attempting to supply large amounts of farm credit before the whole future farm program is worked out. The government should concentrate on these research studies regarding loan repayment possibilities. Piling up credit debt is not the answer, although adequate credit facilities certainly are part of the long range farm program.

I would ask the government to produce its plans for lower machinery costs. As I said before, what about the promise of $2 wheat as a guarantee for future sales? A large amount of wheat has been sold in this crop year at good prices, so there should be a great deal of the farmers' own money standing to their credit. I suggest the government make an interim payment now to the farmer growers. With assured markets for $2 wheat and a good interim payment each summer, the farmers may not need $55,000 loans.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I support a program which will provide reasonable farm credit, but it should be only one part of the whole agricultural program. The complete program should have been made known before we were called upon to pass Bill No. C-100.

Mr. Speaker, those are all the remarks I want to make now, but I intend to make more specific comments when this bill is studied in committee.

Mr. John Mullally (Kings): Mr. Speaker, like all hon. members who represent rural agricultural ridings I am very much interested in anything which has an effect or bearing on agricultural problems of our farmers. First of all I think the minister should be commended for bringing this legislation before the house, as well as for the other legislation which he has prepared, some of which is already on the order paper. I am sure the minister has the confidence and the respect of the farmers everywhere in Canada.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Mullally: This is very evident, Mr. Speaker, when one attends an agricultural meeting, discusses matters with farmers, reads the editorials in our agricultural newspapers, or indeed in any press in Canada. The minister is a farmer at heart, a very successful farmer indeed, with a deep knowledge of farm problems and I am sure he is able to bring forward many measures will be to the benefit of farmers everywhere in Canada.

The legislation we have before us at the moment, to provide amendments to the Farm Credit Act, is one of four measures being considered at the present time to assist farmers throughout the country. With regard to the others, I would first refer back to what the last speaker said. He said we should have presented our program before presenting various pieces of legislation. However I think our program is very well known; it was made public to the people and to the farmers of Canada during the last two election campaigns. The people of Canada endorsed it and decided this was a very acceptable program and we are proceeding with that program. This is the first step. At the same time, Mr. Speaker, farm credit is not entirely confined to the Farm Credit Act; there are other methods of providing credit for farmers. I am thinking particularly of farm improvement loans. The minister has indicated that he will be bringing in improvements to this legislation as well. Also on the order paper we have a resolution preceding the introduction of legislation to deal with crop insurance. I think this is most important, to assure farmers that they will not suffer disastrous losses in the event of some natural disaster which could wipe out their crops. The minister has also announced that he will bring forward, as soon as the opportunity is available, an act to assist in the very difficult problem of the high cost of farm machinery; that is, measures to assist in some way to overcome the very difficult problem farmers are facing today with the high and rising costs of farm machinery.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I think these four measures are certainly a good initial step in our program for rural Canada and the farmers of Canada. I realize there is much to be done. I am sure all those who have spoken today and who will speak in this debate are aware of this and have the same thought in mind. It is extremely difficult, as they are also aware, to bring forward in this parliament all the legislation one would like to see enacted. We have a very crowded schedule and some things have to take priority. We are satisfied that the minister is doing a very excellent job for the farmers of Canada. I think the farmers of Canada are aware of this and are showing their appreciation of what the minister is doing.

I would like to comment very briefly on the four main improvements this piece of legislation attempts to provide to the Farm Credit Act. First of all it increases the capital fund of the corporation to $600 million. At the present time it is $400 million. With the rapidly increasing use of credit by farmers everywhere in the country it has become necessary to increase the capital fund which is available to the corporation in order to provide the loans farmers require. I think a mere glance at the statistics and figures which are available indicate that in the year 1959-60 the corporation lent a total of $40 million; in 1962-63 this was increased to $90 million, and for the year just ended on March 31 it is anticipated that this amount will be $106 million. So we see that there has been a tremendous increase in the number of loans made and the amount of money which farmers are obtaining from the Farm Credit Corporation. Therefore it has become necessary to increase the amount of money available to the corporation to meet these demands. I think this is a very necessary and a very excellent step.

Second, the measure before the house at the moment will double the amount of money a farmer can borrow from the corporation. As we are all aware, at the present time under a part II loan a farmer can borrow $20,000; under part III it is $27,500. Some members who have spoken today have been rather critical of this effort by the minister and the government to increase the amount of money available to a farmer; in other words, to double the amount of money a farmer can borrow from the Farm Credit Corporation. I think this increase is very necessary, is very essential and will be very beneficial to the farmers of this country.

I am sure we are all aware that with the increasing value of land and the increasing cost of everything a farmer has to buy as a capital investment, it is necessary, even for the farmer who has not a large operation, to be able to borrow amounts larger than those previously provided under this act. Therefore I endorse this measure to increase the amount of money which an individual farmer can borrow from the corporation. It was mentioned just a few moments ago that this is an effort to eliminate the small farmer. I certainly do not think that is so, because I cannot see that this provision would in any way eliminate the small farmer or make it more difficult for him to borrow money. This would probably make it a little easier to operate, because any time the standards at the top are raised you make it easier for those borrowing lesser amounts at a lower level to obtain their loans.

I heartily endorse this provision. At the same time I would impress upon the minister and the officials of the Farm Credit Corporation, that they should give the most sympathetic consideration to the small borrower. They should be as lenient as possible within the limits of the act and regulations and give the small farmer as large a loan as possible consistent with his needs. But I do not think that increasing the limits as in this particular case, which I think are very essential and necessary with the increasing cost of capitalization for the average farm, will in any way place any greater difficulty in the way of the farmer to borrow the money he needs to conduct his farm operation.

The third amendment in clause 3 enables a farmer to borrow from the corporation for the purpose of advancing such loans to a member of his family who wishes to acquire farm land. I think this is a most important amendment. We are all concerned at this time with the great trend away from our farms, particularly in the case of young people. This provision enables a father to borrow money to finance his son, his son-in-law, daughter, daughter-in-law, or his nephews, nieces, brothers, sisters, stepchildren or foster children, in establishing a farming operation. This measure I strongly commend both the minister and the corporation for bringing into effect. This will do a great deal to keep many young people on the farm as well as to encourage others to take up farming as a vocation. It is most discouraging in my area, and I think the same is true in all areas in eastern Canada, to see so many of our young and intelligent people who were born on farms moving away from farming to take up some other vocation. We think that farming is the best and most satisfying and rewarding vocation in which to engage, and any effort made to keep our young people on the farms is to be highly commended.

The fourth amendment which this legislation provides enables a borrower who receives a part III loan to make his repayments equally over the entire period of the loan. Under the present regulations such a borrower has to make his repayments on his chattels during the first ten years of the loan. This places a very heavy burden on the young farmer during the early years of his farming life and makes it extremely difficult for him to make any significant progress, because his repayments are so high. By spreading his repayments for the chattels in the same manner as his repayments on money borrowed to purchase land, over the entire 30 year term of the loan, the burden naturally is eased during the early years of his farming operation, which makes it considerably easier for the young farmer to get started.

Another matter I should like to comment on, which is also part of the new provisions of the act, concerns the increased interest rate for the larger amount borrowed in excess of the present amount which is being provided —$20,000 in the case of a part II loan and $27,500 in the case of a part III loan. The interest rate charged on such amounts over $20,000 on a part II and $27,500 on a part III loan will be an economical rate, which I think is very appropriate. If I had my way I would suggest that we lower the interest rate to 3 or 4 per cent in the case of smaller loans, but increase it on an escalating scale with the higher amounts; and at that particular level over $20,000 and $27,500 I think that an economical rate of interest is very much in order. I think it would be preferable if the small borrower were given a lower rate of interest, and the interest rate for loans over $20,000 and $27,500 was in keeping with the prevailing rate of interest charged to the corporation or the government by the sources from which they borrow their funds.

There is another matter on which I wish to congratulate the minister, and it concerns the efforts he has made to establish an interdepartmental committee to consider the whole question of farm credit. As I mentioned earlier, farm credit is not limited to the Farm Credit Corporation under the Farm Credit Act. We also have the Veterans Land Act, the farm improvement loans, various provisions under ARDA for advancing money, and in practically every province there are provincial lending agencies which do a great deal to help farmers. It is the understanding of the minister, who is very familiar with farm credit problems, that we should have a complete study in depth of the entire subject of farm credit, and I think he is to be highly commended for bringing about this interdepartmental committee, which will study the entire question in an attempt to co-ordinate, first of all at the federal level, the various agencies which have provided credit to farmers—and I have mentioned them already. At the same time the committee will try to tie in and co-ordinate our lending efforts at the federal level with the efforts of provincial agencies in each of the provinces.

It is most important that there is no conflict of interest as to where these loans are to apply. In order to bring that about it is very necessary that the federal and provincial agencies work closely together to ensure that money lent to farmers by way of farm credit be used to the best possible advantage. As I said at the beginning of my remarks, credit is most important to any development, and is essential to a farming operation. Good, sound, intelligent credit planning, with money properly applied, used and administered will do a great deal to improve and assist our farm operations.

By the same token, too much credit or credit not properly handled will be just as disastrous to our farmers. It is not a matter of giving a lot of credit; it is a matter of intelligent provision and administration of credit to see it is properly used and applied. I think that the minister's committee will do a great deal to see that this will prevail; and as I said before the committee will study the entire question of farm credit, both as provided at the national level and at the provincial level, including the agencies involved, so as to determine what should best be done in the way of providing farm credit to the farming population of Canada.

In order to effect certain changes in the operations of the Farm Credit Corporation it is necessary to bring in amendments to our legislation. In glancing over this act we find that about half these amendments relate to provisions in the act, the remainder being regulations over which changes can be effected by the governor in council. I should like to make three or four suggestions which could be given effect to merely by changing the regulation. These would not require changes in the act. I make these suggestions to the minister and to the corporation for their consideration as possible improvements to the regulations, which would assist the Farm Credit Corporation.

First of all, Mr. Speaker, I think that farm credit and the whole matter of credit as it applies to the farmer and to the farm is a matter of education. We have to educate our farmers by working more closely with them, helping them in a supervisory way and discussing with them their problems as related to farm credit. In my opinion the supervisory and field offices should have substantial increases in staff so that they could provide for the farmers the close supervision, discussion, analysis assistance, and advice which is so necessary in order that farmers may make the best possible use of the credit facilities available and direct their farming operations in the most economic way, so that they will achieve what the minister so often describes and what we all so much desire, a sound basic economic farm unit.

According to clause 8 of the act the corporation may employ such officers and employees as it deems necessary for the purpose of this act and may fix their remuneration and terms of employment. In clause 11(d) it is also provided that the corporation may engage the services of appraisers, consultants, advisers and other persons, establish branches and so on. Therefore I think the act does give the corporation the authority and enables it to engage additional staff to assist them in supervising the very important matter of farm credit. I urge the minister to consider the suggestion that increases be made in the staffs at the offices of the Farm Credit Corporation in order to assist farmers to make intelligent use of the credit available to them.

I am in no way reflecting on the corporation in my next suggestion. There is enabling legislation in the sections to which I have just referred, and I would suggest that it might be most useful if something in the nature of an appeal board were set up. Many farmers feel they have not received satisfactory settlement of their applications. They feel that the corporation and its appraisers and officers do not dispose of their applications satisfactorily. I think that an independent appeal board composed of successful farmers who have a wide knowledge of farm operations and conditions in the particular area could serve a very useful purpose so far as the farmers are concerned, and also from the point of view of the officials of the Farm Credit Corporation. I am sure they feel that in many cases they have to make decisions of judgment and it is always very difficult to decide what should be given and what should be refused. In my opinion an appeal board of this nature would enable them to have their decision reviewed by an independent body which would be fair to their point of view and also to the opinions of the farmers involved. I insist that this does not cast any reflection on the excellent work which has been performed by officials of the Farm Credit Corporation, but I feel that such a board would assist them and would help to relieve the concern of many of our farmers that their applications for loans do not receive the disposition which they feel they should.

I should like to make a couple of other suggestions. I would think that the officials, appraisers and all the other people involved in determining whether or not a farmer should get a loan should make the broadest possible interpretation of the act and the regulations. I believe they should give the most liberal interpretation to the regulations so as to provide the maximum amount to the maximum number of farmers.

I believe that the corporation could be much more generous and much more lenient in their interpretation of the regulations if they had a more substantial amount of money with which to work, if there was some leeway, some volume of money provided as a buffer against losses which they may incur. I believe that the Farm Credit Corporation is a little too concerned about losses. I do not think they should be, because Canadian farmers have the best repayment record of any occupational group. The Farm Credit Corporation's losses have been extremely small and I think the corporation should be a little more lenient and generous in their interpretation of the regulations and in their disposition of the applications which they receive.

If we check the last statement of the Farm Credit Corporation we find that in the last fiscal year for which they have reported they had a loss of $1,080,000. I do not think the Farm Credit Corporation is different from any company, individual or organization. Nobody likes to show a loss. They would prefer to show a profit. In order for them to have the money to overcome these losses, which I am sure they do not like to report, I think that the funds made available to them by the government should be made available at a lower rate of interest. If they are going to lend money at 5 per cent I think funds should be made available to them at 4¼ or 4½ per cent. This would provide the corporation with sufficient leeway so that they could lend more generously to the farmers concerned.

Finally, I think this legislation is an excellent first step in the right direction. The minister has several other pieces of legislation to bring forward. I know that as time goes on he will probably be making improvements to this legislation as well. I commend him for his foresight and initiative in bringing this legislation before parliament, and I feel I can assure him that the farmers of Canada stand behind him 100 per cent.

[Translation]

Mr. Réal Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, in considering Bill No. C-100, one realizes that its purpose is to improve farming conditions and to help more adequately Canadian farmers, especially those in eastern Canada.

I heard the hon. member for Kings (Mr. Mullally) suggest more liberal credit facilities for all farmers. He pointed out that farmers need sound and intelligent credit facilities and he asked the minister to take the necessary measures so that the legislation will allow the largest loans possible to be granted to the greatest possible number of farmers.

Mr. Speaker, it is not the first time that we hear government members or politicians discuss farming. We heard about it during election campaigns and today we hear about it in parliament.

The government admits, therefore, that farm credit has not been adequate in the past and it is now suggested in Bill No. C-100 to increase the amount of loans to farmers and even to grant loans to farmers wishing to set up members of their family on farms.

Not so long ago, I was told about a farmer of 47 or 48 who applied for a loan to the Farm Credit Corporation. His application was turned down precisely because he was over 45 years of age.

The bill under consideration does not state whether farmers will be able to secure loans regardless of their age. On the other hand we know that when a farmer is old enough to draw his pension, he no longer looks after his farm and will certainly not seek a farm loan.

When a man of 46 or 47 is refused a loan because he is over the age of 45, I feel that the officials of the Department of Agriculture should see to it that such things do not occur again in our country, and especially in our province.

Mr. Speaker, everybody admits that agriculture and farmers are in an intolerable plight. From all parts of Canada, and especially the eastern part where assistance to farmers has left much to be desired in the past compared to other areas, farmers are complaining about the way they are treated; other farmers are quitting the farm because they cannot earn their living there any more and, therefore, they are forced to go elsewhere and work in the factories or in the mines. And that is because both federal and provincial governments have not done their share to assist farming.

It is so true that the Quebec minister of agriculture stated not long ago that there are 34,000 surplus farms in the province of Quebec, 34,000 farmers who cannot make a living on their farm, 34,000 farmers who are, in other words, a problem for the provincial and federal department of agriculture.

Then, the suggestion is made to the wealthy farmer to buy the small farms of those who are unsuccessful and to hire those people to work on their present farm, according to a formula of the ARDA plan. Therefore, one farmer would be the owner and the others would become wage earners as it is done in Russia under the communist system where farms belong to the state and farmers become its employees.

We know now the monumental failure of the farm collectivization in Russia. The same thing will happen here, in Canada, where our ministers of agriculture seem intent in following that course, taking his farm from the small farmer instead of helping him to live on it. At the same time, economists in the Department of Agriculture, and even agronomists, are making plans for the farmers. Instead of giving these people the opportunity of establishing their own plan, an outside plan is forced upon them even if it does not meet at all their requirements. We tell the farmer how to organize his life instead of giving him the means to do as he sees fit.

Self-styled experts come to inform farmers, to order them around, to prescribe or suggest the planning of their farm or their production and the marketing of their products.

It seems to me it would be simple to help the farmers by giving them complete freedom to organize their farm as they see fit, and providing them at the same time with the means to do so without always driving them to extremities, as is done today in the province of Quebec and in eastern Canada.

Mr. Speaker, Bill No. C-100 can still help farmers temporarily. A great number of farmers who have obtained farm loans from the federal or the provincial governments are hard put to meet their obligations. Those farmers were obliged to ask for delays to make their payments at the federal level and they had all the trouble in the world getting those farm loans from the province of Quebec. There were cases in our regions and throughout Quebec where the federal Department of Agriculture did not even take the trouble of making an investigation or going into the field to see what was going on when a farmer asked for a federal farm loan. From the provincial farm credit board to the federal Farm Credit Corporation, back and forth, the farmer was sent from one to the other, each not knowing what to suggest and telling him; wait, wait and your case will be settled.

Farm credit has been in force for at least 25 years in Quebec and throughout Canada and yet agriculture today finds itself in the same hopeless situation that prevailed in 1932, 1933 and 1934. And, what are we offered? A bill bearing No. C-100, and the assurance that something will be done to save the Canadian farmer.

How will that be done? By mortgaging his holdings for 25 or 30 years to come? The hon. member for Kings said a while ago that loans should be extended at a rate of 4½ and 5 per cent so as to allow the greatest number possible to take advantage of this rate of interest of 4 per cent—the bill suggests 5 per cent. Now, how much will this "sound and intelligent" credit cost the Department of Agriculture? Why ask a farmer who borrows $10,000 or $20,000 to repay $30,000 or $45,000? Why ask the farmer to sell one bag of potatoes for himself and one bag for financing at the same time? Why ask him to erect one building for himself and, at the same time, one for financing?

Why ask him to pay interest when the Minister of Agriculture knows very well that his department, should the government so decide, could use a "sound and intelligent" credit directly from the Bank of Canada with an interest rate no larger than the administrative cost, which would probably mean an interest of one quarter of 1 per cent. Then, we could say that we are assisting the Canadian farmer, which is not the case when we force him to repay three times the amount of the loan.

Mr. Speaker, when the Conservatives were in office, before the Liberals, they introduced bills in that direction. The Liberals follow in the footsteps of the Conservatives. Since confederation, we follow a beaten track and when some people suggest means to enable us to get out of that rut, immediately there is an uproar and they are ridiculed for offering a solution which would be much more in line with the present conditions of agriculture in the country, a real solution, and not a mere poultice on a wooden leg, like the ones offered by the government at the present time.

Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Agriculture states that we have 34,000 surplus farms in the province of Quebec. But it was those same farmers who, 30 years ago, were sent to new farmlands in Abitibi, Lake St. John or in Lotbinière county, for instance, because at that time, a back-to-the-farm movement was advocated and we voted $10 to $15 million a year to assist agriculture. That is the result, after 25 or 30 years of labour. Let us go and visit those pioneer regions, the farming communities of Abitibi, of Lake St. John or of Lotbinière, where, 25 years ago, we had 225 families and you only find 40, 50 or 60 of them today. Why? Because the farmer can no longer make a living on his farm.

Today, he will be able to remain on his farm if he is granted a loan sufficient for him to remain on his land, provided he is not forever struggling to make both ends meet, day after day, week after week, month after month, year after year.

There are surely some means to assist agriculture. In my opinion, the Minister of Agriculture could offer something other than this simple amendment to the Farm Credit Act of Canada. I should immediately ask the Minister of Agriculture, when he is authorized to borrow from the consolidated revenue fund up to $600 million instead of $400 million, not to grant loans only in western Canada but also in eastern Canada.

The Minister of Agriculture and the government have granted interest free loans to foreign countries, in order to enable them to buy Canadian production. The government have granted loans to agriculture in other countries, without interest, to help farmers in those other countries. We readily and enthusiastically agreed to give all the help we could afford to underdeveloped countries of the world, but we also have farmers in Canada whose farms are presently underdeveloped because there are no markets, because they cannot sell their products, or else, because they cannot get organized in order to improve their production.

Now, in the circumstances, the Minister of Agriculture and his department should cast their eyes in the direction of eastern Canada, where agriculture is quickly losing ground and is on the verge of collapsing.

This legislation makes millions of dollars available to Canadian farmers provided they are not obliged to pay three times the real value, because then it simply becomes inflation. If my hon. friend from St. Jean-Iberville-Napierville (Mr. Dupuis) wants to know what inflation is, let him just take a look at the outrageous interest which we are paying at all levels of government, here, with the Canadian people's money. To increase a debt, or to pay three times its value, that is inflation, because a $100,000 school will never be worth $300,000 nor will a $10,000 farm be worth $50,000 as is the case under our present financial system.

We are asking for concrete action and concrete results to assist the farmers of eastern Canada. Let us show more sympathy and more consideration for the eastern farmer. Not that we are against helping the western farmer, not in the least. On the contrary, we supported the government's effort to put western agriculture back on its feet, to help farmers get out of the slump they were in, from 1929 to 1939. Well, today, our eastern farmers are in exactly the same situation. Let us come to their assistance.

I feel confident that the minister will give serious consideration to the requests we put before him, not only on this side of the house, but also on his side, because there are, on that side also, hon. members who represent agricultural and rural ridings in the province of Quebec, as well as in Ontario and the maritime provinces.

Heed should be paid to the requests submitted by those people who are not reaching for the moon, but who want a just and fair treatment. The Minister of Agriculture must accede to the requests of eastern farmers.

Hon. Théogène Ricard (St. Hyacinthe-Bagot): Mr. Speaker, Bill No. C-100 is so important to a large area of my riding that I could not let it pass without saying a few words.

First of all, I want to pay tribute to the personnel of the Department of Agriculture, and more particularly to that of the Farm Credit Corporation. I want also to tell them that I greatly appreciated their co-operation, because each time I had to work with them, they acceded with great readiness to my requests.

However, I must say that I never insisted to obtain things which were not logical. On the contrary, I have always attempted to put forward requests as just and equitable as possible.

I would like to take this opportunity to speak about the staff of the St. Hyacinthe office and state that since 1958, in particular, the business of the corporation has been so good that the staff had to be tripled, even quadrupled. Now, if the staff had to be increased, it is because business had increased.

I am happy to learn that it is proposed to add beekeeping and to extend farm credit facilities to this area of agriculture.

Beekeeping is an important part of agriculture.

Since the minister worked for a number of years on a farm where bees were kept, that is in an apple-growing district, I am sure he will be interested in helping out a large number of our farmers. Indeed, in several parts of the province, of the country even, people carry out that kind of operation and the equipment required to produce honey is often quite costly.

The minister is not without knowing that beekeepers suffer heavy losses at times. For instance, if their hives are struck by an epidemic, they face hardship when they cannot replace their equipment.

Therefore, as I said, I am very happy to see that beekeepers will now be able to take advantage of farm credit.

Mr. Speaker, since you represent a predominantly agricultural riding, you must share my opinion and that of many others here in the house who think that a special effort must be made to preserve and protect the family farm.

In the province of Quebec, as well as in Ontario, the family farm is a unit that must be protected at all costs. Even if the government were to do more for that small farm unit, I am sure he would get the support of all members of parliament.

In recent years, when the cost of machinery is ever increasing, the farmers, especially the small farmers, must necessarily be assisted. I for one will certainly not blame the government for the assistance it will grant this sector of the population.

Moreover, I urge the minister to do his utmost so that, if possible, greater assistance under various forms may be granted small farm industry.

Unfortunately, while considering Bill No. C-100 we have to admit that the purpose of the government is not primarily to help the small agricultural industry, the family farm, but rather big enterprise.

My hon. friend, the member for Rosthern (Mr. Nasserden) said that special attention should be given this problem.

I think it is proper to remind the minister that by extending credit, by making credit more readily available to large farming organizations we are not really helping the farmer; if we do not protect and help the small farmer, it is not by training him that he will be able later on to operate on a big scale. The small farm is the real place where the farmer can familiarize himself with the many complex problems of nature and farming. That is why I believe that instead of trying to help the larger farm corporations, often operated by people known as gentlemen farmers whose main revenues are not derived from farming, we should rather try to help the small farmer.

When a farmer applies to the corporation to obtain a loan, it often happens that he comes up against regulations which work to his disadvantage, and I think that the minister should see to it that more consideration is given to the ability, the efficiency and the good will of those who wish to take up farming. Often well-meaning people would make excellent farmers, but they belong to large families and they do not have the necessary means to buy the smallest farm. In such cases, I think, that it would be advisable to consult the local authorities in order to inquire about the solvency and especially the desire of the young man to meet his obligations.

I would also like to recommend to the minister to make clear what the rate of interest would be. It is a known fact that farm loans are already available in the province of Quebec at a rate of interest of only 2½ per cent. This is surely a great help to farmers and the very small losses suffered by the provincial farm loan board prove beyond doubt that the person who established that agency in the province of Quebec and who was so strongly criticized by my hon. friends opposite, namely the late Maurice Duplessis, rendered great services not only to the farmers but also to the province in providing the required credit facilities to this segment of the population.

I would like the minister to consider the possibility of reducing if possible or at least of restricting to 5 per cent the interest rate on farm loans.

I should also like to ask the minister whether it would not be possible for the borrower to select his own notary instead of dealing with a notary who is designated to him by the corporation.

It is a well-known fact that among French Canadian families, businesses are transferred from fathers to sons at a particular notary office. It has become a custom among our people to do their transactions at the same office in order to facilitate research and also to eliminate expenses which can sometimes be burdensome, if a notary other than the one who is used to look after the business of the family is appointed to do the necessary work when a young farmer makes an application for a loan from the Canadian Farm Credit Corporation.

Once more, I heard tonight the hon. member for Kings pay tribute to the present Minister of Agriculture and praise the farm policy of the Liberal party. I would not like to seem unpleasant at all toward my friend, the Minister of Agriculture, but the flattering words which were uttered about him by my colleague from Kings compel me to set the record straight because according to the hon.

[Mr. Ricard.]

member, we would be ready to confer sainthood on the Minister of Agriculture.

However, I would like to put on the record an appraisal of the Minister of Agriculture made by the editor of La Terre de Chez Nous, the mouth-piece of farmers—if I may say so—in the issue of May 27, 1964, through Mr. Paul Henri Lavoie. Here is what Mr. Lavoie thinks of the present Minister of Agriculture, and I quote:

> Mr. Harry Hays does not have to deal so much with the problem of agriculture in his area, namely that of western Canada, because there is none or practically none. Especially when we consider the great sales of wheat made in the recent months and the prospects for the coming year.

What strikes me particularly is the following sentence:

> We are under the impression that he does not know anything about eastern agriculture and that he is not at all not interested therein. Yet, he is the one who makes decisions and this is already very serious.

That is quite another story that I deemed it my duty to recall so as to show both sides of the question. The hon. member for Kings also mentioned all the blessings bestowed by his party ever since it came to power. However, I should like to point out that since the minister has taken over the agriculture portfolio, the income of farmers in the province of Quebec has decreased.

The first step was to abolish the 25 cent per cwt. subsidy on milk, which resulted in a saving—according to the minister's own figures—of about $11 million.

Now, Mr. Speaker, if this new measure, made possible a saving of $11 million, a sum which was previously paid to farmers, well, I wonder if it is not from the farmers' pockets that this amount was extracted. If the hon. member for Kings considers this has been a blessing for the farmers, he has a peculiar idea of the interest we should show them.

I would also like to remind the hon. member for Kings, as well as the other members, and especially those of the province of Quebec, that in the programs presented during the election campaigns of 1962-63, the Liberal party had promised a minister of agriculture for eastern Canada. Where is this minister of agriculture for eastern Canada? Is this not another promise which was broken by the federal Liberal party? I urge those members to exert pressure in order to secure such an appointment, because during the campaign in our Quebec areas the appointment of a minister of agriculture for eastern Canada was promised.

I see my good friend, the hon. member for Argenteuil-Deux-Montagnes (Mr. Drouin) who was shouting himself hoarse at the time promising everything to the right and to the left, roaming through the various ridings and acting up behind the micro and on the television screen—

Mr. Drouin: Mr. Speaker, may I point out to the hon. member for St. Hyacinthe-Bagot that if he sat down, he would become minister of agriculture for the east sooner.

Mr. Ricard: Mr. Speaker, if I understood him rightly, the hon. member said that if I tried, we would probably have one sooner.

Mr. Paul: He said: "If you sat down".

Mr. Ricard: Mr. Speaker, I am certain that if a Conservative government made such a promise, it would be kept to the last dot.

Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Kings also whined and said that we did not do enough when we were in power, i.e. from 1958 to 1963.

Mr. Speaker, it must be admitted that it was impossible to remedy, within a period of six years, the negligence of the Liberal party which had been in office for 22 years and held the eastern as well as the western farmers, at its mercy.

Indeed, Mr. Speaker, it is a well-known fact that, when we assumed office, there was a wheat surplus for which we were not responsible. Yet, we tackled the problem under the leadership of the hon. member for Qu'Appelle (Mr. Hamilton) who proved his great ability as a salesman and a farmer, and we also succeeded in eliminating this wheat surplus, which was a very welcome action.

Mr. Speaker, since you were in the house at that time, you are no doubt aware that when the hon. member for Qu'Appelle introduced the so-called ARDA in the house, all the members of the Conservative party, including the hon. member for Qu'Appelle, were laughed at by the Liberal party. However, today, the Liberal members, having as their special ambassador the hon. member for Îles-des-la-Madeleine (Mr. Sauvé), whom I congratulate for his work, travel throughout the country praising the merits and advantages of ARDA, saying that the future of agriculture rests on it.

We now hear a different tune, and it would have been so easy then for the hon. member for Bonaventure (Mr. Béchard) to sing the praise of ARDA instead of running it down as he did at the time. In fact, if he and his colleagues of the province of Quebec had simply agreed to give the Conservative government a chance, if they had brought pressure to bear on the members of other governments, such as the Lesage government, for instance, to assume half of the responsibilities and co-operate with the planning in that direction, we would certainly have seen right away the results and the benefits of ARDA.

But in that field as in the others, Mr. Speaker, you cannot separate the Liberals. They always use the same tactics. They only have one objective and it is to get into office. And once they are in they have to burn what they worshipped and worship what they burned.

For the information of the hon. member for Kings and for other government members who might be inclined to think that the Conservative party did nothing for the farming class when it was in power, I would suggest that they refer to page 19 of the pamphlet published by the Farm Credit Corporation and to compare the loans made during the 22 years of Liberal regime with those made during the six years when the Conservative party was in power. They will notice that during the six years of our administration, we accommodated about the same number of farmers as the Liberals did in 22 years.

As a matter of fact, they granted loans to some 35,000 farmers, while during six years of Conservative administration—and I add the figures rapidly—34,854 farmers received loans from the Farm Credit Corporation. Under the Liberal regime, the money made available to the farmers amounted to some $112 million, while it went up to over $283 million during the six years of Conservative administration.

But those statistics do not keep government members from repeating, every time they can, that nothing was done by the Conservative party for the farming class.

I also wish to make a comparison between what was done under both governments in my riding. Before 1958, only six loans were granted by the Farm Credit Corporation, for a total amount of $37,400. On the other hand, for the years 1958 to 1963-64 inclusive, 114 loans were granted to farmers in my riding, for a total amount of $1,823,500.

Those are figures and comparisons which will certainly cause some meditation among government members of good faith. I know that there are some and I see my hon. friend from Champlain (Mr. Matte), for instance, as well as my good friend from Chambly-Rouville (Mr. Pilon) and many others whom

I would not like to forget, but I cannot name them for lack of time. I know that the figures I just quoted will convince them that they should stop criticizing when they speak of the Conservative government. I suggest that they should face the facts, which will enable them to see that the Conservative government did a lot for the farming class. Moreover, I suggest to the Minister of Agriculture to do only half that much, and he will have done a lot for farmers during his term of office, because if we believe what farmers say, he will not be there very long.

[Text]

Mr. D. M. Fisher (Port Arthur): Mr. Speaker, it would be unnatural for me to take too much time, when I do not come from a primarily agricultural constituency and I see such proponents of the sturdy rural yeomen as the hon. member for Essex South (Mr. Whelan) and the hon. member for Northumberland (Miss Jewett) waiting to speak. The minister has been congratulated on all sides; the hon. member for Kootenay West (Mr. Herridge) congratulated him for extending socialism; the Conservatives have been congratulating him for pushing on with the legislation they are so proud of; the congratulations that have been flowing from his own benches have been pretty hard to identify, other than I suppose you would just say they are part of the great man syndrome. I have been trying to think of some way in which I could congratulate him, and the only thing I could come up with was not very relevant to this bill. This is the question of flying around the country with a bunch of M.P.'s. I think it is very good for any minister of the crown to accept such a responsibility in view of the general stigma that attaches to M.P.'s these days, and I think the minister is very brave, if not for bringing in this bill, at least for suggesting he is prepared to go and stump the brushes and brakes of Canada with a group of M.P.'s. This is a real contribution he has put into the raising of the parliamentary prestige.

The only point I wanted to make, Mr. Speaker, is something that I cannot really see very clearly from the introduction the minister made when he indicated that this legislation was just a part of a much larger farm credit story that is being approached by an interdepartmental committee, and he mentioned ARDA. I happen to live in a region where there are very few farms of substance, except those that have some relationship to a pulpwood cutting operation. The plain fact of the matter is that the ARDA program which the minister threw in as providing some means of credit facilities is just not functioning in most of the country, and where it does function it always seems to be within a municipality or a regional framework that really does not open up the opportunities that this act does for an individual farmer, for example, who wants to acquire more forestry land or wants to turn some of his forestry land, by some fairly substantial expenditures, into a genuine tree farm with some prospects of developing a rotation pattern, and so on.

I would like to ask the minister why the definition that is contained in the act is not a bit more expansive, and whether he could give any indication of whether this act could be expanded just a little bit more broadly in its terms so that in those areas where farming shades into forestry, such as the area I happen to represent, there could be a greater opportunity to get credit.

I raise this point because there are many cases in my area of men getting most of their cash income from pulpwood cutting, either off their own property or from other contracts on crown lands, and they have not been able to get loans very easily under the act, partly because the equity they hold in value terms in their partly cleared forest holdings is too low. Since the ARDA program is still not extended in a national way to provide assistance to them, they have had substantial difficulties in getting the funds they require to enable them to branch out and extend this kind of odd mixed farming.

I gather from some of the remarks made by certain hon. members from Quebec that the problem in their province is not dissimilar to mine. Here again you have fringe or hinterland agriculture which badly needs credit. Yet in this legislation before us there does not seem to be any specific direction to the legislation, particularly in the definition given in the act; and I will not abuse your chairmanship, Mr. Speaker, by reading it. However, it is obvious that the definition of farming which obtains in this act is not the broad one which would include tree farming, or what we call pulpwood farming. Yet that is the real substance of agriculture in our area.

I want to put to the minister one of the reasons why I think an easier approach is necessary here. A great deal of the forested land in the region I represent not held by the crown is being bought up by successful men in the main, particularly doctors, dentists, and small entrepreneurs who have been successful.

Mr. Nesbitt: School teachers, too?

Mr. Fisher: Yes, and school teachers, too, now that their salaries are going up. The reason these people are doing this is so they can take advantage of such investment by way of a tax loss for a time so as to enable them to have better control over the taxation of their income. These people, once they build up holdings of a certain size, and because of their stature in the community, have little difficulty in getting credit. If they want to branch out into tree farming or the Christmas tree trade they are in a financial position to do so. But so often the man who starts with the small holding and a truck, and spends half his time in the winter hauling and half cutting, maybe on his own property and maybe not, and a little clearing and vegetable and root farming in the summer, is not in this enviable position. The point I am making is that the act as it exists at the present time is being enriched, if you want, for the more successful farmers and bigger operators, but is inadequate for the hinterland or shaded area of agriculture carried on in the region I represent.

Since I entered this house in 1957 I have noticed repeatedly in every farm debate we have had hon. members from farming areas getting up and pleading that we save the family farm. In my part of the country I think the family farm idea was given up long ago. I have rarely met a kid who wants to stay on a farm; he prefers to scrabble off to a bush camp, to school or to the boats, or to any place but the farm, mostly because the rewards have not been particularly great. I have a general impression that the family farm in this country is a passing thing. I am not sure, but certainly in many ways it is past in our area as the kind of subsistence enterprise which we traditionally think of.

However, there are a great many working men of relatively low income who move out, get a bit of bushland with some gardening on it, and they begin to develop a livelihood along this line. These men are obviously not the kind of farmer about which most members of parliament from the prairies talk. But the land they are using could be turned into something more valuable and is every bit as important; and it fits right into a market which is a sure and a rich one, namely the pulpwood market. For that reason I would appreciate a few comments from the minister on this aspect of the act and as to why it would not be possible to write into the act itself some more generous provisions for the use of loans for bushland and pulpwood purposes.

Mr. R. R. Southam (Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the privilege of making a few comments on Bill No. C-100, to amend the Farm Credit Act. In making these comments I should first like to congratulate the officials of the Farm Credit Corporation, some of whom I have become personally acquainted with over the past five or six years, for the effective and efficient way they are carrying out their duties respecting the application of the act. I have noticed statistics given by previous speakers with regard to the total number of loans processed under the act in the last five or six years. I think the figure quoted was approximately 38,500 loans, and this represents a good deal of work. Personally I became acquainted with Mr. Duncan, director of the Farm Credit Corporation in the province of Saskatchewan, several years ago. There were two of his advisers in the province, one at Carlisle, Saskatchewan and one at Estevan. In becoming acquainted with their work I came to appreciate the wonderful job they were doing.

I am sorry that I cannot join with my colleagues in complimenting the Minister of Agriculture for introducing these amendments. I appreciate the fact that he has done so, but many farmers are heaving a sigh of relief and saying that at long last the minister has finally brought to the house a piece of legislation in the interests of all farmers. The old saying that hope springs eternal is predominant in their minds, and they look forward to the fact that possibly he will introduce further legislation in this house which will be in the interests of agricultural industry of Canada.

With respect to the amendments, I should like to say that I express some doubt as to the benefits which are going to be derived from such a large increase in the loans. I think it is reasonable to suggest that in the course of five years, with our experience of the act, the amount of the loans should be increased some, but I do not see the logic to the argument that they should be doubled —increasing them from $20,000 to $40,000 and from $27,500 to $55,000. This to my mind might encourage vertical integration, a process which the argicultural industry has not been too happy about. It is also an encouragement to corporation farming.

Another point we should touch on, I think, is that this would have the tendency to create an incentive for an accelerated increase in land values. As our economy strengthens and time goes by I can readily understand that land values will increase; but the doubling of these loans in one fell swoop I feel is an encouragement to people who have land to sell it. This is particularly the case if a farmer wants to retire; the tendency is to take full advantage of this increase and inflate the value of the land. If we had been more modest in increasing these loans I think it would have been more beneficial.

With regard to the comments of the hon. member for Port Arthur (Mr. Fisher), I think that more consideration should be given to benefiting the smaller farmers, those with not too much collateral who would like to come under the act.

Young men who have grown up on the farm, are fully conversant with farming and would like to go into the business of farming find that this act does not provide them with too many benefits. Here is an area to which we in the house who are interested in agriculture, the members of the committee on agriculture and the minister himself should give consideration, so far as the application of the act is concerned.

There is another thing I am concerned about which was mentioned by the hon. member for St. Hyacinthe-Bagot (Mr. Ricard). I refer to interest rates. The minister did not spell out what the interest rate would be when he introduced the bill, but he said there would be an increase in the interest rate on loans between $20,000 and $27,500. He suggested that the increase would be related to the increase in administrative costs which he said would be close to 1 per cent, and that there might be a further slight increase to cover the reserve and so on. To my mind this indicates an increase up to 7 per cent.

I cannot understand how the government can introduce legislation like this which would make flesh of one and fowl of another, and I think this is what will happen. In fact, I believe this is contrary to the laws of economics. My experience in money matters leads me to say that if you buy in volume you usually receive a discount rather than an increase in the cost. Actually the farmer is purchasing something here when he takes a loan. He is purchasing credit. I think the minister has his philosophy in reverse. Another thing I have been concerned about has to do with the remarks the minister made on May 7 last when we were studying the estimates of the Department of Agriculture in committee of supply. As found on page 3025 of Hansard the minister said:

[Mr. Southam.]

We have tried, and I know the former government did also, to cut down the time it takes to service a loan so far as the farmers are concerned. After all, they are of No. 1 importance.

I could not agree more with that statement.

My instructions to Mr. Owen, the manager of the corporation, have always been that we want to cut down this time. Last year we were able to cut it down substantially. This year the members of the corporation are charged with the responsibility of cutting it down further—ten days—regardless of what lawyers are handling the loans.

The minister went on to say:

If the lawyers do not service them immediately and they have not got a real good excuse, then they are to be replaced. Everyone who has been appointed as a lawyer handling Farm Credit Corporation loans has been instructed to do the work quickly.

And so on. I think this is purely window dressing, Mr. Speaker, because I have here question No. 451 asked by the hon. member for Provencher (Mr. Jorgenson) under date of March 16, and the answer thereto tabled in the house on April 29, 1964. The answer gives the number of legal advisers of the Farm Credit Corporation. In looking over the figures I see that there has been a decrease of approximately 40 per cent in the number of legal advisers under the Farm Credit Corporation. In fact in the province of Saskatchewan the number was reduced from about 30 to 17.

I cannot understand how the minister's philosophy operates. It is rather like hitching a team of horses to a wagon with 125 bags of wheat and expecting them to pull the load, which they could not, and then unhitching one horse and expecting the other horse to pull the load anyway. It does not make sense. The applications made by farmers have to go to the legal advisers for processing. The hon. member for Mackenzie (Mr. Korchinski) pointed out this afternoon that the demand for loans has been rising gradually from a level of about 5,000 to approximately 8,000 last year. If this is the case, it stands to reason that we should be increasing the number of legal advisers or else the farmers are going to have to wait a long time to have their applications for loans processed. The fees are not too high for handling these applications, and I have found from experience that some lawyers have a tendency to leave these applications on the bottom of their work pile and to process other work that is more lucrative.

There is another problem that arises also. When you reduce the number of legal advisers it means that the farmer has to drive that much farther to get in touch with the lawyer if the lawyer is a little tardy in the processing of the application. The farmer is hesitant about having to drive another 100 or 150 miles to see the lawyer with the result that he waits patiently and the whole process is being slowed down under this system. Rather than all the window dressing that the minister engaged in on May 7 with regard to legal advisers under the Farm Credit Corporation, I suggest that he should at least maintain the same number of advisers as we did when we were in office and thus help to get these loan applications processed quickly. These are all the comments I wish to make tonight, Mr. Speaker. I look forward to the minister answering some of these suggestions when he replies.

Mr. J. N. Ormiston (Melville): Mr. Speaker, much of the ground with regard to farm credit has been covered by previous speakers. I should like to congratulate particularly the hon. member for Mackenzie (Mr. Korchinski) who put forward some of the points about which we are somewhat worried. I am sure the minister will take them into consideration.

With one or two exceptions, most of the speakers have dealt more or less with generalities. For a few minutes, Mr. Speaker, I should like to deal with a specific problem. In listening to the minister the other evening I was very pleased to hear him say that he was interested in the co-ordination of a study of the requirements of agriculture so far as farm credit is concerned. There is one point I should like to make in order that he may be able to give it some consideration. In making farm credit available I wonder whether the minister and his officials have given any consideration to the needs of those farmers who are faced with considerable expenditure because of anticipated costs pertaining to land improvement where irrigation is concerned. I am sure the minister is quite aware of this situation, not only in his province but in other provinces as well.

The cost of improving land for irrigation is considerable. There is a growing need for water conservation and the most practical and economic use of our water resources, and a considerable amount of land adjacent to our dams and reservoirs can be made suitable for irrigation purposes, but at considerable cost. The credit needed for this type of improvement is not readily available at the present time and it may be that the Farm Credit Corporation can be of considerable service in this regard. I put this forward to the minister for his consideration in the hope that he will give it the kind of consideration it deserves.

May I call it ten o'clock.

Mr. MacNaught: Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether we could continue for a few minutes to see if it would be possible to finish the debate on second reading of the bill tonight. There seems to be a general desire on the part of all hon. members to finish the debate on second reading. I understand that one of the matters that was to be debated after ten o'clock has been dropped, so that will shorten the debate then by ten minutes. If we could continue for another 15 minutes we might be able to give the bill second reading.

Mr. Churchill: If we are prepared to give second reading immediately, is it the intention to go into committee of the whole house on the bill tomorrow?

Mr. MacNaught: That is the intention.

Mr. Churchill: Then those members who had intended to speak on second reading could perhaps make their general speeches on the first clause of the bill.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is this agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to and bill read the second time.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Churchill: I should like to ask the acting house leader what the business of the house will be. In particular, would he inform us concerning the main estimates? May I just say here that we have had six days on the main estimates, and I estimate from experience in other sessions that we will need another 40 full days on the main estimates to cover the 20 departments that are ahead of us. Are we likely to have main estimates on Thursday and Friday in each successive week?

Mr. MacNaught: Mr. Speaker, so far as the main estimates are concerned, they will not be considered this week. In yesterday's Votes and Proceedings, there is a government notice of motion in the name of the Minister of Transport to refer the annual report for 1963 of Canadian National Railways, the auditor's report and the budget for 1964 to the standing committee on railways canals and telegraph lines. This motion will be the first order of business tomorrow. I understand that this motion will pass without any debate.

Next, we will resume the committee stage of the bill to amend the Farm Credit Act, and when that is concluded we will take second reading of Bill No. S-26, an act respecting the commission to establish and administer Roosevelt Compobello international park. When this is concluded, we will take the second reading of an act to amend the Export Credits Insurance Act. If any time is left over we will consider Bill No. S-10, which was passed in the Senate, to provide for the establishment of harbour commissioners.

Mr. Churchill: Is that for Wednesday and Thursday?

Mr. MacNaught: Wednesday.

Mr. Churchill: There is still uncertainty about Thursday, then?

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

(Subject matter of questions debated under adjournment motion.)

A motion to adjourn the house under provisional standing order 39A deemed to have been moved:

INCOME TAX—HOSPITALIZATION PLAN PAYMENTS BY EMPLOYERS TREATED AS INCOME

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): On Monday, June 1, Mr. Speaker, as recorded at page 3793 of Hansard, I asked this question on the orders of the day:

> Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of National Revenue? My question is based on information that came to light over the week end. Is it true that the government is now treating payments made by employers to government hospitalization plans as taxable income in the hands of the employee, even though this is not being done with respect to payments made by employers to private hospitalization or medical plans?

Mr. Speaker thought that there was not sufficient urgency in the question for it to be dealt with on orders of the day so I gave notice that I should like to ask it in one of these adjournment periods. I am in the position at the moment of not knowing what the minister's answer to my question is, as to whether or not this change has been made. But in view of the reports that suggest that this sort of taxation is to be applied, perhaps I had better use the minutes that are at my disposal to state my reasons for suggesting this is a change that should not be made.

[Mr. MacNaught.]

First of all, Mr. Speaker, may I point out that it has been the policy of successive governments to extend the exempting of payments for social security benefits so far as income tax is concerned. These exemptions, particularly with regard to payments made by employers, are spelled out in section 5, subsection (1), paragraph (a) of the Income Tax Act. I find on doing a little research that that paragraph has been amended several times and each time the list of exemptions from income tax has been extended. As I read the paragraph at the present time all the benefits that an employee may derive from his employer's contributions to social security plans of one kind or another are exempt from taxation. Now, however, we are led to believe that payments made by employers for hospitalization plans in a province where payments are made by taxation are to be made subject to federal income tax.

This means, as I understand it, that employees whose hospitalization is paid for them by their employers in Saskatchewan, Manitoba, Ontario and Prince Edward Island will have these amounts added to their income, and hence the result will be an increase for their income tax, starting for the year 1964.

Quickly and briefly, Mr. Speaker, there are four points I want to make. First, this is a reversal of the trend in which successive governments have moved. I have indicated that by referring to the amendments which have been made to section 5(1)(a) of the Income Tax Act. I think this reversal would be a retrograde step.

The second point I want to make is that if employees are going to have to pay income tax on what their employers pay for them into government hospital plans, but are not required to pay it on what their employers pay into private hospital plans, the government immediately sets up a discrimination between these two kinds of plans. I suggest that kind of discrimination is most unfair and that it will lead from one inequity to another.

The third thing I want to say is that this proposal, if it is being carried out, will establish unfairness as between provinces. It seems to me to be manifestly unfair that employees in the four provinces I have named will have to pay income tax on what their employers pay for them by way of hospitalization benefits, whereas the employees in other provinces will not have to do so.

There are national employers in this country who have employees in all ten provinces, and there are cases where employers treat their employees alike in all ten provinces, yet in four of the provinces those employees will have to pay extra income tax on what is paid for them by their employers. I think that is manifestly unfair.

Fourth, the government has been telling us, ever since the royal commission on taxation was set up, each time we ask for any concession or any reduction in taxes, to wait until the whole question of taxation is reviewed. I suggest to the government that it listen to its own slogan. It is quite unfair to tell us we must wait, as I have been told, for full exemption with regard to trade union dues until the whole question of taxation policy has been reviewed, while the government lets its own department make a change in a ruling of this kind.

I hope, Mr. Speaker, that the whole of this speech I have made is unnecessary. I hope the reports that this kind of ruling has been made by the Department of National Revenue are false. If they are, I will welcome and applaud such a statement by the minister. On the other hand, if the reports are correct I hope the minister will assure us that the proposed change will be cancelled just as soon as it can possibly be done.

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Acting Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, first of all I should like to thank the hon. member for not pressing his question forward for discussion early last week when he might well have done so, and I am very appreciative of his courtesy in that. I have not overlooked it or forgotten it.

The simple answer to the question as posed by the hon. member is no. However that answer is perhaps in itself not wholly accurate because the question, as worded, is rather complicated and has a lot of material in it that does not deal specifically with some of the points he raised in debate. There has been no change in the taxation policy or law on this point.

Because of the abbreviated time available, perhaps I had better start my explanation of what the situation is by reading section 5 of the Income Tax Act. It reads:

(1) Income for a taxation year from an office or employment is the salary, wages and other remuneration, including gratuities, received by the taxpayer in the year plus

(a) the value of board, lodging and other benefits of any kind whatsoever (except the benefit he derives from his employer's contributions to or under a registered pension fund or plan, group sickness or accident insurance plan, medical services plan, supplementary unemployment benefit plan, deferred profit sharing plan or group term life insurance policy) received or enjoyed by him in the year in respect of, in the course of, or by virtue of the office of employment—

And so on. The point I am making here is that the benefits, the premiums paid by the employees, if made on their behalf by the employers, have always been deemed to be part of income and therefore taxable. Some large employers in Ontario—and I think this is where the misunderstanding which is causing the hon. gentleman concern arose—have not been setting this out as part of the wages of their employees. This position was not discovered until very recently, and it was upon the discovery of this practice, which I may say is contrary to the law, that steps were taken to which the hon. member refers.

There has been no change in the law and there is no discretion vested in the minister in this regard. It was, as I say, the discovery of this practice which led to the misunderstanding which has taken place—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order.

Mr. Knowles: So the answer is yes, not no.

Mr. McIlraith: No.

LABOUR RELATIONS—BRITISH COLUMBIA—FREEDOM OF WORKERS TO JOIN UNION OF CHOICE

Mr. T. S. Barnett (Comox-Alberni): On June 4 I addressed a question to the Minister of Labour on the orders of the day as follows:

In view of the fact that MacMillan, Bloedel and Powell River Limited, the largest industrial concern in the province of British Columbia, is currently trampling upon the principles of the I.L.O. convention respecting the right of workers freely to enjoy the protection of the union of their choice, will the minister use his good offices with Mr. J. V. Clyne, the head of that company, to alter the course of action presently being pursued by his company?

Mr. Byrne: Would the hon. member give the number of the I.L.O. convention, please?

Mr. Barnett: I will make reference to that in the course of my remarks.

It was suggested that this was a matter for the order paper. However, I felt the situation was an urgent one, and in any event it can perhaps more properly be explained and dealt with under this order. My question arises out of the fact that local 15 of the office employees international union is currently engaged in a legal strike against MacMillan, Bloedel and Powell River Limited. The fact that some 60 workers had established picket lines had resulted in the complete closure of all the major industrial plants in the Alberni valley. This situation is now in its third week which means that over 3,000 workers in the valley are without employment. There were initially various issues between the union and the employers, some of them having to do with wages and working conditions, but at the present time the only obstacle to a settlement of this situation, which would enable not only these office workers to conclude an agreement and go to work but which would also enable the members of several other unions to return to employment, is the refusal of the company to agree to any form of union security clause in the settlement.

A union statement indicates they are asking for a union security clause similar to that which now exists in every other agreement their union has in British Columbia. It is also similar to the security clauses in existence in the agreements with other unions —the papermakers, the electrical workers, the international woodworkers of America, and so on.

I feel this is a situation which should not be allowed to continue, if any effort can properly be made to bring it to an end. I have raised this matter because in the field of the International Labour Organization—and I have here volume two of the international labour code, 1951—the matter is expressly dealt with. On page 29 are set out some statements in this connection dating from 1947. I want to point out that the declaration of Philadelphia recognizes the solemn obligation of the International Labour Organization to further among the nations of the world programs which will achieve, among other things, the effective recognition of the right of collective bargaining and that the resolution that was adopted provides for the exercise of the right of freedom of association without fear of intimidation, coercion or restraint from any source. That resolution later became a convention and has been approved by the United Nations.

I should point out that the jurisdiction of the federal Minister of Labour is directly involved in this question, because among those who are now suffering loss of employment are a good many members of the longshoremen's union on the west coast, which of course comes under federal labour jurisdiction. But even apart from that, in view of the fact that the minister of labour and the deputy minister of labour of British Columbia have more or less publicly stated that they are throwing up their hands, that there is nothing more they can do, I feel it is a situation where the good offices of the federal Minister of Labour might be of some value in bringing this situation to an end.

The last report I have on the situation, which I received this evening, is that at the moment no negotiations are going on and that the only point at issue is the recognition of a minimum security clause, which I think all of us who have any experience in trade union dealings recognize is basic to the protection of the right of free association and free organization. I freely confess that as far as I am concerned I do not think I am in a position personally to use any good offices with Mr. J. V. Clyne, because I have stated on several occasions that I find he acts as an autocratic ruler of a baronial empire, the largest one in British Columbia, and at times appears to me to regard himself as being in a higher position of authority than the government of that province. Indeed, the admission by the provincial minister that he is powerless to cope with this situation I think suggests that the only resort left is for the federal Minister of Labour, with the prestige and backing of Canada's support for the principle involved in the International Labour Organization conventions, to come into the picture and perhaps persuade this gentleman that he should sit down and at least grant to these workers the same rights as have already been won over the years by the other workers in the plant involved, and in the other plants in the Alberni valley.

Mr. J. A. Byrne (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, the federal government, and more specifically the Minister of Labour (Mr. MacEachen), are very deeply concerned that such a large number of people on the west coast are affected by this strike. On the other hand, as the hon. member has himself indicated, it is a matter for the department of labour of the province of British Columbia. Mr. Sands has been endeavouring to bring the two opposing parties together. It may be that he had admitted he is unable to make any progress. Still, Mr. Speaker, this does not provide a vehicle by which the federal Department of Labour can impose their jurisdiction upon those people in British Columbia who come under the jurisdiction of the provincial authority. It is regrettable too that there are employees involved who normally come under the jurisdiction of the Department of Labour, such as seamen and fishermen. However, they are not directly concerned with the labour dispute.

There is little more that can be said. It is the opinion of the Department of Labour that no conventions of the I.L.O. are being violated in this instance. This is a legitimate legal strike and it is a matter of one group effecting economic pressure upon another in order to reach a settlement. There is unquestionably quite a wide difference of opinion on the question of union security or the closed shop, as seemed to be indicated in the first request. However, that does not in any way permit the federal government to move into this jurisdiction. Certainly we would wish to express our desire that a settlement be reached, but I am sure it would be considered a violation of provincial rights to interfere at this time.

Motion agreed to and the house adjourned at 10.24 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Wednesday, June 10, 1964

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

PRESENCE IN GALLERY OF CHANCELLOR AND FOREIGN MINISTER OF GERMANY

Mr. Speaker: The house is especially honoured today by the presence in the gallery of two very distinguished visitors. On behalf of all hon. members it gives me great pleasure to welcome the distinguished chancellor of the Federal Republic of Germany, Dr. Ludwig Erhard, and his foreign minister Dr. Gerhard Schroeder.

In times past Dr. Erhard has visited Ottawa more than once as his country's minister of economics, the position from which he directed with such energy and skill the remarkable economic recovery of post-war Germany. This, however, is our first opportunity to receive him as chancellor of Germany.

In recalling the spectacular economic recovery of post-war Germany with which the chancellor is so closely associated we should not overlook another important development which is too little known and acknowledged; the establishment of a modern and stable parliamentary democracy in the federal republic. Our visitors have played a central role in the emergence of a new Germany and the establishment of a democratic society based on the dignity of the individual and the rule of law.

In this process the new German parliamentary institutions have played a most important role. Indeed, within the past few weeks we have had the pleasure of welcoming a group of German parliamentarians with whom we were able to have a most profitable exchange of views, and during the course of the next few days our own former Speaker, the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert), will be paying a personal visit to the Bundestag in Bonn.

Conscious of our common heritage and purpose, we are deeply honoured today to receive the German chancellor and foreign minister and to extend to them a warm "herzlich willkommen."

Hon. Members: Hear, hear.

PRIVILEGE

STATEMENT BY MR. SPEAKER ON QUESTION OF MEMBER FOR YUKON

Mr. Speaker: If hon. members will bear with me I would like to make a statement on a question of privilege raised last Friday by the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen). On Friday last the hon. member for Yukon rose on a question of privilege having to do with certain rulings of the Chair the previous day. The hon. member referred me to Beauchesne's fourth edition, page 57, where is found the following citation:

> The Speaker's jurisdiction does not extend to words outside the house.

The hon. member then added:

> There is a reference there to May's Parliamentary Practice, thirteenth edition.

I might perhaps now allude to this reference, which will explain the quotation from Beauchesne:

> In case of disorder the jurisdiction of the house is also extended to the lobbies. On the 11th April, 1877, on the numbers being declared after a division, complaint was made to the house by Mr. Sullivan of an offensive expression addressed to him by Dr. Kenealy in the side lobby during the division just taken. Mr. Speaker observed that, had the expression complained of been used in the house it would have been his duty to deal with the matter on his own authority; but, as the complaint referred to words used in the lobby, he left it to the consideration of the house and called upon Dr. Kenealy to explain his conduct.

In May's sixteenth edition at page 133, which I read to the house on Thursday, I find the following:

> Alleged breaches of privileges or contempts committed out of the house or in the precincts of the house but not in its actual view may be brought to the notice of the house.

We may from the beginning draw two conclusions from these statements. The first is that contempts committed outside the house may be dealt with in the house itself, and I will refer to the existing precedents in a moment; the second conclusion to be drawn is found in a quotation from Beauchesne in paragraph 2 of citation 104, which is as follows:

> (2) It has often been laid down that the Speaker's function in ruling on a claim of breach of privilege does not extend to deciding the question of substance whether a breach of privilege has in fact been committed—a question which can only be decided by the house itself.

On Thursday, June 4, without restating here the question of privilege, I said:

I am going to make a personal appeal to the right hon. Leader of the Opposition to withdraw those words or take other steps which will amount to a withdrawal . . .

I must confess that this might not have been the exact procedure which is usually followed. At that time I was thinking of another quotation of Beauchesne which is found in paragraph 5 of the same citation, 104:

(5) As a motion taken at the time for matters of privilege is thereby given precedence over the prearranged program of public business, the Speaker requires to be satisfied, both that there is a prima facie case that a breach of privilege has been committed, and also that the matter is being raised at the earliest opportunity.

When the leader of the New Democratic party rose on a question of privilege it was normal for the Speaker to assume, as the matter had taken place outside the house, that a motion would be made where the Speaker might have decided if there was a prima facie case of privilege. The usual proceedings would then have followed. This is in accordance with what is stated in the parliamentary dictionary by Abraham and Hawtrey at page 41:

If the Speaker decides that the member has made out a prima facie case, the member must make some motion in reference to the matter. He usually moves that the matter of the complaint be referred to the committee on privileges but he may content himself with moving a resolution to the effect that the act of which he complains constitutes a breach of privilege.

In other words, what the Speaker has then to decide is whether, assuming that the facts are as stated, the conduct complained of could be reasonably held to be a breach of privilege; and here I might in passing refer to what Abraham and Hawtrey say on page 40:

To constitute a breach of privilege a statement reflecting on the conduct of a member in his capacity as a member need not be untrue but it must tend to lower the house in the eyes of the public.

In other words, as stated by Bourinot in his third edition, at page 152:

To constitute a breach of privilege such libels must concern the character or conduct of members in that capacity.

Parliament being the highest court in the land, Bourinot also writes in his fourth edition, at page 38, in relation to privileges:

Their extent and nature have frequently been subjects of controversy, but in the main they are decided by the legislature itself and its decisions, speaking generally, cannot be called into question by any other court or authority.

Among the Canadian precedents in relation to alleged breaches of privileges or contempts committed outside of the house and dealt with by the house itself are the following cases, which I need not examine in detail: the Elie Tassé case in 1873; the Cinq-Mars case in 1906; the Miller case in 1913; a case in February, 1914, where Mr. Law rose on a question of privilege regarding newspaper statements; two other cases on the 8th and 15th of April, 1915; also on February 3, 1916, where a member complained of an article in the Toronto Star being incorrect in reporting him; then the Spear's case in 1920; and finally, the Sperry and Hutchinson Company case in 1960. There would be no great advantage in reviewing these cases at the moment.

Now to come back to our second point, that is that these matters are to be decided by the house itself; I must say that on Thursday last, the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam having raised the question of privilege and not having concluded by making a motion, I was put in the position where it was normal that I should allow the right hon. Leader of the Opposition to make an answer. Other members then rose on the question of privilege, among them the member for Winnipeg North Centre, the member for Villeneuve, the member for Quebec-Montmorency, the member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands, the member for Parry Sound-Muskoka; and it was at that stage that I did make a personal appeal to the Leader of the Opposition that he might, and I quote, "help us out of a very difficult situation at the moment".

I will now deal with the procedure on a breach or alleged breach of privilege and refer to Bourinot, fourth edition at page 63, where he states:

When the offence is contained in a newspaper, the latter must be brought up and read at the table unless the extracts are of an inordinate length and then the member must conclude with a motion founded on the allegation that he has brought forward. It is irregular to make such a complaint unless the member intends to conclude with a motion.

In consequence, the only obligation of the Speaker is and should be that, before putting the motion, he would decide if there is a prima facie case of a breach of privilege. If he does find a prima facie case then the house, as stated by Bourinot, at page 62:

Will consider whether the member has excused himself or whether he is guilty of the offence. If the house come to the latter conclusion, he will be declared guilty of a breach of the privileges of the house.

Bourinot also states at page 64 that:

When a member has reason to complain of a speech made by another member outside the house, he must bring up the paper, but it is customary, as a matter of courtesy, to give notice of his intention to the member complained of and ask him formally whether the report is correct before proceeding further in the matter.

To give a last quotation from Bourinot, at page 305 the author writes:

When a member proposes to make a motion touching another member, it is frequently found convenient that he state his intentions in his place, and then give notice that he will move it when motions are called in due order on a subsequent day.

As to precedents in the United Kingdom, referring to the fact that the authority of the house supersedes that of the Speaker in the case of occurrences which have taken place outside the house, here are two such precedents which appear to be applicable.

On April 11, 1877, on a question of privilege raised by Mr. Sullivan complaining that an hon. member had called him a liar in the lobby, Mr. Speaker said:

If such an expression as that stated by the honourable member for Louth had been made within my hearing in the House, of course it would have been my duty at once to interpose on my own authority. The expression, however, was used in the lobby and it will be for the House to determine what course to take under the circumstances... it becomes my duty to call upon the member for Stoke that he may be heard by the House in explanation of the statement made by the member for Louth.

Later on the Speaker repeated:

It is for the House to determine whether that observation should be withdrawn by the honourable member.

Then on July 21, 1887, respecting a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker made the following statement:

There have been repeated complaints made to name the members of this House in the course of the session, of language used in the lobbies which I have thought to be derogatory to the dignity and character of the house. The honourable gentleman was deeply pained and I told him that I thought that he was justified in bringing the matter before the house; that I thought it was not for me, in a case of that sort, to intervene; and that the House should decide for itself if he thought proper to bring the matter before the House.

However, in that case the Speaker did discuss at length what had happened in the house, and he concluded as follows:

I hardly know whether I have transgressed the bounds of my duty to the house in what I have said; but I would respectfully urge the house, after the formal, distinct, and unreserved apology, as I regard it, that the apology should be accepted by the house, and that the house should no longer pursue this question.

In the same manner I might say myself that I hardly know whether I transgressed the bounds of my duty to the house last Thursday, but I was satisfied on that day that the withdrawal of the right hon. Leader of the Opposition should be accepted and that the house should no longer pursue the question.

Having regard to what I have said and to the numerous precedents I have quoted, I believe that it is quite clear, in respect to incidents which take place outside the house, that it is the house itself which has the authority and responsibility of resolving any questions of privilege. I suggest that hon. members in future when raising questions of privilege, such as those raised last Thursday, should at the very beginning of their speech advise the Speaker that at the end of their statement they will conclude with a motion so that, if such a matter is found to be a prima facie case of breach of privilege and also if it has been raised at the earliest opportunity, the house may deal with it according to the rules and the recognized practice.

COMMITTEES OF THE HOUSE

Second report of special committee on defence—Mr. Hahn.

Second report of standing committee on standing orders—Mr. Asselin (Notre Dame de Grace).

RAILWAYS, CANALS AND TELEGRAPH LINES—CONCURRENCE IN FIRST REPORT

Mr. J. T. Richard (Ottawa East) presented the first report of the standing committee on railways, canals and telegraph lines, and moved that the report be concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

LIBRARY OF PARLIAMENT

CONCURRENCE IN REPORT OF JOINT COMMITTEE

Hon. Guy Favreau (Minister of Justice) moved:

That the report of the joint committee of both houses on the library of parliament, presented to this house by Mr. Speaker on Monday, May 25, 1964, be now concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

Government Notice of Motion

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS—TRANS-CANADA AIR LINES

REFERENCE OF ANNUAL REPORTS AND BUDGETS TO STANDING COMMITTEE

On the order:

Government notices of motion—The Minister of Transport—that the annual reports for 1963 of the Canadian National Railways and of the Canadian National Railways securities trust, the auditor's report to parliament for 1963 in respect of the Canadian National Railways, tabled on April 7, 1964, the budget for 1964 of the Canadian National Railways, tabled on March 30, 1964, the annual report of Trans-Canada Air Lines for 1963, the auditors' report to parliament for 1963 in respect of Trans-Canada Air Lines, tabled on March 6, 1964, and the budget for 1964 of Trans-Canada Air Lines, tabled on February 28, 1964, be referred to the standing committee on railways, canals and telegraph lines.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether you would permit me to say that I understand there will be unanimous consent to adopt this motion immediately. If that is the case it would seem redundant to have it transferred from one order to the other, and I would make the necessary motion.

Mr. Speaker: Does the house give unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Translation]

Mr. Gilles Grégoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, we are prepared to give our consent, but one thing is surprising in the resolution. Usually budgets of the C.N.R. and Air Canada were referred to a sessional committee of the house —besides that is what the acting leader told us yesterday. The record shows that budgets of the C.N.R. and Air Canada are to be referred to a sessional committee of the house; it has always been so in the past. Now, today, request is made that they be referred to the standing committee on railways, canals and telegraph lines, when there is no mention of airlines among the subjects to be considered by that committee.

That is why I think this calls for an explanation by the Minister of Transport. Why this change of policy this year, compared to previous years?

[Text]

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, if I may be permitted to say a word, there are two reasons. The first is that it is contemplated that there is going to be legislation which normally goes to the standing committee, and it was thought it would perhaps be better to try to concentrate in one committee all those members really interested in transport questions so they would be continuously informed throughout the course of the session. The second reason is that we do seem to have a great deal of committee work going on during the present session, and a multiplicity of committees would create difficulty. I can assure all hon. members, if assurance is necessary, which I know it is not, that any substitutions of membership desired by any party will be promptly made by the whip.

Mr. Speaker: Is it agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

QUESTIONS

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

SERVICES OF FEDERAL DEPARTMENTS, LABRADOR BOUNDARY CHANGES

Question No. 744—Mr. Macquarrie:

1. Have the services of the surveyor general of Canada, or any other agency of the Department of Mines and Technical Surveys, been requested by either the government of Quebec or the government of Newfoundland regarding their announced intention to discuss the exchange of 22,000 square miles of territory in Labrador and northern Quebec.
2. Have any departments of the government of Canada been advised of the projected boundary changes?

Mr. Lamontagne: 1. No.

2. No.

TWELVE MILE FISHING LIMIT

Question No. 880—Mr. Lambert:

1. What is the effective date of the proclamation of the Canadian government of a 12 mile limit off Canada's coast line?
2. Have any protests been received from foreign governments concerning the proclamation by Canada of the 12 mile limit?
3. How does the government of Canada propose to enforce this 12 mile limit?
4. What is the nature of the enforcement fleet referred to recently by the Minister of Fisheries on which Canada will rely?

Mr. Robichaud: 1. Legislation to establish a 12 mile fishing limit was introduced in the Senate on April 30.

2. I informed the house on April 27 that discussions have been taking place with countries which may be affected by Canadian action. We are hopeful that satisfactory arrangements will be worked out with countries concerned.

3. As above indicated, legislation for this purpose has now been introduced.

4. Approximately 26 patrol vessels are available and they will be supplemented by air patrols.

IMMIGRANT STATUS OF HAL BANKS

Question No. 974—Mr. Coates:

Does the government intend to cancel the landed immigrant status of Hal C. Banks?

Mr. Badanai: Since Mr. Banks' conviction is under appeal, it would not be appropriate to answer the question at this time.

OTTAWA—SHARE IN COST OF UNDERGROUND WIRING

Question No. 1,000—Mr. Prittie:

1. Has the federal government received a request from the city of Ottawa asking that the government share in the cost of placing overhead wiring underground in the downtown area and, if so, when was this request received?

2. Has any decision yet been made by the federal government?

Mr. Davis: Yes. The previous administration received a letter from the mayor of Ottawa dated December 9, 1961.

2. In a letter dated February 5, 1962, the Minister of Public Works replied to the mayor outlining an arrangement differing from that proposed by the city. The minister's letter stated that the federal government is prepared to concur in the placing of wiring underground where this is the policy of the municipality and where the contribution of the federal government is the same as any other property owner. However, in special cases, placing of wiring underground would be supported for aesthetic or other reasons where there is a clearly identified federal interest—for example, in those areas of Ottawa forming part of the national capital development.

INVITATIONS TO JUSTICE MINISTER, SKEENA CONSTITUENCY

Question No. 1,010—Mr. Howard:

Has the Minister of Justice been invited to attend any function or visit any place in the electoral district of Skeena for 1964, and, if so, with respect to each such invitation, by whom was the invitation given, for what function or purpose, at what time or times, and has it been (a) accepted or (b) declined?

Mr. Favreau: No.

R.C.M.P. BARRACKS CONSTRUCTION, PELLY, SASK.

Question No. 1,038—Mr. Korchinski:

Has the government purchased any land at Pelly, Saskatchewan, with the intention of constructing new R.C.M.P. barracks and, if so, what date was the purchase made, and when does the government intend to proceed with the construction?

Mr. Favreau: Land was purchased at Pelly, Saskatchewan as a site for construction of R.C.M. Police detachment quarters; the date of purchase being September 15, 1961. No date has yet been set for construction of the detachment quarters and no funds are available in the estimates for 1964-65.

REQUESTS FOR RAILWAY LINE ABANDONMENT, COMPTON-FRONTENAC CONSTITUENCY

Question No. 1,142—Mr. Latulippe:

1. During the past two years, how many requests has the board of transport commissioners received from railway companies operating in Compton-Frontenac (a) for the abandonment of certain lines (b) for the abandonment of certain stations, and how many such requests have been approved and in what areas?

2. Following each decision, how many people were laid off because of the changes made in the railway schedule?

[Translation]

Answer: The Board of Transport Commissioners for Canada advises as follows:

1. (a) None. (b) Three applications were received for authority to retire station buildings. Two of these were approved, one at Birchton, P.Q. and one at Gould, P.Q. Two applications were received for authority to remove station agents and appoint caretakers. These were approved, one at Bury, P.Q. and one at Johnville, P.Q.

2. This information is not on record with the board.

SALE OF T. MCAVITY LTD., SAINT JOHN, N.B.

Question No. 1,148—Mr. Fairweather:

Was the sale of T. McAvity Limited of Saint John, New Brunswick, to Crane ,Canada) Limited the subject of any investigation under the provisions of the Combines Investigation Act and, if so, what was the result of such an investigation?

Mr. Macdonald: The director of investigation and research under the Combines Investigation Act scrutinizes all significant mergers to determine whether the situation warrants formal inquiry under the act. The general practice, however, is that no information is given out as to whether a particular inquiry is being pursued with respect to particular companies or individuals unless and until a report is published.

*NATIONAL HOCKEY TEAM

Question No. 1,154—Mr. Winkler:

Has the physical fitness and amateur sports council been requested by the Canadian hockey association to assist in the establishment of a Canadian hockey team and, if so, (a) will this hockey team be for the purpose of international competition (b) will it be located in Ottawa?

Questions

Mr. Munro: The Canadian amateur hockey association has requested assistance under the fitness and amateur sport program for the establishment of a national amateur hockey team in Canada.

(a) Yes.

(b) Ottawa has been suggested as a possible location but this is a matter under study by a committee of the Canadian amateur hockey association.

TON MILES FLOWN BY CANADIAN AIR CARRIERS

Question No. 1,159—Mr. Latulippe:

1. What was the number of ton miles flown by Canadian air transport firms last year?
2. What percentage does such number represent of the total ton miles flown by members of the international civil aviation organization?
3. How does Canada rank in terms of ton miles flown per year?
4. What is the increase in ton miles flown by Canadian carriers over the previous three years?

[Translation]

Answer: 1. 419,262,000.

2. 3.6 per cent.

3. In 1962, Canada ranked fourth.

4. From 1959 to 1960 an increase of 12.0 per cent; from 1960 to 1961 an increase of 16.5 per cent; from 1961 to 1962 an increase of 10.1 per cent; from 1962 to 1963 an increase of 6.9 per cent.

*SUBSIDIES TO POLARIS SHIPPING COMPANY

Question No. 1,170—Mr. Marcoux:

1. Are subsidies paid to Polaris Shipping Company by the departments of transport and fisheries toward the construction of the ship Cacouna by Geo. T. Davie & Sons Ltd. and, if so, what are the names and addresses of the directors of the Polaris Shipping Company?
2. What are the amounts of the subsidies paid to the company by the departments of transport and fisheries toward the construction of the ship Sillery by Geo. T. Davie & Sons Ltd.?

Mr. Stewart: I am informed by the departments of transport and fisheries as follows:

1. Yes. Company representatives dealing with the Canadian maritime commission are: president Captain Vallier Bouchard, Rimouski, Quebec; secretary, Mr. Laurent-P. Bolduc, Ste. Foy, Quebec.

2. The amount of subsidy paid to the shipyard on behalf of the owner is $400,000. There is a balance outstanding of $100,000.

No subsidies on these vessels have been paid by the Department of Fisheries.

[Mr. Winkler.]

WINTER WORKS EXPENDITURES, BRUCE COUNTY, ONT.

CIVIL SERVICE COMPETITION 63H-664

Question No. 1,175—Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria):

1. What were the results of the recent civil service commission competition No. 63 H-664, fish culture officer?
2. What was the closing date of this competition?
3. Who was the successful candidate?
4. What were the names and addresses of all others who entered the competition?

Mr. Lamontagne: I am informed by the civil service commission as follows:

1. As a result of competition 63H-664, fish culture officer 1, Department of Fisheries, various centres in the province of Nova Scotia, an eligible list, containing the names and addresses of the 27 successful candidates was established. This eligible list was published on page 1245 of the Canada Gazette of April 25, 1964.

2. January 15, 1964.

3. This competition was held to provide eligibles to fill vacancies that may arise in the fish culture stations throughout the province of Nova Scotia during the next 12 months. No appointment has as yet been made as none has been requested by the department.

4. The names and addresses of the successful candidates appear in the list referred to in question No. 1. Having regard for the right to privacy of the candidates and the possibility that publication of information could prove not only embarrassing but prejudicial to them, the commission holds in confidence the names and addresses of candidates who were not included on the eligible list.

POST OFFICE CARETAKER, CADILLAC, QUE.

Question No. 1,182—Mr. Caouette:

1. Has the Post Office Department called for tenders for the position of caretaker for the Cadillac post office and, if so, what are the names of the tenderers and what was the amount of each tender?

2. Has the position been awarded to one of the tenderers and, if so, what is the name of successful tenderer?

3. If the position has not yet been awarded when will the department arrive at a decision?

[Translation]

Answer: 1. Tenders have been called by the Department of Public Works for the provision of cleaning service on a contract basis.

Tenders were received as follows: Mrs. Marcel Melanson, Cadillac, $720 p.a.; Mr. Rudolph Veilleux, Cadillac, $1,080 p.a.; Mr. Armand Lacoste, Cadillac, $3,300 p.a.

2. No.

3. The low tenderer has been requested to confirm her tender and if confirmation is received an award will be made shortly after.

VETERANS AFFAIRS EMPLOYEES, COMPTON-FRONTENAC CONSTITUENCY, QUE.

Question No. 1,188—Mr. Latulippe:

1. What doctors, professional persons, or others are employed by the Department of Veterans Affairs in Compton-Frontenac?

2. How long has each of these employees held his job, and what salary is paid to each?

Mr. Teillet: 1. No doctors, professional persons, or others are employed by the Department of Veterans Affairs in Compton-Frontenac.

2. Not applicable.

ISSUE OF CREDIT BY COMMERCIAL BANKS

Question No. 1,193—Mr. Côté (Chicoutimi):

Did the Prime Minister state in Montreal on May 26 that decentralization requires financial means which must be found under the terms of the constitution and, if so, could this result in the federal government re-assuming the regalian rights of commercial banks to issue credit?

Mr. Davis: The Prime Minister made the following remarks during his address to the Canadian Manufacturers' Association in Montreal on May 26:

I know that the provinces in our confederation have new problems, new responsibilities and must have financial resources as well as the constitutional authority to deal with them. Canada is a vast continental domain—too big, too spread out, too cut up to be governed exclusively, or even dominantly, from one centre. I believe that the provinces and their governments will play an increasingly important part in our national development, and I for one welcome that as a healthy decentralization—but not as a destructive separatism.

And this development must not be, and need not be, at the expense of the right, the duty and the power of the federal government to direct and control national factors in our development; including financial, economic and trade policy.

The Prime Minister had in mind the revised fiscal arrangements between the federal and provincial governments announced in the House of Commons on April 20, 1964. He was not referring to bank credit.

MOTEL AND HOTEL CONSTRUCTION, BANFF, ALTA.

Question No. 1,203—Mr. Woolliams:

1. How many motels, hotels or other such accommodation are being constructed at the present time in Banff?

2. Who is building these motels, and who are the owners of the motels in question and what tenders, if any, were called for by the government?

Mr. Laing: 1. Two, assuming the question refers to Banff national park rather than only to the townsite of Banff.

2. Voyager Inn: Under construction by Poole Construction for Banff Voyager Inn Limited; tenders were called for the site.

Deer Lodge: Under construction by Burns and Dutton for Crosby Company Limited; no tenders called for the site since the new construction is replacing part of an existing concession.

POST OFFICE, MESSINES, QUE.

Question No. 1,209—Mr. Martineau:

1. With reference to the answer to question No. 219 concerning the construction of a post office at Messines, Quebec, does the Minister of Public Works now propose to build a post office there?

2. If a post office is to be constructed at Messines (a) has a site been purchased and, if not, has a definite site been chosen (b) to whom did the site belong (c) what was the purchase price (d) is the site located in the centre of the village (e) are there other sites available in the centre of the village (f) have these other sites been considered (g) who recommended the purchase of such site by the government?

[Translation]

Answer: 1. Yes, the construction of a post office is proposed for later this year.

2. (a) Expropriation of the site is under way.

(b) Mr. O. Saint-Jacques.

(c) The agreed price is $500.

(d) The site is located approximately one quarter of a mile from the geographical centre of the village.

(e) Yes. Other properties nearer to the geographical centre of the village were considered. However, in view of the cost involved in preparing those sites and other factors, it was decided that the location chosen was more suitable.

(f) Yes.

(g) Officials of the Department of Public Works investigated the acquisition of the site and their choice was approved by the representatives of the Post Office Department, the majority of the residents and the municipal council. A few citizens and one member of the council were opposed to the site chosen.

*FLAG FLOWN AT PRIME MINISTER'S RESIDENCE

Question No. 1,210—Mr. Coates:

1. Who produced the "three maple leaf flag" which was flown from the flagstaff at the Prime Minister's official residence at Harrington lake on Saturday, May 30, and Sunday, May 31?
2. For how many hours was the said flag flown on said flagstaff on each of the said days?

Mr. Davis: Bruck Mills, Limited, Cowansville, Quebec.

2. Several.

ARDA PROJECTS, NEW BRUNSWICK

Question No. 1,212—Mr. Flemming (Victoria-Carleton):

1. What are the details concerning the following ARDA projects in New Brunswick: 4001—Advisory services to farmers in farm woodlot management; 4002—Soil and water conservation, under the New Brunswick land improvement program to promote the development of agriculture in those areas where a good potential for development exists within delineated pilot areas during 1962-63; 4004—Alternate land use, acquisition of marginal land for forestry purposes at Lincour and the re-establishment of 15 families; 4005—Soil and water conservation, under the New Brunswick land improvement program, as outlined in project 4002, within delineated pilot areas during 1963-64?
2. What is the estimated cost of each project?

Mr. Sauvé: 1. Project No. 4001: To provide an advisory service to farmers to assist them in the management planning, planting and thinning woodlots, the construction of access trails and other woodlot extension services.

Project No. 4002: To promote the development of agriculture where a good potential for development exists in the areas of Madawaska, Victoria, Carleton, York, Queens, Kings, Westmorland, Albert and Kent counties.

[Mr. Martineau.]

To provide assistance in solving major problems of soil and water conservation as they exist in each area.

Project No. 4004: The purpose of this project is to adjust the land use in the settlement of Lincour from combined farming and forestry to forestry exclusively and to relocate the residents in the area.

Project No. 4005: To promote assistance in the protection of land against erosion by water, the improvement of poorly drained areas by the installation of drainage systems both tile and open ditch systems. The construction of farm ponds for stock watering, fire protection and irrigation.

The areas involved in this project are the same as outlined in project No. 4002.

2. The estimated cost of each of the above mentioned projects is as follows:

Project No.	Total shareable costs	Federal share
4001	$ 36,000.00	$18,000.00
4002	61,500.00	30,500.00
4004	24,597.60	12,298.80
4005	135,800.00	67,900.00

TRANS-CANADA HIGHWAY CONSTRUCTION, NOVA SCOTIA

Question No. 1,228—Mr. Armstrong:

What contracts have been approved by the federal government for trans-Canada highway construction between Antigonish and Sutherland's river, and in the case of each contract what sections of highway are to be built and what is the anticipated federal contribution?

Mr. Deschatelets:

Contracts approved	Anticipated federal contribution
French river bridge	$ 166,500
Lamont road overpass, (near Telford, Pictou county)	85,500
Grading and gravelling, 5.1 miles west end of Antigonish bypass to James river	488,700
Grading and gravelling, 3.4 miles from east French river at Broadway to French river	395,100
Grading and gravelling, 3.5 miles from French river towards Sutherland river	520,200

HIGHWAY OVERPASSES ANTIGONISH-WESTVILLE, N.S.

Question No. 1,229—Mr. Armstrong:

Are any highway overpasses planned between Antigonish and Westville?

Mr. Deschatelets: No, no correspondence has been received from the province of Nova Scotia relative to further proposed overpasses between Antigonish and Westville.

HIGHWAY OVERPASS, ROUTE 7 AND ANTIGONISH BYPASS, N.S.

Question No. 1,230—Mr. Armstrong:

Was an overpass proposed at the juncture of route 7 and the Antigonish bypass?

Mr. Deschatelets: No, no correspondence has been received from the province of Nova Scotia relative to an overpass at the juncture of route 7 and the Antigonish bypass.

TRANS-CANADA HIGHWAY SAFETY STANDARDS

Question No. 1,236—Mr. Armstrong:

Has the federal government any jurisdiction over safety standards on the trans-Canada highway?

Mr. Deschatelets: Yes. The trans-Canada highway agreements jointly signed by the provinces and the federal government, contain ruling dimensions for curvature, gradient, sight distances and bridges for the highway. With the exception of the portion of the trans-Canada highway through the national parks, regulations pertaining to safety standards, such as signs, speed limit, lighting requirements, vehicle dimensions, etc., are the responsibility of the province concerned and are generally contained in the relevant provincial highway traffic act. In the case of the sections of the highway through the national parks, safety regulations are the responsibility of the Department of Northern Affairs and National Resources.

QUESTION PASSED AS ORDER FOR RETURN

PRINTING CONTRACTS

Question No. 970—Mr. Pascoe:

1. How many contracts for printing have been let by the (a) printing bureau (b) Department of Industry, from April 22, 1963 to date?

2. How many of said contracts were over $500?

3. What are the names of all companies or individuals who did such printing, and the amount of each contract?

Return tabled.

MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

Mr. J. B. Stewart (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, motions Nos. 124 and 126 are acceptable to the government. Motion No. 121 is acceptable subject to the reservation that it be limited to correspondence which the department can identify in their files and which was not submitted in confidence.

Notwithstanding the offensive way in which motion No. 125 is formulated, it will be accepted. I ask that motion No. 123 be allowed to stand.

Mr. Diefenbaker: What is offensive about it?

Mr. MacNaught: The wording.

Mr. Speaker: Subject to the reservation expressed by the hon. member, is motion No. 121 agreed to?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Hon. Théogéne Ricard (St. Hyacinthe-Bagot): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. Last Monday I asked the Minister of Labour when he expected to be giving me an answer to a question I had handed in in my name, and he answered that he was going to give it to me today. I find today that I have no answer, so I want to point out this is an urgent matter and I would like to have an answer as soon as possible.

Mr. Speaker: One moment, please. I am a little in doubt about motion No. 123. Motion No. 123 is to stand?

Mr. Pickersgill: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, was it not understood that if the hon. member for Antigonish-Guysborough (Mr. Stewart) indicated that the motions were acceptable, then they were passed and they did not have to be called separately?

Mr. Speaker: Yes, that is my understanding.

[Translation]

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): I rise on a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker.

Notice of motion for production of papers No. 125 reads as follows:

That an order of the house do issue for a copy of all telegrams received by the Prime Minister since the introduction of the proposed resolutions concerning the two flags and the two anthems appearing on the order paper as items 44 and 45.

The hon. member answers: "That was an offensive question". I do not think the question is such as to offend the Prime Minister and I am convinced it would be in the public interest to have those photostat copies produced in the house. Only the protests received by the Prime Minister constitute an offence, since the Canadian people are against the adoption of two flags.

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I am sure we have had enough discussion on both sides, and the case has been presented.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Well, Mr. Speaker, no; because the expression should not have been used by the hon. gentleman. Notices of motions are not regarded as offensive except by those who have those sensibilities that apparently are possessed by the hon. gentleman. That statement should not have been made.

Some hon. Members: Withdraw.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

Mr. Diefenbaker: No, Mr. Speaker. The use of the expression "offensive" by the hon. gentleman is not proper; and I ask if you rule otherwise—and the ruling has been made—that gratuitous statements like that should not be allowed.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I may say, Mr. Speaker, whatever your ruling, it is accepted as always by me, but that is not a proper expression.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I do think the point is well taken. I am sure the hon. member will withdraw any implication that was in his answer.

Mr. Stewart: Mr. Speaker, the objection I took to the notice of motion is that in itself, by the terms it uses, it is clumsy and consequently, as I suggested, offensive. It places upon a resolution on the order paper of this house an interpretation which is inaccurate. Now, my intent is to provide the hon. member with the material for which he is asking, without accepting the clumsy or offensive terminology employed by him.

Some hon. Members: Withdraw.

Mr. Monteith: You can't get away with that junk.

Mr. Grafftey: Divine rule.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. This does seem to give me an opportunity of calling to the attention of hon. members some instructions which the house has given the Chair. Answers to questions should be as brief as possible, should deal with the matter raised, and should not provoke debate. Would the hon. member withdraw so that we can get on with the business before us?

Mr. Stewart: Mr. Speaker, I am quite prepared to withdraw that part, but I should like to observe that—

[Mr. Pigeon.]

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Stewart: I should like Your Honour to assure that when notices of motions appear on the order paper, they appear in good order.

Mr. G. H. Aiken (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, on the—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. There is no reason to go into a long debate on this subject. We have had a withdrawal.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: In the opinion of the Chair there was an adequate withdrawal. The point was raised that perhaps the drafting of questions or motions should be more carefully looked into, and we will do that.

Mr. Aiken: Mr. Speaker, I rise because I feel there has been injustice done and I want to speak on the question of privilege. The other day—

Mr. Speaker: The question of privilege, I understand, has been resolved. The withdrawal has been made and there is no purpose in continuing discussion along this line. The question is over; it is regulated; it is settled.

Mr. Aiken: I heard no withdrawal, Mr. Speaker. There was a withdrawal coupled with an "if".

Mr. Speaker: Once more I tell the hon. member there is no purpose in continuing this discussion. A withdrawal has been made. The question is over and settled.

Mr. Aiken: Mr. Speaker, I wish to rise—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Aiken: I have the right to speak in this house. I intend to say what I have to say, regardless of the other side of the house.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Aiken: All right, all right; as soon as I have some semblance of order from the members across the way I want to make my point. Mr. Speaker, I am rising on a new question of privilege, and it arises out of a statement Your Honour made this afternoon at the opening of the house, followed by the discussion we have just had. The other day the right hon. Leader of the Opposition was required and requested to withdraw a statement that he was not required to withdraw and which did not come within the purview of this house. The statement today did come within the purview of this house and was made in this house, and my point is that the hon. member should have risen in his place and withdrawn immediately when he was requested to do so, because there has been a change in the rules governing this house. The other day the Leader of the Opposition was requested to withdraw—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The last statement is not correct. If the hon. member would read my statement today carefully he would see that his interpretation does not coincide with the position taken by the Chair.

I really do not see any purpose in continuing this discussion. It was my understanding that the hon. member did withdraw; perhaps not in the precise language which would suit the hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka, but it was a withdrawal. I think we are wasting far too much time on a minor point.

Mr. Aiken: I bow to your ruling Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Thank you.

CHINESE IMMIGRATION

Motion No. 121—Mr. Howard:

That an order of the house do issue for a copy of all correspondence, telegrams and other documents exchanged between the government or any agency or branch thereof and any other person or organization in the province of British Columbia since April 8, 1963, dealing with the question of immigraton to Canada of people of Chinese origin except such correspondence from persons who are either prospective immigrants or sponsors thereof as that correspondence relates to such pospective immigrants.

Motion agreed to.

GRANTS OF ARMS TO CANADA, ONTARIO AND QUEBEC

Motion No. 124—Mr. Winkler:

That an humble address be presented to His Excellency praying that he will cause to be laid before this house true copies of the original grants of arms for Canada and the provinces of Ontario and Quebec.

Motion agreed to.

TELEGRAMS RESPECTING FLAGS AND ANTHEMS

Motion No. 125—Mr. Pigeon:

That an order of the house do issue for a copy of all telegrams received by the Prime Minister since the introduction of the proposed resolutions concerning the two flags and the two anthems appearing on the order paper as items 44 and 45.

Motion agreed to.

REPORT ON THREE RIVERS BRIDGE

Motion No. 126—Mr. Vincent:

That an order of the house do issue for a copy of the report submitted by Mr. H. W. Lea, hydraulic engineer, to the Minister of Transport to review plans for the Trois-Rivières bridge to study certain apprehensions of federal engineers, and to report to the minister whether, in fact, the proposed bridge constitutes a danger with regard to ice formation, or for navigation, and, if so, to propose the best way to guard against such a possibility.

Motion agreed to.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

POSSIBLE WITHDRAWAL OF CANADIAN TROOPS FROM GERMANY

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): I have in my hand a Canadian Press dispatch and with the leave of the house I should like to read it so I might base my question to the Prime Minister. It reads as follows:

Chancellor Ludwig Erhard of West Germany has indicated to Prime Minister Pearson that there would be alarm in his country about any withdrawal of Canadian forces from Germany.

Informants said this was one of the points made by the chancellor in his 47 minutes talk with Mr. Pearson Tuesday.

After dealing with various matters the report goes on to say that other subjects discussed included Canadian-German relations, and so on.

In view of the headline "Erhard Afraid of Canadians Pulling Out of Germany?" and the prominence given to this, would the Prime Minister make it clear—and I am sure he would be speaking for all Canadians—that the suggestion of such a course being followed would be detrimental to western unity and to the maintenance of the strength of NATO?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): The suggestion was not made by the chancellor, nor was it made by myself. Indeed, the chancellor never brought this matter up at all in the discussions we have been having.

Mr. Diefenbaker: There is no foundation, then, for the suggestion that such a thing was in the mind of the Canadian government?

Mr. Pearson: None whatever; and the matter has not been discussed with the chancellor or his party.

Inquiries of the Ministry

ANGOLA—USE BY PORTUGAL OF CANADIAN ARMS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, on May 25 I addressed a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs and brought to his attention a newspaper report that women and children were being shot down in Angola by the Portuguese army with arms supplied by Canada to NATO and thence to Portugal. I asked him to investigate this matter and he said he would. Has the minister anything to report to the house?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): I have nothing to report as yet, Mr. Speaker.

ASSISTANCE TO AFRICAN COUNTRIES TO COMBAT LEPROSY

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs?

Does the Canadian government intend to provide within its external aid program to African countries, a contribution to the tremendous work undertaken by His Eminence Cardinal Léger in favour of lepers?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, this matter is now under study.

[Text]

CYPRUS—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON PRESENT POSITION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): I wanted to ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs a question about an Associated Press dispatch from Nicosia which indicates that the government of Cyprus has asked for a meeting of the United Nations security council in order to denounce the Turkish government's threat of military intervention in Cyprus. The report states that the secretary general of NATO, Mr. Stikker, has arrived in Athens and described the situation as being serious but not critical.

In view of the great concern the Canadian people have for what is happening in Cyprus, has the minister any statement to make regarding the situation?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): With regard to the request for a meeting of the United Nations security council, Mr. Speaker, there has been no decision as to whether or not one will be called as requested by President Makarios. The security council will be meeting in any event, some day next week in accordance with arrangements previously made to receive a report from the secretary general of the United Nations. The secretary general of NATO is in Athens as the hon. gentleman has reminded the house, and he is there pursuant to an arrangement made at the last meeting of the NATO ministerial council. The foreign minister of Cyprus is on his way now to New York, and from his public statement through Reuters it is clear the situation is less critical now than it was a few days ago.

Mr. Douglas: May I ask the minister if the Canadian government has been in touch with the Turkish government to express concern at the grave consequences of an invasion of Cyprus by the Turkish forces?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Our mission has been in touch not only with the Turkish government but also with a spokesman for the government of Greece.

EDUCATION

LOANS TO STUDENTS—INQUIRY AS TO LEGISLATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): In view of the statement made yesterday by the Minister of Transport and recorded at page 4094 of Hansard, indicating that not all the provinces have so far agreed to the terms of the legislation to provide student loans, I want to ask the Prime Minister if he can give the house some assurance that this legislation will be brought down in time to help finance needy students in the academic year 1964-65.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): That is our hope and it is our intention.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

WITHDRAWAL OF FILM RESPECTING PRIME MINISTER

On the orders of the day:

Mr. D. M. Fisher (Port Arthur): I want to ask the Secretary of State a question with regard to the Pearson film. In view of the allegation of the producer that a straw ballot was taken to determine whether the Liberal party and the Prime Minister approved of this film, I wonder whether the hon. gentleman could provide the house with a more thorough explanation of the relationship between the Prime Minister and any of his staff and C.B.C. officials with regard to this whole debatable question.

Mr. Speaker: It does seem to me that this question goes away beyond the limits of the rules. The hon. member made a series of statements at the beginning and gave interpretations. Perhaps he would rephrase his question, if he is looking for information, and put it on the order paper.

Mr. Fisher: I will be glad to rephrase the question. In view of the controversial circumstances which now exist with regard to this film I wonder whether the minister could provide us with a more thorough and plausible explanation of the incidents involved.

Hon. Maurice Lamontagne (Secretary of State): The C.B.C. some days ago—I think it was a couple of weeks ago—issued a statement, and I certainly have nothing to add to that statement.

Mr. Gene Rhéaume (Northwest Territories): Now that the National Press club has seen the film can the Secretary of State tell us whether the Canadian people are to be allowed to view this extravaganza for which they paid $35,000 in taxes?

Mr. Lamontagne: This is a matter of programming—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Lamontagne: —and as the minister formerly responsible for the C.B.C., the hon. member for Digby-Annapolis-Kings once said in this house, it would be a tragedy if there were interference with the programming of the C.B.C.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): In view of the minister's statement that programming lies entirely within the jurisdiction of the C.B.C., can the minister assure the house that there was no interference to prevent this film being shown?

Mr. Pearson: The C.B.C. said so.

Mr. Lamontagne: Not to my knowledge, Mr. Speaker.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Now that the Secretary of State is in such a friendly mood and is furnishing information so complete and frank, will he tell us what was the position of those five ministers who sat in and examined this particular film before it was declared unfit for human consumption?

Mr. Lamontagne: All I can say about this film is that I have not seen it. The C.B.C. has been completely free in arriving at the decision it has reached.

Mr. Fisher: Perhaps I could put a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs and ask him whether he presented any opinions which got to C.B.C. executives indicating that this film should not be shown.

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): What I do in my private capacity is not, of course, the concern of the hon. gentleman, but I suggest that if he is interested in films he come with me tomorrow night and see the film entitled "I Would Like to be that Guy".

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Eric A. Winkler (Grey-Bruce): I should like to ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs why he is going to see it.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I am always frank with this house. It is because I would like to be that guy.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Douglas: The Secretary of State has said that the decision not to show the film was made entirely by the C.B.C. I should like to ask the minister why it was shown to persons outside the corporation, and particularly why it was shown to advisers in the Prime Minister's office.

Mr. Speaker: I do not think this question is in order. The hon. member has made a series of statements and allegations. He may have the facts; certainly I do not. But it seems to me there is a better way of asking questions than by making a statement that we have to assume is true, and then expecting an answer. If the hon. member would rephrase that question to make it legal—

Mr. Douglas: I will gladly rephrase the question, making it a simple, direct question. Was this film shown to persons outside the C.B.C., and, in particular, was it shown to the Prime Minister's advisers? If so, why?

Mr. Lamontagne: I understand it was shown, as a result of a decision by the C.B.C.

Some hon. Members: Oh.

[Translation]

Mr. Gilles Grégoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Secretary of State. Does he intend to ask the C.B.C. to launch an investigation so as to find out who is responsible for that unnecessary expense of $35,000 and again ask the corporation to make a decision in that respect?

Mr. Lamontagne: Mr. Speaker, I will be pleased to communicate the views of the hon. member to the C.B.C.

[Text]

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Royal): I have a supplementary question. I wonder why the Secretary of State cannot answer my starred question No. 1,207 about the C.B.C., considering that he knows so much about the matter today.

Mr. Lamontagne: I will look into this matter, Mr. Speaker, and make sure that an answer will be provided next week.

COMPARABLE EXPENDITURES ON ENGLISH AND FRENCH TALENT

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Hon. Maurice Lamontagne (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, in answer to the question directed to me yesterday by the hon. member for Port Arthur (Mr. Fisher), here is the gist of the statement made by the C.B.C. in that connection.

During 1963 the C.B.C. paid fees amounting to $14,770,920 to artists of all categories.

According to press reports the president of ACTRA, an organization representing English speaking artists and writers blamed the C.B.C. for allocating to its French language radio and television services two thirds of the expenditures occasioned by fees.

Here are the facts as shown by C.B.C. records:

Of the total amount paid to all artists by the C.B.C. last year, about 60 per cent went to the English service and almost 40 per cent to the French service.

Fees paid to artists, excluding musicians, were as follows: 56 per cent for the English service and 44 per cent for the French service.

The proportion of fees paid to all artists, except authors and musicians, were as follows: English service, 55 per cent, and French service, 45 per cent.

With regard to authors only, excluding musicians and other artists, the proportions were 57 per cent for the English service and 43 per cent for the French service.

According to the newspapers the ACTRA president said that the fees paid to musicians were divided as follows: two thirds for the French language service and one third for the English language service. But it is precisely the opposite.

I should mention that C.B.C. records indicate only the amounts paid to individuals and do not distinguish between members and non-members of unions.

Mr. Gilles Grégoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, a supplementary question. Could the Secretary of State give us the same report regarding the fees paid by the C.B.C. to Canadian artists, as well as those paid to foreign artists.

Mr. Lamontagne: Mr. Speaker, I shall try to obtain the information requested from the C.B.C. and then report to the hon. member.

DOMINION-PROVINCIAL RELATIONS

PROVINCIAL PARTICIPATION IN FISCAL AND MONETARY POLICIES

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Réal Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the right hon. Prime Minister.

Has the federal government received from the Quebec government a request to allow the provinces to participate in the shaping of fiscal and monetary policies of the country?

[Text]

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, it is quite impossible to deal with a question of that importance on the orders of the day.

HOUSING

REQUEST FOR FURTHER CONSIDERATION OF REDEVELOPMENT PROJECTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. E. Gray (Essex West): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Postmaster General. Now that the amendments to the National Housing Act have been passed by the house, will the minister cause further consideration to be given to extending federal government assistance to a proposed municipal project—

Some hon. Members: Order paper.

Mr. Gray: —to acquire land for the redevelopment of an area in downtown Windsor for commercial purposes, and to similar projects throughout Canada?

Mr. Speaker: I was not able to hear the second part or the lengthy ending of that question, but would the hon. member put it on the order paper.

Mr. Gray: The second part of my question was this, Mr. Speaker. I asked whether the minister—

Some hon. Members: Sit down.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Is the hon. member asking another question?

Mr. Fairweather: No; it is another plant.

Mr. Gray: I am sorry, Mr. Speaker, but I did not hear you too well down here. I thought you asked me to repeat the last part of my question.

Mr. Speaker: Is the hon. member for Essex West rising to ask a second question?

Mr. Gray: No, Mr. Speaker, I am not.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

HALIFAX—DISMISSAL OF CIVILIAN COOK

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Gerald A. Regan (Halifax): Mr. Speaker, I would like to address a question to the Associate Minister of National Defence. Is the minister aware that a civilian cook named Lorne Edward Pace, with 12 years of good service in the R.C.N. and two years as a civilian cook with the R.C.A.F. in Halifax, has been discharged for taking home a 50 cent cake? Would the minister investigate the matter—

Mr. Speaker: Order. This question, although quite important, should be put on the order paper.

Mr. Regan: I would like to discuss it at ten o'clock tomorrow night, Mr. Speaker.

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT

WINNIPEG—POSSIBLE USE OF MAILS TO DEFRAUD

On the orders of the day:

Hon. J. R. Nicholson (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, I do not know whether this calls for a correction in Hansard, but in fairness to the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre and the house, I think I should supplement a statement that I made yesterday. I was answering a question that the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre had asked about the alleged use of the mails by a business organization in Winnipeg which allegedly resulted in severe financial losses to a victim. After I had given the answer—

Mr. Churchill: What page?

Mr. Nicholson: This is to be found at page 4090 of Hansard. After I had answered the question a supplementary question was asked by the hon. member, as follows:

> Was it not established that the victim in this case received his first invitation to approach this firm through the mails?

I replied:

> That is not my information, Mr. Speaker.

On reading that answer I have decided that what I should have said—and I want to remove any doubt about this, in fairness to the hon. member—was that I do not know whether he received it through the mails or not; the post office does not censor these letters. He may have received it through the mails or he may not. I cannot say.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Can the Postmaster General say whether the authorities in Winnipeg are checking the assertion which was made by the man in question?

Mr. Nicholson: As I stated yesterday, Mr. Speaker, this matter has been referred, I understand, to the attorney general of the province of Manitoba, and that aspect of the matter is being looked into.

FORESTRY

NOVA SCOTIA—CONTINUATION OF IMPROVEMENT PROGRAM

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Robert Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Forestry. Is he in a position to advise whether an agreement has been reached as yet between the federal government and the government of Nova Scotia for a continuation of the forest stand improvement program which will provide employment in Cape Breton?

Hon. Maurice Sauvé (Minister of Forestry): Mr. Speaker, I wish to thank the hon. member for giving me notice of this question. The matter is now under consideration, and I hope to be able to give an answer some time next week.

Inquiries of the Ministry

CANADIAN FLAG

INQUIRIES RESPECTING CONSIDERATION OF NEW DESIGN

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Reid Scott (Danforth): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister concerning the flag. I know the Prime Minister has told the country that the issue of a distinctive national flag is a matter of confidence, but in view of the importance of the matter I wanted to ask the Prime Minister this question. Can he say whether a vote of parliament changing the design of the distinctive national flag for example to a single maple leaf instead of three, would be considered by the government as a motion of non confidence?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I would like to take notice of that question and answer it subsequently.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. While the Prime Minister is on this subject would he tell us what are the plans of the government regarding the debating of these two resolutions?

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, the farm credit bill is before the house, as my right hon. friend knows, and it must be completed before we go on to the flag resolution. It has also been made clear to the house that there are two other matters which must be decided, and the time taken on them will influence to some extent when we will get on to the flag resolution. I am referring to interim supply, which must be discussed before many days have passed, and the other matter is the resolution regarding the constitutional amendment for survivors' benefits. The formula has been agreed to by all the provinces, but with regard to the province of Quebec the agreement is subject to approval by the legislature. It is now on the order paper of the legislature, and as soon as it is dealt with there a resolution will be brought in here. Those are the three matters.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Will that precede the debate on the flag issue?

Mr. Pearson: It depends. If that were passed through the legislature of Quebec this afternoon, it would be important to get that question disposed of at once so it could go to Westminster for the necessary action. We have been informed that it should go to Westminster as quickly as possible because of the parliamentary situation there. Those are the three matters before the house. I would like to proceed with the flag resolution immediately, subject to those considerations with regard to the other two matters.

[Mr. Sauvé.]

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, in order to have a degree of definiteness—and I thank the Prime Minister for his explanation—would it not, under all the circumstances and having regard to those matters which require to be discussed, interim supply and the like, be desirable that he fix the date for next week, so that members will be in the position to know when it is coming up and can arrange to be sure they are here; because we have to make plans?

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, the right hon. gentleman is perfectly reasonable in that request, but I am sure he understands our difficulty.

Mr. Howard: It sounds like collaboration to me.

Mr. Pearson: We are not in a position to say when we can proceed with the constitutional resolution until it is dealt with in the Quebec legislature. If we were to proceed with the flag resolution at once, and then Quebec passed the constitutional resolution, we could interrupt the flag resolution and we could go right ahead with the constitutional amendment. The only possible interruption then would be interim supply. If we left interim supply until the very last moment we might very understandably be criticized for trying to get interim supply through by shotgun methods. So it is not an easy situation. But I hope before the end of the day we may be in a better position to indicate what will be done. If we could agree that the flag resolution would start on a certain date, say next Monday instead of tomorrow, because of the uncertainty of the situation, that would be perfectly agreeable to this side.

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In view of the urgent desire to deal with the question of the constitutional amendment and interim supply as well as the flag, would the Prime Minister consider introducing a motion for the house to sit on Saturdays, during which time we could discuss the flag and then spend the rest of the time on these other important matters?

REQUEST THAT NEW DESIGN BE FLOWN ON PARLIAMENT HILL

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I should like to revert for a moment to the flag issue to ask the Prime Minister the following question. Last Thursday, in answer to a question I put to him, he said he would be glad to arrange to have the flag proposed in the resolution which is to be introduced fly unofficially from the flag poles in front of the parliament buildings. Could he inform the house when this will be done?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I would think perhaps tomorrow or Friday, say from five to eight o'clock, would be a suitable time. The flag pole is occupied today.

Mr. Brewin: A supplementary question. In answer to another question at the same time last Thursday the Prime Minister said that he would be glad to look into the suggestion of flying a single maple leaf design; and in view of the fact that I believe he has received a flag with that design, as I have, can he now say whether this suggestion will be acted upon so the house can see both designs before hon. members make up their minds?

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, I think it would be a little confusing—and I have been thinking about the matter—if two flags were flown, one representing the design that the government is submitting to parliament for its decision and one representing the design favoured by my hon. friend as a private member.

Mr. Mandziuk: A supplementary question.

Mr. Churchill: A supplementary question.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I must remind hon. members that many of these questions on the flag issue have been admitted because of the general emotional interest; but to carry this question on too far is clearly breaking a rule which the house itself has given me, namely that it is improper to anticipate an order on the order paper.

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question does not anticipate an order of the house. I think in fairness to the people who have submitted designs of flags the Prime Minister should, in deference to their wishes, also fly them outside the parliament buildings, particularly the ones chosen by the committee in 1946 as well as the other superior designs, compared with his flag, which he is now concealing.

Inquiries of the Ministry

HOUSE OF COMMONS

POSSIBILITY OF CHANGE IN HOUSE LEADERSHIP

On the orders of the day:

Mr. G. L. Chatterton (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. Has the Prime Minister yet received a request from the Minister of Justice to be relieved of his duties as government house leader?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): No, Mr. Speaker. The hon. gentleman and I —and it is quite improper for me to be discussing this matter in the house—have been in consultation with regard to this matter. I know how heavy are his duties but I also know how well he is performing all of them, and I hope he will continue.

Mr. Chatterton: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker, of the Minister of Justice. In view of the statement made by the minister on television on Monday night that he needed more time for his duties as a member of the house, as Liberal leader in Quebec and as Minister of Justice, when will he formally put the question to the Prime Minister about being relieved of his duties?

CONSUMER CREDIT

STATEMENT ON SALARIES OF ADVISERS TO JOINT COMMITTEE

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Walter L. Gordon (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, yesterday the hon. member for Wellington South asked me about the authorization for payments to certain assistants to the joint House of Commons and Senate committee on consumer credit, and I promised to try to have an answer for him today.

The authorization for these payments to the committee assistants was made not by the Minister of Finance but under an order of the House of Commons and the Senate which was passed in this house on April 30. The decision to engage the two assistants in question was made on May 26 by the joint committee steering group. Payments will be made out of the normal vote in the legislation estimates. It appears likely that supplementary estimates may be required for this purpose.

Inquiries of the Ministry

INDIAN AFFAIRS

STATEMENT ON READINESS OF PROVINCES TO ATTEND CONFERENCE

On the orders of the day:

Hon. René Tremblay (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, on Thursday June 4 the hon. member for Churchill raised the question of the federal-provincial conference on Indian affairs and asked me to inform the house which provinces were prepared to meet now and which provinces had indicated they would need more time.

To clarify matters, I should inform the hon. member and the house that the federal-provincial conference in question was not postponed as the result of a formal request from any of the provinces. It will be recalled that this conference is intended to deal with measures required to implement or further the aims and objectives generally agreed upon at the federal-provincial conference held in Ottawa last November. Since that time the federal government has been developing certain suggestions which would offer a promising possibility for consensus on the federal-provincial action that might be required.

These proposals are of such importance and complexity that, after full consideration, I came to the conclusion that a conference date in May would not provide sufficient time for their completion and presentation to the provinces in detail and still give the provinces time for adequate study. Accordingly it was suggested to the provinces that the conference be held later in the year so they might have more time to study the actual proposals that will be submitted to the conference.

Mr. Gene Rhéaume (Northwest Territories): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Can the minister advise the house whether invitations to participate in this conference were extended to the governments of the Yukon and Northwest Territories?

Mr. Tremblay: I am not aware of that, but I will take this question as notice.

Mr. Robert Simpson (Churchill): A supplementary question. Can the minister advise the house in relation to the answer he gave us whether some of the provinces did not indicate that they were preparing to go ahead with programs needing ratification by this conference? If the conference were held in October these programs would be delayed some six months. Some very important projects in relation to Indian affairs would be delayed six months.

[Translation]

Mr. Tremblay: Mr. Speaker, I am not aware that such a delay could have these consequences.

PRIVILEGE

MR. MARCOUX—FAILURE OF CHAIR TO RECOGNIZE SOCIAL CREDIT MEMBERS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Speaker: I must advise hon. members that there is time for one more question before orders of the day.

Mr. Guy Marcoux (Quebec-Montmorency): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. I should not like to extend the question period—

[Text]

Mr. Churchill: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. Will you permit other supplementary questions, then, or has the time elapsed?

Mr. Speaker: According to the rules given to me there is a 30 minute period for questions on Wednesdays, but this was a sort of special day. There was a long statement by the Chair and other questions, but if this is a question of privilege I think we should hear it, provided it is a serious one.

[Translation]

Mr. Marcoux: Mr. Speaker, it will not be long. I should not want to extend the question period even one second.

I only want to point out that no member of our party has been recognized this afternoon to put a question.

[Text]

Mr. G. H. Aiken (Parry Sound-Muskoka): I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. Today there has been only a half hour period for questions. While there is no great objection raised, since my hon. friend from Winnipeg South Centre is anxious to proceed with the business of the house, I think it should be noted that today, when we had only a half hour available, the Postmaster General, the Minister of Finance, the Secretary of State and the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration all made fairly extended statements. I am merely raising a point. If this trial period is going to work, statements of this sort will not assist in carrying out the business of the house.

FARM CREDIT ACT

AMENDMENTS INCREASING AUTHORIZED CAPITAL, MAXIMUM LOAN LIMITS, ETC.

Hon. Harry W. Hays (Minister of Agriculture) moved that the house go into committee to consider Bill No. C-100, to amend the Farm Credit Act.

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee, Mr. Lamoureux in the chair.

On clause 1—Farming.

Mr. Mandziuk: Mr. Chairman, in my introduction to a discussion of the first clause I might say that during the general discussion at the second reading stage many useful suggestions were made to the minister. I hope he will take note of them. I feel that we are not going to take too much time in discussing this bill clause by clause because some of the amendments are worthy of support. There are some amendments to which I, at least, intend to take exception and as we come to them these will be pointed out to the minister. I hope he will do more than he did at the conclusion of the discussion on second reading. After all the various speeches that had been made in the house, the minister did not see fit to make any closing remarks. Whether or not this was done in order to save time or whether he had nothing to say is anybody's guess.

In so far as the first clause is concerned, Mr. Chairman, on the face of it—

Mr. Hays: May I just interrupt to correct one statement the hon. member has made. He has said I did not see fit to say anything at the conclusion of the discussion on second reading. This occurred at ten o'clock, and there was nothing I could say. I will be glad to answer any suggestions as we go through the bill clause by clause.

Mr. Mandziuk: I thank the minister for that statement, because I expect him to answer a few questions which I shall pose.

This first clause falls into two parts, as is apparent on the face of it. There is reference to the fact that paragraph (f) of section 2 is repealed leaving the impression that this paragraph was perhaps completely changed. As a matter of fact, if you look back at the statute of 1959, when the original bill was passed by the previous administration, you will find no changes have been made except for transposing certain words and the addition of beekeeping to the qualifications of "farming".

The second part of this clause extends the list of those to whom loans can be made. In addition to those whose principal occupation is livestock raising, beekeeping, dairying, fruit growing and all tillage of the soil, the bill purports to extend the right to borrow to the executors or administrators of the estate of a deceased farmer. Let me take these two divisions in order. I take no issue with the proposal to include beekeepers under the act. However, I believe the minister should give some assurance to the committee as to how the corporation proposes to get security from a beekeeper, if beekeeping is the principal occupation.

Mr. Byrne: Are you afraid the corporation may get stung?

Mr. Mandziuk: You will get stung before the day is over. Beekeeping is an occupation that can be conducted on a very small plot of ground. The hives are generally farmed out all over the township wherever there is nectar available for the bees. The bees themselves are perishable insect and some of them are destroyed in the fall, so that a new supply has to be obtained in the spring. The hives themselves are of very little value. What security would the corporation take in a case where beekeeping was the principal occupation? I think the committee should be given some indication of what the intention is with regard to this type of farming. I do not think this clause has reference to the farmer tilling the soil or raising livestock, who keeps bees for the purpose of gaining additional income. He would not be borrowing on that particular asset.

I am not seriously objecting to the second part of clause 1 but I am puzzled as to how the minister's advisers came to include personal representatives for the purpose of qualifying for a loan from the corporation. How do they reconcile that with the definition of a farmer in paragraph (e) of section 2 of the act, which has not been repealed? That paragraph defines a farmer as a person whose chief occupation is farming. Under the bill, provision is being made to extend the right to obtain a loan to the personal representative of a deceased farmer.

I realize that the operation of the farm of the deceased farmer has to be carried on for a number of years. So far as personal representatives are concerned, I divide them into two categories according, to whether there is or is not a will. If there is a will an executor is appointed but the executor may be someone who does not know beans about farming. He may be a member of the family who is in a business far removed from farming. Furthermore the executor may be a trust company which would carry on the farming operations by remote control. But the executor is authorized to borrow from the corporation.

The same situation exists if there is no will. Some member of the family may be appointed as administrator of the will. That member of the family may not be a farmer and may not know anything about farming. An official administrator such as a trust company could be appointed. The trust company would have no personal interest in the farm and would be operating it by remote control.

As I interpret paragraph (e) of section 2 I believe that the original intention of the act was that a borrower had to qualify as a person having a personal interest in some particular aspect of farming, whether it be raising cattle, tillage of the soil, or beekeeping as now included. My interpretation is that there had to be personal interest, personal attention and the farmer had to live on the farm. I know from experience that in the few years the act has been in operation the corporation has refused to take mortgages on anything other than the land actually occupied by the borrower, namely, his homestead, because they wanted to be absolutely certain of the repayment of the loan.

Let us look at the matter from this angle, Mr. Chairman. In addition to what I have just said about the inclusion of personal representatives, and the possibility that such representatives would have no personal interest in operating the farm of the deceased farmer, there is another conflict that may arise. I refer to the fact that it is the duty of the personal representative, whether he is administrator or executor, to wind up the estate as speedily as possible and distribute the assets to the heirs unless there are special trusts provided for in the will. What would be the situation if the administrator or executor should encumber the land before the loan from the Farm Credit Corporation had been paid off and the land, encumbered without the approval of the heirs, was then turned over to them without any ability to repay on their part?

I have brought this matter up under this clause, not because I oppose this extension. I have to argue hypothetically and present hypothetical situations because I do not know how this provision will work out in practice. Probably the minister has some explanation. His officials must have delved into the matter more deeply than I have. However I know from experience that the corporation will be confronted with difficulties, if it lends to people who have no personal interest in the property which the corporation is taking as security for the loan. In answering my questions I hope the minister will indicate whether he has had requests to make this extension and, if so, from whom have they come? That would be of interest to the committee.

Mr. Hays: Mr. Chairman, I cannot tell the hon. member the exact number of requests, but we have had many requests for this sort of thing. I think that the intent of this provision is that the executor of the estate would operate the farm for the recipient of the estate. I might go one step further in explaining this matter by giving an example. What we were trying to do was to make it possible for a father to provide that his son could continue operating the farm and have an additional farm. Suppose the father has two sons who wish to take up farming, and his own farm unit is not large enough to support the two sons. He may wish to transfer the farm to one of his sons, while at the same time assisting the other son to buy a farm of his own.

Mr. Mandziuk: On a point of order, I think this matter is covered in another section.

Mr. Hays: I thought I would cover it now.

Mr. Mandziuk: The minister is going into another section.

The Chairman: Order. We are on clause 1 of the bill, of course, and we can have a general discussion, but I agree with the hon. member that we should not go into the details of any other section.

Mr. Mandziuk: Let us have answers to my questions.

Mr. Hays: Mr. Chairman, I think the intent of this particular provision is to enable the deceased farmer to confer on the executor of the estate the same privileges as the farmer would have if he were still living. The executor is acting on behalf of the heirs of the estate. The Farm Credit Corporation would be lending the money to the heirs of the estate who would be operating the farm.

Possibly the heirs would not be of age but they would want to continue the operation of the farm.

Mr. Mandziuk: I do not think the minister has quite got my point. Can he envisage an executor administering a farm for 30 years, which is the period of time for repayment of a loan from the Farm Credit Corporation? Any child who may be born at the time of the death of the farmer reaches his majority at age 21. I would like to know how the minister reconciles this extension with paragraph (e) in the act, which I interpret as stating quite definitely that the borrower must have a personal interest. An executor or administrator has no personal interest because he is just a trustee, and there is even less of a personal interest if it is a trust or loan company administering the estate. If the minister had suggested a repeal or amendment to paragraph (e) I could understand it would be workable. Otherwise I do not think the provision gives the corporation authority to lend to administrators or executors.

Mr. Hays: The loans would be for the benefit of the heirs who may not be able to borrow for themselves, and the executor can state he is acting for the heirs until such time as he, the executor, steps out of the picture.

Mr. Mandziuk: I do not think that is a quite satisfactory answer, Mr. Chairman, but I do not believe I can get any further with my question. I think the minister is labouring under a misconception that the executor may be one of the members of the family, and he would have an interest in preserving the estate for a brother or sister. The minister has not answered my question concerning the estate being administered by an outside administrator or trust company as executor. I have a large number of wills in my office and the testators have indicated they want me to act as executor of their estates. However, I am not a farmer. I have no personal interest. What right should I have to borrow money and encumber a deceased farmer's estate? I would be renting the land out and having somebody else operate it, and this is in contravention of paragraph (e).

Mr. Hays: Paragraph (e) reads as follows:

> "farmer" means a person whose principal occupation is farming, and, for the purposes of Part II, includes a co-operative farm association and a family farm incorporation as defined by regulation;

This is broadening it, and the explanation in the bill says:

> The expression "farmer" as used in this act primarily means a person whose principal occupation is farming. This amendment would enable the corporation to deem the executor or the administrator of the estate of a deceased farmer to be a farmer for the purposes of a Part II loan.

This is intended to broaden the provisions of paragraph (e).

Mr. Mandziuk: Mr. Chairman, the minister has my blessings. I only hope it works because I realize there is no law that can be put on the books that is perfect. Time alone will show whether it will work, but I have my doubts. I know what section 2 of the act refers to. It refers to co-operatives and corporations, but I do not know how I, as the sole executor of a farmer's estate, could be considered to be a corporation. If that is the best explanation we can get, we shall have to take it.

Mr. Pascoe: I should also like to deal with this amendment making it possible for the corporation to lend money to the executor or administrator of a deceased farmer's estate. As recorded at page 3865 of Hansard for June 2 the minister said:

> One amendment will make it possible for the corporation to lend to the executor or administrator of an estate of a deceased farmer, and thus the corporation will be able to assist the farmer's heirs to continue to operate and develop their farms, even though the estate may not yet be fully settled.

In many cases an estate is not fully settled because of a dispute over the value of the land. I am wondering, when a loan is made by the Farm Credit Corporation, will the corporation's appraisal of the value of the land be accepted for payment of estate tax?

Second, in making these loans has any consideration been given to the incorporation of a life insurance clause whereby, in the case of death, the loans would be paid off?

Mr. Hays: When my officials suggested that this be put in the bill to broaden paragraph (e) of the act, they stated there were many requests for this. For instance, there are cases where a mother would have an interest in a farm as long as she lived, and loans could be made under these circumstances. We know this will work, and requests have been made for this.

Mr. Pascoe: Would a Farm Credit Corporation appraisal of the value of the land be accepted for estate taxes, and what about the question of a life insurance clause in the case of death?

Mr. Hays: Would the hon. member rephrase the second part of his question?

Mr. Pascoe: For example, when a credit union makes a loan there is a life insurance clause so that in the case of death the loan is paid off. Has any consideration been given to providing such a clause in the case of farm credit loans?

Mr. Hays: Insurance in part III loans is compulsory, and it is optional under part II. I am not just sure I understand exactly what the hon. member is getting at.

Mr. Mandziuk: I think I could assist the minister. What my hon. friend has in mind is insurance on credit union loans, and to keep the record straight it is the credit unions themselves that insure the borrower. I do not think there is any obligation to do that with the Farm Credit Corporation.

Mr. Pascoe: There is no obligation but I wonder has it been considered?

Mr. Rynard: Is it not true that they are insuring them at the present time?

Mr. Hays: About 60 per cent of them are insured.

Mr. Rynard: What are the qualifications for insuring them?

Mr. Hays: Part III is compulsory and part II is voluntary.

Mr. Rynard: In other words, the size of the loan determines the compulsion.

Mr. Hays: It is the part of the act concerned, not necessarily the size of the loan.

Mr. Rynard: Could we have the qualifications? This is the point we are trying to clear up.

Mr. Hays: Part III is compulsory and part II is voluntary, after medical examination if required.

Mr. Rynard: What does part III refer to?

Mr. Hays: These are the loans that are supervised.

Mr. Rynard: These supervised loans which may be insured. How is that insurance placed? Is it placed after medical examination? How long does it last? What happens if a man who gets a loan dies?

Mr. Hays: It lasts for the life of the loan and it is group insurance taken out by the corporation.

Mr. Rynard: Supposing a man dies just before his loan comes through. What happens then? Suppose his application for a supervised loan has been passed.

Mr. Hays: I understand the insurance does not come into force until the loan has been made.

Mr. Rynard: But on the basis that he was promised a loan, a loan which is coming through, he could have purchased a lot of material and equipment. What would become of the widow? Let us suppose the day before the cheque arrived the man dropped dead. He had gone ahead and purchased material and equipment he wanted.

Mr. Hays: It is all hypothetical, but we would go ahead and make a loan to the widow if she wanted it.

Mr. Rynard: I do not want to dispute that. I know the minister is telling me what he feels is right, but I should like him to check that answer.

Mr. Hays: I will be pleased to do that.

Mr. Pugh: The hon. gentleman says a loan would be made to the widow. But would she be in a position to take on such a loan?

Mr. Hays: If she wished, because I think it would have been a co-operative venture.

Mr. Pugh: The widow might not be able to farm or to carry on. What would be the point of making it to her?

Mr. Peters: In rising to speak on clause 1 of the bill I might, perhaps, draw attention to the presence in the gallery of Mr. Ken Kelly, who is at the present time the sole representative of the fourth estate responsible for disseminating throughout Canada information garnered from this debate. I know this will be of interest, since members of the gallery continually draw attention to the attendance here of members of parliament. I know he is going to be hard pressed to carry this information across the country—

An hon. Member: He can do it.

Mr. Peters: Certainly, he can do it. But agriculture is not normally his field and maybe, therefore, sympathy will be shown to some of us who are, similarly, outside our usual fields.

I should like to ask, first of all, whether the minister has given any consideration to extending the definition of farming, which has already been extended so as to include beekeeping, so as to cover the growing of trees for pulp, Christmas tree production and the raising of seedlings. A farmer often needs to purchase adjacent land in order to carry out activities of this kind, and in most cases a good deal of credit is necessary in relation to the amount he can reasonably expect to receive from his operation. Such credit is not easy to find. In my own part of the country tree cultivation has played an increasingly important part in the development of the area. Indeed, Senator Roebuck, of the other place, in editorials he wrote many years ago in a local newspaper in Timiskaming, said that pulp and timber, to us, took the place of wheat in western Canada, inasmuch as it was the basis of the development of our land. Perhaps the minister will give consideration to extending the definition of farming along these lines.

I wonder, too, why some consideration has not been given to establishing a revolving fund, so that instead of returning to general revenue moneys paid back to the Farm Credit Corporation could continue to be used by the corporation as the basis of new loans. If this were done, parliament might not be constantly needing to consider bills making additional money available to the corporation. Because of the rate of interest charged, the sum of money would, obviously increase, and this would assist to some extent.

In the third place, I should like to ask the minister why a distinction has been made between the two classifications, part II and part III. We believe that in their efforts to establish economic units, farmers should have to pay the lowest possible rates of interest. Here, in the case of the larger amounts, it is provided that an additional sum should be paid to cover costs of administration. I urge the minister to continue the policy of charging 5 per cent across the board with respect to farm loans. If he is arguing that those who borrow the larger amounts, $20,000 and more under parts II and III, are not, in the strict sense, running family farms or seeking to establish economic farm units, I think he should tell us so. But if it is felt these loans are for the purpose of establishing more economic units in the light of the new technocracy we should, I think, maintain the rate of 5 per cent.

I know the minister has not yet had an opportunity to say something about the effect the possibility of these new loans in the top range is likely to have. Would they not have the effect of allowing some prosperous farmers to extend their operations at the expense of neighbours who might not yet have extended their operation sufficiently to become economic units? It seems to me the existence of the possibility of such large loans is bound to lead to an increase in the market values of land. It is bound to increase the ability of one farmer in an area to purchase neighbouring farmland. If this is a factor, then I believe the department will have to give some consideration to the sociological problem that is going to develop in terms of rural economy and the family farm unit.

Mr. Hays: Mr. Chairman, in reply to the first question in connection with the woodlot, in the farm credit regulations on page 16, section 9(a), I think this point is covered. It says:

> The appraised value of the land shall be based on the value of the land for agricultural purposes, including the commercial value of any part thereof used by the applicant for the production of forest products and, so far as possible, on the productive value thereof based on the average yield and prices of farm products and operating costs.

So in the regulations it is possible to go ahead and borrow on a woodlot in order to plant more seedlings, and that sort of thing. With regard to the other question in connection with the cost to the corporation in so far as loans are concerned, the loans now are costing .87 of 1 per cent; this is the cost of the corporation's administration. We do not anticipate that there will be any additional cost with regard to enlarging loans to between $20,000 and $40,000; we anticipate that the same costs will prevail.

In connection with the third question, I think a great deal of our reason for extending these loans is this. Last year we lent $108 million, and the total amount, more or less, of the corporation's loans now are up around $375 million. Outside of this we know that farmers borrowed $235 million just last year at interest rates in excess of 10 per cent. So we know that the need is there. If you stop and think about a farm today, if a man has 20 cows and he has $10,000 worth of buildings and 100 acres of land, without any machinery, he is up to $26,000. If you hope to earn 10 per cent on a $40,000 investment you are only speaking of $4,000 as being the farmer's net return. If you get to $60,000, you are speaking of $6,000 at 10 per cent—and there are not too many farmers who are today earning 10 per cent on their investment. In the United States similar loans are now up to $95,000; $60,000 for land and buildings and $35,000 for chattels.

An hon. Member: What is the interest rate?

Mr. Hays: I am not sure of the interest rates in the United States. We are saying that the first $20,000 on the unsupervised loans will bear an interest rate of 5 per cent; that rate will remain. Then any additional loan will be at an economic rate, and this would bear a relationship to the rate of interest at which we borrow money. Apparently we borrow our money four times a year. I am referring to the federal government. The interest rate on this money is 5⅜ per cent. To this you would add the cost of operation, which would be .87 of 1 per cent. In addition to this there would be possibly one eighth per cent for provision for bad debt on new loans—not on present loans. It would be on the additional amount between $20,000 and $40,000, $27,500 and $55,000. This is what the amendments really say.

Mr. Douglas: Mr. Chairman, is the minister saying the government is paying 5⅜ per cent for the money which it borrows? This seems a fairly high rate of interest. Is this money borrowed on the open market with 20-year bonds? It seems a fairly high rate of interest for the federal government to pay.

Mr. Hays: In this regard we are speaking of 20-year money, for which today we are paying 5⅜ per cent.

Mr. Whelan: Mr. Chairman, if I understand the position correctly—

Mr. Pigeon: Filibuster.

Mr. Whelan: Under clause 1 we can talk in generalities. You can be sure that I will be pretty general on this subject. This clause provides that beekeepers shall be called farmers for the purpose of borrowing money. I would say that most farmers I know have been associated with the beekeeping industry for a long time, because they have been stung so often by busy bee politicians, or whatever you want to call them, and they are so dubious about this act that they are worrying how badly they are going to be stung again.

Mr. Pigeon: Very humorous.

Mr. Whelan: Looking over all that was said yesterday, mainly by the opposition, it put me in mind of a phone conversation I had with my wife about three weeks ago. My wife runs my farm at home.

Mr. Simpson: What clause is this under, Mr. Chairman?

Mr. Whelan: Generalities. I asked her what was going on at the farm, and she said they had had a terrible windstorm. I said, "I can't understand this, because John and Mike were both in Ottawa and there are no people from the front benches on either side, that I know of, who have been down in that area". I asked, "How bad a windstorm was it?" She said, "It was a real bad one". I said, "How bad?" She said, "It blew everything off the farm but the mortgage".

All that was said yesterday by the members of the opposition added up to one thing, that for the last six years they have recognized that the Farm Credit Corporation was not meeting the needs of agriculture. The Conservative government of Ontario recognized the failure of the Farm Credit Corporation to meet the needs of farmers in that province; they recognized this failure by their action. In the first instance they discontinued the junior farm loans, this great saviour that was brought in and which was going to meet the needs of the farmers in Ontario. They recognized the failure of the federal government quicker than did most people.

Mr. Danforth: Did the hon. member say they have taken it off?

Mr. Whelan: They did, and then they reinstituted the junior farm loans, because they recognized the failure of the previous Conservative federal government to meet the needs of agriculture. Mention was made yesterday of interest rates. I am not 100 per cent in favour of the proposals in this bill, but I would point out to hon. members of this house that well over 55 per cent of all money borrowed by the farming industry of this nation is borrowed at a higher rate of interest than is proposed in this bill. Too many of our farmers are turned down by the Farm Credit Corporation and stay in the farm business by borrowing from modern Shylocks at high rates of interest and bonuses, or by borrowing from the finance companies. I noticed an article in the bulletin put out by the Canadian Federation of Agriculture—I think all hon. members will have received this—which says:

> It may be noted that for personal loans the banks are now charging, in effect, well over 6 per cent (more like 10½ per cent), if service charges and the reduction of the loan through amortization are taken into account.

I think it was rather ironic last night when I went back to my office and opened the mail at six o'clock and found a letter that asked when this bill was going to become law. This man wanted to borrow $40,000 to extend his greenhouse industry. There has long been a need for this money for the farmers of western Ontario, where a high investment is made for a very ordinary return. A good many farmers in western Ontario, as members from that area will realize, have well over $100,000 invested and they are not getting any more by way of return today than an average factory worker.

These people are feeding the nation, and I would say it is true of all farmers in Canada that they are the most efficient producers of agricultural produce to be found anywhere in the world. Moreover they are feeding this nation with the cheapest produced food anywhere else in the world. This is one of the reasons I am not ashamed to ask that this interest rate be reconsidered. When we think of all the other things we are doing for industry, for area development boards and everything else, I do not think it is asking too much if we make sure that our agricultural industry is given a low interest rate in this regard.

Last night one of the members from Prince Edward Island expounded certain theories on the Farm Credit Corporation. One of the matters I feel strongly about is the refusal of the corporation to make a loan when they designate a farm operation as an uneconomic unit. My own view on this is that we should have enough people able to go into the field and say, when they find a farm is not an economic operation and the farmer wants $20,000, that the corporation will lend him $30,000 to put him in a sound economic position, in a position where his children, along with the other children in the neighbourhood, will be able to enjoy the rights and privileges enjoyed by every other citizen in the country.

I also feel that the establishment of an appeal board should be considered. It is claimed that this is covered by the regulations, but I feel it should be written in in black and white. Civil servants have an appeal board to whom they can go if they are not satisfied on something. Unions and other bodies make provision for appeals as well. People can appeal to the local member of parliament, but if the appellant is a Conservative and he appeals to me, and still nothing is done, he will say: "I knew the dirty beggar would not do anything for me because he knew I was a Conservative." I am not exaggerating this because it is a real problem. These people should be able to go to an independent board. I gather from many farm organizations that a good many farmers and business people would be prepared to sit on an appeal board for which they would charge the government nothing. They would know the local problems better than anyone 200 or 2,000 miles away from the problem.

I am not going to congratulate anyone on the administration of the Farm Credit Corporation, because when 55 per cent of the money borrowed by our farmers, as I said before, is being borrowed from Shylocks, and the like, we are not meeting the needs of agriculture in Canada. However, I realize the commitments made by the Minister of Agriculture and the committee he has set up will, we can rest assured, deal with these problems.

Mr. Doucett: Mr. Chairman, I should like to ask the minister an important question. I have had many requests from persons who wished to purchase a farm and had part-time gainful employment, to leave the farm to their wives and families to operate until they had sufficient means to carry on the pursuit of farming. I know that in the past the loan board did not look upon this type of applicant very favourably. I fully appreciate that in order for him to be a desirable applicant he must, first of all, know something about farming; and it is understood that within so many years he will take over and operate the farm himself. I am wondering how the board would look upon an application of this kind under the new act.

Mr. Hays: Mr. Chairman, in reply to the hon. member for Lanark, according to page 17 of the regulations:

> No loan shall be made on the security of farm land that is not part of a farm unit of sufficient size to produce, under the operation of the applicant, revenue which, together with any supplementary income, is sufficient—

And so on. As long as he establishes to the satisfaction of the Farm Credit Corporation that his major income will be from the farm, then he is entitled to a loan. If he was, say, a pilot for Air Canada he would not be entitled to a loan. We have not touched this part of the regulations. Even if he had an economic unit and was a fairly substantial chap there are provisions in the regulations which do not permit him to borrow money under the Farm Credit Act for additional land or chattels. However, I would be glad to consider this matter and hand it over to the committee. But we have not changed the regulations; they are left exactly as before.

Mr. Doucett: So that a man making an application under those circumstances would not have any chance, or at least very little opportunity, of getting a loan; but a farmer can borrow money for his son or his cousin?

Mr. Hays: Yes; provided the major part of his income is from this enterprise then he can participate in the benefits offered by the Farm Credit Corporation. He could have a part-time income; but if his major income was from some source other than farming he is not entitled to a loan, due to this provision in the regulations.

Mr. Doucett: In other words, if he had a gainful occupation which he worked at, say, eight months of the year, he would have to make more money on the farm than he was making from his other occupation in order to be considered?

Mr. Hays: Yes, that is the way it reads.

Mr. Honey: Mr. Chairman, I should like to take a few minutes of the committee's time. I am pleased the hon. member for Marquette is in his seat now because I want to refer to his remarks, particularly on clause 1(2) of Bill No. C-100. I agree in principle with the remarks of the hon. member, but I would suggest to him—and I speak from some experience of a farm clientele in the practice of law—that possibly he is looking a little too technically at the provisions of this amendment. I think the amendment is designed to overcome, and will in fact overcome, many of the hardships experienced by farm families consequent upon the death of the husband and father. Too often in these circumstances the executor of an estate is placed in the position where he must pay succession duties and estate taxes, and must use some of the estate funds to pay off members of the family to whom legacies may have been left, or charges which may have been made against the farm property. This is the sort of situation in which an executor finds himself from time to time. I am sure my hon. friend has probably found, when acting himself as an executor of an estate, that it would be helpful to him to be able to go to the Farm Credit Corporation and obtain a loan which would permit him to carry on the business of the farm, at least until he is able to hand it over, probably to the son when he attains his majority.

I think all of us know farm families in which it is the desire of the father and mother that the farm will be taken over by a son. This sort of legislation will enable the executor to arrange the finances of the estate, to borrow money perhaps while the son is still a minor, in order to operate the farm. Then, when the son is able to look after the farm the executor can hand over an operating farm to him. I am not concerned, Mr. Chairman, about the doubt raised by the hon. member for Marquette, although I know it is well founded. He referred to the question of a personal interest in the property. I believe that in practice the Farm Credit Corporation will apply the same good business principles to applications from administrators or executors as the corporation applies to any other application. If the executor or administrator can satisfy the Farm Credit Corporation that he is able to carry on an economic farm operation for the benefit of the estate, then I feel it is highly desirable that we have this amendment that will permit the corporation to do that.

If, on the other hand—and I think this should satisfy the doubt in the mind of the hon. member for Marquette—the Farm Credit Corporation is not satisfied with the ability of the executor or the administrator to carry on farm operations, then of course the corporation can refuse the application, just as they do in other cases in which they are not satisfied. The mere fact that this amendment is before the committee today, and the mere fact that it may be enacted, does not mean that all applications by administrators or executors will be granted. I feel that the principles I have just mentioned would apply even in the case of trust companies. I can envisage a situation in the administration of an estate whereby a trust company may be able to go to the Farm Credit Corporation and, acting in the best interests of the estate and the farm family, obtain a loan under this provision which might otherwise have been obtained by the farmer if he were living.

There is just one other point I want to mention to illustrate why I feel I can wholeheartedly support this amendment, and why I feel it is in the best interests of all farmers. I have already mentioned the facility that will be provided by this legislation in permitting the transmission of the farm to the son. Often we have seen cases in which a husband has died prematurely and the farm has to be sold, sometimes in payments of the debts, testamentary expenses and so on. Quite often the farm has to be sold because nobody is capable of carrying on because of lack of experience or for other reasons. There may be a son 14 or 15 years of age and the executor could go to the Farm Credit Corporation and obtain financing to operate the farm without imposing any liability or responsibility upon the wife but relieving her of these responsibilities. In due course, the farm can be turned over to the son. In this way, the farm remains in family hands into the next generation, as would have been the desire of the farmer.

For these reasons I support these amendments. I am pleased that the hon. member for Marquette raised the pertinent points that he did, but I do not view them with the same concern that he does. I think, in practice, this provision will work out very well.

[Translation]

Mr. Latulippe: Mr. Chairman, I avail myself of the study of clause 1 of Bill No. C-100 to state briefly a few ideas about farm credit and in particular to try to make the minister understand the pitiful situation which prevails in my riding of Compton-Frontenac.

First, I must point out that the Farm Credit Corporation and the Farm Credit Act do not meet the sorry plight of the small farmers in Quebec. The reason is very simple: the small farmer cannot prove that his farm is an economic unit and that he is solvent because his income is very often too low, simply because his farm is too small and his equipment too old. Farm credit in itself would probably help several small farmers, but they cannot hope to get a loan because they cannot fill the conditions set up by the body which distributes those loans.

The problem is obviously the families' lack of resources and it is not likely to be solved by new legislation even if the latter provided for penalties and extensions.

Usually legislation does not increase the taxpayers' income.

If so many farmers fail to submit applications, it is for a number of reasons but the main factors involved are of an economic nature. None of us must forget that, because the problem will be solved only if we seek all those causes. We must always remember who made our country what it is today. Who benefits from it? Is it the founders' descendants or is it exploiters and spongers? Why is it that our farmers have become slaves who are fearful of the future in a rich country? Why are they compelled, after three or four generations, to mortgage their farm, and that, through their government?

It is because big interests were successful in controlling money and credit and because governments have become the servants of financial interests. Well, it is that control that all other reformation advocates denounce and respect at the same time that the Social Crediters have decided to break down, so that the people can become again master in their own country.

When a doctor meets a patient, he has two alternatives: to look for the cause, or only treat the manifestations of the illness without looking for the cause.

Our present system goes one better and maintains the centre of infection in laying down that infection as a principle.

Farm credit is no solution. It is a cancer in the economy which will tend to increase the cost of living and to reduce some more the purchasing power, generally, after each payment. That is why we say that credit should be provided at administration costs, if this country really intends to save agriculture.

Farm credit will drive farmers away from their farms to put them back in the hands of the community. As a solution, we are presented with ARDA, a planning and suggestions which farmers will always be too poor to carry out; besides, that ARDA program could not bear fruit before some 15 years and by then, a great number of farmers will have left their farms.

What we need is concrete measures, peacefully hastened, if we do not want to face other depressions which, this time, would be detrimental for the whole economy; if our modern system makes it possible to create debt money with a stroke of the pen, it can make it possible to create, with a stroke of the pen, debt free money to be used to modernize agriculture and give the farmers their legal right to the efforts of generations and their right to become owners of their assets and not only indebted, depossessed and discouraged people, as it is the case today.

The present system has no mechanism to set in balance the consumer's buying power with the producers' production power. Why prefer the commission, ration and planning system? The only thing lacking is the financial system; why control the rest and not that one? Why not talk a little more of planned money and much less of planned economy?

Why not control money, instead of controlling producers and consumers? It is because of our apathy and silence, because we silently endured the whip and the knife in the past, that we have become the most exploited people in the civilized world. We should learn to act.

It is a well known fact that the farming industry in Quebec is experiencing a deep depression. My county is extremely affected by the farmers being considered as second rate citizens by the various governments, simply because they have not in hand, and on their own, the means of adjusting to modern economic trends.

It is inconceivable that society as a whole should expect so much from agriculture, while our governments ignore the basic problems in their legislation. I say "ignore", because last year, or more exactly on June 4 of last year, I received an answer to a question on the order paper asking for the number and amounts of loans granted by the Farm Credit Corporation in my county.

In 1961, seven requests had been received, of which four were approved for a sum of about $44,000. In 1962, 41 requests were received, of which 30 were approved, representing $413,700 which means ten times as much borrowed money and ten times more people with a financial load to carry.

The Farm Credit Corporation should be able to adjust to the local needs, so as to help not only the farmers to get credit for their own farms, but also to help farm organizations and other people who, though not being farmers themselves, make their living from farming, in order to open up paying markets, so that those who borrow might at least repay their loans.

In Compton, in 1962-63, 18 loans were approved for $282,900, and in 1963-64, 14 loans for $168,700. Fourteen applications were in abeyance. In Frontenac, in 1962-63, 17 loans were approved for $176,000, and in 1963-64, one application was approved, for an amount of $8,000, and five cases were in abeyance.

In both sections of the riding, Compton and Frontenac, 35 farmers were granted a loan. Are 35 farmers an economic market? Because their neighbours were unable to get financial help, they will not be able to make the borrowed money productive. Almost all the farms in the riding represent a whole network of poverty. It is not small farmers, faced with chronic farming problems, who must adapt themselves to the Farm Credit Corporation, but rather it is the corporation which should find some means to adapt itself to their situation and help them.

One has no right to let people suffer, who might produce something to feed a part of our population which lacks the vital minimum, and that for administrative reasons, because of a legislation which is only paperwork, because of the decisions of officials blinded by routine. There is only one thing that can put an end to our troubles: it is a concentration of collective efforts.

Mr. Chairman, I wish to introduce an amendment to section 16.

[Mr. Latulippe.]

I move, seconded by the hon. member for Chapleau (Mr. Laprise)—

[Text]

The Deputy Chairman: Order. I apologize for interrupting the hon. member for Compton-Frontenac but if he proposes to move an amendment to clause 16 I think it might be more appropriate if the hon. member would wait until clause 16 is being discussed.

Mr. Hays: Mr. Chairman, with the concurrence of hon. members I wonder whether we might not pass clause 1 this afternoon. I know we cannot pass them all.

Some hon. Members: No.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall clause 1 carry?

[Translation]

Mr. Latulippe: Mr. Chairman, may I call it five o'clock?

[Text]

Mr. Baldwin: I have some observations on this clause.

Progress reported.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Batten): It being five o'clock the house will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely notices of motions and public bills.

ESTATE TAX ACT

SUGGESTED EXTENSION OF MINISTERIAL DISCRETION UNDER SECTION 16

Mr. A. D. Hales (Wellington South) moved:

That, in the opinion of this house, the government should give consideration to the advisability of extending the ministerial discretion delegated by secton 16 of the Estate Tax Act beyond the "undue hardship or excessive sacrifice" limitations, to the end that the minister possess wider power to accept instalment payment of estate taxes and thereby reduce the number of "forced sale" liquidations that, in many cases, have resulted in the loss to Canada of Canadian ownership or control of Canadian business enterprises.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I welcome the opportunity to reintroduce this notice of motion which I favour very strongly and which I hope other hon. members of the house will favour likewise. I should like to outline simply the basis of this motion. Without repeating it word for word, it recommends to the government that it make the payment of succession duties payable over a greater length of time and by instalments.

I think we could put up a very good argument as to why death duties are at all necessary. Death itself causes enough hardship without adding to the burden by taxation, and when we consider that only about 1.5 per cent of the national revenue is derived from this source, in my opinion these taxes have a very crippling effect on the economy of the country. They certainly do not encourage one to save and build up an estate. However they are with us and will probably always be with us.

Therefore I think the government should give consideration, first, to extending the time of payment of succession duties from six months to five years and, second, to making it possible to pay these taxes by instalments.

As my motion deals with the payment of estate tax assessments by instalments I shall limit my remarks to this point. It is of paramount importance to Canada to arrange our taxing statutes so as to encourage the retention in Canada of the ownership of Canadian enterprises and to encourage the development of capital within Canada.

When the demand for taxes at death becomes confiscatory or requires the liquidation of a business at sacrifice prices, serious problems result. I submit that this is one of the reasons why certain taxpayers are forsaking Canada, and also why the control of much of our heritage is being sold to foreign investors. In the case of privately owned businesses where the owners die, six months is far too short a time to wind up an estate and secure the necessary funds to pay succession duties. The widow or some member of the family may wish to carry on the business, but the payment of succession duties in six months time is too great a drain on the capital reserves. Whereas, provided that a non-liquid estate furnishes proper security and interest is charged, there would seem, Mr. Speaker, much in favour of permitting the payments on the instalment basis.

May I remind the house again of the difficulties of continuing a family or small business, or making a satisfactory sale of the business after the dealth of the owner. It does create a real problem. Imposing payment of succession duties within six months only creates further problems, causes forced sales and loss of ownership, often to foreign investors.

I think I should draw the attention of the house to another hardship caused by the payment of these taxes within six months of death. The case so often happens where the survivors, in many instances widows, have to make forced sales of stocks or bonds. The sales have to be made at a low market value, thus creating grave problems for survivors, particularly in family owned corporations.

Another hardship often created by imposing the present regulations of the Estate Tax Act is in the rural area of our country. I know of a case where a father owned a large farm stocked with a good herd of pedigreed cattle. He died without making a will. He and his two sons had been building up this farm. Very unfortunately the mother died a short time afterwards, with the result that the two boys found themselves in the position where they had to gather up sufficient funds to pay the succession duties. There were no liquid funds available. The only thing they could do was call an auction sale, and this purebred herd of cattle was dispersed at that sale. They had taken years to build it up, and it was a real hardship for these two boys to see this herd dispersed simply in order to pay succession duties.

The Estate Tax Act, with respect to payment of succession duties should, as I said at the beginning, be amended to make death taxes payable in instalments, with interest in approved cases. Several representations and briefs have been submitted to the government in this respect. The National Council of Women of Canada, the Estate Planning Council of Toronto, and the Canadian Bar Association have all shown a great interest in this matter, and presented briefs to the royal commission on taxation.

I brought this subject up during the last session of this house, and a number of hon. members were very interested in my motion. Some five speakers participated in the debate, and with the exception of two members on the government side they were in favour of the motion. I realize that those on the government side no doubt will be bringing up some of the arguments that were mentioned previously.

As recorded at page 2990 of Hansard of May 6 last, the parliamentary secretary to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) has this to say:

> There is a problem in connection with family businesses which exists in this field and, as hon. members know, the officials of the Department of National Revenue have been looking at this problem for some time. One of the great difficulties with which they have had to deal is the fact that nobody comes forward and gives us a specific example of a business which has had to be sold because of having to pay the estate tax. People talk of this generally but do not come forward and say that a particular business must be sold because of this.

When this motion was debated in the house last December the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) had this to say, as recorded at page 5617 of Hansard for December 9, 1963. He was referring to what Dr. Eaton, the former deputy minister of finance, had to say:

> Dr. Eaton has a very theoretical and nice sounding proposition in the lengthy quotations we got from the parliamentary secretary, but this presupposes that owners of a concern are masters of all the factors and that they can plan to the nth degree. Let me assure him that I am concerned with companies where one cannot do so. I can cite a case of one of our better growth companies, controlled by four men in their forties, which had to be sold to what I am sure was foreign capital because the principal shareholder could not get any insurance. He was uninsurable. This was a growth company where there were no accumulative reserves. The principals drew good salaries but their capital was tied up in the shares of that company and its subsidiaries. If you cannot get a term insurance with a buy-sell agreement, how can you protect the interests of the estate and the remaining shareholders who must make some provision for eventualities? There was no doubt in my mind that against the potential assets of the principal shareholders of this company there was going to be a substantial tax assessment. I know of other cases where Canadians have lost control. I am not going to name the companies; they came through knowledge acquired in my legal practice.

Yet the parliamentary secretary says we do not come forward with concrete examples. I communicated with the Canadian Institute of Chartered Accountants and was informed—and I quote:

> While many of our members in public practice know of many cases where businesses have been sold because of the looming threat of estate taxes, because of the professional relationhip with their clients they are unable to divulge the information you require.

I can well understand that men in these positions are not at liberty to divulge certain things.

On May 21, 1964, the Financial Post came out with an article headed "In Five Years These Firms Have Been Sold Foreign". It stated that in just five years control of 143 Canadian firms had been acquired by foreign investors. I am sure we can say that a large percentage of these sales was made because the owners knew of the succession duties which would be facing those companies. I know it is always known what succession duties will be payable. Owners are advised by their lawyers or accountants that the law is as it is, and that there is no use making objection. The tax will have to be paid and they, or their heirs, will have to get the money together with which to pay them within the allotted period of six months.

This is a serious problem. I am not so concerned about the situation in which the large companies or corporations find themselves, though no doubt these succession duties affect them acutely. I am more concerned about the number of small businesses, family owned businesses, which find themselves in a precarious position when the time comes to round up enough money to pay succession duties. I think we are all agreed that death duties in Canada are extremely high. For instance, a company with a taxable income of $1 million has to find $300,000 in succession duties. The duty on a $2 million set-up would be $800,000. On a taxable income of $250,000 succession duties would amount to $44,000, and on a taxable income of $160,000 they would amount to $19,000. It is the problem faced by these smaller firms to which I would refer the house particularly.

I know it has been said that these firms should carry insurance to take care of these eventualities. That is all very well, but there are types of business which just cannot follow such a course. For one thing, they may not be insurable, because of health reasons or other reasons including age. Then again, if life insurance is taken out to cover the situation, it only adds to the total value of an estate and makes the taxable amount so much greater. I would point out that there are many family businesses which are just making a living for their owners. The business is being held together, but there is not enough money available to pay premiums to take care of succession duties. The business is composed of land and buildings, paid for, granted, but there is no money available from which to pay these succession duties within six months. Yet, under the act as it now stands, no provision is made for the payment of these duties over a more extended period of time.

I do not wish to take up the time of the house much longer because I know there are many who wish to speak on this subject. I have been most encouraged by the interest which has been shown in the subject since I first introduced the motion to this honourable chamber. Editorials and letters which have appeared in the press in support of my suggestion have been gratifying. Maybe I should put one or two of them on record—I hope I will be pardoned for the personal references in this connection. The Windsor Star printed an editorial headed "The Nub of the Problem" which read as follows:

Alfred D. Hales, Conservative M.P. for Wellington South, puts his finger on the nub of the succession duties and estate tax problem. He told that many small businesses have to be sold to raise the cash to meet the death taxes.

The duties have put more than one modest business on the block. A man builds up his firm, then he either has to liquidate before death to provide the taxation money or his heirs have to sell to pay the taxes.

The succession duties and estate taxes are driving small businesses into the arms of big corporations. That may not have been the original idea, but that is how it works out.

Another editorial—a short one—appeared in The Independent of April, 1964:

We have discussed succession duties on these pages before. We have deplored the fact that the law requiring that they be paid within six months is encouraging Canadian businesses to fall into the hands of Americans.

The money derived from succession duties provides the government with only 1½ per cent of its revenue. Yet the sale of businesses to pay these duties is daily allowing more and more of Canada to fall into the hands of foreigners and depriving us all of part of our birthright.

Yet, earlier this year, when Alfred Hales, PC, Wellington South, introduced a bill to allow these payments to be made over a period of five years, the government rejected it.

Perhaps I might mention a letter I received from a private individual who said this:

Some time back the writer read an article in the Globe and Mail regarding succession duties, estate taxes, etc. You are so right. To me, any firm which necessarily must sell out for this reason should have cause to be supported by the government.

We have worked very hard and enjoyed seeing our business grow. We started in the basement of our home. Our family and help stuck together and our present shop is 90 feet by 320 feet, and we have taken over another shop 40 feet by 80 feet. We have approximately 140 on our payroll.

The writer expresses his concern about succession duties and about the time when they will have to be paid in cash.

These are all the remarks I wish to make at this time. I hope hon. members will recognize the importance of the situation and express their views. I hope the matter will come to a vote and, if it does, that the subject matter will be referred to the committee on banking and commerce for the further study which I honestly feel it deserves.

Mr. E. J. Benson (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): The arguments put forth by the hon. member for Wellington South (Mr. Hales) were very strong, especially strong I feel for the complete abolition of death duties. Indeed, I think the present government has done much in this regard from the federal point of view inasmuch as it has turned over to the provinces 75 per cent of the death duties paid.

First, I think we should have a little background with regard to the sections we are discussing. The sections of the Estate Tax Act dealing with collection of duties are sections 13 to 21. When the Estate Tax Act was passed, there was a change, inasmuch as the executor became responsible for the tax rather than the successor, as was the case prior to the enactment of the act. Section 15 makes provision for instalment payments over a six-year period where a beneficiary is receiving a life annuity. Section 16 is the section to which the motion refers, and I will later quote it in full. This is the section which provides that the minister may make allowance for delayed payment when there is hardship. Section 17(2) provides that an appeal does not stop collection of the tax. Section 18 provides for the payment of the taxes to be met as a debt of the estate, and section 19 provides that there will be 5 per cent interest on the overdue tax. Section 20 deals with penalties, and section 21 with refund of overpayments. The specific section with which we are dealing here, section 16, provides:

Notwithstanding the provisions of this part respecting the time within which payment shall be made of any amount as tax under this part by the executor of the estate of a deceased or by a person as the successor to any property passing on the death of a deceased, where the minister is satisfied that payment of any such amount as tax under this part cannot, without undue hardship or excessive sacrifice, be made within that time, the minister may defer the time for payment of that amount or any part thereof for such period, on such terms and on payment of such interest, not exceeding 5 per cent per annum, as to him seems equitable and proper.

The amazing thing about this particular motion put forward by the hon. member for Wellington South (Mr. Hales) is that he is asking that the minister's discretion be further extended. It seems to me that last year when we were talking about ministerial discretion in order to close up some flagrant abuses under the Income Tax Act there were very, very strong arguments from the opposite side of the house that in no case should ministerial discretion be extended or should more reliance be put upon the minister with regard to the application of a taxing statute. However, be that as it may, I believe that the hon. member's motion is worthy of consideration. Indeed I made statements in this regard on December 9 last and I would refer hon. members to pages 5612-5615 of Hansard. I again discussed this particular problem during the debate on the Estate Tax Act—not on the Income Tax Act, as the hon. member stated. This was on May 6, 1964, beginning at page 2990 of Hansard. There would really be very little effect on estates in Ontario if the motion put forward by the hon. member were adopted and were put into the Estate Tax Act. If the federal government were to extend the payment period over five years, it would really have little effect on the payment of total death taxes in Ontario. In backing up this argument, Mr. Speaker, I would like to point out that with regard to Ontario, Quebec and British Columbia the federal government collects only 25 per cent of the death duties. The other 75 per cent of the death duties which are paid by people in the provinces of Ontario, Quebec and British Columbia are not even levied under a federal act; they are levied under provincial statute.

In the province of Ontario they are levied under the succession duty act, and there are similar acts in Quebec and British Columbia. In the other seven provinces the duties are levied under the federal Estate Tax Act and a 75 per cent rebate is made to the provinces. But in the province in which the hon. member for Wellington South resides, 75 per cent of the duties—that is, when the present legislation assigning 75 per cent to that province is completed—will be collected by the province of Ontario. So if somebody has $100,000 in death duties to pay, he will only be paying $25,000 of this amount to the federal government. Therefore if we adopted the hon. member's suggestion and spread it over a five-year period, it would mean that out of a total of $100,000 he would have to pay $75,000 in cash to the province of Ontario within six months, and the other $25,000 to be paid to the federal government could be spread over a five-year period. I believe the action proposed by the hon. member would be much more effective if he would go to his Conservative confreres in the province of Ontario and persuade them to change the succession duty act so that succession duties in that province were paid over a five year period. This would be of much more benefit to his constituents and to mine than incorporating his suggestion within the Estate Tax Act of Canada.

I stated on May 6 when this question was raised by the hon. member for Brome-Missisquoi (Mr. Grafftey) that there had not been a great deal of evidence brought forward to the Department of National Revenue indicating that businesses had actually been disposed of because people had had to pay estate taxes. I have checked with the Department of National Revenue and am told that this is still the case; that people have not come forward and said, "Well, if we have to pay our estate taxes we will have to sell our business". I am sure that if people had had to dispose of their businesses in order to pay estate taxes they would have gone howling to the Department of National Revenue. However, I have checked and am told they just cannot find specific cases. As I have stated before, the problem has been considered for a good many years by the Department of National Revenue under the previous administration and the present one. The difficulty is to find evidence of hardship, for someone to present to them specific cases where this has occurred. Companies often change hands. In my experience as a chartered accountant I have found that businesses change hands as the main shareholder gets older, for a good many reasons. I might just indicate a few of the reasons why.

You often find that a business has developed because of the forceful management of one particular individual. This individual fears, as he gets older, that his heirs will not be able to carry on the business in the same forceful way, and he may turn around and sell the business. In addition, in the case of companies these days we find that some small business operations are making such a profit that serious income tax problems develop. They are operated as private companies, and we often find with regard to them that there is a build-up of retained earnings on which income taxes have not been paid. Provisions have been written into the Income Tax Act to try to deal with this particular problem. However, all the provisions which are contained in the Income Tax Act have not really created a situation whereby on the death of a businessman the money can be taken out of the business easily, or if he wanted to take the cash out during his lifetime this could not be done without paying very sizeable amounts of personal income tax.

I have found that many businesses are disposed of in order that the individual may realize a capital gain rather than having to continually face this income tax burden. To these people this is much more important than the succession duties burden on their death. As I have previously stated, and as I stated during the debate on May 6, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Gordon) and the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) have indicated that there is to be consultation between the provinces of Canada and the federal government on tax matters. There has been mention of setting up a committee for this purpose, and personally I would be very much in favour of it. I believe estate taxes and succession duties should be one of the subjects to be discussed with the provinces at this time.

I also indicated on May 6 that it is extremely difficult for the federal government to make changes to the present Estate Tax Act because it affects the incomes of seven of the provinces to whom we rebate 75 per cent of the tax. Nevertheless I am very much in favour of consultations taking place, and I am sure they will take place and that the particular problem raised by the hon. member in his resolution will be discussed at that time.

Personally I do not think that any move to allow instalment payments should be limited to businesses but should apply to other assets as well. One speaks of businesses passing from the control of one group of individuals to another on the death of a major shareholder. However, on the death of individuals quite often in Canada one has to sell stocks, bonds and real estate. There are a good many assets which have to be realized, apart from the business assets of an individual. I believe that if such an extension of payment of death duties were made it could only be effectively made, I stress again, if the succession duty acts of Ontario, Quebec and British Columbia were changed, as well as the federal Estate Tax Act. I believe that such extension of payments would in equity have to apply to the assets of individuals such as stocks, bonds and real estate, instead of just business assets as proposed in this resolution.

The hon. member also raised the question of ownership passing to non-Canadians because of the estate tax problem. I hope I have convinced him that from this time onward such events in Ontario will not be because of the estate tax problem, but mainly because of the succession duty problem under the act passed and administered by the Conservative government of the province of Ontario. The hon. member stated that because of death duties businesses often fall into foreign hands. Personally I have not been able to find examples of this. I also checked with the Department of National Revenue and they could find no concrete example of this happening. I should like to point out to the hon. member that we on this side of the house are very interested in preserving and expanding Canadian ownership of business in this country. Indeed, I should like further to point out that the present government in spite of a good deal of criticism from members of the official opposition, has taken the first effective steps ever taken in this country to encourage the transfer of part of the ownership of foreign-owned companies in Canada to Canadians.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I should like to sum up by saying that I believe the motion is worthy of consideration. I think the hon. member should send it off to the Conservative government in Toronto, so that that government will be willing to consider it with us when we sit down to discuss death duties. I also suggest that he send it to the governments of the provinces of Quebec and British Columbia, because 75 per cent of all death duties in these provinces are levied under provincial statutes. I think this matter is worth discussing, and in my own personal capacity I will do everything in my power to see that it is discussed when we sit down to discuss tax matters.

I have indicated that the motion, in order to be effective, requires provincial action in these provinces. We would like anyone who has evidence of businesses having to be sold because of death duties to submit such evidence to the Department of National Revenue so that when we sit down with provincial representatives who are levying most of the death duties we will be able to present them with this kind of evidence, perhaps provided to us by the hon. member, in order to further the case he has brought forward by this motion.

Mr. Hales: Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether I could ask the parliamentary secretary a question. There are strong possibilities that the province of Ontario may collect their succession duties on the instalment basis. If they go ahead and do this, would the parliamentary secretary be prepared to recommend to his government that they follow suit?

Mr. Benson: Let me say in answer to the hon. member that I checked no less recently than today, but found that no legislation to this effect has been introduced in the province of Ontario. We Liberals are certainly very much interested in having similar tax laws applied across the country. Indeed, when the Estate Tax Act was introduced, it was the hope that this might be the act which would be adopted across the country, whether we were to collect the tax and rebate it to the provinces, or the provinces were to collect it themselves. This has not been the result, and there are certain differences between the federal Estate Tax Act and the succession duty acts of the provinces of Ontario, Quebec and British Columbia. But we are willing and anxious to have similar laws applied across the country and the government I am sure would be willing to discuss this matter when discussing death duties with the provinces.

Mr. Joseph Macaluso (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, I should like to commend the hon. member for Wellington South (Mr. Hales) for reintroducing this motion. I was not able to speak on it in December 1963 when it was first introduced, a fact which I regret, but my absence was due to illness. I have been interested for quite some time in the Estate Tax Act and in the old dominion succession duty act.

Being a lawyer by profession I certainly come into contact on many occasions, both in my own practice and the practice of our firm, with estate tax matters in which succession duties have played a very important part. The Estate Tax Act, as it now is, came into force on January 1 of 1959, I believe, replacing the old dominion succession duty act. It provided for payment by the executor of an estate of the succession duties levied by the Estate Tax Act within a period of six months. I also believe that in the present act if an application is made to the minister he has discretion, if a bond is posted, to extend payment of tax for another period of six months, making the period a year. The experience I have had is that on many occasions it is difficult to obtain a bond, and it is also difficult to obtain the exercise of the minister's discretion. I think any of the lawyers in the house will acknowledge that.

I am completely in favour of payments of succession duties in instalments, and I certainly think this notice of motion should be given serious consideration by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Gordon) and the government. I have been trying to urge such consideration and I commend the hon. member for Wellington South, as I say, for reintroducing the motion.

Whether or not there is actual loss of Canadian ownership or control to foreign ownership as a result of the payment of succession duties is at times questionable. I am sure there are businesses and firms who have sold out with the succession duty aspect in mind, not so much because of the payment of the taxes themselves. The hon. member for Wellington South quoted from the May 21 edition of the Financial Post concerning 143 firms which were acquired by foreign investors. I paid particular attention to this article and studied it very carefully, but there is nothing in it to lead one to believe that those acquisitions by foreign investors resulted from the payment of succession duties. The hon. member assumed that some of them may have been caused as the result of such payments, and perhaps they were; I wish I knew for sure, as perhaps do many of us. But there is a problem here.

In section 16 of the act, which deals with the minister's discretion, a problem arises with regard to the words "undue hardship or excessive sacrifice". If payment of succession duties is likely to result in undue hardship or excessive sacrifice, the minister may extend the time of payment. The Estate Tax Act is one of those acts which does not have a very comprehensive definition section. Perhaps this is because parliament did not want to define undue hardship or excessive sacrifice. This provision really leaves it to the minister's discretion as to what is undue hardship or excessive sacrifice. I am not one who is in favour of ministerial discretion, especially when it is left in such a vague position as it is left in section 16.

Here, Mr. Speaker, we have the words "undue hardship or excessive sacrifice" which really cover the particular situation the hon. member for Wellington South (Mr. Hales) wishes to have covered. I agree that the section is invoked very rarely; very rarely does the minister use this discretion. My own thinking on this matter is that perhaps the act should be amended by extending the period of six months to a period of one year during which the minister could exercise his discretion. Then, perhaps, there could be a better definition of the circumstances of undue hardship and excessive sacrifice. Certainly, many of our acts have very comprehensive definition sections, but this act does not. I say that this is one of the faults of this act, that it does not define, perhaps purposely, what these words mean. Perhaps there is security in vagueness, Mr. Speaker.

The instalment payment plan is a very interesting proposal, Mr. Speaker. We have this provision in our Income Tax Act, and I think it could be extended to the Estate Tax Act. However, as the parliamentary secretary pointed out, I think there is a problem in obtaining provincial consent to the provision for instalment payment. As the parliamentary secretary pointed out, the provinces of Ontario, Quebec and British Columbia have their own succession duty acts. Other provinces do not and the federal government collects estate taxes and then remits them to these seven provinces. According to my research, there has to be consultation with the provinces of Ontario, Quebec and British Columbia as to whether they are prepared to make the same provision in their own acts.

I have read the debate on December 9 and the debate on May 6, 1964 with regard to the estates tax resolution when it was before this house. As a result of my own research and discussions with other lawyers eminent in estate matters, I have concluded that there is a problem in obtaining the agreement of the provinces to having the same provision in their own acts. If the provinces agree to this provision, then the federal government can also have it. I believe that the report of the Carter commission on taxation will probably come forward by the end of this year or perhaps sooner, as well as the reports of the various provincial royal commissions on taxation. I am sure these reports will contain recommendations with regard to the Estate Tax Act. Certainly, there is a great deal lacking in this act and it is not doing the job it was meant to do when it was enacted in 1959. I believe that when these reports come forward the Minister of Finance (Mr. Gordon) should consult with the provincial ministers in Ontario, Quebec and British Columbia, on the possibility of obtaining such an amendment as has been proposed by the hon. member for Wellington South. Certainly, I will do all I can to urge that this is done.

The parliamentary secretary has stated the minister will do this. The hon. member can be assured that I will do my best to see that he does do this. The other problem connected with section 16 is that it permits the minister to defer the payment of taxes in cases of undue hardship which may occur if payment is demanded too quickly. I believe that six months is too quick for any person, any individual or large corporation. I gathered from the remarks made by the hon. member for Wellington South that he would like to see succession duties eliminated. I agree, and so far as the federal government is concerned the revenue collected is so small, 1.5 per cent of our national revenue, that it would not have a great effect. However, I agree also with the hon. member that we probably will never see this done. Certainly, we should try to alleviate the burden that is imposed on many large corporations and many family businesses connected with the payment of succession duties within the six month period. This certainly is a hardship, not only on the large corporations but on the small business firms.

I have a recollection of one case in which the widow of the deceased proprietor wished to carry on the business. She was unable to do so because her husband had not provided means whereby the succession duties could be paid. She was unable to carry on the business because of this demand for the payment of succession duties. An appeal was launched under section 16, but she was not able to obtain the discretion of the minister, so there was hardship involved. I should like to suggest, if it would be possible to do so without consultation with the provinces, that the deferment period be extended to 12 months rather than six months. Then, perhaps if a bond were posted it could be extended another six months, making it 18 months. If the deferment period were 12 months, then many people would not be forced to sell short at a time of low capital value or forced to consider refinancing.

I do not believe the industrial development bank meets the situation when it comes to the payment of succession duties. The industrial development bank, in the functions it exercises, is lacking because there is too much red tape, and at times the delay is too lengthy in processing the loan. By the time the bank turns down your application the six month period has expired. I should like to see action taken, therefore, to extend the deferment period for at least 12 months. In addition, I should like to see some definition of what is undue hardship and excessive sacrifice. I know there are others who wish to speak in this debate, so I will give up my time to them.

Mr. M. J. Moreau (York-Scarborough): I did not intend to speak in this debate today until I heard the parliamentary secretary say he was looking for evidence that there was a problem in this area. I thought perhaps I might relate for the benefit of the house one example, at any rate, without mentioning any names, which was brought to my attention within the last six months. I certainly assure the parliamentary secretary that I will be giving him all the details of this problem before too long.

I should like to commend the hon. member for Wellington South (Mr. Hales) for bringing the problem before the house. I must agree with the parliamentary secretary, however, that it is one which properly belongs before the provincial legislature. I urge the hon. member to apply all the pressure he can on his Conservative colleagues to have this done in the province of Ontario.

Mr. Hales: Do not forget Quebec, where you have Liberal friends.

Mr. Moreau: Being an Ontario member and realizing that the hon. member for Wellington South is also an Ontario member, I hope we can collaborate to see what we can do in our own province.

I do not generally support provisions containing ministerial discretions. However, I believe we can make a better case for it when it comes to the question of deferring tax payments than in other applications, such as the distasteful class or kind legislation which was before the house in recent times. I feel that perhaps the hon. member does have a point on the question of tax deferment in giving the minister more discretion. Referring to the problem of the evidence which I have to offer the parliamentary secretary, I may say that a short time ago I was approached by the president and founder of a new, internationally known food processing firm which operates within my riding. This gentleman came to Canada as an immigrant about 20 years ago and got into the food processing business. He has now developed a considerable export business, something for which I am sure we would all commend him. He now has an enterprise worth several million dollars which is growing very rapidly with the result that the firm is continually short of cash.

Recently he has had to face up to the problem of possibly selling the enterprise to one of a number of American concerns who are bidding for it. The firm is a highly reputable one and its products are rapidly gaining a reputation all over the world. The firm label has become very valuable and a number of large American firms have been putting pressure on him to sell his enterprise to them. They have been using, very successfully, arguments related to our estate tax laws, and have pointed out to him that with the way the company is growing and in view of the shortage of liquid assets his family would have to make a forced sale if something should happen to him.

He said to me: "Mr. Moreau, I came to this country and it has been very good to me. I want to commend the Minister of Finance (Mr. Gordon) for the efforts he is trying to make to keep control of our companies here in Canada; but what can I do? There is only one thing I can do. My tax advisers have told me that if I do not want to sell I have to form a public company." He said: "This is a company that my family and I have developed over the past 20 years and we are not particularly anxious to go public. However, I must. I have followed the advice and we are now getting out a stock issue."

The parliamentary secretary says that the department does not have any evidence of forced sales, but I suggest to him that the problem is a real one, one which a number of firms are meeting before they are actually faced with the situation. They are doing so in two ways, either by selling the enterprise to an American operator or by forming a public company in Canada and thus jeopardizing control of the company which the enterprise of the family has created.

These people feel strongly that the situation is unjust and I must say there is a great deal of merit in the argument put forward to me. Again I should like to urge the hon. member for Wellington South (Mr. Hales) to do what he can to acquaint the provincial authorities in Ontario with the problem, because it really lies there. I hope we will see changes in our estate tax laws very soon because I certainly agree with the hon. member that this is a very real problem, particularly for smaller family firms in Canada.

Mr. A. B. Patterson (Fraser Valley): Mr. Speaker, without being charged with talking out this motion I should like to make several observations with respect to it. I did not hear the comment just made but I guess there was not much to it. The hon. member for Wellington South (Mr. Hales), as he pointed out, has introduced this motion again this session, but I would say that the points he has put forward and emphasized seem to be very important and logical. It seems that these days we are living on the instalment plan. We are carrying on our lives on the instalment plan and we may as well continue this in the estate tax field. Therefore I do not think there is anything remarkable or unique in this suggestion.

I believe that the suggestions made by the hon. member would be of real benefit to many who are faced with the task of trying to meet these responsibilities and still maintain the business, or whatever the asset may be. The argument has been raised that this matter is a provincial responsibility because of the fact that the provinces of Ontario, Quebec and

British Columbia receive 75 per cent of succession duties. I do not know why British Columbia is always tacked on the end. I would much prefer that members would refer to British Columbia and then come farther east, but I have noticed that the order is always Ontario, Quebec and British Columbia. However, that is beside the point.

This whole matter could be resolved, as far as the federal administration is concerned, by turning over to the provinces 100 per cent of these taxes. Then we would not have to be concerned here about passing legislation complementing provincial legislation. We could get rid of the whole business by letting the provinces have 100 per cent of estate taxes.

I rose to support the motion that has been presented. I believe there are a great many other amendments that should be made in estate tax legislation, but the ones suggested today could be brought in without too much difficulty and would benefit a great number of people.

Mr. J. J. Greene (Renfrew South): Mr. Speaker, first of all I would commend the hon. member who introduced the motion. I would also indicate to him that he is in very select company in making this suggestion because the same or a similar suggestion has been put forward by the university women's club, the business and professional women's club and the women's institutes in various parts of the great riding of Renfrew South. Thus the hon. member is certainly in very select company when he makes this suggestion.

I would point out to the hon. member, however, that his motion refers specifically to family businesses and I think it envisages holdings of considerable size. Again, I think we should commend not only the Minister of Finance (Mr. Gordon) but also his parliamentary secretary, who has been rather humble in taking praise in this regard, because between them they have brought before the house very powerful suggestions whereby Canadian business entities may be preserved.

On the question of succession duties I suggest that the right to pay over a period of years should be given not only to large family businesses, as the resolution appears to envisage, but particularly to the smaller estates of more humble persons, such as farm people who are subject to these duties. They should have the right to commute them, just as much as larger business enterprises.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Batten): Order. The hour for the consideration of private members' business has expired.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Speaker, I would ask the house leader to let us know what is in front of us for the next few days.

Mr. Favreau: Mr. Speaker, we intend to complete the debate on the committee stage of the bill concerning farm credit, which we hope to finish tomorrow. After that we intend to proceed with interim supply. If there is time left on Friday we will proceed with the third reading of Bill No. C-90, to amend the National Defence Act, which has now come back from the committee.

Mr. Churchill: Not third reading; it will be in committee of the whole house.

Mr. Favreau: Yes, of course. We will take the committee stage and then hope to proceed with third reading. On Monday we will begin the debate on the flag resolution.

At six o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Thursday, June 11, 1964

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

HUNGARY—AGREEMENTS RESPECTING TRADE, EXCHANGE OF DIPLOMATIC MISSIONS, ETC.

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, representatives of the governments of Canada and the Hungarian People's Republic have held a number of meetings in Ottawa between May 20 and June 9 to discuss problems of common interest in the fields of trade, financial claims, consular matters and diplomatic relations.

In addition to an agreement on trade on which my colleague the Minister of Trade and Commerce will be making a statement, we have also agreed to an exchange of diplomatic missions with Hungary as soon as convenient to each party.

We have reached agreement with the Hungarian government to negotiate at an early date a settlement of outstanding financial claims between the two countries. I shall shortly be making an announcement of the type of claims which might be eligible for consideration under this agreement.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, we have reached an understanding with the Hungarian government on a number of consular matters which will, among other things, clarify the position of Canadian citizens, including those of Hungarian origin, who may wish to travel in Hungary.

I propose now, Mr. Speaker, to table the letters I have exchanged today with the Hungarian vice minister for foreign affairs covering these various subjects.

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, the three year trade agreement signed this morning between Canada and the Hungarian People's Republic is the first such agreement between the two countries in the post-war period.

The agreement is based on an exchange of most favoured nation treatment. At the same time Hungary has committed itself to purchase Canadian wheat and other goods to a total value of $24 million over the period of the agreement. I would draw the attention of the house to the mixed nature of this purchase commitment, marking a departure from other recent agreements. Since Hungary itself is normally an exporter of wheat, that portion of its commitment involving wheat is to amount to 250,000 metric tons, a somewhat smaller quantity than has been involved in recent purchases by other countries. Hungary has the choice of taking one half of this amount in the form of feed barley. The remainder of the purchase commitment will be taken up by Hungary in the form of Canadian goods of its choice. These goods are not specified, but it is hoped that on the basis of past Hungarian interest, new and continuing markets will be opened up for a wide range of Canadian goods.

In addition, the agreements signed today provide that a Hungarian trade office may be opened in Canada and a Canadian trade office may be opened in Hungary for the purpose of market exploration and trade promotion. Both governments have expressed the wish that through these agreements trade between Canada and Hungary may be expanded on a mutually satisfactory basis.

The establishment of trade relations with Hungary represents yet another step in the development of closer trade links between Canada and the countries of eastern Europe. In recent years our long standing trade relations with Poland and Czechoslovakia have been further strengthened through our sales of wheat to these countries. Poland is currently discussing in the GATT the basis of its participation in the Kennedy round, and Canada has expressed support for this initiative. Our trade agreement with the Soviet union signed in 1956 has been twice renewed, and the first trade agreement between Canada and Bulgaria was concluded last year. I am sure that our new trade agreement with Hungary will make a further valuable contribution to the expansion of Canadian trade.

With the permission of the house I should like to table a copy of the trade agreement and other correspondence exchanged between the two governments.

Mr. Speaker: Does the house give consent to the tabling of these documents?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Later:]

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Harold E. Winch (Vancouver East): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce in view of the statement he made concerning the trade agreement between Canada and Hungary. He outlined the major exports to Hungary under the agreement, and would he like to tell us now what are the major imports into Canada from Hungary?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Trade and Commerce): The only concession made by Canada under this agreement is to accord most favoured nation treatment to goods from Hungary.

INCOME TAX

PROPOSED REVISION OF CANADA-UNITED KINGDOM AGREEMENT

Hon. Walter L. Gordon (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I thought I should announce briefly to the house and to the public that it is the intention of the government to seek the revision at an early date of the Canada-United Kingdom income tax agreement. An announcement that this agreement would be revised was first made by the then minister of finance in December, 1960, following his proposal that certain special rates of non-resident withholding tax on dividends be withdrawn and that a rate of 15 per cent thereafter be imposed on all dividends paid to non-residents. The intention to revise certain international income tax agreements was also stated in the budget speech of 1963.

I have recently written to the chancellor of the exchequer in the United Kingdom suggesting that the discussions which were commenced in 1961 concerning the Canada-United Kingdom income tax agreement be reopened as soon as possible. If any hon. members or other persons or business firms wish to submit suggestions concerning the revision of this treaty, I would be glad to receive them during the next several weeks.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

PROVISION FOR CAPITAL EXPENDITURES, ISSUE OF SECURITIES, ETC.

Hon. Walter L. Gordon (Minister of Finance) moved that the house go into committee at the next sitting to consider the following resolution, which has been recommended to the house by His Excellency:

That it is expedient to bring in a measure to authorize the Canadian National Railway Company to make capital expenditures and to supply the financial requirements of affiliated companies in the year 1964, not exceeding $155,000,000 and to make certain capital expenditures and enter into certain contracts prior to July 1, 1965; to provide for the financial requirements of Trans-Canada Air Lines in an amount not exceeding $5,000,000, either by means of loans from Her Majesty to the National Company or by means of issues of securities of the National Company, authorized and guaranteed as to interest and principal by Her Majesty, the cash proceeds by either method to be used only for the financial requirements of Trans-Canada Air Lines, the capital needs of the national company itself being met entirely through the sale of preferred stock to Her Majesty and from reserves for depreciation and debt discount; to authorize Her Majesty to continue to purchase until December 31, 1964, Canadian National Company 4 per cent preferred stock in an annual amount not exceeding 3 per cent of the gross revenues of the company; to extend until December 31, 1964, the moratorium on interest on the loan of $100,000,000 to the company authorized by the Canadian National Railways Capital Revision Act of 1952; to authorize Her Majesty to make loans to the Canadian National Railway Company and Trans-Canada Air Lines to meet deficiences in operating revenues to June 30, 1965, any such loans to be repaid from revenues of the railway company and Trans-Canada Air Lines or, if revenues prove insufficient, by subsequent deficit appropriation by parliament; and to raise the limit on the Canadian National Railway Company's authority to refund matured, maturing and callable securities from the present level of $480,000,000 to $680,000,000.

Motion agreed to.

FINANCE

REPRESENTATIONS RESPECTING REMOVAL OF SALES TAX ON DRUGS

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Finance and ask whether representations have been received by him for the removal of the 11 per cent sales tax on most drugs on which it is levied. Also, was such a resolution brought to his attention from the recent meeting of the Ontario pharmacists' association, and will the minister say, in view of the fact that this tax actually rests particularly on those of low income, whether consideration will be given by the government to the removal of what is in effect a tax on sickness?

Hon. Walter L. Gordon (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, no representations have been made to me. They may have come to my department during the last day or so, but not to my knowledge.

In answering my right hon. friend's question I would point out that there has never been any general exemption from sales taxes for drugs. This particular tax to which he refers has been in effect for many years. I would also like to emphasize that it is a general tax and not a tax that is specifically imposed on the sale of drugs.

Mr. Rhéaume: It is on building materials too.

Mr. Gordon: It applies to everything, like clothing, shoes—

Mr. Rhéaume: Building materials.

Mr. Gordon: The Leader of the Opposition asked whether consideration would be given to the exemption of this tax from drugs, and I would be very glad to give that consideration prior to the next budget.

[Translation]

Mr. Réal Caouette (Villeneuve): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. The minister just said that this tax has been in effect for many years. Now, could the minister tell us whether it was in effect when the Leader of the Opposition was prime minister of Canada?

Mr. Habel: Certainly.

[Text]

Mr. Diefenbaker: Nice co-operation.

Mr. Gordon: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I asked the minister particularly whether there has been a request for the removal of this tax. The press said there had been. I would point out that under his government he raised the amount of the sales tax.

Mr. Gordon: I answered the first question, that to my knowledge there have been no representations. The right hon. gentleman is mistaken in his understanding of when this tax was increased.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

SOUTH AFRICA—CONVICTIONS AND SENTENCES UNDER APARTHEID LAWS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Prime Minister. It has to do with the fact that Nelson Mandela and seven of his associates have been found guilty of contravening the apartheid laws of South Africa. They are to be sentenced tomorrow, and the death penalty could be imposed.

Inquiries of the Ministry

I want to ask the Prime Minister if he will make vigorous representations to the government of South Africa urging that they exercise clemency in this case, having regard to the fact that if these men are executed it will shock the conscience of the civilized world and sow the seeds of a terrible day of reckoning in Africa.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I understand that while eight of the defendants in the Rivonia trial, to which my hon. friend has referred, have been found guilty on charges of sabotage and conspiracy, the sentences, as has been indicated, have not yet been pronounced. When they are pronounced they will be subject to appeal. While the matter is still sub judice it would, I believe, be improper for the government to make any public statement on the verdict or on the possible sentences.

I wish to assure the house, however, that the government is following this matter with grave concern in the light of the resolution passed by the security council of the United Nations last Tuesday. If circumstances make it desirable the government, after the appeal has been heard, will take whatever action it can to assist in avoiding the result to which my hon. friend has referred.

Mr. D. V. Pugh (Okanagan-Boundary): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Would the Prime Minister advise the house whether representations have been made to Canada relative to improper incarceration under our immigration law and, if so, what countries have done so?

Mr. Pearson: To my knowledge, Mr. Speaker, no such representations have been made, but I will be very glad to look into the matter.

NATO—BILINGUAL QUALIFICATIONS OF CANADIAN DEPUTY SECRETARY GENERAL

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Gilles Grégoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs concerning bilingualism in his department. I think the minister is highly qualified in that field, since he is himself perfectly bilingual.

Could he tell us whether Mr. Roberts, who was loaned to NATO to act as undersecretary, is bilingual and whether such a qualification was required by the North Atlantic Treaty Organization?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): I understand he is bilingual.

RECOGNITION OF QUEBEC DELEGATION IN PARIS

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Maurice Côté (Chicoutimi): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs.

Is it true that the federal government has been obstinately refusing for two years to grant the statute of general consulate to the Quebec delegation in Paris, as reported in the press and apparently confirmed by the premier of the province of Quebec?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I feel this matter should be given serious consideration, and that is what I intend to do.

IRELAND—APPROVAL OF DEMAND FOR UNIFICATION

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Marcel Lessard (Lake St. John): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Prime Minister about last week's visit of the President of Ireland, whom everyone had the pleasure to welcome.

Can the Prime Minister tell the house if the present government intends to support Mr. de Valera's claims to the British government for the reunification of the two Irelands, since there are over two million Irish people in Canada? I feel that we should favour this unification as much as that of Berlin or Germany.

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: It does strike me that though this question is most interesting, and even very important, it would take considerable time for a considered answer to be given.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

WITHDRAWAL OF FILM RESPECTING PRIME MINISTER

On the orders of the day:

Mr. D. M. Fisher (Port Arthur): Mr. Speaker, I want to ask the Prime Minister a question and I should like to preface it by saying that I am asking him as Prime Minister and not as an individual. I should like to ask the Prime Minister whether he would like to have or would prefer to have the controversial film "Mr. Pearson" shown to the national television audience.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am sure the hon. gentleman has asked me that question as a member of parliament and not as a journalist. It is not a matter of concern to me. Whatever decision the C.B.C. makes, it is their decision and I will be very glad indeed to accept it.

Mr. Fisher: I should like to ask a supplementary question of the Secretary of State. I know you will not mind, Mr. Speaker, if I express my appreciation that the Prime Minister himself can make the distinction. Would the Secretary of State ask the C.B.C. whether they are now prepared to review their original decision not to show this film, and to look at the situation again?

Hon. Maurice Lamontagne (Secretary of State): I will be glad to do so, Mr. Speaker.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Just for the sake of information I should like to ask the minister whether the five ministers and their ancillary troops, who previewed the film before anyone else had an opportunity to see it, asked for a repetition of the showing five times because of the enjoyment it gave them; and why are the Canadian people to be denied the enjoyment that caused these cabinet ministers to ask for this quinquennial repetition?

Mr. Lamontagne: I am not aware of this, Mr. Speaker. All I can do is repeat what I said yesterday. As far as I am concerned, I did not see the film.

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Royal): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In relation to the restricted classification given to this film by persons unknown, will the minister consider the adage "You've read the book, now you should see the movie", and let M.P.'s in on the delights of this surreptitious film?

Mr. Lamontagne: Mr. Speaker, I answered that question last week on behalf of the C.B.C.

[Later:]

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): I wish to address a question to the Secretary of State. Has the British Broadcasting Corporation made an offer to the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation for the purchase of the now internationally known program "The Prime Minister"?

Mr. Speaker: I do not see any particularly pressing need for an immediate answer this afternoon. Would the hon. member put this question on the order paper.

INQUIRY AS TO COMPLETION OF FRENCH NETWORK

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Auguste Choquette (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, may I put a question to the Secretary of State?

Could the minister tell the house whether the C.B.C. will soon be ready to extend the French radio network from coast to coast?

Hon. Maurice Lamontagne (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I think that this is still the C.B.C.'s intention. I must add however that this very important question will no doubt be fully looked into by the advisory committee on broadcasting established a few weeks ago.

AIRPORTS

MALTON—LIMOUSINE AND TAXI SERVICE BY UNLICENSED COMPANY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Ralph Cowan (York-Humber): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport. Can he advise this house why in 1961 the Department of Transport granted an exclusive privilege to Air Terminal Transport Limited to operate a limousine and taxi service at Malton airport, when the company does not hold a taxi licence from either metropolitan Toronto or the township of Toronto in Peel county?

Mr. Speaker: I am sure the hon. member would be delighted to put this question on the order paper.

Mr. Cowan: I give notice that I should like this question debated at ten o'clock.

INQUIRY OF THE MINISTRY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Raymond Langlois (Mégantic): I have a question which is of concern to all members in this house, Mr. Speaker. I should like the Prime Minister to inform the house at what stage the negotiations are between the Liberals and the N.D.P., and what progress is being made.

Inquiries of the Ministry

TRANSPORT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Thomas M. Bell (Saint John-Albert): I have a question for the Minister of Transport. Has the hon. gentleman received a communication from the maritime transportation commission requesting a further suspension of the proposed increases in export rail rates on grain after June 30? If so, when can we expect an answer?

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): I should like to make a careful reply to that question, and I hope I can do so tomorrow.

PENSIONS

CANADA PLAN—REQUEST FOR PREPARATION OF WHITE PAPER

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address a question to the Prime Minister. Now that we have some of the details of the revised Canada pension plan through the medium of the Prime Minister's letter to the provincial premiers, can we, as members of parliament, be given more of these details either by way of a white paper or some other document which could be distributed among all members?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Yes, we hope to have a white paper ready very shortly. It was not possible to do this until we had had an exchange with the provinces.

Mr. Knowles: A supplementary question, and I put it as a question rather than as a point of order at this time. Does the Prime Minister not think he should have informed the house yesterday that he was tabling the letter to the premiers? Standing order 40 hardly covers putting something on the table about which we know nothing until we see reports in the press.

Mr. Pearson: I am sorry if the procedure was not satisfactory. In future I agree that if we are tabling important communications such as these it would be well to inform the house the day they are tabled.

Mr. Knowles: Hear, hear.

Inquiries of the Ministry

PUBLICATIONS

REPRESENTATIONS RESPECTING IMPLEMENTATION OF ROYAL COMMISSION REPORT

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): I wish to ask the Prime Minister whether representations have been received by him or by other members of the government within the last few days from representatives of various publications in our country to the effect that unless early action is taken upon the O'Leary report, two very important publications—I will not identify them unless asked to do so—in the city of Toronto will find themselves in a position where they will face the danger of having to close up.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): I have received no such representations recently. I will make inquiries of my colleagues and if any have been received I will inform the house tomorrow.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Can the Prime Minister say whether, in view of the pressing need for action in this regard, this is one matter which deserves priority?

Mr. Pearson: This is certainly an important matter and we hope to bring it before the house before we adjourn—if we are able to adjourn—for any summer recess.

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT

POSTAGE NOT REQUIRED ON MAIL TO MEMBERS OF PARLIAMENT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. P. V. Noble (Grey North): I should like to direct this question to the Postmaster General, of which I have given him notice. Are all rural mail carriers informed that mail addressed to members of parliament at Ottawa does not require postage?

Hon. J. R. Nicholson (Postmaster General): I thank the hon. gentleman for having given notice of this question to my office. Unfortunately I did not receive it until the bell was ringing and I was on my way to the chamber, so I have not had an opportunity to make full inquiries. However, I can assure the hon. member and other members of the house that if rural mail carriers have not been so advised they will be advised immediately.

Mr. Raymond Langlois (Mégantic): I wish to address a supplementary question to the Secretary of State. Can the Secretary of State assure the house that the austerity program affecting the office of papers and circulars is over so that we may get the necessary paper on which to write to our constituents whenever we wish?

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

CIRCULATION OF "HATE" LITERATURE AGAINST JEWS AND NEGROES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. C. S. Smallwood (Battle River-Camrose): I have a question for the Minister of Justice. Is the minister aware of the recent flood of hate literature in the capital as well as in other centres in Canada directed against Jews and negroes, and the implication of the connection with the Social Credit party through one Neil Carmichael, the approved Social Credit candidate in the Toronto-St. Paul riding, as reported by C.F.R.A.'s parliamentary press correspondent?

Hon. Guy Favreau (Minister of Justice): I am not aware of the latest literature specifically referred to in the last part of the question. I will look into it.

[Translation]

Mr. Gilles Grégoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, may I ask a supplementary question?

Can the Minister of Justice tell us whether he has inquired into the matter of the literature of Reverend Ewin which was distributed through the royal mail, as per copy sent to him the other day? If so, what are the results of that inquiry?

Mr. Favreau: Mr. Speaker, I wish to thank the hon. member for sending me copy of that text the other day but, as I said in the answer given at that time, I have passed it on to the officials of my department and I am unable to supply him with an answer today.

[Text]

DOMINION-PROVINCIAL RELATIONS

PROVINCIAL PARTICIPATION IN FISCAL AND MONETARY POLICIES

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Finance?

Does the minister intend to comply with the request made by Mr. Kierans that the provinces be consulted in the future when he will propose changes to the Canadian monetary policy?

[Text]

Hon. Walter L. Gordon (Minister of Finance): I had a very interesting and friendly conversation with Hon. Mr. Kierans a week or two ago, I think it was. He assured me he was just delighted with the way everything is going.

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): A supplementary question to the Minister of Finance. Would he consider asking his good friend Mr. Kierans if he and his colleagues in the government of Quebec would be prepared to consult with the government of Canada and with the government of the province of Alberta before passing legislation or dealing with matters which could have an adverse effect on Canadians outside of Quebec?

Mr. Speaker: Undoubtedly this question is an interesting one, but it does raise a matter of policy far too large for an answer to be expected on orders of the day.

CANADIAN FLAG

INQUIRIES RESPECTING CONSIDERATION OF NEW DESIGN

On the orders of the day:

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): I have a question for the Prime Minister. If there is a division of the flag resolution by a decision of the house, will the Prime Minister consider that to be a question of confidence in the government?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend should wait until the resolution is before the house.

[Later:]

Mr. Reid Scott (Danforth): I wish to ask the Prime Minister if he is ready now to answer my question of yesterday concerning a change in the design of the distinctive Canadian flag, and whether this will be considered a matter of confidence.

Mr. Pearson: I said I would answer this question subsequently, and "subsequently" has not yet arrived.

Mr. Knowles: The Liberals are never in a hurry.

Mr. Scott: Can the Prime Minister tell us whether today is the day the proposed new Canadian flag will be flying in front of the parliament buildings; or will that day be "subsequent", too?

Mr. Pearson: Following a request made by certain hon. members, it is intended to fly the flag referred to in the resolution tomorrow evening, I think from 5 p.m. until flag lowering time.

Mr. Scott: In view of the increasing national support for a flag with a single maple leaf, would the Prime Minister reconsider his announcement the other day that a flag of this design might not also be exhibited for public view?

Mr. Pearson: I do not have a copy of that design.

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Winnipeg South Centre): I have a supplementary question for the Prime Minister. Now that the right hon. gentleman has announced his intention of flying an unauthorized piece of bunting over the parliamentary grounds, is this being done under the authority of the Prime Minister or by order in council?

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, it is being done at the request of certain members of parliament made in this house, replied to by me and not objected to by my hon. friend.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Actually, Mr. Speaker, we understand the fine spirit of co-operation between the two parties, but I ask the Prime Minister this. What possible justification is there for flying this flag? Has there been an order in council passed? If not, it cannot be justified; that is all.

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, there is the same justification as for making available to members a pictorial representation when the resolution was introduced, which my hon. friends were very glad indeed to receive to assist them in their consideration of this resolution.

Mr. Diefenbaker: What about answering the question as to what justification the Prime Minister has to fly this on parliament hill before it has been accepted? Has he arrived at a point where he is the boss and determines these questions, I would like to know, without order in council?

Mr. George Muir (Lisgar): Mr. Speaker, I have a question of privilege. The Prime Minister said that no objection had been taken in the house to flying this unauthorized flag on parliament hill. I want to voice an objection personally right now that no unauthorized flag should be flown on parliament hill.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Pearson: It is, of course, well known that a question of privilege should be raised at the time the matter arises in the House of Commons. This matter arose last week and no one raised a question of privilege or an objection at that time.

Mr. Muir (Lisgar): Mr. Speaker, since the Prime Minister has taken this attitude, I suggest that every one of the 3,000 flags which have been presented to the government be flown for 15 minutes every day until they have all been flown.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Since the Prime Minister has said it is only proper that members should have an opportunity to see the flag the government has in mind displayed on a flagstaff, may I ask him why the government should have any monopoly in this regard, and why other political parties which may have different designs they wish to display are not to be given an opportunity to do so.

Mr. Pearson: The government has no claim to any monopoly in this regard, Mr. Speaker. If my hon. friend wishes to fly a design at any place in any circumstances, he is at liberty to do so. But the government has taken its responsibility of putting a resolution on the order paper submitting to the House of Commons a flag of a certain design. Some hon. members thought it would aid in the consideration of that design, submitted by the government for parliamentary decision, to have the flag flying so they could see how that particular design looks.

Mr. Douglas: Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister is quite right, but all I am asking him is this. Since there are a number of flagpoles, why are the other political parties which have other designs not to be allowed to display them?

Mr. Diefenbaker: I return to this matter, Mr. Speaker. The Prime Minister tries to laugh it off, but I ask him what possible justification is there, in view of the order in council of 1945 respecting the flying of the red ensign, to fly what is at the present moment the Prime Minister's personal choice, and to fly it on parliament hill? Tell me what vestige of parliamentary government still remains, with the Prime Minister exercising such a right?

Mr. Pearson: This is still, surely, a free country, and if members of the House of Commons request the showing of a design which is referred to in a resolution before the house, surely it is a matter of courtesy for the government to accede to that request.

Mr. Churchill: Liberal propaganda.

Mr. G. L. Chatterton (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, if the Prime Minister received a request from a larger number of members not to fly the new flag, would the Prime Minister give equal consideration to that request?

Mr. Churchill: Answer.

[Translation]

Mr. Gilles Grégoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a supplementary question to the Prime Minister. Could he have put up, in front of the parliament buildings, all the poles that we see on United Nations day? By so doing, we could fly about 85 or 90 flags and allow the members who so desire to fly a flag of their own choice and to look at them one after the other.

[Text]

Mr. D. V. Pugh (Okanagan Boundary): I have a supplementary question for the Prime Minister, Mr. Speaker. Now that the Prime Minister has acceded to the request of members of parliament to fly the flag on parliament hill—one member or more; it doesn't matter—would he now accede to the request of the member for Okanagan Boundary to have his latest moving picture shown in the house?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Diefenbaker: There's a chance to get an Oscar.

[Translation]

Mr. Gérard Chapdelaine (Sherbrooke): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a supplementary question to the right hon. Prime Minister. Does he not feel that in flying the new national flag the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Diefenbaker) will be convinced and will love it?

[Text]

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, lest that some time be regarded as a question unanswered, may I say no; it looks too much like a trade mark.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Pigeon: Two nations; two flags.

Mr. Speaker: There are two hon. members who wish to ask questions. The first is the hon. member for Danforth and the second is the hon. member for Churchill.

Mr. Scott: Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Prime Minister whether his justification for flying the proposed flag is that by reason of the resolution having been presented, that particular flag is before the house for adjudication?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. This question is clearly out of order.

Mr. Robert Simpson (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question. I should like to ask the Prime Minister whether he could inform us of the exact location at which this flag will be flown. Which flagpole on parliament hill will be carrying this flag?

Mr. Pearson: On a suitable occasion, Mr. Speaker, and I think on a special flagpole erected for the occasion.

Mr. Churchill: Retreat again.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Backing up again.

Mr. Harold E. Winch (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. On this question I rise alone, on my own responsibility. I want to say, sir, that sincere and emotional as all are in this House of Commons, with questions on the flag being asked every day on orders of the day, though we are at a point where a date is set for a discussion of the resolution, the way we—I say "we" and I include myself—are now carrying on in my estimation is bringing the institution of parliament into disrespect. Can we not get on with the business and deal with the motion concerning the flag when it comes before the house?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. A. D. Hales (Wellington South): Mr. Speaker, in speaking to the question of privilege raised by my hon. friend I suggest to Your Honour that the question in point is whether or not this new proposed flag should be flown on government property. I suggest to the right hon. Prime Minister that as long as the order in council is on the statute books no other flag but the Canadian red ensign should be flown on government property—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Hales: —and he has no right to fly this flag on government property.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. R. W. Prittie (Burnaby-Richmond): Mr. Speaker, notwithstanding the remarks of my hon. colleague from Vancouver East I think I have a legitimate question on the flag. The point has been made that only the red ensign, which is authorized, be flown. The union jack is mentioned in the resolution. Can the Prime Minister tell me whether there is any authorization for flying that flag on the hill, as some hon. members ask?

Mr. Speaker: Order. Perhaps at this time it would be useful to recall the attention of hon. members to the fact that most of these questions in my humble opinion are out of order, in that they anticipate an order which is on the order paper and which will be before the house very shortly; but due to the emotional impact of this issue the Chair has been, I think, more than reasonably lenient.

THE MINISTRY

APPOINTMENT OF EXECUTIVE ASSISTANTS IN HOME RIDINGS

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Guy Marcoux (Quebec-Montmorency): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the President of the Privy Council.

He was asked recently about the civil servants working in some ministers' ridings, and he said that he would inquire and give an answer to the house.

[Text]

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (President of the Privy Council): Yes, Mr. Speaker. The practice of appointing persons to the staffs of ministers outside of Ottawa is a long established practice which goes back many years. When this government took office it reviewed the practice followed by the previous administration and continued to maintain it in force. There was one change; now the appointments have to be approved by treasury board before the order in council is submitted to the governor in council.

[Later:]

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the President of the Privy Council. By what authority and precedent did the cabinet pass orders appointing staff to the constituencies of cabinet ministers; and is this practice to be continued by the government?

Mr. McIlraith: Mr. Speaker, staff are not appointed to constituencies, they are appointed to ministers. With regard to the point being raised as to the authority for such appointments, section 71 of the present Civil Service Act makes provision for this. Prior to the present Civil Service Act, authority was given in the section which had to do with exempt positions. There is no question about the legal validity of the appointments.

Mr. Douglas: A supplementary question. There may be no question about the legal ability of the government to do it but there is some question about the moral right of the government to do it. The minister says these people are appointed as assistants to ministers, but do not the orders in council specifically state that, in these two instances, the staff to be appointed is to serve in the constituencies of the ministers and not in Ottawa?

Mr. McIlraith: No, Mr. Speaker, that is not quite accurate. In one case at least the appointee is not serving in the constituency of the minister, and that may be the case in the other. I have not the orders in council before me, but in any event the point I wish to make is that the staff may be serving the minister in any area of Canada.

I think the point bothering the hon. member is whether or not they are doing government work; that is the test. I may say that this is an old practice which has gone on for a great many years, as the Leader of the Opposition knows. However, I will look into the whole question and find out exactly how it has been done in each instance.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, as I was gratuitously brought into this matter may I say that throughout the entire period when I was a minister I paid for my own office assistance in Prince Albert out of my own pocket.

Mr. McIlraith: Mr. Speaker, if my remarks were taken by the Leader of the Opposition as a reflection upon him, they were not intended in that way. The fact is that objection was made by him to this practice when he was prime minister and also to the practices of his ministers, which practices, notwithstanding his objection, were carried on. The point is that the practice now being carried on follows that carried on previously.

Mr. Douglas: Mr. Speaker, I have no desire to prolong this debate, but I would ask the minister whether he would be prepared when we get into interim supply to give us more information. Because if this has been the practice in the past, I think any person who examines it and what the practice could lead to, would insist that it stop.

Mr. McIlraith: Mr. Speaker, I will be glad to discuss the matter further on interim supply. I do not yet have all the information I want. Since this question was raised in the house I have had the appropriate officials get the information and put it together, but it is not complete at the moment. However, I will be able to give more information later.

Mr. Terry Nugent (Edmonton-Strathcona): Mr. Speaker, since the President of the Privy Council indicated that the question is whether these people are working on government business, perhaps he can answer the question I asked the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration two days ago concerning the appointment of a man to serve at Baie des Sables, I think it was, as a special assistant. Perhaps he could also tell me whether there has ever before been an immigration office at that place, and exactly what are the duties of the gentleman who has been appointed at a salary of $7,500 a year, which is provided out of the taxpayers' money.

Mr. McIlraith: Mr. Speaker, I do not have here that particular order in council—or any of them as a matter of fact—but I would repeat what I have already said two or three times in the last few minutes, that the present practice exactly follows the former practice.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Not at all.

Mr. McIlraith: The Leader of the Opposition says "not at all"; I am sorry to have to differ with him. I said I would look into the whole matter, and I repeat that this practice follows precisely the practice followed by the former government.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I immediately answer that, as I did a moment ago, by saying that statement is without justification. May I ask the minister of immigration to tell us something about this man who is going to work at this place for the immigration department. The minister is here; let him answer. He is of age.

Mr. Speaker, the minister has had someone appointed in his constituency, which is an area not noted as a place where immigrants land. Would the minister say what is the purpose of this appointment? What will the duties of this gentleman be? Surely the minister is not going to adopt the same answer he did the other day, that "Whatever I do is right". Tell us the facts.

[Translation]

Mr. Gilles Grégoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask a supplementary question.

I should like to ask the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration what will be the duties of Mr. Côté who has been appointed at Baie des Sables, in his constituency, and what will be his duties as special assistant to the department of immigration?

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: I think all these questions illustrate the fact that when detailed information is needed, either notice should be given or the question should be placed on the order paper. It may be possible that the information is known by the minister, but I do not think it is reasonable at this time to expect a detailed statement on a matter of this nature. I suggest that these questions should be put on the order paper.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, may I say that surely the minister, who is spending $7,500 of the Canadian people's money to have what looks like a patronage appointment made in his own constituency, should rise and give us the facts. The answer he should give is not very intricate, but he should tell us the facts.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): It is patronage.

[Translation]

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Speaker, we accept the principle that you set forth a few minutes ago, but we believe we would be entitled to know from the minister on what date he will make a statement about this. At the present time the minister remains seated and does not say whether he will make a statement and he declines to say when he will give information to the house.

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: Order. This is argument, not a question.

Mr. Douglas: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, we are not asking the government to give us any detailed information. We are simply asking a very easy question, and it is why did order in council P.C. 1964-5/490 appoint a Mr. André Côté as a special assistant to the office of the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration at Baie des Sables? Why is the government appointing, at public expense, an official who resides in the minister's constituency? Surely that is a simple question to which the minister ought to reply.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member has asked the question twice, I believe, and if I understood the President of the Privy Council he said he had taken full notice of the question and would reply in detail, either on his estimates or very shortly.

Mr. Nugent: Mr. Speaker, the Minister of National Health and Welfare is in exactly the same position. Perhaps she is prepared to give an explanation which would save the house waiting for the President of the Privy Council.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. It does seem to me we have had a full discussion of this point at the moment.

Some hon. Members: Answer.

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I should like to answer the question put to me by saying that I have engaged someone as a part of my clerical staff, as part of my ministerial staff, which happens to be located there, in Niagara Falls, to look after the responsibilities of the department in my constituency, and that I did this in pursuance of the practice—which I checked into first—of numerous ministers in the last government.

Mr. Diefenbaker: That is not so.

Miss LaMarsh: Including my immediate predecessor.

Mr. Monteith: Very definitely not.

[Translation]

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Speaker, I wish to point out to the Minister of National Health and Welfare that she—

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I do think we have had more than sufficient discussion on this point, in view of the fact that details will be furnished, and of course I assume full details, by the ministers concerned.

[Translation]

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of National Health and Welfare whether an assistant of that kind to her department will be appointed in the Lapointe constituency.

[Text]

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, parliament deserves answers from ministers on simple questions, and I ask the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration whether this Mr. Côté, for instance, is one of those who look after the imprisonment of people in Toronto over a period of time. Is that the type of duty he is going to exercise, or what will his duties be?

Mr. Speaker: Order. I am sure the implication in that question was not intended.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I am trying to get some information from this silent minister who spends $7,500 of the people's money and won't tell us what for.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Harold E. Winch (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, I would like to address a supplementary question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. In view of the fact that I represent a riding 3,000 miles from Ottawa, would she support the principle that I could appoint a public relations officer in my riding at government expense?

Miss LaMarsh: Mr. Speaker, it is not my responsibility as a member of the privy council to decide whether the hon. member needs a public relations officer. The individual I have appointed is a widow with two children—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Miss LaMarsh: —and she is, as I said, a member of my secretarial and clerical staff.

Mr. Winch: As a supplementary question, can I appoint a widow with five children?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

FARM CREDIT ACT

AMENDMENTS INCREASING AUTHORIZED CAPITAL, MAXIMUM LOAN LIMITS, ETC.

The house resumed, from Wednesday, June 10, consideration in committee of Bill No. C-100, to amend the Farm Credit Act—Mr. Hays—Mr. Lamoureux in the chair.

On clause 1—Farming.

[Translation]

Mr. Latulippe: Mr. Chairman, as I was saying yesterday, war should be declared against the agricultural depression prevailing in Quebec ridings, an unrelenting war where technology, financial resources and all our talents would be used to find solutions acceptable to our farmers. At the same time we would wage war against hunger, want and collective poverty. As legislators, we should be more conscious of our responsibilities and we would perhaps be more worthy then of our title of representatives of the people.

Before I conclude, I should like to direct one question to the minister. Could he tell us whether he will consider the possibility of having the corporation reduce its interest rates, change the conditions concerning loan applications and see how it could contribute financially to the establishment of markets for farm products? When can we expect a reply?

I am also asking the minister whether the government will soon make a decision as to the possibility of granting subsidies for grain shipping by truck right to the farm. Such a measure, requested by several farmers' associations, would be a great help, and I cannot see why the government could not comply with such a request.

[Text]

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Chairman, I want to make a few comments on this particular item, and I am going to relate my remarks rather exclusively to the particular clause itself although I may have to wander a little bit in order to make the point I think I should make. Subsection 2 raises some questions in my mind as to whether this amending bill is departing from the original purposes for which the legislation was conceived.

In order to refresh our memories as to what that purpose was I would like to refer to section 16 of the act which, as I understand it, has not been amended. If it has been amended I would be glad to have the minister tell me. Section 16 (b) reads:

> Loans under this act shall be made only to farmers who are actually engaged in or are shortly to become engaged in the operation of the mortgaged farm and whose experience, ability and character are such as to warrant the belief that the farm to be mortgaged will be successfully operated;

These are wise, sensible and realistic provisions, and should be the kernel around which all this legislation is built; but looking at some of the amendments proposed in this bill I am wondering whether we are in fact departing from that particular principle. My reason is not only a general one in so far as the value of the legislation to the country as a whole is concerned, but I think I am entitled to relate this to the situation in my area and in the northern parts of Canada.

To emphasize this point I want to refer very briefly to a pamphlet issued by the Canadian council of resource ministers, volume 1, No. 3, for March, 1964. In that pamphlet there is a comment with regard to the particular area in which I am interested with respect to the application of the act and this particular amendment to the act. I am only going to give a digest of it, but I think it is quite important.

> Homesteading, the historic method of settlement on the prairies, is undergoing a revival in the virgin lands of northern Alberta. A farm land boom has been under way since 1961. In that first year, 1,371 applications were recorded. During the next year, to March 31, 1963, a total of 2,350 applications were received, and in the current year, to February 26, 2,350 applications have been filed.

In other words, in something less than three years over 6,000 applications for new land have been received from people proposing to go on the land and farm it. I think this area is probably one of the few left in Canada where we find a variation from the normal pattern of people leaving farms. The minister visited this area last winter and will bear me out in what I say. Here in the northern part of Alberta people are going on the land. But having in mind the nature of farming, the cost of breaking, brushing and clearing land and the cost of machinery and equipment, in order to farm the land effectively, produce efficiently and make a contribution to the economy of the country, certain financial assistance is required, and this legislation has been most effective in providing it.

I can say that in the quarter of a century before this act came into effect less than half a million dollars was lent under the old farm loan board in the entire northwestern part of Alberta, including all of Peace River constituency. I do not have the precise figure, but I believe that in the last four years loans have aggregated approximately $12 million. So we have the striking contrast of half a million dollars lent in 25 years and $12 million in four years. This indicates the intense interest that I, on behalf of the people of my constituency and in other northern areas, have in this matter, and why I question whether in what the minister is proposing we are not possibly departing from the main purpose of the legislation.

What is this purpose? If one looks at the annual reports of the Farm Credit Corporation over a number of years we find a very interesting contrast. In the fiscal year 1957-58 moneys used to purchase land were limited to 27.7 per cent of the total amount lent. For the fiscal year 1962-63 the amount for land purchases and improvements represented 66.8 per cent. In other words there has been a doubling.

This is the manner in which the utmost value will be obtained from this legislation, by the money being used to buy land, to make improvements and to purchase cattle. On the reverse side of the picture, in 1957-58 the amount of money used to pay off land and other debts was approximately 56.6 per cent. In the last fiscal year for which we have information, 1962-63, this was reduced to approximately 30 per cent. I think this is also a very necessary and wise change in the trend.

Having laid that foundation, let us look at this particular clause, and I am going to deal particularly with subclause 2, which reads as follows:

For the purposes of part II the corporation may deem the executor or the administrator of the estate of a deceased farmer to be a farmer within the meaning of paragraph (e) of subsection 1.

This raises two sincere questions in my mind which I think the minister might consider. First, what about the situation of an executor or administrator which is a trust company? As I understand the legislation, it is not intended to be applied to limited corporations save only those corporations which are defined as family corporations under the pertinent regulations. I have not the section at hand, but I am sure the minister can ascertain what it is from his officials. The legislation is applicable to farm corporations as defined in the regulations.

I pose this question to the minister. A trust company, which is a limited company, of course, either by act of parliament or under the pertinent companies act of the province or of the federal government, is certainly not a farming corporation as defined by the regulations. I am not opposed in a limited way to what is suggested here, but I wonder whether the minister in his consideration of this particular subsection would not find it necessary to spell out the matter in detail if it is proposed to extend this particular benefit to an executor or administrator which happens to be a limited company.

I am thinking of the responsibility which otherwise might be thrust upon the very hard working and efficient officials and employees of the Farm Credit Corporation who may have to decide questions of this kind, which I think should be decided here in parliament and not left to the discretion of the officials.

Second, I put this question to the minister. In doing so I have in mind the purpose of the act as set out in section 16 (b) where it is provided as follows:

Loans under this act shall be made only to farmers who are actually engaged in or are shortly to become engaged in the operation of the mortgaged farm and whose experience, ability and character are such as to warrant the belief that the farm to be mortgaged will be successfully operated.

I can visualize cases where the farmer has made his application and while the documents are in the process of being prepared he passes away. His administrator or executor would then be able to apply under this particular amendment. How would the officials deal with such a case, having in mind the fact that they must take into consideration the provisions of section 16 (b)? Take the situation where there is a widow with young children. How would it be possible for the officials to be able to say that the particular loan was being made to a farmer actually engaged in or shortly to become engaged in the operation of the mortgaged farm?

Certainly the particular circumstances will have to be considered. If the deceased farmer left an adult son or sons who are on the farm and who have made their intention to continue the farming operation plain to the corporation, then discretion could be exercised and there would be compliance with the principle of the act which is the kernel of the whole scheme. But if this is not done I can see situations arising where this particular subclause could be invoked and could be used only for the purpose of settling estates.

As I pointed out before, this places the very considerable onus and responsibility upon the officials of having to make this decision, a decision which I think parliament should make by including apt words in the legislation. How would the departmental officials deal with a situation where there was an administrator or an executor but nothing specific to indicate that farming operations were going to be carried on by the beneficiaries of the deceased?

The minister might not be able to answer right now, but I would ask him to consider the matter and, at least before the amendments are passed, indicate if other changes or other amendments in the regulations may be considered which will make it quite plain that we are not passing these amendments to depart from the original principle that these moneys are to be available only for the purpose of carrying on farm operations, and not to settle estates.

Mr. Hays: With great respect for the hon. member's point, Mr. Chairman, may I say that we have gone into this matter with our legal people. The Farm Credit Corporation has had to deal with many of these cases of hardship. We feel that the point has been taken care of quite well. A question has been raised in connection with a widow with a very small family, but this is not the type of case with which we hope to deal although these cases will be taken care of as well. Where there is a son 17, 18 or 19 years old, not of legal age, then the executor acts on his behalf until such time as he can legally take over the farm.

Then, there is the case of a widow who may have a vested interest in the farm, possibly for as long as she lives. In that case it may be that, in conjunction with the executor, the farm could be operated for her protection. Our legal people have taken a long look at this provision and at the cases of hardship that have been brought to our attention. We are merely trying to broaden the provision so that it would take care of these cases of hardship. I appreciate the inquiries hon. members have made, but we feel we have adequately provided for these cases.

Mr. Herridge: I want to briefly make one or two suggestions to the minister. First of all, as one who is interested in the tree farming aspect of farming, I may say that I was pleased to hear the minister read the regulations yesterday. I am sure this knowledge will be welcomed by a number of persons who were quite uncertain as to just what was intended in so far as the application of this section and the definition of the word "farmer" was concerned.

I am interested in tree farming operations all across Canada. I notice that in eastern Canada you call them woodlots, but in British Columbia we call them tree farms. They are a great source of winter income to many types of farmers in the interior of British Columbia. I am not one who believes that everyone living on a farm is required to have an economic family farm according to the business interpretation of those words. There are many types of farms. We have gentlemen farmers, you know, who have private incomes and treat the farm as a hobby. Then we have maintenance farms. I have a number of people whose incomes, compared with those in urban areas, would be considered very low, but whose relative income would be about three times as high because they have a high standard of living. Then there is some place for the part-time farmer and the maintenance farm.

A number of these smaller farmers are taking an increasing interest in tree farming. I know a number of persons in my constituency who have five acres in fruit or 50 acres in a general farm, and who have anything from 100 acres to 1,000 acres in tree farming or woodlots as they are called in Ontario. They are combining these operations very successfully. It is on that account I was pleased to hear the minister read the regulation. In fact I have some farmers who are cutting all the way from a few thousand feet of lumber a year up to one or two million feet a year. This illustrates how this type of farming has developed in recent years.

I urge the minister to provide for a study of the various aspects of tree farming in Canada. The circumstances vary so much in the various localities from the maritimes, Quebec, Ontario, and the prairie provinces to British Columbia. I believe we should study the relationship of of the various types of tree farming to the various types of agriculture in the areas concerned. I am not sure whether the minister has the officials within his department to make such a study; they may be in the Department of Forestry.

There has to be some attention paid to this increasingly important section of farming. There should be some study of the types of tree farming, the types of production, the types of markets available for these products in various areas. I believe some consideration should also be given to research into the application of the principles of taxation to meet these various circumstances. I suggest it would be a good idea for those interested and the officials concerned with this study to look into the principles of taxation applied in Great Britain and Europe to those persons who are considering trees as a crop and maintaining their capital for future generations.

I believe there could be more attention given by the corporation to this aspect. I am speaking not only as the member for Kootenay West but as the president of the Canadian tree farmers' association, which offers its full co-operation to the minister in anything he may do in this respect. I believe if this study is undertaken, more information will be available to those who are interested. What the corporation is willing to do for this aspect of farming could be greatly assisted as a result of the amendments to this act.

Mr. Hays: Mr. Chairman, I appreciate what the hon. member has said. We have an interdepartmental committee working on the problem, and I will be glad to bring these remarks to their attention. It seems, as a result of our studies in the last year, that some of the questions the hon. member has raised are of great importance, because if these woodlots had been extended into economic units many of the problems would have been resolved. We have the manager of ARDA on this committee, because it relates very closely to forestry.

I believe that as a result of this study and the extension of these loans by the Farm Credit Corporation we will accomplish what the hon. member has suggested. Certainly we have this in mind. Personally I feel it is a very good suggestion, and we will pass it along. I am sure we can resolve some of the problems we have had in the past from coast to coast.

Mr. Herridge: I just want to personally thank the minister for his remarks and assurances in this respect, on behalf of those who have been particularly interested in the application of this act to the tree farming I have mentioned.

Mr. Korchinski: I should like to make a few remarks on this first clause. I am concerned over what may happen in the case of a widow with a few children when the estate is not settled. The administrator may feel that a loan may be necessary and the officials of the corporation may agree with him. However, some of these loans are taken out for 30 years, for example, and the members of the family, as they become of legal age, may want to have the estate settled. They may feel they are not going to get a fair share of what might have been the value of the property at the time the father died. In some instances the property may have lost in value as a result of poor management or unfortunate circumstances.

I am concerned that in such a case the department may find itself a contributor to a grievance in later years. I am wondering whether there will be some strict provision made in order to avoid legal entanglements in future years.

Mr. Hays: I think this is the same problem as we have been debating ever since we began to consider clause 1. We shall certainly take these things into consideration and make sure that there will be no such difficulties as the hon. member suggests.

Mr. Korchinski: I am just wondering whether the minister intends to make strict provisions either in the regulations or by some other means for setting out the rules, which will have to be followed closely. Otherwise I can envisage many complications arising in later years.

Mr. Hays: Every necessary precaution will be taken and we shall bear in mind all the points which have been raised in the last two days in this connection.

[Translation]

Mr. Choquette: Mr. Chairman, my remarks will be very brief. I simply want to commend the government and the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Hays) for the fine legislation submitted to the house, to double the borrowing power of our farmers.

To my mind, Mr. Chairman, this legislation will be a stimulating one for our farmers, and more particularly those of the province of Quebec, who, I think, suffer from an "inferiority complex".

Too many farmers in the province of Quebec are afraid to increase their farming operations, and if today, there are complaints that so many farms do not pay their way, for instance in the riding of Lotbinière, 1,100 farms have a gross income of less than $2,500 a year it may result from certain farm policies, but it is also due to the fact that too many farmers do not want to expand their operations, enlarge their acreage.

Consequently, the fact of granting them increased borrowing power will incite them to extend their acreage and to own larger farm units, thus increasing their productivity and, hence, their income.

I therefore congratulate the government for introducing such a measure and, if I may, I shall make a suggestion to the minister. Our farmers have vented certain grievances, which, I think, are quite justified, and I would more particularly draw the minister's attention to the following case. Several farmers in my riding who made loan applications to the Farm Credit Corporation, complain, and rightly so, that the evaluation process is very slow; too much time goes by before someone comes around to set a value on their farm and tell them whether they are entitled to a loan.

I therefore call the attention of the minister to this situation which affects our farmers, and I would ask him to have the procedure accelerated, so that the evaluation of those farms is done more quickly and that the farmers who apply for a loan get their answer sooner.

Mr. Cardiff: Perhaps I can claim to have more knowledge of farm loans than any other member of the house. Certainly I had more to do with the veterans farm loan board than any other member remaining in the house at the present time.

From 1943 until 1950 I was trying to rehabilitate the boys who came back from the war. At that time we had men in the field who very often knew little or nothing about land values. We had difficulties in getting these boys installed on farms which were suitable for making a living. We had to intercede for them, otherwise they would have found it almost impossible to get the land. I have had a lot to do with the Farm Credit Corporation and with the farm loan board before that. I have great respect for the men who have been at the head of that organization, Mr. Rutherford, in the first place and then Mr. Owens. I know both of these gentlemen very well. They have been doing an excellent job. One cannot expect these men to be responsible for all the mistakes which are made. They have field men out in the field who make many of these decisions. They should be very particular men and do their jobs well.

You cannot always judge these matters strictly according to the value of the farm; you must take into consideration the man who is seeking the loan. Sometimes you get a young man who wants to start farming but he does not have any considerable amount of money. Yet his reputation is good and if given a chance it is not long before he makes a name for himself. The point is this: It is getting harder and harder to start boys on a farm if they do not have money. When I started farming I started with practically nothing and worked my way up in a few years so that I was able to get a little credit. But a boy cannot even start farming nowadays unless he has, say, $10,000. A boy who is inclined to favour agriculture finds it difficult to get enough money to start, and his only hope lies in the farm loan board. You cannot get private mortgages any more because the money lenders will not lend money to farmers.

I have read over this bill and I am not entirely against the amendments being sought. However I have not studied them sufficiently well to pass an opinion on them. I am inclined to be dubious about parts of the bill and I think perhaps I will wait until the other clauses come up for consideration before I pass judgment on them. I wanted to say something because of the fact that I have had so much to do with farm loans during the years trying to get these boys started on farms. Many of the older men who have boys coming along find it difficult to carry on without the help of the boys, and the boys find that unless father has a little money to give them they cannot get started on their own.

The minister said he was anxious about boys 16, 17 and 18 years of age. Mind you, there is an awful lot of difference in boys. You get a boy sometimes who is almost a man by the time he is 16 and you get another who does not develop until he is 20, 21 or 22. Take a boy who is level headed and interested in farming. At 16 he is as good a man as he will ever be and can do as much work. I think the minister is justified in looking after loans of this sort.

I am not so sure about how the interest rates are to be arrived at. I think it should be set down in clear words; there should be no guesswork. I agree that the interest rate is not to be increased above 5 per cent in respect of loans up to $20,000 and, in another case, up to $27,500. But I am not sure what the intention is with regard to loans outside that category. I will try to find out before the bill goes through.

Let us bear in mind that for as long as I can remember—and that is a long time—farmers have always been short of money. Some farmers of course have been lent money. But the man who has to earn his income on a farm is generally short of money and the only way in which he can get along is by means of loans from the government. I do not want to see interest rates jacked up until the loan is impossible to repay. Some people say: What about industry? That is another matter. Industry makes more money than farming does, and a farmer cannot be expected to pay the kind of rates expected from industry. I hope that when the other clauses come before the committee I will be able to understand them a little better.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): Mr. Chairman, rising to take part in the debate on clause 1 of Bill No. C-100 I would first like to congratulate the farm credit officials for the wonderful job they have done in administering this act and making it applicable to many of the farm areas throughout Canada. Certainly, no matter how good the act is, amendments are required from time to time to keep up with and ahead of the expanding economy and the expanding circumstances of farming and agriculture. I think, though, that in some respects the amendments before us today will have a tendency to narrow the application of the Farm Credit Act, rather than widen it.

I am somewhat concerned to see in the 1962-63 annual report, the last one that is available, that on page 5 it states that during the fiscal year some 21,000 farmers consulted the corporation, and it goes on to state that only 9,875 received loans; 46 per cent completed formal loan applications. I am concerned about the other 11,000 people who did not get loans and whether the act was suitable for the type of loan about which they consulted the corporation. I think that, rather than increasing the amount available we should make the money that is now available applicable to more farmers in more areas of Canada.

It pleases me a great deal to see at the top of page 5 that the Farm Credit Corporation in its fourth annual report had this to say with regard to the amendments brought in in 1962. It is said that the amendment of the Farm Credit Act in November, 1962, "will considerably enlarge the scope of the corporation's future lending activity". This is the type of legislation we brought in at that time; we allowed farmers to borrow money on the income they earned outside of their direct income from the farm. This in some way must have brought in some of the 11,000 persons who approached the corporation the year before last—and in fact approach them every year—and did not get a loan because their cases were perhaps not suitable for receiving a loan from the corporation.

While I have this annual report in my hands I think it should be pointed out, as it probably has been a number of times already, that of the some 7,000 loans approved, the average loan was a little better than $12,000. As the minister pointed out in his speech opening this debate, only some 11 per cent of those who applied for a loan asked for the maximum amount available. This makes me wonder whether increasing these loans to $40,000 and $55,000 is actually meeting the requirements of the many people who applied for loans and did not receive them. I think perhaps the Farm Credit Corporation's greatest benefit to farmers is its attitude toward establishing young farmers, farmers on uneconomic units and small farmers; to get them on their feet and up to the standard of an economic unit. There has been a great deal of talk regarding what is an economic unit. I imagine the minister has his own views in this respect. I am led to believe that in the minister's view an economic unit would be a very large one indeed, as he is sponsoring maximum loans of $40,000 and $55,000. It is not that I have anything against loans of this size because I well realize that many farms cost a great deal to maintain and operate. However, I also realize that in order for a farmer to borrow $40,000 or $55,000 from the Farm Credit Corporation he must himself have in the neighbourhood of from $10,000 to $20,000 to apply to the farm.

This brings me to the point, Mr. Chairman, as to how many small farmers can take advantage of a $40,000 loan when they must have 25 per cent of that amount in cash or negotiable securities in order for their application to be approved by the Farm Credit Corporation. Certainly not many farmers in my area have $10,000 in negotiable securities which they could put forward on an application for a loan of $40,000 from the corporation.

I am greatly concerned that making this large amount of money available will be of direct benefit to the large farmers and of no real benefit, or very small benefit, to the small farmers. Some 54 per cent of the people who consulted the Farm Credit Corporation nearly every year find that the corporation does not meet their needs with regard to loans. Perhaps the same 54 per cent reappear the next year and are able to find their needs fulfilled; I have no doubt that this is the case on many occasions. But I am concerned about the 54 per cent who are turned away or who leave on their own account. I do not think a $40,000, or a $55,000 loan under part III, will in any way help these 54 per cent who are turned away every year and find that the Farm Credit Corporation is not meeting their needs.

One must look at farm income, at the products produced in the various areas of Canada, to see whether the farmers in these areas would be able to pay back a loan of this large amount. When you consider the statistics of the last census in 1961 you realize that some 480,000 farmers in Canada had an average realized net income, even in the more prosperous provinces of Ontario, Saskatchewan, Alberta and the prairies, perhaps, of less than $3,000 a year. This leads me to believe, once again, that the average farmer cannot make use of a $55,000 loan which will be the maximum obtainable when this measure is passed. We realize that in some areas of Canada agriculture lags behind other areas. Some parts of Quebec and the maritimes have not really taken full advantage of the Farm Credit Corporation. In 1962-63 only some 60 loans were made in the province of Nova Scotia; this compares with some 2,000 in Saskatchewan, I think. When one looks at the income figures for these provinces—I think the realized net income figure for the average farm in the province of Quebec was something like $1,200, and the maritimes was not too much higher—he understands why farmers in those areas cannot pay back a huge loan of $40,000 or $55,000. This convinces me that these amendments will be directly aimed at benefiting the large farmer.

When the Farm Credit Corporation was set up in 1959 I thought its main purpose was to help only those farmers who needed money, those farmers who were farming on what could be termed relatively uneconomic units. I thought this was a wonderful principle which would help raise the standard of living on farms all across Canada, and in it I saw hope for many farmers and particularly those who most needed a loan.

I have the feeling, in view of these amendments to the act, that the principle of the Farm Credit Corporation will slowly change and go back to the old idea that those who have the most will get the most by way of loans. This is a fear which I feel I should express at this time. Up to this point I think the corporation has done a wonderful job to help farmers who really need a loan, but I fear that increasing the amount of the loan will perhaps destroy the initial principle on which the Farm Credit Corporation was founded.

I also think that under clause 3 a greater erosion of this principle is feasible. The clause suggests that a father, uncle or brother can borrow money on behalf of a son, son-in-law, daughter, daughter-in-law, nephew, niece and so on. This may sound good, but it may well allow—and I should like to know whether or not it will allow—a farmer operating what is now classified as a commercialized enterprise and who is not entitled to a loan from the corporation, to borrow money for his son who, by reason of age, is not yet able to carry on the farm. Perhaps the son is 12, 14 or even 16 and still at school; and we all hope that he will stay at school for as long as he can. But this clause may well allow a farmer who was not otherwise entitled to a loan to borrow money on his own credentials for his son, son-in-law and so on, and in fact create even a larger corporation around him and his family. Perhaps I see greater dangers in the clause than are evident to the minister.

The hon. member for Peace River suggested that the settlement of an estate could also lead to a corporate type of operation in a case where the initial borrower dies, leaving a wife and several children to carry on the repayment of the loan while the farm operation is managed in trust, perhaps by a trust company for all we know. This would tend to direct money advanced by the Farm Credit Corporation into the more commercialized operation, the sort of operation which really would not qualify under the initial principle of the Farm Credit Corporation, which was to help those who needed help most.

I noticed that at the beginning of the minister's remarks in introducing the debate he stated that the principle of the Farm Credit Corporation was to make loans for the buying of livestock and equipment, as well as to improve farm buildings and houses. If one looks at the money which has been paid out by the Farm Credit Corporation, some 80 per cent of it has been directed toward paying land debts and buying more land, whereas only some 3 per cent was applied to the purchase of livestock.

The minister went on to point out that another principle of the Farm Credit Corporation was to assist the small farmer to expand his enterprise to an economical size. I wonder whether the minister could give us some idea as to what he feels is an economical size, not in acreage but as far as capitalization is concerned. Perhaps the corporation have some figures they use as a rough guide which in turn will guide the committee this afternoon in its discussion of this bill.

I am also concerned at the rate of interest payable on loans over $20,000 and $27,500 under part III. In some respects perhaps it is an established principle that, if one has a sound credit rating, the more money one borrows from the bank the lower the interest rate. But here it is the opposite: the more money one borrows the higher the interest rate. A high interest rate on a large loan makes it all the more difficult to meet the repayments. One hon. member mentioned that a loan of $55,000 taken over 35 years would mean that a borrower had paid back $125,000 at the end of the term. This gives the committee some idea as to what this interest rate means; it means a lot of money to the person who is repaying the loan.

I, like the former speaker, should like to see the interest rates spelled out in the bill so that the farmers would know exactly what this means to them. A farmer taking a $25,000 loan under part II of the act would perhaps be better advised to borrow the money under part III of the act unless the interest rate made a great difference. He would have to get advice from the corporation, but it might save him the difference in interest between the rate on $20,000 and that on $27,500. That may be an avenue which could be explored.

The minister stated that in some respects these amendments are reinforcing the position of family farms. I have grave doubts whether this would be accomplished. The average family farm, judging from the 480,000 farmers in Canada, involves a capitalization around $30,000; and nearly half our farmers have an acreage of 250 acres or less. As a result of the amendments I am afraid that the capital will be slowly drawn off, and perhaps not immediately but in the ensuing years there will be a tendency for the corporation to place large sums of money in good secure hands, but it will not bring about the improvement in over-all farm standards which we should like to see.

I realize that the Farm Credit Corporation is sometimes rather a stickler, with regard to making loans, in ensuring that a farmer borrows enough money to establish himself on what the corporation calls an economical unit. I have had a number of farmers come to me and tell me they want to borrow only $3,000 or $4,000, but that the corporation has said that that was no good, that they should find a farm value at $20,000 and that they would receive a loan of $20,000. That is why these amendments concern me today. There are a number of farmers—I am sure this is the case in many areas of Canada—who, having farmed a half section of land for the last ten years, suddenly find available a quarter section of land adjacent to their own farm.

They want to buy this and it can be bought for $5,000 or $6,000. However, the corporation says, "No; this still does not give you an economic unit in our way of thinking and we would not lend you $5,000 or $6,000, but if you find a bigger farm, a well established farm, we will lend you $20,000." This may sound good in principle but many cases have been pointed out to me where a farmer, who has existed for ten years on a half section of land, sees a piece of land adjacent to him that he wants, but the corporation will not lend him the money to buy it. As the years go by maybe another quarter section would become available and eventually he would be able to establish himself on a full economic unit.

I also believe the corporation should continue to make and process loans throughout the winter. It has been its policy not to make appraisals after the first snow flies, but at times it is pretty difficult to shut down and wait until spring. You have other agencies and departments of government saying, "Do it now; why wait till spring?" But the corporation takes the attitude that once the first snow flies it must shut down on appraisals and wait until spring.

Perhaps the Farm Credit Corporation might not be as brave in its winter appraisals as in its summer ones, but it could process applications and perhaps not pay loans on as large a scale as in the summer months. In this connection I am thinking of a particular case of a farmer who had rented a place for five or six years. He knew it as well as he knew his own place. The owner died and, in order for the estate to be settled, the farm had to be sold, and this man could not wait until spring to obtain the money to buy the farm. If the corporation had been taking applications and appraising land during the winter months he could have enlarged his farm. I am sure this situation exists in many parts of Canada.

In Alberta last winter many southern parts had no snow, but the corporation claimed the ground was frozen and it could not make an appraisal. There is no real difficulty in taking a chunk of frozen ground into a house, thawing it out, and conducting a soil test on it. For that reason I say this is one particular regulation that could be removed.

Under the terms of this bill we are asked to place our judgment in the hands of the corporation with regard to estate administrators, and with regard to people borrowing money on behalf of their sons or sons-in-law. Up to the present time the corporation has done a real good job in administering the act. I have full confidence in it, and I believe it could process many applications throughout the winter months in many parts of Canada. This would be an additional benefit to small farmers who need money during the winter when pieces of land come up for sale.

In closing I say that if the minister is trying to assist the small farmer, to strengthen and reinforce the family farm, he should give further consideration to the amendments he proposes. To me it appears that increasing the amounts of loans to $40,000 and $50,000 is a millionaire's approach to the solution of agricultural problems. It may be of real benefit to some farmers, to a small percentage of the applicants, but I greatly fear that many of the 55 per cent of the applicants who are turned down, or who go away from the corporation of their own accord each year, will not benefit very much from this proposal.

The minister has said further amendments will be necessary. I hope he gives greater consideration to some amendments which would be more beneficial to the small farmers across Canada.

Mr. Hays: Mr. Chairman, I assume the hon. member is opposed to the larger loans, and I think I should explain our thinking in this regard. Last year we loaned $108 million to the Farm Credit Corporation across Canada, and we have about $378 million, as of this week, at loan to the corporation. Last year, outside of this, the farmers used another $235 million worth of credit. They borrowed another $235 million at interest rates over 10 per cent. These are the figures obtained by the corporation in its study, and this is part of the reason why we are increasing these loans.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): For the purchase of land?

Mr. Hays: For the purchase of chattels and that sort of thing. Under the terms of the legislation 60 per cent is for land and 40 per cent for other chattels. Further, a recent study made by the Quebec department of agriculture into what an economic unit should be, showed that a dairy farmer, with 100 acres, must have a contract for the supply of between 200,000 pounds and 400,000 pounds of milk a year. The cost of such a unit in Quebec is about $40,000. If it is an economic beef operation the same study shows that a farmer will require between 200 and 300 acres of land for 50 head of cattle. Further, in the eastern United States their loans total $60,000 for land, plus an additional $35,000 for livestock, $95,000 in total. It was in this context that we brought forward these amendments. There is nothing to say a smaller farmer cannot use this, and this was our thinking in introducing the amendments.

Mr. Rynard: I have a case of a man starting to organize a dairy farm, and he has some money. He has enough to make a start and he is going to build a unit where he will keep around 75 head of dairy cattle on a 25 acre farm, with about 25 more acres in timber or woodlot. He figures that he can buy feed for the cattle, keep a milker to do the job with the equipment he is intent on providing, and make it an economic operation. Is it possible for this man to secure a loan under this legislation?

As the minister knows, his cattle will cost him around $30,000, and he estimates another $25,000 for equipment. He figures that he can run this unit more economically by paying the cost of labour than by buying a lot of machinery to harvest a two or three hundred acre farm to supply his cattle with feed. Does this fellow qualify?

Mr. Hays: I realize the hon. member is raising a hypothetical situation.

Mr. Rynard: It is only in part hypothetical; this question has been posed to me.

Mr. Hays: In discussing this with the officials we have discussed many cases so that we would know how to broaden the act. I believe that the Farm Credit Corporation has more trouble in eastern Canada in suggesting to an individual applicant that he should borrow a greater amount of money. If he is to have an economic unit in order to repay the loan, he probably needs $40,000 and not $10,000. An applicant will refuse $15,000, but oftentimes he cannot pay back $15,000 if he does not have $30,000 to make his unit economical. The Quebec department also learned this from their study. The whole problem with farming is that those farmers who are operating at a subsistence level must have their operations converted into an economic unit, and certainly it will take a great deal more credit if he is going to be able to repay.

Mr. Rynard: There is only this further point. What about the case of the farmer who feels he has an economic unit and can prove to the Farm Credit Corporation with facts and figures that he can operate his farm as an economic unit? I am sure the minister knows as well as I do that there are people operating farms of this type in Ontario today who are doing very well. What I want to find out from the minister is whether they will consider these highly specialized farms for farm credit?

Mr. Hays: Yes, Mr. Chairman. An economic unit is a unit where the man can meet his obligations, pay his taxes and keep his family. Anything that will do that certainly is an economic unit.

Mr. Nasserden: Mr. Chairman, the more I listen to the minister the more I am convinced that he has completely missed the purpose of this legislation when it was first introduced in the House of Commons. I do not take exception to legislation which will provide an increase in the amount of loans where a larger loan can be made use of, unless we are to have the increase without also broadening the scope of the act to take care of the 11,000 farmers per year who have been unable to take advantage of the act as it is now constituted.

A few minutes ago something was said by the hon. member for Lotbinière about the problems in his area. I listened to the minister's remarks yesterday and today and it seems to me that the whole situation has escaped him, so far as the need of people faced with a particular problem is concerned. Before we proceed to broaden the act to make loans in excess of $27,500 available and double the amount available for individual farm units, I believe that something should be done for the vast number of farm people to be found in every part of the country who up to now have been unable to benefit from the legislation.

In saying that, I am not discrediting the legislation that has been brought forward or the good work that has been done by the officials who have tried to put the legislation into effect for the benefit of agriculture. All of us know that the legislation introduced in 1959, and amended later, requires further amendment from time to time to meet situations as they arise. Surely we have learned something from the experience of the last few years. In looking at the record of loans the thing that impresses me most is that the losses have been so small. That being so, it would seem to me that because of the regulations that have been in effect we surely must have been bypassing a great number of farmers who deserve loans.

I should like the minister to give more than passing consideration to this problem. I am disturbed by the legislation as presented, particularly clause 3 which enables the borrower to acquire farmland for his son or daughter, and so on. There is nothing wrong with that in itself, but it indicates the trend of thinking of the government. We must realize that land is getting scarcer in Canada today and that the purpose of establishing the Farm Credit Corporation was to bring as many people as possible into active agricultural production. The amendments before us today have the reverse effect. Unless the minister is prepared to introduce more lenient regulations so as to make loans available to those who have been unable to qualify in the past, I believe that the amendments before us today will have a very serious effect on the agricultural situation in Canada. They can only have one result, that there will be fewer farmers. Perhaps some people think this is inevitable, and maybe it is; but surely we should try to see that the development of these resources is left in the hands of as many families as possible and not try to funnel these resources into the hands of a smaller number of families.

I think it is a well known fact that the farmer who is well established is better able to establish his sons, daughters and other relatives in agriculture or, for that matter, in any other business. Those who need help are those who are not as well established. Perhaps this whole point is not making a dent on the minister at all but I hope he will take it under consideration and give it the attention it deserves.

Mr. Pugh: Mr. Chairman, I have only a few comments on the bill to amend the Farm Credit Act. My only purpose in rising is because of certain statements made by the hon. member for Essex South yesterday. As found on page 4162 of Hansard, he said:

> All that was said yesterday by the members of the opposition added up to one thing, that for the last six years they have recognized that the Farm Credit Corporation was not meeting the needs of agriculture.

He made that statement just after talking about a windstorm, and I think that windstorm must have affected his words. The Farm Credit Corporation deserves a tremendous amount of credit. I think members have only to recall the old Canadian farm loan board, which in its day did a good job within the limitations placed upon it. But when the Farm Credit Corporation took over in 1959 it adopted a new approach to the credit and other needs of farmers all over Canada. I do not want to make a political speech but I would remind members opposite who have been criticizing the Farm Credit Corporation that it was set up by a Conservative administration.

The basic difference was that, instead of just looking at loans on the basis of proper security, as the farm loan board did, the Farm Credit Corporation looked at the needs of the farmers from the point of view of what constituted an economic unit. The minister has made much of the fact that the farm must be an economic unit in order to repay the loan. I think that has been the basis of all loans made by the corporation to date.

As far as my area is concerned, we do not have too much mixed farming. There is a certain amount of lumbering and some raising of cattle but mainly we have orchards. The benefits which have accrued to these orchardists in British Columbia through the Farm Credit Corporation are immense. In many cases the whole picture has been changed, and this has continued year after year.

One has only to examine the loans made to see what an excellent job the Farm Credit Corporation has done. I was extremely pleased to hear the hon. member for Huron speak this afternoon. Because of his great knowledge of farming I was particularly pleased with the pat on the back he gave the Farm Credit Corporation. He comes from eastern Canada and I felt that his words supported what I intended to say this afternoon. There have been complaints with regard to the time it takes to have appraisals made. I have checked into a great many complaints over the last number of years and I would say that if all appraisals were to be made quickly, in the rush of the season, the corporation would require a staff far greater in numbers than what they now have and they would have to be on the job 24 hours a day. I do not blame the Farm Credit Corporation at all for this. We have a longer period during the year in which appraisals can be made. However, you cannot just go out and pick up people off the street and say, "You are an appraiser; go out and look at farms." You have to have men with proper training and an understanding of farm problems.

I must say that in my area of British Columbia the appraisers are good. I can say they are men of understanding, Mr. Chairman, because they are faced with a great many problems when men cannot understand why their application for loans have been turned down. Certainly, we have a backlog of applicants for loans, but you cannot have an immediate appraisal. I would say offhand that there seems to be some concern about the number of applicants who were turned down last year. However if I am any judge of the applicants, the type of men who are processing and of the type of men who form the administration of the Farm Credit Corporation, I would say that the vast majority of the applicants are requesting loans on non-economic units.

I thought the hon. member for Acadia and the hon. member for Rosthern made excellent points. I should like to refer the minister to the amendments made in 1962. These were good amendments; they were broadening amendments. They gave applicants a better opportunity to qualify for loans, because income from other sources was considered to be income available for the repayment of the loans. I do not believe the doubling of the amount of credit available is the answer to this problem. I believe this is a good measure, but I do not believe it will apply too much to my area. I can see that for the larger units on the prairies these provisions would be excellent.

The hon. member for Acadia and the hon. member for Rosthern both emphasized the fact that there should be a stronger attempt to keep the family on the farm. This might not be economic if credit were required to achieve this objective. I think the minister might look over the regulations under which this administration operates. Actually, I believe the administration is not hidebound. I believe they have a flexible way of looking at the requirements for credit of the individual orchardist or farmer. I feel that when a man makes application, if he has anything remotely resembling an economic unit he will get extraordinary consideration. It is true that in my area probably as much as anywhere, because of the nature of fruit farming and because of the nature of the economic unit needed, people asking for loans have been told that these loans will not do them any good. That what is needed is a larger loan so they can be put on an economic basis.

At the moment, as has been pointed out, there has been little if any loss to the Farm Credit Corporation because repayments have been made on a regular basis. May I say, in closing, that we have had a great many congratulatory messages to the minister from Liberal members? I do not want to detract in any way from those words but I should like to add that the work which was put in earlier made the Farm Credit Corporation an extraordinarily good means of extending credit to farmers all across Canada. Finally, I should like to say to the hon. member for Essex South that he should spend a little time talking to some of his colleagues, or some of us over here, in order to find out exactly what the Farm Credit Corporation is and just what it has done since its inception.

Mr. Hays: Mr. Chairman, since February 21 we have spent five days on the supplementary estimates for agriculture and four days on the main estimates. This is the fourth day upon which we have been dealing with the Farm Credit Corporation. We have the Crop Insurance Act coming up shortly and some of the provinces are very anxious to do something with it this year. We have the farm improvement loans amendments coming up soon on the order paper. Then, there will be the farm machinery bill, and I am sure farmers would like to take advantage of it this fall. In view of all this, perhaps we could get on with the point by point discussion of the bill and get it passed. I have indicated many times that we are running out of money. We are lending about a million dollars a day. There will be ample time to discuss these very important problems in agriculture. I realize, and hon. members realize, that this is one piece of legislation that is most necessary and most important.

Mr. Muir (Lisgar): I should like to cooperate with the minister. I see no reason why this measure cannot be handled this afternoon or this evening. However, I have a couple of questions that I cannot properly put under the other sections. They have to do with insurance on the loans. As I understand it, insurance is taken out on the borrower for the life of the loan. I should like to have on the record an answer to these questions: Is the amount of the insurance reduced as the loan is reduced?

Mr. Hays: Yes, it covers the normal amount outstanding and it decreases as the loan decreases. It is compulsory on part III but not on part II.

Mr. Muir (Lisgar): That is the other question I was going to ask; supposing a man wants to take insurance for his own benefit, but he is turned down on a medical examination, will there still be a loan granted?

Mr. Hays: Yes, he still gets a loan.

Mr. Muir (Lisgar): Does this apply to part III?

Mr. Hays: There is no medical examination under part III.

Mr. Muir (Lisgar): I think that probably answers the questions I have on the first clause. I do have some questions about interest but I can probably take them up later.

The Chairman: It being five o'clock, it is my duty to leave the chair in order that the house may proceed to the consideration of private members' business.

MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

MODELS FOR CANADIAN FLAG

The house resumed from Thursday, June 4, consideration of the motion of Mr. Smallwood:

That an order of the house do issue for the production of all flag designs or models which have been received by the Prime Minister, members of the cabinet or the government, as models for a Canadian flag.

Mr. S. Perry Ryan (Spadina): By the terms of the motion which the hon. member for Battle River-Camrose (Mr. Smallwood) has put before the house I take it he is hoping to have the property or ownership in every such flag design or flag model transferred to parliament. This may not have been the hon. member's intention, but I submit it will be the effect of ordering the production and tabling of more than 3,000 flag designs which, we are told, have been sent to and examined by the government, more particularly by the department of the Secretary of State.

In this situation I think the hon. member should consider whether such action does not in itself amount to an infringement or expropriation of copyright and be actionable in the courts in each case by writ of summons or petition of right. Further, even if no action were brought in respect of an individual design there likely could be no redelivery to the sender or author upon request unless this house, which is sovereign, ordered such redelivery. All hon. members might just imagine for one moment the effect of having individual writs of summons issued or individual requests made to obtain these numerous flag designs and models. Failing an order by the house for redelivery in a particular case, the government could again be faced with a writ of summons or a petition of right in many cases. I do not argue that a writ or petition would be issued in respect of each flag design or model, but there could be a sufficient number to make this house regret the day when the hon. member for Battle River-Camrose bestowed himself on his electors and inflicted this motion upon the house.

The likelihood is enhanced by the publicity which has already been given to this motion. I am sure that many authors of flag designs and flag models which have been submitted are now acutely conscious of their proprietary interest in their creative work, both by virtue of common law and by virtue of a federal statute, the Copyright Act. Furthermore, many authors who have sent in their submissions specifically requested that their designs be returned to them. Thus, to impound their creations by passing this motion would, I submit, amount to an inexcusable breach of faith as well as a breach of this federal parliament's own law.

I have grave doubts—and I am sure they are shared by most hon. members—whether flag designs and flag models come under the definition of "papers". I would think that the rule might be applied to the letters and the briefs or instructions which accompanied these submissions, but not to the actual artistic works themselves. Certainly with respect to some designs and models at least, they are not papers at all—they are articles. We have heard the Minister of Justice (Mr. Favreau) describe one as being executed on a piece of plywood; I think it was six feet by three feet, or eight feet by four feet. This is certainly not a piece of paper.

[The Chairman.]

All hon. members are aware—or they ought to be—that the guiding principle is that when papers are sought to be produced they should be of a public or official character, not of a private or confidential nature. In this case, the government did not invite, request or advertise for the submission of the thousands of models which have been sent in, as distinct from the case in 1946 when those who were asked to submit flag designs and models were told that they would be further submitted to a committee. In this case the government did not stipulate any use to which these designs or models might be put. They were sent in, for the most part voluntarily by public-spirited citizens who had a burning desire to see a distinctive national flag for this country. They were sent in also by professional designers and artists, all of them hoping, no doubt, that their work might be accepted either in whole or in part by the government when reaching its decision.

I believe, therefore, that implicit in the submission of each designer was the understanding that only after his work had been chosen, either in whole or in part, would there be any publication, reproduction, transfer or use of his design or model. Thus if it were thought desirable to produce and table these flag designs and flag models—and I do not agree with this assumption—I say that the only reasonable and proper thing to do would be to contact each of the authors and obtain a written assignment of ownership and copyright in each case. This would of course involve a delay of unforeseeable length, particularly because some of the authors would, no doubt, be extremely difficult to locate. In some cases, executors of estates would be required to sign. It is indeed unlikely that all the designs and models could ever be tabled with permission.

This motion has been a waste of the time of this house and it is no tribute to the mover's sense of responsibility or to that of his party. If, by some inconceivable circumstance, it were allowed to pass either in whole or in part, it would amount to a costly exercise in sheer futility. A flag design has already been chosen by the government in pursuance of its commitment and responsibility. The situation as I see it is that the hon. member would like to hold his own beauty contest and select his own beauty queen, after the beauty queen has been chosen by the proper judges.

At this stage the motion would tend towards chaos rather than order in the field of choosing an official national flag for Canada. I am sure the house will see it simply as a clumsy attempt to postpone further the selection of a Canadian flag which should have been selected many years ago. The position of the mover with respect to this motion is currently far worse than it was last Thursday, because the parliamentary secretary to the Secretary of State (Mr. Stewart) in his usual inoffensive manner then offered to let the hon. member personally see and analyse all the designs and models in the hands of the department. The hon. member for Battle River-Camrose has not to date availed himself of this golden opportunity to exercise his flag picking fingers. Some people having this same opportunity might be tempted to design and obtain a copyright on the new game of "flagpik" and sell it to the Eskimos.

Mr. Speaker, without admitting that a flag design or flag model is a paper within the rules, I would probably not be so disturbed about this motion if it sought the production of flag designs or flag models within the public or international domains. I am thinking of such things as a black flag, either with or without the skull and crossbones, which in days gone by was the symbol of the pirate, or the plain yellow flag which was and still is the sign of infectious illness aboard ship—

An hon. Member: That is the Liberal flag.

Mr. Ryan: You are looking through a jaundiced eyeball when you say that. Another is the white flag, which is universally used as a flag of truce or to show peaceful intentions. Striking your flag, whatever its colour may be, denotes surrender. None of the authors of the private and confidential flags in question here have struck their flags, but the hon. member for Battle River-Camrose, to save his face and possibly his seat, should strike this nuisance motion.

Mr. Smallwood: A great contribution; you should be proud of yourself.

Mr. E. Nasserden (Rosthern): Mr. Speaker, I believe that seldom has parliament heard a more arrogant construction of straw houses than we heard today and the other day when this question was under debate. For members across the way to suggest that those who have sent flag designs to the Canadian Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson), to the Secretary of State (Mr. Lamontagne) and to parliament for consideration as the national flag sent them in confidence is indeed something that is very hard to understand, particularly when most of these designs have been given wide publicity not only in the localities from which they originated but in many other parts of the country as well. This afternoon we heard the hon. member for Spadina (Mr. Ryan) tell us that the government had chosen a flag and he suggested that no other flag should be given the same kind of publicity as that chosen by the government. Indeed he indicated, if I understood his words correctly, that the very fact the government had chosen a flag meant that parliament had already endorsed it—and that certainly is not the case.

Mr. Ryan: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker; the hon. member is speaking on a platform of thin ice and I think he has a little too much heat in his shanty, because I did not say that at all.

Mr. Nasserden: The ice may not be as thin as the hon. member tries to make out at the moment, when he takes a look at the words he uttered in this house a few minutes ago. All I want to say on this question very briefly is that the Canadian people should be given a chance to look at all the designs and these designs should not be hidden from them by an arrogant government.

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. Is the house ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those in favour will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion the nays have it.

Motion negatived.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I declare the motion lost, on division.

Mr. Smallwood: Trained seals.

Hon. J. Watson MacNaught (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, could I make a motion that public bills Nos. 13 to 70 inclusive stand?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it agreed that these bills stand at the request of the government?

Mr. Rapp: I intend to go on with mine, Mr. Speaker.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE ACT

AMENDMENT TO PROVIDE FOR EMPLOYEES IN AGRICULTURE

Mr. Reynold Rapp (Humboldt-Melfort-Tisdale) moved the second reading of Bill No. C-45, to amend the Unemployment Insurance Act (agricultural employees' coverage).

He said: Mr. Speaker, I had not expected that my bill would come up today. However, as it has been on the order paper for many sessions and parliaments I am prepared to suggest to the house that serious consideration be given to bringing agricultural employees under the Unemployment Insurance Act. Agricultural employees are the only employees not covered by unemployment insurance. This creates hardship on farmers who want to hire employees in the spring or fall, but because these employees are not covered by insurance the excuse is made that when their seasonal employment on the farm is over they will find themselves in a position where they are unable to keep their families, because during the time they were employed their incomes were too low. Consequently these people are not available, and they will not be available unless agricultural employees receive the same coverage under the Unemployment Insurance Act as do other employees.

The excuse has been made many times both by the minister and other government officials that no action can be taken until the Gill report is received, so that they can study the recommendations made. I have not got a copy of the report before me at the present time, but I might point out that the report recommends that all employees be covered by unemployment insurance, provided there are the proper administrative procedures or processes available. I cannot see why the administration of unemployment insurance for farm labourers should be so difficult or so different compared with employees in other industries.

For many years we in the west, where agriculture is perhaps on a somewhat larger scale than other places, have run into difficulty at seeding or at harvest time when the rush is on, of being unable to get help. Many times farmers contact the unemployment offices in the cities to no avail. I should like the government to give serious consideration to the recommendation of the Gill commission to which I have referred, because the commission stress the point that agricultural employees and all other employees should be covered by unemployment insurance where the necessary administrative procedures are available. Therefore I ask the minister, or in his absence the parliamentary secretary to the Minister of Labour (Mr. Byrne), to give serious consideration to this problem.

I well remember that in another parliament when I presented this bill many members of the party which now forms the government wholeheartedly supported its purposes. Now that the Liberal party is in power, I should like the members of parliament who so vigorously supported my bill previously to stand up and speak in its support as they did before. This bill raises a serious problem. It is most important that farm labourers be covered by unemployment insurance.

The agricultural industry in the west is becoming more mechanized, as a result of which it is difficult to get employees who know how to operate these big combines, tractors and other machines. Many farmers have incurred great losses on account of being unable to get help. As time goes on I think the need for agricultural employees able to work on these big farms will become smaller.

In conclusion, I should like to direct the attention of the parliamentary secretary, in the absence of the Minister of Labour (Mr. MacEachen), to the Gill report and I invite him to tell the house that my bill, Bill No. C-45, will be sent to the committee for discussion, instead of talking the bill out, as I expect will be the case. At the same time I would urge the government to give serious consideration to this matter and bring farm labour under the Unemployment Insurance Act.

Mr. Lloyd Francis (Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I listened with a great deal of interest to the remarks of the hon. member in moving second reading of this bill. We are all sympathetic to any objectives which try to develop the broadest possible coverage to employees under the Unemployment Insurance Act, and which try to see to it that every class of employee in Canada in gainful employment gets equal protection and rights under our social security legislation, of which the Unemployment Insurance Act is an important part.

As a member of the house sitting on this side I have some reservations in my mind about the piecemeal attack on the problem of amending the Unemployment Insurance Act. The hon. member who proposes this legislation made reference to the report of the Gill committee in which was a general recommendation that the principle of extending insurance coverage should be given sympathetic consideration. The government is looking very carefully and systematically at the recommendations in the Gill report, and we would be more than irresponsible were we not to do so. But it is the intention of the government at the earliest possible date to place specific measures before this house involving a fairly substantial series of amendments to the act and changes in the operation of the fund.

We all know what happened to the unemployment insurance fund. We recall rather painfully that in 1957-58 there was close to $1 billion in that fund. We also recall very painfully that in 1963 the fund had to borrow money from the government of Canada to sustain its operations, and at one particular juncture in 1964 we had a rather embarrassing experience concerning the approval of the necessary authorities to make payments under this act.

There is no question, when looking at the extension of coverage of unemployment insurance, that we have to look at the record of the industry which is being covered. We know the problems of agriculture, that agriculture represents declining employment, that at present it means increasing size of farm units. Increased mechanization is becoming more and more a part of agriculture, and agriculture requires more and more capital. It is for these reasons that we have been debating authority, under another piece of legislation, to provide additional capital loans to farmers in order to help them increase their efficiency.

We know there are times of the year, as was pointed out by the hon. member proposing this bill, when there is a shortage of farm help. We are of course well aware of all this; but it does not necessarily follow that we can take the simplest and easiest type of resolution, which simply says we will give these benefits to this category of employees. We cannot do that, in view of the history of the unemployment fund.

If we believe in the principle of unemployment insurance—and I am very sure there are very few hon. members in the house who do not—then it follows that when we propose amendments to the legislation we have to look in an over-all way at the fiscal implication of what we are doing. The bill before us does not do that.

It has one curious clause which I personally found difficult to understand, and though I am sure the hon. member has taken professional advice on the matter, I have some doubts in my own thoughts as to whether this would stand up in the courts. The problem relates to private members' limitations in regard to the initiation of money bills. This clause proposes to restrict the payments that could be made to the amounts contributed by private individuals, to make sure that the contribution from the government of Canada is not paid out. The hon. member is making gestures. Does he disagree?

Mr. Rapp: Mr. Speaker, I thought—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member has already spoken in this debate but, on the other hand, if hon. members agree, he can certainly ask a question.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Rapp: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Carleton (Mr. Francis) has said this will probably not stand up in the courts. What is the difference between an unemployed labourer on the farm and an unemployed fisherman or an unemployed industrial worker? There is no difference, except that these classes have been covered under the Unemployment Insurance Act, and the farmers are the only large group that is not covered.

Mr. Francis: The hon. member asked me what is the difference. I have to say, of course, that if they had been included as part of the initial legislation, or as part of a series of proposals laid before the house by the government, there would be no problem; but there is a problem and this relates to the fact that it is initiated in a private member's bill. There is a reservation in my mind as to whether the type of solution proposed in this clause overcomes that difficulty. I do not know how you could make such a clause work, how you could restrict benefits which are paid out of the unemployment insurance fund and relate them in some way to private individual's contributions, exclusive of government contributions. The problem is one of trying to identify contributions from a specific group and relate them to benefits, which is contrary to the principles established under the Unemployment Insurance Act in the form in which it has been developed, to date.

I am aware that in other parts of the world a factor known as experienced rating by industry has been adopted as a feature of unemployment insurance—

Mr. Rapp: Mr. Speaker, if you will allow me to draw attention again to the bill, I would like to read the explanatory note concerning this clause. It says:

> The unemployment insurance fund is 80 per cent private moneys and 20 per cent public moneys. To avoid having this bill infringe the rule against the introduction of a so-called "money bill" by a private member, this clause provides that employees in agriculture shall be paid benefits out of the contributions by private citizens (the employee and the employer) but not out of the contributions by the taxpayers.

This bill is trying to avoid making the government responsible for it. If the hon. member would read this clause and study it, I think he would know his argument is falling through.

Mr. Francis: I have read the clause and I come back to my point. It suggests a procedure which is foreign to the administration of the act today. It suggests you can somehow identify one particular group of contributions, and relate benefits paid to one particular category of beneficiaries to a particular group of contributions, and I am suggesting to the hon. member that this has not been one of the principles of administration during the development of the act.

As I was saying, there are parts of the world where a feature known as experienced rating has been made a part of social welfare or unemployment insurance. It has not been part of Canada's philosophy to incorporate this kind of thing into its legislation.

The provision which the hon. member proposes would suggest that the benefits which are going to be paid are somehow going to be limited by contributions which could be identified. I think I can read as well as the hon. member, and if he has a contrary interpretation that is his right. As a member of this house I can only say to the house that my interpretation of this clause raises a very serious doubt in my mind as to whether it is administratively feasible. I believe this clause is dealing with a point of principle in terms of our Unemployment Insurance Act which has been in operation since 1940—with a series of amendments—but substantially the same in principle. The hon. member, in attempting to bring his bill within the four corners of what is permitted to a private member, has done some things which I contend are contrary to the spirit and intention of the original act. For this reason I do not think it is sound to proceed in this way.

I come back to something which is more substantial and basic, and this is the intention of the hon. member in introducing this private bill. He is using the device of private members' hour to call attention to a problem. This is a perfectly legitimate thing to do. It is done on many occasions by many hon. members in different groups in the house, and to the extent to which the hon. member represents an agricultural riding and is bringing the problem of his electors and his riding to the attention of the house, he is certainly to be commended. I for one would be delighted to see the government, as part of its over-all package, make recommendations which would deal with the kind of problem the hon. member is bringing to our attention.

But I cannot help recall that the hon. member sat on this side of the house for some years. During that time a series of amendments that were rather general in character were brought forward on behalf of other groups, but apparently the hon. member was not able to use his persuasiveness with the ministers of his own government to get his problem remedied.

Mr. Rapp: We waited for the Gill report.

Mr. Francis: It is true the Gill report was an excuse for inaction, and that action was delayed far too long. We are now trying to cope with the Gill report and to bring in recommendations which are very sweeping in character and which can be implemented. There is no question in my mind, as a result of reading the Gill report, that a revision of the unemployment insurance fund is long overdue. Certainly it cannot be left just hanging in the air, particularly when the fund itself is so perilously close to being insolvent and is living from hand to mouth far too frequently.

I commend the hon. member for calling attention to the problem. It is perfectly legitimate on his part to use the device of drafting a piece of legislation, however imperfect, and dealing generally with the problem, as a means of calling attention to it. But we have to be responsible in this house too, and it is much too easy to say, "Let us do this;

let us give this benefit." In the case of the unemployment insurance fund we could not have a clearer warning that we cannot proceed in a piecemeal way without making the necessary fiscal recommendations for the solvency of the fund itself, to make it as solvent as it used to be at one time, to make it the kind of fund which serves the purpose of insurance and does not pervert the concept of social insurance to a form of welfare measure, which perhaps might be more appropriately administered under one of the other social welfare programs being developed in Canada. I for one cannot accept the bill before us. While the intention is perfectly legitimate and I have the deepest sympathy for it, I do not think that clause 3 of the bill achieves the purpose which the hon. member has in mind and in my view it negates to a substantial degree what he has tried to do.

Mr. Nasserden: May I ask the hon. member a question? Has the hon. member forgotten so soon that he was elected on the pledge to provide unemployment insurance for employees in agriculture?

Mr. Francis: I have not forgotten that in any way, but I do not think the way to bring about unemployment insurance coverage in agriculture is by a private member's bill containing such a clause as clause 3 in the bill before us, which purports to introduce a device whereby, within the four corners of what a private member can do, the hon. member introduces a totally new concept in the administration of the law. That is not my idea of how to meet the problem.

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, the members of this group have long advocated the inclusion of agricultural labour within the terms of the Unemployment Insurance Act, and on that basis we support the purpose of the hon. member for Humboldt-Melfort-Tisdale (Mr. Rapp). I have no hesitation in complimenting him on his consistency, his persistence and determination, whether he is on the government side of the house or on the opposition side. I also compliment him on his ability to find it possible to make two or three speeches on his own bill during private members' hour.

I am going to be brief, Mr. Speaker, because I know the hon. member for Lotbinière (Mr. Choquette) is just bursting to rise. He represents a lot of farmers and I know of his sincere interest in their welfare and in the need for this legislation. I am sure he is going to support the members of the opposition in this case.

In my view the hon. member who has just taken his seat took a rather technical approach to this matter. I am not sure the method set out in the bill is the exact way we should do this, but the hon. member who introduced the bill has brought it forward in the only way he can as a private member. We know his intention and we know the necessity. I thought the last speaker took a rather technical approach, but I am sure his approach will not be the same when he goes around among the farmers of Carleton county. He lacks feeling for the farmers. He has a legalistic approach, which has been the reason for this matter being delayed for many years.

None of us on this side of the house wants to see something placed in legislation that is unsound or unfair or is going to cause an unexpected charge on the public exchequer. We know that this is a particular problem and we think it should be given early consideration, and that the whole question should be studied. I know that the farmers themselves do not want agricultural labour to come within the terms of the Unemployment Insurance Act and create an unfair burden on the rest of the taxpayers of the country, but we have discussed this subject year after year and nothing has been done to date to remedy the situation. I judge that the hon. member for Carleton (Mr. Francis) is not a farmer.

Mr. Francis: I was born on a farm.

Mr. Herridge: The hon. member in commencing his remarks almost suggested that the hon. member for Humboldt-Melfort-Tisdale was trying to commit a parliamentary fraud, but he did withdraw somewhat and compliment him tenderly before concluding. I can see that on reflection the hon. member for Carleton realized that the hon. member's intentions were of the best and that he was trying to do the best he could. I simply rose, Mr. Speaker, to express our support for the purpose of the bill and the hon. member who has proposed it. Now, Mr. Speaker, I am just dying to hear from the hon. member for Lotbinière (Mr. Choquette).

Mr. Pickersgill: Before the hon. member speaks, I wonder whether I could put a question to the hon. member for Kootenay West. Is he speaking for all the serried ranks of farmers behind him?

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Speaker, I am speaking for all the serried ranks of members behind me that understand the farm problems of this country and have always supported the representations of the farmers organizations in this house.

Mr. A. B. Patterson (Fraser Valley): Mr. Speaker, I am going to be very brief in speaking on this private member's bill. So far as the operation of the Unemployment Insurance Act is concerned, I believe it is the desire of every hon. member that Canadians everywhere, regardless of their particular vocation, should all share equitably under the provisions of this act. Therefore we support the objective and principle of the bill and commend the hon. member for Humboldt-Melfort-Tisdale (Mr. Rapp) on introducing it once again.

As has been pointed out today, we understand that the Gill commission report has advocated a thorough study involving the extension of unemployment insurance to agricultural workers. Farm organizations have also indicated their support of the principle. Therefore we feel that careful and urgent consideration should be given to this matter because it is hardly fair that those engaged in agriculture should be deprived of legislative benefits now extended to those in other industries. Therefore I urge the government to take this matter under immediate consideration and introduce legislation as soon as possible to effect the purpose of the bill now before us.

I can see that there may be some problem in the operation of the fund as outlined in clause 3. I should imagine it would be very difficult to put that clause into operation, but I do not think that any of these problems are insuperable if there is a will to surmount them. Therefore I think that what the government needs is the will to extend and expand the coverage to include agricultural workers, and we urge them to do that very thing.

Mr. R. R. Southam (Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I am not going to take much time of the house at this particular juncture in the debate, but I rise to support this motion for the second reading of Bill No. C-45, an act to amend the Unemployment Insurance Act. In my first words I too wish to compliment the hon. member for Humboldt-Melfort-Tisdale (Mr. Rapp) for his persistence and studious effort each year in presenting this very important piece of legislation for the consideration of the house. In my view it is high time that the house took steps to adopt legislation to implement the principle involved in this bill.

Reference has been made to the Gill committee report. This committee was established by the former government, of course, to study the whole problem of unemployment insurance. Their report has been made and, like many other members representing agricultural ridings, I was disappointed to find that they did not make a definite recommendation that farm labour be included. I am thinking now of the members opposite who support the present government and who in the election campaigns of 1962 and 1963 went across the country telling the farmers that, if elected, they were going to bring in legislation amending the Unemployment Insurance Act so as to cover farm labour. I suggest to them now that they should make this promise good, take this matter under serious consideration and see to it that at the earliest possible date legislation is introduced into the house to provide unemployment insurance coverage for farm labour. That is all I have to say, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Pickersgill: I wonder whether the hon. member would permit me to ask him a question. As an influential supporter of the former government a little over a year ago, did he urge such action upon the government he supported, and with what success?

Mr. Southam: We certainly did, and the minister knows quite well that because of our representations the Gill committee was set up to study the whole proposition. He knows what is in their report. As I said a few moments ago, members on that side went across the country suggesting in farm ridings that this was one of the first things they were going to do.

Mr. Nasserden: The Minister of Transport (Mr. Pickersgill) has also forgotten his promise.

Mr. Pickersgill: I have not forgotten what was in the Gill report about fishermen.

[Translation]

Mr. Auguste Choquette (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, this morning, we sat on the agriculture committee, this afternoon, we came back to agriculture to discuss farm credit and tonight, between five and six, the private members' hour, another bill on agriculture is presented to the house.

And yet today, which I might say is "devoted to agriculture", I am sorry to note the absence of the hon. member for Nicolet-Yamaska (Mr. Vincent) who always makes it a point to stress the presence of his colleagues, to denounce the absence of government members; and when agriculture is discussed during a whole day, when extremely important problems are discussed to help the farmers, the hon. member for Nicolet-Yamaska is not here. His absence is unfortunate and I congratulate all the Liberal members who are here, especially the hon. member for Carleton (Mr. Francis) who made a very good speech, because he dealt with the matter quite objectively.

In fact, this bill to amend the Unemployment Insurance Act involves a measure quite acceptable in principle, because it is a very ticklish problem and our farmers often have cause for complaining about their plight, since they cannot draw unemployment benefits. If there are qualified workers, if there are people who spend their energy with dedication, with fearlessness, I might say, they are our farmers and they deserve from the government all the assistance they should get.

Let us read together the preamble of the bill:

> Whereas, since the coming into force in 1941 of The Unemployment Insurance Act, 1940, economic and social pressures and technological changes have reduced the number and increased the size of farm units and have swollen the migration of excess farm population to urban areas;

Such is indeed the case. This paragraph is well written and gives a clear account of the facts. A great number of farm units are being abandoned; the farm population migrates to urban areas, thus reducing—

[Text]

Mr. Alkenbrack: I rise, Mr. Speaker, on a point of privilege, to point out the most unethical practice being followed by the hon. member for Lotbinière. He mentioned the name of the hon. member for Nicolet-Yamaska (Mr. Vincent), my seatmate, who is unavoidably absent. I think that is very unfair and very poor practice on the part of the hon. member.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I may say that I have had the opportunity before of bringing to the attention of hon. members that they should not refer to the absence of other members. I am sure, as the hon. member says, this is a rather unacceptable practice and I feel members should stay away from it. On the other hand, I suppose the hon. member for Lotbinière felt he was justified in using this method of retaliation. I do feel that the moment an hon. member refers to the absence of another member he is, ipso facto, from that moment forward out of order. I certainly agree that members should always refrain from referring to the absence of other hon. members, which I am sure in most instances is quite unavoidable.

[Translation]

Mr. Choquette: Mr. Speaker, one cannot do otherwise than commend you for making such a ruling, because there is actually nothing shabbier than a member contriving to note the absence of a fellow member—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I would ask the hon. member to revert to the matter now before the house.

Mr. Choquette: Mr. Speaker, this ill-timed interference prompted me to make remarks that should really be avoided. I immediately revert to the matter and congratulate again the hon. member who has called the attention of the house to a situation which deserves serious consideration.

In my constituency of Lotbinière, for instance, there are a number of farm labourers who, having no farms of their own, are hired by farmers to do farm work. They are not farmers, but they are workers who would like to be covered by the Unemployment Insurance Act. Lacking the necessary security, they find themselves in an unfair situation, because once their employers are no longer in need of farm hands, they have nothing to fall back on. They have no protection whatever. A number of them came to see me, saying that they would like to draw unemployment insurance benefits and had applied to the commission. But since they were considered as farm labour, as farm hands, they were deprived of the security to which every citizen should be entitled.

That is why I agree with the principle of this bill but I suggest that the Unemployment Insurance Act should not be amended without further consideration.

[Text]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order; perhaps before I call it six o'clock I may be allowed to allude in one word to the reference made by the hon. member for Carleton (Mr. Francis) that the bill now before us appears to infringe upon the financial initiative of the crown. I wanted to say that there was some doubt in the mind of the Chair as to whether or not this bill was acceptable. On the other hand, in view of the very special circumstances under which the discussion was initiated, it was felt by the Chair that we should proceed with the discussion.

At this moment I only want to reserve the right of the Chair to express a formal opinion about the matter, if this bill appears again on the order paper or later comes before the house.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It is my duty, pursuant to provisional standing order 39A, to inform the house that the questions to be raised at ten o'clock p.m. this day are as follows:

The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), social assistance in Saskatchewan; the hon. member for Burnaby-Richmond (Mr. Prittie), date of payment of winter construction bonus; the hon. member for York-Humber (Mr. Cowan), airports, Malton, taxi service by Air Terminal Transport Service Limited.

FARM CREDIT ACT

AMENDMENTS INCREASING AUTHORIZED CAPITAL, MAXIMUM LOAN LIMITS, ETC.

The house resumed consideration in committee of Bill No. C-100, to amend the Farm Credit Act—Mr. Hays—Mr. Lamoureux in the chair.

At six o'clock the committee took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The committee resumed at 8 p.m.

Mr. Korchinski: Shortly before five o'clock the Minister of Agriculture suggested that some $230 million in loans—I believe that was the figure he used—have been taken out by farmers from sources other than the Farm Credit Corporation. I do not know whether it was his intention to give the impression that with the passage of this bill the situation would be corrected or not, but if this was his intention I wish to make a few remarks at this moment to suggest something to the contrary.

I am suggesting that the reason $230 million was taken out in loans from sources other than the Farm Credit Corporation or other sources, such as those available under the Farm Improvement Loans Act, is that the provisions of the existing act do not permit farmers to obtain loans. The minister is aware that some 55 per cent of those who have gone to credit advisers for loans have not been able to obtain them. It is for this reason that they are obliged to resort to other sources. Many farmers with whom I am personally acquainted have had their applications for loans turned down by the Farm Credit Corporation for one reason or another, in most cases because in the opinion of the credit adviser the unit which is proposed to set up would not be an economic one. I know that in many cases farmers have had opportunities to acquire land adjacent to their own. While it is true that this particular purchase might not result in an economic unit in the eyes of the Farm Credit Corporation adviser, the farmer himself might have seen a possibility that in a few years someone else might have some suitable land to sell, and that the loan would place him in a better position to set up an economic unit later on. But because he is refused a loan by the Farm Credit Corporation, and because he feels his opportunity slipping away, he turns to other sources for finance. Many farmers in this situation turn to sources such as the credit unions. I understand that in most cases the credit unions charge a higher interest rate than that charged by the Farm Credit Corporation. But these farmers feel that unless they go ahead and borrow the money everything they had planned and hoped for will be lost; their chances will have slipped by, and henceforth they will be going backwards instead of forwards.

A farmer who has not been able to get a loan under this legislation certainly will not be able to do so as a result of the amendment proposed now. Nothing has been done to meet such a situation as I have described, and I suggest that next year we shall be able to look up the record and find that the situation is unchanged, that these people have had to go to other sources, and that because of the attitude taken by the farm credit board there has been a refusal to make loans where the proposition does not lead to the establishment of an economic unit.

I suggest that what has happened with regard to the bill before us is this: The minister found that in a few days the corporation would be short of funds. Thus, he had to come to parliament and ask for more funds. This is a necessary step, and I agree with it. At the same time, the minister felt he should, perhaps, throw in a few amendments for the sake of appearances. This I believe is exactly what he has done. In the first clause we find what in future years will amount to a lawyers' bonanza. I am sure the minister is trying to get across to the country that he is doing something for the farmers, but we shall find that the situation as it affects the 55 per cent who have been refused loans by the corporation has not been changed.

If the minister had made proposals for the setting up of an appeal board, for example, it would have been a move in the right direction. An applicant whose request for a loan had been refused by a credit officer could then turn to a group of people and put forward his case with a view to having the decision reversed. If the minister does not want to set up an appeal board, I will make another suggestion. He could arrange for applications to be heard by a group of, say, half a dozen people, as is done by the credit unions in every community. They have groups of interested people and they perform this service for nothing, in a sense. They would, possibly, be familiar with the operation which the applicant had conducted and would be in a better position to know whether or not he was a good risk. If it were felt that the man could be regarded as a fair risk, the decision made by the credit officer could be reversed. This would constitute one method by which farmers whose applications for loans have been turned down in the past might qualify. I suggest this is the area in which there is most irritation.

I might just as well put on record a few of the other objections I have to this bill; it will save my having to get up later. I understand that the loans which may be made above $20,000 to $27,000 under the terms of the bill may amount to something in the order of 7 per cent, according to the figures I have been able to get from the minister's department. These figures would indicate that a loan of $55,000 over a period of 30 years under the new provisions would cost over $12,000 in interest, and so on. The former Conservative administration set the rate at 5 per cent. If the rate is going to be in the neighbourhood of 7 per cent, it will cost a farmer over $12,000 more for a loan of the same size as one he might have obtained under the provisions of the act as administered by the former government. This is a great deal of money when one considers that for a $55,000 loan he will repay almost $125,000 in 30 years.

I have another question for clarification, Mr. Chairman. When a farmer obtains a loan of over $27,500 under part II of the act I wonder what rate of interest the corporation will apply in collecting the money. If the farmer has finished paying off $27,500 at a rate over and above 5 per cent, will he be paying a lower rate of interest every year or will the calculation be made in such a way that each year the payments will be at the same rate? One other objection I have to the increase in the interest rate is that it will be a deterrent to the borrowing of money. Farmers will hesitate if the interest rate is higher than it was the previous year; they will say, "Perhaps it will be lower next year, so I will not get a loan this year". This in itself will have a deterring effect. I think the minister wants to leave the impression that he is doing something for the farmers, but certainly this provision, whereby the farmer will not know what the rate is going to be and will perhaps assume it will be lower next year, will mean he will not rush in to get a loan and in many cases this could mean he would be giving up an opportunity that might never again occur in his lifetime.

I wonder whether the minister would consider giving at least an idea as to whether the interest rate will be set for one year and the next year it might be changed, or whether interest rates will be changed monthly or every half year. These are just a few of the objections I have in this connection, Mr. Chairman, and any other questions I have I will raise at the appropriate time.

[Translation]

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Chairman, I should like to say only a few words on clause 1 of Bill No. C-100.

The day before yesterday I said that the purpose of this bill was to encourage and to assist the family farm, the small farmer. We feel, Mr. Chairman, as I pointed out the other day to the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Hays), that the time has come for the government, not to show compassion for the condition of eastern farmers, but to give them a fair and equitable treatment.

When we refer to farming, in eastern Canada, at the present time, we mean chiefly the ARDA program. I can see a full-fledged minister who could deal with the farmers' problem regarding the ARDA program; the government's advisers claim to help agriculture by getting rid of several small farmers, going in for farm centralization as never before in Canada which means that a prosperous farmer could take over a number of farms around his own and turn those dispossessed farmers into ordinary employees.

Mr. Chairman, in this era of automation, technology and machines, the minister who is actively involved with the ARDA program at the present time will eventually be able to deal with a larger movement of farmers who have become employees and who will become then regular unemployed or people living in the most abject misery. Why? Because we are now trying harder to dispossess them, allegedly because they cannot live on the income from their farm. Everyone knows that and everyone knows that in eastern Canada, in Ontario, Quebec and the maritimes, the farm problem is becoming more and more acute, harder and harder to solve because of the methods and suggestions coming from the government.

That reminds me of the Quebec farmer who took the plane for the first time and who, while flying at 15,000 feet—

Mr. Boulanger: That is an old one.

Mr. Caouette: My hon. friend from Mercier (Mr. Boulanger) says that it is an old one; it is younger than he is. Anyhow, the farmer walked into the washroom and saw written above the door: Please do not use over towns and villages. Quite naturally the farmer said to himself: "That's it! It is us, farmers, who will get it again on the head."

The solution offered by Bill No. C-100 rather confirms the fears of the farmer in the plane.

Mr. Chairman, any legislation to assist agriculture should not tell the farmer what he must do but should provide the latter with the means to do as he pleases and to plan his operation as he sees fit. No one in Canada is in a better position to appreciate the farmer's problem than the farmer.

Even though the Minister of Agriculture owns farms in western Canada and employs a lot of people, such as a managing-director, a sales manager, etc.—

Mr. Gauthier: He is no longer a farmer.

Mr. Caouette: —as my hon. friend for Roberval just said, he is no longer a farmer but a contractor. However, the man who operates his own farm knows what he needs.

I would say the same thing about the Minister of Forestry (Mr. Sauvé), who is responsible for ARDA. It is easy for one who has never been a farmer to tell the farmer what to do. But Bill No. C-100 should give the farmer the means to set up his farm as he sees fit, the opportunity to operate and modernize his farm and to plan and improve his farm production.

The clauses of this bill should include ways of actually helping the farmer. But, no. We have, as I said on many occasions, economists like my excellent friend for Matapedia-Matane (Mr. Tremblay), others like my very good friend the Minister of Forestry (Mr. Sauvé), especially of the forests of Îles-de-la-Madeleine, able to suggest plans to farmers. We are satisfied and we rejoice when we see the ARDA program being organized in eastern as well as in western Canada, but ARDA was more particularly established to help underdeveloped and depressed areas of our province.

We have had a great number of agricultural plans from economists, sociologists and others in Canada for the last 25 or 30 years. Suggestions and plans have not been lacking. But there has been a terrible and complete lack of suggestions liable to really help the farmer.

Of course, we have heard these people, like others, during election campaigns, bewailing the farmer's lot, stating energetically that farming was the basis, the foundation of the whole economy and of the social and economic structure of this country. However, in 1964 more than ever, we find that agriculture is slowing down, that the farmer is getting less recognition than ever, that the farming class is the most scoffed at and the least considered, the most ill-treated by the government at present.

Mr. Chairman, the farmer deserves more than what he is getting at the present time.

The other day, I referred to some facts concerning colonization and agriculture. In those days, with the assistance of the federal government, we implemented plans like those of Rogers, in Ottawa, and Auger, in Quebec, to promote the back-to-the-farm movement in the northern part of the province; we told people living in the cities of Montreal, Rimouski, Three Rivers, Quebec and elsewhere: Come and settle on farms, join the back-to-the-farm movement; it is the only way to fight effectively against the unemployment crisis in Canada. At that time, especially during the years 1934 and 1935, we promoted colonization in the province of Quebec and in some other provinces. Today, we visit those same settlements where 200 or 250 families had settled in 1934 and we find hardly 50, 60 or 75 families. Why? Because the farmer can no longer earn his living on the farm. In fact, he has to leave it, wander in the bush and work in mines or in factories, in order to earn enough money to allow him to carry on the operation of his farm, where he can no longer earn a livelihood for himself, his wife and children.

Mr. Chairman, is this Bill No. C-100 likely to help that farmer? Is it also likely to help to house or to settle farmers on those farms which have been vacant for ten years? No.

A bill is introduced which in its simplicity tells us all the good will of the Minister of Agriculture to help the farmer by allowing him to borrow larger amounts than he used to do in the past, to help him in borrowing for his son or a member of his family who wants to settle on a farm.

But such is neither the problem, nor the solution.

Even if we would help with $10,000, $15,000 or $25,000 a farmer to settle his son or settle himself, if he had no assurance that he will be able to sell his production, in five, ten or 15 years from now, we will still be faced with a more acute problem, more serious than the one facing us now.

As I said, there are possibilities to help the farmer, but not with half measures, nor by introducing in the house a bill like Bill No. C-100, because in itself this means that it is absolutely necessary to increase the indebtness of the farmer.

I had the opportunity to visit farmers in western Canada. I went to Saskatchewan, Alberta, British Columbia and also to Manitoba. I saw there farmers who though owning thousands of acres of land, nevertheless have been deeply in debt for the past 10 or 15 years, since the massive crop failures, or since some crops did not sell, or ever since the crops have been sold to China, or communist Russia.

The problem of the western farmers is far from being solved. The same is true for the problem of the eastern farmers which was never considered until 1964.

I very much doubt that the Minister of Agriculture is quite aware of what is happening in eastern Canada. I am rather inclined to believe that the minister who is actively responsible for ARDA knows more about the needs of the eastern farmers in this country than the present Minister of Agriculture. That is, to a certain extent, why my good friend, the minister responsible for ARDA was, earlier today, sitting beside the official Minister of Agriculture, to brief him on what is happening in eastern Canada, and more particularly in the province of Quebec.

The bill in which we are asked to award generous, or more important, loans to farmers, has our approval, except for one or two clauses where we cannot accept the interest rates suggested by the Minister of Agriculture.

It is not only in respect of the Department of Agriculture that we object to interest rates which will double any debt in 20 years and treble it in 25 years. We are opposed to all those interest rates suggested by any department or minister who would introduce such bills.

We are in favour of the spirit or the principle of this bill which is aimed at helping the farmer, but we are firmly opposed to the hidden spirit of the bill, which is to take unfair advantage of the farmer. We are going to stand up against it. In fact, we are going to move—I think the hon. member for Compton-Frontenac (Mr. Latulippe) is going to do it —an amendment to do away with the rate of interest which will oblige a farmer to repay 20 years from now twice the amount borrowed in 1964.

This is all I have to say on the bill at this stage. When the agricultural question is more thoroughly discussed, I will come back to it, and I hope that the Minister of Agriculture will listen carefully to our suggestions. In certain circles, there is still a tendency to ridicule our suggestions and proposals, but the time will come soon when the minister, as well as the government, will have to face the financial problem which prevents agriculture to progress as it should, as the system which prevents all departments, the Canadian legislation and all Canadian economy from developing as it should be possible in our country.

Let us save agriculture first and then we will save the whole country.

[Text]

Mr. Nasserden: I shall be very brief, Mr. Chairman. One thing just occurred to me after I sat down, and it is with regard to the $235 million which farmers receive at present from sources other than government sponsored lending services. I believe the minister sought to leave the impression that this legislation would take up most of that slack, if you want to call it that. That was a misleading impression to me because most of the people who have borrowed this money have gone to other sources as a last resort. In many cases they first approached the banks, the farm improvement loans authority, the Farm Credit Corporation, credit unions and so on, and when they exhausted these they went to other sources to get the money, sometimes at higher interest rates.

If I draw the right conclusion I take it the government will have legislation to introduce to increase the amounts available under the Farm Improvement Loans Act. Such legislation, in my opinion, should have come before us prior to this bill. On reading clause 16 in particular I cannot help but wonder whether the government is contemplating an increase in the interest rates on farm improvement loans. Could he let us know whether this is so or not?

Mr. Hays: Mr. Chairman, when I indicated that farmers used $235 million worth of credit over and above government sponsored loans, I should have made it clear that we hope, with the three pieces of legislation we are going to bring before parliament, they will take care of most of it. We know this particular piece of legislation will not take up all of the $235 million, but our best studies indicate it will take up a substantial portion. I am sorry we cannot discuss the legislation that is yet to be introduced. We have to deal with what is before the committee this evening, but within the next ten days I hope some amendments will be placed on the order paper concerning the farm improvements loans legislation.

Mr. Pigeon: Can the minister assure the committee that the interest rate will be maintained at 5 per cent, thus continuing the same policy we had?

Mr. Hays: The amendments make no change in the previous loans. So far as the original $20,000 is concerned, the interest rate will remain at 5 per cent, and so far as the supervised loans to $27,500 are concerned, it also remains at 5 per cent. But we indicate that on the additional $20,000 it will be lent at an economic rate, which will require an extra .87 of 1 per cent, which is the cost now so far as the 5 per cent loan is concerned. We do not expect this will be much larger, and it will be plus an amount for bad debts.

If this bill were to pass tonight and become law immediately, a farmer taking advantage of it to borrow $55,000 would borrow $27,500 at 5 per cent, on which he would pay $1,817.75 per year, and his payment on the additional $27,500 would be $2,131.25. Further, if he got it amortized over a 30 year period the total amount he would pay would be something less than $4,000 per year. If you put that down on a $40,000 basis it comes out at about $3,000, or some such amount.

Today the government is paying 5⅜ per cent for money for crown corporations, and added to this would be .87 of 1 per cent, which is the cost of operating the Farm Credit Corporation, and which I might say is less this year because, as the total amount becomes more, the cost of operations goes down.

I have a chart in which the hon. member might be interested. Starting back in 1955 it cost 1.390 to operate the old farm loan board. Then in 1960 it amounted to .87 of 1 per cent. In 1962 it went to .945 per cent and in 1963 it is .968 per cent. This year we were able to reduce it to .87 of 1 per cent. Therefore this would be added to the $27,500, plus a reasonable amount, which would not be over one quarter of 1 per cent, probably closer to one eighth of 1 per cent to take care of losses on those amounts of the loans which exceed $20,000 and $27,500.

There will be no change in this particular amount, but we thought, when it came to the point where a farmer would use more than this, then he should be expected to pay an economic rate and not a subsidized rate.

Mr. Pigeon: I address my question to the minister because he knows very well that the income of farmers in eastern Canada is very low. I appeal to the minister and the government not to change the policy with respect to the 5 per cent loans. We spend lots of money on defence, and I urge the minister to adhere to the policy of 5 per cent interest rates on loans to farmers.

Mr. Hays: We feel quite strongly about this and we believe the farmer should be looked after, but when he gets a loan over $27,500, a supervised loan, we feel it should be made at an economic rate. When I speak of an economic rate I mean the amount which the government has to pay for money it borrows, plus the cost of operating the Farm Credit Corporation and a reasonable amount for bad debts, possibly not more than one quarter of 1 per cent, and probably not less than one eighth of 1 per cent. This would give us an opportunity to take more risks so far as loans to farmers are concerned.

Again I go back to the study which the Quebec department of agriculture made. With all respect to my hon. friend who has just spoken, I am a little familiar with farming in eastern Canada. At one time I owned six farms in eastern Canada and I had to make a living farming.

Mr. Pigeon: How often have you visited the province of Quebec since you became minister?

Mr. Hays: In all humbleness, I have been to many of the farms in Quebec, and discussed agricultural problems with the deputy minister of agriculture from Quebec. The Quebec study indicates that their whole salvation is dependant on larger economic units. They feel quite keenly about this. They feel that a farmer, if he is a milk producing farmer, must have at least a minimum 100,000 pounds contract a year, with a 100 acre farm, to make a go of it.

If he is going to produce beef cattle, if he is involved in a cow and calf proposition, then he has to have a minimum of 50 cows and at least 300 acres. I might remind hon. members that from 1941 to 1956 we lost an average of 1½ per cent of our farmers per year to the urban centres, and in the period from 1956 to 1961 we lost 3½ per cent of our farmers because of their moving to urban centres. This process is just not going to stop. The number of farmers moving off the land is going to increase. I do not think there is any doubt about that. So far as the interest is concerned, we feel that this is the proper approach and we would hope that hon. members would feel the same as we do.

Mr. Pigeon: One last question. Suppose under the bill you fix the interest rate at 5 per cent with no restriction. What amount of money will the government lose if the interest rate is fixed at 5 per cent generally?

Mr. Hays: In the operation of the corporation last year the amount was something over $1 million, which represented the difference between what the corporation had to pay for money and what it received on loans, plus the cost of operation. I do not have the exact amount but it was very close to $1,100,000. Above the $20,000 and $27,500 the increased rate would apply to the extent that the borrowings were above those figures.

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Chairman, I address this question because I remember that the late C. D. Howe said in the house a few years ago, "What's a million", in regard to the army and navy. However, so far as the farmers are concerned the income of farmers in eastern Canada is so low that I think it is the duty of the minister and the government to make sacrifices for the farmers. The average income of eastern farmers is about $1,200 a year. That is why I address this question. We spend $1½ billion for defence, and I am surprised at the minister's interest in the farmers when the income of eastern farmers is so low. I prefer to fight for Canadians rather than to spend money for nothing sometimes.

Mr. Douglas: I do not want to detain the committee but I want to make an appeal to the minister that, when we come to the sections dealing with the matter of putting a limit on the amount of money which can be borrowed at the flat rate of 5 per cent, he give some thought to removing this provision which he has introduced so that the full amount that is borrowed will carry a flat rate of 5 per cent. As the draft now stands, after $20,000 under part II and $27,500 under part III the borrower will have to pay the economic rate.

I have taken the figures the minister gave of 5⅜ per cent plus .87 per cent and this works out to 6.245 per cent or virtually 6¼ per cent. This is a pretty stiff interest rate for a farmer to pay. I see no real reason why this cut-off figure should be introduced at all. I see no reason why farmers should be able to borrow at 5 per cent up to a certain amount and then have to pay virtually 6¼ per cent for the balance of their borrowing.

In the case of some big farms where a number of young farmers go together to farm co-operatively, they will require the maximum amount they are entitled to borrow if it is a large co-operative farm, but on $27,500 they will pay 5 per cent and on the balance of the loan they will pay 6¼ per cent. It seems to me that no good reason has been given by the minister for making this differentiation, and before we come to the section I hope the minister will give some consideration to providing that the entire loan will be at the flat rate of 5 per cent. I can see no economic reason whatsoever for making this distinction between the first part of the loan and the second part of it.

The minister has referred several times to the drift of farmers from the farms to the cities and cited the figure of 1½ per cent over a period of years and 3½ per cent from 1956 to 1961. This is certainly a serious transfer of population from rural to urban areas and it is definitely not going to stop. All I want to say to the minister is that in passing this legislation I hope he is not under any illusion that the increase in the ceiling of loans is going to stop this drift. The drift will not stop until the government is prepared to tackle the major problems that concern farmers, the matter of farm income and farm costs.

From 1951 to 1963 farm income in relation to farm costs declined steadily. The index commodity figure for almost everything the farmer buys has been going up, and proportionately the index commodity figure for the things the farmer has to sell has gone progressively down. While everybody will welcome the idea of increasing the ceiling on loans, and the minister is to be commended for introducing this provision, I hope the house is not under any illusion that increasing the size of the loans which farmers may obtain from the Farm Credit Corporation will in any way stop the drift of population or will in any way solve the basic problems which face Canadian agriculture today.

Mr. Cardiff: Before we proceed to change the act would the minister answer this question? How much money has been lost since the act came into being in 1959?

Mr. Hays: I think the figure is something like $6,000 a year. Inasmuch as the number of loans has been rising rapidly, it is a negligible amount. The hon. member is talking about bad debts, not about operating costs?

Mr. Cardiff: The money that has been completely lost.

Mr. Hays: It is very small—about $7,000 per year.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): Before we proceed with the details of the bill I should like to comment on what the minister said with regard to the $235 million. He suggested the bill would help to alleviate outside borrowing of this $235 million. Surely he must realize that the greater part of the $235 million is short term credit. He himself has said, as found in Hansard, that the act is in no way designed to meet the short term credit requirements of farmers.

I am also concerned about his remarks a few minutes ago with regard to the $27,500 limit. He suggested that an interest rate of 5 per cent was a subsidized rate. He suggested, too, that anybody borrowing more money than $27,500 did not need the subsidized rate. Do I gather correctly from his remarks that anybody borrowing more than $27,500 was borrowing for an operation large enough that he did not need the subsidized rate and could well afford to pay what he termed the economic rate? If this is so, then I can only assume that the large amounts of money provided by these amendments are, in the opinion of the minister, a direct help for the large farmer. This is what I have suspected all along.

Certainly, the minister suggests that 5 per cent interest on $27,500 is a subsidized rate and that anybody borrowing more than that can well afford to pay the going rate. If I interpret him correctly, the going rate will be 5¾ per cent plus .87 per cent, plus ¼ per cent for bad debt writeoff. This would make the total interest close to 6½ per cent. If one takes the difference between 5 per cent on $40,000 or $50,000 and 6½ per cent on the same amount of money over a 30-year period, he will find that it amounts to close to $15,000 more the farmer is going to have to earn from saleable products to pay the interest. I should like to see a provision for the 5 per cent interest rate written into the bill.

The minister said that he gathered from my remarks that I was against raising the ceiling on loans to $40,000 and $55,000 under part III. I am not against it. However, I have a suspicion that in doing this we will narrow the field of the Farm Credit Corporation. I appreciate the fact that there are many young farmers who, in buying a well established farm, will need more than $20,000 or $27,500. I suspect that these amendments will narrow rather than broaden the field of activities of the corporation. I gather from the minister's remarks that anybody borrowing less than $27,000 does not have an economic unit and therefore deserves the subsidized rate, whereas anyone borrowing more than $27,500 has an economic unit and can borrow at what he calls the economic rate. I suggest this is not a good rule of thumb to apply. There may well be many a young farmer who wishes to buy his father's farm or his neighbour's farm, and who may well need to borrow $40,000. However, such a farmer will need a stabilized rate of interest at 5 per cent.

I should like to think that the minister wholeheartedly believes that agriculture needs a stabilized rate of 5 per cent. I suggest this in all seriousness. Let us suppose that a young farmer under 45 years of age wishes to buy a farm. He is prepared to buy a farm that is a going concern, which will cost about $40,000. If these amendments are passed the farmer can borrow $40,000 from the Farm Credit Corporation. However, he could also borrow $27,000 at 5 per cent from the Farm Credit Corporation and borrow the other $13,000 to buy equipment from the bank through the Farm Improvement Loans Act, after the government has increased the amount available under that act. He can borrow this money at 5 per cent, too. He therefore saves himself money by breaking the deal into two parts and borrowing the total amount at 5 per cent interest rather than paying the 6½ per cent on that additional $13,000.

If the minister follows my quick calculations, I am sure he will realize that in introducing this bill providing for two rates of interest he does not simplify farm borrowing; he complicates it. He does not do away with the red tape which the farmers hate so much; he adds to the red tape and the difficulties connected with acquiring a loan. I am very much afraid that he aids more large farmers than he does small ones.

There is another point I hope the government has considered, and that is the effect the availability of these large amounts of money will have on the cost of land. We farmers realize that the price of land has risen tremendously in the last few years. The high cost of land is, perhaps, beneficial to those elderly farmers who are about to sell their property. However the high cost of land is a burden which the practising farmer must bear, and it brings him no real benefit. Certainly there is some fear in my mind as to the effect this $40,000 and $55,000 provision will have on the price of land. This fear was substantiated when the farmers union was in Ottawa about a month ago and suggested that the ceiling on loans from the Farm Credit Corporation remain as it is. They thought if there were an increase it would cause a tremendous increase in the price of land. I throw out this suggestion to the minister and I hope he and his officials will consider it, because the cost of land has risen tremendously in the last six or seven years. It is a burden around the necks of the farmers now operating land and certainly we, as legislators, do not want to add to this burden in any way.

While I believe that the amendments may be needed, I do not think the interest rates should fluctuate on the higher amounts. If the minister is determined to increase the ceiling on loans to $40,000 and $55,000, and I am not opposed to that although I do not believe the increase needs to be that high, then the interest rate should be spelled out in the bill. It should remain at the flat 5 per cent which is the rate charged for a farm improvement loan. If an increase is brought about, that will not necessarily reduce the loss the Farm Credit Corporation has suffered this year and the year previous.

I can remember that when I first came to Ottawa the old farm loan board was making money and, in fact, paid income tax I thought this was an error. While we have not seen much evidence of it yet, this government was supposed to be against high interest rates and was going to make every effort to reduce operating costs. Perhaps in the foreseeable future the government will be borrowing money at less than 5 per cent and will thus reduce the loss suffered by the Farm Credit Corporation. I can see that with the amount of money the Farm Credit Corporation is lending and the amount that is being repaid them every year, they will be able to lend money at 5 per cent in the near future and still break even. This is all we want to see them do. I hope that before we continue a clause by clause study of this bill the minister will make a decision with regard to the 5 per cent interest rate which will be applicable to these larger loans. I should like to see the government set the rate of interest by statute on all moneys borrowed from the Farm Credit Corporation.

Mr. Douglas: Before the minister answers, I wonder if he would clear up this point with regard to the interest rate which is to apply on that portion of the amount in excess of $27,500? Perhaps I misunderstood the minister. I thought the .87 per cent included losses. Do I understand that in addition to the .87 per cent there is still an amount to cover losses, and if so, how much is it?

Mr. Hays: We say that the proportion for losses will not be more than one quarter of 1 per cent. It may be as low as one eighth. Throughout the years the Farm Credit Corporation has borrowed money as low as 4½ per cent, and still indicated 5 per cent. This is natural. It may be that at some time in future years we shall be borrowing again at 4½ per cent and, of course, the farmers would receive the benefit of the lesser rate.

Mr. Douglas: Does this mean that if the government has to pay 5⅜ per cent it will add .87 per cent plus either one quarter or one eighth of 1 per cent for losses, so that this money will cost the borrower either 6⅜ per cent or 6½ per cent on these larger sums?

Mr. Hays: That is right. It is the same as the National Housing Act provisions. I think that a farmer who needs $27,500 over 20 years is in much the same position as a truck driver or the owner of a supermarket who is buying his house through the N.H.A. He also pays 6¾ per cent, and up to 7½ per cent.

Mr. Douglas: Is he in the same position as a man who borrows money under the Small Loans Act which parliament has on the statute books?

Mr. Hays: I should point out that our statistics indicate that farmers pay between 10 and 15 per cent on the $235 million which, as I mentioned earlier, are borrowed outside the Farm Credit Corporation.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): On short term loans.

Mr. Hays: As far as farmers are concerned, we have been able to borrow as low as 4½ per cent. The amounts we are speaking of are subject to repayment over 20 years and the rate would be 5⅜ per cent, as I indicated earlier.

When we were putting together the amendments to this act we were thinking about eastern farmers in particular, farmers in Quebec and adjacent areas. Take a unit in Quebec of 300 acres of land; we know that in most of these areas grass will support between 50 and 75 cows on a unit of this size. If farmers are engaged with a cow and calf proposition, add something like one and a half tons of hay throughout the winter. If they are trying to sell the calf as part of an operation where it is given to the feeder, gross earnings from this land would be about $7,500 a year. If a farmer were to borrow $40,000, his payment on the first $20,000 would be $1,322 a year and his payment on the other $20,000 would be $1,551, so his gross payment plus taxes would be $2,873. If he were a fairly good operator and he had a good average crop he should net somewhere between $4,000 and $4,500. This process would certainly lift him out of the economic position in which he finds himself today, a position which it is almost impossible to sustain. It is very similar to the project in the Abitibi area on which ARDA was doing a lot of work this year. In this instance the farmer had a minimum of 50 cows. We felt this would be a step in the right direction, together with other bills and amendments such as farm improvement loans, the machinery bill, and so on. This will not mean a cure overnight but it seems to me it is the proper approach.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): A millionaire's approach.

Mr. Hays: Well, the hon. member can speak for himself. I know he does not need this sort of loan—he owns half of the Hanna district; I realize that. My feeling is for the farmer and I think we can do something for him on this basis.

In answer to the hon. member's question in connection with interest rates, we think it is reasonable to think that the man who can afford this $25,000 will receive a good deal less criticism if he can stand up and face the world and say: I am paying what I am supposed to pay and I can make a living doing this.

Mr. Douglas: I was thinking that we do not make this kind of distinction in connection with the Small Businesses Loans Act. As I recollect it, loans are made there up to $50,000 and I am almost certain—I read the act some months ago—that there is no distinction between the rate of interest for any part of the loans. The loans are guaranteed by the government at a fixed rate of interest and it is not required that up to $27,500 one interest rate will be charged and that over this amount another rate will apply. It seems to me that when we are making loans to farmers the same interest rates should apply throughout. Why do we make this distinction with reference to farmers borrowing these larger sums? The ceiling for the farmer in part II of this bill is lower, as I recall it, than the ceiling in the Small Businesses Loans Act.

Mr. Hays: I am busy trying to run the Department of Agriculture. They have not promoted me that far yet.

Mr. Douglas: To close the matter as far as I am concerned, let me say that the minister may be busy running the Department of Agriculture—that, of course, is his job—but the government surely has the responsibility to preserve some degree of equity in treating the different economic groups in Canada. It seems to me that in the new provisions which the minister is introducing he is inserting a principle which is different from that which applies to other economic groups and I hope when we get to the various clauses he will reconsider his stand on this matter.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): The minister indicated that the increase was intended particularly to aid farmers in Quebec and to help them establish economic units. Can he tell the committee how many loans were made, or what percentage of the loans was made, to farmers in the province of Quebec at the present limit of $20,000?

Mr. Hays: In the year 1962-63 the average loan in Quebec was the highest in any province of Canada, with the exception of British Columbia. There is a great need, and these people appreciate how to use credit. I think this is the very thing they need to help them out of many of their difficulties. The government of Quebec has recognized this with regard to these loans of $20,000 by paying 2½ per cent of the interest rate. I think this is something other provinces should consider in their programs to help farmers.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): In what province were the highest losses? Did they correlate with the highest loans? Can any comparison be made?

Mr. Hays: When we are considering a total sum of approximately $350 million and losses amount to only $6,000 I would say they are negligible in every province. I suppose I could get those figures.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): Do I gather from the Minister's remarks that he thinks farmers borrowing more than $27,500 can well afford to pay these high interest rates? This is the impression I had. Is it a correct impression?

Mr. Hays: Yes. I think it is a big step forward, when we know he was paying between 10 per cent and 18 per cent for this money.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): You do not know anything of the kind. You suggested that $235 million was borrowed outside the Farm Credit Corporation; but these were short term borrowings, not long term. I gather from the minister's remarks that he believes anybody borrowing $27,500 is a big farmer and can well afford to pay a higher rate of interest. This is my interpretation of the minister's remarks, and I would like to know if this is correct.

Mr. Hays: As I suggested, we are not changing what has taken place before. The farmer can borrow $27,500 at 5 per cent; the act will not change. What we are doing is broadening it to help the farmer who is operating a good, economic unit. There is provision in the act whereby under certain circumstances you cannot even borrow money. I do not suppose the hon. member could obtain a loan; he is in such good shape that he would not be permitted to borrow money under this act. But this provision is for farmers who need help. I am saying, Mr. Chairman, that we are not changing this provision, but any additional amount shall be borrowed at an economic rate. I think this is justifiable and we stand behind it. I think the farmers will accept it and will think it is a great deal better than they had before.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): Mr. Chairman, the minister has perhaps led the house to believe that I am not in need of a loan. I would like to correct that false impression; I certainly am in need of a loan. I live in the dry part of Alberta where the grass is short and the water is scarce, and if the minister can do anything to help us in that area, I would greatly appreciate it. If he could give me a loan under the Farm Credit Corporation, my banker and I would both greatly appreciate it, but being a member of parliament I am excluded from obtaining a loan. However, I would like to think that many of those borrowing more than $27,500 would be small farmers, young farmers who need that much money and cannot afford to pay a high rate of interest on a high borrowing. This runs into a terrific amount of money. As I suggested, the difference between a $40,000 and $55,000 borrowing is $15,000 over 30 years, which comes to something like $500 more interest each year than a young farmer who is buying an economic unit would have to pay in interest alone to Harry Hays & Company, if I may use that term. I say that this high rate of interest on high borrowing is a millionaire's approach, and only a millionaire would think this would benefit the small farmer in any way, shape or form.

[Translation]

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Chairman, I shall not be very long, but I want to say a few words on Bill No. C-100 to support the suggestion made by the hon. member for Mackenzie (Mr. Korchinski)—which, to my mind, seems most logical—to set up, if need be, an appeal board concerning loans of the Farm Credit Corporation.

A while ago, the minister said that he knew the Quebec region fairly well and he even informed us that, at one time, he had owned five farms in that region. That assertion puzzles me a little. I wonder whether he owned those farms to operate them or to trade them. There are so many of those people, especially in my riding. Indeed, I could name large land buyers who have never seen the colour of the land and evidently never farmed it, and who own up to 40 lots in my region. The fact that they own them is precisely detrimental to those lots, since they bought them for a few hundred dollars from their owners, and they claim three times what they paid. If that is how—I do not mean, far from it, that he proceeded in that way—but if that is how the minister, at one time, owned farms in the province of Quebec, I don't agree with him at all, because we have too many of those people who own farms and who are not farmers.

What we want—and let us hope this will be made easier by the amendments brought in to Bill No. C-100, is to establish average units, but not everywhere, obviously, because all Quebec farmers would not benefit from them. In fact, most of our farmers own family farms, and we cannot rely on those larger units the Quebec minister is now trying to lure us with, those units of at least 500 acres.

If you want our Quebec farmers to stop thinking of the land and of the family farm as it stands now, if you keep on trying to impose upon them a minimum of 500 acres for each farm, all you have to do is to introduce here the Russian plan and your success is guaranteed.

As for us, we are in favour of the family farm system and so are our farmers. For two years, I have been actively looking after farm loans in my riding, and I must say that we succeeded last year, by our efforts, in having 15 per cent of the applications accepted by the Farm Credit Corporation. I want the minister to note these figures and to consider that if only 15 per cent of the applications were accepted by the Farm Credit Corporation in the Lake St. John area, there is certainly something wrong.

I heard the minister say that over 40 per cent of the loans were accepted. This is certainly not the case in the province of Quebec.

In my riding, hardly 15 per cent of applications have been accepted and still, the amounts have not all been paid, because only 10 per cent of loans approximately have actually been made.

After looking into the matter and having talked to farmers in an attempt to find the trouble, I reached the conclusion that credit advisers were to blame. I feel that the trouble lies with credit advisers. The minister said earlier that he was familiar with certain areas of the province of Quebec. I am convinced, however, that he does not know it through and through. The minister is not aware of the partisanship existing in the province of Quebec. This is not to our credit, but I must say this, because I found last year that half the applications for loans were being turned down because of political partisanship.

Mr. Pigeon: That is wrong.

Mr. Gauthier: Fifty per cent of the applications for loans were not accepted because of party politics.

Mr. Pigeon: That is wrong.

Mr. Gauthier: Fifty per cent, and I can prove it. That is why, in my last speech the other day, I asked the minister to launch an inquiry. I know he can conduct a serious inquiry in my constituency, and I assure you, Mr. Chairman, that he would be shocked if he could see how some applications were refused, as I did last spring. He would then have proof. I think of the farmer who owned three lots of good tillable land, more than 200 acres of which was farm land, 32 heads of cattle, some dairy cattle, and was refused an aggregate loan of $13,000. There are several cases like that in my riding. Why? Probably because the farmers in question are not of the right party.

Mr. Pigeon: That is untrue.

An hon. Member: It is so.

Mr. Gauthier: I have proof of it. Unlike the people out west, we live as if we belonged to the same family. Our parishes are controlled by four or five families but if four of them do not belong to the party in power, they will never get a loan. Such a situation is simply amazing but it must be pointed out. I have been fighting against such partisanship ever since I entered this house. Do not seek the cause elsewhere because, as far as agriculture is concerned in our province, the cause is that if you do not belong to the party in power, you have only one choice: to starve to death.

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Chairman, I rise on a question of privilege—

Mr. Gauthier: It is even worse, because the province of Quebec—

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Chairman, I rise on a question of privilege in the interest of all members of the house.

The hon. member for Roberval has just made serious charges against the government and the Farm Credit Corporation. I say, even if I am a member of the opposition, that the statements made by the hon. member are an insult to all hon. members of the house. They are false, because the officials of the Farm Credit Corporation are honest. They are conscientious and they work in the interest of all citizens without any political considerations.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Chairman, I did not assert anything, I just assumed. I only wanted to know which one had been most guilty and I found out.

Mr. Pigeon: You are wrong. Withdraw.

Mr. Gauthier: I have nothing to withdraw. If the hat fits you, wear it. I found out certain things in my riding. I looked for two years to find out what was wrong, and, today, I say to the minister that the wrong exists at the level of the farm credit counsellors, because, as counsellors, they must give guidance.

[Text]

Mr. Hays: Mr. Chairman, I rise on a point of order. I should like to give the committee some details concerning the hon. member's riding. Out of 1,500 projects he said that barely 100 were accepted. The corporation reports that for the four constituencies in the Lake

St. John district there were a total of 369 persons who contacted the local credit adviser for loans during the fiscal year. The dominion bureau of statistics figures for the census of 1961 indicate that there were 1,244 farmers in the municipality of Lake St. John West who had gross sales of over $1,200. During the fiscal year ended March 31, 1964 the corporation approved 121 loans for an amount of $1,293,900 in this country, or about one loan for every ten farmers with a gross income of over $1,200 or more.

The hon. member related loans in his constituency to the number of loans being made in the province of Saskatchewan. The d.b.s. figures show that in 1961 there were 82,285 farmers in Saskatchewan with gross sales in excess of $1,200. During the last fiscal year, the corporation approved 2,332 loans in Saskatchewan, or about one loan for every 40 farmers. From this it will be seen that the rate of lending by the corporation in the hon. member's constituency is about four times as high as that in the province of Saskatchewan, in spite of the fact that there is a provincial lending agency in Quebec very active in the field of farm mortgage credit. I can assure the hon. gentleman also that opinions of agricultural people, provincial agronomists and farmers in general indicate that the staff of the corporation working in the Lake St. John region are performing their duties in a competent and efficient manner.

[Translation]

Mr. Pigeon: Withdraw.

Mr. Gauthier: I am very glad that the minister gives us those figures.

Mr. Pigeon: You should be ashamed.

Mr. Gauthier: I worked all summer and fall.

Mr. Dupuis: Doing nothing.

Mr. Gauthier: Making inquiries. The minister told us that last summer, only 408 applications had been submitted in Quebec compared to over 2,000 in the English speaking provinces and, today, he tells us that there have been 200 or 300 applications. I do not know who is making a mistake, but I spent two days in the office of the loan counsellor in Roberval. There were about 800 applications, but today the minister says 200. The figures supplied by the loan counsellor in Roberval do not agree at all with those given by the minister. Why did you not say so. We filed 300 applications and 200 have been accepted. When I visited the counsellor about loans, I gave him these figures and I told him: What are you doing, you are not working? He answered: Look at that, more than 800 applications.

Mr. Pigeon: A question of privilege, Mr. Chairman.

The Deputy Chairman: Order. I think the debate has taken a turn away from the question which is before us. I should point out to hon. members that the question before the committee is the bill to amend the Farm Credit Act, not a discussion on the general application of the act. I hope the hon. member for Roberval will make his remarks apply as closely as possible to the first clause of the bill before the committee.

[Translation]

Mr. Gauthier: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. The minister has involved me in this. He quoted figures concerning my constituency that I do not accept.

I spoke about loans to farmers and I asked who was preventing these loans from being granted. Advisers, high officials are the ones who approve these loans and I simply appeal to the minister to make it clear to the advisers that they are being appointed exactly to guide, to assist the farmers in requesting and securing the loans they need to get out of the hole and not to recommend to them or to tell them: In your case, it would be better to sell your farm and to settle in town.

Their role is precisely to encourage farmers to stay on the farm. That is why we say that credit advisers must organize their work so as to put an end to farm abandonment. In fact, that makes ten families which have been chased away from their farm when they should have been provided with the necessary means to stay on the farm.

It is rightly said that the purpose of the amendments under consideration is to help our farmers. Well, then, let us help them properly. At present, they are given loans, about the same way a real estate agent would do it, and they are told: "You wish to get out of the hole? Then borrow now and borrow again tomorrow."

Moreover, it is said that agriculture is the basis of the economy. If we really want to help the farmer, since agriculture is the basis of the economy, let us help them by the granting of a monetary contribution.

Mr. Chairman, I have heard the minister state a while ago that he borrows money at 4 or 4½ per cent. I ask him whether he ever helped farmers, whose production is the basis of our economy, through our monetary system, namely the Bank of Canada? There is the means. Let him stop borrowing money. The situation is such that in order to help the farmer, the government makes him borrow money and it borrows money itself so that it may lend the farmer more money.

Does the minister work for the finance companies or for the farmers?

We want him to work more for the benefit of the farmers and, to do so, he should make better use of the Bank of Canada. If only he would grant loans at the administrative costs he would then really help them. In fact, it is the only way to help them; he would thus grant them loans on the very basis of our economy.

But if he wishes to continue to use our silly financial system, he should at least lend at a rate of interest of 5 per cent, but he should exempt farmers from taxes. The government gives industry such an exemption. He should exempt farmers from taxes during a five or ten year period, to give them an opportunity to recover and then he would really come to the farmers rescue. As for the suggestion of the hon. member for Mackenzie who would like to establish an appeal board, I suggest that in the Lake St. John area, in Chicoutimi and Roberval, which he seems to know fairly well, the minister should appoint the county council, an organization entirely free from political affiliations, because members of the appeal board should not have anything to do with politics. The farmer who will apply for a loan must also obtain justice from this non-partisan group, not to mention that the county council is a regional organization which knows farmers well and will do them justice.

I feel that this suggestion of the hon. member is the best one made tonight. The appointment of such a group would finally help farmers whose applications for loans have been turned down for the reasons I mentioned earlier.

I would say to the minister: "Why not take the trouble to send into our area someone who would examine the situation on the spot. Stop relying on such and such an official. Go and examine the situation yourself and you will put your finger on what is wrong now." I could tell him that today, instead of helping the farmer, we are making things more difficult for him.

Mr. Caouette: On a point of order, Mr. Chairman.

[Mr. Gauthier.]

Mr. Pigeon: I rise on a point of order also, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Chairman, while the hon. member for Roberval (Mr. Gauthier) was making his speech, I heard unbecoming remarks being made by some government members, namely, the hon. member for Longueuil (Mr. Côté), the hon. member for Hull (Mr. Caron) and the hon. member for Vaudreuil-Soulanges (Mr. Émard), who apparently wanted—

Mr. Côté (Longueuil): Mr. Chairman, I rise on a point of order.

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Chairman, when I am through with my point of order, the hon. member for Longueuil can rise, but until then, let him remain seated—

Mr. Côté (Longueuil): Mr. Chairman, I rise on a question of privilege.

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Chairman, when I am through with my observations, the hon. member for Longueuil can speak.

[Text]

Mr. Côté (Longueuil): On a point of privilege—

The Deputy Chairman: The hon. member for Villeneuve is already on a point of privilege and the Chair would like to hear him first.

[Translation]

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Chairman, I cannot pass over the behaviour of those three members who tried to ridicule the hon. member for Roberval. Neither can I do anything but protest against the attitude of those three members who never saw a carrot grow in their own county and who know absolutely nothing about agriculture, but who tried to ridicule the hon. member for Roberval. Those people should be a little more responsible than they are now.

Mr. Côte (Longueuil): Mr. Chairman, on a question of privilege. If I did utter some improper words, as the hon. member for Villeneuve (Mr. Caouette) just stated, I would like him to repeat them and I shall be ready to withdraw anything I might have said which the hon. member would deem offensive.

As far as the speech that has been delivered is concerned, I think I have the right to qualify it as I wish.

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Chairman, for five minutes the hon. member has been laughing and trying to ridicule the member who just resumed his seat. These expressions are not recorded in Hansard and for that I am thankful, because the terms used by him and by his colleague, the member for Hull (Mr. Caron) who is sitting in the back, seemed quite improper under the circumstances.

Mr. Caron: What terms have been used?

[Text]

Mr. Rock: On a point of privilege—

The Deputy Chairman: Order.

Mr. Rock: The hon. member for—

Some hon. Members: Sit down.

The Deputy Chairman: The hon. member for Hull.

[Translation]

Mr. Caron: Mr. Chairman, since I have been involved, I should like the hon. member for Villeneuve (Mr. Caouette) to give a single example of an improper remark I have made. He may be full of improper words but he does not know what "improper words" are.

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Chairman, on that same question of privilege, this is the first time in three years that I have seen the hon. member for Hull rise to speak, and yet he could do no better than make the incoherent remarks we have just heard.

[Text]

The Deputy Chairman: Order. The debate has got to the stage where there are charges and countercharges, and I think we have heard sufficient on the point of privilege.

Mr. Rock: I would like to mention the fact that there has been an error made by the hon. member for Villeneuve. He had also named the hon. member for Vaudreuil-Soulanges and he is not even in the chamber.

[Translation]

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Chairman, the hon. member is not in the house at this time, but he was here a while ago, I think.

Mr. Rock: No, apologize, he is not here, he is not present.

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Chairman, only one word to express all my admiration for the authorities of the federal Farm Credit Corporation. They are honest, conscientious officials, and I regret the remarks made by the hon. member for Roberval.

The authorities of the Canadian Farm Credit Corporation swore to dedicate themselves to the interest of all Canadian farmers, regardless of political or other considerations and, as I say, I regret the speech made by the hon. member for Roberval.

I hope the Canadian people will forgive the irresponsible remarks just made by the hon. member for Roberval and I am hopeful that after the next general election that corner of the house will have completely disappeared and it will be a blessing for the Canadian people.

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Chairman, I again rise on a point of order. The hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm is surely not dealing with the bill before us. He is another one who, apart from the tobacco question, does not know anything about agriculture in the province of Quebec. He is the first one to blame the government when it introduces any legislation, but he did not have the courage to protest against his own government when it was legislating on Canadian agriculture.

[Text]

The Deputy Chairman: Order. I must ask the committee to exercise its good judgment.

Mr. Pigeon: On a question of privilege—

The Deputy Chairman: Order, please. I must ask the committee to exercise its good judgment and come back to the bill before the committee.

[Translation]

Mr. Pigeon: I rise on a question of privilege. I hope the house will pass this bill, even if I do not agree with some of the opinions expressed concerning some of its details.

I hope the house will pass this bill as soon as possible, because I have full confidence in the officials of the federal Farm Credit Corporation, and as an agronomist and a farmer's son, I question what the hon. member for Villeneuve (Mr. Caouette) said.

[Text]

The Deputy Chairman: Order. I cannot accept the remarks the hon. member is making now as a point of privilege.

Mr. Hays: Mr. Chairman, I wonder if we could continue with this point by point discussion of the bill. May I remind hon. members that this is the fifteenth day since February that we have discussed agriculture, including the supplementary estimates, the main estimates, two days on the supply motion, and now four days on this bill. As I pointed out earlier, we still have the amendment to the crop insurance bill, the machinery bill, farm improvement loans and also another supply motion, at which time I am sure hon. members will be able to discuss agriculture in all its ramifications. I must point out again that the Farm Credit Corporation is running out of money and I am sure the farmers would appreciate it very much if we could get the bill through. Some of them may even need money to finish putting in their crops.

Mr. Churchill: On a point of order, Mr. Chairman, I think a statement like this from the minister, which is inaccurate, should be corrected immediately. When he is recounting the time spent on the subject of agriculture he might restrict himself solely to this bill, and also be accurate in his statements in that regard. I have the record here. We passed the resolution stage of this bill without debate in order to speed up things. We began debate on second reading of the bill on the 2nd of June at eight o'clock and continued for two hours. On the 9th of June we returned to the debate on second reading at 4.30 p.m. and debated the bill for two and a half hours that day. As hon. members will recall it was at my request that the bill was then given second reading. We spent another one and a half hours yesterday on the committee stage and we have been on the committee stage today. Surely this is not too long a time to spend on a bill of this importance. We made a concession with regard to the resolution stage and completed the second reading stage in order to speed things up. The minister's friends on that side have been participating to a very great extent in the debate on this bill, and I wondered yesterday whether they were attempting to delay its passage.

The Chairman: Shall clause 1 carry?

Mr. Horner (Jasper-Edson): Mr. Chairman, before clause 1 carries I should like to address a few remarks to the minister with regard to the additional legal costs that are going to be involved. As he knows, I had some questions on the order paper with regard to solicitors and their fees under the Farm Credit Corporation. I am particularly concerned about the use of solicitors that are available in rural areas.

The minister and I both know that the local patronage is handled by groups in the cities and has nothing at all to do with the people in the rural areas. Surely a qualified lawyer in a particular area, regardless of his politics, should be able to act on behalf of the Farm Credit Corporation. We spent a great deal of time trying to decentralize this thing. The minister also knows that farmers 200 miles from Edmonton do not like having to drive into the city. They are not accustomed to it and feel out of place in the city.

I hope the minister will have another look at the question of the government paying solicitors' fees on behalf of the farmers. The farmers have to pay them in the end, and I know what happens in my area and other areas as well. There are only five accredited lawyers in my whole constituency. It so happens that all of them are Liberals. It so happens that we appointed them farm credit solicitors. When the government changed, the new government changed all the solicitors and cut off these lawyers regardless of whether or not they were doing a good job. It was pure and simple patronage.

The minister has said on many occasions that he does not want any part of political patronage, and I agree with him. As a fellow Albertan he is on the right track. But let him talk to the political organizers, particularly in the cities of Edmonton and Calgary, who control the legal patronage lists. Let us talk in practical terms. Let him not supply answers like he did to me, saying the Barrhead is 25 miles from Edson and the farmers can go over there. I am sure he appreciates where the rivers run in Alberta. I am sure he also appreciates where the roads are. If he is going to continue to make these farmers drive 125 miles to see a lawyer in Edmonton who is no more competent than the lawyers we have in Edson and Barrhead, it is absolute nonsense and a farce.

The minister is increasing the limits under the act and this is fine and dandy. I agree with it; but in increasing the limits he is going to increase the fees paid to the lawyers. He and I also know that these contracts are drawn up by clerks in the offices of the lawyers. They are simply a standard form, nothing specialized, and all the lawyer has to do is check them over and O.K. them. Let us not have this kind of political patronage nonsense. In my own home town we have three qualified lawyers. Are they not qualified to handle the business of the Farm Credit Corporation? What nonsense. Instead of using them the minister makes the farmers drive an extra 50 miles. These three lawyers are all Liberals, so appoint them. They will not hurt you. They will never get elected anyway.

An hon. Member: How did you get in?

Mr. Horner (Jasper-Edson): Come and run against me. The minister has said he is not going to belong to the gang to which the hon. member for Kootenay East belongs, the old political gang that played this patronage game before. We expect an Albertan to be above that. We expect the minister to live up to what he has said he is going to do. We expect him to have another look at this matter and to appoint lawyers who are competent in the areas that are involved. Let us not have any more silly answers that the farmers can drive 25 miles. They cannot drive 25 miles because there is a river in the way.

Mr. Hays: Mr. Chairman, I would be very pleased to take the hon. member's suggestion into consideration. All we are interested in is cutting down the time. Certainly we are not interested in political patronage, so far as farm credit is concerned. I might remind hon. members across the floor that they were elected on June 10, 1957, took office on June 21 and 35 days later every lawyer formerly employed from coast to coast was without any further work.

Some hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. Pigeon: Prove that.

Mr. Horner (Jasper-Edson): If the minister will allow me to say so, under the old farm loan board only one group of lawyers in Edmonton was allowed to do the work. It was all centralized in the city of Edmonton and, whether you lived in Edson or in Medicine Hat, you had to drive to Edmonton to get a farm loan. One group of lawyers did the work and they were Liberals. We fought to get this decentralized, because one of the things that was wrong with the old farm loan board was that you had to go to Edmonton to get a loan. The minister knows, and so does the chairman of the corporation, that we got it broken down. If you want a nonsensical situation, we have a farm credit officer in this town with three lawyers, but since the Liberals came into office apparently not one of these lawyers is considered capable of handling these mortgages. The minister denies there is patronage, but if this is not patronage I have never seen it.

Mr. Pigeon: A scandal.

Mr. Hays: Mr. Chairman, I can assure the hon. member that there has been no change in the system.

Mr. Horner (Jasper-Edson): No change in the system? Come now. For heaven's sake, can the minister stand there and talk like that?

The Chairman: Order. The hon. member for Prince Edward-Lennox.

Mr. Alkenbrack: Mr. Chairman, I find I must raise a question of privilege with regard to the remarks of the minister concerning the alleged changes made by our administration in 1962 after we were elected in June. I beg to point out to the committee that the lawyer in Napanee handling the Farm Credit Corporation work in our area was appointed by the Liberals prior to 1957, and is still acting.

Mr. Horner (Jasper-Edson): Mr. Chairman, the minister has made the statement that there has been no change. That is absolute nonsense. I can give him the name of the town. There were three lawyers there in 1963 when the minister took office and one of those lawyers was doing the farm credit work. I wrote to the corporation and said I did not care who was appointed. The chap who was appointed was a good Liberal and he was a member of the executive of the Liberal association. He was also a competent lawyer so we made him a solicitor for the Farm Credit Corporation.

Along about April 10, the minister took over and this fellow lost his commission to survey mortgages for the Farm Credit Corporation. Instead of a farmer having to drive 10 or 20 miles to see a lawyer to get this work done he now has to drive 150 miles. For the minister to say there has been no change is absolute nonsense. In the town of Edson there are two lawyers and we had appointed one of them to do the farm credit work. He was also a fair Liberal but he was appointed because we did not think it was right that these farmers should have to drive 150 miles to Edmonton to arrange for a mortgage. At the time the government changed, these people were cut off completely. You say that there has been no change, and that is an absolute prevarication.

Mr. Hays: I think I should correct this statement. My officials tell me, and they run the corporation, that there has been no change in the system. I tell them to run it on merit. There has been a reduction in the number of lawyers and also a reduction in the time that it takes to service a loan. This is the very operation we feel we should do. We are working for the farmer and nobody else.

Mr. Horner (Jasper-Edson): I rise on a question of privilege. The minister is now coming up with a statement that his officials have said there has been no change. This is absolutely incorrect because his answer in this regard is on Hansard. His officials have already told him he is incorrect in making that statement. They changed the solicitor. They wiped out the solicitor in the town of Barrhead. There were three lawyers there. This does not make any sense.

Mr. Hays: Let us correct this again. I said we did not change the system.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Hays: That is what I said. There is a reduction in the number of lawyers and a reduction in the amount of time it takes to service a loan.

Mr. Pigeon: I ask the minister if he submitted the list of lawyers to the board, yes or no?

An hon. Member: The list has been in Hansard for some time.

Mr. Horner (Jasper-Edson): The Minister of Justice submits the list to the Minister of Agriculture and it is O.K.'d by the legal department of the Liberal party. This is how lawyers get appointments. Let us not fool ourselves. We know how they get appointed.

The Chairman: I wonder if the members of the committee do not feel they have discussed this particular point long enough? I realize it may be of interest and importance, but perhaps we could move along a little bit and go to another point. Then, if hon. members want to come back to this a little later on, we will do that.

Mr. Pigeon: We are against patronage, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Ricard: I just want to clear up this question of patronage. I should like to ask the minister the reason Mr. Oliva Blanchet of La Présentation, Quebec was replaced by Mr. J. E. Lafleur from St. Denis as a member of the advisory board.

Mr. Pigeon: That is patronage.

Mr. Hays: This question has been answered, and it is in Hansard.

[Translation]

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Chairman, I rise on a point of order. I do not want to ask a question—

[Text]

Mr. Ricard: Where is this answer in Hansard—

[Mr. Horner (Jasper-Edson).]

[Translation]

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Chairman, on a point of order.

The Chairman: I recognize the hon. member for Villeneuve on a point of order.

Mr. Caouette: Apparently the Conservatives do not want this bill to be discussed any further tonight or to be passed. It is probably to follow up what the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm (Mr. Pigeon) told me about ten minutes ago, that the Conservatives want to wait until the hon. member for Qu'Appelle (Mr. Hamilton) is back, before this bill is passed. That is why they discuss—

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Chairman, I rise on a question of privilege—

The Chairman: Would the hon. member please resume his seat?

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Chairman, I rise on a question of privilege.

The Chairman: One moment. The hon. member for Villeneuve has the floor now on a point of order, and when he has finished, we can hear the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm.

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Chairman, you were no doubt in the chair a while ago when the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm came to my desk to tell me that the bill could not be passed tonight because the hon. member for Qu'Appelle was still away and that we had to wait for his return before passing the bill.

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Chairman, I rise on a question of privilege.

The Chairman: The hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm has the floor to explain a personal matter.

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Chairman, I must say that the hon. member for Villeneuve's remarks are not in keeping with the facts. His statement is entirely inaccurate; in fact, the former minister of agriculture, the hon. member for Qu'Appelle, is in the house at present and is carefully listening to the discussion.

The hon. member for Villeneuve, knowing that his whole political venture is crumbling under him and that he himself will be eliminated in the next election, takes the liberty of jeering indiscriminately.

[Text]

Mr. Fisher: Speaking to the point of order, I may say that I do not really believe it was a point of order. However, Mr. Chairman, I believe it would be nice if the whole house were to welcome back these people who have returned to enliven and enrich our agricultural debate.

Mr. Pugh: Mr. Chairman, with regard to the appointment of lawyers, and more or less speaking horticulturally, I would say that the minister does not know his aspidistras from his hollyhocks in a greenhouse. I can sincerely say that many of the residents in my constituency formerly served by lawyers now have to travel up to 50 miles to get service. This is in the whole of the Okanagan Boundary. It is ridiculous for the minister to say that there has been no change made. This area was well served by lawyers of all political faiths after 1958, and particularly after the formation of the Farm Credit Corporation. I say "all political faiths" because I know this to be a fact. There has been a change and a concentration, just as the hon. member for Jasper-Edson has said. If the minister has not heard of this, then I suggest he look into it. I suggest that he made changes which were political. I do not know whether or not there is any patronage and I would not like to go so far as to say that. Previously, this organization was serving the people who were supposed to be served, namely the farmers.

The Chairman: It being ten o'clock, shall I rise and report progress?

Mr. Hays: Mr. Chairman, would it not be possible for us to consider sitting a little longer to pass part of this bill?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

The Chairman: There is not a unanimous consent to this suggestion.

Progress reported.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Churchill: May I ask the acting house leader if we continue with this bill tomorrow, followed by interim supply?

Mr. MacNaught: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

(Subject matter of questions debated under adjournment motion).

Proceedings on Adjournment Motion

A motion to adjourn the house under provisional standing order 39A deemed to have been moved:

SOCIAL ASSISTANCE—SASKATCHEWAN—PROPOSED REQUIREMENT THAT RECIPIENTS WORK FOR AID GIVEN

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, on Monday, June 8, as recorded at page 4033 of Hansard, I put this question to the government:

> Is the federal government aware of the declaration made by a minister of the Saskatchewan government that it intends to require recipients of social aid to work for relief? Have any proposals been made to the federal government regarding this matter, and what is the attitude of the federal government toward such a proposal?

It was felt by Mr. Speaker that the question was not one to be dealt with on orders of the day so I asked that it be transferred to be taken up in one of these overtime periods. I hope we may now get an answer from one of the ministers or from one of the parliamentary secretaries.

It seems to some of us that this announcement from Saskatchewan is a very serious one, and that every effort should be made to prevent such a retrograde step being taken. It is our hope that the federal government will have no part in any such proposal. All of us believe in work rather than relief, but we do not believe in work for relief. This was well put on Monday of last week in an editorial in the Toronto daily Star, a sentence or two of which I should like to read. Speaking of this Saskatchewan proposal the Star said:

> If it meant that a concerted effort should be made to find normal jobs for the unemployed and thus take them off the relief rolls, every reasonable person would be for it. What the advocates of this policy really want in most cases, however, is to make everyone on relief who can walk put in a few hours every day at some kind of physical labour, however pointless.

Later in the same editorial I note the following sentence or two:

> A program of forced labour for people on relief can only serve as a means of punishment and humiliation for those involved, while disorganizing the province's regular public works system. It also has possibilities of course, for getting certain jobs done on the cheap, and undercutting the wages of civic and provincial workers.

I believe this editorial and others which I have seen in various newspapers make it very clear that any step of this nature would be thoroughly retrograde in character. It reminds us of policies which were practised by a number of governments in the 'thirties. We have got over those policies; let us not go back to them. A policy of this kind is against everything that people who are practised in the field of social welfare stand for; they have already made it clear that they hope such a policy will not be pursued. I should like to remind the house, also, of the statement made the other day by the Canadian Labour Congress in which, among other things, it was pointed out that this practice would be contrary to the universal declaration of human rights which declares that everyone has a right to work, to just and favourable conditions of work and to protection against unemployment, but also that everyone has a right to free choice of employment.

So, because we feel this is a backward step which should not be entertained, and because it would seem to us that if any change in the Unemployment Assistance Act is to be made, the federal government is involved, we hope the federal government through its spokesman tonight will make it clear that it will have no part in a retrograde policy of this kind.

Mr. J. C. Munro (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Health and Welfare): I am not too sure that this is the proper place in which to conduct a campaign against the government of Saskatchewan which, in effect, is what the hon. member is doing. As far as I am aware, all that has happened is that some statements have been reported in the press, some of which have not been very complete. Certainly, the federal government has received no firm statement or declaration from the government of Saskatchewan even one asking for consideration of a change in the type of the present program. So I think the point made by the hon. member is academic at the moment.

I do not know what the hon. minister—Mr. Boldt, I believe it was—said. Perhaps the hon. member knows no more than we do, except that from various press reports he read or heard over television or radio. I do not know if he has a word for word statement of what the minister said; the government has not, to my knowledge.

Mr. Knowles: The minister said he wrote to the federal government.

Mr. Munro: Well, we have not received anything; we have received no communication setting out any type of proposal which he would even like us to consider. The last discussion there was on these lines was of a most general nature. It took place at the last welfare conference with federal and provincial ministers a week and a half or two weeks ago.

Mr. Knowles: What was the position of the government at that time?

Mr. Munro: It was just a general discussion at that time on the Unemployment Assistance Act and what changes may be necessary, without really any detailed reference to this question of work for relief. Various provinces were asked to submit their views on it. They indicated they had certain views, and in a spirit of federal-provincial co-operation, I suppose, their points of view on this question have to be considered. At the time of the conference no specific proposals were advanced. I think the stand any federal government would have to take, in view of the fact that this is a shared field, would be that their proposals would have to be considered, once we have any proposals. We have not even received a proposal from the province of Saskatchewan; therefore I do not think there is any justification for the hon. member's alarm, certainly at this point.

Mr. Douglas: What position did the federal government take when this matter was discussed at the conference?

Mr. Munro: It really was not discussed. It was indicated by certain provinces, I believe and I could not even tell you which ones now; perhaps it was one at that time, and it was not Saskatchewan—that they had some views on this subject. That aspect of the matter having been opened up, the provinces were asked to submit their proposals and have them ready for the next meeting. Since one province had views on this question it was felt it should be discussed. And that is about where the matter stands.

HOUSING—DATE OF PAYMENT OF WINTER CONSTRUCTION BONUS

Mr. R. W. Prittie (Burnaby-Richmond): Mr. Mr. Speaker, on June 8 I asked this question of the Minister of Labour:

> Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Labour. Is the minister aware that many persons living in houses completed before March 31 have not received the $500 bonus yet, and can he inform the house when these bonuses will be paid?

Mr. Speaker then said:

> This is a question for the order paper.

This somewhat disappointed me, because I do not ask questions very frequently and I try to observe the rules. I felt it was a question of concern to everybody in all the provinces. However, Mr. Speaker, I repeat the question at this time so that the Minister of Labour can make a statement on just what is the status of the payment of these bonuses. I have received information from the west coast that quite a number of people have been waiting for this bonus, and I should like to hear what the position is at the present time.

Mr. J. A. Byrne (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, since the Hansard record did not suggest or indicate that the hon. member was going to raise this matter this evening, the notice I received at 5.30 did not leave much time in which to gather statistical information.

Mr. Douglas: The question was asked on June 8.

Mr. Byrne: However, Mr. Speaker, I have been informed that the cheques have been going out within three to five weeks after receipt of the application upon which determination can be made as to whether these people qualify. In the case of any bona fide applications submitted regarding houses completed before March 31, where the cheques have not yet been received, this should certainly be brought to the attention of the Department of Labour. I am sure they would be happy to investigate such cases immediately. March 31 is some time ago, and if there are home owners or contractors who have not received their cheques, I wish the hon. member would bring the specific details to the attention of the Department of Labour.

AIRPORTS—MALTON—LIMOUSINE AND TAXI SERVICE BY UNLICENSED COMPANY

Mr. Ralph Cowan (York-Humber): Mr. Speaker, this afternoon during the question period I asked the Minister of Transport whether he could advise this house why the Department of Transport in 1961 granted an exclusive privilege to Air Terminal Transport Limited to operate a limousine and taxi service at Malton airport when the company does not hold a taxi licence from either metropolitan Toronto or the township of Toronto in Peel county.

This question has been prompted by a situation which has arisen in Toronto where the Toronto taxicab conference is demanding that they be given fair treatment in this Canada of ours, and that a monopoly that was granted by the previous government should be broken. I was amused a moment or two ago to hear the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm yell across the aisle his opposition to monopolies, and I heard two speakers on farm credit from Alberta claiming that they were also opposed to monopolies. Yet here we have a monopolistic agreement between the minister of transport for 1960 and 1961 and Air Terminal Transport Limited of 30 Howard Park avenue, Toronto which gives them, if I may quote from the front page of the indenture, which I was not able to secure from the previous government when I sat in opposition but which I got with ease from the present President of the Privy Council, (Mr. McIlraith) in his earlier capacity of minister of transport, in December last year—> —the exclusive right and privilege (hereinafter referred to as the said right and privilege) to maintain and operate a limousine and taxicab station at the Malton international airport, at Malton in the province of Ontario, for the operation of a limousine and taxi service.

In this agreement between the then minister of transport and Air Terminal Transport Limited, which runs for ten years from 1960 to 1970, the word "taxi" is used ten times. The word "taxi" appears ten times in seven pages. This organization does not hold a taxi licence, either from the township of Toronto, in which Malton airport is situated, or from the municipality of metropolitan Toronto from which 98 per cent of their business originates.

There are 1,100 taxicab operators in the city of Toronto, all of whom are experienced and all of whom are seeking to give the taxicab service which this indenture is supposed to cover. I ask the Minister of Transport whether he will not look into this situation, which appears to be nothing but a dog in the manger attitude based on an exclusive franchise granted by the previous government.

This company do not supply a taxi service, yet they are given a contract which says that they alone shall supply a taxi service. I state that the 1,100 taxicab operators in Toronto who take fares out to Malton airport but are forbidden by the terms of this contract, it would appear, to pick up fares at Malton and bring them back into Toronto should be allowed to give the taxicab service people expect.

Why in the name of heaven should a monopoly be granted to a firm in Toronto to give taxicab or limousine service from the Malton airport? We do not do that here at the parliament buildings. If an hon. member wants a livery or taxicab at the front door of the buildings, this is government property and one of the officers at the door will call a number and summon one from downtown Ottawa. Or you can give him the number and he will call it. But at Malton airport and I am told the same situation prevails at Dorval and at Uplands, there is an exclusive agreement with one monopoly outfit to provide the service. Under the terms of the contract, whereby they pay 3¾ per cent of their gross revenue to the Department of Transport during the present five year period, I calculate that their gross take is $1,800,000 a year, and they do not have any competition, with the protection of the Department of Transport as per the agreement signed by the former minister of transport in 1961.

This, Mr. Speaker, is a nefarious attitude to take. I have gone to the trouble of looking up the taxicab bylaw of the township of Toronto, in which township the Air Terminal Transport Company have their offices. Under the old taxicab bylaw dated March 8, 1948 it is distinctly pointed out that, > —no person shall keep any motor vehicles whatever to be used for hire in the conveyance of persons from place to place within the township of Toronto or from any point within the said township to any point beyond the limits of the said township unless duly licensed therefor under the provisions of this bylaw.

The township of Toronto is a semi-rural district between Toronto and Hamilton. On December 31, 1956, a new bylaw was brought into effect covering taxicabs, and one clause which was added is very interesting.

> "cab" means any vehicle used for hire for the conveyance of passengers either wholly within the municipality or to any point not more than three miles beyond its limits and includes a taxicab, ambulance, funeral hearse and sightseeing coach—

And note this:

> —but does not include a limousine unless the limousine is equipped with a taxi meter;

Yet if you walk into the parliamentary library, there you have Webster's International dictionary, which is the first book you see in the library, and you will find it says a taxicab is a chauffeur driven automobile "with or without a taxi meter." The general acceptance is a cab for hire with or without a taxi meter, but in the township of Toronto some fine hand, with a fine pallette, has painted a pretty picture, and has produced this clause which does not include a limousine unless it is equipped with a taxi meter. Therefore this agreement that it shall provide a taxi service does not apply to a company which operates only limousines.

[Mr. Cowan.]

There are 16 hon. members from the Toronto area in this house, and since I was contacted this morning by the Toronto taxicab drivers conference I have spoken to six of them, and all of them advised me they are opposed to a monopoly operation in the city of Toronto at Malton airport.

There has been absolutely no tender on this $1,800,000 a year contract. Mr. Speaker, I have here a letter from the Department of Transport which contains the following paragraph:

> When the agreement with Air Terminal Transport Limited was up for renewal in 1960, a tender call was considered but it was not possible to proceed on this basis because of the position taken by the provincial department of transport in respect to franchises.

I telephoned the Ontario provincial department of transport this morning and asked if there would be any trouble in securing a franchise to operate motor vehicles from Malton airport to Toronto if the federal government should issue a franchise, and I was advised there would be no trouble at all.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I have to interrupt the hon. member to tell him his time has expired.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I have not had very much opportunity since the hon. member asked his question this afternoon to do any lengthy research into the matter. It is quite correct, as the hon. gentleman has said, that this particular company does have a contract which was renegotiated some years ago, I think in 1960. It is also true—at least I assume it is true because I read it in the Ottawa Journal this evening, that—> —eight taxi drivers seeking a test case they hope will permit them to pick up fares at Toronto international airport got what they wanted Wednesday—two summonses and eight $5 parking tickets.

I assume, therefore, this case is going to come into the courts and it would be perhaps unwise for me, under the circumstances, to attempt to say anything at this stage which might in any way prejudge a case that is going to be heard in the courts. But I listened with a great deal of interest to what the hon. member has said, and I will naturally continue my research into the subject and see whether there is in fact a situation which should be remedied and, if so, what the appropriate remedy should be.

Of course hon. members will realize that people travel by air presumably to get to their destinations quickly, and that there would be a great deal of dissatisfaction on the part of the travelling public if they arrived at an airport on a day which was stormy, when perhaps it would be more profitable for taxis to carry passengers in the metropolitan areas instead of going out to the airports to wait for passengers. In this case there might be nobody there to carry them. It is important to have some means of assuring the public that there will be a means of getting to and from airports at all times, but whether the present system is the best one I am not prepared to say.

Motion agreed to and the house adjourned at 10.22 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Friday, June 12, 1964

The house met at 11 a.m.

PRIVILEGE

MR. GAUTHIER—REMARKS IN DEBATE BY MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE

[Translation]

Mr. C. A. Gauthier (Roberval): I rise on a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker, because I have reason to believe that the Minister of Agriculture misled the house, perhaps unwillingly, in replying to some comments I made last night while speaking on the farm credit bill.

As reported at page 4218 in yesterday's Hansard, I had stated:

> For two years I have been actively looking after farm loans in my riding, and I must say that we succeeded last year, by our efforts, in having 15 per cent of the applications—

I repeat, the applications.

> —accepted by the Farm Credit Corporation.

And a little further on I said:

> This is not to our credit, but I must say this, because I found last year that half the applications for loans were being turned down because of political partisanship.

Those are the words I uttered and the reply of the Minister of Agriculture may be found at the bottom of the same page:

> Mr. Chairman, I rise on a point of order, I should like to give the committee some details concerning the hon. member's riding. Out of 1,500 projects he said that barely 100 were accepted. The corporation reports that for the four constituencies in the lake St. John district there were a total of 369 persons who contacted the local credit adviser for loans during the fiscal year. The dominion bureau of statistics figures for the census of 1961...

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: Order. Having had the advantage of listening to the hon. member for a few minutes, it appears to me that this is not basically a question of privilege but that it concerns, rather, a misinterpretation of words. The hon. member will have the opportunity this afternoon, I understand, to clear up any misunderstanding, and I suggest that for the moment he desist.

[Translation]

Mr. Gauthier: My question of privilege, Mr. Speaker, is intended to correct figures at the same time—

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. This is basically a matter for the committee. I am sure the hon. member will have the opportunity this afternoon to raise this point and clear up any misunderstanding.

[Translation]

Mr. Gauthier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I will reserve it for the committee, to give accurate details.

MR. LACHANCE—ARTICLE IN "TIME" MAGAZINE

[Translation]

Mr. Georges Lachance (Lafontaine): Mr. Speaker, I should like to make a brief statement on a question of privilege with regard to a survey of members of parliament which Time magazine conducted by telephone on the flag issue. It is reported on page 12 of the June 12, 1964 issue that I refused to make my views known on the matter.

Since many people seem to misinterpret this statement allow me to correct my reply to the person who called on me, that is "I did not wish to discuss the matter over the phone", since I was unable to identify the party calling—

Some hon. Members: Order. You are out of order.

Mr. Lachance: I must add that if this person could have seen the flag referred to in the resolution introduced by the government displayed in my office, there would have been no doubt in his mind as to my intention to pass it.

PRIVILEGES AND IMMUNITIES (UNITED NATIONS) ACT

AMENDMENTS CHANGING TITLE, EXTENDING APPLICATION, ETC.

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs) moved the first reading of Bill No. S-24 (from the Senate), to amend the Privileges and Immunities (United Nations) Act.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

CANADIAN FLAG

DISPLAY ON PARLIAMENT HILL—MOTION FOR ADJOURNMENT UNDER STANDING ORDER 26

Mr. A. D. Hales (Wellington South): I ask leave under standing order No. 26 to move the adjournment of the house for the purpose of discussing a matter of urgent national importance, namely the right of the Prime Minister, without any legal authority, to display an unauthorized flag on the property of the crown, stating that this is being done at the request of certain members of parliament.

I submit that this matter is of great importance, and the urgency of debate is substantiated by the fact that the right hon. gentleman intends to take this unprecedented action, within a few hours of which he informed the house yesterday. As a matter of fact the flagpole has already been erected on the grounds in front of this building—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Hales: This request, Mr. Speaker, is something entirely apart from an anticipated order of business next week. The purpose is not to debate the flag issue but the principle involved in this action, namely the right of the Prime Minister of Canada to circumvent and ignore order in council No. 5888 assented to on September 5, 1945.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps I might have the privilege of hearing from a few members as to this proposed motion before rendering a decision.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the question is one of alleged urgency in view of the fact that the design of a flag which is referred to in an order before the house is about to be flown in a few hours, and we are informed by the hon. member who has moved the motion that this circumvents the order in council of 1945 establishing for certain purposes the flag known as the red ensign as the Canadian flag.

I should think, Mr. Speaker, that the same argument could be applied to the introduction of a resolution in the House of Commons, because that resolution does describe verbally a flag that it is proposed should be the Canadian national flag. At the time that resolution was introduced a pictorial representation in colour of the flag was circulated to all members of the House of Commons without objection and, indeed, with approval, because it was felt they could then better make up their own minds in respect of the decision which parliament was going to be asked to make.

Last week certain members asked that this flag should be flown because the best way to come to an opinion as to the merits of a flag is to see it flying and not merely see it in a colour reproduction. The government, not the Prime Minister, has decided that it would be a courteous and useful thing to do to let hon. members see the flag design which is described in the resolution, and which is the only design which will be before the House of Commons unless and until there is an amendment moved altering the design or substituting a design.

An hon. Member: Backtracking again.

Mr. Pearson: If and when an amendment is moved, and it will not be moved on this side—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Pearson: —if and when an amendment is moved on the other side, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. It so happens that I agree with the position the Prime Minister is taking on this matter, but is he not debating the motion rather than the question as to whether or not it should be debated? Should he not stick to the question whether there is urgency of debate?

Mr. Pearson: The question as it was put to the house is one of urgency because of the announcement of the decision of the government to fly the flag, which would be considered by the hon. member who moved the motion as an improper act. In arguing the matter of impropriety I am relating that, of course, to urgency. I was just about to point out, and this is all I have to say, that if there was an amendment moved by the other side altering the design, that amendment would have the same official status as the design now in the resolution and would become part of the proceedings of the house. In those circumstances I suggest that such a design, if and when moved and if and when it became part of the proceedings of the house, should be given exactly the the same right of display as the design now set out in the motion.

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister diverted from the motion before the house and indicated to us that once again he is going to shift his position. He is asking for an amendment from his supporters on this side of the house, and suggesting that that amendment will be adopted. The degree of uncertainty as to the design that is favoured by the Prime Minister continues.

What is before the house now is a proposal by my hon. friend that we should debate today whether the Prime Minister should take the action that he said yesterday he would take. I quote from Hansard, page 4183:

> Mr. Pearson: Following a request made by certain hon. members, it is intended to fly the flag referred to in the resolution tomorrow evening—

Which is Friday.

> —I think from 5 p.m. until flag lowering time.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister has just recently said that the government has decided—not himself but the government, and we conclude from this that the cabinet has met and that they have perhaps passed an order in council to authorize this otherwise unauthorized showing of a piece of Liberal propaganda, which is all it is—

Some hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. Churchill: This is an attempt to influence the public of Canada by flying on government property, here on the grounds of parliament, a flag which is the personal choice of the Prime Minister and not the choice of the people of Canada.

It is a rare thing, Mr. Speaker, for a motion to adjourn the house to discuss a matter of urgent public importance to be allowed, because so frequently it is possible to suggest there will be other opportunities to debate the matter, that the matter has not been raised early enough, and arguments of that nature. Beauchesne, in his fourth edition at page 90, citation 100, paragraph 3 says:

> "Urgency" within this rule does not apply to the matter itself, but it means "urgency of debate", when the ordinary opportunities provided by the rules of the house do not permit the subject to be brought on early enough and public interest demands that discussion take place immediately.

This motion comes within that citation because the opportunity for debating the proposed action will lapse just within a few hours. The Prime Minister told us yesterday that his personal choice will be flown from the flagpole at five o'clock today. It is now about 11.30, and if the house is to pass judgment on this unusual action it must immediately have a chance to debate the purpose of the Prime Minister's action.

Beauchesne refers to the fact that public interest must demand that discussion take place immediately. If this opportunity were postponed it would be too late. Consequently we are suggesting that under the rule of urgency of debate, this motion is in order. I think, sir, that on a reference to Erskine May's sixteenth edition you will find also that this particular motion meets any of the objections which are sometimes raised when such motions are brought before the house. May points out that the matter must be definite and must deal with a single, specific matter. This motion deals with a single, specific matter, the determination of the government to fly an unauthorized flag—

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Churchill: —on the grounds of the parliament buildings.

May deals with the various objections which may be raised, and deals particularly with the question of whether another opportunity would be available for debate. I suggest to you, sir, that there is no other opportunity today for debating this particular matter. The business which was announced last night is the discussion in committee of the whole house of the bill dealing with amendments to the Farm Credit Act, and in view of the very lively interest that was taken in that bill last night there is no reason for anyone here to conclude prematurely that that bill will be passed within just a few minutes or within an hour. So if it happens that that bill is under discussion for the balance of the day, as might well happen because of its importance, there will be no other opportunity presented to the house to debate this particular matter.

It is on those grounds, and others which might be raised, that I suggest you allow this particular motion so the house may have an opportunity to express an opinion on this unprecedented action of the government in its attempt to display and gain public approval for a flag design which has not received the approval of this House of Commons or of the Senate, and certainly has not the approval of the people of Canada.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I think in considering this matter Your Honour should pay attention to something that the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre said, I believe twice, during the course of his remarks, namely that this debate is necessary in his view in order that the house may render a judgment or make a decision as to whether the proposed flag should be allowed to fly on a special staff on parliament hill this afternoon.

Mr. Churchill: On a point of order, I did not use the words judgment or decision. I said pass an opinion, express an opinion, which is different.

Mr. Pickersgill: It is the same thing.

Mr. Churchill: It isn't the same thing.

Mr. Knowles: I quite accept the hon. member's correction. Whatever Hansard says is quite satisfactory to me, but the point is that the hon. member is urging we should have the debate so that an opinion can be expressed, and I expect that means he wants some kind of a decision to be taken about this matter.

I want to point out that the debate that is proposed in the motion by the hon. member for Wellington South will not settle anything. We will debate the question presumably all day. That will put the farm credit matter off until Monday and interim supply off to Tuesday or Wednesday, and we will not get to the flag issue until some day later next week, or heaven knows when.

An hon. Member: That is what they want.

Mr. Knowles: I put this forward to underline my point that I do not think there is any value to this kind of debate. If my hon. friends in the Conservative party felt the government was doing something wrong, they should have brought up a question of privilege on which a motion should have been founded, so that a vote of the house could be taken to determine whether the action of the government was invalid. Merely debating it all day will not prevent the government from flying the flag at five o'clock. All we will do is spend a day in advance on another measure which we will be debating fairly soon. I think parliament has more important business to do than that—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Knowles: —and that this motion does not qualify under the requirement that there be urgency of debate.

[Translation]

Mr. Marcel Lessard (Lake St. John): I shall be brief, Mr. Speaker. However, in view of the motion introduced by the hon. member for Wellington South (Mr. Hales) and the remarks made afterwards by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), I feel I must say a few words on behalf of our group. We see no urgency in discussing the motion today because ever since the resolution was introduced at least half an hour has been spent each day on the question of the flag.

I feel the issue was sufficiently discussed last week and we will have full opportunity to debate it next week. The point discussed today, that is the question of whether or not the flag should be raised tonight so that the people of Ottawa and the members of the house might have the chance to see it and form an opinion, does not justify the adjournment of the business of the house.

On the other hand, I should like to point out to the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) that it is unfortunate that he has chosen that hour to display the flag, because several hon. members of the house will be away then to catch a train or a plane.

Consequently, I would ask the Prime Minister to forestall the moment and display the flag on parliament hill at one o'clock, so that we may all see it together, this afternoon, and also that the flag may convince certain other hon. members that it is definitely acceptable to all Canadians.

It is unfortunate that there is some fear that this alleged Liberal propaganda is liable to contaminate people.

Personally, if the Liberal party, since it has been in power, had never used any other kind of publicity I would have become a Liberal long ago.

Mr. Raymond Langlois (Mégantic): Mr. Speaker, as far as the motion of the hon. member for Wellington South (Mr. Hales) is concerned, I go along with the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), in that this motion is likely to take up the whole day without settling anything.

The right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) was kind and courageous enough, to a certain extent, in selecting a special pole to fly a very special flag; indeed, and this in the general interest; and I think that if the former government had showed as much intestinal fortitude and determination, we would have had a flag a long time ago. Now, today—

An hon. Member: We have one, what is the matter?

[Text]

Some hon. Members: We have one.

Mr. Winkler: We have one, if you would only recognize it.

Mr. Langlois: Mr. Speaker, I think this is going to be another waste of time if we continue this discussion, which is not on the point of whether we are going to raise or lower this flag. By the time we have finished discussing it, as the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre has stated, it will probably be six o'clock and the flag will have been raised since five o'clock. I go along with the hon. member for Lake St. John in that we should possibly have it up at one o'clock so we can all see it before some of us leave.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Langlois: Those who look at the flag and are not convinced, who intend to hang on to their own ideas and not change their minds about it, should not even be in this house.

Mr. Churchill: Withdraw.

Mr. Langlois: I agree with the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre and the Prime Minister that we should have the flag up this afternoon as a trial. We will have ample opportunity on Monday to discuss this matter, and possibly the whole of next week. So I say to the Tory party, quit looking back to where you have come from and start looking at where you are going.

Mr. G. L. Chatterton (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, I wish to make a point which indicates the urgency of debate on the motion put forward by the hon. member for Wellington South. On three occasions yesterday the Prime Minister said the reason the flag is being flown today is that this has been requested by certain members. I refer to his statements as reported at pages 4183 and 4184 of Hansard. I have here a request addressed to the right hon. Prime Minister and dated June 11:

> We, the undersigned members of parliament, hereby formally request that the three maple leaf flag named in the resolution be not allowed to fly on parliament hill by action of the government, or any member thereof, until this flag resolution has been approved by parliament.

This request is signed by 39 members of parliament. In view of the statements made by the Prime Minister yesterday as to the reason for flying the flag, I consider that the urgency of debate is indicated by this request.

Mr. R. A. Webb (Hastings-Frontenac): Mr. Speaker, I would only like to suggest to you, sir, that three examples of Canada's national flag are proudly flying outside the building at this present moment, and I do not think we should waste a lot of time debating this issue.

Mr. Eric A. Winkler (Grey-Bruce): Mr. Speaker, I rise to make a few very brief points, one being in reply to the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre with regard to the debate and its purpose. The purpose of this particular debate and the order under which we are discussing this question is not to make a determination on the flag but to allow the opportunity of free discussion, which is the right of members and should be the case in this particular parliament, in order that we can perhaps bring the government around to making some change in their attitude or, should I say, in their common sense—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Winkler: Let me remind you, sir, that the right hon. Prime Minister himself, when he rose this morning, said it is an urgent matter, if I understood his words correctly; and I think we might well agree that we should proceed with this debate. Although I would very much like to elaborate beyond these few words, I think this is sufficient to give Your Honour my views.

Mr. Terry Nugent (Edmonton-Strathcona): Mr. Speaker, I wanted to say just a few words on the question of urgency of debate. My remarks really are germane because of what the Prime Minister said with regard to the flying of this flag. He himself remarked that there is a possibility that someone may wish to move an amendment. Certainly we can see that many members may have different ideas of flag designs. It is going to be up to parliament to accept some design, and this is a matter of persuasion. I do suggest to the Prime Minister and to the government that while they have a right to put forward their own design, it is taking an unfair advantage of other designs or members' ideas for the government to use the premises of parliament in this manner to help brainwash not only the members of this house but the public on their particular choice. We have seen various flag designs circulated in the house, and one day we saw members at the far end of the chamber with a design of their own; they had flags on their own desks. Therefore it is obvious that other designs may be desired by other members.

There is certainly nothing in the Prime Minister's argument that because their particular design is described on the order paper, that gives it any legality or any position other than being just one design which may be considered by this house. Just because it is on the order paper does not give it any priority or legality. I say it is unfair to every member in this house who may have a different design in mind. I suggest that once the flag is flown the damage is done, and so this matter must be discussed early today.

Mr. Harold E. Winch (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, I may have a completely wrong perspective on this matter and on the issue before us, but may I say, as I did yesterday, that I think we are becoming a little bit childish on this issue. Therefore through you, sir, I would like to ask the Minister of Public Works whether any tenders have been called for a diaper service.

Mr. Hales: Mr. Speaker, if I may be allowed to speak again before you make your ruling, I would say that you should not have any problem in deciding whether this question is of national importance or whether it is urgent. Continuing from there, Mr. Speaker, I should like to refer to the remarks of my hon. friend who referred to this house as being childish, and some other remarks that were made concerning this issue. The issue here is not the flag but, as I said in the motion, the legality of displaying this flag on government property. The point is not to debate the flag issue but the principle involved, which is the right of the Prime Minister of Canada to circumvent and ignore order in council No. 5888 assented to on September 5, 1945. This is the principle at stake.

I do not wish to get into the debate at all, Mr. Speaker, but I would refer to what the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre said. He said we would not settle anything. I think it is the duty of parliament to settle whether a prime minister or a cabinet minister or anyone else in the house has the right to circumvent a statute or order in council. The argument is not what flag is flown; there is a principle at stake here. What right has the Prime Minister to circumvent a statute or an order in council? I think all these other remarks which have been made miss the point, and I still come back to my argument that this parliament should have the right to say whether anyone has the right to circumvent or ignore one of the statutes of Canada.

Mr. Knowles: Would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Hales: Yes.

[Mr. Nugent.]

Mr. Knowles: If the hon. member wishes parliament to express its opinion or to have its say on the issue, why did he not move a motion so parliament could do just that?

Mr. Hales: I would answer my hon. friend in this way. If the government were thinking of courtesy, as the Prime Minister said—he said they did it through courtesy—it would have been courtesy to give the members of this house an opportunity to express their views on whether or not that flag should be flown.

Mr. Speaker: It seems to me that there is little doubt about the urgency of this matter because there is a deadline this afternoon, and we must decide whether the proposed flag will or will not be flown. So under the heading of urgency, the matter does seem to be urgent. It also seems to me that the matter is national in scope, particularly in view of the great interest shown by all Canadians on the subject. However, it is my duty to point out to hon. members that under standing order 26 the words are:

> Leave to make a motion for the adjournment of the house when made for the purpose of discussing a definite matter of urgent public importance—

The standing order provides that a motion be made for the adjournment of the house, which means that discussion could range all day if necessary, and at the end of the sitting time no conclusion would have been reached and no decision would have been made. But we would have had an all day discussion on the subject matter.

Mr. Howard: That would have been just a normal day, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: That may be true, but at least the Chair is not responsible for that.

It seems to me that this morning we have had a rather full discussion. Many views have been advanced, and it seems to me that many of the views are in the nature of a complaint, an objection. Instead of losing the whole day discussing this matter, which is of great emotional import, I would have hoped that the discussion this morning would have given a certain amount of satisfaction to hon. members, and I doubt whether much more can be said on the question after the brief debate which has just taken place. I ask myself whether there is now any real urgency for debate, after having had a small, miniature debate already this morning. Therefore in the circumstances I do not see that urgency, that necessity to set aside the important business already on the order paper in order to continue the small pocket debate we have already had this morning.

Mr. Thomas M. Bell (Saint John-Albert): Mr. Speaker, I accept your ruling, but with great respect may I ask you, so that we can be sure there is a precedent for the future on this very important motion, whether you are ruling this motion out because no decision can finally be taken and because a day would be lost? Do I understand that aright? If so, would you please explain to me how this motion is different from any other motion in those two respects?

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Speaker, may I, with respect, draw your attention to page 90 of Beauchesne.

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Speaker: It does seem to me that having endeavoured to render a fair, impartial and just decision the members of the house should accept that decision. Surely at this stage I do not have to continue giving further reasons ad nauseam in justification.

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Speaker, I am rising on a point of order. My point of order is with regard to the Speaker's jurisdiction in this matter, and I very respectfully put it before you.

Mr. Winch: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of privilege. I do not want to interrupt the hon. member, but is this house to be turned into a spectacular sideshow? I would ask you as Speaker to look at this matter and to say whether it is permissible to turn this House of Commons into a sideshow on a most important issue.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Speaker: I would ask the hon. member to take down the piece of cloth on his desk. It is against the rules of the house to display apples or anything of that sort.

[Translation]

Mr. Marcel Prud'homme (St. Denis): Mr. Speaker, I should like to draw your attention to the fact that I am cordially inviting the hon. member who just had the floor to come with us this afternoon when the flag will be flown. He may then be convinced.

As for the flag design I had on my desk, I displayed it in order to permit the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre to see what it looked like, and I think he can see it pretty well from where he sits.

[Text]

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Speaker, I am quite seriously drawing your attention to page 90 of Beauchesne, citation 100 (6), which reads as follows:

> The Speaker's duty with regard to a motion to adjourn the house for the purpose of discussing a definite matter of urgent public importance, under standing order 26—

That is our present standing order.

> —is confined to determining as to whether, in the first instance, a motion so proposed is in order. There his responsibility ends.

Mr. Byrne: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, I suggest the hon. member has no point of order because there is no matter before the house. If the hon. member does not wish to respect it I would ask him to appeal your ruling.

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Speaker, I will not take instructions from the hon. member. I would ask, on what ground has he the right to interrupt me? Was the floor given to him?

Mr. Bell: No, he just bobbed up.

An hon. Member: Strike the remarks from the record.

Mr. Speaker: If it is any satisfaction to the hon. member let me say I did not hear the remarks of the hon. member to my right. However, I should like to say that I have given a ruling to the best of my ability and conscience, and it is now up to the house either to accept it or to reject it.

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Speaker, if your ruling is subject to appeal I would appeal your ruling.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps the hon. member would allow me to refresh his mind. On April 23, 1964, as reported at page 2485 of Hansard, I gave a ruling in more or less similar circumstances. I said then:

> In answer to the hon. member I must recall the following to his attention, and I shall read it very slowly so that all hon. members, I hope, will agree.
>
> Hon. members will recall that on April 7, 1964, at page 1845 of Hansard, the house sustained a ruling of the Chair to the effect that there was no appeal from a decision made by the Speaker under standing order 26.
> The house having already taken a decision on this matter, it is my view that it cannot be questioned again during the current session and must stand as the judgment of the house. In this regard I wish to refer hon. members to May's sixteenth edition at page 400, Bourinot's fourth edition at page 328 and Beauchesne's fourth edition citation 200 (1). For the above reason I cannot permit this appeal.

Then there were certain interruptions, and I said:

> I would like to call to the hon. member's attention Beauchesne's fourth edition, citation 200, paragraph (1).
> An old rule of parliament reads: "That a question being once made and carried in the affirmative or negative, cannot be questioned again but must stand as the judgment of the house".
>
> It seems to me that the Chair has given a full and detailed explanation, and I must ask the hon. member to accept the decision of the Chair.

Then later on:

> The hon. member is not appealing my decision, as stated in that way; he is appealing the decision rendered by all members in this house on a matter which has been put to the vote and decided by the members in the house. That decision I am applying this afternoon, and that decision I am not going to change.

Hon. J. A. MacLean (Queens): I wish to rise on a question of privilege, merely to say that the understanding of this party was that your ruling was not appealable, and that is why we did not immediately appeal your ruling. It was because we understood—and I think Your Honour's statement just now confirms our opinion—that your ruling was not appealable. When one of the hon. members on the other side rose a few moments ago, I understood him to say that if we did not agree with Your Honour's ruling we should appeal it—

An hon. Member: He is no expert.

Mr. MacLean (Queens): Maybe that is right.

Mr. Herridge: Are you referring to the hon. member for Kootenay East?

Mr. MacLean (Queens): I wish to make it perfectly clear that the reason we do not appeal the ruling is not that we necessarily approve it, but simply because we have no recourse of appeal from it.

Mr. Byrne: On that question, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I suggest we have spent considerable time on this matter and that we should get on with the business before the house.

FLOODS

BRITISH COLUMBIA—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON SITUATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): I wonder if I may direct an extremely important question to the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources, one which I am glad has not been pushed to one side by the silliness of the motion we have just dealt with. Could I ask the minister whether he has any up to date information about what I understand to be an extremely disastrous flood situation in British Columbia.

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): I indicated some days ago that there were worrisome days ahead for British Columbia due to the extremely late run-off and the considerable increase in temperature. I will admit at once that the next several days are going to be extremely difficult for the people in the valleys.

The Mission gauge stood yesterday morning at 22.07 feet. This is a height which gives ground for anxiety. At Hope the flow is 420,000 feet per second; at Prince George the gauge stands at 32.07 feet and the water level will rise over the next several days, as is anticipated also at Hope and Mission. Nevertheless there has been no serious breaching of any dikes, although there has been loss and damage, both in the private and the public sectors, as a result of seepage through the dikes and underneath the dikes. I will say at once that this loss is, in total, not inconsiderable. On the Skeena the gauge stood this morning at 38.6 feet. The second crest is about to occur and it is likely to be of the nature of the first. Considerable flooding has taken place in that area. The Peace river, too, is experiencing a flow unprecedented in history. It is now running at 275,000 feet per second and this is causing a great deal of concern, especially with regard to the construction work which is being carried on, because I believe the diversion tunnels are designed to deal with a capacity involving 300,000 feet per second.

I can only say we are hopeful that no critical dikes will be breached, and if we can get over the next week we shall be safe for at least another 12 months.

Mr. Howard: A supplementary question. Could I ask the minister whether he or the government has received any request or communication from the government of British Columbia in relation to federal assistance in overcoming these difficulties; and if not, has the government of Canada made an offer to work with the provincial government so as to minimize the damage caused?

Mr. Laing: The answer in both cases is, at this time, no.

FINANCE

REQUEST FOR REPRINTING OF PAMPHLET "BEHIND THE GORDON REPORT"

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): I wish to address what I consider to be a somewhat helpful question to the Minister of Finance. In view of the fact that a pamplet written by one Thomas Kent entitled "Behind the Gordon Report" is becoming rare and is in great demand, would the minister arrange for the republication of this pamphlet at public expense for the illumination of members?

Hon. Walter L. Gordon (Minister of Finance): I doubt whether that would be a proper expense to charge to the treasury.

CANADIAN FLAG

PROPAGANDA USE OF DISPLAY ON PARLIAMENT HILL

On the orders of the day:

Hon. J. A. MacLean (Queens): I should like to pose a question to the Secretary of State and ask him whether, in the light of the fact that the Prime Minister said the purpose of flying the maple leaf flag design this afternoon on a flagpole on parliament hill was to enable members of parliament to see it and use it as a basis of judgment when making up their own minds, he can assure the house that the occasion will not be used by the C.B.C. or any other television network or station as the basis of subtle propaganda to leave the impression that parliament has already acquiesced in or approved of this design.

Hon. Maurice Lamontagne (Secretary of State): I am certainly not in a position to impose censorship on our media of communication.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

[Later:]

Mr. M. J. Moreau (York-Scarborough): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. Would the Prime Minister consider having a second flagpole set up for the use of the official opposition so the house may be aware of what design they favour?

Mr. Winkler: A good idea.

Mr. Raymond Langlois (Mégantic): A supplementary question to the Prime Minister. Would the Prime Minister consider the request of the hon. member for Lake St. John a few minutes ago with regard to having the flag flown at one o'clock?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that many members apparently are leaving before five o'clock—

Mr. Bell: How about the C.B.C.?

Mr. Pearson: —the government would be very glad indeed to change the hour of the flying to one to two and five o'clock to flag lowering time.

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, in view of the statement made by the Prime Minister earlier today that the government has decided to take this otherwise unauthorized action, will he table immediately the order in council reflecting the government's decision in this matter?

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, no order in council is required in a matter of this kind.

Mr. Eric A. Winkler (Grey-Bruce): Mr. Speaker, in view of the request of certain members of the house I wonder whether the Prime Minister would voice his opinion in regard to the petition before him at this moment.

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, I have just received this petition from certain members on the other side requesting that the flag be not allowed to fly on parliament hill until the resolution has been approved by parliament. The first reference to the flying of this flag for the purpose I have indicated was made by me in the house on Thursday, June 4. I have just received this petition signed by certain members of the house, but I think this does not justify changing the course that has already been announced.

[Later:]

[Translation]

Mr. Auguste Choquette (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the right hon. Prime Minister in respect of the petition he received to the effect that he should not fly his proposed flag? Will the right hon. Prime Minister be kind enough to table the said petition in the house?

ELIMINATION OF REFERENCE IN RESOLUTION TO UNION JACK

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Justice who is also the Liberal leader for the province of Quebec.

In view of the fact that the large majority of the people, especially in the province of Quebec, want to have only one distinctive flag, can the minister exert pressure upon the government so that the resolution may be amended by removing the union jack provision from the resolution, so that we may have only one flag and not two?

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: Order. To my knowledge this question has been asked once or twice before.

[Translation]

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege—

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: In any event the question is out of order in that it anticipates an order of the house.

[Translation]

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Speaker, may I discuss this question at ten o'clock, next Monday.

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: The question is out of order.

[Translation]

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Prime Minister?

So as to comply with the request of the majority of the Canadian people, would the Prime Minister reconsider his decision and delete the last part of the resolution concerning the union jack, so as to give Canada one single flag?

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: This question is out of order.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

TORONTO—REPORTED CONVICTION OF JUVENILE FOR ILLEGAL ENTRY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): I wish to address a question to the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration. Is the minister aware of the fact that George Sarris, who was tried on April 10 in Toronto for entering Canada contrary to section 50(b) of the Immigration Act, was only 14 years of age when he committed this offence and entered Canada on November 6, 1963; that he was 15 years of age when he was apprehended on March 26, 1964, and had just turned 16 when he was tried—

Mr. Speaker: What is the point of the question? We are having a long, detailed statement.

Mr. Orlikow: It seems to me that there was an infringement of the basic rights of a person in Canada who was under 16 years of age when he was arrested. I want to know whether the department knew of this action and whether the magistrate in this case was informed of the facts.

Hon. René Tremblay (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration): The hon. member gave me notice of this question, and I thank him for doing so. I am now in a position to answer part of the question. The hon. member may be mistaken in respect to this young man's age. In fact, under oath he declared on March 31, 1964, at the inquiry held under the provisions of the Immigration Act, that he was born on March 29, 1947. Therefore according to his own words, when he was arrested for criminal entry into Canada he was 17 years old less a few days. When the special inquiry was held he was aged 17 years old plus one or two days, and when he was charged before the criminal tribunal of provincial jurisdiction he was 17 plus 12 days. In Ontario a person under 16 years of age is a minor, and a person aged 16 and older is an adult.

May I add that this young man is at the present time represented by a Toronto attorney, Mr. Bruce Thomas, and my information is that Mr. Sarris will within a few days be filing a notice of appeal from the conviction and sentence. I am following the developments in this case very closely and will gladly inform the house of the results.

INQUIRY AS TO PROGRESS OF PENAL REFORM PROGRAM

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Thomas M. Bell (Saint John-Albert): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Justice. With reference to the statements that have been made by the minister concerning a new penal program before the end of the year, may I ask him what will happen to the existing and most commendable program inaugurated in 1958, with regard to which there does not seem to have been very much action recently?

Hon. Guy Favreau (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, in announcing, which was normal, that in conjunction with the officials of my department I was considering a further stage in the evolution of our penal reform system, I am pleased to say for the benefit of my hon. friend that twice recently I have noted the commendable steps taken by one of my predecessors, Hon. Davie Fulton, in introducing certain very good penal reform measures, but this surely should not prevent this government from taking further steps ahead.

IMMIGRATION

BAIE DES SABLES, QUE.—OPENING OF OFFICE

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Hon. Théogène Ricard (St. Hyacinthe-Bagot): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration.

Would he tell the house whether it is true that his department has established an office at Baie des Sables?

Hon. René Tremblay (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration): No, Mr. Speaker.

[Later:]

Mr. Ricard: Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a supplementary question to the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration.

If there is no immigration office at Baie des Sables, why is there a resident employee there?

Mr. Tremblay: There is no employee at Baie des Sables; when Mr. Côté was appointed he was living at Baie des Sables, but his residence now is in the Ottawa area.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

REQUEST FOR EARLY DEBATE ON BILL C-48

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Reid Scott (Danforth): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister not related to the growing national support for a single maple leaf. In view of the action of the Toronto city council in supplying birth control pills to certain persons in Toronto and in view of the fact that such action by the council makes its members liable to prosecution and to be jailed for up to two years, would the Prime Minister remove the widespread fears or hopes of the Toronto population of such a result by arranging for an early debate on Bill No. C-48 introduced by the hon. member for Burnaby-Richmond which would legalize such activity?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): I will be glad to examine this matter, Mr. Speaker, though some aspects of it are certainly outside my jurisdiction.

LABOUR RELATIONS

QUEBEC—REPORTED DANGER OF LONGSHOREMEN'S STRIKE

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Gilbert Rondeau (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Labour.

Can he tell us what reply he gave or intends to give to the longshoremen's union in Montreal, Quebec city and Three Rivers about the threat o fa strike which now hangs over the national harbours and what solution he has to offer to this union which has asked for his intervention in this problem?

[Text]

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I have not yet received any communication from this particular union. Just as soon as I have I will be glad to consider it and reply to the hon. member.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

REQUEST FOR ADJOURNMENT FOR ST. JEAN BAPTISTE DAY

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. L. P. Antoine Bélanger (Charlevoix): Mr. Speaker, I have a question to direct to the Prime Minister. Has he studied the possibility of granting a few days' leave to the members from the province of Quebec to enable them to join with their colleagues from the provincial legislature and their fellow citizens to celebrate our national holiday, next June 24?

[Text]

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): I should like to think, Mr. Speaker, that progress with our work would justify consideration of that matter.

TRANSPORT

ALBERTA—REPORTED SHORTAGE OF BOX CARS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. H. Horner (Acadia): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. Has the minister received correspondence from the Oyen and Acadia valley farmers and chambers of commerce pointing out the urgent need for box cars in the east central part of Alberta, and would he take action to see that this need is provided for?

Mr. Speaker: Would the hon. member put this question on the order paper?

Mr. Horner (Acadia): There is an urgent need.

On the orders of the day:

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): I should answer the question asked by the hon. member for Saint John-Albert as I promised yesterday I would. The reason I did not answer it yesterday was that I was not quite sure whether the order in council had been passed. I knew the recommendation had gone forward to extend the date to which these proposed increases in rates are suspended. The rates that are now in existence will continue in existence until the end of the year, and perhaps longer if that is necessary.

CANADIAN CONSTITUTION

PRIORITY FOR CONSIDERATION OF PROPOSED AMENDMENT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, can the Prime Minister bring us up to date on the proposed amendment to the constitution with respect to the survivor benefits aspect of the Canada pension plan? Has the Quebec legislature yet dealt with the matter and can we assume that this resolution may be dealt with by the house before we get into the flag debate?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I have been informed that the Quebec legislature will not be able to deal with this matter until Monday. We hope and I believe they hope that it will be passed very quickly, but it will not be passed quickly enough to enable this house to discuss the matter before the flag debate begins on Monday. However, I would hope that we would be able to deal with it later in the week.

Mr. Knowles: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In case the amending bill to the Farm Credit Act and interim supply are not disposed of today, is it the intention of the government to go ahead with the flag debate on Monday in any event?

Mr. Pearson: Yes, Mr. Speaker, we intend to go ahead with the flag debate on Monday.

Mr. Bell: Continuously?

POWER

COLUMBIA RIVER—METHOD OF PAYMENT BY UNITED STATES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): I wish to address a question to the Minister of Finance, and it is an important question to many of us. It is based on a lengthy article in the Globe and Mail entitled "Huge Payment by U.S. Under Columbia Treaty Unique and Complicated." In view of the information in this article and the contradictory statements to this article made in some United States publications; and in view of the fact that we were able to obtain very little information on this matter from the Secretary of State for External Affairs in the committee when we were considering this treaty, for which I do not blame him because it is a complicated matter, will the minister take advantage of the debate on interim supply to explain to us the circumstances surrounding the payment of these funds so all members will understand them?

Hon. Walter L. Gordon (Minister of Finance): I would be pleased to explain how the financial aspects of this transaction will be dealt with. I have not read the article and I am not in a position to do so now. I will be away for a few days, and when I return I will be pleased to go into this matter.

TRADE

BEEF—STEPS TO INCREASE EXPORTS TO GREAT BRITAIN

On the orders of the day:

Mr. C. S. Smallwood (Battle River-Camrose): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. In view of the serious shortage of beef in Great Britain, will the minister inform the house what action his department has taken to increase our exports of beef to that country?

Mr. Speaker: This is surely a question for the order paper.

Mr. Smallwood: This is a very urgent matter. The price of beef is going down in our country today and they are importing beef into the United Kingdom.

An hon. Member: You will have an opportunity to debate that later.

Mr. Smallwood: I will debate it at ten o'clock.

HEALTH AND WELFARE

INQUIRY AS TO USE OF DOSAGE MACHINES IN HOSPITALS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Ralph Cowan (York-Humber): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. In view of the unfortunate experience we had with thalidomide under the previous administration when doctors were issuing prescriptions, surely the department of health and welfare is not now considering having any part in the use of machines for passing out dosages in the hospitals of Canada?

Mr. Speaker: This is a question which is highly important but has not that element of urgency, it seems to me, that should be in questions asked at this time. Will the hon. member put the question on the order paper.

FARM CREDIT ACT

AMENDMENTS INCREASING AUTHORIZED CAPITAL, MAXIMUM LOAN LIMITS, ETC.

The house resumed, from Thursday, June 11, consideration in committee of Bill No. C-100, to amend the Farm Credit Act—Mr. Hays—Mr. Lamoureux in the chair.

On clause 1—Farming.

The Chairman: I believe the hon. member for Roberval wanted to raise a question which he submitted to the house earlier this morning.

[Translation]

Mr. Gauthier: Thank you, Mr. Chairman, for giving me an opportunity to pursue my question of privilege at the opening of this sitting.

I was saying that I had some reason to believe that the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Hays) had—perhaps inadvertently—misinformed the house last night when answering some arguments of mine. I read over this morning those arguments and that statement of the minister, which I found on page 4218 of Hansard, where he put words in my mouth to the effect that out of 1,500 requests, only about a hundred were accepted. I never mentioned those figures; I simply stated that 15 per cent of the loans had been accepted in my county.

In order to rectify the fact, Mr. Chairman, I telephoned this morning to the Roberval office of the Farm Credit Corporation and spoke to the official now responsible for that agency, with some witnesses on the line, so that it could not be alleged that I was making up those figures, as it was suggested last night. I gave this telephone call to the new incumbent because, last night, I somewhat put the blame on the credit advisers, but I shall tell you in two minutes that I found out something new.

The minister's words last night somewhat enlightened me and made me discover another reason which prevents the Quebec farmers from obtaining the farm loans to which they are entitled. I called up the new incumbent, because I have the pleasure to announce that the Minister of Agriculture replaced the former adviser for the county of Roberval. So, I called that office where I received some information.

Now, note this. The minister stated that 369 requests had been filed in our four counties and 121 loans had been granted, but I maintained there had been a much greater number of requests. I maintain that today, and I have proof, which I hold from the head of the Roberval office, who told me that, at the first stage of applications—and that is precisely the point to which I want to call the minister's attention, for I believe he has been misled by the Quebec report—first of all, requests are received, and the head of the office tells me that at that stage applications are not registered—and I make a distinction between applications and registered applications—about 30 per cent of farmers' applications are rejected. So, when I said the number of our farmers' applications was much larger than 369, it was because I considered that those received at the office were applications for loans.

Mr. Chairman, it is precisely at the second stage that all sorts of contradictory actions are taken, that 30 to 35 per cent of loan applications made by farmers are refused, and then the whole question is re-examined. It is at the second stage that they say that there were 369 applications, that is farmers have been allowed to make application to the Farm Credit Corporation by depositing $10. I believe that the minister has in his possession information concerning the second stage only, that he has never been provided with information concerning the first stage.

Taking into consideration that a minimum of 30 per cent of the applications are refused, it is easy to establish the percentage, even at the second stage, of farmers who are denied loans. Considering that the minister stated that 121 applications had been accepted, I have reason to say that in the four ridings (because we have a district office for the four ridings) hardly 15 per cent of the farmers were allowed a farm loan.

I said also that, after having studied the question for approximately a year and a half, I had finally come to the conclusion that this situation was probably due to credit advisers who did not perform their duties adequately.

As can be seen on page 4219 of Hansard, the minister stated:

> The dominion bureau of statistics figures for the 1961 census indicate that there were 1,244 farmers in the municipality of Lake St. John West who had gross sales of over $1,200. During the fiscal year ended March 31, 1964, the corporation approved 121 loans for an amount of $1,293,900 in this county, or about one loan for every ten farmers with a gross income of $1,200 or more.

Mr. Chairman, that is precisely the secret I have been trying to find out for a long time and the statement made by the minister provided the answer. He mentioned applications approved at the second stage.

I was wondering why between 35 and 40 per cent of applications for loans from farmers were rejected at the first stage. Now, I know it is because it was discovered that their gross income was less than $1,200. The minister told us last night that the corporation makes loans only to farmers who can prove that their income is above $1,200. This means that loans are granted to farmers whose gross income is $5,000, $6,000, $8,000 and $10,000, but that no money is loaned to the farmer whose income is less than $1,200. In other words, loans are granted to the rich, but they are denied to those who need them. That is how I see it.

Mr. Chairman, even if the minister misinterpreted my remarks last night, he nevertheless gave us an explanation; he gave us evidence, once more, that the government encourages those who have money and discourages those who have none.

That is exactly why we fight and want those loans to be granted to farmers who do not earn more than $1,200 and who own two, three and even four lots, but are refused a loan of $6,000, $7,000 and $8,000 which would enable them to live advantageously and develop their lots.

[Mr. Gauthier.]

On several occasions, I called on the adviser and he told me that the act did not allow it. It is understood that, in my area, the act does not authorize loans to the small farmer; the farmer has to be rich to borrow. On account of conditions prevailing in the province of Quebec, it is therefore useless to speak about improving our land, since 60 per cent of our farmers earn less than $1,200 per annum.

The minister keeps making comparisons with the province of Saskatchewan, and says —please note this because it is good:

> The hon. member related loans in his constituency to the number of loans being made in the province of Saskatchewan. The d.b.s. figures show that, in 1961, there were 82,285 farmers in Saskatchewan with gross income of over $1,200.

In Saskatchewan, 82,285 farmers earn more than $1,200 per annum. Now, more loans are made to farmers in Saskatchewan precisely because those farmers are richer than those in the province of Quebec.

And the minister adds:

> During the last fiscal year, the corporation approved 2,332 loans in Saskatchewan, or about one loan for every 40 farmers.

Mr. Chairman, if the minister wishes to make comparisons, he should go back a few years. He said 121 loans were granted in my constituency, but I should like to know the total number of loans granted in the province of Quebec in 1964.

Then the minister goes on:

> From this it will be seen that the rate of lending by the corporation in the hon. member's constituency is about four times as high as in the province of Saskatchewan—

This is untrue. I am not very good at mathematics, in fact, some are better than I am, but while in 1962, 109 loans were granted in the province of Quebec, 1936 were granted in Saskatchewan. The minister would have us believe that 109 is higher than 1936.

In 1963, the province of Quebec succeeded in obtaining 104 loans against 2,307 in Saskatchewan. Will the minister again try to make us believe that 104 is more than 2,307.

In 1964, in Saskatchewan, 2,300 loans were granted. The minister will likely say that there are more people there; he will try to make comparisons between the population and the number of farmers. But I am prepared to put my seat at stake if the province of Saskatchewan has a greater population than the province of Quebec.

We are told that four times as many loans are granted in the province of Quebec than in the province of Saskatchewan. How ridiculous can one be. You have put your finger on the trouble: namely that 2,307 loans were granted in Saskatchewan to farmers who are well off, while in the province of Quebec where our farmers really need loans, only a very small number were made.

The province of Quebec should be getting 5,000 loans a year, against 300 for Saskatchewan. That would be a fair proportion considering the taxpayers. Just figure it out: the province of Quebec pays five times more taxes than Saskatchewan. I have nothing against Saskatchewan, but I maintain that the province of Quebec is entitled to the same fair treatment.

If the Minister of Agriculture wants to study the situation and be responsible, let him compare the number of small farmers, not the rich farmers but the poor ones, in Quebec and in Saskatchewan. Then the figures could be reversed and doubled, and 5,000 loans would have to be granted in Quebec and only 300 in Saskatchewan, so that those two provinces could be given the same treatment.

That is the core of our agricultural problem. The needs of the province of Quebec where family farms have to be improved have never been understood. The minister's statements concerning family farms indicate that he has never known such farms nor considered their proportions.

In the application of the law as it stands at present, no consideration can be given to farmers who earn less than $1,200 a year. That is precisely what we have been criticizing for the past four or five years. As I said last night, when a farmer goes to the office, the credit adviser tells him without too much explanation: "Sell your farm and move to the city."

Only last night I got another letter from a farmer who owes $5,000 on his two farms, and yet he has 155 acres under cultivation. All he needs is a small $2,000 loan to complete his organization. But he is told to sell his farms and to leave.

What a fine reasoning. People are being paid to advise and help farmers, but this is not the way to revive agriculture in the province of Quebec, and more especially our family farms.

We were justified in the past to ask for a minister of agriculture for the province of Quebec and we shall keep on making such a demand, because I realize more and more that the legislation implemented by the minister in the western provinces is not adaptable to the province of Quebec.

The Department of Forestry was created as a front to help—

The Chairman: Order. I wonder whether the hon member is not straying away from the matter under consideration, that is the amendment to The Farm Credit Act.

Mr. Gauthier: I will come back to the subject under discussion; this was only an aside to illustrate how amendments to the Farm Credit Act even though they offer a few benefits, are still favouring western and not eastern Canada, and that is because the problems of the eastern farmers were never seriously considered.

The introduction of these new credit terms is intended to make our farmers agricultural contractors, as in western Canada. These family farms which were handed down from generation to generation are going to disappear. It is for that reason that we want to safeguard the soil of Quebec, because we must protect our family life in all spheres of society.

I consider that if the proposed amendments were more appropriate to the kind of farming carried out in Quebec, our farmers would be able, a few years hence, to compete on an equal footing with those farmers of other provinces. Our farmers merely ask for the same standard of living as that of other provinces. But what is being done today? They are shown to the door and told to go into town and to leave their farms.

Mr. Chairman, I am pleased with these amendments because two or three of them have to do especially with beekeeping and other types of farming. Farm production, in the province of Quebec, is so highly diversified that instead of these amendments, we should have had at least 10 or 12 more directly related to Quebec farming. I am sure we will get nowhere as long as the Minister of Agriculture does not examine the question. I know he can do it if he wants to. Let him come to Quebec not as someone dealing occasionally with people but as one who considers the type of farms we have and the living conditions of our farmers and, Mr. Chairman, I can guarantee that we will have only words of praise for him in the future.

Mr. Hamilton: Mr. Chairman, as I listened to the hon. member for Roberval I could not help but think that if the Creditiste party in this house stuck with the issues about which he spoke today instead of following will-o'-the-wisp issues such as the flag, which means nothing to the people of rural Quebec, and helped the people in his county by joining with us in trying to get some long range program to help the smaller farmer across the country, we would be in a much better position than we are today with regard to agriculture.

I rise to speak on the amendments to the Farm Credit Act. Some two or three weeks ago I indicated to the Minister of Agriculture that we on this side of the house would welcome legislation brought in that was positive, constructive and would do some good for at least some section of the Canadian people. Therefore I was pleased when the Farm Credit Act amendments were brought down. However, in reading over the debate, and particularly the minister's words yesterday, I was shocked to find that what I thought was just poor drafting in the bill is a deliberate policy on the part of the government.

I am referring to the cost of money. We had a farm loan board in existence in Canada from 1929, and until 1957 all the farm loan board was able to lend was approximately $110 million. This works out to roughly $4 million or $5 million a year. The reason they could not fill this big demand that arose as the result of a revolution in agriculture was the attitude of those who administered the farm loan board. This board was under the Department of Finance, and their concept of a loan was "If you want $5,000, show us $10,000 worth of assets and then we will give you a $5,000 loan".

The revolutionary, new concept that was brought in in 1959 with the Farm Credit Corporation was altogether different. This new concept was that we were trying to help agriculture to get on its feet so that more and more farmers could become commercial in their operations. I wish the hon. member for Roberval would not keep referring to these "rich" farmers in Saskatchewan. What he is really trying to say is that compared with the people in his county, many people in other parts of Canada are commercial farmers and are farming to make money. It is just as true to say this, because the wealthiest farmers in Canada are actually in the province of Ontario, where in proportion they number twice as many as there are in Saskatchewan. The job of this government and our job as representatives in this parliament is to help more and more farmers reach the commercial level of farming; and the Farm Credit Act was one of the best acts ever put on the statute books of this country to help that development. Now the very philosophy of that act is being attacked; its basic, fundamental purpose is being changed. The basic, fundamental purpose of the act was to stabilize the cost of money to the agricultural industry in order to assist those who wanted to go into commercial farming.

If you look at the history of debt in Canada —that is, debt held by the federal government —you will find, when you apply the amount of interest paid to the total amount of debt, that the average interest rate fluctuates between 3 per cent and 4 per cent. It is true that during temporary periods of around four, five and six years the interest rate goes above 4 per cent, and there are other periods when it goes below 3 per cent; but the average amount paid by the treasury of Canada to the people of Canada who lend money to the government varies, on the total debt, between 3 per cent and 4 per cent. I am not talking about the day by day cost of money; I am simply talking of the average interest paid on the total debt.

We had this issue before us when we formed the government, and we decided that if we were to bring the agricultural industry up to a higher level so that it could participate in the wealth of this country we had to give to the industry some assurance that if a farmer borrowed money for 30 years there would be a stabilized interest rate, and we picked 4 per cent as the basic interest rate that we would charge farmers.

We added to it 1 per cent to cover the costs of running the corporation and to provide a reserve against loss. We took the maximum of the average interest rate paid by the government of Canada to the people of Canada for borrowing money—because the long term average on the total debt is, as I said, 3 per cent or 4 per cent—and we were going to ask the farmers, in periods of low interest rates when the government was getting the money at below the average interest rate, to continue to pay 5 per cent so we would build up a reserve when the country swung into a high interest period, and this reserve would carry the Farm Credit Corporation through without the government having to come back to this house and ask for money. We were prepared as a government, if that reserve did not build up and the Department of Finance took the loss, to say to the farmers that they had not a fluctuating interest rate but a stable interest rate.

Therefore the issue was very simple. On the question of the basic principle of providing farm credit to lift more and more farmers to the commercial level we decided to take a stabilized rate of 4 per cent plus 1 per cent to cover costs, so that when the interest rate was low the farmer would pay 5 per cent and when the interest rate was high he would still only pay 5 per cent. We took the highest level so that in the long run there would be no cost to the treasury, and no subsidization.

The government has now changed the principle drastically. I did not realize how drastic was the change until I read the remarks made by the minister last night, as reported at page 4216 of Hansard. I would ask every hon. member in this committee, whether he comes from a rural constituency or an urban constituency, to write these figures down and calculate them, and then go back to his voters and ask for their support for this sort of thing. This is what the minister said:

If a farmer were to borrow $40,000, his payment on the first $20,000 would be $1,322 a year—

I ask hon. members to put those figures down and to work them out. What does it come to at $1,322 a year? It works out to a rate of 6.6 per cent on the first $20,000. The minister went on:

—and his payment on the other $20,000 would be $1,551—

That works out to 7.7 per cent. Then the minister went on to say:
