HOUSE OF COMMONS

Wednesday, May 20, 1964

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

PRESENCE IN GALLERY OF MEMBERS OF WEST GERMAN GOVERNMENT

Mr. Eric A. Winkler (Grey-Bruce): Mr. Speaker, I rise with your permission, and I trust on behalf of the entire house, to welcome into the diplomatic gallery this afternoon four members of the West German government who are here on a visit. I would extend to them in their native tongue a "Herzliches Willkommen", which interpreted means bienvenue or welcome.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, on behalf of those of us on this side of the house I should like to be allowed to associate myself with the hon. gentleman in extending a very sincere welcome to the distinguished parliamentarians from the Bundestag in Western Germany. I have recently been in West Germany, where I was the beneficiary of much kindness from the government of that country. I am sure that our expression of welcome to these distinguished parliamentarians will not be found wanting in the warmth and sincerity with which this parliament is pleased to welcome these distinguished representatives.

COMMITTEES OF THE HOUSE

PROCEDURE—SIXTH AND SEVENTH REPORTS OF SPECIAL COMMITTEE—CONCURRENCE IN SEVENTH REPORT

Mr. Speaker: I have the honour to present, in English and in French, the sixth report of the special committee on procedure and organization. This report outlines a major reorganization of the staff and services of the House of Commons.

I have the honour to present in English and in French the seventh report of the special committee on procedure and organization. Later it is my intention to call upon the hon. member for Edmonton West to explain this report under the heading of motions.

[Later:]

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, seconded by the hon. member for Lapointe and with the unanimous consent of the house I should like to move concurrence in the seventh report of the special committee on procedure and organization.

It will be recalled that during the last session the committee on debates of which I had the honour to be a member presented a report which was not concurred in. Therein was contained the following paragraph:

> That satisfactory electronic recording apparatus as referred to in the abovementioned report be installed at the earliest possible date to be used on a trial basis in selected committee rooms.

Hon. members will be aware that about two weeks ago a somewhat awkward situation arose with regard to the recording of the debates and proceedings of one of the house committees, that on privileges and elections, in the French language. Despite every effort it has been found very difficult to obtain additional reportorial staff, especially on a permanent basis. It was through the generosity of the other place and of one of the government agencies that trained reportorial staff able to record the proceedings in French were obtained.

In the past two years at least, primarily as a result of the introduction of simultaneous interpretation, considerably more French has been used in this chamber, with the result that an undue burden has been placed on the shoulders of our French Hansard staff who are thus not available for French committee hearings. It is in order to alleviate this difficulty, as well as to examine, rather with experience than in haste, the use of electronic recording equipment, that your committee would recommend to this house that electronic recording apparatus be introduced into selected committee proceedings in order to assist in overcoming the difficulty caused by the shortage of French reporters and in order that the value of this equipment may be assessed.

Your committee was unanimous in this recommendation, Mr. Speaker, and I would ask members of the house to concur in this report.

[Translation]

Mr. Gilles Grégoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to second the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) for concurrence in the seventh report of the special committee on procedure and organization.

It is obvious that we were faced with an emergency due to the shortage of bilingual or French speaking stenographers and reporters in the various committees of the house.

As mentioned by the hon. member for Edmonton West, these last few years, mostly in the last two years, the French language has asserted itself more and more in the house and this has contributed to emphasize the bilingual character of our country. However, bilingual or French speaking reporters could not be found.

What is strange in the situation that is developing today is that we are obliged to call on machines to replace people, that is electronic machines to replace the reporters who could have been used.

While I second this motion, Mr. Speaker, I wish to point out that it does not necessarily mean that reporters will be replaced but that their work will be made easier and more complete. I suggest at the same time that the responsible authorities make the necessary efforts to find bilingual or French reporters. I am convinced that their smallest efforts will meet with success and that it will be possible and even easy to find very good French or bilingual stenographers and reporters in our country.

Mr. Pigeon: If we offer a good salary, we will find some.

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I want to say a word on this motion as a member of the special committee on procedure and organization. We are pleased on this side of the house to consent to the waiving of the usual notice and make concurrence in this report possible today. We do that because of the emergency situation that has prevailed in the standing committees with respect to the problem of French reporting. I think it ought to be noted that considerable flexibility is being observed by the special committee on procedure and organization, in that the hon. member who has moved concurrence in this report is recommending to the house the installation of recording apparatus on a trial basis, which will ultimately involve an expenditure of public funds. It ought to be indicated at this point that a special prerogative is involved here on the part of the government, which will be discharged in the proper way at a later date.

Mr. Speaker: It has been moved by the hon. member for Edmonton West, seconded by the hon. member for Lapointe, that by unanimous consent this house do now concur in the seventh report of the special committee on procedure and organization. Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the said motion?

Mr. Harold E. Winch (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, may I just say a word on this, or is that not permitted?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Vancouver East.

Mr. Winch: I apologize if I did not catch your eye but I did want to make a very brief statement on this matter. In no way whatsoever do I oppose the suggestion which has been made or the principle involved, but I do want to make clear, because no one else has, the semi-hypocritical attitude involved. Mention was made of a committee meeting some two weeks ago which had to be postponed because a French reporter was not there. Mr. Speaker, an English reporter was there, and we in the House of Commons have a marvellous translation branch. Anything taken down at that committee would have been available in both languages within a matter of hours.

You may ask why I raise this point. It is because we now have a recommendation to instal electronic equipment. I agree with that recommendation, but I would draw to your attention that electronic equipment takes down the exact words spoken. There is no simultaneous translation by electronic machine. There is no such animal as a bilingual electronic machine taking something down in one language and immediately translating it into another.

An hon. Member: Oh, yes, there is.

Mr. Winch: No, sir, there is not. The only reason I have got up now is to speak not only in support of this motion but to draw to the attention of others that it will still require the services of the most efficient translation branch of the House of Commons to translate from one language to another what is taken in by the electronic brain. Let us not forget that.

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, I also support the motion which has been moved, but I should like to ask whether any consideration has been given to the training of the necessary personnel to operate this equipment. It seems to me that we are now making a change in the system which has been followed up to now. There has been the recommendation that the debates in this house as well as in committees be electronically recorded, but it seems to me that this will only be successful if the proper people are trained. Electronic equipment has been operating in some committees but has been controlled by people who do not know how to use it. It appears to me that this is very ineffectual, and that it retards the extension of the operation considerably. There are no doubt many hon. members who can remember being in committees when the man operating the switches has not turned on the right microphone and the squeals are more easily heard than the voices. Therefore we must have trained personnel, and this is a matter the house has not given much consideration to in the past.

I only hope that when we use this equipment, operators with a high degree of integrity are employed; because electronic records can be changed, and that is one of the reasons they have not been accepted in the past. I suggest that the committee give consideration to the establishment of a branch with properly trained personnel to operate this equipment so that it will prove satisfactory, and so that we will be able to extend it into some other fields. I hope this is done immediately so that we are not again faced with having half trained people operating highly complicated equipment.

[Translation]

Mr. Guy Marcoux (Quebec-Montmorency): Mr. Speaker, a few words only to say that our group also holds translators and interpreters in great respect. However, we think it is normal, especially in the capital of the country and in our parliament, that members be able to speak in their mother tongue and be interpreted, or at least to have their speech recorded as delivered in the reports. That is the reason why a proposal was made for a tape-recording system.

In the same way that the federal government found, to its surprise, that the Quebec pension plan was a considered and well-thought-out plan, I feel it might be profitable to consult the Quebec government concerning the system it uses to report the official debates. We are told that it works very well. This is another field where we could advantageously follow the pattern set by the province of Quebec.

QUESTIONS

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

"OOKPIK"—CATALOGUE IDENTIFICATION

Question No. 503—Mr. Fisher:

1. With regard to the Ookpik toy design, what is the exact bibliographical identity of the catalogue in which the officials of the Department of Trade and Commerce found it?
2. Who is the publisher of this catalogue?
3. Was trade and commerce shown a model or replica, other than the catalogue design, before it had an Ookpik made up and, if so, when and by whom?

Answer: 1. Canadian Eskimo Fine Crafts, issued under the authority of the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources, by the queen's printer and controller of stationery, Ottawa, in 1963 as item Cat. R2-2463.

2. The queen's printer on behalf of the Department of Northern Affairs and National Resources.

3. No. On request, the Department of Northern Affairs and National Resources had an Ookpik made up for use by the Department of Trade and Commerce.

REQUEST FOR GRANTS TO UNIVERSITIES

Question No. 539—Mr. Orlikow:

Is the government giving consideration to the requests of the Canadian universities foundation made in their brief to the Prime Minister in May 1963 "that the parliament of Canada enact legislation authorizing expenditure of $300 million for matching capital grants to universities and colleges for projects on which commitments are made between July 1, 1963 and June 30, 1966;" and "that the federal grant for each approved capital project be equal to not more than 50 per cent of the cost of the project;" and "that in each of the years 1963-64, 1964-65, and 1965-66 a grant of $500,000 be made by the government of Canada to the government of Nova Scotia for distribution to the universities of that province, and a grant of $200,000 be made to the government of New Brunswick for distribution to the universities of that province"?

Mr. Davis: The government is re-examining these requests and other university financial requests in the light of its existing financial commitments including the revisions proposed in federal-provincial fiscal arrangements.

R.C.M.P. MOTOR VEHICLE PURCHASES, CUMBERLAND, N.S.

Question No. 647—Mr. Coates:

How many motor vehicles were purchased by the R.C.M. Police in Cumberland from April 1, 1963, to March 31, 1964 and (a) from what firm, or firms, were these vehicles purchased (b) what was the amount of the lowest bid (c) was it submitted by the successful tenderer and (d) what other firms were invited to tender in each instance?

Mr. Favreau: A total of three vehicles were purchased in the electoral district of Cumberland during the period referred to, of which two were required for Amherst and the other for Pugwash. (a) Claude W. Carter Ltd., Springhill, N.S.; (b) $4,212.20 (three vehicles 1 bid); (c) Yes; (d) Cumberland Equipment Limited and T. D. Brennan Limited, both of Amherst.

FURNITURE AND RENOVATION EXPENDITURES, PRIME MINISTER'S RESIDENCE

Question No. 663—Mr. Jorgenson:

What were the amounts spent on renovations and furniture for the Prime Minister's residence at 24 Sussex drive for the fiscal years ending 1961-62-63 and 64?

Mr. Deschatelets:

	1960-61	1961-62	1962-63	1963-64
Renovations	$6,351.26	$5,518.31	$3,040.60	$9,955.95
Furniture	$1,248.23	$1,016.02	$1,814.74	$7,433.16

CORRESPONDENCE BETWEEN B.C. PRISON INMATES AND MEMBERS OF PARLIAMENT

Question No. 672—Mr. Howard:

1. Since January 1, 1960, has the commissioner of penitentiaries issued any instructions to the effect that any inmate or inmates in the B.C. penitentiary must get special permission to correspond with members of parliament and that copies of the said correspondence must be provided and, if so (a) when were these instructions given (b) to how many inmates do they apply, and (c) what was the reason for so issuing them?
2. Has any such inmate been prevented from writing to a member of parliament or denied permission to so write and, if so, what are the reasons therefor?
3. Has any communication from a member of parliament to an inmate in the B.C. penitentiary been withheld from or delayed in transmission to the said inmate and, if so, for how long and for what reason?

Mr. Favreau: 1. No.

2. No.

3. Yes, a communication from a member of parliament, addressed to an inmate, dated December 19, 1963 was received at the penitentiary on December 21, 1963. Because of the nature of the contents the warden withheld the correspondence with the intention of discussing the subject of communication with the writer during his impending visit to the institution. This discussion was held on December 27 and the communication was transmitted to the inmate on the same date.

FEDERAL PENITENTIARY INMATES AND STAFF

Question No. 697—Mr. Orlikow:

1. What is the total number of inmates in federal penitentiaries as of the last date for which the annual report was prepared?
2. What is the total staff employed in these penitentiaries and, of these, how many are guards, teachers, psychologists, psychiatrists, etc.?
3. What qualifications are required for the professional staff?
4. What are the minimum qualifications for guards employed in penitentiaries?
5. Is there a compulsory training course for people hired as guards and, if so, what type of course, and how long does it take to complete this course?

Mr. Macdonald: 1. As of March 31, 1964, there were 7,648 inmates on register in federal penitentiaries.

2. Authorized staff establishment penitentiary service exclusive of headquarters and correctional staff colleges, as of March 31, 1964:

Medical
Physicians, full time	1
part time	3
contract	7
Psychiatrists, part time	8
Dentists, hospitals officers, assistant hospital officers and dental technicians	111
Inmate training division	60
Classification staff	72

Educational staff	51
Recreational staff	23
Vocational staff	71
Custodial staff	1,287
Administration, service and supply	836
Industrial staff	164
Administrative staff, i.e. wardens, chaplains, clerks, etc.	218
Total	2,912

3. Physicians and surgeons, graduation with an M.D. degree from a recognized university with certification as a specialist by the Royal College of Physicians and Surgeons. In Quebec such qualifications are granted by their accredited colleges.

Psychiatrists, graduation from a recognized university with an M.D. degree and studies which have led to the granting of a certificate by the Royal College of Physicians and Surgeons.

Dentists, graduation from a recognized university with a dental degree.

Chaplain, completion of university or theological seminar, pastoral experience in community; preferable: correctional or social work.

Teachers and educational, (adult education), instructors, completion and elementary teachers certification; minimum of four years' teaching experience in community; preferable: university degree or university courses, if any, of the social sciences.

Classification staff, university graduation preferred in education, psychology, sociology or social work.

4. For employment in the penitentiary service an applicant must be from 23 to 40 years of age, of a minimum height of 5'8" and physically fit; possess an education (minimum) of grade 10 (grade 9, Quebec); be a person of good character and neat in appearance. Candidates are submitted to educational tests and to psychological evaluation as to their suitability for carrying out custodial duties. Proven satisfactory police or military experience would be a decided asset for any applicant.

5. Effective May 4, 1964, a compulsory three months' induction training course commences at the Quebec, Ontario and western correctional staff colleges for all newly appointed custodial officers prior to appointment to an institution.

This course consists of theoretical and practical training in the following subjects: organization and administration of penitentiary service; correctional work and custodial procedures; inmate supervision, training and discipline; weapons and gas training; physical training, self defences and drill; communications, operation and procedures; crowd control and emergencies.

COMBINES INVESTIGATION INTO DRUG PRICES, B.C.

Question No. 726—Mr. Prittie:

Has the director of investigations and research (Combines Investigation Act) received a request from ten individuals in British Columbia asking for an investigation into a recent order of the B.C. pharmaceutical association, approved by provincial order in council No. 3366, dated December 31, 1963 and published in the B.C. Gazette of January 24, 1964 which restricts the competitive sale of drugs and if so, is an investigation now taking place?

Mr. Macdonald: The information received is being considered by the director of investigation and research, Combines Investigation Act, to determine whether the situation is such as to warrant formal inquiry under the act. Since the letter was received, however, it has been confirmed that a private action has been instituted in the supreme court of British Columbia challenging the validity of the above regulations or bylaws and the director will of course have to take note that the matter is at present sub judice.

LEGISLATION TO ALTER QUEBEC-NEWFOUNDLAND BOUNDARY

Question No. 771—Mr. Coates:

Does the government intend to bring legislation forward to alter the boundaries of the provinces of Quebec and Newfoundland as required by section 3 of the British North America Act of 1871?

Mr. Davis: The consent of the legislatures of the provinces affected is required before the parliament of Canada may alter the boundaries thereof. The federal government has not been informed that such consent has been given by the provinces concerned.

PRINTING OF SOCIAL INSURANCE CARDS

Question No. 841—Mr. Hales:

1. Were tenders called for the purchase of the paper used to print the social security cards and, if not, for what reason?

2. If paper requested could only be produced by one company, why was the paper stock not changed to a type or kind procurable from more than one source?

3. What are the names and addresses of the firms which submitted tenders for the printing of the social security cards?

4. Why were these cards not printed by the queen's printer?

5. Who printed the instruction leaflet which accompanied the social security cards (UIC-543F 12-64) and the leaflet to the employer (UIC-5816 12-63)?

6. How many of each were ordered and (a) what was the cost of each (b) were tenders called

(c) who submitted tenders (name and address) (d) was the lowest tender accepted and who submitted it?

Mr. Drury: 1. (a) No. (b) Only one source of supply.

2. The specifications for the paper required for the social insurance number cards could be met by only one mill. The first of many requisites was the necessity for rag content and the company awarded the contract was the only manufacturer of rag bristol. Experiments by this mill have also produced a chemical additive which provides the extended life expectancy required for the stock.

3. Crain Business Systems, Ottawa Sales Office, P.O. box 392; Data Business Forms Ltd., 87 Brydon drive, Rexdale, Ontario; Mount Royal Press Ltd., 5740 Ferrier st., Montreal, P.Q., Moore Business Forms Ltd., 133½ Besserer st., Ottawa, Ontario; Drummond Business Forms, Drummondville, P.Q.

4. Efficient printing of the social insurance number cards calls for equipment not available at the Canadian government printing bureau.

5. The correct numbers for these forms are UIC-543-F(2-64) and UIC-581-G(2-64). The Canadian government printing bureau printed instruction leaflet UIC-543-F(2-64) and form UIC-581-G(2-64) was printed by: Tremblay & Dion Inc., 725 Cote d'Abraham, Quebec 4, Quebec.

6.(i) Form UIC-543-F(2-64): 4,199,000 were ordered. (a) The cost for paper and printing was $7,100.69. (b) No—Work done by government printing bureau; (c) N/A; (d) N/A.

(ii) Form UIC-581-G(2-64): 500,000 (a) $4,923.07 was the total cost of paper and printing; (b) Yes; (c) Laval Specialties Ltd., 18 Labelle St., Lavalle des Rapides, Que.; Ronalds Federated Ltd., 6306 Park Ave., Montreal, P.Q.; Ateliers des Sourds-Muets, 65 ouest, rue de Castelnau, Montreal, Que.; Mtl. Litho Co. Ltd., 1685 Ontario St. E., Montreal, Que.; Techno-Lith Ltd., 1525 St. Dominique St., Montreal, Que.; Tremblay & Dion Inc., 725 Cote d'Abraham, Quebec 4, Que. (d) Yes, the lowest tender was accepted and contract awarded to: Tremblay & Dion Inc., 725 Cote d'Abraham, Quebec 4, Que.

INCREASE IN PENSIONS OF RETIRED CIVIL SERVANTS

Question No. 843—Mr. Mather:

Is the government during this session giving consideration to making amendments to the Public Service Pension Adjustment Act, or to any means of increasing the pensions of federal civil servants already retired?

[Mr. Hales.]

Mr. Benson: See statement on this subject in Hansard, April 21, 1964, pages 2438 and 2439.

JUSTICE DEPARTMENT EXPENDITURES

Question No. 848—Mr. Rondeau:

What were the estimated and actual expenditures of the Department of Justice for each of the last ten years and, for each such year, what was spent in the province of Quebec?

Mr. Macdonald:

Year	Amount of Estimates	Actual Expenditures	Expenditure Quebec
1953-54	15,927,444	15,017,395	3,794,000
1954-55	16,965,142	16,423,823	4,056,000
1955-56	18,118,875	17,317,470	4,351,000
1956-57	19,928,918	19,065,569	4,638,000
1957-58	20,763,128	19,929,268	4,763,000
1958-59	24,960,379	24,345,475	5,744,000
1959-60	29,121,103	27,845,867	10,148,000
1960-61	28,443,190	27,694,612	7,761,000
1961-62	34,989,708	32,580,185	8,465,000
1962-63	37,647,217	34,531,655	8,974,000

INTEREST ON NATIONAL DEBT

Question No. 854—Mr. Dionne:

How much has interest on the national debt cost the government of Canada since 1867?

[Translation]

Answer: Gross cost of interest on the national debt to the government of Canada from July 1, 1867, to March 31, 1964, was $15,287 million (including an estimated amount of $952 million for the fiscal year 1963-64).

Note—Includes interest on unmatured debt and where applicable interest on deposit and trust accounts and on annuity, insurance and pension accounts.

PROGRAM FOR CORRECTIONAL INSTITUTIONS AND FACILITIES

Question No. 887—Mr. Orlikow:

Has the government adopted a long range plan for the building and programming of correctional institutions and facilities and, if so, has this program been discussed with organizations interested in correction such as the Canadian corrections association, John Howard and Elizabeth Fry societies?

Mr. Macdonald: The government has adopted from time to time, in this connection, portions of the report of the Department of Justice correctional planning committee, 1960. Organizations interested in corrections were consulted by the committee when its report was being prepared.

*SITE FOR PENITENTIARY, ST. PIE DE BAGOT, QUE.

Question No. 894—Mr. Ricard:

For what purpose will the government use the four farms which were purchased in the Grand Rang St. François in the parish of St. Pie de Bagot, Quebec, on which the treasury board had authorized the construction of a penitentiary?

Mr. Macdonald: This property will be used for the construction of a medium security institution when another institution of that type is required in the province of Quebec.

FEDERAL PRISONS, QUEBEC

Question No. 895—Mr. Latulippe:

1. What is the number of federal prisons in the province of Quebec?

2. During the past year, what was the number of inmates in each, and how many employees were working therein?

3. In each of those prisons, what was the number of psychiatrists, psychologists and social workers trained in correctional work?

4. Do the guards in those prisons receive any training for their duties?

5. Has the construction of new federal prisons been undertaken in the province of Quebec during the past year and, if so, where, and what will be the cost of each?

6. For what reasons was the site of each prison chosen?

7. What is the cost of each?

8. How many men and women were transferred from Quebec prisons to prisons in other provinces during the past year and (a) where is each prison situated (b) how many inmates were transferred to each?

[Translation]

Answer: 1. Seven (7).

2.

Maximum security institution	Inmates	Employees
St. Vincent de Paul penitentiary	888	401
Medium security institutions
Leclerc Institution	455	206
Federal Training Centre	421	232
Penitentiary's Industrial Annex	190	60
Minimum security institutions
Gatineau Correction Camp	42	20
Valleyfield Institution	88	32
Penitentiary's Farm Annex	76	14
Total	2,160	965

3. Maximum security institution: St. Vincent de Paul penitentiary: two psychiatrists, one psychologist and eight classification officers.

Medium security institutions: Leclerc institution: one psychologist and three classification officers.

Federal training centre: one psychologist and three classification officers.

Penitentiary's industrial annex: one classification officer.

Minimum security institutions: Gatineau correction camp: one classification officer. Valleyfield institution: one classification officer.

Penitentiary's farm annex: one classification officer.

4. Each new member of the guard's service is required to complete a recruits training course of three months period. After that course, the new employee is submitted to a three months probation period. Besides, every member of the guard's service must follow every year a training period designed to teach him the new penology systems.

5. The construction of a medium security institution was undertaken at Cowansville, province of Quebec, at the cost of approximately $6 million.

6. That site was chosen for the following reasons:

(a) The site is far enough from Montreal to provide the required security and close enough to permit easy access to professional, medical and social resources.

(b) The site chosen is located, near Cowansville, in a region where no housing development is anticipated for a period of 50 to 75 years, because Cowansville is developing rather in the direction of Dunham, province of Quebec.

(c) Public utility services are provided in adequate quantity.

(d) The road system and transportation leading to the site are adequate to facilitate visits for the inmates' families.

(e) Six (6) neighbouring municipalities, situated within 15 miles of the chosen site, total a population of 50,873 (1961). Those conditions ensure a source of continuous manpower for custodial services as well as administration. The services of professionals, such as physicians, dentists, psychiatrists, psychologists, social workers, teachers and chaplains are available or can be obtained from adjacent centres.

(f) The city of Cowansville has elementary schools and high schools, hospitals, Roman Catholic and Protestant churches and all civic facilities which make possible the development of family life. That factor becomes important if it is wanted to get the continuous services of a qualified staff.

(g) The construction of the eastern townships throughway, with its layout situated near the institution, will enable travellers to reach Montreal in less than one hour. That will certainly facilitate the keeping of professional relations between the institution staff and universities, clinics, social or government agencies, etc.

There are several social clubs in Cowansville, such as the Kiwanis Club, the Rotary Club, the Knights of Columbus, artistic groups and religious organizations and so on, which are all ready to co-operate in the rehabilitation of inmates.

7. About $6 million.

8. Inmates, men and women, were transferred from the St. Vincent de Paul penitentiary to the penitentiaries in other provinces during the last year, as follows: to the Kingston penitentiary, Kingston, Ont., 17 men; to the Women's Prison Kingston, Ont., five women; to the Dorchester Penitentiary, Dorchester, N.B., 17 men; to the Manitoba Penitentiary, Stony Mountain, Man., four men; to the Saskatchewan Penitentiary, Prince Albert, Sask., four men; to the British Columbia Penitentiary, New Westminster, B.C., two men.

R.C.M.P. BARRACKS, WILLOW BUNCH, SASK.

Question No. 905—Mr. Watson (Assiniboia):

1. Is the government giving consideration to building a new R.C.M.P. barracks at Willow Bunch, Saskatchewan?
2. What does the government use as a guide to the necessity for new office and living quarters for the R.C.M.P.?
3. Who owns the building this detachment now occupies?

Mr. Favreau: 1. No, not at the present time.

2. The permanency of the local R.C.M. Police detachment and the availability of suitable accommodation for rent.

3. The town of Willow Bunch, Saskatchewan.

KRAFT COMPANY CONTROL OF CHEESE EXPORTS TO U.S.

Question No. 919—Mr. Latulippe:

Has an investigation been launched under the Combines Investigation Act into the allegations made by Mr. Donald C. MacDonald to the effect that the Kraft Company, which operates in Canada as well as in the United States exercises a control on the exports and sales of Canadian cheddar to the United States?

Mr. Macdonald: The director informs me that press reports of Mr. MacDonald's allegations indicate that the situation relates to import quotas imposed under United States legislation and therefore would not appear to be a matter coming within the purview of the Combines Investigation Act. Should further information indicate otherwise, however, the director may be expected to take any action which the statute may require.

JUVENILE DELINQUENTS IN FEDERAL INSTITUTIONS

Question No. 922—Mr. Latulippe:

R.C.M.P. AUXILIARY POLICE

Question No. 932—Mr. Barnett:

1. Are auxiliary police being enrolled with the R.C.M.P. and, if so, in what provinces is this being done and under what legislative or governmental authority?
2. What are the duties to be performed by auxiliary police and what course of training do they receive?
3. What remuneration or emoluments do auxiliary police receive?

Mr. Favreau: 1. Auxiliary police have been enrolled with the R.C.M. Police in the provinces of British Columbia, New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island. This has been done by provincial order in council which is authorized under the provincial civil defence act.

2. The duties of these auxiliary police are to assist the R.C.M. Police in effectively discharging its provincial duties in time of national emergency or natural disaster. Their training consists of instruction in the following subjects, which is carried out by the R.C.M. Police: (a) criminal law; (b) crowd control; (c) discipline; (d) emergency planning; (e) first aid; (f) foot drill; (g) general police work; (h) small arms training.

3. The auxiliary police do not receive any pay during training. If called out for actual service, they would be paid by the provincial government at a rate comparable with other provincial civil defence workers. They are provided, without cost, with a uniform of an approved type.

BANK OF CANADA PUBLICATIONS

Question No. 935—Mr. Côté (Chicoutimi):

1. What reports and publications are published by the Bank of Canada?
2. Are these publications printed in both official languages and, if not, will they be so in the near future?
3. Which banks and other financial institutions are regular buyers of treasury bills?

[Translation]

Answer: 1. Bank of Canada annual report. Bank of Canada statistical summary. Loans of government of Canada and loans guaranteed by the government of Canada. Bank of Canada, statement of assets and liabilities. Bank of Canada, weekly financial statistics.

2. Yes, with the exception of the Bank of Canada statistical summary. The Bank of Canada is studying the technical aspects of producing a French edition.

3. Government of Canada treasury bills are bearer securities which are being continually traded in the capital market and there is no complete record of the names of investors involved in such transactions. In any case it is not considered in the public interest to make public individual holdings of government of Canada securities, other than in regular statutory returns and official statistics.

Weekly financial statistics published by the Bank of Canada show holdings of government of Canada treasury bills as between Bank of Canada, chartered banks, government of Canada accounts and the general public. Amortized values of month end holdings of such treasury bills by individual chartered banks are available in the "Statement of Assets and Liabilities" of the chartered banks published monthly as a supplement to the Canada Gazette.

CARETAKERS, FEDERAL BUILDING AND ARMOURIES, SPRINGHILL, N.S.

Question No. 948— Mr. Coates:

1. Was David Brown, Springhill, appointed full-time caretaker for the Springhill federal building without a civil service competition being called for the position and without notification to the Royal Canadian Legion, Springhill, of the vacancy in question?
2. Does a vacancy exist for the position of caretaker at the Springhill armouries and, if so, will the civil service commission carry out a competition and will the Royal Canadian Legion, Springhill, be notified by the civil service commission of its intentions in this regard?

Mr. Lamontagne: 1. David Brown, normally a full time fireman-labourer in the federal building, Springhill, N.S., was assigned the duties of caretaker only during the absence, on sick leave, of the regular caretaker.

2. No, since the present caretaker who was referred in 1951 by the civil service commission has not indicated that he intends to resign.

USE OF URANIUM IN POWER PROJECTS

Question No. 949—Mr. Webb:

1. Did the Minister of Trade and Commerce make an announcement to the effect that Canada has moved to the world front in provision of nuclear power projects?
2. What steps is the government taking to assure Canadian General Electric and Westinghouse companies, major producers of nuclear power equipment, that ample supplies of uranium will be available thereby giving a guarantee for the employment of Canadian miners?
3. Is the government ensuring that the uranium used will be Canadian produced?

Answer: 1. The Minister of Trade and Commerce made an announcement on April 27 that agreements signed with India would, inter alia "place Canada in the competitive forefront of the world market for similar atomic power stations"; i.e. similar to the CANDU stations at Douglas Point and Rajasthan.

2. Canadian firms producing fuel for nuclear power plants are well aware that ample supplies of uranium are available.

3. For reactors operated in Canada, Canadian uranium will be used. For reactors abroad that are supplied by Canada, the government will endeavour to insure that Canadian uranium fuel producers are allowed to compete for the imported fuel requirements of the foreign operator. It is relevant to add that Canadian uranium fuel selling prices are highly competitive.

PARLIAMENT HILL—REMOVAL AND INSTALLATION OF LIGHTS

Question No. 951—Mr. Korchinski:

1. Was the removal and alternate installation of lights on the front lawn of the parliament buildings done by a contractor and, if so, who was granted the contract?
2. What was the cost of removal and installation?
3. What was done with the electrical cables which were removed?

Mr. Deschatelets: 1. Yes, Bedard Girard Ltd. (Ottawa).

2. $78,685.

3. Old unusable wiring removed from ducts, etc., is to be removed from the site at the general contractor's expense and becomes his property.

R.C.M.P. MOTOR VEHICLE PURCHASES, CUMBERLAND, N.S.

Question No. 953—Mr. Armstrong:

How many motor vehicles were purchased by the R.C.M. Police in Cumberland from April 1, 1962 to March 31, 1963 and (a) from what firm, or firms, were these vehicles purchased (b) what was the amount of the lowest bid (c) was it submitted by the successful tenderer, and (d) what other firms were invited to tender in each instance?

Mr. Favreau: One motor vehicle. (a) MacIntosh Motors Ltd., Parrsboro, Nova Scotia; (b) $1,034.95; (c) Yes; (d) Cameron and Wilson Ltd., Parrsboro, N.S.; Sargent's Garage, Parrsboro, N.S.

*DEPARTMENTAL CHANGES RESPECTING PRINTING BUREAU

Question No. 971—Mr. Pascoe:

1. What changes or transfers from department to department have taken place since May 1, 1963, in connection with the printing bureau, and on what dates?
2. Were these changes made under order in council and, if so, was each of such orders in council published in the Canada Gazette?

Mr. Nicholson: In so far as the Departments of Industry and Defence Production are concerned:

1. Order in council P.C. 1963-1130 dated July 25, 1963, transferred to the Minister of Industry the powers, duties or functions of the Secretary of State of Canada under the Public Printing and Stationery Act.

Order in council P.C. 1963-1254 dated August 21, 1963, transferred to the Department of Defence Production the control or supervision of the procurement purchasing and stores branch, the production branch, the outside printing production branch, and the supporting services contained in the departmental secretary's branch, the administrative services branch and the financial services branch of the department of public printing and stationery.

Order in council P.C. 1963-1450 dated October 3, 1963, transferred to the department of public printing and stationery from the Department of Defence Production, the responsibility for the procurement of print for books and publications.

Order in council P.C. 1964-156 dated February 3, 1964, transferred to the Secretary of State of Canada the powers, duties or functions of the Minister of Industry relating to the department of public printing and stationery.

2. Yes, these changes and transfers were made under order in council. Such orders in council are not normally published in the Canada Gazette.

APPLICATIONS UNDER MUNICIPAL LOANS ACT, N.S.

Question No. 979—Mr. Armstrong:

Have requests been received from municipalities in Nova Scotia under the terms of the Municipal Development and Loan Act and, if so, what requests have been received?

Mr. Benson: Two requests have been received. These are (a) the Caledonia power and water board, Glace Bay, for a loan amount of $160,734 and (b) the town of Amherst and county of Cumberland for a loan amount of $555,003.

TARIFF BOARD DECISION ON COLD HEADING WIRE

Question No. 986—Mr. Irvine:

1. As a result of certain representations made by members of the steel alloys industry in November 1963, has the tariff board reached a decision on cold heading wire and, if so, what is the decision?
2. If not, when will a decision be reached and reported?

Mr. Benson: 1. The tariff board has not yet forwarded to the Minister of Finance its report on wire and wire products.

2. The board's report is not expected until the end of the year.

COMMISSIONERS OF COUNTRIES PARTICIPATING IN WORLD FAIR

Question No. 991—Mr. Latulippe:

1. What are the names of the commissioners representing the various countries which have agreed to take part in the 1967 world fair?
2. How many of them have so far visited the site of the world fair?

[Translation]

Answer: 1. To date the Netherlands and Belgium have appointed their section general commissioners to take part in the 1967 world fair.

They are: H. E. Simon Hendrik Visser; Mr. Jan Albert Goris.

The Canadian government has appointed Mr. Leslie H. Brown as general commissioner for the participation of the Canadian government.

2. These three persons have already visited the world fair site.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE CLAIMANTS, ROUYN-VAL D'OR, QUE.

Question No. 997—Mr. Laprise:

1. How many appeals were made to the board of referees by claimants at the unemployment insurance commission office at (a) Rouyn (b) Val d'Or, during the year 1963 and, of that number (i) how many decisions were modified (ii) how many were maintained?

2. How many claimants were considered ineligible because they left their jobs voluntarily?

3. How many claimants were considered ineligible because they refused to accept the job offered?

4. What has been the total number of unemployed claimants who registered at the unemployment insurance commission office at (a) Rouyn (b) Val d'Or for the years 1960, 1961, 1963, and 1964?

Mr. MacEachen: 1.

	No. of Appeals	Allowed	Disallowed
Rouyn	232	34	198
Val d'Or	122	10	112

2. 586 in Rouyn and 536 in Val d'Or.

3. 334 in Rouyn and 147 in Val d'Or.

4. Information not available. However, following is the number of initial and renewal claims received in the period concerned.

	Rouyn		Val d'Or
	Initial	Renewal	Initial	Renewal
1960	9,994	3,684	7,125	3,249
1961	9,145	3,687	6,400	3,012
1962	8,697	3,290	5,854	2,567
1963	8,234	3,374	6,063	2,574
1964 (to 31 March)	3,067	1,271	2,214	858

Many of the claimants filing renewal claims would be the same as those filing initial claims in the same year.

INVITATIONS TO CITIZENSHIP AND IMMIGRATION MINISTER, SKEENA CONSTITUENCY

Question No. 1,003—Mr. Howard:

Has the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration been invited to attend any function or visit any place in the electoral district of Skeena for 1964, and, if so, with respect to each such invitation, by whom was the invitation given, for what function or purpose, at what time or times, and has it been (a) accepted or (b) declined?

Mr. Badanai: The Minister of Citizenship and Immigration has received an invitation from Mr. John Poussette to inspect the condition of historic totem poles in the electoral district of Skeena in the summer of 1964. (a) Mr. Poussette has been advised by Mr. Tremblay that it would please him to accept this kind invitation but that it is not yet certain when the minister will visit British Columbia or how much time will be available to him for this purpose. If the minister cannot join Mr. Poussette personally a senior official of the Indian affairs branch will be asked to go along with Mr. Poussette and report to the minister. (b) Not applicable.

INVITATIONS TO FINANCE MINISTER, SKEENA CONSTITUENCY

Question No. 1,006—Mr. Howard:

Has the Minister of Finance been invited to attend any function or visit any place in the electoral district of Skeena for 1964, and, if so, with respect to each such invitation, by whom was the invitation given, for what function or purpose, at what time or times, and has it been (a) accepted or (b) declined?

Mr. Benson: No.

INVITATIONS TO INDUSTRY MINISTER, SKEENA CONSTITUENCY

Question No. 1,009—Mr. Howard:

Has the Minister of Industry and Minister of Defence Production been invited to attend any function or visit any place in the electoral district of Skeena for 1964, and, if so, with respect to each such invitation, by whom was the invitation given, for what function or purpose, at what time or times, and has it been (a) accepted or (b) declined?

Mr. Drury: No.

INVITATIONS TO LABOUR MINISTER, SKEENA CONSTITUENCY

Question No. 1,011—Mr. Howard:

Has the Minister of Labour been invited to attend any function or visit any place in the electoral district of Skeena for 1964, and, if so, with respect to each such invitation, by whom was the invitation given, for what function or purpose, at what time or times, and has it been (a) accepted or (b) declined?

Mr. MacEachen: No.

INVITATIONS TO MINES AND TECHNICAL SURVEYS MINISTER, SKEENA CONSTITUENCY

Question No. 1,012—Mr. Howard:

Has the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys been invited to attend any function or visit any place in the electoral district of Skeena for 1964, and, if so, with respect to each such invitation, by whom was the invitation given, for what function or purpose, at what time or times, and has it been (a) accepted or (b) declined?

Mr. Benidickson: No.

INVITATIONS TO POSTMASTER GENERAL, SKEENA CONSTITUENCY

Question No. 1,018—Mr. Howard:

Has the Postmaster General been invited to attend any function or visit any place in the electoral district of Skeena for 1964, and, if so, with respect to each such invitation, by whom was the invitation given, for what function or purpose, at what time or times, and has it been (a) accepted or (b) declined?

Mr. Nicholson: No.

INVITATIONS TO PUBLIC WORKS MINISTER, SKEENA CONSTITUENCY

Question No. 1,020—Mr. Howard:

Has the Minister of Public Works been invited to attend any function or visit any place in the electoral district of Skeena for 1964, and, if so, with respect to each such invitation, by whom was the invitation given, for what function or purpose, at what time or times, and has it been (a) accepted or (b) declined?

Mr. Deschatelets: No.

INVITATIONS TO SECRETARY OF STATE, SKEENA CONSTITUENCY

Question No. 1,021—Mr. Howard:

Has the Secretary of State been invited to attend any function or visit any place in the electoral district of Skeena for 1964, and, if so, with respect to each such invitation, by whom was the invitation given, for what function or purpose, at what time or times, and has it been (a) accepted or (b) declined?

Mr. Lamontagne: No.

INVITATIONS TO TRADE AND COMMERCE MINISTER, SKEENA CONSTITUENCY

Question No. 1,023—Mr. Howard:

Has the Minister of Trade and Commerce been invited to attend any function or visit any place in the electoral district of Skeena for 1964, and, if so, with respect to each such invitation, by whom was the invitation given, for what function or purpose, at what time or times, and has it been (a) accepted or (b) declined?

Answer: 1. Prince Rupert chamber of commerce. To inspect port facilities. Invitation extended January 3, 1964. Declined. Invitation not received until return to Ottawa, January 5.

2. Mr. Frank Windsor, Aluminum Company of Canada, Ottawa, on behalf of the associated chambers of commerce of central British Columbia and their Alaskan affiliates. To speak to delegates, annual meeting in Kitimat. June 4, 5 and 6. Declined.

GRUNTHAL, MAN. POST OFFICE

Question No. 1,031—Mr. Jorgenson:

1. What is the revenue of the post office at Grunthal, Manitoba, for the year ended March 31, 1963?

2. Has a survey been made to determine if the Grunthal district requires better post office facilities?

[Mr. Howard.]

3. Is it the intention of the government to construct a new post office at an early date?

Mr. Nicholson: 1. $3,378.13.

2. The Grunthal post office belongs to the class of offices where it is the responsibility of the postmaster to provide satisfactory premises to house the office as a condition of employment. A work-load survey was made in late March 1964 at which time it was ascertained that this post office still belongs to that class. However, it was determined that the existing premises are barely adequate to meet the requirements of the community and our field officials have been requested to conduct a further investigation in this regard.

3. No. As this office belongs to the class of offices where the postmaster is required to provide adequate premises, no action will be taken to provide crown owned accommodation.

TRAINING OF UNEMPLOYED

Question No. 1,032—Mr. Orlikow:

1. How many people have enrolled in the program of training for the unemployed under schedule M of the technical and vocational agreements with the provinces?

2. Of those enrolled, how many (a) completed the courses they began (b) failed to complete their training programs?

3. Has the government received any information as to the reasons why people who begin the courses do not complete their training?

4. Has the government received any complaints from the provinces that the living allowances are insufficient to permit those taking the courses to complete them, or received reports that some married students do not have enough to eat?

Mr. MacEachen: 1. 32,825 persons were enrolled under program 5, "training for the unemployed" in 1963.

2. (a) 17,627 persons completed training in 1963. (b) 13,050 failed to complete their training programs in the same period. The remainder were still in training at the end of the year.

3. While complete information in this regard is not available, a number of trainees discontinue their training to take employment while others discontinue because they find it difficult to study after a long absence from school.

4. No.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE CLAIMANTS

Question No. 1,040—Mr. Ricard:

How many registered claimants for unemployment insurance were there in Canada at the end of each month between January 1, 1962 and April 30, 1963?

Mr. MacEachen:

	No. of Registered Claimants
January, 1962	698,538
February	718,668
March	687,450
April	564,478
May	263,862
June	214,311
July	211,975
August	198,694
September	197,799
October	244,140
November	374,191
December	591,965
January, 1963	703,081
February	720,461
March	687,318
April	567,471

*TRAINING OF OLDER WORKERS

Question No. 1,047—Mr. Rynard:

Has the government taken any steps to ensure that those employees hired under the on the job training program for workers over 45 are, in fact, being trained?

Mr. Byrne: The employer in applying for approval of his job vacancy under the provisions of the older worker employment and training incentive program describes the training to be given the worker. Each month in applying for payment of the incentive he certifies that he has conformed with the training and other provisions of the program. An evaluation of all aspects of the program is being carried out including training.

HARBOUR IMPROVEMENTS, MCBETH POINT, LAKE WINNIPEG

Question No. 1,049—Mr. Stefanson:

1. What improvements has the government planned for the harbour at McBeth point on lake Winnipeg?

2. What is the estimated cost and when will this work be carried out?

Mr. Deschatelets: 1. The department is investigating possible improvements to the breakwater facilities at McBeth point.

2. This information will not be available before completion of the investigation.

FLAG DESIGNS

Question No. 1,062—Mr. Coates:

How many flag designs have been received in the office of the Secretary of State?

Mr. Lamontagne: 2,995 designs.

CARGO TONNAGE, SAINT JOHN, N.B.

Question No. 1,066—Mr. Bell:

What has been the general cargo tonnage, loaded and unloaded at the port of Saint John, N.B., each year since 1950, expressed as a percentage of the total tonnage of all types of cargo for that port (both excluding and including crude petroleum)?

Answer: General cargo, port of St. John, N.B., expressed as a percentage of the total tonnage of all cargo.[1, 2, 3]

General cargo expressed as a percentage of all cargo.

1951[3]	60.2 per cent
1952	46.1 " "
1953	43.1 " "
1959	24.8 " "
1960	17.0 " "
1962	9.4 " "

[1]General cargo consists of those commodities which are reported to us as "general cargo". The tonnage of "general cargo" has declined because more commodities which were formerly reported as "general cargo" are now being reported by specific commodity name.

[2]Crude petroleum is not included in general cargo figures.

[3]Figures for coastwise tonnage movements are not available and are not included in this total for 1951.

PUBLIC WORKS LAND, DRAYTON VALLEY, ALTA.

Question No. 1,069—Mr. Horner (Jasper-Edson):

1. Does the federal Department of Public Works own land in Drayton Valley, Alberta and, if so, is a public building to be constructed on it and when?

2. If the land is not to be used for such a purpose, for what reasons was such a decision taken?

Mr. Deschatelets: 1. The federal Department of Public Works owns property in Drayton Valley, Alberta, which it is holding as a future public building site. No decision has been taken as to when construction may commence.

2. Not applicable.

*SOUVENIR SETS OF CANADIAN COINS

Question No. 1,072—Mr. Rynard:

In view of the great demand for souvenir sets of Canadian coins from the mint which has necessitated a closing date of April 30 for further orders this year, will the Minister of Finance give serious consideration to additional staff at the Royal Canadian Mint in order that the demands of the public may be satisfied and that this branch of government may continue to show a profit?

Mr. Benson: The minister is giving serious consideration to enlarging and improving the capacity of the mint to meet the substantial demands for coin. It will not, however, be possible to meet the demands for souvenir sets of coins this year without prejudicing the ability of the mint to meet the regular demand for coin for circulation, notwithstanding the profit that might be made from souvenir sets. Additional staff alone is not sufficient to meet both demands.

WATER LEVELS, LAKE HURON AND GEORGIAN BAY

Question No. 1,077—Mr. Smith:

What effect will the increase of the flow of water from lake Ontario into the St. Lawrence river channel have on the level of the water in lake Huron and Georgian bay?

Mr. Laing: None.

NEW CITIZENS, BRUCE COUNTY, ONT.

Question No. 1,078—Mr. Loney:

In the county of Bruce, what are the names and addresses of the new Canadians who received citizenship in the years 1960, 1961, 1962, 1963 and 1964?

Mr. Badanai: The records of the department in respect to persons granted Canadian citizenship are maintained only under the name of the individual applicant and consequently this information is not available.

QUESTIONS PASSED AS ORDERS FOR RETURNS

YUKON TERRITORY—CONTRACTS FOR BUILDINGS, SERVICES, ETC.

Question No. 109—Mr. Nielsen:

With respect to the operations of the Department of Public Works in the Yukon Territory, in each case where the answer to part (iv) of question 1,237 (October 4, 1963) is given by sessional paper No. 270, December 9, 1963, as "yes (quotations)" (a) from whom were such quotations requested (b) what was the amount of each quotation (c) what procedure was adopted to obtain such quotations (d) why was it not practicable to advertise for public tenders?

Return tabled.

"HANSARD" SAVING BY ELIMINATING FRENCH TEXT

Question No. 836—Mr. Marcoux:

What public funds have been saved on each issue of the English debates since French texts were excluded therefrom?

Return tabled.

[Mr. Rynard.]

IMPORTS AND EXPORTS, LATIN AMERICAN COUNTRIES

Question No. 929—Mr. Latulippe:

1. What was the volume and the value of the main exports and imports with the countries of the organization of American states during the past five years?
2. Have any negotiations been started with these countries regarding imports and exports?
3. Has the Department of Trade and Commerce appointed permanent representatives attached to the countries of the common market and, if so, what is the name of each representative and what are the duties of each?

Return tabled.

CANADIAN FLAG

SUGGESTED SUBMISSION OF QUESTION TO REFERENDUM

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): I should like to ask the Prime Minister this in regard to the flag question that is now assuming some interest in the country, has he received recommendations and suggestions that the whole question ought to be submitted to a referendum? Has he given consideration to that? Has the government made a decision in that regard?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Yes, Mr. Speaker, I have received such suggestions, including one from an hon. member in this house yesterday. I answered yesterday that I did not think that would be a practicable or the most desirable course to follow in the circumstances.

Mr. Diefenbaker: From that answer, may we conclude that the decision is that the matter will not be submitted to a referendum?

Mr. Pearson: Yes; the matter will be submitted to parliament.

Mr. Diefenbaker: But not a referendum?

Mr. Pearson: Not a referendum.

EDUCATION

LOANS TO STUDENTS—INQUIRY AS TO LEGISLATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): May I ask the Prime Minister if it is the intention of the government that loans to needy students will be available for the fall term. With that in mind, is the intention of the government to introduce the legislation fairly soon?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Yes, that is our intention. Whether our intention will be carried out will depend on the decision of the house. We hope to get the legislation before the house in ample time for that purpose to be achieved.

[Translation]

Mr. Gilles Grégoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a supplementary question to the Prime Minister. Can he assure the house that before introducing this measure he will enter into the required negotiations with the government of the province of Quebec?

[Text]

Mr. Pearson: That matter has already been discussed with the provinces.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

ST. JOHN'S, NFLD.—STEPS TO SETTLE LONGSHOREMEN'S STRIKE

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Michael Starr (Ontario): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Labour. In view of the fact that a strike of longshoremen in St. John's, Newfoundland, has been in progress for about four weeks can the minister tell us what steps are being taken to assist in bringing the parties together to bring about a solution of this problem?

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of Labour): The senior officer of the Department of Labour in the Atlantic provinces has been active in the situation for the past several days. The efforts undertaken by him and other officers of the department, in conjunction with a three man committee of the Newfoundland board of trade, have failed up to this time, and there is still quite a wide area of disagreement between the parties.

Mr. Starr: May I ask a supplementary question. In view of this failure, as the minister puts it, to bring the parties together, would not the minister consider trying to bring these parties together on his own initiative?

Mr. MacEachen: Yes, Mr. Speaker; if the circumstances warrant further intervention by the department, that intervention will be undertaken. The parties have rejected a proposal for binding arbitration and the employers, as I understand it, have rejected a proposal for the establishment of an industrial inquiry commission. In this situation, I assure the hon. member for Ontario that at any moment at which further efforts at mediation might be helpful, they will be undertaken.

BASIS FOR FIGURES RESPECTING NUMBER OF UNEMPLOYED

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Pierre-André Boutin (Dorchester): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Labour.

According to the dominion bureau of statistics there were 597,300 persons claiming unemployment insurance benefits on March 31. On the other hand, on April 18, according to official statistics, there were 403,000 unemployed persons across Canada.

Could the minister clearly explain the discrepancy between the two figures, since one is based on a report of the unemployment insurance commission and the other on a sample survey?

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Would the hon. member put this question on the order paper?

[Translation]

Mr. Boutin: Mr. Speaker, I should like to bring up this matter after ten o'clock.

FINANCE

FAMILY ALLOWANCES—PAYMENT THIS FALL TO 16 AND 17 YEAR OLD STUDENTS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. J. W. Monteith (Perth): I should like to ask a question of either the Minister of Finance or the Prime Minister. Due to the fact that the amendments to the Income Tax Act having to do with the extension of family allowances to children 16 and 17 years of age attending school have been withdrawn thus far with the intention of introducing a comprehensive amendment some time later, can we be assured that children attending school this autumn will be in a position to receive these family allowances?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): No one can give that assurance because it will depend on the decision of the House of Commons, and when that decision is given.

Mr. Monteith: May I ask a supplementary question. Will the legislation be introduced in the house in ample time to assure that those allowances are available?

Mr. Pearson: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

Inquiries of the Ministry

REMOVAL OF QUEEN'S PICTURE FROM CANADIAN CURRENCY

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): Mr. Speaker, I have a specific question for the Minister of Finance. Does he intend to accede to the request made yesterday by the hon. member for Lotbinière (Mr. Choquette) to the effect that the government remove the effigy of the Queen from Canadian currency?

[Text]

Mr. Habel: Keep that question for ten o'clock tonight.

Some hon. Members: Order paper.

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Speaker, I wish to discuss this matter after ten o'clock.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

COMMUNIST CHINA—STATEMENT BY EXTERNAL AFFAIRS MINISTER RESPECTING RECOGNITION

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Guy Marcoux (Quebec-Montmorency): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs now that he is back in the house. Can he explain what he meant in The Hague when he spoke about a new Canadian policy concerning communist China?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I will have the opportunity to discuss this matter on Friday next, when we will study the estimates of the Department of External Affairs.

[Text]

Mr. Barry Mather (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, with your permission I have a question I would like to ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Having in mind what appear today to be the gathering clouds over Laos, South Viet Nam, Cuba and the Middle East, would the minister undertake to include in his statement on Friday, on the estimates of his department, his assessment of Canada's involvement or relationship in these dangers?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, there will be an opportunity on Friday to discuss these matters.

[Mr. Pearson.]

CYPRUS—NEGOTIATIONS FOR PURCHASE OF MILITARY EQUIPMENT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): I wish to ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs if his attention has been drawn to reports that the government of Cyprus is negotiating the purchase of bombers, fighter planes, torpedo boats and heavy equipment, and whether any representations are being made to the government of Cyprus through the United Nations to make sure that these purchases will not be used to further aggravate the delicate situation in Cyprus at the present time?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): The answer is yes, sir.

COAL

REQUEST FOR INCREASED PURCHASES FROM NOVA SCOTIA BY ONTARIO HYDRO

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Robert Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. In view of a report in today's Globe and Mail that the cost of United States coal in Ontario will increase substantially in the near future, and in view of the fact that the amount of United States coal imported into Canada last year was up by two million tons over the previous year, would the minister consider making representations to Ontario hydro to encourage increased purchases of Nova Scotia coal?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I will be glad to take the hon. member's suggestion into consideration.

[Later:]

Mr. Lawrence E. Kindt (Macleod): Mr. Speaker, I have been trying to catch your eye for five minutes. Sitting back here in the corner, as I am, that seems impossible. I wanted to ask a supplementary question of the Minister of Trade and Commerce but I see he has left the chamber. I only hope some other minister or member of his staff will take note of it. Now that he is giving consideration to supplying the Ontario market with coal, and in view of the rise in price of United States coal, I hope he will take into consideration the supply of coal which has traditionally served Ontario from the Crowsnest pass of Alberta. I ask him if he will take into consideration the coal from the Crowsnest pass of Alberta.

THE MINISTRY

NATIONAL REVENUE—APPOINTMENT OF MINISTER

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Marcel Lessard (Lake St. John): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister.

In view of the fact that we are beginning to receive a great many complaints from our people about the 1963 income tax, could the Prime Minister tell us whether he intends to appoint a minister of national revenue soon so we could discuss those problems with him, because I do not believe the present minister will be there permanently? It would be a good thing if we could have discussions with the minister who will be appointed to that post.

[Text]

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the present minister is of course competent to deal with these matters, and we hope before long there will be a permanent minister appointed.

DOMINION-PROVINCIAL RELATIONS

STUDY OF EFFECT ON CANADA OF SEPARATION OF QUEBEC

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Reid Scott (Danforth): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister of which I sent him notice. In view of the action of the Quebec legislature in setting up a committee to study the social, cultural and economic effects of separation upon the province of Quebec, and in view of the urgent need for the widest possible dissemination of information on this subject and in particular its effect on the rest of Canada, would the government consider ordering a study of the economic, cultural and social effects upon the rest of Canada of separation by Quebec, so the fullest measure of information would be available to discuss this important subject?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Well, Mr. Speaker, the government would be glad to give consideration to the hon. gentleman's proposal, but I would like to add that we are convinced any such study would be entirely academic, because no such separation is going to take place.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Scott: I am sure the sentiments of the Prime Minister are shared by every member in the house, but is he aware that there are people in Canada who really think Canada can get along separately, and that it might be useful if this type of information were available?

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, I am very much aware of that, and I repeat we shall give consideration to the hon. gentleman's proposal.

[Translation]

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a supplementary question to the Prime Minister.

In the name of national unity, had the Prime Minister given instructions to the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Hellyer) to denounce Mr. René Lévesque because the latter is in favour, for Quebec, of the status of associated state?

Some hon. Members: Ten o'clock.

[Text]

Mr. Pigeon: Yes or no? Mr. Speaker, I want to discuss this matter after ten o'clock.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member asked a question but I did not hear any answer. In view of the fact that there is no answer there can be no disagreement or dispute, and I do not see how the hon. member could discuss this at ten o'clock.

Mr. Pigeon: It is a proper question.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, I should like to raise a question of privilege. I directed a question to the right hon. Prime Minister and I got no answer. Under the standing orders I think I am authorized to raise that question after ten o'clock, at the first opportunity.

Some hon. Members: Tonight.

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: I want to assure the hon. member I will take it into consideration and give a decision just as soon as possible.

AGRICULTURE

EGGS—DROP IN PRICE IN WESTERN CANADA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Reynold Rapp (Humboldt-Melfort-Tisdale): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Agriculture, but in his absence maybe some other minister will take it as notice. Could the minister explain to the house the drastic drop of 17 cents per dozen in the price of grade A eggs in the western provinces? What steps, if any, has the government in mind to stop this unheard-of price drop? At the present time the wholesaler gets more for grading and packaging the eggs than the producer receives.

Mr. Speaker: Would the hon. member put this on the order paper.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

INQUIRY AS TO AMENDMENTS RESPECTING FUND

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Hon. Théogène Ricard (St. Hyacinthe-Bagot): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Labour. Since more than half a million Canadians are receiving unemployment insurance benefits, could the minister tell us what is the present financial position of the unemployment insurance fund?

[Text]

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I would be glad to answer this question, which is statistical, if my hon. friend would put it on the order paper.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): In this connection, Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that the rehabilitation of the bankrupt unemployment insurance fund was spoken of as one of the priorities, I would like to ask the minister is it just a matter of coincidence that it did not appear on the list of matters to receive attention before the summer recess?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, the intention of the government with respect to action in the way of amending the unemployment insurance fund was stated by the Prime Minister during the debate on the address in reply, and no change has taken place with respect to that declared by the Prime Minister.

Mr. Diefenbaker: That still does not answer the question. Is it the intention of the government to bring in any measure before the summer recess to rehabilitate that fund?

An hon. Member: What recess?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether the parrots over there could be kept quiet.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. It is quite impossible for the Chair to hear the questions unless there is better order.

URANIUM

DISPOSITION OF UNFILLED PORTION OF GUNNAR MINES CONTRACT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a perfectly proper question to the parliamentary secretary to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. I apologize for not giving more notice, but the question got immersed in the Columbia river documents. Would the parliamentary secretary inform the house what is the government's intention with respect to the disposition of 1,200,000 pounds of uranium oxide from the Gunnar Mines unfilled contract?

Mr. Speaker: Important as the question is, surely it is not the type that should be asked at this time. Would the hon. member put his important question on the order paper.

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Speaker, I would like to give notice to have a go at ten o'clock.

COMMONWEALTH RELATIONS

TRINIDAD—CONFERENCE TO CONSIDER CLOSER TIES WITH CANADA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Thomas M. Bell (Saint John-Albert): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Is the minister aware that on Monday the prime minister of Trinidad announced details of a high level conference this year on closer ties with Canada? If so, can we have the details here, and can we be assured that the government will take an enthusiastic part in such a conference?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I have not seen the announcement or story of which my hon. friend spoke. When the prime minister of Trinidad was in Ottawa, the Prime Minister of Canada and I had some discussions with him on closer relations with the Caribbean commonwealth countries. Consideration is being given to this matter, and when it has been formally discussed with all of the countries concerned we may be in a position to make a more definite statement.

Mr. Bell: Is the minister aware that the serious-minded President of the Privy Council advocated closer ties for many years, which could amount to a promise by the government to get moving in connection with this most important matter which is of special urgency now because of the transformation through which the West Indies are passing?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): The hon. gentleman has correctly stated the situation. He will find that the action to be pursued in the foreseeable future will not be inconsistent with the attitude taken by this government.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

INQUIRY AS TO FRENCH REPORTING AND TRANSLATION STAFFS

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Guy Marcoux (Quebec-Montmorency): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport as regards the translation and interpretation system that we have in this house. On the 8th of October last I asked him a question to which he gave the following answer:

[Text]

"Seeking to do everything that can possibly be done to meet them"—that is, to meet the difficulties.

[Translation]

I should like to know whether the minister has actually done something to overcome those difficulties.

[Text]

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): Yes, sir. I did everything I could while I had the capacity to do it.

[Later:]

[Translation]

Mr. Robert Beaulé (Quebec East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Public Works. Does the minister intend to instal an air conditioning system in the centre block, considering that we will soon have to put up with the warm weather of the summer? I think it is an opportune time to find out what the department proposes to do in that connection.

Hon. J. P. Deschatelets (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, such a system is included in the overall plan covering the extensive improvements we intend to carry out in the centre block. However, my hon. friend will understand that no work can be started while the house is sitting. The program will be launched at the first opportunity.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

POSSIBLE TRANSFER OF HOSPITALS FROM FEDERAL CONTROL

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. Chester MacRae (York-Sunbury): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Veterans Affairs. Is the minister in a position to answer the question I directed to the Prime Minister yesterday in the hon. gentleman's absence? It is to be found on page 3340 of Hansard.

Hon. Roger Teillet (Minister of Veterans Affairs): I did read the question very carefully, and I had a word with the Prime Minister. The situation obviously is that in the final sense the government must take its responsibility, and I cannot foresee what the circumstances might be where agreement would not be forthcoming.

Mr. MacRae: A supplementary question. Perhaps the answer could be expressed this way; that if the Royal Canadian Legion and the other veterans organizations do not agree with the transfer of any of the veterans hospitals, the department will still proceed to carry out these transfers?

Mr. Teillet: I did not give that answer at all. May I say the question appears to be completely out of order. It is entirely hypothetical.

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT

LOSS OF REVENUE FROM NEWSPAPERS AND PERIODICALS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Reid Scott (Danforth): I have a question for the Postmaster General. In the light of the hon. gentleman's speech in Montreal, in which he is reported to have said that the main deficit in the accounts of the Post Office Department results from $22 million lost on the mailing of newspapers and magazines, I should like to know, first of all, why this information was not provided to the house during the discussion of the resolution—

Some hon. Members: It was.

Mr. Scott: —and second, does this mean that the legislation will be revised so the revenue from postage on periodicals and newspapers will be increased by $27 million in order to cover this loss, rather than attempting to recover it by increased charges on first class mail?

Mr. Speaker: Order. Will the hon. member put this question on the order paper.

Mr. Scott: I give notice I should like to raise this matter after ten o'clock.

Mr. Pickersgill: I should like to raise a point of order. The hon. member is seeking to debate after ten o'clock a matter which is before the house for debate now, and it seems to me this is a dubious use of the rule.

Mr. Scott: If the hon. gentleman would give us an assurance that this subject will come up immediately for debate I should be glad to withdraw my suggestion.

INCOME TAX ACT

Hon. Walter L. Gordon (Minister of Finance) moved the third reading of Bill No. C-91, to amend the Income Tax Act.

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Winnipeg South Centre): I rise at this point to ask for information. Bill No. C-91 has been before the house on several occasions. It was amended in several respects and we were quite prepared to complete third reading today, but we should have in our possession the reprinted, amended bill, and copies of that bill have not reached our desks. May I ask the Minister of Finance if they are ready?

Mr. Gordon: Yes, they are ready, Mr. Speaker.

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): I should like the minister to assure us that the change which was requested by the hon. member for Pontiac-Témiscamingue (Mr. Martineau) has been made. This was why the bill was held over last night.

Mr. Gordon: I am glad to give that assurance. I made inquiries earlier this afternoon to make sure the bill had been reprinted in accordance with the undertaking given last night. I am sorry a copy was not sent to the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre. I believe a copy was sent to the hon. member for Digby-Annapolis-Kings (Mr. Nowlan).

Mr. Churchill: It is not a question of sending one to me. They should be circulated to every member of the house. May I ask the Minister of Finance if he will assure us at this stage, so as not to delay proceedings, that the bill as reprinted is correct in every particular and that the amendments have been made?

Mr. Gordon: To the best of my knowledge and belief, Mr. Speaker.

[Translation]

Mr. Gilles Grégoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, before third reading is given to this bill to amend the Income Tax Act, I should like to deal once again with a subject which particularly affects us and which we want to consider when we have the opportunity to do so. We are asked to pass the income tax bill presented by the Minister of Finance, but we are most conscious of certain obligations imposed upon us when considering, from a practical point of view, bills placed before parliament.

We have protested on many occasions against the application of certain bills passed by parliament or against the manner in which these are applied. I merely want to point out to the minister that the Income Tax Act, which we have already passed and amended today, is applied in a vexatious manner in the province of Quebec, especially as regards receipts for charitable donations. Every day, we get complaints about the attitude of the income tax inspectors of the Quebec office concerning the application of the income tax legislation we are passing.

Therefore, I wish to take this opportunity to ask the Minister of Finance to see that, not only we pass income tax legislation, but also—and it is his responsibility—that inspectors respect the legislation that is passed at the request of the Minister of Finance.

Pieces of legislation are submitted to us, explanations are provided but those responsible for their administration should administer them exactly as they have been passed and not only according to their whim or at their convenience, by annoying taxpayers and treating them almost as thieves; they should see that the taxpayers are given satisfaction, in accordance with the provisions of the law, since taxpayers must not only pay to provide for the needs of the government, but at the present time they must put up with the inspectors, especially those of the Quebec office.

I am asking the Minister of Finance, before the third reading, to assure us personally, either by way of an investigation or otherwise, that the pieces of legislation which he sponsors, the measures of the Minister of Finance concerning taxes, are strictly complied with to the satisfaction of taxpayers.

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: On division.

Motion agreed to and bill read the third time and passed.

BANK ACT—QUEBEC SAVINGS BANKS ACT

EXTENSION FOR ONE YEAR OF AUTHORITY TO CARRY ON BUSINESS

The house resumed, from Tuesday, May 19, consideration in committee of the following resolution—Mr. Gordon—Mr. Lamoureux in the chair.

That it is expedient to introduce a measure to amend the Bank Act and the Quebec Savings Banks Act to extend by one year the authority to carry on business for the banks to which these acts apply.

Mr. Olson: Mr. Chairman, last night when the committee rose I was suggesting that there were a number of recommendations and a number of suggestions of the Porter commission that we in this party endorse and agree ought to be brought in as quickly as possible. As a matter of fact I pointed out that there were in this report a number of what might be called new concepts in the functioning of the banking system in Canada that ought to be accepted. I should like to extend those commendations on behalf of this party by including that part of the royal commission's recommendations where it says that the commission also recommends that steps be taken to guard against excessive concentration of the financial system and to outlaw price arrangements among financial institutions. Then this is found at page 369 of the report, where the commission points out:

—competition is an uneasy state and that, however much they may thrive under it, businessmen have an inclination to protect themselves against it.

I think perhaps this is as true in the banking business as in other businesses. The commission also recommends that the Minister of Finance be granted the necessary powers to prevent lending and borrowing agreements among banking institutions, and that there be a limit on the extent of interlocking directorates between banking institutions and other financial institutions. As I pointed out, Mr. Chairman, with this we agree; but when it comes to matters of monetary policy and debt management which are covered in chapter 22 of the Porter commission report, I want the Minister of Finance to know that we in this party take very strong exception to some of the remarks contained in this chapter and to the concept that the commission seems to have adopted. For example, on page 453 the report says this:

Despite a recent revival in a subtle form of the "burden of the debt" controversy, it is generally accepted that domestic interest payments are best thought of as part of a transfer process which has effects on the distribution of incomes and wealth and involves some administrative costs but does not impose other real burdens on the community as a whole.

If $1,035 million in annual interest charges that is paid by the taxpayers of this country is best thought of and generally accepted as not being a burden to the community, we cannot agree and we do not accept this concept at all. The report goes on to say:

Since virtually all of the federal government's debt is held within Canada, the transfer argument applies in our case.

If all the people of Canada had an equal share in the debt of the country, I would suggest that this is valid; but we have only to turn our memories back to 1958, when the federal government chose to call in all the victory bonds that had been issued during the war and convert them to other long term issues. Under questioning at that time the minister of finance was asked, "Where did you find these victory bonds?", because of course most of them were non-registered, marketable securities. He did not give an exact answer as to who owned them at that time, but I think he did say he was alarmed at the number that had been found in the vaults of the chartered banks and the other financial institutions. If it is generally accepted and best thought of that these interest charges that are paid by the federal treasury are a means of distributing some of our income to these financial institutions—if this is the purpose—I think the financial and monetary system of this country has reached a new low in its function. We cannot accept that, Mr. Chairman. Of course, we see that the author of this report takes a swipe at the Social Credit party, when over on the preceding page he says this:

The view that government should pay no interest on its debt, financing its needs solely by the issue of currency, is the reductio ad absurdum of a cost minimization approach. Such a policy in conjunction with deficits in the government's accounts would lead inevitably to extreme credit ease throughout the system, an exchange crisis and finally uncontrollable inflation. Many of those who propose this view ignore the physical limitations on economic output, assuming that what can be paid for can be produced at current market prices.

We do not suggest that the government should pay absolutely no interest on its debt. The argument that they use to follow this up is:

Many of those who propose this view ignore the physical limitations on economic output, assuming that what can be paid for can be produced at current market prices.

What we have said is that what can be produced, can be paid for—and not the other way around. What we have said is that what is physically possible should be made financially possible. We believe that if the review and the amendments to the Bank Act that will be coming up, which is in fact a mandatory obligation of this house, is going to be based on this kind of concept in so far as monetary policy and debt management is concerned, we are not going to get out of the financial problems that the federal levels of government and all other levels of government are having. I think it is time the Minister of Finance rose and gave us some explanations respecting this paradox, in that we seem to have reached the stage where we must have deficits, and everybody accepts that. The Conservatives were in office from 1957 to 1963 and they had a deficit very single year during that period. Since the Liberals have come back to office, in spite of the terrible things they have said about deficits they too are budgeting for a deficit. Furthermore, there is no indication at this time that they even have their sights aimed at a date when they will be able to manage the affairs of this country without having a deficit.

I want to say in fairness, Mr. Chairman, that we in this party have criticized the enormous deficits we have had in the past few years, but having said that I think that if we had to choose between deficits and the kind of economic contraction which leads to the depression of the type we knew in this country prior to the second world war, we and everyone else in the country would prefer deficits rather than setting that kind of economic activity in motion.

The interesting thing about these deficits is that in the space of three or four years since 1958 we have also had an expansion of the interest charges on the national debt, which annually amounts to more than the deficit itself. This is the kind of paradox which I think the Minister of Finance should explain. I would ask why it is that if we have to have deficits to keep our economy buoyant, along with those deficits we have to have increased interest charges which more than account for the deficits? Our party has advocated for years that if we could take the first step toward putting a solid foundation under our social capital requirements and had this money provided by the Bank of Canada, eventually we would be able to inject new money into our economy to keep it going to the extent of its physical limitations, while at the same time keeping debt charges down. In that way we would not run into the situation where our debt charges add more and more to our deficits, and where the higher are the debt charges the higher are our deficits. It is really a vicious circle.

The report goes on to say that—there are those—and I presume that refers to those in the Social Credit party—who say that we should pay all our expenses with new money. That is, all our government expenses. We have never said that. We have said that part of the social capital requirements could be supplied by the Bank of Canada. In the last fiscal year, 1963, reports indicated that there was an expansion in the money supply in this country of $1,345 million. If the federal government needed about $700 million in new money of that $1,345 million, we consider this expansion of the social capital requirements could be supplied by the Bank of Canada. I cannot understand why it would be any more inflationary if this money were to come from the Bank of Canada than if it were supplied by the other chartered banks in the country. I cannot understand why it would increase inflationary pressures if it came either from the chartered banks or from the Bank of Canada. When parliament gets to the point of sending to the standing committee on banking and commerce for recommendations to change the bank charters of this country, we believe there should be some new recommendations made respecting the Bank of Canada as well.

The Porter commission dealt with this matter to some extent I believe in chapter 26. We all remember the controversy between the minister of finance and the governor of the Bank of Canada in 1961, I believe it was, and this has been taken into consideration by the commissioners. As reported at page 543 of their report they say:

> The Bank of Canada Act should be amended to make this clear and to provide the Minister of Finance with the right to issue a directive to the bank if the government disapproves of its policy.

I am happy to see these words in the report, because I think the commissioners have recognized that the political authorities in this country must be supreme and that all the branches of government must, in the final analysis, acquiesce in the wishes of the federal cabinet. The report goes on to say:

> We therefore recommend that any directive take the form of an order in council to ensure that it receives cabinet consideration—

So apparently after we adopt these recommendations there need no longer be any conflict between the incumbent minister of finance and the governor of the Bank of Canada.

I am not going to go any further at this time, Mr. Chairman, but my reason for drawing these matters to the attention of the Minister of Finance now is that if he also accepts what the report says is generally accepted and best thought of with respect to the interest charges on the national debt, then we are going to have a great deal of difficulty in trying to come to some kind of agreement as to how the Bank Act should be amended, after it is reviewed.

[Translation]

Mr. Rondeau: Mr. Chairman, with regard to the resolution to amend the Bank Act so as to enable our Canadian banking institutions to carry on business for another year, I was unable to find in the explanation given by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Gordon) the main reasons why a one-year extension was being granted to them without amending the present act.

Everybody may not share our opinion to the effect that financial reforms should be made in our country, but everybody agrees, however, that the financial situation in Canada is one of the most serious and probably one of the most urgent problems.

When we consider the whole financial situation of Canada, and in particular the financial situation of the provinces, of our municipalities and school boards, in short when we see that the provincial governments, and more especially the Quebec government, are forced to take steps, at this time, to find the necessary funds in order to meet their requirements, I think that it would have been appropriate, this year, to introduce amendments to the Bank Act, because if we postpone that review for another year, we postpone by that much the introduction of proposals or amendments to the present act which could be brought about this year.

Unfortunately, today, in our modern world, no difference is made between public and private capital; our banks are there to play their part as financial institutions to meet the needs in private capital, they are there to live, make money, make profits and they set up their organization in the private sector to make such profits. That is normal and we do not blame them at all for making money, but we are against the banks having access to the public sector; as private organizations they should not finance the public sector, they should not invest in our municipalities, school boards or anything that comes under the federal government.

Public capital does not bear interest; no profit can be made out of highways because they are public capital. Nowadays, money is borrowed from private enterprises to be invested in public capital; citizens are compelled to pay interest because private enterprises have been allowed to receive interest which they should not claim.

I would like the Minister of Finance to tell us what he thinks about that and whether he puts private capital and public capital on the same footing. Indeed, he is a businessman, and an experienced accountant; he admits that capital must earn a profit, but it is not normal that a municipality or a school board, which do not make any profit, should be compelled to pay interest to private companies in order to develop.

When public works are carried out nowadays, the taxpayers and electors have to pay, through interest charges, two or three times for the schools, bridges and roads which are built, because the Bank of Canada does not provide the necessary public capital.

For years now Social Crediters have been saying that banks have the right to operate in the private sector of our economy. Financiers who invest money in private enterprise have the right to expect a profit, but we who advocate Social Credit, have also stated that banks should not finance non-profit public projects. That is why we make a distinction between private and public capital. That is also the reason why we ask the Minister of Finance once and for all to take his responsibilities concerning the Bank of Canada and to bring it to play its role in the field of public capital.

Investment is needed everywhere in fields which do not yield any interest but which are beneficial to everybody. The Bank of Canada should be there to meet the needs of public capital and the requirements of our society.

Now, I wonder when the Minister of Finance will assume his responsibilities once and for all in the field of public financing; we are here in parliament to satisfy the needs of the general public. We find it stupid that a government has to borrow from private institutions, from chartered banks, money which it could obtain from the Bank of Canada at 1 per cent instead of 6 per cent, as our public bodies are now doing. The country or the central administration would save a great deal of money that way.

We should realize that the Minister of Finance, in his budget, has almost a billion dollars interest on the public debt. We must pay every year a billion dollars in interest, that is, as the hon. member for Medicine Hat (Mr. Olson) said, a little more than the amount of our annual deficit. We had several deficits under the Conservative administration, we had another one last year and we will have a new one in 1963-64, because nothing is changed in the monetary and financial policy.

Finance is very important in the management of a company, and it is even more so in the federal administration. Nevertheless, it does not seem that much interest is shown in that. When Social Crediters speak of finance, there is a tendency to laugh at them. However, it is the most important problem in Canada, because if we have to go on seeking for and borrowing money in the world, in the United States, New York, Washington, from the American or Canadian finance companies, in order to develop our country and pay back, after 30 years, twice the value of the borrowed capital, we will never get out of our debts which will increase from budget to budget; and if our debts increase, taxes will increase also. Now, when taxes go up, the cost of living necessarily goes up. It is necessary to include in tax increases—

The Chairman: Order. The hon. member will allow me to interrupt him for a moment only, in order to ask him whether it would be possible for him to relate his remarks to the resolution now before the committee.

Mr. Rondeau: Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that my remarks are relevant to the proposed measure: to maintain for another year the power our banks now have. The Minister of Finance did not tell us why he wanted to give banks another year without improving at all, through an amendment, the existing legislation.

Now, I should like him at least to tell us what amendments he intends to bring to the Bank Act. Indeed, why give one more year, if no change to the present act is anticipated? If the minister wishes to give the banks an additional year for their operations, I believe that some amendments must be made to this act. It would give us an opportunity to help him if we discussed those amendments, because at present we cannot see the reasons why the government wants to give the banks one more year, when this is supposed to be done every ten years.

Those are the reasons why I made my observations concerning this resolution. Now, we will wait for the bill to have more details concerning that matter. But once again, Mr. Chairman, I want to say that it is stupid to live in a country as rich as Canada, as well organized in terms of production, and to have a financial system according to which the more we develop, the more debts we have.

[Mr. Rondeau.]

Resolution reported and concurred in.

Mr. Gordon thereupon moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-98, to amend the Bank Act and the Quebec Savings Banks Act.

Motion agreed to and the bill read the first time.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: When shall the said bill be read a second time?

Mr. MacNaught: I wonder whether we could have unanimous consent of the house to have second reading of the bill now. We have a few copies available for distribution and they can be distributed immediately. It is only a short bill.

Mr. Pigeon: Have you copies in French and English?

Mr. MacNaught: In French and English.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: By leave, now?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Translation]

Mr. Gérard Perron (Beauce): Mr. Speaker, I am opposed at this stage to the second reading of this bill because, in my opinion, it is of the utmost importance to know exactly the content of the bill in order to have the opportunity for explanation and study. Consequently, I am against the second reading of the bill.

[Text]

Mr. MacNaught: The bill is being distributed, and the hon. member could take a moment to look it over.

[Translation]

Mr. Guy Marcoux (Quebec-Montmorency): Mr. Speaker, the Porter commission took several years to study all the suggestions made and to arrive at a decision. In the circumstances, it would perhaps be appropriate for us to take more than a few minutes to study this bill. Consequently, I suggest that the second reading of the bill be deferred to another sitting of the house.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Second reading at the next sitting of the house.

TERRITORIAL SEA AND FISHING ZONES

LEGISLATION RESPECTING TERRITORIAL WATERS AND FISHERIES LAWS

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs) moved the second reading of Bill No. S-17, respecting the territorial sea and fishing zones of Canada.

He said: Mr. Speaker, because of its importance I intend to make some general remarks on the bill, which has to do with the territorial sea and fishing zones, and which is now before the house for second reading. It is the intention of my colleague the Minister of Fisheries (Mr. Robichaud), who has been very intimately associated in this matter with me in my capacity as Secretary of State for External Affairs, that the bill be referred to the standing committee on marine and fisheries.

The bill before the house has two principal purposes and these are accomplished each in a somewhat different manner. They are both set out in the first part of the bill, as hon. gentlemen will have noted.

First, the bill establishes the fishing zones of Canada at 12 miles from the coast line. When it is passed by parliament and proclaimed, Canada will have a fishing zone in the 3 to 12 mile area off our coast line. This, in the view of the government, is a fundamental achievement of the bill. It is not enabling legislation in this respect. On proclamation, the 12 mile fishing zone will be established. I must emphasize there is no doubt, and there can be no doubt, about this point.

Canada has never published official charts showing the present base lines, but for at least parts of our coast the base lines follow the sinuosities of the shore. Pending the establishment of straight base lines, the fishing zones will be measured from the existing ones. This is clearly provided for in the bill.

The second important purpose of the bill is to apply the straight base line system to the Canadian coast line. This part of it, unlike the section concerning fishing zones, will be of an enabling character. When the bill comes into effect the governor in council will be authorized to draw straight base lines. The question may be asked: what does this achieve? In response, I would say that what the bill accomplishes is of great significance. It makes applicable the straight base line system to the Canadian coast. These straight base lines will be drawn in accordance with international law, on the basis of the decision of the International Court of Justice in the Anglo-Norwegian fisheries case and of the Geneva convention on the territorial sea and fishing zones and taking into account Canadian historic interests in the bodies of water off our coasts.

Thus, while the bill is enabling in so far as the drawing of specific or individual base lines is concerned, it has this immediate general effect; it makes applicable, on proclamation, the general system of straight base lines to the Canadian coast line. The authority that is given to the governor in council is with respect to the specific lines to be drawn and the exceptions to be made. The larger effect of the bill is to make applicable the principle of the straight base line system to Canada. Hon. members will note that the bill specifically provides that all areas enclosed by the new straight base lines will be internal waters of Canada. This is important and may have far reaching consequences.

Part II of the bill consists of the amendments that are to be made to certain acts of Canada pursuant to the main purpose of the bill. These are consequential changes which will make existing legislation applicable to the new fishing zones and areas within the straight base lines. The acts amended are the Aeronautics Act, the Canada Shipping Act, the Criminal Code, the Customs Act, the Fisheries Act and the Coastal Fisheries Protection Act. Their provisions will now conform with part I of the bill. Part III of the bill provides that the act will come into force on a day or days to be fixed by proclamation of the governor in council.

This, in brief, is the general scheme and contents of the proposed legislation on the territorial sea and fishing zones of Canada. I am sure the house will agree that this bill is of the greatest significance for our country.

I have heard some say that we are going too fast; that we should not consider moving forward unilaterally; that parliament should not be asked to take action until a general international agreement has been reached or until specific agreements are worked out with the countries fishing off our coasts. On the other hand, I have heard comments that we are moving too slowly; that we should now embody in the bill the co-ordinates of points from which the base lines are to be drawn; that the bill should designate the specific bodies of water which we are closing off. I need only add in passing, of course, that we are now in the stage of very important negotiations and this, in itself, answers any criticism in that regard.

I am convinced that in taking this action now—as the government is doing, unilaterally —Canada is acting in accordance with present day international law and practice. The government is convinced that we are following the wisest course in immediately seeking agreements with the countries affected by our action. We are equally convinced that we must carry forward our negotiations with these countries before we proclaim the base lines for our entire coast line. We are confident, in short, that we are proceeding in the proper way.

Let us look for a moment at the suggestion that we should not act unilaterally. This house knows of the great efforts made for many years to achieve international agreement. This house knows how Canada tried at the two law of the sea conferences—and before and after them—to achieve some form of international agreement.

Canada was the first country to put forward in an international forum the concept of a 12 mile fishing zone in which a state has the same jurisdiction over fishing as it has in its territorial sea. This was the general assembly in 1956. Canada took the lead at the first law of the sea conference in 1958 as my hon. friend, the former minister of fisheries, will attest. The then government of Canada made the most strenuous efforts to obtain support for the 12 mile exclusive fishing zone. Notwithstanding all the efforts that were put into that particular initiative, the proposal failed.

The period before the second law of the sea conference in 1960 was one of most intensive diplomatic activity. At the conference itself Canada sought the support of the United States, Britain and the western European countries for our formula of a six mile territorial sea, six mile exclusive fishing zone, and a ten year phasing out period. Had these states supported us at the first conference there is no question that we would have had agreement on a rule for the territorial sea and for an exclusive fisheries jurisdiction.

But it was too late. The second conference followed in the footsteps of the first; it failed. It failed by a single vote, but the fact is that it failed.

Then Canada took the lead once again in trying to pick up the remains of the second Geneva conference. Canada tried to win support for a multilateral treaty among like-minded countries in favour of our proposal at the second Geneva conference, and my recollection is that this was done by the former administration in February, or thereabouts, of 1963. But the results were inconclusive. Once again our efforts on the multilateral plane had failed.

When the present government took office a year ago we came to the conclusion—and we regretfully came to it—that for the foreseeable future there was no possibility of reaching general agreement on a 12 mile fishing zone.

Canada had to make a choice. There were two possibilities. We could have decided in favour of postponement. This would have meant an indefinite delay. This would have meant that we would not have for a long time the 12 mile fishing zone which this legislation will make possible. Meanwhile, our resources would have continued to be depleted, as greater and greater fishing fleets drew nearer our shores. Or, we could have decided to establish a fishing zone without waiting for international agreement, and to draw the fishing zone from straight base lines.

Our experts looked at the situation in international law. We found that there were 42 countries which claimed a territorial sea limit of more than three miles. We found that 23 countries claimed fishing zones in excess of their territorial sea. There were thus over 50 countries claiming control over fisheries beyond the traditional three mile rule. In the circumstances the government concluded that a decision by Canada to establish a 12 mile fishing zone from straight base lines would be soundly based on present day international law and practice. We chose this course, and so the government has brought forward accordingly the legislation we are now considering.

In establishing the fishing zones of Canada and in making applicable the straight base line system to our coast line, the bill provides a legal basis for the international achievement of our aims. Our action is in this sense unilateral, for who else can proclaim base lines or establish the fishing zones for Canada?

But at the same time we know that our action has international implications. We know that, notwithstanding the many countries claiming limits beyond three miles, there are a number of states, important fishing nations, which firmly maintain that they are not bound to recognize any limits beyond the traditional three mile rule. Consequently, it will be recalled that the Prime Minister informed this house a year ago that we would consult with the countries affected by our action and that we would seek to work out satisfactory arrangements with them.

When the government took its decision to establish a 12 mile fishing zone and straight base lines, we did not minimize the problems involved in some of the negotiations lying ahead of us. Nor do we minimize them now. These negotiations may be difficult and we must accept this fact.

When a country seeks to achieve recognition for what it has done, when it seeks to protect its interests, it must be prepared to discuss and to negotiate with the countries that are affected. Existing in a world of sovereign states, we must do the best we can to achieve our ends through negotiation.

This is what the government of Canada is now in the process of doing. We have already had three rounds of negotiations with the United States. In the last two months we have had a round of discussions with Norway, Denmark, Britain, Portugal, Spain, Italy and Japan. All these countries sent officials to Ottawa to have talks with us, and in our negotiations with the United States one of the meetings took place in Washington. I am hopeful that in all cases our discussions will work out satisfactorily, but I do not want in any way to minimize the difficulties of the negotiations themselves.

Hon. members may ask what is the basis of our talks with these countries? What do we expect to achieve? What base lines are we asking these countries to accept or to acquiesce in? These are fair questions and I will try to give a clear and frank response.

When straight base lines are proclaimed in whole or in part for the Canadian coast line, and when Canadian laws are enforced in the fishing zones, the situation will be as follows:

First of all, those countries which have not fished in the three to 12 mile zone or have just begun to fish, will not be able to come in under Canadian law. They must cease their operations at once, both in the fishing zone and in the internal waters enclosed by the base lines. I would urge the house not to underestimate the importance of this fact.

Since the last war we have seen the birth of enormous fishing fleets of certain countries, ranging thousands of miles away from their home ports. These ships are equipped with the most modern equipment and use the latest techniques. So far the vessels of certain important fishing countries have not come within 12 miles of our coasts. It is possible that they might do so soon. By establishing fishing zones now, before they can lay claim to any so-called historic fishing rights, we are excluding them under Canadian law from coming into our 12 mile zone in future, and we are thus protecting the living resources of our adjacent areas.

Second, as I have said, we are now discussing arrangements with those countries which do not possess treaty rights but have fished off our shores for many years. I refer to Portugal, Spain, Norway, Denmark, Britain and Italy. There is no question in our minds of allowing the indefinite continuation of historic fishing rights for these countries. The basis of our proposals to them is the possibility of allowing a period of time for adjusting their fishing operations so that their fishermen do not suffer any undue economic loss.

Under such arrangements, fishing by these countries would continue for a period of time, subject to non-discriminatory Canadian regulations. But it would then cease and, like those states which do not claim traditional fishing rights, fishermen of these countries would not be allowed to come into the 12 mile zone under Canadian law.

Third, we have had discussions with those countries which do possess treaty rights off parts of our shores—the United States and France. The French have had treaty rights for over two centuries to fish off parts of our coastline. Under the convention of 1904 they have the right to fish off the west, and parts of the northeast coast of Newfoundland. With the United States there is the treaty of 1818 providing specific fishing rights off the coast of Labrador and parts of the coast of Newfoundland. These rights allow United States fishermen to fish within the three mile limit. In addition, there is the treaty of Washington of 1912 between Canada and the United States which ended a long and complicated series of negotiations and implemented, in part, an award by an international tribunal based on the treaty of 1818. The treaty of Washington specified terms for the closing of a number of bays on the east coast of Canada, both inside and outside the gulf of St. Lawrence.

We have made clear that the United States and France will be allowed to continue to fish in those areas where they have fished before, subject to agreed arrangements and regulations for the protection of the fisheries concerned.

I have said that the bill makes applicable the straight base line system to Canada. When the specific base lines are delineated, all the waters inside these lines will become internal. The territorial sea and fishing zones will be drawn seaward from the new base lines. Thus, the delineation of the new lines may affect the fishing operations of other countries. In some cases, their traditional fishing practices may be disturbed. For this reason, it is necessary to determine the general effects of our action on the countries concerned before publishing the base lines. Pending this determination and an opportunity to carry forward our discussions with the countries concerned, we have decided to allow a short period of time to elapse before starting to enforce Canadian laws in the fishing zones of Canada.

Both my colleague the Minister of Fisheries (Mr. Robichaud) and I have already emphasized that we were not in a position to indicate the state of our negotiations concerning our straight base lines and the bodies of water which may be enclosed by these base lines. I am sure this will be understood. While negotiations are under way with foreign powers, friendly though they may be, no disclosure may be made until such time as it is in the interest of the parties concerned. To take any other course would be self-defeating. I can make clear, however, that in a general way we have based ourselves on the brief by the fisheries council of Canada of January 28, 1963, which recommended closing lines for the gulf of St. Lawrence, the bay of Fundy, Hudson bay and Hudson strait, Dixon entrance, Hecate strait and Queen Charlotte sound. I cannot at the present time go beyond this general indication of our position.

I am hopeful, however, that our discussions will soon be completed and that the governor in council will be in a position before the end of the year to proclaim a list of geographical co-ordinates of points for application of the straight base lines to at least a part of our coast line. If our optimism, here, proves unwarranted it will not be because this is not our present appreciation of the situation; it will be because of the nature of the negotiations themselves. It is unlikely that the governor in council will publish points covering our entire coast line in his first list. It is possible that, depending on how our discussions proceed, he will publish several lists and that, in the first, base lines will come into force only for those areas in respect of which we have completed our talks.

I should like to conclude by discussing briefly our negotiations with the United States. The Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) said on June 4:

> In my discussions with President Kennedy at Hyannis Port, I informed him that the Canadian government would shortly be taking decisions to establish a 12-mile fishing zone. The President reserved the long standing American position in support of the three mile limit. He also called attention to the 'historic' and treaty fishing rights of the United States and I assured him that these rights would be taken into account. Discussions will be held with the United States with a view to determining the nature and extent of the United States' rights and interests that may be affected by the action which Canada is taking.

I am confident that the United States and Canada will be able to work out a solution in this field, as we have in other difficult problems. In view of our tradition of the closest co-operation, I remain optimistic that we will reach a satisfactory common accord.

[Mr. Martin (Essex East).]

But we have not yet been able to settle all outstanding questions. On most matters there are no differences between us; in certain other areas, our points of view have yet to coincide.

The Prime Minister made clear in the house that Canada for its part is prepared to be fair and just towards our neighbour. In our efforts to reach an accord with the United States we will continue to be guided by our tradition of friendship. We are convinced that our case is a fair one, solidly based on legal, economic, and historic considerations as well as those of a security nature. The configuration of our coast line, the needs of our people, and the interests of our security, require us to draw base lines so as to enclose Canadian internal waters. We have informed the United States that in view of their treaty rights and in order to be as fair as possible to the interests of their fishermen we are prepared to allow them to continue to fish in those areas where they have operated until now, subject to agreed regulations for the protection of the fisheries concerned. We are endeavouring to obtain their acquiescence in our straight base lines and to the application of Canadian regulations in the waters affected by our action.

We hope that with the adoption of this legislation our negotiations will be substantially furthered. I am sure that the introduction of this bill, which provides for the establishment of a 12 mile fishing zone and which enables the government to establish a straight base line system, will be a material factor in the negotiations which are still under way. The differences which we must overcome do not affect large parts of our coastal limits where there should be no difficulty in achieving agreement on what we propose to do. I am hopeful that in the foreseeable future all difficulties will have been removed and that our long standing desire to protect our coastal waters will be realized. I believe this bill will commend itself to the house.

Hon. J. A. MacLean (Queens): It is a pleasure for me to take part in this debate on a most important subject which has been near to my heart for a number of years.

I wish at the outset to congratulate the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Martin) on the reasonable and generous attitude he has taken in the course of his remarks. But I regret that in this matter, which is one of national importance and is one with which I think all parties in this house agree in general terms the attitude now shown by the minister has not been shown by spokesmen for the party of which he is a member in the heat of election campaigns. I regret very much the attitude that was taken on many occasions by speakers on behalf of the party now in power, during not only the last campaign but the last three or four campaigns. I suppose some of these people can be excused up to a point, because in most cases they were not people who were most familiar with the problems involved.

I feel this is a very important matter not only to Canada's fishermen but to Canada as a nation. It is a problem that we must try to solve with as much of a united front as we can present to other countries when negotiating with them for what we consider to be our rights. It is, of course, an important subject, chiefly because as the world population increases, the demand on the living resources of the sea increases at an even greater rate, with the result that many countries have greatly enlarged their fishing fleets and their fishing efforts over the last few years and larger and larger fleets are operating closer and closer to our coasts as time goes by.

This bill represents the Canadian reaction, as expressed by the present government, to this state of affairs. I do not propose to review the fact that discussions have been going on with regard to this subject for a number of years. The Secretary of State for External Affairs reviewed this situation very fairly, I think, and I believe it was a matter of great regret to all Canadians interested in this matter that the proposal put forward by Canada at the 1960 Geneva conference missed being accepted by only one vote. Indeed, up to the last moment it seemed that it would be accepted, but for some reason that has never been explained, at least one country—I think in fact there were two or three—abstained from voting. What their motives or considerations were, nobody knows; but at the very last moment the proposition was lost. I think this was a great loss to international law generally, and to a reasonable development of international law as far as the living resources of the sea are concerned. Following that failure to carry the Canadian six plus six proposal—that is, the familiar six miles territorial sea, plus six miles exclusive fishing zone—

Mr. Martin (Essex East): It was then a compromise formula.

Mr. MacLean (Queens): That is correct. Following the failure to carry that proposal, the Canadian government did not just sit on its hands, as I heard many speakers of the party of the Secretary of State for External Affairs state during the last election campaign—and I think very unfairly. I say this because I have great regard for the officials of the departments concerned, chiefly the Department of External Affairs and the Department of Fisheries, in this very difficult field. They worked hard and conscientiously, and so did the government of which I was a member; and I would doubt if as a result of the change of government there has been any appreciable change in the speed of the progress being made. I think it is fair to say that had the former government still been in power we would almost certainly be at least as far ahead as we are now—perhaps farther. I am willing to admit that the opposite could be the case. However, in both cases our objectives are the same; they are the objectives which, as the Secretary of State for External Affairs said, are expressed in a submission to the government by the fisheries council of Canada. I believe this submission is dated January, 1963. Actually the letter transmitting it to me was dated January 28.

Unfortunately the government of which I was a member was defeated in the house within a week of that date. I would just like to highlight that date, because it has been inadvertently published in the newspapers of Canada—due, I think, to a typographical error—that this submission was made in 1961. Everybody recognizes that it was actually made in 1963. I believe the fisheries council have done a great service to Canada by presenting this resolution, because by so doing they have tremendously strengthened the hand of any government in these negotiations. By making these recommendations they have at least in a measure taken, on behalf of the fishing industry of Canada, some of the responsibility for any reaction which might come from other countries as a result of our action in this field.

I hope there will be no detrimental reaction, but I think this is a possibility that we should not forget, that some countries that are friends of ours have very strong reasons for objecting to either an extension of the territorial sea or an extension of the exclusive fishing zone. Persons may be misled by the fact that these friends of ours joined with us as a compromise in the Geneva conference to support our resolution; but they joined with us only for the purpose of trying to bring order into the chaos of international law in this field, and they reserved their position for the future. It did not follow that if the resolution did not carry, as was the case, they would still support the concept that this bill expresses, as a matter of fact. This is something that must be fully realized. As the Secretary of State for External Affairs rightly pointed out when quoting the statement of the Prime Minister of last June 4, the President of the United States stated specifically that they reserved their position on this matter. Any notion that, because the United States and some other countries supported the Canadian position in 1960, their position is still the same, is not valid. As far as any possible reaction arising out of this action on the part of the Canadian government is concerned, I think some people are lulled into a sense of false security by the statement that the United States has to buy our fish, the same as we have to sell it to them.

In this context, Mr. Speaker, I should like to remind hon. members that we export at least two thirds, in value, of our catch to the countries of the world, and a great percentage of that catch goes to the United States. I am not suggesting that the ministers responsible have this notion, but the United States have other places from which they can buy fish, if they so choose. If they had a long term contract with other countries, those other countries could even extend their fishing fleets for the very purpose of supplying the United States market, if that unfortunate situation should come about. All I am saying is that I hope there will be no reaction of this sort from any country which is affected by the action we are taking; but we must not fail to realize that this is a possibility which must be guarded against in our negotiations.

There are, as I have said, certain categories to the recommendations made by the fisheries council; and the minister has said that roughly this is what the bill is trying to achieve. However, I want to say categorically that the party for which I am speaking at the moment supports the objectives in mind—I want this to be perfectly clear—provided, of course, they can be achieved by negotiation without an overriding liability.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): That is precisely our position.

Mr. MacLean (Queens): I believe this has been the responsible position of the Liberal party for a number of years, although it is not, of course, my place to speak for them. For this reason I regret most strongly the statements which were made during the last election campaign. I had better not be specific because I am speaking from memory, but statements were made to the effect that if the present government came to power they would very quickly declare unilaterally an exclusive fishing zone up to 12 miles, regardless of what happens. Let the chips fall where they may; it was perfectly simple. They said that the reason this was not done sooner was because the government of the day was not acting rapidly and resolutely enough.

I have tried to be fair in this connection, Mr. Speaker, but that was a statement which was completely invalid and should never have been made. We now have the commitment made by the present government that within a very short time of their coming into office they would declare a 12 mile exclusive fishing zone. The Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) on June 4 of last year made a statement in this regard on behalf of the government. He said that by the middle of May this year this legislation would be in effect and that this action would have been taken. I think that if one reads the fine print carefully he would discover that the Prime Minister may have created an escape hatch or two. The bravado-like statements made before the election have been soft pedalled a little and a note of caution introduced. Nevertheless the statement was made that a 12 mile exclusive fishing zone would be in effect by the middle of May 1964.

I think that if this bill were bringing this about we would have nearly reached that objective; but the trouble is that the fisheries council recommended that certain bodies of water, which the Secretary of State for External Affairs mentioned, should be proclaimed Canadian national waters, and with this I agree. The bodies of water which come to my mind are the gulf of St. Lawrence, the strait of Belle Isle, bay of Fundy, Hecate strait, Dixon entrance and Queen Charlotte sound.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): And Hudson bay.

Mr. MacLean (Queens): Yes, Hudson bay; but I believe Hudson bay is in a somewhat different position in that we have already declared it to be a national water. With this objective I concur, but I think the minister will agree with me that we have the power under the Coastal Fisheries Protection Act to take this action by order in council. I have no objection to restating the requirements in this bill especially if it will strengthen the hand of the government in its negotiations with other countries. I am perfectly willing to support the bill on that basis. But I do not support the bill on the basis of trying to make a shadow look like a substance, and going through the legislative process at this time in order to make the Canadian people believe that more is being done at the moment than is actually being done. The speed with which our final objective, which we all share, will be achieved depends on the progress and the success of the negotiations, which the secretary of state rightly said are still in progress. And they are very difficult negotiations; I am the first to concede that point.

This particular part of the bill cannot be effective until the bill is proclaimed, and I note that nowhere in the bill is there reference to a date of proclamation. No part of the bill can come into effect until it is proclaimed an act. With regard to these national waters and the delineation of the geographic co-ordinates which will determine the base lines by which our territorial waters are to be measured, until these orders in council are passed—and the minister said that some of them may be passed by the end of this year—this bill can have no effect. As the secretary of state said, when the bill is proclaimed it will establish, in theory at least, an exclusive fishing zone beyond our territorial waters, which at the moment would be an exclusive fishing zone of nine miles beyond our present territorial waters.

This brings me to a very important point. At the 1958 law of the sea convention in Geneva several conventions were approved, I think four in all. One was a convention on the territorial sea and contiguous seas. Another was a convention on the high seas. However, these conventions become effective only when a certain number of countries ratify them; I believe 22 countries in the case of some of the conventions. I think I am up to date when I say that in no case have enough countries ratified any of these conventions—although one of them is very close to ratification—to make them effective. It is curious that the Secretary of State for External Affairs did not mention that Canada has not ratified any of these conventions. I would ask why this is, Mr. Speaker. I suspect the reason Canada has not ratified any of these conventions is because if we started to ratify one of them we would have to ratify them all.

Article 2 of the convention concerning the high seas says this:

> The high seas being open to all nations, no state may validly purport to subject any part of them to its sovereignty. Freedom of the high seas is exercised under the conditions laid down by these articles and by the other rules of international law. It comprises, inter alia, both for coastal and non-coastal states:
> (1) Freedom of navigation;
> (2) Freedom of fishing;

I need go no further than that.

This bill states in one breath that our territorial sea will extend to three miles from certain base lines, and then in the next it proceeds to enact legislation, to apply to the nationals of all countries, with regard to the next nine miles, which the bill itself admits is part of the high seas. If we can bring this off, Mr. Speaker, I am all for it, do not misunderstand me; but in this connection I believe we are on very shaky ground with regard to international law. As a matter of fact, the convention of 1958 agreed to at Geneva, though not ratified by us, specifically prohibits what we are about to do.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I would hope that I did not understand my friend to say that the effort to establish straight base lines with regard to waters that we hope will be regarded as internal will put us in a position where we do not have a legal case.

Mr. MacLean (Queens): Oh, no.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I am sure my hon. friend did not mean that and I would not want such words to be before us in the negotiations because I am sure he agrees with me that we have a good case.

Mr. MacLean (Queens): I agree fully and I contend we are completely justified in stating that these bodies of water I have mentioned, and perhaps more, are national waters and belong to Canada. I think we are on fairly good legal ground as far as international law is concerned up to this point and also with regard to the establishment of the straight base line method. There are certain precedents for this and there is the moral suasion of certain events that have happened in the past plus references to the court of international justice, and matters of this sort that add strength to our claim in this regard.

I agree 100 per cent with the minister on this point, but I go on to say that when we proceed in the bill to establish an exclusive fishing zone beyond our territorial sea we are on shakier ground. I hope that will succeed too but I would foresee that when we pass this legislation almost certainly it will be tested. It will not be done right away, but when the act is proclaimed and the nine mile exclusive zone will be in effect adjacent to our present territorial waters—

Mr. Martin (Essex East): From the present base line.

Mr. MacLean (Queens): From the present base line—I would predict that, unless we can arrive at unanimity in the negotiations, the legislation will be tested in the courts. I believe we would be on much sounder ground as far as international law is concerned if we had proclaimed 12 miles of territorial sea instead of three miles of territorial sea and nine miles of exclusive fishing zone. There is the difficulty there, of course, of which I am fully aware, that we would be running head on into the objections of our most important friends on this point, and that is not a practical posture to take in the matter.

There is another important point I want to reiterate. A great deal of attention has been paid to this legislation and to this whole concept, and it has always been referred to as the exclusive 12 mile fishing zone, the 12 mile limit. The motion has grown up that the exclusive fishing zone is a more important aspect of the matter than the declaration that these bodies of water are to be national waters. I believe that the most important thing is the clear establishment that these large areas, like the gulf of St. Lawrence, are national waters. I believe that the second most important thing as far as our fishing industry is concerned is to establish straight base lines. I believe that the third most important thing is the width of the exclusive fishing zone. However, if we achieve the first two, much of what is required will be achieved by that fact alone and the actual width of the exclusive fishing zone will not be of such great importance. It will be of very great importance in some areas, however, especially so far as our inshore fishermen are concerned because then their fixed gear will not be torn up and destroyed by foreign trawlers, and so on.

It will also have fairly important conservation benefits as far as some species of fish are concerned, such as lobster, shellfish and other estuarial fish. However, as far as the problem of the conservation of the living resources of the whole ocean is concerned, the width of the exclusive fishing zone has very little effect. It has some effect but it is only a very small percentage compared to the whole and it will not begin to solve the great problems that face us in this modern world with regard to arriving at agreed upon methods whereby we can conserve the living resources of the sea for the good of all mankind and arrive at a method by which they can be exploited fairly by the countries concerned.

As far as this legislation is concerned, it will be of no benefit in preserving our salmon resources on the west coast. It will have virtually no effect in that regard because this species of fish migrates for hundreds of miles out into the ocean and can be caught on the high seas, regardless of how wide we make our exclusive fishing zone, by the nationals of other countries, unless we can continue to broaden the areas of treaties for the purpose of conserving intelligently these important fishing resources.

I see that it is five o'clock, Mr. Speaker. I am just about finished but I may have two or three thoughts that have escaped me at the moment, so I should like to take this opportunity to adjourn the debate.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Batten): Order. It being five o'clock the house will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely notices of motions.

CANADIAN CONSTITUTION

COMMITTEE TO CONSIDER DIVISION OF LEGISLATIVE FUNCTIONS

On the order:

Notices of motions—Mr. Asselin (Notre Dame de Grâce):

That a special committee be appointed to consider matters relating to the constitutional structure of Canada, desirable changes thereto and in particular, without limiting the generality of the foregoing, the proper division of legislative functions between levels of government; that the committee have power to send for persons and papers; that it report from time to time its findings and recommendations to the house; that standing order No. 67 be suspended in relation to the committee; and that it consist of 24 members to be designated at a later date.

Mr. MacNaught: Mr. Speaker, I suggest that, with unanimous consent of the house, this motion stand.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Batten): In order for this motion to be retained on the order paper there will need to be unanimous consent. Does the house give unanimous consent for this motion to stand?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion stands.

INCOME TAX ACT

SUGGESTED DEDUCTIONS OF CONTRIBUTIONS TO POLITICAL PARTIES

Mr. J. E. Lloyd (Halifax) moved:

That, in the opinion of this house, the government should consider the advisability of amending the Income Tax Act to permit taxpayers to deduct from taxable income contributions to registered national political parties, providing such deductions do not exceed a stated maximum percentage of taxable income.

He said: Mr. Speaker, if the principle of this resolution were adopted a Canadian taxpayer in essence could divert a limited amount of his income to a political party, an amount that would otherwise be paid out as income taxes. Several considerations prompted me to move this resolution. They arise mainly from the fact that the role of government, in ordering the economic affairs of our nation, has evolved to a greater degree of responsibility than ever before in our history. Evidence of that fact is apparent when we reflect upon the impact on our economy of new policies that could flow from the GATT conferences. We have found it necessary to establish an economic council to advise government on the state of the nation's economic health and the measures to improve it.

The unique division of powers under our federal constitution has brought the provincial governments into the field of economic planning within their provincial boundaries. Their provincial objectives must be co-ordinated with our national objectives. Canada recently found it necessary to stabilize the Canadian dollar, to peg it at a value of 92½ cents, with the financial assistance of the international monetary fund. That decision brought advantages to some sectors of our economy, and disadvantages to others.

The affluence of the Canadian economy, or otherwise, depends upon the volume of our exports to other nations of the world. All of them are dedicated to employ the powers of government to attain full employment for their people. They are bound to introduce economic policies that will require counter measures, as well as co-operative efforts on the part of our national government, that could involve loss of opportunity for some existing industries in Canada, and gains for others.

It is the government of Canada and parliament that have to make the hard decisions in the light of international developments, as they transpire, with due regard to the overall benefit to Canada as a whole. The challenging responsibilities of governments in the economic field in the world today and tomorrow must be discharged by the men and women elected to parliament and to the legislatures.

To ensure that parliament shall discharge its duties with a maximum of democratic objectivity, fairness and justice, we maintain the party system of nominating and electing its members. That process calls for a continuous flow of funds to party treasuries, not only for election campaigns but also to maintain party responsibilities between elections.

If Canadians are not encouraged to make contributions to political parties, with a high sense of service as democratic citizens, we encourage undemocratic influences upon those elected to office. In April, 1962, a commission appointed by the late President Kennedy submitted to the United States congress a report of its inquiry into the matter of presidential and vice presidential campaign costs. I quote from that report:

> Given the erratic flow of funds and the periodic crises in campaign finance, individuals and organizations providing substantial gifts at critical moments can threaten to place a candidate in moral hock. In consequence, a disturbing and fundamental failure of present practices is the widespread cynicism about the democratic system they produce.
> The heavy dependence of political parties in presidential campaigns upon substantial gifts from and expenditures by a relatively small number of individuals and organizations lends itself to widespread misinterpretation. While the great majority of such contributors to presidential campaigns is not motivated by expectation of specific preferment, none the less, for the vitality and acceptance of the democratic system, we hope to see a significant increase in the number of contributors, both to spread the cost of campaigns and to diffuse more widely through the population the sense and the reality of participation in the politics of democracy.

The United States commission of 1962, among other recommendations, proposed that one half of the contributions by individuals to a maximum of $10 per year be deductible from annual income taxes or, in the alternative, that they be permitted to deduct up to a maximum of $1,000 per annum from taxable income.

It is feared by many with a practical knowledge of our political system that efforts to have governments subsidize the cost of elections could lead to a weakening of the democratic process. While measures can be adopted to reduce election campaign costs, they will not eliminate the need for a substantial volume of voluntary contributions.

It is the present practice, under the Income Tax Act, to disallow contributions to political parties. Many corporations contribute, as well as individuals. Looking for a moment at the corporations, while such outlays are included among operation expense, in reports to shareholders they are added back to income, for income tax calculations. It is a fact, Mr. Speaker, that such contributions are disbursed in the form of cash payments. This poses a problem for both shareholders and auditors as well as the income tax auditors. They must satisfy themselves that the payments were in fact made for the alleged purposes.

The procedure of verification is usually confined to questioning the responsible officers of the corporation. Third party verification is not customarily employed. This opens the door to diversion of corporate funds to personal use under the guise of an alleged party contribution. In this manner income taxes are avoided on what would otherwise be dividends taxable in the hands of a shareholder.

This difficulty confronting auditors could be overcome by requiring corporations, as well as other taxpayers, to make these payments to political parties registered for that purpose with the income tax department. The use of cheques, with the proceeds payable to a political party, and the use of receipts would do much to alleviate the difficulty of auditors in this field, and then the secrecy clauses of the Income Tax Act should be sufficient protection for those who desire no publicity.

It is my opinion that large, single contributions are not as prevalent in Canada as in some other countries. I have in mind particularly the United States. Large corporations and wealthy individuals seeking favourable measures from the government can employ other methods to influence decisions. They engage professional lobbyists; they work through trade organizations, and organize publicity campaigns to achieve their objectives.

It is my conviction, Mr. Speaker, that we should adopt policies and practices that make contributions to political parties and election campaigns a wholesome, healthy and desirable thing for Canadians to undertake. We should encourage that effort by Canadians as an honourable service to their country. By adopting a measure such as I propose we place the stamp of approval on political contributions, and I believe it would broaden the base of contributions from many Canadians. Furthermore, I believe it would go a long way towards ensuring government of the people, by the people, for the people.

Mr. MacInnis: Would the hon. member permit a question? He referred to the recent devaluation of the dollar as bringing advantages to some segments of our economy and disadvantages to others. Would he not agree that the advantages far exceeded the disadvantages he spoke of?

Mr. Lloyd: Mr. Speaker, I think this would require some time to answer. For example, one would have to examine the cost to municipal governments of borrowing. Many of them did borrow in the United States and had obligations in the United States. One would have to go through all the measures, but I think perhaps one will agree that the devaluation, on balance, was a good thing. However, the regrettable thing about it was that the awareness of the proper management of foreign exchange rates should have occurred to the Canadian government at a much earlier date than it did.

Mr. Barry Mather (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, I would like to say a few brief words in support of the general principle of the proposal before the house, that is, to make donations to political parties for campaign funds deductible from income tax.

I have two reasons for being brief. First, the idea is so commendable it is easy to understand that no argument in support of it is needed. Second, I would like to see it come to a vote. The proposal to allow income tax deductions for political donations is good both in theory and in practice. We allow union dues and donations to many cultural, health and religious organizations to be deductible from income tax. Why not political donations also? It seems to me in both cases the donor gives his or her money to causes in which he or she believes.

As to the practical aspect of making donations and allowing deductions, I think most of us would agree that the time is overdue for some reform to be made in our campaign fund structures and procedures. This measure, if adopted, would, I believe, amount to a modest step in the right direction. Speaking personally—and I think members of my party would agree—I would not like to see the multi-thousand dollar donations which have been given in the past to some parties made deductible for income tax purposes. I would consider them to be rather in the nature of business transactions. However, there are thousands of people in this country who give regularly to political parties out of their personal purses—and, sometimes, the purses involved are meagre. They give in the belief that the philosophy of their chosen party is such that its application would make for a better way of life for the people of Canada. This type of donation is, I believe, made in very much the same spirit as are donations to churches.

I commend the hon. member for having brought this interesting proposition to the attention of the house, and in case the measure is talked out—perhaps by the hon. member's own colleagues—I should like to put myself on record as saying: Had I voted I would have voted in favour of this proposition.

[Translation]

Mr. Guy Marcoux (Quebec-Montmorency): Mr. Speaker, I wish to speak briefly about the motion moved by the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Lloyd). In principle, I fully agree with the hon. member when he advocates that contributions made by voters to a political party be allowed as income tax deductions by the Minister of National Revenue.

Even if I agree with the principle of the motion, I will not go as far as recognizing that all the reasons he put forward to support his motion are justified. As a matter of fact, when he says that it will facilitate the workings of democracy, I feel that he is deceiving himself a little.

Of course, there would be some advantages if contributions to party funds were disclosed. I would not say this information should necessarily be made available to the general public, but at least the officials of the taxation division should be able to see that contributions have been made to the election fund of some political parties. I do not wish to question the honesty of civil servants, but I simply wish to point out that these figures are available to them, even if they remain confidential; it would be an advantage, since we do not enjoy that privilege at the present time.

In short, this means that contributions would be aboveboard instead of being surreptitious as at present. That is a good beginning, especially if one considers that the government is responsible for so much hypocrisy on the part of taxpayers. Besides, this would enable certain taxpayers to contribute to party funds without immediately becoming hypocrites, since they could declare their contributions to fiscal authorities.

The hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Lloyd) said that corporations unwilling to resort to publicity would not have to do so. That is obvious. As a matter of fact, as I said earlier, if those companies deduct their contributions from their income tax, only certain officials—and the minister, if he is curious enough—would know what big companies have contributed to the election funds of certain political parties.

In spite of all that, it must be recognized that, at the present time, big companies give money to political parties, do not claim it on their income tax returns and do not seem any the worse for it. As a matter of fact, it seems that those companies use money which has not been declared for income tax purposes; therefore, they can give it away very easily, not by cheque but in cash; that is being done at the present time and companies do not seem to complain.

Of course, as pointed out by the hon. member, those companies must enter those amounts under operating costs. They are lucky to be able to add the money they give to political parties to their operating costs.

Of course, ordinary citizens who have contributed to the campaign fund of our party, for instance, and who have given not exactly everything they had but who nevertheless have made enormous sacrifices to support their political party, would benefit from this measure, since they are even denied the right to deduct in their income tax return the purchase price of their working tools and also the actual amount of their charitable donations, as certified by the receipts filed.

The hon. member is in favour of allowing at least a deduction concerning contributions to political parties; that would already be something. Personally, as I said a moment ago, I am entirely in favour of that principle.

I repeat though that we should not expect such a step to improve the functioning of democracy. If we did, we would be deceiving ourselves, because even if all the taxpayers' contributions were accepted, that would represent only a very small fraction of the money spent by the various parties on their election campaigns. That would not take into account either the money paid to election funds by foreign governments and companies. Indeed, it is always difficult to prove such things, but it was rumoured that during the last election campaign, our southern neighbours contributed to the fund of certain political parties, without the Canadian people even hearing about it.

As I say, even if the principle of the motion introduced by the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Lloyd) were adopted—it provides for the publication of certain figures—we would still be in the dark as to the money supplied by foreign companies and individuals.

The hon. member also stated that such contributions would have to be made to registered political parties. I wonder how one goes about to define a registered political party. The privileges and elections committee was asked to consider the advisability of accepting a new political party; it took a decision concerning the specific case, but it did not establish a general policy nor did it define what a political party is. It did not say what would happen if two registered parties had the same platform. If one translates accurately the word used by the hon. member, one wonders where it can be registered. We know that professional organizations with registered members, such as the medical college, for instance, or the bar, have lists of their registered members, but at the political party level, I have never heard of anything of the sort.

We know that there is a general agreement on the existence of recognized political parties, but there is no legal document which actually gives a definition of a political party. Lately, I put a bill to that effect on the order paper and I hope that some day we shall have the opportunity to pass it. Until then, I do not see what criteria would indicate that a political party is considered as registered.

On the other hand, the hon. member referred to a national party. Here again, what really constitutes a national party should be defined. Is it a party which presents candidates in all the provinces? Is it a party which presents candidates in a determined number of constituencies, as I advocated in the bill I submitted?

I wonder, in view of the good intentions of the hon. member, if it would not be proper to include also provincial and municipal political parties which are also in existence so as to permit the people to act in a true democratic way?

If a national political party, such as the one in which the hon. member is active, is recognized, and if his own voters are allowed to deduct certain sums for income tax purposes, I do not see why the voters of his colleague, living in the same area and running as provincial candidate, could not enjoy the same advantages.

I am merely expressing opinions to that effect, with no intention of insinuating anything about the motives which prompted the hon. member to put forward his notice of motion.

In closing, Mr. Speaker, I would say that passing such a motion would in no way solve the problem of political corruption. All the means now being used to corrupt the voters in some way or other, by offering them sums of money, through false publicity, false information, false impressions, will still be used, even if people who contribute to election funds to make such practices possible can deduct from their income the amount of their contributions. The problem of political corruption at election time will therefore not be settled, and I think that we should go much further in the reform of our election practices, before reading this point.

Neither does this necessarily imply that only the stated sums were paid. An individual may declare an authorized sum and deduct it from his profits, but this does not mean that he did not pay additional amounts to finance political parties. Once again, we are going to put the taxpayer in a situation where he necessarily resorts to the very hypocrisy this motion obviously wants to eliminate, but which will be allowed because of the certain loop holes.

Yet, we should be very happy to see that this legislation gives some consideration to the average voter, and perhaps only to the average voter, who labours hard every day to earn his living, and is affected in every income tax field, or the man whose taxes are deducted at the source by the employer, for the benefit of the federal government, or the one who must fight the government to prove that he is being made to pay too much at the source and, as I said, more particularly the taxpayer who is even refused a reimbursement for the implements he had to buy himself to earn his living and, finally, the one whose receipts for charitable donations are disregarded.

Mr. Speaker, as I said earlier, I am, in principle, in favour of the motion before us. If a vote is taken, I shall vote in favour, and if no vote is taken, I would have supported it. Yet, I think that between the motion presented by the hon. member and the bill which will be submitted later, there should be many amendments, and when the motion comes back as a bill, we will have to oppose it if the amendments we mentioned are not incorporated therein.

Mr. C. A. Gauthier (Roberval): Mr. Speaker, I should like to say that I support, in principle, this motion because, as the hon. member for Quebec-Montmorency (Mr. Marcoux) said, it is the beginning of an undertaking intended to give us more honest elections throughout Canada.

Political parties have always had three sources of supply:

1. A foreign source;

2. A source provided by large corporations, foreign as well as local;

3. Small subscribers, individuals.

I do not think that first aim of the mover is to safeguard or protect more particularly the money subscribed to the election funds from outside. I think he was rather thinking of the amounts obtained at home, from large corporations or financial interests, because as regards the money which increasingly comes to us, as indicated by the hon. member for Quebec-Montmorency (Mr. Marcoux) a short while ago, from our neighbour country to support the election of a certain political party, I consider that givers of those sums are rewarded long before they put even one cent into the electoral fund of that party.

We have to suffer the consequences because today, we are the victims of those who sold out our economy. We are now faced with that problem, while their only aim was to come into power. Now, we have to look after the administration.

That is why I maintain that this motion should not deal with tangible contributions from abroad made to certain political parties. One can also be interested in contributions from large corporations, but I think that these big corporations have their reward, even if they did not get it before foreign countries got it by way of protection and promises made to them before they invest thousands of dollars in certain party funds.

That is why we, Social Crediters, maintain that those who were elected with the assistance of such party funds are simply the servants of those who invested in these funds, that is the servants of those big corporations or of those foreign countries.

I feel that this motion contains nevertheless a factor of interest to us. It would also serve to protect the small taxpayer who contributes a few dollars to the election fund of parties with real popular appeal. I say "parties with real popular appeal" because I believe that there are parties today which can call themselves democratic, the others being financial parties. Parties with real popular appeal are not dictatorial parties.

I think that this motion is useful in that it will prompt people to make more sacrifices in order to contribute to the funds of small popular parties, as they are called. I hope that in the near future, those parties will teach a lesson to those big financial parties, so that the people will finally see parliament pass measures beneficial to them and not good only for international financial interests.

I believe that the purpose of this motion might contribute to free the people, something we have been fighting for these last 20 years. To that end, it would be necessary to make a few changes in that motion, by including, for instance, a substantial amendment which would ensure that the tax reduction would benefit mainly the small taxpayer. This way, to start with we could determine the amounts. If ever, as a result of this motion, a bill were presented, it should set the maximum, so that the large companies, as I said earlier, could not benefit by this advantage to cheat the taxpayer even more.

If ever this parliament, following this motion, introduced legislation, it should protect directly all the people of Canada.

The contribution should be established and a receipt issued by the political organization. I do not say by the political party, because here we play so much on the words "political party" that one wonders finally what a political party really is, but a political organization, whether a school, municipal, provincial or federal organization. If someone works toward the election of a man who will work for the good of society, who will join a popular organization to work, not to protect the interests of big companies, but to protect the interests of the citizens, then that citizen is entitled to a receipt, because if we proceed without a receipt, it is useless to talk about a deduction for income tax purposes.

Such a receipt would have a double effect: it would favour the individual who sacrifices what little money he has to put his and his nation's ideas forward, for the protection of society as a whole; furthermore, the practice of issuing a receipt would control certain election funds.

I think that today the control of election funds is becoming more and more imperative, in view of the rise of totalitarian capitalism. I believe that if, tomorrow, we do not take steps to control the election funds of the larger parties, the people will be voting for nothing, because casting a vote will have no meaning in a few years if monetary influence of totalitarian capitalism spreads to the buying of conscience, the buying of election boxes and all the dirty doings which we know occur during an election.

I feel that such a control of campaign funds will become necessary in a few years.

The giving of receipts would be a first move in that direction. To support my point, I should like to say to the house that, in our own ridings, which are not worse than any others, election campaigns cost from $2,000 to $2,500 whereas it is reported that from $60,000 to $65,000 are considered peanuts in other ridings, as far as an election is concerned.

I can assure you that we find that most strange. People ask: "Where can all that money go, considering that parliament is afraid to spend $10 or $100 more than the amount authorized by the budget?" Yet, when it comes to an election campaign in a riding, $50,000, $60,000 or $70,000 are nothing but peanuts.

Consequently, I submit that the control of campaign funds is urgently required.

Besides the giving out of a receipt to every taxpayer who has contributed to election funds, I feel—and I am willing to introduce an amendment to the motion in that respect—that any money paid out by foreigners for an election campaign in Canada—in some cases it constitutes the whole campaign fund—should be taxed so that, before the election, Canada may at least derive some advantage from such taxes on foreign contributions since, after the election, it is those same countries which will reap the advantages.

Those are the few ideas I wished to express on this motion. I hope parliament will make further investigations possible in that field, so that elections may be cleaned up and controlled to a greater extent throughout Canada.

As I said a few months ago, if, after this check on campaign funds, we get the identity card to prevent people from voting five, six, seven, eight and ten times, we shall have made some contribution towards cleaning up the election procedure and we shall then give the country a government of the people, for the people and elected by the people.

Mr. M. L. Klein (Cartier): Mr. Speaker, usually I find myself in agreement with my seatmate, the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Lloyd), but on this issue I am beginning to see eye to eye more and more on less and less. I am opposed to this resolution because I believe it would place in the hands of our taxpayers in the upper income brackets a tremendous power. I do not believe that the deduction of a contribution of $5 for income tax purposes has any meaning; but it does begin to have meaning when tax deductions include large amounts. I would fear that this system would reintroduce the system of patricians and plebeians.

The only taxpayers who I believe would take advantage of this deduction would probably be those earning in excess of $15,000; because those who earn less than that amount are probably on a budget and cannot afford to make a contribution of any sizeable amount to assist political campaigns. This would make political parties completely dependant upon the people in the upper income brackets.

[Mr. Gauthier.]

According to the report of the chief electoral officer on the 26th general election there were a shade under 10 million registered voters in Canada. According to the 1963 taxation statistics there are some 4,500,000 taxpayers in Canada. Of this number approximately 22 per cent pay tax on incomes of $15,000 and over, and simple arithmetic shows that less than 10 per cent of the voting population of this country would be the main contributors to election funds. If this were the case it would mean that political parties would be conscious of their electoral responsibilities vis-à-vis the 10 per cent who were supplying all the money. It would also mean that persons in the upper income brackets would be able to make contributions to political parties in off election years; and in certain instances people in the higher income brackets, in order to become taxable in a lower bracket, would make contributions to political parties even in off election years.

In my view the government should provide election funds for political parties. Some equitable basis should be provided whereby the government would supply the money to political parties in election campaigns. We should also study means to try and reduce the cost of election campaigns, which is mounting every year. In studying means to make elections cheaper instead of more expensive, we should consider bringing the voter to the polls. This is one of the reasons elections are so costly. Candidates have to rent cars or ask their contributors to supply the money to rent them for this purpose. If when he cast his vote the voter were supplied with a certificate by the returning officer which could be attached to his income tax return, thus giving him a credit, whether it be for $2 or $5, and thus reducing his tax liability, this would encourage him to go to the poll and vote.

Mr. Pigeon: A very good idea.

Mr. Klein: You like it?

Mr. Pigeon: Sure.

Mr. Klein: I think we have only to look at our neighbour to the south to see how much money is being spent for election purposes. Take the primaries which are now going on. Candidates are now spending thousands of dollars on delegates for conventions so that these delegates will commit themselves either to this or that candidate for the presidency of the United States. Radio and television costs are going up. If the government were to allot radio and television time to political parties free of charge, or if they were to pay for this time, and each candidate were entitled to two mailings and a specified number of radio and television appearances, there would be equality for all candidates in elections in Canada. This is the view I put forward.

I am strenuously opposed to this resolution. I think it is a wrong step in the wrong direction, and I do not think it would redound to the credit of Canada.

Mr. Lloyd: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, when my hon. friend drew his conclusions I wonder whether he would tell us whether he read the motion. It says—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Batten): Order.

Mr. Lloyd: Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. member has completely misconstrued my remarks. As a matter of fact, he was making an argument in support of them.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Batten): Order, please. When the debate on this matter is concluded I think the hon. member will have his opportunity to reply. If he wishes to reply at that time he may make any remarks he likes.

[Translation]

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): Mr. Speaker, I think it is abnormal for any political party to have to spend considerable sums of money during an election. There should definitely be certain limits set to stop much extravagant spending. We, on this side of the house, are well aware of the fact as, during the last election, we actually suffered much from that extravagant spending, from those large sums of money spent all over Canada, including money from the United States. Consequently, I think that the government should take a stand in this respect, in order that we may have truly democratic elections, and that money be not an item influencing the popular vote. Indeed, the people should be free to vote according to their conscience, and that is why I believe in the necessity of enacting significant reforms at the earliest possible opportunity. I know that the government may refuse to take such action, because it probably feels guilty about the action it took during the last election.

When we consider the attitude of certain political organizers, like Mr. Keith Davey, for instance, who held out the considerable advantages of an election fund and what have you, we cannot but deplore the fact that there should be, in our democratic system, a party with so much power, with so much money that democracy is affected. For this reason, I believe that the government should take action to stop certain political organizers from resorting to blackmail and influencing Canadian public opinion with money, as we were able to see during the last election.

Mr. Speaker, it is abnormal for money to come even from the United States, because when they elect a government of their choice, the Americans are able, afterwards, to try and control the Canadian economy, and I feel that it would be in the public interest that legislation be introduced as soon as possible, so that money will not be a cause of influence during election campaigns, that we may have really democratic elections, and that the people may judge candidates on their value, according to the platform of their party, and that they may not be influenced by the money which is distributed generously, as happened during the last election campaign.

Mr. M. J. Moreau (York-Scarborough): Mr. Speaker, would the hon. member allow me a question?

Mr. Pigeon: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Moreau: Can the hon. member tell us why he did not introduce this reform when his party was in office?

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Speaker, we did not make that reform because we did not have the money to do it. We had no money at all during the election campaign.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Speaker, one has only to check the number of hours that this government used on television, throughout the country, over the national television networks, and one will see that it cost the Liberal government at least three quarters of a million dollars, and that only for one television station.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Batten): Order. I think the debate is now going beyond the bounds of the resolution before the house.

Mr. Grant Deachman (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, in entering this debate may I say I cannot find myself exactly in agreement with the mover of the motion, and I join with another hon. member on this side of the house who did not express entirely the same views as those put forward by the mover of the motion. I consider that quite a few of the objections raised were valid. Today gifts for charitable purposes are deductible under the Income Tax Act. When we consider what is a gift to charity we mean a gift for religious purposes, a gift for the relief of the poor or the sick, donations for educational purposes, recreation and the arts. Over the years the list of such organizations has gradually been enlarged to include various other community projects. Such classes of expenditures are today considered deductible from taxable income whether for purposes of personal income tax or corporate income tax.

But it has never been considered that gifts to political organizations should be made deductible, because if those organizations are elected to office they have the power of changing the laws of the country, regulating the taxes and affecting to a great extent federal, provincial and municipal budgets. It is for this reason that those who have the responsibility for introducing tax laws have stayed away particularly from enlarging the field of deductibility to include contributions to political parties.

Deductibility in such a case would not really accomplish many of the things at the outset which we think it would, and the hon. member for Cartier (Mr. Klein) has referred to a number of these. There is the fact that those in the lower income brackets, who are now allowed a deduction of $100 to cover their donations generally, would not be particularly affected by this measure, while those who have much larger incomes from which to make donations for charitable purposes would have much more to give toward the support of political parties.

Let us take the case of a corporation with $1 million of taxable income, and let us say that this corporation is in the habit of giving away 2 per cent or 2½ per cent of its taxable income. This represents $20,000 to $25,000 a year that it has available for charitable donations. If that company wanted to make political donations of, say, a quarter or a third of the money it had set aside for charitable purposes, that would amount to from $5,000 to $10,000 for a company with an income of $1 million a year, and like amounts from other such companies of reasonable size in many towns and communities in Canada.

The interesting feature is that such a company would say: If we must obtain the customary receipts for charitable purposes and attach them to our income tax statements, then the result will be that this information will become the property of the federal income tax office, and I think this would cause such a company to pause and consider the matter before making such donations. There is also the point, as hon. members know, that many companies are accustomed to giving to more than one political party in the realization that in a democracy the sides may change. Over the years some companies have been accustomed to giving on a 60-40 scale, 60 per cent to the party in power or the party they prefer to see elected and 40 per cent to the other party which they feel may to some extent represent some of their views but which they place as their second choice. Indeed, I have heard it said that some companies even give to three parties. If such funds could be made available for political purposes their division in this way would certainly go out the window, once these donations became deductible for charitable purposes, because I doubt very much that any corporation would wish to find itself in the position of declaring charitable receipts for two or three political parties.

The hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm (Mr. Pigeon) was complaining only a moment ago that while they have not been in office they have found it extremely difficult to find funds.

Mr. Pigeon: We are honest.

Mr. Deachman: I suggest to him that if such donations were allowed as a deduction for charitable purposes they would find it even more difficult, because those who have been in the habit of dividing their contributions among two or three parties would no longer consider doing so.

These are some of the reasons why this measure would not work in the way the mover of the motion thought it would. There is another factor of interest and I should like to close on this note. What we seek, so far as contributions to political parties is concerned, is to broaden the base and enlarge the number of people who make such contributions, rather than to narrow it. Any system which tends to narrow the base and restrict contributions to larger and larger sums from fewer and fewer people and corporations is not entirely in the best interests of the parties concerned, or of the people of Canada.

Some hon. Members: Six o'clock.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Batten): Order. The hour for the consideration of private members' business has expired.

Mr. Scott: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I think the record should show that the Liberals are filibustering once again and preventing votes on these private members' matters.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the acting house leader for the order of business for tomorrow. We know the business for Friday and next Monday and Tuesday. If he mentions interim supply would he indicate the period of time for which interim supply is being asked?

Mr. MacNaught: Tomorrow, Mr. Speaker, the first item of business will be the consideration of interim supply for one month.

Then we will go on with the second reading of the bill to amend the Bank Act and the Quebec Savings Banks Act. Then we will resume debate on second reading of Bill No. S-17, respecting the territorial sea and fishing zones of Canada. If there is any time left we will consider the resolutions preceding the Export Credits Insurance Act and the Farm Credit Act.

At six o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Thursday, May 21, 1964

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

THE ROYAL ASSENT

Mr. Speaker: I have the honour to inform the house that I have received the following communication:

Government House, Ottawa,
May 21, 1964

Sir:

I have the honour to inform you that the Honourable Robert Taschereau, P.C., Chief Justice of Canada, acting as Deputy of His Excellency the Governor General, will proceed to the Senate chamber on Thursday, May 21, at 5.45 p.m., for the purpose of giving the royal assent to certain bills.

I have the honour to be,
sir,
Your obedient servant,

A. G. Cherrier
Assistant Secretary to the Governor General.

PRIVILEGE

MR. MACINNIS—CARTOON APPEARING IN OTTAWA "CITIZEN" OF MAY 20

Mr. Donald MacInnis (Cape Breton South): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege affecting many hon. members of this house and members of the Royal Canadian Legion and their families. My question of privilege is based on a cartoon appearing in the Ottawa Citizen of Wednesday, May 20. This is an example of yellow journalism, holding up to ridicule and contempt the image of all veterans throughout this country, with one exception. I and the members of my party deplore this malicious attack on the veterans.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

PROCEDURE

CONCURRENCE IN FIFTH REPORT OF SPECIAL COMMITTEE

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), seconded by the hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka (Mr. Aiken) moves that the fifth report of the special committee on procedure and organization, presented on May 19, 1964, be now concurred in.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I should like first of all to thank the hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka for seconding this motion. The fifth report, concurrence in which we now ask, consists of only one sentence; therefore perhaps I might read it:

Your committee recommends that the provisional standing orders and recommendations contained in your committee's second report, concurred in by the house on April 20, 1964, which are now in effect until the end of May, be continued in effect until the end of the present session, unless it is otherwise ordered by the house.

The provisional standing orders and recommendations referred to in the second report are those under which we are now operating with respect to questions prior to the calling of the orders of the day, debate on adjournment motions three nights a week, and the handling of notices of motions for the production of papers. Under the decision of the house taken on April 20, 1964, these are in effect until the end of this month. It is the feeling of your committee, Mr. Speaker, that the house would like to continue the trial period for these standing orders and recommendations until the end of the present session, and if this report is concurred in, that will be the effect.

Mr. G. H. Aiken (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, I think it is significant that this motion is moved and seconded by members of the opposition, indicating at least our very sincere efforts to see that something effective is done to restore the prestige and effectiveness of parliament and to repair damage previously done. In addition, Mr. Speaker, I do believe that having new rules themselves is not sufficient, and that in addition to following them we must give effect to the spirit of the rules already in existence. It has been indicated so far this session that we do intend to do our best to carry out the intent of the rules and perform the business of parliament.

Motion agreed to.

BRIDGES

AUTHORIZATION OF CONSTRUCTION BETWEEN STE FOY AND ST. NICOLAS, QUEBEC

Hon. J. P. Deschatelets (Minister of Public Works) moved the first reading of Bill No. S-21 (from the Senate), to authorize the construction and maintenance of a bridge across the St. Lawrence river between the city of Ste Foy, in the county of Quebec and the municipality of St. Nicolas, in the county of Levis, both in the province of Quebec.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

CANADIAN FLAG

REPORTED ACCEPTANCE OF DESIGN BY CABINET

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Prime Minister whether there is any basis in fact to the press report that the personal flag to which he has given his support has now been accepted by the cabinet.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, there is no basis for any statement that any personal flag of anybody's has been accepted. There is basis for the statement that the cabinet decided this morning on a design, which it will shortly submit to parliament in the form of a resolution.

Mr. Aiken: A supplementary question—

Mr. Diefenbaker: I would be glad if the hon. gentleman asked his question, but first of all I should like to know if the Prime Minister will tell us whether this is the flag he exhibited to a group of newsmen last Thursday night at his home, and did he at that time say "This is my personal choice as a flag design"? Did he also say that he had sent a telegram to the Queen informing her that the red ensign would not be the Canadian flag?

Mr. Pearson: No, Mr. Speaker.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, some of those who are laughing at the moment are not laughing inwardly. May I ask the Prime Minister this. Did he on Thursday night meet at his home with a select group of six members of the press gallery, show them a model flag, and state that this was his personal choice?

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, I did meet with certain members of the press at a social occasion; I do not deny that. Indeed, the right hon. gentleman does that himself quite frequently. I hope that when he meets his friends from the press at his home they have as good a time as I hope they would have at my home. Mr. Speaker, we had a cup of tea, and there was some discussion of the question of national emblems. The national flag issue certainly came up, and I expressed in a personal way to my friends my views on that subject.

[Mr. Deschatelets.]

Mr. Diefenbaker: I ask the Prime Minister this. Is the report by Val Sears in the Toronto Star that "Mr. Pearson personally had chosen a flag design," and that "he had sent a telegram to the Queen informing her" as I said a moment ago, true?

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, Mr. Val Sears was not at this social gathering in question.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Pearson: Perhaps that will explain the inaccuracy of the right hon. gentleman's report.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Is the report inaccurate in stating that the Prime Minister said that he had telegraphed the Queen and had advised her that the red ensign would not be our flag?

Mr. Pearson: Yes, it is inaccurate.

Mr. D. M. Fisher (Port Arthur): I want to ask the Prime Minister a question about the hour long film that was prepared on his career and personality. I wanted to ask the Prime Minister if his—

Mr. Speaker: Order; I understand there are one or two supplementary questions. The hon. member for Pontiac-Témiscamingue.

Mr. Pickersgill: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. The hon. member for Port Arthur has been recognized. Surely he cannot be interrupted in this manner.

An hon. Member: Are you afraid of it?

Mr. Speaker: The question is quite easy to solve. The hon. member for Pontiac-Témiscamingue.

Hon. Paul Martineau (Pontiac-Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask the Prime Minister if the flag design of which he expressed approval is the one that was approved by the cabinet this morning.

Mr. Pearson: My hon. friend should wait for a few days, and he will see the design of the flag.

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): I have a supplementary question for the Prime Minister. I wonder if he would tell us whether in the consideration of government business the government is going to give priority to the resolution with regard to the flag over the introduction of an address to the Queen in the United Kingdom asking for an amendment to the British North America Act to provide the foundation for the pension legislation.

Mr. Pearson: Well, Mr. Speaker, the question of the address to the Queen of Canada with regard to the amendment of our constitution can only be decided when we get the agreement of all the provinces on the exact formula for this address. As soon as that formula is agreed upon, legislation will be put on the order paper and dealt with very promptly.

Mr. G. H. Aiken (Parry Sound-Muskoka): My supplementary question, Mr. Speaker, is very innocuous and I am sure it will not offend the Minister of Transport. I ask the Prime Minister if this latest effort in connection with the flag is to be known as the Pearson prognostication or the Matheson masterpiece.

Mr. Robert C. Coates (Cumberland): I should like to ask the Prime Minister if he will consult the provinces before presenting his flag design to parliament.

Mr. Pearson: No, it is a matter for the responsibility of the Canadian parliament.

Mr. Coates: Does the Prime Minister not consider it to be of the utmost importance to national unity to have the views of all provincial governments on this matter?

Mr. Pearson: I hope that the views of all Canadians will be represented in this house.

Mr. Coates: Does he not feel that the views of all Canadians should be given the opportunity of expression in a national referendum?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Is the hon. member rising on a supplementary question?

[Translation]

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Prime Minister?

Can the Prime Minister tell the house if the adoption of a single distinctive national flag will automatically entail our rejecting the red ensign once and for all, that is to say that it will not be flown next to the distinctive national flag?

An hon. Member: Ask Mr. Pierre Sévigny.

[Text]

Mr. Pigeon: It is a very important question.

Mr. Speaker: I can only assume that it is the good weather that gives the hon. member so much energy at this time.

Mr. Pigeon: I rise on a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker. I addressed a direct question to the Prime Minister, I asked him to answer and he refused to answer my question because it is a question that embarrasses the government.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Port Arthur.

[Later:]

Mr. Fisher: I should like to ask the Prime Minister another question on a subject which has already been gone over. It is simply this: does the flag design he has chosen have a maple leaf on it?

Mr. Pearson: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Fisher: Does it have three maple leaves on it?

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

WITHDRAWAL OF FILM RESPECTING PRIME MINISTER

On the orders of the day:

Mr. D. M. Fisher (Port Arthur): I should like to ask the Prime Minister whether he or his personal advisers, to his knowledge, refused approval of the film prepared by Intervideo Productions Limited that was to be screened by the C.B.C.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): No, Mr. Speaker. I understand this is a matter entirely between the C.B.C. and the producer of the film.

Mr. Fisher: In that event, Mr. Speaker, if it were possible for the production to be seen on some network other than the C.B.C., would the Prime Minister and his advisers give their approval for that to be done?

Mr. Pearson: We do not censor films on this side of the house.

Hon. Paul Martineau (Pontiac-Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Prime Minister if he has had a private preview of the film?

Mr. Pearson: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Oh? What were you doing it for?

Mr. Pearson: My right hon. friend should not get so excited.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Did you find it a horror film?

Mr. Pearson: I am only sorry, Mr. Speaker, that events have not so transpired that I will get this additional publicity.

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Can the Prime Minister tell the house whether there were five separate screenings of this particular film in his office?

Mr. Pearson: No, Mr. Speaker, there was no screening in my office. I saw this picture in Toronto at a C.B.C. studio.

Mr. Diefenbaker: For what purpose; censorship?

Mr. Nielsen: I have a further supplementary question.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Speaker: Order. I had grave doubts that the last question was in order but in order to try to get rid of the matter I allowed it. If the supplementary is along the same line I am afraid it will be out of order.

Mr. Nielsen: If Your Honour is ruling it out of order on the ground of urgency, which I assume Your Honour is doing despite the great national interest in the question and the cost of $35,000 to the Canadian taxpayers, I give notice that I wish to debate this question at ten o'clock this evening.

[Later:]

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Secretary of State. Can he inform the house when the policy of the C.B.C. was changed so as to allow the Prime Minister to editorially review a film before a decision is made on its presentation?

Mr. Speaker: There does not seem to me to be that tremendous urgency that requires an immediate answer. Would the hon. member put the question on the order paper.

Mr. Nielsen: I would like to give notice to debate it this evening.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, in view of the earlier questions I am sure the Prime Minister would want to tell the house what business it was of his to have a preview of what was supposed to be the story of his conduct as prime minister. Did he or did anyone on his behalf advise the C.B.C. that this should not be produced because it had all the appearance of a horror mystery?

Mr. Pearson: Well, Mr. Speaker, the right hon. gentleman knows this matter is coming up for debate at ten o'clock, but to anticipate that debate, because he has such a strong interest in the matter, I might point out to him that the C.B.C. have already stated that this is a matter for their own decision and that no pressure of any kind was brought to bear on them by any member of the government to deal with this in any other way than they saw fit.

Mr. Diefenbaker: That is not the question I asked. The question I asked was under what circumstances this preview took place. Was it at the request of the Prime Minister or a member of his staff; for it is a most unusual thing that Canadians have to have him or those associated with him censor what is being produced on the C.B.C.

Mr. Pearson: The circumstances were perfectly proper. The initiative was taken by the producer of the film, and no question of censorship arises.

Mr. Nielsen: Perhaps, Mr. Speaker, you would allow a supplementary question. Can the Prime Minister answer whether the statement of Intervideo Productions Limited is accurate, that there were five separate showings to the Prime Minister and other members of his cabinet?

Mr. Pearson: My hon. friend cannot have it both ways. If he wants a debate at ten o'clock he will have to wait. He has asked for a debate at ten o'clock, so perhaps he can wait until then.

LEGAL ACTION RESPECTING PROGRAM "TWENTY YEARS LATER"

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Secretary of State who answers to the house for the C.B.C. Does the minister intend to recommend that the government take legal action against the C.B.C. following the program "Twenty years Later" presented on Saturday, May 9, which was an insult to religion and which questioned the value of religious teaching in Quebec?

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: This surely is a question for the order paper.

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Speaker, after ten o'clock.

HEALTH AND WELFARE

FEDERAL ASSISTANCE FOR MEDICAL RESEARCH

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Heward Grafftey (Brome-Missisquoi): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. My question is largely based on facts brought out at the recent annual meeting of the Montreal neurological institute. Is the government currently discussing policy relating to federal assistance for medical research in Canada, and can we expect an announcement in this regard in the relatively near future?

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, may I thank all hon. members for their very friendly welcome on my return to the house, and I also wish to express my thanks to all those members who were kind enough to visit me and send me notes.

May I say to my hon. friend that this matter, like many others, is under constant review by my department as well as by the medical research council. It is also part of the terms of reference of the royal commission on health which has not yet reported. I should like to say to my hon. friend, however, that when developments warrant it I shall be very pleased to see that any government announcement is brought to his attention.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

LAOS—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON PRESENT POSITION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In view of the urgent and deteriorating situation in Laos and the presence in that country of Canada's member of the truce supervisory commission, does the minister have some word for the house?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the situation in Laos, as I mentioned yesterday and as we now know from the statement made by Mr. Stevenson at the United Nations this morning, has deteriorated, and this does affect the work of the commission. I expressed regret the other day that the Polish member of the commission had temporarily withdrawn from service on that commission. I said that the Polish government had been requested by Canada to have its member of the commission resume his duties.

The situation is one that is changing rapidly and we will have to await events. I may be in a position to make a statement on this tomorrow when the department's estimates are before the house.

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): A supplementary question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs, Mr. Speaker. Does the government of Canada support the policy of the government of the United States with respect to Viet Nam?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, I have already dealt with this question, but I hope to deal with it at greater length tomorrow.

NATO—REPORTED CANADIAN AGREEMENT TO INCREASE MILITARY COMMITMENT

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Marcel Lessard (Lake St. John): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of National Defence. Can he tell us if there is any truth in the newspaper article stating that the government intends to increase its contribution to the NATO forces? Is it true that Canada is willing to increase its military contribution to NATO?

[Text]

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of National Defence): The policy of the government was announced in the white paper, and there has been no change since that time.

PUBLIC SERVICE

REAPPOINTMENT OF MEMBER OF UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE COMMISSION

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Michael Starr (Ontario): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Prime Minister and ask him, in view of the expiration of the term of office of Mr. MacArthur as a member of the unemployment insurance commission, whether it is the intention of the government to appoint him for another term. If so, when does the government intend to announce his reappointment?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend the Minister of Labour is not in his seat at the moment. I will discuss this matter with him, and I hope to make an announcement tomorrow or Monday.

[Later:]

Mr. Starr: Mr. Speaker, to follow up my question to the Prime Minister regarding the unemployment insurance commissioner, would he give consideration to the fact that many of the affiliates of the Canadian Labour Congress have forwarded representations on behalf of Mr. MacArthur to the Minister of Labour, and would he take these into consideration?

Mr. Pearson: Yes, indeed, Mr. Speaker. I think I have received some myself.

TRADE

RUSSIA—SUGGESTED EXCHANGE OF PETROLEUM PRODUCTS FOR WHEAT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, I had hoped to put this question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce and the Minister of Agriculture, but in their absence maybe I can direct it to the Prime Minister. I may say it deals with a very important matter concerning western Canada. Reference has been made in an article in the New York Times, reprinted in the Calgary Herald, to negotiations between the government of Canada and the Soviet union to accept petroleum and other oil products in return for Canadian wheat. Is there any justification for this report in the New York Times?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Not to my knowledge, but it is important, Mr. Speaker, and I shall look into it.

Inquiries of the Ministry

URANIUM

ALLOCATION OF UNSOLD PORTION OF GUNNAR MINES CONTRACT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. A. Webb (Hastings-Frontenac): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Industry. Would the government consider allocating to Metal Mines Limited, Bancroft, Ontario, the unsold Gunnar Mines-United Kingdom contract for 1,200,000 pounds of uranium oxide, thereby assuring the operation of Metal Mines Limited until the end of 1964 without any other assistance from the government?

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Industry): Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Would the hon. member put this question on the order paper?

Mr. Webb: Mr. Speaker, it is very urgent at this time.

Mr. Speaker: I am quite sure there is no doubt about the importance of the question, but according to the rules handed to me by the house questions must be of sufficient urgency and importance to require an immediate answer. It does seem to me, not knowing what the minister has in mind, that he is entitled to notice on this question to be able to make a full and correct answer.

Mr. Webb: Then I should like to give notice to debate this at ten o'clock.

BROADCASTING

REQUEST FOR APPOINTMENT OF COMMITTEE

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Gilles Grégoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Secretary of State. Could he, today or tomorrow, make the statement he is supposed to make concerning the setting-up of a commission of inquiry on the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation and tell us what kind of a commission it will be?

Hon. Maurice Lamontagne (Secretary of State): I am sorry I cannot make such a statement today or tomorrow, but I shall certainly do so next Monday.

[Text]

SHIPPING

MEASURES RESPECTING WATER LEVELS IN LAKE HURON AND GEORGIAN BAY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. G. H. Aiken (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Public Works. It is urgent and will require just a simple answer. Will the minister soon be in a position to announce emergency measures to meet the low water conditions in lake Huron and Georgian bay?

Mr. Speaker: This surely is a question for the order paper.

Mr. Aiken: I merely asked if the minister would soon be in a position to make an announcement, which only requires a yes or no answer. I think the minister is prepared to answer.

Mr. Speaker: Whether the minister is ready or not, it is my duty to apply the rules as given to me by the house, and there is not that sense of urgency or importance that would require an answer at this time.

WATER RESOURCES

PEMBINA RIVER—REQUEST FOR REPORT ON DEVELOPMENT PROJECT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. George Muir (Lisgar): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources and ask him whether he has had any recent communication from the international joint commission in regard to the Pembina river development project in Manitoba and North Dakota?

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): No, Mr. Speaker.

PUBLICATIONS

INTENTION OF GOVERNMENT RESPECTING PENDING LEGISLATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. D. M. Fisher (Port Arthur): I want to ask the Prime Minister a question, Mr. Speaker, in relation to the periodicals issue. I would like to ask the Prime Minister whether in recent personal interviews he has had with the principals in the case—I am thinking of Maclean-Hunter and Time magazine—he has informed them he intends to proceed with the legislation in the form in which it was originally presented to this house.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I have had no interview on this matter with any representative of Time magazine. I did have an interview with representatives of Maclean-Hunter publications. The resolution is on the order paper and we will proceed with it.

Mr. Fisher: As is?

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

REDISTRIBUTION—FURTHER CONSIDERATION OF LEGISLATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Transport. In view of the minister's insistence a year and a half ago that parliament at that time should get on with its constitutional responsibility in the matter of redistribution, when can we expect this matter to be proceeded with?

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): I would hope, sir, as soon as there was some indication it would be proceeded with.

Mr. Churchill: What do you mean by that?

[Later:]

Mr. Reid Scott (Danforth): I wish to ask the minister a supplementary question. If I heard him rightly he said the matter would not be taken up again until there was some indication it would be proceeded with. Does this mean the government is knuckling under to the Tory filibuster?

Mr. Pickersgill: The hon. gentleman, I think, misunderstood my answer. There was no negative in it at all.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

INQUIRY AS TO SETTING UP OF COURT OF CLAIMS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. H. A. Thomas (Middlesex West): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration. Can the minister tell the house when we can expect the establishment of the Indian claims commission?

Hon. René Tremblay (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration): Not before the bill is approved by this house.

[Later:]

Mr. Thomas: I have a question for the Prime Minister. In view of the answer given by the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration to a question asked a few minutes ago, can the right hon. gentleman give the house any information as to when we can expect the introduction of legislation leading to the establishment of an Indian claims commission?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): We know how important this matter is, and we hope to get this legislation before the house as soon as possible. I understand we are still receiving representations from certain Indian bands, but that is not holding it up. As soon as there is a possibility of getting it through the house and of making progress, the measure will be brought in.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

ST. JOHN'S, NFLD.—STEPS TO SETTLE LONGSHOREMEN'S STRIKE

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Michael Starr (Ontario): I have a question for the parliamentary secretary to the Minister of Labour in the absence of the minister himself. Because of the failure of the attempt to bring together the two parties concerned in the longshoremen's dispute at St. John's, Newfoundland, can the hon. gentleman tell us what efforts are being made by the Minister of Labour to bring these people together in order to end this long standing dispute?

Mr. J. A. Byrne (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Labour): As far as the Department of Labour is concerned, there has been no failure. The officials are continuing their efforts to help bring about a settlement of this matter. I will bring the hon. member's question to the attention of the minister when he returns.

Mr. Starr: In view of what the parliamentary secretary has just said, is it not a fact—and he can confirm or deny it—that the conciliation officials and others who were endeavouring to bring these parties together have given up because they were unable to do so?

Mr. Byrne: That is not a failure on the part of the Department of Labour or the minister. This is a legal strike, and the department is keeping in close touch with the situation.

Mr. Starr: What are the minister and department doing with respect to reaching a settlement?

Mr. Byrne: Carrying out the natural processes under the Industrial Relations and Disputes Investigation Act.

POWER

COLUMBIA RIVER—COST OF REPLACING WHARF FACILITIES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): I wish to address an urgent and important question to the Minister of Public Works. I apologize for not having given him notice, but the matter has arisen within the last few minutes. The question is urgent because the external affairs committee is meeting at 3.30 this afternoon, and we require an answer from the minister for purposes connected with that meeting.

Has the hon. gentleman's department obtained an estimate of the cost of replacing all wharf facilities on the Columbia river in connection with the building of the high Arrow dam, should that dam be built?

Mr. Speaker: I quite appreciate the importance of the question, but I do not know how the hon. member can expect the minister to answer a detailed inquiry of this kind on the orders of the day. Perhaps the hon. member would put it on the order paper, or communicate with the minister.

AIR TRANSPORT

APPEALS TO MINISTER FROM DECISIONS OF BOARD

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. S. Barnett (Comox-Alberni): I have a question for the Minister of Transport arising out of an answer given to me on December 21 by the then minister of transport when we were discussing the estimates of the air transport board. On that occasion the hon. member for Ottawa West, who is now President of the Privy Council, said:

> The Aeronautics Act will be coming back for debate very early I hope in the new session, and there will then be an opportunity for an appropriate amendment to cover the point raised by the hon. member for Comox-Alberni.

I wonder whether the Minister of Transport can shed any light on the position and tell us how this matter stands at the present time.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): There is a notice on the order paper, and I hope it will be reached in due course.

SUPPLY

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Batten in the chair.

INTERIM SUPPLY

Mr. McIlraith moved:

> Resolved, that a sum not exceeding $338,136,717.59, being the aggregate of—
> (a) One twelfth of the total of the items set forth in the main estimates for the fiscal year ending 31st March, 1965 laid before the House of Commons at the present session of parliament, $329,299,209.25;
> (b) an additional four twelfths of the amount of forestry item 25 of the said main estimates, $480,333.34;
> (c) an additional three twelfths of the amount of finance item 15 of the said main estimates, $1,500,000.00;
> (d) an additional two twelfths of the amount of external affairs item 15 of the said main estimates, $1,597,000.00;
> (e) an additional one twelfth of the amount of finance item 10, forestry items 10, 20 and 30, justice item 1, mines and technical surveys item 70, national research council item 5, and privy council item 15, $5,260,175.00,
> be granted to Her Majesty on account of the fiscal year ending 31st March, 1965.

Mr. Churchill: I would simply ask the President of the Privy Council whether he intends to make a statement in connection with this motion for interim supply.

The Deputy Chairman: I am sorry to interrupt, but it is difficult for the Chair to hear what is being said.

Mr. McIlraith: The supply asked for is one twelfth of the amount in the estimates. That is for the month of June, and a further interim supply bill will therefore have to be brought down within a month unless, of course, the house passes the estimates, something which I do not anticipate.

The committee is also being asked to grant the additional items indicated, and if hon. members wish to inquire about any one of them I can give some further details. However, these are only items in respect of which payment is required to be made in special circumstances, in some cases because shipping on the great lakes is involved and payment for shipping is done in the months between April and November. Therefore a larger proportion than the one twelfth is required.

Another example is grants to municipalities, where the actual payments are made to the municipalities at various times during the year and certain of the payments have to be made before the end of June. In one case one half of the total payment is made by the end of June. Another example I could give of where a special item is asked for is the United Nations grants, which are made to the organizations on certain annual dates in keeping with their budgets. This has always been the practice, and these are typical examples of the kind of items where more than one twelfth is being asked for.

I of course give the usual undertaking that it is customary to give, namely that the passage of this interim supply bill does not in any way interfere with the full right of hon. members to discuss the items in the main estimates when they are brought forward. I do not know if there is any further explanation I can usefully give at this time, but if there are any questions I shall be glad to try to answer them.

Mr. Barnett: Mr. Chairman, I am one of the members of the house who consider that under ordinary circumstances a motion for the granting of interim supply is one which can be considered as a fairly routine matter perhaps not requiring any extended debate. However, I do believe there are certain circumstances when a member must exercise his right under this motion to raise certain questions, which apparently cannot be raised in any other way, which have some urgency attached to them.

I am sure the President of the Privy Council, who apparently is charged with the responsibility of piloting this motion through the house, will not be at all surprised if I indicate that I desire to rise at this time to discuss the question of the amount granted by the federal government to the Alberni valley and west coast disaster fund to assist the re-establishment of the victims of the tidal wave disaster which struck the west coast of Canada following the earthquake in Alaska at Easter. I think the fact that I am raising it will surprise him less because His Honour the Speaker saw fit, when I rose to move the adjournment of the house on the day following the announcement by the Prime Minister that the federal government was contributing $250,000 to this fund, to disallow the motion and therefore no debate on this question was possible at that time.

The minister may recall that I did ask the Prime Minister a question on this subject on Tuesday when we reconvened following the Victoria day week end, and the Prime Minister had this to say with regard to the amount of the grant:

> Mr. Speaker, it seems to me and to the government, having regard to the measure of the damage —and I do not depreciate that—and having regard to the responsibilities of the provincial government and the resources of the provincial government, that the federal contribution of a quarter of a million dollars is fair in the circumstances, and is in accord with the principles which have been followed in the past.

At this point I might just make some reference to the last phrase in that statement, namely "and is in accord with the principles which have been followed in the past". My own feeling is that one of the reasons there has been misunderstanding and some measure of political controversy arising out of this question, and one of the reasons there has been expressed a great measure of dissatisfaction with the contribution made by the federal government, not only by me as a member for the district but by people of the area, is precisely because of the fact that there really have been no principles in the past which have been followed in this connection. Some members of the house may be a little surprised at the reaction to this amount, because it is quite true that it is not every day of the week that the federal government decides to make a contribution of a quarter of a million dollars, which in some circumstances could be regarded as a fairly substantial amount.

I want to assure the committee, Mr. Chairman, that in raising this question I certainly am not speaking only for myself. Newspaper headlines do not always give a very accurate impression of the situation which exists, but I think in this situation the newspaper headlines which appeared in the press of the area on May 14 and 15, immediately following the Prime Minister's announcement, give a very accurate summation of the reaction of the people in that area. The headline of the lead story in the daily Free Press, which is published in Nanaimo, of May 14 says "Ottawa gives meagre sum of $250,000 to Albernis". In the following day's issue of that newspaper the headline reads "Federal donation brings only anger to Albernis". I think the house will agree that headlines indicating a reaction of that kind in some respects put a very anomalous situation before the house, because normally when the government takes action to make a grant or a donation we in this house expect that the contribution will be received with at least a fair amount of appreciation, if not gratitude.

I want to make it quite clear at once that my personal reaction to this situation is very much in accord with the sentiments expressed in those newspaper headlines. I want to try to explain to the committee some of the reasons for that situation, not only in the minds of the people in the area but also for my own reaction as the representative in this house of those people. It arises out of a situation which perhaps it may be difficult for people like the President of the Privy Council or the Minister of Finance, who come from different parts of Canada, to appreciate. I think those of us who have had an opportunity of becoming familiar with the situation, however, can understand it. I feel quite sure that the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources—whom I am glad to see in the committee—has some understanding of this situation. I should not be at all surprised if he himself may not be somewhat disappointed that the amount of the contribution was not substantially larger in view of the particular circumstances, although I realize that he, being a member of the government, is not free to express such feelings even if he might wish to do so.

The Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources did give a good deal of detailed attention to this situation, and I would like to say that in the dealings I have had with him, as the local member, I have found him most co-operative and helpful in many ways right from the outset of this situation. Nevertheless the facts remain as I have stated them as far as the reaction to this federal contribution is concerned.

Therefore, Mr. Chairman, I am availing myself of the opportunity that has been afforded through the introduction of this motion for interim supply to make some further attempt to have the government give reconsideration to this whole situation and in particular to the matter of increasing the amount of federal participation.

I suggest, Mr. Chairman, that one of the reasons for the reaction on May 14 and 15 of disappointment and a sense of frustration arises from the fact that the federal government, through the Prime Minister and through the minister of northern affairs acting at the request of the Prime Minister, gave an immediate and favourable response to the emergency situation when it arose. Certainly the result was to create an impression in the minds of the people who had suffered, and in the minds of the local authorities who were attempting to bring order out of chaos, that the federal government of Canada could be relied upon to carry its full share of the job of reconstruction and re-establishment when the time came for them to do so. I realize that I have no hope of persuading the cabinet to change its mind in this matter through an emotional appeal, and it is for that reason that I am going to try to set out what I consider to be some of the factual background to the situation.

The response given by the federal government under the Prime Minister's lead at the time of the emergency is, I suggest, a very important aspect of the events which led up to the reaction of anger which has been outlined by the local press and in many other ways. I think it is also important for us to realize that there is a broader background to this situation arising from the attitude of the people of that area, an attitude which I feel is quite generally held. In my view they feel that they are Canadians first, and therefore they look for and expect from the federal government the interest, the authority and the responsibility to deal with emergency situations and with the welfare of Canadians generally no matter where they may live in this country.

This state of mind has resulted, I would say, in a very general feeling that the ideas of federal-provincial cost sharing, particularly as they developed during the period since the second world war, are good. I think in the minds of most people in my part of the country such things as federal participation in the old age assistance program or the trans-Canada highway program are generally accepted as sound and good ideas; and as hon. members will realize, generally speaking most of these cost sharing programs have been pretty well based on the principle of a 50-50 contribution as between the provincial and federal levels of government.

I think I can go further than that, Mr. Chairman, and suggest that most of the people in my area would welcome an extension of that sort of principle. For example, they would welcome a much broader program of participation by the federal level of government so as to ensure that there would be equality of opportunity all across Canada to benefit from the advantages of higher education in this day and age.

I think this question has to be considered against the background of thinking in the particular area of the country from which I come. While it is true that if one reads the fine print in the statement made by the federal government there is some reference to limitations of assistance and federal responsibility which might be undertaken in any disaster, nevertheless the general feeling which the people in my area had was that when the federal government said it was ready to help, and followed that up by sending in immediately, at the request of the provincial authorities, army engineers to assist in the clean-up job, it would be in there with both feet to help on a full scale basis.

There was also a good deal of discussion of what had happened in some other disaster situations. Reference was made to the situations which arose at the time of the Fraser valley flood, the Winnipeg flood, the Rimouski fire, and of course more recently the Hay river flood. In those situations, of which people had current recollections and knowledge, federal participation had been substantial, and as far as was understood had been based upon full participation in meeting with provincial and local authorities and in joining with voluntary contributors to deal with the situation.

As those of us who have been following the situation and have been in the middle of it are well aware, after the initial clean-up period, which was well handled, and after the immediate emergency had been dealt with by local welfare authorities and provincial welfare officials, there developed a long period of waiting during which people did not know what was going to happen. This period of waiting, of uncertainty and growing frustration went on for weeks. This was in contrast to the initial coming forward by the federal government, and I think this period of waiting was because—I think the facts of the situation will bear this out—there was no definitive kind of policy statement made by the provincial government during the early period of the disaster. There was no indication really of what, if anything, the provincial government was prepared to do under its responsibilities when an appraisal of the damage had been made.

As this situation of anxiety, frustration and in some cases near despair grew with the passage of time, more and more people came to pin their hopes on what the federal government would be prepared to do when the provincial government might at long last make up its mind what it wanted. So when the proposal was made by the provincial authority for a cost sharing arrangement in regard to the net depreciated appraised loss, most of the people who were affected felt that their immediate problems were over. They assumed, wrongly as events have shown, that the federal government would be prepared to accept some such proposal, and that with the possibility that the depreciated appraised loss would be met by direct government funds, the very substantial and generous contributions which were flowing in as a result of the initial organization at the local level of a disaster fund to which people could contribute would make up the difference in the cases where the depreciated loss evaluation would not suitably assist the victims of the disaster to re-establish themselves.

The result was that when the federal government announced it was prepared to make a contribution of $250,000, this announcement hit the people who were suffering and the people who were attempting to carry on a program of re-establishment at the local level like a bombshell. Perhaps it did not surprise me as completely as it did many of the people at home. Knowing the disappointment of many of the people, I freely confess that I felt a great sense of frustration and rage. I just could not help but ask myself, and I am still asking myself, why my constituents, my friends and my neighbours have to be the ones who are caught in this petty constitutional bickering. I had hoped that the federal government, knowing the situation that exists in British Columbia in respect of the attitudes that have been taken over the years by the present premier of that province, would have said that in this case we are going to deal with this emergency situation to the full, and then we will sit down and in practical fashion weigh the pros and cons of how disasters should be met in this country.

Then we might try to reach some kind of agreed formula as to the kind and size of disaster in which the federal government will participate in helping the people. If there are principles which have been followed in the past, as the Prime Minister says, I would submit that they are not very well known to the members in this house or to the people of this country. So far as I know there has never been any kind of agreement between the federal and provincial levels of government that has been written down.

So far as the people of my area are concerned, as I said earlier I believe most of them feel they are Canadians first, and they want a federal government which will accept responsibility for the welfare and well being of all Canadians, as circumstances require, in every part of this country. While it is quite true that in provincial elections many people have given support to the administration which has now been in power in British Columbia since 1952, in my view because they seem to think credit is due that administration for the prosperity and economic development that has taken place over that period, nevertheless I believe many of those people who support the present administration in British Columbia for one reason or another have not very much use for the rather petulant and arrogant separatism that comes from the premier of that province.

Those of us who live in that province are quite familiar with the pattern which has been followed in this connection. At one moment the premier of British Columbia is outdoing René Lévesque in taking positions that would mean the balkanization of this country, while in the next moment he is putting out both hands to the federal government and saying "Gimme, gimme". Those of us who live in this province are quite well aware of that situation. As I have said, so far as I am concerned, this was not the time nor the occasion for the federal government to take issue with Mr. Bennett on the kind of request he made.

I have had one or two looks recently at the British North America Act. It is, perhaps, rather prophetic for the people of Alberni that section 92, which lists the exclusive affairs of provincial legislatures, lists, No. 13 as the one which gives the provinces jurisdiction over property and civil rights. While I normally do not consider myself a superstitious person, it seems that in this particular situation there is some reason to be. I hope it is not going to continue to be an unlucky section for the people of British Columbia, whether they live in the Alberni valley or in any other part of the province or, for that matter, for the people who live in any other part of the country.

I feel this is a matter which deserves reconsideration now. The working out of some detailed plan for dealing with disaster situations is something which should be the early concern of the members of this house and of the federal government. It is something which should be considered expeditiously in a conference with the provinces. I do feel that in view of the continuing anxiety and the continuing frustration of the people who were involved in this tidal wave disaster, in view of the very obvious uncertainties in the kind of statement the Prime Minister has made, that it has been done "in accord with principles", this is a matter which should be resolved. I submit, Mr. Chairman, I have tried to express some reasons why it should be resolved in the direction of a substantial increase in the amount of the federal grant to the disaster fund committee before this supply motion passes through this house.

Mr. Prittie: I should like, Mr. Chairman, to support the remarks of my colleague the hon. member for Comox-Alberni. He did take the provincial government of British Columbia to task, and I think rightly so, for their great delay in this matter. I quite agree with the remarks he made as to how difficult it must be for the federal authorities to deal with the premier and government of this province. There was a very long delay before any official communication came from Victoria to Ottawa on this important matter.

However, despite that the hon. member for Comox-Alberni is certainly not overstating the case at all when he says there is very great disappointment in British Columbia generally and in the Albernis particularly regarding the amount granted by the federal government. I do not have the figures before me, but with regard to the Hay river flood a year ago, in which case I realize no provincial government was concerned, and the very serious fire in Rimouski a few years ago, I believe the amounts by way of aid were much greater proportionately than the amount being given in the case of the tidal wave disaster in the Albernis.

The hon. member mentioned in the latter part of his remarks the need for a better method of handling disaster funds in this country, and I should like to dwell on that aspect for a few minutes. The hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam and myself received a letter on this subject from the municipal council of Burnaby recently. I should like to quote some excerpts from that letter:

> The public generally is being asked to subscribe to a disaster fund established to assist those unfortunate people who suffered damage and hardship from the effects of tidal waves along the west coast of Vancouver island, which occurred as a result of the recent Alaskan earthquake. The municipal council, while not unsympathetic to the plight of these people and the worthy cause involved, feels that there should be some different view taken of disaster area situations generally.
> At the present time funds are solicited on a volunteer basis, and no measure of control is specifically exercised by any governmental agency and consequently disaster funds sometimes reach proportions entirely out of true relationship with the purpose for which they are designed. An example in this country may be cited in Winnipeg where it is reported that a disaster fund was set up for flood victims some years ago and a fairly large sum in the order of $1 million still remains in the fund unexpended.

Farther on in the letter they have this to say:

> As mentioned above, the council is not opposed to the principle of assistance to those affected in disaster areas, but is more concerned with the principle of control. It is felt that consideration might be given to the introduction of a system of control by government, similar to that in the United States where disaster areas are established under the jurisdiction of the government and assistance given according to competent judgment of the severity of the disaster.
> The municipal council would seek the co-operation of the members of parliament in giving some consideration to the proposal of the council in this matter and would ask that investigations be made into the feasibility of such control measures being introduced by senior levels of government.

The Vancouver Sun supported this idea in an editorial on May 7 of this year. It is a two part editorial entitled "Slow Burn in the Albernis While Politicians Fiddle". The first part takes the provincial government to task for their delay, but the second part deals with the question of some type of national control of disaster funds, and I should like to quote it:

> The delay in aid to the Albernis supports Burnaby reeve Alan Emmott's criticism of what he calls the hit and miss system of Canadian disaster aid. Mr. Emmott believes there should be a permanent relief fund in this country which could swing into action immediately it is needed. This seems most sensible.
> The Americans can produce millions on a moment's notice. But in Canada federal aid, varying from 50 to 80 per cent of rehabilitation cost, must await the acceptance of the means test applied to affected provinces and municipalities. And public charity—even the $2 million or so surplus from the Fraser and Red river relief funds—simply moves too slowly to meet urgent need.
> It is significant that none of the $300,000 collected so far by the west coast disaster fund—including the $50,000 pledged by the provincial government, the $25,000 from Victoria city and Vancouver's $10,000—has shown up yet in the Albernis.

This, I would add, was on May 7.

> It is understandable that a full appraisal of damage is desirable before governments commit themselves to 100 per cent or even 80 per cent of rehabilitation costs. But surely the two senior levels of government could find a formula for setting up an emergency fund which could act as quickly as, say, the Red Cross. Such a fund could tide over victims while adjusters added up the precise dollars and cents. It could, for example, allow the distraught motel operators of the Albernis at least to put down payments on new furniture and fixtures.
> The fact that no financial assistance of any kind has arrived in the Albernis to date shows that the Canadian disaster relief fund, set up by act of parliament in 1954, doesn't do the trick. This fund contains nearly $1½ million left over from public donations to the 1950 Red river fund.

But neither this money nor the surplus Fraser fund money can make victim's lives less miserable while tied up in the bank, while governments debate what's a national emergency and what isn't.

Finally, Mr. Chairman, there are two points I should like to make. I certainly hope the federal cabinet will, as requested by the hon. member for Comox-Alberni, reconsider the amount of money they have already donated. Second, I hope the cabinet will give consideration to the idea of setting up a national disaster fund which could act more quickly than is the case at the present time. There are many federal-provincial conferences these days, and this matter certainly should be the subject of a federal-provincial conference. It seems to me that such a plan as is necessary can be worked out so that we do not have these very long delays every time a civil disaster occurs.

[Translation]

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Chairman, I just rise for a few minutes to answer a suggestion made yesterday by the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) when he stated that in the event of a supply motion, the opposition might then air its views with regard to the national flag.

The supply motion is scheduled for Monday and Tuesday; we understand that the official opposition does not seem at all anxious to take this opportunity of discussing the matter of the national flag. To my mind, we have that opportunity today, and I believe that our views, on this side of the house, are well known. We favour a distinctive flag, but we do not want to embark upon a discussion on the design of that flag, because it would be endless. But we do want to give the house a chance of stating its views on this point, so as to encourage the Prime Minister to introduce as soon as possible his resolution on the national flag. We are availing ourselves of this opportunity to enable the house to express its views on this subject and thus facilitate the task of the Prime Minister and the cabinet.

Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment to the interim supply resolution. I simply suggest to include one sentence. Here is my amendment, in French and in English:

I move, seconded by the hon. member for Charlevoix (Mr. Bélanger), that the following words be added to the interim supply resolution:

"This house considers that it is opportune to adopt as soon as possible a distinctive Canadian flag".

Mr. Chairman, that does not affect the budget at all. There is no increase in the expenditures. Neither is there a vote of non-confidence. It simply means that we take advantage of the circumstances that give us an opportunity to discuss any matter at all during such a period. Since we are permitted to discuss all sorts of matters, we are also allowed to introduce an amendment concerning the matter we wish to have discussed. That does not affect the budget in the least.

This amendment we are bringing forward is only the expression of a wish. We would like to have it accepted as such. It gives us an opportunity to make the Prime Minister aware of the fact that he will have our support and the support of all members of this house when the time comes to select a distinctive Canadian flag.

There is no reference in this amendment to a specific design, but simply to the principle of a distinctive Canadian flag.

That is why we, of the Ralliement Créditiste take this first opportunity to show the government—we also hope that all the members of the party in power will therefore give us their support—that we support them and that the house also supports the decision to adopt a distinctive flag for Canada.

The Chairman: Order. The hon. member for Lapointe moves that the following words be added to the interim supply resolution:

This house considers it is opportune to adopt as soon as possible a distinctive Canadian flag.

[Text]

The hon. member for Lapointe moves that the following words be added to the interim supply resolution:

This house considers it is opportune to adopt as soon as possible a distinctive Canadian flag.

Is there any hon. member who would like to offer views regarding the legality of the proposed amendment?

Mr. Lambert: I think it is quite obvious that a reading of the most elementary rules of the house would indicate that this amendment goes away beyond the ambit of the resolution, which is one dealing with interim supply and the voting of certain credits to the government. The amendment, dealing with the subject matter of a flag, is as different as day to night, when applied to the resolution. It enlarges the ambit of the resolution and that is not permitted to an hon. member. I would therefore submit the amendment is wholly out of order.

[Translation]

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Chairman, the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) said that one has only to read the standing orders of the house to realize that our amendment is not in order, but he has not mentioned any standing order which says that this amendment is against the rules—

Mr. Lambert: One does not have to do that.

Mr. Grégoire: When someone rises on a point of order at large, it just means that no specific standing order deals with that point.

Now, I would have the committee note that interim supply calls for the vote of one twelfth of all items in the main estimates. So, it has to do with the Department of the Secretary of State, the privy council and the administration of the various departments. Furthermore, the national flag comes under the whole cabinet. There is no expense involved. The opposition must not introduce an amendment which increases the budget expenditures; now, this amendment constitutes a hope which is not against the wishes of the cabinet and does not increase interim supply as far as those departments are concerned, especially the expenses of the privy council, for which this supply provides some expense items.

That is why I submit that the motion is entirely in order and that no standing order is against it.

[Text]

The Chairman: If there are no further arguments to be submitted at this time, I believe the Chair can rule on the legality of the proposed amendment. I would have to go along with the hon. member for Edmonton West when he suggests that the amendment goes beyond the ambit of the resolution now before the committee.

I would like to refer the hon. member for Lapointe to May's sixteenth edition, at page 421, where it is stated:

> —no matter ought to be raised in debate on a question which would be irrelevant, if moved as an amendment, and an amendment cannot be used for importing arguments which would be irrelevant to the main question.

Inasmuch as the proposition brought forward by the hon. member for Lapointe is beyond the ambit of the resolution before the committee, I submit it is irrelevant. I think I should also mention to the hon. member that in my opinion this is really a substantive motion which requires 48 hours' notice. A third argument is that this proposition anticipates Bill No. C-64, which is on the order paper. For these reasons I respectfully suggest that the proposed amendment is out of order.

[Translation]

Mr. Grégoire: Naturally, Mr. Chairman, you have given your ruling on the amendment we brought forward. You referred to Bill No. C-64, which is on the order paper at this time and has to do with a flag. What we are asking for is not necessarily based on that. We are merely asking the house to consider the advisability of adopting it as soon as possible. That does not necessarily mean today. Furthermore, we feel that this—

Mr. Lambert: Order.

Mr. Grégoire: —that this is within the ambit of the discussion and is in no way irrelevant.

The Chairman: The hon. member will recognize that the ruling given by the Chair may not be discussed. I would remind him that the decision I have just given was based not on one argument only, but three. In my opinion, each of those three arguments was reason enough to rule the proposed amendment out of order.

[Text]

Mr. Barnett: Mr. Chairman, I would like not to have to rise again but I believe the matter I raised earlier is of sufficient importance to warrant some sort of reply from the government. Inasmuch as it involved the President of the Privy Council who, I understand, is chairman of treasury board, and the Minister of Finance, both of whom must have taken part in the discussions that led up to the cabinet decision, either or both these hon. gentlemen should be prepared to give the committee some indication, in greater detail than we have been given before, of the thinking of the government in arriving at this decision, and some indication that the cabinet is prepared to reconsider the matter.

I raised this question with the Prime Minister on Tuesday, following his week end trip. I am willing to concede that there had not been too much opportunity over the week end for the Prime Minister to call the cabinet together to reconsider this matter, as he indicated earlier to the Leader of the Opposition that he would do.

So far as the people in my constituency are concerned, it is a question not only of their immediate loss but one that goes deeper than that. It is one which involves their faith in Canada, in the government of Canada, and in what it means to be a Canadian citizen. As the member for that constituency who has tried to give this chamber some indication of the outlook and general attitude of the people of that area towards pride in Canada, I can say it is a question that goes to the root of their outlook, attitude and support of the whole Canadian idea. To me that is an even more fundamental consideration than the exact design of a particular symbol or emblem which may be raised in various places in our country.

Mr. McIlraith: Mr. Chairman, the hon. member for Comox-Alberni and the hon. member for Burnaby-Richmond raised a matter of considerable importance. The difficulty in this case arises out of the requirement that somehow the federal government, under our constitution, reconciled a desire to help a segment of the population who suffered a very severe disaster. Without question, this was a very serious disaster to those who were involved. However, responsibility has to be exercised, in the knowledge that under our constitutional arrangements the provinces have direct and immediate responsibility for the municipalities—indeed, the municipalities are creations of the provinces. I think that a few years ago the position was always firmly taken that it is only when a province was unable, by reason of the extent of the disaster, to finance the relief which needed to be supplied, that anything could be given. That was the original position. I know there have been variations in more recent years, but I mention this so that we may get this matter into perspective.

Something was said of the Hay River disaster. The criteria which apply in this case, however, are different and I do not think the example is particularly relevant to our discussion since, of course, Hay River is in the Northwest Territories and no provincial government is involved. Nor would it be suggested, I imagine by any hon. member, that it is beyond the capacity of the provincial government concerned to handle the relief measures necessary in the case of this particular disaster. The Alberni situation has to be resolved in this context. Bearing these considerations in mind, and not having in its possession details of the damage, the government decided that notwithstanding what I have said it should make a contribution toward helping these unfortunate people. And it made a contribution of a quarter of a million dollars—or, at least, it indicated it would make a contribution of that amount. I believe in light of the circumstances this reflected a responsible treatment of the subject, whether or not one thinks the particular amount was large enough. That is a point which could be discussed at great length because any amount so given is not arrived at on the basis of a precise formula.

Hon. members suggested the sum was not large enough but, as I listened attentively to their comments, I received the impression that their reason for believing it was not large enough did not represent an objective approach on their part but, rather, that it reflected a feeling that the province had not acted as they would have wished it to act in such a situation. In any event—and I do not wish to interpret their remarks—they were critical of the way in which the province had handled the situation. I do not wish to join in that criticism for the reason that whatever I may think of the way in which the province handled the situation, the fact remains that this is a provincial responsibility, and I do not think it is for federal members of parliament to criticize the methods used by provinces in dealing with matters which lie within provincial jurisdiction.

Hon. members then raised another question which I regard as being altogether separate, though related closely enough to allow it properly to be raised in the circumstances. It concerns procedure for a national disaster fund—and those were the precise words used as I noted them down. This raises a matter which perhaps should be taken into consideration so that on some suitable occasion the establishment of some kind of criteria to be made applicable in these cases could be worked out between the provinces and the federal authorities, to the end that in the event of a disaster the municipalities or the local areas themselves would have reason to know what tests were likely to be applied and how they would be applied. The authorities, both federal and provincial, would, in turn, know in what circumstances they would be expected to contribute and the amounts they were expected to make available. This suggestion is certainly one I would wish to consider.

Perhaps there is not a great deal more I can say about it at the moment because this is obviously a proposition which would have to be considered by the government, and when the government had reached a decision on it the whole matter would have to be taken up with the provinces on a suitable occasion. The hon. member for Comox-Alberni raised this question on several occasions on the orders of the day and he has obtained replies from the Prime Minister. I do not know that I could usefully add to those replies. I think it would not be helpful for me to attempt to enlarge on them, other than to say, in connection with the second point which the hon. member raised, that I will undertake to consider the matter and have it given attention.

I regret that in all these cases it is difficult to know what kind of contribution to make. The hon. member read headlines from newspapers as to the inadequacies of the grant made. I cannot help saying that I do not recall at any time in my political life ever seeing a headline in any newspaper applauding an increase in taxation imposed in order to enlarge any of these grants. It is, after all, a matter of acting reasonably and responsibly in determining what is a proper contribution to make, and it is well, when considering these matters, to bear in mind that the generosity desired by most people in arriving at all these contributions would inevitably mean appropriate legislation to increase taxes—because, of course, revenue does come out of taxes. It is a matter of using a balanced judgment in all the circumstances and of reaching a decision as best one can.

I can assure the hon. member that this Alberni situation did receive, as I well know, long and careful consideration and that all the factors entering into a decision were carefully thought out and discussed at some length. There has been no attempt to minimize the significance of the loss to the persons concerned—I think 55 families lost their homes. In any event, the matter was carefully considered and the best conclusion which could be reached was that the sum of $250,000 was appropriate in all the circumstances, bearing in mind the degree of responsibility of the federal government. It is a matter of regret that it was not sufficiently large to be satisfactory to hon. members and to the persons in that area.

Mr. Barnett: I certainly did not intend to imply in the course of my remarks that newspaper headlines always give a fair summary of the feeling in the country on various issues. I did something which I do not ordinarily do. I quoted these headlines and said at the time that I was doing so because I felt they did accurately summarize the reaction. I drew attention to them because, as I had said earlier, this is not the ordinary reaction of Canadian citizens when a grant is made from the federal treasury.

With regard to what the minister had to say about increasing taxes, this is one of the axioms which I believe all members of this house realize and accept. But I should like to point out, if this has not already been drawn to the attention of the minister and the committee, that in effect if funds are provided for purposes of re-establishment and reconstruction it is simply using our taxing mechanism for providing a pool against loss, because the loss figures which were released following the appraisal are based upon the loss that was uninsurable. I have gone into this matter and it becomes apparent that a disaster such as a tidal wave, because it is a risk that will affect only people in certain limited areas of the country, is not something which in the ordinary way insurance companies would insure against, except through charging absolutely prohibitive premiums. Therefore I do not think that the minister's argument in respect to the increase of taxes, and so on, to deal with this kind of situation is really applicable in this case.

I certainly was not inviting the minister to comment upon or to agree or disagree with my own assessment of the actions of the government of the province of British Columbia. I felt free to make my own assessment because, after all, I am a citizen of British Columbia and have a vote in provincial elections, in addition to being a representative of the people of that particular area of the province. What I was trying to do in making that assessment was draw to the attention of the government and the house that there did in fact exist a gap in the finances available for dealing with this disaster situation, and I felt I should offer my own explanation, on my own responsibility, as to some of the reasons for the existence of that gap.

What I was trying to point out was that in view of the long period of uncertainty which these people have had, I was convinced that the more proper and appropriate thing for the government to have done would have been to make a grant on a scale that was sufficient to close that gap, and then follow through with dealing expeditiously with some more satisfactory and better established arrangements for future situations.

I was glad to hear the President of the Privy Council express to the committee his interest in taking action along those lines; but I still maintain—and I think members of the house will appreciate my position—that assurances of that kind are not really very helpful in dealing with the problem that is immediately facing these people, who are receiving considerably less than the net depreciated value of their loss, let alone any consideration toward receiving something that bears a proper relationship to replacement costs in this situation.

[Translation]

Mr. Marcoux: Mr. Chairman, I just want to give you a little assistance. Earlier, when the motion of the hon. member for Lapointe (Mr. Grégoire) was ruled out of order, three reasons were given, one of which was the fact that Bill No. C-64 was now figuring on the order paper. However, I see that Bill No. C-64 is an act to provide for a Canadian national anthem, while Bill No. C-41 is an act respecting a national flag and a national anthem of Canada. The latter would have been a better argument than the former.

The Chairman: Shall the resolution carry?

Mr. Peters: Before the resolution carries, Mr. Chairman, I would like to avail myself of the opportunity of saying something about the business and the operation of the house. An editorial appeared the other day in the Montreal Gazette under the heading, "Better house management needed". It went on to speak of the presentation made by the Prime Minister on May 15. I think some parts of this editorial are worth considering. It said:

> The House of Commons did not look at its best when Prime Minister Pearson announced the 20 pieces of legislation that must be passed before the summer recess, and many members of the house laughed at him.
> To some extent all this is due to the government's minority position and the restive mood of a house that is not disposed to allow the government to forget its thin hold on power. But there is more to it than this. The trouble also comes from the fact that the business of the house, the amount and order of legislation, is not being frankly worked out between the government and the opposition.

It goes on to say:

> The need for a frank understanding between government and opposition would not in any way limit the freedom of criticism and debate. It is, rather, a matter of the proper management of business.

I recommend the whole editorial to all members of the house. I think the Prime Minister was being unfair and rather stupid in introducing the amount of legislation he did introduce in the way that he did, if he honestly and with any integrity expected the house to pass this legislation before having any recess this summer. I think that we in Canada should start looking at improving the affairs of government, and one of the major ways of doing this is by dividing the session off in accordance with the arrangements they use in the United Kingdom, where they divide the financial section of the session and the legislation section of the session. As most hon. members will know, this was done a long time ago, because they encountered the same problem that faces us, namely that you cannot mix the budget resolutions and the throne speech legislation and try to deal with them at the same time and expect to accomplish very much with either.

No one in this chamber has ever gone to a meeting run by any organization which had any understanding at all of the operation of an organization—certainly this has been the experience of anyone who has attended meetings on a regular basis—where an agenda had not been prepared and it was decided that there would be a limited, and only a limited, amount of new business introduced in that agenda. The agenda is presented; those present at the meeting are asked to approve, add to or delete from the agenda, and the agenda is adopted. That is the way the business is carried out.

I have just looked over the number of things the Prime Minister suggested had to be passed. I have totalled them up. I may be out one or two, but I totalled 35 items. I do not know when his week end is going to come, but if he does not run the house better than it appears to be run at the moment he can count on that week end some time very late in the fall, because members of parliament are already taking their holidays and would be quite happy to see that he has the opportunity to stay here during July and August if he wishes to do that.

I have read the list. Some of these measures are important; some of them have been put off by us for five years, and I do not understand how he thinks we are going to pass them all of a sudden. Some of them are just wishes; some of them are just election promises; some of them have great priority and should be discussed—but I think it is very unfair, unrealistic, and is a very poor way to run a government if we are going to continue to hold a gun to the heads of members of parliament every time a period arises when we normally expect to have some recess, and this type of situation is put before us. There is not a member in this house who has not decided in the last two or three years that this is a full-time job, that we have an obligation to be here almost the year round. There is, except for elections, a limited period of time in which a member is able to visit his constituency and make a complete tour of his area.

I think we should decide now when that period will be. I can assure you, Mr. Chairman, that it does not satisfy me to have a recess some time during the winter, when I come from northern Ontario. It is neither handy for me nor advantageous to my constituents. In the rural areas we may sit around a stove while we discuss particular problems, but I think it is much better if they were discussed out in the fields with the sun pouring down, giving a guy a break from his haying or harvesting.

We should also give consideration to the interests of members of parliament with families and young children. If this is done we will find that the best time for a holiday will be somewhere around July and August. If this holiday period could extend to some six or eight weeks I think the date should be set for July 1 to end of August, and that this decision should be taken now.

What would this decision mean, Mr. Chairman? It would mean that the government would have immediately to consult with the other members of parliament, or if they do not wish to do that they would have to publish—perhaps this is by far the best method—a list, a really honest list, as to the things it is desirable to accomplish. This list could be made available to the press, if they want to do it in other ways than in the past; and then it will rest on the shoulders of every member of parliament, no matter from which party or quarter of the house he may come, to give his co-operation and achieve the result desired within a reasonable length of time. There will always be, of course, I think everyone will admit, occasions when certain matters arise, such as that which arose at the Easter recess or during the Cyprus crisis, and attention must be directed to them. I think every hon. member is adult enough to take this into consideration, and our rules and regulations must therefore make way for this type of emergency.

I am very pleased at some of the changes which are being made, and I think members of parliament are to be congratulated on their willingness to make them, particularly when the government does not seem in any way willing to co-operate or to make concessions. When an individual member of parliament makes a concession which the government does not, I think the newspapers could do the country a service by pointing out that the government is being irresponsible in taking such an attitude. Let me take an example. We play with estimates every Friday afternoon. I do not know why estimates are brought forward on Friday afternoons. Perhaps it is because cabinet ministers want to go away and decide that it is "Joe's" turn today. The government have not a chance in Hades of getting estimates passed on Friday afternoons, and they know it. I do not profess to be an expert on any subject, but I do not think it would be difficult for me to speak on the subject of, say, external affairs. All I would need to do is to read the newspaper and every Friday afternoon I could rise and make a speech on what I had read during the week about external affairs. But I think this would be difficult to do over a period of two or three days. My suggestion is that the government is being irresponsible in bringing forward estimates every Friday rather than concentrating on the legislation which they declare should have priority before the summer recess, and hammering away at such legislation until it is passed.

One of the major legislative items is redistribution. There is no question that the Conservative party has decided that redistribution is very important to them and is going to be fully discussed—and I think they have the right to discuss it. On the other hand, I think the government also have the right to expect this measure eventually to be passed. I suggest that the only way they can pass this measure is to bring it forward with whatever priority they wish to give it, state frankly their position to the house and the need for the legislation, and then leave it up to the responsibility of every hon. member in his own conscience to make his decision about it. I think the government shirks its responsibility in failing to do this.

[Mr. Peters.]

You will also be interested to note, Mr. Chairman, in looking over the 35 pieces of legislation which have been announced that there is no reference to a new flag. This was not considered. There are also many other items which I am sure the Prime Minister, if he were honest, would admit he has not a hope in Hades of getting through by September, even if we were to sit here June, July and August. I think the legislation listed is extensive enough, but all 35 items could not possibly be passed before the recess. I have seen some of them on the order paper for two years now and I do not think they will pass even at this session.

I was pleased to hear that the committee on procedure was able to make recommendations far reaching in scope and consented to by all members of the house, as I understand it. After discussing them in caucus there was general agreement with them. But I ask you, Mr. Chairman, did the Prime Minister sit in at his caucus when they were discussed, and did he agree that these concessions were of some value to him? What is the Prime Minister and the government willing to offer us? Too many times members of the press will say that a certain member of parliament, who is doing something they do not like, is holding up legislation. I noted a very amusing occurrence the other day where a long list of remarks made during another debate was unrolled so as to highlight the fact that there had been considerable discussion in a particular field. But have the press asked the government what it wants to accomplish this session, or what it wants to accomplish before the recess, and when the recess will be?

I was accused, Mr. Chairman, of having had some interest in the situation which developed at Easter. I would inform the house now that I also have some interest in developing a situation relating to our summer recess. I have always been offended by the fact that the government are able to hold to the head of an individual member the threat of losing his holiday at the expense of what he considers the interests of his constituents. Since I have been a member of this house there has never yet been an occasion when just before a recess, whether it be for one day, one week, a summer recess or the end of the session, the government did not bring in a number of items of legislation which were not expected to pass prior to the offer of a vacation which, it is suggested, should be given speedy consideration.

I think this is unfair and that the House of Commons and the people of Canada have a right to know the government's agenda for the session, both in the legislative and in the financial field. We are aware that estimates are increasing year by year and that there is need to separate them from our legislative considerations. I think the government would be much more fair if they were willing to disclose what items they wanted passed—they could certainly count on my co-operation and on the co-operation of this party—and allow us to give consideration to what we consider to be our priorities in relation thereto.

In the list of 35 measures, Mr. Chairman, there are a number of items of extreme importance to my constituency. They are of importance to some segments of the economy in my constituency. There are others which do not bear that importance as far as my constituents are concerned. I believe I have an obligation and a right to press for the needs and requirements of my constituents. I should have the right, Mr. Chairman, as a member of parliament, to know to which of these items I should give preference in the allocation of the time to which I consider I am entitled.

I believe the government should be willing to set a date for such things as the Easter holiday, and say we are going to have a holiday. Anyone can check back, Mr. Chairman, and ascertain that we were not much farther ahead after Easter than we were before Easter. We had accomplished very little in terms of legislation or estimates. I am sure that the objection of every member to having something rammed down his throat will be apparent. You will find that after two months of what would be normally our summer recess we will not have accomplished very much in terms of legislation with regard to these 35 items. Hon. members should be informed of the government's intention with regard to a summer recess, and what the government's preference is in connection with legislation it hopes to get through before that time.

I agree with the Prime Minister that there are things that should be presented and passed. However, when he throws in this flag issue and says the government will stake its future on it, and implies that there may be an election, then I think he is being unfair and is not giving preference to any of the 35 items he listed. These items cannot matter very much if he is willing to postpone them for six or eight months in order to have an election.

We are talking about the government, but I am not sure really who the government is. I would think it is a very small number of people in the cabinet. I do not believe it includes all the cabinet. I have sat in opposition with some of these government members, I have been their colleague in years gone by, and I have found most of them to be reasonable. I am sure these people did not decide that these 35 items would have to be passed before a decision could be reached about a summer recess. I just wonder who the government is. Is it only the Prime Minister who sits in his little ivory tower and decides what he wants to get done, decides what the preference shall be, just as he now decides what the flag should be? Is this what government by the Liberal party means? After all, the Liberal party was elected on the fact they had a team and they were going to be able to work things out administratively. They had better get started because they have not given much indication so far that they are a team.

Every member of this house has a responsibility. Their responsibilities vary according to whether they sit on the government side or the opposition side. I think it would be foolish for 265 members of parliament to sit here and not be able to come to a decision on what constitutes a year's work. We know that in the United Kingdom if the work of parliament is not finished by a certain time they automatically start a new session. The old session may end today and a new one may start tomorrow. However, they do decide that there will be a time at which this may happen. I feel that the business of parliament has grown from the time when a session used to be three or four months in length, and being a member of parliament is now a full-time proposition.

I cannot see how the newspapers of this country are going to be able to blame members of parliament for poor management if the government itself cannot make a decision and provide parliament and the country with an agenda for the orderly conduct of business. I strongly urge the house leader to give full consideration to what business he believes should have priority before a summer recess which, in my opinion, should begin on the first of July. Certainly, he should give consideration to the possibility of completing the important legislation the government may bring before us before dealing with the estimates. I strongly urge consideration of this matter. There will probably be two months taken up in trying to convince the government that this course is going to be followed in the future. However, this course is going to be followed because I feel that the matter is important enough to warrant following it. I do not believe the government will find the house unreasonable, if the government is fair and straightforward with the house. I hope that tomorrow the Prime Minister will announce that he expects parliament to recess for the months of July and August, and that certain legislation must be passed before we recess.

We all remember what happened in connection with the $50 million needed for the unemployment insurance fund. Hon. members are not unreasonable when the needs are presented to them. Except for the possibility of an emergency, I hope the Prime Minister will inform the house we will recess on a certain date and return on a certain date, and that this possibility will not hinge on the passage of these 35 items.

Mr. Prittie: The hon. member for Timiskaming has brought up some very important points, I believe. He has expressed the feelings of many private members in this house. There are many ways of expediting business, and if the Prime Minister wants that hatful of legislation passed, I think means will have to be found other than we have been able to find so far. I do not believe the committees system is being used as it should be. This complaint has been expressed by many of the new government backbenchers.

So far in this session we have not had departmental estimates referred to any of the committees. It seems to me that before much longer estimates such as those of the Department of Veterans Affairs should be referred to the veterans affairs committee, which could be working on them. The estimates of the Department of Fisheries could go to the standing committee on marine and fisheries. The committee which looked over the reports of Canadian National Railways and Trans-Canada Air Lines has not been called into session as yet, and this is something we must do before the session ends. All of these committees should be used, and used immediately. Not all the departmental estimates can be referred to the committees, but many of them can be. So far we have just had three committees working, namely the external affairs committee dealing with the Columbia river treaty, the committee on privileges and elections and the committee looking after the rules. I think if we subdivided some of the work and got it out of the house into committee, we would make more progress.

I like the idea presented by the hon. member for Timiskaming concerning some regularity of sessions. Being a member of parliament is a full-time occupation now. In the United Kingdom they say that at certain times of the year the house will sit and other times it will not. I suspect one of the real problems in this whole situation is that there are some people on the government side and some people in the official opposition who do not want the house to function. It seems to me that some members of the official opposition want an election so that their leader will get one more chance to be prime minister. I am sure that many of the advisers of the Prime Minister believe the government should just drift along for a while and then go for a fall election in order to get the majority they need. This is very nice for them, but it does not get the business of the country done. They would like to have an election so that some of these minor parties would be out of the way. I believe if an election is held we will still be around to bother them.

The important thing, I believe, is not to talk about a fall election but to get the business done as soon as possible.

[Mr. Peters.]

WAYS AND MEANS

The house in committee of ways and means, Mr. Batten in the chair.

INTERIM SUPPLY

Mr. McIlraith moved:

Resolved, that towards making good the supply granted to Her Majesty on account of certain expenses of the public service for the fiscal year ending March 31st, 1965, the sum of $338,136,717.59 be granted out of the consolidated revenue fund of Canada.

Motion agreed to.

Resolution reported and concurred in.

Mr. McIlraith thereupon moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-99, for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money for the public service of the financial year ending the 31st March, 1965.

Motion agreed to, bill read the first and second times and the house went into committee thereon, Mr. Batten in the chair.

Clauses 1 to 4 inclusive agreed to.

On clause 5—Account to be rendered.

Mr. Lambert: Before the schedules carry would the President of the Privy Council give the house the assurance that the bill is in its usual form and that all items included therein will be subject to deliberation at the appropriate time?

Mr. McIlraith: Yes, as I indicated at the resolution stage I am happy to give that undertaking and I hereby give the formal undertaking that all such rights and privileges will be respected and will not be curtailed or restricted in any way as a result of the passing of this interim supply bill. I refer to the right to discuss individual items of the estimates.

Clause agreed to.

Schedules A to D inclusive agreed to.

Preamble agreed to.

Title agreed to.

Bill reported.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Batten): When shall the bill be read the third time? Now, by leave?

Some hon. Members: By leave.

Mr. McIlraith moved the third reading of the bill.

Motion agreed to and bill read the third time and passed.

BANK ACT—QUEBEC SAVINGS BANKS ACT

EXTENSION FOR ONE YEAR OF AUTHORITY TO CARRY ON BUSINESS

Hon. Walter L. Gordon (Minister of Finance) moved the second reading of Bill No. C-98, to amend the Bank Act and the Quebec Savings Banks Act.

[Translation]

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, we are in a rather strange situation because the only copy of the bill given us is in French. Usually when copies of bills reach us in one language only, we get the English copy.

We note today, with some pleasure, that this time we have only the French copy.

[Text]

I would ask the minister to advise us whether the period of 60 sitting days will be as of the 1st of July, 1965 or from what particular date. Other than that I have no further comments to add to those which were made by my colleague, the hon. member for Digby-Annapolis-Kings (Mr. Nowlan), at the resolution stage.

Hon. Walter L. Gordon (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I apologize for not continuing this discussion in the French language but I did notice—

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, should you not announce to the house what the effect will be if the minister speaks now?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Batten): I must advise the house that if the minister speaks now he will close the debate.

[Translation]

Mr. Marcoux: Mr. Speaker, may I point out that it is five o'clock?

[Text]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Batten): Order. It being five o'clock the house will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely, private bills and public bills.

PRIVATE BILLS

CONSIDERED IN COMMITTEE—THIRD READING

Bill No. S-5, respecting The General Council of the Canadian Branch of the St. John Ambulance Association—Mr. Matheson.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. MacNaught: Mr. Speaker, If I could have unanimous consent I would request that you call item No. 31, the second reading of Bill No. C-60, an act to amend the Combines Investigation Act (captive sales financing).

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Batten): In order for this bill to be proceeded with now there will have to be unanimous consent. Does the house give unanimous consent to proceed with Bill No. C-60 at this time?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

COMBINES INVESTIGATION ACT

AMENDMENT TO PROHIBIT CAPTIVE SALES FINANCING

Mr. P. V. Noble (Grey North) moved the second reading of Bill No. C-60, to amend the Combines Investigation Act (captive sales financing).

Hon. J. Watson MacNaught (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, I would move, seconded by the Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. Teillet), that this bill be not now read a second time but that the subject matter thereof be referred to the select committee on consumer credit for further consideration.

Motion (Mr. MacNaught) agreed to.

TRANSPORT

AMENDMENTS RESPECTING PUBLIC CARRIERS IN B.C. COASTAL WATERS

Mr. T. S. Barnett (Comox-Alberni) moved the second reading of Bill No. C-29, to amend the Transport Act and the Railway Act (B.C. water carriers).

He said: Mr. Speaker, this is the third occasion over a period of years on which I have moved second reading of a bill on this subject matter. Perhaps I might explain the purpose of the bill by a brief reference to the explanatory notes in which it is stated:

> The principle of this bill is one that is recognized by parliament: namely, that public convenience and necessity may require public carriers of goods and passengers to be regulated. This bill would regulate such carriers that operate in British Columbia coastal waters by putting them under board of transport jurisdiction.

Perhaps I might explain the purpose of the bill a bit further by making reference to the terms of part II of the Transport Act, as it is set out in chapter 271 of the Revised Statutes of Canada, 1952, which deals with the matter of transport by water. Section 10 of the act states:

The board—

—that is the board of transport commissioners—

—may, subject to the provisions of this part—

—that is, part II of the Transport Act—

—license ships to transport passengers or goods or both passengers and goods from a port or place in Canada to another port or place in Canada.

Section 11 (1) states:

No goods or passengers shall be transported by water, from one port or place in Canada to another port or place in Canada, either directly or by way of a foreign port or for any part of the transport, by means of any ship other than a ship licensed under this part.

The particular section of the bill which it is my proposal to amend is section 12, which in effect is an exempting section. Section 12 (2) says:

The governor in council may by regulation exempt any ship or class of ships from the operation of this part.

Section 12 (3) is quite specific in its terms and says:

The provisions of this part do not apply to the transport of goods in bulk in waters other than the Mackenzie river.

Then there is a further exempting provision in subsection 4 which says:

The provisions of this part do not apply in the case of ships engaged in the transport of goods or passengers

(a) between ports or places in British Columbia—

The net effect and the main purpose of my bill, apart from some consequential amendments to the Railway Act, are to remove from that exempting section of the Transport Act the phrase "between ports or places in British Columbia."

I would like to point out that though I introduced this idea to the house for the first time in the form of a bill in 1956, that was not the first occasion on which the subject matter of the bill had been discussed in the house.

The main provisions of the present transport legislation date back to 1938 and the act in its present form, basically, was introduced to this house by the late Right Hon. C. D. Howe who at that time was minister of transport. I remember pointing out on the first occasion on which I introduced this subject for the consideration of the house that when the measure was up for initial consideration in that year the very subsection to which I then referred, and which I now seek to have eliminated, was discussed at considerable length by the then hon. member for Comox-Alberni, Mr. A. W. Neill who, as may be remembered, sat for many years in this house as an independent member representing the constituency which I now represent. Mr. Neill was at that time greatly concerned about this particular subsection, and the records show that when the bill was originally before the house in committee he sought, by motion, to have this particular provision deleted. I pointed out to the house in 1956 that while it was quite conceivable that one member from Comox-Alberni could be wrong in the conclusions he had reached as to the necessity for the deletion of this subsection, it was hardly likely that two of them would be in error in this regard, particularly when their conclusions had been arrived at on different occasions separated by a considerable period of years. So I feel I must be presenting to this house an idea worthy of favourable consideration.

It is true, and I think it should not be overlooked, that during the period which has elapsed since Mr. A. W. Neill first objected to this provision, a veritable revolution has taken place in the transportation pattern in coastal areas of British Columbia. It is true that those parts of the province which were then affected by the need for water transport still depend, by and large, upon the same means of conveyance. In the intervening years there has been some development of roads and highways along the coast, though not as great as one might suppose. But there has been a startling development in the field of air travel. Whereas in earlier years when this subject was before the house the only mode of travel up and down the coast was, almost without exception, by coastal vessel, today the bulk of those travelling back and forth from the various centres along the coast, and particularly from the areas north of the parts ordinarily referred to as the lower mainland and southern Vancouver island, travel by air.

One of the results of the development of air travel has, of course, been a drastic alteration in the whole pattern of travel by steamer. A great many of the steamer runs which had been known for years along the coast as well established runs have disappeared. One of them, and perhaps the best known, partly because of the number of summer tourists who patronized it, was the run of the famous steamer Maquinna along the west coast of Vancouver island. But the old and well known steamers of the former Union Steamship Company which used to sail the coast in a regular way for years have also disappeared entirely from the picture.

There has also been a marked change in the pattern of handling goods or freight. A great deal of the freight which is now carried up and down the coast is carried by barges rather than by the more familiar types of coastal steamer. In recent years a further development has taken place, one which I think should not be overlooked in any consideration of the pattern of travel on the Pacific coast. I have in mind the development of a publicly owned ferry system under the aegis of the provincial government of British Columbia. I should like to point out at once that it is my understanding that the operation of this publicly owned ferry system would not be covered by the terms of the bill I am now proposing. In other words, provision for licensing by the board of transport commissioners would not apply in the case of provinciallv-owned vessels.

I submit that in spite of the many changes which have taken place in the field of travel and which I have attempted, briefly, to outline, there is a continuing need for some form of orderly regulation of transportation by water on the west coast. I should like to point out that water transportation on the west coast of Canada is almost the only aspect of public transportation, as far as I know, in this country which is not governed by some form of public regulation and control. It is the only area of transportation where the people who use it have no right of any kind to appeal to a public body for redress if their interests have been adversely affected. There is no place where they can go to raise any question with regard to the tariffs, fares or freight rates they are charged. They have no means of ensuring whether a particular service will continue to run or cease to run. Moreover, there is no means of protection for those who operate a service so as to ensure that a dozen other people may not suddenly decide to institute a parallel service, with the result that they might all go bankrupt and, in the end, no service would be provided.

From time to time in this house I listen to considerable discussion on the subject of railway branch line abandonment proposals in certain parts of the country. As I listen to such discussions I sometimes wonder what the situation would be in the rest of Canada, and in the prairie provinces in particular, if the transport companies concerned had complete freedom to tear up railway lines or to discontinue passenger services here and freight runs there, unanswerable to any public control or authority and without regard to any of the results which might follow from such actions. Undoubtedly, of course, one of the results might be to bring about some shortening of the length of discussions that take place in this house. But I would like to point out that this is precisely the situation which has faced the people who live in the coastal area of British Columbia all through these years. In my view, Mr. Speaker, that is why the late Mr. A. W. Neill, when he represented a constituency which does cover a very large and important part of that coast, pressed this point in the interests of the people who lived in the coastal communities.

I think this matter is perhaps becoming more important, even though there may not be as many steamer runs affected now as was the case some years ago. I feel that one of the reasons it is becoming more important arises in part out of the development of the provincially owned ferry system in British Columbia, because as matters stand the provincial government, without any other reference, can institute runs and in fact has plans at the present time, according to announcements that we have read in the press, for introducing new ferry runs such as the one that has been proposed to follow what is becoming known as the route of the Haidas, from the northern part of Vancouver island through to Prince Rupert. They can do this without any reference to the general pattern of transportation and the effects their actions may have on it. Of course, the actions of the provincial government in the field of highway development can very drastically alter the requirements as far as travel by water is concerned. In addition to that there is a great deal of confusion as to what is the present policy in the matter of subventions for the maintenance of certain runs to the more isolated areas, when they are required. Confusion exists as to what areas of responsibility in this field lie between the federal and provincial authorities. I could go into the details of particular examples, Mr. Speaker, if I wished to take the time of the house to do that.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I feel that in this situation it is perhaps more necessary than ever, at least for the matter of the protection of the existing operations and the existing lines, that they be brought under the orderly regulation that applies in other transportation fields, whether they be railways under federal jurisdiction or bus lines operating under the jurisdictions of provincial public utility commissions. If the provisions set out in my bill were adopted, it would mean that a realistic appraisal of this whole situation could be made and it would have the responsibility of being made by a public body set up by parliament, namely the board of transport commissioners. The question of subventions, where they were required, could be properly dealt with as part of the general pattern of establishing adequate transportation by water to supplement the other forms of transportation as they come into existence from time to time.

The whole problem along the coast of British Columbia has been different in many ways from that in any other part of Canada. I know that in years past various operators of various steamship lines in that part of Canada have objected to being brought under any form of public regulation or control. I have always been rather at a loss to understand their reasoning in this situation, because it seems to me that in the field of transportation, where quite high capital commitments are involved in the establishment of adequate services, those who proceed to make that kind of investment should require and be entitled to some reasonable form of protection for their investment, so that once having established a run, provided they continue to give good service in accordance with public convenience and necessity, they would be able to carry on their business on a satisfactory basis and under an arrangement which would mean that their fare structure and freight structure would have some reasonable relationship to the costs of transporting goods to the consumer which apply in various other parts of the country.

The provisions of the Transport Act in the regulation of water carriers, and the way it is set out, basically apply only to the inland waters of the great lakes and the St. Lawrence system. There is another exempting section here which makes it non-applicable to coastal transportation on the Atlantic coast, but I would like to point out to the house that on the Atlantic coast the situation is completely different, for at least two reasons. One is that because of the multiplicity of small provinces on the Atlantic coast—that is, small geographically—the federal responsibility for interprovincial traffic enters into the picture; second, the publicly owned railway in Canada, partly under the terms of union with Newfoundland but in other fields in addition to that, has accepted a responsibility for the maintenance of a reasonable pattern of coastal steamer traffic on that part of the continent.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I believe that this situation in British Columbia is peculiar and for that reason I have confined the terms of my bill purely to that situation.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I regret that I have to interrupt the hon. member, but his time has expired.

Mr. Barnett: I have one more sentence, Mr. Speaker. I thought it was a little after ten minutes past five when I was allowed to speak.

Some hon. Members: Carry on.

Mr. Barnett: I was going to say, in conclusion, that I have tried to present my argument for the basic purpose of the bill, but I realize there are a good many technical complications in this field. As far as I am concerned, it is the kind of subject that could appropriately be considered by a standing committee of the house, and I would be more than happy to see this bill, after acceptance in principle on second reading, go to the appropriate standing committee of the house for detailed consideration.

Mr. Grant Deachman (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, for the last 20 minutes I have listened with a great deal of interest indeed to the remarks of the hon. member for Comox-Alberni (Mr. Barnett) because, coming from the Pacific coast and representing a Pacific coast riding, I am aware, as he is, of the great importance of the inland waterway which serves the province of British Columbia, a considerable portion of the state of Washington, and stretches northward to the southern borders of Alaska. You may start below Seattle and sail northward for 1,000 miles on an inland waterway which comes upon the open sea only once for a brief time in that whole passage.

This great waterway is full of marine traffic to the extent that you are hardly ever during the whole voyage out of sight of another vessel of some kind ploughing up and down these inland passages. Moreover, this traffic not only covers the coast line itself, but the indented fiords along the coast, running many miles inland, reaching lumber camps, pulp and paper mills, fish canneries, Indian villages, and other settlements steadily growing and increasing in importance up and down the coast of British Columbia. This is a scene of which my hon. friend is well aware, and he, like myself and other members from British Columbia, is well aware how important is the domestic traffic on these great inland waterways to the people of British Columbia and to much of its commerce.

To give the house some idea of the extent of the traffic which moves along inland waterways, I should like to refer to a supplement to the 1963 annual report of the national harbours board which contains some interesting figures on this question. Turning to the figures for the port of Vancouver, the total domestic cargo tonnage for 1959—I am eliminating foreign cargo tonnage because we are discussing in this bill inland traffic, not overseas traffic—was 4,900,000 tons, or in round figures 5 million tons. In 1963 it had increased 2 million tons to a figure of approximately 7 million tons. That is the total inward and outward domestic tonnage.

If I may compare that 7 million tons of domestic traffic with the traffic in and out of the port of Montreal, in 1959 the figure was 7,700,000 tons approximately, and by 1963 it had moved up to 9,300,000 tons. Therefore the domestic traffic in and out of Vancouver compares very favourably, with a ratio of approximately seven to nine, with the port of Montreal, which gives some indication to the house of the extensive traffic which plies our inland coastal waters.

I want to turn for a moment to the figures for the port of Vancouver for passenger traffic, because my hon. friend mentioned them when discussing the shift in coastal traffic by vessels in the inland waters. I refer to these figures because this is a matter of considerable importance in plotting how traffic should be governed in the future under legislation such as that suggested by my hon. friend today.

In 1959 coast wise traffic in total numbers of passengers, again excluding foreign traffic, taking both landings and embarkations into consideration, amounted to 1,000,183. This number declined steadily until in 1963—and this figure is hardly believable—the number of passengers was down to 198,000. Some of that drop from 1,000,183 to 198,000 had to do with some changes in ferry service and the withdrawal of some of the old ferry services between Vancouver, Nanaimo and Victoria. But, as my hon. friend conceded, there has been a very marked decline indeed in coast wise passenger movements.

There has also been a comparable change in the number of vessel movements, and I want to refer to this for a moment because it is quite significant. I am sorry I have no comparative figures here, but coastal or inland commercial vessels, including fishery vessels, numbered 22,316 in 1962 and 19,325 in 1963. This is in terms of arrivals only. These figures give, I believe, some indication of the importance of this traffic.

In listening to the hon. gentleman's remarks I wondered whether or not it was wise to attempt further to regulate this traffic through a federal agency and to remove the regulation of that traffic from the area of provincial jurisdiction in which for the most part it now rests. It is this point to which I wish to come next. As this question is peculiar to British Columbia and has to do to some extent with the growth and direct development of British Columbia, I wonder whether or not we are wise in bringing this domestic traffic into the federal field in the manner suggested by my hon. friend.

Mr. Barnett: Would the hon. member permit a question at this point. Quite frankly, I am puzzled at his reference to this coastal traffic being within provincial jurisdiction. I wonder whether he could spell that out, because my understanding is that it is under no jurisdiction, except for steamship inspection and that sort of thing.

Mr. Deachman: I think this is quite true. This traffic is literally self-regulating today in the province of British Columbia. I might explain, although I am sure my hon. friend knows this, that the movement of ships, for instance, for use at pulp mills up and down the coast and for the movement of paper from the pulp mills down the coast to Vancouver and further to Seattle is done in two ways. Contracts are let for this movement at the beginning of the season. The job is put out to tender and the various barge operators on the coast contract with the operators of the mills or the shippers for the hauling of the paper and chips from the mills.

Mr. Barnett: Is not the hon. member aware that my bill refers only to the public carriage of goods and passengers? It has no relationship to the contract carriage of bulk goods.

Mr. Deachman: I am sure that the barges operated by commercial barging companies are classified as commercial carriers; that these carriers who contract for the movement of goods are in fact the carriers of the goods for the shipping company, and would thereby be classed as public carriers. I see my hon. friend shaking his head, but I do not know just how I could classify them. If a barge company, for example, is not in the special business of hauling pulp and paper, but is in a commercial business, then I believe that company would be classified as a public carrier. I believe it is a public carrier whether its goods are moved under a tariff or whether its goods are carried under contract.

I should like to go on and point out some of the features relating to the exemptions under section 12 of the Transport Act to which my hon. friend referred, and which I feel he rather skipped over. I do not want to leave this section without explaining it a little more fully. This is the one that deals with exemptions under the act. I quote from section 12, subsection 4:

> The provisions of this part do not apply in the case of ships engaged in the transport of goods or passengers,
> (a) between ports or places in British Columbia—

It was there that my hon. friend stopped early in his remarks. However, the section continues as follows:

> (b) between ports or places in Hudson bay, Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, Prince Edward Island, Newfoundland, and the gulf and river St. Lawrence east of the western point of the island of Orleans, or between any two or more places therein, nor does this part apply between any of such ports or places and ports or places outside of Canada.

Thus the exemptions which my hon. friend mentioned in explaining the act apply to the west coast, to Hudson bay, to the east coast of Canada and to the lower reaches of the St. Lawrence river. In other words, what we are looking at here is not a section of the act in respect of the control of shipping which relates to seaborne craft at all. The section is specifically designed to cover lake vessels and the upper St. Lawrence reaches and in no way at all relates to traffic on the west coast, the east coast or in any of the salt waters surrounding Canada. I think this should be made perfectly clear as we consider this act which specifically relates to traffic on the great lakes, on the upper St. Lawrence regions and in no way relates to traffic on the British Columbia coast.

I want to move on a little bit to consider for a moment the changing nature of services on the west coast. My friend will remember that his area was at one time served by the old Princess Alberni, which called at his port and at other ports up the coast along the west coast of Vancouver island. A number of years ago this old vessel was suspended from service, I believe, and is probably running guns into Cyprus today or performing some other useful task. It is also true that about the time when this service was suspended a road was driven through from Port Alberni and people can now, for the first time go through to the Pacific ocean, even if they are not going on some business for the McMillan, Bloedel Company.

Mr. Barnett: Only if you are going at night or on week ends.

Mr. Deachman: I realize that the service is still not on a day to day basis; nevertheless my hon. friend has the privilege of representing a riding which has a road in it and now, for the first time, passenger cars and private individuals are enabled to travel out to the Pacific ocean. This is the only road in Canada that takes you to the Pacific ocean. The rest of us only reach the inside passage. One of the things that the withdrawal of these old vessels has accomplished, as new methods of transportation, has been the construction of a growing shift in the roadways which now reach out to the Pacific coast.

I suggest that if we had protected these old vessels by legislation, this new system of transport which now enables people to move freely in and out of Port Alberni would not be available now. I want to cite a further instance. The government of British Columbia, for which I hold no brief has done a rather excellent job in improving ferry services. This new ferry service to Vancouver Island, connecting with the riding of my hon. friend, has replaced the ancient and creeking machinery of the Canadian Pacific which formerly took a long time to render service to him and to the people of his riding. I suggest it was the competitive spirit of the people living on the coast and in British Columbia which felt that that was necessary to improve upon the facilities serving my hon. friend's riding.

Had the hon. member been able to get his bill through a few years ago, the cloak of protection would have been cast around the shaking shoulders of the old Canadian Pacific. These ancient vessels would still be plying back and forth across the Georgia strait. We would all be cursing and gnashing our teeth, wishing for something better, and talking about building tunnels and bridges. Instead of that, local competition has built new and good services. I suggest that we let her rip, my friend; let these people fight it out and provide better services. Put your faith in free enterprise. Turn your back upon socialism and march forward to victory.

Mr. Ron. Basford (Vancouver-Burrard): I enjoyed listening to the hon. member for Comox-Alberni (Mr. Barnett) explaining his bill, partly because I have certain connections with his riding. When I heard him discuss the early shipping in his riding, I was reminded of the fact I had the good fortune to graduate from one of the leading high schools in his riding which used to return an independent Liberal to this house.

Mr. Knowles: That is not what he called himself.

Mr. Basford: I am sorry to see that the riding of Comox-Alberni has fallen into such a bad way.

I enjoyed listening to my colleague, the hon. member for Vancouver Quadra (Mr. Deachman) conduct his spirited examination of the provisions of this bill. I particularly enjoyed his references to the area of the hon. member's riding and the west coast of Vancouver Island. I well know how dependant it has been upon coastal shipping. I considered that before debating this bill I should look at the explanatory notes to determine exactly what the hon. member wanted to do. Normally one can look at the explanatory notes of a bill to determine exactly what is intended and why it would be a good thing to pass the bill. But I find that these explanatory notes are rather sketchy and really do not set out what the bill is intended to do at all. They simply say:

> The principle of this bill is one that is recognized by parliament: namely, that public convenience and necessity may require public carriers of goods and passengers to be regulated.

It does not go on to state exactly what form the regulations will take.

THE ROYAL ASSENT

A message was delivered by Major C. R. Lamoureux, Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod, as follows:

Mr. Speaker, the Honourable the Deputy Governor General desires the immediate attendance of this honourable house in the chamber of the honourable the Senate.

Accordingly, Mr. Speaker with the house went up to the Senate chamber.

And being returned:

Mr. Speaker informed the house that the the Deputy Governor General had been pleased to give, in Her Majesty's name, the royal assent to the following bills:

An Act respecting the International Bridge over the St. Clair River known as the Blue Water Bridge.

An Act to amend the Customs Tariff.

An Act to amend the Estate Tax Act.

An Act respecting The General Council of the Canadian Branch of the St. John Ambulance Association.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Speaker: It is my duty, pursuant to provisional standing order 39A, to inform the house that the questions to be raised at ten o'clock this day are as follows: (1) the hon. member for Lapointe: transfer of administration of Eskimo affairs to the province of Quebec; (2) the hon. member for Pictou: proposed removal of C.N.R. agent from Westville, Nova Scotia; (3) the hon. member for Kootenay West: disposition of unfilled portion of Gunnar mines contract.

It being six o'clock I do now leave the chair.

At six o'clock the house took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The house resumed at 8 p.m.

BANK ACT—QUEBEC SAVINGS BANKS ACT

EXTENSION FOR ONE YEAR OF AUTHORITY TO CARRY ON BUSINESS

The house resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Gordon for the second reading of Bill No. C-98, to amend the Bank Act and the Quebec Savings Banks Act.

[Translation]

Mr. Guy Marcoux (Quebec-Montmorency): I am sorry, Mr. Speaker, but we are not ready to accept this measure immediately, in view of the fact that, this afternoon, within five minutes, the house passed Bill No. C-99, thereby voting an amount of $8,837,000 and some odd dollars, and that, according to the Bank Act, that amount only represents a cash reserve of $883,700 on the part of the chartered banks. It may then be realized that, before extending the application of the Bank Act and the Quebec Savings Banks Act, the Bank Act must be explained to certain hon. members.

We have raised that question many times, and several hon. members said the Social Crediters were talking through their hats. However, I am under the impression that several hon. members have never read the Bank Act and that they have no idea of what its consequences might be.

That is why I feel that those who may not be familiar with the Bank Act should be told what it is all about, and it is for their information that I will say a few words about it. I can assure the house that in doing so I have no intention of delaying either the passage of this bill or any other business of the house. But since we are especially interested in chartered banks, I thought I should say a few words at this time.

Mr. Speaker, I should like to call the attention of the house on the following quotation of Pius XI's encyclical Quadragesimo Anno:

In the first place, then, it is patent that in our days not alone is wealth accumulated, but immense power and despotic economic domination is concentrated in the hands of a few, and that those few are frequently not the owners, but only the trustees and directors of invested funds, who administer them at their good pleasure.

Mr. Speaker, perhaps it would be appropriate to call hon. members' attention on chapter 48 of the 1953-54 Statutes of Canada, 2-3 Elizabeth II, and to read the definitions given under the heading "Interpretation". I am sure they would be quite surprised by what they would find out.

I should like to point out that this has to do with the legislation on banks and banking operations, but I must say that the Bank Act and the Quebec Savings Banks Act are two different things entirely. As a matter of fact, the Bank Act is recorded in chapter 48 while the Quebec Savings Banks Act is in chapter 41 of the same statutes.

And here is what can be found in section 2 of chapter 48: "agricultural equipment", "agricultural implements". And then the definition of a bank follows. Subparagraph C of section 2 says:

"Bank" means the bank to which this act applies.

And then it goes on with the definition of various terms used in the Bank Act, such as "bill of lading", "branch", "corporation controlled by the bank", "farm", "farm electric system", "farmer", "fish", "fisherman", "fishing", "fishing equipment and supplies", "fishing vessel", "goods, wares and merchandise",

"grain", "hydrocarbons", "inspector", "live stock", "manufacturer", etc.

That means that the Bank Act is quite clear and that we are justified in wondering from the beginning what is the purpose of all those definitions.

Mr. Speaker, when we, members of the Social Credit party, say that chartered banks can create credit, that is do something with nothing, when we say that chartered banks can create credit which is 10 or 12 times the amount of their cash reserve, we are told that we talk through our hats.

And yet, if one refers to section 71 of the Bank Act, one can read the following:

The bank shall maintain a cash reserve in the form of a deposit with the Bank of Canada and of Bank of Canada notes held by the bank, and such reserve shall be not less on the average——and please note that it does not say more,

—shall be not less on the average during any month than 8 per cent, or such other percentage as may be fixed by the Bank of Canada under the provisions of the Bank of Canada Act.

The chartered banks legislation refers to the Bank of Canada Act, so that we have to consult another act to know exactly the problem of the cash reserve of chartered banks.

And if one looks up the Bank of Canada Act, which is chapter 13 of the 1934 statutes, one can see that section 24 deals with the reserve chartered banks must maintain.

Mr. Speaker, I shall not read everything which concerns this matter, for there are two pages.

In 1954, the act was amended under chapter 33, and section 11 says:

Section 24 of the said act is repealed.

This means that everything in section 24 was repealed, everything concerning the provision of fixed cash or numerary reserves was eliminated because section 24 had been repealed.

Section 28 is repealed and replaced by the next section which becomes section 24. That section mentions a reserve to be maintained by the banks—and this, Mr. Speaker, is in the Bank of Canada Act, not in the Bank Act concerning the chartered banks.

It is very easy to compute the amount of numerary reserves to be held by the banks; I can immediately prove it by quoting subsection 2 of section 71:

For the purpose of determining the amount of the cash reserve required to be maintained by a bank during any month,

(a) the amount of its deposit liabilities payable in Canadian currency shall be the average of such deposit liabilities at the close of business on Wednesdays in each of the four consecutive weeks ending with the last Wednesday but one in the preceding month,

(b) the amount of Bank of Canada notes held by the bank shall be the average holdings of such notes at the close of business on Wednesdays in each of the four consecutive weeks ending with the last Wednesday but one in the preceding month, and

(c) the amount of its deposit with the Bank of Canada shall be the average amount of such deposit at the close of business on each juridical day of the current month.

I know that many members of the house are experts, but it is really difficult to know what are the average cash reserves the chartered banks are supposed to keep. However, they are well protected by the law, I may assure you.

(3) If the property and assets of the Bank of Canada are insufficient to pay its debts and liabilities and the Bank of Canada suspends payments of any of its liabilities, the deposit made under this section by every bank is hereby guaranteed, and the governor in council, on the recommendation of the minister, shall authorize payment out of the consolidated revenue fund of such moneys as are necessary to implement the guarantee.

That is why we have been saying that the banks have discretionary powers, incomparable powers. We would like to see this act amended in some way, so that the people are dealt with a little more justly.

Now, you know what a bank is: the act tells us "Bank means a bank to which this act applies".

What are the powers and business of the banks?

I read this in section 75, and you will see it is very important:

The bank may
(a) open branches;

It is a great privilege and it is very convenient for banks to open branches.

(b) acquire, deal in, discount, and lend money and make advances upon the security of, and take as security for any loan or advance made by it, bills of exchange, etc—

I shall not go any further, Mr. Speaker, but I meant to show that the banks are entitled to make loans from 10 to 12 times the amount they have as a reserve in cash on deposit in the Bank of Canada.

The law says so; it is neither us nor even Messrs. Towers, Rasminsky or Coyne. It goes to show that banks have extraordinary powers.

Do you think it would be to one's advantage to be a director of a chartered bank? It could be, because according to the Directory of Directors published by the Financial Post of Canada for 1962, people of very good families, of very good reputation, are chartered bank directors and, at the same time, probably by accident, control more or less directly many companies. I will not quote the whole Directory of Directors, it would be too long and, besides, my time would not suffice. However, I will read the names of some very decent persons who have succeeded well in business, and I would have done the same thing if the opportunity had arisen.

For instance, in the Bank of Montreal there are: Hon. C. Wallace, director of the Bank of Montreal, who partially controls 16 companies; Hon. H. de M. Molson, also director of the Bank of Montreal, who partially controls nine companies; Hon. Sir Leonard Outerbridge, who partially controls two companies; Hon. James Sinclair, who partially controls seven companies; Hon. Leslie M. Frost, who partially controls eight companies.

For the Bank of Nova Scotia: Hon. E. Asselin, who partially controls 11 companies; Hon. S. A. Hayden, who partially controls six companies.

For the Canadian National Bank: Hon. J. M. Dessureault who partially controls five companies; Hon. F. Philippe Brais, who partially controls 14 companies; Hon. Jean Raymond, who partially controls 32 companies.

For the Canadian Imperial Bank of Commerce: Hon. G. P. Campbell, who partially controls 37 companies; R. H. Winters, who partially controls 20 companies; Hon. G. B. Foster, who partially controls 35 companies; Hon. J. V. Clyne, who partially controls five companies; Hon. F. M. Ross, who partially controls four companies; Hon. C. C. Pratt, who partially controls 15 companies.

For the Royal Bank: Hon. Paul H. Bouffard, who partially controls 19 companies.

For the Toronto-Dominion Bank: Hon. J. A. Mathewson, who partially controls ten companies.

For the Provincial Bank of Canada: Hon. J. Olier Renaud, who partially controls five companies; Hon. Gérald Martineau, who partially controls seven companies; and formerly, Hon. Lionel Chevrier, who partially controlled three companies.

That was taken from the Directory of Directors for 1962. I checked the 1963 edition: the name of Mr. Lionel Chevrier has been deleted; the name of the Hon. Louis S. St. Laurent, who controls Famous Players Corporation is there, but no mention is made of the fact that he is a director of that company.

However, the 1963 edition mentions Mr. Roger Létourneau, big fund raiser of the Quebec Liberal party, director of the Bank of Montreal and associated with nine companies; Mr. Peter Nesbitt Thompson who was secretary treasurer of the Quebec Liberal federation and who is director of 49 companies, excluding the Canadian Oil Co. that he sold to American interests. Moreover, we saw yesterday or the day before that he had just been appointed director of the Greater Winnipeg Gas Company. Finally, there is Mr. Renault St. Laurent, son of the Right Hon. Louis St. Laurent, who is director of the Canadian National Bank and who plays a part in the control of the destiny of ten other companies.

Mr. Speaker, as you can see, it is rather important to know where the privilege granted by the Bank Act, the chartered banks act and the Bank of Canada Act can lead.

As Pope Pius XI stated:

> That is how in a manner of speaking they pump blood into the economic organism whose life they hold in their hands in such a way that without their consent no one can no longer breathe and only the strongest survive.
> That is to say that the ones who are most determined in the fight are those who are less hampered by their conscience.

The issue is quite serious and the people cast the chain of their own enslavement because they are unaware of the power of high finance.

It is all very well to speak of planning, state control, crown corporations and what not, but no effort is made to find out the true causes of the problem.

Lately, a federal member pointed out to me that the Russian revolution, which took place in 1917, was quite satisfied with the banking system for many years since banks were only nationalized in 1935. It goes to show that even under a socialist or communist system banks are still sufficiently strong to keep on controlling the economy.

Some statements in the Porter commission's report are, to say the least, unfounded. In the first place, on pages 112 and 113, it is stated that banks create credit. We see it repeatedly written in legislation. People say it is not true. But, we see it in the Porter commission's report; not bad, for a start.

> It is further stated that, with the exception of existing chartered banks, banking institutions should be allowed to make unsecured loans to individuals and enterprises in addition to loans secured under section 88.
> Those amendments would increase competition and, at the same time, give the institutions more freedom to specialize as they see fit, thus improving at lesser cost their services to the community as a whole.

Without entering into an argument, I should like to say that such a reason is absolutely false and inadmissible.

This is what was said about cash reserves:

> Perhaps it would be appropriate to reduce them a little further.

About foreign banks in Canada, it says:

> It would be possible to have regulations to prevent foreign banks to assume control in Canada.

That is to say, we could see to it that they do not take over Canadian banks.

And the commission recommends:

> That any purchase of shares in Canadian banks by foreign banks be subject to approval by the treasury board.

It considers abnormal that the government exercises no control whatever on purchases made by foreign banks, whereas it forbids or at least regulates such action by Canadian institutions.

Therefore, as you can see, Mr. Speaker, the question of extending by one year the application of the Bank Act is extremely important. I understand the banks would suspend their banking operations on July 1 if the bill is not passed. I can tell the Minister of Finance (Mr. Gordon) right now that it will be accepted, because it is a fait accompli. We keep. accepting accomplished facts in this House of Commons. We pass postdated bills, so to speak, for expenditures made six months ago.

We agree with the new legislation, but we want the hon. members who did not have time to examine the Bank Act to know right away that, when the time comes to really amend that act, we shall come forward with very strong arguments and, above all, we will not let the legislation pass if some of our recommendations are not accepted.

The Porter commission report also says this:

The commission thus maintains it would be beneficial to the economy if the interest rates asked by the Farm Credit Corporation and the industrial development bank were to follow more closely the rates on the financial markets, so as not to cripple the operations of private lenders.

Mr. Speaker, those agencies were established by parliament to assist the farmers, large and small, in short, to help farmers and industrialists with an average capital benefit from capital funds at a reasonable interest rate.

The Porter commission—and I shall not give the names of its members, because anybody can find them in the new book just published on the subject, but some of them are bankers—the Porter commission, as I say, is asking that interest rates be raised. Of course, the role played by those organizations then becomes worthless, if the recommendation of the Porter commission is carried out.

The Porter commission also points out:

—that the financial situation of the provinces and of most of the municipalities is generally sound in spite of their substantial deficits in the last few years.

Is that logical? They have experienced in the last few years substantial deficits, but their financial situation is sound.

Some small municipalities have greater difficulties in getting funds than their financial situation could warrant.

That is for sure. Montreal, Toronto and few other large cities excepted, there is hardly one single municipality in a borrowing position.

It says here some small municipalities but I think that we could easily change "some" to "thousands".

But the provincial governments could often remedy that situation in helping them to supply a more complete and more up to date information for the securities purchasers.

Here, it is practically suggested that municipalities resort to some advertising; but municipalities such as that of Saint-Marc-des-Carrières, Beauport or others are unable to do so because they cannot get any credit.

So, as I said, I find that the report of the Porter commission contains some recommendations which are unacceptable.

I shall not go any further in this field. But I would simply like to quote an excerpt from the speech made by the hon. member for St. Maurice-Laflèche (Mr. Chrétien), on May 12 last, as reported in Hansard, page 3186, when the hon. member for Shefford (Mr. Rondeau) asked him why the recommendations set forth by the royal commission on banking appointed in 1944 had not yet been put into practice. The hon. member for St. Maurice-Laflèche then answered as follows:

I am pleased to answer this question of the hon. member for Shefford. A commission can make recommendations that the government may find unacceptable. And when we have responsible government like the one we then had, it is possible that it decided not to accept them in the political climate that prevailed at the time.

I hope and trust that many recommendations of the Porter commission will not be accepted as they stand now, because that would be detrimental to the Canadian people.

Now, as for the power of banks to create credit, that power is given to them, not alone, but with the power to charge interest also. The fact is that the Canadian government itself is faced with an extraordinary problem, because it has a considerable debt and it must pay fantastic amounts in interests alone.

In the first volume of Public Accounts of Canada for the year 1963, it is said that the amount paid in 1962-63 was $881,598,898 in interest alone.

Now we know that the deficit for that same year amounted to $691,632,927, which means that we paid $200 million more than the debt interest deficit. That is, if we did not have any interest to pay to the banks, we could get rid of our deficit and register a surplus of $200 million for 1962-1963.

Now, some hon. members are saying: If our financing was without interest, it would get us nowhere.

Well, Mr. Speaker, if this is the only thing that worries them, we are ready even to accept that the government pay some interest —I, at least, am ready to do so; but let the government pay it not to individuals, not to those who are living from interest paid on money loaned, but to the Canadian people. There would not be any problem then, and we could pay 6 per cent, except that the money would return to the consolidated fund of the Canadian government.

Therefore, if that is enough to make it clear to people that they should use the money of the Bank of Canada, we are willing to make this concession and to accept that the interest be paid to the Canadian people.

I shall now revert to the matter of interest. The interest of the federal government is one thing, but there is also the interest paid by municipalities. In my own city of Beauport, as reported in the newspaper L'Action of March 21, 1963, the debt charges cost $184,600, which means that the percentage of the debt compared to the estimates is 41.76 per cent.

It is strange that 41.76 per cent of taxes paid by individual taxpayers are used to service the debt.

As recently as May 8, 1964, I read in Le Droit of Ottawa that the budget of the municipality of Eastview included $262,200 for debt service. Those are fantastic amounts given to people creating credit. This credit is not provided by means of some people's savings so as to benefit others, but it is created out of nothing and made available to other people. In doing so, they make a profit.

Now, the report of the Porter commission maintains that:

> About 30 per cent of the credits of $100,000 or more granted by the banks at the end of 1962 were for the benefit of their directors, or of firms or companies in which they were also shareholders or directors, or of borrowers of whom they were surety.

Mr. Speaker, we can see that our system is well organized and, from memory, I could quote an export insurance company—you know that the government votes amounts for an insurance company to guarantee the payment of exports—which is now and has been for some years under the control of the chartered banks. This means that the chartered banks create credit and make loans which the people will have to repay. This is why they are sure that this amount will be paid, for if foreign countries refuse to pay, the government guarantees to them the payment of the amount involved.

I do not wish to dwell any more on the subject, for there are so many things which could be said. I simply wanted to show the members of the house who cannot conduct research that there are perhaps in the position we take justifiable points. If others wish more detail, they may ask questions. As far as we are concerned, no doubt we shall revert to the matter when the chartered banks act is introduced next year.

Mr. Maurice Côté (Chicoutimi): Mr. Speaker, I have to congratulate my colleague, the hon. member for Quebec-Montmorency (Mr. Marcoux), whose very explicit statement may, I believe, have opened the eyes of many hon. members.

Under the circumstances, I feel that it is reasonable to pass this legislation now under consideration, the purpose of which is to amend the Bank Act and to extend for a year, that is up to July 1, 1965, the privilege of the banks to issue currency, that is to create ex nihilo the credit which is the only currency now in circulation in Canada, because even bank notes and metallic currency are bought at the Bank of Canada with a mere draft drawn on their account at the Bank of Canada and accumulated through credits previously created.

We are in favour of this bill, because it is absolutely necessary for all hon. members to have enough time available for a thorough study of our Canadian banking system. Yet, they all must co-operate and, first of all, get rid of their prejudices, and lift the veil of mystery which covers the Canadian monetary system. How many hon. members have actually conducted any research in depth with regard to the historical background and the evolution and operation of our financial system? Their number is certainly very restricted.

A year would hardly be too much to enable all hon. members to contribute as individuals to the improvement of our banking system. I would, indeed think it extremely desirable for all Canadians together, putting aside all political considerations, to come, a year from now to the conclusion that it would be fitting for the Canadian government to recover the royal privilege which never should have been ceded, when the Bank Act was amended in 1870 and in 1871, and which maintained for the chartered banks the special privilege of printing bank notes and issuing credit.

In reality, the issuance of credit is a sovereign power lent to the commercial banks, but the time has come for the federal state to recover that right to issue credit through the Bank of Canada.

With confederation, the provinces gave to the central government the exclusive right to legislate in monetary matters. Why did the federal state, even after the setting up of the Bank of Canada, leave to a private sector of our economy, that is to the chartered banks, the prerogatives of bank credits. That is something absolutely inconceivable that the most important operation, the issuance of credit or the creation of new money, be left in the hands of chartered banks.

Only parliament has the power to amend the chartered banks' act and that is why, even if in a year's time, we passed only one item of legislation giving back to the Bank of Canada the absolute power to issue credit, to coin the resources of Canada for the benefit of all Canadians, it would be infinitely better than a great number of meaningless pieces of legislation passed these last 25 years, because they only evaded the problem of a stagnant economy and a galloping inflation.

Our monetary system is essentially inflationary in character. Canada cannot go on stagnating in a financial system that gives us deficit budgets, an exhausted treasury, monetary instability, continuous depreciation of our currency, lack of currency, exchange control, high cost of money, multiplicity of taxes, nuisance taxes, and finally credit anarchy. Whether it concerns a nation or a business, any sound administration must obey a rigid set of rules. For that purpose, we must regulate the financial activity of the country and also the national economic activity.

Someone just handed me a document showing that inflation does exist in most countries of the world at the present time. Even the common market has to declare war on inflation. Canada is not the only country faced with inflation; there is inflation in all countries which have adopted the same financial system. There is inflation in Brazil and also in other countries. The Minister of Finance is now waiting for something and I am under the impression that he is looking for new solutions to free the country from the financial trap which stifles Canadians. In his last budget, he stopped the increase of taxes, but for how long? I take this opportunity to tell the Minister of Finance that I support his policy aimed at freeing our country from foreign capital, and I prefer the nationalism of a Walter Gordon to the internationalism of Eric Kierans who, with the policy he advocates, is one of the worst masters of the inflation and depreciation of our currency.

Nationalism is not an exaggerated desire for power, but on the contrary it is the will to maintain and develop what is necessary to the life of the community.

Mr. Speaker, from the end of 1954 to July 1, 1963, monetary inflation increased in a dangerous way. Indeed, during that period, borrowings on foreign financial markets by municipal, provincial and federal governments as well as by private companies totalled $5,140 million. During that time, foreign investments in Canada reached $13,950 million.

Furthermore, if we add to those amounts, the amount of the new credits issued by chartered banks during the same period, amounting to $5,248 million, we have a grand total of $24,338 million of debt money put into circulation in Canada over a period of eight years and six months. That is aberration at its worst. On the other hand, when an economic system needs artificial means to function, it is basically unsound, and this bill will give us ample time to rectify the matter. Statistics on consumer credit show that, at December 31, 1963, there were $6,604,000,000 in loans to finance consumer goods. That figure does not cover instalment purchases, accounts and credit cards of all kinds.

It is by hundreds of millions of dollars that chartered banks create credit for the loan companies which finance consumption. In addition, they must also finance consumption themselves, because consumers do not have enough money to buy goods. That is a new factor which contributes to disastrous inflation in our country. It is precisely in such circumstances that violent economic crises occur; if that is so, it is because instead of merely financing production, an artificial purchasing power is based on the hope of meeting monthly instalments rather than on the true purchasing power at the time of purchase or on previous savings. Indeed, that is a frightening situation if you consider the interest rate on all those consumer loans.

That proves once again the necessity of amending the Bank Act, because when a country such as Canada cannot give a lasting value to its currency, cannot balance its budget and only succeeds in increasing its debts, it is easy to see that we are going around in a vicious circle.

Financial balance and the stability of monetary value can never be achieved as long as parliament does not give the Bank of Canada, this bank of banks, the regalities which it should have logically and naturally, and as long as a distinction is not made between social investment expenditures or public investment expenditures, which provide the funds required for the national equipment, and the commercial capital meant to boost the agricultural, industrial and commercial activities.

Thus, thanks to the bill which is now before us, we will be able to prepare within a year the necessary monetary reform. It will then be possible to achieve such a reform quite easily by amending the Bank Act in such a way as to provide that henceforth the Bank of Canada would have the privilege of creating credit. It would not be more difficult than that. Thus, any credit would be based on values under the control of a national credit council with representatives from the Bank of Canada, the major financial institutions, including the credit unions and the major intermediate agencies.

As for the methods of application of banking practice concerning the rediscount of banking instruments which could be granted to all banks and credit unions—and I insist on that—that is a matter of internal administration that the national credit board could change. However, I wish to point out that the maximum interest rate on loans made by banks as well as credit unions, should never, under any circumstances, exceed 5 per cent.

I add that the Bank of Canada would be authorized to grant credit without interest or at cost to the government of Canada for the financing of public capital works or social services, always under the control of the national credit board, so that those treasury operations could be made according to criteria corresponding to statistics. That procedure would be a scientifically controlled release of purchasing power directly to the public and would constitute a reversal of the monetary circulation to finance consumption. In our present system, credit is generally issued in order to finance a new production, while there is no money in circulation to buy the former production.

From now on the Bank of Canada would look after the financing of treasury bills, if any, at administrative cost.

Finally, the municipal credit bank, connected with the Bank of Canada, would replace the municipal loan fund and would grant loans to municipalities at administrative cost, accepting their bonds as security. It would be a very simple machinery which would upset nothing and which would put everything back in order, allowing the economy to operate smoothly.

What would result from the implementation of those financial proposals? We would witness a gradual decrease in municipal taxes, a reduction of federal and provincial taxes, a revalorization of our currency and, finally, a drop in the cost of living. The various governments would be able to balance their budget. There would be work and income for everyone, and coercion and centralization under any form would disappear.

If, on the contrary, the federal government maintains its policy of impoverishment of the Canadian people and of depreciation of all our values, there will no longer be any hope of establishing a truly binational confederation, and the federal administration will remain under a financial tyranny when it could become free so easily.

On clause 1—Duration of authority to carry on business.

Mr. Gordon: Mr. Chairman, the hon. member for Edmonton West asked if clause 1, section 6(b), meant that in the event that parliament did not sit for 20 days during the month of June, 1965 the provisions of this act would apply for 60 sitting days following the first of July, 1965. That is correct.

TERRITORIAL SEA AND FISHING ZONES

LEGISLATION RESPECTING TERRITORIAL WATERS AND FISHERIES LAWS

The house resumed from Wednesday, May 20, consideration of the motion of Mr. Martin (Essex East) for the second reading of Bill No. S-17, respecting the territorial sea and fishing zones of Canada.

Hon. J. A. MacLean (Queens): Mr. Speaker, at five o'clock yesterday, when this item was last up for consideration, I was nearing the end of my remarks, but I referred to statements which had been made during the last election campaign with regard to this very important matter of the protection of our coastal waters for the exclusive use of our fishermen, so far as that may be possible.

I note that these comments have gone back over the years, indeed over the last three election campaigns. Speaking in Yarmouth on March 14, 1958, the present Prime Minister was reported as follows:

> Mr. Pearson's most important proposal...was a strong endorsement of the extension of Canadian territorial waters from the present three mile limit to 12 miles. This would offer Canadian fishermen much greater protection from foreign fishing vessels.
> He said that in spite of the fact both Britain and the United States are opposed to it Canada should continue to press for this extension due to the international conference next fall.

I do not know to which conference he could have been referring, because when that statement was made the very important law of the sea conference of 1958 was then going on in Geneva. You will recall, Mr. Speaker, that the two conferences on the law of the sea took place in the intervening period between that and the 1962 campaign, one in 1958 and one in 1960, and in the interval the government of the day was trying by every means possible to reach agreement so that we might extend our exclusive fishing zones.

As I have already said, this business of legislating with regard to nationals of other countries on what we admit is part of the high seas, is a very questionable procedure. I reiterate that I hope it will succeed, but it is a difficult thing unless we have the cooperation and agreement of some of the most important countries involved which have a stake in this matter.

I shall try to keep my remarks as brief as possible, but I would like to point out that this became a political issue, or attempts were made to make it a political issue. With reference to the 1962 election campaign, reporting a speech that the Prime Minister made in Charlottetown, the Toronto Telegram said:

> He also made his first formal promise of the campaign. A Liberal government, he pledged, would institute a 12 mile limit (to replace the existing three mile limit) unilaterally, if a 12 mile limit could not be achieved through nternational agreement.

This was repeated many times, and an attempt was made to create the illusion in the minds of those listening to these speeches that if the present Prime Minister were granted the magic power of being Prime Minister, all he had to do was wave some magic wand and all these foreign vessels would disappear over the horizon and never be seen again. It was as simple as that.

For example, speaking in Sydney during the last election campaign in 1963 he said:

> —we as a Canadian government will declare a 12 mile limit by national action...I'm not afraid of this step—the present government is.

Mr. Speaker, the former government, referred to in that context as the "present government", was not afraid to take action. I must say I have great respect for bravery, but I have learned over the years to have great misgivings about foolhardiness and it would be a terrible mistake if, by doing something brash, we antagonize our friends to the point where they would make it as difficult as possible for us to attain our objectives.

These speeches by the Prime Minister went on indefinitely, and I think they were unfortunate because an attempt was made to create the impression in the minds of our fishermen that a 12 mile zone could be set aside exclusively for their own use. This is virtually an impossibility because there are a number of treaty rights and other things which have to be taken into consideration.

In this connection, when the Prime Minister's formal pledge was first made in 1962, I read this quotation from a report of the occasion:

> During supper in Charlottetown, the Liberal leader read over his speech for that night and added a final paragraph. It was a tricky ending for a political address—a few sentences on political morality reinforced with quotes from Wesley and a modern Catholic philosopher and theologian—but it worked beautifully.

I must say it did not work because the people I represent are shrewd, and they were not taken in by this. I am not sure to which Wesley he was referring. It may have been a former member, Mr. Wesley Stewart. On the other hand, if he was talking about John Wesley, I am sure John Wesley must have turned over in his grave when that statement was made.

Mr. Knowles: Maybe it was John Wesley Pickersgill.

Mr. MacLean (Queens): That would figure. Now, Mr. Speaker, I want to conclude because I know there are other members who wish to participate in this debate. I am not even attempting to mention a number of important factors, such as the problem of enforcement that may be involved, but I am sure this will be covered by other hon. members.

I am pleased that the Secretary of State for External Affairs indicated that the bill would be referred to the standing committee on marine and fisheries. I think this is an important piece of legislation which should be examined thoroughly by the committee and I welcome the expression of intention in this regard. However, I want to say this: A promise was made by the party now in power that within a year a 12 mile exclusive fishing zone would be instituted. An attempt was made to imply that this 12 mile zone would be for the exclusive use of Canadian fishermen. What is the state of affairs? Legislation is being brought in at this time, but because negotiations are still continuing we do not know what concessions we shall have to make to other countries in order to get their acquiescence in this. Both the minister and the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Martin) are reported to have said in Washington on December 5, 1963—I have a report here which perhaps I could read:

> Both External Affairs Minister Paul Martin and Fisheries Minister Hedard A. Robichaud said here yesterday that historic rights of United States fishermen will not be affected when Canada establishes a 12 mile national fishing zone as it is proposed to do next mid-May.

I do not always depend completely on the accuracy of such reports, but there is no doubt about it that France and the United States have treaty rights which will have to be respected. So we shall have these exceptions. Then there are the traditional fishing rights of a number of countries. We do not know where we stand with regard to these, or at least I do not, because the negotiations are still going on. But I should be surprised if we were not obliged to make considerable concessions along the lines of a phasing out period. This, too, will be in the nature of an exception to the suggested exclusion.

Moreover, until the orders in council establishing the geographical co-ordinates are passed we shall not know where the base line is to be or what bodies of water will lie behind them and thus become national waters. I think this is bad practice. It is unfortunate that the effect of the bill which, after all, is the important thing, will occur at some time in the future when the government will not be obligated to bring the matter before parliament. It will be a fait accompli. Not until the negotiations are complete and the government is ready to pass the order in council will we know the effect of what we are doing now. We are buying, as it were, a pig in a poke. We do not know what concessions we may have to make in order to get any agreement at all.

My final point is this: The law itself, of course, will not become effective until its proclamation and no fixed date for proclamation is given in the bill. We have no means of knowing when this act is to be proclaimed and we therefore have no means of knowing when it will become effective. I hope that when the minister speaks he will be able to enlighten us on some of these points. When the act is proclaimed, the only effect it will have is to become a statement of Canada's determination to establish an exclusive fishing zone, with certain exceptions, out beyond our present territorial waters. Then, when the co-ordinates are established at a later date these will presumably have a bearing on what will become our national waters.

So I regret we are passing this legislation now. However, if it will strengthen the hand of the government in its negotiations with other countries we are willing to support it on that basis at this time. But a far more logical process, to my mind, would have been for the government to have completed its negotiations and then, based on what they had been able to do, to have brought a bill before us and told us frankly what had been the result of the negotiations and what concessions we had been obliged to make. Then we would know where we stood in the matter. This, in my judgment, would be far more acceptable from a parliamentary point of view. Under the present arrangement parliament is being asked, as it were, to sign a blank cheque and trust to luck.

I think, frankly, that the reason this is being done at the present time is to create the illusion that we have reached some special milepost—and we have not. I do not think so, anyway. These negotiations, as the government has found, are long and difficult; people who do not wish to agree can stall and keep coming back to negotiate again and again. It is slow progress. When the former government were trying to safeguard Canada's interests by negotiating patiently but actively in this field we were accused of not doing anything—of having no will to succeed in this endeavour. This was not the fact, and I deplore the situation which has brought about the somewhat premature presentation of this legislation to parliament. Nevertheless, on behalf of the official opposition I wish the government every success in these negotiations. We hope they will be fruitful. We have witnessed this spectacle of promises made in the heat of election campaigns. They sounded good—as if this was as simple a matter as could be imagined; as if when the present Prime Minister came to office all he had to do was say the word and these foreign fishing vessels would disappear over the horizon forever. Now we see the Secretary of State for External Affairs in the role of sorcerer's apprentice trying to make it appear as though we were achieving this result. That is the aspect of the legislation which I deplore.

I have only one further comment to make. No matter how successful we may be in these negotiations, even if we succeed in our objectives, there is a still more important factor yet as far as the fisheries, particularly in the Pacific, are concerned. I refer to the general problem of the conservation of the resources of the high seas. In this connection I should like to quote briefly from a statement made by a member of the Canadian delegation at the Geneva conference in 1958. The representative was Mr. Ozere, the present assistant deputy minister of fisheries, and I quote his remarks because what he says is self-evident when one is familiar with the facts of this matter. Here is the extract from the record:

Mr. Ozere (Canada) observed that, whatever understanding might be reached on the extent of the territorial sea or the contiguous zones, there would remain many problems affecting the conservation and management of sea fisheries which would not be solved by the simple formula of drawing lines in the seas. That was not to say that the adoption of an exclusive fishing zone would not be of definite benefit to those countries which, like his own—

That is, Canada:

—had developed their fisheries mainly along their own coasts.

That is the situation, exactly, as I see it; I think that states it well. I wish the government success in these negotiations and in the other inevitable negotiations with regard to the conservation and exploitation of the living resources of the sea.

Mr. T. S. Barnett (Comox-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, I should like at the outset to say that I agree with the views which have just been expressed by the hon. member for Queens (Mr. MacLean) about the weaknesses of this bill as far as the absence of any determination of the base lines that are to be fixed is concerned. He referred to the bill as being a pig in a poke, and I intend to say something further on that aspect of the matter later on in my remarks. I hope to find that the hon. member is prepared to support my contentions in this connection.

Actually, when this bill was introduced by the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Martin) with his usual verbosity and enthusiasm, I must say the thought that crossed my mind was that the bill was a bit like the proverbial bride's first cake. While it may be a little difficult to imagine the Secretary of State for External Affairs as the blushing bride rushing in with the cake to show it off to hubby, nevertheless that was the thought that crossed my mind as he was introducing this bill. The unfortunate thing, it seems to me, is that the Secretary of State for External Affairs and the government, in their hurry to produce this first cake have become a bit flustered and have left out of the bill, or the cake, a good many of the essential ingredients. In fact it seems to me there is really nothing in the make-up of the bill but flour and water, and therefore the result is really not much of a cake.

I certainly agree with the remarks of the Secretary of State for External Affairs and with those made by the hon. member for Queens (Mr. MacLean) as to the importance of the subject matter that is dealt with in this bill. A bill which has to do with the matter of the territorial sea and fishing zone of Canada is, in my view, a matter of importance not only to the people who live in the coastal areas of Canada but to the entire nation. Much has been said about the importance of the living resources of the sea in a world where the population is growing apace and where an increasing shortage of high protein foods becomes ever more evident. I think it is in the context of that kind of situation that at least the subject matter of this bill should be considered, even though in my view the importance of the bill which has been presented falls a long way short of measuring up to the importance of the subject matter.

The hon. member for Queens (Mr. MacLean) referred to the bravery of the present Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) with regard to some statements he had made in the Atlantic areas of the country in reference to the declaration of a 12 mile fishing zone for Canada. As far as I am concerned, thinking back to the days when I was first in the house, when some of us from over here were advocating the desirability of a firm course of action by Canada in this connection, the brave words of the Prime Minister certainly represented a good step forward. But, of course, I am sure the hon. member for Queens (Mr. MacLean) will agree with me that from our experience and observation we always find that the Liberal party and its leader are much braver when they are in opposition than when they are on the side of the house to the right of Mr. Speaker.

Consequently, now that we have this bill before us we find there has taken place a considerable retreat from some of the bolder words that were uttered by the Prime Minister on the occasion to which the hon. member for Queens (Mr. MacLean) referred.

We in the New Democratic party have been attempting to follow all the recent developments in this situation as closely as we can. Reference has already been made to the United Nations conferences on the law of the sea in 1958 and 1960 and of the failure there to reach international agreement on this subject matter by the required two thirds majority in a vote. I am not going to expand upon that situation, except to say that it has, of course, made quite evident the fact that if anything is to happen in this context, some action along the lines of the declaration of the Prime Minister for the establishment of a fishing zone for Canada needs to be taken.

We have advocated that this action should perhaps have been taken earlier than it was, while recognizing of course that there is a great deal of need for international co-operation in this area. However, as far as we are concerned we believe that the real area in which international negotiation, international treaty and international understanding is required lies in the high seas problems as far as the fishery is concerned to a much greater extent than it does in connection with the establishment of a coastal fishing zone. We believe, also, that in the light of the action which has already been taken by a very larger number of the nations of the world, Canada certainly is well within her rights in taking a firm position in this connection.

During the period since this announcement was made by the Prime Minister, and since we have been informed in our questions to the Secretary of State for External Affairs and to the Minister of Fisheries (Mr. Robichaud) that negotiations have been going on, we have been very much concerned as to the progress of these negotiations. We have been quite concerned that these negotiations appear to have become quite protracted. I am not prepared at the moment to pass any severe judgment upon the Canadian negotiators in this field because the negotiations have not been sooner brought to a determination, desirable though I feel that would have been; but during the period when we were addressing questions to the government on this subject we rather assumed from the answers that were being given to us—perhaps we took this too easily for granted—that the government would not be bringing any legislation before parliament on this subject until these negotiations were concluded. Obviously we wrongly assumed that this would be the case. Naturally we took it for granted that the government would expect parliament to have the substance of the matter before it before we were asked to approve legislation, so that at least we would be intelligently informed and would know what we were talking about.

Rather to my surprise I found that the legislation was being introduced in the other place and would only reach this house following consideration there. This certainly came as a surprise to me and in many ways served rather to mislead those of us who were particularly concerned in this matter, because we had assumed that this legislation would be introduced in this house, where it could be initially dealt with either by the Secretary of State for External Affairs or the Minister of Fisheries.

Some of the inadequacies of the bill have already been pointed out by the hon. member for Queens (Mr. MacLean). I will not attempt to repeat them in detail, but I think there is substance in the point he made to the effect that the real significance of this change in our territorial sea and fishing zones lies much more in where the straight base lines are established than it does in the nine mile fishing fringe which will lie outside the area designated as our territorial sea.

As far as I can see, in the absence of any determination of that matter all we are getting is a poor skeleton of a bill, something which really does not amount to much more than the pious declaration which has already been made by the Prime Minister of Canada's intentions. The fact that this bill as drafted leaves it entirely in the hands of the governor in council to take action as, when and if he sees fit, on the matter of establishing the straight base lines strikes at the very crux of the principle of the bill as I see it, because without it the main purport of the subject matter is meaningless to me.

The question of where these base lines will be established was not outlined by the secretary of state when he introduced this bill. I looked at the evidence given by the Secretary of State for External Affairs and the Minister of Fisheries before the banking and commerce committee of the other place, and as far as I could see from the evidence they gave there, there is no indication given of the intention of the government in this regard. It is true that appended to the minutes of those proceedings is a copy of the brief submitted by the fisheries council of Canada, in which is included a couple of maps indicating the desires of the fisheries council of Canada in this connection. While many of us may agree with the proposals of the fisheries council of Canada, we have had no indication that I recall whether or not the government intends that these base lines should be established either on the Atlantic coast or on the Pacific coast. When one couples that lack of definiteness with the fact that the bill not only provides that these base lines should be set by the governor in council but that they may be changed from time to time by the governor in council as he sees fit, then it appears to me that this present bill is completely unsatisfactory and inadequate.

The subject matter of the bill, as I said earlier, is in my view of extreme importance. It certainly requires a much greater and more detailed consideration in this committee than it received in the committee of the other place, where many of those who were most interested and concerned in this matter, including the commercial fishermen themselves, were not able to appear and express their point of view.

Mr. Robichaud: Would the hon. member permit a question. Is he aware that the group to which he is referring were given a week's notice to appear before the committee?

Mr. Barnett: Well, Mr. Speaker, I do not quarrel with the minister's statement on that matter and I was not expressing any view as to where the responsibility for the situation lies. However, seeing that he has mentioned this question of a week's notice, I do not feel that a week's notice on a matter of this importance is very adequate. If the minister is referring to the organized fishermen on the west coast he probably knows that at that time they happened to be involved in some rather important meetings on the matter of unresolved negotiations with which the minister is quite familiar. But as I say, I was not assessing any blame; I was merely stating the fact that their point of view had not been presented.

I find it increasingly difficult to understand the rather cavalier attitude which is being taken by the present government with regard to international treaties, particularly those relating to fishing. For example, during the last session I tried to bring to the attention of the house the fact that the international north Pacific fisheries treaty had been amended by the government without any proper notice being given either to this house or to the public of Canada through the medium of the Canada Gazette; that in fact the treaty had been amended as the result of a telephone call from one of the officials of a government department to Vancouver.

The government is now bringing in a bill on this very important subject while it says negotiations are still going on, no indication being given of a reasonable termination date. We are given no indication as to what is the likely outcome of the negotiations either in respect to where the base lines are going to be established or as to whether or not there is going to be any understanding, agreement or decision reached on a termination date to so-called historic rights of nationals of other countries. I gather from the evidence given in the committee of the other place that the government has no intention of attempting to renegotiate any of the treaty rights, although I do not consider that in itself to be as serious as this other question, because apparently the treaty rights are not as significant as they might have been a number of years ago. I do not know whether members from the Atlantic provinces would agree with that. Nevertheless this is the situation in which we are being asked to approve this bill, and I submit, Mr. Speaker, that it is simply not good enough for the government to expect parliament to take definitive action which, as the hon. member for Queens (Mr. MacLean) has already said, gives the government a blank cheque to do practically what it likes with regard to where the fishing zones of Canada are going to be. Not only the present government but any future government, if this legislation is passed, will be in the position of being able to manoeuvre and manipulate in this field without coming to parliament for approval.

So, Mr. Speaker, we in this party feel that this bill should not receive approval as it stands. I should like to move, seconded by the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands (Mr. Cameron):

> That Bill S-17 be not now read a second time, but that the subject matter thereof be referred to the standing committee on marine and fisheries for consideration and report.

If this motion carries it means that the marine and fisheries committee of this house, comprised largely of members who are most interested and concerned in this bill, will be in a position to say, after these negotiations are concluded, when progress reports can be made and to consider and assess what real progress the government is making in this field. If the committee is satisfied with the kind of progress the government has made, it will be able to bring back to the house definitive recommendations as to how a bill should be presented which would clearly set out the areas to be included in the internal waters of Canada and the fishing zones of Canada. We feel that unless this is done before we put anything into final legislative form, we have no guarantee that the rights and interests of the fishermen of this country are going to be adequately protected.

Mr. A. B. Patterson (Fraser Valley): Mr. Speaker, in rising to take part in the debate on this particular measure before us I want to say, first of all, that there are many very serious reservations with regard to it. So far as the general principle is concerned, which of course is what we are mainly considering at the moment, it should receive the support of hon. members. However, I can quite understand the hesitancy with which some members, especially the previous speaker, have approached this particular matter. They have voiced fears that if the measure were passed in its present form it would not, to any extent, meet the needs of our fisheries.

Looking back into the history of this particular matter, we are reminded first of all of a statement that was made by the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) about one year ago. He stated it was the intention of the government to declare the 12 mile fishing limit in May, 1964. Of course, we are now in May of 1964 and the measure is being presented. At that time comments were made with regard to the statement and it was pointed out in one news article that this was the fulfilment of another Liberal election promise. The article was quite complimentary with regard to this particular matter.

At that time also it was pointed out by others, for instance in the Pacific Troller, the January-February issue, and I quote:

> When the Minister of Fisheries, H. J. Robichaud, announced the government's intentions to declare a 12 mile territorial limit in May of 1964, the entire fishing industry was elated with the good news.
> The government's announcement was forthright and courageous; it heartened the fishermen's pride in their Minister of Fisheries and renewed our hope for protection from foreign exploitation of our shoreline fisheries which for Canadian fishermen represents practically their entire fishery.

We realize, as has been pointed out by the Secretary of State for External Affairs when he presented this measure, that there are currently about 50 nations that have extended their limits and Canada is more or less following in the train of those other nations. I believe, therefore, we can welcome the introduction of the bill so far as the general principle is concerned. However, I do join with other members in voicing misgivings over a number of issues that are involved.

First of all, I would reiterate our regret over the continuing hesitancy to place the matter before the committee on marine and fisheries. We have an indication, in this particular instance, that the representations made by the fishermen's unions were not acceptable. As was pointed out tonight, they were not able to make arrangements in time to meet with the committee of the other place. I would suggest that during the past few months there has been ample opportunity for a meeting of the committee on marine and fisheries, even although this measure was not before us, and the fishermen's unions and other organizations would have had ample opportunity to make their views known with regard to the particular issues involved in the introduction of such a measure as this. I feel it is unfortunate that we have the measure before us without having had the opportunity of hearing representations from the fishermen's union and other interested parties.

There has been some discussion concerning the matter of historic fishing rights. As was pointed out by the Secretary of State for External Affairs when he presented this measure on May 20, as recorded on page 3411 of Hansard, there have been discussions with those countries which do possess pre-rights for parts of our shores, namely the United States and France. Then, he said:

> We have made clear that the United States and France will be allowed to continue to fish in those areas where they have fished before, subject to agreed arrangements and regulations for the protection of the fisheries concerned.

It has been emphasized, I believe, that there is no intention on the part of the government to alter historic fishing rights. This, it seems to me, creates somewhat of a paradox. In the June 7, 1963 issue of the Montreal Gazette there is one paragraph in an editorial which I should like to read:

> There has arisen a new anomaly. For the Canadian government, realizing the need for conservation, has prohibited Canadians from fishing under certain conditions. But foreign ships have been able to move in and fish as they please between the three mile and the 12 mile limit.

Then, the Globe and Mail for December 5, 1963, carried an article from which I should like to quote this paragraph:

> This would continue an incongruous arrangement in which Canadian trawlers are prohibited for conservation reasons from fishing in coastal waters which are open to foreign fishermen.
> Notwithstanding the conservation arguments made by Canada at Geneva, the Canadian government's method of relieving this inequity seemingly will be to ease the regulations affecting Canadian trawlers.

This points up the particular situation that seemingly is going to exist where at times Canadian fishermen will be deprived of fishing opportunities while other nations are able to move in and take advantage of them.

Strenuous objections have been raised by the united fishermen and allied workers union which represents a great many of the fishermen of the west coast. They have been very zealous in their representations on behalf of the fishermen and have raised strenuous objections with regard to this particular matter. In their letter of May 14, 1964 they state:

> We are absolutely opposed to Bill S-17 and call for its defeat unless it is amended to exclude all foreign fishermen from the 12 mile limit outside a base line which is clearly defined by legislation and not left to be defined or amended by secret orders in council.

In a news release issued by the united fishermen and allied workers union they also emphasize this matter very clearly and strenuously. Sometimes I think the intemperate language used by these organizations in making their representations is more likely to build up walls of resistance than to break them down, but none the less it does indicate how strongly they feel about some of these matters that are not covered in the measure now before us.

A distinction has been drawn between historic rights established by treaty and traditional rights established by traditional fishing practices. In this connection various views have been taken as to what should be done. For instance, the pamphlet, the Pacific Troller, to which I have already referred, calls our attention to this matter and has this to say:

> We do not know what precautions our government is taking to assure that those who might claim historic rights do not develop beyond their present fishery, which we feel should be the maximum annual fishery they should be allowed, nor do we know if precautions are being taken to control such fisheries if a breakdown in our fisheries occurs, or if such foreign fisheries will be subjected to such restrictions as will be applicable to our nationals.

Then they go on to make certain recommendations with regard to historic fishing rights:

> 1. That any recognition of historic rights the government may feel obligated to observe be confined to such species as have in the past been harvested by such claimants and further, that such parties be limited to their present annual harvest of those species, excepting wherein there may be an intermingling of anadromous types of fish to which another country contributes. In such instances, there should be equitable consideration for the fishing rights of that country for those species in the areas involved.

2. That any recognition of historic rights should be subject to revision by Canada, for reasons of abuse of our fisheries and improper behaviour toward our fishermen.

3. That no permanent recognition be given to historic rights prior to a trial period of some years in which to assess the effectiveness and further complications of an extended fishing limit.

In concluding this statement they say:

Those who might claim historic rights offer nothing in return.

There we have one position. Another is that taken by the fishermen's union which, as I have already indicated, is that they are calling for the defeat of the measure unless it is amended to exclude all foreign fishermen from the 12 mile limit outside a base line which is clearly defined by legislation. This means, of course, complete and full operation of the restriction.

Again, as referred to in the discussion tonight, I believe, there are those who would subject the traditional fishing nations to a phasing out process whereby they would be given a certain length of time to change their pattern of fishing. I think this is a very important matter. I realize, of course, that discussions are still going on with those who have or claim to have traditional fishing rights. However, as has been pointed out by the fishermen's union, I would emphasize that there is no intention whatsoever to seek an amendment or change as far as the treaties are concerned under which some nations have historic fishing rights, and the union, of course, is taking very strong exception to that fact.

So I think this whole matter is one of great importance. We wish the minister well in all the discussions that are going on with other nations but we do urge him to seek in every possible way to assure the safeguarding of the rights of Canadian fishermen and the Canadian people as far as the fisheries of this nation are concerned.

There has been discussion tonight about the designation of the zones or the base lines. Again this is something to which great exception is taken by the united fishermen and allied workers union. They feel very strongly that this matter should not be left to the governor in council but should be included in the legislation. Once again I would refer to their statement, to which I have already referred twice, to point out that they say that the base lines should be clearly defined by legislation and not left to be defined or amended by secret orders in council. Apparently this is going to be done at some future date. We are not just sure when. I suppose it will be when the discussions currently being carried on are completed. But, as has been noted tonight by other speakers, we have very little or no information upon which to base commendation or criticism of government intentions with respect to this particular matter. We are left completely in the dark and will have to trust to the discretion, wisdom and political diplomacy of the minister to arrive at the most satisfactory conclusions to these matters. I do not think this is altogether satisfactory to the fishermen. I do not think it is altogether satisfactory to us because we believe there should be something more clear and more definite upon which to base consideration of this particular measure.

We appreciate the fact that the bill is to be referred to the standing committee on marine and fisheries. Once again let me say that I believe that committee should have considered many of these factors long ago. The minister would then have had the benefit of the suggestions of the fishing industry, the fishermen's union and other interested individuals with the result that as he entered upon these negotiations and discussions he would have had a clear understanding of what these interested parties consider should be involved in the negotiation and discussion of these matters.

Mr. Robichaud: Would the hon. member permit a question? Is he aware that the body he is referring to has presented a long, 30-odd page brief, exactly on this matter to the federal fisheries conference, so that their views have been made clear and definite to us?

Mr. Patterson: They have been made clear and definite to the minister, but they have not had an opportunity to meet in person with the committee on marine and fisheries. That is the place where members of the committee could deal with this matter, question the representatives, and have a clear understanding. Perhaps the minister already has a clear understanding, but we should have as clear an understanding as he professes to have.

Mr. Robichaud: Once the bill has passed second reading you will have that opportunity.

Mr. Patterson: The minister says that once the bill passes second reading we will have that opportunity. I think it would have been better to have had them present their views before the committee prior to this, and then we could have taken them into consideration when considering the bill. These are the only remarks I wish to make at present, but possibly some other hon. members will participate in the debate a little later.

Mr. J. B. Stewart (Antigonish-Guysborough): You will perhaps have surmised, Mr. Speaker, that there are few subjects on which those of us from the Atlantic provinces, and who represent the people of those provinces by the sea, feel more deeply than the preservation of our fisheries.

In the four provinces there are some 32 constituencies, and of these 29 are touched intimately in their lives by the north Atlantic. Moreover, sir, discussion of the fisheries is not a new matter in this house. There was a time, sir, when fisheries rather than wheat was the staple of debate here; and in those days the debates were robust and lively, as the hon. member for Queens (Mr. MacLean) sought to remind us somewhat earlier this evening.

It is well to remember that fishing is, after all, our most historic industry. It is well to remember too that fishing is far more than an industry. To a very great extent it touches and shapes the lives of the people involved in it. Consequently, the demarcation of Canada's internal waters, the demarcation of her territorial sea, and the demarcation of her fishing zones are no mere assertion of a mature nationhood. Rather, this is an assertion that this country is not prepared to stand idly by, doing nothing, while the fisheries are being wantonly devastated.

That phrase, "wantonly devastated", is not perhaps perfectly exact, for the truth is that no Canadian fisherman and no fisherman from any foreign country is prepared to see the great north Atlantic fisheries wiped out either by design or by carelessness. The problem has been that no government has had established any conclusive jurisdiction over large areas of these seas. Of course the fact that the difficulties that have arisen have sprung largely from an absence of jurisdiction has been very little consolation to the people who saw the source of their livelihood ravaged, or to the scientists who were prepared to devote their time and energy to the preservation of this great natural resource.

Three things are necessary; first, the establishment of straight base lines; second, the establishment by clear reaffirmation of Canada's rights relative to certain waters such as the gulf of St. Lawrence and the bay of Fundy and, third, the fixing of the extent of Canada's fishing zones. I am pleased to see that the bill now before the house envisages provision for all these necessities.

It happens that the constituency which I have the honour to represent, by reason of its peculiar shape and location at the extremity of the mainland of Nova Scotia, is one in which all these three points have a direct application. Both the Northumberland strait and St. George's bay are within the gulf of St. Lawrence. At the same time, the entire Guysborough shore, from Ecum Secum to Mulgrave, will be benefited greatly from the establishment of a Canadian fishing zone 12 miles wide drawn from a base line straight from cape to cape.

When this bill has been proclaimed Canada's fishing zone will extend nine miles beyond the present three mile limit. The function of this portion of the bill, as I understand it, is to establish the existence of Canadian fishing zones. Let me say here parenthetically, Mr. Speaker, that it is my understanding also that since these zones are shortly to be moved farther out to sea in many places—that is, just as soon as the straight base lines have been defined and published—these zones will not be enforced in their temporary locations. Then the bill authorizes the governor in council to establish the necessary straight base lines, these to be drawn from one major headland to another.

For example, in the case of the southern and eastern shores of Nova Scotia, I think what is envisaged is a series of lines beginning at cape Sable, touching the principal headlands and encompassing the larger offshore islands along to cape Canso and thence to Scatari island. When this base line has been settled all the waters landward of this line will be defined as internal waters of Canada. The territorial waters of Canada will be three miles of sea immediately seaward of this base line. The fishing zones of Canada will be the nine miles of sea immediately seaward of the territorial sea.

Generally, as provided by clause 4 of the bill, all fishing both within the internal waters of Canada and in the 12 miles between the base line and the limit of the fishing zone will be under the sole jurisdiction of the government of Canada.

Mr. Speaker, may I call it ten o'clock?

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Churchill: May I ask the acting house leader about the order of business for tomorrow?

Mr. MacNaught: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Peace River, who is the chairman of the standing committee on public accounts, told me they had scheduled a meeting for Tuesday and unless we passed a couple of resolutions on the order paper they would have no business to transact. I discussed the matter with the house leaders on the opposite side, and there is agreement that we first call item No. 17 on the order paper, a resolution to refer the reports of the Canada Council to the standing committee on public accounts, and resolution No. 18, to refer the public accounts volumes I, II and III, together with the Auditor General's reports thereon, to the standing committee on public accounts. I understand these will go through with no debate. Then we will go on with the estimates of the Department of External Affairs and on Monday, as mentioned by the Prime Minister, there will be a motion to go into supply.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

(Subject matter of questions debated under adjournment motion).

A motion to adjourn the house under provisional standing order 39A deemed to have been moved:

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS—WESTVILLE, N.S.,—PROPOSED REMOVAL OF STATION AGENT

Mr. H. Russell MacEwan (Pictou): Mr. Speaker, on Tuesday last I addressed a question to the Minister of Transport, which was as follows:

> I should like to ask the Minister of Transport if he has received a telegram from the mayor of the town of Westville requesting his support in connection with the proposed removal of the Canadian National agent from the station in that community, thus placing it on a caretaker basis. If so, would the minister request the board of transport commissioners to postpone such action until the legislation standing on the order paper in the name of the minister is passed by this house?

I bring this matter to the attention of the house because I understand a telegram was sent by the mayor of this fine mining town in my constituency and a reply was sent by the minister stating that he would assist in the matter. A representative of the board of transport commissioners went to the area on April 21, I believe, and a hearing was held attended by many people, following which a letter was sent by the board of transport commissioners to the town clerk stating that the agent would be removed from this station if further submissions were not made within a 30 day period.

This is a most important matter for this mining town, one which has been a hard luck town for many years as a result of the closing of coal mines, which has led to a labour surplus not only in the town itself but in the whole constituency of Pictou. The history of this matter is well known in the district. The area served by the New Glasgow office is a designated area and to remove the agent from Westville station would be the last step before closing the station altogether. At the present time an application is being made by the C.N.R. to remove the centre of the line which runs from Stellarton to Oxford Junction, that is, to remove the heart from a community which, though it may not be well known in this house, is well known in Nova Scotia—Tatamagouche to Scotsburn. This proposal to take out the middle of this line or, if I might put it more roughly, take out the guts of this line would, together with the closing of Westville station, be disastrous to the whole area. I believe the submissions put forward at the hearing held by this particular officer of the board of transport commissioners gave the reason why the traffic has been cut down so greatly, namely the removal of the Canadian National Express Agency to a private individual.

I am appealing to the minister because he has the responsibility of reporting for the Atlantic development board, a board which was set up to assist the Atlantic area. If there were no rail service it would be difficult to get new industries into the area, even with the help of the Department of Industry. As I stated, many people attended this hearing, including the provincial members Donald R. MacLeod and Harvey A. Veniot, representatives from the various municipalities in the area, officers of the department of trade and industry in Halifax, representatives of chambers of commerce, and merchants in the area as well as interested citizens. The principal brief was presented by Mayor Duggan, the mayor of this hard hit town.

I would ask the Minister of Transport, in accordance with the telegram, to request the board of transport commissioners to adjourn this matter so that rail services may still be provided for this area. If this were done, the Atlantic development board as well as the area development agency under the new Department of Industry would be given an opportunity to do something for this area.

Mr. Jean-Charles Cantin (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): In answer to the hon. member I can say it is a fact that on April 14 the minister received a telegram from the mayor of Westville which reads:

> Board of railway commissioners are having a hearing here Tuesday re closing of Westville station we are objecting to same. Would appreciate your assistance to prevent this.

A day later, on April 15, the minister answered as follows:

> Application of C.N.R. is being investigated by board of transport commissioners district inspector and report on investigation will be considered by board. Understand full opportunity will be given to municipal representatives to make representations to board's district inspector. I am referring your representations to the board of transport commissioners.

That is signed by the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pickersgill). Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I feel that the board of transport commissioners will take good care of this problem for the good of the citizens concerned.

URANIUM—DISPOSITION OF UNFILLED PORTION OF GUNNAR MINES CONTRACT

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, as a trade union member of 23 years standing I raise a question tonight on behalf of my fellow union members. The question I asked the minister the other day was: What is the government's intention with respect to the disposition of 1,200,000 pounds of uranium oxide from the Gunnar mines unfilled contract? I intended to put this supplementary question but was stopped in my tracks by Mr. Speaker and had to use the ruse of this evening's procedure in order to make my point: Is consideration being given to placing this contract with Metal Mines Limited, formerly known as Faraday Mines, in the Bancroft area, which is scheduled to close June 30 unless the contract is provided?

There was a brief submitted by the Bancroft and district workers local union 1006 of the international union of mine, mill and smelter workers to the Hon. Charles M. Drury, Minister of Industry, on May 19. In view of the shortness of my time, Mr. Speaker, I think I can most usefully use the time available by quoting from the brief, and I do urge the minister to give further consideration to their representations. I presume, from the gleam in the parliamentary secretary's eye, that he is intending to respond favourably to my representations later on. This brief reads:

> The Bancroft and district workers local union 1006 of the international union of mine, mill and smelter workers (Canada), representing the employees of the Metal Mines Limited (Faraday Uranium Mines), Bancroft, Ontario, are making this representation with a view to preventing the closure of these mining operations. Their closure will work great hardships on many people, and create another depressed area in our nation.
> The members of our union in Bancroft were both disappointed and alarmed when they heard the announcement made on May 4, 1964, that uranium delivery contracts would not be renewed by the government's crown corporation. These workers had hopefully anticipated, despite threats of closure, that the government would in the future interests of the nation continue the stockpiling of uranium.
> This optimistic conclusion by the mine workers in Bancroft was a direct result of promises made to them during the previous federal election campaign.

I am sure the parliamentary secretary will refer to that. The brief continues:

> In order to ensure that these promises would not be forgotten, our membership over the past period of time has continued to examine ways and means by which this small mining community could be saved from becoming a depressed area. In this, we have co-operated with the various community organizations, who we believe also have made proposals to the government. We believe the proposals we are now making are workable and provide a proper solution to the problem facing our industry.

Then the brief goes on to make certain proposals. They propose that for immediate relief and to prevent the proposed closure of the Bancroft operations of Metal Mines Limited on June 30, the government should revert to these operations the unsold Gunnar Mines United Kingdom contract of 1,200,000 pounds of uranium oxide. They go on to deal with the possibilities of doing this and suggest a practical way in which it can be approached.

Then the next recommendation is:

> 2. As a long range prospective to the problems facing the uranium industry, we again propose that the government institute some measures of stockpiling which will ensure that the three uranium communities are able to continue and that the industry will be competitive in the future.

Then they go on to say:

> All engineering and political experts indicate that by 1970, there will be a large commercial demand for uranium oxide, arising from the development of uranium power and other commercial uses such as steel alloys. At that time, we repeat, it is important that the sources of supply be varied and monopoly control by one company be avoided.

I think that is a very good suggestion indeed. They conclude:

> 3. New industry in Bancroft—One cannot look at the economic future of the Bancroft area without consideration of the development of a wider industrial base. It is important that even while the uranium industry operates, that secondary industries should be able to complement this basic industry to ensure the stability of employment over a long period of time. It is important, even if the uranium industry be assisted to continue and should function over the next few years, that at no time should the community be dependant upon this one industry alone.

I think that is a very constructive suggestion.

> In conclusion, we wish to impress upon your government the urgency of the situation. It is now the middle of May. We are faced with the mine's closure on June 30. We have been given to understand from press reports that the question of Gunnar Mines undelivered contract is before the government. We have every hope that the government will be acting on this immediately and that this contract will be given to the Bancroft area. At the same time, we also urge that the long term viewpoint be considered and that through the use of some method of stockpiling and the establishment of secondary industry, the government will take steps to insure a diversified and competitive uranium industry in three stable and prosperous communities protected against the vagaries of one industry, through the establishment of secondary industries.

I have quoted briefly from the union's proposals, Mr. Speaker, and I do urge the government to give them consideration. I am sure that the hon. member who represents this area is very concerned about this matter; he asked a question about it on orders of the day today and I hope to hear from him later. I see from looking at the parliamentary secretary that we can anticipate a favourable response to our representations.

Mr. Jack Davis (Parliamentary Secretary to Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I know from the oral question that the hon. member for Hastings-Frontenac (Mr. Webb) posed earlier today that he is vitally concerned with unemployment and its consequences in the Bancroft area. I also gather from the remarks of the hon. member for Kootenay West that he too is concerned about this matter. I can assure both hon. gentlemen that this matter is also very much in the mind of the Prime Minister. Our uranium mines are in difficulties. They are in difficulties in the Elliot Lake area as well as at Bancroft. No one could be more aware of this fact than the hon. member for Algoma East.

What, Mr. Speaker, can be done about it? The hon. member for Kootenay West asked about the undelivered portion of the Gunnar contract, involving some 1,200,000 pounds of uranium oxide. If it is distributed among the remaining producers it could keep them all running for another two months, no more than that. The government is therefore considering an incentive program. The price of $4.19 a pound will not change, but the work will go to the producer who is willing to do the most stockpiling on the side. In other words, the one which is prepared, partly at its own expense, to create the most man-hours of employment will get the contract. Invitations to tender phrased along these lines will be going out over the week end.

There is, of course, the longer term problem. Every effort is being made by the Department of Industry, the Department of Mines and Technical Surveys and the Department of Labour to find alternative opportunities for the workers who are being laid off at Canada's uranium mines. These efforts are meeting with some success. Further announcements along these lines will be made at a later date.

Motion agreed to and the house adjourned at 10.17 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Friday, May 22, 1964

The house met at 11 a.m.

UNITED NATIONS

ADDRESS BY SECRETARY GENERAL TO JOINT MEETING OF SENATE AND HOUSE OF COMMONS

Mr. Speaker: I wish to announce that on Tuesday, May 26, at ten o'clock in the morning a joint meeting of all hon. members of the Senate and the House of Commons will be held in this chamber in honour of the secretary general of the United Nations, His Excellency U Thant, who will deliver an address.

PRIVILEGE

MR. RONDEAU—REPORTED REMARKS BY MEMBER FOR THREE RIVERS

[Translation]

Mr. Gilbert Rondeau (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege which concerns the honour and reputation of several hon. members of this house.

In view of the fact that these past few days the hon. member for Three Rivers (Mr. Balcer) has been taking the liberty to make vague, incorrect and misleading statements which are spreading doubt and confusion about the intentions of several hon. members, I feel duty bound to straighten things out.

The hon. member for Three Rivers took the liberty to state that more Créditistes would be leaving the ranks of their party to join the Conservatives.

Now, Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the members of the Ralliement Créditistes, I want to make the following corrective statement: Not a single member of the Ralliement Créditistes has thought of joining the ranks of the Conservative party. On the contrary, none of them has considered leaving the ranks of the Ralliement.

Therefore, the hon. member for Three Rivers—

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: Order. I doubt very much whether this is a question of privilege. Inasmuch as the hon. member has had an opportunity of making a statement I think we should now proceed with the business before the house.

[Translation]

Mr. Rondeau: Once again the hon. member for Three Rivers has tried to mislead and delude the Canadian people—

[Text]

Some hon. Members: Order.

[Translation]

Mr. Gilles Grégoire (Lapointe): I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. Before deciding whether there is a question of privilege concerning the matter raised by the hon. member for Shefford, would it not be reasonable to hear his explanations and then you would be in a position to decide whether or not there is a question of privilege. This is why I humbly ask you to let the hon. member for Shefford complete his statement.

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: Order. The reason the Chair came to this quick decision, if you want to call it that, is that if all hon. members were to comment on all the statements made by other hon. members outside the chamber we might be here for several years. It seems to me that the point has been made this morning, and I suggest to the hon. member that he leave it at that and that we get on with the business before the house.

[Translation]

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Speaker, I should like to quote paragraph 1 of standing order 39, under which we are allowed to put questions to members other than ministers, if members of the house are concerned.

I should like to ask the hon. member for Three Rivers when other Social Crediters will join his party, and what their names are?

Hon. Léon Balcer (Three Rivers): Mr. Speaker, I must tell the hon. member for Lapointe (Mr. Grégoire) and the hon. member for Shefford (Mr. Rondeau) that they need not—

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Balcer: —be worried, because we are not in the least interested in having them in our party.

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: Order. After due consideration and advice, I am advised that any question under standing order 39 (1) must relate to the business before the house. Consequently the question as asked by the hon. member is out of order.

[Translation]

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Speaker, I beg your pardon if my question was out of order but that meant, neither more nor less, that desk changes were considered, and I thought that it could be of interest to the house, since the matter had been mentioned in the newspapers.

Mr. Lambert: Keep quiet.

Mr. Grégoire: As a supplementary question, may I tell the hon. member that, as for not joining his ranks, the pleasure is ours.

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: Order. It seems to me this is the start of a very bad practice, and I certainly would not want to encourage it.

[Translation]

Mr. Rondeau: Mr. Speaker, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Lapointe (Mr. Grégoire):

That the question raised by the hon. member for Three Rivers (Mr. Balcer) to the effect that desk changes will soon be necessary in the house, be referred to the committee on privileges and elections.

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Speaker—

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I have to decide whether to accept this motion. First of all, no notice has been given, and two days' notice—48 hours—is required. In the second place, I have already ruled this morning that there was no question of privilege. In the circumstances I cannot go back on my decision; therefore I cannot accept this motion.

[Translation]

Mr. Rondeau: Mr. Speaker, I should like to point out that what you hold in your hand is a two-day notice.

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: Notice, as the hon. member must know, must be in writing and be given in the proper way.

[Mr. Speaker.]

WORLD FAIR

ALLEGED DELAY IN ARRANGEMENTS FOR EXHIBITS

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Hon. Léon Balcer (Three Rivers): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put the following question to the right hon. Prime Minister.

Since some irresolution on the part of the government seriously jeopardizes the organization of the Montreal world fair, can the Prime Minister tell us when the cabinet will take a decision concerning the request made by the world fair corporation to grant tax allowances to the exhibiting companies?

[Text]

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the preamble of that question I cannot, of course accept; there has been no lack of decision at all with regard to the government and its relations with the world fair. I will look into the second part of the question.

Mr. Balcer: A supplementary question. I wonder whether the Prime Minister is aware that officials of the corporation have said that the government had promised a decision by May 9 and then by May 15, that May 15 would already be extremely late for such a decision, and that the future of the exhibition is threatened by this delay.

Mr. Pearson: I told the hon. gentleman that I would be glad to look into the matter, but I can assure him that I have received no complaints of the kind he has indicated from any member of the corporation.

CANADIAN FLAG

REQUEST FOR DETAILS OF PROPOSED DESIGN

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Paul Martineau (Pontiac-Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. Will the Prime Minister now tell the house the flag design he will be proposing to parliament?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the design, as I said yesterday, will be in the resolution, and I should think in order to get the exact description before the house it would be advisable to wait until the resolution is presented. I know hon. members are interested in this matter. The hon. member for Lapointe told me that he might bring it up this morning, but in the circumstances I hope hon. members will feel that it would be well to wait until the resolution is introduced, at which time the details will be revealed.

Mr. Martineau: A supplementary question. Did the Prime Minister tell newspapermen yesterday that if he were asked this question in the house he would immediately reveal the design?

Mr. Pearson: No, Mr. Speaker. I told newsmen that if I were asked this question I would do my best to deal with it. The question as it was put by the Leader of the Opposition yesterday made it impossible to deal with it in any other way than I did.

Hon. George C. Nowlan (Digby-Annapolis-Kings): Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the right hon. Prime Minister would tell the house when the resolution will be brought before it.

Mr. Pearson: I would hope, Mr. Speaker, on Wednesday or Thursday of next week.

Mr. Nowlan: This week or next week?

Mr. Pearson: Well, we are past Wednesday and Thursday of this week.

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Prime Minister. Can he inform the house whether the cabinet meeting of a day or two ago on the flag question altered the design from three maple leaves to one?

Mr. Pearson: That is the kind of question which makes it difficult to answer questions on the flag.

Mr. Robert C. Coates (Cumberland): As a supplementary question to the Prime Minister, could he inform the house whether the Toronto Star had any prior knowledge as to the design of the flag, in view of the fact that they flew from their flagpole what they held out to the city of Toronto to be the new Canadian flag?

Mr. Pearson: No, Mr. Speaker. So far as I am concerned the design of the flag as agreed to by the cabinet has been given out to nobody.

Mr. G. H. Aiken (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Prime Minister a supplementary question. A moment ago he referred to a resolution to be placed before the house. Is this intended to be a resolution preceding a bill, or is it intended to be a straight resolution adopting a flag?

Mr. Pearson: Well, Mr. Speaker, I think my hon. friend should wait until the resolution is on the order paper.

Mr. Coates: In view of the fact that the Prime Minister has already stated that this type of legislation has never been presented to parliament before, and that a flag design has never been adopted, I feel this house should be made aware of the type of design that is going to be adopted, if in fact it is adopted.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm.

[Translation]

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a supplementary question to the Prime Minister. Has he obtained the unanimous consent of his party, including that of the hon. member for York-Humber (Mr. Cowan), to select a distinctive flag?

[Text]

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman has obviously asked this question to conceal the lack of unanimity in his own party.

[Translation]

Mr. Robert Beaulé (Quebec East): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Prime Minister. Could he assure the house that there will be no "pigeon" on the distinctive flag?

[Text]

Mr. Pigeon: That would represent peace.

SHIPPING

SUGGESTED CONFERENCE ON WATER LEVELS OF GREAT LAKES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. G. H. Aiken (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister on another subject. Has he received an invitation from the province of Ontario to attend a conference on water levels on the great lakes?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): No, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Aiken: As a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker, have we now to look to the provinces and the American states for leadership in this matter?

Mr. Pearson: No, Mr. Speaker. As the premier of Ontario himself recognized, as reported, in sending out the invitation to certain states and provinces, the responsibility in this matter is in the hands of the federal government in so far as any arrangements with any other country are concerned; and that, of course, is a correct statement of the position.

Mr. Aiken: Is there any action on the part of the federal government on its own initiative? I have been trying to get an answer to this question.

Mr. Pearson: Yes, Mr. Speaker. In view of my hon. friend's interest in the matter I should inform him that the international joint commission, within the limits of its existing authority and conditions, is regulating levels and flows so as to make the best use of the available supplies of water. Within the next day or two the government expects to send to the United States government and to the provinces, recommendations for new authority for the commission, whose authority now extends only to lake Superior and lake Ontario. I believe the whole question of diversion from other watersheds is being considered and has been considered for some time by the international joint commission. But, of course, this is a long range project.

With respect to dredging for local emergencies—and we all know there are local emergencies—I expect to bring the details of this emergency dredging to the attention of the house next week.

Mr. Aiken: I thank the Prime Minister.

Hon. Paul Martineau (Pontiac-Témiscamingue): A supplementary question to the Prime Minister. Although the government has not been invited, does the government intend to send observers to the conference convened by Premier Robarts?

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member for Chapleau.

[Translation]

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Chapleau): Mr. Speaker in view of the fact that my seat is rather far from the Chair, and that it always takes a long time for us to be recognized during the orders of the day, my question has already been asked.

[Text]

Mr. W. H. A. Thomas (Middlesex West): A supplementary question to the Prime Minister. Would he outline briefly what methods of control are being used in connection with water levels on the great lakes?

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, this would be difficult to do on the orders of the day but if my hon. friend will put his question on the order paper I will see that he gets the information.

[Mr. Pearson.]

[Later:]

Hon. Théogène Ricard (St. Hyacinthe-Bagot): A supplementary question to the Prime Minister. A few moments ago he referred to the group that is going to study water levels on the great lakes. Will the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources be invited so that he may conduct the necessary prayers?

LABOUR CONDITIONS

ST. JOHN'S, NFLD.—STEPS TO SETTLE LONGSHOREMEN'S STRIKE

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Michael Starr (Ontario): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Minister of Labour which I put to his parliamentary secretary yesterday. I am sorry the minister was not able to be here. In view of the serious situation in the longshoremen's dispute in St. John's, Newfoundland, is the minister prepared to take an active and personal interest in this matter to bring the two parties together?

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I have been taking an active and personal interest in the matter for some weeks now. The situation is that an experienced officer of the department in the Atlantic area has brought the parties together for intensive discussions, but as yet no resolution of the dispute has been possible. This officer is in contact with the parties with a view to establishing a situation that might bring the parties together and result in a settlement. We regard the matter as very serious, and are doing everything that we think will be helpful in the situation.

Mr. Starr: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Are the reports correct that another senior officer and others who are interested in this matter have failed to bring the two parties together?

Mr. MacEachen: No, Mr. Speaker. The parties have been together for discussions, but they have not come together by way of a settlement. There have been joint meetings.

Mr. Starr: When was the last joint meeting held in this connection?

Mr. MacEachen: I do not recall the exact date, but I think they met over the last week end. I will be glad to check and give the precise dates.

SAINT JOHN, N.B.—TRANSFER OF MANUFACTURING FIRM TO MONTREAL

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Thomas M. Bell (Saint John-Albert): I have a question for the Minister of Labour in the absence of the Minister of Transport. In view of the closing of the national manufacturing concern of McAvity's in Saint John and its transfer to Montreal with all its facilities, resulting in a loss of more than 400 jobs, will the Atlantic development board immediately investigate and offer every assistance in this matter?

Mr. Speaker: Would the hon. gentleman put this question on the order paper.

Mr. Bell: I give notice I will raise this matter on adjournment on Monday.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

CONSIDERATION OF HEALTH AND WELFARE ESTIMATES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare, but before doing so may I say that I am sure all members will join with me in welcoming her back to the house. We are happy to see her in her seat oozing vim and vigour. In view of the particular interest of many Canadians in several subjects that come under the jurisdiction of her department, can she inform the house when we may expect her estimates to come before the house for consideration?

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Shortly, Mr. Speaker.

TRADE

RUSSIA—SUGGESTED EXCHANGE OF PETROLEUM PRODUCTS FOR WHEAT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Bow River): I put a question to the Prime Minister yesterday which is of concern to the west, and particularly to the petroleum industry. Is the article which appeared in the New York Times, reprinted in the Calgary Herald, to the effect that the government may stimulate trade in the petroleum industry with Soviet Russia, speculative or is there a basis in fact for it?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): I think I told my hon. friend I would look into that question and discuss it with the Minister of Trade and Commerce, who returned to Ottawa only this morning. I will have something to say about it on Monday.

CANADIAN CONSTITUTION

CONFERENCE OF ATTORNEYS GENERAL RESPECTING REPATRIATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): I should like to welcome the Minister of Justice back from his trip to the west. I hope he got a true sampling of public opinion which he will convey to his colleagues. In view of the atmosphere of harmony and togetherness which seems to be engendered by this issue of a national flag, I should like to ask him if he does not think this would be the appropriate time to attempt to secure the necessary provincial consent prior to the repatriation of our constitution, and thus make a real contribution toward national unity?

Hon. Guy Favreau (Minister of Justice): Since my hon. friend spoke about my trip to the west, I am pleased to report that there is a real atmosphere of harmony and togetherness in the Canadian family.

In so far as the repatriation of the constitution is concerned, he may be assured that the conference of the attorneys general, about which there has been some question, will be convened in due course.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

CYPRUS—AUTHORITY OF PEACE KEEPING FORCE TO DISARM

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Marcel Lessard (Lake St. John): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs?

I would like to know if, following the first death we have to deplore among the UN forces, the members of that force will have wider powers and be able to disarm members of both groups now fighting each other, so that we will not have to deplore more deaths.

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I answered that question a few days ago but, on account of its importance, I will have the opportunity in a few minutes, when we discuss the estimates of the Department of External Affairs, to express our feelings and opinions about that matter.

Mr. Lessard (Lake St. John): Mr. Speaker, may I ask a supplementary question?

Inquiries of the Ministry

We learned that U Thant will be in Ottawa next week and will address the house; will hon. members be allowed to set forth their views on that matter at that time?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I am convinced we are all agreed that the secretary general of the United Nations should be given a good reception during his official visit in Canada. As Secretary of State for External Affairs, I will have the occasion, with the Prime Minister, to discuss this problem with U Thant; I will be pleased to arrange the opportunity for the hon. member to meet the secretary general.

[Text]

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): May I ask a supplementary question. Does the Secretary of State for External Affairs intend to request the secretary general of the United Nations, on behalf of the Canadian government, to extend his peace keeping operations to Canada when he visits here?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman, I am sure, does not want to be frivolous about the visit of the secretary general of the United Nations. He is coming to Canada as an honoured guest and because he has admiration for the contribution this country is making, not only in national but international affairs.

CANADIAN CENTENNIAL

APPOINTMENT TO COMMISSION OF WIFE OF CABINET MINISTER

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a very important question to the Prime Minister. Does he approve of the appointment to the conference on the centennial of confederation of the wife of the Minister of Forestry, who is already an employee of the C.B.C. and who did not even take the trouble to attend the meeting held in Charlottetown last April 25 and 26?

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: Certainly this question is not exactly pressing and urgent.

[Translation]

Mr. Pigeon: I will raise the question after ten o'clock, Mr. Speaker.

[Mr. Lessard (Lake St. John).]

[Text]

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT

THREE RIVERS, QUE.—REPORT ON MAIL TRUCK ROBBERY

On the orders of the day:

Hon. J. R. Nicholson (Postmaster General): In early April several questions were asked in connection with the mail robbery which took place in downtown Montreal on April 3. I assured the house at the time that when investigations were further advanced I would make a statement.

Various estimates were given of the amount involved in the robbery. I stated at that time that the cash involved was somewhere between $600,000 and $800,000. As a result of an extended investigation it is now believed that the cash stolen amounted to $618,175, and other postal assets to $9,923. Stock certificates and bonds of the value of approximately $709,000, were also stolen at the time.

DOMINION-PROVINCIAL CONFERENCE

REPLIES FROM PROVINCES RESPECTING PARTICIPATION BY TERRITORIES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister. Several weeks ago the house passed a motion for the production of the replies received from provincial premiers to the letter which the right hon. gentleman directed to them requesting their opinions as to the participation by the councils for the Yukon and the Northwest Territories in federal-provincial conferences. Can the Prime Minister give some indication when those replies will be tabled?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): I am sorry they have not been tabled. I will look into the matter at once, because they should have been.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

RED DEER, ALTA.—RETURN OF SMALL ARMS TO SEA CADETS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. C. S. Smallwood (Battle River-Camrose): I have a question for the Minister of National Defence. Would the minister give instructions to have the small arms returned to the sea cadets of the city of Red Deer? They were confiscated about a month ago.

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of National Defence): I would be glad to take the question as notice.

CANADA COUNCIL

REFERENCE OF REPORTS TO PUBLIC ACCOUNTS COMMITTEE

Hon. Guy Favreau (for the Secretary of State) moved:

That the reports of the Canada Council for the fiscal years ended March 31, 1962 and March 31, 1963, tabled on October 10, 1962 and on July 11, 1963 respectively, be referred to the standing committee on public accounts in order to provide for a review thereof pursuant to section 23 of the Canada Council Act.

Motion agreed to.

PUBLIC ACCOUNTS

REFERENCE OF PUBLIC ACCOUNTS AND AUDITOR GENERAL'S REPORTS TO COMMITTEE

Hon. Walter L. Gordon (Minister of Finance) moved:

That the public accounts, volumes I, II and III for the fiscal years ended March 31, 1962 and March 31, 1963, and the reports of the Auditor General thereon, tabled on January 21, 1963 and on February 19, 1964 respectively, together with the financial statements of the Canada Council for the fiscal years ended March 31, 1962 and March 31, 1963 and the reports of the Auditor General thereon, tabled on October 10, 1962 and on July 11, 1963 respectively, be referred to the standing committee on public accounts.

Motion agreed to.

SUPPLY

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Lamoureux in the chair.

DEPARTMENT OF EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

1. Administration, operation and maintenance including payment of remuneration, subject to the approval of the governor in council and notwithstanding the Civil Service Act, in connection with the assignment by the Canadian government of Canadians to the staffs of the international organizations detailed in the estimates (part recoverable from those organizations) and authority to make recoverable advances in amounts not exceeding in the aggregate the amounts of the shares of those organizations of such expenses, and authority, notwithstanding the Civil Service Act, for the appointment and fixing of salaries of commissioners (international commissions for supervision and control in Indo-China), secretaries and staff by the governor in council; official hospitality; relief and repatriation of distressed Canadian citizens abroad and their dependants and reimbursement of the United Kingdom for relief expenditures incurred by its diplomatic and consular posts on Canadian account (part recoverable); Canadian representation at international conferences; expenses of the third commonwealth education conference; a cultural relations and academic exchange program with the French community, and grants as detailed in the estimates, $10,836,300.

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): On November 28 last I made a full statement to the house on Canadian policy concerning a wide range of major international issues. Today I propose to concentrate on the most important developments that have taken place in the meantime in areas of primary concern to our country.

Since last November I have attended a number of important conferences and meetings including two ministerial meetings of the North Atlantic council, one in December of last year and one last week; the United Nations trade and development conference in Geneva in March, and a session of the 18 nation committee on disarmament. I also accompanied the Prime Minister on visits to France and the United States in January, and we received here in Ottawa in February the Prime Minister and the foreign secretary of the United Kingdom.

In one way or another all these meetings had to do with the three main developments which have characterized the last decade in international affairs, the continuing contest between the communist and non-communist world in both a military and an economic sense; the changing relationships which are taking place within both the communist and non-communist camps, and finally the adjustments which both groupings have been making in their relations within the so-called third world, the less developed and often non-aligned nations which now comprise more than two thirds of the United Nations.

These three main tides of development have brought with them such a host of new and unfamiliar problems that there has been an understandable, and perhaps inevitable, tendency to try to deal with them piecemeal and in separate compartments. Yet the obvious interrelationship of these major political trends should convince one that at some stage—and I do not pretend to know how or when—the means whereby we are endeavouring to cope with some of the major unresolved problems must be brought together. It is clear to me that when we in NATO decide on a particular size and structure of defence arrangements to cover a given future period, we must not only consider whether that structure is adequate to ensure our physical security but what impact it will have on what we are simultaneously trying to accomplish in the disarmament committee in Geneva, and how it might affect prospects for a settlement of European security problems. Again, when we contemplate the rash of local conflicts which have broken out in the Middle East, Africa and southeast Asia we should not, in our anxiety to contain them, overlook what we are trying to achieve in the United Nations and in the disarmament committee by way of more orderly and lasting international peace keeping machinery. In piecing together the parts of this complex puzzle I believe we are, during the next months and years, going to have to rethink a great deal of what has been our traditional policy.

I have just returned from the NATO ministerial meeting in The Hague, followed by a short visit to Germany. Together, these two visits were concerned with most of the fundamental issues in our contemporary international life, our relations with the communist world or worlds still being the dominant preoccupation. For years in NATO and in all the western capitals we have been speaking rather loosely about east-west relations. I think it is time we admitted that this shorthand phrase is no longer adequate. When we say "east-west relations" we imply that we are thinking in terms of a bipolar world, the communists and the rest of us. In fact today there is no longer one communist world and it is quite misleading to equate "east" with "communism". It is equally misleading to equate "west" with "the rest of us" or even with "NATO". What is actually happening is a more complicated form of competition than our old terminology suggests, a competition in which the Chinese communists are making a determined takeover bid for the communist leadership in Asia and Africa. We must think more of a four way relationship among the west, the Soviet communists, the Chinese communists and the non-aligned countries, instead of the old "east-west" terms.

If there is a pause or a détente in our relations with the Soviet union, based on what is really a common appreciation, since the Cuban confrontation, of the unacceptability of nuclear warfare—if this is true, we cannot pass the same verdict on our relations with the other communist world. For the Chinese, nuclear war is certainly unwanted but not unthinkable. Mao Tse-tung has pointed out that after the first world war there were 200 million communists and after the second, 900 million; so he predicts that after the third, communism will take over what remains of the world.

I know, sir, that apart from the Chinese communist invasions of Tibet and India and the troubles to which they are a party in southeast Asia, there is no reason to believe that the Chinese communists would deliberately allow their theories to push them over the brink. Their bark may, as we must hope, be worse than their bite. We have had experience before—bitter experience—of madmen whose theories were explicit and public, but we were too rationalistic to believe that they meant what they said. I am not prone to believe that we face the same situation now, but there are similar dangers. It does not appear at present that the west's détente with Moscow extends to Peking, but we must continue to test the intentions of the Chinese communists, intentions little affected by Soviet views or aims, by all means at our disposal. In the meantime it would be premature and irresponsible to dismantle our defences, either materially or psychologically, even though for the time being we think that with the Soviet world western relations are showing some real though limited improvement.

This is the first time that as external minister, I have tried in this house to analyse our relations with the communists in this way. When the differences between Moscow and Peking first became apparent, there was a natural reluctance on the part of the west to attach too much importance to them lest the cleavage be short lived. While this was a prudent reaction at the time, we can now begin to draw a new balance sheet and get away from too exclusive a preoccupation with only one of the communist giants. They are clearly at odds with each other on national, historical and racial grounds, though as communists their differences find expression in ideological terminology. These differences, which have been coming into the open for perhaps four years, are obviously not a transient phenomenon.

It is impossible to say how deep the détente or the pause with the Soviet union will go or how penetrating it really is. In the meantime I think it should clearly be our intention to encourage this pause or détente while remembering that Soviet positions have not changed on most of the central issues which divide us, including the division of Germany, the cruel, special case of Berlin, and the fomenting of unrest throughout the non-communist world under the guise of liberation. Moreover, as we have recently noted in Ottawa as well as in other parts of the world, communist efforts to subvert individuals and groups in free countries, and to expand their power and influence by other means than war, have continued unabated despite the détente.

This kind of situation, of course, requires the most careful examination. Each week brings some new evidence that it is possible to modify the word "satellites" in describing the relationship between the Soviet union and the countries of eastern Europe. This trend, of course, should not be exaggerated, but it is evident that, apart from foreign policy, and within certain limits, the eastern European countries are being allowed much more than ever before, to develop a brand of communism more in conformity with local conditions and the national characteristics of their peoples. Simultaneously the process of de-Stalinization has led to a considerable reduction in the physical control over the populations in these countries. Such trends are not easily reversed.

A final element to be kept in mind is that the communist countries are faced with substantial economic difficulties. Agriculture is clearly inefficient, and the planning and organization techniques of communist industry are passing through a period of revision. These developments present possibilities to the west for trade and for the opening of channels of communication which may help us to break down some of the barriers between the Soviet world and our own. Yet even if we should be able to make some really substantial progress toward an understanding, a modus vivendi, with the Soviet union and eastern Europe, there would still remain the ominous question mark of communist China.

The Prime Minister and I had the opportunity for a frank discussion about communist China with President de Gaulle and M. Couve de Murville, the French foreign minister, during our visit to Paris shortly before the French act of recognition. While we would have preferred that France had consulted her allies, it was apparent to us that her decision was taken after a careful weighing of all the circumstances as the government of that country saw them. I hope the decision of France to establish diplomatic relations with Peking will help to reduce communist China's continuing isolation. The isolation of the Soviet union between 1917 and the early 1930's is now recognized as having brought little benefit either to the west or to the Soviet union.

I do not wish to leave the impression that it is the west which is mainly responsible for Chinese isolation. In fact, since the communist Chinese took control of the mainland they have often appeared to be pursuing a deliberate policy of severing contacts with the west. They have also sought to impose conditions upon those who were otherwise prepared to enter into relations with them. It must be frankly admitted that the experiences of some governments which extended recognition and sought to establish diplomatic relations were not as happy as those countries might have hoped.

Realizing the dangers inherent in Chinese isolation, Canada has, like a number of other western nations, encouraged increased contacts in the commercial and cultural fields with China; and I think this policy has been wise and has met with success. Canadian trade with China continues at a relatively high level, and there are increased dealings between Canadian businessmen and the appropriate Chinese agencies. With a relaxation in the Chinese attitude, one Canadian newspaperman is now in mainland China, and there is the possibility of other correspondents being admitted. This could give our public greater first hand coverage of events and developments on the Chinese mainland.

As part of this new development we would be willing to receive an equivalent number of Chinese correspondents in Canada for the purpose of reporting—and I emphasize the word reporting—on the Canadian scene to their home audience. It is our hope that such reciprocal arrangements could in the long run help to reduce the distortions which in the past have proved so dangerous to relations between Peking and the western countries.

As far as the international position of communist China is concerned, there are no simple solutions in sight. At the United Nations, as my hon. friend sitting opposite me can confirm, Canada has opposed resolutions calling for the expulsion of nationalist Chinese representatives and their replacement by representatives from Peking, on the grounds that such resolutions make no provision for the right of the inhabitants of Formosa to self determination and appropriate international status. Canadian representatives at the United Nations have made clear the Canadian desire for an equitable solution which would deal adequately with the Formosa problem and at the same time bring mainland China into the mainstream of international affairs. This was the position taken by the chairman of the Canadian delegation, the present leader of the opposition in the other place, when he acted as head of the Canadian delegation to the general assembly of the United Nations in 1961. I also agree with what the right hon. Leader of the Opposition said in the House of Commons on July 25, 1963:

> I think a major challenge is presented to the nations of the western world today. Canada, the United States and other nations will have to take another look at our policy regarding communist China. We will have to review our thinking. We will have to consider the problem, and it is a tremendous one, in the perspective of changing events, and particularly in view of this agreement; because unless it includes communist China —and I do not want to mention France in the same paragraph—and we are able to secure the adherence of communist China, the threat of nuclear war will hang over us to a degree that we can only anticipate with foreboding, horror and overwhelming fear.

Mr. Nesbitt: Mr. Chairman, I was wondering whether the minister could give me the reference to that quotation?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I am sorry I did not give the page, but I will have it before I conclude. It was in the month of July, 1963.

Recent developments have revived interest in what could be described as a one China, one Formosa solution. To achieve such a solution would require above all the cooperation of the parties immediately concerned; but a practical and equitable solution along these lines has not so far proved acceptable either to Peking or to Taipei.

During the recent NATO meeting questions were asked in this house concerning my references in my statement before the council in The Hague to the realities we might face at the nineteenth session of the United Nations general assembly which might require some modification of the policy I have just described. The Prime Minister, in reply to a question put to him by the Leader of the Opposition, has already referred to one such reality, the possibility of a vote favourable to the seating of mainland China irrespective of Canada's stand on that issue.

Another possibility is that communist China might come so close to being seated by vote at this assembly as to foreshadow a decisive trend in that direction at the following assembly.

In that event, as I told the NATO council, the chances of a solution which would make provision in the United Nations for the future of Formosa and its inhabitants on a basis of self determination might disappear if we do not move from the present static position. We must remember that if communist China were seated, it would occupy not only the general assembly seat now held by nationalist China but the security council seat as well, a privilege which carries with it the right of veto over the admission of new members. A third issue we might face, if communist China were seated and Formosa automatically excluded, would be whether to recognize the Peking government or do as we did some years ago in the case of Outer Mongolia, sit beside them in the United Nations without according recognition to the regime.

These examples will make it clear to the committee that the extent, if any, of modifications in our position which we might wish to consider will not become apparent until we see what developments occur at the next United Nations general assembly, but surely there can be no excuse for our failing to consider this matter in good time when important changes in the tactical position at the United Nations have taken place.

In saying that Canada has no intention of doing anything that would add to the difficulties of our friends, as I said at NATO, I was simply recognizing the need for prior consultation with our friends before policy decisions are taken on important questions. Indeed, there is a NATO requirement for such consultation, and that is why I concluded my statement at The Hague on the China issue by urging close consultation in New York among NATO delegations on this matter before and during the forthcoming general assembly.

We are watching the situation closely and Canadian policy will be predicated on a number of factors. For example, the effect on the stability of countries in southeast Asia must be assessed with care, and particularly in the light of the current critical situation in Indochina. I shall refer to this new crisis in that area in a few minutes. Canada shares with other western countries the same basic interest in helping the developing countries of southeast Asia to maintain their independence and national identity. In addition we have a special interest in this area through our role in the international control commissions in Indochina.

It is against this background of our relations with the communist world that I would like to report on the NATO ministerial meeting which I attended in The Hague last week. The foreign ministers of the NATO countries have an opportunity each spring to review the international situation and the state of the alliance. We all realize that it is necessary to keep the nature of the threat under constant review so that the western response may be appropriate, not only in a military sense but, equally important, in ideas and policies. Therefore I firmly believe that it is not a sign of "disarray", as it is sometimes called, but of progress and sensible evolution that there are any thoughts in the western alliance as to how our countries should react to the new opportunities as well as to the pitfalls presented by the current situation vis-à-vis the communists.

We have heard far too much about NATO being at a crossroads and suffering from various kinds of malaise. The fact is that the alliance is going through a healthy process of sorting out the different and often vigorously expressed ideas of its members on the state of the alliance and what should be done to bring it up to date. Would it be healthy if it were otherwise, if we were merely clinging to the conceptions of the past and not trying to keep up with the times in a flexible way as befits free peoples?

At The Hague there was general agreement that in the next few years our main aim must be to ensure that NATO can meet the requirements of a world very different from when the alliance was founded. NATO has its old myths. Events are overtaking them rapidly and, if the alliance is to survive, we all must face the new realities. In the words of the Prime Minister at the NATO council in January, "We must learn to deal with the difficult job of peace making while maintaining the force necessary to deter war."

But I can say that all the members, all the foreign ministers representing the great powers and the others, are agreed upon the fundamentals of this alliance, which are that we intend to remain free; we intend to maintain our military strength in the absence of political settlements and controlled disarmament; we intend to contain communist aggression; we intend to remain firm in our dealings with the Soviet union, but willing to explore any road to political settlement provided it does not endanger our security.

There are different ideas on how to proceed in the future. What is needed in the alliance is more willingness on the part of those who want changes to propose them, and more willingness on the part of those who profess partnership to start practising it. If we are to adapt the alliance to changed conditions, there are certain goals which we believe are worth pursuing. First and foremost, so far as this country is concerned, we believe there must be increased emphasis on the transatlantic nature of the alliance. Any development within the alliance toward European or North American continentalism will be resisted by this country, I hope. We will never choose, I hope, between the two sides of the Atlantic, because we cannot; for our historic ties are with Europe while at the same time we are a North American country. Greater co-operation between the two sides of the Atlantic is to us the only sensible policy if the western alliance is to continue to evolve as a partnership of like minded nations.

Second, Europe today is vastly stronger than in 1949, and many European countries think, quite rightly, that they should play a larger role in the direction of the alliance politically and militarily. I am sure concrete proposals would accomplish this and these would be welcomed by all. I urged my colleagues at the meeting to let us have these proposals.

The Chairman: Order. I regret having to bring to the attention of the committee that the minister's time has expired.

Mr. Nesbitt: I am sure all of us in the committee wish to hear the minister's comments on the various aspects of world problems, and I am sure there would be no disagreement to allowing him to continue.

The Chairman: Is it agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Yet it accomplishes little to state the complaint without suggesting the remedy.

Finally, we need better consultation in the military as well as in the political and economic spheres. There have been enormous improvements in recent years and, as a result, the alliance is stronger today than in 1949. Because we now feel freer than before to go our own ways, there is an even greater need to tell each other what we are doing, and why.

I am afraid that that is now the situation. If we fail to do so, mistrust sets in and we lose sight of the fundamental reasons which keep us together and we become obsessed by our differences.

When the Prime Minister and I visited Paris last January we agreed that we would consult with France at the ministerial level. We found that President de Gaulle and his ministers shared our desire for a closer relationship. Although only a short time has elapsed since that visit, I believe I can already say with confidence that our conversations marked an important milestone in Canada's relations with France.

While I was at The Hague I met privately with the French foreign minister, M. Couve de Murville, as part of our continuing ministerial consultations. We talked not only about NATO matters and Cyprus but about more general international problems and about our developing bilateral programs in the cultural field. I am sure we will have an opportunity later to give an indication of the nature of these bilateral accords which were reached with France and in connection with which I was able to report some progress in my conversations with the French foreign minister who, I believe, and I am sure the Prime Minister will agree, is one of the great foreign ministers. Even when we do not agree with his views, they are worth trying to understand, for I am sure they represent much more than a purely nationalistic approach to the problems of Europe and the world. I am happy to see that this was confirmed by France herself in the warm reception which the government of France gave to the secretary general of the United Nations a few days ago in Paris.

In recent months Franco-Canadian programs have been set in motion which will result in closer educational and cultural links. Our investment relationships are also actively under study, and we are looking at a number of other fields in which there may be some possibility for mutually beneficial links—immigration, defence production, science, tourism and so on. Neither we nor the French expect to see spectacular changes overnight, but we are working to create a new atmosphere or a new structure in our relations.

I might add here that we in no way think of this new relationship as one of interest only to French speaking Canadians. May I quote what the Prime Minister said at our dinner last January in honour of Monsieur Pompidou, the French prime minister. I quote the Prime Minister of Canada:

> In English speaking regions of Canada, there is a much greater interest in the French language and French culture, the role of which is being increasingly appreciated as an essential element in our nation. This development brings about, quite naturally, a renewal of interest which serves most appropriately our relations with France, and this, I can assure you, is not limited to the province of Quebec...The two governments are fully alive to the opportunities offered by the dynamic progress within the two countries.

I have spoken of our relations with France. Turning to the commonwealth, I might say that we look forward with pleasure to the holding of the third commonwealth education conference here in Ottawa from August 21 to September 4. It will be recalled that, as a result of the commonwealth trade and economic conference held in Montreal in 1958, a commonwealth education conference was held in Oxford in July of 1959. This meeting recommended the development of four types of commonwealth co-operation in education; the scholarship and fellowship plan, the training of teachers, the supply of teachers, and technical education. Developments in all these fields were reviewed and new areas of co-operation examined at a second conference held in New Delhi in January, 1962.

Mr. Vincent Massey has agreed to accept the office of president of this meeting, and this is yet another example of his high sense of national duty and of the valuable contribution he has made to Canada. The Canadian government, provincial departments of education and the whole educational community are giving their full support to this important conference. The activities in the field of educational co-operation which will be discussed at the Ottawa meeting have already brought benefits to all commonwealth members, and provide an example of the constructive partnership for which the commonwealth stands.

I should like to say that much thought is being given these days in many places to the commonwealth. It is a unique institution, as we know, which has evolved along lines which are capable of promoting the interests of its members and the improvement of international understanding. Admittedly it faces problems which may test its adaptability and cohesion, but we have no doubt it will weather these storms. The prime ministers' conference in July will address itself to many of these problems. There will be a continuing search for methods to maintain its character and its purpose. It could be that the commonwealth education conference provides the kind of activity needed to realize these objectives, as we pointed out to Mr. Sandys, the secretary of state for commonweath relations, when he was here in Ottawa a few days ago.

At the end of The Hague meeting I accepted an invitation from the German foreign minister to go to Germany. No secretary of state for external affairs had visited Germany since the war, apart from attendance at a NATO ministerial meeting held in Bonn. It was thought that it would be desirable for me to pay a visit to this leading allied country at this time, a country which has so successfully constructed a modern democratic state on the ashes of nazi tyranny.

Our relations with the German federal republic are important. We have more trade with Germany than with any other European country, nearly $200 million more than with France, for example. There are in Canada now almost a million people of German origin, while we have in Germany, if we include the families of our soldiers and airmen, about 25,000 Canadians.

I therefore agreed to go from The Hague to spend some time with the German foreign minister, Mr. Gerhard Schroeder, in Bonn and to spend a day in West Berlin before returning home. I can say that Mr. Schroeder gave me a full and clear account of the thinking of his country on the great problem which must preoccupy all Germans so long as their country remains divided. That, of course, is the problem of German reunification. He said again, as his government has said countless times, that modern Germany has renounced the use of force as a means to attain its objectives. I said that the government of Canada understands and supports the Federal Republic of Germany in every peaceful effort to reunite its peoples through the exercise of their right of self determination in freedom.

I think there are many points of similarity in the Canadian and present German outlook on the future of Atlantic co-operation. Like us, they want to see European integration pursued within an Atlantic framework. Like us they want the Kennedy round to succeed and so contribute toward the liberalization of trade on a world wide basis.

I am glad, as I am sure the whole house will be, that we shall have an opportunity to welcome Chancellor Erhard and Mr. Schroeder here when they visit us from June 9 to June 11. Apart from the United States and Britain, Canada will be the first country outside the European common market that Dr. Erhard will have visited since he became chancellor. He has been here before and we look forward to seeing him again. Both the economic regeneration and the political transformation of modern democratic Germany owe much to the chancellor.

When I went to Berlin, I saw a different kind of evidence that Germany is not what it was when I last visited that country in 1936. As many of you who have been there know, there is not a single landmark left of whole aspects of the Berlin I had known. Much has been rebuilt, and there are impressive new industrial and urban developments. But as one gets to the frontier of freedom, where East and West Berlin meet, there are gaping reminders of Hitler's war. Through this area, formerly the heart of the city, runs the wall, that stark, horrible monument to the failure of a system. For if the communist system in the eastern zone had not failed so lamentably why would from 3,000 to 5,000 persons a week have tried, at the risk of their lives, to escape westward to freedom? From the boundary of West Berlin it is like looking at the outside of a great concentration camp. There are armed guards, machine guns, lookout towers, row upon row of barbed wire, tank traps, houses demolished or their boundary windows bricked up, railways and subways blocked and guarded, as if the life of that regime in the east depended upon stopping people at all costs from escaping to bear witness to conditions under communism.

The German problem, Mr. Chairman, is the centre of the European problem and certainly also of the relations of the west with communist countries. The solution of the German problem could open up a real understanding between east and west. It is important for a country like Canada to understand this problem, to understand the position of some of our NATO partners, to analyse our attitude and our assessment of the reactions of the Soviet union to any proposed solution.

I have dwelt principally on the relations between the west and the communist countries and within the western community itself. Both these preoccupations converge in the disarmament discussions being conducted in the 18 nation committee in Geneva. It is there that the four NATO nations, Britain, Canada, Italy and the United States, are in a sense, acting for their alliance partners in the continuing search for controlled disarmament and, in the meantime for any measures to ease international tension and avert the possibility of war by miscalculation or surprise attack. It is there, too, that both the communists and the non-communists feel the full weight and influence of the non-aligned nations as represented by eight of their number from all the continents.

While I was in Geneva at the end of March, I attended a session of the 18 nation disarmament committee and reaffirmed Canadian support for its activities. May I add, Mr. Chairman, the last time I had been in the room where that meeting took place was in 1938 when, with Mr. Lapointe, I had gone as one of the delegates from Canada to the last assembly of the league of nations. I could not help but think, as I sat in that room, of all that had happened since 1938, both in human and physical destruction in our world; I wondered whether our deliberations would lead to the beginning of a resurgence and of a new opportunity for mankind.

At that meeting I stressed the need to follow up the accomplishments of 1963 with further advances toward halting the arms race. While the negotiation of a treaty on general and complete disarmament is the main task of the committee, discussions over recent months lead to the conclusion that the way to general disarmament must be prepared by agreements on more limited collateral or pre-disarmament measures.

I therefore took the opportunity to state Canadian views on a number of measures which have been proposed. I expressed Canadian support for President Johnson's recent proposal for a verified freeze on the numbers and characteristics of strategic nuclear weapons delivery vehicles. It is a proposal of particular interest to Canada because those long range weapons systems constitute the direct threat to North America. It is also consonant with our view that every effort should be made to arrest the ever growing qualitative and quantitative competitions in armament production. A verified freeze on strategic delivery vehicles would provide a practical means to that end. A halt in this most costly and potentially dangerous segment of the arms race would do a great deal to help us all find an agreed method to reverse the process and begin disarmament in earnest.

I welcomed also the proposal which has been made in differing form by both the United States and the Soviet union for a bomber bonfire. An early agreement to destroy some of the major means of delivering nuclear weapons would reassure a sometimes sceptical world that the great powers are really serious about disarmament. It would have the added advantage of ensuring that these aircraft, obsolescent perhaps by super-power standards but still potentially lethal, would not be disposed of to less militarily powerful states which might use them in a way which would aggravate regional disputes.

On the question of non-dissemination of nuclear weapons, I voiced continuing Canadian support for an agreement based on the terms of the well known Irish resolution of 1961 and for a comprehensive ban on the testing of nuclear weapons. I spoke in support of the progressive development of an international system of safeguards over the transfer of fissionable materials for peaceful uses. All these measures merit our continuing support as important elements in limiting the number of nuclear weapons in the world and the number of nations having independent national control of them.

I am satisfied, after watching the disarmament committee in action, that it can make real progress toward the solution of disarmament problems. Both the Prime Minister and I, at one time or another, have had an opportunity of sitting in disarmament committees, as have my hon. friends opposite, who will understand what I am saying. I believe, however, one should be realistic in the appraisal that one makes. This committee has before it ample material for constructive negotiations when discussions are resumed on June 9. If the committee concentrates its efforts on these items which, taken singly or in some combination, offer good prospects of advance, it should be able to report to the next United Nations general assembly that we have moved a few steps further toward the goal of a disarmed and peaceful world.

An important advance, indeed the only one, in the field of disarmament since the turn of the year was, however, arranged outside the 18 nation committee. In unilateral but coordinated announcements the President of the United States, the Prime Minister of Britain and Chairman Khrushchev indicated, on April 20, the intention of their governments to cut back production of fissionable material for weapons purposes. Although not identical in content or necessarily equivalent in their effect, the announced measures are nevertheless a further step in the direction of curbing the arms race and as such are welcomed by Canada. They could mark the beginning of a process which could eventually lead to a complete and verified cut-off in production of fissionable material for weapons purposes and to a substantial transfer of such material to peaceful uses.

Because the development and strengthening of peace keeping machinery have a direct relation to disarmament negotiations, I used at Geneva the example of Cyprus to illustrate the continuing need for strengthening the ability of the United Nations to undertake such operations while attempts are being made to work out general disarmament plans. The draft disarmament treaties of both the United States and the Soviet union include provisions for the development of international peace keeping methods which would take the place of national armed forces in a disarmed world. Cyprus and a number of other examples have, however, demonstrated that in the meantime we must be able to cope with a wide variety of situations by means of ad hoc peace keeping arrangements, the efficiency of which should and could be improved.

As the Prime Minister said on May 7, we are issuing invitations to a number of nations with experience in this field to attend an exploratory conference in Canada within the next few months. We are following up with detailed suggestions as to the pattern which such a joint examination of this problem might follow. Out of it we hope to obtain not only improved methods by which those nations can prepare themselves for peace keeping service under the United Nations, but some concrete conclusions which could be made available to other interested states and which would perhaps encourage them to set up stand-by units within their national forces.

Speaking of the United Nations, I know I can say for all members of this house that we are looking forward to the visit on Monday and Tuesday next of the United Nations secretary general, U Thant, who will address the combined Houses of Parliament in this chamber on Tuesday morning. He will find us a nation dedicated to the charter of the United Nations, as has once again been demonstrated by Canada's contribution to the difficult peace keeping operation on the island of Cyprus.

I regret taking up all this time, Mr. Chairman, but I did feel that a comprehensive statement on these matters was due to the committee, and there are two matters of current interest upon which I cannot refrain from speaking, particularly in the light of the assurances I gave several times this week in answer to questions on orders of the day.

So much has been said in the house about Cyprus that I would not feel justified in entering into a detailed recapitulation of the United Nations operation there, either in respect of the peace force or the concurrent endeavours of the mediator. I would, however, like to give the house a brief account of how this matter was dealt with at the recent NATO meeting, where it became in fact one of the principal preoccupations of the assembled ministers.

I went to The Hague representing the only country at that meeting which is participating in the force—

Mr. Churchill: What about Britain?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): —although two days later the foreign minister of Denmark was able to announce that his country's forces had just arrived in Nicosia. And, of course, as the hon. gentleman says, the United Kingdom is a member of the force and is also a member of the NATO council. But the United Kingdom had a force on the island long before the United Nations force was established, and did an essential job in dealing with a most difficult situation.

Mr. Churchill: And it is still the major component.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): It is the major component, with some 2,700 troops, and it is bearing a heavy responsibility.

I went to The Hague convinced that advantage should be taken of that NATO meeting to impress upon the Greek and Turkish foreign ministers two points; first, the concern of all other members of the alliance over the weakening of the southeastern flank of NATO resulting from the deterioration in relations between these two countries because of Cyprus; and second, the need for these two countries to exercise restraint in their relations with each other as well as a moderating influence on the two communities in Cyprus in order that the peace keeping and political mediation of the United Nations might be facilitated.

I met separately with the foreign ministers of Greece and Turkey both before and during the meetings. I listened to their views and pointed out to them my grave concern. I can say that these preliminary and other discussions were very helpful in furthering mutual understanding of our various preoccupations.

Hon. members have already seen my references to relations between Greece and Turkey and to the Cyprus situation in the conference statement which the Prime Minister tabled on May 15. Other foreign ministers also expressed concern that the solidarity and strength of the alliance should not be prejudiced by a deterioration in relations between Greece and Turkey, and spoke in support of the United Nations operation there. I believe it will be a matter of pride to members of this house that practically every foreign minister who took part in the discussion referred to Canada's participation not only in peace keeping in Cyprus but in practically every other peace keeping operation under the auspices of the United Nations.

It was agreed after some discussion that the secretary general of NATO should keep in touch, pursuant to recommendations made by the committee of three in 1956, with Greece and Turkey in order to be available to assist in easing relations between these two allies. In effect the NATO secretary general has been given an informal watching brief over a situation affecting the relations of two member countries.

Because of our preoccupation with Cyprus, this was a valuable part of our meeting at The Hague from my point of view. I want to make it clear that there has been no infringement by NATO of United Nations responsibilities in Cyprus. Exclusive responsibility for restoring peace and promoting a political settlement in the island rests with the two Cypriot communities assisted by the United Nations force and the United Nations mediator. But a quite separate responsibility, which has now been recognized, rests on NATO to see to it that the actions of none of its members either weaken the alliance or render the task of the United Nations in Cyprus more difficult. War between Greece and Turkey is unthinkable—unthinkable for NATO and unthinkable, as I told the foreign ministers concerned and as others did, for the two countries themselves. I think the recent frank airing of this problem in the council gave all the members an opportunity to express their concern and to offer assistance to Greece and Turkey in restoring good relations, and thereby contributing also to an improvement in intercommunal relations in Cyprus.

Mr. Chairman, we are reading these days about a developing and critical situation in Indochina that concerns Canada. Although the Cyprus operation under the United Nations auspices has been a constant and urgent preoccupation over recent weeks, other peace keeping duties continue as we know to be discharged by our country. Some, such as the United Nations emergency force in Gaza and the observation mission in the Yemen, are going forward quietly. Another major operation, that in the Congo, is scheduled to be wound up next month, four years after its inauguration.

Of renewed importance, although outside United Nations auspices, are the truce supervision activities in which we are engaged in the three Indochina states of Viet Nam, Cambodia and Laos. It is now almost ten years since this country undertook, at the request of the participants in the Geneva conference of 1954 on Indochina, to serve along with India and Poland in the three international supervisory commissions for these three Indochina nations. Indochina is once again in a state of crisis, and I believe I have the responsibility to explain the Canadian government's position with regard to some of the unfolding events in this area.

In South Viet Nam there is now a full scale civil war supplied, directed and inspired from communist North Viet Nam. This civil war runs the risk of becoming an international war, because the communists continue to encourage their communist fellows within South Viet Nam and to provide them with help in the form of strategic direction and infiltrated supplies of arms and trained personnel, while the United States for their part have responded to the requests of successive South Viet Namese governments for help in the form of training and equipment against this externally organized and supported insurgency.

[Mr. Martin (Essex East).]

Both the government of the United States and the government of South Viet Nam have made it clear that if the North Viet Nam government and its backers will cease to interfere in South Viet Nam, military aid from the United States will not be necessary. There is no question of any attempt by the south to take over the north, nor of the United States desiring to maintain bases in the south. What is required is for the communist north to abandon its policy of interfering in the south. Our delegation to the commission there reports to us as an independent body, and I am satisfied that the assessment made by Canada, on its own, represents the actual situation.

There have been suggestions that neutrality would be the best policy for Viet Nam. I would not disagree with this as a long term objective; we are already agreed that it is the desirable policy for Cambodia and Laos. But can there be any doubt that supporting a nominally neutralist South Viet Nam would, in present circumstances, make that territory become anything other than an early victim of communist subversion? I believe that genuine, viable neutrality for Viet Nam can become possible, but I think it will become possible only after the present insurgency is brought to an end.

The role of the commission on which Canada serves in this situation is very difficult. Yesterday in the security council Mr. Stevenson criticized the effectiveness of the commission. A large part of the original terms of reference of the commission has become a dead letter. But the commission has performed the useful function of examining South Viet Namese charges of subversion from the north, and has presented a special report to the co-chairmen of the 1954 Geneva conference stating its positive findings. It has not done as much as we would have thought necessary. In particular we have believed and proposed repeatedly that the consideration of cases of subversion should have been and should be more expeditious. In the critical situation obtaining in Viet Nam the commission's duty to point to breaches of the cease fire agreement becomes more rather than less urgent. We shall continue to press our commission colleagues to take the same view of the commission's duties as we do.

One unfortunate offshoot of the war in South Viet Nam has been a series of violent border incidents with Cambodia. South Viet Namese troops repeatedly cross the Cambodian border and we are told that they do so in hot pursuit of Viet Cong insurgents seeking to take refuge in Cambodia after operations in Viet Nam. We in Canada—and I have made this clear before—support Cambodian neutrality and territorial integrity and therefore are doing what we can to try to find some way to bring these incursions to an end. Although this is not, strictly speaking, among the functions set out for the commission in Cambodia in the Geneva agreements, we have allowed it to be used to investigate such incidents and are ourselves trying to use it to see whether some more satisfactory arrangement can be made.

Yesterday Mr. Stevenson made a number of proposals in the security council in the course of the debate on the Cambodian complaints against Viet Nam. The proposals concerned various means by which the Cambodian-Viet Namese border might be insulated from the effects of the communist insurrection in Viet Nam. These proposals merit careful study. We have long felt that the Geneva framework for Cambodia was not designed to deal with situations that might arise along the frontier with Viet Nam. We should therefore welcome all suggestions that could lead to the lowering of tension on the frontier between these two countries. Whether they are related to the Geneva framework or not is of less importance than their possible efficacy in correcting a dangerous situation. I am sure that when we discuss the problems of these countries it is not easy for us to recognize the extent to which we in this interdependent world, whether we like it or not, are obliged in our own interests, as well as in the interests of world peace, to find that these matters are of vital concern to us.

Laos is also the unfortunate victim of the confrontation between communist and non-communist forces. An attempt was made at Geneva in 1962 to bring about conditions which would permit Laos to be united, independent and neutral. My hon. friend the former secretary of state for external affairs attended the conference in 1962 when we were brought in as a direct member of the conference. At the present time that country is, in all but name, a divided country. One part of it is held by right wing forces which have been far from blameless; they have done many things which have made the task of the neutralist prime minister, Prince Souvanna Phouma, more difficult. But at least they have co-operated in some measure with the prime minister, and the areas they hold are generally open to inspection by the international commission of which Canada, I wish to emphasize, along with India and Poland, is a member.

The areas held by the communist Pathet Lao are closed to the commission except upon rare occasions, and the Pathet Lao faction has been unco-operative to such a degree that one is forced to the conclusion that it really prefers the partition of the country to its unification under a neutralist government. Their latest military attacks in the plaine des Jarres cannot be justified by any political manoeuvring of the right wing in Vientiane. Our delegation to the commission has consistently supported both the authority of the prime minister and the obligation of the commission to carry out its duties under the Geneva protocol of 1962. Unfortunately we have not received the degree of co-operation required for success. The commission has to act by majority vote, or in certain circumstances by unanimous vote.

The prime minister of Laos has proposed that in view of the gravity of the situation the members of the 1962 conference on Laos should hold consultations as provided by article 4 of the Geneva protocol. The government of France has now indicated its support for this proposal in notes to the co-chairmen of the Geneva conference, Britain and the Soviet union. It seems to me that consultations under the protocol could have a salutary effect on the present crisis, and I have already instructed our commissioner in Vientiane to let it be known that Canada would be willing to take part in such consultations arranged as a result of the proposal made by the prime minister of Laos. It will, of course, be for the members of the Geneva conference to decide whether any consultations which are agreed upon should take place with all the formality of an international conference or, perhaps preferably, in some less formal way.

I recognize, Mr. Chairman, that this has not been an encouraging picture of the state of affairs in Indochina, an area where Canada has for 10 years now, at great expense to our people, sought along with India and Poland and other countries to bring about peaceful conditions. The key seems to lie in Viet Nam, and if the communists would renounce armed subversion a great step forward would have been taken toward restoring peace and stability to the area. Political solutions seem hardly possible for Viet Nam as long as the present militant communist interference in South Viet Nam continues.

I am afraid, Mr. Chairman, that I have taken too long, but really I do not apologize because these are matters on which parliament has a right to hear from me. I recognize that time has prevented me from dealing with many other questions, such as external aid, international economic development, desirable changes in the United Nations, and the organization of American states. These and other questions will undoubtedly be covered in our discussions here and in the external affairs committee when my estimates are being considered.

The wide area covered by what I have had to say, Mr. Chairman, points up the fact that our world is interdependent. When I think of the questions with which I have to deal I cannot help but go back to my early days in this house 28 years ago when there was little discussion of foreign affairs and when it was regarded almost as presumptuous even to put a question having to do with the foreign policy of the nation. All that is changed because our world is changed, and with that change has come perhaps a heavier responsibility for parliament than it realizes. Canada cannot escape its responsibilities in matters which a few years ago were not regarded as our concern. We are drawn into the maelstrom of a disturbed world. We are not one of the great powers, but self respect and international obligation present us with a duty and an opportunity. Although we are not one of the main architects of the world's destiny I believe we will not shirk our responsibilities in seeking to establish better conditions for peace among the nations.

Mr. Nesbitt: Mr. Chairman, it is about one minute to one o'clock, so I was wondering whether we might call it one o'clock.

The Chairman: Is that agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chairman: It being one o'clock I do now leave the chair.

At one o'clock the committee took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The committee resumed at 2.30 p.m.

Mr. Nesbitt: This morning, Mr. Chairman, the Secretary of State for External Affairs gave us a very wide ranging comment on very important aspects of international affairs, but during his discourse he did not say very much about what the government actually intended to do. He certainly pointed out the problems and the difficulties, but he did not offer too many solutions. As we know, in this aspect of government it is not always possible to present solutions until they have been worked out with other countries, but surely at least in some fields the minister could have given some clarification of what government policy is, or will be, and it is to these particular fields I will refer in the course of my remarks.

As it was, the minister's speech was mostly concise, and a very interesting résumé of what we have all been able to read in the Times, both the London and New York varieties, in the Christian Science Monitor and elsewhere during the last few months. As a matter of fact, in the case of Cyprus we have been able to find out more by reading the press than we have been able to find out from the minister in this chamber.

On repeated occasions over the last few weeks and months various members of the committee have tried to find out, both from the Prime Minister and the Secretary of State for External Affairs, what directives were given to the United Nations force on Cyprus, and on every occasion, as I recall, either the Prime Minister or the Secretary of State for External Affairs said these could not be divulged because it would cause embarrassment to the United Nations, or it was not possible to give out these details because it would complicate matters on Cyprus. Perhaps that is true. Having had some experience in this field on other occasions, notably with the Congo advisory committee, there is perhaps some merit in what the minister said in this regard, but I could never completely understand why it was not possible to disclose the directives given to the United Nations force on Cyprus.

I am sure these directives must have been known to a great many people on Cyprus, and I fail to see how it could have caused any embarrassment to the government to disclose them. I have in front of me a publication called "Report on Foreign Affairs" published by the general council of the parliamentary association in England, and this issue is for January, February and March of 1964. As most members know, it is an extremely reliable publication, and I would refer Your Honour to page 6, the middle of that page, where it lists a number of the directives given by the secretary general of the United Nations to the United Nations force on Cyprus. I quote as follows:

> The following points were understood to be among the 14 laid down by the secretary general: (1) the force should not interfere in the internal affairs of Cyprus; (2) it should not use arms to disarm Greek or Turkish Cypriots and should fire only in self-defence; (3) it would be the aim, though not a mandate, to attempt integration of the U.N. force with the Greek and Turkish contingents in Cyprus (which, under the Treaty of Guarantee, numbered 950 and 650 respectively); (4) a clear distinction was to be made between the British contingents which were part of the U.N. force and fell under its command, and British troops manning British bases; (5) the disarming of Cypriot irregulars was not to be enforced by arms, but other measures might be used; (6) a status-of-forces agreement was to be negotiated between the Cyprus government and the U.N.

Then it goes to mention a number of comments on these directives which allegedly have been given by the secretary general to the force on Cyprus. If these in fact are some of the directives, and I have reason to doubt that they are, I cannot see any reason why there would have been any embarrassment to the government or the United Nations in disclosing them to us.

Mr. Winch: Would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Nesbitt: Certainly.

Mr. Winch: You are reading out the directives as you know them, or as we know them. Is there any way to interpret the directives to say that, if a member of the United Nations force is killed, as one has already been, they cannot then disarm those who fire?

Mr. Nesbitt: I thank the hon. member for Vancouver East for the question. Having looked at these alleged directives as set out in the article, there does not seem to be any specific directive among the ones listed here to cover that situation, except perhaps No. 2 which says:

2. It should not use arms to disarm Greek or Turkish Cypriots and should fire only in self-defence;

Mr. Winch: My question was not exactly that. Can they not disarm those who fire, until somebody is killed?

Mr. Nesbitt: There is no such directive listed here. However, it says there were 14, but the article lists only six of what are understood to be the directives. Presumably there are other directives which the author of the article did not ascertain or did not care to publish. It may be, as I have already mentioned, that some of the other directives might have caused some problems if they had been disclosed, and with regard to the question just asked, possibly a directive of that nature might have caused some trouble. But certainly the alleged directives published in that article could not have caused any problem. Indeed, they do not seem to have, and I cannot understand why those directives at least were not disclosed to the house.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): May I point out that those were the terms of reference which have already been tabled in the house.

Mr. Nesbitt: I have read those terms of reference. I have them here and I have looked at them carefully. They are similar but they by no means coincide with the other ones to which I have referred. I do not have much more to say on the Cyprus situation at this time. Certainly there were great difficulties involved in the preliminary aspects of the Cyprus venture. I repeat that at the moment things appear to be going very well, with the exception of the incident in which a Finnish soldier was unfortunately killed and became the first casualty in the force. I am sure all members of the house will wish to express their sympathy to the government of Finland in this regard. But at the moment things seem to be going fairly well and all we can say is we hope they will continue to do so. The minister may be sure that if they do not there will be further inquiries as to the extent and terms of our participation in this venture.

I noted certain observations that the minister made during the course of his remarks this morning and there are a number of questions I should like to ask him. I hope he will have an opportunity to answer them toward the end of this debate. The first matter I should like to ask the minister about has to do with mainland China. In his discussion of the China problem this morning he made it quite clear that as far as cultural and trade relations with mainland China are concerned things are going very well. I think we would all agree to that statement. He also expressed the hope that these enterprises would continue and expand, and again I think we would all agree with that.

However, in discussing the apparent attitude of the Peking government with regard to war, and nuclear war in particular, the minister indicated, as I recall, that it was by no means certain whether or not the Peking government had entirely renounced the idea of a nuclear war. Then the minister made what I thought was a very odd observation. I noted it carefully and I should like him to clarify it for us. In discussing the matter of China's intentions as to nuclear war the minister said, as I noted it, that we should test the intentions of the Chinese government in this regard. That struck me as a rather startling observation because, if I may say so, it was reminiscent of a certain now deceased but well known secretary of state who on frequent occasions advocated a policy of brinkmanship. I hope the Secretary of State for External Affairs was not suggesting that we should keep pulling the dragon's tail to see if it will spew forth fire.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Of course not.

Mr. Nesbitt: I simply refer the Secretary of State for External Affairs to his statement. For this reason I hope he will offer some explanation or enlargement of this rather odd observation.

Another question I should like to put to the minister concerns the possible seating of the Peking government of China in the United Nations this fall. The minister indicated that he was rather concerned and had reason for concern that perhaps the credentials of nationalist or Taiwan China might not be accepted by the credentials committee of the United Nations this fall and that either this year or perhaps next the credentials of Peking China would be accepted. He indicated there would be certain problems with regard to what Canada would do in this event. Would Canada sit in the United Nations and not speak to Peking China, when we are trading with that country, or what would we do?

The minister put forth the question in a very interesting way but he did not offer any suggestions as to what the government might do in this regard. While at the moment this may be a hypothetical question, I wonder whether the minister could not enlarge a little on what he would expect the government would do if this should take place, inasmuch as he indicated that there is a reasonable likelihood of its happening. Later in the debate one of my colleagues will be making further remarks on the subject of China so I will not continue any longer in this vein, except to say there is one other matter I should like to bring to the attention of the minister on which he might perhaps seek the advice of his departmental legal adviser.

I refer to a rather interesting proposition which has been suggested to me. I do not know what the answer is and I hope the minister will be able to give one. In the event that the credentials committee of the general assembly should not accept the credentials of nationalist China but rather accepts the credentials of Peking China at the next general assembly or the one after, and Peking China is then seated in the general assembly, does this necessarily affect the credentials of Taiwan China in respect of its seat on the security council? This could present a most interesting state of affairs.

While from a practical viewpoint it would seem quite ridiculous that there could possibly be a situation where Taiwan China would be seated in the security council and Peking China would be seated in the general assembly, after a brief and cursory examination of the terms of the charter I am not at all sure that this could not be the case. The security council would have no veto over the credentials committee of the general assembly, but I would be interested to hear what the minister can find out from his department in this regard. As I have said, it does not seem at all logical, but legal aspects are not always logical aspects as we all know. We know, for instance, that the Soviet union has refused to pay its assessments for the various United Nations peace keeping expeditions, because of a very tenuous and technical legal argument. I would think it would be helpful to get some further enlightenment on the interesting possibility to which I have referred.

If I may now deal with the minister's observations on NATO, he gave us quite a bit of information as to his travels to Paris, The Hague and West Germany. I am wondering whether the minister visited London at any time during the course of his travels, or had the minister visited London before his trip to the last NATO ministerial meeting at The Hague? I realize that the visit of the minister and the Prime Minister to France, and the minister's visit to The Hague, West Germany and West Berlin are very important, but I also think that our relationships with the United Kingdom are likewise very important. Therefore I am wondering whether the minister has not been there yet. Visits have been made to Washington since the government has been in power, and I should like the minister to make some comment in this regard.

A year ago at the NATO meeting here in Ottawa it was decided, as I recall, that a review of the NATO defence role and NATO's requirements would be carried out. So far we have not had a report on this matter and I wonder whether the minister can enlighten us in this regard.

With regard to the matter of disarmament the minister was certainly very hopeful and enthusiastic. I can remember my first association with the minister back in 1955 at the United Nations, at which time he was also very enthusiastic and hopeful. We all have been since, but I think we are all sorry to have to say that there has not been that much progress. Therefore I believe a somewhat more realistic and practical view should be taken of disarmament. In my opinion all of us, including the minister, well know that disarmament is a long, long, slow, tedious process. It is a matter of two steps forward and one step backward, three steps forward, four steps backward, five steps forward and so on. It is a long drawn out affair. We are all hopeful, and perhaps conditions are propitious in the world at the moment because of the détente between the Soviet group of states and the west. We certainly hope there are further steps.

I am glad to see the minister is now so enthusiastic and so hopeful, because he did not seem to have that same degree of enthusiasm and hope when the former secretary of state for external affairs, Hon. Howard Green, was expressing those views. In those days, Hon. Howard Green was expressing the same hope and enthusiasm for the success of the disarmament negotiations and making every effort in these talks, but the present minister was full of worry, reserve and fears about the future of disarmament. Now that he is back in office, he seems to have another view. Of course the views you have on various things all depend on where you sit in this house.

Since the minister said in his opening remarks this morning he was intending to cover only a certain number of fields in international affairs, because in any reasonable length of time it is impossible to cover the whole gamut, I intend to limit my remarks to certain aspects. My colleagues, at another stage, will be dealing with other aspects, particularly those relating to external aid and assistance. There are two or three items with which I should like to deal specifically this afternoon. One is the peace keeping operations of the United Nations. Another one is our problems in the Pacific. Another one relates to the organization of American states. This latter subject was always a great favourite of the minister until he became a minister. We have not heard very much about it since then. However, perhaps I will be able to remind him this afternoon of his views in the past.

With regard to the United Nations peace keeping operations, I agree with the minister's remarks this morning in which he stated that the three principal peace keeping operations that we associate with the United Nations namely the one in the Near East sometimes known as UNEF, the Congo and Cyprus, have been largely successful operations. Perhaps it is a little too early to say this about Cyprus, but at the moment it seems to be progressing well. We hope it will be as successful as the previous two.

These operations have been successful in so far as the political results that have been obtained are concerned, but they have not been so successful in so far as payment for them is concerned. As everyone knows the Soviet union has refused steadfastly to pay anything towards its share of the assessment for these operations. In so far as the Congo is concerned, France and Belgium have behaved in the same manner.

As I indicated earlier the Soviet union, as the result of a very tenuous legal argument which was not upheld by the judgment of the world court in 1962, has refused to pay for the Near East and Congo operations. This argument was based on the fact that the resolution was passed, not by the security council but by the general assembly. As I say, the world court has not accepted this argument advanced by the Soviet union, but that has not made any difference. The Russians are still literally sticking their tongue out at the United Nations and refusing to follow the rules of that organization. Of course, there are other reasons for the refusal of the Soviet union and France to pay their share of this assessment. I think the situation would be different if the late Premier Lumumba were still in power in the Congo. Then the Russians would have been only too glad to pay their share. This not being the case, they have not done so.

Only this morning I heard a news bulletin to the effect that the Soviet union had again flatly refused to pay any amount of its assessment for the Near East and Congo operations. As I understand it, this did not include the Cyprus operation because this venture was started in the security council. While the Soviet union did not vote against it, they participated and I think made it quite clear they were not excluding the possibility of helping to pay for this operation.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): With regard to Cyprus I know of nothing that would warrant the view that she indicated she would.

Mr. Nesbitt: I realize that, as the minister has said, the Soviet union has given no indication she would pay. On the other hand, she has given no indication she would not pay. Since her argument in connection with the Congo and UNEF were that the security council had not passed the resolution in the first place, and since she said nothing when the security council passed the Cyprus resolution, it is perhaps reasonable to hope she may contribute.

Then, we are faced with the question, what should we do about it? If the Soviet union and France continue to refuse to pay, in the one case for both the UNEF and Congo operations and in the case of France for the Congo operation, after being ordered to do so and after vetoing the decision of the world court, then some kind of action must be taken. Under the charter, of course, these countries could lose their voting rights in the assembly if they do not pay. As I understand it from various press reports—I have some here but I will not take the time of the house to read them—the Soviet union has given an indication it would have to change its attitude towards the United Nations in the event its voting rights were suspended. The implication is she might leave the United Nations and she would be accompanied by a number of her satellites if she did.

One of the views one hears expressed is, if the Soviets want to walk out, let them go; that if the Soviet union will not pay its share of the cost of these operations, the United Nations may as well break up anyway. This is one viewpoint that is expressed. If a country will not follow the rules, you may as well call the whole thing off right here and now. You have to have a confrontation or showdown with the Soviet union and France in this regard. You cannot go on forever placing the burden on a few countries like Canada, Norway and Sweden that do all the work and pay the bills as well, although funds have been contributed by some other countries including the United States and Britain.

Many people, however, believe that if the Soviet union were actually confronted with this situation whereby she might lose her vote, she would back down in the same way as she backed down in 1961, when she was insisting that there be a troika or three-headed secretary general, and also when she was carrying on a particularly bitter personal campaign against the late secretary general, Mr. Hammarskjold, trying to get him out of office. I remember it well, since I was there at the time. When the Soviet union found this behaviour was not acceptable, particularly in so far as the smaller countries she hoped to influence were concerned, without turning a hair she just backed down and changed her whole attitude. After the late secretary general was killed, there was no further insistence on a three-headed secretary general, and the present secretary general, U Thant, was accepted. Many people feel that this is a bluff by the Soviet union and that if the bluff were called the Russians would back down because it is in their interests to remain in the United Nations. It is useful for several purposes. There is also the fear of the great opprobrium which would come to the Soviet union from the smaller countries she hopes to influence. Russia would have no choice but to remain.

Another point of view is, of course, that if some face saving device could be found for the Soviet union so that she would not have to pay for UNEF and the Congo, she might remain in the United Nations. Perhaps in this regard some compromise could be worked out. Such a compromise proposal was suggested by the United States representative, Mr. Adlai Stevenson, in a speech to the United Nations which was reported in the New York Times on March 24, last. I have the quotation here and perhaps I could read it.

> Mr. Stevenson said the United States wished to discuss with the Soviet union a new United States-British plan under which all proposals for future peace keeping forces would be submitted, in the first instance, to the security council—> —and a new standing committee of the assembly would recommend the assessments required for the force.

That would take care of the Soviet objection.

That is the alternative suggestion—that some such plan as this should be negotiated if possible with the Soviet union. I believe this would be the wiser course. Failing this, the bluff, if such it be, might be called, and we would then see what happens. Another view I have heard expressed is that if the Soviet union proved not to be bluffing, if that country did, indeed, walk out of the United Nations, thus ending its effectiveness to all intents and purposes, such an action might enforce the revision of the charter, a reform which is badly needed. We can all suggest dozens of ways in which the charter could be improved. The present system of one vote, one country, is clearly nonsensical. It has created a situation where countries such as the United States and the Soviet union have one vote, just as do countries like Zanzibar. No provision is made for representation on the basis of population, or resources, or anything else. The system is completely out of touch with the realities of the world. In the last few years many new nations have joined the organization. In many cases their territories are purely arbitrary; it is not going to work out. Well, it has been suggested that if the Russians did walk out, one of the reasons for their doing so would be to bring about a revision of the charter, because revision of the charter by discussion would take a long, long time; it would probably be talked about for the next 50 years and then get nowhere.

The Chairman: May I interrupt the hon. member and bring to the attention of the committee the fact that his time has expired?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I am sure we would all wish to allow the spokesman for the official opposition to extend his remarks.

The Chairman: Does the committee agree?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Nesbitt: I thank the Secretary of State for External Affairs and the other members of the committee for their courtesy. I shall try to complete my remarks as quickly as possible.

I was saying that even if the Russians did walk out after having been suspended for non-payment of assessments, it might not be as bad in the long run as it would at first appear, because their action might enforce a much-needed revision of the charter. I remember the last conversation I had with the late secretary general. At that time, in 1961, he was under heavy personal attack from the Soviet union and he looked very discouraged. He said: "You know, the league of nations was a great success". I guess I looked a little surprised, because he said: "I know you will think I am wrong but, after all, the league of nations was the first time in world history that anything of this kind had ever been done, and it was at least a start. The next step was the United Nations. We have gone much further and have been much more successful than the league of nations ever was. This organization is now getting into serious trouble. It is apparently unable to revise its own constitution by agreement. These difficulties will increase as the world changes and the constitution of the United Nations becomes outdated. The United Nations will have to change or it, too, will fail." I am quoting to the best of my memory from my conversation with the late Mr. Hammarskjold. Then he said: "If that happens, a third body will come into existence, one which will be more successful, and then a fourth." I remember his final admonition. He said: "You people in America, in Canada as well as the United States, tend to think of events in terms of five or ten years. We in Europe think in terms of one hundred or two hundred years. A thing like this, progress toward ultimate world government, may take a couple of hundred years before we are ready for it." I do not disagree with the late secretary general.

So, should the Russians be forced out of the United Nations the situation might not be as black as it would appear. As I have said before, we might get the necessary revision of the charter and the emergence of the United Nations in a new form, as many of us would agree is necessary. However, so that I may not be misunderstood, I again express my hope that the first alternative I suggested is workable, namely that agreement can be reached with the Soviet union with regard to the payment of future peace keeping operations and that some more peaceful and less extreme method of revising the charter can be found.

As to the nature of the peace keeping force, what kind of peace keeping force do we want? I think there are three requirements in connection with any such force. One is that it must be practical in world-wide political terms. Second, it must be effective. It must be ready for use at once. Third, it must be paid for. This is a matter about which we feel a little sensitive. Not only must it be paid for, but it must be paid for by all of the members of the United Nations, at least to some degree. When the general public thinks about a United Nations peace keeping force it imagines some kind of standing army kept on First avenue, New York. People have no conception of what is required. Such a force would obviously be too expensive. Besides, one could readily imagine the difficulties which would be involved if troops were sent to country X and country X was one of the countries involved in a peace keeping operation.

The arrangements made so far in this field have been good. They have been ad hoc arrangements, played by ear, as we say. The approach has been purely pragmatic. But the result has not been too bad. Action has been slow in developing and there has been little experience upon which to rely, but I think both our secretaries general have shown great wisdom and judgment. They have made a few mistakes, but who would not have done so in these circumstances? I think they deserve great credit indeed for the results they have been able to accomplish. Nevertheless, I think we should all like to see some type of arrangement whereby the secretary general is not driven out of his mind trying to work something out, and we hope that when these forces have to be raised in the future a more expeditious and efficient means can be used by the United Nations to deal with emergencies.

The United Nations has to be a pragmatic place. I think the idea now being developed between Canada and the Scandinavian countries, the Netherlands and others, is a good start. I was pleased to hear the minister tell us that a meeting between these countries is to take place in Canada later this year. I should like to expand this idea a little. I would think this is a good nucleus for such a group of countries to try to get together to have forces ready and available, should the United Nations request them. What countries should contribute forces to such a group? Initially, I think, countries which have contributed forces in the past should form the nucleus. This is apparently what is taking place. Other countries, such as Colombia in South America should also be invited. It may be they have not been able to take part up to the present time, but they should have an opportunity.

I say, Mr. Chairman, that any of the countries which have contributed forces to the three major peace keeping operations should be the first to form this nucleus. This program could be expanded to cover any countries who are members of the United Nations and who might wish to contribute forces. First of all I would omit the big powers, the five permanent members of the security council; but at a later date I see no reason why even these countries could not offer to contribute forces if necessary.

Someone might say, "Well, how about the communist countries?" As the minister pointed out in his remarks this morning, the expression "communist countries" does not mean what it meant five or ten years ago. One might envisage this position in two or three years. If communist China should be in the United Nations and she had a border dispute with India, I imagine that Polish troops would not be unacceptable in such a situation. It would do no harm to try such a program, and I think eventually all countries wishing to offer troops to the secretary general should be allowed to do so. How they will be selected, of course, is a matter to which I will come in a moment.

The next thing is, should this group of countries be in the United Nations and directly under the jurisdiction of the secretary general, or should they be a quasi part of the United Nations, or out of the United Nations? As the Prime Minister and the Secretary of State for External Affairs have indicated, at the present time it is probably better to have the nucleus of such an organization outside the United Nations, but making themselves available—they would all be member countries —to the secretary general in a sort of an affiliated or associated way. I can understand full well the reasons why the minister would say this, and it is not necessary to go into them. The secretary general would perhaps be caused certain embarrassment at the present moment if this organization were to come directly under his jurisdiction. I think any hon. member will realize why I say this. Eventually, though, I think this organization, when arrangements for payment are made between the larger member states and the United Nations, should come directly under the jurisdiction of the secretary general.

It may be said, "How will these troops be made available?" Each country which offers to contribute troops to the United Nations should agree to have a certain number of troops trained and ready for United Nations use at 24 hours' notice. We in Canada have had these troops available for several years now, and I understand that the Scandinavian countries are passing legislation to do this. This is essential. Any country could volunteer any number of troops, from 100 to half a brigade, as the case may be; but these troops would have to be ready to go within 24 hours. I say this, Mr. Chairman, because certainly one of the biggest problems which has faced the secretary general in the past is the fact that first of all he has had to get in touch with the countries he thinks might be suitable to contribute troops; then those countries have had to find out whether they could provide troops, for domestic reasons or purely technical reasons; time has elapsed while answers were received; the troops have had to be gotten ready in the meantime, and during this period of time the situation has probably worsened—and time is of the essence in all these things. If the countries had troops ready to move in 24 hours, troops that were trained and ready, this would probably prevent half the difficulties and dangers that have been encountered in the past.

Perhaps this is getting into matters of defence rather than foreign affairs, but I believe that such troops should receive training under all sorts of warfare conditions—desert, jungle, and perhaps even arctic. Perhaps they should also receive political instruction, in the very broad sense of the word, as to how to behave with inhabitants of other countries, because these men would be good will representatives of the United Nations as well as being charged with keeping the peace.

These troops should be listed on a roster at the headquarters of this group, or eventually on a roster of the secretary general, so that the secretary general, if an emergency situation should arise, could get in touch with the headquarters of the group and ascertain what troops were available. He could say, "I would like to know what countries have what troops available"; he could consider the answer received, and if he decided that the troops of certain countries would be better choices under certain conditions, that is a matter that would of course be the responsibility of the secretary general. In this regard the secretary general will need not only troops to help keep the peace, but civilian personnel. I mean by that, police, and so on. I believe the Prime Minister and the Secretary of State for External Affairs have indicated this already; but in addition to police forces you would need public health officials and even transport officials, and the like, to help move supplies into the area involved. These men should be senior civil servants and technical personnel from the countries contributing troops. This type of personnel would be very, very helpful in carrying out any peace keeping operation. I believe these personnel should also be kept in a quasi United Nations group—that is to say, outside the United Nations—but eventually a roster of this type of personnel should be available to and directly under the jurisdiction of the secretary general.

Finally, Mr. Chairman, in this regard I think the secretary general—he could do this even now, I think, without any embarrassment—should arrange to have at his disposal a staff of personnel, or a roster or list of personnel, whom he could contact in an emergency. These people could be known, in United Nations terms, as a "U.N. Presence". Every emergency situation that arises in the world is a different kind of situation. It might require a committee of three or four men in one place, while in another place one person would be sufficient. In one case the "U.N. Presence"—I use the word "Presence" with a capital letter and in quotation marks—would be a type of person such as an undersecretary or the secretary general himself. In another case it might be a distinguished foreign diplomat, as in the case of Cyprus at the present time; or diplomats, since there are two. This would be very useful. The type of presence required depends on the circumstances; but again, if the secretary general had a list of internationally well known and respected persons who would be available, this would again save time—and so often it is time that is important in these cases.

The secretary general cannot do any of these things until a resolution has been passed directing him to carry them out. I have already pointed out that in the future if any arrangements can be worked out it is essential that the security council handle this type of resolution. If that is not possible, due to a veto, it might be necessary to go back to the "united for peace" type of resolution from the general assembly. In the case of the Congo the secretary general appointed an advisory committee to advise him as to how he should carry out the terms of the resolution of the general assembly, because resolutions on peace keeping matters are always by nature and by necessity exceedingly vague and the secretary general would have to be a Philadelphia lawyer and have the wisdom of Solomon to carry them out. This is because the resolution may mean one thing to one country and another thing to another. I know that in the case of the Congo it was a very difficult matter. The secretary general had the advice of all the countries which contributed forces. While I cannot say more in this regard, certainly this advisory committee caused the secretary general a great many headaches and a good deal of wrangling went on in the committee. But it was of some help at least, and very often the late secretary general would do something of his own volition and then tell them, "I have done this", and because nobody else had anything better to offer, they usually accepted it. I think an advisory committee is something that should be carefully considered on every occasion, if the secretary general thinks it necessary.

Finally in this regard, Mr. Chairman, is the question of financing. I think the United Nations should try to arrange—and I think Canada should take this initiative—to have a special fund ready from which to provide immediate costs. In the matter of finances and financing, the United Nations is probably the worst of any organization in the world, which is a shocking thing. We have never been able to get some countries to pay their bills, although certainly this does not apply to us. A special fund should be available for emergency purposes into which the secretary general can dip at once without having to pass around the hat and go begging. It is a shocking thing which has taken place in the past. Then for long range financing the plan suggested by governor Stevenson of the United States should be adopted. I emphasize again that if assessments are made by any group of United Nations countries, even if it is only a small amount, these assessments should be paid. We all know that countries like Zanzibar and other small countries have not the money to pay large amounts, but they should pay something, even if only a token payment, to make them feel part of a group, which is something very necessary. As I mentioned before, Canada and our friends like Sweden, Norway and Ireland have not only done the dirty work but have had to pay the bills as well.

One final matter on this subject. In view of the fact that this nucleus of countries is going to try to form a group to make troops available and will be meeting in Canada shortly, I would suggest to the minister, since some co-ordinating arrangements must be made between these countries with regard to standardized training of troops and civilian personnel, that some kind of permanent centre for these countries, perhaps a staff college, might be made available in this country. I think that would be very helpful and would provide a permanent headquarters. We are not trying to get away from the United Nations, but at the present time it is probably not feasible to bring this matter directly under the secretary general. I think that if a headquarters or training base for the senior officers of these troops were set up in this country it would be a good thing. Canadians want their government to take the lead in this United Nations enterprise, and I think that is true of everyone in Canada. However, although most Canadians want to do their share I do not see why they should do more than their share. We do not want to accept the role of "suckers", and therefore we should act now to see that these arrangements are made, and that other countries do pay their share as best they can. I think that is essential and that the government should give the best leadership it can in this regard.

The next matter I should like to deal with briefly concerns our relations in the Pacific. Canada is a Pacific power but very little emphasis has been placed upon, or attention paid to, this fact over the years by, perhaps, all governments. In the last three or four years events in the Pacific have moved very rapidly, and they now make it imperative that the government pay very close attention to what is going on in this part of the world, and try to do something about it, purely from the point of view of our own future safety. The minister told us today of the troubles and dangers in Viet Nam, Laos and Cambodia. Relations with China were also touched on. In the north Pacific our relations with Japan, both commercial and diplomatic, are excellent and can hardly be improved upon. But this is not the case in the south Pacific.

I refer to the situation pointed up by Malaysia, Indonesia, Australia, New Zealand and the Pacific islands. There lies a very dangerous situation indeed, of which we are all aware. The minister mentioned this morning when discussing Europe that if a man like Hitler gets in control he goes from one conquest to another, as a result of economic conditions at home which cause him to do something to distract the people, and he becomes an egomaniac. These people can never be trusted.

I am not suggesting that the head of the government of Indonesia, President Sukarno, is in that category, but he comes pretty close to it. First of all he took over the Netherlands New Guinea as a result of a weak-kneed attitude in Washington. Now he is after Malaysia, and he has suggested that Malaysia of all places is trying to encircle Indonesia. Now President Sukarno has sworn himself to the destruction of Malaysia and attacks are being made on that country, which is a sister nation of the commonwealth. Australia and New Zealand are very concerned about this, because if Malaysia goes the next step will be New Guinea, part of which is controlled directly by Australia. Then the next step would be the Pacific islands, and the information I have received from people in Samoa and other places is that they are very concerned.

Fifty years ago no one would have given a hoot for the Pacific islands. People do not give a hoot about things which do not concern them. But in this age of jet aircraft the Pacific islands are of great importance not only to us but to our immediate allies. When you have an imperialist, power-hungry, expansionist country headed by someone like President Sukarno heading out in all directions, people give way. This causes concern, and it concerns us.

I would suggest that the government take steps to consult Australia and New Zealand with regard to establishing some sort of closer relationship or alliance; that we consult Malaysia to see what we can do to help. Since the minister of defence has scrapped a large part of our navy or put it in moth balls, perhaps we could make some arrangement whereby some minesweepers and destroyers which are presently laid up are made available to help Malaysia drive off these aggressive attacks by the Indonesians on Sarawak and Brunei. This is a matter which I think should be carefully considered. We should also offer other aid, both economic and military, to Malaysia, because if President Sukarno is not stopped now then, just like Hitler in the 1930's, he will go on, and the next country to which he will turn his attention will be New Guinea, and then Australia and New Zealand will become involved. We cannot stand idly by because this is a thing which will spread. The man should be stopped now. He has no possible reason for making attacks on Malaysia except to satisfy his own ego and to cover up the failure of his economic policy at home. I think he should be stopped now before we get into more trouble.

Mr. Churchill: Where is the Minister of National Defence? He should be listening to this.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): The minister is at a meeting. He was here all morning.

Mr. Nesbitt: I might mention in this regard that I have before me a clipping from the London Times of April 15, 1964. It is an article by the naval correspondent of the London Times pointing out the necessity for Malaysia to have small ships to help her ward off these hit and run commando-like attacks which are being pulled off almost daily by the Indonesians.

In conclusion—I am sorry if I have bored the hon. member in the corner from Quebec, but perhaps these matters do not concern him very much—the last item I want to deal with concerns Canada and the organization of American states. This was one matter about which the minister could have told us this morning. We would like to know what government policy is in this connection. Before the minister came to his present office he was very anxious to tell the house what we should do in this regard.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I still am.

Mr. Nesbitt: I do not want to remind the minister that I have a good many newspaper clippings in front of me covering the last year or so, and to save the time of the house I will not read them all into the record. However, I think the minister will be only too willing to agree that in the past he did advocate that Canada join the organization of American states.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I have not changed my view at all.

Mr. Nesbitt: The minister says he has not changed his view. Perhaps when he replies he could elucidate on that matter.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I would be very glad to.

Mr. Nesbitt: There was one other thing I was wondering if the minister had considered, and it is this. While the minister has not changed his view, apparently some of his colleagues changed their views—

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Wait and see.

Mr. Nesbitt: The minister says wait and see. Does that mean we are going to join the organization of American states?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): You can never tell.

Mr. Nesbitt: The minister says you can never tell. I think this is wonderful. Perhaps when he is replying he will make that more clear. As everybody knows, there are a great many arguments, pro and con, as to joining this organization. If the minister cannot persuade his colleagues to join the organization outright, then I wonder has he given any consideration to trying a sort of trial run, in the form of observer status, or perhaps a status similar to that of the United States in the CENTO organization, where they do not have a vote but they give gratuitous advice. People who do not vote but give gratuitous advice probably are not too welcome in any organization, but I just throw out the suggestion of an observer status for Canada in the organization of American states.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): We are thinking along the same lines.

Mr. Nowlan: This worries me.

Mr. Nesbitt: By having observer status for a while we could see what problems we might encounter if we became a full member, and we would have better grounds upon which to decide whether we should or should not join. I certainly look forward to the minister's observations later in this debate.

Before sitting down there is one other thing I would like to mention, and that is Canada's relationship with the West Indies and the Caribbean. Every effort should be made to increase our close association with these countries, and in particular I would mention one which is shortly to become independent, British Guiana. Our colleagues in the United Kingdom are faced with great difficulties at the present time. Their armed forces are spread very thinly through the trouble spots in Yemen, Cyprus, South Arabia, and the like. It is also a well known fact that there might well be trouble in British Guiana, and it is my understanding that the United Kingdom has very skimpy forces there at present, which causes the United Kingdom great concern.

It might be helpful in this area if the minister gave consideration to offering the use of certain Canadian forces in this very important area of the Caribbean. It is getting pretty close to home. It is not too far from Cuba, and I do not think I need say more or elaborate in this regard at this time. It is something the government should consider.

Again I want to thank the committee for allowing me the extended period of time in which to make my remarks, and at this point I will now sit down.

Mr. Brewin: Mr. Chairman, I would very much like to open my remarks by welcoming the review of foreign policy given us this morning by the Secretary of State for External Affairs. With a very great deal of what he said I imagine no reasonable Canadian of good will could possibly disagree, but there are some points of difference of opinion which I would like to mention, and some differences of emphasis I would like to discuss in the course of my remarks.

I imagine, Mr. Chairman, all members of the committee have received a very beautifully edited magazine about the President of the United States. In it was an article on the late President Kennedy, written by Arthur Schlesinger Jr., who was his special assistant. In it he used these words with which I would like to preface my remarks:

> Every significant statesman must possess and be possessed by a vision of the future. He must have some instinct about the grand movement of history, and must perceive some direction in which he supposes the world is moving. He must have a conception of the historical process which connects what has been and what is to come, and which therefore gives his present deeds and decisions a setting and a point. Implanted within him there must be an image, not necessarily conscious or explicit, but plastic and capacious of the world he strives to bring into being.

I imagine it would be difficult, in fact presumptuous, for all of us to seek to be significant statesmen; nevertheless I think it would be worth while for us, in making our comments in this discussion on external affairs and on the statement given to us by the Secretary of State for External Affairs, to set them in the context of our understanding of the world situation today and in the light of some sort of vision of the world of the future. I would say, Mr. Chairman, that the significant feature of today's world is its radically changing nature. There are today new opportunities, and there are new threats. If one's thinking is clear it seems to me that it would not be good enough for us to go on meeting these new threats with the methods that were appropriate to meet the old. If we do not seize the new opportunities we may lose them and they will never recur. These remarks, I think, are appropriate in discussing our position in international affairs.

When he spoke to the special committee on defence in July last, the Secretary of State for External Affairs stated that the foreign and defence policies of any state in the nuclear age are inseparable, and they must both have but a single objective, the preservation of peace. With that statement I most heartily concur.

If I may mention a personal matter I had the privilege, as did some other hon. members, of having lunch today with Dr. Matsumoto from Japan, who was a school teacher in Hiroshima at the time of the explosion of the nuclear bomb. He lost his wife, and 378 of the girl students died. He is here on a mission to try to explain that experience to other people in the world. With that experience in mind, I am sure none of us will disagree with the proposition that the major objective of both foreign and defence policy—which, as the minister said, are inseparable—must be the preservation of peace. In that light I want to look at NATO, which the Secretary of State for External Affairs discussed with us this morning.

It was created in 1949 under conditions totally different from those which prevail at present. It was created to meet the threat of Soviet aggression in Europe, but uniting the nations of Europe in an alliance which was backed up by the United States nuclear monopoly. Without that backing, the nations of western Europe might well have fallen victims either to the internal subversion or external military threat of Soviet conventional power. But the situation has radically changed since that time. The western European nations have recovered their economic strength. In the common market and other western European institutions, they have recovered a sense of strength and independence, and in addition the world has entered a new era. It is the era of the hydrogen bomb, the era of intercontinental ballistic missiles.

The United States of America no longer has the nuclear monopoly. We have reached a situation, it seems to me and to many people, of a nuclear stalemate, and at the present time we have in Europe massive confrontation of tactical nuclear weapons equal, as Mr. McNamara has told us, to 10,000 Hiroshimas and Nagasakis put together. From this I think we can deduce that any major conflict in Europe would quickly escalate into all-out nuclear war. Fortunately it is clear that Mr. Khrushchev and his advisers are well aware of this. Indeed we know that this was one of the main items in the dispute which shattered the myth of communist unity and put the U.S.S.R. and the peoples of the republic of China into open conflict. In these circumstances no one who is not crazy would risk a major conflict in Europe, and no one believes that the leaders of the U.S.S.R. are crazy.

There remains nevertheless a danger of war, a danger that we set off war by accident or by the impelling incentive in case of tension to strike first before you are struck. I suggest that it is on minimizing and reducing these risks that the major emphasis should be put both in NATO and in the disarmament conferences that are taking place at Geneva. But, Mr. Chairman, apart from this threat of accidental war or war induced, as I say, by the dangerous nature of the weapons which we possess in superabundance, we can, I think, reasonably look forward to a period of relative stability, a period in which the two major powers of the world have a strong, common interest in co-existence. The threat which NATO was designed to meet has been lessened by these facts and we would be foolish in my judgment to put our major emphasis in international affairs into meeting a waning and almost non-existent threat. We are aware that on both sides of the iron curtain there is no longer a monolithic picture. I think the Secretary of State for External Affairs said that we should not be speaking of the east versus the west. On both sides of the iron curtain he agrees that there are indications of various sorts of a changed picture. There is no longer monolithic unity on either side. Therefore we have a period of relative stability based upon this balance of nuclear power.

My belief is that we must use the time bought by this measure of stability through the nuclear stalemate in order to create institutions on an international basis which will put on a far firmer foundation than any balance of mutual terror possibly can the hopes for peace of the world. If we say that we have acquired a degree of stability in Europe because of this nuclear confrontation, we must simultaneously admit that other developments throughout the world are creating major areas of instability, and I suggest it is to these major revolutionary movements in other parts of the world that our chief attention should be directed at the present time.

These major revolutionary developments involve not only the technological changes that have brought us all together so that we now discuss, as the minister has said, the affairs of Viet Nam, the affairs of Cyprus, affairs in every quarter of the world. There is also the major development of political emancipation, and I think that a basic fact that we sometimes overlook and which creates instability is the tremendous disparity in living standards between the peoples of two thirds of the world and the peoples in other parts of the world. So, Mr. Chairman, I think it is to this type of threat to stability that we should be devoting more attention.

I suggest that Canada must remain within the NATO alliance, but I welcome what I understood to be the statement of the minister, that he believes that concrete new developments for more effective consultation within NATO are required. I was sorry that he was not able to tell us that any of these concrete solutions were either suggested at the council meeting he attended or that he himself has any in mind with regard to the development of NATO.

But I think that more important than the maintenance of these regional alliances at the present time is the meeting of this other threat which can only be met if we build up the world institution; in other words, it can be met only if we turn the United Nations, so far as we are able to do so, into a power, in embryo if you like, that can create something of the nature of a world government eventually, but in the meantime at any rate can be a force working for peace in all of these unstable areas of the world. Whether or not we recognize it, we have to build in this generation a world community, or we have to perish.

What does this mean in terms of concrete policy today? I suggest it means putting our major emphasis on the development of the United Nations. It is for that reason that we in this section of the house warmly welcomed the intervention, in which I believe the Secretary of State for External Affairs gave great leadership, of the United Nations in Cyprus. We are disturbed by some of the details there, but any disturbance we may have is entirely secondary to our earnest desire to see this new experiment which is being carried on now in different parts of the world gain experience—gain, moreover, the experience which will enable it to be done more effectively in the future.

We cannot expect 100 per cent success, as I think the hon. member for Oxford suggested, in these first efforts. I welcome, and we in this part of the house all welcome the intervention of our forces in Cyprus, difficult, painful and perhaps even unsuccessful as it could possibly be in the long run. We cannot weigh things by whether they are 100 per cent successful at the time or whether they are easy. We have to do what we can, and we commend the part played by the government in carrying through this experiment.

As one who, as some members know, has been interested in law, I am reminded that the common law of Britain, which is regarded as quite an achievement of civilization, was not laid down by any prior plan but gradually broadened out from precedent to precedent, and I suspect that the development of the peace keeping powers of the United Nations will come about in somewhat the same way.

For the same reason we warmly welcome the initiative which has been taken by the government in planning to create stand-by forces for the United Nations. I had intended to read into the record certain remarks made by the Prime Minister in an article in Maclean's magazine of May 2 last. Perhaps I should read one or two sentences from it because in what he says he has the warm concurrence of the members of this group. He is dealing with the need for leadership to bring this about, for a constructive initiative toward peace and security by establishing stand-by forces. He said:

> There must be leadership to bring this about.... As a leading middle power, with a well known record of support for United Nations peace keeping operations in widely spread theatres, Canada is in a unique position to take the initiative. It is prepared to do so. It is anxious to develop its close co-operation with other U.N. members in these vital endeavours; to explore with them means for strengthening the United Nations' capacity to act in this field and the ability of member states to participate.

To that statement we here say "amen", and we hope that not only will this policy be carried out but that our defence dispositions will clearly be made in a way that will enable us to carry out the obligations that are to be assumed in this way. I say quite frankly, that simply is not the situation now and I have serious doubts whether the white paper will permit us to do that and carry out the other obligations referred to there. However, I do not want to digress too far into matters that relate strictly to defence, although they are closely interrelated.

There is another activity under NATO about which I feel far less happy. I am going to read to the house the answer to a question I put on the order paper. I realize that what was done was not done during the administration of the present government, but I should like to ask the minister to inquire about this matter because I find it disquieting. I read in a newspaper, the Montreal Gazette, I believe—I do not have it with me—that

[Mr. Brewin.]

Canada had some sort of joint arrangement of mutual aid under NATO whereby we and the United States jointly were to supply 120 F-104G aircraft, to be assembled by Canadair in Montreal, to Greece and Turkey as part of the mutual aid program. I was naturally interested in this when, at the present time, there is some real danger of conflict between these two allies of ours in NATO. I, therefore, put a question on the order paper and was given the following information as recorded at page 3213 of Hansard for May 13, 1964:

> On June 12, 1961, Canada and the United States concluded an agreement under which F-104G aircraft, support equipment and spares to the value of U.S. $200 million were to be produced in Canada. Of the total cost, the U.S. government was to pay $150 million and the Canadian government $50 million. It was agreed that the aircraft produced under this arrangement would be used to meet Canadian mutual aid contributions to NATO and U.S. military assistance program requirements. According to most recent estimates, it is expected that this sum will cover the production of approximately 140 aircraft; the figure of 120 was an earlier estimate. Delivery of aircraft from the production line is still in its early stages, and it is not expected that production will be completed until October, 1965.

Then, I call attention to this statement:

> In late 1961, the Canadian government agreed that title to all aircraft produced under this program should be vested in the United States. An understanding was reached whereby the U.S., having title, would decide the allocation of the aircraft, taking into account Canadian views.

This seems to me to be a very extraordinary statement, Mr. Chairman, that we should put up $50 million—and we do not have too many bundles of $50 million—to purchase aircraft, and then vest title and the real disposition of the aircraft in the United States. I do not say this out of any lack of confidence in our allies but sometimes, under the guise of mutual aid as approved by congress, things are done which this parliament might well not approve. I suggest this is an arrangement which requires to be looked into carefully. I continue quoting:

> Arrangements have since been made for the total production to be divided into two categories; aircraft purchased in Canada for the United States military assistance program, and aircraft produced for presentation to NATO countries as a joint Canada-United States program of assistance to NATO countries. Such aircraft as have been delivered to date all fall into the former category.

So far we have delivered aircraft which, I understand, were for the United States for disposition by them.

> No decision has as yet been taken concerning the countries which will receive F-104G aircraft under a joint Canada-United States program of assistance to NATO countries.

Then, I had asked about specifications, but I was told that the technical specifications of these aircraft were classified military information. Although I am no expert on the fine points of defence I have, as a member of the defence committee, learned enough to know that this F-104G has a range of 400 miles and when acquired by Canada as Starfighters or CF-104's they were equipped solely with tactical nuclear arms. This may not be so with these particular machines. This does not seem to be the time to be arranging to deliver to Greece and Turkey these highly offensive weapons. I wonder if there is not a little inconsistency between this type of arrangement and what our soldiers are trying to do in Cyprus at the present time.

Then, the answer concludes in this way:

> In the event that it is decided to allocate to Greece and Turkey any of the aircraft produced under the latter program, the normal conditions attached to Canadian mutual aid will apply, viz., that recipient countries will use any material they receive to strengthen the capacity of NATO to deter or resist aggression.

But, Mr. Chairman, in the possession of nations at war, whose existence is at stake, are these conditions likely to be very meaningful? As I said, these arrangements appear to have been made some time before the present administration came into power, but the eventual disposition does not seem to have been decided. I should like to know what the answer is to a proposition whereby we put up $50 million of our money and provide that control of these offensive weapons is in the United States. The control is in the United States and apparently the eventual disposition of these is in the United States. This phrase is reminiscent of the Columbia treaty. As the minister will recall, the phrase in that treaty was that they would take into account Canadian views—and then make their own decision.

There was another aspect of the speech by the Secretary of State for External Affairs which I found, I must say, partly exasperating and partly delightful because it was so well done. This was the part in which the minister discussed our relations with the people's republic of China and it was, I would say, a typical and very skilful performance. Once again he gave us, as clearly as could be, good major reasons why we should not continue the isolation of the republic of China. He then proposed an exchange of journalists, and I have no objection to this proposition at all. It is delightful that we should learn something about what goes on in one quarter of the globe. If the journalists from China can find anything in Canada that would interest their readers, personally I would be delighted that they should do so.

The minister reminded me of a gentleman in early spring in a bathing suit, going out shivering, putting his toe in the water and getting ready to dive in, then his courage leaves him and he puts on his dressing gown and retires to sit in front of the fire once again, and saying, "Some time in the future". The logical consequence of what he said would have required him to finish with an announcement that we were exchanging diplomatic representatives with the People's Republic of China, and that we would, under proper conditions, support the admission of the de facto government of that country into the United Nations. In this connection, I noticed a statement the Prime Minister made when he was in Paris, and I think the minister was with him at that time. He said this:

> Two courses are open to us. One is the diplomatic and economic ostracism and isolation of states behind the iron curtain.

I ask you to note those words:

> One is the diplomatic and economic ostracism and isolation of states behind the iron curtain. This course, Canada rejects.

If we reject it, why do we not do something about it? I know there are complications and difficulties, but if Mr. de Gaulle can recognize the People's Republic of China, then so can we. The minister discussed the matter with him and told us he agreed with many of the reasons that impelled that decision. This suggests that it is about time we carried out the logical consequences of what the minister has said when he referred to the continuing isolation of the de facto government of a quarter of the people of the world.

Mr. Valade: Will the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Brewin: Yes.

Mr. Valade: In view of what the hon. member has said, what does he propose to do about the Formosan government?

Mr. Brewin: I think there is not the slightest doubt that conditions should be attached to any admission of the People's Republic of China to the United Nations, that the Formosans should be given the right to choose, by referendum or otherwise, what form of government they prefer. I think that should be clearly recognized. We do have to get into a two-China policy. I do not think it would be right or proper for us to say we will just hand over that country, which is independent, to the people's republic of China. We do not yet know, at least I do not believe we know, whether, faced with the possibility of admission to the United Nations, that term might somehow or other be acceptable to the People's Republic of China.

The minister said conditions would be required. But you do not reach the stage of discussing conditions until you make up your mind that, subject to the conditions being met, you are ready to move. My criticism is that we have dilly-dallied too long on this subject. We in Canada are in a position, it seems to me, to use with other people in the world the interval which we believe exists to promote a world community.

I want to end my remarks by expressing a mild degree of disappointment that the Secretary of State for External Affairs did not find the question of external aid one which he thought necessary to review or emphasize, though he did mention the subject. I say this because it is my conviction that in building a world community we must have regard for the welfare of two thirds of the people of the world. We have a measure of responsibility. This has been requested by the United Nations, which we say we are trying to serve and build. The government has moved forward but, in my view, it has not moved forward as fast or as far as its own commitments require it to do. I have here a copy of a decision reached by the United Nations general assembly in 1961 to the effect that the standard contribution from the developed nations in economic aid should amount to 1 per cent of the income of those countries. That is not a very high standard. However, it was not chosen arbitrarily. The figure was set after careful examination.

The Acting Chairman (Mr. Batten): I am sorry to say that the hon. member's time is a little more than expired.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): The committee was very generous to me, and we agreed that the spokesman for the official opposition should extend his remarks. I would be happy to do that in this case.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Brewin: I thought I heard someone say that the agreement was not without limit. I hasten to reassure the committee that I shall conclude my remarks in a very few minutes. I had reached the last point I wished to make, which is that the percentage figure for contributions to underdeveloped nations set by the United Nations assembly itself was 1 per cent of the national income. In my view, this is not enough, but the figure is related to projects which could now be undertaken to meet the impact of this terrible problem caused by abject poverty in large sections of the world, a poverty which I suggest is one of the main causes of instability in the world today. Our own contribution has not risen above $100 million a year; I think the figure in the estimates for next year is of the order of $100 million. If we were to give the 1 per cent, we should be contributing $370 million. I do not think that less than half of the international standard suggested is good enough for a country which aspires, as Canada does, to leadership in the development of a world community, and I urge that this matter be given more attention by the government than it has in the past. Hon. gentlemen opposite have moved in the right direction. Their intentions are good. I do not think they need be frightened about what the people of Canada may think in this regard. When we are spending one and a half billion dollars on defence, surely we could spend more than we are now spending on this other aspect of the battle for the peace of the world.

I hope, also, we shall make a contribution on a far larger scale to research into those things which are required to bring about peace. We are spending plenty of money on research into so-called defence. We have the scientists, capable people, in Canada who could do this most important job in co-operation with other nations, and I hope the government will set about this task with the assistance of such organizations as the Canadian peace research institute. In his eloquent peroration the Secretary of State for External Affairs referred to the fact that Canada was not a major power and, therefore, did not have—I am paraphrasing his words—the awful responsibility which rested upon a major power. But, he went on to say, Canada does have a special responsibility—and I think I speak for all members of this party when I say I could not agree more. One of the reasons for this special responsibility is that we are not a major power. We welcome the initiative which the government has taken to strengthen the United Nations and to build up forces to support it. We hope they will go further and faster along that road because along that road, rather than in the maintenance of military alliances which are becoming obsolete, lies the hope of the world for peace in the future.

Mr. Thompson: First, I should like to congratulate the Secretary of State for External Affairs upon the effort and the thought which he put into his statement to this chamber this morning. I believe he attempted to give us a realistic review of world affairs as they stand at the present time. Certainly, what he had to say represented a great improvement over what we have been offered in the last year or so, as far as a realistic approach to world problems is concerned.

The minister said we had come a long way in Canada in the field of external affairs. He reminded us that 25 years ago it was difficult to get a government statement on foreign affairs. I agree that the situation has improved very much, but I think we still have a long way to go. I was disappointed to find this morning that we were fewer than 45 members in the house; the front benches on the government side were practically empty at the outset of what should be one of the most important occasions on which government policy is stated.

The minister began by saying that the world situation could no longer be divided on an east-west basis. He said the east-west label was no longer applicable and that he would like a better one. So he tried to find a more descriptive terminology. I think it does not matter what we call it; the world is still split in half. If the minister would like a better name, perhaps he should describe it as a fight between freedom and totalitarianism. The minister divided the world scene into four groups. He mentioned the free world and Russian communism as opposed to the Chinese type of communism. Then he spoke of the underdeveloped or uncommitted nations. I believe such a method of division covers up the fact that we are still divided into two camps, both of which are wooing the uncommitted nations. The side which will be most successful will be the one which is able to win the uncommitted nations to its camp. In my opinion the present phase of this struggle is far more dangerous than was the situation in the time of Stalin, when the war was fought out front and when the western nations were more or less driven to unite in face of a danger they could see.

Today the situation is much more deceiving; in fact, it is covered over in such a way that it is often difficult to determine and fully understand. It is much more subtle. If the minister really wants to differentiate between the Soviet type of communism and the Chinese type of communism, I think it would be wiser to do it in terms of strategy rather than in terms of their present attitudes toward the west, because I think both brands of communism have the same ultimate goal. Their only fight today, the only basis of their argument, is how best can they achieve that goal. Khrushchev is selling a soft line. By doing so I believe he has deadened the perceptive powers of the west; he deceives us into passiveness and often into lowering our guard. Mao Tse-tung, however uses the cold, brutal methods that Stalin used. These are often more impressive to the underdeveloped nations. Perhaps one of the reasons for this is that China is closer to them in their economic underdevelopment than is Russia herself.

Therefore, Mr. Chairman, Khrushchev has adopted the method which he believes will succeed, and I think in many cases he is succeeding where Stalin's method failed. Stalin, in taking over much of eastern Europe, was unable to legalize or to gain any degree of acceptance for his takeover of those various countries. Khrushchev today, using the line that he is, is coming much closer to it. When he reaches the point where he is able to convince the people who live in these satellite nations that the west have forgotten about them, he will have accomplished his purpose. I believe that as he realistically looks at the world he understands the truth of the atomic situation relating to military force, because he knows he could not survive any more than could his enemies. So of necessity he is using this soft sell approach in talking to the rest of the world.

But again I would say that the communist approach is different only in strategy; their goals are the same. Whether you read a speech that comes out of Peking, or whether you read a speech that comes out of Moscow, every time a statement is made one should note that it defines their ultimate objective to be the takeover of the world for the communist way of life.

Therefore I think we must face up to this situation. We must face it as the grim reality that it is. Any attempt to rationalize these things will only mean we will be deceiving ourselves, and our efforts to promote those things in which we believe and which are the only alternative to this situation, I am convinced, will end in failure. How can the free world, in any permanent or substantive way, compete with the communist world, when the advantages are on their side? We are a free society. They can have their own political parties in our midst, as they have in the free countries of the world, and at any time they wish, they can flood those countries with propaganda. Can the free world do this in the other direction? It cannot. Therefore it seems to me that the only realistic approach to the many problems which face us in the world today is to face up to them.

I believe the minister, in trying to lay a new foundation for the policy which he has developed, is forgetting, or perhaps is attempting to rationalize the trade policies of the present government; because today the war that continues in the world has shifted from a military to an economic one; it is a cold war. I think the turning point was Cuba, because there we saw Khrushchev backing down to the threat of armed force, which he himself was responsible for building up. From that point on I think he has been convinced that, aside from brush wars, his real tool today, his real weapon, is the economic side of things rather than the military side. That being so, the logical question is, what are we doing about it? Are we to continue believing that we can separate our foreign policies from our trade policies. Somehow we content ourselves into believing that we can reach our objectives by doing this, just as we did in earlier years and just as the British empire used this policy down through the years

Therefore I am convinced, Mr. Chairman, that the basic premise which the minister attempted to lay before us this morning is wrong. While many of the arguments which he built upon that premise were reasonable—and certainly he has given a great deal of thought and effort to developing these—he can never expect to reach the goal which we know we must reach if we are to survive as a free nation in a free world. The minister said, "If only the communists in southeast Asia will give up their military subversion". Well, they will not do this; they will never do it. In fact they intend to step it up, because what they expect to do is take over southeast Asia. I believe there are only two alternatives for that troubled part of the world, and it is a critical part of the world today. Either there will be an all out conventional war, or southeast Asia will be lost altogether. How can neutrality further our purpose? In fact, I do not think the communists ever use the position of neutrality or agree to go along with it unless it is part of their specific strategy. When it no longer works to their advantage, they throw it aside. This is what has happened in Viet Nam; this is what has happened in Laos. And we see, even with our peace keeping missions, when the communists reach the point where they realize that neutrality is no longer furthering their objective, they withdraw their member altogether. This fact itself ought to speak very clearly to us. The peace keeping mission, as we heard in the news yesterday and today, and again in the statement made to us, have been able to keep their pledge of inspection on the neutral, or western, side but when they step across to the communist side, they cannot do it; it is impossible; it is not permitted.

I believe, also, that in this regard the minister overlooked a basic and very important factor on the international scene. This concerns President de Gaulle of France. It is obvious that he is determined to undermine the United States position wherever he can. In fact his obvious dislike of Americanism, and Anglo-Saxonism as well, indicates that he will resort even to using the communists to further his own objectives. This is rather clear in what has happened in Brazil in only the last few weeks. Here we find that he was giving at least encouragement of support to the Goulart administration. I think if what has happened there had not happened when it did, we probably would have had a communist coup before this date. De Gaulle lost out in his plans to use Brazil, and so now he is working against the American influence in southeast Asia. Any attempt to neutralize southeast Asia can result in nothing more or less than the loss of that entire area to the communists. By neutralization all we will do is help the communists reach their objective. His own ideas have become an obsession with him. That is why he has all but torpedoed NATO at the present time; that is why he was determined to prevent Great Britain from entering the European common market.

There is another omission which the minister has made in outlining government policy today. I do not think he did it intentionally. Perhaps in endeavouring to provide answers to some of these acute problems in crisis areas he merely overlooked it. This concerns the cold war, which seems to have become less of a military war and more of an economic war. The communist countries are in trouble and are not able to produce what they need. Therefore they come to us in their extremity and we help them out. Their system is unable to produce, unable even to meet the needs of their people for food. What we are doing in our present trade policies is assisting them in their weakness. Not only the commodities we sell to them but also the longer term financing which we make available helps them to bridge over their problems. Russia could never be doing what she is doing in Egypt today, or in Algeria or other parts of the world, if she had to use all her efforts in meeting the problems in her own country. In this sense we are actually furthering the aim of the Russians to bring about a communist state throughout the world.

I come now to the greatest omission of all made by the minister this morning. He did not even mention the underdeveloped nations as such. He mentioned southeast Asia, an area—

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Would my hon. friend forgive me. I mentioned that I had taken an hour and 20 minutes, but that I did propose at some point to discuss a number of problems, among them external aid. I would not want my hon. friend, who is very fair in these matters, to have the impression that the government is not interested in this—because it is.

Mr. Thompson: I understand that the minister's time was limited and that is why I prefaced my statement by saying that he had probably overlooked it. But at this point it comes into the argument I am trying to develop, which is that we are attempting to carry our share of the load in the crisis areas of the world. I am thinking of the United Nations, NATO, southeast Asia and Cyprus. We are doing a commendable job, but are failing to take what is probably the greatest opportunity of all, and that is to help some of the uncommitted nations to develop to the point where they can look for their needs in light of what we understand and believe to be a free way of life.

I am thinking now particularly of the organization of African unity. There has been a tremendous revolution take place in Africa in recent years, some of it without bloodshed, some with. Unfortunately we learn of this through news media which emphasize only the violent aspect. I think one of the greatest opportunities before Canada is to understand what is taking place and to show those people that we are willing to carry our share of the load in helping them reach their goal. I think we should have permanent observers at the organization of African unity and should have direct diplomatic missions in more African countries. In this regard we ought to be stepping up our external aid program. It is not good enough to say that we are going to double it and let it go at that. I am convinced—I say this will all sincerity because I know the tremendous load the minister has in other parts of the world—that perhaps an associate minister is required who could concentrate on the undeveloped areas of the world. He could go out carrying Canada's message to the countries of South America, of the Caribbean area as well as parts of the Far East and Africa. If such an additional position were created within the Department of External Affairs a tremendous amount of good would be accomplished which at the present time is not accomplished, simply because the burden of organization rests upon one person who cannot give the necessary attention to this very important aspect.

I mentioned the organization of African unity. We are all aware that there has been great bloodshed in the country of Rwanda. We are fearful what might happen in the Congo once the United Nations operation ceases. We know there is trouble in upper Sudan. We know there is trouble between Ethiopia and Somalia. We think also of countries like Algeria, Angola, Mozambique and central Africa. It is a fact that the African states themselves are making a real attempt to work out these problems in some kind of peaceful way. Then we read that Russia is moving in; that China is also moving into these areas and exercising a great deal of influence.

This also applies to the organization of American states. We hear a great deal about it not being advisable for Canada to become too closely related to problems in the southern hemisphere. On the other hand, how can we expect to be neighbours and convince them the way of life which we have in Canada with our free enterprise approach to living and the guarantee of those liberties which permit people to develop their initiative and have privileges which we sometimes regard all too lightly is the right way if we do not reach out to them as well?

Then there is the Caribbean area, quite apart from the American states. I do not think there is a person in the house this afternoon who would not agree that we should not do more to help our friends in the Caribbean get on their feet. There are small territories there which are isolated. The colonial office really has no longer any affection for them. The West Indies federation has collapsed. They need to be assisted and guided as they come closer to a new eastern Caribbean association. We are able to help them, and here lies a great opportunity.

We have a tremendous moral obligation in Canada which we are not fulfilling as we should. That is why I believe it would be a very practical suggestion that some provision be made in the Department of External Affairs to appoint an associate minister or some senior official who could truly represent Canada with the necessary prestige and authority, and who could concentrate on this important field.

I believe the minister was right when he said, in speaking about Berlin, that Berlin was the core of the European problem. I think what the minister should have done is to extend this illustration of Berlin to the whole picture in Europe. The problem NATO faces in Europe today will never be solved unless it is brought back to the point where the problem started. The problem NATO is facing in Europe today, with which we in the western world are so vitally concerned, begins with the very division of Europe. You cannot eliminate the disease unless you get to the root cause. I am sure the parliamentary secretary to the minister understands this even better than some of the rest of us. As far as Europe is concerned we must get back to the point that the only way to solve the problem is the reunification of Europe. I doubt whether there is one example the minister can cite where it can be proved that the communists ever carried out any commitment or agreement they had made, and did so in a way which fulfilled their obligation. As I was speaking about this to a friend, there arose the illustration of Austria. In my opinion Austria might be used as an example. I am convinced that the Russians were willing to go along with Austria in the way they did simply because it assisted them out of a very difficult situation. As they saw that western Austria was being used as one of the main transportation routes for supplies going into NATO, they were willing to withdraw if western Europe would also withdraw. They certainly removed a very difficult situation from their own hands and put it in NATO's lap.

The point I want to make here is that in dealing with the communist problem as it relates to NATO, let us face facts as they are. The minister stated this morning that we have to deal with the communists and have to work out ways of continuing peaceful negotiations, but on the other hand we must maintain our strength in order to carry out our obligations. In this connection I wonder if what NATO needs now is a new joint high command that would bring the various policies of NATO together, not just so far as the branches of the military forces are concerned, but to bring the various problems together, with someone in command of each section. I am thinking of the political responsibility, the economic responsibility—yes, even the psychological aspect of it.

If NATO is to perform its real function in the years ahead, it cannot be regarded just as a military alliance. Certainly I agree with the minister when he says Canada is determined that it must be a trans-Atlantic organization, but, unless we bring all the aspects and phases of the problem together, and co-ordinate them under one main policy, NATO will not fulfil its obligation and do what it expected it to do.

When I suggest a joint high command, I am saying that we should have a specific department of NATO in each of these four fields, and then have over them a co-ordinated policy that will bring them together. At the present time Canada is strengthening its forces in NATO. I understand that Canada is not intending to increase its forces, though, when we heard the minister mention this morning that there are 25,000 Canadians in Germany, we fully realize that is not a small effort. Of course we must remember that this includes dependants and all the auxiliaries that go along with the military.

Yesterday in a newspaper report we were told about the re-equipping of our Canadian forces in NATO, and that the Honest John missiles are going to have nuclear warheads. But in another article in the same newspaper I read that, though France is withdrawing from NATO, she intends to bring back into it a ground to ground missile far superior to the Honest John. In view of the tremendous development of West Germany, the recovery of France and Italy, and the development of some other NATO powers, I question if it is essential for us to continue keeping such a large NATO contingent, in the military sense.

If NATO is to continue in a positive role it needs to be reorganized along the lines I have previously mentioned, and Canada should play a far greater part in the economic and psychological aspect than she does in the military aspect.

Referring briefly to Cyprus. This is indeed a difficult problem. Actually, it brings us back to the United Nations at this time and, more specifically, to the visit of the secretary general of the United Nations. In last night's Montreal Star there was a very timely article in regard to the visit of U Thant to Ottawa, and I would like to place one or two paragraphs from it on the record:

> For their part, Canadians will be able to assess a secretary general who has called upon Canada to assume an increasingly heavy UN burden in terms of men and money for UN operations.

However, if anything concrete is to come from the Thant visit, it will be incumbent upon the secretary general to clarify for Canadians just what role Canada is to play in a UN that has changed radically in the last five years.

Since assuming power, the secretary general has followed the Hammarskjold tradition by playing up to the newly emerging nations of Africa and Asia.

It must remembered that Canada is just one of 112 members of the United Nations and I think the secretary general should be reminded, though no doubt he is well informed about it, that we contributed something more than $20 million to United Nations operations in the last year, and that this does not include some of the peace keeping operations which we have paid for directly. Out of a total budget of some $300 million we contributed that much, when actually we represent, so far as voting power is concerned, only one one hundred and twelfth.

The visit of the secretary general to Ottawa is a significant one because it brings us to the question of how long we are to continue these peace keeping missions through the United Nations and still have the same lack of co-operation from other members of the organization. Specifically at the moment this concerns the Cyprus operation. Yes, we are carrying our share. We are doing our best. We are helping to settle the hot spots. We are playing a leading role in setting up within our armed forces a special unit available at all times to assist in peace keeping. This is good; but we must understand that beyond all this there is a greater responsibility.

Before closing, Mr. Chairman, I would like to mention the commonwealth. I believe we speak and think too little about the commonwealth, and the important part it can play. Somehow we think about it as something of the past, but the commonwealth of today represents some 700 million people, and is one of the greatest vehicles we could use to discharge the responsibility of helping the underdeveloped nations of the world.

The commonwealth education conference is to be held this year in Ottawa. It would be good for the minister to consider, in addition to the regular agenda, the arranging for a study period for those delegates who are coming from underdeveloped areas. It could last for a month, or possibly two or three months. I personally have had letters from a number of delegates whom I know, asking if they could not stay here for a couple of months in order to study the Canadian educational system, to take a short course that would help them when they return to their own countries. Again this is the kind of thing that we can do in Canada and which does not cost a lot of money.

In closing may I say, let us not think in Canada that we are a great military force which can compete with the great nations of the world such as the United States, the U.S.S.R., France, and Great Britain. We cannot do that. Any attempt to try and imitate them is just going to frustrate and confuse the picture so far as our own responsibilities and obligations are concerned. We are in a peculiar situation. Formerly we were a colony, but have reached our own independence. We have developed on a free basis a tremendous economy that rates high among the other nations of the world. We have a tremendous reserve of good will in the world. These things should all be tied together in our external affairs policy, in our defence policy, and in our politics as they relate to the international scene. They should all be co-ordinated so that we can make a greater contribution for world peace.

Again, coming back to the very fundamental need across the world, which is in two words, perhaps more vitally and clearly to the people of the underdeveloped countries than in any other words: world hunger. If we can align our policies and set our actions in a direction that will assist people in these countries meet their needs more effectively, then we can make the greatest contribution to the world scene, and accomplish much more than we are doing at present.

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Chairman, I wonder whether the hon. member would answer a question. I did not want to interrupt him during his remarks. Does he still take the position that he and his group are against selling western wheat to Russia and China?

Mr. Thompson: Well—

Mr. Woolliams: Let me finish. Is he still against that and, if not, what is his policy in that regard and why has he changed?

Mr. Thompson: If the hon. member for Bow valley—

Mr. Woolliams: Bow River is my constituency.

Mr. Thompson: —has not found the answer to his question from the remarks I have made, then he is not able to understand very well what I have been saying. But I will be very specific. He just loves to stand up and say to the people of western Canada that I am against selling the farmers' wheat. What I am interested in doing, Mr. Chairman, is assisting the people of the underdeveloped nations with the tremendous reserves of food products we have in this country and with the know-how that is behind them in a way that we can strengthen them in their stand in wanting to be part of the free world. If we subvert our trade policies to anything else I think we are not accomplishing what we should.

Mr. Woolliams: I wonder whether the hon. member would answer one more question.

The Chairman: Order. Perhaps I should mention to the committee that the hon. member's time has expired, but if it is the unanimous wish of the committee a question might be asked. The hon. member for Chapleau.

Mr. Woolliams: I will be brief.

The Chairman: Is it agreed the hon. member may ask a question?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Woolliams: We all agree with regard to feeding the people of the underdeveloped nations, but my question was a direct one and the hon. member for Red Deer said he would give a direct answer. Is he against trading with red China and Russia in western wheat?

Mr. Thompson: The hon. member for Bow valley—

Mr. Woolliams: Bow River is my constituency.

Mr. Thompson: Bow River—is very concerned about this problem. What I have said time and again I will say to him now. I believe our policies should be directed in a way that we can sell our wheat to our friends instead of to those who are threatening to destroy the very way of life that we regard as right. Until these policies can be worked out and some of the economic problems involved in them can also be resolved, not to sell our wheat would certainly be utter folly. I have never said anything other than that, but I believe we have a far greater obligation to our neighbours and friends than we have to others who may be on the other side of the world, and on the other side of the fence.

[Translation]

Mr. Laprise: This morning, the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Martin), in his splendid statement, took us around the world. In my estimation, he did not take up too much of our time, since his activities have led him everywhere in the world. This is a part of his duties, and he showed us to some extent what is happening in the world. It was quite proper that the minister should report on his work, his observations, and the stand he took to influence, as it were, the nations with whom he discussed for peace.

I would like to point out immediately to the minister and the members of the house that I agree with those who believe that we must discuss with the other countries in the world and organize cultural and trade exchanges with foreign countries in order to obtain a durable peace.

I believe that this dialogue tending to obtain better understanding and more comprehension between the countries of the world is necessary. I also believe that we, Canadians, are to a certain extent willing and ready to help underdeveloped countries to get their economy going and to teach them to help themselves.

However, I wonder whether the Secretary of State for External Affairs was well equipped during his meetings to offer those countries the solutions they need. It is all right to go to your neighbour offering to help him tidy up his home, but, Mr. Chairman, I believe that one should first tidy up one's own place.

I am not convinced that real peace is prevailing at home. I know that the minister is aware of the great amount of distress to be found all over the world, and of the poverty prevailing in too many countries, and I admit that they should be enabled to shake off this state of destitution. I also agree that there are in this world, and in our own country as everywhere else, ever increasing and more extensive means to help those countries fight the destitution found all over the world, so that it should not get a permanent hold in spite of the new scientific and technical developments, in spite of the machines and automation, that are, or should be, at our disposal.

Well, Mr. Chairman, I believe that in order to be well equipped to offer those countries efficient solutions, it would be in order to look and observe at home, in the four corners of the country, with a view to discovering whether we are not also somewhat underdeveloped.

Not very long ago it was reported that we could number in this country 35 designated areas where depression still prevails. There are 35 underdeveloped areas which encompass not only a city or a village; each of them represents quite a considerable area.

Well, under the circumstances, I wonder whether we are justified in trying to clean up our neighbour's house.

Solutions are being offered and should be implemented. On the other hand, I shall have later on an opportunity to come back to this subject. But in the meantime I would like to ask the minister for some explanation, for instance, in regard to the United Nations.

According to the news we get and which comes from reliable sources, it seems that the member countries of the UN have not quite honoured their obligations or met their commitments toward that organization. In fact, it appears that Canada is the most generous country and also the most aware of its obligations. Therefore, I think that the Secretary of State for External Affairs should clear up that matter by telling us what is the total amount of all the contributions owed to the UN and how many countries have not yet paid theirs? Besides, he could tell us whether, in his opinion, those commitments will soon be fulfilled.

Mr. Chairman, as far as I am concerned, I have some doubts about the results of the action of the United Nations force in Cyprus. This is a personal opinion, based on what I saw or what I learned from reports published in the large newspapers from other countries. My doubts are based on the results obtained by the United Nations forces in other countries faced with domestic difficulties.

As an example, I should like to mention the case of Korea where soldiers from various countries were implicated. Did that action prevent the destruction of that country? I think not.

And more recently, Canada sent troops to the Congo, and there again, one may wonder if our interference prevented trouble or disturbances. On the contrary, we heard that murders had been committed, that disasters, engagements and even assassinations had taken place, in spite of the presence of United Nations forces.

Mr. Chairman, those are the reasons why I feel justified to wonder whether the results which our soldiers will obtain in Cyprus will be any better than in the past. At least, I hope so, since we have become involved.

During his statement the minister referred to the fear now existing in the free world facing communism and its threats. I think that communism, whether it comes from white Russia or yellow China is no less a red communism, and it is dangerous, wherever it comes from. But we do not simply have to face up to communism. If communism, where it has taken root, did not succeed in achieving its objective, that is in ensuring security, it did succeed nevertheless in depriving the people of freedom, without ensuring the security it had promised. Nevertheless, those countries are suffering from poverty and insecurity.

On the other hand, there is another group which is no less dangerous and which rules the world, at least in part. I refer to free masonry, an anti-Christian and anti-religious society which has kept the world and the working class in dire poverty since it came into existence. Communism is also an anti-religious and anti-Christian society which has achieved the same objectives.

Mr. Chairman, those organizations have given us and are maintaining a false system. In spite of the abundance which exists, they are keeping the world and its peoples in the most abject and intolerable poverty. Such poverty is due to an organization and a system which are false.

That system exists not only in what we call the old countries, those of old Europe, Asia or anywhere you please, but here also: even if Canada is a comparatively young country, we have copied a little the old methods of those countries.

Mr. Chairman, those systems breed poverty and keep the people in that intolerable poverty.

A few years ago a former leader of the Conservative party, who was then premier of Manitoba—I mean Hon. John Bracken—stated at a federal-provincial conference in 1941:

> Under the present tax system the income of the relatively poor is transferred to the relatively rich.

That tax system, Mr. Chairman, is forced upon us by a debt-money system which does not take into account the country's economic realities or its production capacity. That tax system which was already bad in 1941 and even before—but that premier recognized it in 1941—and which transfers the income of the relatively poor to the relatively rich, is still with us. This is where some changes are needed if we want to be able to show the other countries of the world that it is possible to fight poverty and give each person in those countries, as well as in our own, a purpose in life and the proper means to achieve it.

Mr. Chairman, may I call it five o'clock?

The Chairman: Order. It being five o'clock, the committee will rise and report progress, to proceed with the consideration of private members' business.

CRIMINAL CODE

AMENDMENT RESPECTING APPEAL IN HABEAS CORPUS PROCEEDINGS

Mr. John R. Matheson (Leeds) moved the second reading of Bill No. C-35, to amend the Criminal Code (habeas corpus).

He said: In rising to speak on this Bill C-35 I should like to tell hon. members that this is the same bill as Bill No. C-77, read on November 12, 1962, for the first time and the same as Bill C-42, read on May 20, 1963, for the first time. So this is the third time that this amendment to the Criminal Code has been spoken to.

This is a very simple amendment, when one looks at the words actually involved. The proposal is to add three words to section 691 of the Criminal Code, the words "or habeas corpus".

This is the result of a recommendation to me from a distinguished friend, Professor H. R. S. Ryan, Q.C., who is known to a good many members of the house, now a professor of law at Queen's University law school, a man who prior to teaching law spent many years as a successful counsel. He is also one of our best known students of penology. It was Mr. Ryan's suggestion, in a letter to me on November 5, 1962, that this bill should be produced. I was supported in the preparation of this measure by advice from an old teacher of mine, a man young in years but long in experience of criminal law, Mr. G. Arthur Martin, Q.C. Mr. Martin wrote me on December 7, 1962, saying:

> I think that the lack of appeal in habeas corpus proceedings constituted a gap in the law which the proposed amendment remedies.

I have also discussed this matter with Mr. John Robinette, Q.C. and Mr. Royden Hughes, Q.C. who are well known in criminal law circles. There is, however, nothing new in this recommendation, which is an attempt to implement a suggestion made by Chief Justice McRuer of the high court of Ontario in the case known as "Re Shane".

Before discussing this case may I say, for the benefit of lay colleagues in the house, that habeas corpus is one of the most ancient and honoured of the writs known to English law. In the most recent copy of the Encyclopaedia Britannica, the author says on this subject:

> From the earliest records of the English law no free man could be detained in custody except on a criminal charge or conviction or for a civil debt. It is granted only on application to the high court or a judge thereof, supported by a sworn statement of facts setting up at least a probable case of illegal confinement. It is addressed to the person in whose custody another is detained, and commands him to bring his prisoner before the court immediately after the receipt of the writ.

[The Chairman.]

Halsbury, in his Laws of England, the third edition, volume II described it as being—> —a prerogative writ by which the Queen has a right to inquire into the causes for which any of her subjects are deprived of their liberty. By it the high court and the judges of that court, at the instance of a subject aggrieved, command the production of that subject, and inquire into the cause of his imprisonment. If there is no legal justification for the detention, the party is ordered to be released.

It is, of course, further pointed out:

> Release on habeas corpus is not, however, an acquittal, nor may the writ be used as a means of appeal.

Hon. members may inquire as to the timeliness of bringing forward a bill making provision for the right of appeal in connection with habeas corpus. I think that all over Canada we are concerned, today, with civil liberties and the rights of individuals. I have here a clipping from the Brockville Recorder and Times of November 26, 1964 where the writer of an editorial on civil liberties asks this question: "What happened to Gerard Bigras, 29, of Sudbury, who was sentenced to seven days in jail and 83 days later was still in jail?" The article continues:

> This points up a glaring weakness in our system of law, when a man can be stuck in jail and nearly forgotten.

We all know that Chief Justice McRuer has served Canada in various capacities as counsel, prosecutor, chairman of various important royal commissions and, of course, as chief justice of the high court of Ontario. The learned chief justice in the Shane case looked very carefully at the legal authorities. Perhaps I may read briefly from the headnote. The headnote to "Re Shane" which is reported in 19 D.L.R., second edition, and at page 460 reads as follows—the hearing took place on May 20, 1959:

> A prisoner has no right of appeal from an order of a judge of the supreme court (Ont.) refusing a discharge under habeas corpus proceedings and neither can he apply from judge to judge of that court until he obtains a decision in his favour or until all judges (31 in all) have heard his application. Once his application for discharge has been refused that is an end of the matter and semble, it makes no difference that, as here, the prisoner is held under the Extradition Act, R.S.C. 1952, c. 322. The present situation, which places the liberty of the subject in the hands of one individual judge, can only be remedied by legislative action providing for a right of appeal in habeas corpus matters.

The learned chief justice had this to say, as reported at page 465 of the reports:

In disposing of the case I respectfully suggest that prompt action should be taken by proper authorities to resolve the confusion that now exists and to provide for the right of appeal in habeas corpus matters that was thought to exist prior to the decision of the Court of Appeal in this case.

I might indicate to hon. members that Professor Ryan has drawn to my attention the fact that the conference of commissioners on criminal legislation has recommended at least once—in the year 1959—that provision for an appeal be restored to section 691. I beg to point out, also, that this matter has been considered by courts of appeal in other provinces. One of the important cases is "In Re Fred Storgoff" reported on page 526 of S.C.R., 1945 where it was found that the federal government had exclusive jurisdiction to authorize such an appeal under the provisions of the British North America Act, sections 91(27) and 92(13). In this case there was reference to the dictum of Lord Halsbury who said:

For a period extending as far back as our legal history the writ of habeas corpus has been regarded as one of the most important safeguards of the liberty of the subject.

Lord Birkenhead is recorded to have said:

We are dealing with a writ antecedent to statute, and throwing its roots deep into the genius of our common law. It is perhaps the most important writ known to the constitutional law of England, affording as it does a swift and imperative remedy in all cases of illegal restraint or confinement. It is of immemorial antiquity, an instance of its use occurring in the thirty third year of Edward I. It has through the ages been jealously maintained by courts of law as a check upon the illegal usurpation of power by the executive at the cost of the liege.

Finally, Sir Charles Fitzpatrick, C.J.C., who was a well known Quebecker, said application for this writ was "unquestionably the first security of civil liberty". The same ideas are contained in the case of Wattebled v. Lesage and Aubut and attorney general of the province, as reported at page 108 of C.B.R., 1953. Here we find a dictum of Mr. Justice Taschereau. He points out that this ancient writ——dates back farther than the Magna Carta of Jean Sans-Terre, it was jus non scriptum, and it was only in 1679 that it appeared in the statutes of England.

This was "an act for the better securing the liberty of the subject and for the prevention of imprisonment beyond the seas".

In some circumstances appeal has not been provided for in our code. The failure to provide appeal in habeas corpus was, I think, inadvertent. This gap in judicial remedy has been recognized by those jurists who make periodic examination of our code, and I believe they have recommended from time to time to the Department of Justice that this oversight be corrected.

I shall not trespass further on the time of the house. I simply indicate that this bill is an attempt to do what has been recommended by His Lordship Chief Justice McRuer in Re Shane and follows logically from the conclusions of other important judgments that have been given by the courts of appeal of various provinces and the Supreme Court of Canada.

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, first of all I would like to congratulate the hon. member for Leeds (Mr. Matheson) for bringing forward this bill. I might say at the outset that I am going to support it without any reservation or equivocation whatsoever. I will try to be as brief as I can because I know the Minister of Justice (Mr. Favreau), and perhaps other hon. members, will want to speak on this matter. Also, I do not want to take up too much time, in order that perhaps this matter can be dealt with and the bill passed today.

Briefly, Mr. Speaker, we are considering one of our special, extraordinary remedies that deals with the rights of an individual. We are dealing with habeas corpus, of course, and we are dealing with that kind of right which is afforded a person in custody. There are many extraordinary remedies; there is the right of habeas corpus, certiorari, mandamus, and others. But in this case we are dealing with habeas corpus, which is very important because we are dealing with the right of a person to make an application for release when he is held illegally in custody. This situation arises when an inferior court, by its judgment, has placed someone in custody and has either exceeded its jurisdiction, exceeded the law, or the decision is against the natural law of justice. It is one of those rights which we have that protects the individual and guarantees his freedom in this country under the rule of law as we know it. After all, our democratic processes are based on the rule of law and not on the rule of people.

What is the law at the present time? It may be that there has been more litigation in this country in reference to habeas corpus than with regard to any other facet or phase of criminal law. I am going to refer to various cases briefly, just to place them on the record; not particularly to emphasize the facts but just to give a portion of the judgment of the Supreme Court of Canada. I did not have too long to prepare these remarks this afternoon. I knew this bill was coming before the house, but some of the other bills were stood.

One of the earliest cases is Smith v. The King, 1931 S.C.R., at page 531. Another case is In Re Jack Goldhar, 1958 S.C.R., at page 693. There is also another decision on the same case by the whole court, reported in 1960 S.C.R. at page 435. I might just pause there, Mr. Speaker, and say that the 1958 case was a decision of Mr. Justice Martland sitting in chambers and the decision in 1960 was by the supreme court on the same set of facts. Then there is the case of Re Shane, which has been referred to by the hon. member for Leeds. That case is reported in 19 D.L.R. (2d) at page 460. Then there is the case of In Re Storgoff, 1945 S.C.R., page 527.

What is the law when one reads these cases? Before referring to that question, Mr. Speaker, I might just say that at one time it was the feeling, when someone was making an application because he felt his liberty had been usurped by being held in custody, that you could apply to a judge of any superior court in the trial division, any judge of the court of appeal, and then you could apply to a judge of the Supreme Court of Canada; but it was finally decided that you could go to only one judge in one court, and having done that your remedy, as I understand the law, is at an end. In other words, the law today is that if one is held on a charge under the Criminal Code of Canada—I emphasize the Criminal Code of Canada because we have to differentiate between offences under the common law and those under the Criminal Code, and I will have something to say about that in a few moments—you could go to any one judge; you can go to a judge of the Supreme Court of Canada or, in my province, which happens to be where I practise law, you can go to a judge of the trial division of Alberta, or a judge of the appellate division, which is our court of appeal in Alberta. This applies to any province.

The next question is this. On the statute books of each province there is some statutory law, or there are some rules which are codified by the legislature of the province, which allow you to go to the court of appeal only on matters with regard to which the province has jurisdiction. For example, there is the dental act, and if someone was found guilty of malpractice on summary conviction and the magistrate or board had exceeded their jurisdiction under that act, you could go to a trial judge and then to the court of appeal of Alberta. This is true in regard to the various provinces, I believe. I know it is true in British Columbia and Alberta.

The next point is this. Until April 1, 1955 there was a differentiation as between an offence under the common law of Canada and one under the Code of Canada. Now, since the new amendment, those offences are all under the Criminal Code of Canada and there is no differentiation between offences which are under the common law and those which are under the Code. At one time a person who was charged with an offence under the common law of Canada, but not under the Code, could not apply for habeas corpus; it did not apply in his case. In particular, he did not have the right to go to the Supreme Court of Canada. He may, of course, have had the right to go to a judge in his own jurisdiction.

Let us look for a few moments at these authorities. The first case I mentioned was the famous Smith case. It is Art J. Smith v. The King. The appellant in this case bears no relationship to the famous Arthur Smith who was a Queen's Counsel in Alberta, or his son. A different set of facts are involved, and a different province. This case states:

> The jurisdiction of the Supreme Court of Canada in respect of habeas corpus extends only to cases of commitment following upon charges of offences which are criminal by virtue of statutes enacted by the parliament of Canada—

That is what I was saying; the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court of Canada applied only to those offences under the Code and not to those under the common law. Since the amendments to the Code of April 1, 1955, any offences under the common law are now part of the Criminal Code in this regard and therefore there is jurisdiction in this respect.

The next case I referred to was In Re Jack Goldhar which, as I said, came before Mr. Justice Martland in chambers. Mr. Justice Martland was a judge of our Supreme Court of Canada. He said that as it was no longer possible to prosecute a person for an offence at common law, there could no longer be a commitment in a criminal case for such an offence, and any offence thereafter charged under the Criminal Code must be considered as a criminal case under an act of the parliament of Canada. Therefore the Supreme Court of Canada would have jurisdiction under the Code and under the common law, because the common law had now been codified. That decision was appealed; the decision of one judge of the Supreme Court of Canada was appealed to the whole court, and that decision was upheld. The judgment was written by the Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of Canada at that time.

Dealing with the Shane case, this is the problem—and I am going to come to grips with it. The problem is that at the present time you can only get this remedy from one judge at a time. You can go only to one judge. At one time there was a lot of law to the effect that you could move from one judge to another. At the present time the law seems to be very firm that you can go to one judge in the superior court, but there is no right of appeal. You have to distinguish between a civil remedy and a criminal remedy. That is because we have quasi-criminal offences.

Let me give an example, Mr. Speaker, of a case I had myself concerning a dispute between the dentists of the province of Alberta and the dental mechanics. Charges were laid against the dental mechanics of manufacturing teeth. They were quasi-criminal charges. If a mistake were made in law by a magistrate or an inferior court, then you had the remedy of habeas corpus if the accused were in custody, or if not in custody, on certiorari, to go for trial in the province. Then there was an appeal to the court of appeal of Alberta. The same procedure existed in the province of British Columbia. Unfortunately, under the offences in the Criminal Code of Canada there does not seem to be an appeal provided for to the courts of appeal of the provinces, as established by the Re Shane case. I discussed this question privately with the hon. member for Leeds a few minutes before five o'clock, and under his bill which he has presented today to the house provision will be made only for an appeal to the court of appeal of a province. I do not think that anyone would like to see, unless a mistake in law had been made, all of these matters go to the Supreme Court of Canada. But I think it is a good thing that we should at least have a right of appeal to the appeal courts in the respective provinces which have jurisdiction as far as the Criminal Code is concerned.

In that regard this bill is a necessary amendment, because if a trial judge does make a mistake, or if he does not agree with the applicant's counsel, the applicant can at least have the decision of the judge reviewed by five judges of the provincial court of appeal. That is true in any criminal matter if you lose a decision before a judge or are convicted before a jury. In Alberta, which is the only province where you can have a case before the supreme court trial division without a jury, if the trial judge has made a mistake in any criminal matter you can appeal on a question of law or on a question of fact in law to the court of appeal. This amendment would mean that if a decision on a question of habeas corpus is unfavourable to the applicant he can have it reviewed by the court of appeal of the province. In that regard I congratulate the hon. member for Leeds for bringing forth this amendment, and I hope it passes.

In dealing with the extraordinary remedies, I think there is one thought which parliament should have, as we sit here passing legislation in this house. I can spend the rest of my time talking about various examples, where, by statute, is taken away the right of habeas corpus and the right of certiorari, which are extraordinary remedies and protect the individual against the infringement of the state where the law is exceeded.

In this regard we need only look at the Income Tax Act, which is a terrible act in this regard. It is only under very unusual circumstances that you can apply this extraordinary remedy. We have only to look at provincial statutes and at our archaic liquor laws. Provincial legislation always makes me laugh. We are always so holy in this country with reference to our liquor laws, while the provincial treasurers take into their accounts about $6 million each year. Yet under those acts it seems to be legal to sell liquor but illegal to drink liquor in most places. In these particular statutes—and this is the point I am making—you will read time and time again that there is taken away the right of habeas corpus and the right of certiorari. They want to make it so tough for the accused that if he is ever charged under the liquor acts he cannot help but get fined or imprisoned. If the law has been exceeded then you have not the extraordinary remedies which you have in normal cases under the Criminal Code and other statutes.

So I say in passing that I endorse this amendment; but I suggest to any future parliament—and I hope the legislators follow suit—that when we are shaping legislation with reference to penal matters we do not take away these extraordinary remedies, because in many cases under the federal Income Tax Act and under the provincial liquor acts injustices are done to individuals. Sometimes they are held in custody illegally. They are fined or their books are seized illegally. These extraordinary remedies which exist in other phases of our law should exist as far as those statutes are concerned. Particularly in provinces where the revenue from the sale of liquor is sizeable the legislators could certainly leave the law the same as it was under the common law as it exists under the Criminal Code. Because if a provincial statute is to become a penal statute, then why have you not all of the remedies which exist under the offences described in the Code?

So I say in summary, realizing that others want to speak, that this is a good suggestion because the application can be made only to one judge of the court. If that judge makes a mistake in reviewing the record of an inferior court as far as the extraordinary remedies of habeas corpus or certiorari are concerned, you have a right of appeal to the court of appeal of the province. We have that right now in quasi-criminal matters or in civil matters, such as the case of the dentists where the dental mechanics were charged with making teeth, because it was alleged they were practising dentistry. We considered the magistrate in that case exceeded his jurisdiction. We considered another board which dealt with the dentists also exceeded their jurisdiction in that regard. You have a right of appeal in these matters in Alberta. In criminal matters, whatever the charge is, whether it be serious or is another offence under the Code, where habeas corpus applies, when an accused is in custody, or certiorari applies where he is not in custody, there is the right of review by the top court of appeal in the province. Since April 1, 1955 we have taken steps to see that all matters are now dealt with as if they come under the Code.

This is another step in the history of jurisprudence of this country and I endorse the bill entirely. I congratulate the hon. member for Leeds for presenting it, and I trust that when the Minister of Justice (Mr. Favreau) speaks he will support it.

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, that this bill should be passed should become very obvious to us all when we realize that the lawyers and members of this house, who usually agree about little or nothing, are all agreed that it is a good bill and that it should be passed. I think the best contribution I can make toward passing this bill is to confine my remarks to a very few minutes of time, and I will certainly do that.

I should just like to point out to any hon. member not aware of it that what the hon. member for Leeds (Mr. Matheson) has described in the remedy of habeas corpus as an ancient and honourable remedy—I think he used those words—is the fundamental means whereby the rule of law and the liberty of the subject have been worked out and preserved during centuries of history. This is one of the great achievements of our system. The security of every individual person against arbitrary imprisonment is based upon this remedy of habeas corpus.

This bill which is recommended to us not only by the words of the hon. member who spoke with obviously good sense, but also by a very distinguished justice, Chief Justice McRuer—who happened to be my partner once, although I did not agree with him in everything—gives the right of appeal where some judge has refused this remedy to effectuate the liberty of the subject.

For myself, I have had enough experience with courts to have learned that judges are not infallible. They are human, and they perform better sometimes if their acts are subject to review by higher courts. I think this is a very commendable thing. I am not going to elaborate on the learning put before the house by the hon. member for Bow River (Mr. Woolliams), which I found very interesting. I just wish to commend the bill to the house and to commend the honourable, learned and distinguished member for Leeds (Mr. Matheson) for having introduced it into the house.

Mr. A. B. Patterson (Fraser Valley): Mr. Speaker, I do not lay any great claim to an understanding of legal terminology or practice, but it seems to me that the amendment proposed this afternoon is one that commends itself to the principles of humanity and justice.

Before taking part in this debate I asked the hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Brewin) if it would be permissible for me, a layman, to enter a debate such as this, and he gave his consent. Possibly it is a case of a layman moving in where angels fear to tread. I assure the house, however, that I am not going to enter deeply into the discussion that is taking place.

It has been indicated that this is an amendment which has the support of many of those who are well versed in legal matters. It has been recommended as a remedy for what appears to be an oversight or omission of the drafting of the present legislation. The fact that it has been supported by those in the legal profession, and has been so ably and conscientiously introduced by the hon. member for Leeds (Mr. Matheson), for whom I have the greatest respect and in whose judgment I have great confidence, prompts me to voice support for the amendment before us.

[Translation]

Mr. Auguste Choquette (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, I would like to commend wholeheartedly the hon. member for Leeds (Mr. Matheson) and say that I fully support the bill he submitted to the house in order to preserve individual liberty, in conformity with the principles of the bill on human rights recently passed by this house.

I believe this is to reduce to the minimum any arbitrary imprisonment or denial of liberty, of an individual by providing for an appeal from the decision of a court having denied an application for a writ of habeas corpus.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to state briefly a very deplorable situation which exists in some of our Quebec criminal courts.

There we find a situation commonly known as "fixing". "Fixing" is a scheme by which one speculates on the sentences to be imposed, sentences which are prolonged or reduced according to the talkativeness or otherwise of an accused or an individual who confesses to the police.

Indeed, a despicable game is often played between lawyers, police officers and judges, who get together to speculate on the length of the detention period, based on whether the persons held in custody have satisfied or not the curiosity of certain police officers who do not care too much for the dignity of the human person. Those police officers often vent their bad temper on others by resorting to violence.

The Coffin investigation shows that there is something wrong with the administration of justice. A Montreal judge has requested a thorough investigation, and he is right. Judge Wagner asked for a thorough investigation of justice, and I feel that as the world fair is approaching, there will be a great promiscuity among people coming from all parts of the world, so there is reason to fear a new outbreak of criminality.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member, but I think that he is wandering far away from the matter under study.

Mr. Choquette: Mr. Speaker, I shall conclude by saying that this bill concerning the possible illegal confinement of a person, prompts me to make these remarks and also to urge the federal government to make also its own thorough investigation, as the world fair is approaching, an investigation which will indicate precise standards to the judiciary in the terms and execution of sentences, so that in accordance with the principle stated by the hon. member for Leeds, any illegal detention will be prevented at any cost and as much as possible.

[Text]

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I too appreciate the principle behind this bill. Habeas corpus, the English meaning of which is to have the body, is a direction by the court to the authorities to bring the body of a person—the live body, of course—of a person who is held in custody under confinement before the court, so that the authorities may justify their detention. I often think, after several years in this house, that when all else fails here we raise a point of privilege. When all else fails in court a person in jail raises a writ of habeas corpus.

May I just add one thing to what has been said. The case to which the hon. member for Leeds (Mr. Matheson) made reference is one based on an English decision. Before that decision it had been impressed on most members of the legal fraternity that a solicitor or counsel for a man held in custody, if rejected by one judge, could then go from judge to judge and keep making his application for habeas corpus; but an English decision indicated that this was an incorrect assumption on the part of the law, the lawyers and the judges. Therefore this was followed by Chief Justice McRuer's action, with the effect mentioned.

However, I would point out that prior to that decision it had not been a wholly unsatisfactory state of affairs where, within reasonable limits, you might go to successive judges. I point that out for this reason. It may well happen that the confinement under which the accused person is being held might be of a limited nature. By the time you get to the court of appeal it might be too late. This accounts for the reason why, having been turned down by one judge in the morning, you go to another judge in the afternoon. There are obviously limits to the application of a principle of that kind, as Chief Justice McRuer pointed out. In the province of Ontario which has 36 judges, and probably more now, it would be an obvious abuse of the legal procedures.

But I would suggest to the Minister of Justice—while I hope he will give an indication that he is going to consent to the amendment at this time—that he might give consideration to including at some later time, in conjunction with it, a limited right which could be incorporated under section 424 of the Criminal Code, where there is given to courts of appeal the right to make recommendations on procedure. This is the section under which the various provincial courts have made recommendations on the procedure, under authority of the federal parliament, with regard to criminal matters. I suggest that the minister give the provincial courts of appeal the right, under section 424, and by a further amendment to section 691, to provide for limited access to individual judges, as well as the right of appeal.

I emphasize the reason for that in this fact that there are a number of cases which occur to my mind, and I think the hon. member for Bow River (Mr. Woolliams) illustrated this by reference to small penalties which might be imposed in respect of certain offences, and by the time you get into the court of appeal it is all over, and, while you might have the honour of the declaration by the court of appeal that you were unjustly imprisoned, that is not always a salutary remedy. I would suggest to the minister in conclusion that he might give some consideration to the suggestion I have made. All it would take would be a legislative enactment to restore the right which the legal profession considered did exist prior to the English decision followed by Chief Justice McRuer. It would permit in some provinces limited access to a number of trial judges of the superior court, which might be desirable. I would ask the minister to consider the possibility of some limited right of application to successive judges in certain cases.

[Translation]

Hon. Guy Favreau (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to take this unique opportunity to say that I agree not only with the spokesmen of my party, but also with all those of the opposition who have expressed their views. This is an opportunity that might not happen again very often in this house.

I am also happy to congratulate the hon. member for Leeds (Mr. Matheson) on the civic sense and the understanding of the administration of justice in this country he has shown by introducing the bill now under consideration.

The situation he pointed out is one which constituted an anomaly up to now. Section 691 of the Criminal Code which is sought to be amended by the present bill, refers to three methods of examination or of statement of invalidity with regard to conviction or imprisonment.

[Mr. Badanai.]

I do not want to discuss here, in a technical way, those three methods, but they are mentioned in that section: mandamus, certiorari and prohibition. The only test of the legality of a conviction and the only means of getting directly out of jail the person who complains about the decision, is through the procedure of habeas corpus which was well explained before I rose. It is abnormal that the code should include at the present time a provision which, in the case of the other three procedures, stipulates the right of appeal but entirely omits to stipulate it in the case that is undoubtedly the most important of those privilege proceedings, that is habeas corpus.

As Minister of Justice, I must say that even if this bill is not a government bill I had that same amendment in mind. As a citizen, as a member of the Quebec bar, the Ontario bar and the Canadian bar, it is a measure I wanted to see introduced.

Indeed, I remember that during the last five or six years I was associated with the faculty of law of the University of Ottawa, one of the subjects I taught dealt precisely with those extraordinary writs called "prerogative writs". Every year, and especially since the appeal court's decision in the Storgoff case, to which the hon. member for Bow River (Mr. Woolliams) referred, I would point out to my students this anomaly where an appeal could be heard on the other three writs but not on a writ of habeas corpus in a criminal case.

That is why I feel it is a duty for me to give full support to the bill introduced by the hon. member for Leeds. In my opinion, its passage would be a step forward in the administration of justice and I hope that the house will pass it.

Some hon. Members: Question.

[Text]

Mr. Ralph Cowan (York-Humber): Mr. Speaker, we are indebted to the hon. member for Leeds (Mr. Matheson) for having brought this matter forward and for having taken action in this regard. I note in the explanatory notes, however, that it is five years since the suggestion was first made, so that it is not prejudicial in any manner to this bill to make reference to the law's interminable delays.

Mr. Woolliams: Don't filibuster your own bill.

Mr. Cowan: The wording in the explanatory notes stating that "the present situation . . . places the liberty of the subject in the hands of one individual judge" attracts my attention. I agree that there should be an appeal in such a situation and I am happy that the hon. member for Leeds has introduced this bill. I am very pleased to know that it has the approval of the Minister of Justice (Mr. Favreau). But as a layman and not a lawyer, and as one who never uses a thousand words where one will do, and who has never studied law, I should like to ask the Minister of Justice to give consideration, after this amendment is passed, to the fact that certain judges—I will not name any of them here, but most Ontario people know to whom I refer—make use of the power they have with regard to contempt of court in what I think is an improper way. There is certainly no appeal from the decision made by one judge in such a case, which lets the hammer of the law fall on the subject, and certainly the liberty of the subject is at the disposition of the judge.

I am thinking in particular of a friend of mine in the city of Cornwall in the riding represented by the Deputy Speaker who was subjected to a contempt of court decision by an authority I do not need to name. That means that the record of this decision will stand against him. I do not think the action of the judge in the case was correct at all. That man had no appeal from the decision of the judge; but now we have high authority quoted today to indicate that the circumstances covered by the bill place the liberty of the subject in the hands of one individual judge.

There is one judge of the Ontario high court who finds there has been contempt of court more frequently than all the other judges on that bench. I hope that the Minister of Justice, in approving of the amendment of the hon. member for Leeds, will give consideration to action to provide an appeal from the sentence of an individual judge in a contempt of court accusation.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time, considered in committee, reported, read the third time and passed.

Mr. Barnett: Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that some of us on this side of the house are probably feeling a little faint from surprise at a bill passing in this hour, and in view of the fact it is Friday, I wonder whether a suggestion that it be called six o'clock would be acceptable.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Shall I call it six o'clock?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Churchill: May I ask the house leader if the business of the house for Monday and Tuesday is unchanged—a supply motion, I believe?

Mr. Favreau: Yes, the business for Monday and Tuesday will be a supply motion.

At six o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Monday, May 25, 1964

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

CANADIAN CONFERENCE ON THE FAMILY

DESIGNATION OF JUNE 7 AS FAMILY DAY

Mr. Speaker: May I be permitted to make a short announcement. Hon. members may be aware that the Canadian conference on the family, which is sponsored by His Excellency the Governor General and Madame Vanier, will meet in Ottawa from June 7 to June 10. It is the intention of the Governor General to invite the heads of religious denominations in Canada to attend and participate in a special religious observance as part of the opening ceremonies of the conference, to be held on the grounds of Government House on Sunday, June 7.

In recognition of this significant meeting, June 7, 1964 is being designated by the government as "family day". I am sure that all members of this house, and indeed all Canadians, will join with me in wishing the conference every success and in paying this tribute to the important unit in our society, the family.

UNITED NATIONS

ADDRESS BY SECRETARY GENERAL TO JOINT MEETING OF SENATE AND HOUSE OF COMMONS

Mr. Speaker: If hon. members will permit me I should like to recall to the attention of all hon. members that tomorrow at ten o'clock in the morning a joint meeting of all hon. members of the Senate and the House of Commons will be held in this chamber in honour of the secretary general of the United Nations, His Excellency U Thant, who will deliver an address.

LORD BEAVERBROOK

TRIBUTES ON 85TH BIRTHDAY ANNIVERSARY

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): If the house would allow me, I should like to make a reference to the birthday of a great Canadian. I refer to the 85th birthday anniversary today of Right Hon. Lord Beaverbrook, a Canadian who served in the cabinet of the United Kingdom in the first great war and again in the second great war; a man who has given leadership not only in our country but in the United Kingdom and in the commonwealth.

Too often we wait until the passing of our great men to pay them tribute. Tonight a dinner is being held in the city of London in honour of this man. One need only recall that in the darkest days of the second world war he was minister of aircraft production and later, of supply, to indicate the depth of gratitude which we owe to him, and which freedom owes to him, for the contribution he made.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Perhaps I might be permitted to associate those of us on this side of the house with the words which the right hon. gentleman has just uttered in connection with the 85th birthday anniversary of Lord Beaverbrook.

No Canadian-born citizen has made a greater impact on his times, I think, than has Lord Beaverbrook both in the land of his birth and, if I may call it so, in the land of his adoption—certainly he has made it his own—as well as in the commonwealth of nations. We think at this time of the great services which Lord Beaverbrook rendered to the United Kingdom and to the commonwealth in two world wars, particularly in the darkest days of 1940 as a member of the war cabinet of the United Kingdom. We wish him many happy returns on his birthday.

PRIVILEGE

MR. HERRIDGE—SIGNATURE OF U.S. RESIDENT ON COLUMBIA RIVER PETITION

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): I rise, Mr. Speaker, on a somewhat unusual point of privilege. Recently I moved that an order of the house do issue for a copy of all petitions sponsored by the Nelson chamber of commerce signed by residents of Kootenay East and West urging immediate ratification of the Columbia river treaty, received by the government since January 1, 1964.

On May 13 I received a copy of sessional paper 98c which contains certain correspondence and petitions with a total of 3,746 signatures attached. While many of these signatures are those of persons not resident in Kootenay East or West, they are the signatures of Canadians. However, I wish to bring to the attention of the house and of the Prime Minister that the petition also contains the signature of one Al Cappone of New York, and that this name should be deleted from the list of petitioners since I did not ask for petitions from United States citizens.

LIBRARY OF PARLIAMENT

TABLING OF REPORT OF JOINT COMMITTEE

Mr. Speaker: I have the honour to lay before the house a report in English and in French from the committee of both houses on the library of parliament with respect to certain promotions, reclassifications and alterations in rates of pay of employees of the library of parliament.

BROADCASTING

TABLING OF REPORTS OF INQUIRY COMMISSION—ESTABLISHMENT OF ADVISORY COMMITTEE

[Translation]

Hon. Maurice Lamontagne (Secretary of State): Last year, Mr. Speaker, my predecessor, the present Minister of Transport (Mr. Pickersgill) decided, as a preliminary study for a redefinition of official policy concerning broadcasting, to ask three persons, that is, the chairman of the board of broadcast governors, Mr. Andrew Stewart, the president of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, Alphonse Ouimet, and the president of the association of broadcasters, Mr. Don Jamieson, to examine, from their personal point of view, what is the Canadian policy on broadcasting at the present time and to indicate the points on which they agreed and the aspects on which they could not agree.

These gentlemen, who have now completed their study, have given me a joint report as well as three individual reports. I am ready to table copies of those reports, with the permission of the house.

[Text]

While the work done by the so-called "troika" will certainly prove to be most useful, the reports show quite clearly that there are still important areas of disagreement. Because of this situation, because of the complicated and urgent issues raised by Canadian broadcasting today, and in order to end present uncertainties, it has been decided to establish a committee on broadcasting whose terms of reference will be as follows: To study, in the light of present and possible future conditions, the purposes and provisions of the Broadcasting Act and related statutes and to recommend what amendments, if any, should be made to the legislation; including an appraisal of the studies being made by the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation of its structural organization; and including an inquiry into the financing of the C.B.C., into C.B.C. consolidation projects, into the relationship between the government and the C.B.C. in so far as the administration and the financing of the corporation are concerned, into the international service of the C.B.C., and into the various means of providing alternative television services, excluding community antenna television systems; and to report their findings to the Secretary of State with their recommendations.

During the course of its study it is expected that the committee will carefully consider the four reports which I am tabling today, and that it will maintain close contact with Dr. Andrew Stewart, Mr. Alphonse Ouimet and Mr. Don Jamieson, who have acquired a long and valuable experience in the field of broadcasting.

The committee will be comprised of three members, as follows: Mr. Robert Fowler, Mr. Marc Lalonde, Mr. Ernest Steele. This will be an advisory committee to the Secretary of State. It will proceed with its important work as quickly as possible in order to present its report and recommendations at the beginning of 1965. When the report has been received and made public, the government intends to introduce appropriate new legislation and to refer that legislation to a parliamentary committee for detailed study and consideration.

The advisory committee will not study the subject of community antenna television systems. The B.B.G. and the Department of Transport have already made such a study and on March 19 made joint recommendations to the government, which hopes to make known its policy on cable television within a short time.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, the announcement made by the minister represents, I think, the general viewpoint of the house and the country as to the need of an investigation into the C.B.C., particularly by a committee of parliament. The terms of reference he outlined may require to be reconsidered. I had no advance information in this connection, but I feel that the general ambit is rather too narrow and that if an investigation is to take place and full consideration is to be given to the whole problem of broadcasting the widest possible field should be available for investigation.

The minister mentioned that he was going to table the recommendations of this committee as well as the observations made by the individual members of the committee. I feel this matter is of such importance that copies should be made available to all members of the house. This is a matter of transcendent interest not only to members of the house but to the country as a whole. The mere tabling of copies does not make possible that type of examination all members should be able to give to this question.

Mr. D. M. Fisher (Port Arthur): Mr. Speaker, the Leader of the Opposition seemed to indicate in his comments that this committee would be concerned primarily with the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation. I did not take that out of the minister's announcement because I felt that it was only there he was being specific. If we are going to consider the purpose of the act, and recommend amendments to the act, it would seem to me that the review must touch private broadcasting stations and the whole picture of their relationships.

We certainly feel that the three people chosen, most of whom are well known by members, are able and fair and capable of doing an excellent job. The minister specified that one of the responsibilities of this committee was to make representations concerning the relationship of the government and the C.B.C. in an administrative and financial way. There has been an expression of opinion, Mr. Speaker, in this house within the last year that one of the things that needs to be reconsidered is the relationship between parliament and the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation. It is obvious that the minister has decided not to include that matter within these terms. It would seem to me that this is still something upon which we need an indication of governmen policy, and which will not be solved by the report of the committee.

We feel that the exclusion of C.A.T.V. from the committee study is a very wise move. It is obvious, Mr. Speaker, from the controversy that is developing in the United States, where you have the broadcasting networks and the C.A.T.V. people joining in a monster national battle, that a decision will have to come very soon to determine the community antenna television problem; otherwise it may be too late and we will have a really disastrous problem on our hands.

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): We welcome this announcement that has been made by the Secretary of State. I think such a committee as he is proposing is long overdue, because the whole relationship of broadcasting and telecasting is something which needs to be studied carefully. I believe there is so much interest across the country in this particular situation at this time, centring specifically on the C.B.C., that these four preliminary reports assume such an importance they should be included as an appendix to Hansard. In this way not only the members of the house but the population as a whole would have them available for study. I suggest that to you, Mr. Speaker.

We realize that this is not the time to enter into a debate or even a detailed discussion of this matter. However, the importance of the control of television, and the responsibility of those who control television and radio, must be studied very carefully. During the last week end I had an opportunity of studying in detail the methods the government of West Germany have adopted in this regard. I suggest to the Secretary of State that these important documents represent preliminary work that has been done. We give our support to this study and trust it will reach the objectives we all understand must be met now.

[Translation]

Mr. Gilles Grégoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, the motion just introduced by the Secretary of State (Mr. Lamontagne) is somewhat to the effect a committee of three members should be appointed to study the report of another committee of three members. It is a committee which will study what has already been studied by others.

Will the representatives of the C.B.C. thus avoid appearing before a parliamentary committee? Also the Secretary of State did not explain if this is a way to prevent the C.B.C. officials from appearing before such a committee. This is what we would like to know. In my opinion, the statement of the Secretary of State is rather vague on that point.

We had proof in the past that it was helpful when representatives of crown corporations heard the views of members of the house. For instance, I could mention the case of the C.N.R. and T.C.A. which brought about improvements in their organization in the last two years following suggestions made by the representatives of the people when their spokesmen appeared before those committees.

Mr. Speaker, I suggest that representatives of the C.B.C., as well as of other crown corporations, might be well advised to appear before a parliamentary committee so as to obtain some recommendations from members of the house. As a matter of fact, this could at least improve some of the aims of this crown corporation.

That is why we believe that the Secretary of State should elaborate further on the decision he has reached and tell us exactly what are the objectives of the new committee and whether that procedure will exempt the C.B.C. from appearing before a committee of the house.

[Later:]

[Text]

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, my question is to Your Honour and relates to the statement made by the Secretary of State. I should have asked it before but did not have the opportunity. Did I understand that it was agreed that these four initial reports would be attached to Hansard as an appendix?

Mr. Speaker: I am advised that these reports are very bulky and consist of a great number of pages, and that it would involve considerable effort to say nothing of the expense if they were appended to Hansard. Furthermore it could very easily delay the printing of Hansard. In the circumstances I am wondering whether the house would not be well advised to leave matters as they are.

Mr. Thompson: Would they be available to the members of the house?

Mr. Speaker: If the house so orders that can be done, but it would take unanimous consent. Does the house give unanimous consent to the printing of these reports?

Some hon. Members: No.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, instead of having the house decide, would the Secretary of State agree to distribute copies to members of the house as I suggested earlier?

Mr. Lamontagne: It may take some time, Mr. Speaker, but we will do our best to produce the copies as soon as possible.

[Later:]

[Translation]

Mr. Gilles Grégoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a supplementary question stemming from the report tabled by the Secretary of State? Could the Secretary of State tell us whether this new committee of three members, set up on his instigation, will prevent the establishment of a special committee of the house for consideration of the current business of the C.B.C., which is a crown corporation?

Hon. Maurice Lamontagne (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, there is no incompatibility whatsoever between the two committees. However, the C.B.C., as I indicated briefly a moment ago, has already initiated a complete inquiry in its administrative structure, which requires a considerable amount of additional work.

Moreover, the establishment of the committee I have just announced will add to the work load of the authorities of the C.B.C.

Finally, certain questions dealing with technical details and basic policy will have to be settled by experts and by the government, before they are examined in greater detail by hon. members.

[Mr. Thompson.]

For all those reasons, the government does not intend to propose the establishment of a parliamentary committee during the present session.

However, as I said before, when the new legislation is introduced in the house by the government in 1965, we intend to recommend that such a committee be set up and that it be given specific terms of reference so as to be able to play as useful a role as possible in the field of broadcasting.

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Speaker, then could not the Secretary of State appoint a special committee of the house that would study the C.B.C.'s deficit or the C.B.C.'s budget, as it has done in the case of the C.N.R. and Air Canada?

Mr. Lamontagne: Mr. Speaker, I think that question does not come within the purview of my responsibility.

Hon. Théogène Ricard (St. Hyacinthe-Bagot): Mr. Speaker, I wish to put a supplementary question to the Secretary of State. Does the answer he just gave apply to the question I asked him three weeks ago?

Mr. Lamontagne: Would the hon. member be good enough to repeat his question?

Mr. Ricard: My question was this. When does the Secretary of State propose to set up a commission on the C.B.C.?

Mr. Lamontagne: I think the hon. member's question was answered today.

QUESTIONS

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

C.N.R. EMPLOYEES RETIRED WITHOUT PENSION

Question No. 601—Mr. Knowles:

In each of the last ten years, how many employees of the Canadian National Railways have been retired (or laid off at the retiring age) without being awarded any pension at all?

Mr. Pickersgill: The management of the Canadian National Railways advises as follows:

The only employees who would be retired from service at age 65 without qualifying for a pension would be those with relatively short service who elected not to contribute to the pension plan. There is no normal requirement to maintain this type of statistics, and to extract the information from the individual service records would involve considerable time and expense.

MAINTENANCE OF PRIME MINISTER'S RESIDENCE —REFURNISHING, REDECORATING, CENTRE BLOCK

Question No. 675—Mr. Horner (Acadia):

1. What was the cost of operating and maintaining the Prime Minister's official residence at 24 Sussex drive for the years 1961, 1962, 1963?

2. What was the cost of redecorating the cabinet room in the centre block?

3. What was the cost of refurnishing offices in the centre block in 1963?

Mr. Deschatelets: 1. 1961, $13,499.05; 1962, $12,786.51; 1963, $9,108.55.

2. $6,455.80 including furniture.

3. Not possible to give information requested since all requisitions for House of Commons include centre and west blocks and no breakdown is available.

SUBMISSIONS RESPECTING WOOD BUFFALO NATIONAL PARK

Question No. 779—Mr. Horner (Jasper-Edson):

1. Has the government received any submission from the government of the province of Alberta with regard to Wood Buffalo national park in the last 12 months and, if so, what is the nature of that submission?

2. What does the federal government intend to do about it?

Mr. Laing: 1. Since my statement given in the house on April 15, 1964, I have received from the Speaker of the legislative assembly of Alberta, Hon. A. J. Dixon, a copy of a resolution passed by the legislative assembly of the province of Alberta on April 9, 1964, urging the federal government to return to the province of Alberta the control and ownership of that portion of Wood Buffalo park lying within Alberta's borders.

2. I have informed the Speaker of the legislative assembly of Alberta that the government is not prepared to return to the province of Alberta the entire portion of Wood Buffalo national park located in the province of Alberta because large sections of this area are required for national parks purposes. I also informed the Speaker that the federal government is prepared to consider the possibility of an exchange of lands, transferring portions of Wood Buffalo national park for park lands in the Cypress hills region of Alberta so as to maintain the total amenities offered by the national parks to the people of the province of Alberta and Canada. I have asked the Speaker for early discussions with the government of the province of Alberta.

RECOMMENDATIONS OF JOINT INDIAN AFFAIRS COMMITTEE

Question No. 865—Mr. Howard:

What action, in detail, has been taken with respect to each of the following recommendations of the joint committee of the Senate and the House of Commons on Indian affairs:

"(a) The act should provide for a term of office for band councils of not more than three years with one third of the members elected each year.

(b) All band members, who are otherwise qualified, should be allowed to vote at band elections and on any other matter affecting the band if present on the reserve when the election is held.

(c) The chief should be elected by the band members rather than from the elected council.

(d) An oath of office for band council members should be required.

(e) The Indian Act should set out specific duties and authorities of the chief.

(f) The act should provide for filling a vacancy in a band council as soon as possible after the vacancy occurs.

(g) There should be an extensive educational program to acquaint band councils with the Indian Act and regulations and with council authority.

(h) It should be the definite policy of government to move toward more self governing bands and to this end more bands should be given control of their revenue funds.

(i) There should be a decrease in ministerial and governmental authority with a concomitant increase in band council authority.

(j) Bylaw authority under the act should be combined and additional powers granted.

(k) To assist elected band councils in local self government, per capita grants on an unconditional basis should be made."?

Mr. Badanai: (a), (b), (d), (e), (i), (j) and (k). These recommendations would require legislation to implement with relevant changes in existing provisions of the Indian Act. A review of the Indian Act is proceeding as quickly as sound and thorough consideration will permit with the objective of submitting appropriate amendments.

(c) To restrict the election of a chief to a majority vote of the electors would require changes in the Indian Act, as it now provides under section 73(3) for the election of the chief by a majority vote of the electors, or by a vote of the elected councillors from among themselves.

(f) In accordance with the provisions of section 77(4) of the Indian Act, a special election may be held to fill a vacancy when such vacancy occurs in a band council more than three months before the date when another election would ordinarily be held. The general practice is to hold such special elections in consultation with the band council concerned.

(g) The development of Indian leadership is carried on with the co-operation and assistance of provincial governments and university extension departments. Sixteen leadership training courses were held in 1963-64. These were attended by chiefs and councillors and other real and potential leaders on the reserves.

The purpose of these courses was to train those who attended in order that they might increase their competence in the field of leadership in reserve activities. Although the content of the courses varied depending on the wishes of the trainees, subjects covered were frequently concerned with recognizing problems, planning and taking action to solve these problems, methods of communication, public speaking, understanding the community and its economic and human resources, knowledge of Indian affairs branch administration and existing programs, federal, provincial, and local resources that are available and how to obtain this assistance when required.

(h) The department is already moving ahead in this field. Progress is dependant upon the readiness and ability of Indian bands to assume the additional authority and responsibility which may be conferred under the Indian Act. Since 1959, 76 bands have been granted permission to control, manage and expend in whole or in part their revenue moneys.

RECOMMENDATION OF JOINT INDIAN AFFAIRS COMMITTEE

Question No. 871—Mr. Howard:

What action, in detail, has been taken with respect to the following recommendation of the joint committee of the Senate and the House of Commons on Indian affairs: "An Indian claims commission should be established to hear the British Columbia and Oka Indian land questions and other matters, and that the cost of counsel to Indians for the two land questions specified above, be borne by the federal treasury"?

Mr. Badanai: Action is being taken to establish an Indian claims commission. On December 14, 1963, Bill C-130 "An act to provide for the disposition of Indian claims" was given first reading in the House of Commons. The bill was subsequently sent to Indian bands, Indian organizations and others for study and comment with the objective of introducing a new bill with such changes as might be required as a result of consultation with Indians and others. Also see Hansard page 3433.

TRANSPORT DEPARTMENT CONSTRUCTION PROJECTS, GUYSBOROUGH COUNTY, N.S.

Question No. 885—Mr. Armstrong:

1. Were any construction projects undertaken in Guysborough county, Nova Scotia, during the 1963-64 year by the Department of Transport and, if so, from whom were tenders received in the case of each project, and in what amounts?
2. To whom were the contracts awarded?

Mr. Pickersgill: 1 and 2. Construction projects undertaken by the Department of Transport in Guysborough county, N.S., during 1963-64:

(1) Construction of two single dwellings at Ecum Secum, N.S. List of tenders: Stevens & Fiske Construction Ltd., Fairview, N.S., $43,641; MacDougall Construction Company, New Glasgow, N.S., $44,724; Nordbec Construction Inc., Rimouski, P.Q., $45,800; Albert E. Whidden, Antigonish, N.S., $49,468.30; Eastern Contracting Ltd., New Glasgow, N.S., $49,910; Malach Roofing & Flooring Limited, Windsor, Ont., $51,990; Continental Construction Co. Ltd., Dartmouth, N.S., $64,675.20; Cameron Contracting Limited, Halifax, N.S., $68,240.

Contract awarded to: Stevens & Fiske Construction Ltd., Fairview, N.S. Lowest tenderer.

(2) Construction of one—four bedroom dwelling, two—three bedroom dwellings, combined fog alarm and radio beacon building and concrete light tower, demolition of old building at Country Island, N.S. List of tenderers: Eastern Woodworkers Ltd., New Glasgow, N.S., $104,000; Cameron Contracting Ltd., Halifax, N.S., $117,757; Nordbec Construction Inc., Rimouski, P.Q., $131,800; Continental Construction Co. Ltd., Dartmouth, N.S., $137,583.

Contract awarded to: Eastern Woodworkers Ltd., New Glasgow, N.S. Lowest tenderer.

ABITIBI, QUE., COMMEMORATIVE STAMP

Question No. 918—Mr. Laprise:

Since 1964 is the fiftieth anniversary of Abitibi, and since large scale festivities will be held to mark the occasion, does the Postmaster General intend to issue a stamp to commemorate this anniversary?

[Translation]

Answer: No. It is considered desirable to continue the established precedent of issuing stamps to commemorate the important anniversaries of only the provincial capitals.

[Text]

ARDA PROJECTS, QUEBEC

Question No. 921—Mr. Latulippe:

1. How many ARDA projects are now underway in the province of Quebec in co-operation with the government of that province?
2. What ARDA projects are underway in the constituency of Compton-Frontenac?

[Translation]

Answer: 1. 104.

2. There are no ARDA projects underway in the constituency of Compton-Frontenac.

CONTRIBUTIONS OF BOOKS TO DEVELOPING COUNTRIES

Question No. 925—Mr. Latulippe:

1. Does Canada intend to follow the example of Sweden in inviting private or government organizations, university associations or public organizations to unite in offering books to countries in the process of development?
2. Will the government study the possibility, after communicating with the Swedish international assistance agency, of creating a similar organization in Canada, with a view to participating in such a program?

3. Would the government be willing to assist religious organizations by way of postal privileges or special tariffs for the shipment of school books to countries in the process of development?

[Translation]

Answer: 1. The Canadian government offers books to developing countries at present. For instance, Canada has given fairly large collections to national and university libraries in African countries in the process of development on the occasion of their independence. Books are also distributed to such states under the program of book donations administered by the Department of External Affairs. The external aid office has a program for the distribution of technical, legal and academic books to developing countries. The government constantly encourages the work, in Canada, of voluntary organizations which look after foreign aid, including the distribution of books overseas.

2. A certain number of Canadian organizations, such as religious orders, branches of the I.O.D.E., schools and Overseas Book Centre, 151 Bloor st. west, in Toronto, have already undertaken to choose and repair books which are sent to libraries and interested institutions in developing countries.

3. More information would be needed for us to give proper consideration to such a proposal.

POLITICAL REFUGEES

Question No. 928—Mr. Latulippe:

1. What is the present number of political refugees in Canada?

2. From what countries do they come?

3. How many have expressed the desire to move to other countries or return to their country of origin?

4. How many have expressed the desire to become Canadian citizens?

5. What was the cost to the Canadian government during the past year of employees assigned to assist these refugees?

6. What was the total cost to the Canadian government during the past year of caring for these political refugees in Canada?

7. How many protests has Canada received from countries from which these refugees came?

Mr. Badanai: The answer to all parts of the hon. member's question is unknown. Immigration records are not complete respecting the total number of persons admitted to Canada who might be regarded as refugees within the usual meaning ascribed to this term. Since the end of the second world war, it is only possible to identify approximately 242,000 such persons. The main groups comprising this figure are 165,000 displaced persons, 25,000 stateless persons, and 37,000 Hungarians who fled Hungary because of the crisis in 1956. In addition, there are thousands of other individuals who were not specifically recorded as refugees upon arrival in Canada but who for political reasons left or were forced to leave their countries of origin and, being reluctant or unable to return, migrated to Canada.

WOOD BUFFALO NATIONAL PARK

Question No. 950—Mr. Thompson:

Has the government of Alberta made application for the return to provincial jurisdiction of that portion of Wood Buffalo national park within the province of Alberta and, if so, what action is being taken by the federal government towards this request?

Mr. Laing: Answered by reply to question No. 779.

FEDERAL RENTAL OF SPACE, AMHERST, N.S.

Question No. 965—Mr. Coates:

What is the estimated total cost to the federal treasury for the rental of space from private individuals or concerns at Amherst, Nova Scotia, for the fiscal year 1964-65?

Mr. Lamontagne: $23,130.

ARDA PROJECTS, SASKATCHEWAN

Question No. 984—Mr. Southam:

What projects under the Agricultural Rehabilitation and Development Act have been approved with the province of Saskatchewan since January 1, 1964, giving the location, date of approval, and the cost of each project?

Mr. Sauvé:

DETAIL INFORMATION RE QUESTION NO. 984

Date approved	Description of project	Location	Total shareable cost	Total federal share
1964			$	$

CONFERENCE ON FORESTRY INSECTS AND DISEASES

Question No. 988—Mr. Latulippe:

1. Will government specialists in forest entomology and pathology participate in the seminar on insects and diseases harmful to forests, to be held in England from July 20 to July 30 and, if so, what are the names of the specialists, what work does each do for the department, and who will lead the delegation?

2. What contribution will Canada make to this conference?

3. Is Canada a member of the international union of forestry research organizations and, if so (a) since what date (b) how much does such membership cost this country (c) what have been the main Canadian contributions to this organization?

4. In the Department of Forestry, who is responsible for Canadian participation in this organization?

[Translation]

Answer: 1. Yes. The following specialists employed by the federal government will take part in the seminar on insects and diseases harmful to forests, which will take place in England in 1964:

B. M. McGugan, associate director (entomology), forest entomology and pathology branch, Ottawa; V. J. Nordin, director (pathology), forest entomology and pathology branch, Ottawa; R. M. Belyea, chief of forest entomology and pathology laboratory, Fredericton; R. Pomerleau, chief of forest pathology research, forest entomology and pathology laboratory, Quebec; L. T. White, chief, forest pathology laboratory, Maple (Ontario); W. A. Reeks, chief, forest insect laboratory, Sault Ste. Marie (Ontario); F. E. Webb, chief, forest entomology laboratory, Winnipeg; G. P. Thomas, chief, forest entomology and pathology laboratory, Calgary; R. R. Lejeune, chief, forest entomology and pathology laboratory, Victoria.

The delegation is under the joint direction of Mr. McGugan, in charge of the entomological personnel, and Mr. Nordin, in charge of the pathological personnel.

2. The delegates of the forestry department will take part in the general discussions on the threat caused by the intercontinental dissemination of forest insects, and tree diseases, as well as on the means of lessening that threat, and they also have written the various briefs listed hereafter:

Repercussions of Tree Diseases on Forest Production in North America; Intercontinental Spreading of Forest Pathogenic Agents; Possible Dangers Resulting from Root Diseases; Forest Entomology in Canada; The Role of the Forest Entomologist.

3. The Canadian members of the international union of forestry research organizations include the forestry departments of several Canadian universities, the Minister of Forestry and some other research organizations. (a) The forestry service of the former department of the interior became a member of the international union of forestry research organizations in 1932. (b) The yearly fee is $30. (c) The main contributions of the Department of Forestry to this organization include its representation in the standing committee, the participation of officers of the department in the studies of technical sections dealing with various aspects of forest management, for instance, fires, soils and forestry types, tree diseases, insects and forest products, as well as the presence of its delegates to the meetings of the congresses which are held periodically every three or five years.

4. The participation of the forestry department in the studies of the international union of forestry research organizations is the responsibility of the deputy minister of forestry, as well as that of the directors of the three research branches of the department he may delegate.

WOOD BUFFALO PARK—RETURN TO PROVINCE

Question No. 989—Mr. Kindt:

What progress has been made in negotiations between the federal government and the provincial government of Alberta with regard to the return of Wood Buffalo national park, in whole or in part, to the province?

Mr. Laing: Answered by reply to question No. 779.

VACATION LEAVE CIRCULAR, TRANSPORT DEPARTMENT

Question No. 1,001—Mr. Howard:

1. What has been the response from each air service establishment or station to whom R.D.A.S. circular No. 3/64 (File 1802-1) by T. G. How, regional director, air services division, Department of Transport, was issued?

2. With reference to the circular, tabled by the Minister of Transport, which states in part, "It has been drawn to our attention by a recent suggestion that some stations may still be considering seniority only in arranging their vacation leave schedule...While we do not intend to attempt to control annual leave programs, at the same time if the arrangement we have outlined is not being followed now we would strongly recommend that it be adopted", what steps have been taken or are contemplated if this so-called strongly recommended arrangement is not followed?

3. Under what authority did Mr. T. G. How issue the said circular and was it issued with the knowledge or consent of any of his superiors?

4. Are any steps being taken to countermand the said circular, and, if so, what steps and initiated by whom?

Mr. Pickersgill: 1. There has been no response from air services establishments and stations to whom regional director air services circular No. 3/64 was issued.

2. The administration of local leave programs is left to the decision of local officers in charge within the broad framework of direction.

3. Subject to the provisions of the Civil Service Act and civil service regulations, the deputy head is authorized by the Civil Service Act, section 63 (4) to administer leave programs. This authority has been delegated to regional directors, air services, in relation to those employees under their jurisdiction.

4. No steps are being taken to countermand the said circular.

INVITATIONS TO FORESTRY MINISTER, SKEENA CONSTITUENCY

Question No. 1,008—Mr. Howard:

Has the Minister of Forestry been invited to attend any function or visit any place in the electoral district of Skeena for 1964, and, if so, with respect to each such invitation, by whom was the invitation given, for what function or purpose, at what time or times, and has it been (a) accepted or (b) declined?

Mr. Sauvé: No.

INVITATIONS TO NORTHERN AFFAIRS MINISTER, SKEENA CONSTITUENCY

Question No. 1,017—Mr. Howard:

Has the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources been invited to attend any function or visit any place in the electoral district of Skeena for 1964, and, if so, with respect to each such invitation, by whom was the invitation given, for what function or purpose, at what time or times, and has it been (a) accepted or (b) declined?

Mr. Laing: Yes, an invitation was extended by the city of Prince Rupert to officiate at the opening of the new city hall which was previously a federal government building and to attend a civic dinner in honour of the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources and as guest speaker. This invitation was accepted and carried out on April 30, 1964. An invitation was also received from the Kitimat chamber of commerce to attend the 33rd annual convention of the associated chamber of commerce of central British Columbia being held on June 4, 5, 6, 1964. This invitation was declined due to previous obligations.

INVITATIONS TO PRIME MINISTER, SKEENA CONSTITUENCY

Question No. 1,019—Mr. Howard:

Has the Prime Minister been invited to attend any function or visit any place in the electoral district of Skeena for 1964, and, if so, with respect to each such invitation, by whom was the invitation given, for what function or purpose, at what time or times, and has it been (a) accepted or (b) declined?

Mr. Davis: The Prime Minister received an invitation from Mr. G. Harris, chairman, convention committee, Kitimat chamber of commerce, to be guest speaker at the annual convention of the associated chambers of commerce of northwest British Columbia and southern Alaska on June 5 or 6, 1964. Declined.

[Mr. Pickersgill.]

PEMBINA RIVER FLOOD CONTROL REPORT

Question No. 1,030—Mr. Jorgenson:

1. What were the terms of reference for the study of flood control and water conservation on the Pembina river by the international joint commission?
2. When is the commission expected to complete its study?
3. When will the report be available?
4. Has an interim report been submitted?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): 1. The commission is requested to determine what plan or plans of co-operative development of the water resources of the Pembina river basin would be practicable, economically feasible and to the mutual advantage of Canada and the United States, having in mind: (a) domestic water supply and sanitation; (b) control of floods; (c) irrigation; and (d) any other beneficial uses. In the event that the commission finds that these criteria can be met, it is asked to make recommendations to the two governments concerning a specific plan or plans.

2. The international Pembina river engineering board set up by the commission to carry out the technical studies under this reference is expected to report to the commission in December of this year.

3. On receipt of the board's report, the commission will consider the terms of its report to the two governments. Normally, this would occur after public hearings in the area.

4. No.

PUBLIC SERVICE SECURITY INVESTIGATIONS

Question No. 1,033—Mr. Orlikow:

1. Has the new policy regarding security investigations promised by the Prime Minister last session been established and, if not, how long will it be before it is ready?
2. If it has been completed and approved, have its terms been made known to the employees of the government and their associations?
3. Will a copy of the policy and its regulations be tabled in the house?

Mr. Pearson: 1. Yes.

2 and 3. The terms have been formally communicated to all government departments and organizations. It is not customary to send directives such as this to employees or associations, nor are administrative directives normally tabled in the House of Commons. The directive is completely in line with the statement of policy and procedures announced in the House of Commons on October 25, 1963.

NORAD BRIEFING TEAMS

Question No. 1,035—Mr. Lambert:

1. Under what authority do teams composed of officers of the U.S. air force or army and of the R.C.A.F. travel in Canada to address meetings sponsored by service clubs, chambers of commerce, etc., for the purpose of featuring the NORAD story?
2. Are any of these NORAD briefing teams composed entirely of R.C.A.F. officers?
3. Who is responsible for the expenses of such briefing teams?
4. Has consideration been given to using R.C.A.F. personnel exclusively for such lectures and demonstrations in Canada and, if not, what are the reasons for such a decision?

Mr. Hellyer: 1. Under the authority of the joint Canada-United States North American air defence command.

2. No.

3. Since these teams originate out of NORAD headquarters, U.S.A.F. aircraft are usually used for transportation. Pay and allowances of the members of these teams are paid by their respective services.

4. Yes. However, to illustrate that NORAD is an international command both Canadian and American military personnel are used for all NORAD briefings both in Canada and United States.

ARDA PROJECTS, NEW BRUNSWICK

Question No. 1,055—Mr. Flemming (Victoria-Carleton):

What are the 25 ARDA projects in the province of New Brunswick?

Mr. Sauvé: 4001. Advisory services to farmers in farm woodlot management.

4002. Soil and water conservation, under the New Brunswick land improvement program to promote the development of agriculture in those areas where a good potential for development exists within delineated pilot areas during 1962-63.

4004. Alternate land use, acquisition of marginal land for forestry purposes at Lincour and the re-establishment of 15 families.

4005. Soil and water conservation, under the New Brunswick land improvement program, as outlined for project 4002, within delineated pilot areas during 1963-64.

4009. Alternate land use, acquisition of 30 acres of marginal and submarginal farm land in Gloucester county to develop Val Comeau provincial park.

Questions

4010. Alternate land use, acquisition of 34 acres of marginal and submarginal farm land in Gloucester county to develop Belledune provincial park.

4011. Alternate land use, acquisition of 60 acres of marginal and submarginal farm land in Queen's county to develop Waterborough provincial park.

4012. Alternate land use, acquisition of five acres of marginal and submarginal farm land in Kent county to develop Jardine provincial park.

4013. Alternate land use, acquisition and development of 850 acres of marginal and submarginal farm land in King's county as the Buckley settlement community pasture.

4014. Alternate land use, acquisition and development of 540 acres of marginal farm land in Sunbury county as the Gilbert's Island community pasture.

4016. Research, residential adult education study in association with P.E.I. and N.S. (projects 2018 and 3022) to examine the need for residential education facilities and resources and to develop a plan to establish centres for continuing education if a need is shown.

4017. A study of the north shore region of New Brunswick to provide background information for use in future rural development programs in the area.

4018. Management and administrative coordination in the New Brunswick pilot rural development research region.

4019. To set up a rural development leadership training seminar as part of the New Brunswick pilot rural development research region program.

4020. To accelerate the soil survey and interpretation of soil capability for agriculture in the New Brunswick pilot rural development research region.

4021. To develop a soil capability inventory of the agricultural lands in the province.

4022. A comprehensive study program for the New Brunswick pilot rural development research region.

4023. Research, serial photography of the settled areas and adjacent portions of the New Brunswick pilot rural development research region.

4024. Soil and water conservation, to undertake emergency river bank erosion control works where substantial acreages of agricultural lands are threatened.

4025. Alternate land use, to acquire eight acres of marginal and submarginal cultivated farm land for a public recreation area on highway 11, between Bathurst and Tracadie.

4026. Soil and water conservation, to assist in the development of controlled water areas for multipurpose uses. The project is limited to rural ponds where the total cost does not exceed $3,000.

4027. Alternate land use, to acquire and develop marginal agricultural land as the Botsford Westmorland community pasture.

4028. Soil and water conservation, under the New Brunswick land improvement program, as outlined for project No. 4002, within delineated pilot areas during 1964-65.

EXCLUSION OF ALEWIVES UNDER FISHERIES ACT, N.B.

Question No. 1,058—Mr. Crouse:

For what reasons did the Minister of Fisheries make a special order under section 29 of the Fisheries Act, excepting from the operations of that section the taking, selling or exporting of alewives in the county of Gloucester in the province of New Brunswick?

Answer: To permit utilization of alewives for reduction to fish meal. The operation provides income to fishermen where, because of the depressed state of the pickled alewife trade, no other outlet for disposal exists.

NATIONAL PARK, QUEEN'S COUNTY, N.S.

Question No. 1,061—Mr. Crouse:

1. How much money has the federal government contributed to date toward the establishment of a national park in Queens county, Nova Scotia?
2. What projects are planned for 1964-65 and 1965-66 which will provide employment in developing the park?
3. How much money will be allocated for developing these projects?
4. On what specific date does the government estimate a start will be made on developing this tourist attraction?

Mr. Laing: 1. To date, approximately $1,000 has been spent by the federal government.

2 and 3. Ground survey work is planned for 1964-65. Planning for 1965-66 and the following years is still in progress.

4. Assuming that the land can be transferred by the province later this year as expected, it should be possible to start major work early next spring.

TERMINATION OF FLYING TRAINING, PENHOLD, ALTA.

Question No. 1,067—Mr. Thompson:

1. When will the present flying training program at R.C.A.F. Penhold terminate?
2. Is the government presently formulating plans for the use of the training and airport facilities at Penhold after the Harvard flying training program terminates, and if so, how soon is it expected that such policies will be announced?

Mr. Hellyer: 1. It is expected that the present flying training program will terminate in the spring of 1965.

2. Studies are being undertaken in respect to the possible future use of the facilities at Penhold. As these studies must be co-ordinated with the over-all reorganization plan for the armed forces it will be some time before any decision is taken.

[Mr. Sauvé.]

COUNT DE LA BOULARDERIE HISTORICAL SITE

Question No. 1,073—Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria):

1. On what date did the historic sites and monuments board hold its last meeting and when is the next meeting scheduled to take place?
2. Will the historical importance of the Count de la Boularderie settlement on Boularderie island be on the agenda at that time?

Mr. Laing: 1. October 28-29, 1963; the dates for the next meeting have not yet been fixed.

2. Yes.

MASTER OF FISHERIES PATROL CRAFT "SCATARIE II"

Question No. 1,074—Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria):

1. Who is the master of the fisheries patrol craft Scatarie II?
2. Where is his residence and what are his qualifications?
3. When was he appointed?
4. What are the qualifications required as master of the fisheries patrol craft Scatarie II?

Answer: 1. The Scatarie II is not a fisheries patrol craft.

2. Answered by No. 1.

3. Answered by No. 1.

4. Answered by No. 1.

ARMED FORCES RECRUITING

Question No. 1,082—Mr. Rynard:

1. How many enlistments have there been in the armed forces during the months January, February, March and April of this year?
2. What amount of money has been spent on advertising for recruiting purposes during January, February, March and April of this year?

Mr. Hellyer: 1. January, 728; February, 754; March, 696; April, 697.

2. The recruiting advertising program is planned on a yearly basis with the value of advertising placed for the first four months of this year being as follows: January, $25,033.47; February, $45,657.91; March, $69,249.89; April, $19,540.89.

These monthly amounts are not related directly to the number of enlistments in a given month.

TRANS-CANADA HIGHWAY BRIDGE, GRAND FALLS, N.B.

Question No. 1,084—Mr. Flemming (Victoria-Carleton):

1. On the trans-Canada highway, has the location of the bridge across the Saint John river at or near Grand Falls, Victoria county, New Brunswick, been determined and, if so (a) what is the approximate location (b) is this location east or west of the town of Grand Falls?

2. What is the estimated cost of this bridge?
3. Will the estimates for next fiscal year include an item to cover the cost of this bridge?

Mr. Deschatelets: 1. Location of bridge has not yet been determined.

2. Not yet known.

3. Federal payments to the provinces in respect of trans-Canada highway construction are provided by the statutory appropriation under the Trans-Canada Highway Act.

ADVERTISING REVENUE, STATION CJBC, TORONTO

Question No. 1,085—Mr. Cowan:

What was the division of the advertising revenue of radio station CJBC Toronto, in the month of April, 1964, between advertising in the French language and advertising in the English language?

Mr. Lamontagne: I am advised by the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation that all advertising revenue of station CJBC for the month of April, 1964 was from advertising in the English language.

LEGAL DIVISION, EXTERNAL AFFAIRS DEPARTMENT

Question No. 1,086—Mr. McNulty:

Is the government giving consideration to the implementation of the recommendation by the Glassco commission to effect certain modifications in the staffing of the legal division of the Department of External Affairs in order to build up a core of specialists in international law, and, if so, how soon can action on this matter be expected?

Mr. McIlraith: The Glassco commission's recommendations contained in the report on legal services have been under study by a committee of officials established under the auspices of the bureau of government organization. No decision has yet been reached by the government with respect to the commission's recommendation relating to the legal division of the Department of External Affairs.

*BILINGUALISM COMMISSION—TRAVEL ABROAD

Question No. 1,088—Mr. Ormiston:

Will the Prime Minister inform the house if the royal commission on bilingualism and biculturalism intends to travel abroad this summer and, if so, to what countries and for what purpose?

Mr. Davis: We are informed by the co-chairmen of the royal commission on bilingualism and biculturalism as follows: the royal commission on bilingualism and biculturalism does not intend to travel abroad this summer.

Mr. Bell: How about the following summer?

PORT ELGIN, ONT.—DEMOLITION OF OLD TOWN HALL

Question No. 1,099—Mr. Loney:

Have tenders been advertised for the demolition and removal of the old town hall on the property purchased by the federal government for the construction of the new proposed post office in Port Elgin and, if so, who was the successful tenderer and what was the amount of the tender?

Mr. Deschatelets: No. Demolition will be included in the contract for the new building for which tenders are expected to be advertised very soon.

QUESTIONS PASSED AS ORDERS FOR RETURNS

BUSINESS FAILURES, 1962-63

Question No. 562—Mr. Mather:

1. To what is attributable the major increase in commercial failures recorded in 1963 under the bankruptcy and winding-up acts?
2. What was the estimated total liabilities of such business failures in 1963 and 1962?

Return tabled.

GRANTS TO RESEARCH SCIENTISTS

Return tabled.

CANADIAN FLAG

INQUIRIES WITH RESPECT TO HOLDING OF REFERENDUM

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Robert C. Coates (Cumberland): Mr. Speaker, on May 21 I posed three questions to the Prime Minister, two of which were answered. The Prime Minister gave no reply to the third question, which does not appear in Hansard. However, I feel that it should be placed on Hansard in the context of the three questions I posed. In effect I asked the Prime Minister why, in view of the fact that there was a great demand for a national referendum, he continued to endeavour to impose his own personal design on the Canadian public.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Prime Minister whether a petition has been received from the national leader of the Imperial Order Daughters of the Empire requesting a plebiscite or referendum on the question as to whether the red ensign should be maintained or an alternative should be considered. If so, what has been his reply to that resolution?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): I have received a good deal of correspondence on this question, Mr. Speaker, and I am not certain whether a communication has come from the Ontario branch of the organization referred to by the right hon. gentleman. But I will look into the matter at once.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, is there any foundation for the rumour that the Prime Minister and the government have decided that a referendum will take place on this subject, so that Canadian unity will not be bifurcated or even fragmentized by strict adherence to what is becoming generally known as the Pearson pennant?

[Translation]

Mr. Gilles Grégoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a supplementary question to the Prime Minister. Is he aware that a petition was sent to the Leader of the Opposition by the Conservative members of the province of Quebec asking him to accept a distinctive Canadian flag without insisting on a referendum?

[Text]

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Pigeon: Not two flags.

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is based upon a release over radio station CKNW in New Westminster of a wire story from Ed Murphy of the press gallery that the new Canadian flag design would be a single red maple leaf on a plain white background. My question is, will the Prime Minister take the house into his confidence, since Mr. Murphy attributed his source to a highly placed government official?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for—

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister was about to rise to answer my question as to whether his office has leaked this information. I think the house is entitled to a reply.

Mr. Pearson: Of course, Mr. Speaker, under the rules I am instructed not to answer questions which inquire whether statements made in a newspaper are correct. Nevertheless I do not mind telling my hon. friend that this story is purely speculative.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Possibly now, Mr. Speaker, I could get an answer to my question. Has the Prime Minister decided now, or is he giving consideration to having a referendum on this question, rather than endeavouring to push this pennant down the throats of the Canadian people?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Port Arthur.

Mr. Fisher: My question is not on the flag, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): I have a supplementary question on the flag, Mr. Speaker. I wonder whether the Prime Minister could indicate whether the resolution on the flag, if there is to be one, when introduced will be one of the items to which he referred on May 15, as reported at page 3304 of Hansard, when he said:

> Circumstances or developments may make it necessary or desirable to add to the list I have given, and the additions may require priority over existing items either now on the order paper or on the list I have given.

Mr. Pearson: Yes, Mr. Speaker, that will be one of those items.

Mr. Baldwin: A further supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Would the Prime Minister indicate whether it is his view that considering the importance the government attaches to this matter, when debate is once entered into it should continue without being interrupted by other government legislation, and that each member wishing to make a contribution should have ample opportunity to do so?

Mr. Pearson: I think that is a very reasonable suggestion, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. H. Russell MacEwan (Pictou): I have a further question on this matter, Mr. Speaker. I wonder whether the Prime Minister has received a communication from the premier of Newfoundland stating that he would only accept a distinctive Canadian flag if the red ensign or the union jack, or both, remain equally the flag or flags of Canada.

Mr. Pearson: No, Mr. Speaker, to my knowledge I have received no such communication.

[Translation]

Mr. Marcel Lessard (Lake St. John): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of National Defence—

[Text]

Mr. R. W. Prittie (Burnaby-Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Prime Minister. Has the Prime Minister received the views of the premier of Nova Scotia on the question of the flag?

Mr. Pearson: Only in so far as they were communicated to the country in a speech to the Canadian club in Montreal a few weeks ago.

Mr. W. H. A. Thomas (Middlesex West): Mr. Speaker, I have a further supplementary question for the Prime Minister. Since we in Canada have adopted the principle of opting out, could consideration be given to permitting municipalities that wish to do so to opt out of the proposed flag legislation?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. P. V. Noble (Grey North): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct this question to the Prime Minister. Did the Prime Minister communicate directly or indirectly with the Queen by any means with respect to the red ensign or any other proposed flag?

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, I think I should tell the house that I have, in an informal way, informed the Queen, through her private secretary, of the intentions of the government in this matter, without of course asking for the Queen's advice, which would be unconstitutional. As a matter of courtesy it was surely desirable to let the Queen know what the intentions of the government were in this matter, and that has been done.

An hon. Member: Why didn't you tell the hon. member for Hull (Mr. Caron)?

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I do not want the Prime Minister in any way to go into detail, because the Queen would not get any more information than the house has received, I suppose—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Diefenbaker: —but would the Prime Minister say when it was that he communicated with the secretary of Her Majesty the Queen?

Mr. Pearson: I have not the exact date in my mind, Mr. Speaker. The first communication was a good many days ago, and there has been one since that time.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister says "a good many days ago". Does that mean more than a month ago?

Mr. Pearson: No, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Nielsen: A supplementary question, sir. In answering my previous question the Prime Minister indicated that the story was speculative. I wonder if he would also tell the house whether it was speculative when Mr. Murphy quoted the source of his information as a highly placed government official.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I do not think that question is in order.

Mr. Coates: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question that goes back to the matter of the flag. I wish to ask the Prime Minister whether he would assure this house that our Queen will not be involved in what is rapidly developing and deteriorating into a partisan political matter, the matter of the selection of the design for the flag.

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, that danger occurred to me as I listened to certain questions in the last five minutes.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Coates: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Prime Minister whether that danger did not occur to him when he made his speech to the Royal Canadian Legion?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. This is a statement, not a question.

[Later:]

[Translation]

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister. Could he assure the house that once the government has given the country a distinctive national flag, which will be flown on the parliament buildings, he will never allow another symbol remindful of a foreign country to be flown beside the national flag?

[Later:]

[Text]

Mr. Noble: I should like to ask the Prime Minister a question supplementary to the one put to him a while ago. Did the right hon. gentleman not mislead the House of Commons on Thursday when he answered "no" to the question whether he had sent a telegram to the Queen with regard to the red ensign?

[Later:]

Mr. Diefenbaker: I wonder if the Prime Minister has taken a vow of silence with respect to questions asked him in the house. I know he could take that stand, but I ask him now—

An hon. Member: Intelligent questions.

Another hon. Member: Quack, quack.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Don't dishonour the ducks. I ask the right hon. gentleman now whether the communication made to the secretary to the Queen was by telegram, or whether it was a communication sent by the Governor General. I ask this only in view of the fact that the Prime Minister gave such a definite answer the other day.

Mr. Pearson: The exchange of views was both by telephone and by telegram, and the Governor General was informed.

Inquiries of the Ministry

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

WITHDRAWAL OF FILM RESPECTING PRIME MINISTER

On the orders of the day:

Mr. D. M. Fisher (Port Arthur): Mr. Speaker, I want to ask the Prime Minister a question with regard to the Pearson film. It arises out of the answer he gave last week when he said "We on this side of the house do not censor films". I want to ask the Prime Minister, if this is the case, why the film was screened before his government advisers, and was there an opinion as to whether these advisers liked the film and felt it should go to Mr. Reeves Hagan of the C.B.C.?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I realize the great interest in this matter, but is this question a vital, urgent one that requires to be answered today?

Some hon. Members: Yes.

Mr. Speaker: In my opinion it should be placed on the order paper.

Mr. Fisher: I will debate it at ten o'clock, Mr. Speaker.

SUGGESTED DELAY IN DEVELOPING COLOUR TELEVISION FACILITIES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (Queens-Lunenburg): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister. In view of the fact that the C.B.C. operating deficit for 1962-63 exceeded $72.5 million, will the Prime Minister impress upon the board of broadcast governors the need for providing better black and white television for all Canadians throughout Canada before any action is taken in developing facilities for colour television, which would be too costly for the average Canadian and would further add to his taxes and the country's deficit?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I will be glad to bring my hon. friend's observations to the attention of the B.B.G.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

MEETING OF JOINT U.S.-CANADIAN MINISTERIAL COMMITTEE

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Marcel Lessard (Lake St. John): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of National Defence. In view of the fact that Washington announced that next June 25 the Canada-U.S. ministerial committee would study the defence systems of the North American continent, can the minister tell the house who will be the Canadian delegates to that conference?

[Text]

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of National Defence): Yes, Mr. Speaker, the announcement was also made here. The Canada-United States ministerial group on defence will meet in Washington on June 25. The Canadian delegation will be led by the Secretary of State for External Affairs; other members of the delegation will include the Minister of Finance, the Minister of Defence Production, the Associate Minister of National Defence and myself.

[Translation]

Mr. Lessard (Lake St. John): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Has the minister planned to include members of the committee on defence as delegates or observers, if you wish, to give them the opportunity to see what will be going on at this conference?

[Text]

Mr. Hellyer: It had not been planned to take members of the special committee on defence to this meeting.

REPORT OF COMMITTEE ON REORGANIZATION OF MILITIA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. G. L. Chatterton (Esquimalt-Saanich): I wish to direct a question to the Minister of National Defence and ask whether the committee on the reorganization of the militia has yet made its report to him?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of National Defence): Not yet. The first report is expected soon.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

CYPRUS—EXTENSION OF PERIOD OF COMMITMENT OF CANADIAN FORCE

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address my question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Will he kindly advise the house whether the United Nations secretary general has asked Canada, or whether Canada has received any direct request from the United Nations, for an extension of the period of commitment of our security forces in Cyprus beyond the original period to June 27? If so, what has been Canada's reply to this request?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): First of all, Mr. Speaker, since my hon. friend has mentioned the name of the secretary general of the United Nations, may I say I am sure that all of us in this house and in this country are honoured and pleased at the fact that he is in our capital and will be addressing this parliament tomorrow morning.

There has been no formal request as yet.

ANGOLA—USE BY PORTUGAL OF CANADIAN ARMS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): I wish to direct to the Secretary of State for External Affairs a question of an urgent and pressing nature to all those who are concerned with these matters. Has the minister's attention been drawn to a statement which appeared in the Globe and Mail on May 23, attributed to a Dr. Ian Gilchrist? The article bears the headline "Women and Children Shot in Angola, Deserters Say". Two officers reportedly deserted because they had been asked to shoot women and children. The report goes on:

In Hamilton earlier this week, Dr. Ian Gilchrist, a Halifax-born doctor who operates a hospital in Leopoldville—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. What is the hon. member's question?

Mr. Herridge: I was laying the foundation for my question. This doctor goes on to deal with the question of Canadian arms supplied through NATO being used for purposes such as I have mentioned, and I should like to ask the minister if he still has the same confidence in the good faith of the Portuguese government with respect to the use of these arms, supplied by Canada, as he had on December 21, 1963 when he answered my question on this subject. Would the hon. gentleman have these circumstances investigated in order, if possible, to allay the fears of the Canadian people who are concerned?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Yes, I will have the story looked into. It would be a violation of the agreement between Canada and Portugal if the story in question were true.

CANADIAN CONSTITUTION

PRIORITY FOR CONSIDERATION OF PROPOSED AMENDMENT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Prime Minister. Since the proposed amendment to the constitution of Canada is the necessary next step before we go further with the Canada pension plan, can the Prime Minister say whether that proposed resolution will be on the order paper this week?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, that will depend on whether we get replies from all the provinces. Three or four replies came in before the week end and they were all in agreement with the formula put forward. I hope that within the next two or three days the other replies will come in and will be in agreement, and then we can put the resolution on the order paper.

Mr. Knowles: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In view of the fact that the Prime Minister has already agreed that debate on the flag should be as long as members might wish it, will he undertake that the debate on this question of amending the constitution regarding the Canada pension plan will take priority?

Mr. Pearson: I cannot very well give that assurance, Mr. Speaker, when I have not yet received the replies from the provinces and do not know for certain when they will all be in.

TRADE

VISIT OF FRENCH MISSION TO ONTARIO DAIRY FARMS

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Maurice Côté (Chicoutimi): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce?

Following a press release concerning the visit of a French mission to the dairy farms of Ontario, I would like to ask him whether the program includes such a visit to French Canadian farmers so that the visitors may have an opportunity to meet their Canadian cousins?

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: In the circumstances would the hon. member put this question on the order paper.

WHEAT—STATEMENT BY MINISTER RESPECTING RUSSIAN EXPORTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Reynold Rapp (Humboldt-Melfort-Tisdale): Mr. Speaker, I have a question of importance for the Minister of Trade and Commerce. When the minister made a statement in Los Angeles to the effect that the U.S.S.R. would never again be able to export wheat and might not even be able to sustain herself, could the minister inform the house as to the source on which he based his statement, or is the statement just his opinion?

Inquiries of the Ministry

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I was asked whether I had expressed an opinion. I cannot take any responsibility for what a newspaperman said I said. I merely expressed the opinion that it was unlikely the Soviet union would again be a major exporter of wheat. This was the extent of my comment at that time.

RUSSIA—SUGGESTED EXCHANGE OF PETROLEUM PRODUCTS FOR WHEAT

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Trade and Commerce): May I take this opportunity to answer a question which was put to me in my absence by the hon. member for Bow River, who referred to an article in the New York Times and asked whether there was any justification for reports of negotiations between the government of Canada and the Soviet union regarding the acceptance of Soviet petroleum and other oil products in return for Canadian wheat.

I should like to assure the house that no negotiations are being carried on with regard to such an exchange. The proposal in question was a tentative suggestion put forward by Soviet officials in the course of informal discussions with visiting Canadian businessmen. A number of other Soviet commodities including birch plywood, canned fish, watches, potash, pig iron, cotton textiles, naphthalene, benzol, window glass, furs and manganese were in fact mentioned at the same time.

CONTINUATION OF POLICY RESPECTING OIL EXPORTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Bow River): May I ask a supplementary question. Is the Minister of Trade and Commerce continuing the national oil policy so that we may accelerate our exports in this field to a target of approximately 800,000 barrels of crude petroleum a day, taking into account the amount we use domestically?

Mr. Speaker: Would the hon. member put this question on the order paper.

Mr. Woolliams: May I speak to that ruling for a moment? This is an important economic matter.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member knows the rules as well as I do. In particular, he knows why these rules were brought in. His question is vitally important to the future of the oil industry, I admit, but it is not so pressing as to require an answer at this time. Therefore I suggest the hon. member put it on the order paper and get a detailed, reasonable answer.

[Mr. Rapp.]

Mr. Woolliams: The Prime Minister agreed to answer this question today, and I see no reason why it should be delayed any further.

Mr. Speaker: I am unaware of that fact. If it is so, it is due to my ignorance. If the Prime Minister is ready to answer it, that is one thing. On the other hand, I do think this is the type of question which should be put on the order paper.

Mr. Woolliams: Then I give notice I wish to debate it at ten o'clock.

MISSION TO EUROPE RESPECTING PREFABRICATED HOUSES

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Maurice Côté (Chicoutimi): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a further question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce, regarding a Canadian delegation of 13 people sent to Europe with regard to prefab houses. Can the minister tell us how many of those thirteen delegates are bilingual, that is who can speak French and English?

[Text]

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I can take this question as notice, or I am sure you would prefer that it be put on the order paper.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

HOLDING OF UNITED STATES CITIZEN IN TORONTO JAIL

On the orders of the day:

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Justice. Is the minister aware that a United States citizen was held in the Don jail in Toronto for 97 days before being charged with any offence? If so, has the minister taken any steps to deal with this disgraceful situation?

Hon. Guy Favreau (Minister of Justice): I will be glad to take this question as notice. I will confer with my colleague the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration and ask for a report. I hope to be in a position to answer on Wednesday.

SPORTS

HOCKEY—NATIONAL CANADIAN TEAM FOR INTERNATIONAL COMPETITION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Eric A. Winkler (Grey-Bruce): I have a question for the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Will the minister inform the house and the country of any plans sponsored by the Canadian hockey association and supported by the fitness and amateur sports council with regard to the establishment of a Canadian hockey team for international competition based here in the nation's capital?

Some hon. Members: Order paper.

Mr. Speaker: Would the hon. member put this on the the order paper.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

POLICY RESPECTING OPERATION OF HOTELS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. J. A. MacLean (Queens): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. I regret not having given him notice. Would the hon. gentleman tell the house what is the current policy of Canadian National Railways with regard to the retention or sale of Canadian National hotels; and specifically, will he tell us whether the C.N.R. hotel at Charlottetown has been sold or is about to be sold?

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): I do not think there is any policy of a general character with regard to this matter. I will inquire of the management of the Canadian National Railways whether there are any negotiations in progress concerning the particular hotel in question.

Mr. G. L. Chatterton (Esquimalt-Saanich): A supplementary question. Can the minister say whether consideration is being given to the transfer of the management of any of the remaining C.N.R. hotels?

Mr. Pickersgill: Not that I know of.

AGRICULTURE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. E. Nasserden (Rosthern): I have a question for the Prime Minister. Is the Prime Minister aware that eggs are selling for as little as 12 and 13 cents a dozen in country stores in Saskatchewan? Will the right hon. gentleman bring this matter before a special committee of the cabinet with a view to relieving the discrimination suffered by producers under the present regulations governing support prices for eggs?

Mr. Speaker: Would the hon. member put this on the order paper.

[Later:]

Mr. Nasserden: Surely an inquiry asking whether the Prime Minister would give consideration to such a proposal should not have to wait for the order paper as you have indicated to us today, Mr. Speaker. I think the Prime Minister should get up and give us a clear answer off the cuff.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): That is a very offensive suggestion, in view of the fact that His Honour has ruled that the question should be put on the order paper. The hon. member is suggesting I should get up and contradict the Speaker.

LABOUR RELATIONS

CONCILIATION BOARD REPORT RESPECTING NON-OPERATING RAILWAY EMPLOYEES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): I wish to address a question to the Minister of Labour and ask him if the conciliation board headed by Mr. Justice Munroe dealing with the matter of wage negotiations with non-operating railway employees has submitted its report and, if so, when it will be published.

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of Labour): The chairman of the conciliation board has delivered a majority report. A minority report is expected very shortly from the third member of the board. When that report is received, steps will be taken to release the two reports.

CANADIAN CENTENNIAL

ISSUE OF COMMEMORATIVE MEDAL MADE IN U.S.

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Secretary of State. Can he tell the house why the builders of the monument to the fathers of confederation, in Charlottetown, have begun distributing a commemorative medal made in the United States rather than in Canada?

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: This is a question for the order paper.

SHIPPING

OWEN SOUND, ONT.—REQUEST FOR HARBOUR IMPROVEMENT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. P. V. Noble (Grey North): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Prime Minister. Does the Prime Minister propose to take early action in respect of the resolution sent to him by the city of Owen Sound in order to remedy the condition of their harbour?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): I will have to look into that resolution, Mr. Speaker.

SUPPLY

Hon. Walter L. Gordon (Minister of Finance) moved that the house go into committee of supply.

LACK OF ACTION TO ASSIST EASTERN AGRICULTURE

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): Mr. Speaker, today is the 25th of May. Like many other Canadians I took the opportunity last week end to travel through parts of our country at this most beautiful time of the year. To my sorrow I find that the country is dividing on the subject of the flag. At a time when all our hopes should be centred upon uniting the country, this matter is now becoming a partisan issue and one, I am afraid, of a deeply emotional character.

This effort on the part of the government to force a shotgun decision on the people of Canada causes us to wonder why. I am going to suggest that one of the reasons for their great haste and the manner in which they are carrying forward this project is that they are desirous of covering up a whole series of sins of omission.

Mr. Woolliams: And commission.

Mr. Hamilton: People are wondering if this is not a device on the part of the government for the purpose not only of hiding the long list of promises unfulfilled, not only to cover up their sins of omission, but also to whitewash their sins of commission or to draw a red herring across the trail. They are wondering whether there is an election coming and, if it is coming sooner than parliament desires, if it is simply because a budget will have to be brought down at the next session of parliament which will involve all sorts of new taxes that will be required to get the government out of its present difficulties.

The subject of the flag is one on which we should all be tending to unite on the basis of a common pride and love not only for the beauty of our country but for those things for which we have stood and fought over the years, but we know that you cannot build up pride in any flag unless there is a record of achievement under that flag. We know that in Canada today discrimination of an economic sort exists. Whether it be among workers in factories of our great cities, people trying to build homes in the suburbs around our great cities or even farmers, as long as discrimination exists you cannot have a strong Canada and there is very little use in talking about a flag around which we can all unite. We cannot talk about rallying the people of this nation in pride around a flag as long as this discrimination exists.

I am going to bring to light something that is not new. It is one of the sins of omission of the government which I believe they are trying to hide with all the emotional discussion about a flag. They are trying to divide Canada to hide the fact that no action has been taken with regard to this particular sin of omission.

The government has been in power for over a year. During that year we have had 60 days of decision and 300 days of retreating. We are wondering where the retreating is going to stop. We would like to see the government not try to hide these vital economic issues by dividing the country on an emotional issue such as the symbol of our sovereignty. We want the government to get on with the job of correcting these economic discriminations.

As one member of the opposition I have tried on several occasions to bring to the attention of the people of Canada the fact that discrimination does exist between the farmers in the better farming areas who have markets for their products and the farmers in other areas which are not so good and who do not have markets. Several times I have brought this matter forward in the house on behalf of the party of which I am a member. Several times other members have supported the points of view I have expressed, yet no action has been taken.

I would recall to the house that on October 14, 1963, I took advantage of the democratic opportunity provided by the rules of the house to move an amendment to a supply motion which dealt with the plight of eastern farmers. I placed on the record at that timetables of statistics from the dominion bureau of statistics and the department concerned to show the level to which a large percentage of the farmers in eastern Canada had fallen. I also included the farmers of British Columbia in my remarks at that time.

Yet on May 25, 1964, I once again have to take advantage of the democratic opportunity provided on a motion for supply under our rules to bring forward matters about which the government has done nothing, in order to direct the attention of the people of Canada once more to the matter of action to assist the eastern farmers. There is much reason to be more satisfied today that this problem is being paid more attention by the public than was the case a year or two ago. Many newspapers are beginning to recognize that as the wealth of the farming community goes, so goes the wealth of the whole nation.

As recently as today that august newspaper the Montreal Gazette tells us how the great sales of wheat to the nations of the world have begun to lift up the economy of Canada and cause it to move forward even faster than before. These great sales of wheat are not enough, Mr. Speaker, unless they are backed by a program that will deal with the trouble spots. All the Liberals can say is, what did you do when you were in power? Once again I should like them to listen to the answer.

After we took power in 1957, following a generation of inactivity by the previous government, we announced a national agriculture program in this house in August, 1958. We systematically tried to carry out that program, and with some success. It was clear that the program was working for those farmers whose operations were of a commercial character, that is farmers who could take advantage of the various pieces of legislation and regulations that we had introduced to build up their economic life. It was also easily apparent that those pieces of legislation, those various acts of the government, were not sufficient to help the farmer at the bottom of the totem pole. We introduced, therefore, the well known piece of legislation called ARDA, the Agricultural Rehabilitation and Development Act. This was a long range program and had to be backed up by a series of regional, short range programs to get at the pressing problems of the areas in agriculture which were not doing well. These areas in agriculture could be found by calculating the income of the farmers.

On October 14 of last year, therefore, I put on the record of the house a series of figures to illustrate where I thought the problem was most serious. At that time I pointed out that we had gone to the country in 1962 and again in 1963 with a program to meet those conditions. We had worked out as a government, I say with some satisfaction, a program which was received well in the rural areas of B.C., the rural areas of the west, the rural areas of Ontario, and yes, even in the rural areas of Quebec and the maritimes, as the number of members here from rural areas indicates. This was a program that received no particular publicity in the city areas. However, it was a sound Canadian program because we realized we could not ever build a strong Canada if some segments of the population were weak.

We were right in 1957 and 1958 in saying that agriculture had to be built up. We attempted to do so. I think we succeeded. But there is no use being complacent about success if some segments of the agricultural population do not share equally in the benefits others are receiving. So on October 14, 1963, I gave the country an opportunity of seeing some of the statistics, and how awful they were.

This battle is slowly being lost because of the fact that we have, as an agency of government, the dominion bureau of statistics. I have in my hand a bulletin issued last Friday, May 22, and it illustrates the reason we are losing the battle. I tried to inform Canadians that there was a problem and that you cannot build a strong Canada if some people remain weak. Listen to this statement which was issued last Friday:

> Farm cash income from farming operations, excluding supplementary payments, in Canada (excluding Newfoundland) was estimated at an all-time high of $3,219.1 million in 1963, up by 2.1 per cent from 1962's preceding peak of $3,154.2 million. Higher receipts from the sale of wheat, coarse grain, tobacco, and poultry and dairy products contributed most to the increase.

This is the type of statement that is detrimental to the efforts we are making in this house to bring to the attention of Canadians a situation which is not good for the people of this country. If you go on and read the advance statement for the whole year, which was compiled by the dominion bureau of statistics, you will find they amended these figures to show that the income was up 2.1 per cent. They say that farm income is up 2.2 per cent. How can you blame the people who write our newspaper articles, who are the medium for education of our people in Canada, when they see this type of statement?

At this point I should like to go back and read the statement the minister made in introducing his estimates in this house on April 24, I believe, just about a month ago. He repeated this statement and held it up to the people of Canada as evidence that everything was well in agriculture. Everything is not well in agriculture, Mr. Speaker. What I want to do now is find out where the truth lies so that hon. members in the house will know. Let those who disseminate information disseminate the truth and not this type of meaningless claptrap.

What is the truth? Let me quote some figures that I think make sense. First of all, the Ethiopian in the woodpile in so far as these figures are concerned is the fact that they refer to net income. Net income is meaningless. It is the silliest sort of thing you ever saw, and I will illustrate that statement by dealing with the figures for the province of Saskatchewan. The net income for the province of Saskatchewan for 1961 is stated as $132 million. In 1962 the net income for the province of Saskatchewan in agriculture is stated as $506 million. Therefore from the year 1961 to the year 1962, farm net income, according to the dominion bureau of statistics, went up nearly four times. Nothing could be more asinine than a statement like that. In 1961 you have all the editors crying how poor the farmer in Saskatchewan is, that all he made was $132 million. In 1962 they said he made $506 million, almost four times as much, so look how wealthy the farmer is. Then everybody gets mad at him.

These figures do not tell the story, Mr. Speaker. If you go on to 1963, the last figures we have, we find the net income for Saskatchewan is shown as $603 million. Everybody says, isn't the farmer doing well? He made $506 million in 1962 and $603 million in 1963, compared with $132 million back in 1961, only two years earlier. These figures do not tell the true story, because it has been assumed that the people who read these statements are knowledgeable as to how the figures are put together, and this is not true.

I should like to put on the record, if I may, the real figures for income for Saskatchewan in those years. In 1961 the realized net income, that is the cash that goes into the farmer's pocket—and that is the only thing that means anything—was not $132 million but was $343 million. These statements that were conceived in the city of Ottawa were out by over $200 million in the case of one province alone. In the year 1962, instead of $506 million, when everybody thought the Saskatchewan farmer was wealthy, the net income was $413 million. The increased income was nothing like $506 million. In 1963, when the published statement showed the net income as $603 million, the farmers' real income was down some $43 million to $370 million. I am glad the Minister of Trade and Commerce is sitting in his seat today because he knows why the income was down last year. He knows 1962 was a good year. He knows 1963 was an even better year.

Why did the farm net income in Saskatchewan go down by $43 million last year, the best year in our history? He knows that last year he would not listen when I, on behalf of the official opposition, proposed that he take certain steps to see that grain could be moved out of the St. Lawrence efficiently. He stated he knew how to move grain; he had been deputy minister under Mr. Howe. What happened? We lost days of shipping time out of the St. Lawrence because of his failure to act. Later on I felt the shipping situation in British Columbia was going bad. He said something would be done and it would be done his way, not my way. He knows that as a result they had to turn down orders for grain through the west coast ports last fall. The businessmen out there showed what they could do when you went out there and challenged them. They shipped 29 million bushels in one month. This drop in farm income was due entirely to this matter of not getting the grain out of the country. So the farmers' income was down this $43 million.

I am not worrying about the Saskatchewan farmer; he knows he will get the money eventually. I am simply pointing out that on these figures of net income, which make such beautiful and wonderful headlines, they tell the city people that the Saskatchewan farmers got up to $603 million in 1963 whereas their real income was not $603 million but about $370 million, just about half.

I would like to explain how you get this difference between realized and net income. People in the d.b.s. who keep these figures are sound statisticians. They are good bookkeepers, and when a farmer earns so much money they call that gross cash income. They take off his operating and depreciation costs and then they get his realized net income, the money in his pocket. They have another figure called inventory, and when a farmer grows a big crop or raises a lot of cattle and does not sell them they add the value to his income, and according to these figures he is very wealthy yet he has not got any money in his pocket.

The next year, when the farmer sells all that surplus, since they added it on to his income the previous year they take it off this year from the money in his pocket. Therefore net income is a meaningless figure, and is only for experts in the back room. I would plead with those who disseminate information in this country to keep away from giving the net income figure. It brings bad feelings between the city and the country, and it does not give a true picture of farm income. What you want to disseminate is the money in the farmers' pocket, and that will tell the story.

Let me tell the grim story of agriculture during the last year or so. I have in my hand figures of the realized net income, in millions of dollars, as issued by the d.b.s., which stated that net farm income was up 2.2 per cent across Canada last year or, according to the revised figures in the last bulletin, up 2.1 per cent. Whether it is 2.2 per cent or 2.1 per cent, it is a fact that there was a decrease in realized net income in every province of Canada, except two, in 1963.

Let me give the figures. In Prince Edward Island in 1958 realized income was $12,579 million, and in 1963 it was down to $6,908 million. I would not want to say it is down by half, but it is getting very close to half what it was a few years ago. This decrease has been going on every year and continued in 1963.

In Nova Scotia in 1958 realized farm income was $15,898 million and in 1963 it was down to $11,161 million. In 1962 it was down to $13,557 million, so this shows a decrease of roughly $5 million in a seven year period. In percentages, it is almost a third.

Surely there must be some New Brunswick members in the house who would be interested in knowing that realized farm income in New Brunswick last year was $12,188 million, in 1962 it was $12,840 million, and seven years ago, in 1958, it was $21,218 million. It is now down to almost half what it was in 1958. Surely this means something to somebody.

In Quebec the situation is static, because the good farmers of Quebec are building up their income while the other 40 per cent or 50 per cent, who are on poor farms, are going steadily downhill, which means that the net result is almost static. In 1958 Quebec realized farm income was $196,645,000 and it dropped to $189,822,000 in 1963. This is not a matter of satisfaction that the good farmer's income is going up while the poor farmer's is going down.

I wonder how many members of parliament from these provinces will stand up and fight for these areas that are not doing so well. These are not just statistics; these are the stories of farmers I have met and known. These are the stories of my fellow Canadians who have a right not just to have a member of parliament in this house, but to have every member of parliament concerned about discrimination against those who are not doing so well.

I could go through the list of the provinces, but let me just leave this one figure with you; that in all the provinces of Canada, with the exception of two, realized farm income went down last year, and those two provinces do not include Saskatchewan and Alberta. We went down too, but we know why we went down and we will correct that. I give those figures because this is the truth and not this meaningless gibberish that comes from the d.b.s., which is of course satisfactory for bookkeepers but should not be used by people who have not reached the mental status where they can understand these figures.

I have tried in blunt terms to put the realized income figures on the record. I do not like to make speeches which are just tearing down the government all the time. I have been quite blunt about what I think is a failure on the part of the government. These points were all brought out in previous years, yet all the government can do is reply "What did you do when you were in power"? We, when we were in power, at least brought to the attention of the people how bad the situation was, and we prepared long range programs. We launched the study of those special areas in eastern Canada where the situation was very bad. The report of that study has never been published and should be made public now.

We were the ones who went into the 1962 and 1963 election campaigns with a program for building up eastern agriculture. We were the government which, in the speech from the throne in 1962, brought in a program to meet the situation, and we were the government which was thrown out of office on the nuclear issue on February 5, 1963, before we could bring our new farm program into effect. We were the ones who brought in a program that would take two or three years to implement, but we were thrown out on what I think was a bogus issue. However, the people of Canada will decide these things in due course.

I now hope that this tendency to quote net income figures, which show how wealthy you are when you are not, and how broke you are when you are not, will come to an end. I hope from now on we will be given the realized net income figures. When he looks at these figures province by province what member of parliament from Quebec, whether he sits on the government side or on the opposition side, is happy to sit here looking at those figures for the last few years? What member of parliament from the province of New Brunswick, no matter on which side of the house he sits, is happy about these figures? What member of parliament from Nova Scotia can be happy about these figures? I know these people, and I know that something has to be done.

Just to show how bad the situation is, if I could have permission from the house I would like to table these two sets of figures so that members could study them. Mr. Speaker, can I have permission to table them? One gives the d.b.s. figures on realized net income and the other gives the figures of income distribution, survey of farms in eastern Canada, preliminary data, prepared in the Department of Agriculture.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Does the hon. member wish these to be printed in Hansard as part of his speech?

Mr. Hamilton: Yes, that is what I ask.

Mr. Favreau: I take it that the reference to this issue and the pages of the d.b.s. releases is on these figures?

Eastern Agricultural Assistance

Mr. Hamilton: I had not put the pages on here, but I have referred to the documents. They are not very big, about two or three pages, and it would not be too hard to find them.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Income distribution, survey farms in eastern Canada (preliminary data)

Sales of farm products	Per cent of families	Total income average per farm	Per cent of total income from: Farm products	Off-farm	social payments dollars	per cent	dollars		per cent
Under 2,500	43	2,800	53	33	14

5,000 and over	23	10,500	92	6	3
All groups	100	5,200	79	15	6

Mr. Hamilton: The second table is from the income distribution survey of farms in eastern Canada, data which was quoted by an official of the Department of Agriculture in 1963, and this table delineates the problem. All I am going to say here is that 43 per cent of the farm families in the eastern part of Canada, that is in the northern and eastern part of Ontario and then on east to Quebec and the Atlantic provinces, have a total income—this is an average figure—of $2,800 or less; and from the tables I put on the record on October 14, 1963, you will see that more than half that income comes from income outside farms. This is total income of $2,800, out of which they have to pay taxes, look after their families and pay farm operating expenses. Of that $2,800, we see that 53 per cent comes from sales of farm produce. This means that 43 per cent of the farmers in the Ottawa valley, the northern part of Ontario, all through Quebec, P.E.I., New Brunswick and Nova Scotia have an average income from their farms, out of which they have to pay all expenses, of roughly $1,400. I submit, Mr. Speaker, that these figures show where the problem lies.

Having made those points, I would like to conclude by suggesting a program for the regions of Canada in which there is this economic discrimination. You will recall, Mr. Speaker, that under the national agricultural program that we laid down in 1958 we proposed a long range program and suggested, in the seventh point, that there should be regional programs to meet regional needs. I am going to list a regional program for eastern Canada to give some direction to the government, not with the idea alone that they should follow these suggestions but to at least give them something they can study. I know they have no ideas of their own at the moment. Their ideas do not show up, at least. Here are the ideas I put forward for their consideration. First, there should be a feed grain policy that stabilizes prices. Second, there should be a fertilizer policy that gets at this job of increasing the income of the low income farmer. Hon. members will see the importance of this by reading from the d.b.s. bulletin of February, 1964 entitled "Farm Net Income, Advanced Statement". It says:

> Farm operating expenses and depreciation charges advanced from the revised estimate...an increase of slightly less than 5 per cent.

Then it says:

> —with the more important increases being recorded for feed, fertilizers and the operation of farm machinery, including repairs.

This means that policies in respect of feed grain and fertilizer should be devised to meet this problem. Feed grain amounts to about 25 per cent of the cost of running an eastern farm, and this is the No. 1 pressing problem.

Fertilizer is growing in importance and this problem should be met head on before the opportunity goes by. With regard to farm machinery, we have heard a great deal from the Minister of Agriculture as to what he is going to do, but there has been no action.

Next is the fourth point. We need some sort of a pasture policy to get increased production off the grass in eastern Canada. Yesterday I was looking at some of these pastures and talking to the farmers about what could be done, and I know there is a very simple way of getting it done. Fifth, we need a water policy for the eastern provinces, something similar to P.F.R.A. and the programs that apply to the west. Then we need a livestock policy for the whole country, with particular reference to the east. Next, as I said when the estimates of the Department of Agriculture were being discussed, there has to be a national dairy policy, because dairy products are now produced and distributed in the whole country—in fact, they even go abroad. We should apply this national dairy policy to the regional problems which exist.

With regard to eastern feed grains, as I said a moment ago this is the No. 1 need. It costs the average eastern farmer 25 per cent of his total expenditures to buy feed grains. Last year when the government made several policy changes in the summer I told them, on behalf of the official opposition, that their policy would not succeed in stabilizing prices. The ordinary person said, "All right; let us wait for a year and see if this policy will stabilize prices". The hon. member for Nicolet-Yamaska (Mr. Vincent) started to give the figures when these estimates were under discussion a couple of weeks ago. He will give the figures tomorrow, which will bear out what I have said that these prices were not stabilized and last winter there was a large jump in the last few months of winter feeding.

The standing committee on agriculture and colonization does offer us some hope in this connection and I would suggest to the government very seriously, and I think with some correctness, that if the members on that committee are allowed to act as an all-party committee, the Liberals, the Conservatives, the N.D.P., Social Credit and the Créditistes, something can be done in this regard. I have looked at the composition of that committee and have measured the calibre of the men on it. We could come up with a strong program supported by all parties if the government will let the members of the committee act as members trying to help agriculture in eastern Canada. I know this question relates to the Minister of Forestry (Mr. Sauvé) and not the Minister of Agriculture, because the Minister of Forestry now looks after this question, but if he will give us a policy statement that the members of this committee could work in a non-partisan way, I think they could come up with an answer to these problems.

With regard to the marginal farmer, after the report of January, 1963 I gave some figures to the house on October 14 of that year, and I suggest to the Minister of Agriculture that he should let us have this report. If we have it I think some of us will be able to come forward and make some policy suggestions which will really help solve some of the problems faced by the marginal farmer. In my previous remarks on this subject last year I suggested that action be taken along educational and sociological lines, but we need the full report on this subject so that our policies can be based on fact and be made more effective.

I have almost concluded my remarks, Mr. Speaker, but I wish to wind up by saying that I do not think it is enough for the Liberal members on the other side of the chamber, when I quote these figures of low income in eastern Canada, to stand up and say, "What did you do?" That shows an empty mind and a bankruptcy of ideas. I would ask them to just remember that ARDA gets at the job on a long range basis, and they will only hinder the solution of these problems by the kind of monkeyshines to which I referred in a previous debate. ARDA will point the way a little bit, but something more is necessary. I ask the government to remember that the Conservative party drew up this program to help eastern agriculture. It helped eastern agriculture in 1962 and 1963, and we should be prepared to act upon it now.

Surely, Mr. Speaker, we do not have to draw a diagram for the government. We know they are out of ideas, but we are simply asking them to accept our positive suggestions and begin to move on them. There is no use at all saying that there are going to be amendments to the Farm Credit Corporation Act to double the amount lent from $20,000 to $40,000, and so on. This does not get at the problem of the little farmer. There is no use at all saying there will be amendments to the Crop Insurance Act, because this only helps those provinces where crop insurance is in effect; those are the only farmers who would benefit from these amendments. I ask the government not to tell us they contemplate taking some secret action with regard to farm machinery; I ask them to bring this action forward so we may consider it.

I am simply saying, Mr. Speaker, that at this moment we should seriously consider this amendment to the resolution to go into committee:

That all the words after "That" be deleted and the following substituted therefor:

"this house regrets the continuing failure of the government to take effective action with regard to the pressing agricultural problems of eastern Canada".

I am moving this motion, Mr. Speaker, seconded by the hon. member for Nicolet-Yamaska, and I have a copy here in French. While these copies are being distributed I would like to wind up by simply saying that at this time hon. members of the house should, with their vote, make sure that we are not using the flag issue as something to hide the real problems facing Canada today. It will bring more satisfaction to the workers in our cities, as I said earlier, the people in our suburbs, and our farmers, if they know that this house is moving to solve the economic problems that are causing unrest, and is not using matters such as the flag, and other matters, to cover up the real economic problems facing Canada.

Mr. Favreau: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I submit that the present amendment should be declared out of order because the matter has already been submitted to the house and passed upon in the form of a previous motion, although the said motion was not worded in exactly the same manner.

May I refer Your Honour to the Votes and Proceedings of this house for Monday, May 4, 1964, page 284, to a motion that Mr. Speaker do now leave the chair. The hon. member for Brandon-Souris (Mr. Dinsdale), seconded by the hon. member for Victoria-Carleton (Mr. Flemming), moved an amendment to that motion in the following terms:

That the motion be amended by striking out all the words after "That" and substituting therefor:

"this house condemns the neglect of the government"—

Then the motion follows, and concludes in this manner:

"And urges the government, in the interests of national development, to take immediate action to make up for the year of neglect of this problem by forthwith:

(1) establishing a national advisory committee on water resources to assist in co-ordinating national resource development;

(2) accelerating the application of ARDA policies to the problems of national resource development.

Just in case an attempt might be made to argue that the first amendment put by the hon. member for Brandon-Souris on Monday, May 4 ought to be interpreted as limited to referring to the protection of water resources, I would draw to Your Honour's attention that on the same date a subamendment was proposed and that that subamendment dealt squarely and completely with all policies relating to ARDA, and therefore to eastern agriculture. That amendment is to be found at page 285 of Votes and Proceedings and reads as follows:

—"and practical steps in the best interests of national development to accelerate the application of ARDA policies."

If one refers to Votes and Proceedings for Tuesday, May 5, 1964, one notes first at page 289 that the subamendment to which I have just referred is recorded as having been substantially defeated. Then at page 290 the principal amendment is also reported as having been defeated.

May I repeat for Your Honour the last part of standing order 35 of the rules of this house, which reads as follows:

No member may reflect upon any vote of the house, except for the purpose of moving that such vote be rescinded.

It is a rule of practice in this house that whenever a question has been decided in the course of a session the matter be not put again to the house by way of amendment in the same session. I should like to quote first of all citation 200 (1) of Beauchesne's fourth edition, which is to be found at page 167.

(1) An old rule of parliament reads: "That a question being once made and carried in the affirmative or negative, cannot be questioned again but must stand as the judgment of the house." Unless such a rule were in existence, the time of the house might be used in the discussion of motions of the same nature and contradictory decisions would be sometimes arrived at in the course of the same session.

Lastly I should like to quote citation 203 (7) of Beauchesne's fourth edition, which is to be found at page 172:

(7) Mr. Speaker Sproule on the 13th February, 1913, decided that a proposed amendment which was substantially the same motion as the member had moved on the address in reply to the speech from the throne, was not in order because "a motion must not raise a question substantially identical with one on which the house has given a decision in the same session".

For that reason I suggest respectfully that the amendment ought to be declared out of order.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Speaker, before the minister sits down will he permit a question. Would he expand a little on his contention, which I do not think he has yet established, that there is an identity between the previous motion and this one? Or to be more specific does he contend that ARDA and eastern agriculture are identical?

Mr. Baldwin: Well, might we have the amendment read to us?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. Before we proceed further to hear arguments for or against the acceptability of the motion, it might be put to the house at this time. The hon. member for Qu'Appelle (Mr. Hamilton), seconded by the hon. member for Berthier-Maskinongé-Delanaudière (Mr. Paul), for the hon. member for Nicolet-Yamaska (Mr. Vincent), moves:

That all the words after "That" be deleted and the following substituted therefor:

"this house regrets the continuing failure of the government to take effective action with regard to the pressing agricultural problems of eastern Canada".

Mr. Lambert: Mr. Speaker, although I have the greatest respect for the government house leader I must say that I find his argument somewhat tenuous. He has indicated in reading to Your Honour the citations from Beauchesne that for this motion to be out of order it must be in substantial agreement with a previous one. If we look at the motion which was put forward by my colleague from Brandon-Souris (Mr. Dinsdale) on May 4, we see that that motion called for water resource development; and all through the motion there is reference to water resources management, pollution of national waters and, the urgent necessity for conserving water resources for the benefit of national resources development in Canada. He advocated a national advisory committee on water resources, and accelerating the application of ARDA policies to the problem of national resource development.

Mr. Pickersgill: What about the subamendment?

Mr. Lambert: We did not move any subamendment.

Mr. Gregoire: I had one.

Mr. Favreau: Mr. Speaker, I referred expressly to the second paragraph at the top of page 285 of Votes and Proceedings and I said that the subamendment referred to there was directly related and referred to ARDA policies, and that this subamendment was defeated.

Mr. Lambert: On the other hand, Mr. Speaker, I submit that without regard to any subamendment which may have been put, whether rightly or wrongly, this present motion is dealing primarily with the pressing agricultural problems of eastern Canada. This motion has to do with dairy policy; it has to do with feed grain policy; it may have to do with cheese and cheese pricing policies; it may have to do with pasture and other matters. The question of water resources is incidental. I cannot for the life of me see how the present amendment which has been put forward by the hon. member for Qu'Appelle (Mr. Hamilton) can be deemed to be substantially in agreement—and those are the key words—with any other motion. With the greatest respect I feel that the Minister of Justice (Mr. Favreau) is really on very thin ice—

An hon. Member: He has already fallen through.

Mr. Lambert: —in arguing that this amendment is out of order; and not only is he on thin ice, but as one of my hon. friends suggests he has burst through.

Mr. Baldwin: He has gotten all wet.

Mr. Lambert: May I go further and on behalf of the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) say that he has gotten all wet. I do suggest, Mr. Speaker, that the amendment put forward by my hon. friend from Qu'Appelle (Mr. Hamilton) is quite within the rules of this house and may properly be put forward at this time.

Mr. Baldwin: I think my hon. friend from Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) has more than adequately dealt with the objection that the main motion is identical in substance with the amendment moved on a previous occasion. I should like to direct attention to the question of the subamendment, also referred to by the Minister of Justice (Mr. Favreau) as it appears on page 284 of Votes and Proceedings. I think Your Honour was in the chair at the time the subamendment was moved by the hon. member for Lapointe (Mr. Grégoire), and I think Your Honour then entertained some doubt as to the validity of this amendment, because it did not appear to fall within the four corners of the amendment moved by the hon. member for Brandon-Souris (Mr. Dinsdale). In order to be relevant, the subamendment must be related to the main amendment as it appears on page 284. That amendment, as my hon. friend from Edmonton West has pointed out, was directed primarily to the question of water resources and water development. If one takes a close look at the subamendment, one finds that the real pith and substance of it was represented by the words "the best interests of national development". This was a motion relating to national development. Incidentally, it said, in effect, that national development would be stimulated by accelerating the use of the ARDA program. But the ARDA program was incidental; it was the means to be used in providing for national development.

There is all the difference in the world between national development promoted by the use of ARDA and the amendment moved by my hon. friend from Qu'Appelle, who has devoted his speech and his amendment to the interests of the farmers of eastern Canada. If the subamendment moved by the hon. member for Lapointe had been restricted solely to this question, Your Honour would have been bound to rule it out of order. You did not do so because you related it to the broader issue of water resources and water conservation, and all the other matters referred to by the hon. member for Brandon-Souris.

[Translation]

Mr. Gilles Grégoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, the subamendment I introduced a few weeks ago concerned mainly the so called ARDA legislation, while the amendment proposed today by the hon. member for Qu'Appelle (Mr. Hamilton) deals with the urgent problems of eastern farming.

Now, the government itself recognizes that ARDA and eastern farming are two different things, and that is evidenced by the fact that they appoint a minister to look after ARDA and another one, for agriculture. If two ministers are appointed, it means that those two fields are different, unless the government would be prepared to admit that one of the two ministers is useless. Then, we would admit that ARDA and eastern farming are the same thing.

That is why I submit that an amendment concerning the application of the ARDA program and another one concerning eastern farming in Canada and the application of solutions to urgent problems of eastern farming in Canada are not the same thing and are the subject matter of two completely different amendments. ARDA is concerned with certain matters and the Minister of Agriculture with certain other matters, as, for instance, the farm credit policy, which comes under agriculture but not necessarily under the ARDA program.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I think that from the government's own admission, the ARDA program and the agricultural policy, while being apparently related in certain fields, nevertheless constitute two different matters and that the amendment as moved by the hon. member for Qu'Appelle should, in my opinion, be accepted.

[Text]

Mr. Favreau: In order to make more precise the argument I was using a few moments ago, may I say, in reply to the hon. member—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I am wondering whether the house wishes the Minister of Justice to be allowed to speak twice to the same question. I appreciate that this is a small debate on a point of order and that perhaps the house would wish to hear the Minister of Justice again. But if I may say something at this point, let me assure the house that the mind of the Chair is pretty well made up, having heard arguments both in favour of and against the proposition put forward by the Minister of Justice. I would be prepared to give a brief ruling on the matter if the house is prepared to hear it.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Objection has been taken by the Minister of Justice to the motion moved by the hon. member for Qu'Appelle on the grounds that the subject matter of the motion is substantially the same as one moved earlier. I am sure the essence of the motion made earlier in the session had reference to water resources. Certainly, there is a marked difference between a motion dealing with the natural resources of Canada and the motion just made by the hon. member for Qu'Appelle.

The Minister of Justice referred to the subamendment proposed by the hon. member for Lapointe at that time. I think I should mention, now, that when this amendment was proposed there was some difficulty in deciding whether or not it was acceptable. The special difficulty which the Chair encountered was that the motion had been moved in the English language while the subamendment was in the French. The subamendment referred, of course, to the words in the amendment, so it was almost impossible to decide at once whether the subamendment was acceptable. In any event, because it was felt that the hon. member for Lapointe should be given the benefit of the doubt, the subamendment was accepted at the time.

In my opinion the proposition then made by the hon. member for Lapointe referred specifically to government policies in connection with ARDA and, as has been suggested by some of the members who have taken part in this discussion, there is a difference between ARDA and general agricultural policies in eastern Canada. For this reason I feel the motion of the hon. member for Qu'Appelle is within the rules and should be accepted.

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): I was very surprised to learn that the amendment today would be on agriculture, because of the auspicious beginning of the statement by the former minister of agriculture dealing with another subject. I was also surprised to learn that the subject matter of the hon. member's speech has been discussed every time the subject of agriculture has been before the house for the past two years. It was a good speech in the beginning and there was a good deal to commend it to the people. But a great deal of the information and philosophy in that speech have now been accomplished, and I think if anyone intends to move a non-confidence motion he should do it on a much broader scale.

It also strikes me as being very odd to hear someone say he wishes to make a non-political speech and a non-partisan suggestion on the basis of a non-political scheme for the economy—a scheme for agriculturists and farmers across Canada—and then in a partisan way go ahead to move a motion of no confidence. This may fit in with the rest of the speech, and maybe it becomes an amusing matter, but I doubt this because many of us know that the concern felt for agriculture is fairly fundamental across the nation; it does not apply only to eastern agriculture. Although the problems may be more pressing in that area, there is a great similarity between the problems in eastern Canada and those that have been brought to our attention by many of those representing the western farmers.

The concern for agriculture is a continuing one, and one that warrants some consideration. One matter of concern is the operations of the committee on agriculture. Since I have had the honour of being a member of that committee, and it may be a dubious honour on many occasions, the committee has discussed several very important problems. But whether the government of Canada is Conservative or Liberal we find that there is a failure on the part of the government to relate the work done by members of parliament in the committee to actual legislation.

I should like to refer to one such committee of several years ago. We heard briefs from every farm machinery company, every farm organization and from many individuals. Certainly the work done by the committee as a whole and by individual members of the committee should be commended. It was very interesting to hear members of the committee speak about farm machinery prices and point out some of the difficulties on the basis of their own experience. They knew exactly what they were talking about. They knew how to solve the problem and could offer clear and definite suggestions to improve the situation.

But what do we do? The Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Hays) gets up and says that this is one of the most pressing problems. Pressing, my foot! If it was pressing why did he not refer it to the committee this year? What has the committee got before it now? The tobacco industry. This is also a very important field, but we spent a year discussing the subject of farm machinery. I have a cabinet full of submissions made by farm organizations, the proceedings of our investigations and studies that were prepared on our behalf. We got half way into the matter and then what happened? I do not know what happened, but certainly no government acted on the matter. All the material we gathered has just stayed in the files in the minister's office as it has in mine. If the minister wants to do anything about the matter all he needs to do is to look at his files and he will find there are quite a number of things he can do. He does not need to go to the committee again to ascertain what they are. There are many very simple things that can be done.

We should eliminate the morass of equipment available which cannot be interchanged with other equipment. Every time a new tractor is produced it probably makes obsolete all the equipment that the older tractor drew behind it. It is a very simple thing to make the hydraulic connections the same for all tractors. If necessary we can pass a law saying that they will all be of a specific size and interchangeable. It is not hard to do. The minister wants to help the farmers to save money. This would probably save my brother $1,000 a year because of the equipment he uses on his farm.

I am sure there are many members here who operate farms on a much larger scale where the saving would be much larger. The minister knows this. He has studied this problem. But what do we do about it? Every member of the house who stands up and makes a speech like that made by the hon. member for Qu'Appelle (Mr. Hamilton) is drawing a red herring, like the red flag, across the problems of agriculture. The hon. member did not really make any specific suggestion. What he was doing was drawing a vision.

I could go into all aspects of the farm machinery situation. We listened to the subject being discussed for months. From the farm machinery companies we certainly heard some of the most fantastic financial reports that have come before a committee of the house in many years. If there ever was a free wheeling, international dealing bunch of financiers it is those in the farm implement industry.

What does the minister do about the matter? Does he have to sit in his seat and say he does not understand, that he does not know anything about it? Can he honestly say that he cannot stand up in the house and make even one suggestion that will help to solve some of the problems? We do not need a committee. The problem has been discussed. It would have been nice if we could have gone to Europe and seen what some of the other countries were doing. What did the Conservative government say? They said it could not be done now, that they would have to go back to the house and get permission. You know the old story: Put it off till tomorrow; don't worry about the bridge because we may never get there, and it will not matter whether it is up or down.

This situation has been going on for a long time. If we wanted to do something about the farm machinery problem the committee should have been continued. I have not heard the minister stand up in the house and say: Let us get the committee organized immediately. I attended the first meeting of the steering committee the other day. We all know that last year I made a real fuss about calling the committee to meet and that members of the government would not come to the meetings because they did not want the committee to meet. I do not want to have to go through that again. I can be a proper s.o.b. if I have to, but I do not want to have to be all the time. I am quite happy for somebody else to do it. But some of the responsibility falls on the minister. Every farmer in the country knows something about the problem.

There is another thing that is very simple. In the defence committee we decided that there would be standardization of nut and bolt sizes. So far as the farmers are concerned, if this were done the farmer would know he would get the right size when he sent to town for half a dozen bolts to fix his plow. They would be standardized. Now there are many different sizes being used. Many of these things will save the farmer a hundred dollars a year.

The former minister went on to talk about other problems. One he named was feed grain. What did we do about feed grain? The committee sat and received a very good education in the matter. I have learned a lot about agriculture and the wheat deal. I always said that the wheat board made the deal. The former minister said that he had made the wheat deal with China. I find out that he is wrong, too. The people who made the deal were people we did not know existed. The free wheeling grain brokers of this country were the people who made the wheat deal.

We found out quite a bit about feed grain. We got quite an education. But surely I was not elected just to be educated, Mr. Speaker. Once we have the knowledge surely we should be able to make legislative decisions on these matters. But what did we do? The minister did not even ask that the matter of feed grain be referred again to the committee so they could solve the problem of the eastern farmers in this regard. Instead, the subject of tobacco was referred to the committee. This came about because somebody introduced a very dangerous, political resolution on the tobacco problem. It was referred to the committee because otherwise it might have been voted on in the house and something might have actually had to be done about it. What a red herring that turned out to be.

I am not saying that the tobacco problem is not important. It is important, but surely we should settle one problem before we jump into something else. Let us not play around with things and use them as red herrings. Is the committee simply a rug under which to sweep everything? Are we to discuss a matter for a little while and then take up a new problem and sweep the other one under the rug? The problem of feed grain could have been solved.

I have reports from farmers in this area that are in conflict with the statements we received with regard to the grain that was being held in this area for consumption on the farms last winter. I find that in the Arnprior area the price went up $7 or $8. This should not have happened, of course, because the grain was already in storage in the great lakes area or at Prescott. The minister had made provision for the storage costs so there would be no increase in the price of grain during the year. Yet the price went up $7 or $8. My colleague says that parliament did it. Parliament can only act when the minister brings matters before us. In my opinion this is where he fails all the time. He does not bring the right things before parliament. If he would give us the opportunity to do something about these problems we would settle them in a very short time because we all know what they are.

We spent a substantial amount of money on storage charges for feed grain. Yet I am told that between Christmas and the 1st of February the price of grain in the Arnprior area went up $7 a ton. If it was the fault of the handler of the grain, whether it be a co-operative or a feed merchant, let us say so. Let us put the blame where it belongs. But if there was a failure to do what was necessary to get the grain into position where the farmer could have a continuous supply at an even cost, then let us do something about that and not blame somebody else. But at least let us know where the fault lies. The only way we could have found this out would have been to have the committee continue. I ask the minister why he did not do this? Is he afraid of it?

I have never seen such whitewashing organizations as the committees of the House of Commons. I do not see how anybody could be afraid of referring anything to them. The committees get so confused, so deeply involved, they never do come to any decision. I have sat on many committees but I never sat on one that made a constructive or comprehensive decision. These are two of the things that were suggested. What does the agriculture committee concern itself with now? I am not talking about the beginning of the session, but now, at a time when the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) has said we have to pass 37 new items or we do not have any summer holiday. At this time we are being asked to sit in a committee as well, so that we can get that out of the way.

There are problems in agriculture, but we should start doing something about them. I have a particular problem in my area that concerns me very much. I refer to the matter of credit, and I have heard the minister say a great deal about credit. I am not speaking about the farmer who can get credit from a bank, but about the farmer who cannot get credit anywhere. I am speaking of the farmer who has to increase his unit in order to make an economic unit that will produce enough agricultural products to provide his family with a living, and him with enough money to repay his loan. This seems to me to be the field in which the federal government must act in extending farm credit. It is in this field that they have failed. I could say they have failed for many reasons, and one of them might be the patronage that has been involved in the legal work connected with the extension of farm credit.

I do not believe this is true. On the other hand, I do not believe it is entirely without foundation. The situation is no better with Conservative lawyers than with Liberal lawyers. Both of them have been exceptionally slow in processing applications. In northern Ontario we have snow for about six months of the year and conditions are such that you cannot do the actual evaluation of properties. If the local people hold up an application and the season in which the evaluation can be made goes by, then that evaluation is delayed sometimes a year or 18 months. This has happened many times. Few of the farmers in my area are wealthy. Their farm units are small, about 150 acres. Many of them have a substandard of living on this small income. Some farmers supplement their income by working at odd jobs on the highways or in the bush during the wintertime. They are interested in developing an economic unit that will provide for their families. When they ask the Farm Credit Corporation for a loan of $2,000 or $3,000, the corporation says the loan cannot be extended because the farmer would not have an economic unit.

These farmers are living on these units and raising families. They must consider them to be economic units. One of the great drawbacks arises from the fact that the department has been valuing land at about $25 per acre. In northern Ontario clearing the land costs about $50 an acre. If it costs $50 an acre to clear land, then I think it would be poor business if that land did not become worth $50 an acre. Then, of course, one gets into the ARDA program and the question of whether or not this land should have become agricultural land, or whether it should have been developed for something else. Perhaps if the minister were to extend credit for a shorter term on small amounts, the farmers could get started and it would be of great help to the farmers.

I do not make the suggestion that I know the answer to this problem. I may be wrong in wanting to extend small loans to farmers for a shorter period of time to enable them to buy the farm across the road for $3,000 or $5,000. However, I believe the minister is wrong in saying it is not possible to do this. The committee should meet so that we could hear the experts in this field who would be able to tell us what the situation would be if this type of credit were established on a regional basis. I know hundreds of farmers in my area who would be helped by loans of $1,000 or $2,000 if this type of credit were established to permit them to purchase additional land in the locality.

I am sure the same conditions apply in Quebec. There is a similarity between agriculture in northern Ontario and in parts of northwestern Quebec. I feel that farm credit could be extended on a regional basis with better results than are now achieved under the Farm Credit Corporation. If you do not ask for $25,000 when you make an application to the Farm Credit Corporation, they think you are nuts; you are not really in the farming business and you are not working an economic unit.

I can assure you there are many workers in Canada who would like us to permit Household Finance Corporation to make loans of $10,000 to householders. If we did this, we would only compound their problems and they would owe $10,000 instead of $2,000. This would not be a good thing. If some of the farmers in my area were to borrow $25,000, they would be putting their children under a mortgage for a lifetime. I do not believe this would be an advantageous thing. It might not be desirable, and it might not meet the needs of many of my people.

I receive many letters asking me for assistance in connection with farm credit problems. These people get a heck of a lot more assistance from the junior farm loan board in Ontario than they do from the Farm Credit Corporation. I feel that is a disgrace because the federal government is in a position to extend credit to a greater degree than that which is extended by Ontario, where there is an age limit for the applicant.

There are many other problems in agriculture, and there are a few that the minister does not know about. There is one to which I should like to ask him to give consideration and that is the change in the cheese subsidy. He lowered the subsidy by one cent. The cheese producers, in my opinion, have done an excellent job of disposing of their own product. They seem to have been in the same position as the wheat pools, the Canadian wheat board, and yes even the minister, in connection with selling wheat. They have been able to go into the external markets and sell their products. It is gratifying to find that Canadian cheddar cheese is at a premium of 8 cents or 10 cents per pound on the English market. I think it is gratifying to the Canadian producers, and it must be gratifying also to those who are interested in agriculture products to find that last year cheese exports to Great Britain amounted to between four million and five million pounds. This has been accomplished by the farmer in co-operation with the federal government, which has granted a subsidy of four cents. I understand the minister has dropped the subsidy by one cent.

We may be confused, and certainly the minister may be, by the problem of getting rid of surplus agricultural products. He may have been confused by the fact that we are getting rid of the butter oil surplus. I say, however, that we are not getting rid of it; we have thrown it away. It is very simple to figure out the amount of storage we pay each year. At the end of a few years storage costs amount to 15 cents, and after that, when you ship it some place and sell it for 27 cents there is no money for the federal government in such a process. I do not say that we should not give it away, but let us not get confused about it and think that we have done a good job. There comes a time when I have to liquidate my car because it is not economical for me to keep it any longer. It may be the same with our butter oil. It may be that we should not hold on to it any longer, but let us not tell everybody that we made 27 cents out of it, because we did not make anything out of it.

We can upset the balance in the dairy industry very easily by playing with one particular commodity. Over the years there was a good export market for Canadian cheddar cheese, but we are all aware of the fact that we loused that market up in Great Britain and that it took a great deal of effort to get it back. The Ontario cheese producers have spent a lot of their own money in Great Britain promoting the sale of cheddar cheese, and the Ontario cheese marketing board has done an excellent job, with the co-operation of the government through the subsidy it paid. I would like the minister to stand up and justify the stopping of that one cent subsidy. That subsidy would not cost the Canadian people millions of dollars, but it does cost them $50 million to subsidize butter.

The minister has some fairly good advisers and I would like to compliment one of them, Mr. Phillips, who seems to know a great deal about the Department of Agriculture. In fact, I may say he is alone in knowing anything about it, because quite a few people in it have not been able to give information to members of the public who went to the department seeking information. I believe this official could do very well if he were promoted to a top public relations job, mainly because he is willing to find out some of the problems that exist in the department, and the solutions for them.

In my opinion the minister will have to justify the dropping of this one cent subsidy. Is it not a matter of pride to him that we can export raw milk cheese to Great Britain? Is it his desire to have a price competition take place between New Zealand and Canada, so that either the importers in England will not hold our cheese long enough to give it the seasoning it needs, or the sale to them will take place on the basis of different prices over the contract year?

One of the reasons that we have been able to sell our cheese so successfully is that we have had a contract price that applied over the year, not taking into consideration the delivery date. A subsidy of four cents has brought about this situation, and I think the minister should continue that subsidy.

My father has spent a lifetime in the dairy industry in eastern Canada and he informs me that the most complex problem existing today is that we have not been able to pool milk in Ontario, and there has been a fight taking place between the concentrated milk industry, the whole milk industry and the processed milk industry. They must have an integrated relationship between their costs of production, and unless the whole industry is organized under one marketing agency this situation will continue. The minister should know this. Surely he did not drop that one cent subsidy so that he could save the money on the whole stabilization program? If he did, then I say it is a very expensive economy and one that we should not be making.

I have not made any suggestions because I do not really think that agriculture is a subject for a vote of confidence in the government. This government has not changed anything except to drop the one cent subsidy I have been speaking about. We can drift along for the next few years without improving the situation, so long as great changes are not made, and the question of confidence rests on whether or not the government is capable of giving leadership in agriculture.

The farmer has scratched along for many years and will probably be able to carry on for a few more years. The question is whether the government is able to give the necessary leadership. To date it has not, and I believe I am fair in saying that.

The Conservatives have been able to travel on ARDA for a long time. That is a very good piece of legislation, and it may be that the government is right in separating ARDA from the Department of Agriculture. ARDA is a long range program, but in my opinion it will never solve all the agricultural problems of the farmer. It is a program designed to put agricultural land back into more profitable production than hitherto existed under marginal farming in eastern Canada. It is a long range program, and the only question is what the government is going to do about it today.

The idea of ARDA was very good. I supported it and thought it an excellent long range program, but in my area it has become a political weapon. If you vote Conservative you are apt to get your cattle placed on the community pasture, but if you don't you won't. The reason is because Ontario runs the ARDA program, not the federal government. As with many things, the federal government has given it up to the province. The federal government does not believe in strong centralized government and in a strong centralized ARDA program; it believes in decentralization.

An hon. Member: Tell it to the Tory cows.

Mr. Peters: It has become a Tory cow in my area. As a matter of fact, I recall the story of a well known merchant in my area who brought in seed potatoes and offered them to the farmers to grow for him, but it did not turn out that way because the fertilizer costs were as much as his share of the crop. Those people now want to buy cows to put them on the community pasture, and this sort of thing is taking place all the time.

I do not really think the amendment is a question of confidence in the government. I have heard the story that the minister is a slow starter. In fact I think he repeated it himself. He is a well known international auctioneer, and in this context may I say I am always amused when a drunk stands up at an auction and tries to give the auctioneer a hard time. This also sometimes happens at political meetings, but I have never known an auctioneer to be troubled by that type of person. If the minister is a slow starter I hope he will be able to come back with the answers and provide the repartee that is necessary. The question of confidence rests on whether the government is going to take early action. The minister himself has mentioned the four things with which the amendment is concerned. He has said these are the problems that face our farmers and he has personal knowledge of them. I have personal knowledge of them, too, as has every person in this house who was raised on a farm. These problems, as we all know, are farm machinery, stabilization of income, feed grains, a pasture policy, and water conservation. We each have some knowledge of these matters. The vote of confidence will be called on whether or not in the very near future the minister is prepared to bring legislation before parliament that will solve, for the farmers of Canada, some of these very important agricultural problems.

[Translation]

Mr. Marcel Lessard (Lake St. John): Mr. Speaker, we have again today an opportunity to discuss agriculture. This reminds me that on several occasions farmers in my riding pointed out that there were many references to agriculture made in this house, but that there were very few results.

I think that we have again an opportunity to deal with agriculture in our country more especially, since such is the subject matter of the non-confidence motion: the problem of agriculture in eastern Canada, that is in Ontario, in the province of Quebec and the maritime provinces.

I feel that we should admit, as stated by the former minister of agriculture, the hon. member for Qu'Appelle (Mr. Hamilton), that agriculture is a basic problem in Canada, since we have always been concerned with agriculture and its related problems. I feel that this is a basic problem. It must be recognized just the same that agriculture is also a basic industry and that we depend on it to a large extent.

This brings me to the main point of the discussion, namely that, in our country, agriculture seems to be the only industry in which the producer is not sure of making a profit on his product.

In general, an uneconomic industry does not survive. It disappears immediately. But this is impossible for agriculture.

How is it that, in Canada, an industry as widespread and long standing as agriculture, and established throughout the country, is uneconomic for those concerned, for the farmers themselves?

Why is it that the industry in general can set for its product a price including a profit, whereas the farmer, the man who produces and feeds the country, cannot set the price of its product, including in it the profit he is entitled to just like any other producer?

That of course raises a point which is related to farm organization as well as to numerous farm associations throughout the country, which makes it very difficult to unite them. Consequently, it is difficult also to get all the farmers to accept an agricultural policy that would enable them to control the sale of their own products in order to benefit from it themselves, and not leave the profit to middlemen who are not producers but just professionals in haggling and trade who benefit from the farm industry at the expense of the producer and the consumer.

I know that in the province of Quebec in particular the problem of agriculture is truly acute because the value of farms has been decreasing for a number of years. That situation is due to several factors, the main one being the steady increase in production costs.

Farmers had to face a period of automation, a rise in the prices of by-products and a rise in taxes. They had to face all kinds of increases. They had to adjust by themselves to a general increase in the standard of living, while at the same time, their income could not keep up with that general increase.

I believe that in view of the fact that farming in Quebec is quite special, because it was based formerly on the family farm, covering a small area, it must be recognized that the farm problem in eastern Canada, and in Quebec in particular, requires very special attention.

In the province of Quebec the farming industry is confined mainly to the butter and cheese production. The Quebec dairy industry is for the farmer the main source of income.

When, once in a while, the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Hays) announces with great satisfaction that he has succeeded in amending regulations in the field of agriculture to make savings I wonder who has asked him to reduce the expenditures of his department. I cannot think of a single instance where an hon. member, a group or an association in Canada brought pressure to bear on the federal government for some reduction in the estimates of the Department of Agriculture.

If there is one federal department which is absolutely necessary and which requires more money, it is the Department of Agriculture.

In my opinion, it is absolutely out of proportion to spend something like $180 million on agriculture at present, whereas defence expenditures total the fantastic amount of $1,500 million.

I can certainly assure the minister that he will never have to face reprisals in the house for having authorized his department to draw larger amounts from the national treasury if these funds are used to help our farmers. I can also assure him that he will always obtain the support of all the members of this house.

Recently, he announced certain amendments to the regulations concerning cheese and butter. This leads me to raise a point which is particularly interesting for the dairy producers of Quebec, that is the quotas which apply to them. The fluid milk producer who delivers his product as such for consumption is submitted to delivery quotas. These delivery quotas do not cover his entire production and surpluses must be used for cheese production. In that case, he is not entitled to any assistance or grant because he is allowed a quota for fluid milk. In my opinion, it would be advisable to amend these regulations and to see that farmers who are selling fluid milk up to 400 or 500 pounds are granted the same rights and subsidies for milk delivered for cheese production, because at the present time, they do not receive any assistance from the government for their 300 or 400 pounds of surplus. This is completely discriminatory and unfair, since we are not helping the farmers.

The minister reduced the assistance with one hand and he increased it with the other to induce the cheese makers to produce a better quality cheese. If it is the minister's intention, through such a policy, to encourage the production of a better quality cheese, I am all for it, and I am convinced besides that all the producers and farmers in the dairy industry and in the cheese industry in particular, agree that this objective be followed so that we get a quality production which will be easier to market. In addition, even while trying to help the farmer to do better, I think that the minister has no right to deprive him from an extra income by reducing the assistance which he offers him in another field. If he wants to encourage him to do better, let him offer him more. To reduce the assistance with one hand while increasing it with the other, does not show much discernment.

I hope that the minister will strive to adapt his policy in that respect, because I think that in the months or even the days ahead, he will have to face the general outcry of the farmers' associations from the province of Quebec who will come here in order to make their point with regard to that new policy. I became convinced of it after reading the resolutions which appeared in the newspapers in my own area—and which were carried by the farmers' associations—dealing with the effects of that new government's decision.

We want to increase farm production, we want to make farming more stable economically; but then we have to provide markets to our farmers. We want our farms to expand and to become mechanized so as to produce more. Why? We know that according to statistics, there are surpluses already.

Mr. Speaker, it is useless to urge our farmers to increase their production if we are unable at the same time to ensure markets for their products so that they might sell them at a fair price. I feel that the Minister of Agriculture, in co-operation with the minister of trade (Mr. Sharp), should strive to find markets for farmers.

I should like to suggest to the minister that he read the reports given to the papers recently by his predecessor, the hon. member for Qu'Appelle, following his trip to China where he apparently found tremendous markets for Canadian farmers.

Everybody here knew that those markets existed. We all knew that those markets existed in mainland China and that over 600 million Chinese are starving, a great number of whom are doing without the bare minimum. It is obvious that there is a market in China for the Canadian farm production.

Incidentally, I should like, at this stage, to point out to the minister that there is room for more consumers here in Canada, as there are surely Canadians who are still not getting the three meals a day to which they have a right. I suggest that the Minister of Agriculture and his colleagues should take a sympathetic interest in our farmers, especially those who are at present suffering the greatest hardships.

You are aware of the fact that the Saguenay region, where I come from, as well as the province of Quebec, is going through hard times. It has long been said that the Saguenay region was blueberry country. Well, Mr. Speaker, I regret to say that this has not been true for a number of years.

It has been the fame of the area for a long time but it is now a thing of the past, since that industry moved into the maritimes. We even have some colleagues who are amongst the most important producers. It seems that this industry is very prosperous in the maritimes. Besides, the Saguenay has everything to revive it, if markets can be secured. There certainly is a great potential for the production of blueberries, and that potential still exists, but unfortunately, the markets have completely disappeared because the Canadian government has shown no interest whatsoever in that production and has never tried to secure markets. Some swindlers got busy securing control on the American markets so as to force producers, let alone pickers, as they are called in the industry, to accept absurdly low prices for their work. So it is that today, the Saguenay people are in no way interested in picking blueberries, because they know that they cannot secure a reasonable price.

I know that the hon. member for Roberval (Mr. Gauthier), who represents the area, supports my remarks, because in both our counties, ARDA, which is worth-while legislation, has made every effort to revive the production of blueberries and promote their sale.

Moreover, again last week, people desirous to work in the blueberry fields were telling me: All this is very well, but where are we going to sell our production, since we have no assurance that it will be better and that we will be able to obtain a reasonable price. That is the question.

What is the purpose of producing if there are no consumers, no one who can purchase the goods at a reasonable price? That is the point and it is only when we are assured of a reasonable market price that we will be able to solve the problem of production because as such production does not constitute a problem. Advise producers to produce and forget the rest. There can be no doubt about that considering the present competition between farmers.

If the Minister of Agriculture wants millions of pounds of cheese and millions of bags of potatoes, he is going to get them. He asked western farmers to produce wheat. He told them: "Produce wheat and we shall sell it." Now that they have done so he does not dare sing the same tune. Why? Obviously because western farmers did produce a little too much and, at one time, the federal government was stuck with a surplus.

Now, if the Minister of Agriculture were to ask Quebec farmers to produce butter, cheese or any other commodity, he would be sure of getting enough to flood the world markets because the soil is good and our farmers are willing to work. In fact, they are willing to work providing they get reasonable compensation for their efforts, just like industrial workers in general and any other kind of workers.

Mr. Speaker, even though dairy production is very important in the Saguenay area, for some time now our farmers have turned to other fields of endeavour because they were asked to cut down dairy production.

Many launched out into the poultry industry others into the broiler industry and others still took up pig breeding. But all of them are facing exactly the same problem, the same difficulty, that is the price of the product ready for market.

On the other hand, the problem is closely related to the price of feed grains.

Mr. Speaker, I wish to point out that in the Saguenay region we are, of course, somewhat far from other big feed grain centres, but I believe we are still entitled to some consideration. For the two years we have been in this house, under both the previous and present administration, we have advocated a feed grain policy which would permit eastern farmers, those of Quebec province and especially those of the Saguenay region, to compete on the larger markets to sell their finished products.

However, this policy seems to be very complex, as, after two years' study, we recently learned from the very mouth of the Minister of Agriculture that it would only be announced next fall.

Yet, for many years the farmers have approached the federal authorities and submitted many a brief suggesting solutions for the various farm problems in eastern Canada. In fact, I am certain that the departmental files are full of briefs submitted to the minister and to his predecessor. There certainly would be some solutions for those problems in those briefs. Moreover, those briefs were submitted by people in the agricultural field, and I think that the minister should not ask the opinion of Tom, Dick and Harry but rather that of those people who—from a technical point of view, I would say—are in the best position to solve their own problems by submitting appropriate suggestions and recommendations.

They want legislation that will solve those problems and it is such legislation they want us to pass in this house; it seems that it is the very legislation which the present government, as well as the former one, wants to delay, for reasons they do not want to tell us and for which they are unwilling to give favourable consideration to the claims of the eastern farm organizations.

Their main claim at this time concerns the establishment of a feed grain agency for the east. This claim seems to me hardly excessive. Indeed, the western farmers asked for a grain board and obtained it. Since then, their problems seem to have been partially settled and their economic situation has much improved. I am not trying to say they are millionaires but their financial position has definitely improved.

The eastern farmers want a feed grain agency in order to avoid being exploited—and I mean exploited—by the middle men, those shrewd businessmen, the professional farmers of St. James street who have never seen a cow in their whole life, who have never even set foot in a field and who, in their big well-designed offices, set the prices of goods going from the producer to the consumer.

They are the people we should expose. They have often and again been denounced, but nothing has been done up to now to correct this situation. Why? Because those millionaires, of course, manage to be heard when they lobby the government with lawyers at their side. They are stronger than the farmers.

An hon. Member: That is right.

Mr. Lessard (Lake St. John): Mr. Speaker, those people have a very strong voice. As a matter of fact, it was even reported in certain newspapers that there was a lobby in Ottawa, that the members of parliament were the last to be consulted in this matter and that, whenever those people came to see us, it was because all other means had failed.

Mr. Speaker, lobbying has been practised ever since parliament began, and those who practice it are unquestionably stronger than the small farmers from the back concessions. Moreover, we found out last year what millionaires and brokers could do and how influential they were. As a matter of fact, one of them succeeded after a very short visit in having an act amended. Yet no matter how many visits our farmers make they do not succeed in bringing about much change.

We saw the result of lobbying last year; we still see it today. It is regrettable that our governments cannot, once and for all, decide to treat all Canadians on an equal footing. They yield, they give way to pressures if they are strong enough; but when they are not, then they protect their own friends.

Last year, the Saguenay district farmers had to borrow over $2 million from the Farm Credit Corporation, the money being used to mechanize their farms following the government's advice to expand their farms in order to make them more profitable and increase production. But later the government told them to cut down dairy production because there were surpluses. We must admit that it is somewhat illogical as far as policy is concerned.

Mr. Speaker, the farmer who works from 12 to 18 hours a day, receives very little for his labour, if we consider the salary paid the industrial worker who has little skill compared to the farmer.

The farmer has to be a jack-of-all-trades. He must be something of a lawyer, to protect himself adequately. He must be a specialist in all fields, and yet he does not get much in return for all those skills and knowledge. Our lives depend on him; he puts on our table the food we eat. And what consideration have we got for him? I wonder. If the farmer should decide tomorrow to stop producing, I think we would all be in a fine fix.

At any rate the problem has reached the point where, at a meeting in the Saguenay area, the farmers unanimously passed a resolution in which they threatened not to pay their taxes. Things have come to that.

Out of 168 farmers present at a meeting, 168 decided they would no longer pay their municipal and school taxes. We have reached that point, and the situation is serious.

The farmer has to pay a great deal more in taxes than the ordinary citizen. It should not be so, since his production brings him less income. But such is the situation that he has to bear the brunt of our whole system and foot the bill for all the blunders that can be made.

The Department of Agriculture is in the process of being subdivided. Some jurisdiction has been given to the Minister of Forestry (Mr. Sauvé), in whom I have confidence, because he is from Quebec. Not that I want to hold against the present Minister of Agriculture the fact that he is not from eastern Canada, but being an easterner himself, the Minister of Forestry is in a better position to understand the situation.

Now, that leads me to wonder, since we have had western ministers of agriculture who were interested in grains and who worked out the grain problem, and since the present Minister of Agriculture, who is interested in livestock, seems to be working out the livestock problems, whether we will soon have a minister of agriculture directly and personally involved in the dairy industry, because then he would probably know what he is talking about and might co-operate in order to settle the problems in that field.

Since we had men experienced in other areas, I hope that before long, we will have a minister with some experience in the dairy industry.

The present Liberal government has been in power for 13 months. Of course, if we look at its record in farming, we do not find, unfortunately, a long list of achievements. I wish I could find one because destructive criticism is not interesting. I should like to make constructive and objective criticism in the light of achievement in agriculture. Unfortunately, in 13 months, even if we recognize that they had other fish to fry, that one was not done. It may be that the Liberal party had no special training in farming matters; they were undoubtedly better qualified in industry and public relations, but I believe and I hope that with the advent of a new minister in that field, in whom I have confidence because I think he has imagination, something will be undertaken. Will he succeed? I do not know, but I think he will undertake something and I have confidence because he is a man of decision.

I hope he will get his information from the proper place and that after obtaining it he will take action so that our eastern farmers can be equal partners in Canada with equal opportunities in their profession.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I should like to point out that at the present time, ARDA is the only legislation to which attention is being paid, the only legislation that seems to be accepted as a solution. It is the only one that is applied in eastern Canada at this time and incidentally, I wish to commend the hon. member for Qu'Appelle (Mr. Hamilton) who was minister of agriculture when that legislation was passed. The Liberal government are enforcing it with even more energy and I wish to congratulate them, because they are trying to improve it. I think that that legislation should not be the only one to deal with the problem. There are other measures which have to be passed if we want eastern farmers to be assured of a fair return for their daily work, as in the case of other sectors of the Canadian industry.

Mr. C. A. Gauthier (Roberval): Mr. Speaker, I am happy to take the floor again on the matter of agriculture; I have already discussed the subject several times in the house and I do not know whether my remarks will have the same effect, because when one speaks of agriculture—especially along the lines of this amendment concerning agriculture in the east—one gets the impression that he is talking to a brick wall.

When one knows all the needs of the province of Quebec, I can assure you that when one speaks in the house or has correspondence with some departments, one gets the impression that for some people, eastern agriculture is not much indeed in the Canadian economy.

I listened to the hon. member for Qu'Appelle (Mr. Hamilton) while he was dealing with agriculture and I pictured him with the new Canadian flag in his hand, because he first spoke of our national flag. I congratulate him because he admitted most sincerely in this house that he was in favour of a distinctive flag. I congratulate also all those who support this project, of the English as well as the French element. I somewhat blame those who look too far behind and completely forget to look ahead. I feel that the flag, whatever its design, for I know it will be selected by competent men, and that is why we voted for a distinctive flag, will be the beginning of the new confederation in the union of both elements of this nation.

We always had and always will have reactionaries, but the French element is the one which always moderated its pretentions and sacrificed its own personality to try and make a success of the great Canadian cause.

We wish that the English refractory element, which is still against this project, would think a little more of the nation. It wants it to be great, but in its own way. As for us, we want the nation to be as it ought to be: great, unique, and it must have a distinctive emblem. I believe that we will have this distinctive emblem in a few days—at least I wholeheartedly wish it—and I hope that the discussion on this matter will not last forever and kill such a fine project.

Mr. Speaker, I do not think that the hon. member for Qu'Appelle wanted to suggest that this question was a smokescreen behind which the government endeavoured to hide its shortcomings. In my opinion, each party had its failures, its strong points and weak points, when it was in office. It is a matter of getting rid of the bad, salvaging the little good there is and trying to do better.

In my opinion, that is a rather strong attack against an initiative towards unity which should gain the confidence of all members of the house.

We point out readily the good there was: when they were in office, the Conservatives did a lot for agriculture, especially the bill to set up a department of agriculture for eastern Canada, and ARDA. We are grateful to them and we appreciate their work. But, after passing such legislation they announced that the 25 cents premium per hundredweight of milk was to be abolished. We, from Quebec, had to swallow that much more. That measure was not good for Quebec, the farmers protested and sent telegram after telegram; they changed nothing and we had to accept that.

Now, the Liberals are in power and they also have their good and bad points. They started by killing the bill to set up an eastern department of agriculture which is essential to Quebec, and I think that the province of Quebec will never get over that.

Now, they gave us a semblance of a department of forestry. They probably compare agriculture in Quebec to a wide forest, since they transferred this minister into forestry; let us hope he may produce something for Quebec.

I am one of those who firmly believes that a single thing will save Quebec: the enactment by this parliament of a piece of legislation to give Quebec a department which will directly control agriculture in that province. I discussed the matter on several occasions and I mentioned it a few moments ago; those who are acquainted with Quebec know very well that today a minister coming from the west, a minister who thinks and dreams only about wheat, cannot understand the province of Quebec. It is impossible. Let us not expect the impossible. For him it is impossible to try to understand the province of Quebec and its family farming. They say that Quebec should be modernized and its lands should be expanded.

There is one thing I do not understand: it is that 100 or 150 years ago, most of our farmers came to settle on these lands because they were rich lands, real agricultural lands. At that time the west was never mentioned. All those farmers came to establish themselves especially in the Lake St. John and the Quebec areas, saying they were settling down in the granary of agriculture.

Today, all of a sudden, that granary is being converted into a desert, according to the idea or the semblance of idea which the ministers have conceived about it in the course of the last 50 years. I wonder why those ministers have not come to see what was going on in the province of Quebec in that respect.

Besides, I notice something else. If, here in this house, the impression prevails that the Quebec lands are poor, it is perhaps due to the fact that for 50 years, there was no minister of agriculture who would go and investigate for himself the farming situation in the province of Quebec. For 50 years, parliament took pleasure in choosing ministers from the west. I bear no grudge against my colleagues. They did right, they had a majority.

But today, if everybody, if all members of the house seem willing to solve this problem—we feel they truly want to rehabilitate the province of Quebec—then let us do something, let us create an efficient weapon designed to help solve the farming problem in Quebec. I feel that the only efficient weapon is to set up for eastern Canada a department that will look after forests and mines and also land and farming.

As a matter of act, what is lacking in our province? First of all, drainage. Hundreds of millions of dollars were spent to drain the land in the prairie provinces. I have not yet seen a single cent allocated for that purpose in the province of Quebec, and yet the citizens of Quebec know how much their province, especially the land in the Lake St. John and Saguenay areas, is in need of drainage.

We might get a few thousand dollars for drainage in 1965, according to a statement made by Quebec's minister of agriculture. I wrote to him recently, and about two weeks ago I received the particulars of a drainage project. Though ARDA has been in force for some time, we shall only start drainage projects in 1965, whereas the western provinces have already received more than $300 million to that end. Is that fair?

It might perhaps be said that the province of Quebec is lagging behind. Now Quebec is not hanging back in any way. But Quebec lacked, here in this federal parliament, the proper spokesmen to interpret and study conditions there. That is the only reason.

If we had had some responsible men in the Department of Agriculture, who had been familiar with conditions in the province of Quebec, I assure you that, they would, before now, have implemented projects satisfactory to the farmers, which at the same time would have very rapidly improved the yield of their land in a proportion of 30 to 40 per cent.

Today, we have the ARDA legislation my fellow member from Lake St. John (Mr. Lessard), mentioned a short while ago. This legislation applies in the Lake St. John district in only two fields at this time: reforestation and blueberry growing. Broken and fully reclaimed land is taken and re-seeded to produce trees. After having laboured hard to reclaim this land from the forest it is now given back to what is now called tree farming.

As to the second project: blueberry crops. Everybody knows the Lake St. John blueberries. According to outsiders—of course when we live in this berry paradise we are unable to realize it—they are a real manna from heaven. I am saying that about 15 years ago it was a gold mine, because within a month and a half or two months, the people of Roberval riding could make $2, $3 and even $4 million.

The most interesting part of it was that such amounts were not taxable. I think that income tax inspectors were too lazy to visit the blueberries producers, and consequently that was clear profit.

On each dollar of revenue, one has today to pay 40 cents income tax, but just think that $1 is worth $1.40 for the blueberry picker, as blueberries are not taxable.

That is why I say that this industry is a real gold mine, because it is safe from any government income tax collector. Moreover, blueberries are probably picked at a certain hour of the day when tax inspectors are still in bed, and they do not have time to go to the blueberry patch.

At any rate, the blueberry program that we have today will surely do some good. But, as my colleague from Lake St. John pointed out earlier, the problem is to find a market. You may pick berries in 10, 12 or 15 fields of my constituency, if you cannot sell them, as I expect, the whole thing will be useless.

I discussed that problem with the minister of agriculture of Quebec and the answer he gave me was that the market would come later. But if the market comes two years after the first crop, because the first crop will be harvested this summer, I see no organization set up for the harvesting of blueberries because today, even if we had no blueberry field, Lake St. John is a region where blueberries grow wild.

If we had the market we had ten years ago; but alas, it was taken over. Taken over by whom? By the big financial interests, as they take over all the markets at all levels of our economy.

Ten or 15 years ago, we sold blueberries around $6.30 per 30 pounds, while last year, we had to sell 30 pounds of blueberries for the ridiculous price of $1.75.

And whose work is that? The work of those who have never picked a blueberry, who are resting comfortably in their easy-chairs in the big cities and who have succeeded in removing all competition. Ten or 15 years ago, we had 15, 20 or 25 buyers, whereas today there is only one who sets his own price. That reminds me of those Negroes the Americans were paying two or three cents a day to carry elephant tusks on their backs.

Blueberry pickers are paid ridiculous prices, with the result that 15 per cent of those who are able to go and pick blueberries no longer wish to do so. This is simply ridiculous.

I heard earlier the hon. member for Lake St. John (Mr. Lessard) say that at one time it had been a blueberry paradise. Who caused that paradise to disappear? It is the financiers who took control of the market and paid starvation wages.

Last summer, because I was under the impression that the price of blueberries had fallen on the international market, I asked someone in the blueberry business in Montreal whether the price of blueberries was higher or lower than it was ten years ago. He told me: "The price is exactly double what it was ten years ago." Blueberries are selling at twice the price they were selling ten years ago, whereas today our blueberry pickers are paid ridiculous wages for a day's work that starts at seven o'clock in the morning and ends at ten or eleven o'clock, and even at midnight.

However, many policies, such as that advocated by ARDA, can be put into practice;

I remember that some 20 or 25 years ago, we used to say that we were in a position to turn out large quantities of farm products and we can still say so; the only trouble is the lack of outlets. And the government who is supposed to play the part of co-ordinator should assist farmers in marketing their products.

It is a known fact that the government is in a position to do as it pleases. When the Minister of Trade and Commerce gave his attention to the finding of markets for the western wheat, he succeeded, so I ask him today to try just as hard and not only half as hard as he did to dispose of the western wheat, with regard to the eastern products because we grow there a greater variety of products than in the west. It is the responsibility of the Minister of Agriculture, with the assistance of the Minister of Trade and Commerce, to find markets for our dairy products, such as butter, cheese, potatoes, vegetables, apples, maple syrup and so on. Let them together find markets and our producers will not be reluctant to produce.

Once again, if depression as indicated by the hon. member for Qu'Appelle, seems definitely settled in Quebec, the fault is not with the producers, but with the governments who did not support the producers' efforts to ensure reasonable cost prices and adequate markets for them. That is the reason, Mr. Speaker.

Let us cease to harass the farmer and to weigh him down with all the capital sins. Let us take our responsibilities. Let the Minister of Agriculture take his responsibilities, since he has been appointed by the government to look after agriculture throughout Canada.

Agriculture is not limited to the western provinces, it also covers eastern Canada and requests of eastern farmers must be granted.

An hon. Member: We are not deaf.

Mr. Gauthier: An hon. member says that he is not deaf, but I must say that one has the impression of speaking to a group of deaf people when one is speaking here. That is why, very often, we must speak loudly. Even at that, it will not be sufficient, since I am sure nothing concrete will result from my speech. At least, the house will be aware of our needs and I will have done my duty.

Let us stop saying that farmland is poor and no longer productive in Quebec. Our farms are just as good as they were 30 years ago. Financial interests have taken them over and have robbed our farmers of the fruits of their labour.

Farm equipment was selling for four times more than what it was worth. Just like the farmers in other parts of the country, the Quebec farmer had to modernize his farm, but had to put up with those unreasonable demands, because the banks would not make loans to farmers on easier terms at a reasonable rate of interest. Furthermore, the banks even ceased completely granting credit to our farmers who, therefore, had to go to finance companies and borrow at a rate of 17, 18 and even 30 per cent interest, which the government was tolerating. That is what ruined the farmers and, Mr. Speaker, I know what I am talking about because I lived through it.

And if we needed a machine that was worth $100, we began by paying $400; with the interest, it cost us $600. That is the work of finance in agriculture in the province of Quebec.

On the other hand, I know that western farmers may have certain difficulties about prices, but they are less serious, because all members of the cabinet and the minister are working for them, including the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Sharp) who is trying to sell their commodities and get reasonable prices for them.

Mr. Speaker, may I call it six o'clock?

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It is my duty, pursuant to provisional standing order 39A, to inform the house that the questions to be raised at ten o'clock this day are as follows: (1) the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm:

[Translation]

Alleged discrimination in the military college at Kingston.

[Text]

(2) the hon. member for Danforth: loss of revenue from newspapers and periodicals; (3) the hon. member for Saint John-Albert: transfer of manufacturing firm to Montreal.

It being six o'clock I do now leave the chair.

At six o'clock the house took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The house resumed at 8 p.m.

SUPPLY

The house resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Gordon for committee of supply, and the amendment thereto of Mr. Hamilton.

LACK OF ACTION TO ASSIST EASTERN AGRICULTURE

[Translation]

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, as I was saying when we adjourned at six o'clock, the present agricultural stagnation in the province of Quebec results from lack of markets and a lack of initiative on the part of the government in order to support the efforts of our producers, who are ready to produce 25 per cent more provided their products sell at profitable prices.

I concluded by denouncing the invasion of our Quebec farms by financiers. In fact, the farmers could not borrow from the banks at reasonable rates, the amounts necessary to purchase modern equipment, and they had to sacrifice everything to financial interests so as to survive modernism. Rates as high as 20, 24 and even 30 per cent were being claimed; during that time our governments were asleep. If, by any chance, somebody woke up, it was to tell our farmers to stop buying farming equipment.

Today we have farm credit. Thanks to this farm credit, our farmers may perhaps produce more, but nevertheless profitable markets are necessary. I hope the government will understand in time—

An hon. Member: We have also Social Credit.

Mr. Gauthier: Somebody on the other side says that, in addition to farm credit, we also have Social Credit. I hope that one day farm credit will fall under the control of Social Credit, and then we shall see our farmers prosperous.

At present, farm credit helps only a very small number of farmers, because with politics and patronage here like everywhere else, I may say that the future of agriculture soon takes second place, and the old greedy man quickly comes to the surface.

It is also through government action in co-operation with farmers, and not through socialization, but by supporting the individual efforts of each and everyone, thanks to private enterprise, that Quebec will be able to survive from the economic standpoint.

For instance, let our co-operatives deal directly with western producers. Let our eastern farmers pay for feed grain the same price this government sells it to red China. In brief, let us do without the financiers and help, by a protective action, eastern farmers to deal with those of the west. Let us have a price policy for eastern products. Besides, that is precisely what gave the west its high agricultural level. Indeed, the government helped western farmers by guaranteeing them such really economic prices which make impossible financier competition such as we have in Quebec.

When our farmers succeed in producing something, there is a rush of financiers to our farmers every fall. At this time, we have no organization which could act in co-operation with the government in order to ensure really economic prices for our farmers.

Let us set up this policy in Quebec. Let us protect farm prices and establish markets for the merchandising of their crops.

As I said, we always take example on western Canada because, especially during the last 30 years, the government has spent huge sums of money to help western producers and I say that it was a good thing. But what we did wrong was to forget the province of Quebec completely. We are not asking today to multiply the joint programs which, although they were very well received in the western provinces, are nevertheless completely contrary to the ideal of the Quebec farmer.

Special legislation should be introduced for the province of Quebec, since special legislation was enacted to help the western provinces; give Quebec an even break and help the Quebec farmer with legislation to his stature.

That is what we are asking. We are not asking for more than the other provinces have received. We are simply asking to be treated as they were. Legislation favourable to the province of Quebec should be introduced, legislation from which our farmers will benefit, just like western provinces have benefited from legislation made for them. We are asking for action based on the views and the co-operation of all our local and provincial farm organizations.

I hope that this time we are not talking to deaf ears, as in past years, and that the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Hays) will decide some day, which is yet to come, to glance towards the province of Quebec and show, at least in this parliament, that he is really the Minister of Agriculture for the whole of Canada.

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): Mr. Speaker—

[Text]

Mr. John Mullally (Kings): Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to participate in a discussion of the problems of eastern agriculture. We found very interesting the remarks made this afternoon by the former minister of agriculture, the hon. member for Qu'Appelle (Mr. Hamilton). It did seem a little hypocritical to those of us who sit on this side of the house when the hon. member attached so much criticism and blame to the government and to the minister for failing to cure the ills of eastern agriculture in one year when his government was unable to do anything about it in a period of six years. I am not minimizing the problems of agriculture in eastern Canada. They are many and their roots are quite deep, as are any solutions which may be offered to solve those problems.

From listening to the hon. member this afternoon it was difficult to tell whether he was going to move a motion of criticism of this government or of the dominion bureau of statistics. On some occasions he was telling us that the farmers should pay attention to certain sets of figures which have been provided, and in the next breath he was telling us we should disregard the figures which have been provided. If the hon. member for Qu'Appelle represented an eastern agricultural riding as I do he would not need statistics to indicate to this house or to anybody else that there are serious problems facing the farmers in eastern Canada.

Mr. Loney: Then why don't you do something about them?

Mr. Mullally: If the hon. member will give us an opportunity we will certainly do something about them.

I have spoken on two occasions, Mr. Speaker, since coming to this house about eastern agriculture and I have not spared the government that criticism which I thought it merited and deserved. But at the same time I think it is most unusual for a former minister of agriculture—and this is the second occasion on which he has done so—to stand up in this house and move a motion of censure against this government for a situation which his government failed to correct in the six years they were in office.

Besides supplying long lists of statistics to back up his argument, which I am not disputing, the former minister took considerable time to tell the members on this side of the house that we should not go into or review the past. I do not intend to go back into the past and talk about the record of the previous government because I think that is well known; the very statistics which the former minister presented both on this occasion and on a former occasion indicate the complete failure of the previous government to give any assistance to the farmers in eastern Canada. The income statistics which he mentioned and which he put on the record on the occasion when the question was debated last fall, on October 14, clearly indicate that this is not a problem which has arisen within the last year. The minister admitted very clearly that it has existed in eastern Canada for several years, and the statistics he quoted also indicate very clearly that his government failed, and failed miserably, to do anything about it.

I said a moment ago that the former minister cautioned us not to review the past, and I will certainly follow that advice. It is never our intention to be critical of the past, and I think hon. members on this side are to be commended for the decision which they have taken not to go into the past. We do not want to thresh old straw; we want to get on with something more concrete and talk about what this government has done for the eastern farmers and what it plans to do if given the opportunity. I think the members of the opposition have an excellent opportunity to show their good will to and their concern for the farmers of eastern Canada by co-operating with the government and letting us get on with the legislation which is on the order paper, as well as other legislation which the minister wants to bring before the house to benefit the farmers in eastern Canada.

Mr. Ricard: Bring it in then.

Mr. Mullally: We will certainly bring it in. There is already on the order paper a bill to improve farm credit for farmers everywhere in Canada. There is also other legislation, but there is not much point in cluttering up the order paper with more until we have disposed of what is already on it. I know that members in all parts of the house—I am not being critical of the members of the opposition—are concerned at the plight of the farmers in eastern Canada, and I am sure they will co-operate with the government in getting this legislation enacted so that those farmers can stand to benefit by it.

Mr. Smallwood: We are waiting for this legislation.

Mr. Mullally: I said there was no easy solution to the problem, Mr. Speaker. It is over one year since I came to this house, and during this past year I have thought long and deeply about this problem. I am convinced there is no easy solution. It is going to take legislation. It is going to take study, research and education. It is going to take hard work on the part of everybody to find a solution to the problems affecting the farmers in eastern Canada. But I am convinced that the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Hays) and the Minister of Forestry (Mr. Sauvé), who will soon assume the portfolio of rural development, are doing a very excellent job and are doing their best to assist the farmers of eastern Canada, and indeed of all Canada. It is impossible in one year—

Mr. Smallwood: Would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Mullally: —to solve completely these problems—

Mr. Smallwood: Would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The hon. member for Kings (Mr. Mullally) has the floor.

Mr. Smallwood: I was asking him whether he would permit a question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member is entitled to make his speech without interruption.

Mr. Mullally: Mr. Speaker, I will certainly entertain a question.

Mr. Smallwood: You made the remark that you had brought down so much for agriculture. What have you done for agriculture?

Mr. Mullally: Mr. Speaker, I welcome the question and I will mention two things which we have done. Other speakers from this party will expand and indicate other measures which have been enacted for the benefit of the farmers in eastern Canada. I did not open my remarks, nor do I intend to continue them, in a critical vein and I think my observations so far have been in order. I do not intend to be critical in what I say and I hope I did not convey that impression. I think that what I have said is factual. The statistics which the former minister brought before the house today indicate there is a serious situation which has not been remedied for the past several years.

I was saying, Mr. Speaker, that I am convinced the Minister of Agriculture and the Minister of Forestry are doing an excellent job. I was at the annual meeting of the federation of agriculture at Charlottetown earlier this year, at which the Minister of Agriculture was guest speaker. The reception he received and the complimentary remarks which I have heard from all parts of my province since that time indicate that the farmers of eastern Canada are convinced that the minister is doing everything he can to improve their situation and to better their lot. More recently the Minister of Forestry, who is now responsible for the ARDA program, visited in my province, as he did in all parts of the Atlantic provinces. He received a very warm welcome. Since that time, the premier of my province has commented very favourably on the new Minister of Forestry (Mr. Sauvé) and has expressed his belief that much will be done in pursuance of the ARDA program.

I mentioned a few moments ago in reply to a question that I would attempt to deal with two long range actions which the government has taken so far in the interests of eastern farmers. These are the decision to create a new cabinet portfolio of forestry and rural development, and the steps taken with regard to feed grain. Attempts have been made in some quarters to suggest that the action taken in creating a new ministry of forestry has represented a move to downgrade the federal Department of Agriculture. In fact, it has made the Department of Agriculture more important than ever. The representation of agriculture both in the cabinet and in the government as a whole has been widened by this action. It reflects the fact that our government is not a one-man operation; it does not think any one man, whether he is the Prime Minister or the Minister of Agriculture necessarily has all the answers. It also reflects the harmony which exists in our government—a seasoned harmony of reasonably minded men searching to organize government so as to reach the best possible solutions to the problems affecting agriculture in all of Canada. This government is not afraid to co-operate. It does not suffer from any delusions of omnipotence. Now, instead of a single minister trying to run everything, we have three ministers involved closely in the affairs of agriculture. It is obvious, it seems to me, that this will ensure that all aspects of agriculture are given closer attention than was possible in the past. Furthermore the special cabinet committee on agriculture, which meets frequently, sees to it that all activities in this field are co-ordinated. To suggest that the portfolio of agriculture has been downgraded is altogether misleading. The answer is obvious to all who are interested in assisting the farmers in all parts of this country: The action taken by the government in this respect is one which is bound to work for the benefit of our farmers. The steps taken to ensure much closer co-ordination of farm programs are obviously designed to benefit agriculture both in the east and in the west.

As chairman of the three-minister cabinet committee, the responsibilities of the Minister of Agriculture have actually been widened. In the meantime, the new minister of forestry and rural development has to deal, in particular with two problems which are among the most urgent currently facing eastern farmers. One of these is the cost of feed grain and the other is the question of the efficient use of land. The present government has already taken steps to solve each of these problems and further action is being considered. It is well known that steps were taken last year —last August, to be exact—to encourage stability of supply and price in eastern Canada, conditions which had not existed with respect to feed grain in years past. Although the action is well known, perhaps it is not as well understood as it might be. I propose, therefore, to deal with this question briefly.

The livestock and poultry producers in eastern Canada depend heavily on the prairie provinces for feed grains to supplement local supplies, particularly in the winter and spring of each year. Until the present government acted to alleviate the situation, two conditions relative to storage charges discouraged grain dealers from placing adequate stocks in position in the east for winter requirements. The cost of storage itself resulted in purchases being made for delivery as late as possible in the fall in order to avoid a portion of the storage charges in the east. Then, too, the cost of storage and the relationship of the fall and spring prices on the Winnipeg grain exchange discouraged dealers from buying more than the minimum expected requirements.

Probably a word of explanation would be in order at this point. In the fall, feed dealers, including co-operatives, assess their requirements for the winter and place orders with a grain merchant for delivery prior to the close of navigation. They try to assess their requirements until the date when the first grain vessels are expected to arrive in the spring. A grain broker normally buys only to fulfil orders already made. For example, he may buy barley from the wheat board at the lakehead in October for immediate shipment to Montreal. Let us suppose he pays $1.20 a bushel. He plans to replace his stocks in the spring by purchases at the May auction. If the grain broker had received orders from feed dealers in the east amounting to say, 95,000 bushels in the fall, he might decide to take an extra 5,000 bushels just in case he found a customer during the winter after the shipping season had closed. So, he knew his cost, his selling price and his profit on the 95,000 bushels; but on the other 5,000 he had to take his chance in the winter feed grain market. If he had made an error in judgment and found he could not sell those 5,000 bushels during the winter, he would have to leave the grain in an eastern storage elevator at a cost of one cent a bushel per month. This would mean his cost per bushel would rise from the original figure of $1.20 to $1.27 plus interest charges. In due course spring comes, and barley, at the May auction is still $1.20 a bushel or perhaps even a few cents less. The broker has to take a loss on his 5,000 bushel carry-over in order to sell it in competition with barley bought at the lower spring prices.

This was the situation until the present Minister of Agriculture moved, last fall, in co-operation with the wheat board and through the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Sharp) to correct it. Since the grain dealer, and ultimately, the farmer, had to assume the carrying costs from the moment the grain was bought, there had been a tendency, as I have explained, to delay winter purchases until near the close of navigation. This put pressure on both supplies and prices at that time. This pressure on prices often meant that the prices of oats and barley at the time of shipment in the late fall were higher than they would be the following spring. Add to this the cost of storing any carryover grain until the resumption of navigation, and hon. members will see why no broker wanted to get caught with more grains on his hands during the winter than he could sell. It was obviously safer for him to underestimate the demand than to overestimate it. It is also apparent that when this situation produced a shortage of feed grain in eastern position during the winter, the pressure on prices was always upward. If a feed merchant wanted to take advantage of such a situation, the situation was certainly there, tailor-made for him.

Within four months of the present government taking office two definite steps were taken to relieve the situation. First, the government decided to pay storage costs on western feed grains in licensed eastern elevators, from October 15 to April 15. This, of course, encouraged the purchase of a larger supply of grain for winter storage and reduced the chances of a shortage of feed grains developing in mid-winter or later. Instead of bringing in say 5 per cent more than had already been contracted for sale the broker would bring in from 10 to 15 per cent more. In a moment I will give figures to show that most eastern feed grain dealers did bring in substantially larger amounts last fall than in previous years.

With the government paying the storage from October 15, six weeks before the close of navigation, this also encouraged an earlier movement of grain from the lakehead to positions in eastern Canada. This, of course, relieved some of the pressure on shipping space and this usually means that grain can be shipped at somewhat lower lake rates, which is another saving that can ultimately be passed on to the farmers of eastern Canada.

Besides helping the farmers of eastern Canada this new policy encouraged larger purchases of western feed grain. Brokers who previously relied on supplies of corn from United States to supplement their winter demands in this case stocked with feed grain from western Canada. With this new program of assistance the amount of western feed grain in eastern positions on November 27 last was 60 per cent higher than in any earlier year, and at the close of navigation it was almost 50 per cent higher. There were about 31 million bushels of feed grain in eastern elevators at the end of navigation last fall compared with 21 million bushels in the same positions the previous year. This build-up of western feed grain in eastern elevators earlier in the year helped to avoid the usually higher seasonal lake rates as well.

Along with the government's decision to pay the storage costs the Canadian wheat board decided to provide for deferred pricing on oats and barley for the first time. It agreed not to set the final price on replacement purchases until the grain to be replaced was leaving the eastern storage elevator. This did a great deal to remove the uncertainty grain brokers had previously had as to the price they would have to pay for grain in the spring compared with the cost of grain in the fall.

As the figures I gave a moment ago indicate, it was apparent last November that this policy had obviously been successful in encouraging an earlier and larger movement of western feed grain to eastern storage elevators. Furthermore, in the months since then feed grain prices have remained more stable than in any previous winter.

This afternoon the hon. member for Qu'Appelle (Mr. Hamilton) indicated that some members of his party would outline the pattern of feed grain prices in eastern Canada this past winter. While there may have been some increase in feed grain prices I think we should remember that generally prices for feed grain were probably higher this year than in previous years. I think the demand for grains generally brought about by the large sales of wheat tended to be reflected in increasing prices for grain generally, including feed grains for eastern Canada.

There are two matters which I feel stand to the credit of the government. They have been of benefit to the farmers of eastern Canada this year and we feel they will be a substantial benefit in the years to come. I mentioned a moment ago that the Minister of Forestry (Mr. Sauvé), the minister now responsible for ARDA, had recently visited eastern Canada. In fact he visited all of the provinces of eastern Canada to discuss with officials there the ARDA program as it affects each of these provinces. We are convinced that ARDA holds very excellent prospects for helping the farmers of eastern Canada and I think that the government which brought in the legislation is to be complimented for doing so. But, Mr. Speaker, no matter how good a program it is, unless it becomes operational, unless its good features are put into action, the farmers cannot benefit from it. This is why we feel that having a minister who is able to devote his well known talents, which have already been demonstrated, to a program of this kind will make ARDA a really effective program which unfortunately, and I do not say this by way of criticism, we do not feel it has been up to this time.

In the province, of which I have the honour to represent one of the constituencies, we look forward to many accomplishments through ARDA and we feel that the action of the government in placing the talented Minister of Forestry in charge of the program indicates that the government is serious and intends to take those steps which are necessary to make ARDA an effective program, an effective weapon to deal with the difficulties facing the farmers of eastern Canada.

There are many other matters that could be discussed. As I said a moment ago, there is no easy solution to the problems of agriculture either in eastern Canada or in any other part of Canada; but this is particularly true, of course, of eastern Canada. Other speakers from the government party will speak about various phases of the program and various aspects of the problems, of which there are many. At the moment I think of the need for greater expenditure on education and research. I think also of the problem of marketing. I believe this is one of the real problems facing farmers in eastern Canada. With rising costs for everything that the farmer has to buy, rising costs of services and materials, and the almost static prices which the farmer has been receiving for his agricultural products it is not hard to conclude why his income is not what we would like it to be. This is one of the real problems that we all have to face.

An hon. Member: You were going to solve it.

Mr. Mullally: We will solve it and we have already taken steps in that direction. I say again that there are many problems. I started to deal with marketing. If the farmer could receive higher prices for many of the things he produces I think many of the problems he is facing at this time would soon disappear. I think particularly of the marketing of potatoes grown in my province. If we could receive throughout the year the price we are now receiving, around $2 for a 75 pound bag, many of the problems of the farmers of that province would be taken care of.

How far a government can go in solving these problems is something on which we might all reflect for a few moments. It is all very well to criticize any government for its failure to take action to solve problems affecting any aspect of our economy. But how far should a government go? How far, indeed, can a government go in finding a solution to the very vexing problems that affect agriculture in eastern Canada? I think we can certainly go much farther than any government has done in recent years in this country. I believe it would be well to reflect for a moment on what the governments of other countries do for agriculture. For instance, we might do well to compare our expenditures on agriculture with those of other nations with similar problems. We find that in Great Britain, for example, 7.5 per cent of the the national budget is directed to agricultural assistance. In the United States, Denmark, Sweden, Norway and France the figure is 8.2 per cent while in our country it is only 3 per cent. Compared with what these other countries spend only 3 per cent of our national budget is directed to agricultural assistance. In the same line of thought it might be well to consider the situation in terms of the percentage of the total volume of agricultural production.

In Denmark, for example, an amount equivalent to 10 per cent of the total volume of agriculture production is expended by the government to assist agriculture. In the Netherlands, it is 15.5 per cent. In Great Britain, it is 25 per cent. In the United States, our neighbour to the south, it is 14.7 per cent but in Canada, it is only 8.2 per cent. Although we do spend a great deal on agriculture, in comparison with what is done in other countries it is a relatively small amount.

I have tried, Mr. Speaker, to outline some of the problems which are affecting agriculture in eastern Canada. I have indicated at least two aspects of what this government is trying to do to solve these problems. Again, I must say that this is a matter which demands and commands the attention of hon. members in all parts of the house, and not only hon. members but people everywhere. The agriculture segment of our population, the agriculture sphere of our economy, is most important to the economy generally. I think that while there is a great deal yet to be done, this government has taken active steps to help meet the situation.

As I mentioned previously, the government has indicated by way of resolution on the order paper that it intends to do something by way of assisting in farm credit as soon as parliament can find time to deal with the matter. The minister has indicated that he would like to do, and is prepared to do something to solve the very difficult problem of the high cost of machinery facing farmers everywhere in the country. These are matters upon which the government is prepared to act. There are many others which I know would receive sympathetic attention as soon as they can be dealt with effectively by this parliament. I mentioned some of them a moment ago. As I have said, I have not hesitated to speak clearly and frankly, both in this house and in discussion with the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Hays) and the other members of the government. I do not believe I have failed to present the very difficult problems that are facing the farmers of eastern Canada, and certainly the farmers in the riding I represent.

As I mentioned previously, if the former minister of agriculture or anybody in this house wishes to travel through eastern Canada, through the maritime provinces in particular, he will not need statistics to indicate very clearly that there is a definite problem that requires the attention of governments, of farm organizations, of private agencies or any body that is able to help the farmers. I am convinced that the present Liberal government is taking very active steps to do what is best for the farmers of eastern Canada. Our program is very clear. We are moving on that program and, with the help and co-operation of members in all parts of this house, I am sure we will move along very quickly and very effectively in solving the problems of agriculture in eastern Canada, to the benefit of the farm population in that part of the country and to the benefit of this country generally.

[Translation]

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): Mr. Speaker, I do not wish to give a detailed analysis of the speech made by the previous speaker, but I feel that he has taken the government at task for having botched the policies which we had set forth when we were in power and failed to keep its promises by taking the necessary steps to help farmers. During their first 60 days in power they did nothing. Yet, they had promised to help farmers.

Mr. Speaker, eastern farming is going bankrupt, the resources of our farmers are shrinking, especially under the present Minister of Agriculture. In my opinion, the government was justified in appointing an auctioneer, a man specialized in sales, because he is there to sell off farms in eastern Canada as a result of a policy of inaction followed by the government.

The income of eastern farmers is constantly declining. As an example, I refer you to d.b.s. figures concerning the net income of Quebec farmers.

For 1963, compared with 1962, the income of Quebec farmers has fallen by $5,589,000. Two thirds of Quebec farmers have an income under $1,200. Taxes increase constantly, both in Ottawa and in Quebec. The Quebec sales tax was standardized at 6 per cent, not to mention the 11 per cent tax on building materials which affects particularly eastern farmers, as well as the whole country.

Since the minister assumed office, the operating expenses of farmers have gone up unceasingly, but their income has declined constantly.

The government does not pay any attention at all to the farmers and I may tell you, Mr. Speaker, that in addition to all the problems facing the farmers, the cost of living index reached a new high in April at 135.0, that is 0.3 higher than in March, and 2.0 higher than in April 1963. The farm associations are unhappy with this government. In La Presse of April 28, 1964 I read the following:

> The provincial budget does not do anything to assist the farmers.

That statement was made by Mr. Sorel, president of the Catholic farmers' union.

There was an increase in the price of milk in Montreal but it was absolutely unprofitable for the farmers, according to the Catholic farmers' union.

Land taxes increase constantly and the farmers are leaving their farms. What is the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Hays) doing except liquidating the farms in eastern Canada, because of the present government's inaction?

Mr. Speaker, if you refer to the April 3, 1964 issue of Le Devoir, you will read this:

> The Catholic farmers' union blames the federal Minister of Agriculture.
> The general council of the Catholic farmers' union, at a meeting held at the Institut coopératif Desjardins, attacked some recent statements made by the Minister of Agriculture, Mr. Hays. It requested also that the Bankruptcy Act be amended to protect the farmer against bankruptcy by a processing plant.
> The Catholic farmers' union criticized a statement allegedly made recently in Winnipeg by Mr. Hays who would have expressed his formal opposition to the setting up of a feed grain board for eastern Canada and would have said that the appointment of Mr. Maurice Sauvé to the cabinet is due to pressure from some Quebec M.P.'s.

Mr. Speaker, the government is boasting at every turn concerning the appointment of Hon. Maurice Sauvé as Minister of Forestry. The appointment definitely satisfies nobody. The Canadian forestry association blamed the government for having entrusted to the Department of Forestry the responsibility of ARDA, while its minister is unable to devote all his time to forestry products. On the other hand, the administration of ARDA is the full responsibility of the provinces. The minister will have absolutely nothing to do in that field, except asking the house to vote sums of money.

I am asking the present Minister of Agriculture to assume his responsibilities, to wake up, to attend sittings of the house more often, in order to pay attention to repeated requests from the official opposition to help the farmer of the eastern provinces who is going bankrupt.

Mr. Speaker, I would be most happy to hear the Minister of Agriculture give a single policy he has adopted on behalf of Canadian farmers, including those of the eastern part of the country.

We had excellent policies. There was, for instance the milk subsidy of 25 cents per cwt. which the government abolished. When I asked the minister a question about that he replied that the subsidy has been removed in order to save $6 million.

I say to the federal Minister of Agriculture that he must not expect ARDA to save farmers within three, four or five years. The government must act immediately and stop sabotaging the agricultural policies we have set up.

Mr. Speaker, the first 60 days of the Liberal regime were days of mourning for Canadian farmers because our agricultural policies were undermined by the new government.

Mr. Speaker, it is essential that legislation be enacted on behalf of eastern farmers, so that more feed grain—that is grain from the western provinces—be consumed, and at less cost.

To give you an idea of the present situation, are you aware, Mr. Speaker, that 70 per cent of the beef consumed in the province of Quebec comes from outside the province? For veal, the proportion is 30 per cent; for lamb and mutton, 54 per cent; for pork, 23 per cent; for poultry, 28 per cent; for fowl and chicken, 21 per cent; for turkey, 47 per cent; and for eggs, 54 per cent. I think that the situation is the same in all eastern provinces.

It is therefore urgent for the government to carry out this legislation which was introduced under our administration, so as to adopt a permanent national policy for the economic distribution in the east of western feed grain surpluses.

Such a policy is imperative, it is requested by our farmers, by the agricultural associations representing them, and it is absolutely necessary as a starting point and as a basis for a well thought out and sound agricultural production, which will enable the Canadian farmers to act in such a way that Canadian agriculture will play a more prominent part, while making farms more remunerative.

The function of agriculture in any country is to provide food at reasonable prices and in sufficient quantities, and contribute to the general economy of the country through its exports. Up to now, agriculture in Canada has well served this nation of ours, since we can say we are well fed and that our exports of agricultural products make up 27 per cent to 30 per cent of our whole production, thus adding its share to the general economy. This legislation respecting feed grain should help in reducing substantially the production cost of a part of the main productions in our country, that is animal production. It should also enable us to export larger quantities of more completely manufactured products than is exported at the present time.

I consider that the following reasons are fundamental and that they should receive the general approval of the house.

First, and this is addressed to the government: it is important to set a policy that will allow the western farmer to sell his crop at a price which will provide him with a reasonable income from his investment and his work, without imposing too heavy a burden on the population of the rest of the country. That legislation had precisely that common point among its many objectives.

Second, if western Canada needs a permanent policy concerning the sale of grain, eastern Canada, for the development of a more profitable agriculture, also needs a large part of those feed grain surpluses to feed its herds and establish a stable and economical livestock production.

Third, some assistance had been provided in the past few years for the transportation of grain from western Canada to eastern Canada. That policy was to be renewed each year. It has rendered tremendous services to our eastern farmers, while providing a profitable market of three million tons of grain, on the average, for the western farmer.

We would like to see the proposed legislation enacted as soon as possible by the government. This legislation would be more generous and better conceived, while eliminating to the greatest possible extent all speculation on grain. During the next few years, it would favour the establishment of a larger market for the feed grain surplus of the west, while promoting a more economical, permanent and larger animal production by the eastern farmer.

I look upon this policy, which we always wanted, the perfect complement to the fine program of farm management, conceived by our government some time ago, which we call ARDA. Our farms, which in eastern Canada are often marginal lands, should be able to use the grain thus distributed in a more economical way, in order to increase their production by transforming it profitably on their farm, and thus adding to the fertility of a frequently poor soil and promoting the better use of an often unemployed labour force on farms which are are often too small.

In the fourth place, the legislation, once implemented by the government, would have the effect of increasing the consumption of western grain in the east, and Canadian agriculture would, because of that very fact, increase its contribution to the over-all economy of this country.

To indicate how important it is, Mr. Speaker, that this raw material we call western grain be, as much as possible, consumed in eastern Canada—I would say that in the event it is impossible to do so, it would, of course, be preferable to export a raw material like grain, but whenever possible, it would be to the advantage of this country that this raw material be transformed on Canadian farms, and more particularly on the eastern farms which have excellent pasture for that purpose.

It is always profitable, for a country like ours, to export its raw materials under as finished a form as possible. Now, when Canada exports one ton of barley, for instance, the economy is being increased by an amount of about $50. But, on the other hand, if that same ton of barley is converted in the east into beef, for instance, it can be exported, provided, of course, that the product be finished, of good quality and economically produced on the eastern farms—this finished product can be exported in the form of pork or beef and yield in this way an amount of $125 or more, according to the price presently paid for pork or beef. It would appear that an investment of $8 to $12 million by the Canadian government to economically distribute this export grain in its raw state so that it can be exported in the form of finished product, would profit to the whole of the Canadian economy. In converting that product at home, we supply work for labour at a stage where unemployment is a problem and we add at least $75 per ton to the international monetary fund.

Fifth, this national policy of economic distribution of western grain surpluses in the east is a prime requirement to balancing eastern farming.

I offered to you only a few reasons, Mr. Speaker, to show the importance of adopting as quickly as possible some legislation promoting consumption of feed grain in eastern Canada, in order to export as little as possible to other countries.

So as to help this export of western grain to the east, I submit that the government should enact some legislation in order:

1. To establish standard and well-balanced prices throughout the east, so as not to put at a disadvantage any user of this grain;

2. There must always be a sufficient supply available to everyone everywhere.

3. Storage facilities large enough for the needs of eastern consumers and western producers must be provided.

4. It is recognized that water transportation is the cheapest of all but, unfortunately, it is of a seasonal nature; consequently, it would be appropriate to decentralize storage facilities.

5. It is to be expected that grain consumption will increase by 50 per cent before 1975.

Yet, in 1960, it totalled 400 million bushels, 241 million of which had been produced in eastern Canada and the rest in the prairies. Generally speaking, pork and other meat producers buy 35 per cent of the feed grain they use; the other two thirds are produced on their own farms.

6. Price fluctuation in various locations and at different times obviously constitutes a great impediment to producers. It is very important and fundamental to correct such a situation.

This policy is essential to stabilize the prices of grain and assist farmers.

In addition, the hon. member who spoke before me said that the price of feed grain rises when winter or the slack season arrives.

That is one of the reasons why a national emergency policy should be developed as soon as possible in order to remedy that situation and enable eastern producers to increase their net income without affecting western farmers.

We are a little pessimistic because the government seems to be marking time and not willing to do anything. Yet, to date, the minister has received several delegations, all kinds of eastern farmers organizations, which urged him to take action before it is too late.

Canadian tobacco growers and particularly Quebec growers are concerned at the present time because of the way they are treated by the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss LaMarsh).

Indeed, the minister of national health allocated a tremendous amount of money to fight cancer and also published a pamphlet against the use of tobacco. To date, nothing proves that tobacco is the cause of cancer. Nothing was proven on that matter and scientists are at a variance. I wonder why the minister of national health wants to destroy that important sector of our economy, the production of cigarette tobacco.

I know that other government members also share my opinion. Tobacco growers are really concerned over the actions of the minister of national health and I am sending the Minister of Agriculture an s.o.s., asking him to make us aware of his future policy with a view to giving assistance to Canadian tobacco growers.

Tobacco sales have decreased noticeably following the bad publicity made by the minister of health, and I ask the Minister of Agriculture whether he approves the statements and the amounts of money voted by the department of health in order to fight smoking.

Growers are worried, and rightly so, and surely the Minister of Finance (Mr. Gordon) is concerned also, since in 1962 tobacco sales brought in the tidy amount of about $178 million in taxes.

That is why I ask the Minister of Agriculture whether he intends to grant special votes or subsidies in order to help tobacco growers whose production represents an important factor of the Canadian economy.

I hope that the minister will give the house details which will reassure tobacco growers.

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I rise to take part in this debate because this party is seriously concerned with the question of rural life, the development of the family farm and all aspects of rural reconstruction; second, sir, because I am an old peasant farmer myself—I have lived off the land and on the land all my life and I am one of those who have always had their feet on the ground. The amendment reads:

> That all the words after "That" be deleted and the following substituted therefor:
> "this house regrets the continuing failure of the government to take effective action with regard to the pressing agricultural problems of eastern Canada".

Personally, Mr. Speaker, I think the amendment is in too negative terms. What are the pressing agricultural problems of eastern Canada? They are not spelled out. Surely the whole field of agriculture in eastern Canada is not suffering from particular problems. Then, does this amendment mean that the official opposition are quite satisfied with the farm circumstances that exist in western Canada? I am really disappointed, in view of the agricultural talent that is to be found in the official opposition, that the amendment was not placed on a more constructive basis.

Before proceeding, Mr. Speaker, I do want to say that I give the former minister of agriculture full credit for his influence in securing the passage of the Farm Credit Corporation Act. It has been an excellent piece of legislation, but it is one of the pieces of legislation that, as the result of experience, needs improving. I give him full credit for the introduction of the ARDA program. The only thing that we want to see is some action in this respect in every province in Canada. And I give him full credit for publicly supporting the policy of wheat sales to China. At the time, leading members who are now on the government side were timidly trying to criticize this policy, but when they found what the public reaction was, they beat a hasty retreat.

Mr. Woolliams: Not the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Thompson).

Mr. Herridge: No. I give the hon. member for Red Deer full credit; he is positively opposed in principle to selling a bushel of wheat to those behind the iron curtain, and he stands fast on that position, regardless of what the farmers of his constituency think.

Mr. Patterson: A complete misrepresentation.

Mr. Herridge: I think I heard the hon. member for Fraser Valley (Mr. Patterson) chirping up; I think he said I was misrepresenting the hon. member for Red Deer. I will resume my seat, Mr. Speaker, and give the hon. member an opportunity to explain what I misrepresented.

Mr. Patterson: I would just remark, Mr. Speaker, that the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Thompson) rose, I believe it was on Friday, and made his position very clear on this matter, on which the hon. member for Kootenay West (Mr. Herridge) is possibly voicing his own opinions.

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Speaker, if I missed something that the hon. member for Red Deer said recently, I must say now that I may be wrong—

Mr. Smallwood: You are not wrong, Bert.

Mr. Herridge: —but the hon. member for Vancouver East (Mr. Winch) informs me that the hon. member for Red Deer reiterated his stand in principle against the sale of wheat to countries behind the iron curtain. Anyway we did get things lined up a bit.

I listened to the speech made by the hon. member for Kings (Mr. Mullally) and I want to congratulate him on making a constructive speech. He did not profess that there were no problems in agriculture. He recognized there were problems in eastern agriculture and in other sections of the country and was quite frank about it. As far as his speech is concerned, the implicit almost became the explicit when he was dealing with the need for action to improve these circumstances. However, I give him full credit for making a constructive speech under most difficult circumstances, seeing that he sits on the government side of the house.

We have a most unusual situation with respect to the two cabinet ministers whose duties are directly related to agriculture. We have the Minister of Forestry (Mr. Sauvé), who announced at the foundation meeting—I do not know whether it was the foundation meeting or the foundering meeting—of the exchange of ideas organization that he is a socialist. Mind you, he was careful to say that he was not a parlour or a beer parlour socialist; he said he was a thinking socialist. He is now a director of an organization which I shall call the fraternity for the intellectually élite of Canada. So we have one announced socialist in the cabinet whose duties are directly related to agriculture. On the other side we have the ultimate in free enterprise in Canada. The Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Hays) is the only person I have met in my experience in Canada who has publicly announced that his family believes in the principles of free enterprise after the resurrection. I must say I like the Minister of Agriculture and admire his frankness and honesty. Do you know what I have done to recognize that fact and to pay tribute to him, Mr. Speaker? I have just instructed the people on my ranch to rename our latest Hereford bull "Harry".

Mr. Danforth: Why?

Mr. Herridge: Hon. members ask me why. I will tell them why—because he is a great free enterpriser and a most successful salesman.

This is the dilemma I am in, Mr. Speaker, and I am sure many opposition members are too. I am not sure which of these policies is going to prevail, that of the socialist half of the agriculture team or that of the ultimate in free enterprise half. Therefore I am not certain in which direction this team is going. We have been quite conscious of the fact that in recent months there has been a bit of a tug of war, and I think it is around the basic philosophy of life which each of these gentlemen professes.

Going from the philosophical to the serious, shall I say, I want to say I fully support the plea put forward this afternoon by the hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters) for greater use of the agriculture committee of this house. Agriculture is one of our great and important industries in Canada, a way of life, shall I say, and the agriculture committee is not used to the extent it should be to obtain information. I am not one who suggests that there is an overnight solution to all these problems. I have had a bit of practical experience in life and come from a family which has a record in that respect, and has lived under pioneer conditions. We were so pioneer and so deficient in livestock that as far as I have been able to discover to date my family was the only family which owned a travelling rooster, which it used to ship up and down the Arrow lakes in a crate on a steamer. I just give that illustration to indicate that I have been closely associated with pioneer conditions. I believe hon. members of this house can learn a great deal by providing every possible opportunity—

Mr. Ryan: Is this a cock and bull story?

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member does not realize that it is a member of the opposition who is speaking.

Mr. Ryan: I guess it is only a bull story then.

Mr. Herridge: We are not using the brains and experience of persons connected with farm organizations of this country of all types. We should have a systematic exploration on, shall I say, a commodity and a regional, geographical basis of all the problems relating to farmers, which vary from province to province and make it more difficult for one set of legislation to cover all circumstances. That is a fact which we recognize, but I would urge the minister to give consideration to making greater use of our agriculture committee.

Another suggestion I want to make is for greater use of the committees of the Senate in this respect. If there is one thing the senators can do, something which I have urged for some time, it is committee work. We are not taking advantage of their opportunity to do this kind of work without, shall I say, the political atmosphere which surrounds members of this chamber on occasion when facing an election in the near future. The Senators can approach the matter in a more objective way. They are freed from those day to day concerns about re-election and so on. I have often thought that we could use committees of the Senate to study matters instead of appointing royal commissions, as we do in many cases and at great expense. There have been some good committees in the Senate. There was an excellent committee on narcotics. There was an excellent committee on manpower in Canada which made an excellent report.

Mr. Douglas: And on land use.

Mr. Herridge: Yes; my leader mentions land use and I was just coming to that. This is a committee which has sat for several years and which has heard the opinions of responsible organizations across the country, accumulating a great deal of worth-while information which has not been made use of today.

To indicate this, Mr. Speaker, I should like to quote from an editorial in the Western Producer of April 23, 1964:

> In 1958 the committee proposed that the federal and provincial departments of agriculture speed up their soil surveys; that a systematic land use survey should be carried out across Canada; that further studies be made of drainage, erosion and irrigation problems.

I ask, Mr. Speaker, what has been done in that regard? In that connection I would ask the Minister of Agriculture what particular interest he has taken in land use problems relating to the Columbia river treaty. The national farmers' union of Canada has been very interested in and expressed their opinions on this matter. I believe this is a subject in which the federal and provincial departments of agriculture should have cooperated, and made a most exhaustive study of the land use possibilities of the whole basin.

Mr. Patterson: On a point of order.

Mr. Herridge: I can see I have got his dander up.

Mr. Patterson: I am just wondering whether this debate is to be allowed to develop into a debate on agriculture right across Canada. I had intended to speak on agriculture, but I suddenly realized this debate is limited to eastern agriculture, and therefore I refrained. If the hon. member intends to enter upon a general discussion of agriculture I think all members of the house should have the same opportunity.

Mr. Herridge: In reply to the hon. member for Fraser Valley, let me say I am speaking about eastern agriculture but using a western agricultural situation to illustrate my point.

The national farmers' union has been most concerned about this matter. They produced a brief some 10 pages long in which they pointed out the necessity for ensuring that supplies of water on the prairies from the Columbia are available in the future.

Mr. Patterson: I wonder if we might have a ruling before the hon. member proceeds further.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Patterson: Is this debate to be allowed to develop into a discussion of agriculture on a nation-wide basis?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Batten): It seems to me that the hon. member for Kootenay West is referring to agriculture generally, and maybe I could invite him to turn his thoughts eastward.

Mr. Herridge: I must explain that members of this party find it very difficult to divide the agriculturists of Canada into two. It is difficult to divide the philosophy behind the proper use of land and water into two parts. There are certain aspects of the problems of eastern agriculture which are common to all agriculturists in Canada and it is in that sense I am stepping over the boundary west of Winnipeg.

Anyway, they have gone into this question thoroughly, and I am wondering whether in view of the concern expressed by the national farmers union of Canada, an organization which has, of course, locals in Ontario, the minister has given serious consideration to this subject with a view to making certain that everything is done to having these resources properly surveyed, so that plans can be made for their future use.

So as not to further annoy the hon. member for Fraser Valley who is muttering behind me—

Mr. Winch: The hon. member for Fraser Valley wants to speak on eastern agriculture; don't forget that.

Mr. Herridge: As usual, he will be behind me. Now I will go on with this editorial in the Western Producer, because I think more use could be made of these committees.

> In 1959, the committee asked that the federal and provincial agriculture departments, together with universities and agricultural colleges, coordinate their farm research programs; that extension services should be expanded, with special attention being given to "farm management" for the alleviation of problems of the small uneconomic farm unit; that vocational and technical training programs be executed in rural areas; that authorities consider a program to give more resettlement assistance to any farmer on a small uneconomic farm wishing to move to another area of employment.

I should like the minister when he replies to inform the house what is being done to give effect to this recommendation of the Senate committee on land use which was made after listening to a good number of well presented briefs.

The article continues:

> In 1961, the committee recommended that financial aid be given to farmers on submarginal lands in appropriate areas "to encourage reforestation of presently cultivated farm lands"; that surveys be speeded up on urban expansion so as to bring about more orderly development of metropolitan areas; and that the committee sponsor special studies of rural taxation, land use for future recreational needs, river and lake pollution, and loss of good farm lands to "urban sprawl".

This is a very serious problem in eastern Canada. I presume this recommendation laid the foundation for the ARDA program, and I should also like the minister to tell the house when he replies what is being done by his department to give effect to this particular recommendation of the land use committee of the Senate.

I do not intend to pursue this editorial further. What I wish to emphasize is this: Here we have an agricultural committee of the House of Commons which is not used to the extent to which it could be used to assist agriculture in general as well as the government in power. In addition, we have a land use committee in the Senate which has been doing good work for two or three years, yet whose studies and recommendations have, on the whole, not been applied by the government of the day.

I was very glad to note recently the establishment of the agricultural economics research council of Canada. If the minister had any part in this, I give him full credit for it; I understand the organization will exist partially, at least, on federal and provincial grants. I think its objectives are very well stated. These are objectives which could very well be adopted by the agriculture committee of the House of Commons as well as by the corresponding committee in the other place. A document on this subject which I have before me contains a brief statement of the purpose and nature of each of four projects. It reads as follows:

> The first project will be a study of the relationship between Canadian agricultural policy and what is generally referred to as the farm problem. The purpose of the study is to analyse the objective of past and present farm policies and relates them to the programs which have been implemented to achieve these objectives.
> The second project will be an economic analysis of the feed grain freight assistance policy. The study will attempt to determine where the freight subsidies actually go.
>
> The third project is a study of the capital supply for Canadian agriculture.

This is a most necessary study.

> The fourth study is designed to study the place of agriculture in the national economy—
> The board also announced that all research carried out by the council will be published and made available to the public.

I would hope that members of this house can get information about the work done by this research council and that we shall have the opportunity to co-operate with these important activities both in the committee of this house and in the other place. I also suggest that if we are to find solutions to the agricultural problems not only of eastern Canada but of the whole of Canada there must be more co-operation between federal and provincial governments. We have to secure the co-operation of the farmers organizations and more participation on the part of farmers organizations in the development of studies and the provision of information. I must say that as far as farming is concerned, very often someone who is unsung, in some backwoods district, one might say, comes forward with an idea which is eventually accepted by the majority. We should cultivate the soil of experience and knowledge which are found among the farmers of this country. I think we should make better use of the Agricultural Institute of Canada. I happen to be a charter member of that organization and I am very interested in its activities. In passing I might say to the minister that I think the salaries paid to agriculturists in Canada are very much out of line with those paid to other scientific and professional workers and they should receive some further consideration.

Then we must achieve the closest possible co-operation between people and governments. I believe in the principle of co-operation and participation. I should not say "I do": We all do in this party. This is the way in which democratic policies evolve. People like to feel they are consulted—that they are wanted—that they are part of a team. This is necessary if we are to develop an agricultural policy in this country. In addition, we must have co-operation with the press.

I want to say a few words about the agricultural press of Canada. Anyone who has been a reader of the agricultural press of Canada for over 50 years, as I have, knows that it is the most responsible section of the press in this country. I want to pay tribute to the work they have done for agriculture. I want to pay tribute to the Family Herald for the excellent articles it prints with respect to water resources and land use problems, its editorials concerning the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Hays) and so on. I have enjoyed every one of them. I pay tribute also to the Western Producer and the press of the co-operative organizations.

This is not a press that prints only the spectacular or the thing that catches the eye. To many people I suppose this type of periodical is dull reading. For instance, a member of this house can get up and make a most constructive and well informed speech on the principles of conservation or something relating to agriculture, and you will find that most of the press is not very interested, but if one gets up in the house and abuses the minister, instead of complimenting him like I have this evening, it is headline news.

I refer also to Country Life published in British Columbia, and the multitude of other agricultural periodicals. I am sure if the government made a particular effort to get the co-operation of the agricultural press behind a defined policy and program they would get it without a shadow of a doubt. If we can get the co-operation I have been suggesting, and benefit from the experience and knowledge found abundantly among many people in this country, we will solve the problems of eastern agriculture and western agriculture in the near future, instead of having to repeat year after year in the house the fact that there are certain problems which remain unsolved because we have not developed the co-operation to meet them effectively. That is all I have to say, Mr. Speaker.

[Translation]

Mr. Jean Berger (Montmagny-L'Islet): Mr. Speaker, I wish to point out, at the outset of my remarks which I shall make as brief as possible, that I am primarily speaking in my capacity as member for a Quebec constituency which is partly rural and partly industrialized; that kind of mixture back home accounts for the fact that our farm problem is probably more acute.

This afternoon and tonight, I heard various excellent speeches on agriculture. Some I have appreciated more than others. I have also heard some quite caustic criticisms from across, and I hope that I will not commit such a mistake. I quite agree that it is the duty of the opposition to offer criticism, but when we reach a point where former governments are criticized and comparisons are made with this one and that one, it seems to me there are certain limits which should not be exceeded.

I do not necessarily need to know if the previous government, or those preceding it, should have done more or less, because I am only concerned with finding a solution to the existing farm problem. Eastern Canada is obviously in need of assistance and it is not so much a matter of recalling the saddest phases perhaps in the farm history of eastern Canada as of trying to bring a little sunshine to clouded areas. And when I say sunshine, I am using the word in its literal as well as its figurative sense.

Many topics have been discussed today, but we know that the eastern climate is in no way to be compared with the western climate, which does make a difference as far as agriculture is concerned. Even if we had the most intelligent minister to look specifically after eastern agriculture, I do not think he could pull the strings which would give us the required weather when and where we need it. Those are factors that must be taken into consideration, but which seem to be criticized from certain sides. I am thinking, among others, of an hon. member I do not need to mention by name and who is very strong on farm matters. He should bring a few more new ideas instead of referring to the same old things, because he has run out of subjects of criticism. If he had done that at the time he held the required post—that is the only indication I shall give—perhaps we would have less to do now.

A while ago, it seems that the merits of the minister who is responsible today for the administration of ARDA were being discussed and, to a certain extent, even questioned. The so-called ARDA legislation is a program which, personally, I hold in high respect and the same goes for the people in my riding, the farmers themselves and those who go in for part-time farming or are involved in mining research of some kind.

In fact, we have been told that ARDA itself will be revised. In certain quarters, it was said that the responsible minister might not have the time to look after forestry. Be that as it may, the fact remains that in a riding such as mine and in other neighbouring counties, agriculture has just as many problems as forestry. Indeed, problems are often related in both fields. As far as I am concerned, I am quite happy that both questions should come under the same department. I am sure that the Minister of Forestry (Mr. Sauvé), who is also responsible for ARDA, will know how to handle the situation.

It is a pleasure for me to congratulate hon. members opposite for having set up ARDA, because when somebody does something worth while, I like to say it.

What is the present status of ARDA? Before coming here, I inquired several times of agronomists, but the situation is so vague that no one seems to know what benefits we derive from the program. Explanations were given today and as a television writer who is well known in the Quebec area once said: It is not over. Other explanations and instructions will be forthcoming but, what is most important, I can promise you some action, whether hon. members opposite like it or not. It will not be a vision, a castle in the air. It is not a house of cards that the new minister wishes to build; he wants something more solid and it seems to me that one cannot help admire the energetic efforts he has made and is still making so as to obtain beneficial results with his department. That is why he wants to work hard and will draw his inspiration, I am sure of that, as he has done in the past, from the speeches made on both sides of the house, at least from the speeches made in French, because it would be very hard to find something in a wasteland of ideas, and unfortunately that is the main dish we have been served too often.

I was pleased to note this afternoon that sincere and serious people in the various parties really made it their duty to express to the house their worries and those of their constituents about agriculture.

To come back to ARDA, I am happy that at this very moment, the minister responsible for the administration of that act is in Manitoba. When he comes back to the house in the next few days, he will have visited the prairie provinces, the eastern provinces, the maritime provinces and also the provinces next to British Columbia.

When he meets the premiers of those provinces and discusses farm problems with them he will see in which way we may, not so much establish ARDA, because that has been already done, but improve this legislation and make it become more helpful than we could expect until now.

At this point I associate myself with the hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Laverdière), who represents the riding next to mine, who said on May 7 last, as we may find on page 3046 of Hansard:

> For the good of the country, of confederation and of agriculture also, there must be an understanding between eastern and western Canada—

It is not only in the international field that a meeting is needed between east and west.

> One region can help the other and each can complete the other, especially in the production of feed grain which is so urgently needed for our eastern cattle.

He had previously quoted many statistics which are found on pages 3045 and 3046 of the official record. I would rather let you read them for yourself, Mr. Speaker, than repeat what has already been said. Anybody who wants to play about with statistics, handles them as a knife with two sharp edges so that he sometimes cuts himself with the wrong edge. It becomes somewhat boring in the end perpetually to be quoting figures. With regard to the problem now under discussion and which concerns all provinces, including Quebec and the maritimes, it would be needless, I think, to quote so many statistics. It is true that our farmers' income is surely not comparable to the income of western farmers. It is also true that the previous governments—I am not saying "government"—seemed to be particularly concerned with the western farmers, who have taken a lead of which I am not envious. I can understand their enhancing their own business.

That is why today, we must unite our efforts, the efforts of conscientious members on both sides of the house who wish to bring something to eastern farmers who, I think, were too often done wrong, did not get enough assistance and got bogged down. But the fault does not necessarily rest with the federal Department of Agriculture because in every province, there is also a provincial department of agriculture which may be even more directly responsible because they are directly in the area.

In the province of Quebec, it is clear that we had many farming problems at the provincial level.

Whatever leeway there was, an effort is being made now to make it up. It is precisely through that co-operation and following that profitable visit of the present minister, responsible for the new start in ARDA, that we shall finally have more concrete solutions and take more direct steps to assist the farmers.

Help can be given in so many fields.

Another interesting feature of ARDA is that it is not exactly centred only on our farmers. As I said earlier, it can be applied to mines, forestry and many other things, fisheries, everything that can be economic, even industry.

That is why, first of all, work is now being done in my riding as well as in my province, as in the other provinces of eastern Canada, to collect data and complete basic work, for it would be useless to go ahead with the first plan that comes to mind. That was done already, not long ago, and we saw the result. It is better somewhat to delay things in order to arrive at more far reaching and reliable solutions.

Of course several hon. members here would be able to discuss farm problems more interestingly than I can, because I never had the opportunity of looking much into agricultural problems all over Canada, not even in my own riding. But we have seen by now that our farmers had to have some income besides the revenue from their land, because they had trouble in getting along, in finding a decent income enabling them to live and educate their children and so on.

I admit all that, but we must also recognize for instance, that there could have been a somewhat closer supervision, because I think that in the east, and more particularly in Quebec, as hon. members from Quebec are more interested in this matter than others, our farmers may be more inclined to quicker mechanization so that the farms might yield quicker profit, instead of going about it more gradually.

Horses have been abandoned and, today, we have to use tractors, pick-ups and station-wagons on a farm which yields very little, because of unfavourable weather, and which cannot produce enough to ensure a steady income and especially some profit. What is the result? In a constituency like mine great difficulties have been experienced. For instance, a poultry-farmer has to work in the bush in order to make ends meet and pay for his big tractor, while he should have bought a smaller one. He is therefore obliged, during the winter months, to go and work in the state of Maine, or he has to serve on the ships of the Department of Transport. In brief, he tries to find a way to earn some money.

With the implementation of the ARDA program, a better balanced and better thought out program, with a more equitable redistribution of the tillable lands at home, I believe it would be appropriate for the serious farmer to take advantage of the appropriate help which will be offered to him by the Department of Agriculture at the federal as well as the provincial level. Then the farmer could stay on his farm and, in that way, we will not only help him but also the class of forest workers who face a yearly invasion of their field of endeavour by these part-time lumbermen, farmers by profession, who, in order to survive, are compelled to practise several other trades. Thus we would even fight unemployment if a well thought out program were put to work adequately.

That is why, in order not to waste the time of the house, I want to express again all the confidence I have in the present Minister of Agriculture and congratulate him for the work he has done.

I would like things to go faster and the eastern farmer would be delighted.

With regard to supplying feed grain to the eastern farmer, I noticed last year, like all the other members, that the Department of Agriculture had taken a big step forward. When the shipping season opened, it paid for the transportation right away to fill our grain elevators, especially to help our farmers.

Personally, I felt that that was sound but our farmers did not get as much as they would have hoped, even if prices did go up a little.

Who made the profits? I suspect that certain big companies made profits and are still making some. However, co-operatives are having difficulties because the price of pork has dropped while that of feed grain is excessive.

I wonder what would have happened if, for instance, the government had not filled the grain elevators? Perhaps the situation would be even worse. Of course, that is not enough but at least we got off on the right foot.

There has been a lot of talk about the effect of the price of feed grain on the dairy industry. We have within our ranks experts who can explain the situation much more clearly than I could and some of them will explain the statistics and set straight the facts which have been somewhat altered, I might say, by some members of the opposition. Figures will be given and explanations provided. Other explanations may not deal with statistics but they will be useful just the same.

In short, we surely have a lot to do yet, but it is certainly not through criticism that we will accomplish anything. As far as I am concerned, when the opportunity arises, it will always be a pleasure to express the grievances of my constituents because they do not always have the time to come to Ottawa to meet the minister and lay their problems before him. Besides, that is what I was asked to do.

But for the time being I know that at home —and when I say at home I mean, of course, in my constituency of Montmagny-L'Islet— even if we are hoping for a more vital and more specific solution, we realize that efforts are being made along those lines.

I am positive that the Minister of Forestry and the officials of ARDA are doing a marvellous job and that we will surely have better days and a sounder policy, because it will be a clearer policy, stemming from on the spot study. Instead of throwing up a big balloon to float everywhere, we will anchor it so as to derive the greatest possible benefits therefrom.

I leave you with that note of confidence in the present administration, but I will commend the government when the situation has improved, while hoping it will not deteriorate. I am looking forward to a greater improvement as soon as possible and so, I am urging the ministers concerned to continue their efforts with the help of qualified officials of the department.

I also say to our hon. friends opposite, no matter to what party they belong, that when they make proper suggestions, when they offer something acceptable, something constructive and positive, instead of only negative suggestions, then we will be happy to give them our co-operation. I see that the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm (Mr. Pigeon) now has a smile on his face. When he has good suggestions, it will give me pleasure to encourage him and to support him.

Mr. Speaker, I am sorry I took more time than I intended to, but it is in that spirit of co-operation with the hon. members of the opposition that I did so and, in return, I am asking for their co-operation. When they will actually give us their co-operation, that will be the day we will succeed in solving, as quickly as possible and in the most adequate way, the problem which is affecting everyone of us in eastern Canada.

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, we have heard some excellent debating this evening and, as usual, the hon. member for Kootenay West (Mr. Herridge) lit up the chamber with his sense of humour. Coming from the same city as the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Hays) I say with a lot of respect that when the hon. member for Kootenay West said he was going to call his prize white faced bull Harry, that is quite a compliment, because the minister will agree with me that some of the best Hereford stock is bred in the province of Alberta. I might not have gone quite that far myself, but it is still a compliment to the minister.

I was most interested in hearing the hon. member for Kootenay West discussing how the division of agriculture had been made, and in fact the hon. member for Fraser Valley (Mr. Patterson) was wondering how we people from western Canada might discuss agriculture on this amendment. I had better answer that right now. It seems to me we should have one department of agriculture and one minister of agriculture. Then we might have a healthy agricultural colony across the country because, when the wheat farmers of western Canada are doing well, they will not get into severe competition with eastern farmers who raise cattle and hogs and produce other agricultural commodities.

When one speaks critically he should also have something constructive to offer. I think the minister is a practical man, even if he believes in free enterprise after resurrection, as the hon. member for Kootenay West said this evening; but it seems strange to me that, even with one of the best contracts for grain ever made with Russia—a contract which was first made by the former government and then developed by this government—we were unable to supply the full quantities needed, or at least were unable to say to the Russian people that we could supply the full demand.

Make no mistake about it, Mr. Speaker, we had the supply of grain in western Canada. We had one of the finest wheat crops ever, and if that grain could have been moved to the facilities at the ports, and from the ports to Russia, then probably the United States would never have signed its wheat sale agreement with Russia.

Therefore I say to the minister as I said a year ago, and as I said to the former government, some serious thought should be given by the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Sharp), working in conjunction with one minister of agriculture—

An hon. Member: If you can catch him.

Mr. Woolliams: I am not going to get into that. Some serious thought should be given to improving the grain handling facilities, the rail services, and the terminal elevators at the lakehead, Halifax, Vancouver and Churchill. If we have another boom, and that is likely because the former minister of agriculture has just returned from China and has some good news in that regard, we should make certain we have the facilities to be able to deliver the goods.

I am not one of those Conservatives who believe in subsidies right down the line because, after all, the law of supply and demand is the one fact that has made western Canada economically healthy. We have the demand and the supply, but we as a country boast too much about the things we have, while forgetting to put our handling facilities in shape, our railroads, our terminal elevators, and relations between management and labour, so that we can meet the demand.

Coming from the same city as the Minister of Agriculture, where he is well recognized because he was the former mayor, I say to him he has a chance to make a name for himself, if he will discuss this problem with the Minister of Trade and Commerce and have a serious discussion with the railroads. He should say to them "Look, there are three to four inches of rain on the main wheat belts in western Canada. With more rain in June and July we can look forward to another great wheat crop on the prairies."

I have heard senior members of the house tell how grain supplies used to be discussed for weeks on end in this chamber. That is no longer a subject for debate because the farmers are getting the big crops on the prairies and we have the contracts to sell the grain. But the sad situation in this country, which is developing industrially, is that apparently we cannot manufacture enough box cars and equipment to move our grain to the ports.

The gross national product increased again last year, as it did in 1962, and much of that increase is due to the fact that we moved the grain off the prairies. Wheat production is still one of the most important primary industries in this country, and the reason we are doing so well industrially, and the reason for the boom in farm machinery, manufactured in eastern Canada and sold on the prairies, is because the western farmers have been trying to meet the demand for their grain.

But this government of decision has not measured up to its responsibilities and met the demand created by the wheat contracts. Let us look into the situation in the ports of Vancouver and Churchill, and across the line, to see to it that we can fulfil the contracts that are ours.

I have only about a minute left, Mr. Speaker, and even though I know I will have some time tomorrow, at this point I say a very strange thing occurred when the Liberal government was elected. The first thing the Minister of Trade and Commerce did was to go out to Moose Jaw and Edmonton and there he said the former minister of agriculture made a mistake when he told the farmers to grow grain, because now they were going to have a glut on the market. That was in April of last year; but by September he was able to announce that because of the contract with Russia they should grow more grain. If it had not been for the farmers' own ambition and initiative they would not have produced the grain needed to supply Russia.

Mr. Speaker, I see it is now ten o'clock.

Mr. Pickersgill: Would the hon. gentleman permit a question?

Mr. Woolliams: Certainly.

Mr. Pickersgill: Does the hon. gentleman not recall it was the late C. D. Howe who made the first contract with Russia to sell wheat?

Mr. Woolliams: Well, if I might answer that, you know what Mr. C. D. Howe and Mr. Jimmy Gardiner told the farmers in western Canada. When the farmers had wheat piled up on their farms they said, "Wait until the drought comes and that will solve your problem."

Mr. Pickersgill: They never said anything of the kind.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Churchill: Could I ask the acting house leader to solve the problem of the business for Wednesday and Thursday?

Mr. Pickersgill: It would be unwise to anticipate too much. We shall go on with this debate tomorrow and, if it is finished before the end of the day, we will go on with the 12 mile limit, but beyond that limit I am not prepared to go this evening.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

(Subject matter of questions debated under adjournment motion).

A motion to adjourn the house under provisional standing order 39A deemed to have been moved:

NATIONAL DEFENCE—ALLEGED DISCRIMINATION AGAINST FRENCH CANADIAN ARMY OFFICERS

[Translation]

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): Mr. Speaker, on May 7 last I asked the Minister of National Defence a question regarding the discrimination against French Canadians in the Kingston military college and I quote:

> Is it the minister's intention to prescribe an inquiry, following the statement made by Mr. Arsène Lauzière, professor at the military college in Kingston to the effect that there is at the present time a certain discrimination against the French Canadians, as far as their promotion within the Canadian army is concerned?

Mr. Speaker, having received no answer, I asked that that question be taken up later.

I think it would be important for the government to set up as soon as possible a commission, perhaps a royal commission, on the Canadian army, with a limited period of time, in order to establish whether the quite serious charges made by the professor at the Kingston military college are true.

Le Devoir of May 12 last reproduced the statement of a senior army officer that French Canadians are not discriminated against in the army. Major General Worthington stated:

> A French Canadian soldier who speaks English has the same promotion opportunities as anybody else.

We often hear such statements in English-speaking military quarters and, to begin with, they are quite true. Promotions are based on seniority and merit, and that simple rule applies down to intermediate ranks.

However, so that this statement may apply adequately to the problem, a few implications have to be added which show that, if there is no discrimination, there is surely some injustice.

I should like to ask the minister—one of the two ministers of national defence is probably here this evening, even if I do not see either of them now—why is military instruction only given in English and not in both languages. Second, why is only one language used as far as work, correspondence and orders are concerned? Third, the soldier must serve wherever he is sent, with all the invitations that implies to put his own language aside, since he finds himself in a unilingual environment. I am of the opinion that the French speaking soldier should be on the same footing as the English speaking soldier. Fourth, a member of the armed forces who insists on remaining in the province of Quebec to ensure a French education for his children is considered a trouble-maker and his promotion is affected.

Mr. Speaker, I think there is some uneasiness and we are aware of it as a result of the great number of letters which we on this side of the house are receiving. This uneasiness among French Canadians is experienced in the three services. Of course, there is the royal 22nd regiment, which is mostly made up of French Canadians, but I wonder whether the Minister of National Defence could not establish other French speaking regiments or else some regiments half of which would be made up of French speaking and the other half of English speaking servicemen.

I feel it is not enough that the Laurendeau-Dunton commission will examine behind closed doors members of the armed forces who will express such a wish. In my opinion, another investigation should be conducted so as to know exactly what is going on in the armed services and to let the public know.

Serious doubts still exist in the public mind, and I hope that the Minister of National Defence, in the interest of national unity, will act as soon as possible in order to know whether or not there is discrimination against French Canadian servicemen.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I regret very much that the circumstances which have made the attendance rather sparse on the front bench opposite have also made it pretty sparse on the front bench on this side this evening. I know that the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Hellyer), and even more the associate minister, would have liked to be here this evening to reply, and no discourtesy is implied by their absence. I am quite sure that the Associate Minister of National Defence (Mr. Cardin) will take full note of the questions raised by the hon. gentleman. It would be presumptuous on my part were I to attempt to give any kind of answer. I am quite sure the minister will be prepared to deal with these questions when the estimates of the department are before the committee of supply, and I will suggest to him that perhaps he might give a written answer to the hon. gentleman in the meantime.

Mr. Pigeon: I don't agree with that; he is supposed to be here.

LABOUR CONDITIONS—SAINT JOHN, N.B.—TRANSFER OF MANUFACTURING FIRM TO MONTREAL

Mr. Thomas M. Bell (Saint John-Albert): Mr. Speaker, last Friday I asked a question of the Minister of Labour (Mr. MacEachen) in the absence of the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pickersgill), so I am delighted that it is the Minister of Transport who is fulfilling all the responsibilities this evening. I asked:

In view of the closing of the national manufacturing concern of McAvity's in Saint John and its transfer to Montreal with all its facilities, resulting in a loss of more than 400 jobs, will the Atlantic development board immediately investigate and offer every assistance in this matter?

This question was ruled out of order by Your Honour, I suppose because of the lack of urgency. I suggest that this matter is very urgent because meetings are now being held in Saint John between the provincial government, civic officials and bodies, and company officers in an effort to save and possibly retain this industry, and failing this to consider possible alternatives for the plant and men. Therefore it is imperative, in my opinion, that the federal government be represented at these discussions.

This shutdown in Saint John has been one of the most serious blows which we have experienced for some time in this community. The hon. member for Charlotte has some business interests in the city and I think he will agree that this has been one of the toughest blows it has experienced in many years. Over 400 skilled men without pension are to be thrown on to the already meagre labour market. There will be little opportunity for them to relocate in Montreal. Though some may find it possible to obtain work in other industries, the great bulk of these men will have serious readjustment problems. I recognize that this is primarily a matter for the provincial government, and in all fairness I should say that they are taking an interest and are the ones who have arranged this meeting. However, at the same time the present Robichaud government has taken considerable credit for new industry in the province and have given rise to fantastic stories about great job opportunities for everyone. This closing down of a long established family industry will certainly be a lesson to them and they will think twice about making lavish claims in the future.

There is another ironic twist to this, in that we have just made plans for the completion of a large newsprint industry in the city which was arranged by the previous Flemming government of New Brunswick. It is presently under construction and will be ready for operation in ten months. But as optimistic as this is, it will not fill the hole left in the labour market by the McAvity closing.

Similarly, announcements were made in the local papers which appeared in the Toronto newspapers last Saturday that Du Pont will open a new industry there. This is the first to be located by that company in the Atlantic provinces. This is good news, but the truth is that the Du Pont mill will employ only about 12 men for their polyethylene processing.

I suggest that the Atlantic development board immediately send representatives to sit in at the Saint John meetings to obtain first hand information as to the reason this industry can no longer continue. They should examine the economics. Is it the old bogey of geography? Is it a case of freight rate disadvantages, or are there other hidden reasons? What is the responsibility of the internationally owned and controlled Crane Company who purchased McAvity four years ago and is now for some strange reason closing out their Saint John operation in favour of Montreal? It seems that everything is going to Montreal. It may be that the area development agency of the Department of Industry should be involved, and if it is felt by the minister that this would be better, it is all right with me. We are spending thousands of dollars to find out how to locate new secondary manufacturing in the maritimes. We are sending representatives all over the world—I know that some of the permanent officials of the Atlantic development board are presently in Scotland—to study methods which have been successful in other countries which have had this problem. Yet here at our own doorstep, and at the very moment these commendable efforts are being accelerated, this industry, long established and at one time the largest foundry in Canada, is shutting down. Therefore, I call on the minister to say that the federal government will send representatives to these conferences and enthusiastically assist in finding a solution to this problem, one which goes to the very core of our regional geographic disabilities in the maritimes.

I see the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pickersgill), with his great interest in the maritime provinces, is following closely, and this is one time when he has to rise to the occasion and show some sincere helpfulness in this respect.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): I cannot but agree with everything the hon. member has just said about the closing of this industry, which is so important to the economy of the city of Saint John and to the economy of New Brunswick. This is one of these regrettable things; it is very hard to say, without full knowledge of the circumstances, what guides these private industries in making the kind of decision which has been made in this case.

Mr. Knowles: Don't you know?

Mr. Pickersgill: Certainly, I feel it is just as much a responsibility of the Atlantic development board to do everything it possibly can to preserve existing industries in the Atlantic provinces as it is to seek new ones there. The board has been in touch with the government of New Brunswick, as it has been in touch with other agencies interested in this matter from the time the news of the intention to close this plant was first given to us. The board and its staff have offered every possible assistance. If the actual physical presence of a member of the staff at the meeting would be of any help at all, I am quite sure one will be there and I will put this point at once to the board. But whether or not someone actually attends the meetings I can assure the hon. member for Saint John-Albert and the house that this is regarded as a very grave matter indeed. In a place like Saint John the loss of employment of 400 skilled men is a very serious blow. If there is any possible way of having this reconsidered, I am confident the Atlantic development board will do everything it can in this respect, and if that is not possible it will do everything it can to find some suitable alternative, in consultation with the government of New Brunswick, the Department of Industry and any other agency, federal, provincial or municipal which may be able to assist.

Motion agreed to and the house adjourned at 10.17 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Tuesday, May 26, 1964

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

LABOUR RELATIONS

MARITIME UNION TRUSTEES—APPEARANCE BEFORE HOUSE COMMITTEE

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Michael Starr (Ontario): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Labour and ask him whether he would make arrangements immediately to have the maritime union trustees appear before the standing committee on industrial relations, in order to give that committee the story on what has transpired up to now and so the trustees can be subjected to questioning.

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I expect to be seeing the trustees later today and I will raise this question with them.

Mr. Starr: Could not the minister be more specific, in view of the fact that one of those trustees, Mr. Millard, has appeared before certain members of the New Democratic party? Other members of the House of Commons should be given a résumé of what has transpired in the work of the trustees.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, I was not aware that any such meeting had taken place, but I will raise the question my hon. friend has mentioned, namely the appearance of the trustees before a committee of the house.

Mr. D. M. Fisher (Port Arthur): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. As someone who is not aware of the allegation made by the hon. member for Ontario, I wonder whether the minister would consider really moving on the suggestion made by that hon. member, as it would help to clear up not only the one question but also the matter of whether Mr. Millard did meet with members of this party.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, as hon. members are aware, I have raised this question more than once with the chairman of the board of trustees and with at least one other member, and the view taken at that time by the chairman and members of the board was that an appearance before a parliamentary committee, where they would have to discuss their activities in detail and in public, might prejudice the work of the board. I will raise the question again with the trustees and see whether the intervening passage of time has changed that particular consideration.

Mr. Starr: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In view of the report in the Globe and Mail this morning by Mr. Wilfred List stating, among other things, that Mr. Millard recently met the parliamentary caucus of the New Democratic party to explain the position of the trustees, would the minister not consider that the other members of this house also have a right to meet with the trustees?

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): On a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker, the statement just referred to by the hon. member for Ontario is completely inaccurate. Mr. Millard has never met with the caucus of the New Democratic party. I do not know where the report came from, but I want to assure the house that the report is completely incorrect.

Mr. Harold E. Winch (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege because in two ways I am indirectly concerned in a previous question. I want to make it clear as deputy chairman of the caucus of our group that Mr. Millard has never met with us. In addition I wish to speak as national vice president of the New Democratic party and as such I am, I presume, a responsible officer of that party. Mr. Millard has never met with our political party in any way whatsoever.

GREAT LAKES—INQUIRIES RESPECTING "DO NOT SHIP" LIST

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): May I ask the Minister of Labour if he is now in a position to answer a question I asked him regarding the "do not ship" list and, in particular, the position of one Jacques Savard who claims he was denied employment because his name was on that list.

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of Labour): Yes, Mr. Speaker. I promised the right hon. gentleman that I would get this information for him, and I now want to tell the house that the case of Mr. Jacques Savard has been brought to the attention of the board of trustees.

Inquiries of the Ministry

I am informed by the trustees that Mr. Savard has been interviewed and has been advised to make application to the maritime appeals board established to consider such cases. The trustees have also stated that they are prepared to assist Mr. Savard in bringing his appeal before this board.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Have there been any further examinations made to ascertain whether the "do not ship" list is still in effect?

Mr. MacEachen: Yes, Mr. Speaker. In conjunction with the information provided in this case the trustees have stated once again that there is no "do not ship" list physically in existence. The only record which the trustees have of persons previously included on this list is that available from the Norris commission. The trustees have written to all those whose addresses could be located, offering their assistance to such persons.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

ASSISTANCE TO UNEMPLOYED WORKERS IN RELOCATING

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Labour a question with reference to the statement he made the other day to the effect that workers desiring to move from one part of Canada to another should be given financial assistance irrespective of whether or not they are moving from a labour surplus area to a labour deficiency area. Does the minister intend to introduce legislation regarding this matter at this session?

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, in discussing the question of labour mobility I ventured the view that careful consideration ought to be given to widening the basis upon which assistance should be given to unemployed workers. I suggested that we in the Department of Labour were at present considering a wider method of assisting unemployed workers, but no decision has been reached. The matter is under consideration.

[Later:]

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Queens): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Labour along the same lines as that of the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam. In the minister's contemplated and Gordonesque migration of workers, has he any special plans for quick action on the 72,000 jobs needed in the Atlantic region?

Mr. Speaker: I realize the great importance of this question, but would the hon. member put it on the order paper.

[Mr. MacEachen.]

CANADIAN FLAG

PROCEDURE TO BE FOLLOWED IN SUBMITTING DESIGN TO PARLIAMENT

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, to return to things more mundane may I ask the Prime Minister whether there has been a determination by the cabinet as to the design of the flag that is going to be submitted to the house, and when he intends to place the resolution on the order paper.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, there will be a resolution in Votes and Proceedings tomorrow morning which, among other things, will describe in some detail the design of the proposed flag to be submitted to parliament. To assist hon. members and as a convenience to them, at the time the resolution appears on the order paper there will be a pictorial description of the flag which will be circulated to all hon. members.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate that action on the part of the Prime Minister, so we are going to be let in on the secret. May I ask him, then, what is the general plan of the government regarding debate on this matter? Will it be proceeded with at once or will it be delayed? I think the house and the country would like very much to have the Prime Minister tell us what is going to be done about it, after we see this pictorial obsession produced.

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, the resolution will be on the order paper on Thursday and it can then be called, I take it, by the government at any time. It is proposed to give hon. members a few days to consider the resolution and then to proceed to introduce the resolution, I would hope within a matter of a few days after that.

[Translation]

Hon. Léon Balcer (Three Rivers): Mr. Speaker, may I put a question to the right hon. Prime Minister?

Could he inform the house as to whether his office, the government or the Liberal party had one or more gallup polls carried out on the question of the flag?

If so, would he kindly communicate the results to the house?

[Text]

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, the government has taken no poll of this kind, nor do I know of any poll taken by any party.

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Royal): I have a supplementary question for the Prime Minister on the flag. I wonder if the Prime Minister will advise if it is intended in the resolution respecting the flag to provide for the conjoint flying of the red ensign, thus satisfying first the premier of Newfoundland and second the concept of co-operative federalism.

Mr. Speaker: If the hon. member will wait until tomorrow morning he will have a chance to see exactly what is in the resolution.

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): I have a supplementary question on the flag. Will the Prime Minister inform the house whether instructions have now been given to any government department to manufacture anything in the form of the Pearson pennant?

Some hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. Robert C. Coates (Cumberland): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Should the Pearson pennant be adopted, will he carry out an educational program in those countries where Canadian peace troops are serving, so that our troops would not be fired upon, in view of the fact that foreign countries might—

Mr. Speaker: Order.

[Translation]

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister. Should parliament adopt a distinctive national flag, could the Prime Minister tell the house if the cabinet will abolish the 1945 order in council which established the red ensign as a flag?

[Text]

Yes or no?

Mr. Speaker: Order. This question is not in order.

[Translation]

Mr. Pigeon: I rise on a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker. The question is most important, because we think the government is about to give Canada two flags, which is a stupid thing. We would have one for week days and the other for Sundays.

[Text]

[Later:]

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Prime Minister. He referred earlier today to a pictorial representation of the flag the government is recommending, which is to be distributed to members. Will this be printed on paper only, or is the government considering providing us with a specimen of the flag so we can see what it looks like as a flag when it hangs from a mast?

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, it is appearing on paper to assist hon. members in their consideration of the resolution. If members, having had a look at it on paper, would like it in some other form we should be glad to oblige.

[Later:]

[Translation]

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Prime Minister. Does the fact that we have two flags mean that the government adopts two national anthems?

Yes or no.

[Text]

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, there can be only one national flag, and I am sorry my hon. friend is not going to support us in getting one.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

VIET NAM—CANADIAN PARTICIPATION IN PEACE KEEPING FORCE

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Gilles Grégoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, may I put a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs?

Could the minister tell us if, while conferring with the United Nations secretary general, U Thant, the matter of Canada's participation to a peace force in Viet Nam was discussed? If so, could he tell us what are Canada's commitments in that regard?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, we have discussed many things generally, but as there is no definite proposal before the security council, I think it might be better to wait and see what happens. If we know of a proposal, we will consider it.

Mr. Grégoire: May I put a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker?

Could the Secretary of State for External Affairs tell us whether parliament will be consulted before Canada reaches a decision about sending a peace keeping force to Viet Nam?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, there has been no question for the moment of a definite proposal, but I am convinced that parliament would have some responsibilities to assume in that event.

[Text]

CYPRUS—EXTENSION OF PERIOD OF COMMITMENT OF CANADIAN FORCE

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Marcel Lessard (Lake St. John): Mr. Speaker, may I ask a supplementary question?

Could the Secretary of State for External Affairs tell us whether the secretary general of the United Nations, U Thant, has asked him to extend the mandate of the Canadian forces for a three month period, as previously agreed?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): We did not discuss the matter during our talks.

[Text]

PUBLIC SERVICE

REAPPOINTMENT OF MEMBER OF UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE COMMISSION

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Michael Starr (Ontario): Mr. Speaker, I would like to address a question to the Prime Minister and ask if he will give me an answer to my question of last week, as to whether the government has yet decided on the reappointment of Mr. Alistair MacArthur to the unemployment insurance commission.

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, the matter is presently under consideration, and no decision has been reached.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON PRIORITY OF LEGISLATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Prime Minister. Because the flag debate has come to our knowledge since May 15, when the Prime Minister gave us the list of business for this part of the session, could he at an early date make a statement giving us the actual priorities so we will know what are the items of business we should give our attention to in the next few weeks, and so that we will know where the Canada pension plan will be in that list of priorities?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I think that is a very good suggestion, and perhaps a convenient and useful time would be next Monday or Tuesday.

Mr. Harold E. Winch (Vancouver East): As a supplementary question to the Prime Minister, in order to expedite the business of the House of Commons and the legislation he wants put through the house, at an early date will he place the legislation on the order paper so members can read it, understand it, and be prepared to discuss it?

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, I think there are between 15 and 20 items on the order paper now.

TELEVISION

REMOVAL OF FREEZE ON PERMITS FOR CABLE TELEVISION SERVICE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. A. D. Hales (Wellington South): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport. In view of the fact that the Fowler committee terms of reference do not include the study of cable television, would the minister now consider removing the freeze that he placed on this industry as of December 31 last?

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, as the Secretary of State indicated in his statement yesterday, it is the intention of the government to make an announcement very shortly about this subject, and I cannot anticipate it.

AGRICULTURE

EGGS—REPORTED IMPORTATION FROM ENGLAND

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. A. Webb (Hastings-Frontenac): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Agriculture. According to today's issue of the Globe and Mail there is a large shipment of eggs to arrive in Canada from England. Could the minister advise the house as to what type of eggs these are, and for what purpose are they being imported?

Hon. Harry W. Hays (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I realize the urgency of the question, but I would like to be in a position to hear the answer.

Mr. Hays: Mr. Speaker, I did not see the report but I would be glad to check into it. I know that an hon. member from Saskatchewan—I just forget which constituency—is quite concerned about eggs in Saskatchewan, and I think probably we should be bringing them from that province. We will take a good look at the matter.

FISHERIES

NORTH PACIFIC TREATY—REFERENCE OF SUBJECT MATTER TO HOUSE COMMITTEE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Barry Mather (New Westminster): With your permission, Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Fisheries a question. Having in mind the large delegation of fishermen present in Ottawa today from our western or British Columbia maritimes, can the hon. gentleman clear up a question which concerns them by telling the house whether the matters involved in the north Pacific fishing treaty will be placed before the standing committee on marine and fisheries for consideration at an early date?

Hon. H. J. Robichaud (Minister of Fisheries): I cannot but repeat the statement which I have made in the house on two or three occasions: The north Pacific treaty matter will be brought before the standing committee on marine and fisheries as soon as our negotiations are complete and before acceptance or ratification by the government.

CROWN ASSETS

DISPOSITION OF EQUIPMENT OF CLOSED RADAR STATION

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Auguste Choquette (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Industry and Minister of Defence Production. It is an urgent question since the St. Sylvestre radar station is going to be closed without delay. I ask the minister whether he intends, in anticipation of the establishment of an economic industry, to let the equipment on the station go at a nominal price?

[Text]

Some hon. Members: Order paper.

Mr. Speaker: On advice, may I suggest that the hon. member put his question on the order paper.

[Translation]

Mr. Choquette: Mr. Speaker, I wish to raise that question after ten o'clock.

[Text]

NATIONAL DEFENCE

CANADIAN PARTICIPATION IN UNITED STATES MILITARY EXERCISE

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Winnipeg South Centre): I have a question for the Minister of National Defence. Is there in progress at the present time in the United States a major military exercise called "Desert Strike" and are members of the Canadian armed forces there now as observers?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of National Defence): I will take the question as notice.

EARTHQUAKE DAMAGE

BRITISH COLUMBIA—REQUEST FOR ASSISTANCE OF PRIME MINISTER IN APPEAL FOR FUNDS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. S. Barnett (Comox-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. On May 14, which was the day the Prime Minister announced the amount of the federal contribution to the Alberni valley and west coast disaster fund, he informed me that he would be glad to consider taking some steps to assist the committee in increasing the amount of the voluntary contributions. I should like to ask the Prime Minister whether, in view of the continuing need for an increase in this fund, he would be willing to take some steps, such as appearing on a national television appeal, in order to bring to the attention of Canadians everywhere the continuing need for assistance in the rehabilitation of the tidal wave disaster victims.

Mr. Fairweather: Bring out that old film.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I would be glad to appear on such a program in such a good cause; indeed I would be glad to appear on a program at any time.

SUPPLY

The house resumed, from Monday, May 25, consideration of the motion of Mr. Gordon for committee of supply, and the amendment thereto of Mr. Hamilton.

LACK OF ACTION TO ASSIST EASTERN AGRICULTURE

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, last evening at ten o'clock I had just started to speak on the supply motion, particularly with reference to agriculture. In review I might say that I mentioned at the beginning of my remarks that in order to have a healthy agricultural economy, not only has it to be healthy in western Canada but it must also be healthy in eastern Canada. You cannot have two distinct programs; you must have one national program.

I was dealing particularly with an important question. I said that I did not think we should be critical unless we would be constructive. I pointed out to the Minister of Agriculture through you, Mr. Speaker—and I am glad to see the Minister of Trade and Commerce in his seat today—that with Russia we had one of the most economic contracts for the sale of western wheat which we ever had, outside of the one with China. I said to the minister that I thought it was regrettable we did not have the facilities in this country, particularly the railway facilities—I wonder whether we could have a little order, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I am finding it very difficult to hear the interesting remarks of the hon. member.

Mr. Woolliams: Coming back to what I was saying, it is rather regrettable that a country which favours not only an agricultural industry but also an industrial economy did not have the facilities either through the railroads or at our ports or otherwise to move grain to Russia. When this government was elected they said they were going to be a government of action, and I maintain that if they had got busy with the railroads and the farm organizations, the pools of western Canada and the line companies which purchase our grain at local elevator level, and make certain those facilities were such as to move the grain off western Canadian farms, we could have supplied the grain to Russia instead of letting the United States do it. When these negotiations were first entered into the United States was against selling wheat to those people who were living behind the iron curtain. It was only after we were unable to complete our contract or fulfil the demands of Russia that the United States stepped into the picture and was able to take a big slice of the contract which might have gone to the farmers of western Canada.

My charge to the government is that although the wheat board has done a good job and has co-operated throughout the years to sell grain for the western farmers, this government has been irresponsible in that it did not get the facilities ready to deliver that grain. As I said last night, I maintain that when the law of supply and demand operates then there is prosperity on the farms of Canada, whether they be in western Canada or in eastern Canada.

I think the main reason these facilities were not ready was the position taken by the Minister of Trade and Commerce when the government first took office. What was that position? I set it out very clearly last evening. The position was that the government told the farmers of western Canada that the former minister of agriculture, who is in his place today and who told the farmers to grow grain so they could meet the demands of Russia and China, was "all wet". They said that the farmers should not have been encouraged to grow grain because there would be a large surplus.

I should like to quote from the Winnipeg Free Press for September 23 last so as to put the exact words on the record. Under the heading "Wheat curb urged" the Minister of Trade and Commerce and the Minister of Agriculture are reported as follows:

> Mr. Sharp said the Soviet sale did not change the advice he gave last spring that Canadian farmers should grow less wheat and more of other kinds of crops.
> Mr. Hays said farmers should cut their wheat acreage and turn to crops like feed grains. A 10 per cent reduction in wheat acreage, he said, would put Canadian wheat production back in the 500 million bushels a year range—

In other words those two ministers took the position that even with a contract with Russia and a contract with China there was going to be a surplus of grain. The fact is that if we had fulfilled the contract that Russia would have liked to sign with this country, fulfilled the obligation with Russia under the contract we already had, and had had the facilities to deliver this grain, there would have been a great boom in the agricultural industry of this country.

I do not know how the minister can now reconcile his position. He was shortsighted. He was irresponsible. He was not aware of the situation when he spoke to the farmers on that occasion, not only in Edmonton but in Moose Jaw and throughout western Canada. I should like to hear the Minister of Trade and Commerce and the Minister of Agriculture explain their positions.

Today they would like to take the credit. I noticed that the Minister of Trade and Commerce went to Los Angeles recently. I do not know whether he was in Hollywood, but he made a speech claiming that these large wheat sales which he was putting through were a great thing. When we on this side of the house were on the other side of the house we were told these contracts were the wheat board's contracts. He was the one who criticized them, who told the farmers to produce smaller crops; and today, of course, now that we have a boom they are endeavouring to take the credit for it. I do not think he will be able to pull the blinds over the eyes of the western farmers. I do not think Mr. Buckwold, the mayor of Saskatoon, will ever get into the cabinet, because the people of western Canada will know exactly what the situation is. I suppose because they have tried to bribe the voters before they will try to bribe them again, but it would seem to me that the people of Saskatoon, and particularly the farmers surrounding that area, will know the true picture and will know who really implemented a national agricultural policy in this country.

I ask the Minister of Agriculture, who has done a lot of travelling since he took that portfolio, to stand in his place when I have finished talking and name one piece of useful legislation he has placed on the statute books for the farmers. The answer is that he has placed nothing on the statute books. I say, Mr. Speaker, that the wheat board has served the farmers well, but as far as the grain growers and agriculture are concerned, this government are most irresponsible. I am laying before the house the facts about this government this afternoon.

An hon. Member: A government of retreat.

Mr. Woolliams: It is a government of retreat, but unfortunately with regard to agriculture they have nothing from which to retreat, because they have done nothing.

Mr. Sharp: Just the greatest year in Canadian history.

Mr. Woolliams: I am glad to see the Minister of Trade and Commerce come to life, because he puts me in mind of that advertisement for blue blades. They used to say "Be sharp and look sharp". Today I do not know whether we can be sharp or look sharp because everybody is using Wilkinson's blades—and everybody out in western Canada is going to vote Conservative.

Mr. Sharp: Just like they did in Saskatchewan.

Mr. Greene: I didn't think you were old enough to shave.

Mr. Woolliams: I heard one of my friends say that he didn't think I was old enough to shave. I will tell him that when he appears before the Liberal convention in Ontario he will have the closest shave he has ever had.

Mr. Benidickson: He might win.

Mr. Woolliams: I would like to quote from the Toronto Star of September 23, 1963. Let us see what they have to say. I mention the Winnipeg Free Press and the Toronto Star because I think they would report the facts regarding these ministers very accurately:

> Last July Mr. Sharp suggested in Edmonton that wheat acreage might be reduced. "I would think", he said, "that foreseeable demand for our wheat can be satisfied from smaller acreage—

The reason he is telling the farmers to grow smaller acreage is that he knows the facilities of his department are inadequate; he knows that the Minister of Agriculture, who went to Russia, did nothing to stimulate a contract, and they are not capable of doing the job. I charge them with their lack of responsibility in this connection. As far as the western farmers are concerned, I know he has been played up as a great Liberal hero, but the fact is that both those ministers should resign; they are irresponsible as far as a program for agriculture is concerned.

I would now like to come to another matter, Mr. Speaker. One of the most confusing things for anybody in the opposition is to ascertain who is really looking after the agriculture portfolio. We all know how some of these ministers come to grips with subjects. I have here a copy of last night's Citizen. I can understand the headline because we have seen many of these headlines in regard to a very unusual committee. I am glad to see one of the members of that committee sitting in the front row opposite—he is generally in the back row—because I know he will be interested in this subject. The headline says, "Beer parlour socialists not wanted". This statement was made by the Minister of Forestry (Mr. Sauvé), and I am sure the hon. member will be interested in hearing this.

Mr. Greene: I haven't heard anything yet.

Mr. Woolliams: This article says:

> "We have to work through political parties". Describing himself as one of the "real socialists". Mr. Sauvé poured scorn on socialist theorists who are "arguing all the time and don't know what the real problems are".

He took up the theme of his complaint about this matter and said he was a "real socialist". I remember I once made a speech in which I said birds of a feather flock together and birds of certain other feathers roost together. Now these birds are beginning to show their true feathers in the House of Commons. They are the great socialists. We have finally smoked them out. As the hon. member for Kootenay West—

An hon. Member: What about Fairweather?

Mr. Woolliams: Well, he had a lot to say and they were very complimentary about Mr. Fairweather. I refer to the Citizen. The hon. member for Kootenay West said that the Minister of Agriculture, who has nothing to look after, was a free enterpriser and would be such even after the resurrection; but the other minister is a socialist, and they do not know how deep the roots run. That is exactly what the Citizen said in its article. I do not think he challenged the Citizen.

So, Mr. Speaker, how do the farmers know where they are going? Do they believe they are going to be under the regimentation of the socialist who really holds the power in that department or, under the free and fancy programs which have not yet been administered by the Minister of Agriculture, who is a free enterpriser? Are they going to be under the regimentation of the socialist or under the free enterpriser? I say, Mr. Speaker, they are a two flag government and they are a two flag party in regard to the Department of Agriculture. But under one of those ensigns there is one man with the power—and that is the socialist—and the free enterpriser from Calgary has been pushed out; he has nothing to take care of. That is the situation.

My final charge to the Minister of Trade and Commerce is briefly this; that no matter how he tries to dish it up, he can never take credit for the prosperity on the western farms as far as the sale of grain is concerned. First of all he told the farmers they were wrong to grow it; he told them not to grow any more, and when it finally fell in his lap he said it was an accident. I say to him that it was an accident that he arrived on that side of the house, but it will not be an accident when he returns to the proper side of the house, if he ever does return.

Mr. Sharp: Which side is that?

Mr. Woolliams: I say that because the policies with regard to agriculture are the same kind of policies that this government are trying to implement in other departments, and they do nothing to help the situation. What have they done for eastern agriculture? What have they done for the eastern farmers? Nothing. Any time the Minister of Agriculture swells with pride he does so because he is speaking about the legislation which the Conservatives put on the statute books of this country.

Mr. Benidickson: And did nothing about it.

Mr. Woolliams: The operation of that legislation put on the statute books by the Conservatives has done a great deal in improving agriculture in this country. Let us get down to brass tacks. When it comes to exporting grain—and we are going to hear a great deal about this—in 1962-63 we exported about 357 million bushels; that is flour and wheat together. In 1961 we exported 353 million bushels; in 1960 we exported almost 300 million bushels. We can only keep that quantity moving if the facilities of this country are such that we can move the grain off the farms—

Mr. Sharp: How much this year?

Mr. Woolliams: I do not know, but I am coming to that.

Mr. Sharp: Five hundred and fifty million bushels.

Mr. Woolliams: I asked the Minister of Trade and Commerce how much was sold under the Russian contract and he kept saying it was against public policy to tell us. We cannot find out unless we read newspapers.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Woolliams: One thing I might say to the minister is this. Even if it is 400 million bushels or 500 million bushels, another 200 million bushels could have been sold to Russia if they had had the railways, the docks, the ports in shape and had discussed the matter with the farm organizations, the wheat pools, the line elevators, and if they had made certain they could keep management and labour working together.

I am glad to see the Minister of Justice in his place. It took him six months to get a charge laid against the man who disrupted all the shipping on the great lakes. That is the kind of program we have had from this government. This is the kind of responsibility we have been getting from the empty front benches that we see this afternoon.

An hon. Member: And empty heads.

Mr. Haidasz: What a lot of verbal diarrhoea.

Mr. Woolliams: That may be true; if there is one man who knows anything about diarrhoea, you would understand. I would not have used the word diarrhoea, Mr. Speaker, but the hon. member is a specialist on diarrhoea; that is his profession. On those words, Mr. Speaker, I rest my case.

Hon. Harry W. Hays (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, in all humility I apologize for the member from Calgary on behalf of the people of Calgary.

An hon. Member: He will look after himself.

Mr. Hays: I realize that he feels this way occasionally, but he is a pretty good friend of mine and he has said to me "Harry, don't take any notice of it; I have to say it in the house anyway but you know I don't mean it". First, Mr. Speaker, I should like to give the figures in so far as shipments of wheat from Canada are concerned. The all time high in wheat shipments out of Canada occurred in the year 1928-29.

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege.

Mr. Benidickson: You are too late.

Mr. Woolliams: I am not too late. I want to say that the minister may have been right that we are friends, but I challenge him to say again in this house or outside of the house anything that he has said today. If he meant it as a joke let him come clean, because I have never said to the minister inside the house or outside the house that anything I say in the house he should take with a pinch of salt. I can say that I have respect for the community which has elected me twice as often as it has elected its former mayor. I say to him that if he knows what he is doing, then as a citizen of Calgary and the member for Calgary South, who had a very close shave and bought his way into the house, he will get up and apologize.

Mr. Hays: Mr. Speaker, I understand that if any member of the house wishes to take the attitude that the hon. member for Bow River has taken, that is his privilege, and I have no recourse but to accept his statement. If I may continue with the wheat export figures, the all time high was 408 million bushels in the year 1928-29. To date we have exported 418 million bushels and we have two and a half more months to go. A year ago at the same time our exports were 255 million bushels. Remember those figures; 255 million bushels a year ago compared with 418 million bushels now.

I remember being on the west coast shortly after the Minister of Trade and Commerce made his visit there, when we learned that we must do something about the static condition in so far as shipments of wheat from the west coast were concerned. At that time the all time high was the unloading of 400 cars a day. It was not long before we had it up to 450 cars a day. We thought that was excellent. We were even more pleased when it reached 500 cars a day. We never thought it would get to 600 cars, but it has reached 650 cars a day.

By the first of August this year we will probably have exported in the neighbourhood of 600 million bushels of wheat. Add to this the 155 million bushels consumed in Canada and we come out with a figure of 755 million bushels. The all time high production was 723 million bushels of wheat last year. I think that pretty well takes care of the facts of the case, and I believe this government should be commended on the good job it has done. I am sure every farmer in Canada feels exactly the same way as the Russians, Chinese and other recipients of our grain.

The hon. member for Kootenay West made the comment last night that he now has a prize bull named Harry. I think that probably is a good name to give him if he is an active chap, and he probably is. At three o'clock this morning I telephoned the Minister of Forestry to ask him whether he wanted to come back to protect his ARDA program. He said "I do not think it will be necessary. All the farmers know about it, so I think I will not come back." My wife said to me, "To whom are you talking"? I said I had been talking to Sauvé.

I said I was thinking about what the member for Kootenay West had said about me. I said "You remember the time we imported that highland cow from Scotland for which we paid $1,800". She had a bull calf and we took the bull calf back to western Canada. We did not want to expose him to any of the females and we did the necessary thing so that if he did jump the fence nothing would happen. We got to like him. He was a funny fellow. He was a little shaggy and did not do much, but we laughed at him. I said to my wife "I have been thinking that maybe we should call him Herbert, or Bert for short". She said "Well, I think that is a pretty good idea, but as he is such a nice, kindly old man why don't you call him after the old goat we have to keep the bulls from fighting?"

As Minister of Agriculture, Mr. Speaker, I wish as nearly as possible to answer all the questions that were raised yesterday concerning the Department of Agriculture, because farming is a very serious business. We have a great responsibility to the farmers of Canada, and I do not think we should take it lightly. I want to answer what the hon. member for Qu'Appelle said about feed grains. My colleague the hon. member for Kings mentioned the matter, but I should like to go into a little more detail.

The hon. member for Qu'Appelle referred to the feed grain policy which he said the previous government was ready to introduce at the time of the dissolution of parliament in 1963. I discussed the problem with farm organizations and found that they wanted a program which would ensure adequate supplies of feed grains in the east at prices which would not be affected by the close of navigation. I did not take long to appreciate that a program could readily be set up to do this very thing. The policy was announced on August 22, four months after we took office.

This was the policy under which the government reimbursed holders of western feed grains in eastern position for the winter carrying charges. As a result of this policy there were 30.8 million bushels of western oats, barley and feed wheat in eastern elevators at the close of navigation last year compared with 21.2 million bushels at the close of navigation in 1962, an increase of 9 million bushels. On May 13 this year there were 8.7 million bushels in eastern position compared with 6.7 million bushels a year ago.

I tabled in the house previously figures showing the manner in which this policy resulted in western feed grain prices staying uniform throughout the whole winter. The figures I tabled and which I am going to repeat now were assembled from the actual invoices of sales which are filed with the department under the freight assistance policy. These show that from October last year to April this year the average weighted price at Montreal of oats and barley shipped to retailers changed hardly at all. In October last year it was $2.44 per hundredweight for oats, and over the succeeding months it has varied from a low of $2.42, which was in April, to a high of $2.47. This is a very minor spread, I am sure.

The same thing has happened with barley prices. The average weighted wholesale price of barley, based again on the actual claims filed with the department, was $2.48 per hundredweight last October. The price in the succeeding months has never gone above that and, in fact, in April it was only $2.38.

Without this storage assistance policy it is very doubtful if we would have had the volume of feed grains in eastern Canada which we did have during the past winter and, based on previous years, we could have expected by April an increase of 17 cents a hundredweight in the price of oats compared to last fall and an increase of 13 cents in the price of barley, based on storage charges alone, plus any changes that may have occurred in the market due to short supplies.

Present indications are that this assistance policy will cost about $1 million, and I may say that this has been money very well spent because, in addition to the benefits which I have just reviewed, eastern and British Columbia livestock and poultry producers have used approximately 500,000 tons more Canadian feed grains this past year than they did during the previous year.

We have heard a great deal from the official opposition about what they intended to do about an eastern feed grain policy, but the fact is that nothing was done. The steps taken by this government last summer have contributed very substantially to improving both the supply position and the stabilization of prices over the winter months. This has been accomplished despite the very heavy pressure on both supplies and facilities occasioned by the immense overseas wheat movement.

The former minister of agriculture mentioned something about dairy policy. However, before I deal with dairy policy, I may say he referred to the fact that the previous government had a whole agriculture policy. I have been through the office and I have been through every drawer, but I cannot find it. If they had one they have taken it away with them, because I cannot find it.

As I say, the former minister mentioned dairy products. Several times during agricultural debates here it has been charged that savings have been made in the cost of the dairy support program at the expense of the dairy farmer. Any examination of the facts will show that this is not the case, but rather the moves that have been made have been a rationalization of the program with a transfer of part of the costs from the taxpayer to the actual buyer of the products. The only exception to this was the step taken a year ago, a step which had been forecast by the previous government, to reduce the assistance previously given to fluid milk producers. Even here certain measures taken have been of assistance to this part of the industry.

To put this matter in perspective, let us look at the suggestion which has been made here that the $3.5 million saving which has been forecast this year will be at the expense of producers. This is obviously incorrect, since the support levels have not been changed and the $3.5 million represents entirely the saving of 1 cent per pound in the butter subsidy. Perhaps the best indication of the effects which the program changes have had on farmers' returns is the farm gate milk and butterfat prices recorded by the bureau of statistics. For the most recent month available, which is February, the average farm value of butterfat this year was 69.4 cents per pound, up 1.9 cents from a year ago. Cheese milk was $2.87 per hundredweight, up 7 cents from last year. Milk for concentration and ice cream was $2.85, up 15 cents from a year ago.

It has been suggested that changing the cheese subsidy from 30 cents per hundredweight of milk to 3.6 cents per pound for first grade cheddar cheese is a backward step and that it will reduce producer returns. For Canada as a whole, based on the per cent of first grade cheese produced and the average yield per hundredweight of milk, the 3.6 cents subsidy is equivalent to 30.5 cents per hundredweight of milk. While it is true that there are some plants whose production of first grade cheese is below the national average, I am confident that the present program will provide an incentive to improve cheese quality and will provide a basis for the payment to producers for cheese milk on a quality basis. I think it is important to point out that there are cheese factories which consistently produce less than 60 per cent first grade cheese.

Some members have suggested that a lowering of the export assistance on cheese would adversely affect our markets abroad. Changes in the export assistance have only been made as market conditions in the importing countries warranted it. Last year the assistance on cheese was reduced by 1 cent and export markets absorbed this difference. Exports last dairy year were 31.2 million pounds compared to 27.4 million pounds the year before.

I agree with the hon. member for Qu'Appelle that we have not yet reached a final solution in regard to a dairy policy. It does seem to me, however, that rising producer returns, increasing consumption, greater exports and decreasing stocks are a distinct improvement over the mounting surpluses which faced us when we came into office.

The hon. member for Qu'Appelle referred to a water policy for eastern Canada similar to the P.F.R.A. in western Canada. Under ARDA we have been carrying forward an aggressive water policy in eastern Canada. In Quebec we have entered into agreements with the province for 82 drainage and channel improvement projects at a total cost to the federal government of $1,169,000. I might say that this is almost the amount that had been spent on this program in all the previous years. In Prince Edward Island, Nova Scotia and New Brunswick we are participating with the provinces in community and farm pond programs and in open ditch drainage and channel improvement projects. The total contribution to these projects by the federal government to date is $223,000. In Ontario we are participating in a complete soil and conservation project for the Whiteman creek watershed which is part of the area coming under the Grand river conservation authority. The total contribution to this project is $223,000.

In addition to these active conservation programs we are engaged in several water resources projects. We are doing a ground water resource inventory in the Annapolis valley of Nova Scotia and in the Big creek watershed in Norfolk county in Ontario. We have a project which is being carried out by the Ontario water resources commission for a surface of water resources survey in irrigation and other rural uses in southwestern Ontario. In Nova Scotia and New Brunswick the engineering assistance of M.M.R.A. is being redirected to cover a comprehensive watershed protection and development plan for the Musquodoboit river in Nova Scotia and the Kennebecasis river in New Brunswick.

The hon. member also mentioned that he had planned a livestock policy. It is my contention that the most immediate need of the Canadian livestock industry is to put itself in a position to better meet competition, both internally and abroad. This, I believe, can best be done through increasing the efficiency of our basic flocks and herds, whether by decreasing the amount of feed required to produce a pound of beef, a pound of pork, a dozen eggs or a pound of chicken, or by increasing the rate of gain of the animals or rate of lay of the birds.

The approach to this problem is manyfold, but fundamental to it all is the need for active, accurate and expanding testing programs. Canada has always had an excellent record of performance program for dairy cattle. I should like to digress here a little by stating that 42 countries recognize that Canada has the finest dairy cattle in the world. They have recognized this for something like 40 years. I come back now to the fact that Canada has always had an excellent record of performance program for dairy cattle. On taking office we were confronted with a backlog of applications from 115 farmers who, because of the staffing situation within the record of performance organization, were unable to avail themselves of this excellent program. This was immediately corrected.

Testing programs must, however, be reinforced and complemented by research programs having in mind the over-all objectives that I have just outlined. In order to do this we are reassessing the emphasis in livestock and poultry research programs. A further step in such a national program is to ensure that the benefits that can accrue from such programs are brought rapidly and strongly to the attention of livestock producers. Possibly the best forum for this would be the many fairs and exhibitions at which livestock of all classes are exhibited.

Over the years livestock classifications have tended to move away from utility factors. A definite step has been taken to reorient livestock classifications through the establishment for the current year of a pilot project at certain fairs. This project will provide the basis for a major change in the assistance program to fairs and exhibitions and will ensure that utility and efficiency assume their rightful place in the evaluation of our livestock.

Now, Mr. Speaker, another project which the hon. member for Qu'Appelle mentioned as having been in his party's plans, but which had not been introduced, was a fertilizer policy. As hon. members know, there are some agricultural matters which are attended to by the federal government and some which are attended to by the provinces. Matters such as fertilizer assistance have always been regarded as a field of provincial activity. The province of Quebec has had a fertilizer assistance program for a number of years, on which they spend between $2.5 million and $3 million annually.

There have been suggestions from time to time in the house that much more is being done for western agriculture than for eastern agriculture. I think it would be desirable to put some figures on the record to illustrate that these suggestions are not correct. For example, in the fiscal year 1963-64 payments under the various deficiency payment programs of the agricultural stabilization board totalled $31.8 million in eastern Canada and $10.3 million in western Canada. On butterfat alone, Quebec farmers received $14.3 million and Ontario farmers $9.6 million, which is a total of $24 million as compared with $9.5 million in the whole of western Canada.

Quality premium payments on hogs and lambs last year were $3 million in Ontario and $1.8 million in Quebec, a total of $4.8 million as compared with $2.6 million spent on these quality premiums in western Canada.

One and a half million dollars was spent on lime assistance, virtually all of which was spent in eastern Canada except for a small amount in British Columbia. Freight assistance payments on western feed grains to eastern Canada were $17.2 million last year. We know that both the eastern and western farmers benefit from this amount of money.

Getting back to the $1,200 farmer, between the years 1941 and 1951 the number of farmers who moved from the farms to urban centres, into industry and that sort of thing, amounted to 1½ per cent of the total number each year, but between the years 1956 to 1961 3½ per cent of the farmers moved from their farms to urban places. We find the $1,200 farmer not only in Quebec but also in British Columbia, in the maritimes, in fact in every province of Canada.

Quite a bit of research work has been done on the problems of the $1,200 farmer, and I find that he works 157 days a year off the farm. What made me concerned about this is the realization that two sows with two litters a year produce over $1,200 at present prices, and eight cows, producing the national average of butterfat and not taking skimmed milk into account, produce over $1,200. So if you have a farmer with two pigs he has $1,200, and if he adds to it eight cows, each producing 240 lbs. of butterfat, he gets another $1,200.

We have a situation in Canada where farmers are moving from the smaller farms but are using those smaller farms as homes until they establish themselves in industry. In any policy which we pursue we must maintain the family farm, and in the four pieces of legislation which we hope parliament will consider and pass before the end of June, we have this very thing in mind.

The first piece of legislation deals with farm credit. It seems to me that if a loan is amortized over the whole period a farmer can pay a rate of 6 per cent and establish a farm, provided he has suitable credit so far as other things are concerned. In the farm credit legislation that we propose, and which is on the order paper, we are expanding the opportunity of the small farmer to buy his neighbour's farm, if his neighbour wishes to sell, or buy any other farm in order to make his own into a economic unit. We must have the family farm if we are to produce the commodities that the consumers in Canada buy, and these at the lowest prices.

We also have legislation dealing with disaster problems, providing crop insurance to take care of times of disaster so the farmer will not find himself back in the same position he was three years before disaster struck him. In farm improvement loans we aim to provide the single farmer with the opportunity to get enough money to buy the sort of equipment he needs in order to keep his costs down, and the fourth piece of legislation we propose is the farm machinery bill, which will do the very thing we want it to do in maintaining the family farm.

I have listened to the debates in this house on agriculture, and I may say we have had enough of them. Everybody speaks on agriculture because everbody is interested in food. I have listened to the speeches very carefully and the ones I could not listen to I have read, because that is my job. Some of them were pretty boring, but I went through them and I have found, Mr. Speaker, there are many members in the house—believe me they are sincere, and I think they mean what they say—who do not know anything about agriculture outside of their own regional areas.

Canada is a big country, stretching from sea to sea. There are 60 members on the agriculture committee and we have made plans to have a plane ready—the facilities are being provided—so we can take the members of the agriculture committee to every province in Canada in the month of August. We must do this so they will be in a position where we can give them something to tear at and something to build. When they make this trip they will have a lot of information on which to work.

I want to see Quebec farm members of parliament visit in the southern part of Saskatchewan south of Swift Current where they cannot see their hand in front of them for dust. I want to see the Saskatchewan farm member of parliament stand in Newfoundland where he will be up to his knees in muskeg, and out in British Columbia and northern Alberta and Saskatchewan where there are only 90 frost free days in the year. I want to see members take a look at the problems in these areas at first hand, and then we can bring together the sort of program in which every farmer in Canada can believe.

These are some of the problems we have in agriculture. No one man can do all the work. Everybody must take part. As I said before, Mr. Speaker, two more bushels of wheat per seeded acre can amount to another $100 million, and in 10 years that would equal the whole amount which the former government was going to spend on the ARDA program. If our hog were as good as the Danish hog it would produce another $43 million. Some of the French breeds of cattle, which consume only 3½ pounds of feed to produce one pound of beef, as compared with our cattle which consume five pounds of feed to produce one pound of beef, would be very worth while to Canada. These are the things we must do if we are to improve the farmers' lot.

An hon. member was complaining the other day about the fact that we had taken 1 cent off the support price of cheese. The subsidy was originally put on when cheese was 29 cents a pound. That was the reason for the 4 cent subsidy, and when cheese went to 34 cents a pound probably the full subsidy should have been taken off, but we took off only 1 cent. Cheese today is 35 cents a pound, and we have removed another 1 cent.

The hon. member said that the consumption of cheese was down by 3 million pounds. Remember, Mr. Speaker, the greatest market you have is the home market, and when you get your prices so high that the consumer starts using other commodities then you are in great trouble with this particular commodity. This is why we have to watch our step in Canada, because our surpluses could so easily control our whole prices.

These are some of the things which we must consider. Mr. Speaker, I have welcomed this opportunity to say a few things about agriculture after being in office 13 or 14 months. This is the way my government finds the Department of Agriculture and believe me, we are anxious to do something about its problems.

[Translation]

Mr. Clément Vincent (Nicolet-Yamaska): Mr. Speaker, unfortunately I could not attend yesterday's debate on agriculture, because of a death in my constituency. But, when I returned to the federal capital this morning, I read the speech of the hon. member for Qu'Appelle (Mr. Hamilton), in which he voiced his opinion on Canadian eastern agriculture. The speech of the hon. member for Qu'Appelle shows that the former minister of agriculture has the interest of farmers at heart, especially those of eastern Canada to whom we will have to pay special attention during the next few weeks in order to raise their standard of living.

However, I was astonished—and this will surely vex eastern farmers—to see that the leader of the house and leader of Quebec Liberals was opposed to the discussion by the house of the very delicate and complex question of eastern agriculture. I think this matter should be debated so that the government may not only resort to long sentences and put resolutions on the order paper but find concrete solutions to the problems of eastern farmers.

When I think that, during the next general election campaign, those very same Quebec Liberal members will come to that province to boast of Liberal government achievements and tell the farmers that the Liberal party has done much for them, I am sure that they will not boast of the stand taken by their own leader, for he was opposed to the debate now going on in the house. In fact as recorded on page 3544 of Hansard, the Minister of Justice (Mr. Favreau) stated:

> —dealt squarely and completely with all policies relating to ARDA, and therefore to eastern agriculture.

As if eastern agriculture were limited and come only under ARDA.

The minister concluded his remarks by saying:

> For that reason, I suggest respectfully that the amendment ought to be declared out of order.

Mr. Speaker, we have responsibilities to carry out and, since the government of the day has been in power for a full year, we should like to ask all hon. members, regardless of where they sit in the house, whether they sincerely feel that the members of the government have fulfilled their duties as legislators and whether they have really done something for eastern agriculture. I am convinced that not one hon. member can trust the present government, because it has done nothing whatsoever for eastern agriculture, and I am going to prove this point.

The Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Hays) tried to prove a while ago that the dairy program he announced on April 29 last was an improvement. He said for instance that 3.6 cents a pound would be given on first quality cheese, and that represented 31 cents per cent. By this statement, he proved the point I put forward last year and which I continue to maintain, that the farmer has not received the money he should have per cwt. of milk which he shipped to the cheese factories last year.

If 3.6 cents a pound are equivalent to a 31 cent increase per cwt. of milk, when the minister tells us that milk was sold to cheese factories 7 cents per cwt. more than the previous year, he should know that last year the price of cheese was, according to figures published in the report on dairy products market by the Department of Agriculture for the months of May, June and July, 34.6 cents, 34.2 cents and 35.2 cents, while it was at 32 cents a pound in July 1962. So, the pound of cheese has increased from 2.5 to 3.2 cents.

Now, the minister tells us that the farmer got 7 cents more for cwt. of milk sent to cheese factories.

If the program announced last year and by means of which the federal treasury managed to save more than $11 million did not allow farmers to receive their 20 or 25 cents per cwt. of milk, as would have been normal, it is because the present government is more interested in saving money than in really helping the dairy producers through the Agricultural Stabilization Act.

Last week, Mr. Speaker, as I reached the end of my remarks, I was beginning to deal with the very important question of feed grain.

When the hon. member for Qu'Appelle was minister of agriculture, we had prepared a piece of legislation which was put on the order paper but did not go through because our government was defeated on a nuclear arms question.

The propaganda of the Liberal party during the 1963 election campaign led the people to believe that the present government had the answers to those problems. What was that answer? What measures have really brought about supplies stability, price equalization and, above all, price stability in eastern Canada?

The Minister of Agriculture alone claims that prices were firm throughout the season.

Yet, I have before me a price list sent to grain dealers of eastern Canada. This list published by the Agro Company, a well-known firm, is dated September 7, 1963. It reads as follows:

Oats No. 1—Montreal $2.29½ per cwt.; Quebec city, $2.28 per cwt.
Barley No. 1—Montreal, $2.23½ per cwt.; Quebec city, $2.28 per cwt.
Wheat—$2.83 per cwt.

That was for September 1963, at the beginning of the season. On January 8, 1964 I phoned Montreal myself to ask the price of grain as a buyer. Here are the prices that were given to me then:

Barley: $2.59½; oats: $2.55¾; No. 5 wheat: $3.35½.

You see that there is a difference from $2.83 to $3.35½ with regard to wheat. That is not what I call price stabilization.

In September 1963, in Montreal, the price of barley was $2.23½, while it stood at $2.59½ on January 8. On September 8, 1963, in Montreal, the price of oats was $2.29½ and it reached $2.55¾ on January 8, 1964.

As you can see, Mr. Speaker, there was no stability at all in prices.

Last year, we asked the government to establish the committee on agriculture to study the matter of feed grain. The committee met on many occasions, it heard several persons who gave us very useful information in order to allow the government to develop a new policy ensuring what we, Conservatives, wanted to achieve: the stability of supplies, the equalization of prices, an incentive to produce feed grain in the east and, finally, the stability of prices for feed grain in eastern Canada.

That committee worked during several weeks. Where do we stand today? We do not hear that the committee intends to carry on with this business; we wonder what is the government's intentions for the next season.

What we want right now is that the present government will assume its responsibilities, that it will reconvene the agriculture committee to consider the matter of feed grain and find a final solution to this problem which is very important for farmers in eastern Canada.

For instance, we know that 25 per cent of the expenses of eastern farmers are made to purchase feed grain.

Before the sitting of that committee, I met the director of one of the most important flour mills of my riding, which is situated near my home and which buys its grain directly from the broker.

I asked this man to take note every week of the prices he had to pay for feed grain, such as barley, oats and wheat. He gave me yesterday a complete list of prices, but I do not intend to read it all to the house. However, I wish to quote the prices that the millers have had to pay for barley, oats and wheat during the September-May period. You will then be able to appreciate the stability of prices.

I shall begin with August 30, 1963. The prices I will quote are the prices paid for grain that has reached the terminal railway point, close to the milling factory. Oats, $2.30 per cwt.; barley, $2.26 per cwt. and No. 5 wheat, $2.84 per cwt. Those were the prices at the end of August 1963.

On September 6, 1963, oats were $2.31½ a cwt., barley was $2.27 a cwt., and wheat $2.86 a cwt.

Now, let us go on to October 1963. On October 10 of that same year—and though I might quote figures for October 1, 7 and 8, as well as for the 10, 18 and 21 of that month I shall limit myself to prices for the middle of the month—the price of oats on the siding, quite near the mill, was $2.55 a cwt., barley, $2.59 a cwt. and wheat $3.35 a cwt.

Now let us take a look at November 1963. On November 11 of that year, the price paid for oats was $2.58½ a cwt., for barley, $2.54 a cwt. and for wheat—though we should keep in mind that none could have been obtained, even if a price had been quoted, it was $3.59½ a cwt.

Let us go on to December 1963. On December 9, oats were $2.58, barley $2.60 and wheat $3.37.

And now we come to the month of January 1964. On January 15 oats were $2.58, barley, $2.63 and wheat $3.38.

What about stable prices?

As far as the month of August and the beginning of September are concerned, oats were $2.30. On January 15, 1963, oats were $2.58, which is 28 cents more for a hundredweight, or nearly $6 higher for a ton. As to barley, it was $2.26 at the end of August and the beginning of September; whereas in January 1964, it was $2.63, an increase of 37 cents a hundredweight, or $7 a ton. This is not price stability.

For February 1964, $2.46 were paid for oats, $2.48½ for barley and $3.44 for wheat.

Just consider now the price that has to be paid by eastern farmers for feed wheat at the beginning of September or in late August. The price was $2.84 at the end of August and $2.86 at the beginning of September. Then, it rose to $3.44, that is an increase of 60 cents per cwt. or $11 to $12 per ton. That is the price difference between the wheat sold at the beginning of September and the same product which could be bought on February 18, 1964.

And you can go on. In March, oats was paid $2.41, barley $2.45 and wheat $3.29. In April, on the 20th day of the 4th month of 1964, oats stood at $2.41½, barley at $2.47½ and wheat at $3.18½.

In May 1964, on the 14th day of that same month—I am giving all those dates and figures to show the Minister of Agriculture that all this is not idle talk. We took care—and we would have done it if we had sat on the other side of the house—to get from the miller and the farmer the prices of feed grain. Today, we submit that the government does not want to fulfil its duty and, as stated by the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Hays), does not want to agree to the Conservatives' proposal to set up a purchasing board for feed grain in eastern Canada. Now, we intend to prove that such a board is required and even essential to settle the problems facing our farmers-producers in the province of Quebec and eastern Canada.

I go on quoting the prices for the month of May. As at May 14, 1964, oats was priced at $2.42½; barley, at $2.47; as for wheat, no price was given for that week.

May I point out that, on May 1, 1964, a miller in my riding bought bran for $2.62½ and shorts for $2.72½. He even ordered four or five carloads. But on the 22nd day of the same month and the same year, this year, just recently, the price of bran, for no reason at all, suddenly dropped to $2.32½ and the price of shorts to $2.47½.

That proves that there was no price stability this winter as far as feed grain is concerned.

Even if the minister's figures say that there was stability, I would rather believe a very well organized miller who must buy feed grains to sell them to farmers. The prices he had to pay for those grains he bought during the season that just ended are the ones he gave.

As far as feed grains are concerned, we must, in the first place as a federal parliament, legislate to enable eastern provinces to set up one single authority as regards the purchase of feed grain; second, we must provide for the granting of credit to enable farmers to buy feed grain.

That is what we must strive to accomplish. To my mind and in the opinion of several millers, farmers, producers and co-operative owners I have spoken to, that is the only way to ensure the co-ordination of supply and the stability of prices in eastern Canada so that producers of my province and of the other eastern provinces may organize their production; indeed, that would enable them to know in advance the price of feed grain.

If you stop and think, for instance, that when we sell wheat to other countries, those countries know the price they will pay by the time the wheat is to be shipped. Why then, in eastern Canada, should our farmers not be able, under the legislation I am proposing, to group together, figure out their requirements for a period of eight or nine months and go directly to the Canadian wheat board and buy the feed grain their livestock will need during the winter period?

After consulting one another and having met the representatives of this credit agency which we could set up to buy feed grain, those people could go to western Canada in August of each year and, without disorganizing the Canadian wheat board in any way and without taking anything away from western farmers and producers, buy what they need direct. They would then be sure of obtaining firm prices for all their grain after the end of the shipping season.

I put forward that idea last year and I am doing it again this year among several millers of the province of Quebec and even eastern Canada.

In my opinion, we are in a position to put forward that idea, in order that millers and farmers, after having alerted public opinion, may convince the federal government to accept that legislation. If we succeed, we will have performed our duty and made progress in the right direction.

Mr. Speaker, if western farmers have deemed it advisable to set up the Canadian wheat board to look after their interests, the farmers, millers and co-operatives of eastern Canada can do likewise to look after their interests, so that they may play their part as suppliers of food to mankind.

What amazes me is that members of the present government said in the province of Quebec during the last election campaign that they had passed this resolution. They claimed they were the ones who would apply it. Why then this reluctance to go any further today and to really tackle the problem? Farmers themselves wonder whether some interests are preventing the government from doing so.

On October 15, 1963, I said this in the house:

> Where are we, today, October 15, 1963? Are there interested people who do not want that legislation put on our statute books? Those are questions that farmers we meet ask themselves.

On that date, I directed that question to the government, and today, I am asking all the members of the house who are really familiar with this feed grain problem and have met farmers and millers—as I have all during this winter—to tell the committee—if such a committee is again instituted—what they really think about it, to study this question objectively, in order to arrive at this solution which, in my opinion, is the only one deserving our attention, since it is the only one which will ensure final settlement of this question.

But, as far as we are concerned today, the non-confidence motion which was introduced by the member for Qu'Appelle and which I supported, to the effect that:

> This house regrets the continuing failure of the government to take effective action with regard to the pressing agricultural problems of eastern Canada.

Well, this non-confidence motion should be adopted by the house, for we do not speak solely in our name but in the name of the farmers of eastern Canada. Everybody knows that, at the present time, they are disappointed and I wish that Liberal members could meet the farmers, in their own constituency and in others, to discuss objectively all that they think about the present government because they would then state: "In the next election, we shall get rid of that government which heads the country." I hope the house will support that non-confidence motion.

Mr. Choquette: Would the hon. member permit me a question?

Mr. Vincent: Yes.

[Mr. Vincent.]

Mr. Choquette: The hon. member advocates the establishment of a board, of a grain agency for eastern Canada. Now, is he able to tell me whether he was in perfect agreement with the leader of his party and with the hon. member for Qu'Appelle when he made that suggestion?

Mr. Vincent: Mr. Speaker, what I suggested—

Mr. Choquette: I ask the hon. member whether the right hon. member for Prince Albert supports his suggestion?

Mr. Vincent: What I have just suggested—

Mr. Choquette: Yes or no?

Mr. Vincent: May I read a resolution passed unanimously at the last convention of the Conservative party, before all Conservative members representing eastern and western Canada, for it is the same country. I quote:

> To enable the passing of legislation on sales in the east, to create a single authority for the purchase of feed grain, and second, to set up credit for the purchase of feed grain for our farmers.

That quotation should answer the question asked by the hon. member for Lotbinière, since this means that all Conservative members wanted that legislation to be passed. That is why we intend to work, to discuss and to ask the government to pass it as soon as possible.

Mr. Choquette: Hence, all Conservative members are in favour of the establishment of an agency for the purchase of grain for eastern Canada? Is that what you mean?

Mr. Vincent: Certainly.

Mr. Rosaire Gendron (Rivière du Loup-Témiscouata): Mr. Speaker, nobody will deny the importance of the farm problem in Canada itself, on the national as well as the international level.

On the international level, Senator Y. Coude de Foresto submitted to the NATO parliamentary conference a brief in which he pointed out that the 15 member nations of NATO are faced with similar problems in agriculture, namely the constant drift of people from rural areas, an increase in individual farm acreage, the ensuing disappearance of numerous farm jobs. Here is what he says on page 2 of his brief:

> Better means of communication, automobile, radio, television, some progress (still not enough of course) towards equal education, have brought about clashes between agriculture and the other sectors of the economy. The rise of labour unions, co-operatives or mutual associations has shown the young farmers the value of number and the strength derived from unity and sometimes its corollary: the use of force to gain satisfaction.

Of course, it is not those indications at the international level which will remedy the situation here. In our part of the country, in the east and especially in the province of Quebec, a revolution is going in our farming communities which, in days past, formed an autonomous parochial economy and tried to be self-sufficient. However, the advent of such means of communication as the radio, television and newspapers and the opening of roads have created completely different problems.

Nowadays, young farmers are no longer satisfied with living on the farm as their forefathers did; they want to enjoy all the advantages of modern society. But, at the same time, it is no longer as easy for them to be self-sufficient because they must take the money they make from the sale of their production to buy the consumer and other goods necessary to satisfy his needs.

It is there that is felt the great difference between the standard of living in industrialized areas and the one existing in farming areas. They are conscious of that fact and they are shocked.

We are witnessing—and you know it—an economic concentration in about 15 large cities across the country and a constant exodus of young men and women from rural areas. This is obviously creating serious economic, social and moral problems.

Those economic problems often force young men and women getting nowhere in their own areas to leave for the larger centres. They are faced with difficult problems because they are ill-prepared to earn a living and to contribute by their work to the normal development of the community in which they live.

On the other hand, the rural communities where this social haemorrhage is taking place are affected by the loss of their young men and women who could, if they had the opportunity to do so, contribute by their vitality, their energy and their work to the development of their community.

From a social and local point of view, we must remember that this emptying of all those parishes creates many serious problems, since people remaining have to pay for education, schools and local organizations, and they often are left with only the young and the old people, while those who could develop the community through their vitality and their work have to go elsewhere.

There is no need for me to emphasize the moral significance of this uprooting of people who, sometimes ill-prepared, in an environment unsuitable to them where they feel like strangers, encounter difficulties of all kinds for their own moral life.

Of course, the family is the natural basis of society; it is the mother-cell of society. We shall not add to our moral or to our material wealth by destroying the soundest cells of our society. Unfortunately, we sometimes see this evil developing like a cancer through an irrational and rapid development of certain sectors, thus destroying the healthier cells of our society.

This creates a number of problems for the underdeveloped areas which are asking for the tools that would further their development.

However, in accordance with the philosophy of economic liberalism, the first condition which is laid down is that it must be an economically sound proposition. Since that condition is not fulfilled, these areas are sometimes refused the tools which would contribute to lift them up from their economic misery.

I say that the agricultural problem has not only one solution in the remedies related to agriculture itself. The present government has put on the order paper a number of measures just waiting to be passed. Perhaps a greater contribution would be made by letting that legislation to be passed as quickly as possible rather than moving want of confidence motions.

I will not go into the details of all those measures. The minister himself explained them and other speakers have indicated to what extent the present government intends to contribute to the financing of farm properties or agricultural institutes, to assist farmers by means of a support price for milk, butter and other commodities and do some planning in the case of products that are difficult to sell, in short, how the government wants to encourage the production of other commodities which would boost our exports.

But I want to point out the fact that we will not find a definite solution to the farm problems without looking after the development of the whole territory of a region. And that is when the whole problem of an improved economic balance throughout the country arises: the need to bring back on their feet the distressed areas and to assist, as the present government is doing, those distressed areas which are grouping themselves and want to contribute to the solution of their problems.

Neither will there be one easy utopian solution for the farm problem. We shall have to group ourselves according to the various areas to find the true avocation of our communities and invite the whole population to work hard at its own development. And I would say that it is up to the communities to take the initiative and start this necessary economic re-grouping, with the assistance of local authorities and later, of the provincial and federal governments.

The point of knowing whether the matter of designating areas was under federal jurisdiction has been much discussed. Where were those who wondered whether this did not come under provincial jurisdiction. As for me, I say that we live under a democratic system and that it is, first of all, up to the various areas to group themselves and have those groups recognized by the higher authorities, taking into consideration the avocation and trend of the collectivities and have their suggestions approved by the higher authorities of this country, keeping, of course, in mind the latter's recommendations in this field.

There will have to be agreements to proceed with the inventory of our communities and at the same time projects will have to be started to make people wait patiently for the implementation of fully considered, long term schemes; it will be necessary also to canalize the clearly expressed local ambitions and hopes while neither minimizing nor spurning such hopes by trying to implement over-simplified solutions.

I say, borrowing Boussuet's words: "It is among the people that you will find plain common sense".

One has to attend the meetings of the economic guidance council of the lower St. Lawrence to see how interested our people are, how devoted and ready to co-operate in their own economic development.

But alone they will not be able to go against the very strong current I have mentioned before if they do not receive that sympathy which is given to a sick child who gets not only the medicine it needs but also the best food to restore him to health.

I do not accept the principle according to which, the rentability being the same, preference will be given to the setting up of industries in depressed areas.

It is like telling two children one of whom is healthy and the other crippled; first come first served. In such a way, the former would surely get fatter and the latter would only get weaker.

If economics only is laid down as basic principle, the vicious circle by which more is given to those who have already a lot, and nothing to those who do not have much, will be further emphasized.

However, if this principle of economics is not taken into consideration, this will open the door to numerous abuses. Hence the need, in order to intervene effectively, for area planning and justification for the creation of a rural development department. That is another government measure, which followed the establishment of the economic council and the Department of Industry, as well as the adoption of a group of other pieces of legislation, designed to relieve underdeveloped areas, which proves the sincerity of the present government in its endeavour to better the lot of underdeveloped areas, especially the farmers.

It will be quite a challenge and quite a task for the department to put an end to unemployment in rural areas and, at the same time, to develop that territory, to set up industries related to agriculture—we will have to come to that if we are to provide a market for our agricultural products—and to process forest products locally. As forestry engineers pointed out in their brief to the Bélanger commission, because there are no other resources, trees are being cut indiscriminately and forests are being spoiled to pay land taxes and other taxes whereas what we need at present is a long term reforestation policy.

The paradoxical situation of sailors throwing cargo overboard to save the ship is not uncommon. However, if we have set up an economic council, a Department of Industry, designated areas—the criteria and statistics used for the establishment of such areas should be revised—and the responsibility to deal with those problems, which they could not do successfully, will not rest only with that department but rather with all the departments, all the crown corporations and all governments at every level.

Individuals in society are not like potatoes in a bag. The rotten potato can be taken out to prevent it from corrupting the others. We know that society is constituted like the various limbs of the human body, in such a way that if one of those limbs gets sick, and if it is not nursed in time, the whole body is in danger. Therefore, we cannot be satisfied with global statistics and we must see to it that adequate remedies are applied to the affected limbs.

It is therefore necessary that all departments and all crown corporations be not partitioned, but agree that they can, while administering in the best possible way their own department, work in such a way that an appropriate decentralization should provide for the rehabilitation of areas which could, not only take care of themselves, but contribute to the general development of the country.

I say that, in any case, we will have to pay the bill for the progress or the recession, and we have no alternative. I think it is more pleasant and more profitable to supply the required tools, the organization which is essential to the development of resources, and invest the money required for that purpose, or else the number of those who have no other alternative but the welfare state will increase and we shall revert to what caused the decline of Rome, when demagogues were promising bread and games, leading to believe that a people can unduly live on empty dreams, sponging on the whole world, and keeping the nation in the dream of a marvellous world where we could get rid forever of all the miserable people who stemmed that sea of hidden and miraculous plenty which could spread over suffering mankind and bathe everybody in a sea of joy and plenty.

It must be recalled, Mr. Speaker, that if the 30 acres of ice and snow have become a huge and rich country—the second nation in the world as far as exports and industry are concerned—it is certainly not because we have one of the most favourable or easy climates. It must be recalled that other nations, other countries had just like us abundant natural resources and a milder climate.

But, if we have the development by which we are benefiting today, it is because we had serious, hard-working and honest people and governments that could inspire confidence to the whole world.

We must do our share to maintain that confidence to support initiatives, encourage capital investments in the development of our natural resources while not giving away, of course, our right to control our economy and our policy. We must create the climate necessary to the birth of the great undertakings which have made of our country, in spite of great handicaps, such as distance, climate and remoteness, one of the most prosperous in the world.

Of course, that psychological climate does not just happen, it follows action taken by a responsible government, seconded by understanding and support by a people proud of its freedom and anxious to contribute, in a climate of confidence, to the normal evolution of its social, economic and political life.

That is why, notwithstanding the stand taken by the hon. member for Nicolet-Yamaska (Mr. Vincent), I will support the present government with regard to its farm policy and I will give it my confidence tonight because it is creating, from the Atlantic to the Pacific, a climate of confidence which might give new life to our country's economy. That, the hon. member for Nicolet-Yamaska feels it well—

Mr. Vincent: I do not think so.

Mr. Gendron: He feels it well—

Mr. Vincent: I do not think so, and neither do you, for that matter.

Mr. Choquette: He will grow older, he will understand.

Mr. Gendron:—because—and I shall close my remarks on that—within one year, we have brought forward all the legislation and all the departments really capable of controlling the ailment and giving this country a new economic development. I think the whole nation recognizes that.

Mr. Vincent: Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the hon. member? I think he has two more minutes to go.

Can the hon. member tell me what pieces of legislation relating to agriculture have been put on the statutes of Canada within the last year?

Mr. Gendron: I advise the hon. member for Nicolet-Yamaska to read the order paper. I earnestly hope that having read it and having found out what has been put on it, he shall endeavour to convince and to advise his colleagues and opposition members to co-operate fully, so that this legislation can come into force as soon as possible.

Mr. Dupuis: It will not take long.

Mr. Vincent: Just name one or two legislative measures.

Mr. Dupuis: It will not take six years.

[Text]

Mr. Robert C. Coates (Cumberland): Mr. Speaker, on hearing the speech of the hon. gentleman who has taken his seat I can only conclude that he has neither been in his constituency recently nor in this house, for had he been in either place he would be well aware of the dismal record of the government ever since it took office, and particularly in this session of parliament.

To say it is a dismal record is the ultimate in understatement. It is a government that believes in smokescreens rather than action. We have seen this so often in this session already that not only we in the opposition but the country as a whole are fed up to the teeth with the type of government these so-called men of decision were supposed to provide.

Look at the smokescreens we have seen in this session. First of all, we had the pension legislation. We had mark I, mark II, mark III, and now we are going to get mark IV. But probably by the time mark IV comes along mark V will be proposed.

Mr. Winch: Are you speaking on a military basis, because I was an infantry officer and I know that each succeeding mark was better than the one before?

Mr. Coates: Not only do I hope that the hon. member for Vancouver East (Mr. Winch) is correct but I know this nation hopes this as well, because it was a poor piece of legislation to start with. When the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) asks today whether the pension legislation is to receive priority over the flag legislation, what are we told? "We do not know where it is now; we have not heard all the answers from the provinces." This is the legislation which at the beginning of this session we were told was supposed to be paramount in the minds of the government.

The second smokescreen was the redistribution bill.

Mr. Pickersgill: What are we debating?

Mr. Coates: We are debating the inability of you and your kind to run this country properly.

Mr. Pickersgill: I thought we were debating smokescreens.

Mr. Coates: You should know all about that. You have been spreading them all over this parliament for some time. The second smokescreen was the redistribution bill. Where is it now? It is like the maps which we do not seem to be able to find.

We are debating the flag issue more often than anything else, a flag design, when we should be spending all our time on subjects such as the one under debate at present, the agricultural policies of the government. But, Mr. Speaker, the government is devoid of ideas and devoid of action. What do we have to fill the vacuum? We find an emotional issue placed before this country, an issue that can do nothing but damage to the unity of the country, instead of having action in the field of agriculture and other fields.

This party has done everything in its power to see that the flag issue would not come before this house until action was taken in fields such as agriculture, would not come before this house in a political partisan way—which seems to be the ultimate objective of the government—would not come before this house at a time when this nation can ill afford the type of emanations that are developing throughout Canada from people who are not yet ready, I submit, to make a firm decision on a distinctive national flag that will be acceptable in all parts of the country.

Mr. Choquette: Are you against the flag?

Mr. Coates: I am against the design you put forward.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I hesitate to interrupt the hon. member. I think the Chair has been somewhat lenient toward him in allowing him to say a few words about the subject he has brought to the attention of the house, but I would entreat him, now, to return to the subject matter which is now before us.

[Mr. Coates.]

An hon. Member: Agriculture.

Mr. Coates: Well, I do not pretend to be the great authority on agriculture that the hon. member may be, but at least I happen to be standing on my feet in the House of Commons and he happens to be sitting in his place, as he has been doing all through this debate. At least I am making an effort to put forward a contribution which will be of some assistance to farmers and to those associated with agriculture in eastern Canada.

I go back to 1962, to the election campaign of that year, and in particular to a meeting which was attended by my hon. friend from Qu'Appelle (Mr. Hamilton) who was then minister of agriculture. He spoke in my constituency and at that time he outlined a six point program for agriculture in eastern Canada. During that meeting my hon. friend read from the statements he made in western Canada. Those statements were the same as the statements he made in eastern Canada. He was a minister who had a good appreciation of the problems of agriculture across this country. At that time he said our government would go forward and take special steps to correct the inequities which could not be overcome by national legislation. He told the people of eastern Canada what he was endeavouring to do as minister of agriculture and as a member of the Progressive Conservative government to correct the inequities which needed to be corrected if agriculture in eastern Canada was to have a healthy future.

After the election campaign we came back to Ottawa as the party forming the government, and among the statements contained in the speech from the throne presented to that new parliament was the following:

> The prosperity of agriculture remains essential to the well-being of the entire Canadian economy. Canada is blessed this year with very large crops of good quality, and export markets for Canadian agricultural products have been very greatly enlarged.
> My ministers recognize that livestock is occupying a position of increasing importance in Canadian agriculture. They propose that a program be instituted to ensure the availability of storage facilities and continuity of supplies of feed grain to match the expanding requirements for livestock production, particularly in the areas of British Columbia and eastern Canada where supplies of feed grain are normally deficient.

Before that session ended—and it did not end because we asked that it should end, but because the combined opposition voted that parliament out of existence—the minister of agriculture had his legislation ready. He was ready to move, and move quickly, in an endeavour to eliminate the inequities which he knew existed in agriculture in eastern Canada.

Another election campaign ensued. The promises made during the 1962 campaign were reaffirmed. We were not re-elected as a government—

An hon. Member: Good.

Mr. Coates: —and that is a mighty sorry story for the people of eastern Canada. For what have we seen since? We have seen such fumbling and bumbling in agriculture as no one could ever have imagined. In this connection I wish to quote a few paragraphs from the April 9 edition of the Family Herald —an article written by Dave Suderman entitled: "Will Three Heads be Better than One"? Mr. Suderman writes:

> Speed is something that has been needed. It is still not clear what Mr. Pearson intends to do with the farm department. After a third cabinet measure—the second one cancelled the first—Mr. Sauvé now has responsibility for the Agricultural Rehabilitation and Development Act, the eastern feed grain program and the Maritime Marshland Rehabilitation Act—
> Undoubtedly this delay is partly the cause for the Liberals' faltering record in agriculture. Since they took office, not a single piece of farm legislation has been passed by parliament. The measures that have been taken were by cabinet orders in council and these were few in number.
>
> The dairy program is due for another overhaul at the end of April, but any changes are likely to be minor in view of the evident success of the program which is now in existence.

Mr. Beer: Would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Coates: When I have finished speaking I will answer all the questions the hon. gentleman has to ask. The article continues:

> Stacked against these measures of relatively minor importance is the Liberal record in wheat sales which prevented the government's performance in agriculture from being viewed as a complete disaster.
>
> The Liberal record in agriculture was hardly helped by the legacies of the last two election campaigns. None of the Liberal farm planks have been adopted and many have been dropped. The two-dollar guarantee on wheat won few adherents in the west and was quickly and quietly buried. The promise of an east-west ministry of agriculture has also been dropped despite claims to the contrary. The proposal to make support payments on eggs quarterly and regionally was dropped. The promised feed grain program, which included subsidized loans to co-op built storages, also did not make its appearance. The school milk programs, improvements to the crop insurance program, expansion in farm credit facilities—all promises of the "63 campaign"—could show up in the present commons session.
> The three-way split in agriculture responsibilities opens the government to cross-examination by the opposition. When Mr. Hays was reported to be in opposition to a buying and selling feed grain board, questions were immediately directed at Mr. Sauvé and Prime Minister Pearson. Was Mr. Hays speaking for the government? Neither Mr. Sauvé nor Mr. Pearson was able to answer. Sources close to cabinet were equally unclear. Some said that Mr. Hays was obviously expressing government policies. Others, pointing to Mr. Sauvé's plans to study the question again, said there was no policy for or against such a board. Who is right?

Well, with regard to agriculture a great many people have asked that question ever since this government took office. Who knows what is going on in agriculture? Today we see one of the three ministers in his seat in the house. Where are the other two? Can we be certain that any statements which one of them may make will be corroborated by the other two. I, for one, had hoped that the Minister of Forestry (Mr. Sauvé) would be in his place today, in view of the fact that he recently made a tour of ARDA installations in the Atlantic provinces. I was hopeful he would make a statement so that we might have some idea of his future plans for ARDA in the maritime provinces.

But he is not here. We do not know whether we may accept what the Minister of Agriculture has to say with regard to ARDA in view of the fact that he no longer has responsibility for that program. But I will say this, Mr. Speaker, that never has there been a greater indication that one man should be responsible for our agricultural policies in this country than since this government took office. No one knows what the other fellow is doing. But we all know this, that the government are not doing very much, if anything, except marking time and throwing out smokescreens rather than providing policies, action and helpful measures which will be of benefit to agriculture.

Yesterday the hon. member for Qu'Appelle (Mr. Hamilton) put before the government a six-point program and asked them to give very serious consideration to it. I should like to add one specific item to the program of the hon. member for Qu'Appelle and I ask the government whether they would give consideration to it. I have a constituency which is one of the best grassed constituencies in Canada. We could be producing a great deal more livestock than is evident today. One of the problems we face is that while we have some very excellent farm operations in existence there are too many marginal farm operations and vacant farms which could be utilized in a very efficient manner if the right type of individual was operating them. I have noticed over the years that the Dutch immigrants who have come into this country and who occupy many of the farms in my constituency have made a tremendous success of their operation. I would hope that the Minister of Agriculture would urge the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration (Mr. Tremblay) to do his very best to see whether he could attract more Dutch immigrants to the maritimes to take over these vacant farms and once again make them operative.

Eastern Agricultural Assistance

Another of the problems which we encounter in my part of Canada is that a great many of the farmers are older men whose sons have grown up and probably secured a good or a satisfactory education; an education sufficient to allow them to go to the bigger cities, the bigger population areas of this country, and secure jobs in factories and things of that type. The situation we see is that no matter how much credit we might make available and no matter how lucrative we might make it for farmers to accept the credit available, they are not going to accept it because there is no one on the farm willing to assume the obligations, should illness befall the farmer who is presently operating it. In view of this I think it is most urgent that we try by every means possible to interest young boys to stay with their fathers or to secure adjoining farmland so that they will continue to have an interest in agriculture and in the unit their parents are operating. In this way it may be possible to enlarge our holdings and to enlarge the livestock capacity of the farm.

It may be of some interest to note that when I placed a question on the order paper and asked for information about which programs were being carried out in Cumberland in relation to ARDA, I was told that the only one which had been finalized was one associated with the Minudie community pasture. There is another area in my constituency which should, in my opinion, be developed into a community pasture. It has been suggested that the east Amherst marsh could be developed into a wholly different type of community pasture from the one at Minudie in that different farmers in the area could be apportioned a certain acreage in that community pasture, and made responsible for its use. It would be available to them as long as they indicated an interest in, and a desire to improve and to use, that land. I put out those two suggestions as ones which might assist in bettering economic prospects in my constituency.

Now I should like to refer to the speech of the hon. member for Nicolet-Yamaska (Mr. Vincent) and to ask the minister whether he would explain the very apparent differences in the prices of oats, wheat and barley which were paid for these products when the policy of assistance was announced on April 22, compared with the price which the farmers were paid for the same products in the latter part of September. If the minister will look at the figures he will find that there was a tremendous increase in the cost of these products to the producer. The western producer did not receive this increase; the eastern producer paid for it. Where did the money go? There can only be one answer: it went to someone other than the farmers in either eastern or western Canada. This was a state of affairs which the minister was supposed to eliminate by the policy he laid down in the order in council of August 22.

There has to be in my opinion a very substantial and determined program put forward by this government if it is to lift agriculture out of the doldrums it so evidently is in in the maritime provinces. There cannot be any piecemeal type of program. There has to be a concentrated program that touches every facet of agriculture. There is no evidence whatsoever, absolutely none, that this government is taking any substantial steps to do anything about our problems in eastern Canada in relation to agriculture or in relation to anything else. The hon. member for Queens (Mr. Macquarrie) today asked a question of the Minister of Labour. He was asking this question as the result of a statement the minister made in St. Catharines, Ontario, to the effect that the only hope of any unemployed Canadian of finding work is to move to another part of the country, and the fare would be made available by the government. We heard this a long time ago in the Gordon report, and now we hear it from a Nova Scotian. It does not make it any more palatable because it comes from a Nova Scotian. It is what we told the people in our area would happen if this party were elected to office.

Mr. Hays: Mr. Speaker, this has nothing to do with agriculture.

Mr. Coates: It has a great deal to do with agriculture, Mr. Speaker, because there is not any work on the farms and there is not any work anywhere else in the maritime provinces. This is because this government have refused time and time again to take any action of any kind related to the Atlantic provinces, and in fact have eliminated some of the work we did have in relation to their defence policies.

Mr. Speaker, I wish to conclude by reading a short editorial which appears in today's Ottawa Journal. I think it confirms what I have been saying regarding this government and the smokescreens it set up in place of action. This editorial is entitled "Blame is government's" and it says:

> Mr. Diefenbaker and Mr. Douglas, who do not often agree, co-operated for a moment in the Commons the other day. They proved that the Liberal government wants to blame others for its own mistakes.
>
> "Don't blame us for parliament being slow", the Liberals cry. "Blame the irresponsible opposition".
> But see, on the 64th day of the present session, the Prime Minister giving a long list of business the government hopes to get through, as he said,

"before summer". Mr. Pearson asked for co-operation and brought from Mr. Diefenbaker and Mr. Douglas the reasonable objection that they had to know where co-operation was required before they could give it.

Mr. Diefenbaker commented there was little on the order paper to guide the official opposition on the government program and Mr. Douglas added: "One of the ways in which the government can discharge its responsibility is to get some of this legislation on the order paper so that members will have an opportunity to study it".

It is only a year since Mr. Pearson's cabinet—called "a cabinet of all the talents" by Liberal enthusiasts—took office. It has shown a persistent and distressing inability to manage the legislative program efficiently. The responsibility for inefficiency is the government's.

I make the final plea to the Minister of Agriculture to try and give the type of leadership, the type of hope and inspiration to the farmers of eastern Canada that the hon. member for Qu'Appelle (Mr. Hamilton) gave them during the period in which he was minister of agriculture.

Mr. B. S. Beer (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to participate in the debate on the amendment to the supply motion proposed by the hon. member for Qu'Appelle (Mr. Hamilton). Since this is a debate I presume it is appropriate to discuss some of the statements that have been made by other hon. members in this house, and particularly those made by the proposer of this amendment. The hon. member for Qu'Appelle in his address yesterday started out by dealing with the flag and at one point mentioned that he was in favour of a distinctive flag, but that reference seems to have been completely deleted from the Hansard record. Then he went on to suggest that probably an election was imminent. Then further in his address he proceeded to attack the dominion bureau of statistics by making this remark:

Let those who disseminate information disseminate the truth and not this type of meaningless claptrap.

The hon. member for Qu'Appelle was referring, of course, to information on farm income made available by the dominion bureau of statistics, and I think it is ill becoming of any member in this house, and certainly of any former minister in this house, to castigate diligent and assiduous members of the civil service by referring to their work as claptrap. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I want to come to the defence of the civil servants who prepare our statistics for us, and whose information is regarded as reliable at all times, by reading—

Mr. MacInnis: Mr. Speaker, would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Beer: —into the record this statement. It is quite evident that the hon. member for Qu'Appelle—

Mr. MacInnis: Would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Beer: —does not look with favour on the farm income figures published by the dominion bureau of statistics, especially the cash income series and the so-called net income series.

Mr. MacInnis: On a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker, where in the remarks of the hon. member for Qu'Appelle (Mr. Hamilton) can the hon. member who is now speaking indicate that the former minister of agriculture referred to the civil servants as issuing any claptrap? The hon. member for Qu'Appelle may have referred to information sources, but he did not pinpoint any civil servants in his remarks.

Mr. Winch: Read Hansard.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Batten): Order. I think it should be generally recognized that if, when an hon. member is speaking, he makes a statement to which some other hon. member objects, unless it refers to the hon. member personally it is not a point of privilege. If the hon. member for Cape Breton South (Mr. MacInnis) wishes to refute anything now being said, I am sure he will have an opportunity if he wants to take part in the debate.

Mr. MacInnis: I definitely refute the statement that has just been made by the hon. member in reference to the remarks of the hon. member for Qu'Appelle, the former minister of agriculture. No such remarks were made by him. If the rules of the house provide that I must accept what he says as factual, then only the rules provide that I should accept it. It is not because the hon. member is speaking the truth in this case at all; it is only because of the rules that I have to accept what he is now saying.

Mr. Aiken: On this point of order, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Winch: Mr. Speaker, there is no point of order.

Mr. Aiken: —this question of privilege—I am sorry—I am sure the parliamentary secretary does not wish to misquote the hon. member for Qu'Appelle. If he will read page 3539 of Hansard, from which page I assume he is quoting, he will see that in the second column the hon. member for Qu'Appelle was referring to the statement of the minister when introducing his estimates, and he was not referring in any way to the dominion bureau of statistics. The paragraph to which I refer starts:

At this point I should like to go back and read the statement the minister made in introducing his estimates in this house on April 24, I believe, just about a month ago.

Then, as is reported in the last sentence of that paragraph, he said:

> Let those who disseminate information disseminate the truth and not this type of meaningless claptrap.

There is no point in setting up this man of straw and then knocking him down. I am sure the hon. member for Qu'Appelle had no intention of referring to the dominion bureau of statistics in this way, and he did not.

Mr. Beer: Mr. Speaker, I should probably put on the record a few more sentences from the remarks of the hon. member for Qu'Appelle, which I think will pretty well establish the intent. In addition to the passage I quoted a minute ago, the next paragraph begins as follows:

> What is the truth? Let me quote some figures that I think make sense. First of all, the Ethiopian in the woodpile in so far as these figures are concerned is the fact that they refer to net income. Net income is meaningless. It is the silliest sort of thing you ever saw, and I will illustrate that statement by dealing with the figures for the province of Saskatchewan.

I do not think there is any doubt in the minds of hon. members—

Mr. Vincent: What is he attacking there?

Mr. Beer: —that the intent of the statement was to imply that some of the material made available from the dominion bureau of statistics was unreliable.

Mr. Aiken: Mr. Speaker, surely to goodness the hon. member is not going to go on making that sort of statement. No such inference can be drawn from the statement he has just quoted. The hon. member for Qu'Appelle (Mr. Hamilton) was referring to the way in which statistics were used by the minister, and surely the parliamentary secretary will be gentleman enough to admit that.

Mr. Beer: Mr. Speaker, I will proceed with my statement and the house or you, sir, may judge whether I have been the least bit unfair.

Mr. Ricard: Mr. Speaker, I ask you to rule on this and request the hon. gentleman to withdraw his words. He has implied that the former minister was insulting the civil service.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Batten): I must say again to the hon. member for St. Hyacinthe-Bagot (Mr. Ricard) that he may indeed disagree with the interpretation made by the parliamentary secretary but if he wishes to refute that statement he has the right to do so when he rises to speak. At the moment I do not think there is a question of privilege.

Mr. Ricard: Mr. Speaker, the rules of the house prevent any member from imputing intentions to another member that he does not have. It is on this basis that I am asking that the parliamentary secretary withdraw his affirmations.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Batten): I think the parliamentary secretary is interpreting what was said but I do not think he has said anything that needs to be withdrawn.

Mr. Ricard: He has definitely said that the former minister of agriculture insulted the civil service. I was here and I did not hear the former minister of agriculture say anything that was an insult to our civil servants.

Mr. Beer: Mr. Speaker, I wish to thank you for your ruling. I regret that hon. members opposite are so sensitive on this particular point, but I did feel that in fairness to the civil servants, who are not able to speak for themselves, I should place this statement on the record.

An hon. Member: Is that a statement by you or by civil servants?

Mr. Beer: I also wish to state that I will take responsibility for the statement I am about to present. The hon. member for Qu'Appelle, however, by strong inference—

Mr. MacInnis: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Beer: —favours the realized net income series—

Mr. MacInnis: Mr. Speaker, I raise a point of order which is one that should be raised more often in the house. I refer to the rule against the reading of speeches and I would appreciate it, Mr. Speaker, if you would rule on the point of order now.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Batten): I have to agree with the hon. member for Cape Breton South and I hope that the parliamentary secretary, while referring to his notes if he needs to do so, will do his best to carry on without referring too much to them.

Mr. Aiken: He would do better without them.

Mr. Beer: I wish to thank the hon. member, of course, but as this is a very sensitive matter, as I want to be very careful in my presentation and as I am presenting a statement for which I take responsibility I prefer, with the indulgence of the house, to refer closely to my notes in order to be accurate. I do not wish to misquote the hon. member for Qu'Appelle in any particular way.

I repeat that the hon. member for Qu'Appelle, however, by strong inference, favours the realized net income series which, by the way, is also published by the dominion bureau of statistics. One does not have to look very far—

Mr. MacInnis: Further on the same point of order, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Beer: —to realize why the hon. member finds the cash income receipts unpalatable to him.

Mr. MacInnis: On the point of order, Mr. Speaker, it was called to the hon. member's attention that he was breaking the rules of the house by reading his statement and he said he would prefer to stick closely to his notes, but he is drawing nothing but inferences from these notes. If he is going to refer to notes and refer also to what the former minister of agriculture has said in the house he must quote the minister and he cannot read from a prepared statement and draw inferences. If he wishes to say something with regard to what the former minister has said he must quote him. If he is not going to quote him, why does he not put his notes away and have some regard for the rules which do not permit him to read from a prepared text?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Batten): Order. I think the hon. member recognizes that we hope all members of the house will make their own speeches, but at times it is necessary for them to refer to their notes.

Mr. Peters: These are somebody else's notes; they are not his.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Batten): I would hope that the hon. member who is now speaking will not refer to his notes any more than is absolutely necessary.

Mr. Beer: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I will endeavour not to refer to my notes any more than is absolutely necessary. I mentioned that the realized net income figures were more compatible to the hon. member. The cash income figures show an increase and are at an all time high. He quibbles about a small variation of .1 per cent in the increase between 1962 and 1963, that is, 2.2 compared with 2.1. Surely he must realize that the preliminary provincial totals were published in February and the final in May when further information for the year 1963 had become available.

In the report on cash income, No. 21-001, published on May 22 it was pointed out that the net income report would be published in about two weeks time. This net income report, as is the case each year, will present figures on realized net income and total net income from farming operations. An advanced preliminary statement for net income only was published in February.

The hon. member for Qu'Appelle drew particular attention to the net income figures indicating the wide variation between the year 1961 and 1963 in net income and comparisons of net with the realized net series. I am sure he is fully aware that the realized net income series does not take into account inventory changes. He also knows that Saskatchewan had a poor crop in 1961. Cash receipts and realized income levels were fairly well maintained because farmers sold accumulated carryovers of grain from previous crop years. The inventory adjustment, however, was quite large and therefore caused a sharp decline in the figure for total net income.

A word about these series. It will be apparent that the choice of one or the other will depend in large measure on the use or abuse to which people wish to put them. Series like these are produced by the United States and most developed nations of the world. Underdeveloped countries include them in their pressing need for statistical data.

As the hon. member for Qu'Appelle completed his address he referred to eastern agriculture and his amendment is based on the failure of the government to do anything about the problems of eastern agriculture. I want to thank him for being so charitable as to refer to this particular subject, because if we had been choosing a subject to suggest to the opposition as one on which they should propose a motion of non-confidence we would have suggested the program of the government with regard to eastern agriculture.

Some reference has been made to the needs of eastern agriculture. I think I am safe in saying that no group could be more sensitive to the needs of eastern agriculture than the present government. It was this particular sensitivity to the needs that caused the government and the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) to propose that a special minister, who would assume responsibility for ARDA and for some aspects of eastern agriculture, should be appointed. I am happy to say that the Minister of Forestry (Mr. Sauvé) has now visited every province in the country. He is currently visiting the prairie provinces. He was in Manitoba last night, is in Edmonton today and will be in Regina tomorrow.

The purpose of these visits is to ascertain the peculiar needs of the provinces with regard to rural development, and to assess the ways in which our ARDA program may be adapted to those respective provinces. It is the expectation of the minister, after this appraisal has been made, that amendments to the policy may be necessary. These will be presented in this house and the program will be proceeded with in order to meet the various needs of the provinces within this country.

It has been suggested that this government has not done anything for eastern agriculture. I suppose it would be reasonable to say that we must have a starting point, a point at which we commence to make our comparisons. I suppose such a date would be April 22 when this government assumed office. We all recall that within hours after assuming office a new dairy policy for Canada was put into effect. We all, of course, remember with some displeasure the mounting butter surplus which existed prior to April 22. We also know that there were substantial demands for cheese, for which we were not able to supply a suitable product. It was the opinion of the government, therefore, that there should be a new emphasis placed on the production of cheese and a declining emphasis placed on the production of butter. This was done within hours of this government's taking office.

I believe that today the minister indicated the extent to which this policy has been successful. For the first time since 1956, the production of butter and the consumption of butter are in line. As a matter of fact, there has been a deficit in production as compared with consumption. In addition, our cheese production is up approximately 18 per cent. I believe that if this government had done nothing else but institute the dairy policy that was instituted within hours after taking office, this would be a very commendable approach to agriculture problems in eastern Canada.

Then, too, it has been suggested nothing has been done, but within a few weeks of taking office a new feed grain policy was announced. This policy has done several things. It has assured eastern users of a constant supply of grain at all times. As a result, there has been an adequate supply of grain at all times through the winter which has resulted in a uniformity in price.

The minister referred to some of our livestock improvement works. He mentioned the r.o.p. policy in connection with dairy cattle. I should like to make some comparisons here because it is only by comparison we are able to indicate the extent to which this government is meeting the needs of eastern agriculture. When this government assumed office, as indicated by the minister, there were some 115 dairy farmers in Canada waiting to be accepted on r.o.p. lists. Within days, or within a very few weeks, the necessary provisions were made to enable these farmers to be serviced, and this program was put into full effect.

[Mr. Beer.]

This is a worth-while policy. Canada is noted the world over for the excellence of her dairy cattle. This reputation has been built up over a substantial number of years as a result of careful selection based partly on the r.o.p. program. The former government, in the name of austerity, had issued a letter indicating that it was going to be necessary to cut down on this essential service to farmers and they would not be able to accept applications as they came in. The result was that, in order to save an estimated $250,000, this valuable service to farmers which has over the years kept the excellence of our dairy cattle at a very high level, was held in abeyance. This government immediately took action to institute a policy which has given a real lift to our r.o.p. program in this country.

Immediately after taking office the government dispatched a team of experts to Europe to study the swine industry for the purpose of discovering better methods of production, better techniques in feeding, and to bring back a report to this country. The recommendations of that team will be put into effect in a swine improvement policy for this country.

Within a short time of taking office, a new veterinary college was established in western Canada which will result in a general improvement in the health standards of our livestock. This, I believe, is a very commendable step. The minister mentioned the action that had been taken with regard to water policies and indicated that more had been undertaken since this government assumed office than had been undertaken for a number of years prior.

The hon. member for Nicolet-Yamaska (Mr. Vincent) suggested that this government has not fulfilled its mandate from the people. I want to suggest that in one year of administration you do not expect to be able to fulfil the mandate from the people. After all, this government has only been in power for one year and I have outlined a notable list of accomplishments that have been achieved by it. How can anyone ask the question, what has been done, when these things are obvious and are working to our mutual advantage?

Then, the Department of Agriculture has additional responsibilities. Not only is it concerned with the operation of these various policies which tend to keep the farmers solvent and agriculture in balance, but in addition the department has substantial responsibilities in connection with promoting research in order to improve our agriculture, in order that agriculture may better serve the farmers and provide better food at reasonable prices for the consuming public. I should like again to refer rather closely to the notes I have before me in elaborating on a research program which will be proceeded with by this government.

The Canada Department of Agriculture seriously entered research with the establishment of five regional experimental farms in 1866. The primary task was to introduce the best of European agriculture in terms of plants and animals, select those best adapted to our conditions and learn how to manage them. Over the years, as our knowledge of our climate and soil has increased, more and more time has been devoted to developments specifically to meet Canadian conditions.

In so far as soils are concerned, for instance, originally we made progress, for example, in connection with fertility on a trial and error basis. Gradually we are learning more and more about our soils, their nature, their fertility, their response to drainage and irrigation. Today we are achieving some independence of soil through our ability to define its limitations in terms of the requirements of a particular crop and to manage it and supplement its fertility to provide an optimum medium for the crop. As our knowledge and understanding of our soils and of the nutrient requirements of each specific crop increase, we will come nearer and nearer to achieving independence from the soil. In other words, we will be able to manage the soil in such a way that it will not be a limiting factor in crop production. Unfortunately we cannot hope to achieve such control over temperature although we are making good progress towards ensuring adequate moisture.

With regard to plants, in the beginning we depended on varieties developed for conditions other than our own and were limited to selecting those which did best under Canadian conditions. Farmers paid little if any attention to variety, because oats were oats and timothy was timothy. Since we developed Marquis wheat specifically for our Canadian prairies we have gone ahead until today we have many varieties of cereals, forages and horticultural crops developed in Canada to meet the specific requirements of the farmer in a specific delineated area.

Each province makes annual variety recommendations on the basis of varieties tailored to its conditions. Farmers do not plant wheat, or timothy or alfalfa. They make their selections on the basis of specific recommended varieties. Tomorrow we will know much more about the requirements of specific crops in terms of light, of heat, of water, of nutrients and about the genetic make-up of plants in relation to the physiological response to environment and disease. The plant breeder will thus have the knowledge about tailor-made varieties by direct selection of the genetic material which will carry the desired characters.

With regard to animals, in the early days we brought in European breeds of livestock and fed them on the feeds readily available on individual farms. There was no measure of efficiency in terms such as feed/grain ratios or profit factors. Through research we are gradually defining the nutrient requirements of stock for each stage of growth and production. We are developing techniques for evaluating and describing feedstuffs in terms of what they will contribute toward these nutrient requirements. Today, our feed manufacturers and our farmers have been given considerable information for use in planning rations which will come close to exploiting the potential of a particular class of stock for growth or production. This information permits them to substitute individual ration components on a basis of current market prices and still meet nutrient requirements.

Today we are starting to accumulate new information on the profit factor in feeding high energy rations to meat and production classes of livestock, and are learning something about increasing the economy of maintaining and housing breeding herds and young stock prior to coming into production.

Mr. Nasserden: Would the hon. member tell us what document he is quoting from?

Mr. Beer: I beg your pardon?

Mr. Nasserden: I wonder would you tell us what document you are quoting from?

Mr. Beer: I am quoting from a statement that I have prepared. If the hon. member for Rosthern (Mr. Nasserden) were to present statements such as this it might not be necessary to name the source.

Our studies on non-pathological diseases such as bloat, acetonemia, and urinary calculi are giving or will give the anwers we need in devising management and feeding practices which will eliminate these conditions. We are approaching the day when all breeding stock will be selected on the basis of performance in terms of both quality of product and economy of production.

Crop protection will probably interest the hon. member for Rosthern. Developments in agriculture have increased and will continue to increase the numbers of pests affecting our domestic crops and animals and their significance in terms of economic losses. This introduces an increasing hazard and degree of gamble into the farmers' operation which can only be eliminated by control of pests, whether insects, diseases or weeds.

Much of our research has gone into understanding the nature and habits of pests and devising control programs. The control programs have developed to the point where, for example, we can ensure a scab-free apple, or that an epidemic of grasshoppers will not eliminate the cereal or forage crop.

We have a big job ahead of us if we are going to continue to place quality products in the consumer's basket, protect the farmer from wide fluctuations in his income, and at the same time ensure that we do not build up harmful residues in our soils or exceed residue tolerances for pesticides in the consumer diet. Not the least of the problems is the development of resistance in pests to control agents. Thus, we are and will be engaged in controlling pests through breeding resistance into our crops, by introducing biological control agents, by the genetic introduction into the pest of factors limiting the increase of the species, and by developing chemicals more specific to the pests and less hazardous to warm blooded animals such as ourselves.

It is the opinion of the minister and the government that our research stations should be set up in such a way that they will meet the immediate needs of the farmers in the areas which they are intended to serve, and a substantial approach has been made in this general direction.

I think, Mr. Speaker, the following statement should also be read into the record from the statement by the hon. member for Qu'Appelle.

> I could go through the list of the provinces, but let me just leave this one figure with you; that in all the provinces of Canada, with the exception of two, realized farm income went down last year, and those two provinces do not include Saskatchewan and Alberta.

These are the words used by the hon. member for Qu'Appelle yesterday.

> We went down too, but we know why we went down and we will correct that. I give those figures because this is the truth and not this meaningless gibberish that comes from the d.b.s.—

I believe that that corroborates the statement which I made earlier, that the hon. member for Qu'Appelle had undertaken to speak disparagingly of the work of the d.b.s. upon which we have relied with great confidence for a great number of years. So, Mr. Speaker, I conclude my remarks by expressing my own personal confidence that it will be the wish of the house that the amendment, as presented by the hon. member for Qu'Appelle, will be defeated.

Mr. H. A. Olson (Medicine Hat): Mr. Speaker, the amendment to the supply motion that is before the house reads:

[Mr. Beer.]

> This house regrets the continuing failure of the government to take effective action with regard to the pressing agricultural problems of eastern Canada.

We in this party agree that there are some pressing problems with which the government should come to grips, with respect to agricultural problems in eastern Canada, but I think the speech made by the mover of the amendment, the hon. member for Qu'Appelle (Mr. Hamilton) was a condemnation of the policies that he and his government followed during the years they were in office.

I say that in spite of the fact that the hon. member has continuously—and he did it again yesterday—suggested that he is tired hearing members say, "Well, what did you do when you were in office"? If we look at the speech he made, pointing out some of the problems of the farmers and of the whole agricultural industry in eastern Canada, we can agree that there is some validity to what he said. He even took the trouble to have included in the Hansard record a couple of charts which made it clear that during the year 1963 there was a decided drop in the realized net income of farmers all over Canada as compared with the year before. Surely, if anyone must accept responsibility for a decline in agricultural realized net income during the year 1963, it must be the government which was in power during the period just preceding that decline. After all, the government we have today did not come to office until some time in April, four months after the year had started, and even if they had had a completely new agricultural policy to implement at that time—and I do not think they had one—it would be almost ridiculous to expect that the fruits of such a policy could have been realized during the fiscal year 1963.

So, while I agree with the hon. member for Cumberland (Mr. Coates) when he says that the agricultural policy of the present government is found wanting, I believe such a statement applies with even greater force to the previous government when we think of its performance in relation to the amendment before the house today. If there is any suggestion in this amendment that the present government is failing in relation to what the previous government did in the same realm of policy, then we have surely reached a new low in substance as far as amendments to these supply motions are concerned.

The hon. member for Bow River (Mr. Woolliams) complained that the present government did not tackle the question of expanding facilities for carrying grain into export position fast enough. This suggestion is certainly not borne out in face of the fact that more grain has been moved into export position, using the facilities we have now, than at any time in our history. The same hon. member wanted to take credit on behalf of the Progressive Conservative party for all of the wheat sales which have been made, not only to China but also to Russia and other places as well.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Olson: While the Conservatives are cheering I should like to point out to them that in this context they apparently did not believe in themselves. If they felt sales of this kind were likely to continue in the future they should have had sufficient confidence in themselves and in this policy to begin, at least, to expand the facilities needed to move grain into export position. The Liberal government, bad as it may be, even if its plans had been ready for expanding terminal facilities and improving rail facilities the day it took office, could not reasonably have been expected to push this construction work forward to completion by this date. So it seems to me hon. members to my right want to have it both ways.

There has been a significant expansion in sales and shipments of grain from western Canada, I agree. But I think we ought to recognize where the credit should lie. In my opinion it belongs to the Canadian wheat board, both while the Conservatives were in office and now while the Liberals are in office. I think the board has done a remarkable job, considering the railway facilities and terminal space we have, in getting these enormously expanded amounts of grain into export position.

The hon. member for Bow River (Mr. Woolliams) suggested we could have sold 200 million bushels more if we had had facilities to deliver the grain. I cannot think of any statement which is more critical of the policy of the hon. member's own government when it was in office. If there was a potential for sales of this magnitude and if his government had foreseen it, surely it should have accepted the responsibility for at least beginning to expand the facilities needed to enable us to sell 200 million bushels of grain in addition to the tonnage already supplied. Well, the hon. member and his friends may try to keep up this contention that these sales are the result of some action which the Conservative government took, but it seems to me this is a doubtful crutch on which to be leaning at this time. The Canadian wheat board, it seems to me, has done a fairly good job of selling grain under both governments. Let us not confuse the issue. Let us put both the responsibility and the credit where it belongs.

The hon. member for Cumberland said the former minister of agriculture had a complete policy ready and that he announced it to the people of eastern Canada, particularly in the maritimes, during the 1962 election campaign. Well, that is nice, if it is the case. I have never seen it. It is true there have been a lot of words, a lot of platitudes about what would be desirable. But we know from experience the lack of action we encountered when it came to implementing the ARDA legislation. We had all these policies and all these platitudes embodied in an act which was supposed to solve all the problems of agriculture in Canada. This act was passed in 1961. It was late in 1963 before the province of Alberta could get the government which passed this legislation to agree to one project. If that is the kind of program with which the hon. gentleman went to the maritimes, it is no wonder the people there rejected it. What the member for Cumberland failed to realize is this: No matter how good the words might have sounded in the election campaign, the people had reached the stage where they no longer believed them.

Some hon. Members: Six o'clock.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Batten): It is my duty, pursuant to provisional standing order 39A, to inform the house that the questions to be raised at ten o'clock this day are as follows: the hon. member for Dorchester: basis for figures respecting the number of unemployed; the hon. member for Bow River: continuation of policy respecting oil exports; the hon. member for Lotbinière: disposal of radar station equipment.

It being six o'clock I do now leave the chair.

At six o'clock the house took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The house resumed at 8 p.m.

SUPPLY

The house resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Gordon for committee of supply, and the amendment thereto of Mr. Hamilton.

LACK OF ACTION TO ASSIST EASTERN AGRICULTURE

Mr. Olson: Mr. Speaker, when the house rose at six o'clock I was discussing the amendment under consideration and the fact that the hon. member for Qu'Appelle (Mr. Hamilton) had in his supporting speech satisfactorily condemned the policies, practices and actions of the government in which he was minister of agriculture. Looking at some of the suggestions which have been made by the mover of the amendment before the house and relating them to what is contained in the amendment, we find that this is the position. As reported at page 3543 of Hansard the former minister of agriculture said that the number one pressing problem is for a feed grain policy for the farmers in eastern Canada.

I think it is fair to say that all members of this house agree that this is a pressing problem. I think it is also fair to say that this problem did not spring up overnight. I was a member of the committee on agriculture and colonization which sat during the last session and I am rather proud of the manner in which that committee conducted itself. They called in witnesses from the organizations representing the grain producers of western Canada. They followed this up with calling witnesses from the board of grain commissioners, from the Canadian wheat board, right through to the feedgrain purchaser in eastern Canada. There were discussions with the shipping companies which carry the grain from the lakehead to the terminals along the St. Lawrence river. The committee also called witnesses from the primary and secondary distributors in eastern Canada. I know of no other time when such an exhaustive review was conducted into the matter of feed grain policy in eastern Canada. I am not prepared to say that the committee came forth with any suggestions which would immediately solve the problem. However, the hon. member for Qu'Appelle said that this was the most pressing problem facing the farmers in eastern Canada at the present time. If that is true it must certainly be a reflection on the agricultural policies of the government which held office during the years immediately preceding this date.

In addition to that the hon. member who moved the amendment said that we need some sort of pasture policy to get increased production off the grass in eastern Canada, a statement with which I could not agree more. But we also know if we want to be reasonable, that to reach a position where you have some beneficial results from a policy to increase production from grass, whether it be in eastern Canada or anywhere else, this policy has to be in effect for a number of years.

The hon. member also pointed out that we need water policies for the eastern provinces, something similar to the P.F.R.A. and the programs which apply to the west. I can turn my memory back a number of years when the P.F.R.A. first came into being, and I say to you, Mr. Speaker, that not just one or two years went by, but a matter of 10 to 15 years went by before a substantially beneficial result took place from the water policy established in western Canada under P.F.R.A.

The hon. member also went on to say that we need a livestock policy in the country, making particular reference to the east. Here again we agree that this is true. But we also have to return to the same argument, that a livestock policy would require a number of years before there would be beneficial results.

The hon. member also said that we need a national dairy policy. I and the members of this party do not believe that the policy respecting the dairy industry in Canada today is completely satisfactory. But I think we will have to agree that it has improved substantially during the last few months.

Mr. Hamilton: You are really doing a salvage job for the new government.

Mr. Olson: The hon. member for Qu'Appelle says I am doing a salvage job for the government. My main interest in this amendment and the vote immediately before me is—

Mr. Diefenbaker: Personal survival.

Mr. Olson: —that we in this parliament have an obligation to the Canadian people as a whole, and what the country wants most from this parliament is some stability in the administration of their affairs. While we appreciate the problems of the eastern farmers, an election at this time is not going to solve those problems.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Olson: The Progressive Conservative members are babbling away again. They do not like to face these facts. Those same members have introduced want of confidence motions urging the abolition of sales tax, motions having to do with family allowances, water resources and a number of other matters. Every member of this house knows, and most of the people are beginning to learn, that supporting amendments to a supply motion, no matter what the wording, does not have the effect of solving the problems embodied in the literal definition of the particular amendment.

Mr. MacInnis: Would the hon. member permit one short question?

Mr. Olson: Sit down and be quiet; your party have had plenty of opportunity to speak.

There are problems of unity and other matters before the country at this time, and I am sure that if we were to support this amendment tonight and thus plunge the country into another election at this stage the wording of this amendment would be lost in the minds of its supporters before the election campaign was two weeks old.

An hon. Member: That's for sure.

Mr. Olson: Someone for the Conservatives says "Yes, that's for sure". I think that that reveals the intent of the party which has moved this amendment. They are not interested in the problems of the eastern farmers. They are just using this occasion—

Mr. Danforth: You are not either.

Mr. Olson: They are using this tragic problem on this occasion to base an amendment to a supply motion to further what they think might help their own political purposes, if they can fool the rest of the members in this house into supporting them.

Mr. Danforth: Why don't you move over?

Mr. Olson: Mr. Speaker, we hear the same old babble—"Why don't you move over?

Some hon. Members: Why don't you?

Mr. Olson: Let me say to the members over here that I have travelled back and forth across this country several times and have talked with the people in my own constituency; and, by the way, there are almost as many Conservatives there as there are supporters of any party. People in that constituency have told me repeatedly—

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Speaker, would the hon. member answer a question?

Some hon. Members: Sit down.

Mr. Dupuis: We hear enough of you.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Olson: I know, Mr. Speaker, that members of the Progressive Conservative party get a little incensed when they hear some of the truth, when they hear some of the facts of life.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Olson: They get a little disturbed. I was about to tell them that there are a large number of people in my constituency who have supported the Progressive Conservative party in the past few years, and I will tell hon. members this—

Mr. MacInnis: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Olson: —that even those people—

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member for Cape Breton South (Mr. MacInnis) is rising on a point of order.

Mr. MacInnis: I raise a point of order at this moment, Mr. Speaker, to clarify my own position in this house and my duty as a member of parliament. I think this question should be cleared up, and the only person who can clear it up is the hon. member who is now speaking. I would ask that the hon. member explain his remark of a few moments ago when he said—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. MacInnis: —"We in this cabinet". I would like the hon. member to explain the remark, "We in this cabinet".

Mr. Olson: Mr. Speaker, I know hon. members to my right do not like to hear these things.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

An hon. Member: Time.

Mr. Olson: I wish I could hear some of these snide remarks. These people in my constituency who have supported the Conservative party have said to me on a number of occasions that they appreciate the fact that the Social Credit party in this house have provided the measure of stability that they want—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Olson: —in the administration of their affairs. So—

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Olson: Mr. Speaker, if I could have the attention of my hon. friends for a moment, I would tell them something they can think over for a day or two. It might help them.

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Olson: In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, let me say that I think it is time for all hon. members of this house to comply with the wishes of the vast majority of the Canadian people. Those wishes are that this parliament should conduct itself in such a way that would restore to our national administration a measure of both dignity and stability.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Dupuis: Very good.

Mr. Speaker: Order. It being eight fifteen o'clock p.m., it is my duty, pursuant to section 4(d) of standing order 56, to interrupt these proceedings and put forth with the question on any amendment now before the house.

Mr. Speaker: I declare the amendment lost. Are there any pairs to be declared?

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION—ALLEGED GOVERNMENT INTERFERENCE

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, I wish to raise a grievance this evening that concerns several cabinet ministers and, so that they will not be held in suspense as they may wish to stay and hear what I have to say in regard to them, I shall name them immediately: the Minister of Finance (Mr. Gordon), the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Martin), the Minister of Labour

(Mr. MacEachen) and of course the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson), and I am very sorry not to see him in his seat tonight.

But I am sure that hon. members opposite will be very interested to listen to the subject matter of my grievance, if they will contain themselves for a moment in patience.

Mr. Speaker: Order please. I cannot hear the hon. member.

Mr. Nielsen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am very glad that you are endeavouring to assist me in suppressing the catcalls of the hon. members opposite. I know they do not like to hear these criticisms of government inactions and actions in their last year in office, but I am afraid this is one they are going to have to stomach.

This grievance concerns the unwarranted and blatant interference by cabinet ministers with a crown corporation which has been set up to operate independently of government for a very good purpose. I refer, sir, to the activities of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation system. In the last few months we have had more cabinet interference, by cabinet ministers and by the Prime Minister, with the independent actions of the C.B.C. than ever before in Canada's history.

All of these actions on the part of cabinet ministers are beginning to form a pattern, and we can start back as far as April, 1964 when the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pickersgill) made a speech to the Canadian Association of Broadcasters at a meeting in Quebec city. At that time he advocated certain propositions which would have the effect of bringing the C.B.C. under the complete suppression and control of the cabinet. I believe that at that time the Minister of Transport was responsible to parliament for reporting for the C.B.C.

Mr. Pickersgill: Will the hon. gentleman favour us by giving the date he is referring to?

Mr. Nielsen: I will be very happy, sir. I am quoting from an article in the Toronto Globe and Mail of April 10, 1964, by Dennis Braithwaite.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I know the hon. gentleman with his passion for accuracy would not want to get anything wrong. I had at that stage no connection whatever, except as a member of the government, with the C.B.C., and the channel of communication was the Secretary of State, who had not been myself since February 3.

Moreover, sir, I do not regard Mr. Dennis Braithwaite as the authority on what I may have said. I issued an official text—

An hon. Member: Do you deny it?

Mr. Pickersgill: I deny that anything except the official text should be quoted as the text of anything that I said. Moreover, sir, to continue my question of privilege, the hon. gentleman made a great deal about my interference with the C.B.C. on a previous occasion and he was too chicken—and so were hon. gentlemen opposite—to move a vote of want of confidence on it when they had the chance.

Mr. Nielsen: The Minister of Transport has mentioned chickens. I think he is an expert because it takes one to know one. Further, I think that all of these chickens should be brought home to roost and I am sure hon. members opposite will be interested, despite the minister's pious denials of what he might have said at the Montreal meeting—

Mr. Pickersgill: It wasn't at Montreal.

Mr. Nielsen: —in hearing what Mr. Braithwaite had to say. While the minister, in all his professed innocence, denies any channels of communication with the C.B.C., this is very difficult for us to accept on this side of the house because I can remember, as many of us can, the manner in which he imposed himself upon the C.B.C. when he, in a snit, went to the C.B.C. after he failed to announce his air policy in this house. He then, sir, went along to the C.B.C. in a great pique—as the leader of the New Democratic party described it at that time, Pick in a pique—and insisted on announcing his air policy over a national network to reach all Canadians when he was, as he put it, frustrated from announcing it in this house; but that was not the case and I will have a thing or two to say about that in a moment.

This is what the Globe and Mail said about the minister's announcement, and if there was a portfolio of culture in this house—and I am sorry the minister is not in his seat—if there was such a portfolio, the Secretary of State himself would be the person to hold it, since this involves that very feature of national affairs.

This is the way the Globe and Mail printed it up. Mr. Braithwaite said with respect to the speech made by the Minister of Transport in Montreal:

If broadcasting—

Mr. Pickersgill: I made no speech in Montreal.

Mr. Nielsen:

If broadcasting is, indeed, a part of the press and therefore utterly free, does it need guidance? Has any cabinet minister the right to erect guideposts?

He is referring here to the guideposts, so-called, that the Minister of Transport urged should be set up.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, I am constrained to rise again on a question of privilege. I made no speech in Montreal at all, and the rest of what the hon. gentleman is reading is just as accurate as that.

Mr. Nielsen: Well, now, sir, I must confess that I mistook Quebec city for Montreal, but I am sure that the minister will agree that it was in Quebec. I come from 4,000 miles away, from the Yukon, and I am sure other hon. members will forgive me if I made a mistake on a matter of 120 miles, or whatever the distance might be between Quebec city and Montreal. But the fact is that the minister made this speech in Quebec city, which purported to erect certain circumscriptions within the C.B.C.—

Mr. Pickersgill: Once more I rise on a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker. When I spoke in Quebec city I was speaking to the Canadian Association of Broadcasters. Of course I am sure the hon. gentleman would not know the difference between them and the C.B.C.

I was not referring to the C.B.C. at all, but to broadcasting generally, and I was not seeking to make any suggestions to them of any kind as to how they should run their affairs. I was talking mainly about the inefficient way in which some of us in this house were running the affairs of the house, and the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) would have got honourable mention among those.

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, when I was sitting on the government side, watching the opposition of that day, of which the minister was one of the four horsemen, I said to myself, whom should I try to emulate so as to be as responsible in opposition as I could; and I can pay no greater compliment to the minister than to say he is one of those I have tried to emulate on this side of the house. But what I really want to do is to take the minister to task—to make him realize that this unwarranted interference with the affairs of the C.B.C. is not in keeping with those principles he purported to espouse when he was sitting on this side of the house. He should recall the various charges he made in this regard when he was sitting over here. In order that he may call to mind some of the things he said in Quebec city, I propose to return to what was said on that occasion as Mr. Braithwaite saw it.

Transport Minister J. W. Pickersgill told the broadcasters they should forget about being so impartial in their reporting of parliamentary affairs and should become more analytical.

[Mr. Nielsen.]

At first flush, this might seem to be a praiseworthy reaffirmation of the freedom of the press and a declaration that broadcasting should partake fully of that freedom.

Mr. Braithwaite went on to say:

Coming from the cabinet minister who makes the ultimate decisions in federal regulation of radio and television, it would appear to rank only a little below Magna Carta or the Four Freedoms. But hold. It seems that Mr. Pickersgill had a particular kind of liberty in mind rather than liberty in general; the freedom he advocated was needed for a specific purpose. Certain rules that govern parliament must be changed, the minister said, if national purpose is to become national achievement. One such is the right to appeal rulings by the Speaker, which Mr. Pickersgill considers absurd. But who has most need of this right? The opposition. Similarly, who are the exhibitionists in parliament who the minister says gum up the works and should be exposed? Again, members of the opposition.

I am sure that when the minister said this in Quebec city he was thinking: What a wonderful Utopia it would be if we had control of all the crown corporations and all the media for the dissemination of public news, with no opposition at all. This is what he was advocating in Quebec city when he made those remarks. The article goes on—and the subject is, now, the Secretary of State—I was about to say the minister of culture:

This was scary enough, but he went on to say that he would need their assistance to help overcome Canada's so-called cultural poverty. To arrive at certain desired, but undefined, cultural goals, said Mr. Lamontagne, there should be not merely more Canadian content in programs, but better content, including better Canadian escapist entertainment.

I think the government is seeking many avenues along which to escape on several issues, and I do not blame the Secretary of State for making that observation. The key word, concludes Mr. Braithwaite, is the word "better". He goes on to say:

It isn't only broadcasters who should be alarmed by these ministerial attitudes. I am not suggesting the government is ready to take over radio and t.v., but at the very least there is a threat of encroachments which should be resisted.

I believe that was the beginning of this pattern with respect to the superimposition of the views of cabinet ministers and the government over independent decisions of the C.B.C. The C.B.C. was set up as an independent corporation to exercise independence in the dissemination of news to Canadian citizens everywhere. We cannot maintain that independence if the corporation is to be continually exposed to the imposition of the views of people such as the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pickersgill) the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) and the Secretary of State (Mr. Lamontagne) with respect to these matters. This pattern was further developed when the Minister of Transport refused to make an announcement on air policy in the house, as is the normal custom, when questions were called. He refused to do that and he was later denied by the house an opportunity to make a statement on the ten o'clock adjournment debate under the rules. So he went bustling to the C.B.C. in Ottawa and insisted on making his statement on policy over this medium, instead of presenting it to the house as is the proper custom. On the following Monday when a motion censuring the hon. gentleman was before the house he made his apologies. But that is not good enough. The minister made a mistake on that occasion, but that does not excuse this pattern which seems to be developing of the government overriding the independence of the C.B.C., an independence which it is so important to preserve.

We have further evidence of this pattern forming. I refer to the film which was prepared under contract by Intervideo Productions Ltd. for the C.B.C.—a film on the Prime Minister. This was a half hour program which cost the Canadian taxpayers $35,000 and it was previewed by cabinet ministers in five separate showings. The Prime Minister, in reply to a question I asked him as to whether or not this film received its showing in his office on five separate occasions, evaded the issue by saying: No, it was not seen there; it was seen in the C.B.C. studio in Toronto. The fact remains that the Prime Minister and his advisers reviewed this film in five separate showings and, in effect, imposed censorship on it.

I have certain newspaper comments in this regard as well. A private showing was attended by the Prime Minister, by the Secretary of State for External Affairs, by the minister of trade, and by the Minister of Labour. I see the Secretary of State for External Affairs cocking his ear. He was one of those who saw one of these exclusive presentations of the film called "Mr. Pearson". I have as yet no knowledge of any other situation where a government has set up within the cabinet a committee of censorship, because that is what this amounted to. The Prime Minister, the Secretary of State for External Affairs, the minister of trade, the Minister of Labour and the minister for culture—I am sorry; the Secretary of State—were all at these exclusive showings. This is what the Globe and Mail for Thursday, May 21, 1964, has to say about censorship:

> The film-maker, co-producer of a highly regarded documentary on Playboy's Hugh Hefner that the C.B.C. carried two seasons ago—

That has nothing to do, of course, with the government or with the Prime Minister.

> —defended the techniques used in making the Pearson film and said the result was a sincere and honest portrait.

He said that the film was screened at least five times for members of the Prime Minister's staff and cabinet members. Among the ministers who saw it were Finance Minister Walter Gordon, External Affairs Minister Paul Martin, Labour Minister Allan MacEachen and Trade Minister Mitchell Sharp.

An hon. Member: And the minister for external affairs.

Mr. Nielsen: The minister for external affairs, I am sure, was there because he is particularly concerned with the external image the Prime Minister casts in the country.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): May I simply point out to the hon. member that I am not concerned with the external image, because the Prime Minister is respected throughout this country and throughout the world.

Mr. Nielsen: That remark is very refreshing because it is the first time in 18 months that the minister for external affairs has admitted he is once again back in politics.

The article goes on to say:

> Mr. Ballentine said he did not believe there had been government pressure on the C.B.C. but that the corporation had censored its own show in order not to embarrass the Prime Minister.

I wonder what can be read into a statement of that sort in view of the previous activities and statements of the Minister of Transport. However, the article continues—this quotation is from Mr. Ballentine:

> "At one screening, some of Mr. Pearson's advisers admitted that they had to be concerned about his vote-getting image", he said.

Some hon. Members: Oh.

Mr. Nielsen: Is that the reason the film was suppressed?

Mr. Diefenbaker: They might have been there for entertainment purposes.

Mr. Nielsen: As has been suggested, I believe this film was suppressed, unless some other explanation is forthcoming from the Prime Minister or one of the cabinet ministers concerned. It may be they went for the same reason they went to see Mickey Mouse—for entertainment purposes. We have not seen the film. If it is entertaining I am sure we would all like to see it. It seems to me that a film which has cost the Canadian taxpayer $35,000 should be seen by all Canadians. They have paid the price of admission and they should see it.

I think I can do no better than to wind up by reading—

Mr. Berger: Mr. Speaker, I hope my hon. friend from the Yukon will excuse me but I am not too sure whether I should raise a point of privilege or a point of order.

Some hon. Members: Sit down.

Alleged Interference in C.B.C.

Mr. Berger: I wish I could sit down, but the hon. member for Montmagny-L'Islet and others would like to know what is going on here. That is why I am asking Mr. Speaker this question, and if I am wrong I shall be corrected. I have been listening to the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) for a few minutes and he referred to the C.B.C. and matters like that.

Mr. MacInnis: Mr. Speaker, a point of order.

Mr. Berger: Unfortunately, I am not a lawyer; I am just a poor guy who does not know exactly where the hon. member is going to. It seems to me that we have so many important matters to discuss that we are at least entitled to have an explanation as to where the hon. member is going. Because up to now—

Some hon. Members: Sit down.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Berger: —we do not know where we are going.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) is raising a grievance and I am sure he is doing his best to develop some sort of argument. The hon. member for Cape Breton South (Mr. MacInnis).

Mr. MacInnis: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, the hon. member who has just taken his seat has referred to the fact that he did not know whether he was rising on a question of privilege, or what. I would draw your attention to the fact that neither he nor the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pickersgill) three times previous to that were recognized by the Chair; what they have been doing is nothing less than making interjections, and it is about time someone raised a point of order.

Mr. Speaker: The Chair is supposed to arbitrate, not enter into debate, and I assure the hon. member for Cape Breton South that I did recognize the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pickersgill).

Mr. MacInnis: Mr. Speaker—

Some hon. Members: Sit down.

Mr. MacInnis: Mr. Speaker, it would appear that I owe the Chair an apology.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. MacInnis: There goes the snake pit again. Along with the apology I must remind myself to have my ears checked in the morning, because if the Minister of Transport was recognized I failed to hear it.

Mr. Berger: May I ask a question?

[Mr. Berger.]

Mr. Speaker: Order. The time for the hon. member for Yukon will be over at 9.22 p.m. and he should be given an opportunity on a statement of grievance to make his case.

Mr. Berger: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I agree with your ruling but I should like to know whether the hon. member for Yukon can differentiate between Quebec and Montreal, as I can between the Northwest Territories and the Yukon, because then I will listen to him.

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, every time it starts getting a little hot and uncomfortable for members opposite, whether in this house or in the committee, up goes the smokescreen and out go the red herrings and they try to confuse the issue. I would tell the hon. member that I stated at the outset what my grievance was, and it was the unwarranted interference by the Prime Minister and his government in the independent affairs of the C.B.C. Had the hon. member been listening he would have heard the disgusting example which I quoted of the speech made by the Minister of Transport in Quebec city, the remarks of the Secretary of State, and the attempts of this government to suppress a film which the Canadian taxpayers had paid Intervideo Productions $35,000 to produce. If the Canadian taxpayer, as I said before I was interrupted, has paid the price of admission, then he is entitled to see the film, and I do not think the government should bring this pressure to bear on the management of the C.B.C. in an attempt to prevent the film from being shown.

I have before me a telegram from Intervideo Productions which was sent to me yesterday, and I want to read it to the members of the house because I think it deserves an explanation. It reads as follows:

> Intervideo Productions has informed C.B.C. it intends to take all actions necessary to enable the film "Mr. Pearson" to be seen. This action taken because C.B.C. has not replied to Intervideo's letter May 21 requesting C.B.C. to implement immediately Intervideo's rights to prints of the film and otherwise to honour the agreement between them.

Why have they not honoured the agreement? What pressures have been brought to bear by the ministers who previewed this film in their little censorship gathering?

> Inervideo can now only assume that C.B.C. for its reasons is determined to suppress film completely.

It is signed "Intervideo Productions".

I do not blame the C.B.C. for taking the decision they have taken. Unless a satisfactory explanation is forthcoming from the Prime Minister, from the Minister of Transport, from the trade minister or from the Secretary of State, we shall have to assume that this film was suppressed. We have paid the price; let us have a look at it.

[Translation]

Mr. Gilles Grégoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, I would like to speak briefly and leave enough time for my hon. friend for Port Arthur (Mr. Fisher) to say a few words concerning the grievance which has been raised. My remarks may seem somewhat irrelevant, but I still believe that what I say and the grievance I want to raise are quite similar to the one raised by the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen).

I noticed tonight, and many times before, that some hon. members raise grievances or make accusations, without being able to prove anything whatsoever, concerning either their grievances or their accusations. I mention this fact because it is not the first time that it has happened. In fact, the other day we heard the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm (Mr. Pigeon) talking through his hat and levelling an accusation for which he was called a liar, and he did not dare challenge the statement.

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. The hon. member for Lapointe is not allowed to challenge the word of the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm.

[Text]

Mr. Fisher: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I should like to know whether the hon. member for Lapointe (Mr. Grégoire) is speaking to the grievance raised by the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen). Because if he is, then it is not clear.

Mr. Speaker: I am quite convinced myself that the hon. member is speaking to the same grievance, because he told me he wanted to do that. But in order to determine the question, is the hon. member for Lapointe (Mr. Grégoire) speaking to the same grievance?

[Translation]

Mr. Grégoire: Yes, Mr. Speaker. Besides, that was easy to see from my first remarks.

Mr. Speaker, my grievance concerns the one which was raised earlier and it is precisely because this is not the first time it happened that I wish to speak about it.

The hon. member for Yukon quoted newspaper articles and editorials to support his grievance.

I do not know if what he said is true, but I do know that in making his statement the hon. member did not bring forward any conclusive or striking evidence, in short, no proof at all. All he did was quote from press reports and take Montreal for Quebec, which is rather insulting to us.

Mr. Speaker, I am dealing with this type of grievance today, because for several weeks, especially every time grievances have been raised in the house, it has become the custom to do so without giving any proof, to launch accusations in mid-air, and I am rising now to protest against this practice and against the grievance raised by the hon. member for Yukon.

We have seen that the hon. member for Yukon has proved absolutely nothing, and has launched gratuitous accusations, just like the member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm has done.

[Text]

Mr. Pigeon: The same old bunch, Mr. Speaker.

[Translation]

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the remarks made by the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm and by another hon. member whose riding I do not know but who is a front bencher on the other side. I see that it was the hon. member for St. Ann (Mr. Loiselle) who accused us of being with the Conservatives because we voted against the government. Now, the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm says that we side with the Liberals. That is not so. The only thing we want is to try to keep some logic in the house after the outbursts we had a while ago.

[Text]

Mr. Peters: There is no difference.

[Translation]

Mr. Grégoire: It is true that there is perhaps no difference between the two old parties.

As for a possible interference with the C.B.C., I am more specifically coming to the grievance raised by the hon. member for Yukon. It has been said that some ministers interfere with the authorities of the C.B.C. There is, however, one thing which should be established in this house. We see, for instance, Air Canada and the Canadian National sending their officials before a committee of the house, to explain their position, their principles, their objectives and what they propose to do. Now, this is not the case with the C.B.C.

Indeed, yesterday or the day before, we asked the Secretary of State (Mr. Lamontagne) to set up a committee of the house to inquire into the operations of the C.B.C., to enable us to get some information from the heads and officials of that corporation on some points which we may be anxious to clear up. Then, the hon. member for Yukon would be able to obtain the proof of what he just stated.

Mr. Speaker, we are denied such a committee, and that is why I take up the grievance of the hon. member for Yukon in respect to the affairs of the C.B.C. I should like to amplify that grievance, or at least raise one, since there was none a while ago, and ask the government to set up a special committee of the house so that the hon. members may ask the director of the C.B.C. how this crown corporation operates and then express their views and those of the people behind them—and I mean members in all corners of the house—on the machinery and administration of that corporation.

Mr. Speaker, I feel that this is imperative, because it has been several years now since such a committee of the house was instituted. That committee would not be a clumsy interference on the part of members in the affairs of the C.B.C., but it would inform them on what goes on in that corporation. Besides it would also be a source of information for the corporation itself, because we would be in a position to tell them what the people really think of their operations.

Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that this is imperative. The Secretary of State (Mr. Lamontagne) is not present in the house, but I think that there will be other members of the cabinet—

Hon. Paul Martineau (Pontiac-Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. In my opinion, the hon. member for Lapointe (Mr. Grégoire) is wandering away from the grievance raised by the hon. member for Yukon. Under standing orders, he should restrict himself to the grievance which has been raised, but he is now talking about a quite different matter. He should restrict himself to the subject—

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Speaker, may I say a few words on that? The subject matter of the grievance in question is the interference of some hon. members of the house in the affairs of the crown corporation which is called the C.B.C. Now, it seems to me that that is precisely what I am talking about, since I am asking the government to set up a committee of the house to prevent such intrusions.

Mr. Speaker, I feel that my remarks are entirely within the scope of the grievance raised a while ago by the hon. member for Yukon. That is why I should like to continue—

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Speaker, I would ask you to make a ruling as to whether or not the hon. member is out of order.

[Mr. Grégoire.]

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: Inasmuch as I have been requested to render a decision, I think the point is well taken by the hon. member for Lapointe in that the grievance is interference with the C.B.C.—

Mr. Churchill: By the government.

Mr. Speaker: —and he was discussing reaching, I presume, some sort of conclusion in that respect.

[Translation]

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Speaker, I thank you, because it seems to me, after all, that the subject matter is broad enough, since the whole organization of C.B.C. is questioned and this is precisely what I am discussing.

I see that the Secretary of State, who is responsible for the C.B.C. is not here this evening but I am sure that the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Martin) can be the spokesman for the members of our party and many others in the house, I believe, to ask the Secretary of State to look after the institution of a special committee of the house on C.B.C. organization and affairs. It is not because we would necessarily criticize the C.B.C. On the contrary, in spite of the remarks made by the hon. member for Yukon, I think personally that the C.B.C. is doing an excellent job, that it is one of the agencies that works for the development of bilingualism in our country.

It may be that there are other administrative deficiencies in that corporation. Then, there might be some suggestions to be made, for instance, to appoint Donald Gordon as chairman—he knows about administration—and, since things may not go too well as far as bilingualism is concerned in the C.N.R., Alphonse Ouimet, who is doing a fine job of bilingualism at C.B.C. could be appointed there.

Mr. Martineau: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member is again out of order.

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: I do not share that opinion—

Mr. Fisher: We do.

Mr. Speaker: —but I believe that the hon. member for Lapointe had just about terminated his remarks. Am I correct?

[Translation]

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Speaker, I conclude my remarks by officially asking the government to appoint a special committee on the C.B.C., so that we may find out what is happening within that organization and, then, I believe that grievances such as those which were raised tonight, will be less justified.

[Text]

Mr. D. M. Fisher (Port Arthur): Mr. Speaker, I want to speak to part of the grievance raised by the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) and that is this question of the film produced by Intervideo Productions Ltd. and called "Mr. Pearson". The other day, probably feeling he had scored a bit of a triumph, the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson), replying to a question with regard to the government's relationship to this film, said, "We do not censor films on this side of the house". There was a bit of a roar then. I was told later it was probably because in one part of this country, Saskatchewan, there has been some censorship, particularly of a film called "Tom Jones". I would like to suggest that "Tom Jones" and "Mr. Pearson", as films, are a little bit different. The film, "Mr. Pearson", even though it has been turned down by the C.B.C., is no academy award winner.

But I do think there are some points in connection with the film that are very interesting in so far as the relationship of the government and the C.B.C. is concerned. The reports of criticism of the film by the C.B.C. that have appeared have suggested that the camera work is erratic and that the film is not up to C.B.C. standards. I want to make the point to the house that the man who did the camera work is the man who did the camera work for the very famous television documentary in the United States that showed the Kennedy brothers facing up to the civil rights situation in Alabama. That particular television film won tremendous acclaim for the fact that it introduced the exciting new technique of the wandering camera and wandering sound. While it gave a sort of uneveness to the film, once the viewer became accustomed to it he felt he was really inside things and it was an exciting experience something like, I suppose, when the first vista screens were introduced in the movie theatres. But this is the man who did the camera work.

Who was the producer? Was he some stumblebum off the streets? As a matter of fact, Mr. Ballentine has a very high reputation as a producer and he has been associated with a number of films that have won international awards. So the producer and the cameraman are people with real reputations. One of the terrible things about what has ensued is that their reputations are under a cloud because for some reason the C.B.C. changed its mind in a period of 12 hours on May 5.

The man who announced the turn-down is a man by the name of Reeves Hagan who is in charge of public affairs for the C.B.C. I think most members know him. The interesting thing about the project when it was first undertaken was that it was not to be done by the public affairs department. First of all it was to be done by the features section and was probably to be shown on "Telescope". As enthusiasm became aroused, Mr. Hagan was the C.B.C. executive who moved to bring the project within the grasp of the public affairs department. They were immensely interested by the prospect of this one hour film on the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) with this exciting new camera technique and filmed by this experienced cameraman.

So they started to work and various slash or rough prints were made as the project went along. There have been a number of screenings over the months. As long ago as before Christmas the Prime Minister with some of his advisers saw a screening. These advisers had nothing to do with the question whether what had been displayed to them should be revealed, because it was in confidence; but they were artistic advisers, if I may put it that way, people who have had some experience with television and who advised him on his appearance and so on.

These screenings were all arranged over some months. It is very obvious from the evidence of Mr. Ballentine, unless he is a complete liar, that Mr. Hagan was bound and determined he would show the film until he got the order to drop the idea. Why did he not show the film? Is it because Ron Fraser or Alphonse Ouimet are really the best judges, rather than the head of their public affairs programs? That is nonsense.

The hon. member for Lapointe (Mr. Grégoire) is talking about facts. I do not have any facts to nail down actually what happened, but I should like to suggest to the house a reasonable prospect of what happened. First of all, I want to know what business Tom Kent had seeing the film. I want to know what business some of the Liberal party advisers from headquarters had seeing the film.

Mr. Pigeon: Keith Davey.

An hon. Member: Checking the acting.

Mr. Fisher: This is an important point. I think everyone can agree that the Prime Minister should have the right to view the film. I am prepared to concede his right to view the film because of the nature of the particular program and the fact that the cameraman was filming what has been cloistered and secret. From that point of view we have no disagreement with the screening for the Prime Minister. But what business have the party advisers at such a screening, as distinct from the governmental advisers? What business have artistic advisers at such screenings unless the assumption is that the Prime Minister had the final O.K. on the film?

Mr. Woolliams: Right.

Mr. Fisher: I understand that there was a vote taken. It has been reported to me that the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Sharp) thought it was a rather amazing or astounding film. I am told that Mr. Kent thought it was brilliant. I think that was the word he attached to it. But in the voting apparently their votes were lost. They were outvoted. I realize that even the inner circles of the Liberal party have their splits. But in this particular split the vote went against the film and somehow this decision was communicated to the C.B.C. Otherwise how can you explain the fact that Mr. Hagan told the government they were going to proceed with the film and actually set a date for it? How can you explain that, unless there was word from the Prime Minister's office that went to officials of the C.B.C. above Mr. Hagan? They looked at the thing and the story is, of course, that they agreed it was an inferior film.

There is no question that the C.B.C. backed down. They claim that this film does not measure up to their standards. I suggest that there is a legal question involved with respect to whether Mr. Ballentine will have to go ahead, in order to prove that he is not an inferior television film maker, and use a slash print in theatres and on other television stations that will take it or whether the C.B.C. is going to release to him the good prints to which he feels he has a legal right.

I should like to suggest that the government and the Prime Minister have got themselves into a real box, because whether they like it or not the film is going to be shown and it will be very unfortunate if it is an inferior slash print. I should also like to suggest that it is just through this kind of untidy arrangement of people voting on whether a television film should be shown that difficulties arise. I do not want to belabour this particular point very much, but the relationship between the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation and any government is always a delicate one.

We had a suggestion from the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Diefenbaker) of what might be called pre-censorship in connection with "The Open Grave". Now we have a form of post-censorship, but it is much more serious because it is on the side of the government. We can look back to the "Preview Commentary" dispute and "heads will roll", and we will recognize there is always a temptation on the part of a government to manipulate in a sense. One of the things that is most serious about this situation is that there is abroad among many people in this country—I know I have the feeling myself—the feeling that many people in the C.B.C. tend to see themselves almost as agents to preserve the good reputation of the government. For this very reason I think it is most unfortunate that the C.B.C. has acceded, I believe, to information from the Prime Minister's office that this film does not satisfy the Prime Minister and his advisers because it shows him, they believe, in an unfavourable and petulant light. I think it is a disgrace that this situation has developed in the way it has. I suggest the only way to get out of it is for the C.B.C. to release the prints and let the rest of the country see the film on media that are less high in their standards. I think we will be able to form our own judgment then whether the $35,000 was wasted.

Motion agreed to, and the house went into committee, Mr. Lamoureux in the chair.

The estimates of the following departments were first taken up and entered for consideration.

DEPARTMENT OF FISHERIES

1. Departmental administration, including grants and contributions as detailed in the estimates, $1,159,000.

DEPARTMENT OF FORESTRY

1. Departmental administration, including grants as detailed in the estimates, $1,381,000.

DEPARTMENT OF MINES AND TECHNICAL SURVEYS

1. Departmental administration, including the administration of the Explosives Act and Canada's fee for membership in the Pan-American Institute of Geograph and History, $2,191,000.

DEPARTMENT OF NATIONAL DEFENCE

1. Departmental administration, including grants to military associations, institutes and other organizations as detailed in the estimates and authority, notwithstanding section 30 of the Financial Administration Act, and subject to allotment by the treasury board, for total commitments of $2,289,-221,625 for the purposes of votes 1, 5, 10, 15, 20, 25, 30, 35, 40, 42, 45 and 50 of this department regardless of the year in which such commitments will come in course of payment (of which it is estimated that $799,648,500 will come due for payment in future years) and authority to make recoverable advances under any of the said votes and, notwithstanding the Financial Administration Act, to spend revenue received during the year in respect of assistance rendered to the United Nations, any party of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization or any provincial or municipal government, $3,917,825.

DEPARTMENT OF NATIONAL HEALTH AND WELFARE

1. Departmental administration, $2,099,000.

DEPARTMENT OF SECRETARY OF STATE

1. Departmental administration, $363,600.

Proceedings reported.

TERRITORIAL SEA AND FISHING ZONES

LEGISLATION RESPECTING TERRITORIAL WATERS AND FISHERIES LAWS

The house resumed from Thursday, May 21, consideration of the motion of Mr. Martin (Essex East) for the second reading of Bill No. S-17, respecting the territorial sea and fishing zones of Canada.

Mr. J. B. Stewart (Antigonish-Guysborough): Mr. Speaker, when this subject was last before the house I drew the attention of Your Honour and hon. members to the importance of the subject matter to the people of most of the constituencies of the Atlantic provinces. Twenty nine constituencies in the Atlantic provinces are bordered by the Atlantic ocean, and the lives of the people in these constituencies are deeply touched by all matters affecting this great and historic industry, the fishing industry.

Now, as Your Honour knows, the scheme of the legislation is complicated. I know from what has been said by hon. members opposite, particularly by hon. members from that most westerly of our provinces, British Columbia, that there is in that quarter a certain uneasiness with the bill before the house. I think Your Honour should know that this uneasiness is not shared by the people of Atlantic Canada. We think that the scheme of this legislation is excellent. We see in this legislation a pre-figuring of an arrangement which will be highly beneficial both to our inshore fishermen and to those who venture out farther upon the sea.

Your Honour will recall that this legislation provides for the drawing of straight base lines. The waters inside those base lines will be the inland waters of Canada, and all legislation which applies to any of the inland waters of Canada generally will apply there. I think the importance of this aspect sometimes has been overlooked. Outside the straight base lines will be the territorial sea of Canada extending for three miles seaward, and immediately beyond that—

Mr. Chatterton: Will the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Stewart: Yes.

Mr. Chatterton: I think the hon. member said the legislation prescribes base lines. Will he kindly refer me to the part of the legislation which does that?

Mr. Stewart: I think anyone who has perused the bill knows that what this bill enables the government to do is to describe a particular sequence of straight lines which will give to Canada the largest possible portion of sea for its use. I do not believe anybody in this house would demand more. I think I know to what the hon. gentleman is adverting in his question, and I shall come to his point later.

As I was saying before I was interrupted, the third aspect concerns Canada's fishing zones. These will lie beyond the territorial sea in a band of water nine miles wide, so that outside the straight base line there will be a 12 mile area for which the fishing regulations made by the government of Canada will be the regulating principles. I think anybody who is familiar with the oculated coast line of Atlantic Canada will appreciate how attractive this legislation is to us.

Now, it has been suggested that this is not the juncture at which this particular bill should have been brought forward. We have been told that it would have been better for the government to have done one of two things, either to have proceeded with those negotiations, which I am sure every hon. member in this house would wish us to conduct with friendly powers, and at the conclusion of those negotiations embalm the result in a statute of parliament, or to proceed by drawing up now a bill to be enacted declaring prior to further negotiations what our base line would be.

I want to suggest to you, Mr. Speaker, that neither of these courses of action would be as desirable as the course which the present government has elected to follow. As we know, the question of the rights of other powers to have their fishermen fish in our waters is a complicated one. It is not likely that the governments of other countries will lightly give up any claims which they may make. I do not wish to pass upon the validity of these claims. I am sure that in some instances they may very well be regarded by some of our international lawyers as exaggerated. They make these claims both on treaty grounds and on historic grounds. I think everybody in the house would insist that before taking the definitive action, which this government is prepared to take eventually if necessary, there should be complete and amicable exploration of the claims of these other countries.

This exploration, we have been told, has been under way for several months and can be expected to continue for some time. What the government is now asking for is really very simple. The government is coming to this house and is saying, we want you now to give us a mandate to proceed. We have engaged these other countries in negotiations. The negotiations have proceeded to that point at which we are now prepared to ask parliament to give us a mandate to bring this matter to a successful conclusion. We believe that this negotiation has proceeded to the point at which we should be able to inform those powers with whom we have been negotiating that we indeed have the statutory authority to make a final settlement in this whole complicated affair.

Now, sir, in the circumstances I do not see how any other course of action would have been reasonable. I suspect that even had there been no change in government a year ago, parliament today might very well find itself in exactly the same position that it is in now, and I would hope that hon. members who happen to belong to my party would not in that case chastise the government for coming to parliament at this juncture to ask for a mandate to establish a straight line base system and a 12 mile fishing zone, both of which would be so beneficial to our people.

I have almost concluded, but there is one more thing I want to say. It is that I hope, as the debate proceeds on this important issue, that nothing will be put on the record which will cause any misconception in any quarter, within this country or without this country, as to our determination to establish for Canada a 12 mile fishing zone extending beyond waters which are ours by undoubted right. I think this is something on which, despite our minor disagreements, we are emphatically agreed. I think no one in any quarter should have any doubt about this matter. This is one issue on which the Canadian people are enthusiastically unanimous. We are going to have this. We prefer to have it be achieved by amicable negotiation, but we are going to have it, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (Queens-Lunenburg): Mr. Speaker, any measure dealing with the fishing industry is of vital importance to Canadians generally, and especially to representatives from the Atlantic provinces. I listened with considerable interest to the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Martin) when he made his statement relative to the government's proposal unilaterally to establish a 12 mile exclusive fishing zone off Canada's coasts.

While this action is commendable from a conservation point of view, there are still some questions unanswered, questions that require clarification by the government. The most important question in the minds of many Canadian fishermen today deals with the problem of friendly relations that may or that may not exist between Canada and the United States as a result of the government's action.

On the east coast we are concerned with the preservation of our traditional fisheries markets in the United States, markets that are of vital importance to our maritime economy and to our east coast fishing industry. I ask the minister and the government where are the safeguards for these markets? What are the results of the negotiations that have been carried on in recent weeks and months by the Secretary of State for External Affairs?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Are you asking me to answer now?

Mr. Crouse: Yes, I would like to have that statement on the record.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): As this is a very important matter I do not want to interfere with my hon. friend making his speech, but he asked the question. As he knows, there are negotiations under way between Canada, the United States, France and a number of other countries. Those negotiations have not concluded and it is because they have not concluded that it has not been possible—as the hon. gentleman who has just spoken indicated—to proceed definitively and completely with the establishment of the straight base line system.

The negotiations are still under way. These negotiations are friendly, and there would be no justification in anything that has taken place for any concern on the part of anyone in Canada about our relations with the United States or with any other countries. We are proceeding as friends in our negotiations.

There is no intention to interfere with the treaty, or historic fishing rights of the United States, with whom the particular negotiation has been put in question by my hon. friend, and there is no justification for creating the suggestion that anything involving Canada's interests stands in jeopardy. Coming as he does from a fishing district I am sure my hon. friend joins with my hon. friend from Antigonish-Guysborough (Mr. Stewart) in saying it is desirable that we should have a 12 mile fishing zone to protect our fishing industry.

Mr. Crouse: I am grateful to the minister for his explanation, but I would like to tell him that I expressed my concern in the manner, which I did a moment ago, as a result of his very own words which he placed on record in Hansard on May 20 at page 3409, as follows:

> I am convinced that in taking this action now—as the government is doing, unilaterally—Canada is acting in accordance with present day international law and practice.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): That is right.

Mr. Crouse:

> The government is convinced that we are following the wisest course in immediately seeking agreements with the countries affected by our action. We are equally convinced that we must carry forward our negotiations with these countries before we proclaim the base lines for our entire coast.

Then a little further on he stated:

When the government took its decision to establish a 12 mile fishing zone and straight base lines, we did not minimize the problems involved in some of the negotiations lying ahead of us. Nor do we minimize them now. These negotiations may be difficult and we must accept this fact.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): That is right.

Mr. Crouse: It is because of those words and the very doubts that the minister raised in the minds of many Canadians over the results of these negotiations that I spoke as I did. He states that the government is convinced, but I question whether he has yet convinced the United States who have traditionally rights in these waters. It is in the United States market that we must sell so much of our fish, and this is why I raise this doubt.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): What I am pointing out to my hon. friend is that what the United States are concerned about has nothing to do with markets at all. This is a point of law. It does not in any way involve Canada's markets in the United States. These do not stand in jeopardy at all and the very suggestion that they do, which my hon. friend makes, is one that I suggest to him—as the hon. member for Queens (Mr. MacLean) pointed out the other night—is not helpful to a very important negotiation under way now between Canada and the United States.

Mr. Crouse: Mr. Speaker, I would be the last in the house to say anything that would not be helpful in the negotiations, because I represent a constituency which has undoubtedly the largest fishing fleet in North America, and therefore I want my remarks to be helpful. But when you are dealing with an industry like the fishing industry, that will have a market value in my province of Nova Scotia alone, this year of approximately $70 million, this house and this industry need facts about the protective measures that are being taken for its future.

I submit, Mr. Speaker, that this is not the place for any fast, slick promises that may have been made during the last two election campaigns by hon. members who now occupy the seats to the right of Your Honour and who form the government, promises made about the value of a 12 mile fishing zone. We in the Atlantic provinces know that conservation measures must be taken, but we are also a practical people and we know that at present some 70 per cent of our entire catch of fish must be sold on the American market. The Lunenburg county fleet alone can catch sufficient fish to feed the entire population of Canada, some 19 million persons.

So I say we need and must maintain the United States market for our fishing industry. In speeches I have made on this subject from the day I entered the house I have taken this stand and I reiterate it tonight because its importance cannot be underestimated. It is for this reason I wish to impress on the minister, for the benefit of thousands of Canadian fishermen and for the benefit of an equal number of processors and handlers of the fish we land on the Atlantic coast, the importance of maintaining this market and assuring us that the Americans are in complete agreement with the negotiations and with the establishment of this limit.

The subject of fisheries conservation is not something new. It is a problem which has plagued various governments since the early days of this century. In fact, we read in a royal commission report on fisheries in 1928—the exact date is May 4—that the following resolution was passed by the House of Commons on February 6, 1911:

That in the opinion of this house, as the mode of fishing known as steam trawling prosecuted by ships of different nationalities on the coast of Canada outside Canadian waters is destructive to fish life, it is expedient in order to conserve the deep sea fisheries, that negotiations be opened wih the view of securing an international agreement—

And you will note it specifically states "international agreement"—

—prohibiting this mode of fishing in such spawning grounds for deep sea fish as the waters of the gulf of St. Lawrence and the banks of the north Atlantic adjacent to the coasts of Canada and Newfoundland.

That was way back on February 6, 1911. Then, in the same report on page 91 it is stated:

In order to protect further the shore fishermen, the Canadian government in 1915 enacted a regulation under the Customs Act, whereby the master of any steam-trawler is required before he is granted a clearance for the fishing grounds to give the customs officer a declaration that he will not fish within at least 12 miles from shore, this regulation to apply to all steam-trawlers clearing from a Canadian port on the Atlantic coast. Since that time no further restrictions have been placed on steam-trawlers operating from ports of the maritime provinces.

It is this latter regulation which has plagued the Canadian fishermen over the years and as a result we find the anomalous situation in which Canadian fishermen have, since 1915, been required to fish 12 miles from the Canadian coast while fishermen of all other nations have been permitted to fish within three miles of our shores.

I might add that the three mile limit has never been agreed to among the nations of the world, as far as I can see from the literature I have read. Such a limit was proposed many years ago by two great international powers, Great Britain and the United States, the idea being that the three mile range of their cannon would establish sovereignty over their coastal waters. However, when the league of nations convened a conference at The Hague in 1930 to consider regulations concerning the law of the sea there was so much disagreement on what should be the breadth of territorial water that no resolution or proposal could even be put to a vote. Interest in this matter seemed to lapse until 1958 in which year the United Nations called a conference in Geneva to consider the law of the sea. It was evident that fishing rights and territorial limits had become more important over the years since representatives from 86 states attended the conference. A Conservative government was in power in Canada and under the able leadership of the then minister of external affairs, Hon. Howard Green, a Canadian proposal supporting a 12 mile limit was put forward. Here, again, I pay tribute to the present Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Martin) for his remarks in commendation of the action taken by Mr. Green at that time. I think it is praiseworthy that the minister should in this way have done justice to one of Canada's great ministers. We put forward at that time a proposal for a 12 mile limit. Our proposal was known as a "six and six" proposal—six miles of territorial sea and six miles in which fishing limits applied. The present proposal calls for a three mile territorial sea and a nine mile fishing zone. In effect, we advocated what we will refer to as a 12 mile limit proposal. We, the Conservatives, hoped to establish this 12 mile limit by international agreement bearing in mind our trade and treaty commitments. We Conservatives believed in international agreement because a principle is at stake in this problem—the principle that the rights of states in international law depend on the consent of other states. However, although the conference was successful in reaching agreement on 113 articles of the law of the sea, after six weeks of intensive debate the contest between those who wished a three mile territorial sea and those who wished a 12 mile territorial sea failed by one vote to gain the required two thirds majority which would have resolved it. Accordingly, there is still no agreement on the breadth of the territorial sea among the 86 nations represented at that conference.

Mr. Speaker, may I call it ten o'clock.

[Mr. Crouse.]

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Churchill: May I ask the leader of the house if he can forecast the business for the rest of the week.

Mr. Favreau: I will forecast the matters to be taken up tomorrow. First, we will resume debate on the second reading of the bill respecting the territorial sea and fishing zones of Canada. Second, we will proceed with the resolution introducing the measure to amend the National Housing Act. I hope, somewhere, somehow, we can deal with item No. 7 on the order paper, second reading of a bill to authorize the construction of a bridge across the St. Lawrence river between the city of Ste-Foy in the county of Quebec and the municipality of St. Nicholas. I believe, subsequently, we will be taking up item No. 14 which is a resolution introducing a bill to amend the Farm Credit Act.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

(Subject matter of questions debated under adjournment motion).

A motion to adjourn the house under provisional standing order 39A deemed to have been moved:

LABOUR CONDITIONS—BASIS FOR FIGURES RESPECTING NUMBER OF UNEMPLOYED

[Translation]

Mr. Pierre-André Boutin (Dorchester): Mr. Speaker, the question I raise tonight concerns an item published in the newspaper Montréal-Matin on May 20, 1964, and entitled: "Who is right?" I quote:

> The number of claimants of unemployment benefits reached 597,000 on March 31, according to the d.b.s. official unemployment statistics showed 403,000 unemployed throughout Canada on April 18. The discrepancy between those two figures, the former based on reports of the unemployment insurance commission, and the latter on a sample survey, has never been clearly explained.

As a preliminary to the question which I directed on May 20, 1964 to the Minister of Labour (Mr. MacEachen), I quoted the figures which had appeared in the article of the said newspaper.

The question read as follows:

> Could the minister clearly explain the discrepancy between the two figures, since one is based on a report of the unemployment insurance commission and the other on a sample survey.

By computing the difference between the figures provided by the unemployment insurance commission and those of the sample survey, we obtain the rather interesting and high figure of 194,000 unemployed over or below, whether we refer to one of the official sources concerning unemployment.

How can a reduction of 194,000 unemployed in Canada within 15 days be explained?

The sixty days of the present Liberal government having proved to be a disaster for the whole Canadian population, could it be that they were offset by the first 15 days of April, during which the government would have created all the jobs promised during the election campaign?

I doubt very much, Mr. Speaker, that we have there the explanation for this tremendous gap.

Where then are we to find the answer to that question? We might have to look for it in the meaning or definition given to the word "unemployed".

What is meant by "unemployed"? Is it only those who are lucky enough to get unemployment insurance benefits, that is to say, if I may, those unemployed on a full-time basis, who are not allowed to have a little sideline and earn a little money without always feeling the sword of Damocles hanging above their heads and which might come crashing down the moment it is discovered that they are earning a few cents on top of their unemployment insurance benefits?

On the other hand, is the word "unemployed" used to mean those who, while drawing their unemployment insurance benefits, in whole or in part, can earn a maximum amount of money during the week? I believe, Mr. Speaker, that some people can earn up to $20 a week without this being detrimental to them as far as their collection of unemployment insurance benefits is concerned. I do not believe that they draw those benefits in full but they draw at least an important portion of the benefits due to their condition. These people are usually classified as part-time workers.

Could the minister tell us whether, in computing the number of unemployed registered at the various offices, the statistics officers consider as unemployed those people I just mentioned or described?

Finally, are investigations made to establish the number of persons unemployed, many of whom, knowing they have no chance at all of being put on the list of unemployed who get unemployment insurance benefits, do not even try to get on that list?

Finally, are those who are denied during two or even six weeks, unemployment insurance benefits as a penalty for their failure to follow the required procedure at their local unemployment insurance office, included as unemployed?

In that last case, I could say that if those people are not considered as unemployed, we must blame certain little aristocrats who, sitting behind their desk, are making game of those poor people who do not understand that awkward unemployment insurance legislation. They go back home with empty hands simply because they were taken in by those little squirts who sometimes interpret the act as they please to save the government the payment of too many benefits.

Then, Mr. Speaker, I should like to know what, in the opinion of the minister, is an unemployed and second, why there is such a discrepancy in the official figures from the unemployment insurance commission and the d.b.s.

I should like the Minister of Labour, who as I notice now is absent tonight to explain to me those figures.

[Text]

Mr. J. A. Byrne (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Labour (Mr. MacEachen) has asked me to express his regret at his inability to be in the house this evening at this period. The hon. member has introduced several more questions which of course it would be impossible for me, or for anyone else for that matter, to answer within the three minutes provided under the new rule. However, I point out to the hon. member that he has answered some of these questions himself.

In order to explain the discrepancy in the two figures I would first refer the hon. member to a report of the committee on unemployment statistics that was set up by the former administration, which committee reported to the house in August of 1960. Briefly, Mr. Speaker, I would simply state that the 597,300 active unemployment insurance claimants reported by the unemployment insurance commission as of March 31 include those persons referred to by the hon. member who are employed part-time but do receive some measure of benefit.

The dominion bureau of statistics labour force survey, on the other hand, of April 18 as opposed to the earlier date of March 31, does not include such persons. In addition, the unemployment insurance figures provided by the unemployment insurance commission are an average of the number of people drawing benefit during the whole month, while the d.b.s. figures are an estimate of the number of people unemployed during the third week of the month; that is to say, ending the 18th day. The 194,300 discrepancy may be further explained, or rather is self-evident, when one has regard for the significant dates when employment seasonally increases at an accelerated rate.

The other matters, or assertions, that the hon. member has brought forward are impossible to answer in the short time at my disposal, but I would certainly refer the hon. member to this report, which he may obtain in the library. It will, I am sure, accurately show him why there does appear quite often to be a large discrepancy in these two figures.

TRADE—CONTINUATION OF POLICY RESPECTING OIL EXPORTS

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, on May 21 last I asked a question which is to be found at page 3431 of Hansard. I want to make it very clear that when I mentioned that the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Sharp) was absent that day, I know he had absolute justification for being absent; he was no doubt engaged in duties in reference to his own department even if he was not in the house. Therefore I directed my question to the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson). The question was in reference to an article—I do not want to take the time of the house by reading from the newspaper—which appeared in the New York Times and was requoted in the Calgary Herald. I read it in both newspapers. The article was in reference to the petroleum industry, and in particular concerned the acceptance by the Soviet union of petroleum and other oil products in return for Canadian grain. The Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) said that there was no justification for the statement. His actual words were:

> Not to my knowledge, but it is important, Mr. Speaker, and I shall look into it.

The next day, May 22, and I am not criticizing the Prime Minister because only a day had elapsed, I asked him if he had any information. The Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Sharp) had not returned from his duties elsewhere and the Prime Minister said he had no information but he again emphasized that it was an important question.

I am not complaining about the answer given by the Minister of Trade and Commerce at all but I had a supplementary question I wished to ask because if we did get into a deal with Soviet Russia in petroleum products there would be repercussions from the United States. Even before the minister became a member of the house he was no doubt active in the enterprise when he was deputy minister of trade and commerce, and we know that the eastern market is open to the entry of Venezuelan crude. In this case these companies are United States companies. If we introduced quotas for the eastern market there would be repercussions in the United States.

I think this is a very important question. It may be that I owe the Speaker some apology for the way I spoke the other afternoon when he brought me to order, but with the greatest respect to you, Mr. Speaker, it is an important, urgent question, and in saying that I have in mind some of the other questions asked that day. When we realize that a year ago we were able to bring our payments position closer to balancing because of the petroleum industry may I say I was rather shocked when I was prevented from asking this question.

We can look at the Canada Year Book for 1962 and 1963 particularly, and I am sure the minister will not have any argument in that regard. I am not saying this because the Conservatives were in power then. I want to keep this matter out of politics. It is too important to get it into politics. It affects the economy of western Canada. A national oil policy was developed whereby we could ship our crude petroleum to the western states. Discussions were carried on with the proper authorities in the United States and their purchases of our crude petroleum were beginning to accelerate. The only way we can keep the oil industry of western Canada healthy is either by consuming the product domestically or exporting up to 800,000 barrels of crude petroleum a day. The Canada Year Book will show that we brought our exports up to 668,000 barrels daily. In other words, we were near the target.

Prior to the Suez crisis we had trouble. Then the Suez crisis came along and we were able to accelerate our exports and to keep our petroleum industry healthy. But then we got into trouble after the Suez crisis ended. We then went downgrade and we got into a serious situation indeed. Since the deal made in 1959 or 1960—I am not too sure what year —whereby the western states would buy crude petroleum from western Canada and we would leave the eastern market alone our industry has been fairly healthy. So I felt that my supplementary question was very important.

I say to the minister through you, Mr. Speaker, that if we did enter into a deal with Soviet Russia in respect of crude petroleum there would be repercussions in the United States that would cramp our whole industry and bring about a serious depression in the industry, not only in western Canada but throughout Canada as a whole. The repercussions would not only be felt in the industry but in respect of our balance of payments position with the United States.

When you prevented my asking a supplementary question of that calibre and importance, Mr. Speaker, and allowed other questions of lesser calibre and with really no national importance, then it was only natural that I should want to take up the matter at this time. I am not criticizing the minister's answer to my question. He said there was no truth in the statement and that they were merely negotiating. There is nothing wrong with negotiating as long as the government of Canada, whether Liberal or Conservative, does not bite.

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. member for Bow River (Mr. Woolliams) for giving me an opportunity of saying one or two things about our national oil policy. If I may refer to the question the hon. member did ask, I shall quote from page 3536 of Hansard for May 25, 1964:

> Is the Minister of Trade and Commerce continuing the national oil policy so that we may accelerate our exports in this field to a target of approximately 800,000 barrels of crude petroleum a day, taking into account the amount we use domestically?

I am sure my hon. friend does not read all my speeches, but perhaps I may refer him to a speech I made in Calgary on February 3 in which I said, amongst other things, that I agreed with the national oil policy which had been enunciated by the previous government. I agreed that this was a good policy. I went on to say that as soon as possible after this government took office I made clear that this policy would be continued and carried forward.

I then went on to say in the concluding part of this speech that I thought it was necessary to establish new targets. At that time I said I thought it was feasible and desirable to establish a target figure for 1964. I quote from that speech:

> After considering the prospects for growth in the domestic market, for additional displacement by Canadian oil in the Ontario market, and for exports, we think average production should reach about 850,000 barrels per day.

I think my hon. friend would like to know that production for the first two months of this year was well in excess of this target, so that the figure of 800,000 barrels he somehow considers fairly satisfactory has been well exceeded. It seems to me that the industry is well within reach of the target, looking at the whole of the year, but to achieve it the industry will have to exert strong and continued efforts to supply Ontario west of the Ottawa valley with products of refined Canadian crude. I feel confident that the industry will do this and achieve its objective.

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Speaker, I am not going to say anything except to thank the minister.

Proceedings on Adjournment Motion

CROWN ASSETS—DISPOSITION OF EQUIPMENT OF CLOSED RADAR STATION

[Translation]

Mr. Auguste Choquette (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, I am very grateful to the Minister of Defence Production (Mr. Drury) because, within a week, it is the second time that he is here for this question period between 10 and 10.30 in the evening to consider the matter of the radar station in St. Sylvestre.

That name has become quite familiar to the ears of hon. members and they are all aware that this famous station is located in the riding of Lotbinière.

Mr. Speaker, here is the matter I want to call to the attention of the minister in his capacity as Minister of Defence Production: there is in St. Sylvestre some material and equipment worth quite a lot of money and I would like to know what the Minister of Defence Production intends to do with it.

Is the minister willing to dispose of that material and equipment which would not have any military use and, in such a case, is he willing to set what I would call a nominal price for it, in order to stimulate the interest of the industrialists or other people who might be interested in operating the existing facilities?

The minister is aware, I think, that an association that goes by the name of "Centre d'initiative de Saint-Sylvestre" was created recently. It is made up of the following members: the mayor of the parish of St. Sylvestre, Mr. Onésime Nappert, a well known citizen because last year he won the title of maple king of the province of Quebec, Messrs. Henri Dion, André Huppé, Edouard Cotter, Arthur Barbeau, Louis R. Ruel, Paul Théberge, Yvan Dallaire, of Levis, and Gaston Blais, of Lauzon, who would like to set up a recreation centre in St. Sylvestre.

That project is just as good as any other, and if the minister were willing to sell all the equipment at St. Sylvestre for a reasonable price, I am sure that that would encourage some organization to operate that centre for the welfare of the people who live in the riding of Lotbinière, who enjoyed a certain prosperity after the establishment of the radar station. In fact, the closing down of that station is causing some worry, and that is why I insist so often on this subject in the house. That is why I spare no effort to convince the minister of the urgency of maintaining the local economy at the level it reached because of the radar station.

I appreciate the fact that the Minister of Defence Production is a man of great honesty and competence. If I speak of honesty, it is because, at one time, some people expressed the fear that the disposal of equipment by the Minister of Defence Production might lead to speculation. We must prevent that, and if the government is willing to get rid of the equipment in question, I hope it will do so to the advantage of the St. Sylvestre area and in such a way as to prevent certain financiers, who always find a way to profit from such situations, from running off with everything. The proposed centre would be quite advantageous for the residents of St. Sylvestre, since the radar station is in the immediate neighbourhood. That is why I would like them to have the same chance as big speculators.

That is the question I wanted to put to the minister. I thank him for his kindness, since this is the second time he comes to the house to speak about St. Sylvestre during this period.

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Industry): Mr. Speaker, I think hon. members are well aware of the situation concerning the radar stations at St. Sylvestre and elsewhere. The government knows quite well how important is the problem of disposing of the assets represented by the radar stations and other national defence establishments which are about to be closed for major policy considerations.

What the government is trying to do is to find a means, both in the parish of St. Sylvestre and elsewhere, to maintain the activity brought about by the establishment of radar stations.

In the case of St. Sylvestre, it is obvious that, because that station is located in a rural area, at a good distance from railways and highways, it is quite difficult to find an industry willing to establish itself there. However, it is possible that some organization will be found which could use that equipment. My department is now looking for such organization.

For example, there may be some public education institution which could use it, because it could shelter the students, and it would not cost too much.

Again, a public health institution could establish a sanatorium there.

But, I must say to the hon. member that, for the time being, we have little hope that an industry will want to set up shop in that radar station. I will admit frankly that up to now efforts we have made along those lines have been to no avail.

We are now considering with the authorities of the province of Quebec and officials of public institutions suggestions which, we hope, will lead to the utilization of that radar station.

I wish to commend the hon. member for his suggestion that the equipment of the radar station be turned over to an initiative centre. The establishment of such a centre is definitely what is needed and I hope its directors will succeed beautifully. The officials of the development agency will surely help them to find the means to use that radar station—

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Drury: —but the hon. member will understand that we cannot give equipment to an institution—

JAWAHARLAL NEHRU

TRIBUTES ON DEATH OF PRIME MINISTER OF INDIA

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, hon. members of the house will have heard with regret of the death of the Prime Minister of India, a sister member of the commonwealth of nations. The death of Mr. Nehru is a loss not only to India and her people, who knew him best, but a loss to all mankind. Among the leaders of this century no one had made a greater impact on his time. No one has been more dedicated to the proposition that peace should prevail among nations and freedom should exist among men than the Prime Minister of India.

His talents and his energies were long devoted to the cause of India's independence, and when that was achieved he became a strong supporter of India's association in the commonwealth of nations. As the leader of his country his aim was to bring social justice and dignity to India's common man. He inspired respect amongst his adversaries, affection in his friends and confidence in his followers and admiration of all men.

Our sympathy, Mr. Speaker, goes out to his countrymen in their loss, to his colleagues in the government of India, and especially to his family.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, Jawaharlal Nehru belonged to that select group of men who, in any day and generation, leave their imprint upon mankind. He was a man who was educated in the British tradition. He attended Harrow, graduated from Cambridge and became a member of the bar of the inner temple. Orator, political philosopher and scholar, Nehru was a man immortal while still living. The Prime Minister will find when he attends the meeting of the prime ministers of commonwealth countries a few weeks hence that sitting around the table there will be five or six representatives of various commonwealth countries who at one time or another served terms in jails or penitentiaries for their activities on behalf of what they believed to be right.

Nehru fought for independence, as the Prime Minister has said, and having done so he then became a strong, powerful and devoted servant of the commonwealth as a whole. He gave to India or continued in India the British tradition of parliamentary government, the rule of law and above all the principles of freedom based on British justice. A man of commanding personality, a mystic, a political philosopher and a practical politician, he combined in himself the unusual number of ingredients necessary for political and national greatness. He had a sense of humour and at all times, as the Prime Minister has said, was devoted to the welfare of the average man.

India has lost its greatest. When I say that I am not unmindful of the tremendous contribution of Mahatma Gandhi. The commonwealth has lost a devoted friend and counsellor without whose dedication, following the achievement of India's independence, India would not have continued in the commonwealth of nations.

The world has lost a great figure, and I associate myself with the Prime Minister in extending our sympathy to the president and people of India, to the members of the immediate family and to his sister Madame Pandit, who for so many years strengthened his hand and stood with him amidst all the trials and tribulations that were his.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, all lovers of democracy will be saddened at the death of Prime Minister Pandit Nehru. I think history will record him as one of the half dozen great statesmen of our century.

Pandit Nehru and Mahatma Gandhi were the architects of India's independence, and it is a tribute to their powers of leadership, as well as to British statesmanship, that India was able to move from colonial status to nationhood with a minimum of rancour and bitterness. It was typical of the man that he was able to say, after India had attained her independence, "I spent 11 years in a British jail but I have the highest regard for British traditions," and he carried that regard into building a parliamentary democracy in the country whose freedom he had helped to bring about.

Today, in Asia, India is like a light upon a hill, a demonstration that it is possible without any diminution of democratic principles, to bring about economic advancement and social justice. It is significant that the last public speech Prime Minister Nehru made was a plea for better relations between India and Pakistan, a plea directed not to Pakistan but to his own people to show the tolerance and forebearance which alone could establish a new basis for discussion.

Mr. Speaker, democracy has lost a great champion. India has lost a great leader. I am sure all hon. members of the house will extend to the government and the people of India their deepest sympathy in this sad hour in their nation's history.

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, India and the world have lost a truly great man. The late Prime Minister Nehru was not only one of the outstanding statesmen in this post-world war II era but also the champion of democratic parliamentary government, leading India from colonialism to independence to become the largest democratic country in the world.

Certainly it was no small achievement to have built this former colony into a democratic nation, giving the right of the free vote to more than 400 million people. His selfless dedication and courageous determination were directed to all mankind and to the peaceful development of his country and the world.

We in this party join with the Prime Minister, with all hon. members of the house and I am sure with all Canadians in extending our sympathy and regrets to the government of India, to the people of that great country, and to the Nehru family.

[Translation]

Mr. Réal Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, the beloved leader of a friendly country is no more.

Mr. Nehru was the beloved leader of a friendly government. He was also the supporter and champion of all worthy causes, the defender of the weak, the friend of oppressed countries and a relentless worker on behalf of peace in the world.

Without being a narrow minded nationalist, Mr. Nehru espoused the cause of any oppressed country, the same way he undertook to fight for freedom in his own country.

As he said himself:

> We do not seek to dominate any country and we do not want to meddle in other people's affairs. Our main task in world affairs is to maintain peace and ensure that the equality of all races is recognized and that all people under foreign domination become free.

He believed in democracy, not the simple democracy that results from the free exercise of the right to vote.

> Democracy, he said, means tolerance, not only of those who share our views but also and especially of those who do not.

His concept of freedom was not limited to political rights alone but it covered everything that contributes to the welfare of man.

> True freedom, he said, is not purely political, it must also be economic and spiritual.

Mr. Nehru was the friend of the masses. He said one day:

> Our main problem today is to raise the living standard of the masses, enable them to satisfy their needs, enable them to live decently and help them not only to enjoy material things but also cultural and spiritual values.

Not only the Indians, not only the people from Asia but all the men of the world, all freedom and justice loving men lose a defender and a friend.

So we join with the Prime Minister of our country (Mr. Pearson) in extending to the Indian people our deepest sympathy.

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: Out of respect for the memory of the late Prime Minister Nehru of India may I invite all hon. members and all those in the galleries to stand for one minute in silent tribute.

Whereupon members of the house rose and stood in silence.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

PRESENCE IN GALLERY OF ITALIAN FOREIGN TRADE MINISTER

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Industry): I should like to draw your attention, Mr. Speaker, to the presence in the diplomatic gallery of a very distinguished guest, Signor Ministre Bernardo Mattarella, who is the minister of foreign trade of Italy.

Some hon. Members: Hear hear.

PRIVILEGE

MR. PIGEON—RESOLUTION ON "VOTES AND PROCEEDINGS" RESPECTING FLAG

[Translation]

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege.

My remarks are based on the Votes and Proceedings of the house dated May 26, 1964, and on the answers given to the house by the Prime Minister in the past two weeks concerning a Canadian flag, and particularly on the reply which he gave to the question I put to him yesterday and which appears on page 3581 of Hansard.

Mr. Speaker, the answers given in the house by the Prime Minister in the past two weeks clearly suggested that the government would submit a resolution for the adoption of a Canadian flag and a Canadian anthem.

However, the resolution appearing in the Votes and Proceedings of May 26, 1964 asks, for various reasons, recognition by Canada of two flags and two anthems.

Mr. Speaker, in view of that resolution and the answers given in this house by the Prime Minister, I maintain that, by his wiliness and weakness, the Prime Minister has derided the Canadian people and, both by what he said and left unsaid, has misled the hon. members of this house.

That is why I want to express all the humiliation I feel as a result of such trickery and I am not afraid to say, at this stage of our proceedings, that such behaviour on the part of the Prime Minister could very well destroy mutual trust and respect, and spread confusion and dissension across Canada.

Hon. Yvon Dupuis (Minister without Portfolio): Insignificant, as usual.

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Speaker, once again on a question of privilege. I ask the Minister without Portfolio to take back his words.

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

[Translation]

Mr. Dupuis: Mr. Speaker, I said that it was insignificant as usual.

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I listened with a great deal of attention to the words of the hon. member, but they impress me as a grievance more than a question of privilege.

[Translation]

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege.

I was very polite in this house when I rose on a question of privilege, and I cannot allow the Minister without Portfolio, the hon. member for St. Jean-Iberville-Napierville (Mr. Dupuis), to show a lack of education and courtesy in this house. I hope that the Prime Minister will teach him a lesson one of these days, as the governor general himself has already done.

Mr. Dupuis: Mr. Speaker, the previous remarks of the hon. member for Joliette were insignificant but those he just made are impertinent.

Mr. Pigeon: You ill-mannered lout.

[Text]

MR. CHRÉTIEN—REMARKS OF C.B.C. COMMENTATOR

[Translation]

Mr. Jean Chrétien (St. Maurice-Laflèche): Mr. Speaker, I also want to rise on a question of privilege which, I feel, is much more important for Canadian unity than the one which has just been raised.

Following the comments made last night during the program "Viewpoint" on the English network of the C.B.C., French speaking members on this side of the house want to dissociate themselves from the arrogance shown by the commentator, Mr. Dubuc, who may be a humorist when he expresses himself in French but is certainly not so when he speaks in English.

[Text]

MR. ORLIKOW—PROCEDURES RESPECTING SECURITY INVESTIGATIONS

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. On Monday last the Prime Minister replied to my question dealing with the government's security investigations policy, to the effect that the government's policy had been approved and "formally communicated to all government departments and organizations", but that "It is not customary to send directives such as this to employees or associations, nor are administrative directives normally tabled in the House of Commons".

On October 25 last year the Prime Minister, in dealing with the many questions on this matter, announced that new procedures would be adopted. Apparently this has now been done. Mr. Speaker, it is absolutely necessary that the government's policy should be given the widest publicity. The rights of Canadian citizens and government employees are more important than the privacy of a few government ministers or top civil servants. In the light of what has happened and what became apparent last week in Toronto, as exemplified in the Hooper case, we all have a right to question whether top government civil servants are always concerned about the rights of ordinary people.

If the statement which the Prime Minister made during the last session had any meaning, we and the people of Canada have a right to know the policy with regard to security which has been evolved by the government, and this will not be done by keeping it secret except for a few high government officials. This policy should be given to this house publicly.

Mr. Speaker: I am sure the viewpoint as expressed by the hon. member for Winnipeg North has been heard with interest by the responsible officials.

Mr. Fisher: How about a reply?

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, may I speak further to the question of privilege raised by the hon. member. I believe every member of this house is from time to time concerned with protecting the rights of those who feel that their rights have been infringed in respect of some of these security matters. A great many questions of this sort come before this house. It seems to me that we should have, as a matter of privilege in this parliament, a clear indication of what are the security regulations which the Prime Minister promised the house would be brought into effect as a result of the discussions in this house during the last session.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, there will be an occasion to debate this matter on the estimates of the department, when the government will be very pleased indeed to make a full statement on the matter.

Mr. Speaker: It is my duty once more, and I hope it is the last time today, to call on the hon. member for Ontario (Mr. Starr) who has a question of privilege.

Mr. Starr: No, Mr. Speaker; I shall wait until the question period before orders of the day.

[Mr. Orlikow.]

PROCEDURE

Eighth report of special committee on procedure and organization—Mr. Speaker.

QUESTIONS

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

R.C.M.P. VEHICLES, CUMBERLAND, N.S.—TENDERS FOR SALES AND SERVICE

Question No. 572—Mr. Coates:

1. What firms in Cumberland are invited to tender on the replacement of motor vehicles for the R.C.M.P. detachment at Amherst, Pugwash, Springhill and Parrsboro, and what dealerships do these firms represent?

2. What firms are invited to tender by the abovementioned detachments for the overhaul and repair of their motor vehicles?

3. From what firms in Cumberland may these detachments purchase oil and gasoline?

4. Are any firms in Cumberland excluded from the opportunity to tender on the replacement of motor vehicles, repair and overhaul of motor vehicles, and on the sales of oil and gasoline, for these detachments and, if so, what firms?

Mr. Favreau: 1. All bona fide dealers representing General Motor Products of Canada, Ford Motor Company of Canada, Ltd., and Chrysler (Canada) Ltd. are invited to tender on the replacement of motor vehicles for the four R.C.M. Police detachments in question.

2. Normally mechanical repairs to the police vehicles are performed in compliance with the manufacturer's warranty by the firm supplying the force with the vehicle.

3. Oil and gasoline may be purchased from any reliable service stations in the detachment areas.

4. Yes. The only motor vehicles which meet the requirements of the government motor vehicle committee specifications for police work are General Motors, Ford Motors and Chrysler products. As a result, all other firms representing Rambler, Studebaker, etc., are not presently given an opportunity to tender on the replacement of motor vehicles for the Royal Canadian Mounted Police.

No firms are excluded from tendering on the repair and overhaul of vehicles, or from supplying oil and gasoline.

MOTOR VEHICLE PURCHASES, JUSTICE DEPARTMENT

Question No. 588—Mr. MacLean (Queens):

From May 1, 1963 to March 1, 1964 how many motor vehicles have been purchased by the Department of Justice (a) manufactured or assembled in Nova Scotia (b) manufactured or assembled in Ontario (c) imported from the United States (d) imported from other countries?

Mr. Favreau: (a) Nil; (b) 652; (c) four motorcycles; (d) Nil.

B.C. PENITENTIARY ROUTINE

Question No. 673—Mr. Howard:

1. With respect to the British Columbia penitentiary, for the days of the week Monday to Friday, at what time are inmates (a) let out of their cells to pick up breakfast (b) returned to their cells to eat breakfast (c) let out of their cells to return breakfast trays and proceed to work (d) returned to their cells for noon meal (e) let out of their cells to return noon meal trays and proceed to work (f) returned to their cells for evening meal (g) let out of their cells for evening recreation program (h) returned to their cells for lock up for night?

2. Of what does the evening recreation program consist, when was it reinstituted, and how many inmates are permitted to participate in it?

3. For Monday to Friday inclusive, what total number of hours per day does an inmate spend at (a) work, and (b) locked in his cell?

4. For Saturday, at what time are inmates (a) let out of their cells to pick up breakfast (b) returned to cells to eat breakfast (c) let out of their cells to return breakfast trays and proceed to what sort of activity outside of cells (if any) (d) returned to cells (e) let out of cells to pick up noon meal (f) returned to cells to eat noon meal (g) let out of cells to return noon meal trays and proceed to what sort of activity outside of cells (if any) (h) returned to cells (i) let out of cells to pick up evening meal (j) returned to cells to eat evening meal (k) let out of cells for evening recreation program (l) returned to cells for lock up for night?

5. For Saturday, what total number of hours does an inmate spend (a) in his cell and (b) out of his cell?

6. For Sunday, at what time are inmates (a) let out of their cells to pick up breakfast (b) returned to cells to eat breakfast (c) let out of their cells to return breakfast trays and proceed to what sort of activity outside of cells (if any) (d) returned to cells (e) let out of cells to pick up noon meal (f) returned to cells to eat noon meal (g) let out of cells to return noon meal trays and proceed to what sort of activity outside of cells (if any) (h) returned to cells (i) let out of cells to pick up evening meal (j) returned to cells to eat evening meal (k) let out of cells for evening recreation program (l) returned to cells for lock up for night?

7. For Sunday, what total number of hours does an inmate spend (a) in his cell, and (b) out of his cell?

Mr. Favreau: 1. (a) 0645 to 0720 hours; (b) 0650 to 0725 hours; (c) 0750 to 0815 hours; (d) 1110 to 1145 hours; (e) 1300 to 1330 hours; (f) 1555 to 1635 hours; (g) No evening recreation program in effect at the present time; (h) Not applicable.

2. Following the riot of April 19-20, 1963, the evening recreation program was discontinued because of inadequate security in the institution. A partial night recreation program of night exercise periods, from Monday to Thursday, was reinstituted July 22, 1963 after steps had been taken to reinforce security. Night exercise was discontinued on October 10, 1963 due to shortening daylight hours, inclement weather, inadequate lighting in the prison and exercise yards. Night exercise has been reinstituted on April 27, 1964, and will be continued until approximately the end of September. Inmates are unlocked commencing at approximately 1645 hours for night exercise and locked up by 1845 hours. All inmates living in association are permitted to take part in night exercise but because of the large population only half of them are permitted exercise each night. All inmates employed on inside work are permitted a daily exercise period from 1100 to 1145 hours from Monday to Friday even though they also participate in night exercise. Night exercise consists of individual and team sports.

3. (a) The number of hours per day that an inmate works, from Monday to Friday, varies with his work and cell location. In ranges from a minimum of 5½ hours to a maximum of 7½ hours. (b) The number of hours an inmate is locked in his cell would also vary as above from a minimum of 16½ hours to a maximum of 18½ hours. When participating in night exercise an inmate would be out of his cell for approximately 2 additional hours.

4. (a) 0750 to 0830 hours; (b) 0755 to 0835 hours; (c) 0850 to 0920 hours. Following the return of breakfast trays half the population is permitted to go to the exercise yard and the balance to the auditorium for recreation; (d) Not applicable; (e) Not applicable; (f) 1050 to 1130 hours; (g) 1245 to 1315 hours. In the afternoon half the population is permitted to go to the exercise yard and the other half is permitted to attend a movie in the auditorium or go to the exercise yard; (h) 1530 to 1545 hours; (i) 1545 to 1625 hours; (j) 1550 to 1630 hours; (k) No evening recreation program; (l) Not applicable.

5. (a) On the average an inmate would be in his cell for 19 hours on Saturday. This varies with his cell location and does not take into account the time that he is out of his cell picking up meals. (b) On an average of 5 hours but this is qualified as in (a).

6. (a) 0750 to 0830 hours. (b) 0755 to 0835 hours. (c) 0850 to 0920 hours. Inmates wishing to attend religious services are permitted to do so on Sunday mornings following the return of breakfast trays. No exercise periods are permitted while religious services are being held. (d) 1030 to 1045 hours. (e) 1050 to 1130 hours. (f) 1055 to 1135 hours. (g) 1245 to 1315 hours. Half the population is permitted to go to the exercise yard; and the other half to attend a movie in the auditorium or go to the exercise yard. The same movie is shown Saturday and Sunday and that half of the population permitted to attend is rotated. (h) 1530 to 1545 hours. (i) 1545 to 1625 hours. (j) 1550 to 1630 hours. (k) No evening recreation program. (l) Not applicable.

7. (a) On an average an inmate would be in his cell for 19 hours on Sunday. This varies with his cell location and does not take into account the time that he is out of his cell picking up meals. (b) On an average of 5 hours but this is qualified as in (a).

STUDY OF LOCK TWINNING, WELLAND CANAL

Question No. 765—Mr. Smith:

Has any study been made, or is any consideration being given to the possible effect of twinning the locks in the Welland canal on water levels in the great lakes?

Mr. Pickersgill: The twinning of the locks in the Welland canal will have no effect on water levels in the great lakes.

WINTER HOME CONSTRUCTION BONUS

Question No. 814—Mr. Starr:

1. How many applications were received for the $500 bonus under the winter home construction program?
2. How many qualified for this bonus as of April 15, 1964, when this program ended?
3. What is the total cost of this program in advertising, including all media?
4. What is the total cost of this program, including the $500 bonus?

Mr. MacEachen: 1. 32,614.

2. As the final tabulation of accepted applications has not been completed, the information is not yet available.

3. $227,399.96.

4. Since the final tabulation of accepted applications has not as yet been completed, this information is not available at this time.

C.N.R. CONTRACTS FOR MAIL BY TRUCK

Question No. 834—Mr. Grégoire:

1. Is it the practice of the Canadian National Railways to give contracts for carrying mail by truck to salaried employees, thus allowing them to act as employees and contractors at the same time?
2. If such is the case will the Minister of Transport review the situation?
3. Could the Minister of Transport inquire as to whether Edmond Larouche of Jonquière, a regular employee of the C.N.R. is acting in this manner, using his father's and brother's names to disguise his activities as a contractor?
4. Is the minister able to give the names of all the directors of the company which had undertaken these contracts, other than those of Adrien Larouche and Emile Larouche?

[Translation]

Answer: The management of the Canadian National Railways advises as follows:

1. The awarding of contracts for the carriage of mail by truck is the sole responsibility of the Post Office Department and the company has no such contracts respecting mail service in the province of Quebec.

2. See answer to part 1.

3 and 4. The requested information is not available within the company.

RECOMMENDATIONS OF JOINT INDIAN AFFAIRS COMMITTEE

Question No. 869—Mr. Howard:

What action, in detail, has been taken with respect to each of the following recommendations of the joint committee of the Senate and the House of Commons on Indian affairs:

"(a) Special depreciation allowances should be allowed Indian commercial fishermen.

(b) All existing liquor restrictions should be deleted from the Indian Act; and the same rights extended to non-Indian citizens of the various provinces be applicable to Indians, except that the right of possession and consumption on the reserve be granted only after approval by a majority vote of the band.

(c) Sections 32 and 33 of the Indian Act relating to the sale or barter of produce from reserves in the three prairie provinces should be deleted.

(d) Provincial courts should have jurisdiction to deal with Indian estates."?

Mr. Badanai: (a), (b) and (c) These recommendations would require legislation to implement with relevant changes in existing provisions of the Indian Act. A review of the Indian Act is proceeding as quickly as sound and thorough consideration will permit with the objective of submitting appropriate amendments. (d) Steps are being taken to implement this recommendation. Present practice is to consent or direct that the administration of Indian estates of substantial value be referred to the provincial courts pursuant to section 44 of the Indian Act. This will be gradually extended in scope as individual land holdings on reserves and other problems are resolved.

CHEESE EXPORTS TO U.S.

Question No. 941—Mr. Latulippe:

1. Has the federal government asked the government of the United States for assistance in increasing the export of Canadian cheese to the United States and, if not, will consideration be given to taking such action?

2. What amount of Canadian cheddar cheese was exported to the United States for the past three years and what was its value?

3. For each of the other types of cheese, what was the (a) quantity (b) total of exports to each country in the world?

4. Is the Department of Trade and Commerce in communication with provincial departments in Quebec, Ontario and the other Canadian provinces with a view to promoting the export of Canadian cheese and, if so, in what manner, and who is acting on the federal government's behalf?

5. Are there any negotiations presently going on with a view to promoting exports of cheese?

[Translation]

Answer: 1. The Canadian government brought up the matter of the quotas of U.S. imports of Canadian cheddar cheese at the meeting of the U.S.-Canada joint committee on commercial and economic affairs held here in Ottawa on April 29 and 30. While the U.S. representatives did not undertake to increase or reduce such quotas, they are perfectly aware of the importance attached to that matter by Canada.

2. The exports of cheddar to the United States during the years 1961 to 1963 were as follows:

	Year	Cwt.	Value $
Category 51-30	1961	5,354	273,623
Cheddar cheese	1962	4,900	263,435
	1963	4,834	278,598

3. The other types of cheese were not entered separately in the statistics on Canadian exports. The total exports of Canadian cheese, other than cheddar, by country, during the years 1961 to 1963 can be found in the attached statement.

4. The Department of Trade and Commerce works in close co-operation with the provinces in view of the development of export markets and, as far as cheddar cheese is concerned, is in communication with the representatives of the Quebec provincial government and the Ontario cheese marketing board in order to promote exports. For some time now, that board has taken active participation in our department's exhibition program. In everything concerning the development of cheddar exports, the agriculture and fisheries branch of the trade and commerce department, working in close co-operation with the dairy products division of the Department of Agriculture keeps in communication with the provincial governments.

5. The Kennedy round of trade negotiations gets under way this year in Geneva. It was agreed that negotiations on farm products, including dairy products, would not be separated from those trade negotiations. On that matter, the Canadian delegation will especially keep in mind the advantages there would be for Canada to expand her export markets of cheddar cheese.

(c) The Canadian trade mission of the aeronautical industry was set up for sales promotion of products of all sectors of the Canadian aeronautical industry. The mission includes representatives of manufacturers of aircraft, aircraft motors, inboard communication systems, inboard navigation systems and their components.

Its activities are not limited to products manufactured by companies represented by the mission. The mission was set up for the benefit of the whole Canadian aeronautical industry.

2 and 3. Exports and imports figures are given by products rather than by industries. Exports and imports of aircraft, aircraft motors and aircraft parts for 1963 are shown in attached statements.

4. In 1962, the aircraft and aircraft parts manufacturing industry employed 28,254 persons.

5. In the fiscal year 1963-64, the R.C.A.F. paid the aeronautical industry $162.5 million. This is a preliminary figure to which year-end supplementary accounts have to be added.

FARM IMPROVEMENT ACT LOANS

Question No. 980—Mr. Korchinski:

1. How many farmers acquired loans under the provisions of the Farm Improvement Loans Act during the past year?

2. How many farmers acquired loans in the following categories during the past year: less than $1,000; $1,000 to $2,000; $2,000 to $3,000; $3,000 to $4,000; $4,000 to $5,000; $5,000 to $6,000; and $6,000 to $7,500?

[Mr. Latulippe.]

Mr. Benson: 1. During the calendar year 1963, the number of farm improvement loans made was 77,373. The number of borrowers may be somewhat less since some farmers may have taken out more than one loan. Separate statistics on the exact number of borrowers under the act are not available.

2. Not available.

PASTURE CAPACITY UNDER P.F.R.A. AND ARDA

Question No. 992—Mr. Korchinski:

What is the present carrying capacity of all pastures operated under P.F.R.A. and ARDA in each of the provinces of Canada?

Mr. Lamontagne: In so far as the question relates to the Department of Agriculture: the estimated carrying capacity, for the 1964 grazing season, of all pastures operated under the Prairie Farm Rehabilitation Act in each province is as follows:

In terms of adult cattle, community pastures in Saskatchewan	98,450
Manitoba	32,750
Alberta	3,500
Total	134,700

Note: The carrying capacity, although described in terms of adult cattle, makes allowance for current year calves.

In so far as the question relates to the Department of Forestry since construction has just begun on many ARDA pastures approved to date, present carrying capacity is not available. However, the proposed ultimate carrying capacity (cow-calf units) of all ARDA pastures under construction when completed in each of the provinces is as follows:

	cow-calf units
Province of Saskatchewan	34,780
Province of Alberta	38,310
Province of Quebec	400
Province of Ontario	2,400
Province of British Columbia	4,200
Province of Nova Scotia	3,305
Province of New Brunswick	800

INVITATIONS TO SOLICITOR GENERAL, SKEENA CONSTITUENCY

Question No. 1,022—Mr. Howard:

Has the Solicitor General been invited to attend any function or visit any place in the electoral district of Skeena for 1964, and, if so, with respect to each such invitation, by whom was the invitation given, for what function or purpose, at what time or times, and has it been (a) accepted or (b) declined?

Mr. MacNaught: No.

Questions

INVITATIONS TO TRANSPORT MINISTER, SKEENA CONSTITUENCY

Question No. 1,024—Mr. Howard:

Has the Minister of Transport been invited to attend any function or visit any place in the electoral district of Skeena for 1964, and, if so, with respect to each such invitation, by whom was the invitation given, for what function or purpose, at what time or times, and has it been (a) accepted or (b) declined?

Mr. Pickersgill: No.

MEDICAL REQUIREMENTS FOR PRIVATE PILOT'S LICENCE

Question No. 1,034—Mr. Aiken:

Is consideration being given to amendment of medical requirements permitting the granting of a private pilot's licence to persons with monocular vision?

Mr. Pickersgill: No. Amendment of Canadian medical requirements along these lines on an unilateral basis would be inconsistent with our international undertaking to adhere to the minimum medical standards set up by the international civil aviation organization and which, in this respect, provide for a specific minimum of visual acuity in each eye separately and which consequently excludes a pilot with monocular vision.

The question of what privileges, if any, the pilot with monocular vision should have is highly controversial and, together with a number of other areas of difficulty in the application of the international personnel licensing requirements, we plan to seek an early review of these requirements by the international civil aviation organization.

CONTRACT BETWEEN T.C.A. AND TRANSAIR

Question No. 1,036—Mr. Korchinski:

Is the government satisfied that both parties have lived up to the agreement, signed by Trans-Air and Trans-Canada Air Lines, whereby TransAir was obliged to maintain passenger service for three years in return for certain aircraft and equipment being turned over to them?

Mr. Pickersgill: The agreement between TransAir Limited and Trans-Canada Air Lines was a private one and was only subject to air transport board scrutiny to the extent that its provisions were of assistance in determining whether the continued operation of the services in question was economically feasible.

Following public hearings, the board found in its decision dated March 18, 1964 that certain of the prairie services referred to in the agreement had occasioned TransAir Limited such substantial losses as to endanger the continuation of the other prairie services operated by that carrier. The board, therefore, amended accordingly the route pattern set out in the licence of TransAir Limited.

Trans-Canada Air Lines has taken every required step to implement its part of the agreement. TransAir Limited is not in breach of the agreement, since it undertook "to operate on such route pattern as may be approved from time to time by the air transport board". In other words, TransAir has adjusted the route pattern of services referred to in the agreement with the approval of the air transport board as provided in the agreement.

Under the circumstances, the answer to the question is, yes.

SERVICE CENTRE, TORONTO AIRPORT

Question No. 1,054—Mr. Douglas:

With reference to the building of a $500,000 service centre at Toronto international airport which will be run by Shell of Canada Limited, what is the (a) amount of rent that Shell of Canada Limited will be paying to the Department of Transport (b) percentage share of revenues of Shell of Canada Limited which will be paid to the Department of Transport?

Mr. Pickersgill: Shell of Canada Limited will pay the following rent: (a) $11,115 per annum during the currency of the lease for the exclusive privilege of operating the service centre; (b) $6,144.75 per annum land rental; (c) 2 per cent of gross revenue excluding gasoline sales; (d) 3 per cent of gross gasoline sales revenue excluding road tax.

Items (b), (c) and (d) are subject to review at the end of ten years.

DATES FOR MONTHLY PAYMENTS TO BLIND AND DISABLED

Question No. 1,057—Mr. Laprise:

Has the federal government any agreements with the provinces which fix the dates for the making of monthly payments under the provisions of the Disabled Persons and Blind Persons Acts and, if so, has consideration been given to arranging for the making of such payments prior to major holidays such as Christmas and Easter?

Miss LaMarsh: Payments are made to recipients by the provinces under provincial law. In the agreements made by Canada with the provinces and territories under the authority of the Blind Persons Act and the Disabled Persons Act, the provinces and territories agree to administer allowances to the persons and under the conditions specified in the federal acts and the regulations made under the acts. Both acts contain a provision which reads "The allowance in respect of which the government of Canada is authorized by this act to make payments shall be payable monthly in arrears." Consideration has not been given to any change in this provision.

*CIVIL SERVICE COMPETITION 63-669

Question No. 1,059—Mr. Pigeon:

1. Was there a civil service commission competition No. 63-669 (Chief of information services, $8,310-$9,750) and, if so, on what date?
2. Did the commission demand a knowledge of the two official languages as a required qualification?
3. If the competition has been completed who obtained the position and, is the successful applicant bilingual?
4. Were there other competent, bilingual applicants in this competition?
5. Was a notice of the competition posted on the notice board at 444 Sussex street, Ottawa?

Mr. Stewart: I am informed by the civil service commission and the Department of National Revenue as follows:

1. Yes. The advisory examining board was held on December 27, 1963; oral boards were held on January 27, 28, and 29, 1964.

2. The competition poster contained the following statement concerning language qualifications—"A knowledge of both the French and English languages would be an asset".

3. Mr. Norman Riddiough obtained the position. He is not bilingual.

4. No other candidate met the qualifications.

5. Yes.

VETERANS LAND ACT LOANS

Question No. 1,080—Mr. Chatterton:

Is consideration being given to amending the Veterans Land Act so as to increase loans to full-time farmers under the V.L.A. in line with the proposed increase in loans under the Farm Credit Act as indicated by a resolution on the order paper and, if so, is consideration being given to increasing the loans to small holders under the V.L.A. also?

Mr. Teillet: Yes, consideration is being given as to which provisions of the Veterans Land Act, if any, warrant or require amendment.

*URANIUM PRODUCTION, GUNNAR MINES, SASK.

Question No. 1,083—Mr. Douglas:

1. What part of the British contract for the sale of uranium was transferred from the Bancroft area to Gunnar mines, Saskatchewan?
2. How many pounds of uranium were involved in the transfer?
3. Has Gunnar mines produced sufficient uranium to meet this allocation and, if not, to what company or companies has this production been allocated?
4. Will any part of the unfulfilled contracts be transferred to the Bancroft area?

Mr. Pepin: 1. It is assumed that the term British contract refers to the 12,000 ton contract entered into between Eldorado and the U.K.A.E.A. on July 30, 1962. In this event, the answer is, none.

2, 3, 4. Answered by 1.

Questions

* WINTER HOUSE CONSTRUCTION BONUS

Question No. 1,089—Mr. Ricard:

As of April 15, 1964 (a) how many applications have been submitted (b) how many payments have been made, for the $500 incentive bonus for winter built houses?

Mr. Byrne: (a) As of April 15, 32,575 applications had been submitted for certification of housing under the winter house building incentive program.

(b) April 15, 1964 was the date on which most final inspections on housing under the winter house building incentive program were carried out by Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation. Payments amounting to $778,000 had been made as of April 15, 1964 in respect of housing which had been completed and inspected by C.M.H.C. prior to the final inspection date.

*BUTTER AND BUTTER OIL

Question No. 1,090—Mr. Marcoux:

1. At what price was butter oil sold to iron curtain countries?
2. How much butter oil is made from a pound of butter?
3. How long is butter oil usually stored, and what is the yearly storage cost for a pound of butter?
4. What price is paid on the Canadian market for butter earmarked for storage?

Mr. Beer: 1. All butter sold for export has been sold at 27 cents per pound f.a.s. Canadian port.

2. Approximately four fifths of a pound of butter oil is made from a pound of butter.

3. Most of the butter oil in Canada has been stored from two to three years. The average yearly storage cost for a pound of butter is approximately two and three quarter cents.

4. The agricultural stabilization board is paying 53 cents per pound for 40-93 score Canada first grade creamery butter, basis carlots delivered warehouse at main distribution centres in eastern Canada.

EGG PRICES IN PRAIRIE PROVINCES

Question No. 1,098—Mr. Rapp:

1. Has there been a recent drastic drop in the price of grade A eggs in the prairie provinces and, if so (a) by what amount, per dozen, have prices dropped (b) what steps are being taken to halt such a price decline (c) what steps will be taken to ensure the payment to farmers of a satisfactory price for eggs?
2. Has any investigation been made to determine whether wholesalers are receiving more for grading and packaging than the egg producers receive for their product?

Questions

Mr. Hays: 1. (a) The average weighted price to producers in the prairie provinces for grade A large eggs over recent weeks has been as follows:

Week ending	Price per dozen
April 18	23.3 cents
April 25	22.7 cents
May 2	20.9 cents
May 9	17.9 cents
May 16	18.2 cents

(b) and (c) The price decline is related to an increase in the volume of marketing which, to date this year, as compared to last year, is up 15.2 per cent in Alberta, 9.2 per cent in Saskatchewan and 30.8 per cent in Manitoba. Egg producers are protected by a deficiency payment program under the Agricultural Stabilization Act. The support level is set at a national annual average of 34 cents per dozen for grade A large eggs. Producer eligibility is limited to 4,000 dozen grade A extra large, large and medium eggs.

2. During the same period weighted average prices, wholesaler to retailer, for grade A large eggs and the spread between this and the weighted average price received by producers in the three prairie provinces were as follows:

Week ending	Weighted average price to retailers	Spread
April 18	38.6 cents per doz.	15.3 cents per doz.
April 25	38.0 cents per doz.	15.3 cents per doz.
May 2	36.3 cents per doz.	15.4 cents per doz.
May 9	33.3 cents per doz.	15.4 cents per doz.
May 16	33.3 cents per doz.	15.1 cents per doz.

*UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE CLAIMANTS

Question No. 1,101—Mr. Ricard:

From May 1, 1963 to April 30, 1964, what was, at the end of each month, the number of registered claimants for unemployment insurance benefits in Canada?

Mr. Byrne: The number of active claimants at the end of each month, May 1963 to April 1964, was as follows:

1963, May, 270,892; June, 220,260; July, 218,974; August, 192,511; September, 186,261; October, 218,866; November, 303,353; December, 532,331; 1964, January, 598,561; February, 607,144; March, 597,250; April, 497,745.

[Later:]

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. E. Gray (Essex West): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Labour. Would he tell the house whether the figure for April 30, 1964, in today's answer to the written question of the hon. member for St. Hyacinthe-Bagot (Mr. Ricard) represents an increase or a decrease in unemployment in comparison with April 30, 1963?

[Mr. Rapp.]

Mr. Speaker: Important as this question obviously is, would the hon. member put it on the order paper?

Mr. Gray: I give notice at this time that I wish it to be debated at ten o'clock.

*UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE FUND

Question No. 1,102—Mr. Ricard:

What was the state of the unemployment insurance fund on April 30, 1964?

Mr. Byrne: On April 30, 1964, the unemployment insurance fund showed a debit balance of $25,863,147.97.

ARNES, MAN.—HARBOUR IMPROVEMENTS

Question No. 1,111—Mr. Stefanson:

1. What plans has the government for improving harbour facilities at Arnes, Manitoba?
2. What is the estimated cost and when will this work be carried out?

Mr. Deschatelets: 1. There is no plan at this time to improve the harbour facilities at Arnes, Manitoba.

2. Not applicable.

JAMES M. MINIFIE

Question No. 1,112—Mr. Gundlock:

Is James M. Minifie, the C.B.C. commentator from Washington, a Canadian citizen and, if not, when did he cease to be?

Mr. Badanai: As Mr. Minifie has never applied for a certificate of Canadian citizenship nor requested a ruling on his status under the Canadian Citizenship Act, the department has no information on which to base an opinion.

*NEW INDUSTRIES ESTABLISHED

Question No. 1,115—Mr. Rynard:

1. How many new industries have been established in high unemployment areas as a result of the special tax concessions granted to these areas?
2. To how many persons is employment being provided as a result of these new industries?

Mr. Drury: 1. Since this legislation was enacted on December 5, 1963, and up to date May 25, 1964, 60 new manufacturing and processing businesses have declared their intention to establish in such a manner as to benefit from the designated area tax incentive program.

2. The planned employment reported by the new businesses is 5,215.

[Later:]

On the orders of the day:

Mr. P. B. Rynard (Simcoe East): Mr. Speaker, I would like an answer to starred question No. 1,115, answered by the Minister of Industry today. The question I asked was, how many new industries have been established to date, and the second question I asked was, how many people have been employed to date? The answers given were 60 in the future and so many in planned employment. These are not the questions I asked, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: I am sure the hon. member will put this on the order paper. The hon. member for Greenwood.

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Winnipeg South Centre): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member has drawn attention to an incorrect answer to a written question. Putting it again on the order paper will not correct this at all. The hon. member asked how many new industries have been established, and the minister replied that 60 new industries "have declared their intention," which is not the same thing at all. I think putting it on the order paper, sir, will serve no purpose at all. Let the minister give a clear, precise, and accurate answer to a question already on the order paper.

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Industry): Mr. Speaker, the answer to that precise and clear question is that we have no statistics on industries—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Drury: Mr. Speaker, if the official opposition want an answer they might at least have the courtesy to listen to it. The answer to the question is that we have no statistics on industries already established because they are not required to furnish the government with notification of actual establishment until such time as they are in full commercial production and they intend to claim income tax benefits.

Mr. Rynard: Supplementary to that, then I would take it from the minister's answer that no one has been employed to date?

Mr. Drury: Mr. Speaker, that is a completely incorrect assumption to make.

Mr. Rynard: Then let us have the correct figure.

Mr. Nicholas Mandziuk (Marquette): How is it that the minister's department has no statistics on the industries already established but has statistics on those to be established?

Mr. Drury: Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member would just read the answer, it states that the government has been advised by some 60 new industries of their intention to establish in such a way as to avail themselves of the benefits of the Income Tax Act.

Hon. Michael Starr (Ontario): As a supplementary question, does the minister not know exactly how many, or is he not interested in finding out how many industries have been established?

Mr. Drury: As I said before, I do not know. I am interested—

Mr. Starr: Are you interested?

Mr. Drury: I am interested, but we have not the machinery for collecting this precise information at the moment.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Then I would like to ask the minister—because there seems to be a multiplicity of officers around his department —what about the second portion of the question asked by the hon. member for Simcoe East:

To how many persons is employment being provided as a result of these new industries?

Mr. Churchill: The answer is none.

Mr. Drury: If the Leader of the Opposition will look at the answer, with respect to how many positions of employment are going to be provided, the information was given in the written answer.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Complete evasion.

*EMPLOYEES OF REPRESENTATION COMMISSIONER'S OFFICE

Question No. 1,129—Mr. Woolliams:

1. How many persons have been employed, and are employed, in the representation commissioner's office, preparing data, mathematical exercises, and/or maps, in reference to electoral divisions in Canada, in accordance with section 8 of the Representation Commissioner Act, 1963?
2. How long have these persons been performing their tasks, and what special training, if any, had these persons prior to their employment?
3. What is the average age of these persons so employed, and who, if anyone, recommended them for their positions?

Mr. Stewart: I am informed by the representative commissioner:

1. Nine persons have been employed and eight are presently employed.

2. These persons commenced their employment as follows: One person July 18, 1963; Three persons Sept. 16, 1963; Two persons Sept. 23, 1963; One person Dec. 3, 1963; One person Dec. 23, 1963; One person March 9, 1964.

Such persons had no special training prior to their employment.

3. The average age is 33 years and no one made any recommendations to me regarding their positions.

QUESTIONS PASSED AS ORDERS FOR RETURNS

WORLD FAIR EMPLOYEES RECEIVING OVER $10,000

Question No. 945—Mr. McCutcheon:

What was the previous employment, experience and qualifications, as well as location, of those employees of the Montreal world fair in receipt of salaries in excess of $10,000 from that body?

Return tabled.

*GOVERNMENT ANNUITY AND SUPERANNUATION FUNDS

Question No. 952—Mr. Côté (Chicoutimi):

1. What is the present balance in the Canadian government annuity fund and what is the present number of annuitants?
2. What is the balance in the civil service superannuation fund and, how many persons receive benefits?
3. Where are these funds deposited?
4. Are these funds used for investment and, if so, in what securities are they invested.

Return tabled.

*C.P.R. RAIL LINE ABANDONMENT APPLICATIONS, SASK.

Question No. 985—Mr. Southam:

1. Since the present government took office in April, 1963, how many applications has the board of transport commissioners received for rail line abandonment from the Canadian Pacific Railway in the province of Saskatchewan, the province of Manitoba and the province of Alberta?
2. What are the subdivision designations of such applications in each case, and the various mileages involved?
3. What is the railway ten year gross revenue in each case, and the railway gross operating loss, if any, in each case?
4. How many grain elevators, and their total capacity in the case of each subdivision, are involved?

Return tabled.

APPOINTMENT OF AIRPORT MANAGERS

Question No. 1,048—Mr. Fisher:

1. What is the name and address of each person appointed since January 1, 1963, to the position of airport manager 1 level and higher at each respective site in Canada?

[Mr. Stewart.]

2. Where was each such appointee located prior to the appointment referred to in part 1 and what was or will be the cost of transporting him, his dependents and belongings to the new location?
3. Has any D.O.T. employee at the respective sites referred to in part 1 filled the position in a permanent or acting capacity during the last five years? If so, what are the names of each such person, the time the position was so filled and to what degree of satisfaction, and are any of the said persons still at the sites?
4. Was any consideration given to filling the positions from among D.O.T. personnel in the regions concerned and, if so, were any such persons found to be qualified for the positions? What were the reasons for not making the appointments from such persons?
5. At what levels are appointments normally open to residents from (a) local areas (b) regional areas, and (c) all across Canada?
6. If area boundaries are established for applicants for positions and such boundaries are governed by the level of the positions, are such rules always adhered to? If not, in what instances since January 1, 1963, have the said rules not been adhered to, and what were the reasons for not following the said rules in each instance?

Return tabled.

MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

Mr. J. B. Stewart (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I ask that notice No. 121 be allowed to stand.

MODELS FOR CANADIAN FLAG

Motion No. 122—Mr. Smallwood:

That an order of the house do issue for the production of all flag designs or models which have been received by the Prime Minister, members of the cabinet or the government, as models for a Canadian flag.

Mr. Stewart: Mr. Speaker, notice No. 122 entails two difficulties. First, while some of the three thousand and more flag designs or models that have been received are on paper, many are on other kinds of material. Moreover, some are very large. Consequently the costs of reproduction would be extremely great. Besides, in the case of each of these designs the specific permission of the designer would have to be obtained before reproduction and publication. Second, if the originals were produced in the House of Commons they would not then be available to be returned to any of those who submitted them.

I suggest that the notice of motion be withdrawn.

Mr. Smallwood: Mr. Speaker, under those circumstances I would ask that you transfer this motion for debate.

Mr. Speaker: Transferred for debate.

CANADIAN FLAG

PROCEDURE RESPECTING CONSIDERATION OF RESOLUTION

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, now that we know the nature of the resolution regarding the two flags may I ask the Prime Minister when it is intended to go ahead with this resolution, and whether he can give us an indication which resolution will be proceeded with first, that providing for two flags or the second one providing for two anthems.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, it is intended to proceed with these resolutions in a few days, and I hope to be able at the beginning of next week to announce the exact day on which the first resolution will be called. That is the resolution dealing with a single national flag for Canada.

Mr. Diefenbaker: That resolution, Mr. Speaker, does not appear to be before us. If I may put another question, Mr. Speaker, is it the intention of the government to have this resolution also presented in the other place as well?

Mr. Pearson: Yes, Mr. Speaker, a similar resolution will be introduced in the other place.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Will it be presented in the other place for discussion at the same time it is presented here, or will it only be presented in the other place after it has been presented here? In other words, is it going to be a joint resolution or will there be specific resolutions for the House of Commons and the Senate?

Mr. Pearson: The usual procedure will be followed. There will be a specific resolution for the House of Commons and a resolution in the other place. Whether the resolution in the other place will be called before or after the resolution in the House of Commons will depend, of course, on when this resolution, which is not yet on the order paper but which is in Votes and Proceedings, is called. When it gets on the order paper I hope my right hon. friend will read it very carefully and try to understand it.

Mr. Diefenbaker: May I thank the Prime Minister, because it will certainly take a Philadelphia lawyer to understand the intricacies of the thinking of this government as represented by this resolution.

[Translation]

Mr. Gilles Grégoire (Lapointe): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In view of the fact that the government intends to move the adoption of a national flag for Canada and of the union jack as a symbol of our allegiance to the British crown and to the commonwealth, has the government the intention to move the adoption of the flag of the United Nations as a symbol of the allegiance of our country to the United Nations, and of the flag of NATO, as a symbol of the allegiance of our country to NATO, and also of the American flag, as a symbol of our allegiance to NORAD?

[Text]

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, we have already in this country, as recently as yesterday, honoured the flag of the United Nations and I hope we will continue to do so. I hope we will adopt soon a national flag for Canada.

An hon. Member: Flags.

Mr. Pearson: We also in this country owe allegiance to Her Majesty the Queen as Queen of Canada—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Pearson: —and I hope that, while there can only be one national flag for Canada, we will continue to honour the symbol of our allegiance to Her Majesty and our association in the commonwealth.

[Translation]

Hon. Paul Martineau (Pontiac-Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a supplementary question to the right hon. Prime Minister—

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Speaker, a supplementary question—

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: Order. I can only take one member out of four. The hon. member for Pontiac-Témiscamingue.

[Translation]

Mr. Martineau: In view of the answer given by the Prime Minister, could he tell us whether it is necessary to pass legislation to show our affection for the crown?

[Later:]

Mr. Grégoire: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Considering what the Prime Minister stated, I should like to ask him whether English citizens are obliged to adopt the Canadian flag which will also be the symbol of affection for the crown, since the Queen is also the Queen of Canada?

Mr. Guy Marcoux (Quebec-Montmorency): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. May I ask the right hon. Prime Minister whether the resolution on the Canadian flag will be followed by a bill or by an order in council?

[Text]

Mr. Pearson: No, Mr. Speaker, no bill is required. The house will be asked to take a decision on the resolution, and the resolution will be quite clear in that respect.

[Translation]

Mr. Marcel Lessard (Lake St. John): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Prime Minister whether it will be necessary, in the case of the disruption of the commonwealth or, if you wish, of its member countries, that the Canadian parliament pass another act denying the existence or the official recognition of the union jack in Canada?

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: Order. With all respect I must rule this question out of order.

[Translation]

Mr. Raymond Langlois (Mégantic): Mr. Speaker, I wish to put a question to the Prime Minister.

Since the Prime Minister's motion concerning a Canadian flag suggests that the union jack be continued to be flown as a symbol of Canadian membership in the commonwealth and of our allegiance to the crown, does the government propose to submit, at an early date, a bill establishing the total independence of Canada, in which case Canadians would not have to fly two flags, that of England and that of Canada?

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The question is obviously out of order.

[Translation]

Mr. Grégoire: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker—

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. There cannot be a supplementary to a question that is out of order.

[Mr. Grégoire.]

[Translation]

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question will be in order. I should like to ask the right hon. Prime Minister whether he intends to divide his resolution in two parts, so that the members of the house would be called to vote a first time on the distinctive national flag and a second time on the union jack, the flag of England. Then, the hon. members would not have to face a cruel dilemma: either reject the national distinctive flag and at the same time the union jack or vote for both, and this would not be more acceptable.

This is my question. Would the right hon. Prime Minister divide his resolution in two parts?

[Text]

Mr. Pearson: The regular course will be followed. If the hon. gentleman will wait until the resolution is introduced it will be explained in detail.

LABOUR RELATIONS

MARITIME UNION TRUSTEES—APPEARANCE BEFORE HOUSE COMMITTEE

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Michael Starr (Ontario): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Minister of Labour. During his discussions yesterday with the maritime union trustees did he impress upon them the necessity of appearing before the industrial relations committee, particularly in view of the acknowledgement by the leader of the New Democratic party, in spite of his denials yesterday, that certain members of that party did meet with Mr. Millard?

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I discussed with the board of trustees yesterday the possibility of an appearance by the members of the board before the industrial relations committee. While I am sure that if parliament asked the board of trustees to appear they would do so and answer questions, it is still their considered and strong view that it would not be in the best interests of the responsibility assigned to them by the parliament of Canada for them to appear and discuss publicly their activities at the present time.

Mr. Starr: May I ask a supplementary question. In view of the fact that one of the trustees has brought certain members of the House of Commons up to date on the activities of the trustees, surely other members should not be deprived of the same opportunity. I think the committee would agree, if the trustees did not want to make the testimony public, to have the meetings held in camera.

Mr. Douglas: I rise on a question of privilege.

Mr. Starr: I wonder if the minister would agree with that suggestion. Will he tell us whether he will approach the trustees on that basis?

Mr. MacEachen: I will consider the proposal made by the hon. member for Ontario.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): I rise on a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker. The hon. member for Ontario has just said I admitted meeting Mr. Millard, in spite of my denial yesterday. I think that could be some reflection on the statement I made yesterday and I reserve the right, therefore, to raise a question of privilege.

I referred yesterday to the report in the Globe and Mail in which it was stated that one of the trustees held a private conference with the New Democratic party—I am sorry; I have the wrong newspaper clipping. Yesterday's Globe and Mail stated:

> Mr. Millard recently met the parliamentary caucus of the New Democratic party to explain the position of the trustees.

What I said yesterday, as reported at page 3579 of Hansard, was:

> On a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker, the statement just referred to by the hon. member for Ontario is completely inaccurate. Mr. Millard has never met with the caucus of the New Democratic party.

I say that statement is perfectly correct. Now, today's Globe and Mail makes a perfectly correct statement. I told the press that I personally had met Mr. Millard when he dropped into my office and met with myself and one or two members who were readily available and who were called in.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Douglas: This does not constitute a meeting with the caucus of the New Democratic party. I am certain that the Leader of the Opposition, who seems to be somewhat amused, would hardly consider he had a meeting of a caucus of the Progressive Conservative party if he met with someone and two other members of his group.

Mr. Diefenbaker: We have not got a group, we have a political party.

Mr. Douglas: You have a political hodge-podge; I would not call it a party.

If I may continue, Mr. Speaker, in spite of the interjections from the official opposition, I want to say that I have known Mr. Millard for a quarter of a century. He is an old friend of mine. If Mr. Millard wants to come into my office and chat with me, he is at liberty to do so without any reflection being cast upon him or upon myself.

I want to say, Mr. Speaker, that there was no official meeting with the caucus. Most of the members of the caucus did not know I had met Mr. Millard, because I did not think it was important. Mr. Millard was in Ottawa, he was going to catch a train and he dropped in to see me. I had a chat with him. There is no inconsistency between the statement I made in the house yesterday and the statement which I made to the press.

The hon. member for Ontario and the Conservative members seem to be exercised about this. I want to say to them that we have several times suggested in the house that the industrial relations committee ought to meet with the trustees. So far as meeting with any individual such as Mr. Millard is concerned, he would be glad to meet with the hon. member for Ontario or any other member. As a matter of fact, if the hon. member for Ontario, when he was minister of labour, had met with some of these people he probably would have done something about Hal Banks and the S.I.U. long before he did.

Mr. Starr: I rise on a question of privilege. The leader of the New Democratic party has thought it wise to raise a question of privilege, so I think I should be accorded the same privilege. Yesterday I addressed the following question to the Minister of Labour:

> Could not the minister be more specific, in view of the fact that one of those trustees, Mr. Millard, has appeared before certain members of the New Democratic party?

The hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam said Mr. Millard had never met with the caucus of the New Democratic party. He was splitting hairs. The hon. member for Vancouver East also said he had not met with any members of the New Democratic party, and he was speaking as its national vice president.

Mr. Winch: I said he had not appeared before a caucus or any official organization of our party.

Mr. Starr: In my question I did not refer to a caucus. I said he met with certain members of the New Democratic party. The leader of the New Democratic party stated in his question of privilege that the statement published in the Globe and Mail today is perfectly correct. The statement reads as follows, Mr. Speaker:

Mr. Douglas said he invited in three members of the party caucus labour committee; David Orlikow (Winnipeg North), the committee chairman who attended during the entire meeting, and Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre)—

I do not know what his capacity is.

—and Andrew Brewin (Greenwood), who were there for part of the time.

Mr. Douglas said Mr. Millard, an old friend, called on him to explain the trustees' policies, some of which have been bitterly opposed by the N.D.P.

Even the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre had something to say. He said this was an attempt among friends to clear the air.

Mr. Douglas: May I just draw the attention of the hon. member for Ontario to the exact words which he used yesterday, as recorded at page 3579 of Hansard:

A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In view of the report in the Globe and Mail this morning by Mr. Wilfred List stating, among other things, that Mr. Millard recently met the parliamentary caucus of the New Democratic party to explain the position of the trustees, would the minister not consider that the other members of this house also have a right to meet with the trustees?

The hon. member for Ontario said "parliamentary caucus".

Mr. Starr: Mr. Speaker, I quoted what was said in the newspaper. My original question only referred to certain members of the New Democratic party.

Hon. Paul Martineau (Pontiac-Témiscamingue): I should like to ask the Minister of Labour if following his meeting with the maritime union trustees there now has been a decision with regard to the presidency of the S.I.U., and particularly if Mr. McLaughlin will be retained in that post.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, Mr. McLaughlin is not president of the S.I.U., and no decision was reached or could be reached at such a meeting yesterday because that would be a decision for the trustees, to be made by them under their own authority.

Mr. Martineau: May I ask the minister if there was any discussion about the status of Mr. McLaughlin within the S.I.U.

Mr. MacEachen: Yesterday my discussion with the board of trustees ranged over the whole spectrum of their activities with regard to the S.I.U., including the accession and present leadership of the S.I.U.

[Mr. Starr.]

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Is it not a fact that Mr. McLaughlin is acting as president and signing letters on behalf of the S.I.U. at the present time?

Mr. MacEachen: No, it is not a fact that Mr. McLaughlin is president.

Some hon. Members: Acting as president.

Mr. MacEachen: He may be signing letters as executive vice president.

Mr. Martineau: Will he be retained in his present function, whatever that may be?

LABOUR CONDITIONS

ST. JOHN'S, NFLD.—STEPS TO SETTLE LONGSHOREMEN'S STRIKE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Joseph P. O'Keefe (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Labour in connection with the longshoremen's strike in St. John's, Newfoundland. In view of the fact that the minister has stated that the federal government would intervene when the situation warranted it, will the minister now say how serious the situation must become before his department intervenes?

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. member for giving me notice of this question, which is of great concern to the residents of the city of St. John's. The situation at present is that the resident mediator of the department is in the city and Mr. Pettigrove, the senior conciliation officer for the Atlantic region, is in touch with both parties in an effort to arrange further meetings. This situation will only be resolved when there is a greater willingness on the part of both parties to reach a settlement.

PROSPECTIVE LAY-OFFS AT POINT EDWARD NAVAL BASE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Donald MacInnis (Cape Breton South): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Labour. In view of the question put forward by the hon. member for St. John's East and the answer provided by the minister, does he not think that the condition where 400 men will be laid off very shortly in Cape Breton also deserves an answer from the government? Also, considering the fact that this question has been allowed, does he not feel a similar question in respect to these men should be considered and not ruled out, as it had been previously?

Mr. Speaker: May I suggest that the decision as to whether a question is in order or not should be left to the Chair. In view of the length of the strike, which I understand has been going on for some time, it seemed to me the question was urgent and important because it was dealing with humanity and a great many persons were concerned. I know that on many previous occasions the hon. member for Cape Breton South has raised a question about a certain district with which he is concerned, and if he has a very urgent question then in fairness I am quite prepared to allow it.

Mr. MacInnis: I would put a further supplementary question to the Minister of Labour; and considering the remarks made by you, sir, I would now ask the Minister of Labour if he does not consider that the layoffs at Point Edward naval base would be somewhat more permanent than the strike in St. John's, on which he saw fit to answer a question while denying a reply to me?

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): And does he not consider them human also?

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

CHECK OF PENAL INSTITUTIONS RESPECTING PERSONS ILLEGALLY HELD

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Royal): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Justice. I am wondering whether he would show evidence of his concern by requesting the provincial attorneys general to cause an immediate check to be made of inmates of all jails and other penal institutions within their jurisdictions, to ensure that no citizen is held illegally, as a result of administrative mix-ups? There were two such cases in the last month.

Hon. Guy Favreau (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I am presently considering the facts which gave rise to this particular question.

[Later:]

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): My question is supplementary, or at least related, to the question which was asked by the hon. member for Royal with respect to the specific case of a person detained for a long period awaiting deportation. Perhaps I should address it to the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration. How many other cases are there of people who have been detained for long periods awaiting deportation? If the minister does not know, would he inquire into the matter and inform the house?

Hon. René Tremblay (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration): The case the hon. member mentioned is that of Mr. Hooper, and Mr. Hooper was deported last night.

While I am on my feet I should like to make a statement on these immigration cases which are before—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Tremblay: It is related to the same matter.

Mr. Speaker: I am sorry; I did not hear the last few words the minister said. Would he mind telling the Chair what he wishes to do?

Mr. Tremblay: It is a statement about cases before the courts.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

Mr. Brewin: I did not make my question clear to the minister. How many other cases are there within the minister's knowledge of people being detained in jail awaiting deportation for unspecified periods? If the hon. gentleman does not know, will he find out and inform the house?

Mr. Tremblay: I will take the question as notice.

SHIPPING

CONSIDERATION OF ESTIMATES PROVIDING FOR EMERGENCY ASSISTANCE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. G. H. Aiken (Parry Sound-Muskoka): I have a question for the Prime Minister. On Friday last the right hon. gentleman indicated that he would be tabling details of emergency supplementary estimates to meet the low water situation on the great lakes. Can he tell us when these estimates will be tabled?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): No, Mr. Speaker; it is impossible to say on what date the estimates will be introduced.

Mr. Aiken: Will these estimates provide a method of assisting private operators to meet the situation?

Mr. Pearson: I cannot answer that question now.

Mr. Aiken: I am not satisfied with the answer given. May I debate it after ten o'clock?

TERRITORIAL SEA AND FISHING ZONES

LEGISLATION RESPECTING TERRITORIAL WATERS AND FISHERIES LAWS

The house resumed from Tuesday, May 26, consideration of the motion of Mr. Martin (Essex East) for the second reading of Bill No. S-17, respecting the territorial sea and fishing zones of Canada.

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (Queens-Lunenburg): Last evening I started on the first leg of my cruise of Canada's territorial seas and today I hope to finish the voyage.

From the facts I placed on the record it is readily apparent that Canada's support of a 12 mile limit was officially launched in the international field in 1958. However, international agreement on this matter was not reached and we are now obliged to consider the alternatives open to us. The first question which comes to mind concerns those nations which have already applied a 12 mile limit. We know, for example, that Iceland was the first country to push out its territorial limits to 12 miles, followed by Norway, Denmark and then Russia. Africa and Britain have also decided on this course and, in all, some 25 nations have now adopted a 12 mile limit. There should be little objection from these countries to the Canadian proposal. But it would appear that when these decisions were made unilaterally, international incidents followed. Icelandic gunboats chased British trawlers from cod fishing grounds off the shores of Iceland. Norway is chasing Swedish fishermen from grounds which the Swedes have fished for hundreds of years. Irish corvettes have recently scattered Dutch and Belgian fishermen who were fishing in Irish herring grounds, and the Brazilian and French are disputing the ownership of Brittany lobsters caught in traditional Brazilian fishing waters.

This will give the government an idea of what happens when action is taken unilaterally, and I cannot help but wonder what steps are to be taken by the minister and his department to enforce these proposed regulations. What would happen, for example, if the Russians decided to test the new regulation by placing a factory ship within the nine mile limit off the coast of Cape Breton in an area where in the spring of the year the fishing is prolific? I refer to the Scatari bank. It might be that the factory ship would not be fishing in these waters, but the supply draggers would be travelling back and forth and it would require constant patrolling on the part of Canadian vessels to determine whether they were fishing or simply travelling peacefully through these waters.

I would point out, too, that Canada has a very long coast line. The Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Martin)—and I may point out that he is not present while this bill, which comes under his authority, is being discussed—

Mr. Robichaud: On a question of privilege; my colleague the Secretary of State for External Affairs mentioned that he had to go out for a few minutes to attend an urgent matter and indicated he would be right back.

Mr. Crouse: I thank the Minister of Fisheries for that explanation.

The minister of external affairs stated in the course of his remarks as reported in Hansard at page 3411:

> Pending this determination and an opportunity to carry forward our discussions with the countries concerned, we have decided to allow a short period of time to elapse before starting to enforce Canadian laws in the fishing zones of Canada.

My point is this: How will they be enforced? Does the government intend to use the patrol boats of the Department of Fisheries or will it use the patrol boats which are operated as a coastguard service under the Department of Transport? Perhaps it is intended to use the navy—

Mr. Martin (Essex East): On a question of privilege, I understand that the hon. gentleman complained a few moments ago about my being out of the house. I stepped out of the house for a few moments in order to attend to an urgent matter connected with my department and I am now back in my place. I regret that the hon. gentleman showed his sporting quality in this way.

Mr. Crouse: I did not notice the minister leave the house, and when the Minister of Fisheries brought it to my attention that he had been called away I immediately apologized.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I did not know the hon. member had apologized and I am sorry I made my intervention. I did so because I was not aware of the apology.

Mr. Crouse: The Secretary of State for External Affairs has made an explanation of his absence and I accept that explanation.

To continue, I ask this question: How does the government hope to enforce this regulation? Obviously, enforcement will be one of the main problems to be dealt with if these proposals are to become effective. I cannot impress this point upon the government too strongly. I have said before, and I say again, that a gunboat policy for our fishing industry would be disastrous to our traditional fishing markets. The entire proposal raises the problem of historic fishing rights and today I will deal only with those rights on the Atlantic coast. France and the United States have historic fishing rights dated back to the treaty of Utrecht in 1713 and the treaty of London in 1818.

I hold in my hand the brief submitted by the Fisheries Council of Canada on Canada's national and territorial waters under date January 28, 1963. In this brief they recommend negotiations between the United States and France to reach a mutual understanding, and that unilateral action be taken only after agreement with these two countries. The Fisheries Council of Canada is representative of the entire fishing industry. It meets annually and it makes recommendations to the government only after careful study of all the facts. I cannot help but wonder why these recommendations were ignored and why the government, despite their recommendations, decided to take unilateral action.

I think their suggestions are worth placing on the record. They suggest, for example, that Canada, as one of the pioneering nations in the field of international agreements for the conservation of fishery resources of the sea, should continue to provide international leadership and protection for our Canadian marine resources. They recommend that we declare certain bodies of water as Canadian national waters, and establish the straight base line to enclose the national waters. The breadth of the territorial seas and exclusive fishing zone would be measured seaward from the base line. We should recognize and negotiate historic treaty fishing rights and then make a unilateral declaration with regard to the decisions reached. Finally, we should enforce these progressive steps, thereby preventing all other foreign fishing, except the United States and France, from exploiting our marine resources. In my opinion it will be difficult to get some of these nations to give up and suddenly drop their historic fishing rights. The house therefore has a right to know the government's plans on this important matter. Do they intend a phasing out of historic fishing rights over a five or ten year period; or, for example, will the Americans and the French continue fishing their traditional grounds within three miles of our shores in perpetuity? These are questions that require an answer.

Quite frankly, I am not satisfied that the present proposal as outlined by the minister will solve any of our major international fishing problems. In my opinion we will still have large Russian, Spanish and Japanese trawlers operating on the fishing banks of the Atlantic coast five, ten and 15 years from now in ever increasing numbers, using modern methods and equipped with electronic fish finding devices that can only be described as fantastic. I say this because the world population, according to statistics that were last prepared in the year 1960, I believe, was estimated at 2,900 million and it is increasing by 120,000 every day. The nations of the world must turn to the sea as a source of food in ever increasing quantities to feed their ever expanding populations, and as a result fishing operations will intensify in the years ahead. As a matter of fact, the world fisheries have doubled their production in the last ten years, and a further doubling in the next ten years is expected. This, of course, will only create further international competition on the high seas for our marine resources.

This is why I have stated that in my opinion further negotiation at the international level would have been preferable to the action that has been taken at this time by the government. However, the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Martin) and the Minister of Fisheries (Mr. Robichaud) of this government have decided in their collective wisdom to establish by unilateral action this 12 mile limit. Since the 12 mile limit is a conservation measure designed to assist our inshore fishermen as well as conserve our fisheries resources, it is therefore important that we take some definite steps at this time that will be of long term benefit to our fisheries.

In my opinion this measure is not definite enough at present to do what should be done for the Canadian fishing industry. However, it can be amended by the simple act of naming the co-ordinates or points of land to be used in establishing the base line. These co-ordinates are the key, the one important item in this entire proposal; but according to the Secretary of State for External Affairs they have not been named. He stated, as is reported at page 3412 of Hansard, on May 20:

> I am hopeful, however, that our discussions will soon be completed and that the governor in council will be in a position before the end of the year to proclaim a list of geographical co-ordinates of points for application of the straight base lines to at least a part of our coast line. If our optimism, here, proves unwarranted it will not be because this is not our present appreciation of the situation; it will be because of the nature of the negotiations themselves. It is unlikely that the governor in council will publish points covering our entire coast line in his first list. It is possible that, depending on how our discussions proceed, he will publish several lists and that, in the first, base lines will come into force only for those areas in respect of which we have completed our talks.

Mr. Speaker, no one likes travelling through uncharted seas. If we accept this bill as it is now written, we allow this government to take the entire fishing industry on a cruise in the sea of uncertainty. The whole bill, in so far as my reading of it leads me to believe, is surrounded by a fog of indecision. It reminds me somewhat of the Liberal government. They do not know where they started from; they do not know where they are, and they do not know where they are going.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Crouse: For example, base lines can be drawn from the United States border along the coast of New Brunswick, past the harbour of Saint John, and then back again along the coast of Nova Scotia, thereby leaving the entire bay of Fundy outside the territorial seas of Canada. Conversely, a base line can be drawn from the United States border to cape Fourchu, completely sealing off the bay of Fundy and St. Mary's bay, thereby conserving the sardine and scallop industry in the bay of Fundy and the new scallop beds and the inshore fisheries of St. Mary's bay, as these waters would then become part of Canada's internal, or national waters.

I could give the house other examples, but I believe the most important co-ordinates with which we are concerned at this time are those to be used in the Newfoundland-Cape Breton area. I believe, and the Conservative party supports the principle, that the base line should be drawn from cape North to St. Paul island and then to cape Ray in Newfoundland. A base line should also be drawn from cape Freels, Newfoundland, to cape Bauld and then to Labrador. This action would seal off the valuable fisheries resources around Bonavista-Twillingate—and this should be of considerable interest to another maritime member, the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pickersgill)—

Mr. Prittie: Winnipeg.

Mr. Crouse: —Notre Dame bay, and especially the fishing banks in the gulf of St. Lawrence. Bradell bank near the Magdalen islands, Orphan and Natashquin cod banks off Quebec, Centre bank off Labrador and the banks around Anticosti island, would all be protected. Mr. Speaker, I am not advocating that we draw an iron curtain between Nova Scotia and Newfoundland, but I sincerely believe that, if the waters of the gulf of St. Lawrence are classed as Canada's national inland waters, it will be the greatest forward step taken toward conservation of our fisheries resources in the history of this nation. This action would provide a giant spawning ground for all types of fish, and it would come entirely under the control of the Canadian government.

Since most of the sealing operations are also conducted in this area, it would also give the Canadian government complete control over this industry, which has been very much in the limelight during the past few months as a result of the methods used to catch the seals. There should be little objection raised by other nations to these changes, because they would indirectly benefit from our conservation measures. At present any conservation measures carried out on the high seas are completely under the control of the international commission for the north Atlantic fisheries. When we consider the pressure placed upon the ships operating on our offshore banks to bring back suitable catches, it is questionable whether they are following the recommendations of the commission. We must remember that some of these countries fish for food while we fish for profit.

Some evidence has been submitted that would indicate that fishing nets have been used with a mesh so small a sardine could not escape. We cannot, as Canadians, enforce regulations governing the methods to be used for catching fish on the high seas. However, if we seal off the gulf of St. Lawrence as a giant spawning area, and classify this large body of water as Canada's national waters, the offshore banks will eventually benefit from our conservation measures.

As I stated earlier, the co-ordinates to be used when implementing this measure are of vital importance, not only to the future of our fishing industry but also to about nine international air lines which are concerned at the immense powers granted to this government or to future governments by this bill. As clause 5 of Bill No. S-17 now reads, the government could by order in council establish geographical co-ordinates which are far out in the ocean. This, of course, would cause international repercussions and would be difficult to enforce, but in the meantime great damage would be done. As this bill is now worded, notwithstanding the fact that its prime purpose is to assist the Canadian fishing industry, it could have a very serious effect on the operation of foreign international air lines flying across the north Atlantic ocean outside of the present territorial jurisdiction of Canada.

Canadian law on the subject of the operation and control of aircraft is set forth in the federal Aeronautics Act. The extent of this Canadian law is defined in the key operative sections of the act, which are sections 3 and 4. In each of these sections, in so far as foreign aircraft are concerned, the extent of the Canadian control is limited to flights over Canada and the territorial waters of Canada. This is consistent with international law and international conventions that have been entered into and to which Canada has been a signatory. Also under international law the territorial waters of a state—for the purposes of aeronautical law have been restricted to the customary three miles from the shore line. While the width of the territorial sea will still remain three nautical miles under this bill, I would point out that the inward point of measurement has been altered. The new definition of a territorial sea adopts the straight base line system for the purpose of measuring the width of the territorial sea at any given point on the coast line of Canada.

But where are these base lines to be drawn? This is what the bill states in clause 5 (1), (2) and (3), and I should like to place it on record:

(1) The governor in council may, by order in council, issue one or more lists of geographical co-ordinates of points from which base lines may be determined and may, as he deems necessary, amend such lists.

(2) In respect of any area for which geographical co-ordinates of points have been listed in a list issued pursuant to subsection (1) and subject to any exceptions in the list for the use of the low water line along the coast as the base line between given points, base lines are straight lines joining the consecutive geographical co-ordinates of points so listed.

(3) In respect of any other area and until such time as geographical co-ordinates of points have, for such other area, been listed in a list issued pursuant to subsection (1), base lines remain those applicable immediately before the coming into force of this section.

It is in the method of determining the geographical co-ordination of points as outlined in clause 5 that the problem will arise in so far as its applicability to the Aeronautics Act is concerned.

These co-ordinates, Mr. Speaker, are to be determined by the government by order in council. As I read the bill, there are no restrictions setting forth any method to be followed in selecting these points; in fact, a particular point could be a fixed location on water.

The minister of external affairs has stated that it was not possible to divulge the geographical co-ordinates that will be chosen in order to establish the location of the straight base line because of pending negotiations between the Canadian government and the governments of other affected countries.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Does my hon. friend not agree with that?

Mr. Crouse: But he says: "Have patience. I am optimistic that everything will work out right, even though we have not yet been able to settle all outstanding questions, and in certain areas our points of view do not coincide".

This bill, Mr. Speaker, tells us nothing about the future territorial sea and fishing zones of Canada. The government has to date made no commitment, and they can fix the geographical co-ordinates wherever they see fit, whenever they see fit. This bill is as indefinite as the pensions bill. It is as indefinite as the redistribution bill to fix the boundaries of our constituencies. It is as indefinite as the flag issue. It is as indefinite as everything which this government has brought before the house.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): May I ask my hon. friend, having in mind that he represents fishermen, whether he disagrees with the course the government is following? Would he answer that question?

Mr. Crouse: Mr. Speaker, I would be happy to answer any question as soon as I have finished my remarks. My time is limited and I gave the minister a few minutes of my time last evening. Clause 5 as presently worded—

Mr. Robichaud: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order; in order to keep the debate in order is it according to the rules of the house to discuss a bill clause by clause on second reading?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It is not my understanding that the hon. member is discussing the bill clause by clause. I understood he was discussing the general principle of the bill, although I concede it is very difficult to do this without referring sometimes to specifics in the bill. I do not feel that the hon. member was out of order.

Mr. Crouse: Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

As section 5 is presently worded, one geographical co-ordinate could be taken on Sable island. Sable island is Canadian territory and is located approximately 100 miles off the coast of Nova Scotia. If this was done, an area approximately 100 miles wide off a great part of the Nova Scotia coast would be considered to be Canadian territorial seas for the purpose of the Aeronautics Act, and would make foreign aeroplanes flying over this area subject to Canadian jurisdiction. It is important to note that at present many foreign aeroplanes flying between the eastern United States and Europe pass through the air space lying between Halifax and Sable island. As the minister is no doubt aware, these aeroplanes leaving New York fly above the coast of Nova Scotia near a point in Newfoundland, and thence across the Atlantic to European destinations.

The present government might quite properly deny that they had any intention of using Sable island as a geographical co-ordinate. However, as clause 5 is now worded, any future government could make such a choice by order in council without having to come back to parliament for amending legislation. If this came to pass, it can readily be seen how this could cause international complications; and I believe the naming of these co-ordinates at present would assist the government—and this is the answer to the question put to me a moment ago by the minister of external affairs—rather than delay the negotiations as suggested by the minister.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): My hon. friend has not studied this matter carefully.

Mr. Crouse: In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I hope these suggestions will be given careful consideration by the minister and that he will spell out the geographical co-ordinates in order to provide a clearcut picture of the benefits of this bill to the Canadian fishing industry and the aeronautics industry; and by removing the veil of secrecy, improve the international relations between Canada and other countries.

Hon. H. J. Robichaud (Minister of Fisheries): Mr. Speaker, I have listened with great attention to the remarks made by the hon. member for Queens-Lunenburg (Mr. Crouse). He has referred to the recommendations made by the Fisheries Council of Canada, an organization which represents the Canadian fishing industry from coast to coast. As was stated by my colleague, the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Martin) when he introduced the bill, the discussions which have taken place so far with the ten countries interested in fishing in Canadian waters or in proximity to the Canadian shore, were based on the representations which were made to the government on January 28, 1963 by the council.

On April 20 of this year, while the Fisheries Council of Canada was having its annual meeting in Charlottetown, I had the opportunity of meeting the executive of this council. I want to state to the house that I received unanimous approval from the Fisheries Council of Canada of the action being taken by the government with regard to the 12 mile limit.

The hon. member for Queens-Lunenburg has made reference to Russian, Spanish and Portuguese vessels which will be fishing in proximity to the Canadian shore even though the 12 mile limit is introduced. It is true that they will have the right to fish outside of the 12 mile limit, and there are a number of fishing banks located outside of the 12 mile limit which are being frequented not only by Canadian fishermen but by fishermen from a number of foreign countries.

But the hon. member for Queens-Lunenburg, who is familiar with the fishing industry and has a personal interest, also knows that the 13 countries represented on the international commission of the north Atlantic fisheries, including all the countries operating on these banks which have been referred to by the hon. member, are subject to certain regulations and conventions for the conservation and preservation of our fisheries. This year the annual meeting of the international commission of the north Atlantic fisheries will take place in Hamburg during the month of June.

The hon. member has referred to the seal operation. As I have stated in the house before, and we have given notice already to this effect, we want the seal fishery of the north Atlantic outside of the 12 mile limit to come under the protocol to ICNAF in order that we can have regulations which will be observed for the preservation and conservation of the seal herds which mean so much to a large number of fishermen of the Atlantic coast.

When this bill was before the other place a representative of the Fisheries Council of Canada answered a number of questions asked him by members of the other place and he stated that they were satisfied with the action taken by the government. In one breath the hon. member for Queens-Lunenburg says that we are going too far. He is afraid of retaliation by our friends and neighbours, the Americans. In the next breath he says we should define immediately all the co-ordinates. The fact is that we have been negotiating on a 12 mile limit for the last seven or eight months. We have had a number of meetings with different countries, and it was generally agreed by the Canadian representative and the representatives of the other countries involved that it would not be proper to take a unilateral position now by defining specifically what the co-ordinates should be.

When the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) announced in the house on June 4 last that it was the intention of the government to take action, he made it very clear that such unilateral action would be taken after discussions with the countries involved. I should like to quote part of the last paragraph of his remarks, as found on page 621 of Hansard, in which he said:

> He also called attention to the "historic" and treaty fishing rights of the U.S.A., and I assured him—

He is referring to his meeting with the late President Kennedy at Hyannis Port:

> —that these rights would be taken into account. Discussions will be held with the United States with a view to determining the nature and extent of the U.S.A. rights and interests which may be affected by the action which Canada is taking. Discussions will also be opened as soon as possible with other countries affected, and it is our hope and belief that we will be able to reach agreement with such countries on mutually satisfactory arrangements.

This is the position that Canada has taken after having been unsuccessful in obtaining a multilateral agreement on the law of the sea. I am not complaining because the previous government could not succeed in obtaining such agreement. They were not alone in this regard. There were a number of other countries in the same boat. But when we saw it was impossible to come to such an agreement, in order to prevent powerful foreign countries such as the U.S.S.R., Japan and others establishing historic rights which are recognized internationally and then having to deal with those countries as we are dealing today with other countries that really do have such historic rights, we decided that the time had come for Canada to take action, and we have notified the countries involved accordingly.

Negotiations are now under way. We have completed the first phase of negotiations and we are convinced that we will arrive at a satisfactory agreement. In order to do this it was important that the government should not only make known its intention to proceed with the establishment of a 12 mile fishing zone but that it should be given proper, enabling legislation which would provide the government of the country with the power to proceed with the establishment of such a zone.

Mr. Crouse: Would the minister permit a question?

Mr. Robichaud: Certainly.

Mr. Crouse: He mentioned a moment ago that the resolution was being brought in in accordance with the recommendation of the Fisheries Council of Canada. In checking their brief I note that on page 7 of the proposal by the fisheries council they urge the government of Canada, having reached an understanding with the United States and France and having determined a policy with regard to other nations not having historic rights with Canada, to then make a unilateral declaration. In view of that recommendation would the minister tell the house why the legislation was brought in before these negotiations were completed?

Mr. Robichaud: Mr. Speaker, the Fisheries Council of Canada made it very clear that it was their intention that Canada should make a unilateral declaration with regard to Canadian national waters and a straight base line, once an understanding had been reached with France and the United States, and they also refer in another part of the brief to other countries. This is exactly what we have been doing. We have met here with representatives of these countries. We have met with them on different occasions and we have made known to them what our intentions are. We have made known to them that it is our intention to arrive at some mutual understanding on these matters. Later in my remarks I will answer more directly the question just asked by the hon. member.

I will not attempt in my reply to deal specifically with all the points which have been raised so far in the debate. Most of these questions were answered by the Secretary of State for External Affairs when he introduced the bill for second reading. Furthermore, as the bill will be referred to the standing committee on marine and fisheries there will be further opportunity to go into a detailed examination of its provisions.

Although there are objections from the other side of the house, there seems to be support in principle at least for the action of the government, and the differences that have arisen have to do chiefly with the means of achieving the objectives sought by the bill now under discussion.

One of the main objections, which has been raised by several hon. members, refers to the fact that authority is given to the governor in council to determine the points from which straight base lines may be drawn, without any indication having been given as to how the government proposes to exercise this authority. The Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Martin) has already indicated that the recommendations of the Fisheries Council of Canada, which are very explicit on this point, are being used as a basis for current negotiations. Our only aim, our main aim, is to arrive at an agreement which will assure our own fishermen of the best protection possible while respecting international understanding and the good relations which Canada has with all countries in the world, particularly with our neighbours to the south.

Mr. Douglas: May I ask the minister a question?

Mr. Robichaud: Yes.

Mr. Douglas: Would he agree that the house would be in a better position to pass this legislation if the actual co-ordinates were known so we would know that the minister's statement had been carried out and that the lines drawn actually did safeguard the interests of our fishermen, rather than leaving it to legislation by order in council?

Mr. Robichaud: I tried to make it clear earlier that although the co-ordinates are not specified in detail, I am sure every member of this house who is interested in this legislation has read the brief presented by the Fisheries Council of Canada and has seen the maps which were attached to that brief. As I said earlier, these are the lines that we are using as a basis for our negotiations.

[Mr. Robichaud.]

As I mentioned a few moments ago, the Prime Minister stated that we intended to take this unilateral position after discussions with the countries involved. If we have met with some objections, some of these objections might be based exactly on certain of these co-ordinates. But I want to assure hon. members of this house that we have taken a definite stand on this matter, and this might be one of the reasons our negotiations are taking so much time. We are endeavouring to come to a mutual understanding which we all agree will facilitate the implementation of this legislation.

I should like at this time to refer to the report of the federal-provincial conference on fisheries development which was held last January here in Ottawa, and at which the ministers responsible for fisheries development in all the provinces participated. The report states, and I quote:

> The provincial representatives unanimously support the action of the government of Canada to protect our fisheries through the establishment of a 12 mile exclusive fishing zone measured from a straight base line from headland to headland and inclusion of such waters as the bay of Fundy, the gulf of St. Lawrence, Dixon's entrance, Queen Charlotte sound and Hecate strait as Canadian territorial waters.

How much clearer can I be at this time?

Mr. Howard: May I ask the minister a question?

Mr. Robichaud: Yes.

Mr. Howard: May I ask him whether those waters to which he referred in his quotation from the report of the federal-provincial conference on fisheries, the bay of Fundy, the gulf of St. Lawrence, Dixon's entrance, Queen Charlotte sound, and Hecate strait, will be contained within the 12 mile fishing zone?

Mr. Robichaud: I just want to repeat what I have said earlier. This is the position that Canada is taking. This is the basis of our discussions with the countries involved.

Mr. Howard: But the minister is not at this time saying that these waters will be contained within our fishing zone?

Mr. Robichaud: I am not in a position to determine at this time what action will be taken two months or three months from now when the negotiations have been completed. The government will then be in a position to take a definite stand. As has been stated by my colleague, the Secretary of State for External Affairs, as soon as this legislation is passed, as soon as we are able to come to an agreement for certain areas, it is the intention of the government to proceed immediately.

I am sure every hon. member will understand that there could be some international problems created in certain areas. I cannot determine now exactly what position will be taken before negotiations are completed. But I want to assure the house that the position that we are taking now, the position we have placed before the other countries, is based on the statement I have just read from the report of the federal-provincial fisheries conference. I want to repeat that these recommendations of the fisheries council and of the provinces are the basis of negotiations with the countries whose fishing interests would be affected by the Canadian action.

Mr. Olson: Will the minister permit a question?

Mr. Robichaud: I wonder if after this question further questions could be delayed until I conclude my remarks?

Mr. Olson: Can the minister indicate how long the government is going to continue these negotiations with other countries who are interested before Canada does take the unilateral action he says is going to be taken?

Mr. Robichaud: I want to make it clear, as has been made known, that we are proceeding immediately to complete negotiations with these countries. We expect to meet with them as soon as possible. The fishing zones will be applied immediately after proclamation, but in so far as Canada taking action towards those interested countries is concerned, we have made it clear that this will be done after our negotiations are completed.

I cannot determine now exactly what the results of such negotiations will be. As I have said, some countries may have stronger objections than others. Some countries may not agree to the proposals that we have placed before them. But I have every reason to believe that the final negotiations, the final agreement will be satisfactory to all interested in the fishing industry. There are some hon. members who have taken the position that negotiations with other countries should have been completed before the introduction of this bill.

In this connection, I would point out that this would be normal procedure if conventions were being negotiated with these countries. I could give as an example the Columbia treaty. As the Secretary of State for External Affairs has already pointed out, this method has been tried by successive Canadian governments since about 1956 and it has not been possible to get an agreement on a multilateral basis. We are now proceeding, therefore, on a different basis. We have a unilateral approach coupled—I want to clarify this—with arrangements of agreements with countries being affected by our action. This unilateral approach would be ineffective without having the appropriate legislation to carry it out. A delay in this legislation would weaken our position and make our negotiations much more difficult. It would do nothing else but result in an indefinite delay. We are, therefore, trying to avoid as much delay as possible so that we can have the 12 mile limit implemented as soon as possible.

Mr. Chatterton: Will the minister permit a question?

Mr. Robichaud: I would prefer when I am through with my remarks, but I will allow this one now.

Mr. Chatterton: Can the minister say how the passage of this bill will assist in the negotiations?

Mr. Robichaud: That is what I have been trying to explain for the last five minutes. We want to show that this government has the power, as authorized by the parliament of Canada, to proceed with this unilaterally, which it is our intention to do. This is what this bill will do, and at the same time it will take care of certain other acts which have been mentioned, and which are included in the second part of the bill.

It will also establish a different approach so far as the territorial sea is concerned. It is true the territorial sea will be limited to three miles, but instead of following the sinuosity of the coast the territorial sea will be based on a three mile area, on a line drawn from headland to headland, and this alone would be of tremendous protection to our inshore fisheries.

Mr. Barnett: The minister has been arguing that the passage of this bill at this time would strengthen the position of the government in negotiations. I would like to ask him why he considers that it would not further strengthen our negotiations if the bill specifically set out the demarcation lines?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Because you would be giving your whole case away.

Mr. Robichaud: If the bill were specific on every co-ordinate how could we deal with countries that are interested? It would mean nothing else but that we were taking a unilateral position notwithstanding what the results would be, and we have to deal with many countries, some of which have treaty rights, others have historic rights, and others again claim historic rights, which we may not agree they have.

This is what we are trying to do. We are trying to come to mutual agreement with those countries on those points which are being raised in the negotiations.

There is another point I should like to deal with, and which has been raised by some hon. members. It is to the effect that certain factions of the industry, particularly the united fishermen and allied workers union of British Columbia, have been denied the opportunity of making their views known on the subject. To this I can say that as far as the government is concerned the views of the united fishermen and allied workers union have been made known on several occasions.

We had representations on this subject by mail, and a brief was submitted by the union to the federal-provincial conference last January. I am also certain that most of the members of the standing committee on marine and fisheries, and particularly those representing the British Columbia constituencies, have been duly informed about the British Columbia fishermens unions position.

Furthermore, there will be an opportunity of hearing any group interested in presenting its views when the bill is referred to the standing committee on marine and fisheries following the second reading. I want to assure the house that if this particular group so desires, it will be made possible for them, subject to a decision of the committee, to appear and express their views on the matter.

Again I want to refer to the concern expressed earlier by the hon. member for Queens-Lunenburg (Mr. Crouse) in relation to our traditional fisheries markets, particularly in the United States. Seeing that the interests of the United States fishermen in the areas affected by the establishment of the 12 mile fishing zone and straight base lines are being fully recognized, and I would hope my hon. friend agrees with me on this position, it is difficult to see how the question of retaliation by the United States should even arise.

[Mr. Barnett.]

At this point I may add that in many areas on both coasts, on the Pacific coast and on the Atlantic coast, our own Canadian fishermen are also concerned about certain privileges which they would like to retain in United States waters.

Mr. Crouse: Mr. Speaker, I am very grateful to the minister to have that assurance on the record. I hope that in my remarks I made it quite clear my concern was for the east coast fishing industry where 70 per cent of the catch must be sold in the United States. I am very grateful to the minister for his indication that concurrence has been reached with the United States, that they will continue to fish in the traditional waters in which they have always fished, and that there is no possible chance of retaliation from the United States over this.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): That is right.

Mr. Crouse: I am pleased to hear the minister agree with me on this subject.

Mr. Robichaud: National interest and international good will are to be considered in establishing new extended limits along our Canadian coast lines. While Canada is spending what it does for conservation, for the propagation of species, the extension of the limits to 12 miles and the establishment of a fishing zone seem to me to be sound business. It is, in fact, the kind of action which can be expected by other countries in similar positions. Under these circumstances the more amicable road of negotiation seems desirable and preferable. What we are doing now is to introduce by unilateral action what it has been impossible to achieve, as I said earlier, by international or multilateral convention.

I should now like to refer to the treaty rights which certain countries have in certain of our waters, and to the historic rights which are claimed by others. As has already been stated on several occasions by my colleague, the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Martin), and myself, United States fishermen will be permitted to engage in their traditional fishing operations on both coasts.

On the Atlantic coast the United States has treaty rights in addition to claims of historic fishing, and for this reason alone is entitled to special consideration in any arrangements on fishing within areas that will become either internal waters or the contiguous fishing zone.

On the Pacific coast, where Canada and the United States are the only two countries whose fishermen operate in the areas off the Canadian coast line, we have a long history of co-operation with the United States in the development of fisheries of principal concern to the two countries, such as salmon and halibut.

These fisheries have been brought up to a sustained yield level and are being maintained, and in one case, that of salmon, increased by co-operative measures of the two countries and by the restrictions accepted by the fishermen of Canada and the United States for a number of years. Because of this historic intermingling of fishing operations, as well as the intermingling of the stocks of fish concerned, and the long established history of joint conservation measures, it is only fair that the interests of United States fishermen be recognized, and this applies on both coasts.

I want to make it clear, Mr. Speaker, that this recognition would be contingent on United States recognition of reciprocal treatment to be accorded to our fishermen by the United States, should it decide to assume jurisdiction over areas off the United States coasts beyond the three mile limit, where our fishermen would be exploiting any stocks of fish. It is not our intention to tell our neighbours that we want them outside the 12 mile limit when we know—and I repeat what I have already said—that a number of our own fishermen on both coasts are also interested in fishing in United States waters. Had Canada been successful in its attempts during the past ten years to establish a 12 mile fishing zone by way of a multilateral convention, the normal procedure would have been for the government to seek from parliament implementing legislation following the signing of the convention. As this was not possible, the alternative of proceeding by way of unilateral action, coupled with negotiations with countries having fishing interests and this requires legislative authority. A mere declaration by Canada would not suffice. It would amount only to a declaration of intent and such a declaration on behalf of the government has already been made by the Prime Minister. I refer hon. members to the statement made on June 4, 1963. Legislation has now been introduced to give effect to that declaration, to show the countries interested that not only is it the intention of Canada to proceed with legislation establishing a 12 mile limit but that Canada has taken a decision on the matter and passed enabling legislation to establish a territorial sea and fishing zone. Enactment by parliament of this enabling legislation will be an indication of the national will expressed through parliament. At the same time, the bill provides the necessary flexibility to enable the government to take account of the final arrangements with the countries with which we are negotiating.

Reference has been made to the difficulty of enforcing such regulations. I might say to the hon. member that the adoption of the 12 mile fishing zone and the straight base line system will not add materially to the difficulties of enforcement. In some cases enforcement will be rendered easier. With the publication of charts delineating base lines it will be easier both for foreign fishing vessels and for our patrol vessels to get their bearings. Some difficulties of enforcement may be encountered but I may say we are prepared to meet such difficulties. Under the existing law it is almost impossible for Canada to enforce such regulations. We have had experience in recent months of cases where foreign vessels have been apprehended by Canadian patrols. The matter has come before the courts and we have found that we have difficulties in referring to specific legislation which determines whether such vessels were operating inside or outside the three mile limit.

At the present time we have a fleet of some 26 vessels which could be used to patrol both coasts. We have three large vessels on the Atlantic coast—the Cape Freels, the Cygnus, and the Arctica in addition to 11 vessels of medium capacity. On the Pacific coast we have four larger vessels—the Laurier, the Howie, the Kitimat and the Hunter besides eight vessels of medium capacity. We also employ air patrols on both coasts, and have exclusive use of two Beavers at all times during the fishing season on the west coast. On the east coast the use of helicopter S-55 plus a fixed wing aircraft is available as and when required. Again, I wish to assure the hon. member for Queens-Lunenburg (Mr. Crouse) that the matter he has raised in connection with air lines will not be a problem when the 12 mile limit is brought into effect.

I hope hon. members will realize the position in which the fishing industry of this country finds itself. I hope they will agree that it is time for Canada to go ahead and to take this unilateral position for the protection of our fishing industry.

Mr. Winch: I should like to ask the minister if he can tell the house something about a technical aspect of this subject either from his own knowledge or from information which I presume he has received from his colleague the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Martin). Can he tell us whether or not the extension of the territorial water to 12 miles includes control and authority over the continental shelf, as well as, possibly, ownership?

Mr. Robichaud: No. It has been made very clear—and this has been recognized by international law—that the territorial area will not be changed. It will still be limited to three miles, lines being drawn from headland to headland. This bill is to establish territorial sea and fishing zones only. It does not affect the continental shelf. It establishes a fishing zone which will be nine miles from the outer line of the territorial sea.

An hon. Member: But that covers the shelf.

Mr. Winch: That is my very point. I do not wish to get into a debate about this, and if I can have this information it might save me the necessity of making a speech. Can the minister tell us why the territorial sea does not cover the continental shelf? According to this bill it is an extension of the territorial sea.

Mr. Robichaud: I have made it clear that there will be no change in the definition of the territorial shelf. The area from the outer line of the territorial sea to the outer line of the 12 mile fishing zone, a distance of nine miles, will not involve the continental shelf, but will establish a fishing zone.

Mr. Winch: But the first three miles does.

Mr. Barry Mather (New Westminster): As the sponsor of Bill No. C-27, a bill to establish a 12 mile fishing limit which was put forward by the New Democratic party in this house—and, incidentally, I might say it was talked out at that time—I should like to say a few words on the legislation proposed by the government. Like several other members who have already spoken, I rise to take part in this debate as a member from the west coast, one who is concerned, just as the minister is concerned, with the welfare of the fishing industry and of its workers.

Both in the Atlantic and in the Pacific the establishment of a 12 mile fishing zone has long been sought as a means of conserving and harvesting our fishing resources. The measure before us in my view will not accomplish these objects. It is even true to say there are many in British Columbia connected with the industry who believe it may have an opposite effect. My study of the bill and my understanding of the explanations offered to us so far prompt me to make the following brief criticism of the clauses of this measure.

In clause 2 it is declared that any other act of parliament or any order or regulation made shall have a preferred legislative position and shall not be interfered with by the provisions of Bill No. S-17 unless Bill No. S-17 so states. This means that under the provisions of this legislation at present the United States, for example, will continue to have fishing rights in Canadian waters and nothing is being done in the legislation before us to phase out those rights or change them. Further, nations which claim historic fishing rights may also have that privilege protected, because section 4 of the Coastal Fisheries Protection Act states that the governor in council may issue permits for foreign vessels to fish in Canadian waters whether as a result of a treaty or for any other reason. This means, it seems to me, that our American friends, for example, on the Pacific coast will have continued freedom to troll or drag for fish right up to the three mile limit. In effect, their ability to do so will be decided in practice by whatever pressure is exercised upon our cabinet. This bill further determines that the territorial sea and the fishing zones will be drawn on the headland to headland principle. However, clause 5 leaves these arrangements entirely in the hands of the government to proclaim by order in council. In other words, the government could, by order in council, change a fishing area or move it in or move it out just about the way the tide comes in or goes out.

This to me is a very wishy-washy piece of legislation and there are many people connected with the fishing industry in British Columbia particularly who are not satisfied with it in its present terms. On that point, Mr. Speaker, I would like to read into the record briefly an editorial which appeared earlier this month in the Columbian, the New Westminster newspaper, which is headed, "Fisheries bill gutless". The article says:

> Canada's much vaunted 12 mile fisheries bill is becoming more denatured and gutless every day.

The article goes on to say:

> As debated so far, both the U.S. and France claim historic rights to continue fishing to the three mile limit. Only a few European countries would be restricted. In the Pacific, it is not known if Japan and Russia will honour the 12 mile limit, if the U.S. doesn't.
>
> Canada would be spineless if it did not enact the protective regulations it wants off its own shores.
>
> This means Canada would exclude everybody, including the U.S. and France, from fishing within the 12 mile limit, subject to a modest transition period. Exceptions would be separate, mutual localized agreements, as for sharing the Fraser river fisheries.

Mr. Robichaud: Mr. Speaker, would the hon. member permit a question.

Mr. Mather: Yes.

Mr. Robichaud: In view of the newspaper article which the hon. member has quoted, is he in favour of Canadian fishermen fishing in American waters being given the same treatment and being excluded altogether?

Mr. Mather: My answer is that if the minister and his department would take a more courageous stand in negotiating this treaty, there would be no danger of Canadians being excluded there. I think the minister should proceed in a much more courageous way than he has in the past on this question.

Mr. Robichaud: Has the hon. member any foundation for making that statement?

An hon. Member: Yes, you have no courage; that is the foundation.

Mr. Robichaud: You have not seen the treaty.

Mr. Mather: The New Democratic party cannot accept the legislation as presently proposed; consequently we have moved to have it referred to the standing committee on marine and fisheries for detailed consideration. I think this would be an excellent thing; I believe it would strengthen the minister's position if it were done. I think the minister is a very nice fellow, but he is far too easy a man to negotiate with the type of people concerned in this question. If this matter were referred to the standing committee of the house it could be studied in detail. We want to see a stronger stand and stronger measures taken which would help Canada and her fishing industry.

Mr. Robichaud: And end with nothing.

Mr. Mather: I urge members of the house to seriously consider this motion for the benefit of the fishing industry of Canada, and to vote for the motion to refer the matter to the standing committee on marine and fisheries.

Mr. G. L. Chatterton (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, I have only four or five minutes left. In that time I wish to indicate to the house the gist of my argument, and I will follow up my contentions with positive statements at a later date when the debate is resumed. With regard to this bill, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member who has just resumed his seat quoted a New Westminster newspaper as saying it is gutless. I would like to go one step further and say that this bill is a hoax; it is a gross deception. It is designed to accomplish two purposes: First, to make it appear that a promise made by the Liberal party in the last election campaign, and a promise made by the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) on June 4 last, are being kept; and second it is intended to make people believe that this government is in fact establishing a 12 mile fishing limit. That is going to be the gist of my argument.

On June 4 last the Prime Minister, as reported at page 621 of Hansard, said:

—the Canadian government has decided to establish a 12 mile exclusive fisheries zone along the whole of Canada's coast line as of mid-May, 1964, and to implement the straight base line system at the same time as the basis from which Canada's territorial sea and exclusive fisheries zone shall be measured.

In the first place this bill, according to clause 13, will come into force only when it has been proclaimed by governor in council, so that whatever might be in the bill will never become the law of Canada until it is proclaimed. That may never be. But in any case, even if it were proclaimed tomorrow, what does this bill provide for? Absolutely nothing of any consequence, except by way of statements and promises made in various places by members on the other side of the chamber and in the other place. If this bill were proclaimed tomorrow there would exist a 12 mile fishing zone measured from a base line; but there is no indication in the bill as to how this base line will be established. So that even proclamation of the bill would mean absolutely nothing whatsoever in so far as this 12 mile limit is concerned.

Then, Mr. Speaker, when we come to historic rights and traditional rights there is no indication whatsoever in the bill as to the extent to which these rights will be recognized. I asked the minister how this bill would help the negotiation of this matter, and the reply did not convince me in any event. I maintain that this bill is designed for two purposes only; that is, to make it appear that members on the other side of the chamber are fulfilling a promise they made and which obtained for them a great many votes in the last election, and second in order to hide the general failure of the government to produce what they have promised.

Mr. Speaker, may I call it five o'clock?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. It being five o'clock the house will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely notices of motions, public bills.

CANADIAN CONSTITUTION

COMMITTEE TO CONSIDER DIVISION OF LEGISLATIVE FUNCTIONS

On the order:

Mr. Asselin (Notre Dame de Grâce)—That a special committee be appointed to consider matters relating to the constitutional structure of Canada, desirable changes thereto and in particular, without limiting the generality of the foregoing, the proper division of legislative functions between levels of government; that the committee have power to send for persons and papers; that it report from time to time its findings and recommendations to the house; that standing order No. 67 be suspended in relation to the committee; and that it consist of 24 members to be designated at a later date.

Hon. J. Watson MacNaught (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, if I could have unanimous consent I would move that this notice of motion stand and retain its place on the order paper.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is that agreed?

Mr. Horner (Acadia): No, Mr. Speaker, there is not unanimous consent.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: If we do not have unanimous consent, this motion drops from the order paper. I understand there is not unanimous consent; therefore this motion drops from the order paper.

AGRICULTURAL STABILIZATION ACT

DEFICIENCY PAYMENTS ON CUMULATED REGIONAL PRICE BASIS

Mr. Reynold Rapp (Humboldt-Melfort-Tisdale) moved:

That, in the opinion of this house, the government should give consideration to amending the Agricultural Stabilization Act to:

(1) provide deficiency payments for eggs, hogs, etc., on a cumulated regional price basis rather than on a national weighted average price;

(2) have these deficiency payments made semi-annually instead of annually as at the present time.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I welcome the opportunity to introduce this resolution for debate. This is not the first time I have placed this resolution on the order paper. I placed it on the order paper in the last two or three sessions, but it never reached the debating stage, although it is of great importance to the egg producers and hog producers of Canada.

As you will see from the motion, it provides deficiency payments for eggs and hogs on a cumulated regional price basis rather than on a national weighted price. Second, it suggests that these deficiency payments be made semi-annually or quarterly, instead of annually as at the present time. This is very important to the egg producers, because when the weighted average price in Canada is calculated the producers on the prairies never receive a deficiency payment.

For the record I should like to point out that in 1962 the average price in Canada was 34 cents per dozen. At that time there was a deficiency payment allowance of one cent per dozen. One cent per dozen for grade A large was received across the country. In Saskatchewan the average price over the year was 28½ cents per dozen, and if the price had been calculated on a regional basis the producers would have received 5½ cents to bring them up to the 34 cents. Instead of that they received only one cent because the average national price was 33 cents.

It is very important that these averages be calculated on a regional basis because there are times when the price of eggs goes down quite a bit. I put a question to the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Hays) on this matter and received an answer today. As we all know, producers of eggs in Saskatchewan at the present time get as low as 17½ cents per dozen for their eggs. If the national average were 34 cents and deficiency payments were based on 34 cents, the farmer would be entitled to at least 13 to 15 cents per dozen. When the national average is taken across Canada and the price over the year in British Columbia and the west, or in Ontario, Montreal and the east, is 33 cents average, deficiency payments will amount to only one cent per dozen.

My argument is that we should pay the price calculated on a regional basis. Whether the regions are defined as the prairies, central Canada and then eastern Canada, or whether province by province, it is all the same. These deficiency payments should also be made, as I said, on a quarterly basis. Although my motion calls for a semi-annual basis, I should like to see them made quarterly. During the last two campaigns the Liberals, realizing that this was a problem, promised a quarterly payment made on a regional basis if they were put in power. So as not to deceive anyone about this, these statements were made on May 3. Therefore all parties seem to be in favour of making deficiency payments on a regional basis instead of on a national weighted average price.

That, in the opinion of this house, the government should give consideration to amending the Agricultural Stabilization Act to:

(1) provide deficiency payments for eggs, hogs, etc., on a cumulated regional price basis rather than on a national weighted average price;

(2) have these deficiency payments made semi-annually instead of annually as at the present time.

As far as hogs are concerned the matter is much more important. Everyone knows that in the fall when the farmers bring their hogs to the market prices are usually down. The farmers who are able to market their hogs in the spring always get a little better price. If deficiency payments are made on an annual basis it would mean that whatever deficiency payments were paid to the farmers who received low prices for their hogs in the fall they would be cancelled out by the payments received by the other farmers in the spring. This is an important issue. Promises were made by all parties during both election campaigns; this proposal has been advocated by farm organizations across the country; and I think that this is the time to pay attention to the question and to change the act. Actually, the stabilization board makes these payments from October 1 to September 30. That is the year for the calculation of these deficiency payments, and that is the year within which prices are averaged.

I am sure many other hon. members are interested in this very important proposal, Mr. Speaker, so I will not take up any more time in speaking to the matter. I conclude by urging on the Minister of Agriculture, under whose jurisdiction falls the stabilization board, to give consideration to this question; and in view of the fact that promises have been made by his party along the line I have suggested and the matter has been brought to his attention by members of other parties, I ask him to give serious consideration to making these payments on a quarterly basis.

[Translation]

Mr. Jean Berger (Montmagny-L'Islet): Mr. Speaker, I listened with much attention to the opening remarks of the hon. member for Humboldt-Melfort-Tisdale (Mr. Rapp) on the motion we are called upon to discuss today. I must admit that I found this motion very interesting and, at first sight, I thought it would greatly help the farm people in my riding. However, after studying it closely, and especially after making some inquiries, I had to change my mind for the following reasons. The motion reads as follows:

At present, the act provides that support prices will be established with respect to the nine following named commodities: hogs, cattle, sheep, eggs, butter, cheese, wheat, oats and barley not produced in the designated areas set up by the Canadian wheat board.

Under the act, the support prices are to be no less than 80 per cent of the average price for the ten previous years. The exact level, in terms of a percentage of the average for the ten previous years, may be set by the governor in council anywhere above 80 per cent but, as far as the named commodities are concerned, it must never be under 80 per cent.

[Text]

May I point out here, Mr. Speaker, that support is not limited to the nine named commodities. The act permits the governor in council to provide price support on any other agricultural products. At the present time there is a total of 18 commodities being supported under the act. In the case of products other than the nine named ones, the support can be set at any level which the governor in council determines.

The act also authorizes the governor in council to designate the grades of any product to which support will apply. In the administration of the act there are three methods of providing price support. One is known as the purchase method. Under this method the stabilization board is authorized to buy any products of the approved grades offered to it at the support price. Since the board, under this method of support, is an open buyer of all products offered to it, that is indeed, in my opinion, an effective way of maintaining the price of the product at not below the support level.

This method of support, however, has certain very serious difficulties attached to it which are referred to later. It has therefore been discarded gradually for most commodities and the stabilization board now supports the price of only two commodities by the purchase method, these being butter and cheese.

A second method of support, which has been used in a few instances, is by compensatory payments. There are direct payments on a unit of product. An illustration of this is the payment of 3.6 cents per pound which is made on first grade cheddar cheese under the dairy support program for the current year announced a few weeks ago.

The third method of price support, and now by far the most common one, is the deficiency payment method. Under this method, if the average price to producers over the support year falls below the support price a direct payment is made to producers for the difference between the two. In applying the deficiency payment method the support price is established on the basis of an average price for the whole area in which the commodity is produced. Thus, for products produced all over Canada the support price is a national one based on the average national price over the 10 year period. Similarly, the price which producers receive, and which is used for determining whether a deficiency payment is necessary, is calculated on the basis of a weighted average national price received by producers. If at the end of the support year that weighted average national price is less than the national support price a deficiency payment is made.

[Translation]

This motion would change this method of computation of deficiency payments and would also change the length of time provided for those payments. It would change the method of computation in the sense that it would replace the present national price basis by a regional price basis. In addition, payments would be made semi-annually ininstead of annually as at the present time.

I have already mentioned that the stabilization board has now discarded the system of price support through the purchase method, except for butter and cheese. The reason for that is, that serious difficulties were experienced with most commodities where the formula was applied. That method led to surpluses very hard to dispose of, put the government in the position of buyer and seller of farm products and upset the normal process of production and marketing.

That method is still applied in the case of butter and cheese, because up to now we have not found any satisfactory alternative. You will note, Mr. Speaker, that the motion refers specifically to pork and eggs. Those two commodities actually provided striking examples of the complete impracticability of the price support system through the purchase method I have just mentioned. About four years ago, the board stopped buying eggs and pork and since then, support has been provided through deficiency payments.

One of the main difficulties involved in the purchase method to support prices was, as I said earlier, the problem of marketing huge production surpluses. As long as the government remained an open buyer of all commodities offered, there was no restriction, no check on production. Finally, when the government suspended the application of the abovementioned method, it discovered that it had in stock over a hundred million pounds of tinned pork, and it has just found the necessary outlets for the final disposal of that considerable stock.

A second difficulty of the so-called purchase method, and this applies to the motion now under consideration, was that it removed all incentive to the sale of farm products to any other outlet than the government even at a fraction of a cent below the support price of the government. If the government offered to buy pork in Manitoba, for example, at a fixed price of 22 cents per pound for pork, grade A, it is evident that nobody would sell pork at 21.5 cents per pound, even if there was a demand. Therefore, that represented a very serious restriction to what I would call the normal flow of trade, and that restriction was removed by the program of deficiency payments.

[Text]

For the benefit of the hon. member for Humboldt-Melfort-Tisdale (Mr. Rapp) and other interested members may I say that any consideration of applying deficiency payments on a regional basis would have to be certain to have to avoid at the same time that same difficulty of interfering with the normal flow of trade, as I mentioned in French a moment ago. In most agricultural products there is a normal pattern and flow of trade. There are areas which produce more than they can consume, and others which are deficient naturally. Even these surplus and deficiency areas are by no means static. They change, and an area which is in a surplus position at one time may be short at another time. Any action by government which interferes with this normal flow of trade could lead to difficulties.

I should like to point out that a regional price support, even under deficiency payment, could remove the incentive from the people in that area to get the best possible price for their product in any market open to them.

They would know that regardless of how low the price was the government would make up the difference.

I will agree with many hon. members that the present method of price support may not be perfect. In fact, no country has yet found a perfect method of supporting the price of farm products. The present method of providing deficiency payments on an annual basis and on a national average price certainly may not protect fully against temporary difficulties in some regions. But it does prevent distortions in the normal flow of trade, permits production patterns to adjust themselves to changing circumstances and, finally, ensures that producers on the average will be compensated if the average national price over the year falls below the national support level.

[Translation]

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I have come to the conclusion that it would certainly be premature to comply with the hon. member's wishes and change over to a regional basis, unless and until a method can be found to guarantee that such a basis would not create more difficulties than it could remove.

In closing, I should like to congratulate the hon. member for having introduced this motion which, even if it is not accepted by the house, will at least have allowed us to clarify certain points and become better informed about the numerous difficulties facing the farmers. That will enable the government to continue its progressive work in the field of agriculture to the greatest advantage of the Canadian nation.

[Text]

Mr. H. A. Olson (Medicine Hat): Mr. Speaker, I want to offer a measure of support to the hon. member for Humboldt-Melfort-Tisdale (Mr. Rapp) with regard to his notice of motion which we are discussing this afternoon. I think his contention that support prices should be established on a regional basis rather than on the basis of a national weighted average is a good one. However, I will have to disagree with the contention that has been put forward by the hon. member for Montmagny-L'Islet (Mr. Berger) that there is a possibility of severe interference with the normal exchange of these commodities between regions. I think it is fair to say that, for the most part, what commodities are produced in a region, that is eggs, hogs and so on, are consumed in that region. I am not trying to confine this statement to a province or anything like that.

I remember back in the days when they had a floor price on hogs and they used the purchasing method to support the price of hogs. The Calgary market is the one with which I am most familiar. At that time the support price for hogs in the Calgary market was based on the Toronto price less the freight. Almost all of the hogs that were coming into Calgary, and I think this applies to Edmonton as well, were either consumed in Calgary or they went to the west coast. The price of hogs in Toronto had nothing to do with the situation at all. There was very little, if any, of that pork that went from the western region to Toronto, but this was the basis of the support price that was paid in that market.

I believe, Mr. Speaker, the same argument applies to a large extent to eggs and a number of other things. I am not going so far as to say that every egg or every pound of pork produced in a region is also consumed there. I feel, however, that the amount of these products exchanged between regions is so small in relation to the total volume it would not present a problem at all. I want to say that I believe it would be far more fair to have these prices established on the basis of regional prices than national ones.

I am wondering if the sponsor of this notice of motion has not inadvertently made a mistake in the wording of the second part of this resolution. It reads in part as follows:

> That, in the opinion of this house, the government should give consideration to amending the Agricultural Stabilization Act to:...
> (2) Have these deficiency payments made semi-annually instead of annually at the present time.

It would appear that the sponsor actually wants these cheques to be mailed twice a year, and I do not believe that is what he wants. I believe he wants to have the calculation made—

Mr. Rapp: Mr. Speaker, the intention was that the calculation should be made semi-annually or quarterly and the cheques could be issued at the end of the year, as was suggested during the campaign.

Mr. Olson: I thank the hon. member for clarifying that because, having heard his remarks, I believed that was what he intended. However, I believe he will have to agree that the wording of the paragraph does not lead one to believe the calculation should be made on the average prices that were in effect during the semi-annual period. The wording is that the payments should be made semi-annually. I believe there is some merit to this suggestion. We know that there are some wide fluctuations in prices, particularly of eggs. I think we could have a more uniform price base and provide more stability to the egg producing industry if we were to make these deficiency payments on the basis of prices calculated every six months or, as has been suggested, quarterly.

I do not want to go into a lot more detail on this matter this afternoon because I know there are a large number of members who want to speak on the subject. I do believe there is merit in the suggestion the hon. member has made. Furthermore, in answer to the previous speaker, I think that the additional benefits that would flow from this resolution would far outweigh the difficulties that the adoption of it may bring.

Mr. E. Nasserden (Rosthern): First of all, I should like to congratulate the hon. member for Humboldt-Melfort-Tisdale (Mr. Rapp) for bringing forward this resolution at this particular time. This problem has been with us for a number of years, going back almost to the time when the stabilization act was first passed by the Diefenbaker government. There have been repeated efforts on behalf of the producers of eggs to bring to the attention of the cabinet and the Department of Agriculture the problems of producers in various areas of Canada under certain circumstances.

Last week I was in my riding and eggs were selling at the wholesale level at about 16 cents to 17 cents per dozen. Many of the country stores were paying only 12 cents or 13 cents per dozen for eggs, and most of these were going into local consumption. I was very interested in the remarks made by the last speaker from the opposite side. I was rather surprised when he took a stand that was somewhat different from that taken by his party leader, the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson), during the last two election campaigns. He went from one end of this country to the other pledging something would be done to solve this problem.

I would remind members on the other side of the house that during the period when the present Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Diefenbaker) was prime minister, some of the members who now occupy the front benches pointed out to us the need for the kind of legislation that is being proposed today by the hon. member for Humboldt-Melfort-Tisdale. We wonder whether or not this was one of those things which the Prime Minister has described on one or two occasions as statements made during the heat of the election campaign. This matter may not seem to be very important to the Liberal party, to the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Hays) or to the Prime Minister, but it is important to those who are trying to make a living from the production of eggs in western Canada. I know of no part of western Canada that is feeling to a greater extent the full effect of the discrimination caused by the present regulations than the province of Saskatchewan.

I really believe the Minister of Agriculture would like to do something about this matter. I hope that he will try to stir those who are near him on the treasury benches to make this minor change in the regulations that could give hope to a number of people who presently do not enjoy hope. What has been said about hogs, of course, is equally true. At the moment it does not apply because prices are not in that particular relationship. All we are asking is that this government do some of the things they said they would do when they were in opposition, some of the things many of us felt would be done as soon as this legislation had reached a stage where those in charge could realize that a change from the original regulations was necessary and vital to the success of the act.

Mr. Patrick Tobin Asselin (Richmond-Wolfe): Mr. Speaker, I would like to congratulate the hon. member for Humboldt-Melfort-Tisdale (Mr. Rapp) for the initiative he has taken in presenting this motion.

I have done some research on the regional versus the national basis of providing deficiency payments on egg and hog prices, and with the help and co-operation of the stabilization board. I have come to the following conclusions. Since the deficiency payment method of supporting egg and hog prices was introduced, representations have been made to the stabilization board to the effect that the deficiency payments should be made on a regional rather than on a national basis. It has been claimed that producers in certain parts of the country would have received considerably larger amounts if the payments had been made on a regional basis.

In view of these representations the board has undertaken to calculate and compare the results of using both bases in the case of the egg support program. In this study separate calculations have been made for each of the nine provinces, and for Canada as a whole. This makes it possible to see what the results would have been if the payments had been made on a provincial as well as on a national basis.

In investigating this matter the first thing to remember is that, regardless of which basis of administration we wish to consider, it is necessary to calculate two particular prices. In every case it is necessary to determine the prescribed or support price and the weighted average market price. Thus, in order to provide deficiency payments on a provincial basis, we must calculate the support price and the weighted average market price for each province. Any deficiency payment that would be paid to the producers of a certain province would be the difference between the support price and the weighted average market price of that particular province.

The following two tables show the base price, the support price, the weighted average market price, and the deficiency payment for each of nine provinces, and for Canada considered as a national unit, for the egg marketing years 1961-62 and 1962-63. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask permission of the house to have these figures accepted as read, as I do not want to take all the time of the house on this matter. These are figures supplied to me by the stabilization board, comparing the prices and the results of their tests.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Batten): Maybe the hon. member would be good enough to give me the source of his figures?

Mr. Asselin (Richmond-Wolfe): These are the comparisons of the amount of deficiency payable to producers of grade A large eggs in 1961-62, using regional and national bases of calculation, and they show the same thing for the year 1962-63.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Batten): Does the house give unanimous consent to have them printed in Hansard?

Mr. Rapp: Are they too long to read into the record, because we are interested to know this while the motion is before the house for debate?

Mr. Asselin (Richmond-Wolfe): If the hon. member does not wish to have his motion passed, because this is going to take extra time, I shall read the table, but I was trying to help him.

Mr. Rapp: I am not objecting to it.

Mr. Asselin (Richmond-Wolfe): I am just referring to the figures prepared by the stabilization board.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Batten): Does the house agree that these figures be printed in Hansard?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): Would the hon. member name the person who did the calculating?

Mr. Asselin (Richmond-Wolfe): These are statistics that have come from the stabilization board and it would save a lot of time if I did not read them in the house but had them printed in Hansard.

An examination of table I shows several things. In the first place it indicates that if the deficiency payments had been made on a provincial basis, farmers in the three prairie provinces and Prince Edward Island would have received a fraction of a cent per dozen more than they actually did; that farmers in Quebec would have received two cents per dozen more, and that those in the remaining four provinces would have received from a fraction of a cent to a cent a dozen less.

It is also evident that payment on this basis would have meant that producers in Quebec would have received a payment of three cents a dozen, whereas those in New Brunswick would not have received any payment at all. It may also be noted that, if payment had been made on a provincial basis, the amount would have been different in every province. This is in contrast to the complete uniformity of payment which exists when payments are made on a national basis.

Again it can be seen that if payments had been made on a provincial basis no producer in any part of the prairie provinces could possibly have received more than $24 extra income. This could only have happened in Alberta where a producer could have obtained .6 cents a dozen on a maximum of 4,000 dozens.

Finally, it is clear from an examination of the table that the mere act of shifting from a national to a regional basis cannot possibly remove more than part of any inequality or unfairness that may exist in the distribution of deficiency payments. Moreover, this must be the case, regardless of the size or number of regions that might be chosen. While a division into nine regions corresponding with nine provinces might result in a slightly more equitable distribution, it certainly could not ensure anything like complete equity. The truth is that in order to get complete justice or equity in this matter, the calculations would have to be made on an individual farm basis, rather than on either a national or regional basis.

It is obvious, of course, that any program which involved the calculation of a separate payment for every individual farm would be hopelessly unwieldy, extremely expensive, and virtually impossible from the administrative standpoint. This last statement points to a very important reason for not using any regional basis of payment, namely the fact that it would greatly increase the complexity, the cost and the general difficulty of administration. Moreover, these difficulties would multiply as the number of administrative regions increased.

On the basis of ordinary logic, as well as the data shown in table I, I submit that a truly remarkable degree of justice can be obtained without resorting to anything more complex, and from an administrative point of view, more difficult and expensive, than the national basis of payment.

However, regardless of which basis is or should be used, it seems desirable to try to explain precisely why the payments tend to be distributed differently when a regional basis of payment is used than when the national basis is used. For example, why would the use of the regional basis have increased the payment going to producers in each prairie province by a fraction of a cent a dozen, as indicated in table I? In order to explain this it is necessary to remember that the national weighted average market price is a price which reflects the quantity sold as well as the price received in each and every section of the country. It is especially important to realize that the variation in the quantity marketed in the different sections of the country played a very important part in determining the actual level of this national average price. In order to realize the real significance of this factor, it should be noted that there are approximately twice as many grade A large eggs marketed in eastern as in western Canada.

So, not only are eggs normally sold at a higher price in the east than in the prairies, but far more eggs are sold in the east than in the west. Therefore, in determining the national weighted average market price, the price-raising effect of the larger eastern marketings is considerably greater than the price-reducing effect of the smaller western marketings. The net result is that the national average price is raised a little, simply because more eggs are marketed in the east. And, to the extent that this price is raised, the amount of the deficiency payment is reduced.

In connection with table 2, it will be noted that the relationship between the support and market prices in the year 1962-63 was such that no deficiency payment was called for—and this whether the regional or national basis of administration had been used. Of course, this is because the average market price for the year is higher than the support price in every province, as well as in Canada as a whole. In addition to all the other reasons for not making the payments on a regional basis, there is the very practical difficulty of deciding how many regions there should be, and where a region should begin and end. If the regional basis were adopted, rational procedure would probably result in dividing the country into at least four or five regions. Apart from the fact that any such division would add greatly to the administrative difficulties, it should be realized that it would undoubtedly lead to serious confusion on the part of producers themselves.

Mr. G. D. Clancy (Yorkton): I should like to congratulate the hon. member for Humboldt-Melfort-Tisdale (Mr. Rapp) for bringing this matter before the house once again. Before I go further, I might say I challenge the statistics used by the hon. member who has just spoken. He spoke of $24. Well, 4,000 dozen eggs at 6 cents a dozen, comes to $240, if my mental arithmetic is correct, not $24, and $240 represents a considerable sum to most of my farmers. I may say I am sceptical about the rest of the hon. member's statistics too, and I am sorry we allowed him to put the two tables on the record without challenge.

Frankly, I think that when we ask for regional and quarterly payments we are putting forward a demand which is only fair. Let us divide the country into these regions—British Columbia, the prairies, central Canada and the maritimes. We do not ask that it be done on a provincial basis. It must be borne in mind that all the feed grain subsidies which are now going east are not helping the western farmer. The federal government is paying them in order to help the eastern feeder to produce eggs and hogs. Then there is the other problem which has been mentioned a good deal in this chamber lately—the low water level on the great lakes as a result of which boats are travelling a thousand bushels short. All right. My friends from central Canada tell me the world is bright and rosy; yet they squabble over half a cent a pound on cheese.

Let us be fair to all parts of the country. We feel that the regional basis as a means of making deficiency payments is a fair basis. We feel, too, that our request that payment be made quarterly is a fair and reasonable one. Consider this situation: One man markets a thousand hogs in July and a thousand in February. Another, due to circumstances, has to come in on that last quarter. I do not believe for one minute that opposition speakers can go back to their ridings and say, honestly, that the government is doing its job in this connection, and I think this point has been well made by others who have spoken from this side.

Mr. Rapp: In conclusion, Mr. Speaker—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Batten): I must advise the house that if the hon. member for Humboldt-Melfort-Tisdale speaks he will close the debate.

Mr. E. F. Whelan (Essex South): The motion before us suggests that the stabilization act be amended so as to provide for regional price support and semi-annual deficiency payments. The hon. member who put it forward stated that there had been a misunderstanding of some sort in connection with this whole idea. But the argument I wish to advance is directed to the impracticability of making semi-annual payments.

The legislation, of course, does not have to be changed to provide for these features. They can be introduced under the act as it now stands. To amend the act to provide for regional supports or for semi-annual deficiency payments would be meaningful only if it was intended to have the law require that price supports be on a regional basis and that deficiency payments be made semi-annually. If that is the intent of the motion, it could present some very serious difficulties.

While the motion mentions eggs and hogs it also adds the word "et cetera", and presumably the intention would be to apply it to all products which are on a deficiency payment basis of support.

Mr. Rapp: I point out that the stabilization board already has authority to authorize payments on a regional basis or on a semi-annual basis. I do not think the act would have to be changed.

Mr. Whelan: That is what I said. But it would be quite impractical to do this. It would be altogether impractical to make semi-annual deficiency payments for such seasonal crops as sugar beets, or soybeans, or Ontario wheat, or tobacco, to mention a few products which are under deficiency payments and are produced only once each year. After the marketing year for such crops is over, the average returns to producers are calculated and if these are below the support level a deficiency payment is made. There would be no practical way in which these payments could be made semi-annually.

There are some other questionable features of the motion, even if it were intended to apply specifically to eggs and hogs. It suggests that deficiency payments be "on a cumulated regional price basis rather than on a national weighted average price".

There are two components of a deficiency payment. One is the support level. The other is the average price which producers receive. If the average price received by producers is less than the support price, a deficiency payment is made for the amount of the difference. At present, for example, the support level is 34 cents per dozen for grade A large eggs and 23.65 cents per pound for grade A hogs. These are national average support prices. If the weighted national average price received by producers during the year is below those support prices there is a deficiency payment.

[The Acting Speaker (Mr. Batten).]

The motion, though, appears to deal with only one of the components of the deficiency payment calculation. It seems to deal only with the price received by producers, and suggests that this should be calculated on a cumulated regional price basis. This appears to assume that if Saskatchewan, for example, were established as a region for eggs, the amount of the deficiency payment would be the difference between the 34 cent support price and the cumulated price received by producers in Saskatchewan. This would not be so. The 34 cent support price is a national average price. It is an averaging of prices in the higher priced regions, such as Quebec, Ontario and British Columbia, with those in lower priced regions, such as Saskatchewan. If we were to have regional price supports, then both the support price and the price paid to producers would have to be based on prices in that region. The support price for Saskatchewan under that arrangement would be much lower than the present 34 cent national support price.

Mr. Clancy: How could our price be lower than it is today? The hon. member said it would be lower on a regional basis. The price is 17 cents a dozen for grade A large eggs now. How could it be any lower?

Mr. Whelan: If you work it out on a regional average price as compared with the national price, it will be lower. In general, changing both the support level and the calculation of producers' returns to a regional basis would not change the situation in different areas very much from what it is now on a national basis. Then, of course, there is the problem of deciding how to define a region. This is one of the real difficulties in working out a regional basis of support. It would hardly be practicable to rely on provincial boundaries. A great many Saskatchewan hogs, for example, are marketed in Manitoba. If the principle was extended to cattle, where would a region begin and end anywhere in the west or, for that matter, anywhere other than nationally? It has to end nationally.

The same difficulty exists with the proposal for semi-annual deficiency payments, even for commodities like eggs and hogs which are marketed throughout the year. Here it seems to be generally assumed that deficiency payments would be based on the annual support price. But this could not be so. Just as there are areas where eggs and hogs prices are normally lower than in other areas, so with both eggs and hogs there are seasons when prices are higher or lower than in other seasons. If there were to be semi-annual deficiency payments, the support price would have to be calculated on a 10-year average price for those six months, and not for the full year.

Mr. Clancy: Mr. Speaker, would the hon. member permit a question? There is a limit on the number of hogs or the number of dozen eggs you can market and claim deficiency prices for, and it does not matter what time of the year you market them. The hon. member sounds as though he is reading from something written by the stabilization board. I have heard these arguments before.

Mr. Whelan: I did not think I sounded that professional, Mr. Speaker, because I am only a farmer who has had a great deal of experience with deficiency payments. I can say honestly and sincerely that a great many farmers in Canada believed that deficiency payments on this 10-year, so-called average were going to be the saviour of agriculture, and I can tell the house that today, and this has been the case most of the time in the past, the farmers in my area dread the day the announcement is made. They knew it would have this effect. Certain statements have been made today that those on the front benches on this side of the house ran up and down the country proposing the same things as the hon. member is proposing in his motion.

Mr. Rapp: That is right.

Mr. Whelan: I would say this, and I have said it before, that when I campaigned—I don't care how those on the front benches campaigned; I am in the Liberal party and we can campaign any way we like—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Whelan: —I maintained that when the country had good management and industry and everything else was booming, agriculture would go along with it. In my own area, on a 10-year average the price of soybeans and other commodities would be much lower if the price was announced, and it would not be of any benefit to anybody in the area now.

Mr. Olson: I wonder, Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member would answer a question. Do you have a different agricultural policy, then, for each constituency?

Mr. Whelan: I am in a free and democratic country, and I would like to remind the hon. member and everyone else in the house, as a farmer who is familiar with these things but who is not a professional, as one hon. member suggested, that my experience of deficiency payments and their effect on agriculture is that if the economy of the nation is booming, as it is at the present time, agriculture in general will benefit from that situation. We can remember well that the former minister of agriculture said, with regard to agricultural policy, "Your turn is coming. Be patient and wait; your ship is coming in". It never came in during all the time he was minister of agriculture.

Mr. Danforth: Mr. Speaker, will the hon. member for Essex South (Mr. Whelan) permit a question?

Mr. Whelan: I haven't much time.

Mr. Danforth: This is a very short question.

Mr. Whelan: I would like to tell the hon. member, with regard to deficiency prices on sugar beets, that when the Minister of Agriculture was in Chatham—

Mr. Danforth: Will the hon. member now answer a question on sugar beets?

Mr. Whelan: Sure, as long as you do not take up all my time.

Mr. Danforth: I ask the hon. member this question for clarification only, since he did mention sugar beets, and to follow his argument. Is he against a regional payment under the stabilization act for Ontario sugar beets?

Mr. Whelan: First of all, Mr. Speaker, I would say that this country has never had a sugar beet policy that was definite. Even what was stated by the former prime minister of this country to the sugar beet growers of western Ontario was refuted the very next day by the chairman of the sugar beet board. We need a policy that will produce sugar for our nation, and such a policy is being worked on by the members of our party right now.

Mr. Danforth: Answer the question.

Mr. Whelan: This motion does not indicate how these very serious difficulties associated with regional supports and semi-annual deficiency payments would be overcome, and in the absence of these problems being resolved it would be premature to require that those features be introduced into the act.

Mr. Speaker, may I call it six o'clock.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the house leader about the business for Thursday and Friday. Will we be having estimates on both days?

Mr. Favreau: Mr. Speaker, the order of business will be as announced yesterday; that is, we shall continue the debate on second reading of the bill respecting the territorial sea and fishing zones of Canada. Then we will proceed with the resolution preceding a bill to amend the National Housing Act, 1954. After that we will probably deal with a third bill, concerning the building of a bridge across the St. Lawrence river between the city of Ste Foy and the municipality of St. Nicolas. The following item of business will be the present order No. 13, which is the resolution preceding a measure to amend the Farm Credit Act, which will be followed by the present order No. 12 on the order paper, the resolution preceding a measure to amend the Export Credits Insurance Act. On Friday we will deal with the estimates of the Department of Agriculture.

At six o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Thursday, May 28, 1964

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

THE ROYAL ASSENT

Mr. Speaker: I have the honour to inform the house that I have received the following communication:

Ottawa, May 28, 1964

Sir:

I have the honour to inform you that the Honourable Robert Taschereau, P.C., acting as Deputy of His Excellency the Governor General, will proceed to the Senate chamber today, the 28th of May, at 5.45 p.m., for the purpose of giving the royal assent to certain bills.

I have the honour to be,
sir,
Your obedient servant,
A. G. Cherrier,
Assistant Secretary to the Governor General.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

Second report of standing committee on external affairs—Mr. Matheson.

CANADIAN FLAG

PROVISION FOR OFFICIAL ESTABLISHMENT OF NEW DESIGN

On the order: Government notices of motion:

May 26—The Prime Minister—The following proposed motion:—That the government be authorized to take such steps as may be necessary to establish officially as the flag of Canada a flag embodying the emblem proclaimed by His Majesty King George V on November 21, 1921—three maple leaves conjoined on one stem—in the colours red and white then designated for Canada, the red leaves occupying a field of white between vertical sections of blue on the edges of the flag and also to provide that the royal union flag, generally known as the union jack, may continue to be flown as a symbol of Canadian membership in the commonwealth of nations and of our allegiance to the crown.

Mr. Speaker: Pursuant to section 2 of standing order 21 this government notice of motion stands transferred to and ordered for consideration under government orders at the next sitting of the house.

NATIONAL ANTHEM

PROVISION FOR RECOGNITION OF "O CANADA"

On the order: Government notices of motion:

May 26—The Prime Minister—The following proposed motion:—That the government be authorized to take such steps as may be necessary to provide that "O Canada" shall be the national anthem of Canada and that "God Save the Queen" shall be recognized as the royal anthem in Canada.

Mr. Speaker: Pursuant to section 2 of standing order 21 this government notice of motion stands transferred to and ordered for consideration under government orders at the next sitting of the house.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

ST. JOHN'S, NFLD.—STEPS TO SETTLE LONGSHOREMEN'S STRIKE

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Michael Starr (Ontario): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Labour. In view of the prolonged strike of the longshoremen at St. John's, Newfoundland, could he bring the house up to date on what further steps he is planning to take to bring both parties together in order to arrive at a solution of this dispute?

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, the latest word I have is that the federal mediators propose and hope to bring the parties together to reconvene the meetings early next week, and the purpose of these meetings is either to explore or settle the issues outstanding, or the development of other methods of settlement. These officials are in constant touch with both parties in exploring every possible avenue that might lead to a settlement.

Mr. Starr: In view of the fact that the efforts to do this in the past four weeks were without any satisfaction or result, would the minister consider bringing both parties together and negotiating himself in this matter?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, the officials who are dealing with this situation are experienced in these problems. They have not been active in the situation for a full month because, as my hon. friend knows, in situations of this kind there must be a willingness and a desire on the part of the parties to reach a settlement before a mediator can actively function. It is a fact also that the federal mediators have not been able to deal alone with the situation because there have been other well-meaning persons also attempting to settle it. It may be now that a situation has been created in which the fullest use of federal mediators will take place.

[Later:]

Mr. Donald MacInnis (Cape Breton South): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Labour which I am sure he will agree is most urgent, involving the problem that the mediators are faced with in the strike at St. John's, Newfoundland. Would the minister give consideration to having Mr. Gleason come up again from New York, as he did in Montreal several months ago, and save the government a lot of trouble which it seems it cannot handle.

Mr. MacEachen: No, Mr. Speaker. As I recall it, Judge Lippe had success in resolving the dispute in Montreal, but unfortunately he is not available for this situation.

SAINT JOHN, N.B.—TRANSFER OF MANUFACTURING FIRM TO MONTREAL

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, may I address a question to the Minister of Industry and ask him whether his department is doing anything about the problem of the McAvity's manufacturing concern in Saint John, New Brunswick, which is being closed with the idea of moving the plant to Montreal, involving the loss of employment for some 400 workers. Is the Department of Industry doing anything to prevent this move and to assist the company in remaining in its present location?

Mr. Speaker: May I suggest that the question, important though it is, is one for the order paper.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

CANADIAN MINISTERIAL REPRESENTATION AT NEHRU FUNERAL

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Acting Prime Minister and ask who was responsible for the muddle which prevented Canada from being represented by a cabinet minister at the funeral of Prime Minister Nehru.

Hon. Paul Martin (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, there has been no muddle in respect of Canadian representation at the funeral ceremony of the late prime minister of India. The government had hoped and had endeavoured to see to it that a member of the government would attend the funeral. Because of the generous invitation of the President of the United States and the U.S. secretary of state, a Canadian representative was offered an opportunity to fly to India in the presidential plane.

[Mr. MacEachen.]

Unfortunately, because of the time of the funeral it was not possible for the presidential plane in Washington to wait until the arrival from Ottawa of a minister. The Minister of National Defence had made preparations; he had gone to the airport in Ottawa; but we were advised that in order to enable the representative of the government of the United States to be in India in time for the funeral, the plane would have to leave Washington ahead of the scheduled hour of departure.

Canada was represented at the funeral this morning by the ambassador of Canada in Cairo, Mr. Jean Chapdelaine, our high commissioner in Ceylon and the chargé d'affaires of our mission in Delhi.

Mr. Douglas: May I ask a supplementary question. Can the minister tell the house at what time the invitation was received and at what time the presidential plane left Washington for India?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I cannot say at exactly what time the presidential plane left Washington. I think it was just before noon. We were advised about the invitation some time between nine and ten o'clock.

Mr. Douglas: May I ask the Acting Prime Minister this. In view of the liaison which is supposed to have been established between the air services of the two countries, surely it would have been possible between the time the invitation was received and the time the presidential plane left for the R.C.A.F. to have flown the minister of defence to Washington.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): The plane which could have reached Washington in an hour and a half was not in Ottawa at the time. It was in New York city and it was not possible to get it back in time. Every effort was made.

I am sure the hon. gentleman would not want to allow his questioning to convey the impression that there was not the keenest desire, and that every effort was not made, by the government to discharge a responsibility which, in the circumstances, it was its duty to perform. There can be no doubt—and I am sure the hon. member would not wish to leave such a doubt—of the deep regret of the government, shared by every member of this house and the people of this country, at the death of the great prime minister of that great Asian nation, India.

Mr. Douglas: So there may be no misunderstanding I wish to make it perfectly clear that I am sure the government had every desire to be represented at the funeral. I do want to say to the minister, however, that I think there was an inexcusable amount of incompetence on the part of whoever was responsible for making the arrangements.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I cannot allow the hon. member's words to pass without comment. There was no incompetence. It is not the fault of the government if we did not have a plane which could fly our representative from Canada to the funeral in time. We simply do not have such a government plane.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Well, it is a fact. If the Minister of National Defence could have flown to Washington in time to join the presidential plane, he certainly would have done so. He made every effort to do so. It is not, desirable, if I may say so, for the hon. gentleman to persist in this questioning because of the wrong and unfortunate impression that it may create. We had considered asking our high commissioner in London to fly from London to Cairo, but the high commissioner was on his way to Canada to fulfil another engagement. Every effort was made to have a member of the government attend the funeral of Prime Minister Nehru. No country would be more desirous of having a representative of its government at the funeral than Canada which enjoys, and has enjoyed for a long time, such a valued friendship with India.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): After all that explanation I have one simple question. When did this plane—the only one which could have conveyed the Canadian representative to Washington—find its way to New York, and for what purpose was it in New York?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): It had gone to New York for the purpose of enabling a minister of the crown to discharge an important function in New York city on behalf of the government of Canada.

Mr. Diefenbaker: The question was, when had it gone?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I am advised that the plane had left that morning, before we received the news; and I am sure a former prime minister of Canada will recognize the situation.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I do. I fully recognize it as an example of complete negligence, if I am asked the question.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Diefenbaker: I have the floor at the moment.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): —the right hon. gentleman has made a comment—

Mr. Diefenbaker: I have the floor at the moment. I am not having those interruptions.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker—

Some hon. Members: Sit down.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. It does seem to me that we have had a very long discussion about this matter and that a full explanation has been given.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): On a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker, involving—

Mr. Diefenbaker: Oh, oh.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): —what the right hon. gentleman has said. I should say to him that I cannot take back the words he has uttered, but I can say to him as a former prime minister that those words and his comments were not worthy of one who has held that high office.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I am not going to enter into a controversy with the hon. gentleman. When it comes to unworthiness he has a place all his own.

[Later:]

Mr. Gene Rhéaume (Northwest Territories): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Minister of Transport, relating to the statement made by the Acting Prime Minister that Canada had no aircraft capable of taking someone to India in time for the funeral. Was any contact made by the minister with T.C.A. in relation to the need to transport a member on the treasury benches to India?

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): It so happens, Mr. Speaker, that I was on the train travelling to Montreal at the time the news was received by the government. Therefore it was not possible for me to take any action in the matter, but I am perfectly sure my hon. friend the Secretary of State for External Affairs did everything humanly possible in the circumstances.

Mr. Rhéaume: Then will the Acting Prime Minister answer the question, if he was the one handling this whole business?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Yes, Mr. Speaker, that matter was gone into.

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): I have a supplementary question for the Acting Prime Minister with respect to the investigation into the possibility of T.C.A. supplying an aircraft so that a member of the government could attend the funeral of the late prime minister of India. If the matter was gone into, as you will recall it was in the case of Mr. Symington, the ex-president of T.C.A. who died some time ago, could he inform the house what was the reply of T.C.A. as to why an aircraft could not be supplied?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): If my hon. friend will recall what I said when this question was put earlier, there was the question of time involved. The death of the late prime minister of India was made known in the morning. We had to take into account the fact that the plane would have to arrive in time for us to take part in the funeral, and after examining the schedule of the funeral and other factors, the conclusion was that this could not be done.

LAOS—CANADIAN PARTICIPATION IN CONSULTATIONS RESPECTING NEUTRALITY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address an entirely proper and fitting question to the Acting Prime Minister. In view of reports that consultations among at least six of the 14 nations who signed the 1962 Geneva agreement respecting the neutrality of Laos were expected to begin in Vientiane some time this week, has the minister any information he could give the house with respect to this reported meeting and is the government intending to send representatives to the meeting?

Hon. Paul Martin (Acting Prime Minister): There are consultations on this matter, and Canada is a participant in those consultations. The present position is that we are in favour of consultations under article IV of the Geneva protocol, and we would be willing to take part in such consultations. It would seem to us preferable that such consultations take place in a less formal way than is normally understood by the proposal to hold an international conference. I might say we also believe it would be preferable that any consultations take place in Vientiane, to enable the Laotian prime minister to stay in his country at this critical period.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

HOLDING OF UNITED STATES CITIZEN IN TORONTO JAIL

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I want to direct a question to the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration arising out of the serious situation created in the city of Toronto, where a man was incarcerated for 100 days without trial and without a charge being laid; then the charge was laid against him of failing to answer questions asked by an immigration officer.

[Mr. Nielsen.]

Now that the minister has had an opportunity of looking into this matter, while the wrong that has been done cannot be rectified can he give the assurance to the house that from now on people are not going to be incarcerated because they fail to answer the kind of questions that sometimes are asked, not always legally, by immigration officers?

[Translation]

Hon. René Tremblay (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, certain facts reported by the Leader of the Opposition are inaccurate. The man in question was put in custody under the immigration legislation. Different proceedings were taken while he was in Canada. If certain delays occurred, either at the level of the department of immigration or the level of the administration of justice, such a situation will be corrected in future. I think the Minister of Justice (Mr. Favreau) will soon submit a more detailed report to the house.

[Text]

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I would like to ask the minister whether the people in his department who are guilty of either negligence or of being very slow will be reprimanded or disciplined for what they did in the past, not for what they may do in the future.

[Translation]

Mr. Tremblay: Mr. Speaker, I do not think that such an assertion is true. There has been no undue delay. However, certain reports at the various levels of the administration have been made official and we shall try, as much as possible, to shorten those delays in the future.

[Text]

Mr. Pugh: Sixty days and 100 days.

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Bow River): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I want to direct this question to the Minister of Justice. I wonder if he would care to disclose to the house why bail was granted and then two hours later the charge that had finally been laid was withdrawn, after 90 to 100 days. I think it is a matter for the Minister of Justice to take a look at, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I certainly do not want to prevent any questions on anything having to do with the liberty of any citizen of this country, but this matter was discussed yesterday and an explanation has been given today. The hon. member for Bow River is asking for detailed information. May I suggest that he put his question on the order paper.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, I would like to have this matter discussed at ten o'clock.

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I wonder if I might ask a supplementary question. Is the minister able to confirm whether this man was in jail without trial for 90 days or more and, if so, does he not think that in itself is undue?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. This is the same question in effect as that asked by the hon. member for Bow River, and I would ask the hon. member to put it on the order paper, or he may have an opportunity later on this evening to discuss it.

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Speaker, I should like to give notice to have the matter discussed at ten o'clock.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, on this matter I asked the Minister of Justice a question on Monday and he said he would take it as notice and reply later. Now the minister is here perhaps he can make that reply.

Hon. Guy Favreau (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I will give the house a full account of what took place, because I and the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration requested a report on all the circumstances. I have a direct answer prepared which I will make on my own responsibility; but as it is quite lengthy I suggested yesterday to the hon. member who put the last question that he might want to put his question on the order paper so I could table the answer. The hon. member for Winnipeg North is of the opinion that the matter is urgent enough for me to read the answer, although it might be somewhat lengthy. Therefore if hon. members agree I shall do so right now.

Mr. Speaker: A matter dealing with human liberty does seem to me pretty important, and if the house gives consent and the minister is prepared to make a statement now I think we should hear him.

Mr. MacInnis: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, is this not an unusual procedure? You have ruled several members out of order and directed that they should put their questions on the order paper; you have made it necessary for an hon. member to give notice to debate the matter at ten o'clock; but now that the minister is prepared to answer you are going to go along with him.

Mr. Speaker: Order. If the hon. member had listened to the discussion he would have understood—at least I would hope so—the remarks I made to the effect that dealing with the rights of citizens seem to me an important matter. The minister is prepared to deal with the matter now and I asked whether the house was prepared to listen, and I understood from the house that it was. Therefore it seems to me that those last remarks are really out of order.

Mr. MacInnis: Mr. Speaker, I would draw to the attention of the house and Your Honour the fact that the questions asked also dealt with the rights of citizens.

Mr. Favreau: Mr. Speaker, I have now received a full report concerning the case of Mr. Harry Hooper and have discussed it with my colleague the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration. I find that Hooper was in custody during the period of February 25, 1964 until Tuesday of this week, but this incarceration was not by any means related only to the charge which was preferred against him under section 50(e) of the Immigration Act.

He was first taken into custody by the metropolitan Toronto police on a charge of having assaulted his estranged wife. This charge was subsequently withdrawn on March 15. This part of the detention was therefore under provincial authority.

He continued in detention under the authority of the Immigration Act as a person believed to be in Canada unlawfully and subject to deportation. He had been deported on three previous occasions. The first time was in March 1962, and this order was based on the fact that Hooper had been convicted at Toronto on January 4, 1961, for having been in possession of a drug in violation of the Opium and Narcotic Drug Act.

The Immigration Act provides that persons who are deported shall not return without specific permission from the minister, but notwithstanding this Hooper returned to Canada without authority and was deported a second time on February 26, 1963. He again entered Canada illegally and was deported a third time on January 4, 1964. He returned three days later.

The inquiry with respect to his fourth unlawful entry got under way on March 23, after he had been given ample opportunity to retain counsel if he wished to do so. At the inquiry he refused to answer questions put to him by the special inquiry officer. The Immigration Act provides that such refusal is an offence punishable on summary conviction. Because of Hooper's refusal the special inquiry officer found it necessary to adjourn the hearing to April 7, at which time other evidence was adduced to establish his unlawful entry and he was ordered deported to the United States, of which country he is a citizen. He did not appeal against the order.

The next step in the sequence of events was this. Immigration officials at Toronto decided to refer the case to immigration headquarters in Ottawa for instructions on whether to execute the deportation order immediately or take steps to have a charge preferred in relation to Hooper's refusal to answer questions put to him at the inquiry. In this connection it should be noted that the Immigration Act provides that a person who commits an offence under the act is liable to be prosecuted and to undergo punishment notwithstanding that a deportation order has been made against him.

It was decided to prefer the charge, but in the making and implementing of this decision there was a lengthy delay and the charge was not laid until May 22. Hooper was brought before a magistrate on that date and the case was adjourned until May 25. Because of the delay between the making of the deportation order and the preferring of the charge it was decided it should be withdrawn, and this was done with the permission of Magistrate Bigelow on Tuesday of this week.

Certain delays were occasioned in the administrative machinery in processing this matter, but I can assure hon. members that steps have been taken, after discussion between myself and the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration, to prevent the repetition of such an occurrence in the future.

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Royal): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Would the Minister of Justice now answer my question of yesterday in which I asked him to ask the provincial attorneys general to see whether there are any other people who are victims of such absolutely shocking delay in preferring and processing charges?

Mr. Favreau: Mr. Speaker, now that the facts have come to my attention, and although I would have no jurisdiction to request intervention—

Mr. Fairweather: You have jurisdiction to lead.

Mr. Favreau: If the hon. member will bear with me I think he will be satisfied with the attitude I intend to suggest I ought to take. Although I have no jurisdiction to request the attorneys general of the provinces to act, as was suggested yesterday—and this is the reason my answer had to be what it was—now that the facts are before me I intend to refer both the facts and the question of my hon. friend to the various attorneys general with the suggestion that they might want to make inquiries in their respective domains.

INQUIRY OF THE MINISTRY

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Réal Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Public Works. Could he tell us whether employees of his department have measured the flagpole at the top of the parliament tower to see if it will be possible to raise simultaneously the two flags proposed by the government?

[Text]

NATIONAL DEFENCE

REPORTED MOTHBALLING OF NUMBER OF INTERCEPTOR AIRCRAFT

On the orders of the day:

Hon. D. S. Harkness (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address a question to the Minister of National Defence but in his absence I will address it to the associate minister. Is it a fact, as reported in the morning paper, that 25 per cent of Canada's interceptor aircraft, the Voodoos, have been mothballed?

Hon. Lucien Cardin (Associate Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I saw the article to which the hon. member has referred, which reports that the R.C.A.F. fighter strength has been reduced by 25 per cent. This report is inaccurate. As a matter of fact, of the 66 CF-101's that we had on inventory, 64 now remain. Of this total 55 aircraft are being used for squadron operations and training and nine aircraft are undergoing rotational modification and maintenance, which is the normal situation in maintaining fleet effectiveness.

CANADIAN FLAG

INQUIRIES RESPECTING CONSIDERATION OF NEW DESIGN

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Queens): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Acting Prime Minister, who is also a member of the nation's intelligentsia. Can he give the house any information on the government's attitude in response to an interesting and thoughtful letter sent to the Prime Minister, other ministers and, indeed, to all members by an outstanding group of Canadian scholars, including such a great historian as Professor Creighton, suggesting the withdrawal of what the writers call the "innocuous" flag design and putting forward a formula for producing a more meaningful and widely acceptable symbol which would invoke the history of this great country?

Hon. Paul Martin (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I have not yet seen the correspondence to which my hon. friend refers.

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Acting Prime Minister. The notice of motion to which he lent his name this afternoon contains the words "that the government be authorized to take such steps as may be necessary to establish officially" and so on. Do the steps referred to in this motion contemplate either directly or indirectly the expenditure of moneys within the meaning of section 54 of the British North America Act, which of course requires a money resolution?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, it is not correct, of course, for an hon. member to ask for a legal opinion, but I might say that this question and other matters can be more appropriately discussed when the motion is formally before the house.

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Bow River): A supplementary question to the Acting Prime Minister. Has the Canadian government received any complaint from the United Kingdom through diplomatic channels to the effect that the flag question should be settled prior to the visit of Her Majesty; and has the Canadian high commissioner to London been recalled as a result?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, the answer to the first part of the question is no. Since my hon. friend has referred to the Canadian high commissioner to the United Kingdom, I am happy to say that he is in our capital city. He was in the gallery until a few moments ago, and I am sure all hon. members are very glad to see him. I am sure my hon. friend knows the answer to the second part of his question without my reply to it. The answer is, of course, that the high commissioner is not in Ottawa for the purpose to which my hon. friend seeks to give some implication.

Mr. D. M. Fisher (Port Arthur): A supplementary question to that raised by the hon. member for Queens, Mr. Speaker. I ask it because I heard the hon. member for Leeds indicate yesterday that the new flag has a tremendous history behind it. I want to ask the Acting Prime Minister whether the government is prepared to table, before the debate, a report on two aspects in connection with the flag design and development. I refer to a report on the history of the design as it has come forward, which would be for our general information, and second, can the minister provide us with a report as to the status of the union jack as a symbol of a member nation in the commonwealth of nations?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, I am sure that the suggestion made by the hon. member is one that warrants consideration, and I assure him that it will be given.

Mr. Fisher: I thank the minister for his warranty. I should like to put the question more directly. Has the government prepared such reports on these two aspects of the flag?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, when this matter is formally before the house my hon. friend will see the great extent of preparation by the government in this important matter.

Mr. A. D. Hales (Wellington South): I have a supplementary question for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Now that it is proposed that Canada have two flags, and Canada is—

Some hon. Members: No, no.

Mr. Hales: —and Canada is a senior member of the commonwealth of nations as well as a member in good standing of the United Nations, which flag will Canada fly at the United Nations?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): It is clear of course, Mr. Speaker, that the suggestion made in the first part of my hon. friend's question is inexact. The terms of the resolution are before the house and my hon. friend, I am sure, has read them. The appropriate time to ask a question such as that and the appropriate moment to respond to it will be when this matter is formally before the house.

Mr. Olson: I should like to address a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs.

[Translation]

Mr. Gilles Grégoire (Lapointe): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker—

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Is the hon. member for Medicine Hat asking a supplementary question?

Mr. Olson: No.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Lapointe.

[Translation]

Mr. Grégoire: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have tried to get that information before, but the hon. member for Medicine Hat would not give it to me.

My supplementary question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs or, to the Acting Prime Minister and is as follows: Is the government considering the possibility of discussing the resolution in two parts, so that the house may vote a first time on a distinctive national flag for Canada and a second time on the union jack, in order to avoid the dilemma in which the members of the house find themselves?

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: This question was asked yesterday.

[Translation]

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a supplementary question to the Acting Prime Minister and ask him if it was Mr. Smallwood who prompted the government to decide on two Canadian flags and two Canadian anthems; what influence did he have?

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please, I think the time has come to recall to hon. members the fact that questions are supposed to be asked, not statements made, at the question time. I wish members would help the Chair a little bit in that respect.

Mr. Pigeon: We face the same old bunch, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Medicine Hat.

Mr. Valade: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Would the hon. member for St. Mary ask a direct question after the hon. member for Medicine Hat, who has been trying to get the floor for some time.

Mr. Olson: I wanted to ask this question respecting the amount—

Mr. Valade: I rise on a point of order, sir.

Mr. Speaker: I have suggested to the hon. member for St. Mary that he allow the hon. member for Medicine Hat to ask his question. He has been on his feet at least ten times.

Mr. Valade: I rise on a point of order, sir. I believe that Beauchesne gives preference to any supplementary question—

Some hon. Members: No, no.

Mr. Valade: —which is related to the question being asked. Obviously, on this point of order I should be able to ask my question.

An hon. Member: Read the rules.

Mr. Speaker: I must tell the hon. member that I think his point of order is frivolous. I have already suggested to him that he ask a separate question. If he has the right to ask a separate question, surely that is better than a supplementary.

[Later:]

Mr. Georges Valade (St. Mary): I want to ask a separate question related to a previous question asked by an hon. member. My question is directed to the Associate Minister of National Defence.

[Translation]

Could the associate minister of defence (Mr. Cardin) tell us which of the two flags will be adopted as a distinctive flag by the three services, that is the navy, the air force and the army, or will the armed forces adopt two flags?

Hon. Lucien Cardin (Associate Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I think it would be better for the hon. member for St. Mary to wait until the matter is discussed in the house.

UNITED NATIONS

FURTHER CONTRIBUTIONS TO COST OF PEACE KEEPING OPERATIONS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. A. Olson (Medicine Hat): I should like to ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs a question arising out of a statement made by the secretary general, U Thant, in Ottawa on Tuesday. The secretary general suggested that the United Nations was going to have to go back to those countries it had previously dunned and ask for voluntary financial contributions to carry on peace keeping arrangements. I should like to ask if Canada has been approached in this respect and what has Canada's response been?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Well, Canada has already acted. Canada is a participant in the United Nations peace keeping force, and it is paying its own expenses.

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Winnipeg South Centre): I should like to ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs if the government has offered a special contribution to the United Nations for expenses in the Congo operations?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): When the secretary general was here on Monday I advised him that the Canadian government, in answer to his request, would make a contribution of $500,000 on a voluntary basis to supplement the special civilian fund for the Congo which had been set up on his initiative. The secretary general announced this contribution at the press conference which he held in Ottawa on Tuesday afternoon last.

Mr. Churchill: Had the minister previously reported this to the House of Commons?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I had not. It was the secretary general who gave the press conference that information which Canada had passed on to him. I think it was quite appropriate that he should have made the announcement that he did.

Mr. Churchill: We are familiar with the practice of getting government announcements from the press. Do we now refer to the United Nations for other government announcements?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I am sure my hon. friend would agree that in many instances involving world affairs, the United Nations is a good place to which to refer.

Mr. Churchill: What about the House of Commons? Would you not report to it?

Mr. H. A. Olson (Medicine Hat): I should like to ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs if there are any other special contributions that Canada is now committed to, over and above her regular assessment for the United Nations.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I will take that question as notice.

NORTHERN AFFAIRS

ALASKA HIGHWAY—INQUIRY AS TO NEGOTIATIONS WITH UNITED STATES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): I have a question for the minister of northern affairs, and I might say I am glad to see him back in the house after his Vancouver visit. The question is based on a speech he made before the chamber of commerce in Vancouver, I believe it was last Monday, referring to the paving of the Alaska highway. Can he inform the house whether any negotiations or discussions, formal or otherwise, are under way with the government of the United States for the paving of the Alaska highway? Is he in a position to justify the inference, as the press reported, made at the Vancouver meeting that the United States government might pay the whole cost of paving the highway?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Under the instructions given me I suggest this is a question which ought to be put on the order paper.

Mr. Nielsen: If Your Honour is ruling it out of order on the grounds of urgency—if there is an announcement to be made I think it should have been made—I wish to give notice that I would like to debate the matter at ten o'clock.

Mr. Speaker: The question was not ruled out of order. I suggested that it be put on the order paper on the grounds that there was not sufficient urgency to require an immediate answer.

Mr. Nielsen: Very well, I give notice to debate it at ten o'clock.

CANADIAN CONSTITUTION

REPLIES FROM PROVINCES RESPECTING PROPOSED CHANGES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. George Muir (Lisgar): Mr. Speaker, I would like to address a question to the Prime Minister, but in his absence perhaps the Acting Prime Minister would take it as notice and have the answer for me tomorrow. Would the Prime Minister inform the house which provinces have replied to his request on the matter of necessary changes to the constitution in order to proceed with the Canada pension plan?

Hon. Paul Martin (Acting Prime Minister): As the hon. gentleman suggested, Mr. Speaker, I shall take the question as notice.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

PRESENCE IN GALLERY OF MEMBER OF KENYA GOVERNMENT

Hon. Paul Martin (Acting Prime Minister): While I am on my feet, Mr. Speaker, I am sure the house will note with pleasure the presence in the diplomatic gallery of a distinguished member of the government of Kenya, Mr. Mungi.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

POSTPONEMENT OF PROPOSED DOMINION-PROVINCIAL CONFERENCE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Gene Rhéaume (Northwest Territories): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration. Can the minister tell the house whether it is true that he has suddenly called off the federal-provincial conference on Indian affairs which was to have been held on Monday and Tuesday?

[Translation]

Hon. René Tremblay (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration): Yes, Mr. Speaker, that conference was supposed to take place early in June but was postponed until October.

[Text]

Mr. Rhéaume: As a supplementary question, can the minister tell the house whether this will have the effect of postponing a decision on the Indian claims commission until after October, or next year?

[Translation]

Mr. Tremblay: No, Mr. Speaker, there is no relation whatsoever between those two matters.

[Text]

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Would the minister tell the house why the conference is being postponed?

[Translation]

Mr. Tremblay: To give the provinces more time to study the propositions that will be submitted to that conference.

[Text]

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

INQUIRY AS TO MEASURES TO REPLENISH FUND

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Hon. Théogène Ricard (St. Hyacinthe-Bagot): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Labour?

In view of the fact that the unemployment insurance fund shows a deficit of over $25 million could the minister tell the house what measures he intends to take so as to replenish the fund?

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: Would the hon. member put this on the order paper, as it requires a very detailed answer.

TRANSPORTATION

HAMILTON, ONT.—REPORTED SHORTAGE OF FREIGHT CARS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Transport. I ask this question on behalf of the hon. member for Hamilton South (Mr. Howe), who is in Montreal with the committee on food and drugs. Is the minister aware of the fact that the International Harvester Company in Hamilton has laid off more than 65 employees because the company is not able to get flat cars to deliver its finished combines; and will the minister consult with the two railways to see if this shortage can be met without delay?

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I shall be very glad to bring this to the attention of the railways.

TRADE

FEDERAL PARTICIPATION IN INTENSIFIED WORLD CRUSADE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Thomas M. Bell (Saint John-Albert): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Trade and Commerce. Has the government any plans to participate in the new and intensified world trade crusade by Canadians, referred to by the president of the Montreal stock exchange in Banff yesterday? If so, what are these plans?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I should like to take this question as notice.

Mr. Speaker: I am sorry I did not hear the minister.

Mr. Sharp: I should like to take the question as notice.

PRIVILEGE

MR. GRÉGOIRE—REPLY TO QUESTION ON ORDER PAPER

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Gilles Grégoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, my question is rather a question of privilege because it follows the answer I was given to question No. 834 I had put on the order paper.

That question was addressed to both the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pickersgill) and the Postmaster General (Mr. Nicholson), and I submit that the answer is entirely inadequate, in fact it is not an answer at all, and now that this question of privilege is before the house those ministers should take a look at question No. 834 which is related to a typical case of patronage, as practised by the Post Office Department, and give it an answer that will be satisfactory, simple and accurate.

[Text]

VETERANS AFFAIRS

DISPOSITION OF FUNDS OF WAR PRISONER CLAIMS COMMISSION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Veterans Affairs. I apologize for not sending him notice of it, but I was prompted to ask it by someone outside the house, after I had come into the house. Has the minister received a report from the prisoner of war claims commission as to the disposition of the funds under its jurisdiction?

Mr. Speaker: Surely the hon. member would be delighted to put this on the order paper.

TERRITORIAL SEA AND FISHING ZONES

LEGISLATION RESPECTING TERRITORIAL WATERS AND FISHERIES LAWS

The house resumed, from Wednesday, May 27, consideration of the motion of Mr. Martin (Essex East) for the second reading of Bill No. S-17, respecting the territorial sea and fishing zones of Canada.

Mr. G. L. Chatterton (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, in the four minutes I had yesterday afternoon before five o'clock I made a few introductory remarks, and for the sake of continuity I will refer briefly to the comments I made yesterday.

I said that this bill, No. S-17, was gutless, was a hoax and a gross deception; that it was designed for two purposes, one, to make it appear that the promise of the Liberal party and of the Prime Minister is being met and, second, to make it appear that the 12 mile fishing limit is being established by way of this bill.

I have here a valuable document. It is a page from the Victoria Daily Colonist of March 31, 1963. It is headed "The Policies of the Liberal Party". It is a full page advertisement, and as I say it is a valuable document and one which gets more valuable by the day as we approach another election. This document is a clear indictment of the Liberal party, containing as it does a record of the promises which have been made and which have not been fulfilled.

This attempt to make it appear that the promise regarding the 12 mile limit is being fulfilled is, I say, a hoax. Included in the promises set out in this advertisement is a commitment to establish a 12 mile limit for offshore fishing. I notice that the hon. member for Victoria is in his place. I remember so well how in the last two elections he and his friends accused the previous government of doing nothing about the establishment of a 12 mile fishing limit. The facts are, of course, that our government in the United Nations conventions of 1958 and 1960 tried to get United Nations approval for our formula of six miles and six miles. Indeed, it came within one vote of having this formula approved in 1960. In subsequent years our government continued its efforts to negotiate agreements with the other governments involved.

The Liberals, of course, said they could get this accomplished on a unilateral basis; they were the only ones who could do it. This promise, Mr. Speaker, falls into the same category as many of the others which appear in this advertisement. I might mention, for example, the reform of taxes. Well, they reformed them; they increased them. Then there are the promises concerning student loans, national development, health care, rural housing, fishing credits, the improvement of mortgage loan facilities and so on. I could enlarge that list further if I wished, but I mention these things merely to point out that in my opinion the 12 mile fishing limit proposal falls within that group.

Yesterday I referred to the statement which the Prime Minister made on June 4 as reported on page 621 of Hansard. I quoted the right hon. gentleman as saying "With these considerations in mind the Canadian government has decided to establish a 12 mile exclusive fisheries zone—" and so on. The words I want to emphasize are "to establish a 12 mile exclusive fisheries zone". Then again on June 6, as reported on page 728, the Prime Minister replied to a question put to him by the hon. member for Churchill. The hon. member's question was, in part:

> —is it the intention to ensure that by mid-May 1964 Canadian fishermen will have exclusive fishing rights in this new zone?

To which the Prime Minister replied:

> Yes, Mr. Speaker, it is our intention that Canadian fishermen will have the rights that they are entitled to in Canadian jurisdictional waters by, I think it is, mid-May 1964.

It was because of this promise, containing the deadline of mid-May, that the government were prompted to introduce this bill at the present time. They ran into difficulties which they did not anticipate in their negotiations with the other countries, and this is their way of making it appear as though they had fulfilled their promise.

The second point on which deception is based is this. The government is trying to make it appear that this bill establishes a 12 mile fishing limit—

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Precisely.

Mr. Chatterton: The Secretary of State for External Affairs says "precisely".

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Yes. That is what it does.

Mr. Chatterton: The establishment of a 12 mile fishing limit—

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Would the hon. member permit me to say this? As the Minister of Fisheries and I have both pointed out, the bill before the house does exactly that. When the bill is passed there will be no delay in proclaiming that part of it which establishes a 12 mile fishing limit.

Mr. Chatterton: The secretary of state has helped me considerably, because he began his statement by saying "when this bill is proclaimed".

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I said that when the portion of the bill dealing with the 12 mile exclusive fishing zone has been proclaimed, the 12 mile limit will be established forthwith and there will be no delay in doing so.

Mr. Chatterton: Clause 13 of the bill says that the act or any provision thereof shall come into force on a date or dates to be fixed by proclamation of the governor in council. Thus no part of the bill becomes effective or can be enforced until proclamation takes place.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): That is the law of the land.

Mr. Chatterton: The minister says there will be proclamation soon. Maybe that is right. But even if the bill is proclaimed it does not establish an effective 12 mile fishing limit. All it does is say there will be a 12 mile fishing limit measured from the base line. But since there is no way, through proclamation, by which the base line is defined, there can be no 12 mile fishing zone. This must be so because it is not known where the base line is.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): There is a base line now, based on sinuosities.

Mr. Chatterton: The minister says there is a base line now based on sinuosities. That is true. But the 12 mile limit based on a fixed line will not be in effect until the co-ordinates are named by order in council.

Both the Secretary of State for External Affairs and the Minister of Fisheries have stated that the passage of this bill would assist the government in negotiating with the other countries involved on such matters as historic rights, traditional rights and treaty rights. My question is immediate; if this bill is to be valuable in this respect now, would it not have been even more valuable when negotiations were begun many months ago? Further, if this bill places the government in a better position to negotiate, would not the government be in a much stronger position now if it could tell us at least the co-ordinates for the major bodies of water in which commercial fishermen and others are interested? On the west coast, for instance, there is Hecate strait, Queen Charlotte sound, the Dixon entrance, and so on.

The secretary of state, giving evidence before members of the other place, said he hoped negotiations with the other countries concerned would be ended in the latter part of the year. If that is so, why could not the present bill have been delayed until these important matters could have been referred to in it? In that case we would be given something concrete to consider.

The minister has indicated that the bill will be sent to the standing committee on marine and fisheries. However, nothing at all appears in the measure now before us with regard to a number of important matters with which the people in this business are concerned. I have in mind the co-ordinates on which the base line will be measured, the question of which waters will be considered Canadian waters, the question of the extent to which historic and traditional rights will be recognized, and so on. There is nothing in the bill before us about which the committee could ask questions or hear evidence. The minister might tell the committee what it is intended to do or what it is hoped to do, but there is no meat in this proposal for a committee to get its teeth into.

The minister has agreed that the bill will not come into force until it is proclaimed, and that the base line will have no meaning until the co-ordinates are made known. Why rush this measure through now, when there is so much important legislation on the order paper and when so many other major matters are still to be put down for parliamentary consideration? We are spending our time considering a bill which means nothing whatever.

We shall be able to go into greater detail at a later stage, but with regard to part II I have a letter sent to me by MacLaren, Laidlaw and Corlett, solicitors in this city acting on behalf of nine international air lines. I quote from a brief or memorandum they submitted respecting this bill. These agents of these nine international air lines are concerned with regard to part II of the bill. As the hon. member for Queens-Lunenburg (Mr. Crouse) said, according to the bill it is possible for instance, for the government by order in council to name some point on Sable island as one of the co-ordinates to establish a base line. We accept the assurance of the minister that they will not do that, but this is what the representatives of these nine international air lines say:

> The present government might quite properly deny that they had any intention of using Sable island as a geographical co-ordinate. However, our point is that as section 5(1) of Bill S-17 is presently worded any future government could make such a choice by order in council without having to come back to parliament for amending legislation.

Mr. Speaker, there is concern in their minds because it is possible for some future government to establish co-ordinates, in order to make concessions to other countries, for which they would not have to account directly to the house. I would appeal to the government If they will not agree to having this bill sent to committee before second reading so the committee could go into the whole matter of the principle involved, then at least at the committee stage the government should attach to the bill a schedule indicating the co-ordinates to be used to measure the base lines for the important bodies of water. This is the point about which the people in the business are concerned.

Mr. C. W. Carter (Burin-Burgeo): Mr. Speaker, I should like to take a few minutes to reply to some of the criticism of this bill which has been voiced from the opposition benches. At this stage on second reading we are concerned mainly with the principle of the bill, and the principle is certainly very clear. It is, do we want a 12 mile territorial limit or do we not? It is very simple; you are either for it or you are against it.

Most of the speeches from the opposition benches have criticized the details of the bill, which criticism would be more appropriate at the committee stage. As the minister has already said that it will be examined by the standing committee on marine and fisheries, surely that will provide every opportunity to bring out all the various points with regard to the details of the bill in which hon. members opposite are interested.

The criticism that has been voiced so far mainly concerns four points. The first point is that this bill is of no consequence; that it is a hoax, a deception and a pretence of keeping an election promise. That point was taken mainly by the hon. member for Esquimalt-Saanich, who has just resumed his seat. The second criticism is that it should not have been introduced until all the multilateral agreements had been secured. The third criticism has been that this bill gives recognition to treaty and historic rights.

All this criticism, with the exception of that offered by the hon. member for Queens (Mr. MacLean), who replied to the minister on behalf of the Conservative party and who I believe was very fair in his comments, to date has been rather negative and there has been nothing constructive or positive. The kindest thing that I think can be said about it is that it has been based on a lack of understanding of the bill. Certainly that was very clear in the remarks of the hon. member for Esquimalt-Saanich, because my understanding of the bill is quite different from his in the way he outlined it to the house.

Most legislation falls into two classes. One class is called declaratory; it brings something into existence. The second class is known as enabling legislation because it authorizes the government to do something or try to do something. This particular bill is both because when it is proclaimed, or at least when a certain section of it is proclaimed, it will create a nine mile fishing zone adjacent to our present territorial waters. In the face of that fact, how can any intelligent person say that this bill is a hoax or is of no consequence? Our present three mile territorial waters, with the exception of the Newfoundland coast line waters, are based on what is called the sinuosity principle, which means that they are measured straight off from the shore and consequently follow the indentations and contours of the coast line.

If hon. members are interested in knowing why Newfoundland is a little different in this respect, I can tell them that it is based on an interpretation by The Hague tribunal of a treaty between the United States and Great Britain. The treaty dates back to 1818 but the interpretation of The Hague tribunal was made in 1910 and established the headland to headland principle. Newfoundland, as an autonomous, self governing part of the British empire, adopted this headland to headland principle in defining its territorial sea and brought that principle with her when she became part of Canada.

To the extent that the section of this bill, when proclaimed, will establish unilaterally a fishing zone extending 12 miles off from headland to headland along the Newfoundland coast line, and 12 miles from land along the remainder of the Canadian coast line, the bill is declaratory. If nothing else happens, we will have established jurisdiction over the conservation and harvesting of our fishery resources in a belt of water extending 12 miles from land, and that is certainly a big improvement over what we now have.

But this particular bill goes further than that. It will give the government enabling powers, authorized by parliament, to do two things more. First, as I understand it, it will enable the government to delineate a new zone of territorial waters, based not on the sinuosity principle as at present but on the base line principle, which I believe is a variation of the headland to headland principle extended to include offshore islands. In the second place it will give the government enabling powers to delineate a new fishing zone adjacent to and extending seaward nine miles outside the new territorial waters. In other words the jurisdiction over the conservation and harvesting of our fishery resources will be measured 12 miles seaward from the base line instead of 12 miles from land as at present. This will enclose a much larger area of water and will also create new inland waters which will greatly facilitate conservation measures, particularly with regard to our seal fishery. It will also have significance from the standpoint of national security.

In establishing any delineation of territorial waters realistic people must realize that there must be exceptions to the general rule. Obviously the general rule of a 12 mile limit cannot be applied where there is less than 12 miles of water between the coast line of Canada and that of a foreign country. A very good example of that lies near my own constituency. I refer to the islands of St. Pierre and Miquelon, which at their nearest point are only nine miles distant from the coast line of the Burin peninsula in my riding, the average distance between the two coast lines being somewhere around 15 miles. Obviously neither country can have a 12 mile territorial limit under those conditions, so that the sensible thing to do is to work out a mutually satisfactory arrangement.

The same applies to historic rights, which in the case of some nations are embodied in treaties and have become treaty rights. If I understand the position taken by the hon. member for New Westminster, which was described in the editorial which he placed on record yesterday and which he obviously endorses, he would have us tear up these treaties and brush them aside like scraps of paper. I do not think any member of parliament would seriously want Canada to behave in such a manner. In any case it is not very responsible behaviour, and is certainly not a good position from which to start bargaining.

I do not know what is the situation on the Pacific coast, but I can tell hon. members what the position is in my own riding. Certain European countries have fished in the coastal waters of Newfoundland, particularly those of my own riding, for over 400 years. They have fished there continuously. The French islands of St. Pierre and Miquelon again afford a good example. The economy of both these islands depends largely on the inshore fishery. The French fishermen use the same inshore fishing grounds as the Newfoundland fishermen whom I have the honour to represent. They experience the same hardships and vicissitudes of life and make about the same kind of living, just enough to keep body and soul together but not much more. I would not want to deprive those St. Pierre fishermen of their historic and treaty rights upon which their livelihood depends. I would not want to take their bread and butter out of their mouths and the mouths of their children, any more than I want French, Spanish and Portuguese draggers to deprive my own fishermen, particularly in the Rose Blanche area, of their livelihood. We want to live and let live. We want to do what is right by them as we expect them to do what is right by us. If these St. Pierre fishermen did not have any rights I would certainly want them to have rights, because they are people. Their livelihood depends upon those rights, and people are certainly more important than politics.

The position which this bill takes is that treaty rights and historic rights do exist. The honest thing to do is to recognize this fact and get together and work out the best course to take. Let us decide what is the right thing to do in the light of all the circumstances for all concerned, and which at the same time will take care of the problems which are troubling us.

The fourth criticism has been that this bill should not have been introduced until multilateral agreements had been secured. Exploratory talks have been going on in connection with this matter for the past ten years. It was recognized ten years ago that the present three mile territorial limit was not suited to Canada's needs. Unless we show that we mean business by passing this legislation, these talks could very well go on for another ten years with still nothing accomplished. That would be an even worse deception than what hon. members opposite say about this bill, because we would have to keep talking and talking indefinitely without any clear achievement or sign of achievement.

If we really mean business in this matter, as I am sure we do, it seems to me that the proper thing to do is to pass the legislation which shows that we mean business, and then start the formal talks which are necessary to work out the problems connected with the establishment of the base lines from which our new territorial waters and the new fishing zone will be measured.

Canada has a good reputation among our neighbours for the way in which she has honoured and respected her treaties, and for her relationships with other countries. We want to maintain that reputation. In this regard I should like to put on record a paragraph from an editorial in yesterday's issue of the Halifax Chronicle-Herald, which reads as follows:

> In international law Canada has a good but not incontestable case for its actions. If a contest arose, they might or might not be upheld by the international court. Perhaps the countries affected will agree to Canada's moves, perhaps they will not; and perhaps we cannot afford to ignore their objections.
> All of this, of course, remains to be seen. In the meantime the government deserves to be commended for its determination to press this vital issue forward.
> Parliament should grant the government the authority it requests.

Now, Mr. Speaker, as for my own province and my own constituents, we have waited long and patiently for this legislation. We are happy that it is at last before this house. It has tremendous significance not only for the future of the fishing industry but for the security of our country. It has a special significance for my own province, where the fishing industry has played a dominant role in our economy for over 400 years.

It is even more significant for the people of my own riding, especially those engaged in the inshore fishery around the Rose Blanche and Port aux Basques area who year after year have had their gear destroyed and have been denied the fishing grounds by foreign draggers at the very time when the fishery is at its peak, thus having to remain ashore and watch themselves and their families being deprived of their livelihood. We welcome this legislation and I support this bill without any reservation whatsoever.

I want to close with one final word to the government. I wish to emphasize the need of urgency in this matter. Time is of the essence. Already too many long years have passed without action in this regard. Without detracting from anything that was done by the former government—and I am prepared to give that government full credit for the efforts they made in this regard and to say we are benefiting from what they did—the time has now come to carry this matter one stage further and not to waste time debating the principle, because this legislation is very urgently needed and the sooner it can be passed the better for all of us.

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, may I start by making a brief reference to the closing remarks of my good friend from Burin-Burgeo. I say to him that debating this measure is not a waste of time. Precisely because of its importance it is most necessary to debate it to ensure in every possible way that the fisheries of our nation and the rights and opportunities of our fishermen are protected. That being so, in my opinion any suggestion that debating this bill is a waste of time is spurious and facetious, and the house should not be asked to approach the matter in that manner.

It is perhaps appropriate that at this time in our history we are now concerned, or will be concerned within the next few days, with two matters relating to our sovereignty. The bill before us is one of them. It involves the sovereignty and authority of the government of Canada in an area where they did not exist before but should have existed. The other matter concerns the attitude of sovereignty and independence which apparently has found its way into the heart of the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) and is exemplified in the design for a flag which he put before us the other day.

There is a similarity between these two matters. We are asked to think of the proposed flag as being symptomatic of our sovereignty, our national identity and the unity which exists within Canada. With respect to this bill we are being asked to make an initial declaration to be followed by certain orders in council which again will involve our sovereignty, national identity and unity.

The bill before us involves resources of our nation, namely, those of the sea. It involves the application of sovereignty in relation to the conservation and protection of our fisheries resources. To my mind these two measures seem to go hand in hand. I cannot say whether it was by accident or design that the government saw fit to introduce them at this particular time. This is something that the government alone knows. But if it was by design, if the government planned to introduce into the forum of parliament and into the minds of the Canadian people the flag on the one hand and the proposal for a 12 mile fishing zone on the other, I think the government deserves to be congratulated to some extent because of the opportunity that is afforded to us to make a thorough inquiry into all aspects of the two measures, as those aspects are related to each other, because they involve our sovereignty and because they involve what many of us have been striving for for many years, namely, an autonomous Canada which manages its own affairs and does not have to bow to the desires or interests of other nations.

In the proposal for a flag we really have not a two flag policy but one might say more appropriately a two faced policy, involving the union jack and the so-called distinctive Canadian flag of which the Prime Minister at least is enamoured. If that is the approach to be taken it is also pleasant to realize that among the people of the province of Quebec there is a great desire for compromise on this matter, and that if the flag resolution on the order paper is accepted it will mean that in the province of Quebec there will be acceptance of the union jack as emblematic of something which is perhaps dearer to some people in Canada than to others.

I also submit that the bill before us is a two faced proposal like the flag and represents the attitude of a government that tries to do everything both ways, that tries to sell the Canadian people a bill of goods on the one hand and tries to protect the interests of others on the other hand, a government that tells us it is doing something for our protection while at the same time it is really catering to the whims and desires of some other part of the world. The purpose of the bill before us has been described in press releases and elsewhere as being to put into effect an exclusive fishing zone. This is part of the two faced policy because it will not be an exclusive fishing zone if the bill becomes law. There will in fact be the maintenance of the privilege which France and the United States have had for 150 to 200 years to fish within the proposed 12 mile zone and to continue to do so, not for 10 years or 20 years or some period at the end of which this would cease but forever. Forever is a blessed long time for these rights to fish in our waters to be continued. In this sense the policy is a two faced one.

On the one hand we are asked to adopt a distinctive flag emblematic of our feeling of independence and unity and on the other hand we are doing every blessed thing we can to preserve the conditions in treaties made with foreign powers without doing anything to try to negotiate any change in the terms of those treaties. It is claimed that the bill reflects a decision on the part of the government to take unilateral action, but again this is an indication of a two faced approach because the bill does not provide for such unilateral action at all.

One of the prime bases upon which the bill rests is the basis of negotiation with all the other countries that have or claim treaty or historic fishing rights in the area which we propose to embrace within the 12 mile fishing zone. I will not bother to read the quotation from Hansard, but the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Martin) has referred at different times to negotiations that are taking place. This, again, is an indication of a two faced approach. We claim this is a unilateral decision on the one hand, and on the other hand we say it is not because we are negotiating with these other countries. The Secretary of State for External Affairs shakes his head. His words are in Hansard. His words are there for posterity to see and for anybody to read. His words are in the reports of the proceedings of the Senate banking and commerce committee before which he appeared as a witness. He may shake his head, but the shaking of his head will not act as an eraser and rub out those words, no matter how rubbery the situation might be. These words will remain.

The Secretary of State for External Affairs and the Minister of Fisheries (Mr. Robichaud) have said they are negotiating with other countries. They spelled out these various negotiations.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I do not want to interrupt my hon. friend's speech, but I know he is interested in this subject. With regard to the 12 mile fishing zone, there is no doubt that when this bill is passed that section of the bill dealing with the 12 mile zone will be proclaimed. This will represent the achievement through a unilateral act. With regard to the straight base line, that is a matter for negotiation.

Mr. Howard: I do not know which coat the minister is wearing at the moment, but in so far as this bill is concerned I shall refer to him as the Secretary of State for External Affairs. I would just say that he has just proven he is the best actor we have ever had in this house, whether as prime minister or in any other position. His words will not cover up the fact that we are negotiating with the other countries in respect of this particular bill. He shakes his head again. As I have said, no matter how many times he shakes it, it will not act like the eraser on the end of a pencil. His words will remain in Hansard for all to see.

[Mr. Howard.]

It is claimed on the one hand that this bill is designed to protect our fisheries. At the same time, both the Secretary of State for External Affairs and the Minister of Fisheries have said that never at any time was it our intention to interfere in any way, to abrogate or even change the treaties which are in existence which give specific rights to foreign countries to fish within this area. Never at any time was it their intention to do this. On the one hand they refer to protection to the fullest extent, but this protection applies to nations other than the United States and France. They talk about conservation in the same way. This is designed to conserve our fisheries, while at the same time they want to allow foreign nations to fish in these areas.

We have with respect to the flag a proposal for some national identity which I submit is a design or proposal developed primarily to suit one province. With regard to the 12 mile fishing zone proposal before us, it is designed primarily to suit one nation. In so far as the flag matter is concerned, may I just quote briefly from a letter which I received a few days ago and which reads as follows:

> The plan for a distinctively national flag for Canada, under the present method of Mr. Pearson's is just another sop to Quebec. While no doubt he feels it politically expedient to defer to Quebec in most matters, it is getting to be too much. Why should a minority of five million, because of threats or other forms of blackmail, make 14 to 15 million others bow to their wishes?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please; I hesitated to interrupt the hon. member and I had allowed him to continue until now to make reference to a resolution on the order paper, because I thought he was attempting to draw a parallel between the situation before the house at the present time and that resolution. However, the hon. member will recognize he cannot go beyond the limits he imposed upon himself when he started to address the house. I do not feel he should go into the details of this other matter at this time.

Mr. Howard: It was not my intention to extend my remarks beyond attempting to draw a parallel from the contents of the letter I have just read. This is indicative of the feeling of a great many people in Canada. The attitude of this government towards negotiation of matters connected with international affairs is almost identical. There is not one whit of determination or sand in the government to stand up—

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I thought you were one of my admirers, and my friend.

Mr. Howard: I am your friend and admirer. I would do what I could to put you in the position permanently which you now hold in an acting capacity. You see how much of a friend of yours I am when I want to do that. I would say to the hon. gentleman that he would be indicating far more clearly to the Canadian people the attitude of this government towards its relationships with other countries, especially on this 12 mile fishing zone, if he arranged to withdraw the proposed flag and substitute one which contained the stars and stripes. We would have a more clear indication of what this government is trying to do with the fisheries resources of this country.

Mr. Habel: Would you go for it?

Mr. Howard: My friend asks if I would go for it. This is not worthy of an answer. I do not want to be drawn into these snide comments by the member who continues his speech while in a sitting position. If occasionally he would like to rise formally I would be glad to debate matters with him.

We have before us a particular motion moved by my colleague, the hon. member for Comox-Alberni (Mr. Barnett) that the subject matter of this bill be referred to a standing committee. The argument has been made outside of this house, more than in it, that if the motion carries the government would be defeated and there would be an election. Why that was said, I do not know, unless it constitutes a threat of some sort.

My position with regard to voting on want of confidence motions that may be moved in respect of this government is well known. However, this in no way interferes with my feelings or attitude on a measure such as this. If in the process of voting on the motion of the hon. member for Comox-Alberni, it happens to carry and the government is defeated, that is well and good. We will at least have something concrete and worth while to talk about during the election campaign. The argument used that this would cause the defeat of the government is not really well founded, unless the government wants it that way.

Perhaps I could make reference to an action which took place last year in which there were two bills before the house dealing with an attempt to divide the Northwest Territories into two territories, one of which would be the new territory of Nunassiaq. It was after some extended discussion on those bills that the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pickersgill), who then had the position of house leader, on November 15, 1963 moved a motion which received the endorsation of everyone in the house, because parliament was desirous to take that course of action, a motion that the subject matter of the two bills be referred to the standing committee on mines, forests and waters for consideration. Then there was the important proviso:

> —provided however, that despite this motion the said bills shall remain on the order paper as orders for second reading without prejudice to the right to make or proceed with motions for such second reading.

This is what we suggest should take place here in an equally important matter, in a matter equally important as was the proposal to split the territories into two, or perhaps more important because the livelihood, welfare and rights of more people are involved. We suggest this is the course of action the government should take, and that it should acquiesce in the request to refer the subject matter of the bill to the marine and fisheries committee, and keep the bill on the order paper so that we can come back to it.

I suggest this for the very simple reason that a course of that kind will allow the committee to examine this question in its broadest possible aspects because, when we are taking steps to declare a 12 mile limit, or any other mile fishing limit, we must take into account that various species of fish, notably salmon, do not know where that 12 mile limit is, and might occasionally swim outside it and get caught by fishermen of other nations.

This is of vital importance, particularly to the west coast. We should give the committee an opportunity to go extensively into the north Pacific fisheries commission operations and to make as extensive examination as possible into the detrimental effect that high seas fisheries in the mid-Pacific might have on the salmon stocks of B.C., because the salmon stocks are declining year after year, and because year after year fishermen from Japan are increasing their catch of salmon by leaps and bounds. Japan does not contribute materially, or what it does contribute is insignificant to the salmon stocks which intermingle in the mid-Pacific and north Pacific area.

The committee should be asked to inquire extensively into that to determine the degree, if any, by which the proposed 12 mile limit will be beneficial to the stocks here at home. I submit that it won't matter one whit but, if the committee is able to make an examination of that sort, it will be able to look at the possibilities and make recommendations about the content of the expected new treaty between the United States, Japan and Canada, and might be able to make some worthwhile recommendations to bring into effect the Liberal pledge of a few years ago to draw the Soviet union into the north Pacific fisheries treaty.

We should also examine into the fact that the Soviet union and Japan recently amended a treaty which they have between themselves regarding Japanese high seas fisheries on the Asian side of the Pacific, with one of the provisions being that two thirds of the catch that Japan makes of salmon on the high seas must come from the area bounded by the 175th west meridian, which is the line of demarcation in the Pacific over which Japan, up until now, has agreed not to fish.

What will happen as a result of this agreement between Russia and Japan is that the Japanese high seas fishing fleet will be moving closer and closer to the mid-Pacific fisheries and creating greater and greater pressures upon the stocks of salmon that intermingle in that area, and also upon the stocks of salmon from Alaska. The committee should inquire into the full implications of that, so that we can look at the fisheries question as it is, as a whole, and not at one little section, namely the extension of the fishing zones.

We also have the situation in northern B.C. where United States fishermen on the northern side of the Alaska boundary just sit and wait there for our sockeye and pink salmon to come home to spawn, and scoop up our home-coming salmon to suit themselves, without any of our fishery regulations having an effect on them. Partially as a result we find the fishermen on the Skeena river being confined to fishing for sockeye on the basis of about one day a week during the present season.

We want the committee to inquire extensively into that and see if it can make recommendations about treaties, or arrangements between the two countries so that our home-coming salmon, that do escape the high seas fisheries, are not caught by United States fishermen when they are nearing the spawning grounds.

Also in the north we have the extremely important question that some of the spawning rivers are in Canadian territory but their mouths are in Alaskan territory. One such river is the Stikine. This is a matter which should be a subject of discussion between the two nations, and it is a matter which the 12 mile limit cannot remedy.

On the Atlantic coast we have the ridiculous situation where some of our fishing vessels have to go outside 12 miles to fish, yet we allow foreign fishing vessels to come in and disturb whatever conservation measures we put into effect.

For these reasons we ask the government to accept the proposal that we refer the subject matter to the marine and fisheries committee, and leave the bill on the order paper so that it may be dealt with at any time. Let us give to the committee the broadest possible scope of inquiry so that it may come up with recommendations that would be helpful and beneficial to our fishermen and helpful to the preservation of the fisheries of this nation.

The Minister of Fisheries (Mr. Robichaud) and the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Martin) have indicated that the passage of this bill will strengthen their hands in the negotiations that are taking place with Norway, Denmark, Italy and the like. I cannot see how this is possible. All we would be doing would be to endorse the principles, or lack of them, contained in this bill and then give to a cabinet, which is weak and divided on this as it is on most other issues, endorsation to negotiate as it wishes.

In the conduct of negotiations, if I were a member of a union and the Secretary of State for External Affairs were my business agent —a highly unlikely situation if I had any part in it—I would not want him to negotiate on my behalf in the way he is seeking to negotiate on behalf of Canada and its fishermen, because what he is asking is for us to give him carte blanche to do as he wishes. What would be more strengthening to the Canadian government in its negotiations with the United States—and we should reopen the question of interfering with their historic rights—would be to place it in a position to go to the international talks with other nations and say, "We have got the bill. We want to do it. It is just sitting back home waiting for us to come back and report the results of our negotiations." The government would be able to use that as the strongest possible lever to obtain the greatest possible benefits from the establishment of a 12 mile fishing zone.

If the government persists in demanding that this bill be passed in its present form, and continues to support that demand by the spurious reasoning that it will strengthen its hand in these negotiations which, incidentally, look so far as though they have been carried out with an extremely weak hand, we can come to no other conclusion than that it is the desire of the government to give the least possible protection to the fishermen of Canada, and the greatest possible protection to the privileges of others who fish in our waters.

Mr. H. A. Olson (Medicine Hat): In rising to speak briefly on this bill and on the amendment I do not claim to be an expert on matters relating to fisheries and fishing rights. Fortunately or unfortunately, as the case may be, all members of this house, no matter where their constituencies may be, have an equal voice when it comes to voting on measures before us. Therefore I do feel some obligation to try to understand what is contained in Bill S-17 and to express my views respecting it.

I find it very difficult to believe that we will be doing the fishermen and the fishing industry of Canada a service by killing this bill. I say this for the simple reason that while, it seems to me, all that is spelled out in Bill S-17 is not completely satisfactory, the measure must to some extent be a move in the right direction—the establishment of a 12 mile fishing zone. I think the government should be open and frank with members of this house before we endorse the principle of the bill. If the committee on marine and fisheries is to consider this measure, some specific answers will have to be given us with regard to the co-ordinates which will be setting up the base line, and we should be told in greater detail what is meant by respecting the traditional and treaty rights of fishermen from foreign countries, particularly the United States. If all the traditional rights and all the so-called treaty rights which United States fishermen claim can be exercised within the 12 mile zone and right up to the shores in Canadian waters, the establishment of a 12 mile zone would really be of no benefit to Canadian fishermen.

This is an important matter because, in effect, the bill before us amounts to an extension of the boundaries of Canada. Surely the government should give the house an assurance that it intends to make use of this measure to add some security to the rights of fishermen and the future of our fishing industry? As I said, I do not wish to speak at length on this subject. I am in a quandary. I am wondering whether we should support this motion that the bill be not now read a second time, but that it be referred to the committee on marine and fisheries and, to all intents and purposes, kill this bill and ask the government to bring in another, or whether it would be in the greater interest of Canada's important fishing industry to send the bill to the committee after second reading, where evidence could be heard as a result of which the measure might be amended. Perhaps we should get an assurance from the government now that hon. gentlemen opposite would be prepared to add to this bill some of the provisions which have specifically been requested.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Might I just deal briefly with that point? The proposal is that we shall follow the course usually adopted—that we give the bill second reading and send it to a committee. The committee would then have the opportunity to examine the measure in the light of the evidence which would be produced by members of the government and officials. It would have an opportunity of improving the bill, if members thought it required improvement, in the light of the situation which would be revealed.

In other words, the course which the hon. member is suggesting is the course we would follow. The purpose of sending the bill to the committee is simply that the committee should study it and amend it, if that were thought desirable, in the light of the evidence submitted. What my hon. friend and I are faced with is the suggestion of the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Howard) that we should just let the bill stand—that we should not pass it but simply have a general discussion on fishing rights, and so on, with no particular reference to it. Nothing would be more inimical to the negotiations in which we are now engaged.

Mr. Howard: That was not my proposal.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): The hon. gentleman referred to sending the subject matter for consideration. That would weaken the position of the government in the very important negotiations it is carrying on with a number of countries.

The course which the hon. member for Medicine Hat (Mr. Olson) is suggesting is exactly the one which the government has in mind. Send this bill to the committee and the members of the committee will have the opportunity to make changes in it. We would have to examine the changes proposed and, of course, I cannot say in advance that we would accept them. But there would be an opportunity of examining them in committee, as the hon. member has so constructively proposed.

Mr. Olson: I believe that what the Secretary of State for External Affairs has just said is a lot more than any member of the government has been prepared to say up to this point.

Mr. Howard: And that was nothing.

Mr. Olson: I am prepared to accept that this would be the proper course, provided the government can also give its assurance that before the bill is brought back for final passage they are prepared to spell out the co-ordinates with respect to the base line. At the present time this important aspect is still left to the discretion of the governor in council, though this is a matter of great concern to the people concerned in the fishing industry.

I think, too, that the government should make one other commitment before we vote on this amendment. It should say whether it is prepared to accept some of the representations and suggestions which will be made in the committee respecting certain of these antiquated treaty rights. One of these treaties, I think it is the treaty of 1818 granting certain rights to United States fishermen, was actually brought into effect before Canada was even a nation. We know that some countries of the world have adopted wider limits to the territorial seas around their coasts. They have done so unilaterally, not taking into account all these antiquated so-called treaty rights. We know that Iceland and some other Scandinavian countries have taken unilateral action in this field, and in one case ships of the particular country involved took on the British navy in order to maintain its rights within the 12 mile zone.

I wish to be fair to both sides in this controversy. I think we can accept what the secretary of state has just said, namely that the government is prepared to accept some amendments before the bill is brought back to us. If that is the case I believe it would be better to refer this bill to the committee rather than to support the amendment that it be not now read a second time. However, I wish to say to the government that if there is to be no real benefit to the Canadian fishing industry or to Canadian fishermen by adopting this wider fishing zone, in other words, if most of the foreign fishing vessels which have been fishing these waters in the past are to be allowed to continue to do so, the bill would scarcely appear to be effective at all.

I agree partly with the hon. member from Newfoundland who spoke earlier, when he said that the only principle we are adopting at this stage of the bill is that of setting a 12 mile zone or territorial sea around Canada. If that is the only principle we are adopting at this stage, I think we can agree with it. But by saying that the hon. member is also saying that all the specifics in the bill are subject to amendment. We hope that is right, and if that is the case I believe that to refer the bill to the committee on marine and fisheries would be the better course of action to take.

[Mr. Olson.]

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I am going to speak quite briefly in support of the motion to refer to the standing committee because I am convinced that those who have proposed that motion are taking the right course in their efforts to protect Canadian interests, when they ask that the subject matter of this bill be referred to the appropriate committee before the bill receives second reading.

Owing to my attendance at another committee in which we were making arrangements to be very generous with the United States with respect to our water resources, I was not able to attend the sittings of the house and listen to the debate on this bill, but according to my reading of the debate in Hansard there is some suggestion that if the subject matter of this bill is referred to the committee before second reading it would kill the bill. I want to quote a few precedents in that respect, Mr. Speaker, because I think that argument is complete nonsense.

I would refer the house to Hansard for May 14, 1946, when the house leader of that day, the Hon. Ian Mackenzie, referred a bill on reinstatement in civil employment to a standing committee before reaching second reading stage, with the concurrence of the house and without having the effect of killing the bill. I am quoting from page 4567 of Hansard for November 8, 1963.

Mr. Robichaud: Was it referred to the committee by the government?

Mr. Herridge: It was referred to the committee by the minister of the day, yes. That was just about the time the Hon. Ian Mackenzie announced in the house that he was a socialist and he was promoted to the Senate about six months later. Then I would quote from Hansard for May 21, 1964, page 3447, under the heading "Business of the house":

> Mr. MacNaught: Mr. Speaker, if I could have unanimous consent I would request that you call item No. 31, the second reading of Bill No. C-60, an act to amend the Combines Investigation Act (captive sales financing).
> The Acting Speaker (Mr. Batten): In order for this bill to be proceeded with now there will have to be unanimous consent. Does the house give unanimous consent to proceed with Bill No. C-60 at this time?

I might say, Mr. Speaker, that it was the practice several times in the last session for bills to be referred to committee before receiving second reading. Last session a bill of my own was referred to the standing committee on veterans affairs for consideration before it received second reading. This is becoming the general practice, and I think for the minister to claim that this would kill the bill is completely out of line with what has been the practice of this house for some time, and increasingly so.

I want to bring to the attention of the minister the fact that we endorse the principle of the bill if it passes second reading. While in theory we are endorsing the 12 mile limit, in practice I think my friends who are concerned about this question realize that what we are endorsing is in reality a three mile limit, and then provide some opportunities for U.S. fishermen to fish within that limit. I do want to bring to the minister's attention, as an old socialist and democrat, that the fishing companies in British Columbia—and, I presume, on the Atlantic coast to a similar extent—are either United States controlled or have very close connections with United States corporations and companies. As against that, the members of the unions involved are Canadian citizens who are trying to stand up for Canada's national rights. I think their representations with respect to the reference of this bill to the committee before second reading should receive greater consideration than the share capital invested in so-called Canadian companies by United States interests.

While this treaty points to fishing rights not to be allowed within the three mile limit, as I understand it, owing to the practice of using base lines from cape to cape in reality this treaty will permit fishing within the three mile limit at certain geographical points near the capes in question, and so on.

I want to deal briefly with the reference made by the Minister of Fisheries (Mr. Robichaud) to treaties. The Secretary of State for External Affairs speaks almost with awed breath when he deals with treaties of ancient history, and so on. I find on page 3660 of Hansard that the Minister of Fisheries had this to say:

> On the Atlantic coast the United States has treaty rights in addition to claims of historic fishing, and for this reason alone is entitled to special consideration in any arrangements on fishing within areas that will become either internal waters or the contiguous fishing zone.

What is the history of the United States with regard to respecting treaties that have been signed on behalf of Canada? The government of the United States have not hesitated to violate any treaty whenever it was in their interest, and I can give the house proof of that right now. I became interested in this question when I was first elected to this house and began to study the Oregon treaty of 1846, which I was particularly interested in owing to the building of the Bonneville and Boulder dams on the Columbia river and the consequent impediment to navigation from the upper Columbia to the sea, and the destruction of the heavy salmon run which came up into Canada when I was a boy. What happened on that occasion? We all know that the treaty was signed by the government of Great Britain and the government of the United States in 1846 and there were serious differences at that time as to the 49th parallel. It was decided finally, by mutual arrangement, that the government of Great Britain would secede all the land west of the Columbia south of the 49th parallel to the sea in return for the United States guaranteeing uninterrupted navigation to British subjects from the headwaters of the Columbia to the sea. I will deal with that point, Mr. Speaker, and refer to article II of the Oregon treaty which was signed on June 15, 1846, which reads in part as follows:

> In navigating the said river or rivers—

That is the Columbia river:

> —British subjects, with their goods and produce, shall be treated on the same footing as citizens of the United States; it being, however, always understood, that nothing in this article shall be construed as preventing, or intended to prevent, the government of the United States from making any regulations respecting the navigation of the said river or rivers, not inconsistent with the present treaty.

And then it goes on:

> "From the point at which the 49th parallel of north latitude shall be found to intersect the great northern branch of the Columbia river, the navigation of the said branch shall be free and open to the Hudson's Bay Company, and to all British subjects trading with the same, to the point where the said branch meets the main stream of the Columbia, and thence down the said main stream to the ocean, with free access into and through the said river or rivers; it being understood, that all the usual portages along the line thus described, shall in like manner be free and open."

That means that here is a solemn treaty in which the United States guarantees free access to the sea to British subjects in perpetuity.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): We will discuss all these matters in the committee.

Mr. Herridge: I am not on the committee so I intend to have my say now.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I do not want to stop my hon. friend; I am just saying that these matters which the hon. member is raising now, and raising quite rightly of course, are matters which we will be examining in committee.

Mr. Herridge: I do want to alert the minister to the dangers in the future. This illustrates what can happen with respect to a treaty. The government of the United States constructed the Grand Coulee and the Boulder dams without consulting or writing a line to the Canadian government or any representative of it. When the present Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) was the under secretary of state for external affairs, as the result of a motion for production of papers he had the records searched, and it was found that the government of the United States never consulted in any way with the government of Canada before violating this treaty by the building of the Grand Coulee and Boulder dams. So that the free navigation to the sea has been lost to British subjects who are Canadian citizens, and the salmon run which came up into the Arrow lakes when I was a boy has disappeared forever.

I just mention this to illustrate that we must not be too thin-skinned in this matter. The United States violated a very important treaty and took away certain Canadians rights without any reference to the government of Canada. Not a line was ever written. The government of that day either shut its eyes or was not aware of what was going on on the Columbia south of British Columbia below the 49th parallel.

On this account I urge that the minister give serious consideration to these past actions of the United States government, and that he be not so thin-skinned about historic rights and treaty rights which American citizens are supposed to have on the Atlantic and Pacific coasts, in some cases of ancient origin. I suggest that it is about time we stood up for Canada and do exactly to them what they did to us on the Columbia river. That is all I have to say this afternoon.

Mr. A. D. Hales (Wellington South): Mr. Speaker, there are just one or two points I want to make on this bill. First of all I should like to say that I am no fisherman, nor do I come from the east or west coast, but there are things in this bill which I hope the committee will watch very closely.

I think that one of the predominant faults of this bill is that it is giving too much discretionary power to the minister and the government. I well remember in 1962 when hon. members opposite took four or five days telling those of us who were on the government side that we were giving too much power to the minister of national revenue in connection with a bill dealing with class or kind. We were told that the bill was wrong in principle. Now we have a bill before us giving altogether too much power to the minister and the government.

As I understand it, the minister can move these geographical co-ordinates at his own discretion at any time and at any point. We will find fishermen fishing inside the line drawn between two co-ordinating points in an area in which they should not be fishing, and they will not know any different because an order in council had been passed. Perhaps this is one of the reasons the government has not been able to get the consent of other countries in the negotiations they have been carrying on. Why should this government present to the house a piece of legislation and ask the house to pass it before these negotiations have been concluded? I have never heard of anything so ridiculous or so silly since I came to this house. These negotiations should have been concluded before the legislation was introduced.

This is just another example of poor legislation which has been introduced to this house before enough homework has been done on it. We have had experience of this with the redistribution bill, the pensions bill, the flag and the 11 per cent building tax. We also had the suggestion for two ministers of agriculture put before us. All of these proposals have either been withdrawn or revised. Now the house is being presented with another such piece of legislation, and I am certainly glad it is going to the committee where it can be examined most carefully.

The government say that air lines should not worry about this legislation. International air lines cannot fly over territorial waters. We might find the minister or the government using these geographical co-ordinates as a bargaining weapon, a means by which they will make bargains with international air lines. Altogether too much power is being placed in the hands of one minister. The Conservatives have always believed in a 12 mile fishing limit, but we want to approach the matter in a right and proper way. The Conservative way is to negotiate first and then bring in legislation. But no; this government wants to put the cart before the horse and bring in legislation for approval before negotiations are complete. As I say, I am glad the matter is being put before the committee so that it can have a really close examination. A principle is involved here, namely the granting of too much power, and I suggest should not pass this house.

Some hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Batten): Order. It being five o'clock the house will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely notices of motions, private bills, public bills.

MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

MODELS FOR CANADIAN FLAG

Mr. C. S. Smallwood (Battle River-Camrose) moved:

That an order of the house do issue for the production of all flag designs or models which have been received by the Prime Minister, members of the cabinet or the government, as models for a Canadian flag.

He said: Mr. Speaker, in leading off the debate on this motion may I say I will be as brief as I can because I am sure many other members of the house would like to say a few words. I also hope that some of the government backbenchers will support me in this motion.

I introduce this motion because it deals with an important matter, the changing of our Canadian flag. I think all members of the House of Commons and the Canadian people should play a part in the choosing of a new flag before any action is taken. I was very disturbed at the way in which the government has taken action to bring in a new flag. I was always of the opinion that we lived in a democracy; but it appears to me to be pure dictatorship when one man, be he the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) or the member for Leeds (Mr. Matheson), chooses one flag from over 3,000 designs and then, by refusing to let government members have a free vote on the issue, places a gun at the head of the opposition and says: "Either you accept this flag or we will have an election through a vote of non-confidence".

The new design that the Prime Minister has chosen for a distinctive Canadian flag has three maple leaves with big, knotted stems which are not very natural. I should like to remind him that in western Canada we have no true Canadian maple trees. In fact, they do not grow west of Manitoba. I saw my first true maple trees when I came to Ottawa.

As I have looked at the other side of the house in the last couple of weeks I have noticed the absence of the Minister of Forestry (Mr. Sauvé). I understand he is in western Canada. He is probably planting some original maple seeds there, but I hope they will grow to be tall, tall trees before the design presented to parliament is accepted by the people.

Another point I should like to bring to the attention of the house is that the Prime Minister in presenting this resolution—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Batten): Order. I regret that I must interrupt the hon. member but I must advise him of the narrow limits of this particular type of debate. The motion before the house involves the question of whether or not the designs mentioned in the motion should or should not be produced. I do not think this provides an opportunity for debate wider than that outlined in the motion itself.

I would refer the hon. member to a ruling made by Mr. Speaker Michener on February 8, 1962, as recorded on page 682 of Hansard of that year, in which he said:

Before the hon. member proceeds further with that line of argument I think I should say to him that my view of the scope of the motion is that it is limited to the desirability of the production of the documents. The motion is one calling on the government to produce the documents referred to in the motion. The question in issue is whether or not they should be produced.

Again, on November 8, 1962, as found on page 1427 of Hansard for that year, Mr. Speaker Lambert said:

I should like to draw attention to the very narrow limits of the debate at this point. The matter under debate is merely whether the document should or should not be produced.

In view of these rulings by previous Speakers, I am sure the hon. member for Battle River-Camrose will not mind my drawing to his attention the narrow limits of the debate before us.

Mr. Smallwood: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I was just building up a case and I am coming to my point now. It would be very foolish of me simply to get up and say: Will you lay these flags on the table? I am just building up a case and I am coming to the tabling of the flags. I hope you will bear with me for another few minutes. I had referred to the two flags and I will now carry on. For this reason I put this motion on the order paper asking for the tabling of the designs. I understand there are some 3,000. Possibly it would be difficult to make copies of all of them and table them, but I would suggest that the originals be tabled. Instead of one individual picking a flag I suggest that after these flags have been tabled the Prime Minister and a select group of three or four from his party together with the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Diefenbaker) and a select group of three or four from his party, plus the odd one from the smaller groups, get together as a committee and examine these 3,000 designs with a view to cutting the number down to six designs out of the 3,000 tabled. The six designs might include the red ensign, a flag embodying certain alterations to the red ensign, a flag with a beaver on it and a flag with a maple leaf on it.

This committee having reduced the number to six designs, I would suggest that we then call a conference with the premiers of the provinces, because in this way the people of Canada would have an opportunity to speak through these men and on the basis of their knowledge. The people of Canada would then have a chance to have some say in the picking of their flag.

I think I have brought my remarks close to the rules. I hope the Prime Minister will withdraw his resolution as he has withdrawn so many in the past and give consideration to the setting up of such a committee to examine all these flags after they are tabled and then, through co-operation with the premiers of the provinces, give the people of Canada a voice in the selection of a new flag.

[Translation]

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): Mr. Speaker, I can see the hon. member for Lotbinière (Mr. Choquette) is annoyed that his colleagues did not rise to speak on this matter. I notice that the hon. member for Lotbinière also seems to want to have his say about that and I am anxious to see how he will vote, considering that he has pronounced himself against the Queen. In view of the fact that the bill refers to two flags, a distinctive flag and the union jack to represent the Queen, we shall see how he will vote and we shall know then if he adheres to his principles—

[Text]

Mr. Macaluso: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, in accordance with your ruling I suggest that the hon. member's submissions up to now are completely out of order and that his remarks should relate strictly to the motion before us. If he wishes to cast aspersions on the hon. member for Lotbinière he can do so at some other time, but I think we should confine ourselves to the particular question before us because there are many of us who wish to speak on it in our turn.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Batten): Order. I think the hon. member's point is well taken and I am sure the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm is well aware of the limits placed upon the house in a debate of this kind. I am sure he will stay within the limits of the question before us, which is whether or not these flag designs should or should not be tabled.

[Translation]

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Speaker, you have given some latitude to my colleague, the hon. member who spoke before me, and I feel that, since this motion concerns the production of the flag designs received by the Prime Minister, the members of the cabinet, that is, the government, well, I feel I should be allowed—that is my own opinion—to deal with the flag in general terms and we would be anxious—

Some hon. Members: Order.

[Text]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Batten): Order. I am sorry, but I cannot agree with the hon. member that he is permitted at this time to make general remarks on the flag. The only question before the house at the moment is whether or not these designs should be tabled, and I am going to ask the hon. member and other members of the house to stay within those limits.

Mr. Nasserden: On the point of order, Mr. Speaker, surely if an hon. member is going to develop an argument why the designs should be tabled he has to put forward reasons why this should be done. I believe that it what members on this side of the house are trying to do.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Batten): The Chair is quite willing to accept any reasons which any members may put forward for tabling the designs, but in my view there is a distinct difference between a member supporting his argument and a general debate on the flag as entered upon by the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm. I think the best authority in this house is found in rulings which have been made by the house itself, and on a number of occasions previous Speakers have made rulings regarding this type of debate. I think every member will agree that the limits are very narrow, and the Chair will expect every member to remain within those limits.

[Translation]

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Speaker, I have spoken about the proposed flag because the Prime Minister or cabinet members have surely received a very great number of flag designs. They have received so many, that they have chosen two of them in the same resolution or bill. Our country will be the only one in the world, Mr. Speaker, to introduce a bill concerning two flags. It is absolutely stupid—

Mr. Rochon: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege—

[Text]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Batten): Order; will hon. gentlemen please be seated? I have given the house examples of the rulings made by previous Speakers on such occasions as this. I have others here to support the ruling which I am now making. I am sure the house will not mind my saying that I am going to see that this is done. I would expect hon. members to remain within the limits of the motion now before the house. The hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm.

[Translation]

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Speaker, personally, I am in favour of—

Mr. Auguste Choquette (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. According to the standing orders, whenever an inaccuracy is uttered—

Mr. Pigeon: This is not a point of order.

Mr. Choquette: —a member of the house must make it a point of duty to rise immediately so as to correct the situation. The hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm said that two flags are proposed. Such a statement is false and inaccurate. The hon. member has no right to make such a statement—

[Text]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Batten): Order; the hon. member for Lotbinière does not have a point of privilege at this time. If he disagrees with anything that is being said by the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm, he can refute that argument when his opportunity to speak in this debate comes.

[Translation]

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Speaker, you have allowed the hon. member for Lotbinière to deal with a matter which you had earlier declared out of order. Consequently, do not be surprised if I adopt the same attitude as the hon. member for Lotbinière.

As far as I am concerned, I am in favour of one distinctive flag, whether it has 25 or three maple leaves, even though I would prefer only one. However, I am opposed to having another flag which I do not want to see.

[Text]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Batten): Order; I am afraid the hon. member is going outside the bounds of this resolution. I must point out to him again that the resolution before the house is whether or not the design should be tabled. I ask him again if he will remain within those limits.

[Translation]

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Speaker, I believe I am entitled under the Canadian Bill of Rights to be opposed to the government acting stupidly and thrusting two flags upon the Canadian people. I am in favour of one distinctive flag, whether it has one or three maple leaves.

[Text]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Batten): Order; on a number of occasions the Chair has requested the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm to remain within the limits of the resolution or motion. I am going to have to ask the hon. member to do that.

[Translation]

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Speaker, I am always willing to co-operate, but when I hear remarks from government members who fail to take their responsibilities and to make known their views according to their conscience, who refuse also to oppose the adoption of two flags instead of one, well, Mr. Speaker, do not be surprised—

[Text]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Batten): Order. On a number of occasions I have asked the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm to remain within the limits of this debate, which is whether or not the design should be tabled. I fear that the Chair will not be able to continue to interrupt the hon. member and ask him to observe the instructions which the hon. member is now being given. I should like to read standing order 34, subsection (2):

> Mr. Speaker or the chairman, after having called the attention of the house, or of the committee, to the conduct of a member who persists in irrelevance, or repetition, may direct him to discontinue his speech, and if then the member still continues to speak, Mr. Speaker shall name him, or, if in committee, the chairman shall report him to the house.

This would be a very unpleasant duty for the Chair. I hope the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm will be able to continue his remarks on this motion and remain within the limits the house normally expects.

[Translation]

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Speaker, when a matter of principle is involved, I think that the members, whoever they may be, should be in a position to voice their opinion and I am quite surprised that following the appointment of a new leader of the Quebec Liberals, the hon. Minister of Justice (Mr. Favreau) has not protested against such a stupidity, namely the selection of the union jack as our flag.

Hon. Guy Favreau (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I am ready to take for granted that the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm is not wilfully trying to stray from the limits of the motion. However, for the information of the house and of the member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm, it is important to draw his attention to the fact that there is no relation between this resolution and the one put on the order paper by the government in connection with the flag.

There is no relation, there is even no similarity between the motion now under discussion, which in itself raises only one question—

Mr. Pigeon: That is not a question of privilege.

Mr. Favreau: —namely, whether it is possible or permissible to have produced in this house the flag designs that have been submitted up to now to the Prime Minister or to members of the cabinet.

I am convinced that the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm will realize that it is not a question of knowing how many flags are involved, but merely of ascertaining the possibility or legality of producing designs received from outside the house, and nothing else.

The principle of the flag to be selected is not involved here.

Mr. Pigeon: Why impose the union jack? Why impose two flags?

Mr. Speaker, I want to co-operate, but when I hear remarks from government members, who are anxious to silence me, and I know you will stick up for—

[Text]

Mr. Macaluso: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. The hon. member has stated that the members on this side are trying to impose closure on him. It is the Speaker's ruling that he is contravening, and I want to place that on the record. It should be brought home to the hon. member.

[Translation]

Mr. Pigeon: The hon. member rose on a point of order but he was not justified in doing so.

I should be glad if the Minister of Justice and the hon. member for Lotbinière as well as others would tell us what they think about the resolution calling for two flags.

[Text]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Batten): Order; the Chair has given a great deal of latitude to the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm and has encouraged him on a number of occasions to remain within the limits of this debate. I do not believe the house would consider the Chair has not given the hon. member sufficient opportunities. May I ask him once again, if he wishes to speak on this motion, to confine his remarks to the narrow limits which ordinarily the house recognizes as governing debate on this type of motion?

[Translation]

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Speaker, I am willing to discuss the motion within the limits of the debate, but, as I have pointed out, I have no alternative but to refute the remarks from the government members.

I know that the Speaker must be impartial, but he must also take up the cudgels for the opposition, which constitutes the weaker party. The government has a greater number of members than the official opposition has. So, it is normal that the Speaker, while being fair and just—

Mr. Habel: We certainly do not have any lesson to take from the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm.

[Text]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Batten): I cannot accept the statement which the hon. member is now making. It is the duty of the Chair to be impartial, and impartial does not mean favouring the smaller or larger groups. Will the hon. gentleman, if he wants to speak on this motion, please proceed with his remarks and confine himself to the motion before the house, which is No. 122.

Mr. Choquette: He wants the publicity.

[Translation]

He is a paranoiac.

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Speaker, the hon. members for Lotbinière and Cochrane (Mr. Choquette and Mr. Habel) spend their time making comments and I ask that the same strict limitations applied to me be applied to members of the government. In fact, having a greater number of members, the government would like to impose closure, to prevent us from discussing the matter.

Mr. Speaker, I have the right to speak in this house according to my conscience, and the Prime Minister as well as his cabinet members have received a great many flag designs. They received projects of all sorts but I wonder why two flags—including the union jack which I do not accept—have been included in the same resolution.

Moreover, I should like to know what the Minister of Justice, the Quebec Liberal leader intends to do when this resolution is introduced in the house, and what he said to the members of the cabinet. I feel the adoption of two flags, including the union jack, is an act of cowardice.

Mr. Habel: You are completely out of your mind.

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Speaker, I have the right to speak according to my conscience—

[Text]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Batten): Order please.

[Translation]

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Speaker, I ask the co-operation of—

[Text]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Batten): The hon. gentleman is again moving outside the limits of this debate.

[Translation]

Mr. Favreau: Mr. Speaker, since my name was mentioned a short while ago, I wish to say one thing only—

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the Minister of Justice is rising on a question of privilege or raising a point of order. He must do one thing or the other, but he certainly cannot take it upon himself to rise at any time without reason.

Mr. Favreau: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. The hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm mentioned my name a little earlier and I must say that, as Minister of Justice, I would set a very poor example to the house if I were to discuss a motion which has not been presented to the house.

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Justice could take the opportunity offered him by this motion for papers to tell us if he supports a motion to adopt two flags, including the union jack, and if that reflects the feelings of Quebec and Canada as a whole.

[Text]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Batten): Is the house ready for the question?

[Translation]

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Speaker, we are not ready for the question—

[Text]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Batten): The hon. member for Spadina.

[Translation]

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Speaker, I ask your permission—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. I am not through with my remarks and I should like to continue to deal with this notice of motion. I ask for your support, because I would not want closure to be imposed on us by the government on this matter. I am entitled to express my views.

If the hon. member wishes to speak after me, that is all right, because he has a right to do so, provided, of course, you give him the floor.

[Text]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Batten): The hon. member does have the right to speak on this motion, but in doing so I would expect him to observe the rules that normally apply to this particular type of motion. I understood the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm (Mr. Pigeon) had completed his remarks. If he has not completed them will he continue now, but within the limits of this particular type of debate.

[Translation]

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Speaker, at the outset of the debate, you gave some leeway to the hon. member who spoke before me. He dealt with flag designs and you allowed him to finish his remarks. It is most difficult to discuss this motion within strict limits—

An hon. Member: If you have nothing to say, sit down.

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Speaker, I request your support and protection. I can still hear members on the government side making remarks, and I would ask you to help me finish my speech on the motion under consideration.

[Text]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Batten): May I ask hon. members on both sides to refrain from making any remarks until the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm has completed his remarks.

Mr. Nielsen: On a question of privilege, there have been no remarks coming from this side except those from the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm (Mr. Pigeon). They have all been coming from the other side.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Batten): The hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm.

[Translation]

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Speaker, I hope the discussion will be more orderly and that members on the government side will co-operate with you, so that I may speak according to my conscience and express my opinion on this motion.

I know that, in that motion, the hon. member is asking for the production of the many flag designs which have come in, and I trust that all the members of the cabinet, including the Prime Minister, received a great number of them. The Minister of Justice himself certainly received some from every part of the country, including his own province; I would be very happy to know how many were sent to him. It would even be interesting to see, Mr. Speaker, at the same time the letters accompanying the designs received by the cabinet members, in order to know the views of the Canadian people in this matter.

We all want a single distinctive national flag, and not one which would include the union jack—I hope that I do not exceed the limits authorized by the motion before us. Therefore, it would be interesting to have all the designs tabled in the house, so that we might know the proportion of flags containing foreign symbols, such as, for instance—

Mr. Grégoire: Would the hon. member allow a question?

Mr. Pigeon: No, Mr. Speaker. If the hon. member for Lapointe wants to speak after me, he will have every opportunity to do so.

Mr. Grégoire: It is a question concerning the United Nations flag—

Mr. Pigeon: No, Mr. Speaker, I shall not allow the question of the hon. member for Lapointe.

[Text]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Batten): Order. The hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm is not accepting any questions at this time.

[Translation]

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Speaker, what I want is to obtain replies from the members on the government side. Now, the hon. member for Lapointe does not mean much in this house, particularly in his party, since it will completely disappear in the next election.

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Speaker, we would be happy—

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. I think that in the end—

Mr. Pigeon: There is no question of privilege.

Mr. Grégoire: I think I will agree with the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm that there is no question of privilege since from silly people we hear nothing but silly talk.

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Speaker, I do not care to reply to the remark just made by the hon. member for Lapointe, since "what his breast forges, that his tongue must vent".

[Text]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Batten): Order. I must advise the hon. member that the time allotted to him has expired and the Chair has made allowance for the interruptions which he has had. The hon. member for Spadina.

Mr. Pigeon: I ask unanimous consent to continue.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Batten): The hon. member ask the unanimous consent of the house to continue his remarks.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Pigeon: Closure. Same old gang.

Mr. Ryan: I bow to the Minister of Justice (Mr. Favreau).

[Translation]

Mr. Favreau: Mr. Speaker, I believe it is appropriate, as far as I am concerned, that I should read the motion which is before us presently in order to be quite sure not to overstep the limits suggested to the house by the mover.

It reads as follows:

[Text]

That an order of the house do issue for the production of all flag designs or models which have been received by the Prime Minister, members of the cabinet or the government, as models for a Canadian flag.

[Translation]

Now, the motion is for the production of what? Of all flag designs or models received by the Prime Minister, or the members of the government, as models for a Canadian flag. The first principle to be ascertained when we have a motion for the production of papers is whether or not such papers can be produced, in accordance with the rules of the house.

Now, I should quote from May's sixteenth edition, page 273, the following excerpt:

[Text]

While the house has the power of ordering documents to be laid before it the papers sought should be of a public official character and not private or confidential.

[Translation]

The house is facing a very strange problem considering, first of all, the nature of the motion. The first thing to know is whether what is asked is the production of papers. If so, whether such papers are of a public, private or confidential nature.

In the first place, I asked for a report on the very nature of the designs submitted, and here is the answer given in this connection:

[Text]

The 3,000 odd designs in the department of the Secretary of State are on various kinds of material including letter-paper, silk or cloth, heavy wrapping paper, canvas, hardboard, and plywood. In some cases actual flags were made up from bunting, nylon and other flag material. The designs range in size from a two inch by four inch pencil drawing to a five foot by three foot production in colour on hardboard.

[Translation]

It seems clear enough to me, Mr. Speaker, that many of these designs and models are not documents, but articles, as for instance a chair would be, and I suggest that the house has certainly no jurisdiction to order the production of articles which represent movables. I merely say that there is a serious question of whether or not those articles are papers, but this is neither the most important part nor the most serious and definite argument against the motion.

The most important thing is first of all that the models and designs were, by nature, submitted in a confidential way, in the interest of ministers, for purpose of discusison in the cabinet, or for information and as suggestions to the Prime Minister himself.

But when I say that those documents are of a confidential nature, I contend that this appears in the act itself. Under not only the Copyright Act but also the international conventions governing this matter, it is clear that as soon as any design, model or work of art was not only conceived but transferred into a concrete shape, either as a design or an article, the person who conceived, draughted or created such a model has a copyright that nobody else can infringe.

In other words it is clear that if I, in the first place, were to create a work of art or make a design and if I submitted it as a suggestion, as long as I do not waive my copyright, as long as I do not grant permission to issue that design, I keep my copyright. It is not to be published. I am the only one entitled to decide whether or not the said design will be published or issued.

Therefore, if at least only the spirit of the law is applied to the things or the papers which the motion asks to be tabled, I say that those things which, because of their very nature, were submitted in a confidential way, as I said, only for the information of the minister or of the Prime Minister, because it is contrary to the law or to the nature of those things to publish or to reproduce them.

Second, if May's comment is applied to the principle I referred to a while ago, it is clear that such things cannot be the subject of a motion for papers, because the said papers would be confidential documents submitted for the information of the minister or the Prime Minister and not for publication or reproduction.

And that goes still further. Under the Crown Liability Act which, if I remember correctly, was passed by the federal parliament in 1952, the crown is henceforth subject to civic liability, the same liability for damages, as individuals. Now, if we decided or took the responsibility to publish or to reproduce the models or the designs for which each designer has a copyright, I say that we would infringe upon the copyright of each one of those who made the models or the designs and thus we would incur civic liability for the crown and we would be transgressing law.

Indeed the first right of an author is precisely that his work be not reproduced or published without his consent, and the first transgression of that right is precisely the publication or the reproduction of the work without the consent of the author. I submit that it is surely not the purpose of the standing orders of this house or of any motion for papers to compel the crown or the government to incur a civic liability because of the breach of a statute.

That is another reason why I think we are not entitled to have printed and distributed hundreds of copies of the designs and projects which were submitted.

Moreover, what would be the use, for the purposes of the house as such—I would not say revelation—but of this reproduction? Would it be worthwhile to compel the government to break the law?

The government should take a decision as far as the design is concerned, from the designs submitted, and should choose one and recommend it to the house for adoption. Besides, the government is absolutely free to recommend some other design that has never been submitted.

Further, I would say that the motion under consideration at this time would not increase in any way the interest the house might have had in another motion that has already been tabled and which I shall not discuss, because it is not under consideration at present.

There is more; I must refer once again to the Copyright Act because it is essential, there is this: a model or design always remains the property of its author under the Copyright Act, unless the author himself agreed to the transfer of this property or of his copyright, or gave up his copyright in the work or design or in the model. Legally, the only consequence is that one and each of those designs and models remains the private property of the person who supplied it.

If we take for granted that it would still be documents, not only because the document is confidential, since it was submitted to the minister or the Prime Minister on a confidential basis, but it goes farther than that, we are simply and solely faced with articles which are the private property of those who submitted them for suggestion purposes. Now, it seems clear to me that the purpose of a motion for papers cannot be to obtain the production of what is the private property of a person. What can be obtained is the production of papers which are public documents.

I feel that if the confidence motion was to be eliminated, if desired, by saying: Well, if a flag has been submitted to a minister, it is because the minister is allowed to use it, nevertheless, the design or model remains the private property of the person who supplied it, unless a transfer was clearly granted.

Once again, therefore, a motion for papers cannot be used to tell the government: well, those items, those things that were handed to the minister or the Prime Minister, we insist now, even if they do not belong to the minister or the Prime Minister or if they do not belong to the government, we insist now that they be shown to the house.

I think those are extremely serious reasons taken exclusively, but of necessity, from a federal statute enacted by this parliament and which this parliament ought to be the first to respect.

[Text]

Mr. Thomas M. Bell (Saint John-Albert): Mr. Speaker, may I just ask the minister if he will explain why this situation is different from that in 1946? The models and the suggestions put forward under the very same circumstances were made public by Mr. Harris' committee in 1946.

[Translation]

Mr. Favreau: I am speaking in 1964, Mr. Speaker, under my own responsibility. The question you have to settle now—

[Text]

Mr. Bell: Oh, it is different.

Mr. Favreau: I am advised, Mr. Speaker, that with regard to this matter there was a committee of the House of Commons and the Senate. I am not aware personally of the way in which the designs or models were produced, but at all events here we are dealing with a motion for the production of papers and we must comply with the rules which have been laid down with regard to such a motion.

If we accept the principle that copyright is vested in each of the authors of these designs or models, a similar matter was decided in the British House of Commons in 1884. On July 1, 1884, the British House of Commons passed the following resolution—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Churchill: Why go back that far? We were dealing with 1946.

Mr. Favreau: I am referring here to a principle which has been laid down by the mother of parliaments in a similar matter.

Mr. Kindt: It's like oxtail soup: it's a long way back.

Mr. Favreau: In the matter of legal or constitutional precedent it is never too far back, because age makes a thing sacred. Mr. Speaker, I will read the resolution which was passed by the British House of Commons:

[Mr. Favreau.]

Resolved, that an humble address be presented to Her Majesty, that she will be graciously pleased to give directions, that there be laid before this house a copy of Dr. Crichton Browne's treatise on "Education and the Nervous System"—

It seems that this motion had a similar reaction on the opposition.

—together with a copy of his letter to the vice president of the council.

On July 3, the following entry appears in the Journals of the House of Commons for that year, at page 336:

Notice having been taken that the order of the house of Tuesday last, for an address for "a copy of Dr. Crichton Browne's treatise on 'Education and the Nervous System', together with a copy of his letter to the vice president of the council", related to a private matter, over which the house had no jurisdiction, and involved a question of copyright—

—it was ordered that the said order be discharged. In other words, Mr. Speaker, the British House of Commons discharged its own order when it was shown that as far as the object of the order was concerned copyright was vested in a private individual. The British House of Commons decided that this was a private matter and that its own order ought to be discharged.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I regret to interrupt the minister, but his time has expired.

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, in the few seconds left at my disposal I want to congratulate the minister upon the admirable attempt he made to spit through the eye of a needle. As a matter of fact, he was speaking here for 20 minutes on copyrights and the like, and all about the secrecy attached to documents that were submitted. The first point I would like to make to him is that copyrights are not secret.

THE ROYAL ASSENT

A message was delivered by Major C. R. Lamoureux, Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod, as follows:

Mr. Speaker, the Honourable the Deputy Governor General desires the immediate attendance of this honourable house in the chamber of the honourable the Senate.

Accordingly, Mr. Speaker with the house went up to the Senate chamber.

And being returned:

Mr. Speaker informed the house that the Deputy Governor General had been pleased to give, in Her Majesty's name, the royal assent to the following bill:

An act for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money for the public service for the financial year ending the 31st March, 1965.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Speaker: It is my duty, pursuant to provisional standing order 39A, to inform the house that the questions to be raised at ten o'clock p.m. this day are as follows:

The hon. member for Essex West (Mr. Gray), the number of unemployment insurance claimants; the hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka (Mr. Aiken), consideration of estimates providing for emergency assistance with respect to the low water situation on the great lakes; the hon. member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow), the detention of Mr. Harry Hooper for an undue length of time.

At six o'clock the house took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The house resumed at 8 p.m.

TERRITORIAL SEA AND FISHING ZONES

LEGISLATION RESPECTING TERRITORIAL WATERS AND FISHERIES LAWS

The house resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Martin (Essex East) for the second reading of Bill No. S-17, respecting the territorial sea and fishing zones of Canada.

Mr. Howard: I should like to rise on a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker. This is the first opportunity I have had to do so because the matter did not come to my attention until the dinner hour. It involves the proceedings before the Senate standing committee on banking and commerce on Wednesday, May 13, 1964 and relates to some remarks of the chairman, Hon. Senator Salter A. Hayden. He related to the committee the gist of a conversation which he had with, as he puts it, a representative of the united fishermen and allied workers union and a member of the House of Commons. I was the member of the House of Commons. I took a gentleman, Mr. Tom Parkin, from the united fishermen and allied workers union to see Senator Hayden, the chairman of the committee and discuss the possibility of a delegation from that organization appearing before the committee later in the month. Senator Hayden goes on to say this:

I pointed out that with the convenience of transportation now there was no particular reason why we should delay until the end of the month, and they agreed that they could get a flight overnight and be here, and I told them that that should be their course of action for next Wednesday.

Later on, he says:

I had an assurance when these two gentlemen left my office last Wednesday that if they could not secure a postponement they would be here.

This is an incorrect interpretation of the discussion which we had with Senator Hayden, and completely distorts the truth. I did not enter into the conversation—

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. My hon. friend is referring to proceedings in the other place. I cannot see how the hon. gentleman can raise, as he is now doing, a matter of privilege in respect of a situation that happened in the other place.

Mr. Fairweather: And 14 days ago.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Fourteen days ago, as my hon. friend says. I cannot see how this is in order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Howard: I may point out, Mr. Speaker, it does not particularly matter if it was 14 days or 14 months ago. The hon. senator misrepresented the discussion that took place between myself, the person who came to see me and the senator. He relates that incorrect interpretation in a place where it becomes a matter of public record. I feel, then, I am duty bound, in the only forum I have at my disposal at the moment, to rise on a question of privilege and say that the hon. senator completely misrepresented the gist of that conversation and left a false impression with that committee.

[Translation]

Mr. Alexandre Cyr (Gaspé): Mr. Speaker, I would not want to let the debate on second reading of Bill No. S-17 go by without taking a little trip on the territorial waters of Canada, particularly on the gulf of St. Lawrence.

I hope I will not get seasick, like the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Howard), and have to come back ashore to talk about another topic, such as the national flag. However, I can tell the house that fishermen of the Gaspé peninsula are most anxious to fly on their boats the flag with three maple leaves.

Mr. Speaker, a very high percentage of the people living in coastal areas of the maritime provinces depend on the sea for their livelihood, and for a great many years fishermen organizations have requested the extension of the fishing zone limit to 12 miles. On behalf of the fishermen of my riding and on my own behalf, I congratulate the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Martin) and the Minister of Fisheries (Mr. Robichaud) on the introduction of this bill.

The legislation under consideration is most important for our fishermen who have had, for the past few years, large trawlers which enable them to fish outside the three mile limit. The owners of such craft must be given a wider field of operation, so that they may have their share of our country's resources.

We all know that Canada must respect the historic and traditional rights of certain countries, such as France and the United States. Those two countries enjoy privileges which do not hinder the fishermen of the Gaspe area. It is always possible to reach an agreement among friends. At present, fishermen from St. Pierre and Miquelon islands have their home port at Percé and operate along the shores of the Gaspé peninsula without the least bit of trouble.

The amendment, which will be put to a vote this evening, provides that the bill be referred to the standing committee on marine and fisheries, of which I am proud to be a member and the vice chairman. We shall be most glad to welcome any association, union or group wishing to be heard by that committee. I think it is time for the hon. members of this house to show our Canadian fishermen that we are looking after their problems by passing this Bill No. S-17 immediately on second reading. In my opinion, that would be the nicest gift to give our valiant fishermen to mark the opening of the fishing season. After the month of May 1964, it would come too late to be considered as a gift.

As mentioned by the Secretary of State for External Affairs before five o'clock, this bill will be referred to the standing committee on marine and fisheries committee after it is passed on second reading. Therefore, we should make it our duty to vote against the amendment now before us.

[Text]

Mr. Grant Deachman (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, the members from British Columbia were pleased indeed during this current week to see a delegation coming again from the fishermen on the Pacific coast to put their story before us. They have been here before and we were happy to see them again. The delegation was comprised of men, and in some cases their wives, who are actively engaged in the fishing industry on the west coast; and accompanying the delegation, and forming a strong part of it, were a number of Indians from the west coast, many of whom derive their livelihood from commercial fishing, men who from early times have been competent and brave seamen on the coastal waters of the Pacific, who have adapted themselves to commercial fishing and who are well known in the fishing trade on that coast. Indeed it is heartening for anybody who looks at the problems of employing native Canadian Indians to see how well they adapt themselves to this basic trade on the Pacific coast.

As fishermen they have always had a moving story to tell regarding their life on the sea, and the problems and dangers which surround them. Not the least of these dangers is the very grave one of not being able to find sufficient fish in the course of a season's fishing to meet the heavy expenses of operating expensive fishing vessels, and the expenses of competing in the coastal waters of Canada for their livelihood, not only against fellow Canadian fishermen but against fishermen of other countries encroaching closely upon the shores of Canada. This, basically, was the story they wanted to put to us and have us understand.

It is not a new story in itself, for again and again this very competent union has put its story, and put it ably, in talks which it has had with the Minister of Fisheries (Mr. Robichaud). These union members have delivered briefs to each and every member of the House of Commons. They have visited on more than one occasion with members of the house to make them familiar with their case and their particular problems. They have a newspaper which is received regularly through the mail by members of parliament, a newspaper which keeps members in close touch with what they are doing and what they are thinking.

Therefore there was not anything new in what they had to say. They were bringing no new facts to light as they told us their story. They simply reiterated the very grave problems which they face. They told us it was their hope that their story would be told to the standing committee on marine and fisheries before second reading of the bill was reached. If this had been possible I am sure they would have told their story dramatically, and with all the emphasis which people, seeking their livelihood from fishing, can give to the expression of their problems. But I doubt that taking that story before the committee, and using the time of the committee to explain points that have already been made very clear, would have done much to improve upon the knowledge which the committee already has of the problem. Indeed, in doing so we might have run into some dangers.

It was made very clear by the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Martin), when he opened the discussion on the bill in this house on May 20, that negotiations and talks were already under way with other nations in regard to the effect of Canada's unilateral action in establishing the 12 mile limit, and that to open up these matters to searching committee discussion, at a time when Canada was involved in delicate negotiations, would not be in the best interests of Canada.

Basically, what do these fishermen want? They would of course like to see all fishermen of other countries, even countries with historic fishing rights, excluded from Canadian waters and from within the 12 mile limit. I am sure, Mr. Speaker, that the problems attendant upon this will be clear to every member of the house. Such matters are those for most careful negotiation between the Secretary of State for External Affairs and the secretary of state of the United States to establish how the problem of sharing the fisheries off the coasts of North America can best be handled.

An indication that this has been receiving the close attention of the government was given by the Secretary of State for External Affairs when he referred to the remarks of the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) on his return from Hyannis Port when he said, as recorded at page 621 of Hansard for June 4, 1963, with respect to his discussions with President Kennedy:

> I informed him that the Canadian government would shortly be taking decisions to establish a 12 mile fishing zone. The President reserved the long-standing American position in support of the three mile limit. He also called attention to the "historic" and treaty fishing rights of the U.S.A., and I assured him that these rights would be taken into account. Discussions will be held with the United States with a view to determining the nature and extent of the U.S.A. rights and interests which may be affected by action which Canada is taking.

These negotiations are now in progress. As the Secretary of State for External Affairs said on May 20, as recorded at page 3411 of Hansard:

> This is what the government of Canada is now in the process of doing. We have already had three rounds of negotiations with the United States. In the last two months we have had a round of discussions with Norway, Denmark, Britain, Portugal, Spain, Italy and Japan. All these countries sent officials to Ottawa to have talks with us, and in our negotiations with the United States one of the meetings took place in Washington. I am hopeful that in all cases our discussions will work out satisfactorily—

Now, Mr. Speaker, while these discussions of such a delicate nature are in process I think the house will understand that the best it could do at the moment in the interest of the fishermen would be to give second reading to this bill, and thus assure them that we have taken one more step towards recognition in principle of a 12 mile limit, on a unilateral basis, to protect the fishing industry of Canada, and that we intend to proceed with the next step from there.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): I rise purely for the purpose of making a suggestion to the minister. The Minister of Fisheries (Mr. Robichaud) and other speakers on the government side have suggested that they would be happy to see this matter go to the committee on fisheries—

Mr. Martin (Essex East): To have the bill go.

Mr. Douglas: —to have the bill go. We of course would like to see the bill go to committee prior to second reading. I rise for the purpose of asking the minister, who is piloting the legislation through the house, if he would be prepared either to introduce or to support a motion which would send the subject matter of this legislation to the committee, as we did with similar legislation a year ago? If the minister is not prepared to do this, I think we have no recourse but to vote on this motion. If the minister agrees to send the subject matter to the committee we are prepared to withdraw our motion and support the motion to send the subject of the bill to the committee. I cannot see why the minister should be shaking his head so vigorously. If the course we propose were adopted, the committee on marine and fisheries would have an opportunity to discuss the whole subject matter of the bill without being tied down to legislation to which this house had already given approval on second reading.

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Douglas: Is the minister not prepared to send the subject matter of this legislation to the committee on fisheries?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): That is not a suggestion which can be accepted. Nothing would weaken the negotiations which are now under way more than such a course. One of the reasons this bill was introduced was to facilitate and strengthen us in the negotiations we are conducting—so that we would be able to say we have a legislative basis. The course suggested by the hon. member is on that account, apart from other reasons, unacceptable. But there will be the fullest opportunity for members of the committee to put forward various points of view, to seek improvements in the bill and to seek to obtain further information from the government about the base lines. The information available will depend upon the nature of the negotiations at that time. I am sure the purpose the hon. gentleman has in mind could be served by giving second reading to the bill and referring it to the committee for the fullest discussion.

[Mr. Martin (Essex East).]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I declare the motion lost. Is the house ready for the question on the main motion?

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. G. H. Aiken (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, it is my understanding that this bill will be sent after second reading to the standing committee on marine and fisheries. If I may speak on the main motion for a moment, I should like to make my position clear. I favour a complete and full examination of this bill in a committee where witnesses can be heard and the matter can be fully discussed. However, we in this party are fairly well agreed on the general principle of establishing the limits which are set out in the bill. We feel however that the bill has many shortcomings in that certain matters have been left out of it and that it has inadequacies. We hope that schedules might be added to the bill and that some of our doubts might thus be clarified.

It is for that reason we voted against sending it to a committee at this stage, before second reading. We feel, as I say, that the bill should be accepted in principle, regardless of the shortcomings to which I have referred; and we hope it may be amended in committee after full and complete hearings have been held, so that the bill will be satisfactory to everyone in the house.

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, we have no desire, and I certainly hope the impression is not left that we do have any desire, to disagree or quarrel with the decision the house has just made. We think it should have made a different decision, but it did not. We think it would have been the better course to follow if the house had made a different decision. However the bill is before us for second reading, and we are now in the position of saying that this is better than nothing at all.

We hope that when the bill gets to the committee this full, clear and deep examination which the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Martin) has promised will take place, will in fact take place. I have noticed in the past that ministers of the crown have given the house similar assurances, but when the matter was referred to the committee the majority on the committee—this was when we used to have a majority on a committee—decided otherwise. So the assurances of the Secretary of State for External Affairs really do not mean anything because it is the committee which will decide what it will or will not discuss. However, it is good to have the statement of the Secretary of State for External Affairs on the record so that we can persistently point to it if any of the members of the committee try to stifle the examination or debate which will take place.

I should like to make a few remarks about what I think is an incorrect approach to the negotiations to which reference was made, and the course which those negotiations have followed. In the first instance the Minister of Fisheries (Mr. Robichaud) and the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Martin) have each said that the basis for this bill is the brief which was presented by the Fisheries Council of Canada some time in January of 1963. I merely want to say that the fisheries council of Canada is not the only organization in this nation with an interest in the fisheries. In fact, it represents only one segment of the fishing industry, the employing section, and thus would likely take a biased and prejudiced approach. So I think it was wrong in principle to base the contents of the bill solely upon a brief presented to the government by one section of the fishing industry.

Second, I think it is wrong in principle to use the contents of that brief as a basis for negotiations. We have heard the cabinet say time and time again that they must not disclose what their position is, that they cannot make public what they are thinking about, that they want to approach the negotiations with the other nations with a strong hand and therefore they do not dare tell the parliament and people of Canada what they are doing. On the other hand, they claim they are basing their whole negotiations on a brief which is a public document. Thus, if that is the basis for their negotiations, they are in the position of only being able to retreat from that base and are not able to negotiate beyond the contents of that brief, because the pressures from other nations are directed toward making the Canadian government retrench and draw back from whatever position they may have started with, with respect to base lines, fishing zones or anything else.

Here are two things that are wrong: First, basing their approach upon the attitude of one segment of the fishing industry and, second, saying that the attitude of that segment is the basis of negotiations, thus leaving the government in the position of only being able to retreat, depending upon the amount of pressure exerted by other nations. They were wrong in principle in approaching these negotiations, because of the fact that from the very start they had given away two principal points. They gave away the opportunity to attempt to renegotiate the two existing treaties with regard to historic fishing rights claimed by the United States and France. It is a bad and terrible way to conduct negotiations to say to those with whom you are negotiating: We are going to give away some of our points before we even talk about these matters, so just discard this question of treaty rights and historic fishing rights and we will proceed backward from there. This is another opportunity afforded to other governments to force our government into retreating from what should be a firm and determined position.

Not only that, but in the course of this debate there came to light a most disturbing revelation. Let me quote from the opening remarks of the Secretary of State for External Affairs on May 20. I do so in order not to fall into the possible error of misinterpreting what he said. At that time he said:

> Canada has never published official charts showing the present base lines, but for at least parts of our coast the base lines follow the sinuosities of the shore.

In other words, the base line is measured from the high water mark. He went on to say:

> Pending the establishment of straight base lines, the fishing zones will be measured from the existing ones. This is clearly provided for in the bill.

I take that to mean that from the present high water mark from which we now measure three miles we will measure 12 miles when the bill establishing the fishing zone comes into effect.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Nine plus three.

Mr. Howard: Nine plus three are 12, so we will measure nine miles beyond the present three and we will have a 12 mile fishing zone following what is called the sinuosities of the coast or the convolutions of the bays, inlets and so on. Following that we will then have secret negotiations, or by decision of the cabinet co-ordinates will be established and we will draw the base lines and measure the distance all over again. But with respect to the initially established fishing zone let me quote what the hon. member for Antigonish-Guysborough (Mr. Stewart) said on May 21. As everyone in the house knows, he is a prospective cabinet minister inasmuch as he is now in that esteemed position of parliamentary secretary, and presumably he speaks with some authority. He pretty well reiterates what I have just said, but as found on page 3467 of Hansard he made this statement:

When this bill has been proclaimed Canada's fishing zone will extend nine miles beyond the present three mile limit. The function of this portion of the bill, as I understand it, is to establish the existence of Canadian fishing zones.

This is the important part.

Let me say here parenthetically, Mr. Speaker, that it is my understanding also that since these zones are shortly to be moved farther out to sea in many places—that is, just as soon as the straight base lines have been defined and published—these zones will not be enforced in their temporary locations.

What sort of admission is that for the parliamentary secretary to make when the parliament of Canada is being asked to enact a law to establish a 12 mile fishing zone, namely to say that this does not matter because we are not going to enforce it in any event? It makes an absolute ass out of the law that we are in the process of enacting. I think this is a disgraceful state of affairs, and another revelation to parliament and the Canadian people of the attitude of the government toward this vitally important question.

As has been mentioned a couple of times, before we even started discussions we gave away our position so far as these so-called historic and treaty fishing rights are concerned. The Secretary of State for External Affairs made this as clear as it is possible for him or anybody else to make anything clear before the banking and commerce committee, when he said it was never the intention of the government to interfere in any way with the existing treaties. On the 26th of May, as found on page 3620 of Hansard, the minister referred to the historic fishing rights, and I should like to quote from what he said. Incidentally he is a very quotable person. At times it is difficult to quote him with any clarity because he is so verbose and clutters his thoughts with so many words that it is difficult to distinguish just what is fact and what is fancy, but in this case he was particularly clear. He said:

There is no intention to interfere with the treaty or historic fishing rights of the United States, with whom the particular negotiation has been put in question by my hon. friend, and there is no justification for creating the suggestion that anything involving Canada's interest stands in jeopardy.

That is as clear as it is possible for anything to be clear. The Canadian government had no intention and does not intend to interfere with the historic fishing rights of the United States. This substantiates what I said earlier, that the government gave away one of the points of negotiation before even entering into negotiations. This was substantiated by the Minister of Fisheries on May 27 and I should like to quote from his remarks as found on page 3660 of Hansard. Incidentally, I should preface this by saying that he was referring to the thought that retaliation might be forthcoming from the United States if we took a firmer attitude on this question. He said:

Seeing that the interests of the United States fishermen in the areas affected by the establishment of a 12 mile fishing zone and straight base lines are being fully recognized, and I would hope my hon. friend agrees with me on this position, it is difficult to see how the question of retaliation by the United States should even arise.

I want to come back to this question of potential retaliation in a moment, but for the time being I want to stick to these two quotations. They represent a clear statement by the two responsible ministers that the so-called historic fishing rights to which they referred are fully protected now, fully recognized. They are given full protection in the future, perhaps forever, but this is not clear in the bill that is now before us.

We come now to the question of the reluctance or refusal of the cabinet ministers responsible to disclose to the house what are to be the co-ordinates from which or between which the base lines will be drawn. If as the two hon. gentlemen have said the historic fishing rights and treaty fishing rights of the United States of America are to be fully protected, then why do they not declare now what the base line and the co-ordinates will be for the west coast? The United States of America is the only nation in the world that has any treaty or historic fishing rights on the west coast. There are to be no negotiations, since these rights are fully recognized and fully established. What is wrong now with saying, since these negotiations are completed, here are the base lines? Then, at least parliament will be taken into the confidence of the two hon. gentlemen about this phase of it.

Perhaps they are going to make more concessions. This is a very incisive question. What sort of concessions are they going to make to the United States, to their friends south of the line? Why the refusal to disclose this information when it cannot possibly affect any negotiations because each of the ministers has said the position of the United States on the west coast will be fully recognized?

I can predict, I think, now what will happen. The Minister of Fisheries (Mr. Robichaud) tried unsuccessfully yesterday to mislead the house into thinking that Dixon entrance, Hecate strait and Queen Charlotte sound would be enclosed within the lines. I will tell you what is likely to be the case. Obviously, because of the refusal to disclose at this time where the base line is going to be drawn out there, the base line from headland to headland will be drawn in such a way that Hecate strait, Dixon entrance and Queen Charlotte sound will be left as international waters. Is there any reason why the minister cannot say now that the situation will be otherwise? We would certainly like to hear it. I think at this juncture, before the house is asked to pass this bill in principle, this is the sort of information that should be given to us.

Following their argument—I think it is an illogical one—but following their argument they may have a case for refusing to disclose this information so far as the east coast is concerned. They claim to be dealing with Denmark, Great Britain, Italy, Norway and other countries in connection with these so-called historic fishing rights. They may not want to disclose their hand at this stage, although I fail to see why. They disclose their hand to the United States and they give way on all points even before the negotiations take place.

This question is of vital importance to west coast fishermen, vitally important to the preservation and development of our fisheries out there. The refusal to disclose this information, unless there is a clear, adequate reason given for that refusal, would be tantamount to the admission that they intend to give more and more before the pressure of their very friendly neighbours, as they call them.

Before I sit down, I should like to make a reference to the thought expressed that there might be economic retaliation by the United States against our fishery exports to that country. I believe these exports total in the neighbourhood of $100 million per year in value. In the first place, I cannot see why there would be retaliation because each of the ministers has disclosed that the treaty rights and historic fishing rights of the United States are completely recognized. Why raise the question of potential retaliation?

In any event, let us look at a few statistics which I was able to obtain today from a United States publication of the department of interior, fish and wildlife service, bureau of commercial fisheries, entitled, "Fisheries of the United States for 1962." This publication came out in April of this year. Incidentally, these statistics are substantiated by our own statistics, but I thought that inasmuch as the United States are involved we should look at what they have to say on the question. The United States, from its own waters, cannot at this stage and have not been able for some years now, to catch sufficient fish for their own domestic consumption. There is some argument about this, depending upon whether you take into account their exports and balance them against their imports or whether you do not take that into account. There is some argument as to what this catch is in relation to consumption, but it ranges between one half and two thirds. No matter how you interpret the statistics, the United States cannot possibly obtain from its own waters more than two thirds of its domestic requirements. It must import at least one third which, in poundage value of edible fish products, is in the neighbourhood of 1.2 billion pounds and in non-edible fish products such as meals and oils, is in the neighbourhood of 75 million pounds, with a value of about $500 million.

For a number of years the United States has been in a position whereby they must import this amount of fish. One could say that if we get firm with them they may cut off importation of our fish and buy it from some other nation. But what sort of friends are they if they do that? We have been told by everybody from the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) down, and from the Acting Prime Minister (Mr. Martin) up, that they are the greatest bosom pals we have in the whole world; that the United States government are our friends and allies, and that they bestow love and affection upon us. What sort of friends are they if we as a small nation, one tenth the size in wealth and population, exert a little bit of national sovereignty for our self-preservation economically and for the preservation of our fisheries, and they turn around and wreak some economic retaliation against us? I just do not believe they would, or else the Prime Minister and his colleagues have been telling us a different story about this love and tenderness which exists between us and the United States.

I merely point out this one fact, if it is necessary, to show it clearly; and I do not know any other way to put it except to say in a rather blunt fashion that the government of Canada, in this as in other instances, obviously has not the intestinal fortitude necessary to protect fully the interests of the fisheries people in Canada.

Mr. A. B. Patterson (Fraser Valley): Mr. Speaker, my remarks will be very limited this evening. However, I feel there are several observations I should make at this particular stage of the debate.

I abstained from the vote tonight, not because I am not in sympathy with the views of the united fishermen and allied workers union but because I was not in agreement with either the position of the government or the position that was indicated by the motion to refer that was voted upon tonight.

Perhaps I could put it in a more positive way. I agree with the main principles enunciated by the fishermen's union. On the other hand, I do not appreciate the adamant stand that has been taken by the government in regard to these essential matters. I believe we have now reached the point, if this bill passes second reading tonight, where the onus rests on the government to hear the representatives of the fishermen themselves and to give them the fullest opportunity to present their case before the standing committee on marine and fisheries.

The union feels, and I believe it has right to feel, that it has been given the run-around so far as the work of the committee on marine and fisheries is concerned. I brought this matter to the attention of the minister. Other members have brought it to his attention, and the union feels that on a number of occasions promises have been made—sacred promises—by the Minister of Fisheries (Mr. Robichaud), but he has not yet come through with them. Therefore they feel in this particular matter that they are in the position where they can hardly trust the Minister of Fisheries.

The promise was made by the minister to the effect that this bill would be referred to the committee after second reading. I wonder why the fishermen's union did not have the opportunity of bringing its case before the committee months ago. I do not think there was anything to hinder the setting up of that committee and allowing the representatives of the fishermen to appear and discuss, at least in general terms, the basic problems that are facing them at the present time. They would not have had the bill before them. They would not have had any resolution before them, but at least they would have had the opportunity of presenting their case before the committee so that every member of that committee would be well versed on the views they hold on this matter.

When I spoke on this subject a few days ago the minister interjected to say they had already secured the views of the fishermen's union and that a very substantial brief was presented at the conference held some time ago. However, I insist that is far less satisfactory than having the men appear before the committee on marine and fisheries where members of that committee could question the representatives of the fishermen and could have a frank discussion on these various matters.

The minister, and I believe also the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Martin), indicated that it would not be in the best interests of the negotiations currently being undertaken to have this matter submitted to the committee before second reading of the bill. There may be some validity to that argument at the present time but, as I said before, I do not see why the opportunity could not have been given to the fishermen's union to present their case before the committee several months ago.

I trust, Mr. Speaker, that when this matter does go before the committee there will not be any attempt on the part of the government, or on the part of government members, to limit the debate, discussion and expressions before that committee on these various matters that have been referred to tonight by the hon. member for Skeena Mr. (Howard), such as historic fishing rights, base lines and all the other relevant factors. I trust that the united fishermen and allied workers union and others representing fishermen will then take full advantage of pleading their case before that important committee of the house.

Hon. H. J. Robichaud (Minister of Fisheries): Just in order to keep the record straight, Mr. Speaker, I think I should reply very briefly to the statement made by the hon. member for Fraser Valley (Mr. Patterson) to the effect that I have not kept my promise to the united fishermen and allied workers union that they would be given a chance to appear before the standing committee on marine and fisheries.

Just a few weeks after I assumed responsibility as Minister of Fisheries, on my first visit to the west coast, I met with representatives of the union and I made a definite commitment that the question of the north Pacific treaty would be referred to the standing committee on marine and fisheries before ratification or acceptance by the government. I had no way of knowing at that time that we would have three or four phases of negotiations. Later, I made a similar statement in the house. I repeated in the house what I told representatives of the united fishermen and allied workers union, that once the negotiations had been completed on the north Pacific fisheries treaty, the standing committee on marine and fisheries would be convened and the question brought before it before acceptance or ratification by the government.

This is the promise which I made to the united fishermen and allied workers union, and I am sure the hon. member will understand that while the negotiations are under way, while we are on the eve of getting agreement on this treaty, it would not be proper to bring the matter before the committee and disclose the details of negotiations which are taking place, not only between two countries but between Japan, the United States and Canada.

Mr. Patterson: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. Is the hon. member rising to ask a question? He has already spoken on the motion now before the house, and of course cannot speak twice.

Mr. Patterson: I realize that, but I would like to ask the minister if he feels he has fully fulfilled his promises to the fishermen in regard to the opportunity of presenting various matters before the standing committee on marine and fisheries—not just one particular one, but several? I would like to ask the minister if he feels he has fully met his promises to the fishermen's union?

Mr. Robichaud: Mr. Speaker, when Bill S-17 will be referred to the standing committee on marine and fisheries that group will be given full opportunity to express its views and, if it is decided that during the present session the estimates of the Department of Fisheries be brought before that committee, there again they will be given the opportunity to present their views. But once again I want to emphasize the point that we cannot bring the matter of the north Pacific treaty before the committee when negotiations are under way.

Mr. Patterson: May I ask the minister why it was not possible to have a meeting of the standing committee on marine and fisheries some months ago, when the fishermen could have presented their views in regard to such matters as the 12 mile limit, base lines and the other things that are before us at present, at a time before the negotiations actually started?

Mr. Robichaud: Well, Mr. Speaker, at the last session it was decided that the estimates of the Department of Fisheries, for obvious reasons, would not be brought before the committee. There were no matters to refer to the committee at the time, but now that we have this Bill S-17, and when the north Pacific negotiations are completed, we will have definite matters to bring before the committee. Again I want to stress the point that this group will be given the fullest opportunity to express its views.

Mr. Howard: I wonder if I could ask the minister before he concludes whether it is the intention of the government to proceed to move a motion in this house to refer the estimates of the Department of Fisheries to the fisheries committee this session.

Mr. Robichaud: This matter is under consideration. The chairman of the standing committee on marine and fisheries was in to see me a few days ago and I told him that I hoped to be able to make a decision on this matter very soon.

Mr. Patterson: Is the government prepared to set out the base lines and the co-ordinates for the base lines before this bill is brought back before the house?

Mr. Robichaud: That is a decision which will be taken when the committee is called together.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and referred to the standing committee on marine and fisheries.

NATIONAL HOUSING ACT

AMENDMENT RESPECTING RENEWAL PROGRAMS, PUBLIC HOUSING PROJECTS, ETC.

Hon. J. R. Nicholson (Postmaster General) moved that the house go into committee to consider the following resolution:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure to amend the National Housing Act, 1954,

(a) to provide further assistance to provinces and municipalities carrying out urban renewal programs by authorizing Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation (hereinafter referred to as "the corporation") to make contributions and loans to provinces or municipalities to assist them in meeting the costs of such programs, and for this purpose to provide for the payment out of the consolidated revenue fund of amounts not exceeding in the aggregate one hundred million dollars;

(b) to authorize the corporation to make loans and to insure loans made by approved lenders to owners of existing houses in areas included in urban renewal programs;

(c) to authorize the corporation to make loans and contributions to provincially or municipally owned housing agencies for constructing or acquiring public housing projects and operating such projects, and to authorize the corporation to contribute a portion of the operating losses on any such projects that provide subsidized housing accommodation to individuals or families of low income;

(d) to permit federal-provincial public housing projects to include existing housing and hostel or dormitory type housing accommodation;

(e) to authorize the corporation to make loans to non-profit organizations to assist in the acquisition or construction of housing accommodation for individuals or families of low income;

(f) to authorize the corporation to make loans to co-operative associations and charitable corporations to assist in the construction of accommodation for university students and their families and to increase from one hundred million dollars to one hundred and fifty million dollars the maximum amount that may be paid out of the consolidated revenue fund for this purpose;

(g) to authorize the corporation to make loans to provinces to assist in the construction or expansion of sewage treatment projects and to authorize the corporation to forgive repayment of twenty five per cent of the principal and interest on any loans made to provinces or municipalities for this purpose in respect of work completed by March 31, 1967;

(h) to increase from two billion dollars to two and one half billion dollars the maximum charge on the consolidated revenue fund for direct loans by the corporation;

(i) to provide for the establishment of a special account in the consolidated revenue fund out of which amounts not exceeding in the aggregate one hundred million dollars may be advanced to the corporation for the making of loans to the holders of mortgages issued in respect of loans insured under the act and for the purchase by the corporation of mortgages issued to secure such loans;

(j) to increase the loan ratio for insured loans made to home owners and builders; and

(k) to provide further for certain changes in the administration of the act.

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee thereon, Mr. Lamoureux in the chair.

Mr. Nicholson: This is my first comprehensive statement in this chamber as the minister responsible for housing. If for no other reason, the social and economic implications to Canada of this very important subject would make it an occasion of great significance to me. It is also the government's first comprehensive statement with respect to housing.

The resolution is the forerunner of amendments to the National Housing Act which represent a basic change in our concept, perhaps I should say a completely fresh approach, to some of the most vexing housing problems facing the country.

The proposed amendments will introduce a new flexibility into our National Housing Act, both as to objectives and as to ways in which we should strive to attain these objectives. They will, I hope, influence for the better the lives of many thousands of Canadians, in cities and towns, both large and small in all parts of Canada. Here in the resolution, and of course, in the bill to follow, is the promise of new hope for lower income families, for elderly persons and for those who are forced to raise their children in slums or near slums. There is also an added measure of help for university students. Finally, there are broad changes designed to assist provinces and, through them, the municipalities, to meet some of their housing and other development needs.

In view of what I have said, the duty I am called upon to perform tonight carries with it a double satisfaction. It also carries with it an element of sorrow, since both the resolution and the amending bill represent years of thought, work and effort on the part of our former colleague in this house, the minister of national revenue at the time of his death, the late member for Nipissing.

The late Jack Garland was a member of this house for more than 14 years. During a large part of that time he was the opposition critic on housing matters. Throughout the whole of his adult life he had a vital interest in this subject and he acquired a vast knowledge of Canada's housing needs. Consequently, I am sure it did not surprise members of this house to learn that when he became a minister of the crown he was given an opportunity to implement many of the policies and views that he had expressed when he sat on the opposition benches. The resolution now being considered and the bill to follow are largely Jack Garland's brainchild and I know I voice the sorrow and sincere regret of all hon. members that Jack Garland himself is not here to introduce this resolution and speak in support of it.

I should also like at this time to express appreciation of the work done on this particular resolution and on the bill to follow by another great Canadian, the late president of Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation, Dr. Stewart Bates, whose death earlier this week came as a shock to us all. As hon. members are no doubt aware, Dr. Bates served his adopted homeland, Canada, with brilliance and distinction both before and after he resigned as professor of commerce at Dalhousie University early in the war years to assume an important post in the federal Department of Fisheries. After three years with the fisheries department he became deputy director general of economic research in the department of reconstruction and supply, and one year later he became director general of that branch. In 1947, Dr. Bates was appointed deputy minister of fisheries. I could not help but think of him, as I listened to the debate which took place earlier this evening and this afternoon. He made a really great contribution to the department of fisheries, in working out a series of international fishery agreements, one of which was with the north Atlantic nations while the other—the Minister of Fisheries referred to it a few minutes ago—concerned the north Pacific.

Dr. Bates was appointed president of Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation in December, 1954 and he held that office until his unexpected death on the evening of Sunday last. The late Dr. Bates worked closely with my predecessor, Mr. Garland, during the eleven months in which the latter was the responsible minister for Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation and he worked closely with me during the period which followed. I had hoped that Dr. Bates would be with me on the floor of the house, when the bill comes up for discussion. I know I voice the feelings of the sorrow and the sincere regret of all members of the house that he is not here to participate in these proceedings.

Looking back over the list of distinguished Canadians who preceded me as minister responsible for housing, I find that none of them was usually given to general statements about the basic questions of federal housing policy. Perhaps I have a less philosophical mind than most of my predecessors, but I would find it extremely difficult to consider the details of the proposed legislation, without first giving some thought to the general state of housing in Canada and to the purposes which I, as a member of the government, believe we should be trying to achieve through our housing legislation.

Earlier this month I had the pleasure of participating in the opening ceremony of a federal-provincial housing project in the city of Saskatoon. While in that city I visited two other projects that were largely financed by the federal government, with a very substantial contribution from the Saskatchewan government. Since taking over as the minister responsible for Central Mortgage and Housing, I have had occasion to visit many other housing projects in different parts of Canada, including Sarnia, Winnipeg, Vancouver and other cities, and I have been impressed by what I have seen in all these communities. But I have been even more impressed with the improvements that have taken place during the last 15 years in the design and construction of housing projects with which C.M.H.C. has been associated.

On June 26, the first federal-provincial housing project associated with urban renewal will be opened in the city of Winnipeg. It will be Winnipeg's very first urban renewal project. His Worship Mayor Juba has proposed that I encourage members of this house, who may find it possible to be in Winnipeg on June 26 to attend the opening ceremonies. The ceremonies will commence at eleven o'clock on the morning of Friday, June 26.

The federal government, the provincial government and the city of Winnipeg will be joint hosts on that occasion. The ceremony will be followed by a luncheon at the Fort Garry hotel, and members of this house and members of the other place, who may be in Winnipeg on that occasion are cordially invited to the ceremonies and to the luncheon at the Fort Garry hotel. If any hon. member can make it, if he will give his name to me, to my office or to my colleague the Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. Teillet), we will see to it that the formal invitations to the ceremonies and to the luncheon are sent to all interested members.

Mr. Chairman, by any international standard Canadians generally are well housed. We have a population of approximately 19 million, housed in 4.8 million occupied housing units. Seven out of ten of these dwellings are relatively new, having been built since 1920. Only 5 or 6 per cent of these houses are described in the 1961 census as being in need of major repair. Ninety per cent of our Canadian families have the exclusive use of their own homes.

Canada's population is increasing at the rate of about 400,000 persons per annum. This increase in population is accompanied, as all hon. members know, by a decline in farm population; thus the increase in other areas is such that as a nation we need an output of roughly 125,000 dwellings per annum in our cities and towns—not in the rural areas—merely to keep abreast of population growth in housing requirements.

Over the past ten years new housing and the repair and modernization of existing houses certainly has been sufficient to bring about a real improvement in the over-all housing situation in Canada. The number of doubled-up families has gone down by 150,000 during the period to which I have referred. Occupied dwellings in which you can get hot and cold running water has been increased during the same period by half a million. Between 1951 and 1961, there was a decline, I believe, of 400,000 or more in the number of occupied dwellings lacking modern toilet facilities. Nevertheless, Mr. Chairman, despite the generally high standard of housing conditions in Canada, and despite the recent and continuing improvement in the over-all situation, there are still far too many Canadians living in desperately inadequate and overcrowded housing units. Close to half a million families are still sharing accommodation with others, and one fifth of our dwellings in Canada still lack hot and cold water and modern bathing facilities. Fifteen per cent of our housing units or dwellings in Canada lack modern toilet facilities. The lack of amenities, as you might expect, is more pronounced in rural than in urban areas, but congestion in the cities, in the urban areas, is great, and even there the lack of amenities is shocking.

I think we can all get pleasure and satisfaction out of the very high—unusually high—average standard of housing in Canada, and we certainly can rejoice in the improvements to which I have referred. We can be gratified with the knowledge that assistance of one kind or another under our national housing acts has played a very considerable part in achieving our present standard and in improving it from year to year. But, Mr. Chairman, while we are in a mood of self-congratulation let us not fail to accept some responsibility for the misery that persists in the slum and near-slum areas of at least some Canadian cities. Also let us not forget the danger that lurks in the fire traps, let us not forget the newspaper headlines that we see too often, particularly during the winter months, that tell of death by fire, by suffocation and neglect in many of our towns and cities.

After nearly 20 years of steady improvement in average housing conditions in this country, is it not reasonable to ask one simple question? How long must the trend of improvement in average housing standards continue before we take steps, as a national parliament, to do away with some of the extreme privation that continues to plague large numbers of our fellow Canadians in their housing predicament? The answer to this question, to those who have visited Halifax, Saint John, Montreal, Toronto, Hamilton, and Vancouver particularly—my home city—hits one in the face, and certainly there is no reason for any of us to be complacent or satisfied with what we find in these cities. We cannot go on indefinitely improving the average standard of housing conditions and not seriously try to do something worth while for the large numbers of people, who are forced to put up with accommodation that in some instances at least offends even the most rudimentary sense of human dignity.

Under the National Housing Act over the past ten years the production of half a million new houses has been subsidized or assisted in one way or another. Of these houses, 450,000—90 per cent—have been built under the insured loan provisions of the National Housing Act. That is to say 90 per cent of the entire housing output associated with the National Housing Act has been provided for the middle income or upper income classes. These are people who can afford new houses. But only 10 per cent of the N.H.A. output was provided under the sections of the act specifically designed to benefit people in the lower income brackets.

I submit it is clear from this pattern that Canadian housing policy has been heavily committed to the support and aid of the private market; and rather to the production of housing than to its distribution, which has been left almost entirely to these private market forces. I am sure that the government and all hon. members of this house fully support the good features of what has happened under our existing housing policy and favour its continuation. Perhaps one way to put it is to say that this continued improvement has become a basic fact of Canadian life. But while we may undertake to continue this policy, we must be careful not to give it our exclusive commitment, because there are many things which this type of public financing cannot do. For instance, it cannot assure us that we will be able to correct the worst housing conditions, housing conditions of the nature to which I referred a few moments ago. Admittedly correction of these conditions cannot be achieved either quickly or economically under what is frequently called the "filtering down" process. I think all hon. members know, what is meant by the filtering down process, and I believe we all subscribe to some degree of belief in that process. If you build houses for the middle or upper income class, the poor of course will benefit from some of the houses which are passed down to them by the upper classes. That will follow as daylight follows dark. The slum or near slum dwellers and the poor of this country—the residual legatees, if you want to put it that way, of this filtering down process—would be very much worse off, if there were no filtering down process. Nevertheless they do not get the type of help that I am sure members of this house want them to have. The filtering down process is too indirect. It is too uncertain; it is too slow; and it is too expensive in the long run.

In the view of the government, public housing offers a device by which additional housing can be made available directly at subsidized rents to those most in need, without requiring any diversion of the housing requirements of others. If the elimination of substandard housing conditions in Canada is among our housing objectives, as it should be, then we will have to depend largely upon public housing to achieve these objectives.

There has been provision for public housing in the National Housing Act for as far back as 1949. Section 36 of that act provided for the construction and operation of public housing projects by the federal and provincial governments on a 75-25 per cent cost sharing basis.

Some provinces, and more particularly Saskatchewan—I was very impressed by the developments I saw during my visit to Saskatchewan—have done more than others in this field. Projects are initiated by the municipalities with the approval of the provinces, and during the 15 years since this section has been introduced some 12,000 public housing units have been built in Canada. Of these only 9,000 have been let at subsidized rents geared to the tenants' income. The annual subsidy bill to the federal government for these houses for the people in the lower income brackets, and our elderly citizens, is $1.7 million, and in my opinion that is a shockingly low sum to pay for a country as rich as Canada.

There are well over 100,000 families in Canada, who are unable to go to the private market to obtain accommodation or to go on the market and get houses under the existing provisions of the National Housing Act. In the course of my visits during recent months, I have been taken to houses where the accommodation is shocking and would not be considered adequate under the most Spartan of standards. In my view, and I speak as a minister of the crown, our best accomplishments in public housing are not impressive. In the view of the government it represents the greatest single area of failure in our federal housing policy.

As hon. members will see from the resolution, paragraphs (c), (d) and (e), the bill to be placed before them has as one of its principal aims a new emphasis on the needs of low income families. The bill itself will contain a new institutional framework for the provision of public housing.

As I mentioned earlier, the existing legislation does provide for federal-provincial partnerships engaged in public housing activities. Now it is proposed in this new resolution that the provinces, or perhaps I should say the municipalities which are designated by the provinces, may create and own public housing projects themselves. The federal government, through C.M.H.C., is to provide long term capital assistance in the form of loans and in the form of grants for such projects. If hon. members look at paragraph (c) of the resolution this becomes obvious. The federal government is also to pay a portion of the annual subsidies or operating losses of such projects created by the provinces or by the municipalities which they designate. That is also provided for in paragraph (c).

These projects, of course, will be reserved generally for the use of tenants unable to afford adequate accommodation on the private market. It will be largely up to the provinces and to the local government bodies designated by them to acquire and to build and manage these projects. The public housing contemplated—this is very significant—may consist of new dwellings or may consist of dwellings acquired or leased from the existing stock of units. As far as the government is concerned, non-self-contained as well as self-contained accommodation will be considered eligible under paragraph (d) of the resolution. The provision for provincial and municipal ownership to which I have just referred is considered fitting because of the wide range of responsibilities which must be assumed by the provinces, or rather by the designated municipalities. It seems obvious that the provinces will have to co-operate, and the success of the scheme to a large extent will depend on the co-operation we get from the provinces and the municipalities they designate. Even though this be so, it is not necessary for either provincial or local governments to choose this new course which is provided for in the resolution, because there is no change in what they have been able to do in the past. The existing legislation will continue.

While providing for the new techniques the legislation will not take away anything that is in the old section 36, and the arrangements for federal-provincial projects, financed on the 75-25 per cent basis, will remain. The purchase or lease of existing housing as well as the building of new houses will be possible under the new legislation. It is also significant that buildings that are not self-contained will be included in the new scheme.

In short, Mr. Chairman, the bill, which I hope we will be able to discuss in all its detail on a very early occasion, will, as the resolution indicates, offer a new technique for public housing. It will also provide for some amplification of present techniques. The goal of the legislation is frankly ambitious and it encompasses nothing less than a decent standard of housing for all Canadians.

I must point out, however, that, as I mentioned a moment ago, this objective cannot be secured by the federal government alone. It can be achieved only in those provinces which subscribe to and are prepared to share the purposes and aims of the new legislation and, of course, are prepared to share a portion of the costs.

I might say, Mr. Chairman, that the government has a flexible attitude toward the new legislation itself but not toward the objective. If within a reasonable time the legislation fails to produce the pace of activity that is needed to bring about our ultimate goal it will have to be reviewed. I believe, however, that as long as there is hard evidence of provincial dedication to the same goal as is outlined in the resolution, we will reach that goal together and we will reach it in our and not in somebody else's lifetime.

I turn now to another broad area of public policy toward which the proposed bill is directed. For the first time federal legislation is put forward which will encourage and assist municipalities, with appropriate provincial authorization and supervision, to conduct broad programs of urban renewal. Since the early 1940's—1944, I believe—the National Housing Act has offered aid to municipalities to acquire and clear worn out or substandard areas for urban redevelopment. The federal government has been willing to pay half the cost of buying and clearing blighted property, but there is a string attached to the existing legislation. It can only be done so long as there is housing before or after on the cleared site.

The federal government has also shared with the municipalities the proceeds from the disposal of cleared land. I remember one very shocking piece of land with which I am familiar, known as the Bluewater area in Sarnia. The development arose out of the exigencies of war, when there was a great deal of construction. Any kind of roof was good enough, and worse than a slum sprang up in a period of roughly ten years. These buildings have all been cleared out and removed, and under a bylaw of the city of Sarnia the property is being converted into a major new development area for industry. And so it should be because—

The Chairman: I am sorry to interrupt the minister but his time has expired unless the committee wishes to allow him to continue.

Some hon. Members: Go ahead.

The Chairman: Is it agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Nicholson: This area in Sarnia has been cleaned up and it is now being offered to industry. But there are other areas in many cities where it may be that the land should not be put to industrial purposes but should be residential. The provisions of the old act have encouraged five provincial governments and several municipalities to work along these lines. Altogether some 600 acres of urban land—and that is a lot of property—are either cleared or subject to a redevelopment program that involves slum clearance by bulldozer. Some $70 million has been or is being spent for the demolition of properties in these areas.

Municipal plans for redevelopment of cleared areas have led to the construction of a few public housing projects and the setting aside of land for parks and recreational purposes, all of which is commendable, as well as for commercial purposes. These redevelopment efforts reflect the concern of all three levels of government about the gradual spread of slums and blight and the ensuing depreciation that comes from slum areas and affects properties adjacent to slum areas.

I have spent a fair amount of time during the last two and a half months visiting some of these areas and considering reports that have come in to Central Montgage and Housing Corporation. I am firmly convinced that the course embarked upon by the late minister of national revenue when he put the N.H.A. resolution on the order paper during the first session of this parliament will commend itself to all members of the house. The plans included in the proposed new legislation call for the redevolpment of areas which would lead to the construction of public housing in some areas as well as commercial development in the same areas.

As I said before, these redevelopment efforts reflecting the concern of municipal governments can now be directed toward all these objectives. I say that for this reason. If studies are made of the data to which I have referred earlier they will show that the average cost of clearing an acre of land in a municipality is roughly $100,000. That is the average cost; but in our two major cities, Montreal and Toronto, the average cost is $300,000 per acre. Under these circumstances it becomes necessary or advisable for the federal government to move in and assume a major share of the cost and, as is proposed by this legislation, lend money to municipalities or in some cases make funds available through grants to correct the situation.

May I call it ten o'clock, Mr. Chairman, or would you like me to continue and finish my statement tonight?

Progress reported.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Chairman, I should like to ask the acting house leader about the business for tomorrow. If he can also give us a hint with regard to the business for Monday it will be very helpful to any who may be called away on urgent business. I understand that the house leader would like to pass the resolution stage preceding the bill to amend the Farm Credit Act without debate. We think that is a sensible suggestion and we agree to it. We are quite prepared to do the same thing with regard to the resolution preceding the bill to amend the Export Credits Insurance Act. The bills will then be before us at the next stage and we would have the debate then, rather than on the resolution stage.

Mr. MacNaught: Mr. Speaker, on the understanding contained in the remarks of the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre, tomorrow the first item of business will be the resolution preceding the measure to amend the Farm Credit Act, and then the resolution preceding the measure to amend the Export Credits Insurance Act. This is on the understanding that they will go through without any debate. If that is not the understanding—

Mr. Knowles: I wonder if I may say just a word? The house leader did speak to me, at any rate, about the first of these items. I have conducted the necessary consultations to join in the agreement so far as the Farm Credit Act resolution is concerned. Possibly we can make some other arrangement with regard to the other, but that had not been put to us yet.

Mr. Patterson: We find ourselves in the same position. We discussed the first resolution having to do with the Farm Credit Act, but not the Export Credits Insurance Act. However, I feel that would be satisfactory to our group.

Mr. MacNaught: On that understanding, the first item called will be the resolution preceding the Farm Credit Act amendment. If negotiations can be worked out between the house leaders between now and tomorrow morning the next item to be called will be the resolution preceding the Export Credits Insurance Act. Then, of course, we will take up the estimates of the Department of Agriculture. On Monday we will go on with the resolution that we were discussing this evening.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

(Subject matter of questions debated under adjournment motion).

A motion to adjourn the house under provisional standing order 39A deemed to have been moved.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE—NUMBER OF REGISTERED CLAIMANTS FOR BENEFITS

Mr. H. E. Gray (Essex West): Mr. Speaker, on Wednesday last I directed the following question to the Minister of Labour:

> Would he tell the house whether the figure for April 30, 1964, in today's answer to the written question of the hon. member for St. Hyacinthe-Bagot (Mr. Ricard) represents an increase or a decrease in unemployment in comparison with April 30, 1963?

The answer to the written question to which I have just referred gave the number of registered claimants for unemployment insurance at the end of each month from May 1963 to April, 1964. I suggest that to simply set forth the figures in this way does not provide information that is really useful or meaningful to the Canadian people. I feel it is an urgent national matter and that they deserve to have this type of information at this time in a way that really indicates the true situation with regard to unemployment in our country. I suggest that a simple comparison of figures, one month with another, within the same over-all 12 month period does not do this at all.

A simple comparison of this type, for example, does not take into account the seasonal factors. It ignores the fact that for certain types of jobs unemployment tends to rise in certain months of the year and therefore unemployment in Canada has had a certain tendency to rise in the months of winter and early spring. I believe that at this time the Canadian people are watching the operations of this government. They are continually forming judgments of its activities and results.

For example, Mr. Speaker, I am sure that they are most interested in the unemployment insurance fund. They note the deficit figures reported. I think they are interested in seeing whether these figures are increasing or decreasing, whether the balance of the fund is showing a tendency to rise or to go down compared to the balance in the preceding year. They would like to see how these particular figures for the unemployment insurance fund might be linked or might not be linked with the figures for unemployment—not the way they have been given in the answer to which I referred.

I therefore suggest, Mr. Speaker, that to form a proper judgment they must have the figures for the same period in the preceding year to see what kind of job this Liberal government has been doing in fighting unemployment. For that reason I ask for the type of information that I requested in my question, so that we can see exactly what has been happening since the Liberal government came into office, in comparison with the unfortunate period when the Conservative party formed the government of this country.

Mr. J. A. Byrne (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Labour (Mr. MacEachen) has asked me to speak on his behalf this evening in an effort to clear up what does appear to be a meaningless set of figures that I gave in the answer which is recorded on page 3644 of yesterday's Hansard.

Mr. Ricard: You are the one who gave them.

Mr. Byrne: I would be very pleased to table the figures for the two years, that is, for the years 1962-63 and 1963-64, if hon. members would care to have me do that, and thus save time for perhaps more important matters. If that is agreed I would simply say, Mr. Speaker, that this table has been prepared with the figures supplied—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Does the parliamentary secretary wish to have these figures printed as part of his speech?

Mr. Churchill: Where do the figures come from?

Mr. Byrne: These figures, I was about to say, were supplied to me by the unemployment insurance commission, and there is no question about them.

Mr. Nielsen: Read them out.

Mr. Byrne: In any event, if hon. members do not wish to have the figures on the record I will not have time to read them all, but I would simply state that as of May 1962 there were 263,862 persons unemployed and at the end of May 1963 there were 270,892 persons unemployed, so you can see there was a slightly larger number unemployed at that time.

Now I will give the other end of the scale. At the end of April 1963 there were 565,928 persons unemployed and at the end of April, 1964 there were 497,745 unemployed. You can see, Mr. Speaker, that there were 68,173 fewer persons unemployed as of the end of April this year than April 1963.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I have to interrupt the parliamentary secretary as his time has expired.

SHIPPING—CONSIDERATION OF ESTIMATES PROVIDING FOR EMERGENCY ASSISTANCE

Mr. G. H. Aiken (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, the matter I wish to raise tonight arises out of the question I asked the Prime Minister concerning the plight of operators of small tourist establishments, marinas and marine installations on lake Huron, and especially on Georgian bay.

Georgian bay is particularly hit by the low water problem, for several reasons. First is the type of business that is operated on the bay and the limited season under which the operators have to work. There is also the fact that the prevailing winds in this area tend to aggravate the low water situation. These operators are really in a disaster area just as much as farmers with a crop failure or with a loss of markets, or workmen who are unemployed. Not only are these people in difficult circumstances themselves but they gain a large amount of tourist dollars for this country. They pay their regular income tax and in ordinary circumstances they ask for and receive no favours from the government. They are small businessmen who operate a business for a few short months of the year. They try to make a reasonable living for themselves and also they bring in tourist dollars which as we all know form a large part of the credit on exchange with other countries. These people are now in difficulty. They must stay in business both for their own livelihood and for the benefit of our tourist industry and national economy. If they go out of business and lose their customers it might be a long time before they recover.

The government has announced that aid will be provided. I am asking that the aid to be given be extended to small operators in present difficulties. Briefly, I am asking the government to include in the estimates which the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) has undertaken to introduce to the house soon a grant to these operators as a disaster grant on the following bases: first, that it be granted only for the purpose of dredging, dock extension or similar work to permit small commercial enterprises whose water access has been cut-off or reduced by low water to improve their ability to operate; second, that this grant be limited to a prescribed figure in the area of $5,000 or $10,000, as a maximum. I have made a survey of a number of tourist operators in my area on Georgian bay and I believe $3,500 would be the average amount required to give these people the opportunity to recover from this disaster which has befallen them. Third, this grant could cover only out-of-pocket expenses. Fourth, it is suggested that the claims be submitted to the district marine agent or a prescribed official of the Department of Public Works who would inspect the location and verify the need for the work and the estimated cost.

This, in brief, is what I have asked. I asked the Prime Minister yesterday if any such arrangement was included in his proposal and he answered: I cannot answer that question now. I am given some measure of hope that perhaps the Prime Minister may have this in mind and I am raising the question particularly so that it will be brought in with the estimates which will be introduced. Since these estimates are being planned to meet the emergency I am hopeful that the government is meeting the request for a special spending estimate to take care of this particular situation. I know that public works are being provided for commercial navigation, but as to help for these people who are commercial operators in a small way, we are not sure. I want to draw this to the attention of the government to make sure that they are not overlooked.

[Translation]

Hon. J. P. Deschatelets (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I think we all listened with interest to the observations made by the hon. member this evening.

The matter he raises is at considerable variance with the question he recently put to the Prime Minister.

The hon. member raises the case of the small tourist accommodation operators who, because of the low levels in the great lakes and Georgian bay will lose this year profits resulting from their normal operations in those areas.

I may tell the hon. member that within a few days—I do not know whether I will be in a position to do it on Monday, but surely at the beginning of next week—I shall make a statement concerning practically every aspect of what the Department of Public Works can do to offer a short term solution to those problems resulting from the low levels.

The dredging projects that the department is carrying out will undoubtedly be profitable to small operators of businesses located along navigable waters.

I wish to assure the hon. member that we will have a quite substantial sum of money in the supplementary estimates to be brought forward shortly, precisely with a view to bringing a short term solution to those cases.

The most important thing for us—I think the hon. member will understand what I mean —is to begin by providing for ocean shipping, because we have along those rivers harbours which are the mainstay of those smaller cities. If we did not carry out dredging operations this year, those localities would become ghost towns.

That is why this matter is extremely important, something we are well aware of. We shall have, within a few days, substantial supplementary estimates.

What we shall do strictly for ocean shipping will also include those establishments and those tourist centres located along those rivers.

I hope that answers the question raised by my hon. friend.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE—HOLDING OF UNITED STATES CITIZEN IN TORONTO JAIL

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I rise tonight to discuss the case of Mr. Eric Hooper, not because I am concerned only with Mr. Hooper and what was obviously a tremendous injustice committed against him, but because I am concerned with the rights which all Canadians have believed were guaranteed to them and which this case demonstrates can be, and are being ignored very frequently by government departments, and particularly by the Department of Citizenship and Immigration. It seems to me that the rights which we have always thought were guaranteed to us are as follows: First, the right of a person accused of a crime to be charged within a very short period of time after he has been detained; second, the right of a person to have counsel; third, the right of a person charged not to be intimidated by the government officials questioning him; and fourth, the right of a person accused to be arraigned before a judge or a magistrate within 24 hours.

Mr. Hooper was arrested on February 16, apparently because it was charged that he had assaulted his estranged wife. That charge was dropped in a fairly short period of time; but instead of being released from the Don jail he was held for 96 more days until he was brought before a magistrate. Then when he was brought before the magistrate he was charged with a very serious offence, and I quote from the charge:

—you unlawfully refused to answer a question put to you, under section 50 of the Canada Immigration Act.

But, Mr. Speaker, the questions he refused to answer were asked of him on March 23. Why was this man held in the Don jail from February 16 to March 23 when the hearing was held? I think one of these days—

Mr. Nielsen: Sixty days of decision.

Mr. Orlikow: —the minister is going to have to face up to the problem of these people in difficulties with the immigration department being held in places like Don jail, Bordeaux jail and others which I hope the minister will tell us about at an early time.

After the hearing was held it took them another nine weeks before his case was brought to court. I should like the minister to tell the house and the people of Canada how much longer it would have taken had not this man finally got word to a lawyer that he was being held for this length of time. If the Toronto newspapers had not carried this case as a front page story, would this man have been held another 96 days or 196 days? This is a very important question. I wonder whether the immigration officials or the minister think for one moment that Mr. Hooper would have stayed in jail for nine days, let alone 96 days, had he had the money to get a lawyer. I wonder whether Mr. Hooper would have stayed in jail for this period of time had his colour been white instead of black. It seems to me that here is another case of one law for the rich and another for the poor.

At the immigration department board of inquiry held in the Don jail, Mr. Hooper claims he refused to answer questions until he got a lawyer. The Minister of Justice denied that today but I think this claim is worth looking into. Mr. Hooper claims that one of the immigration officials at this hearing told him—and I am quoting from Mr. Hooper's words as reported in a Toronto newspaper—"You'll rot here till you're ready to talk". I suggest that Mr. Hooper should have been kept in Canada long enough to find out whether the words he alleged were used were in fact true. Because if they were, the official who used those words should have been fired immediately. Instead, the department then got busy and got him out of the country so that we could not get the real facts. There is no other reason for moving quickly at the time they did.

Mr. Hooper rotted in the Don jail for 57 days until a charge was laid on May 19. Then he appeared in court a week later only to be sent back to jail because the case was remanded. Why was the case remanded? Because after all this period of time the department did not hire a lawyer to represent them until the day the case came to court; and of course the lawyer needed time to study the case. Surely the department could have hired a lawyer a little earlier, and surely they could have hired a lawyer who was not so busy that he did not have time to look into the case properly. But obviously the department were not worried about Mr. Hooper. I think that some of the departmental officials should be sent to jail for a week to see how they feel about it; and after that they might have a heart, which they do not seem to have now.

The case was to be heard on a Monday. On the Monday the magistrate freed the prisoner on his own recognizance. The department then acted quickly. Mr. Hooper was seized, taken back to jail and deported. After all those weeks why not let Mr. Hooper stay in Canada until the facts could come out? What was the department afraid of, and for whom were they covering up? How many other people are there locked up? The lawyer who acted for Mr. Hooper is quoted in both of this evening's Ottawa newspapers as saying that he understands there are ten other people held on the instructions of the immigration department in the Don jail who have been there for more than a month.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I must interrupt the hon. member but his time has expired.

[Translation]

Hon. René Tremblay (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, first, I should like to clarify some facts stated by the hon. member, regarding the number of people detained in our Canadian jails under the Immigration Act.

According to information obtained today from the department, only 16 people at the present time are being detained in Canada for deportation purposes, under the Immigration Act. Out of those 16 people—

One hon. Member: For how long?

Mr. Tremblay: —six have been detained for more than 30 days.

An hon. Member: Why?

Mr. Tremblay: There are two main reasons why those six people are being detained: they may have taken legal proceedings to have the order of deportation issued against them quashed and their right to stay in Canada recognized or arrangements may be under way with the various countries concerned to secure their authorization for the deportation of some of those people to the countries where they are to go.

That is a first correction. Now, the Minister of Justice (Mr. Favreau) has given all the facts relating to the case and it stands out that the proceedings which were first taken before the Ontario courts took some time. The officials of the Department of Citizenship and Immigration came into the picture only when it was decided to withdraw the charge laid against Mr. Hooper.

The longest period runs between March 23 and May 5. What happened during that time? An investigation was made. Mr. Hooper was called and refused to answer. The investigation was postponed for a few days; he was called again and again he refused to answer. Then it was pointed out that Mr. Hooper was married to a Canadian woman and that he had a child here. The case thus became very important and was referred to the department for consideration. The department needs three weeks to study thoroughly the case of a person who has someone in Canada, a wife and a child were involved in this case. The investigation continued and in view of what came to light, the department decided that proceedings were justified. On May 5, at the department's request, proceedings were instituted against Mr. Hooper.

It is from that time that two appearances are made before the courts. Adjournments are requested, as is done in many cases.

I would state, therefore, that Mr. Hooper was held prisoner under Canadian laws and enjoyed all the privileges granted to a Canadian resident, even though he is not a Canadian citizen, but an American citizen. Therefore, in the case of Mr. Hooper, there has not been any undue delay, but in the future proceedings initiated by the Department of Citizenship and Immigration will always be as expeditious as possible, and we shall always show the greatest respect for those who reside in Canada, even illegally, and even for those who must be deported for having violated our laws.

Mr. Douglas: Ninety six days in jail without a lawyer. Liberal freedom.

Motion agreed to and the house adjourned at 10.30 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Friday, May 29, 1964

The house met at 11 a.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

PRESENCE IN GALLERY OF PROVINCIAL SPEAKERS

Mr. Speaker: Order. May I direct the attention of all hon. members to the fact that sitting in the Speaker's gallery today we have Speakers or their representatives from nine of the ten Canadian provinces.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Speaker: They are here in Ottawa to attend the two day conference of the Canadian area council of the commonwealth parliamentary association, and I am sure everyone is honoured by their presence today.

PRIVILEGE

MR. DIEFENBAKER—PICTURE AND ARTICLE IN MONTREAL "GAZETTE"

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I wish to rise on a question of privilege so there will be no misconception or distortion by misrepresentation later on as to what took place. I warn hon. members against accepting at face value a report appearing along with a photograph in this morning's Montreal Gazette to the effect that I explained certain matters of public interest to a meeting in the city of Ottawa from a rostrum described as being "draped with a union jack".

I have no objection to the picture, in which I am as attractive as I am usually depicted to be. But I would point out that the flag on the rostrum was the red ensign, though the only portion shown in the picture is that portion of the red ensign which consists of the union jack. With the statement that I had discussed certain issues of public affairs before a fine audience which gave close attention, I am in agreement, but the flag in question was the red ensign authorized by order in council in April, 1945, and continued since as the Canadian flag in general use within Canada and throughout the world.

Hon. Paul Martin (Acting Prime Minister): I am sure we all sympathize greatly with the Leader of the Opposition over the pictorial representation of his person which appeared in the Gazette this morning. I think the Prime Minister—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): —or the Leader of the Opposition would both recognize the embarrassment to which the Leader of the Opposition has been subjected. But what I rose to say is this. I cannot understand why the Leader of the Opposition should have risen this morning and affirmed to this house and to the country his embarrassment at having had his picture taken alongside the union jack.

AGRICULTURE AND COLONIZATION

CONCURRENCE IN FIRST REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. Russell C. Honey (Durham) presented the first report of the standing committee on agriculture and colonization, and moved that the report be concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

CANADIAN FLAG

MANUFACTURE OF FLAGS AND PINS WITH MAPLE LEAF DESIGN

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): The question I am about to ask is one that is urgent because it involves the privileges of the House of Commons. I ask the Minister of Defence Production whether it is a fact that the sum of $90,000 has been set aside in his department for the manufacture and procurement of one of the two flags in the resolution, that is the maple leaf flag, before this matter has been discussed by parliament.

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Industry): I am unaware of this. I would be glad to take the question as notice.

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): May I ask a supplementary question. May I ask the Minister of Industry whether his department or any other department of government leaked the information to any manufacturing concern before the introduction of this resolution introducing the three maple leaf design, so that pins, such as the one I hold in my hand, of good quality could be manufactured at a cost of several thousand dollars?

I have a further question, sir. Has the manufacturing concern involved in the production of this pin paid any money to the government for this prior information?

Mr. Drury: There has been considerable speculation regarding the design which has been proposed to parliament. I can say with assurance that no money has been received by the Department of Defence Production or the Department of Industry in respect of any information provided by them to any manufacturing concern. I would hope that if the hon. member has any evidence of such a payment by a manufacturer, he would bring it forward rather than by insinuation—

Some hon. Members: Shame, shame.

Mr. Drury: —endeavour to cast a slur upon a government body of which he is a representative.

Mr. Nielsen: I have a further supplementary question for the Minister of Industry. By way of explanation I might say that this pin was in existence eight days ago, well before the introduction into this house of the resolution concerning the maple leaf design. It seems to me in view of what the Minister of Justice said last night—

Mr. Speaker: Order; the hon. member well knows that this is not the time for speeches. If he has a question he may put it.

[Translation]

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a supplementary question to the Acting Prime Minister. Does the Prime Minister's representative intend to use his prestige and his influence to convince the government, including the Minister of Justice, that Canada should have only one flag and not two, three or four?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member knows very well that when that proposal is submitted to the house all those matters will be discussed. For the time being I think that questions such as that asked by the hon. member should be considered as an effort on his part to embarrass the government. But the fact remains that it is the hon. member himself who is greatly embarrassed by the step taken by the present government.

[Mr. Nielsen.]

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask a supplementary question of the Acting Prime Minister. Does he not feel that his government is embarrassing all the people of Canada, including the Minister of Justice, by wanting to give two flags to Canada?

Mr. Favreau: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I was just about to speak to a point of order myself, if I may put it that way. Standing order 39 (1) reads, in part:

—but in putting any such question or in replying to the same no argument or opinion is to be offered—

Mr. Churchill: Then, Mr. Speaker, will you reprimand the Acting Prime Minister for his extraneous statement?

Mr. Pigeon: We face the same old bunch.

Mr. Nielsen: A supplementary question.

Mr. Speaker: Is this a real supplementary or is it a continuation of the argument?

Mr. Nielsen: I have a valid supplementary question, Mr. Speaker, and I direct it to the Acting Prime Minister. Has the government consulted with the government of Great Britain on the propriety of the Canadian government introducing into the parliament of Canada legislation dealing with the flag of another country, namely the union jack, which is the flag of the United Kingdom and is outside the territorial jurisdiction of this parliament?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, this question and all related questions will be discussed and dealt with at the appropriate time, and that is when the matter is before the house.

Mr. Nielsen: Then may I direct this supplementary question to the Minister of Justice, because I think it is urgent to establish this before the debate on the resolution takes place. Has the government secured a legal opinion on the question of this resolution, dealing as it does with the flag of another country and thus being ultra vires this parliament?

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Pigeon: This is a proper question, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: The Chair is always happy to receive advice. On the other hand the Chair has a responsibility, and under the orders given to me by the house may I recall to the attention of the hon. member who has just spoken that such questions should not require answers involving legal opinions.

Mr. Nielsen: But my question to the Minister of Justice was, has the government secured a legal opinion on the question of this resolution from the law officers of the crown—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Whether the question is direct or indirect it still adds up to the same thing.

Mr. Nielsen: With great deference to Your Honour, I am not asking the minister—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Nielsen: If hon. members opposite would cease their howling I would be able to put my point to Your Honour. I am not asking the Minister of Justice for a legal opinion. All I am asking is whether the government has secured an opinion from the law officers of the crown as to whether the action taken in this resolution is intra vires of this parliament. Has the government secured such an opinion?

Mr. Speaker: I am sorry; perhaps the hon. member has a greater knowledge of the law than I, but if the answer were to disclose that an opinion had either been given or not been given, and if an opinion had been given, its disclosure involves a legal opinion. Therefore the question is out of order.

PROCEDURE TO BE FOLLOWED AFTER ADOPTION OF RESOLUTION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Donald MacInnis (Cape Breton South): I have a question for the Acting Prime Minister. I wish to ask him under what authority there is now being flown on the lawn of parliament hill, on a flagpole about 15 feet in length, a large replica of a new and, of course, presently unauthorized flag.

Hon. Paul Martin (Acting Prime Minister): I would not wish to answer in a way which would suggest there is not absolute freedom for Canadian citizens in this country—

Mr. Diefenbaker: On parliament hill?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I think parliament hill is part of Canada.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): I now ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs what the government intends to do if the resolution on the flag—on the two flags—is passed by parliament. What course is to be taken by the government?

Some hon. Members: Order paper.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Does somebody say "order paper"? I want parliament to have this information. I am asking what course is to be followed, what steps will be taken then. Will there be an order in council which in turn would authorize a royal proclamation to issue providing that the royal union flag, generally known as the union jack, shall be recognized as the symbol of Canadian membership in the commonwealth and Canadian allegiance to the crown? Is that the course the government intends to follow?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I have already indicated that questions of this type will be dealt with at the proper time when this matter is formally before the house. No one knows this better, or should, than the right hon. gentleman.

Mr. Diefenbaker: That is fine. Now I rise on a question of privilege and point out that this information which is being denied to parliament was given to Premier Smallwood in a telegram. The hon. gentleman gives me a lesson in deportment, yet does not know that in the last two days his own government has given this information to Premier Smallwood. Now I intend to read the telegram which was sent by the Prime Minister to Mr. Smallwood and ask the minister whether parliament is to be pushed aside and the information given elsewhere.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): On a point of order, the right hon. gentleman is now, I understand, about to read a telegram sent by another individual—

Mr. Diefenbaker: "Another individual"?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I am using the right hon. gentleman's language. I suggest to you, Mr. Speaker, that this is a most unusual situation—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I ask you if it is not clearly established from what the right hon. gentleman has already said that he is altogether out of order.

Mr. Diefenbaker: No.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): The right hon. gentleman is out of order in the way in which he is proceeding. If he resorts to the proper course there is a way in which he might be able to put himself in order. I hope he will not mind my making the suggestion. But at the present time he is clearly out of order.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I understand the Leader of the Opposition is taking responsibility for the telegram he is about to read?

Mr. Diefenbaker: I certainly am. I am asking what business the minister has to deny parliament the information which has been given to Premier Smallwood. I read fom the telegram which was tabled yesterday in the Newfoundland house of assembly by Premier Smallwood. It is directed apparently, to Premier Smallwood and it begins:

> You have asked me for an explanation of the course which will be followed by the government if the motion is adopted to authorize the government to provide that the royal union flag generally known as the union jack may continue to be flown as the symbol of Canadian membership in the commonwealth of nations and of our allegiance to the crown.

Now here is the significant information which has been denied to us:

> The steps which would then be taken would be to recommend an order in council which in turn would authorize a royal proclamation to issue providing that the royal union flag generally known as the union jack shall be recognized as the symbol of Canadian membership in the commonwealth of nations and the allegiance of Canada to the crown.

I am asking the minister why parliament is being denied the information which has been rendered available to Mr. Smallwood.

An hon. Member: That information was given to parliament.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I do not think those members down there who are interrupting me have even heard about this. They have not been told. I will ask further questions in this connection after the minister has given his answer and given parliament the same kind of information which, up to now, he has denied should be made available to us.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): The right hon. gentleman knows that parliament has not been denied any information.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Certainly it has.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): What I have said today, and what I propose today, is that in accordance with our rules any question having to do with this matter should be discussed when the subject is formally before the house. This is the clear practice, and what my hon. friend is saying does not either abridge or fail to justify the course that is being taken. These questions are being put by my hon. friend not because he wants information but because he hopes by these questions to cause confusion and disunity. That is his obvious intention and it must be clear that in the interests of orderly discussion we must await the time when the matter is properly before this house.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I have the right of reply, in view of the gratuitous statements made by the hon. gentleman. He cannot hide behind a smokescreen.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I rise on a point of order.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I have the floor, and I am not going to have any interruptions.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I understand that the right hon. Leader of the Opposition is speaking to a point of privilege, and I understand that the Acting Prime Minister wishes to raise a point of order.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, my point of order is this. I indicated that I did not mind having questions put, but the hon. gentleman has no right to get up and lecture this house.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): We are now on orders of the day, so let the right hon. gentleman put his questions and he will get replies. But I do not want, and I do not propose to take any lectures from him.

Mr. Diefenbaker: There we have in the clearest terms an indication of the attitude of this government; their divine right. He just finished telling us what we should do, but we are not to reply. "When I ope my mouth, let no dog bark"; that is the attitude of the hon. gentleman.

Now that he is so desirous of giving information, I ask him this. What is the course to be followed? Is the Smallwood telegram a revelation as to what course the government is going to follow or is it not? Will there be an order in council confirming the union jack as one of the two flags of Canada? Is that the government's intention?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I cannot add to what I have already said on this question. I believe this question, and questions like it, should be put at the appropriate time, and when that is done my hon. friend will be given the fullest explanation, an explanation which I believe he now really understands.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Does the hon. gentleman admit that the confusion is in his own mind and he has no knowledge of this whatever?

Mr. Speaker: Order. It does seem to me that we have had a long discussion. I very much doubt if this was a question of privilege. In any event, the question has been asked and if the answer is not satisfactory, perhaps the adjournment debate is the proper time to raise it again.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I ask the hon. gentleman now, would he table in the house this afternoon this telegram which was tabled yesterday in the Newfoundland legislature, so that parliament may have before it what has been available to a favoured premier?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, since the hon. gentleman has been so temperate in the question that he has just put to me, and since he has already tabled the telegram—

Mr. Diefenbaker: No, there is a lot more.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): —I will give consideration to this request which has been put in such a friendly and polite manner.

Mr. MacInnis: Mr. Speaker—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. MacInnis: Mr. Speaker, in all fairness to members in the house I think it is about time some action was taken on these remarks that are made every time I rise to ask a question. You have informed me before that at no time would I be given the opportunity to waste the time of the house. I will insist that this persistent hissing from the opposite side when I rise to ask a question be stopped. I will continue to stand on my rights in connection with this matter and delay. I do not care how many charges they want to make, I am not going to stand for this kind of treatment.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member was accorded the courtesy, if I could put it that way, of asking a question. The hon. member must realize that to abuse the Chair is absolutely against the rules, against the customs and against the traditions. Furthermore I must tell the hon. member now that the Chair does not have to recognize a member. This is one particular privilege, thank goodness, given to the Chair.

Mr. MacInnis: In answer, I may say that I do not mind any interjections or any remarks made while I am preparing to ask a question. However, this continual hissing is an insult to the Chair. If I feel, as a member of the house, that I am being insulted I do not see any reason why the Chair itself should not consider itself insulted. Remarks or interjections I do not mind, but these continual interruptions that are going on over there, I think it is about time the Chair recognized them.

My supplementary question, Mr. Speaker, is directed to the Acting Prime Minister. He referred to the lectures being given, and that is all I am going to say about that. However, he reminded me that parliament hill is also part of Canada. My question to the Acting Prime Minister is, will all the supporters of the 3,000-odd new flag designs that have been sent forward also be given the privilege of displaying their flags on parliament hill whenever they choose, as is being done today with another design?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, I am happy to say that we live in a country where freedom, in the context put by the hon. member, is not being denied to any section of this country.

Mr. Diefenbaker: It is not? Refer to the minister of citizenship.

[Later:]

Mr. H. Russell MacEwan (Pictou): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Acting Prime Minister whether the two proposed new flags will be designated as "one for show and one for Joe"?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, that question will be dealt with at the right time.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

REPRESENTATION BY COUNSEL OF PERSONS DETAINED FOR DEPORTATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration. Last night he told the house that 16 persons in Canada were being detained for deportation purposes, six of whom had been in detention for over 30 days. May I ask the minister whether all these 16 persons have had the benefit of legal counsel?

[Translation]

Hon. René Tremblay (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I feel that any person who is arrested in Canada has the right to be represented by counsel before the court.

Mr. Speaker, while I am on my feet I should like to reply to the question which was put to me last Wednesday by the hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Brewin) concerning the number of people who are detained in jail pending their deportation.

In various centres throughout Canada, sixteen persons are being held pending their deportation. Six of them have been in custody for over 30 days. In each of these cases, the detention is due either to steps taken by the individual himself or by someone else on his behalf to prevent deportation, or to arrangements being made to secure authorization of the intended country of deportation or to obtain transportation. Two of those people are to be deported Saturday, that is tomorrow. Hon. members will understand that in cases of deportation some time is needed for the normal legal proceedings at which the parties concerned can be represented by counsel, after which there is the right of appeal to an independent board. The government must also secure authorization from the country where the individual will be deported and make arrangements for transportation, even when no effort is made to fight the deportation order.

[Text]

Mr. Douglas: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Did I understand the minister to say that legal counsel had been made available to all the 16 persons in detention?

[Translation]

Mr. Tremblay: No, Mr. Speaker. I said that anyone had a right to be represented in any court by legal counsel.

[Text]

Mr. Douglas: May I ask then, Mr. Speaker, why legal counsel was not made available to Eric Hooper?

[Translation]

Mr. Tremblay: Mr. Speaker, Mr. Hooper had a right to be represented by legal counsel. If he did not do so, it was his right.

[Text]

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Bow River): May I put a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker, which may assist the minister in giving the information to the house. While these people were incarcerated were they permitted to get in touch with a lawyer? That is the point. Were they permitted by the police or other authorities to get in touch with a lawyer?

Mr. Deschatelets: Of course.

Mr. Woolliams: You say "of course"—

Mr. Deschatelets: I did.

[Mr. Tremblay.]

[Translation]

Mr. Tremblay: Mr. Speaker, I wonder why the hon. member is asking this question in the house. He knows very well that every person who is arrested and brought before a court has a right to be represented by legal counsel.

[Text]

Mr. Woolliams: A further supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Would the minister answer why someone was incarcerated in this country for 90 to 100 days without the right to consult counsel?

Mr. Douglas: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I asked the minister why Eric Hooper had not been able to get legal counsel. The minister said that such people have the right to legal counsel. I am asking why he was not allowed to exercise that right.

[Translation]

Mr. Tremblay: Mr. Speaker, that question might have to be answered by Mr. Hooper.

[Text]

Mr. Douglas: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, the minister has no right to ask me to ascertain that information from Mr. Hooper. It is the responsibility of the minister to do so. The minister is the one who is responsible for keeping this man incarcerated for 96 days without access to legal counsel—

Mr. Woolliams: And without charge.

Mr. Douglas: —and after he has deported the man he says we can ask Mr. Hooper why he did not get legal counsel. I am asking the minister to answer the question.

[Translation]

Mr. Tremblay: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. I feel that the hon. member has no right to put into my mouth words that I have not spoken in this house. I said that Mr. Hooper was perfectly entitled to be represented by counsel. As a matter of fact, during a ten day period, I believe, Mr. Hooper was asked whether he wanted to seek legal counsel. He was granted ten days precisely to get in touch with a lawyer. A second investigation was held for the sole purpose of granting him this privilege. If Hooper did not want to take advantage of it, I do not think that my departmental officials or myself are to blame.

[Text]

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, does the minister not think that this man having been kept in custody for 90 to 100 days, an apology by the government of Canada is in order under these circumstances against such unfairness and injustice?

[Translation]

Mr. Tremblay: We had every reason for keeping this individual in prison during that period, under the Immigration Act, because it provides that, in certain cases where the security of the country or that of its citizens is involved, such an individual should be kept in prison.

[Text]

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, now that the minister has started to give his ideas of the law, is he telling the house that the government of Canada now asserts the right to keep a person incarcerated because of the caprice of a minister?

[Translation]

Mr. Tremblay: Mr. Speaker, I am not a bit surprised to hear the former prime minister talk of the minister's whims where a right is involved which has been committed to the care of the latter by legislation of parliament, to implement the regulations approved by the house.

[Text]

Some hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. Harold E. Winch (Vancouver East): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. The minister has said that a man has this right within ten days, under Canadian law. Is the minister telling the house that Canadian justice is denied a man if he has not the money to obtain legal advice?

[Translation]

Mr. Tremblay: Mr. Speaker this is a second issue which is being raised and I do not think that it has any direct connection with the case that we are discussing. In my opinion, the various bar associations of Canada provide assistance to those who cannot afford to be represented before the courts.

[Text]

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question. I was wondering whether the minister would be kind enough at the next sitting of the house on Monday to give us a report in reply to a question I asked some time ago and with regard to which I told the minister that I would be willing to wait for a reply. My question concerned the detention for over three months of a Greek seaman in London, Ontario, who was held by the department and refused counsel for that period. I believe he has now been deported, but I was wondering whether the minister would give us a report on this matter on Monday.

Mr. Churchill: Give it now.

[Translation]

Mr. Tremblay: I shall be very glad, Mr. Speaker, to bring down that report on Monday.

[Text]

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the minister this question. Since Mr. Hooper has now been deported, will the minister or his assistants take the trouble to get a report from the counsel Mr. Hooper finally obtained through legal aid and ascertain whether he received any information that Mr. Hooper was not permitted to obtain legal counsel during the 100 days he was in the Don jail?

[Translation]

Mr. Tremblay: The reports are certainly going to appear in the records and I shall be very glad to table them.

[Text]

Mr. Orlikow: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I am not interested in the files of the department; certainly the department can defend itself. But will the minister take the trouble to contact the counsel who acted for Mr. Hooper; or does he want us to do it, in which case we can debate this question for a long time when his estimates come before the house?

[Translation]

Mr. Tremblay: No, Mr. Speaker, I do not think that it is my duty to answer.

[Text]

Mr. Douglas: Mr. Speaker, the minister says it is not his duty to make counsel available and he has told the house that this man had ten days in which to obtain counsel. Statements have been made in the press that the man was denied the right to obtain counsel and that he refused to answer questions until he had obtained counsel. The minister and the Minister of Justice told the house that the man was kept in detention because he would not answer questions. The house has a right to know whether this man actually had the chance to obtain counsel; or was he kept there on the subterfuge that he would not answer questions? I think we have the right to an answer to this question. I would ask the minister to make inquiries from the counsel the man was belatedly able to obtain, as to whether he had the opportunity to obtain counsel and refused that opportunity.

Hon. Guy Favreau (Minister of Justice): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, four of the last five questions were formulated in such a way as to assume a set of facts which the minister could not be in a position to ascertain. I say it is against both the standing orders and regulations of this house to make a statement assuming a fact when putting a question. The only questions that are acceptable are those which ask the minister to answer something, such as "Was this man prevented from obtaining counsel?"; but not "Why was this man not allowed to obtain counsel?" That is a statement, and it is completely unfair.

Mr. Woolliams: I should like to speak to that point of order, Mr. Speaker. Perhaps the Minister of Justice will recall that I asked that very question. My question was, here we have people incarcerated and did the police prevent them from contacting legal counsel? That was the point the leader of the New Democratic party was making in his question. We want to know whether, in the face of the bill of rights of Canada, these people were denied their right to obtain counsel. One man was held between 90 and 100 days, and we are told that he was faced with a cooked-up charge under the act.

Mr. Douglas: On the point of order that has been raised by the Minister of Justice, Mr. Speaker, the minister says we are asking questions about which the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration could not possibly know.

Mr. Favreau: No, I did not say that.

Mr. Douglas: The Minister of Justice—

Mr. Speaker: Order. The minister's point was as to the form of the questions which have been asked. As to the legal form, there seems to be a great deal to be said in criticism of the way in which the questions were asked, but as to the right of members of the House of Commons to inquire into a matter affecting the right and liberty of any citizen, it seems to me that is the overriding consideration and the legality should step aside for the moment.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Douglas: Mr. Speaker, I understood the Minister of Justice to rise on a point of order in which he said that these questions were improper because they were asking the minister—

[Mr. Douglas.]

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Douglas: —to state an opinion regarding something which he could not possibly know about.

Mr. Favreau: Mr. Speaker, I would have been wrong if I had said that. What I said was that it is wrong to assume a fact, thus making a statement, and then ask the minister why did this take place, when we do not know whether or not it did take place.

Mr. Douglas: On the point of order, Mr. Speaker, the minister is now saying that these questions have been based on an assumption of fact which has not been established. I submit that it is perfectly proper for members to ask these questions, having seen in the press statements to the effect that this man, incarcerated for nearly 100 days, was denied counsel. Surely we have a right to ask the government whether these statements are correct. All we have had from the government is a statement that the man had a right to counsel. We all know he had a right to counsel. We want to know whether he was given an opportunity to exercise that right.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Douglas: All the minister had to do was say he had been in touch with Hooper or Hooper's counsel, whom he obtained only in the last few days he was in Canada, and that he had been assured that the man not only had the right but had been given every opportunity to exercise that right and had decided not to avail himself of legal counsel. If that is the situation, of course we accept it; but we have had no such statement from the minister, and I seriously doubt that this man was ever given the chance to exercise his right to have counsel.

[Translation]

Mr. Tremblay: Mr. Speaker, I have already answered this question quite clearly I think.

According to the information given to me by officials of my department, Mr. Hooper was interviewed twice between March 16 and March 23. He was told twice that he could avail himself of legal counsel. He appeared before the court on March 23 and he could, at that time, have been represented by counsel.

[Text]

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, was he not told that he was going to be kept in custody until he answered questions?

[Translation]

Mr. Tremblay: Mr. Speaker, according to the information on file, I am not aware that such things occurred.

[Text]

Mr. Diefenbaker: Will the minister look this up and get some full information, rather than the kind of information that he is trying to put before the house today?

[Translation]

Mr. Tremblay: Mr. Speaker, I prefer to get my information from my officials rather than from newspapers.

[Text]

Mr. Peters: You should be cited for contempt of parliament.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, will the minister look into this question so we can be assured that the injustice, the indescribable injustice, perpetrated here will not occur again? That is what we want to know.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. It does seem to me we have had a pretty full discussion of this question. I think the original difficulty started in connection with the translation and a misunderstanding as to the reply of the minister, who answered in French. I think the misunderstanding may have arisen because of the English translation. It does seem to me the point at issue is very important, and I think the minister indicated that he would do considerable research and reply later.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I want to get that answer from the minister. That is what I am asking him about. Your Honour's idea of the information is exactly what I want, and I want that assurance from the minister in this house, instead of the almost insolent attitude he is assuming.

Mr. Douglas: On the point Your Honour has raised, it seems to me the minister has been asked a very simple question, whether or not officials of his department told this man he would stay in jail until he rotted unless he answered questions. Surely in courtesy to the house the minister ought at least to agree to ascertain whether any officials of his department did make such a statement and, if they did, they ought to be dismissed. If they did not, the minister ought to clear their names in this house by making a public denial.

Mr. Tremblay: Mr. Speaker, I would like to say I would be quite ready to try to assess whether it is right that those words were used by an officer of the department, but so far as I know this statement has never been made by any officer of the department. As I say, I would be quite ready to make an inquiry to ascertain whether it is right that an officer of the department said so.

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I want to ask the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration a related question about the right to counsel. Has he inquired into the practice of special inquiry officers notifying people of their entitlement to the right of counsel, and then telling them it is not worth their while having counsel because in effect a decision has been made before the hearing?

Mr. Speaker: I wonder if the hon. member has any factual information in order to justify the type of question he has asked. The question is important, but it seems to me he is assuming a great deal in it.

Mr. Brewin: Well, Mr. Speaker, I have had a very wide personal experience in respect to these matters and I know this practice exists. I would like the minister to inquire into it.

ST. VINCENT DE PAUL PENITENTIARY—REMISSION OF CORPORAL PUNISHMENT

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Hon. Guy Favreau (Minister of Justice). Mr. Speaker, before prescription comes into effect and I lose my right to do so, I should like to answer the question put on May 12 last by the hon. member for Three Rivers (Mr. Balcer) concerning the remission of lash sentences at the St. Vincent de Paul penitentiary and the right of the parole board to remit or change those penalties.

Under section 18, paragraph (1) of the Parole Act, the parole board has the right to revoke or suspend sentences to the lash passed under the Criminal Code.

When a request for the suspension or repeal of a sentence to the lash is submitted to the board and the board orders an inquiry, the sentence is usually suspended while the inquiry is in progress. At the conclusion of the inquiry, the board's decision is made known to the warden of the jail where the prisoner who has applied for a remission is held, and the warden must then carry out the penalty of the lash if the board refused to remit the sentence.

During the first 64 months of operation, the board received 24 requests to remit the penalty of the lash. Of these, eight were granted and 16 refused.

The board has received eight requests during the year 1964, four of which came from the St. Vincent de Paul penitentiary, and they were refused.

Hon. Léon Balcer (Three Rivers): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a supplementary question.

First of all, I should like to thank the minister for having answered me this year. Could the minister tell the house when the penalty of the lash was last applied at the St. Vincent de Paul penitentiary?

Mr. Favreau: Mr. Speaker, I will gladly inquire and reply as quickly as possible this time.

[Text]

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Does the minister not think the time has come to dispense with this brutal relic of a past age, and do away with corporal punishment?

Mr. Favreau: That is a question which I should like to answer, because I have my personal views on it; but unfortunately I am prevented by one of the rules recently set up by this house from giving a personal opinion, if not a legal opinion, on the matter.

Mr. Douglas: Has the government given thought to the possibility of amending the Criminal Code in this regard?

Mr. Favreau: This is one of the things which the Minister of Justice ought to have under serious consideration.

Some hon. Members: "Ought to have"?

Mr. Favreau: I try to do what I ought to do.

SECURITY PRECAUTIONS RESPECTING PERSONS CHARGED WITH MURDER

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Lucien Plourde (Quebec West): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of Justice. Does he intend to take energetic measures concerning the detention of murderers in a safe place pending their hanging, in order to prevent such incidents as the one which happened in the Dion case a few days ago, in Quebec city?

[Mr. Favreau.]

Hon. Guy Favreau (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I think I know what the hon. member who just asked this last question is referring to.

Evidently, to the extent that jurisdiction may be involved, it is my duty to do so, but as for the fact on which this question is based, I feel this case comes under provincial jurisdiction, on which I have no control whatsoever.

FINANCE

ISSUE OF CREDIT BY COMMERCIAL BANKS

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Maurice Côté (Chicoutimi): Mr. Speaker, I hope you will have no objection to my digressing from the subject under discussion to direct a question to the Minister of Finance.

Following a statement made in Montreal on May 26 last by the right hon. Prime Minister to the effect that decentralization required financial means which would have to be provided under the constitution, does that mean that the royal privileges granted to commercial banks to issue credit will be withdrawn by the federal government?

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: Would the hon. member put that question on the order paper.

WATER RESOURCES

GRAND CANAL—AERIAL SURVEY OF JAMES BAY

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Chapleau): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys. Could he tell us if the aerial surveys of the islands and territories around James bay, which are scheduled to start next Monday, June 1, are related to the Grand canal project?

[Text]

Hon. W. M. Benidickson (Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys): Mr. Speaker, could I take this question as notice.

Mr. Speaker: Would the hon. member repeat his question?

[Translation]

Mr. Laprise: Can the minister tell us whether the aerial surveys of islands and territories in the vicinity of James bay, which are due to start next Monday, on June 1, will be made in connection with the Grand canal project?

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: It strikes me this is a question for the order paper.

NORTHERN AFFAIRS

QUEBEC—ADMINISTRATION OF ESKIMO AFFAIRS

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Gilbert Rondeau (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources. Could the minister tell us whether he has informed the government of the province of Quebec of his decision to keep the responsibility for northern Eskimos' education, health and welfare, as he announced in Winnipeg on Wednesday, May 27?

[Text]

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): Well, Mr. Speaker, I am quite certain the hon. member is referring to a press report, and unlike the Leader of the Opposition I do not say that I am not prepared to accept the press report. I have never said that I have been misquoted and I am not going to start saying it now. But in addition to those things which I was reported to have said, I said other things, and I think I was inadequately reported.

Mr. Diefenbaker: You did not have the picture with it.

Mr. Laing: I did say that for the present it was our responsibility to take care of the education and welfare affairs of Eskimos and that we were negotiating with the officials of the province of Quebec to take over some of those matters which might in the ordinary course of provincial-municipal relations, relate to municipal affairs. But I agree that if the report were exactly as stated, I would have been required to advise Mr. Lévesque of a change in our policy, and so far the policy has not been changed.

Hon. Paul Martineau (Pontiac-Témiscamingue): Can the minister say how the negotiations are coming along?

Mr. Laing: Mr. Speaker, there has been a series of negotiations between my officials and those of the department headed by Mr. Lévesque in the province of Quebec, related to the possible use of some of the personnel that the province of Quebec has in the area, and related also to the possible provision of municipal services such as housing, water and electric light.

[Translation]

Mr. Gilles Grégoire (Lapointe): A supplementary question. May I ask the minister when the last meetings were held between the federal government and the Quebec government concerning the transfer of the administration of Eskimo affairs to the province of Quebec?

[Text]

Mr. Laing: Mr. Speaker, I would not want to be held exactly to the day, but my officials have met with the officials of the province of Quebec within the last week.

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): As a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker, I believe it was on March 4 that the minister made a statement in this house to the effect that a commission was going to be set up composed of Canadian government officials and Quebec government officials. May I ask has that commission yet been set up?

Mr. Laing: No, Mr. Speaker, we have not been able to come to an understanding with the province of Quebec with respect to what consultation with the Eskimos means.

PUBLIC SERVICE

INQUIRY AS TO INTRODUCTION OF COLLECTIVE BARGAINING

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Finance. In view of his statement on Wednesday night to the national joint council of the public service that collective bargaining for the civil service must be recognized as one of tomorrow's facts of life, can he say when it will be "tomorrow" for the civil service?

Hon. Walter L. Gordon (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I do not remember making a statement in exactly those words. I think I was much more likely to have said today's fact of life.

Mr. Knowles: Then can the minister say when this fact of life will become a reality for the civil service?

Mr. Gordon: Just as soon as the procedural details can be worked out and, as I expect my hon. friend knows, they are making considerable progress in that direction.

TRADE

FEDERAL PARTICIPATION IN INTENSIFIED WORLD CRUSADE

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Yesterday the hon. member for Saint John-Albert asked me about a speech made by Hon. George Hees. I have now had the opportunity of reading this speech, which was sent to me by the hon. gentleman. It is an excellent speech and I commend it to my hon. friends. He asked me whether we were participating in the new and intensified world trade crusade. I draw to his attention the fact that in the month of April, as will be seen from figures released today, exports were up 27 per cent over last year. The figures for the first four months were up by 21 per cent.

Mr. Thomas M. Bell (Saint John-Albert): Then I take it from the minister's remarks that there is no truth in the statement that there is a billion dollars worth of trade for the government if they were to go out and get it, and that the government are not going to do what Mr. Hees did in 1961 but are going to remain on the seat of their pants.

Hon. J. W. Monteith (Perth): I should like to ask the Minister of Trade and Commerce a question in relation to an answer he gave a short time ago. I think he referred to an increase of 27 per cent in exports during the month of April. He seemed to have these figures at his fingertips, and I wondered if he also had figures concerning imports. Was there any increase in imports during the same period?

Mr. Sharp: The figures for imports are not out for the month of April. This is just the first release. I think they will be up; they have been up substantially. Fortunately exports have been up a bit more.

[Translation]

Mr. Georges Valade (St. Mary): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. Could he tell us whether the surplus of Canadian exports is due to the devaluation of the Canadian dollar and whether he intends to maintain that policy for a long time yet?

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. This is a question for the order paper. In explanation to the hon. member before he rises on a point of order, I would point out to him that questions should be such as not to raise a matter of policy too large to be dealt with as an answer to a question.

Mr. Valade: Then I should like to debate this question at the next opportunity.

ADDRESS BY MINISTER TO U.S. INVESTMENT GROUP

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce in connection with his visit to New York yesterday by jet star. It is stated in the press that he had talks with United States investment dealers. Would the hon. gentleman tell the house whether he advised them that the restrictive policies of the Minister of Finance and the government are going to be changed, or what was the nature in general of the revelations which he made to the investment brokers?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I should like to assure the right hon. gentleman that the discussions I had with one of the most distinguished groups of Americans I had ever met were most amicable. Relations between Canada and the United States have never been better. I received no particular criticism at that time of any of the policies of the Canadian government.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, after those self flattering remarks on the part of the hon. gentleman would he tell parliament what he was there for? Was he taking the place of the Minister of Finance to secure further investment in Canada by United States investors, or what was the purpose of his visit?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, all I can say is that I was greatly flattered to have this invitation. I have not yet been able to understand why I in particular was selected, but I found a very warm welcome waiting for me for which I was very grateful.

INQUIRY OF THE MINISTRY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Royal): I have a question for the Acting Minister of National Health and Welfare. Will the minister convene a seminar where the facts of life can be gently explained to, but not so as to offend the sensibilities of, the members of the Rideau club?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I must suggest—

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I will see that the question is passed on.

Mr. Speaker: —to the hon. member that this question is out of order.

CANADIAN CONSTITUTION

REPLIES FROM PROVINCES RESPECTING PROPOSED CHANGES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. George Muir (Lisgar): Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether the Acting Prime Minister can now give me an answer to the question I asked him yesterday with regard to the number of provinces which have replied to the federal request for co-operation in the changes to the constitution to precede the Canada pension plan.

Hon. Paul Martin (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I cannot give an answer today but I hope to be able to give it on Monday.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

INQUIRY AS TO SUMMER RECESS

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Hon. Paul Martineau (Pontiac-Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a non-controversial question to the Minister of Justice. In his capacity as leader of the house would he tell us whether a date has been set for the summer adjournment of the house?

Hon. Guy Favreau (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I feel that the more progress there will be with the work of the house, as is indeed the case now, the least controversial this date will be. As far as I am concerned, I am not in a position to determine exactly when it will be. I think the Prime Minister said he hoped he would be soon able to make a statement in respect to the work of the house and those measures it is most urgent to pass.

FARM CREDIT ACT

AMENDMENTS INCREASING AUTHORIZED CAPITAL, MAXIMUM LOAN LIMITS, ETC.

Hon. Harry W. Hays (Minister of Agriculture) moved that the house go into committee to consider the following resolution:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure to amend the Farm Credit Act to increase the authorized capital of the Farm Credit Corporation from sixteen million dollars to twenty four million dollars and thereby to increase the maximum borrowing capacity of the said corporation from four hundred million dollars to six hundred million dollars; to increase the maximum loan limits under part II of the said act from twenty thousand dollars to forty thousand dollars; to increase the maximum loan limits under part III of the said act from twenty seven thousand five hundred dollars to fifty five thousand dollars; and to provide further for certain other changes in connection with the administration and operation of the said act.

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee, Mr. Lamoureux in the chair.

The Chairman: Shall the resolution carry?

Some hon. Members: Carried.

Resolution reported and concurred in.

Mr. Hays thereupon moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-100, to amend the Farm Credit Act.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

EXPORT CREDITS INSURANCE ACT

AMENDMENTS RESPECTING LIABILITY OF CORPORATION AND EXPORTERS, ETC.

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Trade and Commerce) moved that the house go into committee to consider the following resolution:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure to amend the Export Credits Insurance Act to increase from four hundred million dollars to six hundred million dollars the limit of the liability of the Export Credits Insurance Corporation under contracts of insurance entered into under section 21 of the act; to enable the aggregate liability of importers under all instruments guaranteed by or payable to the said corporation to be increased from three hundred million dollars to four hundred million dollars; to permit the said corporation to enter into reciprocal arrangements with export credits insurers in other countries for the re-insurance of liabilities under contracts of insurance with exporters; and to provide further for certain consequential changes in connection with the administration of the act.

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee, Mr. Lamoureux in the chair.

The Chairman: Shall the resolution carry?

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Chairman, in taking the stand we have on this and the preceding resolution regarding the Farm Credit Act, we are indicating our regard for the need for action in both these fields. When the government brings in necessary and desirable legislation and places these matters not only on the order paper but brings them before the house, the same co-operation will be continued providing the government is prepared to act and to bring these matters forward in a regular and proper manner.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Chairman, we have also agreed that debate on second reading of both these measures will be sufficient.

Mr. Favreau: Mr. Chairman, may I say in the name of the government that we are very appreciative of the stand which has been taken by all parties as to these two measures.

Mr. Diefenbaker: That stand will be taken on all matters when the government acts with decision.

The Chairman: Shall the resolution carry?

Some hon. Members: Carried.

Resolution reported and concurred in.

Mr. Sharp thereupon moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-101, to amend the Export Credits Insurance Act.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

SUPPLY

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Lamoureux in the chair.

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE

I. Departmental administration including the national co-ordinating committee on agricultural services, contributions to commonwealth agricultural bureaux and a contribution to the agricultural economics research council in an amount equal to the contributions of the provinces but not exceeding $50,000, $3,368,900.

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Chairman, while I was away from the house the Minister of Industry and the Minister of Agriculture on May 15 again spoke to a matter which I raised initially in the debate on April 24. I will not take much of the time of the committee today, but I think some of the remarks made by both the Minister of Industry and the Minister of Agriculture deserve some comment.

You will recall that at that time an affidavit of Mr. McKay was tabled as sessional paper No. 249, a copy of which I have before me, and the affidavit of Mr. McKay would appear to be at variance with the situation as I described it partly on April 24 and partly on May 7. The Minister of Agriculture said on May 15, as found on page 3311 of Hansard:

I told the house several times that the hon. member's claims—

Referring to myself.

—were entirely without foundation.

He had something to say about the tactics which I employed in introducing this matter in the committee, and made certain other references about which I will not go into detail at this time. But the interesting portion of the minister's remarks is found on page 3312 of Hansard for that date in the left hand column, where he is reported as having said:

Our investigations also confirmed that neither I nor my officials requested that the contract be interfered with.

That is the contract with Purity Dairy.

I have, however, since May 7 learned of a matter which I did not know on that date but for which I, as the minister, take full responsibility.

This is the important sentence.

This in no way changes any earlier statement...

The matter to which the minister refers as having learned about subsequent to May 7 is the matter of requests made of Mr. Trach to cut the contract from six months to three months. As found on page 3020 of Hansard of May 7, which was well prior to the minister's statement I have just read from Hansard of May 15, he had this to say commencing at the foot of the left hand column:

I now wish to inform him that neither I nor my officials were in any way involved in contracts with the Purity Dairy for the supply of dairy products to the R.C.A.F. station Namao or the army station at Griesbach, and that at no time did I or my officials have discussions with Jacob Trach or any other member of the Purity Dairy firm with respect to those contracts.

Also on May 7 the Minister of Industry, as found on page 3021 of Hansard, said substantially the same thing; that there had been no discussions with Mr. Trach and no attempt at interference with the running of the full term of the contract. The Minister of Industry challenged me on May 15 to produce an affidavit from Mr. Trach. He also did so, of course, on May 7. He questioned my rising in the committee and making statements which he said were utterly without foundation, and on May 15 the Minister of Agriculture referred to the statements as completely false, utterly false and used other similar descriptions. I think "patently false" was another phrase the minister used.

The Minister of Industry went on to say, as found on page 3314 of Hansard of May 15:

...and I challenge the hon. member for Yukon to produce an affidavit from Mr. Trach to the contrary effect. I regret that he has been unable to do this, and perhaps in the light of his inability to do so he will withdraw his remarks.

Sir, I have for the benefit of the committee just such an affidavit, and I am going to read it. While it is perhaps not possible for members to compare the affidavits at this time, certainly when they have the record before them they will be able to compare Mr. Trach's affidavit made under oath with that of Mr. McKay to see whether in fact I had any justification for raising the matter as I did, not as a charge but as a matter in which I felt the committee should interest itself since it involved the activities of both the Minister of Industry and the Minister of Agriculture. Mr. Trach's affidavit reads as follows:

In a matter of a certain dairy contract between Purity Dairy and defence production and in particular with Greisbach barracks and station Namao.

Affidavit of Trach

I, Jacob Trach, of the city of Edmonton, manager, make oath and say as follows:

1. That I am the manager of the Purity Dairy Company in the city of Edmonton and therefore have personal knowledge of the facts deposed by me, except where stated on information and belief.

2. That Purity Dairy Company, my firm, had and have a contract in reference to milk and ice cream with defence production to supply for a period of six months milk and ice cream to Greisbach barracks and station Namao and which contract was for the months of October, 1963 to March of 1964 inclusive.

3. Late in October of 1963 a McKay of defence production telephoned me at the Purity plant in Edmonton and we had a telephone conversation in reference to the said six month milk and ice cream contract in question.

4. In brief the said McKay said that he had been approached by Ottawa authorities in the department, and at that moment he didn't mention names, requesting that the said Purity contract with defence production be cut to three months. He stated there were certain pressures being applied and because of the said pressure he wanted the Purity Dairy Company to agree to have the contract changed from a six month one to a three month one.

5. In the same said telephone conversation I, as manager of Purity Dairy Company wanted to know under what circumstances and what legal right defence production had the right to cut our contract from six months to three. I told him this was very disturbing and that I would like to talk to him personally.

6. In the said conversation an appointment was arranged at the said Mr. McKay's office for some time in November of 1963.

7. I went early in November 1963 to the said Mr. McKay's office in the federal building, Edmonton, and a discussion between the said McKay and myself took place. There was no one present during this discussion.

In this regard I would refer the minister and members of the committee to paragraph 7 of Mr. McKay's affidavit.

8. The context of the conversation which took place during the said appointment in November 1963 in the federal building in McKay's office is as follows:

He told me that there were certain elements and certain people who stated that if we did not go for a three month contract (that is to reduce the said six month contract to three) the Department of Agriculture could make it very tough for us. He then referred to the federal Department of Agriculture at Ottawa, and in particular minister Hays. He stated he had instructions that the minister wanted the contract cut. I told him that in our opinion the said department in question could not break the contract as it was in writing and properly executed. He said there was a group of lawyers in Ottawa looking into the validity of the contract. It was just after that he mentioned the said lawyers in question that he said minister Hays, the Minister of Agriculture and the Department of Agriculture were going to take the contract from us, or at least reduce it from six to three months. Then he said, "We could, in accordance with instructions from Ottawa, find something wrong with your product, the milk in question. And from this pressure the department would make Purity Dairy Company agree to a new contract or to cancel the one it has." This would force our will.

9. The said Mr. McKay said, "I do not like to bring this up in reference to having your product declared unfit, but it is my superiors and the Minister of Agriculture in Ottawa that I take my instructions from."

10. I took it from those said statements of the said McKay that he meant his instructions came from minister Hays, the Minister of Agriculture, and the Department of Agriculture.

11. Our company did not bow to this pressure and have continued to supply milk and ice cream to both Greisbach and Namao and have since been advised by the said McKay that contracts will be rotated between various dairies when our contract has expired, all of which I verily believe to be true.

12. I only had one interview with the said Mr. McKay in his office at the federal building where the said abovementioned conversation took place and that interview lasted approximately 45 minutes and it took place in the early part of November, 1963.

Sworn before me at the city of Edmonton, province of Alberta—

Here, Mr. Chairman, I would ask committee members to note the date, to determine whether I had justification for raising this matter at the time I did:

—this 26th day of March, 1964.

This affidavit was sworn before a commissioner for oaths in and for the province of Alberta and it bears the notary's official seal as a notary public in and for the province of Alberta. The affidavit is signed "Jacob Trach".

With the unanimous consent of the committee, should they so desire I am fully prepared to table the document in question.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Nielsen: These charges, as I stated when I first raised the matter on April 24, were serious indeed. I put it to the committee at that time that the circumstances which I described were based on information that I had, and I took it upon my responsibility as a member of the committee to say that I had made certain that they were not frivolous charges at all. I invited the minister to give an explanation after investigating this matter, and I said at the time—I think he will recall this—that I would hope his investigations would exonerate him and his officials. He has made a statement or an explanation on information supplied to him and the Minister of Industry by Mr. McKay, information which committee members will have no alternative but to conclude is at direct variance with the sworn affidavit of Mr. Trach.

For instance, Mr. McKay says that at no time did any discussion take place in his office between himself and Mr. Trach. There is one conflict. I invite the minister to peruse very carefully Mr. McKay's affidavit, and I think he will find it is quite conflicting both within itself and with the affidavit of Mr. Trach. Those circumstances, I feel, should be investigated by the departments concerned, and I think this committee will perhaps come to the same conclusion now.

The minister's explanation on May 15 concluded with his assertion that he wanted to see patronage eliminated in his department and in government. If that is so, why should Mr. McKay say he had received instructions, as he did in his affidavit, from the department in Ottawa to rotate the contracts? This still involves the method of selection. He said it was his practice to award contracts on the basis of the lowest cost. The only way you can get the lowest cost is to invite public tenders; and the practice in the department now is to rotate those contracts, not by inviting public tender calls but by selecting the dairy or concern that is going to supply the milk to these various users. Surely the only way to get rid of patronage in the minister's department is by inviting public tenders when requirements exist for the supply of goods and services to the government. If the minister is really serious and sincere about wanting to get rid of patronage in his department that is precisely what he will do, and eliminate or end this practice of rotating contracts to individuals or individual firms and corporations.

In the light of the affidavit which I have just read into the record and which, as I say, I will table if that is the desire of the committee, I submit to the committee through you, Mr. Chairman, that the information I supplied to the house on April 24 and on May 7 was information that I was fully justified in providing to this committee; and it was not in keeping with the proper usages of the committee or of the house for the Minister of Industry or the Minister of Agriculture to question my motive in presenting that information to the house.

I took it upon myself, as a responsible member, to put these matters before the ministers, and I did so. Because these two ministers thought I could not substantiate in any way the information I placed before the committee they became all-incensed and made charges about my tactics and my motivations in placing this information before the committee. But I invite the minister again to look at the date of that affidavit sworn by Mr. Trach—March 26—well before I raised the matter on April 24. I invite him too, sir, to reconsider the error of his ways, and when members in all sincerity and seriousness bring irregularities such as these before the committee he should take cognizance of them and not immediately jump to the conclusion, as he did, that there was nothing wrong in the situation I presented to him.

In fact both he and the Minister of Industry, subsequent to April 24 and well before May 15, made complete denials before they had information which would have placed them in possession of all the facts. The minister expressed some surprise to learn that an approach had even been made to Mr. Trach to cut the contract from six months to three months, but he has found out since that this was the fact. I invite him now to scrutinize very carefully what Mr. Trach has had to say under oath, and said under oath well before the matter was raised in this committee.

Mr. Hays: Mr. Chairman, we have two affidavits, one by Mr. McKay denying all these things and another by Mr. Trach saying they are correct. My position is that I think the house and all hon. members know what I have said, and I still feel exactly the same way. I am the Minister of Agriculture. I suppose, being a minister, you must expect some of these things. They tell me these things happen. I am not going to argue about it; I am not going to dignify the accusations made by the hon. member with a reply. I stake my reputation in the province of Alberta and the city of Edmonton against those people, and I am quite prepared to let it rest that way. Time takes care of these things.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): Elections do, too.

Mr. Hays: Mr. Chairman, I would like to get on with the estimates. I want to thank hon.

members for the consideration they have given the Department of Agriculture today in connection with the resolution on farm credit which farmers are very anxious to have and which they need, and also for the consideration given by many hon. members in connection with the debate on the supply motion the first two days of this week.

We are now dealing with the main estimates of the Department of Agriculture, and of course we are going along spending this amount of money. I would hope this afternoon that in view of the fact that we have been dealing with both the supplementary and main estimates for eight days this session—I believe this will be the ninth day—and that we do have two amendments to bills and a new machinery bill coming before the house in the next 30 days, hon. members will consider there will be a lot of time on these measures to have a full discussion on agriculture. There will be lots of time for a full discussion on agriculture on those matters, and possibly today we can get down to the details of the estimates of the department.

Mr. Nielsen: If the minister is not going to dignify the statement I made by replying to it, will he at least tell members of the committee whether he intends to take any action with respect to the obvious conflict which exists between the affidavits of Mr. McKay and Mr. Trach?

Mr. Hays: I have nothing to add to what I have already said.

Mr. Nielsen: Then may I quote, sir—

The Chairman: The hon. member has just made his speech, and we have heard from the Minister of Agriculture. We are still on the first item and the hon. member for Yukon will have an opportunity to make another contribution. I respectfully suggest we should give other members an opportunity to participate in the debate. With the co-operation of the committee I suggest that we call on the hon. member for Shefford.

[Translation]

Mr. Rondeau: Mr. Chairman, I thank you for giving me this opportunity to contribute to the discussion of the estimates of the Department of Agriculture. There are certainly many things to be said when discussing our farming industry, and I shall limit my considerations more particularly to the problems of eastern farming.

A few days ago the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Hays) told us that he intended to put an aircraft at the disposal of committee members so as to enable them to visit the various provinces and see for themselves on the spot, what the farm problems are in each Canadian province. This suggestion will certainly please several committee members, and at least enable them to study new farm problems which have not yet been brought to their attention.

As far as we are concerned, in eastern Canada, we are quite familiar with farm problems, and when I think that the minister is putting an aircraft at the disposal of the committee on agriculture to make its members aware of farm problems in other provinces, I am reminded of the farmer who was taking a plane for the first time. When the plane was airborne, the farmer went to the washroom. Once there, he saw that there was a poster above the door: Do not use over towns and villages. And the farmer thought to himself: "We are the ones who will get that on the head".

Mr. Chairman, when I consider the agricultural policy, and especially the intentions which were put forward by the Conservatives, during the six years when they were in office—and I must state that several Conservative members said that their party intended to develop a feed grain policy in order to help the farmers of the province of Quebec, but that unfortunately they could not do it because they were defeated and a general election was held—I feel that we must ask the Liberal party to act as quickly as possible so that the Canadian agricultural policy will not be made only of good intentions but will also include achievements. In fact, we must remember that the road to hell is paved with good intentions, and parliament must not be the place where only good intentions are found, but also achievements.

When the Minister of Agriculture tells us that there are no more agricultural problems, that everything is fine, I have no alternative but to ask him a single question, to which I should like to have an answer. How can he explain that bird seed which, last year, was worth 14 cents a pound, cost now 42 cents? That means an increase of 200 per cent, for only one of the grains that the farmer must buy.

Mr. Chairman, I wish to support my remarks with some excerpts from the newspaper La Terre de Chez Nous, which is known as the official publication of the Catholic farmers' union of the province of Quebec, and especially of the French Canadian element in our agricultural class.

However, before that, I wish to pay special tribute to our Canadian farmers who, to date, have placed a plentiful production at our disposal. They produced eggs, milk, pork, butter, cheese, chicken and broilers in large quantities, as well as various vegetable products, and I feel we should recognize that fact and be proud of it. Indeed, if we profit today by such a varied and abundant farm production, we should be grateful to our farming population, which unsparingly works our soil, which is recognized as very fertile.

As for our farm production, I wish to quote an article which appeared in La Terre de Chez Nous on April 22, 1964. On page 24, we read this:

Plenty of eggs and chickens.

During the first two months of 1964, egg production increased by 5 per cent as compared to the first two months of the previous year. The rate of laying had increased by 6 per cent on February 1 and by 3 per cent on March 1.

For the first two months of 1964, broiler chicken production remained higher than during the same period last year. For the second quarter of the current year (April-May-June), such production is likely to exceed by about 4 per cent that of the second quarter of 1963.

Turkey.

General prospects for 1964: weak to fair increase of numbers in relation to 1963. Up to now, there has been an increase of 5 per cent in incubation of young turkeys.

Turkey meat stocks increase continuously.

All this, Mr. Chairman, goes to show that our farm production increases constantly and that we should commend our Canadian farmers for it.

But on the other hand as our agricultural production increases, we must also consider what income our farmers are getting in Canada, in the province of Quebec and more particularly in eastern Canada.

We must take a look at the income that those farmers who produce so much and so well are getting as a return for their production. And on that matter, I refer once again to the newspaper La Terre de Chez Nous, and more particularly to page 11 of the May 6, 1964 issue:

Fifty per cent of Canadian farmers make less than $2,500 a year.

The proportion of Canadian farmers with an income over $10,000 a year is only 10.4 per cent. But those who make up that 10 per cent own 23.4 per cent of farmed lands and provide 44.7 per cent of the whole farm production in our country.

That first group of 10.4 per cent is therefore by far the most important as regards agricultural production. That group is also the one which collects the best of government grants such as fixed acreage payments and summer fallow grants, two measures applied to date only in the prairie provinces.

[Mr. Rondeau.]

Another group, which offers a striking contrast with the first one, is the group of farmers with a gross income of less than $2,500 a year. That second group involves about half of Canadian farmers.

Now, when you consider our plentiful production and at the same time the statistics and the official reports of the Catholic farmers' union a certain anomaly is brought to light.

At the same time the income of our agricultural people is very low but in the house, there does not seem to be any other way than to offer farm loans to our farmers and to get them more and more into debt.

Again, this morning, a resolution is being moved and in a few days a bill will be put before us to increase the Farm Credit Corporation's borrowing capacity so as to enable them to grant more loans.

The farmers' credit problem is not the only important one; there is also the problem of providing them with the necessary income, proportionate to their production, so that they will be able to meet their obligations concerning these loans. On page 20 of the April 29, 1964 issue of La Terre de Chez Nous, it was stated:

For the first time in the history of this organization, the total amount of loans exceeds $100 million.

According to the figures released by Mr. George Owen, president of the corporation, the total number of loans approved last year amounted to 8,689, for a value of $108,009,100.

In comparing these figures to the previous record of 7,438 loans and $90,924,300 for the fiscal year ended on the last day of March 1963, we find an increase of 16.8 per cent in the number and of 18.8 per cent in the total value of the loans.

Well, it is proposed to make more loans available to the farmers without worrying too much about a farm policy that would enable them to meet their obligations. The Porter commission has also examined the matter of farm loans and here is what it suggests.

I am in complete disagreement with what it suggests concerning farm loans. In one of its recommendations, the Porter commission is advocating the increase of the interest rate the federal Farm Credit Corporation is charging on its loans, that is, that the 5 per cent flat rate be raised to the prevailing rate on the market, which is about 6½ per cent. And the commission recommends:

1. The removal of the 5 per cent ceiling on the interest rate charged by the banks;

2. The withdrawal of government guarantees as soon as the banks realize the loans are safe;

3. The increase from $7,500 to $10,000 of the maximum amount of a farm improvement loan granted by a bank. The commissioners noted that the lending rate had remained at 5 per cent since the Farm Improvement Loans Act was first put in operation 18 years ago.

The commissioners added:

We do not believe that the banks would reduce their lending to farmers if the general mortgage prohibition were removed and the banks were permitted to lend at approximate market rates of interest which would at times exceed the present 6 per cent limit. They might be prepared to lend more freely than at the present uneconomic 5 per cent rate.

Here we have the Porter commission suggesting that, in order to assist our Canadian farmers, the interest rate on farm loans should be raised. Then, they will wonder why it is that with an average income of $2,500 for 50 per cent of our farmers in Canada, with a farm loan which it is suggested to raise to $40,000 with an interest rate of 6½ per cent, which will amount to some $2,600 in interest every year on the farm loan, that the farmer cannot meet his obligations. How can he meet them if our agricultural policy is not changed?

In La Terre de Chez Nous of April 15, 1964, page 3, we could read the following:

"Master of our own house". There is an almost ideal slogan for politicians. It could also be a very laudable and even a very sound objective, provided the necessary steps to reach it or at least to get closer and closer to it are taken.

For our farmers, we must recognize that such is not the case and that it is rather the contrary which is shaping up. Indeed, the farmer, because of a continually deteriorating situation and because of the failure of the leaders at the various levels to consider his lot, is less and less the master of his own business. You just have to think about vertical integration in agriculture with everything it implies and the various forms it takes, to realize that farmers are more and more at the mercy of enterprises whose interests are far from being the same as those of farmers, when they are not absolutely at variance.

Moreover, for all practical purposes, government authorities unfortunately ignore or forget altogether the problem of production credit. Indeed, there are certain forms of credit but they consist mostly in financing anew, at each generation, the farmer's property—

When we consider such basic problems as marketing and all related factors, we have the distinct feeling that some of the major officials of the department, who are supposed to look after farmers, consider with nostalgia and regret the disappearance of a regime which enabled them to grant farmers a few favours and to bring them to heel. In some cases, they do everything they can to prevent the regime from dying out.

For the time being. we would like to quote from a speech delivered recently by a former Nova Scotia deputy minister of agriculture which shows that we should open our eyes a little to find out what is happening outside our province before beaming complacently over our situation and our achievements. I quote: "Marketing, said the guest speaker, is the key to farm prosperity. Not production or anything else, but marketing. The speaker also immediately added that, for rather strange reasons, many provincial governments and the government at Ottawa preferred to turn their backs on marketing. They are instead placing more emphasis on the production and the efficiency of those they are calling "production guys". Such a policy may have its good points, said Mr. Walsh, but it cannot solve the farm problem because the farmer produces everything in abundance and very efficiently." A conclusion is obvious at this time: unless there is a radical change in the concept of the role of the various people responsible for the fate of our agriculture and unless that is truly translated into practice, in spite of the general aim proclaimed for the province, "Masters in our own house", the farmers of Quebec will become more and more "Slaves in their own house".

Mr. Chairman, may I call it one o'clock?

The Deputy Chairman: Order. As it is one o'clock, I now leave the chair.

At one o'clock the house took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The committee resumed at 2.30 p.m.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Chairman, would you rise and report progress?

Progress reported.

THE LATE SHERWOOD H. RIDEOUT

TRIBUTES TO DECEASED MEMBER

Hon. Paul Martin (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, it is with sadness that, on behalf of the Prime Minister, I rise to speak of one of our number who passed away suddenly this morning at eleven o'clock as he proceeded on the Ocean Limited to Moncton in his constituency. I am sure that all members of this house share with me a deep sense of sorrow at the loss of one of our members from New Brunswick, Sherwood Hayes Rideout, the member for Westmorland.

Mr. Rideout was one of the younger and active members of this house. He was born in 1917. During his life he gave much to the public life of his community, his province and to Canada. Certainly, as a member of this house he served his constituents industriously and with sincerity. Mr. Rideout served as a trainmaster on the Canadian National Railways in his home community, and as such he had a special interest in transportation and trade problems of the Atlantic provinces. He was an active member of local 162 of the brotherhood of locomotive engineers. He served as an alderman in his city for two terms and became mayor of Moncton in 1961, serving in that capacity until 1963. He was in the house yesterday and many members have told me, since we adjourned at one o'clock, that they had talked with him yesterday.

We are all the losers because of his untimely passing. We remember him as a man of devoted interests who served his country with distinction. But it was not only in the larger sphere of public life that he took part in the affairs of his people. He served them officially and unofficially, and he served organizations such as the mental health association and the retarded children's association. He was a valuable member of this party and we on this side will miss him greatly. He was a friend of all of us. Every member in this house shares my sense of sorrow as I speak of his sterling qualities.

He was a friendly man, a man with a good sense of humour. He was a practical man. We are reminded, as we speak of him in this context, of the words of Goldwin Smith who wrote:

> The men who saved the world are those who work by rule of thumb; who do the day's work by the day's light and advance on chaos and the painful dark by inches; in other words, the practical men.

To his family, his wife and his three sons, I extend the sincere sympathy of the Prime Minister, the members of the government and the membership of this house. A good man has left us, but he has left a rich memory of devoted service to his people and to his nation.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I join with the Secretary of State for External Affairs in his expression of heartfelt sympathy of all of us to Mrs. Rideout and to the three sons on the passing of a beloved husband and father. He had served in many fields of public service. He was a kindly man. He was one of those who had a good word for everyone and whose contribution to good works was exemplified in particular by what he had done on behalf of retarded children. I think it was Edmund Burke who said that all that is necessary for the triumph of evil is that good men do nothing. He was a good man. He did what he could in his day and generation.

He served his city and he served in various organizations for the benefit of his fellow man. He had served here in parliament for a period of years and so earned what to me is the most important element in the parliamentary arena, the respect of those who, not belonging to one party, none the less have a regard for the sincerity and devotion of others. His life was given to service in a genial, friendly and generous way.

Speaking on behalf of Her Majesty's loyal opposition, I extend to the members of the government and to the Liberal party, the sympathy of those for whom I speak. We extend our sincere condolences to his loved ones on the passing of one whose loss will be felt, not only by his family but by his constituents and by Canadians as a whole.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, during the luncheon recess all of us heard with sorrow and regret of the untimely passing of the hon. member for Westmorland (Mr. Rideout). Although he was only 47 years of age he already had a very considerable life of public service to his credit. He had acted on the county council, on the school board, had been an alderman and more recently mayor of the city of Moncton, and he was a member of this parliament. This is a very enviable public record for a man only 47 years of age, and those of us who had the privilege of meeting him since he came to Ottawa were impressed with his friendliness and convinced that his career held great promise for the future. Now he has been cut off at this early age, and I am sure all of us feel a great sense of regret and loss.

The members of this party would like to extend to the government and all its supporters, to Mrs. Rideout and the members of the family, and to his constituents in Westmorland, our deepest sympathy at the great loss which they have sustained this day.

Mr. H. A. Olson (Medicine Hat): Mr. Speaker, on behalf of this party I wish to join with the other members in expressing our very deepest sympathy with the members of the Liberal party and to his family at the loss this morning of the hon. member for Westmorland (Mr. Rideout). Mr. Rideout came from an area and was mayor of a city which I think exemplify the way in which French and English speaking citizens can live in harmony. I think we must pay tribute to him for the various offices he held, particularly that of mayor.

In addition to that, Mr. Speaker, I feel a very deep personal loss. It may not be well known to the members of this house, but the city of Moncton and the city of Medicine Hat were twinned for the centennial celebrations which are to take place in 1967. During the past few weeks and days the hon. member and I had discussed on many occasions some of the things which we could do as members of parliament to bring about an intermingling of the citizens of these two cities with a view to strengthening the understanding between the various regions of this country. We had decided that we were going to exchange positions for a day or for a week so that we could learn about each other's constituencies. One of the special reasons for twinning the city of Medicine Hat with the city of Moncton was because of the large French speaking population in that city.

Canada has lost a great citizen, Mr. Speaker, a citizen who could look beneath the surface and who could look into the future and try to work out some of those problems which we as a nation have. I want to say on behalf of the leader of this party and all of the members of this party that we have a very deep sense of sympathy at this time for his family.

[Translation]

Mr. Gilbert Rondeau (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, we join with the Acting Prime Minister (Mr. Martin) and all the other members of the house to express our deep sorrow upon the sudden death of the hon. member for Westmorland (Mr. Rideout).

He was a likable and jovial man, and always good-natured.

On the committees I had the privilege to sit with him, I had the opportunity to realize that the Lord had gifted that young member with great talents.

The house will feel for a long time the loss of a man as dedicated and hard-working as the hon. member for Westmorland. It is also a loss for the town of Moncton, which mourns the death of its mayor.

To his afflicted family we express our deepest sympathy upon the death of that model father and exemplary citizen.

[Text]

Hon. H. J. Robichaud (Minister of Fisheries): Mr. Speaker, I wish to join with those who have spoken, and share the sorrow of all members of this house. The news of the sudden passing of our colleague Sherwood Rideout has been a deep shock to all of us. His years of experience as an alderman, as a county councillor and as mayor of the city of Moncton had made him well prepared to serve best the constituents of Westmorland as their federal representative.

Sherwood Rideout was a devoted public servant respected by members on both sides of this house, and he was friendly to each and every one of us. Yesterday he was occupying his seat in this chamber. Later in the day he decided to go home and spend a quiet week end with his beloved wife and three children. This morning at about 11 a.m., when the conductor called at his compartment on the Ocean Limited, there was no answer. Sherwood Rideout was dead.

My New Brunswick colleagues wish to join with me in extending our deepest sympathy to the population of Westmorland county, to the citizens of Moncton city, and particularly to Mrs. Rideout and her three children. Members will be interested to know that the funeral services will take place at the First Baptist Church in Moncton at 2 p.m. Monday afternoon. Tentative arrangements are being made to have air transportation from Ottawa leaving here Monday morning to return after the funeral. Any member interested in attending the funeral of our friend and colleague Sherwood Rideout may contact my office later this afternoon for further details.

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Royal): Mr. Speaker, as a fellow New Brunswicker and a member from the Atlantic provinces I should like to share in the expressions of sympathy which have been so eloquently expressed respecting the life of service of Sherwood Rideout. He came to this chamber at the same time as I and we shared some of the new experiences which new members have in this place. He was, as has been said, a friendly, a genial and a dedicated person, and we shall miss him.

SUPPLY

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Lamoureux in the chair.

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE

1. Departmental administration including the national co-ordinating committee on agricultural services, contributions to commonwealth agricultural bureaux and a contribution to the agricultural economics research council in an amount equal to the contributions of the provinces but not exceeding $50,000, $3,368,900.

[Translation]

Mr. Rondeau: Mr. Chairman, before the noon recess I was saying that the farm situation in Canada was not too attractive, in spite of great abundance. I sketched a picture of the years to come and I also dealt with farm loans. I said that what farmers needed to solve their problems was not so much farm loans as an income in keeping with their production, which would allow them to honour their obligations. In this respect, I quoted several articles published in La

Terre de Chez Nous, the official organ of the Quebec Catholic farmers' union.

I should like to quote another article from the same publication. This way I do not think we can be accused of talking about this and that without consulting the experts. On page 3 of the March 18, 1964 issue, we can read the following testimonial of the general secretary:

> Agriculture on the auction block in Ottawa?...
> Politicians have short memories. Especially when it comes to election promises. That is a little game which served them extremely well as long as political matters remained under the exclusive jurisdiction of a few people in the know and especially the "election makers".
> Because of the political situation at that time, the party now in office in Ottawa was particularly generous with its promises during the last election campaign. The rural electorate whose vote is often decisive had more than its share. That is particularly true for the farmers of eastern Canada who had bared their teeth very menacingly during the last few years and especially during the last months.
> It is then that the Liberal party, through its official spokesman, disclosed on the national t.v. network its policy in order to settle the serious and urgent problem of supply and feed grain prices for the eastern farmers. Even if some measures have been passed in order to prevent a catastrophic deterioration of the situation, a complete fulfilment of that promise has yet to come.

For the information of my good friend from Lotbinière (Mr. Choquette), I must tell him that those are the words of the general secretary of the Catholic farmers' union. I go on quoting:

> Another positive promise of the Liberal party made by all its chief leaders to the eastern farmers was to appoint a minister to specifically look after their interests. We do not intend to go over the history of that famous department of agriculture for eastern Canada which created such a sensation during the past months and which stirred up so many conflicting statements.
> This is not the first retreat on the part of the present federal government. However, there are limits to retreats, to changes of opinions and to dismissal of promises. It seems that we are just about to reach these limits as far as the representation of eastern farmers' interests in the cabinet is concerned.

A little further, the author says:

> But the situation of eastern farmers is too different for them to accept as their only and privileged spokesman a gentleman farmer, who anyhow seems to be not very much concerned with their problems. They do not object to the minister acting as a public auctioneer, but they definitely refuse that their lot should be, so to speak, auctioned off.

Mr. Chairman, it is the general secretary of the Catholic farmers' union who made those remarks and who criticized the present government for not having carried out its two main promises, that is the establishment of a department of agriculture for eastern Canada and the adoption of a policy concerning the creation of a feed grain agency to facilitate the supply of eastern farmers.

I should now like to quote the article which was published on page 5 of the same newspaper, on April 8, and which reads as follows:

> Eastern farmers have had enough of being treated as poor relatives.
> The Minister of Agriculture is reported as saying, during a press conference he gave the day before in Winnipeg, that he is dead set against the setting up of a feed grain agency for eastern Canada.

During the past few days, the Minister of Agriculture has been discussing all kinds of farming problems, but he never stated whether he was in favour of a feed grain policy in eastern Canada and I would like him to tell us at the first opportunity whether he is in favour of a feed grain policy designed to help farmers in eastern Canada.

And the article continues:

> It appears, taking into account the spirit in which Mr. Hays gave his press conference, that for him, farming problems of western Canada alone matter.

Moreover, the establishment of a feed grain agency for eastern Canada has been widely discussed, according to reports published following the last meeting of the Canadian Federation of Agriculture.

And I continue:

> Yet, during the last general meeting of the Canadian Federation of Agriculture...a feed grain agency for eastern Canada and British Columbia, they claim it vigorously.
>
> Honourable minister, the farmers of eastern Canada feel they have been treated as poor relatives long enough; what they want, whatever you think about it, is an agency for the east whose duties would be the following:
> 1. Administer the aid policy for transportation of the feed grain, flour-mill products and screenings;
> 2. Make available storage space for the warehousing of feed grain required by eastern Canada;
> 3. Administer the storage subsidy policy;
> 4. Advise the government on the import permit policy for feed grain;
> 5. Make the necessary studies and give needed advice on policies in respect of feed grain.

That is the five point program submitted by the Catholic farmers' union to the Canadian Federation of Agriculture.

And the article says further:

> Eastern farmers accept to be a guaranteed outlet for western farmers, on condition that their basic rights be observed.

Mr. Chairman, the Liberal team has been in power in Ottawa for more than a year, and it seems to me that we should have seen some concrete results before now in the agricultural field.

For the six years that they were in power, the Conservatives only told us of what they intended to do and I would not like to see the Liberal party in the same position, so that we should have to appeal to the people in order to have our eastern farmers enjoy a favourable policy in the matter of feed grain supply and a marketing policy.

I have here another article of La Terre de Chez Nous. On page 8 of the copy dated May 6, 1964—

Mr. Choquette: Mr. Chairman, would the hon. member allow a question?

Mr. Rondeau: Certainly, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Choquette: I wish to ask my hon. friend, who shows much interest in farmers, as we also do, whether he is satisfied with a government who appointed a minister responsible for the administration of ARDA, as well as with its policy on feed grain, which procedure at least resolves farming problems in the east?

Mr. Gauthier: Not at all.

Mr. Rondeau: I shall answer this question and it is very easy. If the hon. member wants to speak about rural development, the matter does not specifically concern eastern Canada. It was intended to circumvent the problem, to ignore farmers from eastern Canada, and a new thing was devised, that is, rural development, and this in order not to say that a minister had been given to farmers in eastern Canada.

I appreciate the fact that the minister has problems to solve and that he is especially anxious to solve the agricultural problems of the west, and I particularly consider that a minister for eastern Canada would be still more important.

I have here a poem which was written by a farmer about our parliament and the agricultural policy of this country. This poem was published in La Terre de Chez Nous of May 6, 1964, on page 8:

HOMMAGE AU PARLEMENT

—1—

Le Peuple tous les quatre ans
Elit au Parlement
Des hommes qualifiés
Pour nous représenter.

—2—

Rendu à Ottawa
On se croise les bras
C'est pour mieux écouter
Les ordres des financiers.

—3—

Mais il nous faut bien faire
Quelques choses pour plaire
Afin que le peuple croit
Que nous sommes des rois.

—4—

Afin de plaire aux gros
On leur fait des cadeaux
C'est pour mieux s'attirer
Les faveurs désirées.

—5—

Pour se bien satisfaire
On remonte les salaires

Mr. Chairman, I feel that those few verses give a fairly good idea of the situation of agriculture in Canada.

Dealing with agricultural problems on page 9 of its May 20, 1964 issue, La Terre de Chez Nous states that, the farmer is being victimized by speculators and that there is nothing in the policies of the Liberal government to limit or to end such activities.

Nowadays, there is speculation on the wheat a farmer must buy, on the hogs he must sell, on eggs, milk, cheese—

The Chairman: I regret to interrupt the hon. member but his time is over.

[Text]

Mr. Jorgenson: Mr. Chairman, before beginning my remarks related to the estimates of the Department of Agriculture let me express my sorrow and regret at the passing of one of the members of the Liberal party, the late hon. member for Westmorland, whom I knew but briefly but found to be one of the most friendly and sincere people I have had the pleasure of knowing. I am sure I speak for everyone on this side of the chamber when I say, as our leader has said, that we shall miss him very much.

I want to assure the minister that there is no desire on the part of the members of this party to delay unduly the passing of his estimates. However, at the same time I am sure he will realize that we have an obligation and a responsibility as members of parliament to offer our suggestions and indeed our criticisms as well as subjecting the estimates of his department to that careful examination that is required of us at these times. The minister mentioned that we had already spent nine days on the estimates and I think this impression should be corrected. He lumped in the supplementary estimates with the main estimates. Of course we all recall what happened during the course of the debate on the supplementary estimates. I think the minister knows full well that had they come clean with us at that time, had they answered the fears that we expressed during the course of that debate, the estimates would have passed in considerably less time than they did. As it turned out, the examination that was carried on under the auspices of the Minister fo Justice revealed without any doubt at all that there was some question as to the legality of the actions that were taken during the period when there was a transfer of responsibilities; and the fact that a special order in council had to be passed to ratify the actions that had been taken was, to us, sufficient justification for the prolonged debate at that time. Our experience, also, has been that any estimates or policies of this government require careful examination.

During the introduction of the minister's estimates to the committee he dwelt at some length on the work that has been done in so far as production research is concerned. Certainly we on this side of the chamber are well aware of the need for production research, efforts to reduce the costs of production and to provide better varieties of crops suitable to the growing conditions that exist here in Canada. But he said nothing about a matter that we feel is very much related to the question of production research, and that is marketing research. To proceed apace with production research without carrying on the kind of marketing research that is necessary to dispose of the increased production that will result is simply asking the farmers to run faster but to stay in the same place. I would suggest to the minister, in keeping with the promises the Liberal party made during the election campaign, that some considerable effort needs to be spent on the question of marketing research, and I would like to hear him say something about that matter as we proceed with the estimates.

He also quoted with some relish the cash income figures for agriculture during the past year. Admittedly the cash income figures look very appealing, but I cannot understand the reluctance on the part of the government in power to quote the figures that really mean something to the farmer; that is, the realized net income figures. The hon. member for Qu'Appelle put those figures on the record the other day and I have no intention of repeating them. However, they certainly do reveal that all is not as well as the government proclaims. No matter how good the cash income figures for Canada may look, my experience has been that there are always areas, always pockets where all is not so well. To quote these figures without giving consideration to the areas that are in difficulty is like suggesting that a man with one foot in a bucket of ice and the other one on a hot plate is, on the average, very comfortable. I am sure no one will agree that this is the ultimate in comfort.

The minister suggested, also—and I was rather interested in this remark—that the farmer's image, as far as the urban populations of Canada are concerned, has been somewhat tarnished, and he referred to a conversation he had with someone in Toronto when he said, "How do you like all that money we sent you to keep you on the farm?", referring to the western farmer. He said something might be done about this. I would suggest that the minister can do something by telling the Liberal candidates in the next election campaign that when they are campaigning in their ridings they should not exaggerate and falsify the figures and should not say that the Conservative government had to be turned out simply because they were doing too much for the farmer. I think that to a large extent this is the reason for that tarnished image. I am not blaming the minister for this, but I hope he will bring together some of the members of his party and call them to task for the misinformation they spread during the last two election campaigns.

The minister made some comment about dairy policy. This has been dealt with at some length by the hon. member for Nicolet-Yamaska and I do not intend to go into that matter. But I think the minister should remember that the dairy industry is a complex one and the figures relating to that industry as a whole can be somewhat misleading, because there are four component parts of the dairy industry. I am quite convinced they are not all enjoying the degree of prosperity which he indicated. He took great pains to point out the policies he had initiated since he took office, and said they were responsible for the success which he alleges the dairy industry is enjoying. None of us on this side is going to be fooled by those comments. We know the dairy policy he has followed is the policy that was initiated by the previous government through the hon. member for Qu'Appelle.

If the minister wants a complete solution to the dairy problem I would suggest he should pursue that very same policy whereby the four components of the dairy industry —the fluid milk producers, the concentrated milk shippers, the men who ship milk to the cheese factories, and the cream suppliers— can all have the same opportunity to enjoy the same degree of prosperity.

On occasion when listening to the minister I have come to the conclusion that his idea of Utopia in agriculture will be when millionaires and industrialists purchase all the smaller farms in the country and operate them, as was the case under the feudal system. I hope this is not his philosophy, but sometimes I wonder when I listen to his remarks.

During the past few weeks we heard a great deal about solemn commitments and how important it is to implement the commitments made during the election campaigns. Mr. Chairman, quite a number of solemn commitments with respect to agriculture were made by the Liberal party during the last two elections, and it might be well to put a few of them on the record and find out how many have been implemented.

Surely a commitment to a farmer is as valid as a commitment to anyone in any other segment of industry. Surely the government has not completely forgotten some of the promises it made during the course of the last two campaigns. I have in my hand a pamphlet which I had some difficulty locating. It is entitled, "A Square Deal for Farmers," and I could not locate it until I looked under the file marked "fiction." Some of the promises contained in it are startling in view of the results achieved thus far.

First of all, the Liberal government was going to expand Canada's exports of farm products. I would like to hear from the minister in what way exports were expanded, other than simply following the patterns and policies laid down by the previous government, except for some modifications and changes which I am not criticizing because, in the light of changing conditions, perhaps they were necessary. I would like to know what specific effort has been made to encourage exports of Candaian farm products.

The Liberal party said it was going to serve farmers with information on the market outlook, but I happen to recall that not long ago in this chamber the Minister of Transport, who in those days acted as agricultural critic, took the former minister of agriculture to task for spending money for that precise purpose. He was in disagreement with any effort to pass on to farmers information that was important to them in the planning of their production, and information regarding the market possibilities for their products. I do not recall the particular date or year, but I do remember the date. The Minister of Transport is not in the chamber today, but I am sure he could remind members of his party when that debate took place.

Another item in this pamphlet states they would improve consultation about farm policies. I wonder in what way has consultation been improved. Only the other day the minister had an appointment with leaders of the Canadian Federation of Agriculture. I think it was on Tuesday, May 19, and the appointment had been made some time previously, but an hour before the delegation was to arrive in Ottawa they received a phone call to say the minister could not see them. He had gone out west to speak to a Kiwanis club.

Mr. Hays: What date was this, because I spent a whole day with the federation of agriculture?

Mr. Jorgenson: This was Tuesday the 19th.

Mr. Hays: The 19th of what month?

Mr. Jorgenson: Of this month.

Mr. Hays: This is not correct.

Mr. Jorgenson: I will be glad to be corrected if I have misrepresented the facts, but this was my information and if the minister wants to put the record straight, well, fine, that is all right with me.

Another one of the policies which the Liberal party said it would implement was the establishment of an independent research council for marketing, processing and production. At the time this promise was made there had already been an independent research council set up under the responsibility of the minister of agriculture for the province of Manitoba, Hon. George Hutton.

Perhaps the minister would care to outline how an independent research council, sponsored and paid for by the government, can be independent. The independence of the council that is in existence today certainly cannot be questioned, but I doubt very much if such a council paid for, set up and appointed by the government, can exercise any degree of independence whatsoever.

The pamphlet went on to say they were going to provide long term capital for co-operatives through the industrial development bank. I have not seen anything of this. They were also going to encourage the establishment of marketing boards where farmers wanted them. Mr. Chairman, marketing boards can be established in any of the provinces any time the farmers wish to do so. This pamphlet is only a lot of useless words, trying to gild the lily a little bit, but meaningless, as were most of the Liberal promises during the election campaigns.

They said they would improve price support measures. I would like to know in what way they have done so. I know the Liberal candidate in the Provencher riding carried on his own election campaign, and I suppose this was true of most Liberal candidates across the country. The federal Liberal party had one policy and the candidates followed another.

I have in my hand a full page ad that appeared in my local newspaper, in which the Liberal candidate for Provencher started out by saying that if the people wanted these things they must vote for him for strong, stable, responsible government. I do not think I need to comment on the stable aspects of this government. These are well known. The candidate also promised deficiency payments to cream shippers, to eggs and pork producers, paid on a regional and quarterly basis. I wonder where that promise has gone. Then he went on to promise higher initial payments for wheat, oats and barley, announced before seeding time. Have we heard anything about that? Then he promised a guaranteed scale of price supports on wheat, oats and barley, for example, with a minimum guaranteed price of $2 for No. 1 wheat. That is another promise that has gone by the wayside. Then for No. 2 wheat, he says, $1.99 and for No. 3, $1.98. He is taking it upon himself to set the spread between Nos. 1, 2 and 3 wheat and anyone who knows anything about wheat marketing in this country knows that these spreads of one cent between each grade are about the most ludicrous thing we have ever seen. Finally, he says: "For a two price system on wheat calculated on the unit quota".

Well, we have heard the last of that, no doubt. This is set out in somewhat less detail in the pamphlet. They were going to provide deficiency payments for grain, which includes, I suppose, the program announced by the Liberal candidate in Provencher and then, by a consumer subsidy, improve the return to farmers on wheat consumed by Canadians. That is a general statement and I do not think anyone knows what it means. We certainly have not seen any results. Then, they state, they would underwrite provincial crop insurance programs. I presume the intention is to introduce a system of re-insurance such as that proposed by the government of Manitoba, who have been leaders in the field of provincial crop insurance programs. As most members are aware, the legislation we passed as to crop insurance was enabling legislation providing for some assistance to provincial governments which adopted a system of crop insurance in their respective provinces, and the province of Manitoba has enlarged this program now to the point where more than 6,200 farmers are covered, as compared with about 5,100 last year. So this program is expanding and they are prepared to expand it still further as soon as this government is prepared, as was indicated in this election speech, to implement this promise about re-insurance as requested by the Manitoba government. They said they were willing to improve farm credit and we are glad to see that the bill respecting this has been given first reading and that it is likely to become a reality soon. Then they go on to say:

> By area development programs, and with the necessary capital, improve farm land, turn submarginal land to more profitable uses, draw new sources of jobs to rural areas, and improve educational and training opportunities.

Surely they do not think they are fooling anybody with this gobbledygook. They know full well that these are the objectives laid down in ARDA. All they are suggesting here is that they intend to carry on the ARDA program and I do not need to tell members of this house or anyone in the country who introduced that program.

Then it says: "Undertake a program of water conservation". That also has been carried on for years under P.F.R.A. and it is also a part of the ARDA program. Speaking of water conservation, I should be happy if the minister would take another look at the Morris dam in my riding. I should be very happy if the minister could convince treasury board that this project is one of the necessary water conservation projects for the province of Manitoba.

Then, I suppose in order to fill up the page, they say they intend to carry on all these policies in co-operation with the provinces. I suppose that is a departure from what they have been doing under the various programs they have introduced so far. But we are happy to see they intend to co-operate with the provinces in the field of agriculture, at least. The parliamentary secretary, who is listening to my remarks intently, emphasized when he spoke the other day on a supply motion the amount of production research which is being carried on under the government and he left the impression that this was something new—something which had been initiated by this government. I cannot let such an impression be given without making some comment, because surely the hon. gentleman should know that production research has been carried on ever since there have been experimental farms in Canada. There can be no question but that the production research which has been carried on under successive governments has been a credit to the Department of Agriculture. However, he sought to leave the impression—I think, a superfluous one—that new vistas of opportunity were suddenly to be opened up to the farmers simply because they were carrying on this production research.

I was interested in the comment made here the other day by the hon. member for Kings, who seemed to be most impressed with the fact that the Department of Agriculture had been divided up so badly. He seemed to think this would lead to all kinds of co-operation and that great things were to be done as a result of this division. We do not know who is actually in charge of the department because the other day when the hon. member for the Yukon brought some matters to the attention of the government there were a number who took part in the debate, including the Prime Minister, the Minister of Forestry, the Minister of Trade and Commerce, the Minister of Justice and the Minister of Industry. They all pitched in and joined in the act. I wonder how they can reconcile their philosophy and approach in the Department of National Defence, the achievement of unification there, with the divisions which are taking place within the Department of Agriculture. In one instance we are told of a wonderful new move to have everything unified in one camp, while in another department the best thing which could happen, if we are to believe the hon. members opposite, is to split the administration up. I contend there can be no effective co-operation in the face of the division of responsibility which now exists in the Department of Agriculture. The hon. member for Kings went on to say—

Mr. Muir (Lisgar): On a point of order, I am not bilingual and there is a battle going on in the other official language in one corner of the chamber. I cannot take in the two languages at the same time.

Mr. Jorgenson: He seemed to find in these divisions the ultimate solution, but as far as the government is concerned, it has led to a ludicrous situation. They want two ministers of agriculture. We have been supplied, so far, with four pension plans; we have two flags, and they have two policies for the tobacco industry, one to discourage the use of tobacco and another to encourage the use of tobacco. If that is their idea of unification and co-operation, if that is how they intend to run the department, I begin to feel sorry about what is going to happen.

The hon. member for Kings went on to tell us that the minister had made a well received statement to the federation of agriculture in Charlottetown. We know the minister has a good deal of personal charm. There is no question but that he enthralled his audience. But I can hardly concur with the conclusion drawn by the hon. member that this one speech to the federation of agriculture suddenly resolved all the difficulties of agriculture.

There is one thing I should like to put on the record. The other day the hon. member for Nicolet-Yamaska put some figures on record relating to feed prices in his area and the fluctuations in those prices from month to month. I thought they were interesting because the hon. member for Kings, the parliamentary secretary, the minister himself and other speakers on this subject have drawn the conclusion, prematurely I think, that stability had finally been brought to the industry in eastern Canada. Well, the fluctuations which took place between August of last year and April of this year certainly indicate that this stability does not exist. I say this because there was a fluctuation between the low and the high of 75 cents a hundredweight.

I went to the trouble of communicating with the accounts division to find out what were the particular prices allocated on a monthly basis for these same months. I find a variation in prices during that same period, from a high to a low, of 16 cents per bushel. If you want to relate this to the hundredweight, it amounts to about 24.6 cents. The price to the producer in western Canada varied by about 24.6 cents per hundred and the price to the consumer in eastern Canada varied as much as 75 cents per hundred. Surely, in the face of figures such as those no one could claim that ultimate stability has been created. I ask the minister to take a second look at the program he has instituted and not be so complacent about how successful it has been.

In the case of oats, the variation to the consumer is about 28 cents a bushel, compared to a variation of 26 cents a bushel in the wheat board average price at the lakehead. This was approximately 60 cents per hundred. In the case of barley, the variation is 37 cents as compared with a variation of 8 cents a bushel or 16 cents a hundredweight in the wheat board price. I have these figures in table form. I do not want to take the time of the committee to put them on the record, but I am sure the committee would be interested in having these figures put on Hansard as part of my speech. I ask if this course is agreeable to the committee?

Mr. Hays: Could we have them read into the record?

Mr. Jorgenson: Do you want them read into the record? I have put on the record the important parts. The variations in monthly prices in eastern Canada were put on the record by the hon. member for Nicolet-Yamaska; I do not think it is necessary for me to put them on the record again. I choose not to read them into the record. As a matter of fact, I intend to give them to the press if they want to use them. I know what members opposite are attempting to do. They want to restrict my speech by having me read these figures into the record, but I do not intend to accommodate them. I have a few minutes left and I intend to devote that time to other matters.

The minister certainly cannot conclude that the policy he adopted of paying the storage charges on grain in store in eastern Canada has in any way whatever created that degree of stability that he tries to leave the impression has been created in feed mill prices in eastern Canada. I ask him to continue looking into this situation and to pursue a more aggressive policy in order to ensure that there is real stability in feed prices in eastern Canada. This is a problem for the eastern farmer, and will continue to be a problem until some effective action has been taken.

The Deputy Chairman: Order; I must advise the hon. member that the time allotted to him has expired.

Mr. Patterson: Mr. Chairman, I welcome the opportunity this afternoon of taking part briefly in the debate on agriculture. I believe the fact that so many days have been spent on agriculture is an indication of the importance which this item holds for all members of the house. We have had a general debate on agriculture. In addition, we have had a discussion with regard to the problems of eastern agriculture. It may be that many of us are not aware of the fact that agriculture does hold a very important place in the province from which I come, the province of British Columbia. It is true that the arable land area in British Columbia is very limited. I believe the maximum would be about 4 per cent of the land area at the present time.

In spite of that fact, it is a very important industry so far as British Columbia is concerned. In so far as my own constituency of Fraser Valley is concerned, it is most assuredly one of the major industries of that particular section of British Columbia. I have the British Columbia News Letter for July, 1963, in which there is a reference to the cash income of British Columbia farmers. This is broken down by major commodities produced by the British Columbia farmer in 1962. It is pointed out that dairy products account for about $36 million; cattle and calves, $30.4 million; fruit, $19.4 million; eggs, $15.3 million; poultry, $12.2 million; vegetables and potatoes, $10.2 million and wheat, $3.7 million. I believe these figures indicate as I have pointed out before, that agriculture is an important part of the economy of British Columbia.

In a brief presented by the Canadian Federation of Agriculture to the Prime Minister of Canada and members of the cabinet on February 26, 1964, there are several observations made in respect of farming in general. They agree that they are possibly taking a new approach in the presentation of an agricultural brief and point out, for instance, that as an industry agriculture has been and remains, in spite of whatever necessary measures have been taken to improve its position, the most vulnerable and relatively unprotected industrial sector in the country. I feel this is one of the things that has been a matter of great concern to the people engaged in agriculture. It certainly has occupied the time and the attention of the organizations representing agriculture. They have pointed out time and time again that while the costs of production are increasing, there is very little protection so far as the farmer is concerned of the prices he receives for his products. This, of course, places him in a very difficult financial position.

The brief also points out that, as a group, the farmers have shared less in the post-war period in the rising levels of wealth and income than any other group in the country. I think that the statistics that are presented from time to time will show this is very true. The brief points out also that the expenditures in agriculture are taken up pretty well in increasing the quality and abundance of food which has been sold at lower prices. It also refers to agriculture assistance. I believe the hon. member for Provencher referred to this when he called attention to the criticism that is levelled sometimes against the agriculture segment of our economy because of the subsidies or the assistance that is granted in various forms.

While there have been times when it almost seemed as though there were substantial amounts of money being put into this particular phase, I think that, in the over-all picture, the assistance has been very modest. Furthermore, it is justified in view of the particular problems that agriculture faces. I am sure we are all aware of the necessity for agriculture production. We are dependant upon agriculture for our sustenance. I believe, therefore, that in the consideration of the problems that agriculture faces we should be thinking that any assistance we give in this connection is worth while in that it maintains production for Canadian consumption.

Another factor mentioned is that agriculture is a vital sector of the health of the economy; and I think it has been said many times that as agriculture prospers so the economy prospers. I think that is true. Another factor pointed out by the brief is that among advanced nations Canada spends a relatively small proportion of the national budget on agriculture, and I believe this as well is borne out by statistics.

Coming to the problems of British Columbia and especially of my own riding, I should like to say that I have had a number of communications from those engaged in the industry and also those who are representative of the industry in the province of British Columbia. One of the main points of concern is the effect of possible tariff changes as they relate to agricultural production. The British Columbia coast vegetable marketing board, representing a great number of organizations, have submitted material for consideration, and perhaps it would be interesting to record the participating organizations associated with this particular submission. They are as follows: Abbotsford growers co-op association; B.C. coast vegetable marketing board; B.C. coast vegetable co-operative association; B.C. interior vegetable marketing board; B.C. interior marketing agency limited; B.C. blueberry co-operative association limited; B.C. certified seed potato growers association; B.C. lower mainland farmers' co-operative association; Columbia potato growers association; Colebrook potato growers association; district "E" farmers' institute of B.C.; East Chilliwack co-operative growers; Fraser valley fruit and vegetable growers association; Fraser valley pea growers association; Fresh-Pak Limited, Burnaby (processors); Georgia potato growers association; lower B.C. mainland horticultural association; Pacific co-operative union (growers); south Vancouver island potato growers association; united flower growers co-operative association; united Fraser valley growers co-operative association, and the Vancouver island vegetable co-operative association.

This indicates, Mr. Chairman, that this brief and the fears expressed therein is representative of the great many organizations, and of course producers, in these various areas of activity. I should like to read a short paragraph from page 2 of the brief. It is pointed out that:

> We, as producers in B.C., with a minimum of tariff protection now available are able to supply other western provinces with early crop vegetables and various small fruits. We firmly believe that it is to the benefit of our producers, consumers, distributors and processors and the economy of our country to further foster this ever increasing movement within our Canadian regions rather than have these markets supplied by imported produce which we believe would completely dominate our Canadian markets under any method of reduced tariff protection.

It is pointed out in this particular brief that prior to 1959, I believe it is, the producers in that area were severely handicapped owing to the importation of fruits and vegetables from across the border. The producers there had the best of the market in their own country, and then just before our own producers put their produce on the market it was flooded with what was left over from south of the border. Then certain changes were effected which placed them in a more competitive position and I believe added greatly to the stability of the fruit and vegetable industries in the province of British Columbia. The fear is that in the event that certain proposed changes are made and tariffs are reduced, our producers will once again be faced with this very same problem. They are voicing great concern and asking that in any negotiations which are carried on between Canada and other nations of the world under GATT or the Kennedy round, as the present negotiations are called, or any type of negotiations, some of these basic considerations will be borne in mind and that nothing will be done to jeopardize the position of our industries in the province of British Columbia. I think this is fundamental. I think it is basic. I believe it is only fair, because if our own producers lose the position they have now and the market is supplied from outside, our own industries may be put out of operation and prices could rise to the point where we would wish we had our own producers producing our own foodstuffs for us.

There are many problems faced by those engaged in agriculture. As I have said, those in my own riding also have their own particular problems and have to face the situation with a great deal of courage, realizing that there are so many things which could happen to interfere with the satisfactory production and distribution of their products. I just call these matters to the attention of the Minister of Agriculture.

There is one other matter I should like to mention at this time. Some time ago the question was raised as to protection for agricultural producers under the Bankruptcy Act. There have been cases where producers who are farmers have delivered their produce to companies which have subsequently been declared bankrupt. Under the terms of the act no provision is made to reimburse farmers or to enable them to make a claim. Therefore they are requesting that the act be amended so that these people will receive protection, and in the event of such a thing happening will not be in the position of losing their entire crop or their entire production.

I do not propose, Mr. Chairman, to discuss agricultural matters any further at this time. I realize there is a desire on the part of the committee to facilitate the passage of the estimates in view of the fact that we have spent considerable time on them. May I again say that this is only an indication of the fact that we are all interested in and concerned about the problems of agriculture in our own areas as well as right across the nation, and we trust that these matters which are brought to the attention of the minister from time to time will be given every consideration.

[Mr. Patterson.]

Mr. Alkenbrack: Mr. Chairman, I do not intend to dwell unduly long this afternoon on the subject with which we are dealing. I would like to extend to the members of the government, to his colleagues on the other side of the aisle and to his wife and family who survive him, my deep condolences upon the death of Sherwood Rideout, the hon. member for Westmorland.

My remarks this afternoon will deal primarily with the dairy industry, and principally with the cheese segment of that industry. I will also have a few words to say about ARDA and some of its facets, and in a limited way, regarding farm credit.

Beginning with the cheese industry, Mr. Chairman, I wish to point out that the farmers of Ontario and the Ontario cheese producers marketing board, which works in their interests, were very disappointed with the recent announcement of the Minister of Agriculture on Thursday, May 14, cutting cheese export assistance by another cent. As you know, Mr. Chairman, the assistance in the amount of four cents a pound, so wisely and beneficially established by the Conservative administration, has now been cut exactly in half so that whatever benefits the cheese producers receive are of very little consequence to such a vital industry engaged in exporting Canada's principal specialty product.

I reiterate that Canadian cheddar cheese is Canada's principal specialty export product. Canada has other products, of course, that are specialties of our nation. I am not taking anything away from Canadian maple syrup or No. 1 northern hard wheat; but of all the products that Canada exports to the old country cheese seems to be the leader, so far as the tastes of the British consumers are concerned. Therefore the action of the government, the Department of Agriculture and the man heading that department has been retrogressive with respect to the progress that the cheese industry must and should make.

Is it not true that the minister was asked by the Canadian Federation of Agriculture, the dairy farmers of Canada, the Ontario cheese producers, the L and S co-operative and the Lake St. John co-operative, representing the Quebec cheese producers, to continue the three cent subsidy on export cheese? In spite of that the minister left these people in the lurch and cut the export assistance by another cent. From whom did the minister take his advice when he lowered the subsidy on export cheese from four to two cents?

Did he take the advice of the butter and milk powder interests?

Is it right, with this reduction of one cent in the assistance for export cheese, that farmers all across Canada should have to take a reduction of nine or ten cents per 100 pounds for their milk? That is what the mathematics of the matter will mean unless it is possible to raise the price of Canadian cheese one cent per pound on the United Kingdom market. It would be a very ill-advised thing to raise the price on that market because this year we must export a great deal more than last to take care of the reduction in the subsidy, and the contemplated increase in production of cheese-milk.

The price of Canadian cheese on the United Kingdom market has already been raised four cents in a two year period compared with an increase of one and a half cents in the price of New Zealand cheese in a four year period. Our Canadian cheese costs the English importer 37 cents a pound laid down in London compared with 32½ cents a pound for New Zealand cheese properly aged for consumption. Remember that the United Kingdom importer has to keep Canadian cheese approximately one year for aging purposes whereas it seems that New Zealand cheese is already aged when it arrives in England.

Does the minister think it wise to increase our price in that market by another cent? We could well ruin our market there by too high a price and by always asking more and more for the product each time a shipment arrives in England. This latter is not good business. I have here the statement that the minister made in the house on May 14. As found on page 3255 of Hansard he said:

> —so it is now considered in the best interests of all that this subsidy should be reduced by a further one cent per pound.

When the minister says "in the best interests of all" what does he mean? Does he mean the cheese industry, which is mostly farmer owned, or does he mean the butter and milk powder industries which are controlled by large corporations? I leave that question with members of this committee, Mr. Chairman, because it has not been answered and it is most vital to the progress of the cheese industry.

While I may be slightly out of order, Mr. Chairman, in passing I should like to point out the great discrepancy in the methods of taxing the various kinds of cheese companies. First, let me take the limited cheese company factory tax, which includes income taxes and so on. A good example is the Elmbrook Cheese and Butter Manufacturing Company of Picton, Ontario, in Prince Edward county. That company has to struggle along paying as much as $1,200 a year in income taxes whereas a nearby co-operative manufacturing cheese pays no income tax. I am sure you will allow me to point that out to the house, Mr. Chairman. This situation is not the fault of the Department of Agriculture but it certainly represents a handicap to the limited companies which manufacture cheese in Canada today, and should be corrected.

There are a couple of other points I want to make on the question of the cheese export subsidy. The reduction of one cent per pound on export cheese will mean a reduction of nine or ten cents a hundred pounds on cheese milk to Canadian farmers, unless the price of cheese is increased in the United Kingdom market. We feel that such a move is unsound. Second, unless the export price of cheese can be raised to offset the one cent reduction by the federal government, the farmers of Canada are due to lose $1,370,000 on the basis of the production of 137 million pounds in 1963. The government of Canada has saved some $280,000 by reducing the export subsidy by one cent on 28 million pounds exported.

Officials of the government are predicting an increase of ten million pounds in cheese production in 1964. Are they asking this small group of farmers in the province of Ontario, who increased exports by ten million pounds in 1963, to increase them by another ten million pounds this year at a higher price? This does not look right, when the big companies that own whole milk powder plants are subsidized to the extent of 6.3 cents. I hope the minister realizes that this action simply represents a betrayal of the cheese milk producers by the government. I should like to see him rectify the situation soon in order to get that section of the dairy industry back on the track.

To turn to ARDA, although the government claims that it has made some progress and has put certain policies into effect, one can travel across the province of Ontario and see that it has done nothing by way of improvements under ARDA. ARDA has three main aims: to put to better use some marginal land that is not very productive in its present use—and nothing is being done along those lines outside of some pilot projects—second, ARDA is meant to develop income and employment opportunities in rural areas; third, to develop and conserve the water and soil resources of rural Canada. I submit that this government has done nothing along these lines.

I do wish to remind the committee, Mr. Chairman, of the very able work performed by the hon. gentlemen in the other place. I have in my hand a report issued by a committee of the Senate, and having read most of it I want to compliment those hon. gentlemen in the red chamber for their able compilation of this report. I refer to the recent report of the special committee on land use in Canada. When the government and some political parties in this chamber are loudly contemplating and voting for the abolition of the other place, good work of this sort should remind them of the folly of such a measure. I want to quote from this report what the committee has to say about water and land use:

> Water occupies a very influential role in determining the most beneficial use of land. Because of this, various witnesses devoted a part of their submissions to expressing a need for more concern about the use of this resource. The briefs pointed out that most uses of land require water. Despite this, the value of water is often overlooked. This lack will have to be remedied, especially in the areas where the limitations of water are becoming apparent. Less pollution and squandering of water will have to result, it was noted.

Here is the key point:

> Decreasing water supplies in relative or absolute amounts create limitations to urban, industrial and recreational development, it was stated. Large quantities of water of suitable quality are required for these land uses.
> Of particular concern to the committee was the role of water in agriculture. In eastern Canada many lands have the problem of too much water. Drainage must be provided for many agricultural lands. All levels of government are active in drainage programs. Many details were reported to the committee of the various schemes that are in operation to assist farmers in draining farming areas.

This is my point in this connection, Mr. Chairman. If this government really wishes to give leadership and guidance to the farmers of Canada, particularly those of eastern Canada, they should bend their efforts toward providing assistance to farmers wishing to instal tile drainage. I have here a copy of a resolution submitted to me over a month ago, but this is the first opportunity I have had to bring it to the attention of the government and hon. members. It is a copy of a resolution submitted by the Lennox and Addington county federation of agriculture regarding assistance that could be given to farm drainage projects. I quote the resolution:

> Whereas the present depreciation on farm installed tile drainage systems is now 2½ per cent
> And whereas at this rate, it would take 40 years to recover this cost
> And whereas tile drainage is necessary in modern day agriculture
> And is the first consideration in good farm management
>
> And whereas this farm practice of tile drainage installation should be encouraged to a greater degree.
> Therefore, be it resolved that the Lennox and Addington federation of agriculture request the Department of National Revenue taxation division to increase the capital cost allowance on already installed tile drainage systems from the present allowable 2½ per cent to 10 per cent.

You will agree that this resolution is very valuable to the agricultural industry and its recommendation should be put into effect. I urge the government to think along those lines and see what they can do to assist the agricultural industry where tile drainage is required and farmers are loath to start on any large projects because of the small benefit that is granted taxwise.

My last point, Mr. Chairman, concerns farm credit and I wish to quote from that respected old journal, the Family Herald of May 21, 1964. This is the 95th year of publication of this magazine, which is very well known across Canada. In fact I can well remember running out to the mail box on the farm as a child once a week to get the Family Herald, which at that time was one of the main news media for rural Ontario. The article in this magazine is headed, "A crisis in farm credit" and it reads in part:

> Though most Canadians find their weekly grocery bill a heavy burden to bear, they eat as well as any other nation on earth and a good deal cheaper than most. Their thanks for this blessing should be directed to the Canadian agricultural industry, a group of small, independent farmers producing a tremendous volume of food with a slim profit margin.

The article continues by referring to a well informed authority on real estate in western Canada, a person with a farm background, saying:

> —that for his area, Farm Credit Corporation land value appraisals are out of date by at least ten years. "Farm Credit Corporation limits of $50,000 with terms of 35 to 50 years at no more than 3 per cent would be more realistic", he says, "even if it took two generations to pay it back".

I think we should be thinking along those lines, Mr. Chairman, with regard to lending money to prospective, young farmers who want to get into this industry. The article continues:

A charge frequently made is that Farm Credit Corporation money is inflating farmland prices.

If that is so, it is making it all the more difficult for young people to get into the business. Then the article says:

Financing land purchases for increased efficiency is perhaps the farmer's biggest problem but close behind looms the problem of paying for basic and specialized machinery.

Many hon. members are farmers and know how difficult it is to finance machinery, where tremendous costs are involved, and pay mortgage interest and payments on their land, and so forth. I think it is time that we are looking into the loosening up and the expanding of the terms of these Farm Credit Corporation mortgages. To conclude the quotation:

It is frequently reported that the annual sums allotted by parliament to cover F.I.L. borrowing are never over-expended. Estimates of money actually borrowed vary and stood at around 60 per cent in a recent year. The repayment record on these funds is excellent. Where, then, is the bottleneck? Why are these funds not fully subscribed?

This is a question for which we are all responsible, but more particularly the government of the day. I hope it will look into this so that the agricultural industry can be put back on its financial feet. Our prime responsibility to this country is the working of the millions of acres of the top six inches of the soil of Canada.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): I should first like to join with my fellow members and the leader of the official opposition in paying tribute to the late hon. member for Westmorland and in offering my condolences to the loved ones he has left behind.

While the minister may complain that this debate has dragged on, much of the time has been spent pointing out the evils of political patronage in the government, and it may be that not enough time has been spent on this important segment of our economy. Agriculture is still the biggest employer in Canada and is still the main industry of the country. This was admitted by the Minister of Finance on bringing down his budget this year. It was also pointed out by the Minister of Trade and Commerce, at various times throughout the year, that wheat sales and the agricultural economy itself brought buoyancy to our foreign exchange and improved economic conditions which were felt all across the country.

But is seems the government is more concerned with images than it is with agriculture, with this great economic lifeblood of Canada. From time to time we see the Prime Minister worried about his own image and cancelling television programs. We see the Minister of Agriculture trying to portray his image across Canada as a robust auctioneer who has the small farmer's concern at heart, and who is bringing down four pieces of legislation which will vastly revolutionize farming. Why has he not brought them down? Why have we not had a look at them? Only one with regard to farm credit is on the order paper.

In a speech which he made in Lethbridge on April 30 he tried to give the impression that the opposition was doing nothing but filibustering. What legislation has come before parliament this session? We have had the speech from the throne and we spent six days of what might be termed our own time, during the Easter holidays, trying to proceed with government work. Certainly it cannot be said that those six days were taking up government time.

The minister said in Lethbridge on April 11:

The government legislation program is bogged down by opposition filibuster.

Where is this legislation that he wants to bring down to revolutionize farming? We see one item on the order paper and we have asked for it to be presented in bill form. The minister says some parliamentary rules and procedures could be changed to facilitate the passage of legislation through the house. He is very anxious to bring in his proposed legislation, and I personally would like to see the measure dealing with farm machinery.

The minister went on to say that his policies will vastly change the agricultural economy. I remember reading about the minister, at a meeting he had at Claresholm, Alberta, in the following day's Calgary Herald. I do not have the clipping here, but he said he had been farming for 15 or 18 years with a 1928 model tractor, and he felt this was good enough for all farmers, that farmers were being abused by the machinery salesmen, that they were over-buying machinery, and that the farm machinery agents were just taking advantage of them.

I just wonder what will be in this farm machinery legislation, coming from a minister who is supposed to have farmed 18 years with a 1928 model tractor and who said it was every bit as good as his neighbour's rubber tired tractor. I myself did quite a bit of farming with a 1928 tractor and with a team of horses, but when you compare the three modes there is no doubt that the rubber tired tractor is superior.

The minister also said at the Lethbridge meeting that as soon as the pension bill was passed through parliament his farm legislation would be presented. In a sense the pension bill has passed through parliament. It has been withdrawn and now we have a flag issue that also will eventually be withdrawn because Canada does not want two flags. It too will occupy the time of the house and keep this vastly important agricultural legislation from being proceeded with, and these smokescreens will continue until the minister makes up his mind as to what type of farm machinery bill he wants.

We have also noticed that the minister is greatly interested in improving his image. He has found out it is not too good across western Canada, particularly in Alberta. Therefore he has got a new assistant, a former member of the press gallery, who has written a letter, on the minister's stationery, to weekly newspapers in which, the assistant, Mr. Peacock, says:

He—

The minister

—is concerned that the people in your area have every chance to learn as authoritatively, objectively and comprehensively what their government is doing.

I am pleased to hear this because if it is going to be an authoritative weekly column this means the minister is going to spend more time in parliament, and if it is going to be objective and comprehensive, this means he is finally going to start comprehending his own department and parliament itself. In fact, I have a couple of copies of some news releases he has already issued, and it is interesting to note that in some respects he is bypassing one large branch in the Department of Agriculture, the information branch.

Mr. Diefenbaker: At what price are they being auctioned?

Mr. Horner (Acadia): The minister is not as smart—I should not use that word—not as wise, or perhaps in such financial difficulty as the hon. member for Port Arthur, because he is giving these out to weekly papers free.

Mr. Herridge: Will the hon. member permit a question? Does he realize this is not the information branch? It is the propaganda branch.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): Well, if I were chairman I would rule that that was a statement I wholeheartedly agree with, rather than a question. But these releases are going to be interesting. I am told that some 20 weekly newspapers already subscribe to the minister's weekly complimentary and authoritative report on parliament, and perhaps the Clerk of the House or someone else in this house could make a notation in each one of those weekly papers saying how often or how long the minister spent in parliament in order to grasp this information.

Mr. Byrne: The hon. member is notably away more than any other person.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): Now we hear something from the authority on the rules over on that side of the house. There is no question but that I find myself extremely occupied and not in the house on occasions, but my voting record is there for everybody to see, and while I know it could be better I am still not ashamed of it.

The minister is trying to create an image. The other day he was still auctioning, but that was an auction engagement made some time ago. Recently, no one has made any comment on his auctioneering services. Oh, maybe I am a bit envious; maybe there is a bit of auctioneer in me, too. But I notice that on May 18 he auctioned a famous Holstein herd for an amount which totalled $323,000. I roughly figured out the commission on this at the rate of 15 per cent—I was told this by a contributor to one of the sales. It comes to $48,000, a nice day's work—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): —and an honourable profession. But surely if the minister is going to report authoritatively and comprehensively on this parliament and the work of his department he should spend full time at it. There is a report with regard to his auctioneering services in the Western Producer of October 3, 1963. The Western Producer is, I may say, a well known rural farm paper. This is what the editorial had to say:

We can think of dozens of good reasons for Mr. Hays to be quite properly absent from the house, carrying out duties directly connected with his job as minister. Auctioning cattle isn't among them, no matter how good the cattle, nor if they are owned by senators and other prominent people. There are other auctioneers. The minister's first responsibility is to his job as minister.

That is why I began my remarks by pointing out that these estimates we are discussing today concern the largest single industry in Canada, the biggest employer in Canada and the life saver of 1963 with regard to Canada's financial situation. Yet the minister is more concerned with improving his own financial position than with looking after the biggest single employer in Canada and the biggest single industry in Canada.

Mr. Hays: I think I should correct one or two of those statements.

The Chairman: Is the minister rising on a question of privilege?

Mr. Hays: Yes. I received nothing. There were 2,000 farmers there from 15 different countries. I was happy to be there and I discussed many problems with them. But I did not charge anything for my services.

An hon. Member: What was your own farm income last year?

Mr. Horner (Acadia): More than yours.

It is all very well for the minister to say he did not charge anything. How much did he receive, and how much will he be receiving?

Mr. Hays: On a question of privilege; I received nothing.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): Only time will tell. How much is Romandale Farms obligated to the minister for selling those cattle? When is the next election coming, and how much will they contribute to his campaign fund or to the campaign fund of the Liberal party? Nobody in public life does $50,000 worth of business and says: "Don't pay me". They definitely feel obligated and will certainly make a contribution in respect of that obligation in the future. One may rest assured of that. This sale of Holsteins resulted in record prices. There is a full report of it here. To quote the minister's own words, only time will tell, and in this case only time will tell how much Romandale Farms are obligated.

The legislation which the minister hopes to put on the order paper has been advertised in many papers. One of the items deals with farm improvement loans. We had that on the order paper as far back as the spring of 1963—it was intended to increase the amount which could be loaned under the Farm Improvement Loans Act. Everyone knows we have been interested in the Farm Credit Corporation. We set it up, we got it working and we increased the grants from time to time. I am interested in this piece of legislation and in particular in what they intend to do with regard to interest rates in respect of it. Did they ever stop to think that it is fine and dandy to give a farmer $40,000 and charge him a huge rate of interest on that money while providing very little marketing information, very little marketing help to market his product in order to pay the debt? Forty thousand dollars at 5 per cent interest—we can be certain they would not lend a farmer as much money as that without maintaining the present rate of interest; that comes to $2,000, no small sum.

I see in a newspaper clipping that the minister's farm machinery bill will be the saviour of the small farmer. He is making some small farmers big and maintaining others by giving them 1928 tractors, I would imagine. Forty thousand dollars at 6 per cent interest would come to nearly $2,400 a year in interest alone. Surely, the minister will give consideration to saving a farmer $400 a year in interest?

We have heard some talk about the length of time a farmer would have in which to repay his debt. Certainly, the period should be lengthened, but with the increasing length of time it becomes of the utmost importance that the interest rate should be maintained and should not be increased. Because of the time increase a farmer instead of paying back $40,000 will be paying back more like $80,000, if he takes the full time allotted to him under the proposal which the minister may or may not have in mind. Certainly he has suggested from time to time that the time should be increased along with the amount of the loan. Well, I am in full accord that the Farm Credit Corporation should be able to lend more money, but I would rather see many other changes in the legislation to allow the small farmer to get started, or add to the property he may now own. But, of course, we shall see the bill in due time and no doubt I shall have more to say when it is before us.

The recent image builder which the minister has in mind is that he plans to fly members of parliament to various farm regions. This is going to be an interesting junket. It should increase the tourist expenditure by Canadians in Canada. But what real purpose will be accomplished? Is the agriculture committee going to fly to New Brunswick, for example, and set up a day for a meeting, and will farmers be called in and be told: Here is the minister, here are the members; ask your questions and the minister will be glad to answer? Is this to be the purpose of the junket? Or are we to go around interviewing farmers throughout Canada and asking them what will help solve their problems? As a member of the committee I shall certainly be pleased to go along, but it will be a waste of the taxpayers' money because it is the minister who designates the legislation; it is the minister who puts it on the order paper or does not put it on the order paper; it is the minister who brings in the useful legislation which will benefit various segments of the agricultural economy. If the minister wants to fly all around Canada, and he has done a considerable amount of it already, to bone up on the various farm problems, then I think that would be money well spent by the Canadian taxpayer. He might find some answers to a lot of the problems that have been troubling him and his government with regard to agriculture.

This was the party that was going to make decisions. Last fall the Minister of Agriculture told the farmers not to grow wheat: "We have enough of it." The Minister of Trade and Commerce told them not to grow any more wheat, that we were going to have enough of it. We were lucky to have this one big sale. The farmers have gone ahead and pretty well completed putting in one of the largest crops of wheat this country has ever seen. I think it will be in the neighbourhood of 30 million acres. Did they receive any advice from this government about markets, about whether or not it was wise to plant this wheat? At one time they were told by both ministers not to plant wheat. Then reports appeared in the newspapers that the Minister of Trade and Commerce said the outlook was good for wheat sales to Russia to continue; that Russia would continue to be a buyer of Canadian wheat. The Minister of Agriculture has backed away somewhat from his initial statement that farmers should go into other branches of agricultural production, such as beef cattle. The beef cattle industry does not look too good this spring, with a surplus in the United States, the country that sets our market price.

I point out to you, Mr. Chairman, that this government, as it has done in connection with many pieces of legislation, has wobbled and waffled in giving advice to farmers with regard to markets for their products. Today we see the agriculture committe studying the tobacco industry. What is the purpose of that inquiry? It is to improve the image of the present government with the tobacco farmers in order to try to undo some of the harm the Minister of National Health and Welfare did from a political point of view. The government should be concerned about the tobacco industry. Many governments have been. The Ontario government just appointed a commission to study the industry. Why the concern all of a sudden about images? We have concern about the image of the party the image of the Prime Minister, the image of the Department of Agriculture and the minister, as a prime concern of the government today. One would almost think they were preparing for an election.

Certainly the country does not want an election. I read in one of the newspapers today that the flag issue will bring about an election. This country has waited a number of years for a truly distinctive flag, if this is what people want to call this new version we are getting. Certainly we can wait another couple of years. The country does not want an election. Why be concerned about image building? Why has the Minister of Agriculture started issuing free press releases for the rural newspapers? Why do we have members of parliament flying all across Canada in this process of image building? There is no other reason than to make Harry, if I may use the term, look like one of the boys in relation to the agriculture committee and the members of this house. This is another effort at image building. Image building will not create the smokescreen that is desired by that party. As long as there is an opposition in this house, members will be able to clear away the smoke and see where the real action has been with regard to agriculture.

Mr. Kindt: I shall not detain the committee long by the few remarks I have to make. It has been brought to my attention that a number of newspapers in my riding have received letters from Mr. Don Peacock, who I presume is an employee of the Department of Agriculture, which are characterized as reports from parliament hill. During the past six years that I have been a member of this house I have written articles on the debates which have occurred in parliament when, in my view, it was thought of public interest to do so. The custom has grown up for individual members to send reports from parliament hill to their own constituents. This practice has grown up over the years and is not something which I have popularized. I have simply taken it as a practice which has grown up. Certainly under no circumstances has it been the practice for a minister of the crown to try to improve his image by circulating, far and wide, the "Hays Report From Parliament Hill". This is plagiarism. If the minister had any thoughts of decency in relation to the private members of this house, he would reconsider his position in choosing a title which is reserved by custom and practice for hon. members.

If the minister wants to send the "Hays Report From Parliament Hill" to the constituents of Calgary South, no one could find fault. However, if he wants to employ somebody on his staff, who is receiving $12,000 a year, to make up a report to send far and wide as the "Hays Report From Parliament Hill", while he is out conducting auction sales and has not heard what has taken place on parliament hill surely his constituents will not think well of that. What are the people of the country going to think? I would suggest, for his own self-respect, that the hon. member from Calgary South reconsider his position. If he does not, then I am certain the criticism he is going to receive will more than balance the benefits which he might think he is going to receive by way of improving his image as Minister of Agriculture. The minister's popularity is at a very low ebb, make no mistake about that.

I understand the minister has a ranch in my riding of Macleod. I have heard it said that in the next election he intends to run in the Macleod riding. I shall be delighted to have him as an opponent. If he does, I might say that he had better lengthen his legs if he is going to run against me. It will probably fall on the shoulders of this Conservative party to clean up this whole mess in agriculture which he has created. We shall be able to do it. Let me say that every Liberal who has run in the Macleod riding in the past three elections has lost his deposit, so he is welcome to be in the same category.

I should like to say that there are many things about the minister's department which should be mentioned, but I do not wish to repeat the things to which other members have referred.

While I am on my feet I should like to ask about the Chain lakes project out of Claresholm. We have been working on that project for some five years. There was some question whether this project should be at Chain lakes or at the Flying E, and after P.F.R.A. had made their surveys of Chain lakes it was decided to wait until the department had examined other sites. Now at last the local people have agreed to go ahead at Chain lakes. The engineering studies have been completed and the minister has said yes, we will go ahead at the Chain lakes site.

However, in this year's estimates I understand from checking with the department officials that all that is being done this year is to carry out certain studies. There will be no bulldozers getting to work, there will be no construction work; only a small token amount of the estimates before us are devoted to this purpose, just enough to make surveys. In other words, the department does not intend to do anything this year at Chain lakes; and if that is the case the minister should tell the people at Claresholm and at Granum, who are depending on the Minister of Agriculture to get busy, how much of this project is to be completed this year. The minister has said that this project is going to be completed in 1965, which is more than a year away. In other words, he is going to do nothing this year. He is going to wait and see whether or not it rains. That is the situation; and make no mistake, Mr. Minister of Agriculture, the people of Claresholm and the people of Granum who depend on the storage of water in Willow Creek are expecting something more important and more definite than this.

Mr. Hays: Whom were they depending on two years ago?

Mr. Kindt: They were depending on the government in power at that time, which initiated the study by P.F.R.A. which brought in a report on the Chain lakes project. It was also recommended by the council of Willow Creek municipality that the Flying E site be re-examined, and at the suggestion of Willow Creek municipality the government postponed any construction at Chain lakes until the alternative site at the Flying E was properly examined.

These are the facts, Mr. Chairman. The minister can smile, look fat and prosperous and everything else—

Mr. McIlraith: The pot is calling the kettle black.

Mr. Kindt: —but these are the facts, and the people out there, do not forget, are watching what the Minister of Agriculture is trying to do. But they are having a hard time trying to see anything at all that he is doing. I shall be out at the Cartwright ranch on Sunday at a big old timers picnic. I shall be out near the minister's ranch, and since I am a lifetime member of the old timers association in that area I would extend an invitation to him to be my guest. I should be glad to pick him up and bring him over to the Cartwright ranch if he is in that part of the area. We might be good friends as individuals outside the House of Commons, but I want to tell him this, that the policies of this government will certainly not be tolerated or accepted by the people in my riding, or for that matter any of the people in the other agricultural ridings of this country. Regardless of what the minister may do by way of writing articles to improve his image, he is going to find difficulty in correcting the image of this government and the record of the present Minister of Agriculture.

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Chairman, I have been sitting here this afternoon hoping really that item 1 would be passed and that we could get on with the details of the estimates. Seeing that that is not likely I want to make a few kindly observations. I have read the minister's speech in opening his estimates and I have read his speech on the occasion of the amendment on going into supply last Monday, but I must say I fail to see in either of those speeches the sort of reply I should like to the requests of farm organizations in many respects.

We note that there is going to be an amendment to the Farm Credit Act, which we are pleased about. We also note that there is going to be an amendment to the Bankruptcy Act, which the farmers will be very interested in, because they have suffered losses. We also note that more active consideration is being given to the ARDA program than has been the case for some time. However, I wish the minister would give the committee his reaction, before these estimates are concluded, to the representations of the Canadian Federation of Agriculture with regard to the world food program and with respect to taxation policy. We should like to know what he is doing within the cabinet in this regard.

The federation presented to the Minister of Finance immediately following its annual meeting a submission containing recommendations on excise and sales tax and customs tariffs on goods which enter into the farmers' cost of production. We should like to know the reaction of the minister to these recommendations. Page 9 of the brief presented by the Canadian Federation of Agriculture to the Prime Minister of Canada and the members of the cabinet on February 26, 1964, reads, in part, as follows:

> In a somewhat different field, we would like to draw your attention to the resolution in appendix K in which we ask both provincial and federal governments to work out means of ending the use of property taxes for financing local education costs, and instead find means of ensuring that federal funds are made available for education in amounts which will ensure that financing needs for education in Canada are adequately and equitably met.

[Mr. Kindt.]

We should like to know the reaction of the minister to this representation in connection with property taxes. I think this is a nationwide request on the part of the farmers of Canada. I know it is a matter which is brought up at every provincial convention of agricultural organizations and it has been the subject of discussion throughout the years.

We should also like to hear the minister's attitude toward this particular problem, because the burden is increasing every year, owing to the increasing cost of taxation, the need for new and better schools, more teachers, and so on, all of which we support.

Then we should like to know the minister's views with respect to the representations concerning pension plans. Paragraph 25 of the brief states:

> We would hope to be submitting to you more detailed views and recommendations on this subject of pension plans. At this time there is one central point of policy on which we would like to be very emphatic. We think it is essential that, from the first, participation in the plan should be mandatory not only for employees, but also for self-employed persons.

I mention that because I have had some correspondence from the farmers in my own constituency who are concerned with this aspect of the Canada pension plan. We should like to know whether the minister supports the proposals of the Canadian Federation of Agriculture and other farm organizations in this respect.

Then we should like to know the minister's attitude toward the federation's proposal with respect to the St. Lawrence seaway. In paragraph 29 of their brief the federation submits that:

> Our federation opposes any increase in St. Lawrence seaway tolls, or any Welland canal tolls whatever.

Then we should like to know the minister's reply to the question of unemployment insurance for farm labour. This matter has been brought up as a private measure by the hon. member for Humboldt-Melfort-Tisdale. We all give him full credit for it. He is a good representative. He knows how to represent farmers. He has his feet on the ground instead of his head in the air. Paragraph 44 is headed "Unemployment Insurance for Farm Labour" and reads as follows:

> We appreciate that the government must now be very intensively examining the findings of the royal commission on unemployment insurance, and planning new legislation. What we wish to emphasize is that there are many farmer employers who are at a distinct disadvantage in the labour market created by the lack of coverage for farm workers. This is a very serious matter for many farmers and very unsatisfactory also for the man who would otherwise like to enter farm work. Our request is that, without delay, insurance be extended on a compulsory basis to farm employees in particular, defined geographical areas or industry groupings. This we believe should be done when requested by groups of farmers in a particular area or producing a particular commodity.

We wholeheartedly support that request. I know a number of farmers in my constituency who have been unable to obtain good employees who would have liked to work for them and who would have preferred to do farm work, but because of the lack of unemployment insurance in this field these workers have had to go into occupations where they could get their insurance stamps and their benefits later on, if necessary.

We would like to know what the minister thinks. We think that the Minister of Agriculture should rise in this house as the representative of the farmers of this country and say that he believes in this idea, and then behind the scenes in the cabinet he should be doing his best to get the Minister of Labour to see eye to eye with the farmers of Canada.

I have one other question to raise which is of interest to the fruit growing industry of British Columbia. It has to do with certain resolutions passed at the 75th annual convention of the British Columbia fruit growers association which was held at Kelowna on January 21, 22 and 23, 1964. There are a number of resolutions of interest here but I want to draw two particularly to the minister's attention. I have had some personal knowledge of fruit growing over a period of 50 years, but have had to go out of it in recent years. One reason for having to do so is the fact that men employed in this work are not covered by unemployment insurance. I wish to refer to resolution No. 39, diseases and insects of pome fruits, which was introduced by the Keremeos local of our organization. It reads as follows:

Whereas pest and disease control on apples and pears is a major problem throughout the industry, and

Whereas costs of spray materials are steadily rising with tolerances of spray residue being ever more rigorously controlled, and

Whereas there is an excellent publication by the Canadian Department of Agriculture, "No. 915, Diseases, Insects and Mites of Stone Fruits", available to growers, and

Whereas there is at present no publication available on diseases, insects and mites on apples and pears,

Therefore be it resolved by this 1964 B.C.F.G.A. convention that the B.C.F.G.A. apply for such a publication, namely, "Diseases and Insects and Mites on Apples and Pears and Their Control".

The next resolution, No. 40, is related to that resolution. It has to do with non-chemical insect control and reads as follows:

Whereas we appreciate the work already being done on the control of insect pests by non-chemical means, and inasmuch as the need for such control increases as insects rapidly develop resistance to chemical sprays, so that new and costly materials are continually required to replace materials which have become ineffective,

Therefore be it resolved by this 1964 B.C.F.G.A. convention that the federal Department of Agriculture be requested to accelerate research into non-chemical insect control increasing appropriations for this work if necessary.

I do not want to delay the passage of item 1 but I do ask the minister to give consideration to the representations of the farm organizations including the last two resolutions I have read.

Mr. Hays: I will be very pleased to do that.

Mr. Hamilton: Before item 1 goes through I should like the minister to agree that I may discuss crop insurance under the P.F.A.A. heading. As the minister knows, there is no item in the estimates for crop insurance because it comes under supplementaries. I trust it will be all right with the minister if I raise the question of crop insurance under the P.F.A.A. heading, vote 15.

Mr. Hays: Yes.

Mr. Hamilton: Second, I would ask the minister to facilitate the work of the opposition and save our having to ask questions by requesting the department to take each of the votes and give us a list of the major increases and the major decreases, not the small ones but the ones that are sizeable, so that we may have a more complete breakdown than appears in the estimates. If that can be given to us before we next study these estimates I think it will facilitate their passage.

Mr. Hays: The hon. member wants the increase or decrease in each vote?

Mr. Hamilton: Just the major increases and decreases. If there is an increase of over 10 per cent in an item let us have the increase and what caused it and the same thing for the decreases.

Mr. Hays: We will be glad to do that.

Mr. Laprise: Mr. Chairman, I wish to take the opportunity afforded by the debate on the estimates of the Department of Agriculture to make a few comments on the present position of the Canadian farmer, especially the eastern farmer.

Mr. Chairman, I believe that farming falls in a very special category in Canada. In fact, it is the most important profession in Canada, and I think it would be worth while to consider it for a few moments and fully analyse the problems facing farmers, in view of the economic stagnation existing in the country.

Mr. Chairman, may I call it five o'clock?

[Text]

Mr. Hays: Mr. Chairman, I wonder whether it would be possible to pass item 1 today. We have had four full days of discussion of this item and I should like to get into the details at the next sitting.

Mr. Hamilton: We agree.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall item 1 carry?

[Translation]

Mr. Laprise: Mr. Chairman, it would probably take me about eight or ten minutes to deal with agriculture estimates, before the first item is carried.

[Text]

Mr. MacNaught: Mr. Chairman, maybe you would not see the clock for ten minutes.

Mr. Knowles: We would be happy to agree to that.

The Deputy Chairman: Is it agreed that we continue for a few moments with item 1 of the estimates of the Department of Agriculture?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Translation]

Mr. Laprise: Mr. Chairman, I thank the house for its kindness and I will do my best to be brief.

For the past few days, that is the period just referred to by the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Hays), the various problems facing our farmers have been under consideration.

In my opinion, farmers know quite well how to solve their production problems. Indeed, they are assisted in that by their professional associations, organizations and unions which have at their disposal the necessary means to look into these problems.

But another problem which must be urgently settled has to do with the sale of the production. Farmers must not only produce, but they also have to dispose of their production at a reasonable price which will enable them to meet their other obligations.

In the past, people were inclined to think that anyone could be a farmer; this opinion is still current in some circles. I do not agree with that. Today, farming methods are changing more and more, and a farmer must necessarily be conversant with agriculture and moveover be a businessman. In fact, he has to make purchases and if he is not well up in business, he is liable to be cheated sometimes.

In addition, he must have salesmanship; he must know the tricks of the trade in order to make profits. He must also have some knowledge of mechanics, welding and a whole lot of trades; otherwise, he has to make expenditures which are hard on his budget.

In my opinion, contrary to members of all but a few other professions, a true farmer has a variety of skills and that is why he deserves more consideration from the people of Canada. He should be shown greater respect and his income should enable him to enjoy a standard of living comparable to that of any other class of citizens.

There is another point which is of special interest to my riding, that of Chapleau, and that is the situation of farmers under the Unemployment Insurance Act.

I would like for a moment to draw the attention of the minister on this matter. I know it will also interest the Minister of Labour (Mr. MacEachen), but as we are considering the agriculture estimates, I hope the Minister of Agriculture will take due note of it.

In my constituency, farming is far from being a thriving business and, often, the owner of a farm or a plot of land has to find outside work for several months each year. During the period where our farmers work mainly as lumbermen, they have to contribute to the unemployment insurance fund. They often work five, six and even seven months a year away from the farm, but when work in the forest ends, some time in the spring, they are perhaps out of work for a few weeks before farm operations begin. Then, our farmers have to face many difficulties when they wish to draw unemployment benefits. I think it would be advisable to consider the situation more carefully and give the farmer who has a low income the privileges granted other classes of society.

I will not deal further with this matter this evening, in order to allow this first item to be passed. I will make other remarks as the various items are submitted to us.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall vote 1 carry?

Item agreed to.

Resolution adopted in committee of supply this day reported and concurred in.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Batten): The house will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely public bills and private bills.

TOBACCO

PROVISION FOR RESTRAINT OF USE

Mr. Barry Mather (New Westminster) moved the second reading of Bill No. C-32, to restrain the use of tobacco.

He said: Mr. Speaker, the aim of this bill is to safeguard the public against misleading claims by manufacturers and distributors of tobacco products. The bill and the proposition contained therein is in line with similar legislation being advanced at this time in the United States by the federal trade commission. Part I of the bill sets forth that it is a finable offence to sell or furnish tobacco products to children under 16 years of age. However, that part of the bill is presently an act and was enacted as early as 1908. The only reason it is in the bill I am putting forward is to avoid having two acts on the same general subject. Part II of the bill, which is the new part, would empower the government to control, in the cause of public health, the labelling, exposing, advertising or promoting of tobacco products, much as we now control the same activities in regard to food and drug standards through the food and drug legislation.

Hon. members are, I am sure, well aware of the steps which have been taken in recent years by many other governments in this phase of public health protection. Such countries as Great Britain, France, the Scandinavian countries, the Soviet union and Italy have taken some action to curb the toll of cigarette disease. In connection with this, Mr. Speaker, I would like to pay tribute to the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss LaMarsh) for her action and the leadership she has given, she being the first minister in the federal field in Canada to encourage study and action toward curbing abuses connected with the excessive consumption of cigarettes. As we know, she called a national conference last year at which were represented, I think, all the provincial health departments in Canada, the tobacco industry and other organizations which are concerned with the toll taken by cigarettes.

In passing I would like to say that our provincial government in British Columbia, with which I certainly differ in many other respects, is nevertheless to be commended for having pioneered political action in this field. The minister of health of British Columbia, Hon. Eric Martin, as much as three years ago took an active part in getting provincial action to establish, first of all, funds for educational efforts directed to our younger people to acquaint them with the various tolls taken by excessive smoking of cigarettes. As a matter of fact this next week will mark the fourth annual non-smoking day in British Columbia, which is sponsored by the provincial government of that province.

I am sure hon. members will be aware of the pressing nature of the findings of such organizations as the Royal College of Physicians in Great Britain, the American cancer society, the Canadian Medical Association and several other organizations of that type in regard to exposing the dangers connected with the excessive use of tobacco products. The most recent exposé has been by the United States medical authority, with which we are all familiar.

On this point, and in passing, I would like to call to the attention of hon. members that the only interest these impartial medical authorities have in bringing forward the reports they have brought forward, exposing the dangers of excessive cigarette consumption, is that of public health. They have nothing else to sell. They are not concerned with producing tobacco, advertising it, selling it or displaying it. They are only concerned with helping to maintain and improve the standards of public health. They are impartial in that respect.

Mr. Speaker, there have been many activities under way in the last year or two in line with this general program of combating disease from tobacco products, and I have a quotation or two which I would like to make from a pamphlet which is being circulated just now in Washington state by an organization called the "Governor's Conference on Smoking and Youth." There is to be a meeting next week at Seattle, Washington, a conference on smoking and youth, to be attended by 20 health and youth groups concerned in protecting young people from death and disease from the excessive use of tobacco, particularly cigarettes. I quote from the pamphlet as follows:

> If one adds all of the deaths from auto accidents in the U.S.A., about 40,000 in 1963, all of the deaths from suicide, about 20,000, all of the deaths from t.b., about 10,000 and all of the deaths from cirrhosis of the liver, about 20,000, which total about 100,000 deaths per year, this would still be half as many as all of the deaths due to tobacco.

As I say, this is a quotation from a pamphlet, from the health sciences report of the University of Washington, to be circulated at the conference meeting next week, to which I have alluded. The report points out that studies of the American cancer society have confirmed earlier studies which show that the total mortality caused by tobacco is probably about six times greater than that ascribed to cancer. The report adds:

We have evidence that young people don't really want to smoke. They feel pressured to smoke to be accepted.

In line with this, Mr. Speaker, it is encouraging to note that within recent weeks some 90 companies, producing some 99 per cent of the cigarettes in the United States, have voluntarily signed a tobacco industry code which bars advertising appealing to youth, including testimonials by athletic notables, or making claims that smoking is allied with virility. I understand, in line with this code that the United States companies have adopted voluntarily, they are taking out pictures of athletes from the cigarette advertising which we see in the United States magazines, and replacing them with pictures of businessmen and politicians, who are not notably connected with virility.

This is a good, practical stand by the tobacco companies in the United States, but I understand they were notified by the fair trade commission that if they did not do so, the United States would shortly bring forward legislation which perhaps would even further limit their advertising and safeguard the problem to a greater degree.

I have personally communicated with the president of the Imperial Tobacco Company in this country, Mr. Keith, pointing out what has been done voluntarily by the American cigarette companies and suggesting that this might be a good example for the companies in Canada to follow voluntarily. I have had a letter from him which encourages me to think that the Imperial Tobacco Company will consider taking a similar stand.

However, Mr. Speaker, I think it should be borne in mind that despite the code which has been voluntarily agreed to by the cigarette companies in the United States, the United States federal government is still pushing forward with the idea of introducing legislation which will call for the labelling of cigarette packages pointing to the potential danger involved from the excessive consumption of the contents of the packages.

This measure which I propose would empower our own health authorities to adopt similar safeguards in Canada, but I would hope the tobacco industry in Canada of its own accord would take similar steps, in its own protection as well as in the protection of the Canadian consumers.

Like many others, Mr. Speaker, I have been working for a good number of years in a voluntary way to try to acquaint the public with, and arouse public interest in the potential dangers of excessive cigarette smoking. In particular I have tried to acquaint young people with those dangers, and I have a great deal of material in my office, which I could quote on this point. I shall not of course take up the time of the house doing that, but I thought it might be of some interest to hon. members if I referred to one or two of the arguments often brought forward by those who claim cigarettes have nothing to do with ill health.

For example, it is sometimes said that there is no scientific proof, and that they have not isolated any particular constituent of cigarettes which experimentally will constantly produce human lung cancer. This is true, but there are numerous instances in history of disease where the relationship between cause and effect was recognized long before absolute scientific proof was forthcoming. For example, even today the germ causing leprosy does not fulfil the scientific requirement linking it with the disease, though of course nobody would deny the contagious nature of this disease which was recognized even before biblical times.

Then it is sometimes said that they do not really know the cause of lung cancer. The same was once said of cholera and typhoid, which were brought under control long before the germs causing them were discovered. This was based on observation that drinking polluted water was associated with disease. If the provision of clean water had had to wait until the discovery of bacteria, thousands of preventable deaths would have occurred.

One final point. It is said sometimes that lung cancer is really due to air pollution, diesel fumes or petrol engine exhausts. These factors may play a very minor part in the causation, but one of the greatest increases is on the island of Jersey which has the highest tobacco consumption per head and the highest male lung cancer death rate in the world. The island has no air pollution problem, few motor vehicles and not a single case of lung cancer in a non-smoker. Finally, policemen, transport workers and garage attendants all inhale more exhaust fumes than anyone else. They do not get more lung cancer.

If it were possible to leave out all the moral, ethical and health reasons for putting out a cigarette, let me point out two things to those who urge that in the interests of our treasury or of our own tobacco producing areas we should go slow in this direction. First, the non-smoker, or the person who gives up smoking, lives longer. The Royal College of Physicians in Britain states that the chance of dying in the next 10 years for a man age 35 who is a heavy smoker is one in 23. For a non-smoker it is one in 90. If we live longer we produce more and consume more and are taxable further. Second, if a man who now spends $200 a year on cigarettes stops smoking he has an extra $200 a year to spend, and hon. members know how few things which it is possible to buy or do are not taxable today. In Britain, where the government takes in approximately £800 million a year from tobacco taxes they are so convinced of the urgent health need to reduce cigarette smoking that they are content to lose that revenue.

No doubt, Mr. Speaker, a hue and cry will be put up by the producers, advertisers and retailers involved in the tobacco industry against such a health measure as is proposed here, or against such a measure as has been enacted in the United States. No doubt a similar hue and cry would be put up by producers and distributors of opium in eastern countries if their sales were interfered with. But I think there is more than economics involved in this question. Public health, and particularly the health of young people, are concerned. If the measure I am putting forward today were adopted or sent to a committee for consideration we would be doing something to improve the health standards of this country and to safeguard our young people from falling into the trap which at the present time is held out for them. Regardless of the fate of this measure, if any hon. members are interested in a personal way in finding out more about this subject I have leaflets available to them and I will be happy to make them available for perusal.

Mr. Jack Roxburgh (Norfolk): In speaking to this Bill No. C-32, an act to restrain the use of tobacco, may I say at once that I am entirely in accord with part I—the present act to restrain the use of tobacco by young persons. I should like to say, further, that the tobacco industry also believes that this part of the bill is a good one, and has for years believed it to be so. Records show that the tobacco industry is in full support of its intent and purposes and has always done its best to co-operate in any activity designed to promote its observance.

Part II of the bill is another matter. In plain words it will be applied to restrain the use of tobacco in Canada. Clause 13 in particular gives to the governor in council a terrific power—the power to make regulations respecting the labelling, the packaging, the selling, the distributing, the offering, the exposing—whatever that may mean; I do not know—the importing, the testing and the analysis of tobacco in addition to what other regulations may be considered fitting—if there are any other matters left to regulate. Certainly, the adoption of this bill would constitute an entirely unwarranted interference by the government in the affairs of an industry which has always been law abiding and, as I have stated on previous occasions, an industry to which the government owes much from the point of view of revenue and employment. Actually, many of the items which this bill seeks to regulate are already covered by laws having to do with customs and excise, and the regulations made thereunder.

Concerning advertising, section 306 of the Criminal Code already exists to deal with false, deceptive and misleading advertising. This does not relate to tobacco only; it covers all products. In the circumstances it would seem that additional and special regulations to govern tobacco advertising specifically would be discriminatory and inequitable. I should like at this time to correct a wrong impression which people have towards advertising relating to cigarettes or the promotion of cigarette sales. There are four companies manufacturing cigarettes in Canada and these four companies spend approximately between $15 million and $18 million annually on promoting and advertising. The first impression from these figures is to think they represent a tremendous amount of money and that the tobacco companies are really "going to town". However, cigarette advertising amounts, in fact, to less than 3 per cent of total sales value as compared with 9 per cent in the case of proprietary drugs, 8 per cent for soaps—the good old soap opera, and Dr. Kildare—and 7 per cent with regard to alcoholic beverages, the latter figure being about 2⅓ times the amount spent on cigarette advertising. That is our dear old friend John Barleycorn. I am sure members will agree that these figures show that cigarette advertising volume is consistent with the competitive situation and is not disproportionate or overdone, as many have been led to believe.

To turn, now, to one of the points raised by the hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. Mather), perhaps I could quote what was said by Mr. Keith, president of the Imperial Tobacco Company of Canada with respect to the voluntary self-regulating code recently announced by the cigarette manufacturers in the United States. He stated that the code appears to be a realistic move in terms of the situation in that country and is evidence of the desire of the industry to co-operate with the appropriate authorities. I should like to go into a little more detail and quote one or two excerpts from this code, because I have an idea which I wish to develop. They are as follows:

1. Cigarette advertising shall not appear on T.V. and radio programs or in publications directed primarily to persons under 21 years of age;

2. Cigarette advertising shall not represent that cigarette smoking is essential to social prominence, distinction, success or sexual attraction.

Incidentally, all models used must be over 25 years of age and this practice has been followed in Canada for some time.

3. Cigarette advertising shall not depict as a smoker any person well known as being or having been an athlete.

I wonder if as much can be said with regard to the advertising of other products. The other night I watched a television show sponsored by a certain product that is doing more damage to the people of this country than the cigarette or smoking industry. This position regarding the prowess of athletes and problems of social distinction was taken in connection with this problem. I am not going to mention any names, but you can judge for yourselves. In Canada, we have already moved our television program to 9 p.m.

I should like to deal with labelling. The suggested labelling proposals in this bill appear to be based on the assumption that the hypotheses linking smoking and various human diseases have been proven. The hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. Mather) has already stated that it has not yet been proven. He has given certain illustrations that he feels are O.K. However, I want to say that the ingredient or ingredients in tobacco or tobacco smoke said to be causing cancer have not yet been isolated or proven to be the cause. The labelling of tobacco products as indicated in the bill would not only be illogical but also very unrealistic, unscientific and therefore misleading. The mere listing of the constituents of tobacco smoke would have no meaning to the consumer or purchaser of tobacco products. If they are not producing the cancer, why should they be put on the label? At the same time such labelling, meaningless as it may be, would unjustly be placing a sort of stigma on the tobacco products themselves.

We have read about the report of the advisory committee to the surgeon general of the public health service of the United States. Like my hon. friend, I can quote reams and reams of statistics. However, the attitude toward cigarette smoking has undergone a big change since this report first came out. I should like to say that we are now reading such headlines as "Cigarettes are safer now, say cancer scientists". Dr. Ernest L. Wynder and Dr. Dietrich Hoffman, of the Sloan Kettering Institute, New York city, say that the majority of filter tip cigarettes now contain less cancer inducing properties than cigarettes formerly did. Dr. Wynder was one of the members of the first research group to point to an association between cigarette smoking and lung cancer. Now, he has made the statement to which I have just referred.

It was pointed out also that different types of tobacco used in cigarettes have made a difference. This brings to the fore again the fact that more money and time should be devoted to research, as I mentioned in my motion two weeks ago.

Many statements that have been made, and are still being made, in this anti-cigarette smoking campaign have been proven to be erroneous. It seems too bad that a number of these statements have been made by men of good repute who are dealing with something outside their field of endeavour. When a person deals with something outside his own field of endeavour, he is generally running into trouble. For example, Dr. R. G. Williams is reported by the Calgary Herald as having stated:

The percentage of arsenic, a cancer causing agent, has been increasing year by year in tobacco as a result of insect spraying.

I am going to say that nothing could be further from the truth, and I will tell you why. This is something about which I happen to know a little bit. In Canada, little or no arsenic has been used as a spray or otherwise in the tobacco fields for the past 10 to 15 years. Proof of this is the fact that in Canadian cigarettes the arsenic level in tobacco smoke is one part per million, well below the five parts per million allowed by the Canada Food and Drugs Act. I am not saying that such statements are made by one side only. Possibly they are made by both sides. However, when they are made by men with an M.D. after their names, the average person takes that statement as definite proof.

It may be all right for the federal authorities to sponsor a report on smoking, but it is quite another matter for them to try to control the habit. If they are sincere in trying to protect the people against themselves, then let us not forget that we are trying to protect people against themselves. They decide they want to smoke. They decide they want to take a drink. They decide they want to have ten cups of coffee per day. They decide they want to eat certain things, and this is their business. This is not the government's business. The government can advise them not to do it, but the government cannot force them to stop it.

Let us remember that most experts concede that urban air pollution, which is carbon monoxide, probably possesses much the same peril, and efforts to control it have not been noticeably successful. Because of this peril, are we going to say that the government should dismantle those industries which contribute to air pollution?

Then, there is that good old friend of ours that I should like to mention once more, old John Barleycorn. I have not anything against John—I mean John Barleycorn. However, it is estimated that there are some 250,000 alcoholics in Canada. If one includes their families, this means that there are perhaps a million persons affected by alcoholism. Then, there is cirrhosis of the liver, and other diseases that are brought on by alcoholism. If everybody is sincere in protecting people against themselves, why do they select one product in connection with which to take action? Most hon. members may have heard of North Carolina's most illustrious son, the late Joseph Daniels, who was a real fighter against alcohol and a real fighter against smoking. At one time he said that he never knew a man to beat his wife because he smoked.

There still remains that controversial subject of cholesterol. Are we going to put in legislation to stop people from eating butter, eggs or putting cream in their coffee? Every one of these products contribute to cholesterol. Here is something that is very interesting, and I know hon. members will be interested in it. Not only is the brain rich in cholesterol but cholesterol contains the same nucleus as sex hormones and, therefore, is not to be deprecated. My gosh, perish the thought. I can see an unproductive generation in the future if you give the government too much power.

Finally I want to ask hon. members, including the hon. member for New Westminster, if they realize what it will mean if this bill is passed? It will give the governor in council complete power and control over every individual connected directly or indirectly with the tobacco business. If you look at it closely, you will realize it is just about as bad as, if not worse than the recent police bill introduced by Hon. Frederick Cass in the Ontario legislature. If this bill is passed it will be the first step toward doing away with everything for which democracy stands, from freedom of speech to the freedom of free enterprise, with free enterprise competing as it should under laws that are equal for all. I feel sure that the governor in council would hate like the very old dickens to try to implement this bill.

In conclusion, I just want to say that this type of bill gives far too much power and control to the governor in council.

Mr. Mather: One question before the hon. member sits down. He made reference to doctors making statements about cigarette consumption. I wonder whether he knows that in Britain over 60 per cent of the doctors have now given up cigarettes, and that 54 per cent are now non-smokers as compared with only 24 per cent of all British males?

Mr. Roxburgh: Well, possibly that is right if the hon. member has the figures. But there is a lot of smog in Britain and I do not know whether that has anything to do with it. I did not say anything about the doctors. I said that a doctor made a statement in a field he knew nothing about. I do not want to take away anything from the doctors, because I have the highest respect for the medical association. But if the hon. member or myself or anyone else goes out of his own field and makes a statement, he had better make sure it is correct. I did not say anything about the doctors otherwise, because I have the highest respect for them.

Mr. J. A. McBain (Elgin): Mr. Speaker, Bill No. C-32, if passed, would endeavour to restrain the use of tobacco by young persons under the age of 16 years. It also provides certain penalties for offences under the act committed by those persons who sell or furnish cigarettes, cigarette papers, or tobacco in other forms. The penalty applies to those under 16 who may be found smoking or chewing tobacco in streets or public places.

The hon. member has long been interested in endeavouring to restrain the smoking of tobacco by juveniles and those not so juvenile, and this part of the bill I commend. I think we are all quite concerned at the use of tobacco among our young people, those between 12 and 17 years of age. I also think we are quite concerned why these young people are forming these smoking habits in their early teens.

I was interested in a clipping I picked up headed "Survey finds smoking habit increasing among teenagers". The article is written by a Mr. Jack Hutton and says in part:

> The number of Canadian teenagers hooked for life on smoking is increasing every day, according to a survey by this column.
>
> This phenomenon is happening every day in every city, town or village in Canada—despite the strongest warning campaign we've ever known.
>
> A Vancouver 14-year-old girl summed it up. "If you don't accept a cigarette, you aren't counted as one of the group. And who wants to be out?"
>
> Very few teenagers have what it takes to "be out", according to our correspondents. The same pattern showed up all across the country: Teenagers aren't listening to warnings about the dangers of smoking.
>
> The question came up several months ago when I mentioned the fact that the Canadian cancer society and several other groups are worried that smoking seems to be a status symbol for teenagers.
> A small pin for those who decided to bypass smoking was produced several months ago. But I personally have never noticed one on anyone. What happened to the pins I don't know.

I think the hon. member who introduced this bill this afternoon was one of those who was endeavouring to provide pins for non-smokers. The article continues:

> The first letters answering the column were all from readers who scoffed at warnings about smoking. This didn't bother me—at first. What did alarm me was that no one spoke up for the other side.
>
> Therefore, several friends have conducted private surveys during the last three months. Each kept a small notebook handy during August, September and October, quietly jotting down opinions of their friends.

Now, Mr. Speaker, these are some of the opinions:

> What emerged were capsule comments from almost 500 teenagers, ranging in age from 13 to 19. Many said they were already smoking "a pack a day" by the age of 15. Some had developed the habit by 13.
> Here's what a Winnipeg 16-year-old boy had to say. "The warnings we hear would be a lot more impressive if we didn't see adults disregarding their own advice every minute of the day."
>
> "The Canadian Medical Association frowns on smoking but the heaviest smoker I know is a doctor who lives close to us. And I could never place much stock in what my folks said because they'd die without a morning cigarette."
>
> A Halifax 17-year-old girl was one person who didn't smoke. But she added: "I was in a restaurant the other day sitting next to a booth where a girl was taking a merciless kidding from friends because she didn't smoke.

From that article it seems that the people to educate are the parents of young children. With both mother and father in many cases working today, it seems to me that there is very little surveillance given the children in the teenage class. They are left pretty well to roam as they please and they naturally fall under the influence of older persons and especially of cigarette smokers.

If this bill were passed, applying these penalties, especially to those under 16 smoking in the street or a public place, does not seem to me to be the answer. You will drive them underground. If these penalties are enforced these people will go into a secluded place, a cellar or backyard to carry on their smoking habits. That is not what we wish to accomplish. I was interested in a news report this morning to the effect that one of our prominent tobacco companies hoped that within an 18-month period they would be able to produce a cigarette on the market with all possible causes of lung cancer removed from it. I hope this can be accomplished within a lesser period of time than that. I know that all our tobacco companies are doing research work in an attempt to find what are the main possible causes of lung cancer in so far as cigarettes are concerned, and they have spent thousands and thousands of dollars in research programs of their own.

At the present time our agriculture committee is studying the production of tobacco, and I hope that when their report is brought in it will recommend that sufficient money be set aside to enable research to be carried out by the Department of Agriculture into possible causes of lung cancer. The tobacco growers will also welcome that research. The tobacco companies would wish to co-operate 100 per cent in that type of work, and I am sure that everyone across the country would appreciate such studies.

I was also interested in another article by a prominent writer, a person by the name of Scott Young of the Globe and Mail. Scott Young apparently has a couple of teenage boys and he has used various methods in an attempt to stop them smoking. I think hon. members might be interested in a few extracts from this article.

Mr. Young says:

I can't think of a better way to bring on an acute case of restiveness among taxpayers than Wednesday's report that we are going to spend $600,000 of public money to discourage cigarette smoking.

Incidentally, this article appeared in the Globe and Mail of November 29, 1963. He goes on to say:

This is going to be divided as follows: $400,000 to tell youngsters that smoking is bad for them and $200,000 for research into why people start smoking and don't stop.

Couldn't we possibly find some way to tell youngsters, equally uselessly, that smoking is bad for them without it costing $400,000? I have an impulse to suggest that this anti-cigarette message be worked into beer commercials, but I guess I'd better not.

Miss Judy LaMarsh, Minister of National Health and Welfare (or, on alternate days, of national health and hellfire) announced this effective new method of throwing money down the drain after the closing session of the Canadian conference on smoking and health.

She said the educational program would not try to scare the children. This seems reasonable. You tell them that if they don't give up the weed they'll be dead at 40. They look around at the world of atomic weapons, death rates on highways, and all the other ways they might wind up dead by 40 anyway and they say, "So what else is new?"

They don't pay any more attention to the lung cancer threat than boys and girls of my generation did to being told that cigarettes would stunt their growth.

Miss LaMarsh has suggested that one method of persuasion might be an advertising campaign in which noted athletes and other celebrities tell why they don't smoke. This would not be worth the powder to blow it up. The same advertising agencies who picked up the loose change on the anti-cigarette campaign would be busy in another part of the office churning out ads in which athletes and other celebrities endorsed certain brands of cigarettes. This they'll do just as rapidly as they'll endorse a breakfast food, if the price is right.

If it has any pertinence here, I smoke, but not cigarettes. My two sons do. I tried every parental gambit to discourage them. With one, at the age of 14 or 15, every time I saw him smoking I had him write out a $2 cheque and forward it to the society for retarded children, and made sure that the subtlety was not lost on him. He kept on smoking.

The fact is that children have been fed anti-smoking propaganda ever since cigarettes were invented. It has had no effect at all. Their heroes smoke. Their heroines smoke. Even their parents, who fall into neither category but have a certain influence in some households, usually smoke. So some young people of considerable common sense smoke, and so do some stupid ones. It's a habit they acquire from adults—

One encouraging piece of information indicating that maybe tobacco can be put to a better use than smoking is an article headed, "Don't Tell Judy, But Pigs Thrive on Nip of Nicotine". Possibly we have at last found an agricultural use for tobacco in providing nicotine in pig feed. The article reads as follows:

It makes them attractively leaner and saves on food, say the results of tests conducted at the Nappan, N.S., research station of the federal agriculture department. Net profit was $1.30 to $1.70 higher for each animal taking nicotine than for porkers who didn't.

Dr. Hugh M. Cunningham of the Nappan station began seven years ago to try and produce a leaner pig. Now, says a department report, he has found that nicotine stimulates the release of a hormone from the adrenal glands which trims fat and increases the growth of the lean tissue much desired for bacons and hams. Thus, simply by adding five parts per one million of nicotine sulfate, the test pigs showed these desirable changes.

In closing I wish to commend the hon. member for introducing the bill. As I said at the beginning, if the bill were passed it would not have the desired effects but would create the possibility of more than ever driving our young people underground to carry on their smoking habits.

Mr. H. A. Olson (Medicine Hat): Mr. Speaker, in the three or four minutes left to me I want to say that as far as the first part of the bill is concerned there is apparently unanimous agreement throughout the house that this is a good piece of legislation. If they do not agree with what is written in the legislation, at least all of those who have taken part in this debate agree that it is desirable to discourage our young people from starting to smoke and acquiring a habit that they cannot leave. The motive behind this part of the bill, of course, is to discourage young people from smoking when they are young so that they will not be habitual smokers when they grow up.

There are some contradictions in the actions that have been taken by the present and former federal governments with respect to tobacco. I think it is fair to say that all members of the house—I know the members of our party would—would unanimously support the providing of additional funds for research to find a way of producing what might be called safe cigarettes, if such a thing can be found. I am not suggesting that any good purpose is served so far as the human body is concerned in people smoking, but I think we must face up to the fact that people do smoke and probably will continue to do so. Therefore, for the good of the nation additional funds should be provided for research along this line.

I know that we have authorized something like $600,000 for the purpose of educating our young people to refrain from taking up the habit in the first instance, while on the other hand we are spending funds through the agricultural stabilization board for the production of tobacco and also on research to enhance the production of tobacco. This may seem inconsistent, but it is not if we consider other products. There are other products with regard to which we pay money out of the federal treasury in the form of subsidies to assist production and at the same time we also make payments out of the federal treasury to get rid of the surpluses that are produced.

I see it is very close to six o'clock, Mr. Speaker, and I simply want to say that we are in favour of the first part of the bill, but so far as the second part is concerned I would say that while it may seem desirable, I think that from a practical point of view we would be far better to spend our money in trying to find some way that tobacco can be used safely, if such a way exists.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Batten): Order. The hour for consideration of private members' business has expired.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Speaker, I would ask the house leader to let us know what the business will be for Monday and Tuesday.

Mr. Favreau: Mr. Speaker, beginning on Monday we will proceed with the debate on the resolution preceding the measure to amend the National Housing Act, which the Postmaster General is in the process of dealing with, after which we will proceed with the second reading of the measure to amend the Farm Credit Act, after which we will proceed with the debate on a measure seeking approval of the Columbia river treaty and protocol.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, can the minister tell us when the two flag resolution will come up?

Mr. Favreau: Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister will announce either Monday or Tuesday the date when the debate on the resolutions concerning the flag and the national anthem will begin.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether I might ask the house leader a question. Can it be taken for granted that as soon as the provinces have agreed to the proposed amendment to the British North America Act respecting the Canada pension plan, that resolution will be presented to the house at that time?

Mr. Favreau: That, Mr. Speaker, can be taken for granted.

At six o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

[The following item was passed in committee of supply this day:]

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE

Administration—

1. Departmental administration including the national co-ordinating committee on agricultural services, contributions to commonwealth agricultural bureaux and a contribution to the agricultural economics research council in an amount equal to the contributions of the provinces but not exceeding $50,000, $3,368,900.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Monday, June 1, 1964

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

PRESENCE IN GALLERY OF PRESIDENT OF IRELAND

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): I have the honour of welcoming to this house the President of Ireland, Mr. Éamon de Valéra.

Mr. de Valéra is President of a state which is more than a country; it is the motherland of millions of citizens of many other lands. The emerald isle and its friendly, warm and hospitable people have endeared themselves to millions who have not the privilege of having Irish blood in their veins. Ireland is a land which has sent to the world poets and presidents and policemen. It is a small island, but it has been responsible for great things including nearly two million Canadians of Irish birth or descent.

Our two countries have the closest and friendliest of relations. They have worked together at the United Nations and elsewhere, closely and harmoniously for peace, security and freedom in the world.

We welcome our guest to this parliament, not only as President but also as a man of great personal distinction, of passionate patriotism, of intellectual achievement and of great moral integrity. We hope that the president and the minister for external affairs, Mr. Aiken, who is with him, and other members of the party will have a happy visit to Canada. They are very, very welcome.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, all of us will join with the Prime Minister in his words of welcome to the President of the Republic of Ireland. The Prime Minister, with that modesty that all of Irish origin have, did not point out directly that he is a distinguished descendant of ancestors among those two million Irish or of Irish origin who came to Canada and have established themselves here. Indeed, outside of the emerald isle, the United Kingdom, and the United States there are more persons of Irish origin in Canada than in any other country of the world. We welcome the President for what he is, the position he occupies, his contribution to world peace as president of the league of nations and as one whose dedication has been to good relations with the other countries of the world.

I had the privilege of visiting the republic in 1961, when my wife and I were guests of the President and Mrs. de Valéra for lunch. At that time I was able to view something of what Ireland's contribution had been to Canada. On that occasion I presented a plaque in commemoration of what had been done by Thomas D'Arcy McGee, who in 1848 left Ireland in rather precipitated circumstances and in 1864 or 1865 became one of the tribunes of our confederation. I would point out that only very recently have we discovered, as a result of the writing of the history of Canada by Gustave Lanctot, that the Irish were the first to find North America. Up to the present time it has been generally believed it was the Vikings or people from the Nordic countries, but according to this historian the Irish were here in 874 A.D., some 660 years before Jacques Cartier discovered Canada.

I recall with deep interest my visit to Ireland and an experience that I hope the house will allow me to clarify once and for all. Before I arrived there the Canadian ambassador received a cable to the effect that I would be arriving and Champagne would be with me. That caused a great deal of surprise and consternation. One of the members of my staff, Mr. Gilbert Champagne, was in my party, and it was only after arrival that the matter was clarified not only for the Canadian embassy but also for our hosts in Ireland.

I join in welcoming this distinguished visitor, and I hope that for many years to come he will continue to adorn the position he holds; that he will pursue the ways of peace and the leadership he has given to his own country, as well as through the United Nations in the interests of peace everywhere.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, the members of this party join with the government and the official opposition in extending a welcome to the President of the Republic of Ireland. Mr. de Valéra is one of the great figures of Irish history. He has dedicated his life to his belief in the right of the Irish people to govern themselves, and in his struggle to bring that belief to fruition he was the outstanding leader of the Irish rebellion and for the past quarter of a century has been the leader of the Irish people.

Distinguished Visitor

One of the great characteristics of the President of Ireland has been his unyielding integrity. This has been paid tribute to not only by his friends but even by his opponents. Mr. Lloyd George once wrote of him "Mr. de Valéra is perfectly unique, and this poor distracted world can be thankful that he was unique". Mr. Speaker, he has used his unique gifts not only for the benefit of his own people but for the benefit of mankind at large. He was, as has already been mentioned, president in 1932 of the league of nations council, and in 1938 president of the league of nations assembly. Today Irish forces are partners with Canadians in the United Nations peace keeping force in Cyprus.

As one who was born in Scotland, we Scots have a deep feeling of kinship with the Irish since we both have had some trouble with the English in days gone by. However, our approach was different. The Irish chose to fight them; we infiltrated into England and took over all the positions of influence. The end results however, Mr. Speaker, I think will in the long run be for the good of humanity.

Today the President of Ireland is an honoured guest in Canada, he is full of honors and we bid him a thousand welcomes.

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, it is a privilege to join with the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) and with the leaders of the other parties in this house in welcoming President Eamon de Valéra to our midst. We pray that his visit to Canada will convey to him the keen and warm friendship which all Canadians have toward his country and toward himself. As I look back on the period of history which Mr. de Valéra represents I cannot help but think of him as a man who put aside his own personal interests and dedicated his life to a dream, saw that dream become a nation, and then had the privilege of leading that nation to a position of respect and high regard amongst all freedom loving peoples of the world. Thus on behalf of our party I join with others in saying welcome to Canada.

[Translation]

Mr. Gilles Grégoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, it is also a pleasure for us, on this side of the house, to extend the warmest welcome to Canada to the President of the Republic of Ireland.

In the province of Quebec there are a great number of people of Irish origin, and we are very glad and very proud to have them as Canadian citizens and citizens of the province of Quebec.

[Mr. Douglas.]

Mr. Speaker, I think we can assure the President of the Republic of Ireland that the history of the people and the President of Ireland in the conquest of their country's independence is well known in the province of Quebec. The people of Ireland has certainly set an example for us and the whole world by its courage and energy. We are glad to welcome in our country the President of this valiant nation.

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: May I take this opportunity of extending to all honourable Senators and all hon. members of the house, especially those of Irish origin, an invitation to meet the President of Ireland in the Speaker's chamber shortly. We will meet there within a few minutes, and I hope we will have a quorum left in the house.

PROCEDURE

CONCURRENCE IN EIGHTH REPORT OF SPECIAL COMMITTEE

Mr. J. E. Walker (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the hon. member for Edmonton West, under whose genial chairmanship I have been a member of the special subcommittee on procedure and organization, I am pleased to move concurrence in the eighth report. It is a simple report and was approved unanimously by all party membership of the committee. It will serve to clarify the order paper, giving the week's business in the proper order. This should be of some assistance, even to the older members of this house, let alone the newer members, who have had some difficulty in following the week's procedure.

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): I am glad to say, on behalf of this committee, that this is a very acceptable amendment. While I was not a member of the subcommittee, I can say the report was discussed and approved with unanimity at a meeting of the main committee. As the hon. member who moved the motion said, this change will serve a very useful purpose. Apart from anything else, I hope when it is put into effect it will help us, by merely looking at the order paper, to know where we are and where we are going.

Motion agreed to.

ROOSEVELT CAMPOBELLO PARK

ESTABLISHMENT OF COMMISSION TO ADMINISTER INTERNATIONAL PARK

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister) moved the first reading of Bill No. S-26 (from the Senate), respecting the commission established to administer the Roosevelt Campobello international park.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

QUESTIONS

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

EMPLOYMENT IN POST OFFICE CONSTRUCTION, WESTCHESTER, N.S.

Question No. 857—Mr. Coates:

How many man hours of employment were available to residents of Westchester, Cumberland county, N.S., in the construction of the post office in that community?

Mr. Deschatelets: A total of 269 man hours.

GRANT TO HIGHLAND VIEW HOSPITAL, AMHERST, N.S.

Question No. 957—Mr. Coates:

What is the amount of the grant that will be made available to the Highland View hospital commission, Amherst, Nova Scotia, to assist in the construction of the extension to the Highland View hospital?

Miss LaMarsh: Federal assistance approved under the hospital construction grant, to assist in construction of the extension to the Highland View hospital, Amherst, Nova Scotia, amounts to $283,500.

IMPROVEMENTS TO CENTRE BLOCK OFFICES

Question No. 998—Mr. Tucker:

Will consideration be given to the making of temporary improvements to the many poorly ventilated offices in the centre block until the rooms have been air conditioned, in view of the possibility of a short summer recess?

Mr. Deschatelets: Plans for renovating the centre block will include ventilation improvements and will be carried out as soon as possible. Temporary ventilation improvements are not advisable as the electrical and power distribution systems could not carry this additional load.

FATAL ACCIDENTS

Question No. 1,051—Mr. MacLean (Queens):

During the calendar year 1963, how many fatalities occurred in Canada as the result of (a) aircraft accidents (b) boating accidents (c) fires (d) motor vehicle traffic accidents?

Answer: Fatalities due to certain types of accidents in 1963: (a) Aircraft accidents, 220. (b) Accidents involving watercraft, which includes rafts to large ships, according to the international classification of diseases:

drowning involving small craft (under 10 person capacity)	271
drowning involving other watercraft	20
falls involving watercraft	7
machinery accidents in watercraft	1
other accidents involving watercraft	8
Total	307

(c) Fires, 584. (d) Motor vehicle traffic accidents, 4,367.

SAFETY STANDARDS FOR MOTOR VEHICLES

Question No. 1,052—Mr. MacLean (Queens):

Is the government contemplating the introduction of any legislation which would require motor vehicle manufacturers to have their products meet certain safety standards as far as design and manufacture are concerned?

Miss LaMarsh: The federal government has not contemplated such legislation as safety features on motor vehicles have been regulated by the provinces under the various highway traffic acts.

*REPORTS OF RADIATION PROTECTION DIVISION

Question No. 1,060—Mr. Rynard:

1. Have any experiments been carried out recently in Canada, similar to those taking place in England, to determine whether there has been an increase of strontium 90 in children's bones in 1963 and, if so, will the results of these experiments be available to the house?

2. What further research has been carried out in tests being conducted among the Eskimos and in samples of reindeer meat and bones to determine the concentration of Cs 137 and strontium 90?

3. Was a monthly report published since February 1964, by the radiation protection division?

4. Did the radiation protection division issue an annual report for 1963?

Mr. Munro: 1. Studies of strontium 90 in human bones from all age groups are a continuing part of the fall-out program conducted by the radiation protection division of the Department of National Health and welfare. Results are published as they become available in the monthly report "Data from Radiation Protection Programs". The February report was tabled in the house on March 24 and the March report on May 20. The next report is expected in a few weeks.

2. The study of fall-out levels in the north is a continuing one. In addition to the air, precipitation and soil measurements which have been going on for a number of years, a special investigation of caesium 137 in reindeer, caribou and moose meat and in urine specimens from northern residents was initiated last year. Some animal bone samples were also analysed for strontium 90 to obtain a preliminary estimate of the need for strontium 90 studies; these have now been replaced with requests for human bone specimens. Results from this program are also reported periodically in the monthly report

"Data from Radiation Protection Programs".

3. Yes, the March, 1964 report has just been published and was tabled in the house on May 20.

4. No; the complete set of monthly reports vol. 1, Nos. 1-12, contains all the data gathered by the division during the year.

ARDA PROJECTS, NOVA SCOTIA

Question No. 1,075—Mr. MacEwan:

What are the ARDA projects in the province of Nova Scotia, and the location and particulars of each?

Answer:

ARDA PROJECTS

Question No. 1,094—Mr. Regan:

1. How many persons have registered to date for social insurance number cards?
2. Of the estimated eligible total, what percentage has registered to date?
3. Of the total registered, what percentage has registered voluntarily?

Mr. Byrne: 1. 3,722,840.

2. 62 per cent.

3. Not available.

REHABILITATION PROGRAMS FOR RETIRED SERVICE OFFICERS

Question No. 1,097—Mr. Thompson:

1. Will service officers who have been forced into premature retirement be allowed to qualify for the benefits of the Veterans Land Act?
2. Specifically, in what other rehabilitation programs will these officers be permitted to participate?

Mr. Teillet: 1. The personnel concerned may apply for qualification for the benefits of the Veterans Land Act provided they are eligible to do so on the basis of their service in world war II or with the Korea special force and, if they have had alternative rehabilitation benefits to those of the Veterans Land Act, provided it is possible for them to restore their eligibility.

2. No such programs are available through the Department of Veterans Affairs unless an officer had qualifying service during world war II or in the Korea special force.

TRADE MISSION ON PREFABRICATED HOUSES

Question No. 1,120—Mr. Latulippe:

1. Who are the members of the Canadian trade mission leaving the country on May 22 in order to study the question of outlets for prefabricated houses in Europe and what are, in detail, the aims of such a mission?
2. To which countries were the main exports of this industry directed last year and what was the value, by country, of such exports?
3. What countries will be visited by the mission?
4. What countries indicated their intention of meeting the delegation?

[Translation]

Answer: 1. The members of the Canadian trade mission are the following:

Mr. Harold H. Alexander, President of Muttart Builders Supplies (Ont.) Ltd., Toronto, Ont.

Mr. Sol Burke, vice president of The Colonial Homes Limited, West Hill, Ont.

Mr. Peter G. Dueck, General Manager of Dueck Homes Ltd., Clearbrook (B.C.)

Mr. D. K. Geburt, Executive Assistant, M. F. Schurman Company Ltd., Summerside (P.E.I.)

Mr. L. Greenall, President of Greenal Bros. Ltd., Burnaby, B.C.

Mr. T. Jankowski, General Manager of Laminex Products Ltd., Quebec, P.Q.

Mr. Robert Johansen, architect, Les Industries Treco Inc., St. Romuald, P.Q.

Mr. W. A. Kaye, President of W. A. Kaye Enterprises, Haliburton, Ont.

Mr. V. S. G. Lewis, consultant engineer, General Manager of Nelson Lumber Company Ltd., Lloydminster, Alta.

Mr. P. M. Shearer, President of Precision Prefab Products Ltd., Rexdale, Ont.

Mr. A. D. Monkhouse, secretary, Forest Products Division, Commodities Branch, Department of Trade and Commerce, Ottawa, Ont.

It is to help industry take advantage of the opportunities afforded by a shortage of housing in the four countries to be visited, that the Department of Trade and Commerce has organized this Canadian mission concerned with prefabricated houses. The mission is responsible for examining on each market the following factors and to make a report to the Canadian industry:

a) the proportion of the total demand for housing during the next few years which could be satisfied by imports of wooden prefabricated houses;

b) the changes it will be necessary to make on designs to have them comply with local and national construction rules;

c) the problems of shipping and transport, the costs and the competition to be expected from all kinds of established suppliers, including the optimum degree of prefabrication suitable to the different markets;

d) the construction methods being used on the spot and available means for the setting-up and the finishing of Canadian-made houses;

e) the best means of association or affiliation with organizations and builders on the spot;

f) other pertinent factors, such as buying power, availability of land, local preferences as to style, designs, and conveniences in housing.

2. Prefabricated houses are not included separately in Canadian export statistics. They are included within class 960-35 among other types of prefabricated buildings and structures. Total exports of prefabricated buildings, structures and parts, for the 1963 calendar year, are shown in the attached table.

3. The mission will go to Spain, France, Germany and Great Britain.

4. Officials of housing agencies in each of the countries mentioned in paragraph 3 will be among those who will meet with the Canadian trade mission.

TRADE MISSIONS TO SOUTH AMERICA

Question No. 1,132—Mr. Latulippe:

How many Canadian trade missions went to South America in the last two years and (a) who were the members of such missions, and which firms did they represent (b) what firms received new business with South American countries as a result of these trade missions?

[Translation]

Answer: During the last two fiscal years 1962-63 and 1963-64, eight Canadian trade missions visited South American markets.

(a) Here is a list of the members of such missions and of the firms represented:

Canadian mission of the heavy equipment industry to Latin America, April 1962:

Mr. D. H. Struck, sales manager, Preston Woodworking Machinery Co. Ltd., Preston, Ont.

Mr. R. D. Reid, division director, Seaboard Lumber Sales Co. Ltd., Vancouver, B.C.

Mr. H. L. Ladd, president of area No. 2, International Woodworkers of America, Weston, Ontario.

Mr. A. D. Monkhouse, forest products division, Department of Trade and Commerce, Ottawa, Ontario.

Canadian mission of power industry and distribution in Latin America, May, 1962:

Mr. Leo Payer, Payer Electrical Fittings Co. Ltd., Nicolet, Quebec.

Mr. D. F. Martin, vice president and sales manager, Ferranti-Packard Electric Ltd., Toronto, Ontario.

Mr. A. D. Burford, director, exportation, Amalgamated Electric Corporation Ltd., Toronto, Ontario.

Mr. G. A. Cooper, chief—trade mission division, Department of Trade and Commerce, Ottawa, Ontario.

Mr. Claude Rousseau, president, Electrical Manufacturing Co. Ltd., Montmagny, Quebec.

Mr. E. Durham, director, export division, Canada Wire and Cable Ltd., Toronto, Ontario.

Mr. K. Cummings, vice president, National Union of Public Employees, Toronto, Ontario.

Canadian mission of electronics in Latin America, September, 1962:

Mr. C. R. Hughes, president, Automatic Electric (Canada) Ltd., Brockville, Ontario.

Mr. Earl H. Mann, assistant general manager, electronics division, Ferranti-Packard Electric Limited, Toronto, Ontario.

Mr. L.-H. Potvin, manager, Spilsbury and Tindall Ltd., Vancouver, B.C.

Mr. H. C. Ashdown, vice president, Sales T.M.C. (Canada) Ltd., Ottawa, Ontario.

Mr. B. S. Shapiro, Latin America division, Department of Trade and Commerce, Ottawa, Ontario.

Mr. G. N. Cox, vice president and general manager, Marsland Engineering Ltd., Waterloo, Ontario.

Mr. M. L. P. Cheney, Canadian Marconi Company, Montreal, Quebec.

Mr. R. Sangster, engineering and equipment division, Department of Trade and Commerce, Ottawa, Ontario.

Canadian mission of steel and steel products in Latin America, October, 1963:

Mr. N. H. Cuke, sales manager, Quebec Iron and Titanium Corp., Sorel, Quebec.

Mr. W. J. McDonald, manager—exports, Western Canada Steel Ltd., Vancouver, B.C.

Mr. I. Ryckman, manager—export credits, The Steel Company of Canada Ltd., Hamilton, Ontario.

Mr. J. E. Souccar, Atlas Steel Ltd., Welland, Ontario.

Mr. H. R. Gulliver, exports sales manager, Dominion Steel and Coal Corp. Ltd., Montreal, Quebec.

Mr. B. C. Varah, assistant vice president, marketing, Dominion Foundries and Steel Ltd., Hamilton, Ontario.

Mr. Carson Weeks, vice president, sales, Algoma Steel Corp. Ltd., Sault Ste. Marie, Ontario.

Mr. O.-L. L'Espérance, metals and minerals division, Department of Trade and Commerce, Ottawa, Ontario.

Canadian mission of industrial chemicals in Latin America—November 1963:

Mr. Stuart Dyson, Sales Manager, Howard and Sons (Canada) Ltd., Cornwall, Ontario.

Mr. F. B. Parker, vice president, The Bate Chemical Corporation Limited, Toronto, Ontario.

Mr. L. M. Reese, General Manager—Eastern Area, G.H. Wood & Company Limited, Montreal, Que.

Mr. Adolph Monsaroff, vice president, Marketing and development, Domtar Chemicals Ltd., Montreal, Que.

Mr. F. O. Newson, manager, Fine chemicals branch, Canada Packers Limited, Toronto, Ontario.

Mr. W. M. Karn, manager, Export sales, Electric Reduction Sales Co. of Canada Ltd., Toronto, Ontario.

Mr. G. H. MacDougall, manager, Foreign sales, Shawinigan Chemicals Ltd., Montreal, Que.

Mr. A. G. Billingsley, Chemicals Division, Department of Trade and Commerce, Ottawa, Ontario.

Canadian mission of food products and fish processing equipment in Latin America—March 1964:

Mr. G. Allen Jones, assistant manager general, McNamara Engineering Ltd., Toronto, Ontario.

Mr. G. T. G. Scott, Canadian-British Engineering Consultants, Toronto, Ontario.

Mr. A. Edgar Jones, Phillips, Barratt & Partners, Vancouver, B.C.

Mr. D. A. Eisenhauer, vice president, Atlantic Bridge Company Ltd., Lunenburg, N.S.

Mr. E. H. Sinclair, R.T. Tamblyn & Partners Ltd., Toronto, Ontario.

Mr. L. T. Hansson, Engineering and Equipment Division, Department of Trade and Commerce, Ottawa, Ontario.

(b) The main concern of those trade missions was not to make a sale during their visit; the department sent them, first of all, to study market conditions and report on them so that Canadian industry as a whole might benefit therefrom. The reports made by the missions helped to awaken in Canadian companies a new interest for those markets; several took some individual steps, after considering the opportunities or difficulties that had been reported. Several firms take active interest in those foreign markets, but they do not have to inform us of their sales or progress. It is impossible to list all companies which established new business relations following those trade missions.

REQUESTS FOR ASSISTANCE BY AUTOMOBILE FIRMS

Question No. 1,134—Mr. Latulippe:

Have the firms of Peugeot, Renault, Volkswagen, Chrysler, or American Motors requested assistance in any form from the Department of Industry to assist in deciding whether to set up business in Canada and, more specifically, in the province of Quebec?

Mr. Drury: No.

INTERNATIONAL CIVIL AVIATION ORGANIZATION PROFIT

Question No. 1,151—Mr. Latulippe:

Did the international civil aviation organization make a profit during 1962-63, and, if so (a) what was Canada's share of such profit (b) what percentage of the organization's profit did Canada receive?

[Translation]

Answer: No. The international civil aviation organization, a specialized agency of the United Nations, is entrusted with the establishment of principles and techniques in the field of international aviation.

Inquiries of the Ministry

CANADIAN MEMBERSHIP IN ICAO COUNCIL

Question No. 1,156—Mr. Latulippe:

Is Canada a member of the council of the international civil aviation organization and, if so (a) since what date (b) what is the contribution of Canada to that council (c) what was the cost last year of membership in the council (d) does the council submit reports to the Department of Transport?

[Translation]

Answer: Yes;

(a) since 1947;

(b) the council is an agency of the ICAO and Canada does not contribute in any way to the council as such, except for its contribution to the whole organization which in 1963, amounted to $211,392.43.

(c) The cost to Canada was $34,307 for all expenses due to its membership in the ICAO council;

(d) The council as such does not submit any reports to government departments, but the organization reports and is responsible to the governments of the countries which belong to the ICAO.

*R.C.A.F. STATION EDGAR—USE FOR UNIVERSITY PURPOSES

Question No. 1,184—Mr. Rynard:

Has a study been made with regard to the feasibility of using R.C.A.F. station Edgar, which is being closed, for university purposes and, if so, what are the results of this study?

Mr. Drury: It is understood that a feasibility study concerning the use of the R.C.A.F. station Edgar, Ontario, for university purposes is being undertaken, but this is not yet complete.

CANADIAN FLAG

PROCEDURE TO BE FOLLOWED IN SUBMITTING DESIGN TO PARLIAMENT

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I rise to ask the Prime Minister whether there is any foundation for press reports to the effect that the resolution covering the two flags is now to be divided and the matter proceeded with in separate motions.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, there is no intention of departing from the two resolutions which are on the order paper and which will be proceeded with in due course.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I am asking particularly about the motion dealing with the flag. Will it be proceeded with as an entirety rather than in subdivided form?

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, it will be proceeded with as one resolution.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Then I should like to ask the Prime Minister this. What flag, if any, flew during the week end from the flagstaff at the Prime Minister's official residence at Harrington lake?

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, I do not know whether this is a question that is of any interest to the House of Commons. The flag that flew over my residence in the country surely is a matter for my decision.

Mr. Diefenbaker: No, Mr. Speaker; this is the residence of the Prime Minister of Canada. I ask him again, did he during the week end fly the flag with three maple leaves and not the red ensign?

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, I still think this is a matter not appropriate for parliamentary consideration.

Mr. Diefenbaker: It isn't? Why?

Mr. Pearson: This is a free country, Mr. Speaker, and I take it any Canadian can fly any emblem he wishes over his private house if he so desires. But, Mr. Speaker, seeing that the right hon. gentleman obviously is attempting to make some controversial point—

Mr. Diefenbaker: No; to get the truth.

Mr. Pearson: —and I refrain from asking him what flag he flies over his own residence —I will be glad to satisfy my right hon. friend's curiosity about my flag habit by telling him that, as is customary, the red ensign was flying on Sussex street over the week end when I was there and at Harrington lake when I was there. During part of the week end I thought it would be interesting—and it certainly was—to fly the design which has been put before the House of Commons in a resolution and circulated in colour to see what it would look like in textile form flying from a flagstaff. I will tell my right hon. friend that it looked wonderful.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I am not asking the Prime Minister about the aesthetic properties of this flag. What possible business of the Prime Minister of Canada is it to use a flag that has not been designated, and fly it over a home bought and paid for by the people of Canada as an official residence?

Mr. Pearson: My right hon. friend has been doing some very deep research during the week end and he has now discovered that this flag was paid for by the people of Canada.

Some hon. Members: No, no.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I did not say that.

[Mr. Diefenbaker.]

Mr. Pearson: And, Mr. Speaker, I think it would be of very considerable interest to those concerned with this matter to have a look, on the flagstaff, at the flag which is being submitted for parliamentary decision. I think it might be of equal interest to members of the House of Commons, who in due course will be asked to make a decision on this matter, if this flag could be displayed for a time on a flagstaff outside the House of Commons so they could see it flying, as well as seeing a coloured reproduction of it on paper. If hon. members would like this to happen I would be glad to help accommodate them.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I am not going to enter into an argument at the moment except to say it would be a perversion of parliamentary rights, completely unjustified, to do that. What about the other 2,999 models? Would you fly them too in order to test their aesthetic acceptability?

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, I have received a great many models, some on nylon and some on textile, and I had the pleasure of flying some of them to see how they looked on a flag pole. I would tell my hon. friend that, in addition to looking at the flag yesterday, I also went fishing.

Mr. Diefenbaker: And did the Prime Minister have with him that cultural group of ministers who viewed the film of himself by the C.B.C., in order to arrive at a conclusion on the attractiveness of this flag?

Mr. Pearson: I did not, Mr. Speaker, but if I had I am sure they would have enjoyed watching the flag flutter in the breeze as much as I did.

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Prime Minister and I want to let him know my question is completely devoid of partisan purpose or motive.

In view of recent developments with respect to the national flag issue, and in order to secure a decision based on the expressed will of the Canadian people, obtained at little extra expense to the nation, would the Prime Minister consider withdrawing his resolution and submitting the following questions to the Canadian people at the next general election:

(1) Are you in favour of the red ensign as our national flag?

(2) Are you in favour of the flag proposed by the government as a national flag?

(3) Are you in favour of the union jack being flown as the symbol of Canada's partnership in the commonwealth?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Kootenay West, I am glad to say, is a close friend of mine, but aside from that he did me the courtesy of sending me notice of this question. Therefore I have had time to think about it and to consult, and in my opinion the question in effect calls for a referendum and is out of order for several reasons. I would like to give the reasons to the house because they may be of some interest.

1. The question is far too long. In putting a question a member must confine himself to the narrowest limits. Here we have a series of statements embodying a series of questions.

2. The question contains observations which might lead to debate.

3. It refers to a debate or to answers to questions during the current session.

4. It embodies a series of questions which should be moved as an address or order.

5. It anticipates an order of the day.

6. It raises a matter of policy too large to be dealt with in the limits of an answer to a question.

7. It is, in effect, making a proposition which should be the subject of a notice of motion.

8. It proposes a referendum and sets out the details, and any such question does not fit on orders of the day.

My authority for these reasons can be found in Beauchesne's fourth edition, citation 171, as well as the statement respecting questions on orders of the day given by myself on Thursday, October 31, 1963, and appearing in Hansard at pages 4205 and 4206, as well as the rules given to me by the house itself on April 20 and continued on May 21 to the end of the session.

Therefore I come to the conclusion that in my opinion the question as raised by the hon. member is out of order.

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Speaker, I would like to discuss this out of order question when it is in order at ten o'clock.

Mr. Speaker: I am afraid if the question is out of order we cannot do indirectly what is prohibited directly.

Hon. Paul Martineau (Pontiac-Temiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister that relates to the first question he was asked. Will he definitely tell the house when his two flag resolution will be presented for debate here?

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, the resolution concerning the national flag will be presented to the house very shortly, but I am not exactly sure of the date. It appears, Mr. Speaker, there are two or three pieces of legislation on the order paper which we consider should be disposed of because there are reasons why it is urgent they should be disposed of soon. It therefore may not be possible to introduce the resolution concerning the national flag until next week.

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Bow River): As a supplementary question, is it correct that the Minister of Transport has had an audience with the Queen with reference to the flag issue and, if so, would the Prime Minister assure the house and the country that the Canadian government will not permit Her Majesty the Queen to become embroiled with the flag issue?

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, I can unhesitatingly answer yes to the last part of the question, and I am sure that would be the wish of every member of the house.

Mr. Woolliams: What about the first part of the question?

Mr. Pearson: On the first part of the question, I do not know whether or not the Minister of Transport had an audience with the Queen. He is returning this evening, and I will be glad to find out.

[Translation]

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Can the Prime Minister tell the house whether he agrees with the view expressed by the Société Saint Jean Baptiste de Montréal, to the effect that two flags mean two nations, two different ethnic groups?

[Text]

Yes or no?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. This question is clearly out of order.

Mr. Pigeon: I want to discuss this matter at ten o'clock.

Mr. Speaker: A question that is out of order cannot be debated at ten o'clock.

[Later:]

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Queens): I have a question for the Prime Minister. Remembering that he is a former professor of history, I should like to ask the right hon. gentleman if the indicated delay in the presentation of the two flag resolution may be interpreted as the government's intention to give careful consideration to the suggestion of 12 outstanding scholars who wrote to the Prime Minister on May 27 advising the withdrawal of his favoured design in favour of something more meaningful and of more historical significance for this country.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Pearson: I know the weakness of professors of history when they start mingling with contemporary events. Perhaps their letter indicates it. For one thing, the letter was given to representatives of the press and to all members of the House of Commons before I received it, which is an unusual procedure if they wished to have a reply. For another, the letter I received was not signed; there were a number of names typed under it.

Mr. Macquarrie: Could I suggest to the Prime Minister that had he been in Canada he might have received this letter in time?

Mr. Pearson: I was in Canada.

[Later:]

[Translation]

Mr. L.-J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct to the Prime Minister a question supplementary to another one put to him.

I should like to ask the Prime Minister whether, at Harrington lake, in the province of Quebec, during the week end, he also flew a union jack to test the attractiveness of a foreign flag on Canadian soil and compare it with the other flag?

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: Order.

MANUFACTURE OF FLAGS AND PINS WITH MAPLE LEAF DESIGN

On the orders of the day:

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Industry): Mr. Speaker, on Friday last the Leader of the Opposition asked whether the Department of Defence Production had set aside the sum of $90,000 for the manufacture and procurement of one of the two flags mentioned in the resolution before this matter has been discussed by parliament. I should like to reassure the hon. gentleman that no such set-aside in contravention of the rights of parliament has been made.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Has any consideration been given to providing that amount, and has any manufacturer been communicated with in this regard?

Mr. Drury: No such consideration has been given by the Department of Defence Production, nor has any manufacturer been communicated with in that regard.

CANADIAN CONSTITUTION

PRIORITY FOR CONSIDERATION OF PROPOSED AMENDMENT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, as a supplementary to the question about when the flag could be debated, may I ask the Prime Minister whether it was not his intention, by today, to tell us about the priorities of house business, with particular reference to the Canada pension plan and when we are going to get the resolution that seeks to amend the British North America Act.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): I had hoped to be able to do that today, but we have not received all the replies from the provinces on the constitutional amendment. Over the week end I sent telegrams to those who had not replied. We have had one more reply this morning, and I would like to get them all in because this is a very important part of our legislative program. We hope to have all the replies in by Wednesday morning, and if that is the case I will make my statement on Wednesday afternoon.

Mr. Knowles: Will the resolution respecting the amendment to the British North America Act be proceeded with just as soon as all the replies are in?

Mr. Pearson: It is certainly in our priority program and should be proceeded with, if it receives the approval of the house, in order to get the approval of the parliament at Westminster at the earliest possible date.

Mr. Knowles: Before it adjourns?

Mr. Pearson: Before it adjourns.

Mr. George Muir (Lisgar): Mr. Speaker, perhaps the Prime Minister could now give an answer to the question I asked last Thursday and Friday in regard to the provinces that have answered the request for changes to the British North America Act.

Mr. Pearson: I am sorry; I do not have that information with me. I do know, however, that the provinces of Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, Newfoundland, Saskatchewan and British Columbia have all agreed to the constitutional amendment formula submitted to them. The province of Quebec has agreed to the formula but it has to be put before the Quebec legislature for approval. Quebec is the only province which has this requirement. We have had indications of approval from two other provinces, but they have not been confirmed by telegram as yet.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): In view of the statement just made by the Prime Minister, I ask him whether it would not be wise to proceed with this matter, which is of urgent importance, before beginning a long and protracted debate on the flag resolution.

Mr. Pearson: I think that suggestion makes sense, and that is why it is difficult for me to say today on exactly what date we should proceed with the flag resolution; we should get the constitutional resolution through at once to ensure that action may be taken at Westminster, if they desire to take action, before that parliament adjourns.

[Translation]

Mr. Gilles Grégoire (Lapointe): May I ask a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker?

Will the provinces which will establish and administer their own pension plan be able to ask that the constitution be left unchanged as far as they are concerned?

[Text]

Mr. Pearson: I do not think any such contingency will arise.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Speaker, may I ask a supplementary question with regard to the communications the Prime Minister has received from the provinces. Press reports indicate that Premier Roblin wrote the federal government a few days ago on the whole question of the Canada pension plan. Did the premier, in that letter, make any reference to the question of the proposed amendment to the British North America Act?

Mr. Pearson: I do not think so, but I should like to check. As I remember it, his letter did not deal with that point.

[Later:]

CONFERENCE OF ATTORNEYS GENERAL RESPECTING REPATRIATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): I have a question to ask the Minister of Justice following the rather vague answer I got from him last week. Has any date been fixed for the reconvening of the very important conference of the attorneys general on the question of assuring Canadians the right to amend the Canadian constitution?

Hon. Guy Favreau (Minister of Justice): No date has been fixed yet, but I will be pleased to advise my hon. friend and the house whenever a date has been agreed upon.

Mr. Baldwin: May I ask a supplementary question. Has the hon. gentleman or his immediate predecessor made any formal requests in writing to the attorneys general of the provinces for the reconvening of such a conference?

Mr. Favreau: The answer is no, Mr. Speaker.

Inquiries of the Ministry

FINANCE

U.S. COUNTERVAILING DUTY AGAINST CANADIAN AUTOMOBILES AND PARTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Finance and ask him whether his attention has been drawn to the fact that the treasury department of the United States has given formal notice that it will consider representations regarding the application of a countervailing duty against Canadian automobiles and automobile parts. Further, I ask the minister whether the Canadian government is making any representations to the United States government regarding this very serious matter.

Hon. Walter L. Gordon (Minister of Finance): Well, Mr. Speaker, this is a matter that has been under consideration by the United States treasury department for some months. Under their law, when complaints of this kind are made they are required to refer the matter for investigation by the bureau of customs, and that is what they are doing. They are merely complying with the technicalities of the law.

Mr. Douglas: As a supplementary question, does the minister consider this is a retaliatory move, as the press report indicates, or is this merely a routine action as a result of some pressure from congress?

Mr. Gordon: Mr. Speaker, we were in touch with the secretary of the treasury when he was here for a meeting at the end of April, and subsequently. I think it would be quite incorrect to say this is a retaliatory move in any sense. It is merely a measure that is required to be taken by the secretary in connection with the existing law.

REQUESTS FOR TARIFF REDUCTIONS TO ASSIST AUTOMOBILE MANUFACTURERS

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Hon. Paul Martineau (Pontiac-Témiscamingue): May I direct a question to the Minister of Industry, Mr. Speaker?

Does the government intend to grant tariff reductions on the importation of automobile parts from countries like France, in order to make easier the establishment at home of automobile factories, such as Renault, etc.

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Industry): The government is looking into that question at the present time.

[Text]

Mr. Martineau: A supplementary question to the Minister of Industry. I understood him to say that the government was giving consideration to the proposal for tariff concessions. Can he say when the government will be in a position to make an announcement?

Mr. Drury: As soon as possible, Mr. Speaker.

FLOODS

FRASER VALLEY, B.C.—REPORTED DANGER DUE TO DELAYED RUN-OFF

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Barry Mather (New Westminster): I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources. Current reports indicate an increased flood threat in the Fraser river area due to delayed run-off from the snowpack. Does the minister consider the situation as being a cause for concern and, if so, is he satisfied with the diking arrangements?

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): I know the hon. member is referring to the fact that we have had an abnormally late, cold season in British Columbia with the result that at the week end the flow at Hope, which is our checkpoint, was running at the rate of 250,000 feet per second only. In the flood year of 1948, on May 28 it was running at 535,000 feet per second. In the case of a river having a catchment area as great as that of the Fraser, there is always concern when melt conditions extend so late in the year; and when all the forces of nature are turned against man it is difficult to make a prediction.

The ultimate solution lies, of course, in the report I laid on the table six weeks ago, the report of the Fraser river board. I got in touch with the responsible minister of the British Columbia government, Mr. Williston who replied at once and is now preparing the engineering study on the reinforcement of the dikes in the lower Fraser valley from Hope to the mouth at a cost of about $5 million. Then we will proceed under the Canada Water Conservation Act to make provision for the building of a number of small dams on the tributaries of the Fraser where the fish will not be interfered with.

NORTHERN AFFAIRS

QUEBEC—ADMINISTRATION OF ESKIMO AFFAIRS

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources. When the hon. gentleman was in Winnipeg and made that historic speech, if I may use the expression, regarding Eskimo affairs, did he state that the federal government will retain jurisdiction over the health, education and welfare of Eskimos while indicating that responsibility for municipal services will be turned over to the province of Quebec?

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): Yes, with very great qualifications; to the extent that if the right hon. gentleman would read the report in the Winnipeg Tribune—and I made reference to this the other day when I suggested I had been inadequately quoted; I am certain that most members reading the two reports would hardly believe they were taken from the same notes, yet that was the case—

Mr. Diefenbaker: Which newspaper had the correct, unexpurgated edition?

Mr. Laing: The paper which satisfied me most, of course, was the report which appeared in the Tribune, because I think it more accurately represented what I said. That is the only reason. However, I did suggest that for the present it would appear that the responsibility for education and welfare would remain with the federal administration for some time, but there were consultations going on between my officials and those of the government of Quebec leading to the assumption by Quebec, and the participation by that province financially, too, in services which might in a mature provincial set-up be called municipal.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Does all this mean, boiled down to simple words, that the minister has offered to the province of Quebec municipal control of the Eskimo population in northern Quebec but that the balance of the powers respecting Eskimos will be exercised by his department?

Mr. Laing: The right hon. gentleman knows we have no power to offer the province of Quebec the right to administer municipal facilities. We are dealing with a part of Canada which is the province of Quebec, and they have full authority to carry out those functions. At the present time we are dealing largely with areas in which the population is entirely Eskimo with the exception of our own employees. The province of Quebec is now moving in certain people and we have had discussions with them on these lines; that instead of accepting at once responsibility for everything in these areas, including education and welfare, they function in the area of what I have described as normally municipal in provincial affairs. These are discussions. It is not a question of my offering anything to the province. I have no power to do that, of course. But discussions have taken place between my officials and those of the government of Quebec along these lines.

Hon. Paul Martineau (Pontiac-Témiscamingue): I wonder if the minister can say what has been the reaction of the government of Quebec to these new proposals.

Mr. Laing: I think it would be wrong for me to attempt to reply to that question at the present time, because a further discussion along these lines took place as late as Friday last and there will be another, I take it, this week. I do not wish to impair continued good relations.

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): Can the minister indicate whether there has been an opinion given by the law officers of the crown with respect to jurisdictional responsibility over these Eskimos?

Mr. Laing: No, I do not have that.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

REPRESENTATION BY COUNSEL OF PERSONS DETAINED FOR DEPORTATION

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Hon. René Tremblay (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, last Friday the right hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Diefenbaker) and the hon. members for Burnaby-Coquitlam (Mr. Douglas), Bow River (Mr. Woolliams), Vancouver East (Mr. Winch) and Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow) asked questions about Mr. Harry Hooper who was deported from Canada recently. Four main questions were asked.

First, was Mr. Hooper advised that he was entitled to counsel?

Second, was he given a chance to exercise that right?

Third, was he aware that he could get legal counsel free of charge?

Fourth, was he told that he would remain in prison until he had answered the questions?

Mr. Speaker, in view of the importance of the matter and with the leave of the house, I would like to answer each one of these questions.

Mr. Hooper had already been deported from Canada three times. Every time he was informed of his right to legal counsel. The last time, on March 16, he fell under the jurisdiction of the immigration branch. The inquiry was postponed until March 23 and Mr. Hooper was told that he had another chance of seeking legal counsel if he wanted to be represented at the hearing by a lawyer.

At the opening of the inquiry, on March 23, he was again informed that, if he wished, he could be represented by counsel. He was also told that it did not have to be a lawyer, but that it could be a relative, a friend, a priest, a clergyman or any other person interested in his welfare. He was then asked whether he wanted to be represented and he replied he had nothing to say and the special investigator could do as he pleased.

When the inquiry was reopened, on April 7, Mr. Hooper was told once again he had the right to be represented by counsel and was asked if he had taken any steps to get one. He refused to answer. Mr. Hooper was clearly informed of his right to be represented by counsel.

With regard to exercising one's right to secure a lawyer, I think that point was raised by the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam, and I must say first of all that persons who want to be represented by counsel, when their deportation case is heard, must do it at their own expense. That provision has been in the Immigration Act for several years. The immigration branch sees to it that the interested parties are aware of their right to get a lawyer. If they want to be represented by counsel, investigations are postponed to enable them to get a lawyer.

As I said before, Mr. Hooper, although knowing that he had the right to get help from a lawyer, never indicated that he wanted it. He could have tried to get free legal assistance from the jail's lawyer or from various benevolent societies which offer such services. He knew about these societies. The authorities of the Don jail have confirmed the fact that members of these societies regularly visit the jail and that prisoners are well acquainted with their services.

As for the duration or term of the detention, Mr. Hooper was advised that he would be detained until he was ready to answer questions. Refusal to answer questions is, under the Immigration Act, a violation liable to prosecution. Mr. Hooper answered that he did not care, that anyway he had nothing better to do.

Immediately after the adjournment of the inquiry on March 23 the special investigator submitted the matter to the headquarters of the department of immigration in Ottawa in order to obtain instructions. It has been decided to reopen the investigation and to proceed taking into account other evidence available.

I wish to draw the attention of the house to the fact that the available evidence was to Mr. Hooper's advantage and that it was in his interest that such supplementary evidence be examined.

Mr. Speaker, I believe I have answered the four main questions which hon. members asked last Friday. My answers may be summarized as follows:

First, Mr. Hooper had been informed of his right to obtain legal counsel.

Second, he had every opportunity to do so, had he so wished.

Third, he was aware that he could secure free legal advice.

Fourth, immediately after the inquest of March 23, while Mr. Hooper had been informed that he would be detained until he answered the questions, the matter was brought to the attention of the immigration department at Ottawa for instructions. Shortly after Mr. Hooper was specifically informed that refusal to answer the questions constituted under the Immigration Act, an offence which would entail legal proceedings.

[Text]

Mr. Woolliams: A supplementary question—

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask a supplementary question. The minister has made the statement that any legal counsel would be at the prisoner's expense. In view of the fact that this man was in impecunious circumstances, I would like to ask whether the Ontario law society, which provides a legal aid service, was informed that this man would require legal advice and that he was not in a financial position to procure it himself.

Mr. Tremblay: Mr. Speaker, I am not aware that this special group had been informed of the need of Mr. Hooper, but I have been advised by my department that those services were made available to Mr. Hooper.

Mr. Woolliams: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Douglas: Could I follow that question with one other supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Could I ask the minister why, since this man was ordered for deportation on April 7, the department took until May 25 to decide to enforce that deportation order rather than proceeding to arraign this man on a charge of refusing to answer questions? In the statement made by the Minister of Justice last Thursday the minister said the department held off taking any action on deportation pending instructions from the officials of the Department of Citizenship and Immigration here in Ottawa as to whether the man would be deported or whether proceedings would be taken against him. May I ask the minister why there was this long delay and why, after this delay, proceedings were not instituted against this man and he was deported on May 26, when he could just as easily have been deported on April 7 without this long period in jail?

[Translation]

Mr. Tremblay: Mr. Speaker, I should like to say this. When the Toronto office submitted the case to the Ottawa office, there were, at the time, some representations to the effect that Hooper was married to a Canadian and had a child born in Canada. It was therefore most important to refer the case to the department. The accuracy of that statement had to be checked, and it was just to give Mr. Hooper a chance that, for three weeks the department officials considered the problem most seriously, though they finally arrived at the conclusion that this would not —because of certain reasons which I do not have to give the house—justify any delay in carrying out the deportation order.

Hon. Paul Martineau (Pontiac-Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask a supplementary question.

[Text]

Mr. Brewin: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Pontiac-Témiscamingue.

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Speaker, I have risen twice to ask a supplementary question.

Mr. Speaker: So has the hon. member for Pontiac-Témiscamingue, and he was two seconds ahead of you.

[Translation]

Mr. Martineau: Following the minister's answer, can he tell us whether the government is ready to submit to the house a bill which would immediately eliminate, from the Immigration Act, any discriminatory factors which brought about the incident in question and a denial of justice, like in the case of Mr. Hooper?

Mr. Tremblay: Mr. Speaker, I accept in no way the second part of the question of the hon. member for Pontiac-Témiscamingue. But I agree with him that there might be some reason for the house studying that aspect of the Immigration Act.

Mr. Martineau: Mr. Speaker, can the minister say when the government will introduce such a bill in the house?

Mr. Tremblay: In due time.

[Text]

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration a supplementary question. During the time Hooper was held for 90 or 100 days, or in the case of others who may have been incarcerated under the same circumstances, was there a period in which they, including Hooper, were held incarcerated when there was no charge laid? In other words were they held incarcerated without a charge being laid?

While I am on my feet, in order to save time—the minister can think about that question—No. 2, I would like to ask the minister whether he changed his words in Hansard at page 3728 when he replied to the leader of the New Democratic party last Friday. I suggest he did.

Mr. McIlraith: No, he didn't; it was the translation.

[Translation]

Mr. Tremblay: Mr. Speaker, during all his period of detention, Mr. Hooper was held under the Immigration Act, the provisions of which allow the detention of any individual who is in Canada without a visa, before carrying out a deportation order. On the other hand, as the deportation order has to be carried out as soon as possible, the department must make the necessary arrangements for the deportation.

This involves not only transportation arrangements but also arrangements with the country where the individual is to be deported, in order that all the papers be ready at the time this individual is transferred from Canada to another country.

During the period of detention, I think that legally, and under several other sections of the Immigration Act, the department had every right to bring the case before the court. I believe the department had full right to hold Mr. Hooper without making any charge, and this under sections of the act other than that allowing the department to detain an individual who holds no visa allowing him to remain legally in Canada.

As concerns the second question of the hon. member, I believe what happened—and, Mr. Speaker you mentioned it yourself—was the result of an error in translation: the part where I said Mr. Hooper had had every opportunity to obtain assistance from counsel was not translated, and when the leader of the New Democratic party asked why that had not been allowed, I said this question should be addressed to Mr. Hooper, as I thought the hon. member was aware of my reply.

[Text]

Mr. Woolliams: A further supplementary question. How many times during those 100 days was Mr. Hooper, accused under the immigration act, brought before the court and asked whether he would answer the questions which the department or the officials wanted answered? In other words, was he brought before the court every eight days according to the practice, and was he permitted to be out on bail during that time? How many times was he asked whether he would answer the questions?

Mr. Speaker: I do not wish to prevent hon. members from asking questions but the discussion on this matter, although extremely important, has gone on for a considerable time. It seems to me that the type of question the hon. member for Bow River has just asked requires a detailed answer of which the minister is at least entitled to notice.

Mr. Woolliams: With the greatest respect, Mr. Speaker, although I bow to you ruling, I think this is an important matter. I asked the minister whether this man had been charged. He was held because he refused to answer the questions asked. He might have been held there for five years. Surely the minister can say whether he was asked five times or six times.

Mr. Speaker: The question asked how many times. The minister may know and he may not know, and is certainly entitled to check the records before he answers. Therefore I suggest this question be put on the order paper.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, when this matter came up on May 29 I asked the minister this question, as reported at page 3730 of Hansard:

> Mr. Speaker, was he not told that he was going to be kept in custody until he answered questions?
> Mr. Tremblay: Mr. Speaker, according to the information on file, I am not aware that such things occurred.

If I understood the minister correctly today, he now finds that this actually took place and that the man was kept in custody because he refused to answer questions. Under all the circumstances and looking back on the situation now—it cannot be repaired—does the minister not feel that the arbitrary conduct in this case deserves an apology to one who suffered from an unbelievable course of conduct on the part of the department of immigration?

[Translation]

Mr. Tremblay: We informed Mr. Hooper that he would stay in jail because we had some very serious reasons for that, as I already have said twice in this house. As a matter of fact, I believe that it would have been dangerous to release Mr. Hooper.

During all the time he was detained, he was informed that he would remain in prison; and as concerns a certain statement that has been made in the house to the effect that Mr. Hooper had been threatened to be kept in jail until he spoke, I can say that the officials of my department have checked and reported to me that such a threat has never been made.

[Text]

Mr. Diefenbaker: I did not speak about threats, Mr. Speaker. I spoke about statements, because he was told he would not get out until he talked. I now ask the minister, what about the case of Harold Nurse of Trinidad? Was he held in the Don jail for 87 days while his case was reviewed?

[Translation]

Mr. Tremblay: Mr. Speaker, I shall inquire about that.

[Text]

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, this is a further supplementary question to the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration. Has the department worked out any system whereby some senior official at Ottawa is kept informed in the case of people being detained for, say, more than a week?

Mr. Tremblay: Yes, Mr. Speaker, we have organized such a system in the department. The department will be informed each day about all the cases which are before the courts or of people who are in jail.

Mr. Nesbitt: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: I do not wish to cut off any questions on this important matter, but we have spent a very considerable time on it. Unless questions are really urgent and require an immediate answer, may I suggest that hon. members put them on the order paper.

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration a supplementary or perhaps a related question. Last Friday the minister indicated that he would be able to report to the house today concerning the case of a Greek seaman who was held in London, Ontario, for some 90 days, also without benefit of counsel and, in addition, without benefit of an interpreter since the man could not speak English. Would the minister now be prepared to give a report on this matter?

Mr. Tremblay: Mr. Speaker, on Friday last the hon. member for Oxford repeated a question he had asked on April 17 regarding Stylianos Yiannopolous, a Greek seaman who deserted his ship in Canada. The hon. member will recall that some weeks ago my executive assistant provided him with an oral report on the Yiannopolous case and he agreed that a reply in the house was unnecessary. However, in view of this last question I am pleased to provide the following information.

This man deserted his ship in June 1961. He was apprehended in London, Ontario on January 16, 1964. A deportation inquiry was ordered on January 23 but was deferred at Mr. Yiannopolous' request in order to give him time to obtain counsel. He did get a lawyer who asked for a further deferral. It will be seen, therefore, that contrary to the assertion of the hon. member for Oxford, Mr. Yiannopolous did get counsel and was represented throughout all proceedings against him.

The inquiry on the deportation order was held on February 4. Mr. Yiannopolous appealed, and his appeal was heard and dismissed by the immigration appeal board on February 20. Representations on his behalf were then made to me. I reviewed these carefully but decided on March 24 to proceed with the deportation order. Until this time all the delays arose in order to give Mr. Yiannopolous time to get counsel and to appeal the decision.

After the appeal was dismissed the department decided to prosecute him under the Immigration Act in accordance with departmental policy aimed at curbing the serious incidence of ship desertion in Canada. The charge was laid on April 14 and was dismissed on the ground, I believe, that the man's name was improperly spelled, notwithstanding the fact that he pleaded guilty to the charge. He was deported from Canada on April 28. The procedures in this case were entirely legal, but I agree that the period of detention after the appeal was dismissed was too lengthy. Arrangements have been made to avoid such delays in future.

Mr. Nesbitt: On a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker, the minister indicated in his reply that I had made certain representations to his executive assistant. I cannot let that pass unnoticed, Mr. Speaker. When I was in touch with the minister's office concerning this matter the minister's assistant indicated to me that there would be some little time taken in getting all the facts of the case together. He asked whether I was in a hurry about it and I said that there was no immediate hurry, and that I would be glad to receive an answer when it was convenient for the minister and the department if they were busy. I want to make that correction. At no time did I ever say that I wanted a quick answer.

Mr. Tremblay: I will take the hon. member's word.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I did not get an answer from the minister with regard to one question which I think is very important. The right of trial and not having justice denied is one of the most sacred rights of the individual. Under the circumstances and in view of a series of actions which can only be described as tyrannical, does the minister not feel that Hooper, whatever his reputation or position, deserves an apology in the interests of justice in this country?

Mr. Tremblay: No, Mr. Speaker, I do not think so.

Mr. Diefenbaker: That shows how arbitrary the department has become.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Swift Current-Maple Creek.

Mr. Douglas: I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: May I appeal to hon. members. It seems to me that this discussion, while important, has lasted for a long time. We have spent almost an hour on the question period.

An hon. Member: What difference does it make if we spend two hours?

Mr. Speaker: Thank you.

Mr. Douglas: I think we should have some satisfactory answer from the minister, if not now then at a later time. In view of the minister's statement the other day that Hooper enjoyed the privileges of Canadian citizenship although he was not a Canadian citizen, and his statement today with reference to the Greek seaman, that some steps would be taken to deal with situations of this kind; and in view of the statement by the Minister of Justice last Thursday that steps are to be taken to prevent the repetition of occurrences like these in the future, I should like to ask the minister if he will make a statement to the house fairly soon as to what steps are being taken by his department to prevent the recurrence of incidents like those in the Hooper case and that of the Greek seaman, or any other cases in which there may be undue detention where persons are being held for deportation.

[Translation]

Mr. Tremblay: Mr. Speaker, I do not accept the last part of the hon. member's sentence, in which he uses the words "Undue delay". I think that, under the act, the department and the officials had every right to hold Mr. Hooper and Mr. Yiannopolous.

What I meant by the word acceleration was a method to expedite the administration of the Immigration Act, as well as the decisions to be made in deportation cases.

[Text]

Mr. Douglas: This answer is far from satisfactory, Mr. Speaker. I want to know if the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration is perfectly satisfied to operate under the present procedure. I want to know what the Minister of Justice meant when he told the house that steps were being taken by him and the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration "to prevent the repetition of such occurrences in the future". Now, if these two ministers are going to take steps to prevent the recurrence of such incidents, let them tell the house what steps they are proposing to take.

Mr. Tremblay: I will make a statement in the house on my estimates, which I hope will be soon.

Mr. Diefenbaker: This is a matter affecting the liberty of people, and the attitude of the minister in this regard is contemptuous of parliament. We deserve an answer to these questions, and the assurance that there is not going to be a repetition of this bureaucratic tyranny that he apparently upholds.

Mr. Douglas: We are not prepared to wait until the minister's estimates come before us. If the minister will not make a statement on the orders of the day, then I think we will have to have a motion to adjourn the house to debate the matter.

Mr. Speaker: I thought I heard the minister say he would make a statement shortly.

Mr. Douglas: He said "on his estimates", and his estimates may not be up until next October or November. The other day he said that 16 were in jail, six of them for over 30 days. We should have a statement sooner than October.

Mr. Speaker: I do not like to bring this to the attention of the hon. member, but on Thursday, October 31, 1963, I set out certain suggestions as guide lines in asking questions. One of them was that questions should not be speeches, however short, nor be of unreasonable length.

[Translation]

Mr. Martineau: Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration when he will make a statement to the house?

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Tremblay: Mr. Speaker, if the estimates of my department are not presented very soon to the house, I will be very glad to oblige hon. members and make a statement concerning deportation procedure in order to expedite the administration of the Immigration Act even under existing provisions.

Mr. Martineau: But when?

[Text]

Mr. Tremblay: As soon as possible.

TRANSPORT

PRAIRIE PROVINCES—CLOSING OF RAILWAY STATIONS AND REMOVAL OF AGENTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Jack McIntosh (Swift Current-Maple Creek): I believe I have the floor, but before I ask the question I should like to know if there is any new rule that would give recognition to a backbencher the odd time.

In the absence of the Minister of Transport I should like to direct my question to the Prime Minister. In view of the agreement between the railway companies and the federal government that there will be no further abandonment of branch lines until a complete survey of the situation in the prairie provinces has been completed, will the government assure the people of the prairies that no action will be taken to remove station agents or close railway stations on any of these lines until the survey has been completed; because in effect such action by the railway companies is almost as serious as if the lines were abandoned.

Mr. Speaker: Will the hon. member put this question on the order paper?

Mr. McIntosh: I give notice I will debate it at ten o'clock.

PUBLICATIONS

REPORTED DECISION TO CEASE PUBLICATION OF "LIBERTY" MAGAZINE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. D. M. Fisher (Port Arthur): I have a question for the Prime Minister relating to the decision of Fengate publishers to stop publishing Liberty, a consumer's magazine. I want to ask the Prime Minister whether Mr. Cook, the publisher of Liberty, had approached him recently to suggest that this action would follow, that is the stopping of the publishing of Liberty, unless the Prime Minister took some action to include Readers' Digest and Time in the legislation that would give a fair share of advertising to Canadian consumer publications.

[Mr. Martineau.]

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): I have no recollection of receiving any letter from him. He certainly did not approach me personally. I will check into my files, but I do not believe I got a letter.

Mr. Fisher: Has the Prime Minister received a representation from the Maclean-Hunter magazines within the last few days to indicate that unless some action is taken to ameliorate the effects of Time and Reader's Digest competition in the advertising market for consumer magazines, Maclean-Hunter are going to be put out of business?

Mr. Pearson: I will have to look into that.

ROYAL VISIT

POSSIBLE CANCELLATION DUE TO BRITISH ELECTION

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Gilles Grégoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the right hon. Prime Minister. Could he tell us whether there is a rule in England to the effect that, in the event of a general election in that country the Queen cannot leave the territorial land of England and whether, in the event of a general election in England this fall, it would prevent the Queen from coming to our country?

[Text]

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): I cannot answer, Mr. Speaker, but if it is in order I will be glad to make inquiries.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

DELAY IN DISTRIBUTION OF BILLS TO MEMBERS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Winnipeg South Centre): I have a question for the Minister of Justice in his capacity as house leader. My question relates to Bill No. C-100 and Bill No. C-101, the resolutions preceding which were both passed on Friday and first reading was given. However, the bills were not distributed to the members, and Bill No. C-100 has been called for debate today. I ask him, what is the reason for this delay in distributing to the members of this house these bills after they have received first reading?

Hon. Guy Favreau (Minister of Justice): I undertake to inquire immediately and report to the house.

[Later:]

Mr. Favreau: Mr. Speaker, in answer to the question put to me by the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre concerning Bill No. C-100, I am afraid I must plead guilty and admit that I have been as delinquent as the hon. member, because I failed to notice that the bill is printed and already on the table of the house.

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Speaker, I have not been delinquent about it at all. I have a copy in front of me obtained from the table. These two bills were given first reading on Friday. They should have been put in the letter boxes of all members on Friday night so as to be available over the week end, or at the very least they should have been available this morning. They were brought into the house at 2.30 and some members have not got them yet.

Mr. Pigeon: Two flags; two policies.

INCOME TAX

HOSPITALIZATION PLAN PAYMENTS BY EMPLOYERS TREATED AS INCOME

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of National Revenue. My question is based on information that came to light over the week end. Is it true that the government is now treating payments made by employers to government hospitalization plans as taxable income in the hands of the employee, even though this is not being done with respect to payments made by employers to private hospitalization or medical plans?

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps the hon. member will put this question on the order paper.

Mr. Knowles: Perhaps I will put it down for the overtime period, Mr. Speaker.

NATIONAL HOUSING ACT

AMENDMENT RESPECTING RENEWAL PROGRAMS, PUBLIC HOUSING PROJECTS, ETC.

The house resumed from Thursday, May 28, consideration in committee of the following resolution—Mr. Nicholson—Mr. Lamoureux in the chair.

That it is expedient to introduce a measure to amend the National Housing Act, 1954,

(a) to provide further assistance to provinces and municipalities carrying out urban renewal programs by authorizing Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation (hereinafter referred to as "the corporation") to make contributions and loans to provinces or municipalities to assist them in meeting the costs of such programs, and for this purpose to provide for the payment out of the consolidated revenue fund of amounts not exceeding in the aggregate one hundred million dollars;

(b) to authorize the corporation to make loans and to insure loans made by approved lenders to owners of existing houses in areas included in urban renewal programs;

(c) to authorize the corporation to make loans and contributions to provincially or municipally owned housing agencies for constructing or acquiring public housing projects and operating such projects, and to authorize the corporation to contribute a portion of the operating losses on any such projects that provide subsidized housing accommodation to individuals or families of low income;

(d) to permit federal-provincial public housing projects to include existing housing and hostel or dormitory type housing accommodation;

(e) to authorize the corporation to make loans to non-profit organizations to assist in the acquisition or construction of housing accommodation for individuals or families of low income;

(f) to authorize the corporation to make loans to co-operative associations and charitable corporations to assist in the construction of accommodation for university students and their families and to increase from one hundred million dollars to one hundred and fifty million dollars the maximum amount that may be paid out of the consolidated revenue fund for this purpose;

(g) to authorize the corporation to make loans to provinces to assist in the construction or expansion of sewage treatment projects and to authorize the corporation to forgive repayment of twenty five per cent of the principal and interest on any loans made to provinces or municipalities for this purpose in respect of work completed by March 31, 1967;

(h) to increase from two billion dollars to two and one half billion dollars the maximum charge on the consolidated revenue fund for direct loans by the corporation;

(i) to provide for the establishment of a special account in the consolidated revenue fund out of which amounts not exceeding in the aggregate one hundred million dollars may be advanced to the corporation for the making of loans to the holders of mortgages issued in respect of loans insured under the act and for the purchase by the corporation of mortgages issued to secure such loans;

(j) to increase the loan ratio for insured loans made to home owners and builders; and

(k) to provide further for certain changes in the administration of the act.

Mr. Nicholson: Mr. Chairman, just before the committee rose last Thursday evening to report progress on this resolution, I was dealing with the high average cost of acquiring and clearing blighted property in our large cities. I mentioned that the average cost in the two major cities of Montreal and Toronto was approximately $300,000 per acre. I should have pointed out perhaps that these costs are partly offset by recoveries from re-use, but Canadian experience has shown that the loss of about one third of the gross expenditures on the most comprehensive redevelopment projects must be borne and is being borne by the governments concerned.

As indicated by this resolution, the federal government in the national interest is prepared to absorb in future a substantial portion of these losses. Redevelopment, however, will remain essential for those cities in Canada which have depreciated beyond the point of no return, and this need is likely to continue for some time if corrective action is not taken.

It must be borne in mind, however, that redevelopment involves not only high costs but considerable disruption as well. As a result of redevelopment moves, families are uprooted and often move away from their neighbours and from the areas with which they are familiar. In this connection it must be borne in mind also that although housing conditions may be improved as a result of redevelopment some families will move away and will move into areas that are similarly overcrowded and inadequate. All levels of government, therefore, must be continually conscious of the fact that something must be done in this direction. The economic and social characteristics of redevelopment should spur us all in the search for devices and techniques which will prevent the deterioration of areas to the point where clearance and the bulldozer offer the only remedy.

Our cities need the means to face up to blight with a proper and more comprehensive set of techniques than merely clearance. The problem is too complex to be dealt with simply by a bulldozer. What is needed is a municipal program which in the early stages would stop the spread of structural and environmental decay and could generate the physical, economic and, more important, the social renewal of declining areas or areas about to decline. Such an urban renewal program would encompass, therefore, three activities, not only the clearance type of redevelopment with which I have dealt but also rehabilitation and conservation. Urban blight usually casts its shadow before it and I firmly believe that it can be turned back, if the warning signs are heeded, but the situation must be attended to when these warning signs first become noticeable. Surely some rehabilitative action can be taken before the point of no return, that is, before bulldozing becomes the only solution.

There are large areas in some of our cities which are beginning to show signs of blight. Frequently they are the older sections, sections where there is increased traffic flow from trucks and other slow moving, heavy vehicles, and sections which have been infiltrated with non-residential use. I believe that the spread of blight in many of these residential neighbourhoods can be corrected if vigorous action is taken soon enough. Indeed, we have only to go into some of the older cities in Canada—I am thinking of Halifax, Toronto, Montreal and Hamilton, though more particularly of the first three mentioned—to see, if they cannot be restored and if we cannot preserve the good qualities of some of these old residential sections. I am sure that the splendid residential qualities of some of these older neighbourhoods can be restored by a combination of public and private action.

[Mr. Nicholson.]

Some of the more badly decayed buildings may well have to be demolished, and uses of land, which depreciated the environment may have to be terminated. Undoubtedly new facilities, new utilities and new services will have to be installed and, above all, the owners of private property can and should be encouraged and helped to maintain and improve their properties to reasonable standards. This can only be done, however, by a combination of public and private action.

The government is convinced that rehabilitation of older neighbourhoods must form an important component of any comprehensive urban renewal program, and paragraphs (a), (b), and (c), of the resolution indicate that the government has this in mind.

The third activity which I have mentioned is conservation, which means action to prevent the decay of healthy residential sections that now exist. This in effect is the first and most important—perhaps I should say the most effective—weapon in the prevention of urban decay and, while it is a necessary component of a total program of urban renewal, it is one which by its very nature requires the adoption and enforcement of zoning and maintenance bylaws by the cities, and it falls largely within the purview of provincial and local governments.

This then is the comprehensive program of renewal which I see as the means of helping municipalities to overcome the spread of urban blight. As I have already mentioned, the program involves the redevelopment areas which have depreciated beyond repair, the rehabilitation of areas which can be given extended useful life by positive action, if taken soon enough, and the conservation of all that which is good in the existing urban fabric.

The bill to be presented when the resolution is adopted offers three things to give broader scope and to encourage new kinds of programs of urban renewal in Canada's cities. First, there are additional incentives for redevelopment projects; second—and this is in paragraph (a)—federal aid in the form of contributions or loans for municipal rehabilitation in urban renewal areas and, third N.H.A. loans on existing houses in urban renewal areas will be possible under the new legislation.

In the existing redevelopment provisions, that is, in the act as it now stands, there is the requirement that there must be a substantial residential content in the area, either before or after redevelopment. It is, I think, apparent that comprehensive urban renewal cannot be limited to residential property. The development of fine cities in Canada requires that municipalities be able to clear areas of blight and slums, whatever their present use may be, whether it is commercial, industrial or residential.

The cost of acquiring and clearing blighted areas is presently shared fifty-fifty by the federal and municipal governments, although in some provinces the provincial government bears part of the municipal share. The municipal share of capital cost is relatively high and undoubtedly this has restricted action, that is, corrective action, in the past. It is the government's intention to widen the act to help municipalities finance their share of capital costs through loans. Again I would refer to paragraph (a) of the resolution.

In addition, the application of federal urban redevelopment grants is to be extended from acquisition and clearance to cover the cost of preparing cleared land for disposal for the re-use proposed. In other words, funds might be provided for worn out municipal services, street and traffic improvements in the selected areas, and for sidewalks and off-street parking in the approved urban renewal areas.

So much for the changes in respect to redevelopment. What of rehabilitation? In this area the federal government now offers aid to the provinces, or to the municipalities that the provinces may designate, to assist in the process of urban rehabilitation. It is now proposed that the federal government offer grants and loans for municipal works in designated areas, where these works are necessary to arrest the spread of blight and contribute to renewal, provided of course the specific area is part of a comprehensive renewal scheme.

Successful rehabilitation depends, however, not just on public works but on private improvements as well, and I believe that the provisions contemplated by this measure will supplement what the private sector of the economy is expected to do. To facilitate private improvements and the fluidity of property markets in renewal areas, the N.H.A. insured loan provisions will be extended to existing housing in designated areas. Furthermore, as the resolution indicates, if private lenders are reluctant to lend in these areas, C.M.H.C. loans will be made available.

As indicated by the resolution, the proposed legislation contains a number of other items, in addition to the urban renewal and public housing provisions to which I alluded briefly last Thursday and again today. In this connection I would draw hon. members' attention to the provisions of paragraph (f) which authorize loans to co-operative and charitable institutions to assist in the construction of accommodation for university students and their families, and which authorize an increase of $100 million for this purpose.

Paragraph (g) provides that loans to provinces will continue in connection with the construction and expansion of sewage facilities, with forgiveness of 25 per cent of those loans, and paragraph (h) provides an additional $500 million for all purposes, which is to be a charge on the consolidated revenue fund.

Paragraph (h) provides for an increase in the fund to take care of the objectives I have been dealing with during the last few minutes and on Thursday evening, an increase from $2 billion to $2½ billion.

Paragraph (i) provides for a special fund of an additional $100 million for secondary mortgages.

Paragraph (j) is intended to increase the loan ratio for insured loans. Hon. members who have read the legislation or who were present will recall that in the last session this was taken care of for a limited period by another method. The loan ratio will be increased under the proposed legislation and there are administrative changes which are contemplated.

At the beginning of my remarks I mentioned there would be an opportunity following the resolution stage to consider the proposed bill in all its detail. I wanted to use this occasion, however, to speak generally about the broad purposes of the measure and the objectives which prompted the government to put forward the important changes about which I have been speaking.

In bringing these remarks to a conclusion I should like to repeat the two most important aims to which I referred some days ago. First there is the wish, the hope, more than that, the intent of the government to do its part in improving standards of housing and housing conditions for those most in need and, in fact, for all Canadians in the elimination of the degrading housing conditions which exist in certain parts of this country, a challenging but realistic objective and one which the government believes should be accorded a high priority in federal housing policy. Second, we can no longer rest content with a federal urban renewal policy, which is confined to clearance and redevelopment alone. Such a policy by implication accepts the process of decay and rot as if it were something inevitable and natural. We know there is no automatic private market process which regenerates urban areas as they decline. Therefore, the government believes that if there is to be such a regenerative process it must be developed as a matter of public policy. We propose to encourage and help the provinces and their municipalities to develop it together with the federal government and its agencies.

Mr. Hales: May I ask the minister a question? He referred to making loans in respect to existing houses in designated areas. Did he mean houses in the 35 designated areas in Canada, or was he referring to designated areas within cities?

Mr. Nicholson: Designated areas within a city. The Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation will negotiate with the various municipalities interested, and when an area has been designated loans will be made available in that area.

Mr. Brewin: We do not wish to delay the passage of this resolution but in our opinion, or at least in my opinion, it is of such importance to the people of Canada that some attention should be paid to it. We welcome the resolution and look forward with a great deal of interest to scrutinizing carefully the legislation to implement it.

I should like to say to the minister that we particularly welcome his statement that this resolution represents a basic change in the concept and a completely fresh approach to the question of housing. We believe that a basic change and a fresh approach are urgently needed. In our opinion, housing is one of the most important parts of the responsibility of any modern government. Indeed, it ranks with matters such as medical care and old age pensions as among the most important questions facing Canadians at all levels of government. I am reminded of an excellent statement on housing and the part it plays in our lives—a statement which was made in an address to the Canadian housing design council by James A. Murray a well known architect, who had this to say of the purpose of housing:

> It shelters the physiological functions of living, sleeping, eating, bathing. It shelters the care and education of children and the private and public domestic life of its occupants. It serves as haven to individuals hard pressed by the group obligations and pressures of modern life. It is a symbol and expression of its occupant in particular and its times in general.

We also welcome the emphasis which the minister has placed upon the need for public housing and the need for the redevelopment of decayed areas. Even more—and I speak particularly for my own constituents—we welcome the attention which has been paid for the first time to the need for the rehabilitation and renovation of the existing stock of housing in areas which are by no means slums, but which can easily become slums if no governmental responsibility is accepted. I agree with the remark the minister made when he said that by international standards most people in Canada are well housed. The emphasis, there, must be placed on the word "most".

[Mr. Nicholson.]

In another address delivered to the Canadian housing design council by Mr. Ian Maclennan, executive director of the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation, Mr. Maclennan makes the same statement as was made by the minister in the house. But Mr. Maclennan goes on at once to say:

> Nevertheless, there are large numbers of low income families living in desperately inadequate dangerous, and sometimes tragic housing conditions. Thousands of Canadian families can't afford decent housing without some form of subsidy.
> It is possible, in theory, to build so many new houses through the private market that adequate housing eventually becomes available even for the very poor. This is called the "filtering down" process and it's never worked very well. It is an expensive and uncertain way of providing housing for low income families. Expensive because it requires sufficient new housing not only to meet their particular needs, but enough to improve the housing circumstances of everyone else as well. It's uncertain because it requires a public policy to sustain the demand for new housing far beyond the normal market requirements.

Then he goes on to say:

> The most direct, economic and certain way of meeting the problem is to build, buy or lease a stock of housing and allocate it to the families who need it most, at prices they can afford to pay. By whatever method this housing is acquired, subsidies of one sort or another are needed, and this is usually called public housing.

Then the author goes on to refer to one of the greatest failures in our whole domestic housing policy in Canada, that is, the failure to meet the need for public housing. Admittedly, this country has done very well through the National Housing Act in financing the housing of the top 50 per cent of the people of Canada. A tremendous stock of houses has been built. But the endeavours at the different levels of government to meet the needs of those who have the greatest housing difficulties, the other 50 per cent, have been a failure. I welcome the frank words of the minister on this subject and the provision contained in the resolution. I hope the legislation will change the picture, because the picture certainly needs to be changed.

Mr. Maclennan goes on to say:

> The National Housing Act provides for the construction and operation of public housing in Canada—on the initiation of municipalities, with the approval of the provinces. In 14 years the program has produced only 8,000 subsidized dwelling units—

That is somewhat different from the figure the minister gave us. I think he said that 9,000 were subsidized out of 12,000 units built. Mr. Maclennan's figure may be earlier; he says that in 14 years the program has produced only 8,000 subsidized dwelling units. He goes on to say:

> —and there is no doubt that thousands more are needed. An approximate comparison indicates that in 1961 the British paid about $3.15 per capita in annual subsidies for public housing, the Americans about $0.80 and the Canadians just under $0.10.

I referred earlier to a speech made by Mr. Murray on housing and architecture. I wish to read something he has to say on this subject.

In the 1950-60 period some 3,600 units of subsidized housing were laboriously achieved alongside some 1,263,000 private housing starts or 2/5 of 1 per cent of the private market. This should indicate that as a nation we are so rich we don't need it, so poor we can't afford it, or so ineffective we can't do it. It is not the purpose of this paper to assess which is nearer the truth.

Although Mr. Murray was too tactful to assess which is nearer the truth, we will assert that it is not because we are so rich that we do not need this public housing in Canada, and it is not because we are so poor that we cannot afford it. The real reason is that we have been so ineffective that we have not been able to do it; and I hope this resolution and the legislation which will follow will bring a change in that field. Mr. Murray goes on to say that we have made excellent progress in home building for the upper income brackets. He says:

This home builder segment of the total housing machine is extraordinarily effective and the private builder plus private client, plus government insured mortgage system is tremendously effective in the top income third and through the upper half of the middle third—all this is done under the agreeable twin euphemisms of private housing and home ownership.

If we are to take seriously the need for housing, which is so tremendously important to the families of Canadians, including not only those in the big cities but those in other communities as well, we have to accept the lead of other countries, acknowledge the need for public subsidized housing, and change the picture; and I welcome the indication the resolution gives, that the government intends to bring in legislation for this purpose. Because of the fact that in Canada the responsibility is divided, it seems to me the danger is that we do not have an adequate amount of planning and co-operation between the different levels of government. I fully appreciate that there is a constitutional problem involved in direct communication between the federal government, which is responsible for a substantial amount of the financing of housing, and the municipal governments which are, as has been said, the creatures of provincial legislatures. But the time has come when, if we mean what we say about co-operative federalism in a vital and urgent subject like housing, we need constant conference among those who represent great urban areas like Toronto—I mention that first because I happen to live there—or Montreal, Vancouver or Winnipeg, the representatives of municipalities, which have the local initiative to carry out these plans, the provinces which have their share of responsibility, and Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation.

It is not good enough to pass legislation which enables the federal government to do certain things. There is a great and urgent necessity for strong leadership; and I welcome the statement of determination that I read in the minister's speech. It is to be found at page 3717 of Hansard, where he said, if my recollection is correct, that the goal of this legislation is frankly ambitious and it encompasses nothing less than a decent standard of living for all Canadians. That is a laudable objective, I say to the minister; but it cannot be accomplished without the most vigorous initiatives and the highest degree of co-operation among the different levels of government.

I want to refer for a moment to a part of the city of Toronto—I do so because I represent a riding in that city—where people have lived for 50 or 60 years in a very pleasant but not wealthy locality with good schools, excellent recreation centres and other things of this sort. But unless steps are taken, and taken soon, to put the impetus of government financing behind the rehabilitation, the renewal of that sort of area which is by no means a slum area or one suffering slum conditions, and unless the same energy is employed that is going into financing the building of suburban areas for the upper income groups, in the course of time we are going to find that we have failed in the laudable objective the minister has put forward.

What is needed in respect of the rehabilitation of some of these central areas of the city? What is a comprehensive scheme of urban renewal? Again, Mr. Chairman, I have reference to the speech made by Mr. Maclennan, because he puts it much better than I could, to the Canadian housing design council on April 22 of this year. This speech was given at the Royal Ontario museum, Toronto. Mr. Maclennan said this:

A comprehensive scheme of urban renewal would encompass a whole range of aids to re-establish confidence and vitality in deteriorating neighbourhoods. These would include, besides redevelopment and public housing at least four other measures.

(1) Refurbishing of community services such as streets, lighting, parks and schools. This would depend on financial aid to the municipality for help in replacing utilities and facilities in parts of the area being developed. This is important because lending institutions are unlikely to invest in renewal areas which are in unsatisfactory condition.

(2) Partial rehabilitation for houses which do not require total clearance. This must be done quickly if the deterioration of the buildings and their surroundings are not to reach a point where it will not be financially wise to invest in repairs. The basic demands of rehabilitation are to use what we have that is worth using, and to keep costly redevelopment to a minimum.

I commend that statement to the minister. Redevelopment schemes at the centre of big cities are apt to be very expensive; they do not meet the neighbourhood needs; the people are sometimes put out and expensive apartments are built in their place; commercial areas grow up—and this may be perfectly all right—or office buildings. This is perfectly good planning; but if it is rehabilitation of what we have already that is needed, this type of costly revelopment is a great disservice to the people of Canada. Third, he says:

Financial assistance in the form of loans to owners of existing houses (in areas included in the urban renewal program) to increase their marketability, or to assist those wishing to rehabilitate their own dwellings. Through this plan residential buildings could be given additional life of many years.

I understand the legislation that is proposed will enable this to be done, and I welcome that very warmly because I think it is an important change of direction. I only hope it is followed up with energy by whoever is responsible. I do not know whether this minister is to continue with the responsibility indefinitely, but if he is I say to him that this part of the program should be followed up with the greatest energy, because I think it is very important. Mr. Maclennan goes on to say:

Neighbourhood conservation through the enforcement of building maintenance codes and occupancy bylaws.

That is not a matter, of course, for the federal government. Then he says:

A combined attack of public and private enterprise on urban blight through such a comprehensive plan could alter the face of our cities in a substantial and dramatic manner.

I believe that is what we can get if this legislation is effectively put into operation, and to be put into operation it needs, as I say, co-operation between the various levels of government. I want to give an illustration of a lack of adequate co-operation, as it seems to me, in this field of housing in relation to a well meant effort that went astray. I happen to know something about it, and I asked a question about it in the house, by putting my question on the order paper. It was answered in Hansard of May 6, 1964. My question related to the cost of a partnership development project entered into between the province of Ontario and central mortgage and housing for the acquisition of farm lands in the township of Scarborough. This appears at page 2971 of Hansard and it concerned land in the neighbourhood of Malvern which was intended to be acquired land for low cost housing. My question asked:

What was the total sum of money paid out to farmers who owned the lands expropriated for the purpose?

It turned out that it was something over $2,300,000. The farms were expropriated in 1953 and I asked what housing developments, if any, had taken place under the project. The answer was that the lands have not yet been developed. After the farms were expropriated some of the land acquired for this joint housing project was rented back to the farmers, but no action was taken in respect to this land assembly at all. The reason will become apparent later.

Then I asked what was the cost in interest of this acquisition, apart from paying off the farmers, the reply was that the cost in interest which had accrued to March 31, 1964 was $765,070, with legal survey and sundry charges of $77,411. The net recovery from the rental of land and buildings was $93,401.

Then I asked whether any of this land had been sold, but only small parcels had been sold to the board of education and to other bodies of that sort. Certain small parcels had been leased.

Finally I asked:

If no serious development has taken place or is contemplated in the near future, what do the government of Canada and the government of Ontario propose to do with the lands in question?

The answer was as follows:

It is intended to make this land available for urban development as soon as the necessary municipal trunk services reach the area. Plans for a comprehensive neighbourhood will be prepared at the appropriate time. Land will be set aside for community facilities and for public housing projects to accommodate families of low income.

This answer to my question indicates a serious lack of intelligent, over-all and co-operative planning. We are told why this land was acquired and what the cost in interest amounted to, and nothing has been done with it. The reason is that there had not been the necessary municipal trunk services to reach the area. The land is not serviced and there are no plans to service it.

I was very happy to see in this resolution the statement that, included in the new legislation would be a provision whereby it would be possible to authorize the corporation to make loans to provinces to assist in the construction or expansion of sewage treatment projects, and to authorize the corporation to forgive repayment of 25 per cent of the principal and interest on any loans made to provinces or to municipalities for this purpose in respect of work completed by March 31, 1967. If we are going to develop new low cost housing projects through government partnerships—which is an admirable concept —the municipality concerned should be consulted at the beginning, and the necessary arrangements made to ensure that at some appropriate period services will be made available. Otherwise the government is putting farmers off their land and speculating whether or not at a later date they will take a substantial loss. This acquisition to which I referred was in 1953, 11 years ago, and the land has just been left as it is. True, it has been rented back to the farmers, but the housing project was never started and I think the reason was that which I mentioned, lack of adequate planning at the time.

Before I sit down I should like to call to the attention of the minister another matter which, while it is local in one sense, is I think duplicated in many other parts of Canada, certainly in urban areas and cities. The minister will recall that a deputation from the city of Toronto, including Alderman Mrs. Birchard, and the commissioner of planning, presented a brief on the problem of homeless men in the city of Toronto. This brief pointed out that in the city of Toronto there is a serious problem in accommodating homeless single men who are aging and without employment.

I am not going to go over the whole story. Many of these men are over 50, have had little schooling and have few skills. The brief points out the lack of facilities to fill in the spare time of these persons. As the minister will recall, the brief speaks of a good neighbours club which was started in 1957 in a converted house provided by the city. The initial membership of 300 has now grown to over 1,900. Four or five hundred men crowd into the building in order to try to get some place of shelter and recreation during the day.

I would urge, as the brief also urged, that the amendments to the National Housing Act should deal with the plight of these men who are so placed because of social and economic changes beyond their control. I submit it would be appropriate and desirable to include amendments to the National Housing Act so that it would be possible not only to provide such men with adequate living accommodation but also to make available centres where, whether living in housing projects or not, they could find daytime shelter and occupation, recreation and job training. This is the request of the municipalities. I hope the minister will be able to give a favourable response to it, because these are people who are in urgent need, not only in the city from which I happen to come but in many other cities throughout Canada. They are people over 50 years of age with no jobs or opportunities, living in rooming houses of the least desirable sort and having nowhere to go during the daytime.

As I said initially, we do not desire to delay this resolution, because we think these amendments to the National Housing Act are good in intent. We hope they will enable the government to do important work in this field. As I said originally—I think the minister agrees with me because he stated this himself in other words—this is a basic need, if all levels of government are to discharge their responsibilities to the people of Canada. This is one of the most important subjects which has come before the house. Other matters placed before us, which are debated at great length and involve a great deal of motion, are in my humble opinion, far less urgent, as far as the lives of some families are concerned. I most earnestly commend the government for introducing this resolution and I hope the legislation will live up to the standard set out therein. I hope even more that the performance of this and of successive governments, and the basic change which the minister has announced, will deal with the urgent need of housing among the low income group in Canada, the people who need it. I would not worry so much if we stopped providing loans to persons like myself who could afford to look elsewhere. I would worry a little more about those who cannot afford decent housing. Slum clearance is fine, but prevention is far better than cure. This resolution is moving in the right direction. Let it not lie on the statute books like idle letters, as in the case of so much housing legislation in the past; let it be implemented with vigour. If it is, a great contribution will be made to the families of Canada.

[Translation]

Mr. Lessard (Lake St. John): Mr. Chairman, at the beginning of my remarks, I should like to pay a tribute to the late minister, Mr. Garland, and to point out that he was the member of the house who took the most active and heartfelt interest in the problems of his fellow Canadians in the field of housing.

Even if we recognize that the Postmaster General (Mr. Nicholson) has great merits in moving this resolution, at the present time, we undoubtedly all know that the suggestions placed on the order paper are the result of the work done by the hon. member for Nipissing who died some time ago.

In addition, I wish to refer to the fact that, last week, the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation was also saddened by another sudden death, that of Mr. Bates, who was its president for many years.

At the same time, I want to tie those events to another one to mention that—perhaps, as I strongly hope so, this is a mere coincidence —the person in charge of the corporation's Montreal office also died a few days ago of a heart attack.

Whether those are mere coincidences, I cannot tell. I hope so but, following those three events, we might conclude that the department, for some time, has been subjected to such strong pressures and that the projects now to be dealt with were of such importance that, to a certain extent, they might have caused their death.

However, I do not want the program now before us to be pigeonholed. If, by means of this resolution and the bill that will follow, we can make a truly valuable contribution to improve housing conditions in this country, we shall be building at the same time a monument in honour of those who were behind the drafting and promotion of this resolution.

In my opinion, the former minister, the late Mr. Garland, as well as Mr. Bates and the other person from Montreal, whose name, unfortunately, slips my mind at this time, have certainly contributed, with their associates, in offering us the amendments to the act.

The amendments proposed have been hoped for a good many years. In my opinion, as the hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Brewin) said, we must consider first the situation of municipalities with regard to what we offer them at the present time.

Will the municipalities be in a position to undertake municipal works programs?

Do we have at the present time that committee which, I believe, is required to communicate with the municipal and provincial authorities and the federal government, and allow us to adopt policies agreeable to each of the concerned groups, so that we could rest assured that as soon as the act is passed, it can be immediately enforced. Unfortunately we in Quebec have had, in the past, some rather difficult experience with federal legislation. I do not bear any grudge against anyone, but I know that on account of our very special context in Quebec, certain federal measures have always been difficult to administer.

I would like to refer more particularly to the fact that we have in Quebec a legislation providing for a 3 per cent rebate on the interest paid on a loan directly granted by the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation or by another organization vouched for by the corporation. The 3 per cent interest is connected with the assessment of the house itself. This assessment comes under the jurisdiction of the investigators of the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation. It happens sometimes—I know personal and typical examples—that assessors under federal responsibility are inclined sometimes to increase this value to justify a higher loan.

Now when this amount exceeds the limits set by the provincial government for the 3 per cent interest rebate, then the prospective owner of the house cannot benefit from the 3 per cent rebate which at the end of 20 or 25 years represents a very substantial amount.

I know that it may be difficult to adjust the federal and provincial legislation so that they may be complementary, but I feel that it is my duty to draw the attention of the minister to that point, especially to this advantage granted to the Quebec low wage earners to enable them to buy their own house.

That opportunity, which is offered to them by the provincial government, a reduction of interest is one that I should like the whole Canadian population to share. That is why I wonder, since there seems to be a definitive indication to move along their line, if the provincial opportunity offered at present by Quebec could not be extended to all Canadian citizens.

Could a federal measure not supplement that provincial legislation? Is such a move the responsibility of the provinces as far as the constitution is concerned? This is a point which can be argued upon, but if the federal government, which has more extensive credit powers than the provincial governments, if the government can, as it did today, in the proposals before us, vote, for instance, under item A, $100 million, under item F, $50 million and under item H, half a billion, for a total of $650 million, it certainly can extend that advantage to all the provinces. Then, I wonder about the ceiling on those amounts. Why $100 million, $50 million, $500 million. What are the true limits, since those credits apparently will be issued so that some people may build themselves houses, so that the corporation may back up loans and allow the municipalities to undertake planning and clearing projects in blighted areas. If the federal government is able to issue such credits, it certainly can, in my opinion, do without a portion of the 6 and 7 per cent interest it collects on those loans at the present time.

I am sure that they could be reduced in order to help the Canadian citizens, in order to allow small wage earners, in whom we are particularly interested—those earning $5,000 or less yearly—to become home owners.

However, the burden placed upon school boards and municipalities, which are compelled to raise their tax rates which have to be paid by the small home owner, defeats the very objective we have in mind.

In the province of Quebec especially, municipal taxes have doubled in the last three years. I know many persons who bought a home five or six years ago and who today are wondering whether to dispose of it or to deny themselves the bare necessities.

Mr. Chairman, that shows to what extent our provincial and municipal governments need sources of revenue precisely in order to assume their responsibilities. And when I see that the federal government offers to loan more than $650 million, when I think that it has so much money at its disposal, I wonder immediately why it does not withdraw from some taxation fields to enable the provinces and, subsequently, the municipalities to take them over in order lighten the burden which now falls on the shoulders of the small property owner and which seems to keep on increasing.

When I deal with that problem, I know that I touch upon a most sensitive matter as far as several hon. members are concerned—

[Text]

The Deputy Chairman: I apologize for interrupting the hon. member, but the time allotted to him has expired.

Mr. Lessard (Lake St. John): Do we have only ten minutes on this measure?

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Chairman, the hon. member has only had ten minutes.

The Deputy Chairman: I presume there has been some mistake. Would the hon. member proceed, please.

[Translation]

Mr. Lessard (Lake St. John): The resolution under study considers the possibility of granting loans and subsidies. There again, I wonder how we will be able to reconcile loans made by the federal government directly to the municipalities? I know that in Quebec that raises a problem. Will those loans be granted to the municipalities under the Municipal Development and Loan Act we passed last year, since at the time we offered the provinces the possibility of making direct loans to the municipalities or to make them through the government of a province which does not want to allow the federal government to interfere directly in a field which does not come under its jurisdiction in short, which does not want to allow the municipalities, which are its creatures, to go over its head.

I feel this piece of legislation will open new grounds for constitutional quarrels with Quebec province which as we know, is very ticklish about its rights, and rightly so—

[Text]

Mr. Nicholson: Mr. Chairman, perhaps it would save time later on if I assured the hon. gentleman and other hon. members that this resolution and the principles of the legislation have been discussed with all ten provincial governments and they are in agreement with it.

Mr. Lessard (Lake St. John): Thank you, Mr. Minister.

[Translation]

If the Quebec government has accepted the resolution as drafted, it would therefore appear that there are, in the act, provisions allowing it to protect its interests or sensitivities concerning autonomy, and I am very happy about that. At any rate, when we have before us the details of the bill, we will surely be in a position to appreciate it better.

Mention is also made of the possibility of getting rid of slums. Now, in the oldest Canadian city, Quebec city, a recent survey disclosed that in some of the original sections, more than 40 per cent of the houses were unsanitary and no longer up to the requirements of public health. I am sure there is in the bill to be passed a possibility for Quebec city to avail itself of some provisions to improve its old sections.

I hope that the act provides the possibility to grant loans for the improvement of these old sections, because I would be the last one to ask for the removal of these old historical sections of the old capital, the first city of Canada. I would like the owners of such historical buildings to be offered the possibility to renovate them and the necessary funds to restore these buildings in their original style, so that old Quebec can maintain, on American soil, the characteristics of old France which cannot be found anywhere else here on the North American continent.

Mr. Chairman, this is a program which could very well be described as a joint plan. It will be joint plan because the federal, provincial and municipal governments will be called upon to partake therein. Unfortunately, those joint programs inevitably bring about some tension, favour certain groups, enforce elsewhere undesirable controls, and I hope that when we examine in details the items of the bill, we will be able to see to what extent each of the interested parties is allowed to manage its own field of jurisdiction.

Having said that, Mr. Chairman, I will conclude, to allow other members of the house to speak before five o'clock and to end the debate as soon as we possibly can, so that the resolution may be accepted and that the bill itself may be proceeded with.

National Housing Act

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Chairman, I do not want to delay the house, but there is just one question I should like to ask the minister as to subsection (b) where it says:

> To authorize the corporation to make loans and to insure loans made by approved lenders to owners of existing houses in areas included in urban renewal programs;

I should like the minister to tell me whether this would apply to a house built about ten years ago, that the owner bought through a financing company on exorbitant terms: for instance, he bought a moderately priced house but he has to pay monthly instalments amounting to $120, $125 or $150 merely due to the fact that the financing company would not grant him a loan for more than three or four years.

I would like to know whether in such circumstances, the amendments to the National Housing Act would allow these people to avail themselves of the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation's help and obtain a loan on houses of that kind so as to be able to pay a normal amount of $40 to $45 per month. Nowadays their houses are being taken away from them because they cannot pay the amounts they thought they would be able to meet some two or three years ago; they cannot pay them any more on account of the depression prevailing in our areas which are rightfully called depressed areas.

I should like the minister to tell us whether it will be possible for those people to avail themselves of the benefits made available by the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation.

[Text]

Mr. Winch: Mr. Chairman, I appreciate the opportunity of speaking on what I consider to be a most important resolution, but as the time is approaching five o'clock may I simply open my remarks by expressing on behalf of our group our sincere feeling of loss in the passing of Mr. Garland and Mr. Bates, two men who had a remarkably keen interest in the very matters we are now discussing. In honour of their memory I feel we should give intensive consideration to this most important matter of housing.

May I call it five o'clock?

The Deputy Chairman: Order. It being five o'clock and in order that the house may proceed to the consideration of private members' business it is my duty to leave the chair.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Batten): Order. It being five o'clock the house will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely notices of motion.

[Mr. Lessard (Lake St. John).]

CANADIAN FLAG

SUGGESTED LEGISLATION ACKNOWLEDGING RED ENSIGN AS DISTINCTIVE NATIONAL FLAG

Mr. J. A. McBain (Elgin) moved:

> That, in the opinion of this house, the government should give immediate consideration to introducing legislation that would acknowledge the Canadian red ensign as Canada's distinctive national flag as endorsed by the Royal Canadian Legion and the I.O.D.E.

He said: Mr. Speaker, in bringing this motion before parliament I do so on behalf of those people who cannot speak for themselves in parliament except through the voices of their elected member or members.

When I placed this motion on the order paper last February I did not realize at that time that the Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Pearson), come hell or high water, would rush the personal selection of his pennant to the stage where he was going to have his flag announced before my motion came up for debate. The views I wish to place on record this afternoon are my own personal views, as well as the opinions of approximately 90 per cent of the letters I have so far received from the people I represent—and naturally I am speaking of my own constituency, the riding of Elgin.

I can assure you, Mr. Speaker, that I do not speak for the Conservative party as a whole, for we on this side of the house are free thinkers and free speakers.

Mr. Winkler: Hear, hear.

Mr. McBain: We are not like the Liberals who, on a Tuesday, were told by the Prime Minister, "When the flag question comes up for a vote it will be a free vote and you can vote as your conscience dictates," and then a few days later he changed that and made the statement that the government would stand or fall on the flag question. Oh yes, the Prime Minister says to his supporters, "It will be a free vote, but you vote for me and my flag—or else."

I do not know if the Prime Minister has as yet got himself on to that high water mark, but he sure has been getting heck from a lot of people who have expressed their opinions to me by telegram, mail and telephone. Universally public opinion, as I have received it, is, "Don't let Pearson throw our Canadian ensign into the garbage can." We wonder if the Prime Minister has forgotten that the red ensign really is the Canadian flag, as it was made so by order in council of September 5, 1945, P.C. 5888, signed by the Governor General, where it is ordered that—> —the red ensign with the shield of the coat-of-arms of Canada in the fly, (hereinafter referred to as the Canadian red ensign), may be flown from buildings owned or occupied by the federal government within or without Canada—and that it shall be appropriate to fly the Canadian red ensign, within or without Canada, wherever place or occasion may make desirable to fly a distinctive Canadian flag.

Some weeks ago a question was placed on the order paper and eventually answered. It asked how many signatures the Prime Minister had so far received from persons who wished to have the Canadian ensign maintained as Canada's national flag. At the time of the reply, which was early in April, some 98,000 signatures had been received supporting the Canadian red ensign, and these were all of a voluntary nature. I am sure if a petition were widely circulated throughout Canada it would contain more names than were ever received by any government on any other matter, in support of our Canadian red ensign flag.

I have taken the opportunity to read the many letters appearing in the press from time to time, written by individuals concerning a Canadian flag. The great majority of these letters support the Canadian red ensign, and I am sure the writers have given this matter their serious consideration before writing to the editors of their respective papers.

The only distinctive flag for Canada is the present ensign and no other. It contains the union jack, which represents our union with the great commonwealth of nations. The coat of arms represents the four great peoples who discovered and built up Canada into one of the great nations of the world, the English, French, Irish and Scots. What more do we need for a distinctive flag?

In the last three wars over 100,000 of our finest citizens gave their lives for the defence of our ensign and what it represents. Does that not make it a distinctive flag? There are millions of fathers, mothers, wives, brothers, sisters and children mourning today for their loved ones who gave their lives that we should be free and not under a dictatorship. These people are proud of those who made the supreme sacrifice in upholding ensign and country. This also makes our ensign distinctive.

I agree that flag as it stands today may not be entirely acceptable to everyone in Canada, but I am equally certain it is acceptable to the majority of us who are proud to call it our flag. The flag is not only for display to Canadians in Canada, or simply to visitors to Canada; it is our symbol overseas in all countries and also in the United States and must, therefore, be a flag in accordance with the long accepted principles of heraldry and tradition.

Canadian Flag

Speaking on behalf of the Royal Canadian Legion and the ladies of the Imperial Order Daughters of the Empire, who have taken a definite stand on our flag question and universally adopted the Canadian red ensign, they have put forward, time and again, their stand to the Prime Minister and to members of parliament. Recently the annual Canadian Legion's convention in Winnipeg and the annual meeting of the I.O.D.E. again unanimously adopted the Canadian ensign as Canada's flag.

Of course, as we all know, the Prime Minister thought he would brave the lions in their own den and make an appearance at the annual meeting of the Royal Canadian Legion in Winnipeg to unveil to them his proposal for his new flag. I believe it is true that he was booed and cheered to some extent when he announced the proposal for a flag, but how otherwise could these 1,900 delegates raise an objection to a flag, other than the Canadian red ensign, before the Prime Minister of Canada when he was attending their meeting? Would each one of them have had the opportunity to express his individual views to the Prime Minister? No, Mr. Speaker.

It is interesting to note the words of Mr. C. B. Sinclair, second vice president of the Canadian corps association spoken last fall. He had this to say:

The time for a different flag might have been in 1867, at the time of confederation, but certainly not 1967, the one hundredth anniversary of confederation. The day is long gone when any federal government should consider tampering with our Canadian red ensign, with its long history and tradition. To do so now, would I think, be an attempt at political expediency of the lowest order. If the various "ethnic groups" which have migrated to Canada from other lands, and have become an integral part of our growing country are told with absolute and complete finality, that the Canadian red ensign is the flag of Canada, they will accept this as part of their new life, as happily and as completely as they accept all other aspects of their newly adopted country. Our present government and its immediate predecessor have been forced to function as minority governments, which is sometimes difficult, but we firmly believe in the maturity of the Canadian people, and, if our federal government can find the courage to govern wisely, with political considerations giving way to national necessities and well-being, the citizens of Canada, both new and old, would applaud such courage, and we could all look forward to 1967, when our nation will celebrate its one hundredth birthday, and with this centennial celebrated under the same flag as its birth—who could ask for greater consistency?

I feel the Prime Minister has left the impression with the people of Canada that the majority of his present mail favours a new flag. But I wish to place on the record a portion of a letter that he received and which I am sure neither he nor any of his supporters will be placing on the record for public scrutiny. It is from a resident in my constituency who was kind enough to mail carbon copies of it both to myself and the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Diefenbaker).

I was speaking to this gentleman yesterday and he said it was the first time he had ever written to any leader of any government, but he was so incensed when the announcement of a new flag for Canada was made that he had to sit down and put his feelings in a letter and direct it to the Prime Minister of Canada. This is a six page letter, but I am only going to deal with the first two pages which cover the flag question. It reads as follows:

St. Thomas, Ont.
May 16, 1964

Hon. Mr. Lester B. Pearson,
Prime Minister of Canada.

Dear Sir:

Regards your tenure of office as Prime Minister and your vaunted 60 days of decision which has turned out to be 300 days of indecision, I have listened to your interviews on television with Mr. DePoe and Mr. Pelletier and others and your own admission in the press that you have made many mistakes this term. I have always admired your abilities. But these interviews have been very disappointing. You give the impression of a schoolboy trying to convince the teacher he has his homework done when he has not. Why all the sidestepping? If you don't change you may go down in history as the most destructive and incompetent prime minister Canada has ever had. Your inability to control the country. Why do you allow threats against the Queen? A good leader would make short work of the F.L.Q. and others. Regards your promise of a new flag for Canada. By what right as an individual have you to make a decision to change the flag of our country? Then push over on us one of no meaning. The maple leaves bud in the spring and die in the fall. What shall we cling to the rest of the year? Your explanation at Espanola, Ontario, to the Canadian Legion was very weak.

Your remarks of how proud we were in the first world war to wear the maple leaf on our uniforms. Yes, only denoted to other army personnel of other countries where we were from. They also had a mark of distinction on their uniforms. It was the red ensign that held us together. It was for that the boys bled and died for. Have you forgot 1892 when it was first used. The order in council by the cabinet in 1924. The federal order in council 1945. That the red ensign was the national flag for Canada. This is the flag of unity for all Canada. Mr. Prime Minister are you listening to the voices of the extremists for your own personal gain and trying to push over on the majority of this meaningless rag. In Ontario there is a town of Delhi on No. 3 highway. This community is largely made up of peoples of nationalities of every race of Europe as well as Canadians. They all live peaceably together. The different races speak their own tongues within themselves. Yet at the roadside of No. 3 highway they have a large red ensign encased in glass and illuminated 24 hours a day. The inscription reads "This is our flag, let's keep it flying". This should be the motto for all Canada.

That is why these people came to Canada to be under that flag.

[Mr. McBain.]

Since the end of the second world war in 1945, many persons from European countries have emigrated to Canada.

Mr. Côté (Longueuil): Would it be possible for the hon. member to identify the author of the letter he was reading?

Mr. McBain: The author is Mr. Louis Coughlin of 144 Wilson avenue, St. Thomas, Ontario.

As I was saying, since the end of the second world war in 1945, many persons have emigrated to Canada from European countries. They felt they could no longer remain under a dictatorship in their own country and Canada, therefore, was their choice. They knew that here in Canada they could be given freedom of religion, freedom of speech, freedom of assembly and association and freedom of the press. Never in Canadian history has a prime minister and his government tampered with the rights and privileges of so many people in such a brief period of time. It has been accepted since confederation that we should maintain and respect the two languages of our country. What we have before us on the order paper is a resolution dealing with two flags—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Batten): I hesitate to interrupt the hon. member but I would point out to him the terms of his own motion which he is now debating. Any reference which he might make to the resolution on the order paper would be out of order, as the hon. member will find if he reads citation 131 on page 116 of Beauchesne or if he reads citation 403 of May's sixteenth edition. But I believe I can make it very clear to all members of the house by drawing attention to part of citation 149 on page 127 of the fourth edition of Beauchesne paragraph (d) which states that a member while speaking must not—

—(d) anticipate discussion on a motion set down for future consideration.

Although it will be quite in order for the hon. member to continue his argument in support of the red ensign, any reference to the motion which is now on the order paper would, I think, be patently out of order and I think the authorities also take that view.

Mr. McBain: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. That was just a passing reference I was making to the motion which is on the order paper. I thank you for drawing this to my attention and to the attention of other speakers who may follow.

I think that we as members of parliament are all desirous of having unity within Canada. My question is this: Why the sudden rush for a new flag? What is wrong with our Canadian red ensign? It would appear that the Prime Minister and his government are using the flag to camouflage their inability to govern. Some weeks ago we heard the Prime Minister outline some 30 pieces of legislation he wished to have approved before the summer recess. Let us get on with the business of parliament to provide jobs for people and put food into persons mouths; let us bring in legislation which will unite Canada's population, not divide it. Let us have one Canada and one flag—the Canadian red ensign.

[Translation]

Mr. Gérald Laniel (Beauharnois-Salaberry): Mr. Speaker, the notice of motion that we have now before us deals with a subject in which a great many Canadians are interested at this time. I do not intend to engage in a broad discussion of this matter of a distinctive national flag; I will confine my remarks, pursuant to standing orders, to the content of this resolution which would have this government acknowledge the Canadian red ensign as the distinctive flag of Canada, as it is endorsed by the Royal Canadian Legion and the I.O.D.E. Although I completely agree with the principle of giving our country a distinctive national flag, and that as soon as possible, I cannot agree to this motion introduced by the hon. member for Elgin (Mr. McBain) whereby this distinctive flag would be the red ensign on which we find the union jack and the coat of arms of Canada.

I am taking the liberty to add that, not only do I speak in my own name as a responsible member, but also for the people I represent, the people of Beauharnois-Salaberry county. I have met with my constituents during the last few days, and I feel quite free to express my views in the house.

I cannot see how we could consider that flag as really distinctive of our country while it shows the emblem of another country. Like many other Canadians, I have also learned to respect the Canadian red ensign and to accept its use during the last few years; but it has remained for me a pennant, an ensign, and not a flag meeting with the aspirations of a young and dynamic country.

It is a good thing that a flag should reflect our past but, on the other hand, it does not have to be a Canadian history book. We have the duty to select a flag which will really identify Canada and which, at the same time, will be an emblem that will make us look to the future, and a symbol of hope for our youth and future generations.

The union jack, in the upper left hand corner of the red ensign is, of course, a beautiful flag from an aesthetic point of view and it shows the origin of the British people by the superposition of the Cross of St. George, England's flag, the Cross of St. Andrew, Scotland's flag, and the Cross of St. Patrick, Ireland's flag. However, the union jack has nothing Canadian, even though one third of the Canadian people are of British descent.

Our ancestors came to Canada to build a new country, a young country, a self-governing and independent country which, today, can assume its responsibilities in international affairs where its influence is well known. Therefore, Canada can and even must have a flag distinctive from that of any other country, showing that it is not under the dependence of any foreign or friendly nation.

I wish to offend nobody, but the red ensign still remains basically the flag of the British merchant marine, on which the coat of arms of Canada has been added. Only one fiftieth of the surface of the red ensign shows a really and purely Canadian identification, that is the three red maple leaves on white background which appear on the bottom part of the coat of arms of Canada.

From colonial states, our country achieved the status of a self-governing state. Then, it obtained its sovereignty and finally became one of the recognized nations of the world. This progressive and peaceful evolution took place without disrupting our relations with the motherlands of our founders. As this political evolution is now over, it is our duty to show it to the face of the world.

Why should the union jack instead of coat of arms of our country be in the foreground of a Canadian flag? Why should we not follow in respect of a national flag the same policy we started to implement, that is to strengthen Canadian thought, create a real Canadian image and, in a common effort towards understanding, unite Canadians from coast to coast.

Mr. Speaker, it is mentioned in the resolution introduced by the hon. member for Elgin that the Royal Canadian Legion and the Imperial Order of the Daughters of the Empire are in favour of the adoption of the red ensign as a national flag.

So, before concluding my remarks, I will discuss this point, for I am a veteran who served under this flag, as a member of the Canadian air force during the last world war. I am also a regular member of the Canadian Legion, section 62, in Salaberry de Valleyfield.

I admit that the national directors of the Legion want us to maintain the red ensign as the Canadian flag. I did indeed go to Winnipeg for the opening of the convention, not only as a member of parliament, but as the delegate of my section, with a proxy when it came to the vote. I am far from being convinced that all the members of the legion in this country are in unanimous agreement in this matter, and indeed, we have lately heard certain branches approving the Prime Minister when he submitted a distinctive national flag, on which there was no sign of allegiance to any other country. May I read to you the following letter addressed to me on May 12 by Mr. Larry Soly, chairman of local 62, in Valleyfield,

Dear Gerald:

We ask our members' views with regard to the flag, and these were the results:

Red ensign: 30 per cent in favor.
Distinctive flag: 70 per cent in favor.

I hope that your stay in Winnipeg will be pleasant, and that you will find some time for rest.

You may use the two proxy votes of local 62, as you see fit. Dave Watson, our district representative, will also be at the convention, and he will certainly be pleased to meet you there.

Cordially,
Royal Canadian Legion 62
Larry Soly, Chairman.

Mr. Speaker, it is a significant fact that my section should have taken it upon itself to write this letter to me, without my having made any request in this respect, and should have given me its unlimited trust, whereas last November its members had had every opportunity of knowing my views on the flag question, when I had been invited as a speaker at their meeting. In Winnipeg, I also had an opportunity of discussing with several members of the Legion, from various parts of the country, and even there some were ready to accept a national flag which would be really distinctive, other than the red ensign, and also a certain number of others who were not fighting with such grim determination for the red ensign as might be gathered from the statements coming from that convention and the resolutions which were voted at the meetings. I also had an opportunity of meeting a few young students from Winnipeg with whom I discussed the matter of the flag, and the hon. member for Jacques-Cartier-Lasalle (Mr. Rock) was able to see, like myself, that a great majority among them favoured a truly Canadian flag to replace the red ensign.

If I may, I will now quote a paragraph of the order in council of September 5, 1945 which authorized the flying of this red ensign as our national flag.

[Text]

That, until such time as action is taken by parliament for the formal adoption of a national flag, it is desirable to authorize the flying of the Canadian red ensign on federal government buildings within as well as without Canada, and to remove any doubt as to the propriety of flying the Canadian red ensign wherever place or occasion may make it desirable to fly a distinctive Canadian flag.

[Translation]

As you can notice, the terms used:

[Mr. Laniel.]

[Text]

That, until such time as action is taken by parliament for the formal adoption of a national flag—

[Translation]

That, until such time as action is taken by parliament for the formal adoption of a national flag.

Those words indicate that even at that time consideration was being given to the adoption of a truly distinctive flag and that the red ensign was to be used during the period of transition which would eventually lead us to choose a purely Canadian standard free from any foreign symbol. We have reached that historic moment which is an indication of our political maturity and of our national pride and the attachment we have for our country.

Consequently, I would ask the house to reject this motion which is contrary to the wishes of the majority in Canada and to give our people and our children as soon as possible a truly national identity through the adoption, by parliament, of a flag bearing the colours of Canada, that is three red maple leaves on a white background with a blue stripe at both ends.

[Text]

Mr. Barry Mather (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, speaking briefly to the resolution before us I should like to say, first of all, that the opinions I express are my own. I do not know how it is in other parties in this house on this resolution or on the flag question generally, but in the New Democratic party we have decided to have a free vote—a free vote on this resolution and on the flag issue. Personally I believe this is a fair and very wise decision. A flag—the red ensign, as the resolution before us champions, or any other flag—is something which to me cuts across all party lines and all classes of opinion in the country. For example, there are some in my own party who favour the red ensign, as this resolution asks. There are those who oppose it and favour a distinctive, or a more distinctive, Canadian flag. Then there is a third group in my party, and I believe in some of the other parties in the house as well, which has a different opinion still. That opinion, and I voice it in relation to the resolution before us, as I would on any other flag resolution, is that the present government and the present house have no mandate from the Canadian people to decide the flag issue, either the red ensign or the proposed maple leaf flag.

It is true, Mr. Speaker, that in the last election one of the parties, the Liberal party, proposed the establishment of a distinctive Canadian flag. However I think that most hon. members would agree with me that this was never an issue in the campaign. It was seen in the Liberal party literature that they proposed a distinctive Canadian flag, but I am sure that many members here will agree with me that in the Liberal campaign literature in the past we have seen such proposals put forward as a medicare plan, which was suggested as early as 1919. I do not think that the majority of Canadians thought that the red ensign as proposed in the resolution before us, or the proposed new flag, would really be an issue in this House of Commons.

Personally, I think that if the present government or the present house, which is still made up of minorities, has any mandate from the people of Canada on the flag issue, that mandate would extend in my mind only to placing before the people of Canada what this resolution calls for, the red ensign, or a more distinctive Canadian flag, and of doing that in the form of a plebiscite, and urging the people of Canada to make their choice as to the emblem they wish.

I think that the introduction of the flag issue at this particular stage of the session, so far from unifying the country may have an adverse or even the opposite effect. In the meantime, while we are debating such resolutions as the one before us on the red ensign or the one on the general flag issue, we are surely taking up time which should be devoted to more pressing economic issues in the country. I also think that if we vote on this resolution tonight or on the more general flag resolution later, whatever settlement we make or whatever vote we come to will be decided on a majority basis. But that decision will not in any way remove the deep emotional feelings which the people of this country have in respect to the red ensign or to the general flag issue. Whether we vote it down or whether we vote in support of the red ensign or the proposed new flag, I do not think that that will be an end to the issue in the country. Here we are, 265 members of parliament out of a population of between 19 and 20 million people, a population which has never been really asked to give its opinion either for the red ensign or for this new flag. We are supposed to make a decision on this matter without damaging the unity of the country. I do not think that that is a practical proposition. I feel that, rather than voting on the resolution before us or on the government's coming resolution, we should consider very carefully whether it would not be better in the long run and in the interest of the country to take this matter out of party politics and to put before the people a plain plebiscite asking them to decide between the red ensign or the maple leaf flag. This is my own view, and it is shared by some members of my party as well perhaps as by some members of other parties. I put it forward sincerely because I feel that the flag issue is one which will be much better handled in the way I suggest.

It is not too late for the present administration to take a second look at putting before us the flag proposal which they have in mind. They have earlier taken second looks at matters such as the sales tax, the budget and the pension plan. There is still time for a full reconsideration of this issue.

In conclusion, I would say that if we made up our mind to remove the issue from the house and from politics and to put it before the people in a plebiscite, we would then get the most democratic expression in the country of the people's will on the flag issue, and it would also enable us to get on with more pressing economic matters. So to that degree I oppose the resolution which is now before us.

[Translation]

Mr. Guy Marcoux (Quebec-Montmorency): Mr. Speaker, it is strange to hear an N.D.P. member who must have new principles for a new democracy. When the majority has declared itself in favour of something they do not like, such as nuclear weapons and, in this case, the national flag, they claim that we must set little store by the vote of the people. But if, for various reasons, they feel we must respect the will of the people, they invoke the principles of true democracy and they speak of the operation of our democratic institutions. And they say it is irregular for members of parliament to pass legislation concerning the flag.

As the new distinctive flag project for Canada was contained in the platform of the party now in office, of the government party, I believe the members are entitled to represent the people who elected them and there is no question of holding a referendum or a plebiscite thereafter. The government takes a position, it makes a decision, and if democracy does not like this government's decision, the government may be overthrown in the next election.

But as this article was included in the platform of the Liberal party, I see absolutely no reason for holding a referendum or a plebiscite. Besides, it would take about 97 years thereafter for us to get a really distinctive flag.

And I come back to the motion before us. When it is said that the red ensign is a distinctive flag for Canada, I admit this is right, but I also believe it must be admitted the Canadian people today want an entirely and decidedly distinctive flag, and it is why the red ensign should not be recognized as a completely and absolutely distinctive flag.

The hon. member for Elgin (Mr. McBain) said that we celebrated the advent of confederation in 1867 with the red ensign and that we should also celebrate the centennial under the red ensign. I regret I have to differ with him, but surely the Canadian flag, which was accepted and adopted by order in council in 1945, did not exist in 1867 as the distinctive flag of Canada. Consequently, I am not ready to accept his argument on this point.

Mr. Speaker, I have before me Mr. Ollivier's book entitled British North America Acts and Selected Statutes, in which I find the Statute of Westminster, which was assented to on December 11, 1931. In the preamble, among other things, we read:

> And whereas it is meet and proper to set out by way of preamble to this Act that, inasmuch as the crown is the symbol of the free association of the members of the British Commonwealth of Nations, and as they are united by a common allegiance to the Crown, it would be in accord...

Therefore, the Statute of Westminster, without referring to any flag whatever, neither the union jack nor any other, states in its preamble that we form part of the commonwealth of nations.

This is pointed out in the Statute of Westminster, in the preamble that was accepted by all the commonwealth countries at that time. Now I should like to quote section 11 of the Statute of Westminster. Here it is:

> Notwithstanding anything in the Interpretation Act, 1889, the expression "Colony" shall not, in any Act of the Parliament of the United Kingdom passed after the commencement of this Act, include a Dominion or any Province or State forming part of a Dominion.

Consequently, Mr. Speaker, the Statute of Westminster, which was accepted not only by the provinces of the dominion but by the parliament of the United Kingdom as well, clearly provided that thereafter Canada and the other commonwealth countries were no longer colonies.

I believe it is reasonable that the people of a colony be keen on showing, some way or other, their dependence on the mother country. But when the colony no longer exists, when it has clearly and definitely achieved independence, I do not think it is an indication of pride to be bent on showing in a flag any sign of dependence. I think that what proved to be an obstacle for some time to the adoption of a really distinctive flag, is the fact that my fellow countrymen speaking another language would have liked it very much if French Canadians had insisted on some little sign showing their feelings towards France. Well, we do not want any. Not because we are prejudiced against France or our feelings for France have diminished in any way, but because we believe that Canada is a full-grown country and that there is no reason why we should insist on some symbol of France on our flag.

And when we think we are practising Canadian nationalism, we think that we might resemble the Canadians who wanted our country to identify itself as a separate entity of North America, and not as an appendage or an appendix to a European country.

I happen to have here the House of Commons Debates for 1935, which I took for another reason, and where I read a speech by Henri Bourassa, who was one of the promoters of Canadian nationalism, not French Canadian, narrow or provincial, but a sound nationalism, a nationalism which makes us, French Canadians, think that it is a tragedy, like a new Dunkirk, to see a company like the Canadian Oil, for instance, sold to American interests, or John Labatt, sold to another American company; it grieves us, French Canadians, not because it is English capital that goes to the United States, but because it is Canadian capital which leaves us and goes to a foreign country.

That is why, Mr. Speaker, in the matter of a really distinctive flag, I do not think that we would be justified in accepting the red ensign. I agree that it was accepted in 1945, as I said a while ago, but we must not forget that in 1947 the Canadian parliament decided that Canadians could now avail themselves of the Canadian citizenship. We are now Canadian citizens, we are no longer British subjects, and I think that we should be proud to be Canadian citizens. If one must be proud to be a Canadian citizen, I feel one must also be proud to have a flag which clearly indicates that we are Canadian citizens and not British subjects or even French subjects.

The red ensign was used by our merchant navy; before, it had been used by the British merchant navy, and we added to it the Canadian coat of arms. Without discrediting the merchant navy which is practically non-existent today, the Canadian merchant navy has practically disappeared—even if it were still in existence, I feel that it would not be normal to accept an emblem belonging to it, that is belonging to a small group to give it to a much more important group such as the whole of Canada. It would not be normal, for instance, to take the flag of a province and have it adopted by the whole of Canada; it would neither be logical nor normal.

For the same reasons, I do not think that we should accept the flag of the merchant navy, even with the coat of arms of Canada added to it.

Mr. Speaker, I shall not go further. I speak for myself but I think I represent at least part of the members of my party. We also decided to have a free vote, not a vote according to our conscience, because we always vote according to our conscience, but a free vote enabling the House of Commons to take an appropriate decision. That is not a decision to be taken through a plebiscite or some way other than the one brought forward.

Since the Prime Minister's motion is not being discussed, I shall not discuss it either. It may be that some hon. members will wish to discuss it to make some political capital, but personally, I am discussing the motion before the house and I say that I am against it, because I am too proud of being a Canadian, and a Canadian in North America.

Mr. Gilles Grégoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, it can be realized that Canada is becoming a flag country. Today, we are asked to accept the red ensign. In some other instance, we are asked to accept—and we are prepared to do it—a flag with three maple leaves. Some people would also like us to accept the union jack.

The premier of Newfoundland stated that, as far as he was concerned, he favoured the union jack. I think that the premier of Manitoba also stated that the union jack would fly over the buildings in the province. The premier of Ontario suggested that his province should choose a flag.

We, in the province of Quebec, have the fleur-de-lis, which was adopted several years ago, and I even believe it was the first flag formally adopted in Canada. Our country is somewhat becoming a flag country. We are going to have a whole series of them. We wanted to have one for a long time, and a decision on the flag took very long. Now that we are about to get one, we may have several of them, a whole series. Some would like to prove in this way that we belong to the commonwealth and that we owe allegiance to the Queen.

Mr. Speaker, if the red ensign's purpose is to show that we form part of the British commonwealth, I think that the facts are being misrepresented, because we do not belong to the British commonwealth. We belong a lot more to the United States and to American interests than we could ever belong to the commonwealth or to the Queen of England.

We are dominated by American rather than English capital.

Therefore, under those circumstances, we might as well borrow part of the American flag—

Mr. Douglas Fisher (Port Arthur): You mean stars and stripes?

Mr. Grégoire: No. I do not think my words mean that I want the stars and stripes of the American flag on our distinctive national flag, but rather that I want it to have a really distinctive meaning. If we want to choose the union jack or the red ensign to show that we belong to the British commonwealth, I say then that we belong much more to the American capitalists than to the English commonwealth.

[Text]

Mr. Fisher: Put it in the other corner.

Mr. Grégoire: We might have four or five on the same flag, if it is agreeable to the hon. member for Port Arthur.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, when anybody talks about giving us a flag, it is always in order to promote Canadian unity, to give us a symbol to promote the development of Canadian unity.

On this matter, I remember quite well having read one day in the English edition of Maclean's magazine—I think it was in January or February of this year, when this question of a national flag was raised—something like this:

> When racial or regional causes for differences of opinion spring up between its citizens, Canada does not have a strong enough Canadian nationalism to maintain unity among all those groups.

That is true. We had absolutely nothing typically Canadian, no symbol, nothing in our economy of sociology that was truly Canadian. Everything was borrowed from outside. When rather serious conflicts of opinion arise, there is nothing to maintain unity among Canadians.

Mr. Bigg: Don't push me too far.

[Translation]

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Speaker, I do not think that anyone who wishes this country to be truly independent, who wishes it to have full control over its affairs, is a traitor but, I rather believe that those who take symbols from foreign countries are betraying their country, because they are in favour of foreign symbols and they try to impose them on us. We recognize that the real traitors are not among those who want first of all to be Canadians, but among those who want first of all to be English, because to be Canadians first of all means to develop for our own good and not for the benefit of foreign interests.

It is true that Canadian unity, when threatened, has no symbol, no common activities which could preserve it. The flag could have been one of those means, not the most important, but one of those means—

[Text]

Mr. Bigg: Don't push me too far.

Mr. Grégoire: I do not understand what you are saying. You are too far from here. If you have a question to ask, just ask it.

Mr. Bigg: May I ask the hon. member a question?

Mr. Grégoire: Yes.

Mr. Bigg: I use that term lightly. Does he know the meaning of the word "treason"?

Mr. Grégoire: Yes, I know the meaning of the word "treason".

Mr. Bigg: May I ask the hon. member another question?

Mr. Grégoire: If it is a stupid one, no.

[Translation]

Mr. Bigg: Mr. Speaker, this is the first time that I have the privilege to speak in the fine French language, and I wish that you show me the same consideration as I show you.

Here, and here only, can we enjoy the mutual freedom for which we have been praying for more than 200 years.

[Text]

Pardon my French.

[Translation]

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Speaker, I congratulate the hon. member for Athabasca (Mr. Bigg). He did not have to apologize for his French which, in my opinion, was very good indeed. I shall now continue my remarks.

It is possible to realize national unity but only if we think Canadian first of all, and not otherwise.

It seems to me as if I will have the opportunity to kill this motion tonight. This is a pleasure and a privilege for me. I will do so with pride in view of the fact that this is the first time in the last two years that such an opportunity is given me.

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): There are only two minutes left.

Mr. Grégoire: Perhaps the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm would like to do it himself, since he spoke very often of the national flag, but I shall keep for myself the pleasure and honour of talking out the motion under consideration. I prefer keeping for myself such an honour and privilege.

Mr. Speaker, the purpose of having a flag is to encourage national pride. I am proud of the country in which I live, but our pride must not limit itself to a flag; it must be accompanied by practical and concrete realizations.

If the Canadian people are to be proud of their flag, they must be able to lead a decent life in their own country.

If it is intended to make our fellow Canadians proud of the flag they will choose, we must also enable them to make a living in this country, to have access to the resources of their country, to take part in the development of their country and not leave them in poverty in a land of plenty such as Canada.

The flag of a country has a significance. It may show that it feels good to live in a country. But we may wonder whether, for hundreds of thousands of unemployed, for hundreds of thousands of people living on social assistance in our country, it feels so good to live under the flag of our country, that is the one they are given, if they are not allowed to live as human beings in a country as rich as ours.

In all this, when we discuss a flag project, let us ask ourselves if it will make our Canadian citizens proud of their country. They will not be proud of their country, only because of a flag flying over the Canadian parliament and over public buildings in the country, but they will be when the parliament of Canada gives this country concrete proof that it is good to live in a country such as ours and under a flag like the one we are prepared to adopt.

Besides, on the matter of a flag, we are unmindful of the fact that the government has introduced a resolution dealing with two flags, that we are asked to vote on two flags at the same time. I think it is neither normal nor proper. It is a trick to compel the members of the House of Commons to vote on two flags at the same time since they might reject one while supporting the other.

Mr. Pigeon: That is stupid.

Mr. Grégoire: Instead of that, one could ask that the red ensign be rejected—not that we have anything against it—because we do not want it as a Canadian flag. But we should be asked to vote on a single distinctive national flag in one resolution only.

[Text]

Mr. Fisher: Why don't you let us have a vote on it?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Batten): Order. The hour for the consideration of private members' business has expired.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Batten): It being six o'clock it is my duty, pursuant to provisional standing order 39A, to inform the house that the questions to be raised at ten o'clock p.m. this day are as follows:

The hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm (Mr. Pigeon), one distinctive national flag; the hon. member for Port Arthur (Mr. Fisher), Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, withdrawal of film respecting Prime Minister; the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen), Alaska highway, inquiry as to negotiations with the United States.

Miss Jewett: A tremendous program.

Mr. Fisher: Thank you.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Batten): As the house will be in committee at eight o'clock, will the house agree to resume now the business interrupted at five o'clock?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

NATIONAL HOUSING ACT

AMENDMENT RESPECTING RENEWAL PROGRAMS, PUBLIC HOUSING PROJECTS, ETC.

The house resumed consideration in committee of the following resolution—Mr. Nicholson—Mr. Batten in the chair:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure to amend the National Housing Act, 1954,

(a) to provide further assistance to provinces and municipalities carrying out urban renewal programs by authorizing Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation (hereinafter referred to as "the corporation") to make contributions and loans to provinces or municipalities to assist them in meeting the costs of such programs, and for this purpose to provide for the payment out of the consolidated revenue fund of amounts not exceeding in the aggregate one hundred million dollars;

(b) to authorize the corporation to make loans and to insure loans made by approved lenders to owners of existing houses in areas included in urban renewal programs;

(c) to authorize the corporation to make loans and contributions to provincially or municipally owned housing agencies for constructing or acquiring public housing projects and operating such projects, and to authorize the corporation to contribute a portion of the operating losses on any such projects that provide subsidized housing accommodation to individuals or families of low income;

(d) to permit federal-provincial public housing projects to include existing housing and hostel or dormitory type housing accommodation;

(e) to authorize the corporation to make loans to non-profit organizations to assist in the acquisition or construction of housing accommodation for individuals or families of low income;

(f) to authorize the corporation to make loans to co-operative associations and charitable corporations to assist in the construction of accommodation for university students and their families and to increase from one hundred million dollars to one hundred and fifty million dollars the maximum amount that may be paid out of the consolidated revenue fund for this purpose;

(g) to authorize the corporation to make loans to provinces to assist in the construction or expansion of sewage treatment projects and to authorize the corporation to forgive repayment of twenty five per cent of the principal and interest on any loans made to provinces or municipalities for this purpose in respect of work completed by March 31, 1967;

(h) to increase from two billion dollars to two and one half billion dollars the maximum charge on the consolidated revenue fund for direct loans by the corporation;

(i) to provide for the establishment of a special account in the consolidated revenue fund out of which amounts not exceeding in the aggregate one hundred million dollars may be advanced to the corporation for the making of loans to the holders of mortgages issued in respect of loans insured under the act and for the purchase by the corporation of mortgages issued to secure such loans;

(j) to increase the loan ratio for insured loans made to home owners and builders; and

(k) to provide further for certain changes in the administration of the act.

At six o'clock the committee took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The committee resumed at 8 p.m.

Mr. Winch: Mr. Chairman, at the time of the five o'clock adjournment I had been paying my respects to the late Jack Garland and the late Stewart Bates. I can say, without any hesitation at all, that having listened for many years to the late Jack Garland, when he sat on this side of the house discussing his particular study and project relating to housing, we all felt assured that from his position on the ministerial benches there would be great advances made in the National Housing Act, there would be progressive measures introduced, and that there would be a new impetus and drive given to the organization which we know as Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation. It is to be regretted that he is not here to give us of his vision of a new and expanded act, and to give of his drive to central mortgage and housing.

I firmly believe that there are needs for vital changes in the National Housing Act, that there is a great need for a new drive in central mortgage and housing. In speaking on this resolution I want first to make it clear that the major views of our party in this house have already been expressed by the hon. member for Greenwood. However there are one or two matters upon which I would like to speak briefly this evening.

I have always been a supporter of the underlying principles that motivated the organization of central mortgage and housing. I have always been a strong supporter of the National Housing Act, and I will continue to be a supporter of both the act and the organization, but I do feel the time has come for us to take a new look at the organization itself.

I believe that it is becoming somewhat moribund; that it is being engulfed in too much red tape; that it is wallowing in a pit of detail; that its vision does not extend very much beyond its organizational nose; that architecturally it looks along straight lines and some of its construction, especially in apartments, reminds me of upturned wooden crates with too much emphasis on straight line architectural theories, instead of the modern curve and crescent.

I feel, sir, that it is wallowing so much in detail, red tape, and lack of vision, that progress that could have been made during the past year or 18 months has not been made, and no commencement is even envisaged in the near future on projects which should now be nearing completion.

I was most interested in the remarks of the minister this afternoon when he was speaking of the responsibility of municipalities, of the need for clearing slums and for new development. When he said that it gave me the perfect example of what I have in mind, when I was reminded of his own constituency of Vancouver Centre. With all due honour to the wonderful people who reside in the four to six blocks east of Main street —the minister I know will agree—though a certain start was made in that area, there is a great deal to be done and if there ever was an area where the bulldozer should go in—and should have gone in years ago—it is right in that area at the eastern end of the minister's constituency.

I am convinced from my own knowledge, and I feel certain the minister must feel the same way, that a start could have been made there a year or 18 months ago. He knows, as I know, that the residents in that area were prepared to do something. They wanted to co-operate with the municipality, the province and central mortgage and housing. At their own expense they hired an architect and drafted plans. They submitted their plans to the city, to the province and to central mortgage and housing, yet month after month went by and no start was made, although the money was there as well as the plans.

I personally made a visit down here to Ottawa to see central mortgage and housing about this development, and I can only say that it was the red tape, the detail, the lack of co-operation here in Ottawa that have caused the stalemate on that project—and unnecessarily from my point of view, and I think from the point of view of the residents themselves. Now we have a proposition that in future, perhaps, they can go ahead with this plan, which would have been of terrific benefit to Vancouver because it would have meant a development primarily of a two-section block area, but eventually of a four-section block area of modern construction. The oriental touch however, would be kept side by side with the business Chinatown of Vancouver, so as to provide new homes for the thousands of our Chinese Canadians who live in the area and a tourist attraction unparalleled in Canada, with the second largest Chinatown on the North American continent. Yet this plan has been held up, for no reason, as far as I have been able to ascertain from Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation, though the people are ready not only with the plans but with the money from trust funds.

Now we hear of a redevelopment plan for the Chinatown in this area and I am most pleased to have received a letter from Mr. Graham who is director of planning for the city of Vancouver under date of April 10. He says:
