The two go hand in glove. Many of our business institutions in Atlantic Canada are fish plants and firms that have to be located on or next to wharfs, first to bring products in from the sea and, in some cases, to export to other areas. Wharfs are very important to the development of Atlantic Canada.

For example, in my riding we face a desperate situation, with many wharfs being condemned. As a result of the Small Craft Harbours Program, new wharfs are being constructed and new projects are being implemented in many fishing communities. In my riding there is presently almost $20 million in expenditures for new wharfs. That is very important to the area.

I think the two programs are complementary. Certainly, the business component of this is absolutely paramount. If a person has a good idea that will facilitate development, we want to look at it.

Mr. Manly: Mr. Speaker, when we are talking about the economy of an area such as the Atlantic provinces, not only to stimulate new development but to protect what we already have, one of the concerns which have been dominant in the House of Commons over the past year has been the refusal of the Government to stand up for Canadian fishing rights in the Gulf of St. Lawrence vis-à-vis the incursion of the French into the areas around St. Pierre and Miquelon. I have just received information that a French naval tug has arrested the Canadian fishing vessel, the Maritimer, and is presently escorting it to St. Pierre. The Canadian Consulate has been advised and will be meeting the vessel.

I wonder if the Hon. Member, who is the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans, would care to comment on this failure of the Canadian Government to make very clear our intentions and to stand up for the Canadian fishing industry in a way that would prevent this kind of French chauvinism from intruding upon our historic fishing grounds?

Mr. Binns: Mr. Speaker, I can assure the Hon. Member that the Government is doing everything it can to ensure that fish stocks in Atlantic Canada are preserved for fishermen in Atlantic Canada and that they present the most economic opportunity possible to the Atlantic area. I suppose that is why we have a dispute with the St. Pierre area at the present time. We have set a quota for that whole region which we feel will preserve the stocks for the future. The French have not recognized the quota which we feel is important to ensure that the stock is maintained in future years. That has produced the situation we are in today.

We are simply not going to allow overfishing of that stock if it jeopardizes our own Canadian fishing industry in the long haul. Moving into the Gulf of St. Lawrence, to which I think the Hon. Member is referring as well, it is our intention, wherever possible, to ensure that the maximum amount of fish is available to Atlantic Canadian fishermen and is processed in Canadian fish plants. It simply makes good sense for us to do that, and that will continue to be our objective.

Mr. Manly: On a brief supplementary, I would like to know what the Government is going to do about this latest affront to Canadian sovereignty, this assault upon Canada's right to manage its own fish stocks? Even if that area is disputed, we still have rights there. Are we going to allow the French to act with impunity, arresting a Canadian fishing vessel operating in Canadian waters?

Mr. Binns: Mr. Speaker, I do not have the benefit of the note which was just passed to the Hon. Member with respect to this issue. However, I can assure the House that the Government of Canada will do everything possible to ensure that Canadian fishing interests are maintained. We have been heavily involved in negotiations with the French. There have been ongoing activities. There have now been arrests on both sides, apparently. We will, as we have in the past, continue to stick up for the interests of Canadian fishermen.

Mr. Caldwell: Mr. Speaker, I thank you for recognizing me again. I did not realize that I would be allowed a supplementary question. I thought we might be finished at five o'clock. I think the Hon. Member for Cardigan (Mr. Binns) somewhat misunderstood the question I asked him the first time, although I appreciate the answer he gave to me. What I was trying to get at, and I am certainly not downplaying the idea that wharfs are important to a fishing area because I want the Hon. Member to realize that I represent a riding which has the largest fresh water fishery in the world, that is, Wheatley, Ontario. I would like the Hon. Member to realize that, as well as the fact that fishing is important to my riding.

I was trying to get the Hon. Member to explain the difference between the idea of this program, developed by this Government, as compared to the ideas in the past of regional development and diversity under previous Governments, which did not seem to be working. That is the question I was asking him. Could he do that for me?

Mr. Binns: Mr. Speaker, I think the difference is clearly that what we had in the past was a national program that was applied regionally. For instance, one could get the same benefits in Prince Edward Island as one could in Ontario, except that it might be in a different tier or different level of support. One might get 25 per cent support in Ontario and 35 per cent support in Prince Edward Island or another area of Atlantic Canada which is depressed. This is not a national program. This is an Atlantic program set up under a new agency which is independent. It has a president located in the region and it has its head office in the region. It can spend millions of dollars without ever consulting with Ottawa.

The $1.05 billion which the corporation will spend will be spent regionally, based on ideas that are developed in the communities and in the provinces. We think it will serve the best interests of Atlantic Canada.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The time for questions and comments has now terminated. Debate.

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the opportunity to speak briefly in the debate on Bill C-103 which establishes the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency. As my colleague, the Hon. Member for St. John's East (Mr. Harris), indicated, while we support this Bill as one measure that will be helpful, there are a number of concerns we have both in terms of the way in which the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency is structured and set up as well as the fact that it does not really go far enough in dealing with the very serious problems of Atlantic Canada.

Our concerns fall into three main categories. First, there is no goal in this legislation to reduce regional disparity. It is not mandated to move toward certain goals as the Government moved, for example, to institute the six and five program of a number of years ago to cut back wages, and as the Government has moved to do other things by setting goals. It does not have a mandate in Bill C-103 to reduce regional disparity. It is a vague hope.

Second, there is no insurance of equity or fairness among the different provinces. There is no insurance within individual provinces that the regions that most need help in development will be getting the assistance. Finally, there is no real commitment of significant new money. There is $200 million per year over five years. That is for all of the Atlantic region. It simply does not begin to address the very serious regional economic disparity which has existed and which groups such as the Economic Council of Canada and OECD have singled out as being of critical importance for Canada to attack.

We have to ask the question whether the $1.05 billion over the next five years is actually new money. According to the Minister for International Trade (Mr. Crosbie) when he appeared before the committee in St. John's on March 7, 1988, there are no actual ACOA projects as yet. Yet we hear over and over again that the $1.05 billion is actually new money. If it is new money, when is it going to become available for program funding?

The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) has often referred to the Economic Council of Canada as an authoritative agency which supports his free trade inititive with the United States. It is interesting that in its latest annual report it indicates that programs administered by the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency are "likely to be the targets of U.S. countervailing action". Atlantic Canada knows what that U.S. countervailing action is all about because it has had its groundfish attacked by countervail. In fact, in the U.S. action against Atlantic groundfish, over 50 federal and provincial programs were cited by the ITC as constituting unfair subsidies to the Atlantic fishery.

Here we have another program that we are putting in place which the Government hopes will do something to reduce regional disparity. It does not have goals but it does have the hope. It is contributing some money, not enough but some. The Economic Council of Canada says that the programs administered by the agency are likely to be the targets of countervailing agencies. In response to this concern that has been raised by the Economic Council all we have is the assurance of the Minister for International Trade that it is complete nonsense to believe that the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency would be threatened by U.S. actions. He makes a great many statements that the concerns that are raised by certain organizations, including very reputable and supposedly impartial organizations such as the Economic Council, are complete nonsense. The Minister is full of bluff and bluster and stonewalling, but he does not deal with the substance of the concern.

Why should we believe the Minister on this issue when we have seen American actions on the whole question of groundfish, and when the trade arrangement itself provides for a period of five years to determine what is and what is not an unfair subsidy? That is the very period over which this $1.05 billion will be running, at the end of which it will have expired. Perhaps the Government expects itself that it will be targeted for being unfair and so it will just let it run out at the end of five years. In this way it will not be embarrassed when it is indicated by the United States that it constitutes an unfair subsidy.

Considering that the Government has made many statements, repeated statements time after time, that approvals for the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency will be determined on the merits of the application, it is worth noting that the President of the Economic Council of New Brunswick, Mr. Reno Volpe, who is also a member of the Advisory Board to ACOA, expressed the concern that urban centres might be given a greater degree of development. He said that they would have an advantage over rural areas. In other words, there is a concern that the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency is going to continue on a regional basis the kind of centralist tendencies that we have seen in the Canadian economy over the last number of years in which more and more of our industry, our development and our commerce tend to be concentrated in the region around Toronto. So with this attempt to have some development in Atlantic Canada we will have a sort of minor centralization. But it is not getting out to the small communities where development is really needed.

In this connection it might be helpful to look at some of the testimony that was put before the committee studying Bill C-113 which deals with the Department of Western Economic Diversification. The two Bills are somewhat similar. Appearing before the legislative committee was Mr. Dennis Young who is the President of the Canadian Association of Single Industry Towns. Mr. Young pointed out that over the past 100 years there have been over 400 single industry towns close cross Canada, many of them in Atlantic Canada, western Canada and northern Ontario. These towns represent single industries such as mining, forestry, fishing, oil and gas and agriculture. The association is trying to take a leadership role to prevent this from happening to other communities, and to encourage all communities to take greater control of their own future through the design, the development and implementation of community self-reliance principles and mechanisms. That is what Mr. Young said to the committee.

But the question that I have, both with regard to Bill C-103 and the western diversification Bill, is how do these Bills really help small communities to do this? Rather what is happening is that proposals will be brought forward. They will be approved on a proposal-by-proposal basis in accordance with what the Minister himself thinks in the final analysis. There is not any real focus. Again, this is a critique of the western development program. It points out that the western diversification initiative was launched without any articulated development policies or principles. Consequently, they came off the mark with no focus. To this day the public is still confused as to what it is all about. We believe that when a shotgun approach is used one will end up shooting oneself in the foot. What was said about western diversification is also true about the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency.

It has been called a very haphazard, reactionary approach to development which will likely result in our spending another $1 billion of taxpayers' money without ever achieving the long-term goal of diversification for western Canada. The same goes for the $1 billion that will be spent in Atlantic Canada. It is likely to be spent without achieving the goals of reducing regional disparity.

For example, in both Bills municipalities are not eligible for assistance to support community-based economic development initiatives. They are not eligible to receive assistance for infrastructure.

The Association of Single Industry Towns went on to make a number of recommendations. I would like to read them because I think they apply not only to western diversification but also to Atlantic Canada. First, the association suggests that we adopt a truly bottom-up approach to development which focuses on removing constraints to development and the real barriers to economic growth and diversification. WDO should review the association's frontier development policy and use it as a guide to develop a comprehensive set of development principles, policies, programs and services which will serve as a framework for the future of western diversification for this generation and for the next. In other words, we need to have principles in place. It is not just enough to say that individual proposals will be considered on their merit.

The WDO should develop ways and means of supporting and mobilizing community-based economic development, first, by allowing municipalities to be eligible applicants for western development funds. In view of the fact that the entrepreneurial energy is still a relatively untapped resource in Canada, western diversification should develop ways and means of identifying entrepreneurial spirit and encouraging the entrepreneurial development process in every community in western Canada. Again, it should play a lead role in developing a world class market information system to focus our entrepreneurial energy into the areas of highest opportunity.

So there is the concern that, again, we have this centralist tendency. Neither the Western Diversification Office nor the Atlantic Opportunities Agency is really fighting against this and working to get development and opportunity into small communities where it is most needed.

There is nothing in this Bill that has changed the meaning of the statement made by Senator Lowell Murray last June in which he said that final decisions will be made by him with respect to ACOA's decisions, in spite of a great number of witnesses who appeared before the committee examining Bill C-103 who expressed concern over the need for regional responsibility for the agency.

It is worth-while pointing out that there is no mandate in setting up the agency to ensure that a certain number of women are represented on the advisory board. There is no mandate to ensure that academia, labour and small business are represented. Rather, they are people who have been picked by the Ministers involved. That means that they will tend to be responsible to the Ministers rather than to their communities.

Perhaps at this point a few remarks on the role of women might be helpful. Between 1972 and 1983, the number of women entrepreneurs increased nationally by 140 per cent. The number of male entrepreneurs increased by only 10.7 per cent. There is a great growth in the number of women who are getting into business. A study prepared for the Canadian Advisory Council on the Status of Women predicted that 65 per cent of the new businesses started in Canada would be created by women. Here I am quoting from the Newfoundland and Labrador Advisory Council on the Status of Women which stated, "Women are responsible for starting two-thirds of new businesses and they succeed in keeping businesses going 47 per cent of the time compared with 25 per cent in male owned business, and new businesses are responsible for creating 70 per cent of new jobs".

Here we have a situation where the new jobs are being created by small businesses, and the great percentage of those small businesses which start and succeed are started by women. Yet there is an agency which is attempting to create opportunities in Atlantic Canada, and its advisory board is not mandated to have a certain number of women.

The Royal Commission on Employment in Newfoundland recommended that the federal Government should "appoint approximately the same percentage of females as males". There is a need to use a whole range of support and promotion strategies to encourage women actively to undertake enterprise initiatives.

According to the Newfoundland and Labrador Provincial Advisory Council there should be a means by which ACOA can make affirmative action policies a component of its terms of reference. In other words, it should not be simply left to the good intentions of the different Ministers from Atlantic Canada to pick people who might be women who represent labour, or people who may be small business people. They should have a right to be represented on this advisory board, if it is to be truly representative.

In looking at the function of the board, there have been recommendations that the board should have much more say in how the funds will actually be distributed. Again the Minister for International Trade the Minister from Newfoundland, feels that this not desirable. When appearing before the committee he said, "How could we do that and have ACOA's budget spent by an independent board? We would have no control at the political level; the Ministers would have no control over where the money is being spent; Atlantic Ministers would have no input or influence over it". That is what it is all about, Mr. Speaker. It is over political control. The Minister, the Hon. Member for St. John's West, wants political control. He is not willing to trust a representative board that could be established that would represent a broad cross-section of people from Atlantic Canada to make decisions that would be in the best interests of the entire region. He wants to have that political control centralized in his hands.

That suggests to me, and I am sure it suggests to the people of Atlantic Canada, that the Minister sees the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency as an agency that will give a great opportunity to that Minister and to other cabinet Ministers to have control over patronage. They see this as an opportunity agency for patronage. That is one of our concerns. The manner in which this is structured does not put it all at arm's length from being used as a means of rewarding friends and punishing those who are no so friendly to the Government.

The Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency needs a mandate targeted to reduce economic disparity. We need an advisory board that will be independent and at arm's length from the Minister, and not dependent upon the Minister's appointment, one that would be truly representative and would have some power.

I urge the Government to look at some of the recommendations made by the New Democratic Party over the last two years when we studied the whole question of the need for development in Canada. These suggestions were made with respect to Canada as a whole, but they certainly apply very concretely to Atlantic Canada.

First, there is a need for upgrading municipal infrastructure. In co-operation with the municipalities across Canada we have suggested a $1.2 billion annual investment toward upgrading municipal infrastructure. We would like to see a $200 million single industry community diversification fund that is in line with the type of recommendations that were referred to earlier.

That would provide single industry communities with the means to explore diversification options in terms of economic activities.

Money should be spent on affordable housing. An allocation of $500 million in this area would help with some 500,000 housing units. We need a community initiative fund, a youth initiative fund, and a technological change fund. These are the ways in which we could put money out into communities that would stimulate real development and provide real opportunities for development for small communities and also larger communities in Atlantic Canada, western Canada, northern Ontario and, in fact, for Canada as a whole. They would help to reduce the economic disparity that has plagued Atlantic Canada for so long.

Ms. Dewar: I certainly did appreciate the comments of the Hon. Member for Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands (Mr. Manly) on the whole development of the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency. As we talk about it and recognize that there is not the type of representation of the ordinary person from Atlantic Canada and a broad perspective of representation, does the Hon. Member think that there can be the ability to do some grass-root strategic planning and economic development?

I heard the Hon. Member and the Parliamentary Secretary say that the agency will be sitting back and waiting for people to come to it with projects, and then it would react. If we have a commitment to economic development taking place within a community, some of that has to be in over-all strategic planning of the skills that lie in that community, and how they can be developed.

I would like to hear from the Hon. Member exactly how he thinks that that could work with an amendment to the establishment of this agency, or the type of representation that is presently there, and what he would propose.

Mr. Manly: I believe that the whole suggestion that this will be done on a proposal-by-proposal basis and that the proposals will be judged on their individual merit ignores the fact that we need proposals that will have ramifications throughout the region and the sub-regions, in order that the proposals will result in development of the area rather than proposals that will succeed by themselves. If we want proposals like that, then they have to come not only from individual entrepreneurs. We are all in favour of individual entrepreneurs receiving some assistance and being able to do their thing. That is important. They can create some development in that manner.

Even more fundamental than helping individual entrepreneurs is the need to help communities to develop their plans for economic development, to get their act together to see in what direction they want to go as communities, to assess their strengths, talents, and resources, and how they can develop a game plan that will lead them from being in a fragile situation where their economy is threatened to one where they will be able to establish a more diversified base. A community plan would be developed and then proposals would come in that were in accordance with those community plans. I would like to see the agency make way for that kind of proposal to be developed, submitted and accepted.

Ms. Dewar: Mr. Speaker, it has come to my attention that a couple of admirals were speaking in Halifax about six weeks ago saying that they certainly expected the people in Atlantic Canada to support construction of the nuclear submarines. If they did not support that kind of program, how could they expect to get all the things they thought were due to them? It seems to me that when you address the agency structure, you address the kind of control Ministers will have. When you look at the structure and know that there are these economic threats, and given the militarization in the Halifax area, is there some concern that this agency will not truly speak for the people? Rather, will it be controlled by a Government that seems to be bent on making sure that militarization, and expansion of the military-industrial complex, takes place through economic development? I would like the Hon. Member to comment on that.

Mr. Manly: Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for her question, which I think is extremely important. The Minister said he wanted to keep political control. If we have a Government in place, as we do now, that sees militarization of the economy as the way to go, and it is proceeding full steam ahead, then there will be a great deal of pressure on different regions. If you have the possibility of military contracts, there will be pressure on those regions to accept them even though the long-term consequences are negative for Canada, negative for our world, indeed negative for those individual areas.

I think this ties in with something I mentioned earlier about how this agency might be subject to U.S. countervailing duty pressure. All these programs might be regarded as being unfair subsidies. However, the one area that the Mulroney-Reagan trade deal exempts from charges of unfair subsidy is military procurement. Any program supposedly in the interests of national security cannot be targeted as involving unfair subsidies. This will result in increased pressure upon regions to accept military contracts as the one way in which the Government can intervene to prop up an economy facing difficulties. That is not the future I want to see for Atlantic Canada or western Canada or any other part of Canada.

Mr. McMillan: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the Hon. Member would clarify for me and the House whether an NDP Government would be opposed to defence procurement in the Atlantic region. In addition, would he clarify an apparent ambiguity between what he said and what the defence critic for his Party seems to have said in the country at large, that an NDP Government would actually increase defence expenditures, not decrease them?

Mr. Manly: Mr. Speaker, certainly we are not opposed to defence procurement in Atlantic Canada any more than we are opposed to it in western Canada or central Canada. What we are very strongly opposed to and will continue to be opposed to is the militarization of the economy. We are opposed to a trade deal which the Government is rushing into that will make it possible for the U.S. to say that a whole range of Canadian programs constitute unfair subsidies.

The Economic Council of Canada very seriously suggested that the programs of this agency can be targeted as constituting unfair subsidies. The one area exempt from that is defence procurement. We are saying that this is the wrong way to be going with respect to regional development. We should have other options available to us than simply saying something was in the interest of national security, therefore we are going to be giving defence contracts to different parts of the country.

That is the way things are done in the U.S. They do not have our kind of regional development programs to assist parts of the country facing economic difficulty. What they do have are military procurement contracts which are dropped on practically every congressional district to try to maintain support by the people for the military industrial complex. We are opposed to that complex, and I would like to see members of the Government opposed to it as well.

Mr. McMillan: Mr. Speaker, my two questions require a yes or no answer. Is the NDP committed to increasing expenditures or decreasing expenditures for defence purposes? In addition, would an NDP Government have given the defence procurement contract for the naval frigates to the City of Saint John, New Brunswick?

Mr. Manly: Mr. Speaker, we have not arrived at any final figures with respect to what our defence expenditures are going to be. However, I can guarantee they will be less than the price tag for the fancy new submarines that "Little Boy Blue" wants to buy.

Second, with respect to the contracts which have already been let to Saint John, certainly we support those contracts, and that is where they would stay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions and comments are now terminated. Debate.

Mr. George Baker (Gander—Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, I have just a few words concerning this Bill.

The attitude of the federal Government towards Atlantic Canada, as you know, leaves a lot to be desired. Nowhere in this Bill is the fishery or agriculture mentioned. I just got off the phone speaking to a lady who is the mother of a fishing captain off the south coast of Newfoundland. His name his Mr. Willy Bolt. He is from Grand Le Pierre and he got in his boat this morning at five o'clock and sailed out of Fortune Bay with five crew members aboard, two from Port aux Basques and three from Grand Le Pierre. They steamed out towards St. Pierre and Miquelon. At this very moment, and for the next 10 minutes, they are being towed into port in St. Pierre, having been arrested by the Government of France. It is a 65-foot dragger that was dragging for codfish in the disputed zone around St. Pierre and Miquelon off the south coast of Newfoundland.

You know what we as a Canadian Government did recently, and I applauded the Government for its attitude towards Atlantic Canada in this case. It arrested a French boat that came into Canadian waters and said: "Please arrest me because I am fishing illegally". However, at this very moment there is a French patrol vessel towing a 65-foot Canadian dragger that was fishing legally in the disputed zone off the south coast of Newfoundland with five crew members aboard.

We talk about the attitude of the Canadian Government. I will tell you what its attitude is. Over this vessel being towed flies an RCMP helicopter. Then there is a fixed-wing aircraft belonging to the Coast Guard. There is a fisheries patrol vessel in the area. What did the Government of Canada do in the past three hours since the vessel had a cable forcibly hooked on, was forcibly boarded and is being dragged into port at this very moment? It will be in port in exactly 12 minutes from now. What did the Canadian Government do? I have been speaking to the family members of that vessel and I know, putting the time together, that the Canadian Government was notified 15 minutes before the vessel was boarded. It was noted by official text from the Government of France that a "Canadian vessel, the Maritimer, has violated the 12-mile territorial sea around the nation of France off the east coast of Canada and will therefore be arrested". We, of course, have to thank the RCMP for notifying the families of what took place.

Some arrangements have been made for the crew members aboard to telephone home between ten and twelve o'clock this evening, that is, Newfoundland time, which is two and a half hours beyond our time here. That is all well, fine and good. But there was not one single word of complaint or objection from the Government of Canada to the Government of France up to this very moment while the vessel is being forcibly towed to port. There was not one word of official objection.

I suggested to the Government—perhaps you might consider it to be a bit too forceful, Sir,—that at least what should be done is for the Canadian patrol vessel in the area to stick its nose in front of the French patrol vessel, communicate with it and say, "Look, you are not allowed to arrest somebody aboard a vessel in the disputed zone according to the agreement", which the Government keeps referring to in the House, the 1972 agreement which says that neither nation shall board another's fishing vessel in the disputed zone of area 3ps. But no, Mr. Speaker, the Government did not do that. In fact, the Government has not objected to the fact that this action took place by the Government of France. We will be hearing more about this in the next 24 hours.

The Official Opposition has put together a motion to be dealt with tomorrow in the House deploring the fact that the Government of France has carried out an illegal act in a disputed zone. We also condemn the Government of Canada for its handling of this entire dispute with the Government of France. This demonstrates the attitude of the federal Government toward Atlantic Canada. I just wanted to mention that because I think it is important, and everybody should realize that right now there is another six or seven minutes left before the vessel ties up. The Government notified the Honorary Consul General, who is perhaps watching what I am saying here in the House. That was the Government's action. There is television hook-up there and he is probably watching me now because he has to go to the port in another seven minutes. His instructions from the Department of External Affairs are to look at how the crew members are being treated.

Just imagine, Mr. Speaker, that is the action of the federal Government, namely, to notify the Honorary Consul General to go down to the wharf in six minutes time and watch this vessel being hauled forcibly into port and watch the crew members being taken off the boat and taken to what I am sure will not be a hotel. We all know what the French Government said about our jails in St. John's, Newfoundland. However, I will know what is going on tonight because I will be speaking to the crew members anywhere between ten to twelve o'clock. I will report on it in the House tomorrow while our motion is being debated.

Getting back to the Bill, there is not one mention of fisheries in it. In the entire Bill that deals with opportunity for economic development in Atlantic Canada there is not a single mention in the Bill of fisheries. There is not a single mention in the Bill of primary resources. There is not a single mention in the Bill of agriculture. There is not one single mention in the Bill of infrastructure. In fact, Mr. Speaker, when we say infrastructure we mean roads, water and sewage systems and the things that are lacking in Atlantic Canada today and which need some attention paid to them. Here is a Bill through which the Government of Canada will spend $1 billion, but there is not a single mention of those items.

We have highly paid people in charge of this Atlantic Opportunities Agency. About 110 of them are working for it. They are fine people, doing an excellent job—they must be because they can make over $100,000 a year. Where can you find a comparable salary scale in the present federal bureaucracy in Atlantic Canada? I do not know. I have searched. None of the agencies or departments we have have a salary scale that goes over $100,000 a year.

Mr. McMillan: How many people are there? One?

Mr. Baker: No.

Mr. McMillan: Two?

Mr. Baker: No. I can get the exact numbers, but the majority of people listed are in what is called middle and upper management. That amounts to over 200 people altogether. The middle management salary runs, I believe, to $75,000 or $76,000. In other words, I do not care what you look for in the federal or in the provincial Government, this is one fine, dandy pay scale for 350 employees.

Mr. Foster: It is more than a provincial cabinet Minister would make.

Mr. Baker: That is right. More than a provincial cabinet Minister would make.

Now, Mr. Speaker, what does the Government do, according to the Bill? We tried to move an amendment to this Bill to force the agency to spend equal amounts of money throughout the region or to try to initiate industry in Atlantic Canada where it was needed. If this agency is just handling applications, do you know where the applications will come from in Atlantic Canada? If you talk about Newfoundland, they will come from St. John's. If you are talking about Nova Scotia, they will come from Halifax. For sure they will not come automatically from Cape Breton Island. For sure they will not come automatically from any of the rural areas where the unemployment rates are the highest.

• (1750)

We tried to impress upon the Government during the committee meetings and through the amendments presented to the House that if the Government is to pay people lots of money, if it is to create a bureaucracy in Atlantic Canada whose members are being paid such wonderful salaries, a great many of them at a hundred grand a year, in poor Atlantic Canada, sitting in an office in St. John's, Newfoundland, then the least it could do is to put in the legislation the demands of these people that the bureaucracy generate the jobs which are needed in the high unemployment areas of Atlantic Canada and not in the cities.

Do you know, Mr. Speaker, that there are more employees of this agency in Ottawa than there are in Charlottetown, Prince Edward Island, or in St. John's, Newfoundland?

Some Hon. Members: Shame!

Mr. Baker: They even have a vice president here. Oh, yes, the Vice President of the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency—we should call it the Atlantic Canada overblown agency—is in Ottawa.

Mr. Gauthier: Is that right?

Mr. Baker: Yes. There are more employees in Ottawa than there are in Newfoundland.

The Government really has a problem. There are so many things that I could bring up about this Bill. Government Members told every Premier that they will not accept any applications for what they call infrastructure, harbour developments, the cleaning up of neighbourhoods, the installation of water and sewer where it is needed or the paving of roads because there are so many unpaved roads—

Mr. Dingwall: Environmental clean-ups. They should be important.

Mr. Baker: Environmental clean-ups should be important but are not allowed. The provincial Governments are told that there is no sense in applying for this, but there is $1 billion here. If the Liberals or the NDP hold it up in the House of Commons, they are preventing this $1 billion from being spent. That is what they have said.

They have not mentioned where the bureaucracy is. They have not mentioned the very things that are important to Atlantic Canada. There is no doubt that some programs do receive quite a bit of funding. There is a program called Section 38 which receives a lot of money. Under that program, people go to work but they cannot collect unemployment insurance from their work. It is a big program in Atlantic Canada.

There is another program with hundreds of millions of dollars called Job Development. Under that program, people have to be trained to do something. There is no attention paid to what they are doing, as long as they are being trained to do something. Ever since this Government took office, thousands and thousands of people have been hired to learn a trade. What trades are being learned? Carpentry work or the use of chain-saws in the woods are being learned. People can only get into the project if they do not know how to do it.

These positions are advertised on the radio. People cannot go to Canada Manpower any more to register. No, that has been removed. Any jobs that come up are announced on the radio. People have to listen to their radios. There are jokes being heard all over the place in Atlantic Canada about listening to the radio, and you can imagine what some of them are, Mr. Speaker.

Somebody says: "Well, you know, I want to get a job in the Public Service. Well, I have to bring my radio wherever I go. If I'm working at another job, I have to bring in the radio and listen to the radio at the time the jobs come on". When the jobs come on, they say: "Five carpenters needed at such and such a job site, please consult with your local Manpower Office, but if you are a carpenter, you can't get one of the jobs". Just imagine, an electrician needed, only qualification is no experience.

Bowater and Abitibi-Price laid off a lot of workers because of a cut-back in logging operations. The Government of Canada, in its wisdom, decided to have a reforestation program—are you saying that I am at the end of my time, Mr. Speaker?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Yes, but I hate to say that because I really enjoy the Hon. Member's debate. Is there unanimous consent to let him carry on until 6 p.m.?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Baker: The boat The Maritimer, skippered by Willie Bolt himself of Grand Le Pierre, two minutes ago arrived in St. Pierre with a cable on from a French fisheries patrol vessel, hauled into the port. I presume Willie and the boys are now being escorted to some accommodations as the Government of France said that the nation violated the 12-mile territorial sea around the nation of France off the coast of Canada. I presume that they are being given good French hospitality.

Mr. Gauthier: French cuisine.

Mr. Baker: Yes, French cuisine. The people who were arrested in Newfoundland complained that all they got was pizza. What did they expect, Beaujolais Nouveau?

I suppose I could conclude by saying that what will happen to these fishermen over the next three or four hours on St. Pierre and Miquelon will be very important to the Government of Canada and to what happens in the negotiations between Canada and France. A lot of people are very, very angry. As I say, I have spoken to the family members, and they do have the House of Commons cable down there. Maybe Willie is watching the broadcast. Everyone is very concerned about the crew members. Hopefully the thing will be resolved this evening, but you will hear about it in the House tomorrow, Mr. Speaker, and I can guarantee that the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark), the Minister of Fisheries (Mr. Siddon) and that other Minister from St. John's had better be prepared.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Some Hon. Members: No.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 66 deemed to have been moved.

CORRECTIONAL SERVICES—FUNDING OF AGENCY TO ASSIST EX-PRISONERS IN NOVA SCOTIA

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, on April 29 of this year, I asked a question of the Minister of Justice (Mr. Hnatyshyn) in his capacity as the Acting Solicitor General. At that time, I asked the Minister about the decision of the Correctional Service of Canada to cut funding in the amount of some $127,000 to a very important service for ex-prisoners in the Province of Nova Scotia.

This particular service is known as ROPE, the Real Opportunities for Prisoner Employment Program, and it assists ex-prisoners in getting re-established in the community and in finding jobs. The program is headed by an outstanding Nova Scotian named Rocky Jones, and as I say, it has had all federal government funding, some $127,000 in total, cut by the Conservative Government.

I asked the Minister at the time to look into this cut in funding for this important agency and, in fact, to restore the funding to the agency which helps so many hundreds of ex-convicts every year. In responding, the Minister of Justice indicated that he would indeed take up the matter with his colleague, the Solicitor General (Mr. Kelleher), and ensure that he gets back to me within an appropriate time with the information required. We are still waiting for an explanation from the Solicitor General as to this very callous cut in funding for an important community organization which helps ex-prisoners get reintegrated into society.

Real Opportunities for Prisoner Employment, or ROPE, was created in 1979 as a short-term research project which operated from the Carleton Community Correctional Centre. It was incorporated as a society in February of 1982. It operated with the basic premise that lack of employment and subsequent income hastened an offender's involvement in criminal activities, both prior to his involvement with the criminal justice system and during.

The key elements of job creation and job placement are the primary indicators for evaluation of programs for funding sources but, as ROPE points out, the root causes of the clients' problems are far deeper than their inability to obtain and maintain employment. They note that the majority of ex-prisoners have drug and alcohol problems and that many suffer from severe addiction. The instability of their life style prevents most from maintaining stable employment. Thus, Mr. Speaker, employment-related programs for the offender must provide for interventions that deal with the root causes of the person's problems.

Since 1982 the Correctional Service of Canada has provided CORE funding for ROPE. That involves administrative costs including administrative staff and job placement or peer counsellors. The program evaluations of this excellent program have been glowing. In fact, the latest written program evaluation of ROPE was conducted in 1985 by Jack Stewart of the Correctional Service of Canada which stated:

> The CORE program of the ROPE Association providing job search and placement services is extremely successful and competitive and deserves the strongest possible support from CSC in maintaining the service and assisting in the broadening of the financial base of the CORE program.

The program got top marks for the work that it was doing with former prisoners to help them reintegrate in the community. Despite that, as of April 30 of this year their funding was totally cut. My New Democratic Party colleague in the provincial legislature in Nova Scotia, Mr. Bob Levy, the NDP justice spokesperson in Nova Scotia, gave a notice of motion on Wednesday, April 13, as follows:

> Whereas Real Opportunities for Prisoner Employment, also known as ROPE, has provided an invaluable service to ex-prisoners in getting re-established in the community and not ending up back in prison; and
> Whereas it costs between $50,000 to $60,000 per year to keep one person in prison while ROPE served 200 people a year with an annual budget of less than $150,000; and
> Whereas Correctional Services Canada has arbitrarily decided to terminate its support for this innovative and important service to Atlantic Canada;
> Therefore be it resolved that this House call upon the federal Solicitor General to reverse Correctional Services' decision to cancel its funding of ROPE and to consider greater support of community correctional services.

I support that call by my distinguished colleague in Nova Scotia, Mr. Levy. Indeed, by cutting funding for this important program the Government is doing a grave disservice to people in the Halifax—Dartmouth metro area. Indeed, there have been a number of questions raised as to why this decision has been made. The community has called on the Conservative Government to reinstate the funding.

The Executive Director, Rocky Jones, has said that the agency's role has been to "meet guys at the railway station that no one else is going to meet . . . We work with the total person, trying to deal with his self-esteem, to get him away from his former life".

On Tuesday of this week I was at the special handling unit, the super maximum institution in Archambault in Quebec. I talked there with prisoners who asked what they are supposed to do when they are released from a maximum security institution, given $50, and told to be on their way. It is no wonder that many of these prisoners are not able to function and to cope.

• (1805)

Here is an agency that is actually assisting these former prisoners to reintegrate in the community. I hope the Parliamentary Secretary to the Solicitor General (Mr. Cardiff) will rise in his place today to say that yes, the federal Conservative Government recognizes that a mistake has been made and that this community agency that works with ex-prisoners in the Nova Scotia area does an outstanding job. I hope it will reinstate the funds that are so badly needed to keep this important service going.

It is an independent agency, independent of the Correctional Service. We hope this is not a step by the Correctional Service to try to weaken the role of community agencies which are, in fact, independent.

Mr. Murray Cardiff (Parliamentary Secretary to Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have this opportunity to speak further on the issue raised on April 29, 1988, by the Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson) on the organization known as Real Opportunities for Prisoner Employment and the reasons why the Correctional Service of Canada has not renewed its funding.

In the 1986-87 fiscal year, the Correctional Service of Canada could not maintain the level of growth of previous years and was forced to reduce funding to ROPE from $150,000 to $75,000. Their other major funder, Employment and Immigration Canada, was unable to increase its funding to offset the reduced funding from the Correctional Service of Canada.

The Correctional Service of Canada, at ROPE's request, did manage toward the end of the fiscal year to provide additional funding. This increased the level of funding to $95,000. The agency was informed that it would have to find alternate sources of funding in the future because the need for straight job placement had decreased.

In August, 1987, the Halifax parole office conducted a needs analysis of its offender population. The results indicated that offenders had major problems in the area of substance abuse.

Unemployment was ranked as fifth in their list of needs. In fact, they found that the unemployment rate in the offender population was at parity with that of the general population in the community and that the lack of jobs was not the real issue but rather the lack of job skills. Consequently, the Halifax parole office approached each of the agencies under contract which offered employment services, ROPE being one of them, to submit proposals which addressed training offenders in the area of job skills.

The ROPE organization failed to submit a proposal which clearly addressed the training issue. It was decided by the Correctional Service of Canada, in December, 1987, not to renew their contract with ROPE and to use the money toward dealing with the substance abuse problem and other employment training programs.

Presently, the Correctional Service of Canada is contracting with the Coalition Support Services, a private agency which offers not only job placements but also job training and development. It also contracts with community residential centres that provide employment counselling and job skill training.

Unfortunately, Real Opportunities for Prisoner Employment does not meet the present needs of the Correctional Service of Canada. This does not mean, however, that its services will not be required at some future date.

FINANCE—NORTHERN TAX ALLOWANCES—GEOGRAPHICAL DELINEATION OF AFFECTED COMMUNITIES/REQUEST THAT REGULATIONS BE AMENDED

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane—Superior): Mr. Speaker, it has been said frequently that the road to hell is paved with good intentions. I believe that the Government was well intentioned when it decided to broaden the prescribed areas which qualify for the northern residents tax deduction. After all, it is a generous scheme and a welcome tax measure for those who live in northern and isolated areas. It is a just and fair proposal which helps to provide at least a measure of economic equity for our citizens who live a good distance away from the larger urban centres of Canada. It is another useful tool in regional development and I believe it is a necessary cost in the process of building a nation.

So much for the good news. In implementing this excellent tax measure, however, the Government has bungled in spades. In drawing up the criteria for eligibility, the Government has opened for itself a troublesome can of worms in terms of who qualifies and who does not. The Government knows that it has maladministered the program and it knows what has to be done, but it draws back. It draws back because it fears the subsequent loss of revenue and fears the costs of making the appropriate adjustments.

Instead of facing up to the mess it has created and making those corrections, it shrinks from its responsibility and hides behind another phoney task force. This task force will do nothing except cost the taxpayers of Canada $3 million and will take about a year-and-a-half to report. In my opinion, the proposed task force is nothing more than a pricey P.C. patronage plum. It cannot come up with any answers. It cannot solve the problem. The proof of that is taken from the terms of reference provided by the Minister of Finance. First, there will be no retroactivity. Any communities which will be added because the task force deems them eligible will receive the tax benefit only in 1988, not retroactive to 1987 as do those who now qualify.

Second, I quote from the terms of reference:

> The task force should bring forward proposals that are essentially revenue neutral.

That means very simply that there is no additional money for the program. Thus if other communities are added as a result of the task force work, something must be taken from the benefits now received by taxpayers in other communities who are presently eligible. For example, if my constituency of Marathon is added to the list, and it now does not qualify because it is 18 kilometres short of the distance, then Manitouwadge, a nearby community, is going to have to receive a watered-down benefit. Thus it will go on and on across the country. That is inevitable. Therefore, the three million dollar task force will only compound the Government's problem. It is a sham and a farce and should be called off before it begins.

I do not know why I should try to keep the Government out of trouble but I predict that this task force will only make matters worse for the Government unless it is stopped now. Let the officials work with those Members of Parliament from all political Parties whose ridings are affected by this maladministered program. I tell you, Sir, that in relatively short order—it will not take long at all—we can devise a fair and reasonable set of criteria. That is the sensible way to proceed. I plead with the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) to think again about what he has done.

[Translation]

Mr. Pierre H. Vincent (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, we have said many times that the Government is committed to providing a sensible and equitable taxation system for residents of isolated northern communities. The new system is far more generous and equitable than the old remission order system. It gives many more communities and individuals access to the allowance, including owners of small businesses, pensioners, native peoples and employees who did not benefit under the old remission orders because they did not receive an accommodation allowance from their employers.

The new taxation system for northern regions reflects the same community eligibility criteria as the former remission orders, which were based on the Treasury Board directive on isolated posts. The criteria gauge factors such as population, access to road networks, climate and geographical location, and distance from large urban centres, to assess the degree of isolation. They are also used to determine whether a community can finance its own health care services, schools, recreational activities and social and business services, or whether residents must travel long distances to have access to such services.

The Hon. Member suggested making the distance factor part of the points system. This suggestion, which was carefully examined by the Minister of Finance, would increase the number of points required to make a given region eligible, but would give more points to communities located more than 200 kilometres from urban centres with a population of at least 50,000.

Mr. Speaker, this proposal is not a satisfactory answer to the boundary problem, since it merely shifts the emphasis. Furthermore, it ignores concerns raised by communities that are not eligible because they are too close to centres with a population of 10,000 or more. I may add that under the present rules, population and distance factors take precedence over the number of points. We would have to assess carefully the relevance of any proposals to change our approach.

The boundaries problem is not confined to the existing rules. It would arise in any case. Although experts at the Department of Finance have looked at various scenarios, they have been unable to agree on a solution that was immediately and fully satisfactory. We therefore set up a task force to evaluate the relevance of the criteria and make appropriate recommendations. The task force will examine the problems that are specific to each region, so that we can ensure the equity of eligibility criteria for the allowance granted to residents of northern regions.

Mr. Speaker, the existing criteria now form the best basis for setting up the new tax system for northern regions. The task force will hold extensive consultations across Canada with a view to making recommendations for improving the system.

Although we believe our approach meets the expectations of most Northern residents, we share their concerns about the eligibility criteria, and we are convinced that an acceptable solution will be found. We realize it will not be easy and that it will take a lot of time and resources. The task force is expected to provide an objective response to these complex problems.

NORTHERN DEVELOPMENT—NEGOTIATION OF ENERGY ACCORD WITH NORTHWEST TERRITORIES

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, on March 1 I asked the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. McKnight) what progress has been made with respect to the northern accord. We have to know what the northern accord is all about.

This, Sir, is to be an agreement negotiated between the Government of Canada and the Government of the Northwest Territories, along the lines of the agreements that we have in place in Nova Scotia and Newfoundland dealing with the offshore resources of those provinces, although of course in the territories it would apply equally to the onshore resources.

The accord would deal basically with two things. First, it would deal with the revenue sharing component of the agreement. Second, it would establish a joint management regime.

There is, as I have said before, two distinct parts to this agreement. First, there is the offshore areas in which the resources will continue within the foreseeable future and reside in the ownership of the Government of Canada. Then, there is the land area in which the situation is today that the Government of Canada holds those lands and the resources therein in trust for an eventual province to be established in the North.

It is important that we have a management system that will replace COGLA. COGLA has some good people working in the field but, basically, it is an absentee landlord organization in which the decisions are all made in Ottawa. This has to be replaced with a better system in which there can be a greater component of local control.

Revenue sharing is very important in the North because, as we have gone along the road of devolution, those things which have been devolved, recent examples of which are forest management, health and electrical energy, have all been in the field of expending money. They have all been costs to the Government of the territories. There has not been much in the way of a transfer of those things which will bring in revenue to the Government.

In about 1977 the territories enacted its own Income Tax Act because of the small population and the large area and the expenses of administration. That brings in only a small fraction of the moneys needed to administer that vast area.

We can look at the present day situation in the territories as being analogous to that in the early days of Alberta where it was dependent upon mainly land sales for its revenues in its days before the population built up. The same is in effect in the North now. Thus we need to have access to moneys to meet the necessary expenditures of the Government of those territories.

Financial independence is necessary the same way that political independence is necessary. In fact, the two go together. One cannot pretend to be in control of one's own policies and one's own politics unless one also has the money and the revenues that go with it. Otherwise the territories will always find themselves tied to Ottawa's apron strings.

Over the last three years considerable progress has been made on the northern accord. When I asked this question on March 1, it seemed that the final Cabinet touches had been put to the accord, it could be put to bed, a big announcement would be made, and everything would be sweetness and light. Something happened in between. Since that time there has been nothing but stony silence on the issue from the Government. One of the things that I would like to find out in the Parliamentary Secretary's reply is what has happened. We know that the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development has always been a very strong proponent of the accord. He acknowledges that this is part and parcel of the devolution policy of the Government of Canada.

Was there any opposition in Cabinet? Why has this not gone ahead, as we thought it would? Within the agreement there is obviously going to be room for different details respecting technicalities, but it is absolutely essential for the future of the territories that there be an accord and that there be one soon.

Mr. Jack Shields (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, during the past two years the Department of Indian and Northern Affairs has been having extensive discussions with the territorial Governments, northern aboriginal groups, and the oil industry, to determine how best to apply the frontier energy policy in the North.

The cornerstone of this policy is its commitment to "shared management" arrangements with Canada's coastal provinces and territories for the management of frontier oil and gas resources. The Atlantic and Nova Scotia Oil and Gas Accords exemplify the spirit of the frontier energy policy. The largest area still to be brought within the frontier energy policy is the North.

In June, 1987, the federal Government reaffirmed its commitment to the political evolution of the North by approving a policy framework which has as a fundamental goal the strengthening of political and economic institutions in the Yukon and the Northwest Territories.

The framework reflects the significant political and economic changes that have occurred in the North over the past 20 years, and confirms the federal Government's commitment to the evolution of responsible and independent Governments in the North within the Canadian federation.

The following are the essential elements of this policy framework. First, to transfer remaining programs which, in the rest of Canada, are normally provincial responsibilities. Second, to pursue early settlement of land claims. Third, to develop sound and stable economies in the North by working with territorial Governments to encourage economic diversification, with special emphasis on renewable resource development and tourism. Fourth, to encourage the generation of wealth in the North and in Canada as a whole by improving the business climate for investors and entrepreneurs through joint federal-territorial implementation of the northern mineral policy and the development of a northern oil and gas accord.

The frontier energy policy and the Government's commitment to the political and economic development in the North provide the context or framework within which northerners can share in the management of oil and gas and benefit directly from the development of the North's resources. Any agreement must also be consistent with the Government's commitment to aboriginal people, as provided in the comprehensive claims policy. Ultimately, the objective of a northern accord is to provide a stable and fair regime for industry needed to encourage and support the timely development of the North's resources.

A northern oil and gas accord will reflect this policy. The terms will be developed in consultation with the territorial Governments. The Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. McKnight), and colleagues in other Departments, are developing a mandate for negotiations with territorial Governments, which should begin in the near future.

This Government, in the tradition of John Diefenbaker, is committed, with the co-operation of the people of the North, to develop the North.

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY, S. O. 82—CANADA-FRANCE FISHING DISPUTE

Mr. George Baker (Gander—Twillingate) moved:

That this House deplore the unlawful arrest of a Canadian fishing vessel by the Government of France in area 3PS off the coast of Newfoundland; and

That this House condemn the Government for its failure to protect the Canadian fishing industry and its continuing inability to resolve the Canada-France fishing dispute.

He said: Mr. Speaker, yesterday morning a fishing vessel left a Canadian port to go fishing off the coast of Canada. There were five crew members aboard. Three of them were from Grand Le Pierre, Newfoundland, and two were from Port aux Basques. It was a good day for fishing. They had a licence to fish in area 3PS off the south coast of Newfoundland. The only restriction on their licence was that they were not permitted to fish in Fortune Bay.

Restrictions on the south coast of Newfoundland have been placed on Canadian fishermen by the Government of Canada. For the first time, long liners from the north coast and northeast coast of Newfoundland are forbidden to have licences to fish off the coast of Newfoundland, along the south coast.

The fishery off the south coast of Newfoundland has been drastically overfished. It was not overfished by Canadian fishermen from Newfoundland, Nova Scotia, Québec, New Brunswick or Prince Edward Island. It was not overfished by any of these fishermen, but it was overfished and continues to be overfished today by gigantic 300-foot factory freezer trawlers that are not from Canada at all. They are from France. They are from St. Malo. They are not even from St. Pierre and Miquelon.

Under the Conservative Government, Canadian fishermen have been restricted from fishing activity along the south coast of Newfoundland and out into the Atlantic Ocean. A Canadian fishing boat from Fogo Island and La Scie on the northeast coast no longer are permitted to have a licence to fish off the south coast of Newfoundland. They can have a permit for a week or sometimes a month, but no longer a licence.

There is one classification of vessel that is not restricted at all, whether it is 10 feet long, 100 feet long, or 1,000 feet long. As long as that vessel is from France, it can fish all it wants for as long as it wants without interference.

Willie Bolt, Captain of the Maritimer, left port yesterday morning with his licence, after being kicked out of Fortune Bay by the Government of Canada. He went fishing where his licence permitted, only to be arrested by the Government of France.

I am not exaggerating when I say that I do not know of any of the 20,000 inshore fishermen who are rich. I do not know one inshore fisherman in Newfoundland who is making as much money as a Member of Parliament or as the Minister of Fisheries in Newfoundland, or even as the head of his union. I do not know one. Yet these are primary producers who contribute more to the economy of the country than do politicians or lawyers. They have been relegated to poverty on the coastline of Newfoundland, more so in the past few years than ever before.

Willie Bolt and his crew have had two bad years in the fishery off the south coast of Newfoundland. Today he sits in St. Pierre. The Government says: "Well, you're free to go but you are not allowed to leave the island".

The French metropolitan fleet today at this very moment is fishing in an area outside of this so-called 12-mile territorial zone. The Department of External Affairs was notified last evening by the Government of France. As a matter of fact, when the tow-line was put on the boat, it was notified that that vessel was going to be arrested. Why? Because they were violating the 12-mile territorial sea of the Government of France. If that is a declaration by the Government of France that there is a 12-mile territorial sea, then the other area is no longer disputed. They cannot have it both ways.

The French metropolitan fleet today has its large enormous vessels out there taking everything from the ocean, further destroying the incomes of Newfoundlanders such as Willie Bolt and his four member crew.

How did we get to this situation today? The Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. Siddon), the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark), and the Minister in charge of free trade all point back to a 1972 agreement in which they claim the French are given rights to fish in Canadian waters. They have repeated this in the Chamber time and time again.

I want to put on the record what is in this 1972 agreement, its exact wording. The exact wording is:

> Article 2—to recognize the right of French nationals to fish in these waters subject to possible measures for the conservation of resources, including the establishment of quotas.

The quota for the French fleet in Canadian waters this year is 6,000 tonnes. The Government of France says: "We will catch 26,000 tonnes". The Government of France notified the Government of Canada that it wants 50,000 tonnes for next year—more than the entire total allowable catch for every country in the world, including Canada, off the coast of Newfoundland.

I am going to now tell you, Mr. Speaker, why we are in the situation that we are in today, why the Canadian Government is seen around the world as being pushovers, and why the Government of France could direct a French naval vessel to arrest a Newfoundland fishing vessel yesterday afternoon. It is not the act of arresting that is so serious. That is not the serious part. The serious part is that this is another action in a long line of actions that has destroyed the Newfoundland fishery.

I will read for you, Mr. Speaker, what is wrong with the Government of Canada, where we got where we are today by simply referring to a letter to the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) written by none other than the Minister of Fisheries who is sitting in his place today and who is going to have to listen to his words now that were written on June 24, 1986. I quote:

> My Dear Prime Minister:
> I am writing to advise you of the political and economic opportunity related to future French fishing quotas in Canadian waters.

He goes on and gets down to this sentence:

> The issue involves the weighing of the domestic perspective against general bilateral relations with France.

He concludes his letter in this way:

> I want to assure you that my goal throughout will be to manage our fisheries discussions with the French in a manner that does not jeopardize the cordial relationship between Canada and France—

Mr. Siddon: Read the rest of the letter.

Mr. Baker: Now I will read from another letter. It is from the Prime Minister, and I am sorry, Mr. Speaker, if these are marked "Cabinet documents". They were given to me openly.

Mr. Siddon: And taken out of context. Read the whole letter.

Mr. Baker: I am going to read for you, Mr. Speaker, what the Prime Minister responded to the Minister of Fisheries:

> Dear Colleague:
> I agree that in dealing with this sensitive issue, we must weigh on the one hand the interests of Canadian fishermen and fishing communities and on the other our bilateral relations with France.

There was a period before I started that sentence and there is a period after. Here is another sentence.

> I am therefore pleased that you will be consulting with your colleague, the Secretary of State for External Affairs—

Well, he did. The Secretary of State for External Affairs in an outrageous, disgusting manner then wrote to the Mayors in France. Here is a letter to the Assistant Delegated to Maritime Affairs, St. Malo, France. M. L. Perouas. It states:

> The Prime Minister asked me to thank you for your letter—

This was in French, and I am reading an English translation.

> —of December 23, 1985, in which you made known to him your concerns about the rights to fish by French vessels, and especially those from St. Malo, in Canadian waters.

They knew that their rights were coming to an end in Canadian waters because the former Government had said they were going to come to an end. They were concerned and they wrote to the Prime Minister. The Secretary of State went on to state:

> This period is soon coming to an end in conformity with what was agreed to between France and Canada in 1972. None-the-less, as in the past, vessels registered in St. Malo in another distant water French port will continue to fish in the Canadian zone of 200 miles outside the Gulf of St. Lawrence and outside the territorial sea . . . I can assure you without hesitation that Canada has not abandoned the people of St. Malo, especially because—we attach a great value to the friendship we have with them. It is because of this that these people will be able to continue to fish Canadian waters in 1986 and well beyond that.

He states in Canadian waters—that is exactly what has happened. There was a decision to allow the Government of France to send in its gigantic trawlers to employ thousands of people in France with fish taken off the coast of Newfoundland. There it was. There was nothing in the 1972 agreement because that ended. There was the Government of Canada saying to the Mayors in France: "We will allow you to fish, although the 1972 agreement has come to an end". There it is in black and white. If you want to read it in French, Mr. Speaker, you can. If you want to read it in English, Mr. Speaker, it is the same thing.

Today we have another chapter in the book of the destruction and the insults to Canadian fishermen by the Government of France and the Government of Canada. All eyes will now be on the Government of Canada. What will its reaction be? Was it not enough that the Government of France turned around through diplomatic decisions and refused permission to the Lieutenant-Governor of Newfoundland to land in St. Pierre on a courtesy trip? Was it by accident that the Government of France tricked this Government into actually supporting in the United Nations the appointment of the French negotiator in the fish talks to the World Court that will sit in judgment of this very question in the future?

I see my time is fast running out, Mr. Speaker. I will conclude by saying that the people of Canada are now looking at what the Government of Canada is going to do. The fishermen of Canada are totally fed up with the inaction of the Government. They are wondering what happened since 1984. What happened to cause the Government of France to announce unilaterally enormous quotas out to 200 miles in the so-called disputed zone, and to send over gigantic factory freezer trawlers to catch that fish?

The Government of Canada also approved licences for Canadian factory freezer trawlers. The Newfoundland Government approved the inshore middle distance fleet of over 100 foot boats, and 20,000 inshore fishermen with little boats were looking and saying: "What is going on? We have been forsaken by the Government of Canada. We have been forsaken by the Government of Newfoundland. Who speaks for the inshore fishermen today in Atlantic Canada?" They are poor people, Mr. Speaker, who contribute more to this economy than people in St. John's in the Government, or in any other Government.

We are now awaiting the response of the Secretary of State for External Affairs, the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans, and the Minister for International Trade (Mr. Crosbie). Today these Ministers were quoted in the media as saying that this Canadian boat yesterday "was arrested in French waters". In French waters! Were the fish they were catching French fish? What is going on here? Our cabinet Ministers say for all of Canada to hear "These are French waters". Even the ordinary fishermen of eastern Canada know that we have had what is called mutual forbearance, if one wants to talk in legal terms, for 200 years. That means there are no lines drawn. Yesterday little fishing boats from St. Pierre were fishing on the shoreline of Newfoundland. If one wanted to extend a 12-mile zone around St. Pierre, one would be seizing a portion of Newfoundland. In some places it is not 12 miles away from St. Pierre.

It is the craziest, most ridiculous thing that I have ever seen sent to the Government of Canada by the Government of France yesterday afternoon at 3 p.m. It stated that the fishing boat was violating the 12-mile territorial sea around the nation of France off the east coast of Canada.

Do you know, Mr. Speaker, what was the response of the Government of Canada? When it was informed of this just at the time the rope was being put on the boat, the Government asked the RCMP to phone the wives and the families of the crew members to tell them what was happening. At 7 p.m. last night the RCMP officers said: "They will be arrested when they arrive on shore in St. Pierre; they are being towed into port by a French naval vessel. We were asked to pass that along to you. It will take three hours to tow them into port". That, Mr. Speaker, was the sole and only response of Members of the Government of Canada to the declaration by the Government of France. They did not even object to the Government of France. They sat in their offices here in Ottawa and held meetings. They sat in their offices and asked: "What's the most recent report from the Coast Guard and the RCMP helicopter?" They did one further thing, Mr. Speaker. They gave orders that the honorary Consul General in St. Pierre should be on the wharf at 7 p.m. and report on the condition of the crew members.

Mr. Tobin: What a pile of wimps. All the backbone of a jellyfish.

Mr. Foster: Send in Joe.

Mr. Baker: As I say, Mr. Speaker, it all goes back to letters written by the Secretary of State for External Affairs on behalf of the Prime Minister who wants to be known around the world as somebody who wants to be loved and needs to be loved by everybody. The Secretary of State for External Affairs put it in writing. "We will not forsake the people. We will not abandon the people of St. Malo". No, Mr. Speaker, they did not abandon the people St. Malo, but they have abandoned the people of Canada.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crosbie: That was a fine, dramatic performance, Mr. Speaker, which accomplished nothing. Nevertheless, we may as well try to elucidate a fact or two while the hon. gentleman is present. I have a couple of questions. For example, I want to know whether the Hon. Member realizes—

Mr. Tobin: You have questions for us? You have more nerve than a toothache.

Mr. Crosbie: I just want to expose the depths of their ignorance, Mr. Speaker. I want to ask the Hon. Member if he realizes that it was in December, 1971, that the Government of Canada recognized a 12-mile limit for France around St. Pierre and Miquelon. Does the Hon. Member realize that France proclaimed this 12-mile territorial limit around St. Pierre and Miquelon in 1971, and that Canada never objected. The then Liberal Government did not object in 1971. It did not object in 1972, 1973, 1974, nor did it object in 1975, 1976, 1977, or 1978, Mr. Speaker. All those years it never objected. It did not object in 1979, 1980, 1981, 1982, 1983, or 1984.

Mr. Tobin: And they didn't arrest us in all those years.

Mr. Crosbie: So, if Canada has recognized that France has a 12-mile limit around St. Pierre and Miquelon, and that these are territorial waters of France, the Liberal Government of Canada recognized that from 1971 until it was turned out of office in 1984. It appears that the Newfoundland vessel taken in tow yesterday and under the control of St. Pierre and Miquelon was within a 12-mile zone. It is not in the area known as the disputed part of 3PS.

I am wondering whether the Hon. Member knows that, or whether he simply conveniently forgets the fact that there is a 12-mile territorial limit around St. Pierre and Miquelon, a territorial limit that was recognized by his Government, a past Liberal Government. Does he realize that he was a member of this House and a part of that Government from 1972 onward, and that for every day that he was a member of that Government, he was recognizing this 12-mile limit?

He cannot now very well get up in this House and pretend that the 12-mile territorial limit around St. Pierre and Miquelon does not exist. He was among those who permitted it to exist. Past Governments of which he was a member permitted that territorial limit to exist.

Ms. Copps: That is ridiculous. An apologist for the French Government. Ridiculous.

Mr. Tobin: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe, on a point of order.

Mr. Tobin: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order, and it is a very serious point of order. Members of this House have the right to expect that, when they engage in debate and ask questions, they will get answers from a representative of the Government of Canada, and not a representative of the Government of France.

Ms. Copps: Right on.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member has made a point, but not a point of order. I would ask the Hon. Minister to continue.

Mr. Crosbie: Mr. Speaker, the second point—

An Hon. Member: Do you support Mitterrand or Chirac?

An Hon. Member: He probably supports Le Pen.

Mr. Crosbie: Mr. Speaker, the rules provide for a 10-minute period in which one can ask questions or make comments on any speech made by Members of this House, thereby enabling any remarks to be put to the test. The Liberals do not like this rule used on them, given the great abyss of ignorance that exists in that Party. They are very skilled in the use of the stiletto and the dirk in the back of their Leader, but they are not skilled in answering questions.

Ms. Copps: Oh, come on. Tell us about Brian Peckford.

An Hon. Member: What was it you said about Joe Clark, after the leadership campaign?

Mr. Crosbie: Mr. Speaker, the second part of my question has to do with whether or not the Hon. Member for Gander—Twillingate (Mr. Baker), who has just concluded a dramatic presentation—and I congratulate him on that. He is the Marlon Brando of the Liberal ranks. Method acting is his forte—realizes that, in many bays about Newfoundland, there are gear conflicts, conflicts as between the inshore fishermen, a group he claims to represent, a group that he claims to love so much. It is a conflict between those who use fixed gear and those who use mobile gear. In other words, some can move around, setting their gear where they wish, whereas others among them have fixed gear. The gear is set once, and it is fixed.

Mr. Tobin: You should be ashamed of yourself.

Mr. Crosbie: The Department of Fisheries and Oceans has drawn certain lines in the bays of Newfoundland to protect the fixed gear inshore fisherman, who does not want his gear destroyed by the mobile fishing sector.

Does the Hon. Member know that there is a line drawn in Fortune Bay to protect the inshore fixed gear fleet, with the mobile gear fleet having to fish outside of that line? Does the Hon. Member realize that that situation exists, and does he realize that, when he attacks that, he is attacking the very fixed gear inshore fishermen he pretends to love and vows to protect?

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Gander—Twillingate (Mr. Baker).

Mr. Tobin: Now we shall hear from a spokesman for the people of Canada.

An Hon. Member: The people of Canada shall now speak. Vive le Canada.

Mr. Baker: Mr. Speaker, I was interested to hear a member of the Cabinet say that I was a part of the Government of 1972, especially given the fact that I was first elected to the House of Commons in 1974.

An Hon. Member: It seems like 1972.

An Hon. Member: Never let the facts stand in the way of a good allegation, Mr. Crosbie.

Mr. Baker: Perhaps it is an indication that the Minister wants to backdate my pension to 1972.

The Minister, in asking the question he does, is ignorant of a couple of facts. If, as he claims, there has been a 12-mile zone around St. Pierre and Miquelon, Canadian fishermen could not fish within that 12-mile zone. As well, it would mean that there would be a territorial sea going out 12 miles around St. Pierre and Miquelon, which would mean that, when one goes on to the beach at the foot of the Burin Peninsula, one is on French soil. It also means that the French would own at least one mile of the forested area on the very tip of the Burin Peninsula. That would be French territory.

Ms. Copps: Pull up your socks, John.

Mr. Baker: Mr. Speaker, the fact of the matter is that the distance between Newfoundland and St. Pierre and Miquelon, varies, in locations, from 11 miles to 14 miles. That was the only area that was ever in dispute, or a semblance dispute, off the Newfoundland coast. There was no 12-mile zone, because physically it was impossible.

In legal terms, within the Department of Justice, one would find someone describing the arrangement, as I did, as "mutual forbearance"; but, they drew a line from either coast to separate St. Pierre and Miquelon from the mainland of Newfoundland. "Mutual forbearance" meant an understanding that boats from St. Pierre and Miquelon could go on the Canadian side, and Canadian boats could go on the St. Pierre and Miquelon side.

That is why, in those areas where the fishery is better on the Newfoundland side, the boats from St. Pierre and Miquelon go on the Newfoundland side; and where the fishery is better on the St. Pierre and Miquelon side, Newfoundland boats put their gear down on the St. Pierre and Miquelon side.

There was never any such thing as a 12-mile zone around St. Pierre and Miquelon. If there were, we would not be into the problem we are into today. One cannot argue that there is a 12-mile territorial sea around St. Pierre and Miquelon and be arguing that there is a disputed zone out 200 miles.

An Hon. Member: You tell him, George.

Mr. Baker: What has happened here is that the Government of Canada has again caved in. A vessel has been arrested, and this Government is not going to object. Instead, it is going to now try to justify the arrest of a Canadian vessel off the coast of Newfoundland.

Ms. Copps: Unbelievable.

Mr. Baker: There is no Cabinet order by which something can be done about it. This area is now referred to as French waters. No longer is it a disputed zone, but French waters. The Government of France, according to the Government of Canada, now has a 12-mile territorial sea around St. Pierre and Miquelon.

Why do they not put that on the licences of Canadian fishermen; why do they not outline on the licence what the restrictions are? Why not note on the licence that the territorial restriction applies, not only to the coastline of Newfoundland, but the coastline around St. Pierre and Miquelon? Were they to do so, half of the boats could not leave port.

What has been justified in the backrooms of the Department of External Affairs over the last 12 hours will not be accepted by the Canadian public. We are going to get to the briefing notes that are being used today in Question Period; we are not going to let this drop. The fishermen of Canada will know who is speaking up for them, and it is not the Government of Canada. It is the Government of Canada that should be speaking up; it is the Government of Canada that should be objecting to the Government of France.

An Hon. Member: Right on.

Mr. Crosbie: Mr. Speaker, I would—

Mr. Speaker: The period for questions and comments has expired. I will recognize the Hon. Minister if he is rising on debate. Is the Hon. Minister rising on debate?

Mr. Crosbie: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

An Hon. Member: Now we will get the truth.

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, before getting into—

An Hon. Member: Where is the Minister of Fisheries?

An Hon. Member: He is cowering behind the curtain.

Mr. Tobin: He cannot hide behind John all of his life—although he does cast a large enough shadow that a lot of people could hide behind it.

Mr. Crosbie: Mr. Speaker, before I get into the present situation, I wish to refer to the treaty of March 27, 1972, a treaty negotiated by the Liberal Government of the day.

The Hon. Member for Gander—Twillingate (Mr. Baker) referred to the boundary between St. Pierre and Miquelon and the Province of Newfoundland, or the territorial waters thereof, and expressed the view that a 12-mile limit could not be recognized because of the fact that, in certain places, there is not 12 miles of sea between the two coastlines.

That is dealt with in the Liberal-negotiated treaty of March 27, 1972, a treaty which has given Canada so much difficulty ever since. It is this treaty which is the cause of our present problems. Under that treaty, the Liberal Government gave France the right to fish in Canadian waters, subject to our determining quotas.

In Article 8 of that treaty, it is stated that the line defined in the annex to the present agreement determines, in the area between Newfoundland and the Islands of St. Pierre and Miquelon, the territorial waters of Canada and of the zones submitted to the fisheries jurisdiction of France, zones submitted to the fisheries jurisdiction of France by the then Liberal Government.

In the annex there is a document attached which shows that the equidistance principle applies between the Burin Peninsula and St. Pierre and Miquelon. I will show you, Mr. Speaker, the equidistance line in a diagram which is attached to this Liberal treaty. Here is Grand Miquelon and here is the equidistance line. Here is Brunette Island, the Burin Peninsula and Fortune Bay. Of course, the previous Government recognized France as having a 12-mile territorial boundary around St. Pierre and Miquelon. Where there is not 12 miles between St. Pierre and Miquelon and the mainland of Newfoundland, the equidistance principle applies, as was agreed to by the Liberal Government of the day.

First, with respect to yesterday's events, this action on the part of France in taking under French control the fishing vessel Maritimer is a deliberate provocation, as it must be considered to be.

Under the 1972 treaty small fishing vessels of both countries can fish in each country's territorial waters. We are dealing here with inshore fishermen with small boats, 65-foot longliners and under. There are some 200 Newfoundland inshore fishermen who fish from time to time in the zone that might be called the territorial waters off St. Pierre and Miquelon. There are 20 or 30 St. Pierre and Miquelon boats which fish in the Canadian territorial waters. We have never required the small inshore fishermen from St. Pierre and Miquelon to get licences to do that nor has France ever required our vessels to be licensed to fish in these waters. Yesterday, without any notice or warning to Canada at all, the French authorities took action to arrest or to take under their control the Newfoundland fishing vessel Maritimer which was fishing in those waters, as has been the custom. This is, and can only be described as, a deliberate provocation.

Some 10 or 12 days ago the representatives in St. Pierre and Miquelon sent a 200-foot trawler with camera crews, media, a senator and other politicians on board into Canadian waters in a deliberate attempt to get publicity and to challenge Canada's jurisdiction well into the Canadian area, about 50 miles I think it was, off the coast of St. John's West. They were arrested as they had to be and have been charged as they should have been. There is no comparison between that particular event and the action of France yesterday.

As a result of France's actions yesterday, the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark), the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. Siddon) and I met. We have directed our representative, Mr. Fortier, who was to have a meeting today with the French representative, Mr. Puyssochet, in connection with trying to establish a process of mediation to try to bring to a successful conclusion this fisheries dispute, not to proceed with any session in connection with mediation—

Ms. Copps: Big deal!

Mr. Crosbie: —as we are going to suspend any meetings in connection with the mediation process until this matter is resolved to our satisfaction.

Ms. Copps: How about the Airbus?

Mr. Crosbie: I might tell the House that we have received a telex from the Premier of Newfoundland expressing Newfoundland's outrage at the actions taken by France. In the final paragraph, he said that "the Government of Newfoundland and Labrador commends the Government of Canada for the swift action taken by the Right Hon. Joe Clark, Secretary of State for External Affairs, in suspending the mediation talks scheduled for later this week between the two countries. The Government in Newfoundland cannot support any resumption of these talks until the full implications of France's actions have been determined".

That is the motion that should be before the House today, not this partisan, silly, frivolous motion put by the Hon. Member for Gander—Twillingate. We should have a motion commending the Government for the swift action that was taken, just as the Government of Newfoundland has commended us for our swift action.

I want to advise the House that the Secretary of State for External Affairs has called in the Ambassador to France—

Ms. Copps: Which ambassador?

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I would like to hear the Hon. Minister's speech, if I may.

Mr. Crosbie: We can imagine, Mr. Speaker, what the Liberal caucus is like when challenging their leader if this is the kind of noise we have to listen to when we are speaking in this chamber.

The Secretary of State for External Affairs has called in the French ambassador to protest this provocation by France. Of course, the process of mediation will not go forward until this matter is settled to our satisfaction and until we know exactly what France is going to do with respect to the fishing situation in this area that lies between St. Pierre and Miquelon and Newfoundland. Once we know just what France's position is and after the French presidential election is over on Sunday, we will see what then happens in that particular situation.

This is an extremely deplorable action taken by France. I can only outline for the House and deal with the resolution before the House. The resolution asks the House to:

> —condemn the Government for its failure to protect the Canadian fishing industry and its continuing inability to resolve the Canadian-France fishing dispute.

It takes two sides to resolve a dispute. I will outline briefly for the House the steps that we have taken. In the negotiations for the last year or year and a half, we have taken a series of firm steps to try to resolve the dispute with France. We have been unable to resolve it because the Government of France does not respond and is not prepared to accept any reasonable suggestions for the settlement of this dispute. We have followed a step-by-step approach to increase pressure against the French overfishing in the disputed area 3PS. By the way, this incident yesterday did not take place in the disputed zone of 3PS.

In February, 1977, we closed Canadian ports to French fishing vessels. That prevented any diversion of French vessels to Canadian ports for supplies, repairs, or refuelling. Closing the Canadian ports also makes it more difficult for vessels from St. Pierre and Miquelon to operate because they do not have their usual quick repair facilities in Canada. That is part of the action that we have taken to protect the Canadian fishing industry to try to induce France to be reasonable and to settle this dispute. That was a clear signal to the French about our commitment to conservation. We closed the ports because of French overfishing in the disputed zone of 3PS. We have no authority to stop France's overfishing there, but the French have for the last several years overfished in the area to the extent of something like 20,000 tonnes during one year.

As a next step, we refused to allow the Burgeo Bank, which is a major fishing ground off the south coast of Newfoundland, to be used by France. During the summer of 1987 we closed the remainder of area 3PS outside the disputed zone, which is known as the western gullies, to French vessels. We no longer permit them to fish there. Those areas closed off include other valuable fishing grounds on which the French have depended heavily in the past. This was to show our displeasure at France's overfishing in the disputed area which we cannot control.

On October 9, France broke off negotiations with us on both the compromis. We want to get the question of the territorial boundaries and economic zone around St. Pierre and Miquelon and between St. Pierre and Miquelon and Canada to an international tribunal. France refuses unless we agree to give the French certain fish quotas in Canadian waters over the next three or four years. That is what the dispute is about. France broke off negotiations with us in both those areas. We then told France at the end of the year that there would be no quotas granted to the French in Canadian waters— none—in 1988 in the absence of an agreement on sending this boundary dispute to adjudication and in the absence of an agreement on the question of quotas. Our position has remained firm ever since. How juvenile and silly is this resolution to try to condemn the Government for its failure to protect the Canadian fishing industry in light of the steps that we have taken.

We are operating under the provisions of a 1972 treaty entered into by the very people who filed this motion here this morning and who put Canada and Canadian fishermen into this regrettable situation off the east coast of Canada. These are the people who gave the French the right to fish in Canadian waters. The Government of Canada has to set quotas each year for that purpose. This is where the French get their rights from, this Liberal treaty of 1972.

Of course, there may well be a question of whether or not French actions are making this treaty unworkable. That is another question that we will be coming to in due course. However, the very people who caused this problem are the people who are now here with their crocodile tears, going on about the incident that happened yesterday.

The author of the motion, having had his 20 minutes of histrionics in the Chamber, has disappeared somewhere. I suppose he is out before the television cameras or gone somewhere. I did not get the chance to ask this question of him. Perhaps he could tell us now. He claimed yesterday that there was a fisheries patrol vessel in the area when this happened. This is in Hansard of yesterday on page 15188. In fact, there was no fisheries patrol vessel in the area.

Then the Hon. Member claimed that there was an RCMP helicopter that flew over and a fixed-wing aircraft belonging to the Coast Guard. We would like to have some evidence of that, particularly due to the fact that there was heavy fog in the St. John's area yesterday.

What we heard from the Member from Gander is what we usually hear from him, a lot of braggadocio, a bilious bunkum, a blithering blatherskiting, that is all we have heard from the Hon. Member. We heard not a scintilla, not a suggestion as to how this dispute could be settled. Not one reasonable suggestion was made as to how we could get France to agree to a reasonable settlement that will protect Canadian fishermen.

We heard not a word of apology for the fact that from 1974 to 1984, he was in the House completely silent, not a word came from his mouth with reference to what was happening in the fishing areas off the east coast of Canada. We did not hear a word when in 1981, his Government gave the European Economic Community 9,500 tonnes of northern cod to take every year. That agreement expired at the end of last year and we have not renewed it.

We hear not a word of apology for the damage that was done to the Canadian fishery by that agreement with the European Economic Community providing 9,500 tonnes of cod a year, not even a crocodile tear from the hon. gnome from Gander who has now disappeared, doing his Hunchback of Notre Dame act somewhere else, I suppose, on the premises. He outdoes Charles Laughton when it comes to theatrical productions.

The Hon. Member was very positive in his statements, positive being—

Ms. Copps: Who speaks for Canada?

Mr. Crosbie: The Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps) reminds me of something Ambrose Bierce said: she is always very positive, meaning she is always mistaken at the top of her voice.

What action is being taken? This vessel is in St. Pierre and Miquelon.

Ms. Copps: Come on, John, you're usually better than that. Settle down, baby.

Mr. Crosbie: Officials of External Affairs intervened here to assist the fishermen involved. Apparently—

Mr. Foster: Send in the French subs.

Ms. Copps: They're already there.

Mr. Crosbie: The French have asked for a bond in order to release the vessel and that will be attended to. The French Ambassador has been called in and a protest delivered, and a protest has already been delivered to the office of the Minister of Foreign Affairs of France in France. We have postponed until this matter is resolved satisfactorily the mediation process. These are the steps we have taken.

Ms. Copps: That's disgusting.

Mr. Crosbie: We know that the Liberal Members are not interested in the facts. They are not interested in trying to help the fishermen of eastern Canada or of Newfoundland. They are only here to try to score cheap political points and to holler and call out and interject when someone else has the floor.

Ms. Copps: Methinks he doth protest too much.

Mr. Crosbie: I would like to put on the record the following facts so that there is no false feeling of sympathy on the part of any person in Canada in connection with the fishermen of St. Pierre and Miquelon. I would like to remind Hon. Members that there are 28,000 commercial fishermen in Newfoundland. There are only 176 fishermen in St. Pierre and Miquelon. In the period 1972 to 1985, the average groundfish landings in St. Pierre and Miquelon from within and without the disputed zone including the part not in dispute, 3PS, only approximated 6,250 metric tons per year. Yet they are looking now for something in the order of 50,000 metric tonnes per year and they have taken in excess of 26,000 tonnes in the disputed zone in the last several years.

We should note that in St. Pierre and Miquelon, cod landings in 1987, per fisherman, totalled 99 tonnes while, per fisherman on the South Coast of Newfoundland, the catch averaged only 10 tonnes. On a province-wide basis, each Newfoundland fishermen catches about 18 tonnes of fish of various species a year. The St. Pierre and Miquelon fishermen catch about 122 tonnes a year.

Let us not have anyone here in Canada feeling sorry for the poor fishermen of St. Pierre and Miquelon. We should feel sorry for them because they are represented by a Government that apparently does not consider their interest to be of the first priority as we do.

The fishermen we need to be concerned about are our own Canadian fishermen whose catches on average are much lower than the catches of the fishermen of St. Pierre and Miquelon. That is worth remembering when there are theatrical events such as the sending of a trawler with French politicians on board.

I suppose the next thing I would imagine the Liberal Caucus might do is send John Turner out in a 65-foot dragger off St. Pierre and Miquelon and challenge the French authority. That might solve their leadership problem right there.

We have here a motion that is completely misconceived. It is only designed to give the mover a chance to speak in the House in a theatrical manner. It is completely misplaced in trying to condemn the Government for the failure to protect the Canadian fishing industry while the record of the last four years shows the Government putting the Canadian fishing industry first, defending it, advancing its cause, hampered and with our hands tied behind our backs, handcuffed by arrangements entered into by the previous Liberal Government and confirmed by the present Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) when he was the Prime Minister of Canada for those few brief weeks in the summer of 1984. There was an exchange of notes in July of 1984 dealing with the question of mutual restraint by both parties when their fishermen are fishing in the disputed area of 3PS.

We do not have to vote on this motion. It is a pity that we do not, because it is one of the most ill-conceived, weakest, most jejune of motions that has ever been put before the House. If there was ever a case of the pot calling the kettle black, it is this motion moved by the very people who, for the years from 1972 onward, did nothing to protect the Canadian fishing industry. They gave away our rights to the French, to the European Economic Community, to Germany, to Spain, to Portugal and to every other nation. They failed to take steps to adequately enforce the 200-mile limit, the various steps we have taken since which have improved the situation immeasurably.

Mr. Tobin: Why don't you read the dictionary for the next minute? You're afraid of a question.

Mr. Crosbie: I do not need to read the dictionary. Here are some of the steps we have taken. This is a tremendous document. The measures we have initiated include increased fines and the arming of patrol vessels. The Hon. Liberals opposite were afraid to do that. They did not arm patrol vessels.

There has been the placing of fishery observers on all foreign fishing vessels and greater aerial observation including the addition of a twin-engine helicopter to our surveillance capability. Yet we have this ridiculous, silly and in fact misleading and damaging resolution which should be changed so that the Secretary of State for External Affairs is congratulated by the House for the swift action he has taken.

I would urge all Hon. Members, if we have a vote, to throw this motion completely out of the House.

STATEMENTS PURSUANT TO S. O. 21

[English]

FISHERIES

CANADA-FRANCE DISPUTE—ARREST OF CANADIAN VESSEL BY FRENCH AUTHORITIES

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, in my short time in Parliament I have never seen such a pathetic, weak, and spineless response to yet another insult not just to the people of Newfoundland, not just to the small boat fishermen in Newfoundland, Canada's poorest province, with the highest unemployment rate, but an insult to the integrity of the Government of Canada. Here we have standing before us a Minister who has not the good sense to know that as a Minister of the Crown he has been insulted once again.

The Minister can go back to the treaty of 1972, he can go back to the treaty of 1872, he can go back to the treaty of 1772, the fact of the matter is that 24 hours ago a Newfoundland vessel, which makes it a Canadian vessel, was illegally arrested by French authorities. The Government of France—

Mr. Speaker: I am sorry, the Hon. Member's time has expired.

MULTICULTURALISM

CANADA-LEBANON DAY

Mr. David Daubney (Ottawa West): Mr. Speaker, today is Canada-Lebanon Day. Four years ago the Government of Canada so designated May 6 to honour the significant contributions to Canada of Canadians of Lebanese descent.

There are over 200,000 Lebanese Canadians, 20,000 in my city of Ottawa alone, many of whose families have been here for over 100 years.

Last night I was proud to join several hundred members of Ottawa's Lebanese-Canadian community in welcoming the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and other federal Ministers to the local Canada-Lebanon Day celebrations. This is the first time that a Prime Minister has attended such an event. I join him and all Members of the House in applauding Canadians of Lebanese descent for their immeasurable contributions to Canada. We all hope and pray for a return of peace to Lebanon and the early re-establishment of the Canadian Embassy in Beirut.

NATIONAL FOREST WEEK

CALL FOR ESTABLISHMENT OF SEPARATE DEPARTMENT OF FORESTRY

Mr. Ernie Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, this has been a notable National Forest Week. A number of events have focused the importance of our forests to Canadians, their importance in employment, in production, in exports, and in aesthetic and ecological terms.

The Canadian Institute of Forestry deserves much credit for its emphasis on these matters. I take pride in recognizing the leadership of Dr. Jim Kayle, President of the Institute, and one of my constituents as former Director of the School of Forestry at Lakehead University. I also want to express appreciation to yourself, Mr. Speaker, for focusing attention on forestry by means of the reception and luncheon you hosted on Wednesday.

We need equally vigorous action by the Government of Canada. We need a full Department of Forestry for a most important resource and industry. We need increased spending on reforestation and research. We need to ensure that Canadians will have forests to enjoy in perpetuity, and the varied employment that our forests offer. New Democrats anticipate the opportunity to create such a federal Department of Forestry.

YOUTH

VILLE DE VANIER'S CULTURAL AND SPORTS GALA

Mr. Marcel R. Tremblay (Québec-Est): Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity today to draw the attention of Hon. Members to an important event held annually at Ville de Vanier which acts as an important stimulus for our young people.

On April 30 this year, the sixth sports and cultural awards gala of Ville de Vanier was held, with André Morin, who is very involved in community projects and a man of great determination and open-mindedness, as honorary president.

The purpose of the gala is to set up a special fund to help young people in the community, while recognizing individual achievements in sports and culture.

All this would not be possible, Mr. Speaker, without the involvement, sustained efforts, creativity, experience and mutual support of many volunteers who shared a common goal and who were committed to making this an unforgettable event.

My sincere congratulations to Nicole B. Morency, president of the gala corporation, to Rachel Francoeur, president of the organizing committee and to all volunteers who worked together to make this an outstanding community event.

OPERATION RALEIGH

YOUTHS' PARTICIPATION IN THREE-MONTH TREK THROUGH NORTHWEST TERRITORIES

Mr. John Nunziata (York South—Weston): Mr. Speaker, this summer a very special event called Operation Raleigh is scheduled to take place in Canada's North. It is a three-month trek through the Northwest Territories, involving 24 youths who will be conducting scientific research as well as performing community service.

Perhaps what makes this trip so special is the fact that young people aged 17 to 24 from over 20 countries will be participating in the program. They will be working side by side in a survival program, learning about Canada's northern wildlife, ecology, and culture. The only Canadian leader of this group is one of my constituents, Mr. Patrick Coppinger. Mr. Coppinger is a four-year veteran of the Canadian Armed Forces and was chosen for this position because of his military and leadership skills.

Each participant is required to raise a substantial amount of money from the community to fund participation in the program. When they return from their three-month odyssey they will be giving speeches and presentations on their experience to community groups, schools, and companies.

On behalf of all Members of Parliament I would like to commend Mr. Coppinger and the many other individuals involved in this worthwhile project, and wish them luck on their journey.

ABORTION

CALL FOR LEGISLATION TO PROTECT LIVES OF THE UNBORN

Mr. Girve Fretz (Erie): Mr. Speaker, I want to draw your attention to an article which recently appeared in one of our national newspapers entitled "Life-and-death issue". The subtitle reads: "Netherlands expected to approve bill providing euthanasia defence". It says:

> After 15 years of sometimes bitter public debate, it seems likely The Netherlands will soon become the first Western country to legalize mercy killing.
> Unless there is a new, unexpected outburst of opposition, legislation to permit euthanasia will be approved by the Dutch Parliament within the next few months.
> Although there is no prescribed method of death, the consensus in the Dutch medical community is that it would be carried out by injection—ensuring a painless and quick death.

In connection with this article I fear a liberalized attitude toward abortion. If we as a nation do not have respect for the life of the unborn, is public acceptance of euthanasia the next step? Therefore, I urge my colleagues to vote to protect the lives of the unborn when legislation is introduced in the House of Commons.

THE DISABLED AND THE HANDICAPPED

ACCESS TO AIR TERMINALS

Ms. Audrey McLaughlin (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, later this month we will be acknowledging the special needs of the handicapped by designating a special week. However, there is an urgent situation which cannot wait for that designation.

Our society is slowly starting to make advances in the area of rights for the handicapped. Much time and effort have been spent in removing the obstacles to travel for those with impairments.

Although the National Transportation Act provides that carriers must be fair to handicapped travellers, there are no provisions allowing for regulation of air terminals administered by Transport Canada. Last February 24 the Minister of State for Transport confirmed the Government's commitment to the introduction of amendments to the Act to ensure that air terminals are accessible to handicapped people. She promised that the amendments would be passed "before the summer". The Minister said she would "do the impossible" to ensure that this was done.

To date there have been no amendments introduced. I encourage the Minister to get on with it. It is no good to ensure that the handicapped will be allowed to fly if they cannot get to the planes.

IMPORTANCE OF FORESTRY TO BRITISH COLUMBIA

Mrs. Mary Collins (Capilano): Mr. Speaker, as you know, we are nearing the end of 1988 National Forest Week which has afforded an excellent opportunity to take time to appreciate all the good things our forests provide.

In British Columbia forestry is the number one industry employing almost 300,000 people, directly and indirectly. The federal Government recognizes the importance of this industry and we are currently investing $300 million with the province in the Canada-British Columbia Forest Resource Development Agreement. This program has led to an unprecedented level of reforestation. We are also ensuring that important export markets are maintained and expanded.

Our forests in B.C. produce over $6 billion worth of exports destined for the U.S. With the removal of tariff barriers under the free trade agreement, the B.C. forest industry will become even more competitive, and the door will be open to more value added processing of forest products. Free trade will further promote the good health of our vital forest industry.

CANADA-FRANCE DISPUTE

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, I am not surprised the Hon. Member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie) beat a hasty retreat after the spectacle that we saw this morning.

Some Hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Speaker: I am not sure where the Hon. Member is going, but Statements by Members are not traditionally to be used for any personal attack. However, I will hear the rest of the statement.

Ms. Copps: It is not a personal attack, Mr. Speaker, it is an attack on the Government of Canada. I came here this morning expecting to hear government Members, especially one from Newfoundland, stand up and fight for Canada and defend our interests.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa—Carleton): Read the "blues"!

Ms. Copps: Instead I saw a Canadian government official acting as an apologist for the French Government. He should have had the Marseillaise playing in the background. He was practically handing out literature for the French election coming up this weekend. My question is this. Who is speaking for Canada? It is the Liberal Party; it is the Member for Gander—Twillingate (Mr. Baker). We are going to fight for Canadian fishermen, not those limp wimps over there who flop down every time the French Government and the French vessels come into Canadian waters. We have to get rid of the Government because we need someone who speaks for Canada.

ENERGY

MEGAPROJECTS—USE OF TAXPAYERS' MONEY

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, Canadians ought to be free to decide themselves on an individual basis whether or not they would care to invest their money in petroleum megaprojects such as Hibernia, Terra Nova, OSLO, the Husky Upgrader, or Amauligak.

It is both economically and morally wrong for the state to take their money under threat of force by way of taxation and make that decision on their behalf.

Which, if any, of these projects go ahead should be determined solely by market forces.

Not only would it be a wrongful and wasteful use of taxpayers' money if tax dollars were to be put into one of these projects, it would also mean that the Government would be favouring one area of Canada at the expense of another, contrary to the natural workings of the market-place.

INTERNATIONAL LABOUR ORGANIZATION

WORKERS' FREEDOM OF ASSOCIATION—CONDEMNATION OF POLISH GOVERNMENT'S ACTIONS

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, on July 9, 1945, Canada, along with other nations, passed the International Labour Organization Convention concerning the Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organize.

Many times in the House we have risen to condemn the actions of either the federal Government or a provincial Government, especially in Alberta, with regard to their neglect of that Convention. Today I want to stand in this House and speak against the actions of the Government of Poland which has deliberately ignored this Convention and has refused to recognize the workers' right to free association, and has refused to negotiate with the legitimate trade union body in that country.

I call upon Canadians from coast to coast to express their solidarity with the workers in that country, and say that the Government must listen to the workers there as well as in Canada.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

FALL IN UNEMPLOYMENT RATE

Mr. Bill Tupper (Nepean—Carleton): Mr. Speaker, the unemployment rate nationally has fallen to 7.7 per cent and in the National Capital Region to 5.2 per cent, the lowest in many years.

In terms of job creation, small businesses were responsible for 81 per cent of the 1.2 million new jobs created recently. This trend is continuing.

The Government has taken several initiatives to assist small business. For example, the 1987 federal small business corporate tax rate of 15 per cent will be reduced to 12 per cent effective July 1 this year.

The federal Government has given tax incentives to Canadians to invest in small businesses via pension funds and through labour sponsored venture capital funds. The federal Government implemented an action plan to reduce the burden of paper work on small businesses.

In addition, the Government improved the opportunities for small businesses to participate in federal government procurement programs. Moreover, the federal Government implemented a $500 million capital gains exemption for investments in the shares of small businesses, and moved up the lending ceiling under the Small Business Loans Act from $1.5 million to $2 million.

Small business is important to Canada. We must recognize that 50 per cent of the new jobs created in Canada in the next five years will be created by the small business community.

KILLARNEY, ONT. POST OFFICE

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, the Tory Government's plan for postal service in rural Canada was spelled out in the fall of 1986. It was to close 5,000 rural post offices and remove 9,200 jobs, most of them held by women.

It is a plan to take away post office employees' jobs and replace them with short-term contracts, to close post offices and replace them with supermailboxes, and cut back on rural routes.

Now that plan will hit the community of Killarney which will be part of the new Algoma constituency, because the postmaster there has signalled her retirement at the end of this month.

The Killarney post office has a vital and important role in that community of some 500 people and for the thousands of tourists who come to visit there every summer. It is important to the senior citizens who depend on it for service, as it is for business because of the relative isolation of the community.

Now that the postmaster has resigned, the post office is to be reduced from a full-time post office with a full-time postmaster to a retail commission outlet and a part-time service only. If no commercial outlet can be found, it will be reduced to superboxes.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member's time has expired.

OLYMPIC GAMES

TORONTO'S BID TO HOST 1996 OLYMPICS

Mr. Allan Pietz (Welland): Mr. Speaker, the summer Olympic Games will give many Canadian athletes the chance to compete with the world's best. Several members of the Canadian olympic rowing team have been training on the Henley Regatta rowing course in St. Catharines and on the South Niagara rowing course in Welland.

These clubs are working hard to upgrade their courses, not only to ensure that we continue to offer world class facilities to our homegrown and world class rowers, but also in an effort to enhance Toronto's bid for the 1996 Olympics.

The proximity of these facilities to the main Olympic location, and the commitment of the local rowing clubs to maintaining and upgrading the existing courses will certainly contribute to a positive response to the Toronto bid when the 1996 Olympic site is finally chosen.

VISIBLE MINORITIES

JAPANESE CANADIANS INTERNED DURING WORLD WAR II—CALL FOR SETTLEMENT OF ISSUE

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, during the last election campaign the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) deplored the abuse of the rights of Japanese Canadians during the Second World War and said: "If there was a Conservative Government I can assure you we would be compensating them". Some three-and-one-half years have now passed and the issue is still not resolved.

In 1986 a Price Waterhouse study commissioned by the National Association of Japanese Canadians evaluated the internees' confiscated property and forgone income at $443 million. The Government offered a paltry $12 million and, yes, it said it would generously throw in an apology.

The time has come for the Government of Canada to settle this whole issue with the Japanese Canadian community.

MENTAL HEALTH WEEK

SUPPORT URGED FOR CANADIAN MENTAL HEALTH ASSOCIATION EVENTS

Mr. Barry Moore (Pontiac—Gatineau—Labelle): Mr. Speaker, I take this opportunity to remind Members of the House and the general public that this is Mental Health Week. For the past 30 years the Canadian Mental Health Association has co-ordinated events to raise national public awareness aimed at reducing the stigma of mental illness and at encouraging community acceptance of those in need of mental health services.

The Department of National Health and Welfare is pleased to collaborate with the CMHA in this worth-while effort to draw attention to the importance of mental health issues. This year's slogan for Mental Health Week is: "Mental Health—Keep it in Mind", and all Canadians are invited to give their full support to the Mental Health Week events that the local branches of the CMHA have planned in their communities.

FISHERIES

CANADA-FRANCE DISPUTE—ARREST OF CANADIAN VESSEL—DEFINITION OF "FRENCH WATERS"

Mr. George Baker (Gander—Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, we all know about the illegal, unlawful arrest of a Newfoundland fishing vessel yesterday by French naval vessels. The Government of France claims that it took the action because the Newfoundland boat "was fishing within the 12-mile territorial sea around St. Pierre and Miquelon".

Fishermen were shocked this morning to hear the Secretary of State for External Affairs for Canada say: "The boat was in French waters". Will the Minister explain to the House what he meant when he said: "The boat was in French waters"? Does he not realize that if France were to declare and enforce a 12-mile territorial sea around St. Pierre and Miquelon portions of Newfoundland would now belong to France? What does he mean by "French waters"? Are the fish also French?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, what I mean by French waters is what is defined as French waters in a treaty signed by Canada in 1972. It is a treaty signed by the Liberal Government of Canada, supported by the Hon. Member.

The question is not the 12-mile limit, the question is the application of the provisions of a Liberal treaty signed in 1972. The Hon. Member may not like what the Liberal Government did then, but that Liberal treaty set out the facts, and those facts cannot be changed now at the whim of the Hon. Member whose Party conceived the treaty, and which he supported himself.

CANADA'S 200-MILE ZONE—REQUEST THAT FRENCH METROPOLITAN FLEET BE ARRESTED

Mr. George Baker (Gander—Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, if the Government of Canada recognized that 12-mile zone, why did it not inform the fishermen?

The Government of France in enforcing a 12-mile territorial sea yesterday has virtually scuttled its claim in the so-called disputed zone. I would like to ask the Minister this. Would the Minister now not agree that the waters off the south coast of Newfoundland are no longer in dispute with this enforcement of a 12-mile territorial sea? Therefore, will the Government of Canada now, today, arrest the French metropolitan fleet which is fishing outside the 12-mile territorial sea declared by France but within Canada's 200-mile zone? The Government of France cannot have it both ways.

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I have to acknowledge the enthusiasm of the Hon. Member and his willingness to allow his enthusiasm to try to roll over the facts. I am not prepared to let him roll over the facts.

Ms. Copps: Roll over, Joe.

Mr. Crosbie: You're good at stabbing. Go stab your Leader, boys.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): The Hon. Member for Hamilton East is speaking from her seat again.

Mr. Gauthier: Watch it, Joe. They were after you, too.

Mr. Tobin: He's sitting behind you, Joe.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps the Right Hon. Secretary of State would answer the question.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): The Minister for International Trade and I stand cheek by cheek and jowl by jowl.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: Explain!

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): The NDP has no sense of history.

Mr. Crosbie: Nor any sense of humour.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Nor any sense of the future.

Mr. Crosbie: Nor any sense, period.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Gander—Twillingate.

OVERFISHING BY FRENCH FLEET OFF SOUTH COAST OF NEWFOUNDLAND

Mr. George Baker (Gander—Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, the Newfoundland fishermen arrested yesterday have experienced a couple of bad years in the fishery, just like every other inshore fisherman along the south coast of Newfoundland. Boats from the north coast of Newfoundland and the northeast coast of Newfoundland are now restricted off the south coast of Newfoundland because of drastic overfishing. We all know who is guilty of drastically overfishing off the south coast of Newfoundland. It is the metropolitan fleet from France.

I ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs does he not realize that Canadians are fed up with this overfishing by the fleet from France, and the Government's inability to solve the problem? When is the Government going to start getting tough with the Government of France where it hurts, pull the plug on the nuclear submarine and put the brakes on the Airbus?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the negotiation is of course an important issue. I think a couple of things should be made clear.

First, what is at issue here in this present bizarre incident is not the 12-mile limit, despite what the Hon. Member has tried to suggest. What is at issue here is the jurisdiction over waters, a jurisdiction that was established by a Liberal treaty in 1972. The Hon. Member should not try to mislead people about the application of the 12-mile limit because that is not what is at issue here.

The second point that has to be made is that this strange incident yesterday involves, among other things—

Mr. Tobin: It's not an incident, it's an insult.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): —a break in the practice, a practice carried out by both France and Canada, based upon a principle that this dispute between our two nations would not be fought on the back of small fishermen.

Mr. Robichaud: What do you think they're doing now?

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): The Hon. Member understands that what is involved here is a small inshore fishing vessel that has been hauled into St. Pierre. It has been the practice of both countries for some time that this dispute should not be fought on the back of small fishermen. The traditional practices protected the small fishermen of both countries. Our position is that those traditional practices should continue.

When we called in the French Ambassador this morning to protest, the French indicated that their position, their policy, has not changed. Naturally, the Government of Canada is supporting the captain of the Maritimer. If bail is set the Government of Canada will make arrangements to meet that bail.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): The Liberal Party does not want to help the captain of the Maritimer. We intend to. We intend to do that as we have throughout the piece. We intend to continue to do that, to protect that captain, and to protect the other inshore fishermen of Canada.

REQUEST THAT CANADA STOP NEGOTIATING SUBMARINE AND AIRPLANE PURCHASES

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, in a letter to the Minister of Fisheries Minister on August 19, 1986, with respect to this dispute the Prime Minister stated:

> I agree that in dealing with this sensitive issue, we must weigh on the one hand the interests of Canadian fishermen and fishing communities and on the other our bilateral relations with France.

The only treaty that Newfoundlanders are interested in today is the treaty they signed in 1949, the Terms of Union between Canada and Newfoundland. They thought it made them Canadians. They expect that when their interests are challenged that this Government, this Canadian Government, will defend their Canadian interest.

Let us quit beating around the bush. Is the Secretary of State for External Affairs prepared to stand and say today that as long as this kind of action continues by France, which the Government itself has described as irresponsible, Canada will cease today any further negotiation on the purchase of submarines from France, worth some $12 billion, and will order Air Canada to cease today any further negotiations for $1.5 billion worth of airplanes from France? Will he do that? Or is he saying that Newfoundland is nothing but an impoverished and disposable bargaining chip in our relationship with France? Is that what he is saying?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, it may be that the Liberal Government which signed the 1972 treaty regard Newfoundland as a disposable part of Canada. It may be that Liberal Governments which followed energy policies that were detrimental to the development of Newfoundland regard Newfoundland as a disposable part of Canada. This Government is changing those policies that were prejudicial to Newfoundland. We have done that in other fields. We are doing it now in a negotiation with respect to the fishery, a negotiation which will protect the interest of Canadian fishermen in Newfoundland and elsewhere.

What is at issue now is a bizarre incident to which we have responded. We have responded with a protest to the French Government this morning. We have responded by direct contacts with the captain of the Maritimer. We will continue to support him, and to support the other fishermen of the inshore fishery of Newfoundland throughout this incident and into others should they occur.

FRENCH INSULTS

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, there comes a time when a nation must stand up to be counted. The Governor General of Canada was insulted in France during her visit last year. The Lieutenant Governor of Newfoundland was not allowed, for the first time in decades, to visit St. Pierre last summer. A vessel was arrested yesterday.

I am not one, ordinarily, for standing up and saying that we ought to take dramatic measures.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Tobin: I am not asking for a declaration of war. But I am asking, and asking soberly, and the Liberal Party is asking that the submarine negotiations cease today, the Air Canada Airbus negotiations cease today, and that we stand up for Canada. Will the Secretary of State do that?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, let me try to cut through some of this hysteria to place the facts—

Mr. Tobin: Let you try to find your backbone, Joe Clark. You haven't got one.

Mr. Crosbie: Simulated simpleton.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): —on the record.

The Hon. Member referred earlier to two treaties. One was the Terms of Union Newfoundland signed in 1949. In our judgment that was a political decision that we celebrate, but which needs to be accompanied by consistent policies to develop the standard of living and the level of opportunities in Newfoundland and Labrador. That is what this Government has done consistently.

The other treaty has to do with 1972. The issue in question last night has to do with a definition of French waters that was agreed to by the Liberal Government of Canada in a 1972 treaty signed by the Liberal Government of Canada. That is the reality. If the Hon. Member, a member of the Liberal Party, disagreed with what his Government did then, we should have heard from him then, not several years too late.

RELATIONS BETWEEN NEWFOUNDLANDERS AND CITIZENS OF ST. PIERRE AND MIQUELON

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. The Minister knows very well that the relationship between the Canadians who live in Newfoundland and the French citizens who live in St. Pierre and Miquelon has for years been without conflict. They have enjoyed each other's company socially and have worked well together.

The Minister will also know that this action by the French Government in the past 24 hours, if one considers where the action was taken and the size of the vessel under question, is totally unacceptable.

Has the Government of Canada informed the French Government that the very good relationships that have existed between the people of Newfoundland and the French citizens of St. Pierre and Miquelon are the serious matters that are at risk in the short run, and are at risk in the long run?

If the Government has so informed the French Government, have we made it very clear that it has to be held responsible if there is now major conflict between two groups of people who have always been good friends?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, what we have done this morning is called in the Ambassador to Canada of France and protested to him the action of last night. We have made it clear that our interpretation, an interpretation to our understanding shared by France through several years, has been that it would be allowed that smaller fishermen from St. Pierre and Miquelon would be able to fish in Canadian waters, and smaller fishermen from Newfoundland would be able to fish in French waters. That has been the practice for some time. We believe that traditional practice should continue. We have protested the action of France which is inconsistent with that practice.

We intend to continue to support the fishermen of Canada, particularly the small inshore fishermen involved in this dispute.

ROLE OF FRENCH PRIME MINISTER

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, the whole international world that is following this incident understands full well that it is the action of a desperate man who is seeking the presidential office in France, who is running well behind the current President of France, and is taking it out on the people of Newfoundland.

Has the Secretary of State for External Affairs made it very clear to the present Government of France that mixing serious international obligations for short run political gain at home is the very antithesis of good international relations?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, what we have done, and I repeat this, is protested the matter to the Government of France. The Hon. Member understands the practices of international relations between countries, and that is the manner in which we have proceeded in this case. If the event is not resolved in the next several hours, we will naturally consider what other steps we should be taking.

I think the Hon. Member may also know that meetings were scheduled for this morning between the two negotiators of this larger dispute to discuss a mediation process. At my instruction the Canadian negotiator has suspended those meetings respecting mediation.

I understand the depth of the issues involved here. I have been following this file very closely myself with my colleagues, the Minister for International Trade, the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans, and with others. We know the depth of interest of Canadians involved here. We intend to protect those Canadian interests, and we intend to protect them against sudden events that may arise, for whatever reason, in France.

We are proceeding consistently, and we are proceeding in a way that we believe will advance the interests of Canada in terms of the dispute that is now in place, and advance the interests of fishermen in Newfoundland and elsewhere in Atlantic Canada.

REQUEST THAT PRIME MINISTER SPEAK TO HIS FRENCH COUNTERPART

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, my last question for the Minister is this: The Prime Minister of France has made similar decisions and taken similar action in the past. This is not exactly new, coming from this gentleman. Would the Minister speak directly to the Prime Minister of Canada, to persuade him to speak directly to his friend, the Conservative Prime Minister of France, and ask him to stop these actions which have a very negative impact on Canada?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, we have done two things today. First of all, on my instructions, our negotiator has suspended talks with the French negotiator about a mediation process.

Second, we have transmitted a letter of protest to the French Ambassador in Canada, indicating the Canadian Government's profound concern about yesterday evening's events.

We do not want to see small businessmen from St. Pierre and Miquelon or Newfoundland victimized for the sake of an election campaign or for any other reason.

[English]

NEGOTIATIONS ON PURCHASING AIRPLANES AND SUBMARINES

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. By way of preamble, the Secretary of State for External Affairs has not explained why, in talking about the treaty of 1972, he sent a note to the French Government saying that the Conservative Government has given to the French fishing quotas far in excess of any obligations under the 1972 treaty.

Why has the Minister twice refused to answer a direct question to the effect that the Government should cancel or suspend all discussions with the French on the purchase of French nuclear submarines, and on the purchase of the Airbus for Air Canada, until the fisheries dispute is settled in a manner satisfactory to Canada?

Why is he evading answering that question? Is it because he is putting the interests of French companies and French workers ahead of the interests of the people of Newfoundland?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I think there can be no question about the determination of the Government to give the highest priority to the interests of the fishermen and the economy of Newfoundland. We have done that consistently, and we have done it particularly in this case.

We have a discussion here today because of a very bizarre and strange incident last night. It is an incident that we have protested. When we called in the Ambassador of France to Canada this morning he indicated that the policy of France has not changed. In our judgment that means that there should not be any change in the traditional practices that have benefited the smaller fishermen of both Newfoundland and St. Pierre and Miquelon. We intend to deal with this incident directly on its merits, as we have.

I understand what the Hon. Member is trying to do. He is trying to create a larger partisan question and to start a trade war that would have, among other implications, the likelihood of making it more difficult for us to achieve the settlement by negotiation that is in the interests of Canada, that is in the interests of France, and that is particularly in the interests of fishermen in Newfoundland.

[Translation]

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, we have had a whole series of incidents, and the latest one is a serious slap in the face of this country.

INTERESTS OF PEOPLE OF NEWFOUNDLAND

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): I ask the Minister, Mr. Speaker, is it not correct, in saying that the Government does not want to expand this matter into a trade war, that the Minister is confirming that the Conservative Government is putting the interests of the people of Newfoundland second to its desire to buy a nuclear submarine and the Airbus from France? It is trading off the interests of the fishermen of Newfoundland and the people of this whole country for purposes that are not in this country's interest? The Minister has said that in his answer to the first question. Why will he not confirm it now, to the shame of himself and his Government?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, not only is the allegation of the House Leader of the Liberal Party absolutely false, it is also an attempt to sow divisions in this country, an attempt which I personally regard as contemptible, and should not be carried out by responsible parliamentarians.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): The reason we have the incident that is now occurring in St. Pierre is because in 1972 the Liberal Government of the day agreed to a treaty which defined the waters in question as French waters. I believe the Hon. Member was a member of that Government, was a supporter of that Government. If he was concerned about the implications of the 1972 treaty he should have raised that concern in 1972 and not waited for a decade and a half.

• (1140)

REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT NOT PURCHASE NUCLEAR POWERED SUBMARINES FROM FRANCE

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State for External Affairs.

Canadians know that it is foolish enough to attempt to purchase nuclear submarines from any country in the world, but it is compounding the folly for Canada to be proceeding with negotiations to purchase these submarines from a country that has deliberately provoked us, a country that snubbed the Head of State of Canada on her visit to that country last fall, and a country that has deliberately ignored Canadian quotas aimed at the conservation of the fishery.

An Hon. Member: The Head of State of Canada is Her Majesty the Queen.

Mr. Manly: My question for the Secretary of State for External Affairs is as follows. In view of these facts, will the Government now cancel any attempt to purchase the nuclear submarine fleet from France?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, what we have here is a proposal by the two opposition Parties in this House to take a very serious fisheries dispute and escalate it into a trade war between Canada and France. That is their proposal.

The Hon. Member for Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands will understand, I would hope, that trade wars claim victims on both sides. Among the Canadian victims of a trade war with France, were Canada to go out of its way deliberately and unnecessarily to start one, would be the employees of Canadair, a company which is trying to sell water bombers to France—

An Hon. Member: We are not talking about a trade war; we are talking about breaking off negotiations to purchase submarines.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Such a trade war would impact on a wide range of Canadians.

Mr. Tobin: So, it is a trade war. It is confirmed. Newfoundland is expendable.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): That speaks to the Liberal and NDP proposal that we start a trade war.

Mr. Tobin: Newfoundland can be sold down the drain.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): It is the judgment of this Government that, instead of seeking out opportunities to start a trade war, we should be doing all that we can to settle this fisheries dispute, to the benefit of Canadians.

An Hon. Member: Newfoundland is expendable. We have heard it now.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The Hon. Member for Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands, on a supplementary.

Mr. Manly: Mr. Speaker, France has played hardball on this issue. It is not regarded by France simply as a fisheries dispute or a boundary dispute. Rather, it has been allowed, by France, to spill into other areas.

Had this Government taken a stronger position a year and a half ago, this issue would be solved by now.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

CANADA-FRANCE RELATIONS

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands): My supplementary question for the Secretary of State for External Affairs is as follows. Is he now willing to look at this issue in the light of the total Canada-France relationship, or does he simply want to regard it as a little fisheries dispute, with Canada making one retreat after another, letting France have whatever it wants?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, what odd behaviour for the Hon. Member. Here we have a man of peaceful inclination standing in the House of Commons urging us to start a trade war.

An Hon. Member: Hypocrite.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): That is the first oddity.

An Hon. Member: Those are your words.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): The Hon. Member purports to speak for the people of Newfoundland. Perhaps I might be permitted to read into the record, with all appropriate modesty, a letter signed by the Premier of Newfoundland on May 6, today. I quote: "The Government of Newfoundland and Labrador commends the Government of Canada for the swift action taken by"—and I ask for your indulgence, Mr. Speaker—"taken by the Right Honourable Joe Clark, Secretary of State for External Affairs, in suspending the mediation talks scheduled for later this week between the two countries."

We have acted consistently, vigorously, and effectively to protect the interests of Canadians in this dispute.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

SCHEDULED VISIT BY POLISH PARLIAMENTARY DELEGATION TO CANADA

Mr. William G. Lesick (Edmonton East): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. It is a serious matter.

The citizens and workers of Poland continue to struggle against the shackles of communism, of a communist regime. The present strikes are the result of popular discontent over unfair price increases.

There are some 500,000 Canadians of Polish origin in Canada, many of whom agonize over family members in Poland whose lives may be in danger as a result of the current unrest in that country.

Why has the Canadian Government agreed to meet with a Polish parliamentary delegation, when press reports indicate that the Polish Government is forcibly suppressing labour strikes in that country?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the developments in Poland are of a great concern to the Government of Canada, and to the people of Canada. The Government of Canada has been in touch daily with Polish authorities regarding these matters. Our concern is based, not simply upon our interest in developments in Poland, but also upon the justifiable concern on the part of the more than half a million Canadians who are of Polish origin about the rights and liberties of their relatives and friends in Poland.

The Hon. Member for Edmonton East questions why we would meet with a Polish parliamentary delegation to this country.

That, Mr. Speaker, is a visit that has been organized under the auspices of your office and the auspices of the Speaker of the other place, and it is one that involves a visit to Canada by a Polish member of the Politburo who is active in the decisions being taken by the Polish Government at this time. Thus, it presents the Government of Canada, and indeed all parliamentarians, with the opportunity to express, directly and forcefully, the concerns of Canadians to a member of the Polish Politburo.

Certainly for the Government's part we intend to take advantage of that opportunity here in Canada to express our views very directly about what should be occurring in Poland, and I would hope that individual Members of the House of Commons who have the opportunity to meet that delegation will also take a strong and forceful position in relation to that situation.

WOMEN

FREE TRADE—IMPACT

Mrs. Lucie Pépin (Outremont): My question is directed to the Minister responsible for the Status of Women. Yesterday, Status of Women Canada published a report on free trade and women, which states that lowering tariff barriers for Canadian industries will help these industries compete more effectively on the U.S. market; and that women will benefit as far as employment is concerned. Mr. Speaker, I would like to know how the Minister can claim this sort of thing, when we know that manufacturing costs less in the United States because the minimum wage is lower, raw materials are cheaper and production lines can be longer. How can the Minister justify this kind of statement?

[English]

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I was delighted with the report that came out yesterday showing that free trade is going to benefit the women of Canada. It is going to benefit them in a lot of ways.

One reason that manufacturing costs are lower in the United States is the opportunity to have longer production runs. Canadian manufacturing industries compete very well in the U.S. as long as they can get the size and the investment, and certainly free trade will be very good for Canadian women in the manufacturing industry. It is also very good for Canadian women as consumers.

Because of the reductions in tariffs, both in respect of American goods that go into Canadian manufactured products, as well as the Canadian manufactured goods themselves, costs will come down for consumers relative to what they would be otherwise. By way of example, for low income elderly single women, the estimates of the impact of the agreement show an annual savings of about $155 to $240, compared to what the situation would be otherwise.

The free trade agreement is good news for women both in terms of jobs and the ability to train for new opportunities. The service sector, where 85 per cent of women's jobs are, will grow under the free trade agreement. What could be better for women?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

REQUEST FOR FUNDS FOR RETRAINING FEMALE WORKERS

Mrs. Lucie Pépin (Outremont): I gather from the Minister's reply that women as consumers might benefit, but I don't think women working in industries that will be most severely affected will benefit, because they will lose their jobs. We know that most of the latter are immigrants with little education and schooling. I would like to know why the Minister refuses, as she did in committee, to allocate funds for retraining and training women who will lose their jobs or will have to seek employment elsewhere. Could the Minister give the House the assurance that she is prepared to reconsider the answer she gave in committee and guarantee that funds will be available for the thousands of women who will lose their jobs? Will she reconsider her reply and give us those funds?

[English]

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, as I pointed out in committee, the Canadian Jobs Strategy has sufficient flexibility to train people, including women, for job changes throughout the economic system.

I went into some considerable detail on this in committee, and I suggest that the Hon. Member read my remarks in committee.

With the system we have in place now, some two million women require some kind of job adjustment every year. They either change jobs every year or leave the workforce to take a training program.

With the new opportunities provided by free trade there will be additional adjustments. Most will be positive. We have, within the Canadian Jobs Strategy, the ability to train women now to take advantage of upcoming opportunities.

Free trade, like any other economic condition, is not a static thing. It is going to grow, and it will be positive for women. It will be positive for women in terms of both the manufacturing sector and the service sector.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

FISHERIES

CANADA-FRANCE DISPUTE—REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT NOT PURCHASE FRENCH NUCLEAR POWERED SUBMARINES

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, I want to go to the Secretary of State for External Affairs who will know that this latest incident is not the only time the French have pushed Canadians around. He will be aware that the French have been overfishing in our east coast waters; they have insulted our Head of State and they have been harassing and hassling Canadian tourists visiting France. The most recent incident was to stop one of our vessels fishing in waters where they have traditionally fished for many years.

Why doesn't the Secretary of State for External Affairs stand up in the House and say that the Government of Canada is now prepared to send a very clear signal to the French Government, that Canada is not prepared to accept being pushed around time and time again? He should tell the French that we are not interested as a Government of Canada in purchasing any submarines from them. Get tough.

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, we have already done that. We have already made very clear to the Government of France the determination of this Government to protect the interests of Canadians. Among the ways we protect the interests of Canadians as a Government is not to engage in casual trade wars.

What the Member of Parliament is doing now on behalf of the New Democratic Party is suggesting that we should put at risk jobs in Vancouver, jobs in St. John's, jobs in Halifax, jobs in Toronto, jobs in Hamilton—

Mr. Tobin: Damn right we are!

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): —jobs across this country of people who now are engaged in contracts to France or people who might become engaged in contracts to France.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): There is no reason at this stage for us to contemplate that. We are being very tough and very consistent on the fishing question.

MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, I want to say to the Hon. Minister that standing up for Canada means taking some risks sometimes. It is time we started standing up for Canadians in Newfoundland. How many times does the Minister have to be poked and prodded until he realizes that somebody is trying to hurt him?

Mr. Speaker: I ask the Hon. Member to put his question.

Mr. Riis: When you poke away at a grizzly bear long enough, eventually he will start fighting back, Mr. Speaker. I think we have been pushed around too long by the French. It is time for the Minister to stand up now and say that we are prepared to send a very clear signal: "Unless you back off and back off now, we are not interested in negotiating this nuclear submarine contract at all".

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, we have sent a very clear message to the French.

Ms. Copps: A smoke signal.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): We have sent a clear message in the protest. We have done that in the suspension of the discussions on mediation. We do not want to make the fishermen of Newfoundland or people working in factories across this country the victims of some political process of the New Democratic or the Liberal Parties.

We are in the present situation because a treaty was signed in 1972 by the Liberal Government that defines certain waters as being French waters. That situation was established then and it cannot suddenly be ignored.

Mr. Riis: Stand up.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): As for standing up for Canada, Mr. Speaker, I have had the opportunity, because I have been challenged before to stand up for Canada. I have been challenged in this House to stand up on issues, and I think any objective reading would say that when I have been called upon to stand up for Canada, I have stood up for Canada.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

CANADA PENSION PLAN

ELIGIBILITY FOR DISABILITY BENEFITS

Mr. Geoff Wilson (Swift Current—Maple Creek): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the stand-in for the Minister of Health.

Ms. Copps: A stand-in?

Mr. Wilson (Swift Current—Maple Creek): I do not intend to muddy the waters further.

My question is for the stand-in for the Minister of Health who will know that a small number of Canadians left their jobs some years ago but have not been able to apply for disability pensions because their applications, once received, have been deemed to have been late.

Would the Minister consider amending the Act in order to enable these deserving and needy Canadians, who have paid into the Canada Pension Plan for a number of years but whose applications have been denied for late filing, to apply and receive what they have coming to them?

Ms. Copps: No stand-in; it is a lie-down.

Hon. Pierre H. Cadieux (Acting Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I do not intend to lie down as suggested by my hon. colleague on the other side. On the contrary, that used to be the habit of the former Government.

I thank my hon. colleague for his very important question. As he knows, and as he has mentioned, I am standing in for the Minister of National Health and Welfare who is presently at the World Health assembly in Geneva. I will bring the specifics of this very important question to the Minister's attention immediately upon his return on Monday.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

QUERY WHETHER GOVERNMENT READY TO RECALL CHARGÉ D'AFFAIRES FROM PARIS

Mr. Fernand Robichaud (Westmorland—Kent): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. At the present time, Canada does not have an ambassador in Paris. Meanwhile, it seems the former ambassador is trying to get elected.

In this case, would the Government be prepared to call back its Chargé D'affaires in Paris to show the French that we take this incident seriously, that we will not tolerate this and that this act of piracy is an insult to Canadians?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, we have already advised the French Government of Canada's reaction and protest. We have already suspended scheduled talks on mediation. We are protecting the interests of people of Newfoundland and other Canadians. We are here to protect Canadian interests, not to play a public relations game.

QUERY WHETHER PRIME MINISTER PREPARED TO CANCEL VISIT TO FRANCE

Mr. Fernand Robichaud (Westmorland—Kent): Mr. Speaker, if the Government is so serious about protecting Canadian interests and about showing the French that we take this incident seriously, is the Prime Minister prepared to cancel his visit to France which will be sometime in May, in fact on May 26? Or are you afraid of offending the French and more interested in protecting the image of the Prime Minister during his visit to France?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the answer is, briefly, no, because I think it is very important for us to keep all options open for influencing the opinion of the French government. But there is another issue, Mr. Speaker: Why do we have this problem today? We have this problem because a treaty signed by the Liberal Government in 1972 gave the French jurisdiction over the waters in question. That was one of the Liberal Government's achievements. It is just one more problem created in this country by the Liberal Party. We are now trying to find ways to solve a problem that was created by the Liberal Government.

FILM DISTRIBUTION INDUSTRY

ANNOUNCEMENT OF GOVERNMENT POLICY—CANADIAN MARKET

Ms. Marion Dewar (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Communications. In February, 1987, she said that the ability of Canadians to talk to each other would never be negotiable. At the time the proposed policy was that Canadian industry would be guaranteed 15 per cent of the market. We find with the newly announced policy that the industry now has to compete in a bidding war with multinationals for 15 per cent of its own market.

Was it complaints from the Canadian film industry that made her change her mind?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, I do want to say that I am in a rather magnanimous mood today. I am not even going to say to the members of the Opposition, "I told you so". But I want to assure the House that the way in which the policy announcements that I made yesterday were received by the industry is indicative of the support that it is giving to this approach.

I would like to say to you, Sir, that this morning I received a communique from the National Association of Canadian Film and Video Distributors which says: "The National Association congratulates you on your initiatives in offering a comprehensive and effective strategy to stimulate and strengthen the Canadian film industry".

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Miss MacDonald: I realize, Mr. Speaker, that you are indicating that I should wind up, but the communique goes on to say, "Your proposal to introduce legislation to regulate the importation of film products into Canada is an important first step toward breaking the stranglehold of the foreign distributors in our domestic market". They say that this will establish Canada as a sovereign market for film distribution in Canada.

NEGOTIATION OF CULTURAL MATTERS—MINISTER'S POSITION

Ms. Marion Dewar (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, after the good news, the Minister knows perfectly well that the film distribution industry in Canada is largely controlled by U.S. corporations.

Why won't the Minister admit that these pressures from the Canadian industry actually suit the U.S. industry perfectly, since it will always have access to the Canadian market?

Will the Minister admit that culture was part of the free trade negotiations with the United States?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, I have some more letters today. There is one from Serge Lozique, president and director general of the Festival des films du monde. It says: "Madam Minister, the legislation you announced yesterday will be remembered as one of the milestones in our country's cultural history.

For the first time in the history of film, we will exist before the world as a country that is sovereign and distinct from the United States. All Canadians, whether they are politically involved or not, should rejoice in . . . ".

Mr. Speaker: I am sorry to interrupt the Minister, but I don't think it is appropriate to read the whole letter.

A single question from the Hon. Member for Hamilton East.

Oral Questions

HAZARDOUS SUBSTANCES

PAM COOKING OIL—REQUEST FOR REMOVAL FROM SHELVES

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the stand-in for the Minister of National Health and Welfare and it deals with the very serious continued distribution of Pam across Canada.

Earlier this week we heard the Minister come to his senses when he said that the Department would move to take the product off the shelves, but he would not give us a date. This morning the president of the company that sells Pam said that there are five million cans sold in Canada every year and that it could take up to a year before they come up with their substitute product.

Given that a substitute is already available, being marketed in the Maritimes and being sold in the United States, and given that five million cans may be sold over the next year while the Government diddles on its policy, I ask the Minister why today he does not simply agree to pull this product from the shelves so that children and adolescents who want to misuse it will not be in a position to do so. If not, if there is another death, he will have to answer to the parents as to why the Ministry of National Health and Welfare was more interested in corporate support than in protecting the health of consumers.

Hon. Pierre H. Cadieux (Acting Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, as I mentioned a few minutes ago, I am not afraid of standing up in the House. I should recommend to my hon. colleague that she lie low at the rate the knives are flying on the other side of the House.

With respect to this very important question, as I indicated all week, the tragedies that occurred occurred because of a misuse of the product which, if it had been used as intended, is safe for the consumer. That being said, there have been some talks with the manufacturer, as I have indicated, and I am informed that the manufacturer will not only reformulate the product but has been in the process of reformulating the product for a while, and it should be on the test market perhaps as early as next week.

Ms. Copps: It's already been on the test market.

Mr. Speaker: I am sorry, but in view of the time I think we will have to call a close to Question Period.

TABLING OF GOVERNMENT RESPONSE TO TWELFTH REPORTING OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to the provisions of Standing Orders 67(1) and 99(2), I hereby submit the Government's comprehensive response to the Twelfth Report of the Standing Committee on Communications and Culture entitled Accommodation Requirements of the National Archives of Canada.

PETITIONS

GOVERNMENT RESPONSE

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 106(8), I have the honour to table, in both official languages, the Government's response to petitions Nos. 332-4194, 332-4195, 332-4209, 332-4210 and 332-4216.

RESEARCH INTO PREVENTION AND CURE OF SCHIZOPHRENIA

Mr. Bill Tupper (Nepean—Carleton): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 106, I have the pleasure of presenting a petition from some 400 Canadians, most of whom are from my riding of Nepean—Carleton. The petitions show that schizophrenia is a major illness in Canada, affecting about 1 per cent of the population, causing severe mental anguish and suffering to the patients and their relatives and costing Canadian society more than $3 billion annually. This petition further shows that the research effort in Canada dedicated to schizophrenia is very small and not commensurate with the seriousness and cost of the illness. It further indicates that these petitioners humbly pray and call upon Parliament to make sure that the research efforts on schizophrenia in the future will be commensurate with the seriousness of this illness.

SUPPORT FOR BILL C-54 TO COMBAT PORNOGRAPHY

Mr. Geoff Wilson (Swift Current—Maple Creek): Mr. Speaker, I have petitions on several topics. The first is from a number of residents of southwestern Saskatchewan and relates to Bill C-54. The petitioners indicate that they are concerned that pressures exerted by various permissive minority groups may cause the watering down and weakening of this important legislation and the petitioners therefore humbly pray and call upon Parliament to support the Bill which will make it illegal to manufacture, import, sell or rent pornographic materials as defined. They call upon the Government to pass the Bill without dilution in the belief that the Bill gives recognition to the inherent dignity of individuals, particularly women and young children, who are vulnerable to exploitation in this area.

BLOCK AVERAGING OF INCOME

Mr. Geoff Wilson (Swift Current—Maple Creek): Mr. Speaker, I have a number of other petitions relating to an income tax matter. A number of farm people, again from southwestern Saskatchewan, note that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), in December of 1987, indicated his intention to eliminate block averaging. The petitioners humbly pray and call upon Parliament to take the necessary steps to retain block averaging for farmers as recommended by the Standing Committee on Finance and Economic Affairs in its report in the White Paper on tax reform, stage one.

PUBLIC SERVICE—LANGUAGE TEACHERS LABOUR DISPUTE

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, I have a petition signed by over 725 Canadians across the country who would like to present this common grievance with the assurance that the House will provide a remedy. The petition says that whereas the Government of Canada, as represented by the Treasury Board, has failed to recognize a principle of just and reasonable preparation time for federal language teachers, and whereas such failure seriously undermines Canada's policy on bilingualism, therefore, the undersigned request Parliament to mandate Treasury Board to negotiate a collective agreement with the federal teachers providing for 15 hours of preparation time per week for language teachers.

LANGUAGE TEACHERS—REQUEST THAT UNION STIPULATE TIME FOR COURSE PREPARATION

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, I have another petition on the same subject, signed by 240 petitioners who are asking the Government to make a genuine effort to resolve a dispute that has been going on for several months, and who hope that when negotiations resume next Tuesday on May 10, they will not fail because of the inflexibility of a Government that claims to do everything it can to promote the use of our official languages. Mr. Speaker, this petition asks Parliament to order Treasury Board to negotiate with federal teachers in the Education Group, an agreement that provides for fifteen hours course preparation time per week for language teachers.

REQUEST THAT UNLAWFUL SALE OF CIGARETTES AND ALCOHOL ON KANAWAKE INDIAN RESERVE CEASE

Mr. Ricardo Lopez (Châteauguay): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour of tabling in the House a petition signed by 250 business people and convenience store owners in the riding of Châteauguay and surrounding area. Your petitioners humbly pray the Government to take strong and immediate action to put a stop to the unfair sales of cigarettes and alcohol on the Kanawake Indian Reserve. Mr. Speaker, this practice does tremendous harm to business people in our region, since merchants on the reserve sell these goods, without charging taxes, to consumers from across Canada.

Mr. Speaker, speaking on behalf of these business people, I hope the Canadian Government will take immediate action to stop these unfair business practices.

NORTHERN TAX ALLOWANCE

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 106 I am pleased to have an opportunity to present a petition on behalf of a number of people who are concerned that the comprehensive eligibility list for the northern residents tax deduction in its present form is discriminatory. Many communities not on the list are adjacent to listed communities and obviously that is unfair. The petitioners suggest that a practical solution would be for the Government to declare all communities presently in tier 3 ridings, such as Kenora—Rainy River, as eligible for the deduction. That would resolve the problem until the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) conducts his commission of inquiry to sort out this disaster.

RESEARCH INTO PREVENTION AND CURE OF SCHIZOPHRENIA

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition signed by several dozen constituents of mine in Elliot Lake concerning the serious problem of schizophrenia facing many Canadians, and the need for additional research by the Government to assist these patients. The petition simply calls on the Government to provide greater financial support for this very serious disease which afflicts some 1 per cent of our population.

[Translation]

Mr. Gaston Isabelle (Hull—Aylmer): Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to table a petition on behalf of 800 Canadians, most of whom reside in the riding of Hull—Aylmer, and your petitioners humbly pray that Parliament allocate far more funds than it does at the present time for research on an illness that affects 1 per cent of all Canadians and which costs this country about $3 billion annually. Your petitioners are asking the Government to start making a serious effort to find a cure for schizophrenia, a mental illness that has biological causes.

ALLOTTED DAY, S. O. 82—CANADA-FRANCE FISHING DISPUTE

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Baker:

That this House deplore the unlawful arrest of a Canadian fishing vessel by the Government of France in area 3PS off the coast of Newfoundland; and

That this House condemn the Government for its failure to protect the Canadian fishing industry and its continuing inability to resolve the Canada-France fishing dispute.

Mr. Gauthier: Point of order, Mr. Speaker. I am surprised to see that the Minister who last spoke in this debate is not present to respond to questions and comments.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Minister had 10 minutes for questions and comments. Since he is not here I must go to debate. The Hon. Member for Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands (Mr. Manly) has the floor for debate.

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands): Mr. Speaker, like the Hon. House Leader for the Liberal Party, I am very unhappy that the Hon. Minister, who took advantage of the question period after the speech of the Hon. Member for Gander—Twillingate (Mr. Baker) to ask questions—

Mr. Hawkes: Point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Manly: —is not willing to stand in his place and answer questions himself.

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Speaker, it is a well honoured, and for good reason, tradition of this House that we do not comment on the presence or absence of Members in this House. However, I think the Minister would like the House to know that he is working with other Ministers to bring about a resolution of this problem. That I think should be his priority on behalf of the people of Newfoundland and this Chamber.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I wholeheartedly agree with that. We should not comment on who is or who is not in the Chamber. I regret that the Hon. Minister is not here but the rules of the House state that if he is not in the Chamber, he cannot be asked questions or respond to comments.

Mr. Lewis: You guys do it all the time.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member has been recognized for debate.

Mr. Tobin: Point of order, Mr. Speaker. I agree that Members should not comment on the presence or absence of other Members, but surely it is reasonable that someone be present to answer questions. There is no one present to answer questions with respect to these negotiations, no one who answered questions today in Question Period, especially not the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. Siddon) because he is obviously out on a limb, out of touch, and not allowed to speak on this important question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): May I then get unanimous consent to allow the Hon. Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. Siddon) to have the ten-minute question or comment—

Mr. Tobin: No, Mr. Speaker, you do not hear unanimous consent.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order.

Mr. Lewis: Manufactured indignation.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): There not being unanimous consent, the Hon. Member for Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands has the floor.

Mr. Manly: Mr. Speaker, the Parliamentary Secretary pointed out that the Minister is meeting with other Ministers to try and find some solution to the problem. I hope he has more to say to the other Ministers than he had to say to the House. What we had was very long on wind and very short on substance.

Mr. Lewis: Where is Jack Harris when you need him?

Mr. Manly: The Hon. Minister for huffery and puffery, if he had been present yesterday off the coast of Newfoundland, could have huffed and puffed and blown the French fleet right out of the water. However, he had very little to say to the House today about a very serious situation facing the people of Newfoundland and Canada.

Mr. Siddon: You were not listening, Jim.

Mr. Manly: We have had insult, provocation and harassment one after the other by the Government of France. Yet our Government has meekly accepted all of it.

I welcome the opportunity to make a few remarks on the motion put forward by the Hon. Member for Gander—Twillingate. Ordinarily the person responding for our Party would be the Hon. Member for St. John's East (Mr. Harris). He of course is in Newfoundland today where I am sure he is going to have a great deal to say about this very unfortunate incident.

Perhaps this incident could be ignored or downplayed if it were an isolated incident. Perhaps it could even be attributed to some mistake by some over-zealous French officials. However, we cannot see it in that light because it forms part of a pattern of provocation and harassment by the French Government. It is also part of the pattern of the Canadian Government meekly accepting that and backing down in one circumstance after another.

Over the past two years we have seen the refusal of the French metropolitan fleet to accept fishing quotas imposed by the Government of Canada in the interests of conserving cod stocks. These quotas were imposed not simply in our interests but in the world's interests in order to preserve those stocks. The French have blatantly disregarded those quotas and tragically overfished.

Last fall there was a state visit by the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski) and the Governor General of Canada to France and a deliberate snub of our Governor General by French officials. A few weeks ago a French fishing vessel went into Canadian waters and deliberately provoked Canada in order to be arrested. The presence of elected French officials only underlined the provocation. When that French vessel was arrested by Canada, France escalated the situation by harassing Canadian tourists going to France. It seems as though they are not interested in the fact that France has a $161 million surplus in tourism with Canada. Yet there was still that kind of provocation.

Yesterday's incident, with the arrest of the small vessel Maritimer by a French naval tug, was only the latest in a long series of these provocations. The question of whether or not it was in French territorial waters has occupied us to some extent this morning, and there has been debate back and forth. I do not want to get involved in the technicalities of that.

What we know and recognize on all sides of the House is that that arrest violates a long-standing arrangement between Newfoundland and St. Pierre and Miquelon, between Canada and France, which allowed both Newfoundland vessels and vessels from St. Pierre and Miquelon to fish in that general area without being harassed or arrested.

What we see from this whole series of events is that it is very obvious that France plays hardball in international affairs. It is certainly playing hardball with Canada. It has some mistaken, outdated ideas of grandeur that it has inherited from Louis XIV and Charles de Gaulle. The colonial mentality that looks upon places like St. Pierre and Miquelon as colonies that can be manipulated in the interests of French policy, quite apart from the economic interests of the few thousand people who live on those two small islands, has to be rejected and condemned.

While France plays hardball and acts with impunity in its relations with Canada, Canada has accepted all of this. Under the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and his Government, Canada is something of an international patsy. It seems that the overwhelming objective of Canada in international affairs is the photo opportunity.

The House will recall the Prime Minister's visit to Africa and how some of his aides scouted Victoria Falls to find the most advantageous angle at which to photograph the Prime Minister with Victoria Falls for a background. We remember the farce of the Shamrock Summit which, incidentally, points out another sell-out of Canadian fishing interests. The Canada-U.S. salmon treaty for the Pacific coast was rushed through so that the Prime Minister and Ronald Reagan could sign it at the Shamrock Summit. The Prime Minister's boys were very concerned that they not be outdone by this second-rate show business President from the United States, so they went to great, elaborate lengths to present this grand finale where the Prime Minister and the President sang When Irish Eyes Were Smiling. We paid a tremendous price for that PR coup they were able to engineer.

We can look at the latest Summit where the Prime Minister went to Washington and spoke to a joint session of Congress. He got absolutely nothing in terms of the important agenda items concerning Canadians. He got nothing in terms of acid rain but he did get his photo op.

In our relationship with France, we saw that the Prime Minister's refusal to stand up to France on the boundary dispute with St. Pierre and Miquelon was directly related to his desire to have good relations with France for the August meeting of la francophonie last year. While it is desirable to have good relations with France and it is a desirable goal to even have photo opportunities, surely there are other goals and issues that are more basic in terms of foreign policy, including standing up for Canadian interests, for the rights of Canadian fishermen and standing up for a decent environment that would not be polluted by acid rain. Those interests have been sacrificed to the photo op.

Last spring we saw the Newfoundland Government dealt out of the talks with France over the disputed zone because the Prime Minister wanted to have a deal with France that would look advantageous to him even though it sacrificed the interests of the Newfoundland fishery.

If the Prime Minister is that interested in a photo opportunity, perhaps it could have been helpful if he was in St. Pierre yesterday afternoon to be on the dock when the French naval tug came in, towing the Maritimer. He could have seen where his policies have lead and could have had his picture taken, greeting these Canadian fishermen who were only doing their job. He could have been greeting them, after they had been arrested in violation of an agreement because Canada does not have the gumption to stand up to France.

Unfortunately, there will soon be another economic summit at which there will be more photo opportunities. One can presume that this will probably inhibit the Prime Minister from speaking out on this and a number of other issues. I suggest that the Prime Minister may want to see a doctor to help him get rid of some of these inhibitions. He is very inhibited when it comes to speaking out.

We must take seriously the fact that the 65-foot Canadian fishing vessel, the Maritimer, was arrested by the French Government. This action should be condemned by the Canadian Government but rather than condemning it, the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) is quoted as saying in a CP story: "It is a very strange incident and we want to get more details before we take any further dramatic action". The story goes on to say: "Clark said the French insist the privately owned Maritimer out of Fortune, Newfoundland was not arrested but was invited to port".

Mr. Speaker, if someone invited you that way, would you go? What would have happened if the invitation was declined? What would have happened to those fishermen if they did not want to go? Perhaps if there had been a Canadian presence there the invitation could have been turned down successfully. However, as it was, the strength of the invitation was such that a tow line was attached and they were towed into port. Yet the Government seems to accept the fact that it was an invitation.

Rather than condemning it, the Secretary of State says that it is a very strange kind of incident. The only action we have taken is to temporarily suspend the talks that were to take place later this month between Canadian and French negotiators on some kind of non-binding mediation process to provide the French with a secure quota of fish. We have stopped the give-away process of the negotiations. That is all that has happened.

The Croix de Lorraine was seized by Canadian authorities for fishing not in the disputed 3PS zone but in Canadian waters. There was a direct violation of Canadian sovereignty in Canadian territorial waters. In 1987 we banned French fishing efforts in Canadian waters. The Croix de Lorraine incident was a deliberate act of provocation and one that was designed as a media event by the French. That is why there were French politicians on board.

Indeed, there is no relation between the arrest of the Croix de Lorraine and its crew and the accompanying celebrities with the arrest of this working fishing vessel, the Maritimer. The only relation is the exigencies of French politics. I suppose the Government is hoping that once the French run-off Presidential election takes place in three days this whole situation can die down and the Chirac attack will be over. I hope that it will be over also. But the point is, why do we stand for these insults? Why do we allow Canadian interests to become tools in French presidential politics? Why do we not have the gumption to stand up for our own interests at a time like this?

Incredibly, only 13 days after the arrest of the Croix de Lorraine on April 28, 1988, the Canadian Government reached an agreement with the French "on a non-binding mediation procedure to assist in resolving the Canada-France fishing quota dispute". It is a quota dispute, according to this agreement. It is not a boundary dispute. The agreement does not mention anything about how the boundary dispute is going to be resolved. It is a quota dispute. It is something that is going to give the French a quota to fish in Canadian waters. It is not something that is going to solve the boundary dispute between Newfoundland and St. Pierre and Miquelon. Providing the French, whether they are from St. Pierre and Miquelon or the metropolitan fleet from France, with a quota merely addresses the symptom of the problem and does not deal with the problem itself, which is the boundary dispute.

In January of 1987 you will recall, Mr. Speaker, how an agreement was reached, that agreement I referred to earlier, wherein the Government of Newfoundland and the Minister of Fisheries had been dealt right out of the negotiations. An agreement was reached between Canada and France which was supposed to set out the process for determining, first, the conditions for the application of the 1972 treaty after December, 1986, when the French fleet was required to leave the gulf area; and, second, the process by which the maritime claims of both countries off the coast of Newfoundland would be determined.

As I pointed out, this agreement in January of 1987 was reached without the knowledge of the Government of Newfoundland. The Government of Newfoundland was not informed that the team was going to France for one last round of negotiations. It was just left out. It was a kind of oversight.

Mr. Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): No wonder he considered leaving politics.

Mr. Manly: It was interesting that that agreement was signed in Paris during the tenure of our former ambassador to France, Lucien Bouchard, who is now the Prime Minister's hand-picked Secretary of State. He will be attempting to run in a by-election. It should be very interesting to see what the results of that by-election will be.

Under his tenure the Government of Canada offered the Government of France unspecified access to northern cod in the 2J3KL zone off northeast Newfoundland, something that had never been proposed before, and something that had been done without the consent of the Government of Newfoundland. It is as though we were offering to give away the hydroelectric resources of Quebec, or some of the mining resources of northern Ontario to some foreign power. That is what we did with the cod stock off the coast of Newfoundland. We were obviously trying to entice the French with these vital fish stock into accepting some kind of binding arbitration process for the boundary dispute. In 1987, in January, we were willing to grant the French access to our northern cod in the hope that there would be eventual acceptance of binding arbitration.

In April of 1988, just last month, we were offering to settle the question of quotas for French fishing vessels without ever addressing the boundary issue in a non-binding mediation process. We have had one retreat after another. We have given away one thing after another.

For 1987 the French were given a total quota in Canadian waters of 22,265 tonnes. In the disputed 3PS zone the French have already taken more than 26,000 tonnes of cod in spite of the fact that for that zone the quota was set at about 6,400 tonnes.

If we look at the importance of this issue we see that there are about 70 fishing communities and 5,000 fishermen located along the south coast of Newfoundland who depend on the resources of the 3PS zone. In both Newfoundland and the gulf region there are an estimated 30,000 fishermen and plant workers who are affected by any decrease in the resource, this resource that is being so heavily threatened by French overfishing. The total annual estimated value of the fishery in this area is $35 million. Yet the French have been continually overfishing in the 3PS zone, and the Canadian Government continues to negotiate with France and to grant concessions. Even after the January 1987 agreement, it took the Canadian Government two additional months to respond to the flagrant French overfishing.

In March of 1987 the Burgeo Bank was off limits to the French, and we closed Canadian ports to French vessels. In June the French responded by another deliberate provocation by issuing two oil licences in the 3PS zone, not that there was any great intention of drilling at the present time. It was just a deliberate provocation.

In August, at the Franchphonie summit, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) appointed a long time personal friend, Yves Fortier, to be Canada's negotiator on the Canada-France issue. When the talks resumed in September, we hoped to be able to negotiate allocations for the French fleet for the years 1988 to 1991, but in October the French walked away from the table. They wanted to settle only on the issue of quota and not on the boundary issue. That was their goal. The Canadians were reluctant to do that at the time. Now, however, we have agreed.

In conclusion, I think that Canada has to take a much stronger position. If Canada had taken a stronger position two years ago on this issue it could have led to a solution, instead of being the international patsy that we are that has allowed us to fall into this present situation.

The people who are suffering are the small fishers on both sides of the issue, both in Newfoundland and in St. Pierre and Miquelon. They are the ones who suffer.

We want to join in condemning the Government for its failure to resolve the dispute. The settlement of the boundary dispute—not just the quota for the French but the settlement of the boundary dispute—has to be seen as the principal issue that has to be resolved. That should be reserved to international and binding arbitration without either party insisting on preconditions such as the access by the French to northern cod. While that is happening there should be an agreement between Canada and France to restrict fishing in the 3PS zone to a level that is not going to endanger stocks.

Finally, the Canadian Government should be looking at this in a total context of all Canada-United States relations. If anyone wants to ask a question on that point, I would be glad to answer it.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Are there questions or comments?

The Chair recognizes the Hon. Member for Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe (Mr. Tobin) on debate.

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—Port-au-Port—St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, it is traditional to say when one stands in one's place that one is pleased to be in one's place to participate in a debate on a Bill or a motion. I am not at all pleased to be here today to speak on this motion. There is nothing happy about the occasion. There is a great deal that should leave most Canadians rather embarrassed about this occasion.

Canadians now know what this debate today is about. It is about, at the surface level, an arrest yesterday of a Canadian fishing vessel off the coast of Newfoundland, a Newfoundland fishing vessel, and that makes it a Canadian vessel. I should not have to say that but it seems that we have to remind ourselves of that today. On the surface that is what it is about, but only on the surface. It runs much deeper than the incident which filled up our television screens and which fills the front pages of our papers today.

What this debate is really about is what has occurred over the last three years in the relationship between Canada and France insofar as the joint use and management of Canadian waters and Canadian fish and the relationship we have had, the historic relationship, with the people of St. Pierre and indeed with France.

I am tired of hearing a Government that is so without a policy, so without a plan with respect to how to handle this difficulty, this dispute, that it has repeatedly talked about the fishing agreement of 1972. That agreement was signed 16 years ago and the Government drags it out as an explanation for what is happening in 1988. There is no more embarrassing position for a Government to be reduced to than a weak defence. The agreement of 1972 was primarily designed to get the French out of the Gulf of St. Lawrence, the most over-utilized fish stock in the country. I am sure the Minister would acknowledge that fact. The agreement of 1972 got them out of the Gulf. They came out in 1987, 15 years later.

Mr. Siddon: They didn't have to.

Mr. Tobin: They are out of the Gulf. The agreement of 1972 spelled out specific quotas for the French.

Last January the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) in consultation with the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. Siddon) sent a briefing note to the Government of France on our dispute. I have the briefing note in front of me. It was a formal note sent from the Secretary of State for External Affairs on January 27, 1987 to the Government of France. The following is what the Canadian Government said to the Government of France with respect to the 1972 treaty which is now being described as the cause of all our problems: "The Embassy emphasizes that these quotas exceed the legal obligations of Canada resulting from the Canada-France Fisheries Treaty of March 27, 1972 and have been granted only so as to facilitate the process leading to the settlement of the dispute between Canada and France over the maritime claims of the two states off the coast of Canada and St. Pierre and Miquelon."

In a note to the Government of France, the Canadian Embassy said to France that we are giving you quotas that are far and away above and beyond our obligations under the 1972 treaty, and we are doing it as a gesture of goodwill to try to resolve this dispute. That is the 1972 treaty, and enough of that red herring.

What happened when the Government goes beyond the 1972 treaty and attempts to engender goodwill? I agree it is a reasonable attempt for the Government to make. I do not condemn the Government for that. It was an act of diplomacy. But how has it been answered? How has every act of diplomacy, good faith, and goodwill by Canada been answered by France? It has been answered, Mr. Speaker, with an arrogance that is born out of an illusion of an imperial power, with an arrogance that can only be attached to a nation with a colonial mentality.

What nonsense it is in 1988 that because of a small community called St. Pierre and Miquelon off the coast of North America, that France should claim a 200 mile limit off the coast of North America. What nonsense it is in 1988 that the Government of Canada should seriously negotiate such a claim by a nation that lives in the past with illusions of colonial powers. That is the real issue.

What have we seen from our attempts to be reasonable? We have seen the Governor General of Canada, and Canadians will recall since it was recorded in the news services of this country, go to France and be repeatedly insulted by no less a person than the Prime Minister of France. The Right Hon. Jeanne Sauvé, who embodies Canada when she travels abroad, was insulted and deliberately so. That was the response to the gesture of goodwill.

Last summer the Lieutenant-Governor of Newfoundland, and a very distinguished Member of this House for nearly 30 years, the Hon. James McGrath, for the first time in two decades was denied the right to visit the islands of St. Pierre and Miquelon. This has been done for decades as a gesture of friendship between Newfoundland and St. Pierre. For the first time in decades the Lieutenant-Governor was told that he was not welcome in the islands of St. Pierre and Miquelon. That is how France answers the gesture of goodwill.

We saw France take a vessel with four French politicians and deliberately ask that they be arrested. They made it impossible for Canada not to arrest them. That is how France answered our gesture of goodwill. Yesterday we saw France in the most ridiculous action of all and the greatest insult of all, not arresting a Canadian vessel with Canadian politicians looking for cheap press, not arresting a Canadian vessel that was deliberately seeking to escalate the conflict by seeking to be arrested, but arresting a Canadian vessel with fishermen who are trying to make a living in order that they can put bread and butter on the table for their family back home in the communities in which they live. That was the final insult and the final answer to Canada's repeated gestures of goodwill.

Where are we today as a nation, Mr. Speaker? We can satisfy ourselves that we have followed the diplomatic route. We can satisfy our consciences that we have attempted at each and every turn to be a responsible, mature nation that seeks to avoid conflict and instead seeks discussion and a resolution of differences. We have done that. But this dispute has reached the point where we have now to satisfy ourselves and satisfy Canadians that this collection of provinces and peoples from Newfoundland to British Columbia, this Confederation that Newfoundland attached itself to 40 years ago in 1949, is a nation; that Canada does comprise a people that stands sovereign, strong, and independent and are prepared to act like a nation.

Today I asked the Secretary of State for External Affairs is it not time, not to declare a war, not to put gunboats off the coast of Newfoundland, not to arrest French vessels, not to fish under force of arms, but is it not time to say to France that the $14 billion submarine contract that is being discussed is on hold, that the $1.5 billion Air Canada purchase of planes from France is on hold. I asked him the question, and what did he tell me? He said that we cannot do that. There might be a trade war. Some workers in Québec or Ontario might be affected in that trade war. He told me that, a Member of Parliament by definition concerned about all of Canada, but also a Member of Parliament from Newfoundland.

I think that I understand Canada better than does the Secretary of State for External Affairs. The Canada that I know and love and have attached myself to would never say that Newfoundland or any part of Canada must be sold down the drain in the interests of a possible negative reaction somewhere else in the country. The people of Canada that I have met from British Columbia, Alberta, Ontario, and Québec would never say to me as a Newfoundlander: "Yes, we know your rights have been trampled. We know your livelihood is being destroyed, but you must take it, my son, in the interests of ensuring that none of the rest of us in Canada ever have to pay a price for standing up for your rights as a Newfoundlander and as a Canadian".

That is not the Canada that I am a part of, Mr. Speaker. I say to the Secretary of State for External Affairs that I do not know a Canadian from coast to coast who would share his sentiments. The Canada in which I live has citizens in every province who are outraged today at the actions of France. The Canada in which I live has citizens in every province who say: "So be it if we must put a submarine contract on hold, or if we must put an Airbus contract on hold. If we must stand as a united nation to put an end to this insult to this nation and to Newfoundland in particular, then we are prepared to stand as one, take the risk, and pay the price".

That is the Canada that I believe in and the one that the Secretary of State for External Affairs lives in. The Canada that is selfish, the Canada that is brutal, the Canada that says that the poorest and weakest parts of this nation are expendable, are disposable, in the same way that a Kleenex is disposable, exists only in the mind of the Secretary of State for External Affairs.

If that is this Government's worry, if that is this Government's rationale for selling Newfoundland down the drain, for selling Atlantic Canada down the drain in this dispute with France, then it need not be concerned, because the people of Canada are far greater, far more proud, far more independent, and far more united than the paranoid mind of this Minister would indicate, a mind that decides that one part of this nation is expendable.

It is time to put an end to endless debates about treaties. It is time to put an end to endless debates about history. It is time to put an end to endless discussions and the turning of the other cheek. It is time for Canada to stand up and be counted.

I do not condemn this Government for its past attempts at seeking to strike a responsive and conciliatory chord with France. But, when faced with the inevitable, when faced with the reality that France only understands, at this stage, a tough measure, faced with the reality that France will only understand, at this stage, that one part of this country shall not be sacrificed, this Government does not act, and for that I condemn it.

The way for this Government to act is to hit France where it will understand it best, and that is in its pocketbook. France ought to be told that $14 billion worth of submissions cannot be sold to Canada in the face of its action off the coast of Newfoundland—

Mr. Dick: You have just increased it by $2 billion in the last hour. You said $12 billion during Question Period.

Mr. Tobin: Mr. Speaker, is it not a tragedy that, at a time such as this, this narrow and shallow man—a man who, were he but a pair of shoes, could walk across a lake and never get his ankles wet, he is so shallow—would completely misunderstand the importance of the moment and the issue at hand, to the point where he, this junior Associate Minister of Defence (Mr. Dick), wants to debate whether these submarines are going to cost $12 billion or $14 billion.

Mr. Dick: You just do not care about $2 billion?

Mr. Tobin: Mr. Speaker, the truth is that the submarines will probably cost $20 billion. But, the dollar figure is not what counts. Principle counts; backbone counts; courage counts; integrity counts. The Minister cannot count, Mr. Speaker—not when it comes to any of the values that make up the nature and character that define a country; nor can he count when it comes to the cost of these submarines. I would advise him to listen and to learn.

We on this side are asking the Government to put both the Airbus and the submarine contracts on hold, to freeze the negotiations in respect of those acquisitions.

If by some circumstance—one that I cannot imagine—the forests of British Columbia were being held ransom in an international dispute, I am sure Newfoundland would rally to that cause; if the oil and gas resources of Alberta, through some circumstance, were being held to a ransom in an international dispute, I know we would rally to that cause; if the hydro power of the Province of Quebec were being held up to ransom in international dispute, I know that each and every other part of this nation would rally to that cause; and if the mining resources of northern Ontario were held to ransom in some dispute, each and every part of this country would rally to that cause. And, Mr. Speaker, I know in my heart of hearts, notwithstanding the fears and the paranoia of the Secretary of State for External Affairs, that as Atlantic Canada, and particularly Newfoundland, and its resource, the backbone of its economy, is being held to ransom in an international dispute, each and every Canadian from coast to coast will rally to Newfoundland's cause.

I invite the Government of Canada to have the vision and the courage to do the same.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member for Nunatsiaq (Mr. Suluk), on questions and comments.

Mr. Suluk: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Hon. Member in relation to the purchase of nuclear submarines by Canada.

I know that the New Democratic Party would prefer that Canada continue to rely upon three diesel powered submarines. I know that the New Democratic Party would prefer that we not acquire new and modern submarines.

Given the renewed interest in Arctic waters and the question of sovereignty, I think most Canadians understand that the acquisition of nuclear powered submarines is no longer an issue that is subject to question.

This past winter, I heard the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) say that he was not interested in acquiring a nuclear submarine fleet; that he would consider cancelling any such acquisition. However, given the troubles that that Party already has, I would think that to be unlikely. My question for the Hon. Member for Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe (Mr. Tobin) is whether the Liberal Party has changed its position in respect of the acquisition of a nuclear submarine fleet.

Perhaps the Hon. Member will take this opportunity to clarify whether he is now in agreement that Canada should in fact acquire a nuclear submarine fleet, thus enabling Canada to grow stronger, and ensuring that, in the future, should we ever have to confront other nations, we have sufficient power to back up the words of the politicians.

An Hon. Member: What you want is a war!

Mr. Suluk: I know that the New Democratic Party would like us to just give in, whether it be to the Soviets or to other nations of the world. I would like to know where the Hon. Member stands in that regard, and particularly whether or not there has been a change in the policy of the Liberal Party in respect of the need for a nuclear submarine fleet.

Mr. Tobin: Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for Nunatsiaq (Mr. Suluk) for his question. I know he will want it answered at this time, given that he has already announced that he will not be running in the next election. As a result, this may be his last opportunity to ask me that question.

Mr. Suluk: So . . . ?

Mr. Tobin: I am merely pointing out that obviously the Hon. Member is not too enamoured with the process that he has been a part of on that side of the House.

Mr. Suluk: Just answer the question.

Mr. Tobin: Mr. Speaker, I shall make two points in response to the question of the departing Member for Nunatsiaq—a decision he has taken, obviously, because he does not enjoy the political process in the Progressive Conservative Party. There are two points that I shall make in response.

First of all, he has lost sight of the issue. The issue is not one of submarines or airplanes. As it happens, submarines and airplanes happen to be the subject matters of two sets of contract negotiations in which the Government is involved with France. It is not something that involves the private sector. I have not asked that Canadians stop buying French wine, or any other product. The airplanes in question are being purchased by a Crown corporation. That is Government. The submarines are to be purchased by the Department of Defence. Again, a purchase by Government. Here we have two areas where our Government can respond. That is why we talk about submarines; that is why we talk about airplanes.

The issue is Canadian sovereignty and the protection of our fishery, a renewable resource. We raise the issue of submarines and airplanes in that context. It could have been a purchase by this Government of billions of dollars worth of toothpicks. As it happens, the contract negotiations involve submarines and airplanes.

On the larger question of submarines, we in the Liberal Party are opposed to Canada acquiring nuclear-powered submarines for the purpose, in the words of the Hon. Member, of "backing up our words with military might". We do not suggest that the solution to this conflict is that Canada ought to confront France militarily. We suggest that the solution is to hit France where it hurts, in its pocketbook. That is the difference between the philosophy of the Liberal Party and that of the Progressive Conservative Party.

While the Progressive Conservative Government says that it is acquiring submarines to patrol our Arctic waters, we now know from the departing Hon. Member for Nunatsiaq the real reason, that being that it has some fantasy about a military nuclear confrontation that it wants to be able to deliver on one of these days.

• (1300)

I say this to the Hon. Member for Nunatsiaq (Mr. Suluk) who comes from Canada's North that the way to establish Canada's sovereignty in the North is not by putting nuclear-powered submarines under the ice. The way to establish our sovereignty in the North—he should know this, he ought to be preaching it but he is not—is to help the people who live in Canada's North to live a decent life, one of equality, one with equal services, one with employment, one with jobs, one with the dignity of a paycheque, because ownership and possession is 90 per cent of the law. Let us help our people who live in Canada's North, the people in his riding, live a quality life. Let us do that. Let us put the money into that, and the Hon. Member will not need to have submarines to protect an empty land because it will be a full and happy land, inhabited by the people who have not been forgotten by their Government in Ottawa and who have the same quality of life and the same services as the people who live elsewhere in this country. The Member should be preaching that rather than departing this Chamber with his tail between his legs, never to run again.

Mr. Suluk: You have never elected a Liberal in the North.

Mr. Robichaud: Mr. Speaker, I attended Question Period this afternoon and I heard some answers that made me angry. When I heard a Minister of this Government say that we could not defend the property and rights of Newfoundland fishermen for fear that it might harm some other region of the country, I felt angry because I believe that we are all Canadians from coast to coast. I think that this Minister owes us an apology. He should correct the statement he made this afternoon as soon as possible. I was just saying to my colleague, "Shouldn't the Prime Minister demand this Minister's resignation right away?"

[English]

Mr. Tobin: Obviously, Mr. Speaker, this is not a question to which I will have to give a lot of thought. My colleague says that when a Minister of the Crown puts forward in a nation, diversified but reconciled by unity, the notion that one part of the nation is expendable, then that Minister fails in the most basic sense to understand his responsibility as a Minister of the Crown. Of course he ought to come to his senses quickly. He ought to put his finger back on the pulse of this nation quickly or take leave of his responsibilities as a Minister of the Crown.

I hope that when the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) goes to France on May 26, when he goes to his next photo opportunity, he will find more than the backbone of a jellyfish accompanying him and that he will tell the leaders of France in no uncertain terms that Canada is whole and unified and that parts and pieces of Canada will not be traded off like some chip in a monopoly game, because that is the case. Voices from every part of this country will be heard to say that we are not prepared to sell one part of Canada down the drain in some Machiavellian poker game which the Prime Minister and his Government think they are playing.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions and comments are now terminated. Debate. The Hon. Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. Siddon).

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, as I begin my remarks, I can assure the Hon. Member for Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe (Mr. Tobin) and all Members of this House that our Government does not intend to trade off any part of Canada or the interests of the people in any part of Canada as some kind of a bargaining chip, as the Member described it in this matter. Quite the converse is true. The record of our Government in advancing the cause of Canadian fishermen and asserting sovereignty over our fishing resources out to the 200-mile limit is unprecedented in the history of previous Governments at any time in the history of Canada.

I am grateful to the Hon. Member for Gander—Twillingate (Mr. Baker) for bringing forward this motion, which enables us to debate an issue of extreme importance to the Government of Canada, to all the people of Canada, but especially to the fishermen and the people who live in the inshore communities of Newfoundland and other areas surrounding St. Pierre and Miquelon.

On the other hand, I do not appreciate the distortions, the out of context allegations and pure misinformation which are reflected in the kind of diatribe which first emanated from the lips of the Hon. Member for Gander—Twillingate when he heard of a problem arising in the fishing grounds near the Burin Peninsula yesterday afternoon. What could be worse than having a government running this country made up of the Hon. Member for Gander—Twillingate, the Hon. Member for Port au Port—St. Barbe and the Hon. Member for Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands (Mr. Manly) who spoke for the NDP earlier? Their kinds of comments belie a shoot-from-the-hip action, "do not think but take an act first" approach to problems. This approach could have serious consequences for Canada and for the very people we are trying to help, the fishermen of these inshore communities of southern Newfoundland and all of Newfoundland.

The comments made yesterday inside and outside this House to the media by the sponsor of this motion, the Hon. Member for Gander—Twillingate, who seems to have left this House for the day, are absolutely irresponsible, as they have been in cases of his previous outbursts in reaction to events which have developed over the past year in regard to the Canada-France fishing dispute. Of course the Hon. Member for Port au Port—St. Barbe, the Leader of the New Democratic Party, and it seems all Members on the opposite side, would wish that we would act now, escalate this issue even further, if not by a trade war, then by a shooting war, from their perception. We know, Mr. Speaker, that a government has to be far more responsible than that, it has to be methodical and extremely careful in responding to such provocation.

Yesterday the Member for Gander—Twillingate said in this House at about 5.45 p.m., as recorded at page 15188 of Hansard:

> —at this very moment there is a French patrol vessel towing a 65-foot Canadian dragger that was fishing legally in the disputed zone off the south coast of Newfoundland—

We are told this vessel was fishing within the 12-mile territorial sea of the islands of St. Pierre and Miquelon as recognized by the 1972 treaty which a Liberal Government introduced, approved and then remained silent about for some 12 years. The Hon. Member made a false allegation. Had the vessel been apprehended in the disputed zone, you can be assured, Sir, that Canada's response would have been far more swift and it would have been a far more serious provocation of the relationship between these two countries.

The Member then went on to say:

> We talk about the attitude of the Canadian Government. I will tell you what its attitude is. Over this vessel being towed flies an RCMP helicopter.

That is not true. Because of the fog in Newfoundland yesterday, there were no aircraft flying in that vicinity of which we have knowledge. I have checked. There were no Coast Guard aircraft in the area. There were no RCMP aircraft in the area. There were no Fisheries aircraft or vessels in the area. The Member went on to say:

> Then there is a fixed-wing aircraft belonging to the Coast Guard. There is a fisheries patrol vessel in the area.

Then the Hon. Member went on to suggest:

> —that at least what should be done is for the Canadian patrol vessel in the area to stick its nose in front of the French patrol vessel, communicate with it and say, "Look, you are not allowed to arrest somebody aboard a vessel in the disputed zone—"

All of that is rubbish and nonsense, Mr. Speaker. It is an emotional extreme false misrepresentation of a situation which suggests that any persons who would react from the hip in that manner never deserve to sit in the Cabinet of the Government of Canada.

I want to point out in this House that we have made great progress since January 24, 1987, in bringing the French to their senses in realizing that within our Canadian sovereign waters our fish are there for the first benefit of Canadian fishermen. We have, therefore, taken a number of important steps to persuade France and, indeed, where it was necessary, to take forceful action to ensure that the interests of our fishermen are held over and above all other obligations which France or other countries might feel we have to them.

I wish to point out that our over-all effort in this initiative has been unprecedented in Canadian history. It is to protect Canadian interests in the Atlantic area in the face of these difficulties which have developed with France.

Second, this is the first time anyone has interfered with the activities of the small-boat fishermen off the south coast of Newfoundland, the little guys in the inshore fishery, so to speak, who have traditionally fished on both sides of that inshore area between the Islands of St. Pierre and Miquelon and the Burin Peninsula. This is the first time that traditional arrangement has ever been challenged as it was yesterday, and in that respect, Canada will not stand idly by and allow this to happen.

Our principal objective is to settle once and for all the boundary question around the French Islands of St. Pierre and Miquelon. I am told that back in 1972 when Mr. Jamieson and Mr. Sharp and others were in the Cabinet of Canada, they had an opportunity to accept a boundary which would set the limit of the extent of French sovereignty around St. Pierre and Miquelon to something like 20 miles, but they refused to accept that very, very attractive offer which would have prevented all of these problems from occurring. It would have meant that our fishermen would not have had to deal with French overfishing and French presence within our waters or within a disputed zone extending some 180 miles to the south of these islands.

The activities of these vessels are putting our stocks at great risk. We want to settle that boundary question and to establish clearly, beyond a shadow of a doubt, Canada's sovereign right, our right, not some other foreign country's right, not some opposition Party's right but the Government of Canada's right to conserve and manage the fish stocks in the area off the south coast of Newfoundland for the benefit of our fishermen. We have taken unprecedented steps in this regard to limit the French fisheries in Canadian waters to their traditional quotas under the 1972 Canada-France treaty, taking into account the expiration of the metropolitan fishing rights in the Gulf of St. Lawrence in 1986.

When the Liberal Government of 1972 signed an agreement with France, it included the right for large freezer trawlers which became factory freezer trawlers based in France, in St. Malo, principally, to come across the Atlantic and fish in the Gulf of St. Lawrence. This was pointed out by the Hon. Member for Port au Port—St. Barbe. They fished in the Gulf of St. Lawrence for 15 years by the will and with the consent of a Liberal Government, and each year of the last five years they took in excess of 21,000 tonnes of fish from that area, of which all but 4,000 were sent back to France for processing.

We have ended that practice. It was this Government which ended that practice and removed that presence from the gulf so that that resource could be turned over to the people of the ridings of the Gulf of St. Lawrence, including those of the riding of the Hon. Member for Westmorland—Kent (Mr. Robichaud). We are patriating those resources for the benefit of our fishermen.

In a larger sense, this Government has taken unprecedented efforts to remove all foreign fishing presence from our non-surplus stocks within the Canadian economic zone and to bring into force deterrents and penalties that will ensure that those resources are respected and made available to Canadian fishermen. I think that by now all Members of the House know what a great benefit that has been to the fishermen.

This Government has taken those steps. This Government has been firm. This Government has been reasonable, but it has advanced methodically over the past 12 or 14 months, in the case of its relationship with France, the position that our fishermen and their needs come first. This was not done by some other Government. No previous Liberal Government had the courage to do so. This was done by the Government led by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), the Government of which I am proud to be a member.

France has claimed an enormous part of the Canadian 200-mile zone for its two tiny islands off the South Coast of Newfoundland. This is an unreasonable claim, and in fact, we believe that when it is eventually submitted to a court of international arbitration, the decision will be awarded in Canada's favour.

A small, tiny speck of rock adjacent to our Atlantic provinces cannot possibly claim an equitable division of resources with the large continental mass of that rock known as Newfoundland. France knows very well that it will not succeed before any international court in giving effect to the claim of a huge part of the outer Gulf of the St. Lawrence which is Canadian territory. The channel dispute is witness to that. It was awarded in France's favour that islands which are sovereign islands of Great Britain but within the French territorial sea could not claim a large fishing zone around those islands for Great Britain.

It is regrettable that France has made this enormous and unreasonable claim and has at the same time, to put pressure on Canada, escalated its fishery in the disputed zone to four times France's traditional allocation of some 6,400 tonnes of fish in that area. In so doing, France has endangered the stocks and the livelihoods of Canadian communities and the residents and fishermen of those communities, particularly in the vicinity of the southern and eastern coasts of Newfoundland.

France has resisted and continues to resist submitting the boundaries dispute to an international court, demanding from Canada even more fish as the price of an agreement to get the boundary matter into adjudication. As Hon. Members know, these demands are outrageous and cannot be substantiated. Canada will not yield to them. Canada continues to insist, however, that the boundary issue must be submitted to international adjudication before it is too late and the well-being and livelihoods of our fishermen in that area are permanently destroyed.

We want to negotiate with France on a reasonable basis quotas which are fair in the interim period, while the matter is being subjected to arbitration, but we will not give up quotas which will disadvantage our fishermen merely in order to allow ourselves to give in to this kind of pressure—I could use a stronger word to describe it—because we must stand for the interests of our fishermen first.

There are 70 small communities on the south coast of Newfoundland. The unemployment rate there is 22 per cent. Of the 26 fish plants in that area, 15 are closed for at least three months of every year. We are talking here about the livelihoods of almost 5,000 commercial fishermen and 3,400 plant workers on the south coast of Newfoundland alone.

On average, each Newfoundland fisherman catches about 18 tonnes of various kinds of fish in that area, worth about $8,000 to each fisherman per year. In contrast, the 176 fishermen of St. Pierre and Miquelon catch something in the order of 100 tonnes per year, more than five times what our fishermen catch, worth some $55,000 for each one of the 176 fishermen of St. Pierre and Miquelon. The truth is that it is our fishermen who are being disadvantaged and who will be absolutely devastated if we do not eliminate the French overfishing and solve this boundary question as quickly and as swiftly as possible.

That is why we have acted on behalf of these fishermen. We have responded to their concerns by putting pressure on the French, step by step. When we went into discussions early last year, we found that France, by the end of February, had already exceeded the quota we granted it within those waters outside the disputed zone, and we closed, therefore, Canadian ports to French fishing vessels. They had exceeded their 6,400-tonne quota and we therefore closed the ports. We next refused to allow France to fish on Burgeo Bank, an important fishing ground outside the disputed zone to the west of the Burin Peninsula. During the summer of 1987 we closed the rest of area 3PS outside the disputed zone to French fishing, including the western gullies which are very important and precious fishing grounds which they have fished for many years.

The result of these closures has been a significant reduction in French fishing in Canadian waters and, indeed, in the disputed zone. Traditionally, some nine large factory freezer trawlers came from France to harvest our fish. This year I am told that that number has been cut in half because of the strong measures we have taken. You know that when a wayward trawler, a political escapade, if you like, sailed into our waters two or three weeks ago, some 50 miles off St. John's, Newfoundland, and openly defied our decision that no quotas would be granted to large trawlers this year, we arrested them, brought them to port, and charged all of the members of that crew, with the exception of members of the media who were aboard.

On October 9, France walked away from the negotiating table. Although we had put a reasonable proposition on the table for interim quotas, France rejected it, and therefore we said that no further quotas would be granted to French fishermen anywhere in Canadian waters in 1988. That is a great step forward. No previous Government has ever had the courage to do that. It has brought significant benefit to our fishermen. In the absence of an over-all fisheries agreement and without an agreement to send the boundary dispute to international arbitration, there would be no fish for France outside the disputed zone.

What I am saying is that we are making considerable progress in spite of the strong and misleading protests of opposition Members, that is, until France decided to arrest the little guy, the Newfoundland southshore fishermen whose livelihood has been at the heart of this dispute since the outset.

There is an inshore zone some 25 miles across between the Burin Peninsula and the Islands of St. Pierre and Miquelon. In that zone there has been an understanding that these small inshore fishermen, both from St. Pierre and Miquelon and from Newfoundland, would be free to fish unimpeded as they have been for decades. They fish alongside. They do not have sophisticated navigational aids. They are not the large, 150 or 200-foot trawlers with efficient processing on board. These are small trawlers, longliners, local fishing boats, and both Canada and France have understood that the interests of those immediate communities and fishermen should be respected by allowing this arrangement to continue. All that ended yesterday when the little guy got hit hard by big France through the apprehension of one of our vessels by a French naval vessel.

We will not stand idly by and watch our fishermen from these communities which are so dependent on this resource, these inshore fishermen whose earnings are far lower than those of the fishermen of St. Pierre and Miquelon, to be harassed in this way. That is why the Government took the swift action announced this morning by the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark). We will suspend the discussions between our negotiator and the French negotiator which were directed toward finding a way of mediating this problem. The Secretary of State for External Affairs called in the French Ambassador and issued an official protest over this matter. We will defend and support our fishermen, the captain and crew of the vessel concerned.

As conditions develop, other measures, I am sure, will be taken as necessary. Therefore, I would just say in conclusion that it is most irresponsible, unacceptable and reprehensible that members of the Opposition demand some kind of escalation. If it is not a trade war, it is a physical war they advocate. How could we fight such a war with our country as defenceless as it is? This is an absolutely ridiculous suggestion. We are being moderate and we have made great progress on behalf of the fishermen of Newfoundland and Atlantic Canada and will continue to do so. We are prepared to sit down with France and seek an orderly settlement of this question, but not until they reverse this totally unacceptable provocation which they wreaked upon Canada yesterday.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions and comments.

[Translation]

Mr. Robichaud: Mr. Speaker, in his speech, the Minister told us right at the beginning that the Hon. Member for Gander—Twillingate (Mr. Baker) was telling all kinds of lies, that there was no plane, there was no helicopter, there was no boat in that region for surveillance. Nevertheless, the Minister assures us that the Canadian vessel was inside the boundaries of St. Pierre and Miquelon.

My first question is: If there was no surveillance, how can he say that our boat was indeed inside these boundaries?

He then said that it was his Government that had managed to get the boats of the metropolitan fleet out of the Gulf. But should those boats not have been out, under Section 3 of the 1972 Treaty that states:

[English]

"Fishing vessels registered in Metropolitan France may continue to fish from January 15 to May 15 each year up to May 1, 1986." It is not our Government that made it so that the metropolitan fleet would be moved out of the gulf.

I ask the Minister if he would comment on that, please.

Mr. Siddon: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member raises two important questions. He asks, if we allege that our vessel was within the territorial waters of St. Pierre and Miquelon, how would we know that if there were no aircraft or vessels present? I can assure the Hon. Member there were no vessels or aircraft of the fisheries service, the Coast guard or the RCMP in that vicinity, I am told. However, the point at which the vessel was apprehended was very close to the boundary, and I understand that the Master himself may well have admitted that he was within the territorial waters of St. Pierre and Miquelon.

This illustrates the danger of shooting from the hip and reacting in an inappropriate manner, as the Hon. Member for Gander—Twillingate did yesterday. I think that shows a lack of forethought, a lack of caution. Had the vessel been outside the territorial waters of St. Pierre and Miquelon, the incident would have been a far worse provocation. Notwithstanding that this is an unacceptable provocation in its present form, we cannot at this point be absolutely certain that our vessel was in the territorial waters of St. Pierre and Miquelon. The evidence of whatever proceedings follow will show that. However, I can assure the Hon. Member that when the Hon. Member for Gander—Twillingate alleges that an RCMP helicopter was flying overhead and Canadian patrol vessels were nearby, he is absolutely and totally misleading this House and the people of Canada.

With regard to the 1972 treaty and the withdrawal of the French metropolitan fleet from the gulf, the Hon. Member will know, if he studies history a little bit, that there were three five-year renewals of that 15-year right to fish in Canadian waters from 1971 to the May period of 1986. There were three consecutive renewals. The treaty did not specify the quantity of fish. That was established by the then Minister of Fisheries and Oceans who, for a large portion of that time, was the Hon. Member's predecessor as the Hon. Member for Westmorland—Kent. As I recollect it, he granted quotas which increased in each of those five-year periods to a level of 21,000 tonnes in the last period between 1981 and 1986. The result was that when I became Minister we had to take drastic measures to reduce quotas in the Gulf of St. Lawrence because it had been massively overfished. That 21,000 tonnes had a lot to do with devastating the livelihood of fishermen from the Hon. Member's riding in northwestern New Brunswick.

Mr. Manly: Mr. Speaker, first I have a brief comment. The Minister referred to the settlement regarding the Channel Islands. I think the Minister would acknowledge that that settlement very clearly indicated that it was not to be a precedent for any other similar situation. The Channel Islands settlement does not apply across the board to St. Pierre and Miquelon. France was cagey enough to ensure that it received that proviso.

The Minister said that great progress has been made since January, 1987, in bringing the French to their senses on the whole question of fishing and coming to terms with Canada. Will he be specific? What have we got? We have seen the French involved in provocations, sending the vessel Croix de Lorraine into Canadian waters.

The Minister himself admitted a few minutes ago that this is the first time the arrangement between Canada and France, Newfoundland and St. Pierre and Miquelon, for small vessels has been broken. We have seen continued overfishing.

How have the French come to their senses? What have we got? The Minister referred specifically to international arbitration. When will that international arbitration take place? There is an agreement that there will be a process by which France will get quotas while we are waiting for international arbitration. When will international arbitration begin and in what form?

Mr. Siddon: Mr. Speaker, I think the Hon. Member's question is very appropriate. He asks what we have from all these events, even the anguish in the past year, since January 24, 1987. We have the present situation in which, for the first year in our history, there are no French fishing vessels fishing anywhere in the undisputed waters of Canada, from Davis Inlet, down through the areas we call 2GH off the coast of Labrador. There are no quotas of northern cod which they have traditionally fished under their share of the European long-term agreement, which we also terminated last year.

There are no French vessels fishing in the area 3NO on the Grand Banks. There are no French vessels fishing in the Gulf in the area 4RS and 4RT or on the Scotian shelf.

The only place where the French are still fishing within waters that we claim to be ours is in the disputed zone, largely south of the islands of St. Pierre and Miquelon, and the smaller area which the inshore vessels of St. Pierre have shared with our inshore fishermen, which is the area that was the subject of yesterday's incident.

We have removed the French presence. There are no large quantities of fish going back to France as there were every year for as long as France has been present in the waters of Canada. That is a great step forward.

We have also noted this year that the number of large trawlers which have traditionally come across the Atlantic to fish in our waters has dropped by almost one-half. We are told that there are signs in France that the owners of these vessels will increasingly find it difficult to contemplate coming to Canada and fishing that resource. I think that bodes well in terms of a solution to the overfishing in the disputed zone by those large trawlers from France. We see a continual decline of their enthusiasm to come across the Atlantic and fish in these waters.

I suggest that we are making very steady progress. A measure of that progress is the rather extreme, alarmist kind of reaction in which France is engaged, first with the silly voyage of the Croix de Lorraine some three weeks ago to draw international attention to this great injustice. However, that backfired and was seen in Canada and abroad as an unacceptable infringement on our sovereignty.

Then it provoked this silly confrontation yesterday in an area where our inshore fishermen have lived according to certain arrangements for a long time. It is the inshore fishermen of St. Pierre and Miquelon and southern Newfoundland who are being victimized by this latest provocation.

The answer to the question is that we do not know the date on which France will agree to refer the boundary issue to international arbitration. I suggest, however, even with all the debate and controversy that surrounds this issue, that we have made major progress toward persuading France and creating the pressure of international recognition that France's demands in this matter are unreasonable and that just as in the case of the Channel Islands decision which went in favour of France, a just solution to Canada's benefit must be found soon.

Mr. Ernie Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, today we are debating a motion of condemnation of the Government. The motion declares that this House deplore the unlawful arrest of a Canadian fishing vessel by the Government of France in area 3PS off the coast of Newfoundland; and that this House condemn the Government for its failure to protect the Canadian fishing industry and its continuing inability to resolve the Canada-France fishing dispute.

That motion is of enormous concern to Newfoundlanders and Canadians. I emphasize that it is a concern to the people of Newfoundland because I know how much our new colleague, the Member for St. John's East (Mr. Harris), would like to be in the House speaking to this motion. As happens so often with Members of Parliament, on Fridays they are back in their constituencies. He has the opportunity to speak directly to the people in Newfoundland and express his own outrage at what has happened and mobilize their support for strong action from the Government.

In his stead, I and my colleagues recognize firmly our obligation to speak for the people of Newfoundland and the people of Canada in putting pressure on the Government to do the right thing to arrive at a resolution of this matter.

In this respect, I am thinking of the Ministry and its members. The Member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie) spoke before Question Period to express himself strongly on behalf of Newfoundlanders. The Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. Siddon) just spoke and expressed the strong feelings of the Canadian Government.

The Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark), who surely has a central role in such questions of relations with other countries which involve the very boundaries of the Canadian nation, has not spoken. He was here in Question Period, quite naturally receiving the shots of one Member after another pressing him to take action to bring this dispute to a proper resolution.

I want to focus for a few moments on the actions of the Secretary of State for External Affairs since our condemnation is of the lack of success and action of the Government.

It is worth considering what the Secretary of State for External Affairs does in situations like this in other parts of the world. I am not specifically referring to boundary disputes, but the way in which he grapples with difficulties and disputes of whatever sort. Canadians were struck—some pleased, some outraged—by the strong stand the Secretary of State for External Affairs took in regard to the Israeli occupation of the territories it seized in earlier wars, where the Palestinian population has been protesting against the occupation for some months.

I note only the fact that he spoke very firmly. If there was any sense that the Canadian tradition was one of quiet diplomacy behind the scenes, when he spoke that particular day to the Canadian Israeli community there was not very much evidence of quiet diplomacy to be seen.

It was not the only time that the Secretary of State for External Affairs spoke out in such a firm way. I think of his strong statements about Canadians of the Sikh faith who belong to certain organizations when he sent a letter to a number of Premiers urging them to have nothing to do with a certain number of organizations. He took a very, very strong stand. Some people saw this as a response to the pressure of the Government of India and to those who were concerned about trade. They saw this as yielding to another Government.I would not want to draw a final conclusion on that.

At least once in this House some months ago questions were raised regarding the treatment of a Canadian who was from south Asia who was imprisoned in India, whether justifiably or not. We know that the Draconian laws of detention now in effect in the Republic of India allow persons to be held for two years without any charge. The person can then be brought to court and the charge can be renewed for another two years. This detention is in utter disregard for that long-standing principle of habeas corpus that we all value so much which came out of the development of English law. To the credit of the Secretary of State, he recognized the harshness of the treatment of this person. He said quite clearly in the House in Question Period that this was not behaviour that the Government of Canada approved of. I was sufficiently impressed that I went over to him to discuss whether or not this was the first time perhaps that a Canadian Secretary of State for External Affairs had spoken so firmly about a sister nation of the Commonwealth in being critical of some actions that it took.

The pros and cons of these various cases can be debated. However, I do not see any strong action. I know, to the credit of the Secretary of State for External Affairs, the kind of position he has generally taken in Central America. But there I want to begin modifying the picture. We well know that he has been challenged in the House. He was challenged by my friend, the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Birds Hill (Mr. Blaikie). He was challenged to speak some words of condemnation, particularly of the United States which has been pressing against the sovereign state in Central America and against the Nicaraguan people. The Secretary of State for External Affairs refused to do that. There those old traditions of quiet diplomacy came to the fore.

I suggest that whatever may happen in some places far from Canada dealing with countries that have limited impact on Canada, the Secretary of State is prepared to be forceful and firm. However, when it comes to dealings with France and an attempt to resolve this long-standing difficulty involving fishing rights based on the islands of St. Pierre and Miquelon, he has been with his Government a Government that has certainly been equivocal at various times. He has not followed a straightforward and consistent policy that might bring this whole dispute to a resolution.

The Minister of Fisheries spoke a few minutes ago. At one point in his comments he indulged in a certain amount of rhetoric. In fact, he indulged in a little hyperbole about Newfoundland, that glorious rock, and then drew into it the great domain of Canada and how the fishing rights of these little islands could be put up against the fishing rights of the Canadian people. There is, of course, a danger in that rhetoric.

The Islands of St. Pierre and Miquelon have remained a French possession from the days of the French regime precisely because of the fishery. Anyone who goes back to the peace negotiations that ended the Seven Years War in the early 1760s, more than 200 years ago, knows perfectly well that France held on to these islands as a way of maintaining its part of the fishery on the gulf and beyond. The fishery of North America, the coastal waters and beyond North America, the fishery around Newfoundland, has been famous for centuries. The Europeans had fished their territory out. John Cabot carried out exploration for the fishermen of the west country of England. There was the arrival of fishermen from all up and down the western coast of Europe, from Spain and Portugal to the Basque territories of France and the port cities of France and England. The fishery off the North American coast has been one of the great fisheries of the world. The French interest in that is clear and long-established.

Now, of course, the changes that have occurred in terms of the extension of boundaries out to 200 miles, as well as the establishment of responsibility under international treaties, the situation of these islands and the French claims to them have been clearly put in contention. The reorganization of the fishery and the determination of what France's rights should be in this new situation were something that should have been dealt with about the time that the situation of the Channel Islands was dealt with. Surely the Canadian Government of that time should have been in consultation with the British Government. We can always look back to our days in the Empire and our continuing ties with the Commonwealth, even with the British involvement and the European Economic Community which reduces our ties with Britain in many ways. Surely that was the time to say to the British Government: "Let's be sure that when you settle the rights of the Channel Islands and British subjects out there close to France, let's make sure that at the same time we take care to settle the rights of France near the coast of Canada, right off the Island of Newfoundland, in a very similar way". It can only be profoundly regretted that the settlement that was arrived at there is not to be regarded as a precedent.

If it is not possible for Canada to go to France directly and to say that that is a precedent upon which we should settle, then what can be done is to say to an arbitrator: "The resolution that was arrived at for the Channel Islands indicates how these matters need to be resolved. We do not ask you to make it a precedent. We just ask you to contemplate the situation in the gulf and around St. Pierre and Miquelon. As far as French rights are concerned there, treat them in a similar way". That is all that is wanted.

It seems to me, and lawyers may protest, that this is an attempt to prevent something from being a precedent. However, if it is a sound resolution, then how can the French deny that the settlement there was not a sound one? It was one that they wanted. It seems to me that one does not have to concede very much to that particular kind of legalese in pressing the point.

Mr. Siddon: You assume that it is a reasonable world.

Mr. Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): The Minister says that it is a reasonable world—

Mr. Siddon: You're assuming that.

Mr. Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): I want to get to the ways in which it is not a reasonable world. I have been talking about the way in which the Secretary of State has faced up to some situations that were not reasonable.

Surely, in thinking about this situation we have to consider what happened in January of 1987. An agreement was made which indicates how unreasonable the world can be and how unwise the Government of Canada was at the time. It arrived at an agreement which it was hoped would quiet down the French and take care of things. It was an agreement that gave the French some rights. In fact, it gave them unspecified access to the northern cod stock in another area off northeast Newfoundland, the 2J3KL zone. To arrive at that kind of agreement without having consulted with the Government of Newfoundland was an incredible piece of irrational behaviour. It was not reasonable to do that.

A good deal of the difficulties that the Government got into politically resulted from that particular failure to consult with the Government of Newfoundland. This particular grant of fishing rights is short of what is actually required, which is a resolution of the boundaries question. It is not enough to buy the happiness of the French by giving them some fishing rights. What we want to do is to settle the matter.

It is worth recognizing that the reaction or fire-storm of protest that broke out in Newfoundland when that agreement came to public attention has reverberated very far through the halls of Canadian power. As a matter of fact, if one looks at the constitutional Accord arrived at at Meech Lake, and considered further at the Langevin Building last spring, the proviso is that in perpetuity the fishery be a topic for discussion at constitutional conferences, of all places. This is evidence of how badly and irrationally the Conservative Government of the day acted in arriving at some type of concession to the French without properly dealing with the Government of Newfoundland.

It is not surprising that late last fall the Premier of Newfoundland apparently considered getting out of politics when he noted that type of behaviour on the part of his federal friends. They were not even people from another Party. When Manitoba got shafted by the Government on important decisions such as the CF-18 contract, Premier Pawley could always think it was partisan, that the Manitoba New Democratic Government did not matter a whit to the Conservative Government of Canada. But for the Conservative Premier of Newfoundland to experience that type of behaviour from a Government of his own stripe was surely cause for the outrage that he expressed, which continued for months, and also the type of outrage expressed by the people of Newfoundland.

What is clearly required is to find the means of bringing the French to arbitration. What we did today in Question Period is attempt to find the means and to suggest the means to Government to do this.

Perhaps to the credit of the Government, which is not something that we do all the time, cutting back on the fishing rights to which the Minister referred in responding to questions from my colleague, the Hon. Member for Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands (Mr. Manly), actually begins to focus the issue. To cut back on the right to fish for French fishermen, and to make the failure of the agreement on boundaries as costly as possible for the French, is surely the only way to go. When the Government took those steps in reaction to the fire-storm of protest that came last year from the people of Newfoundland, and calls here in the House in Question Period for days, that action was certainly on the right track. I am very pleased to hear that far fewer trawlers are coming over.

This is a question of the fishery of Metropolitan France which has often extended incredibly far across the oceans. While Metropolitan France is not doing its thing in the Gulf area and around Newfoundland as it has in the past, and thank goodness for that, that is the type of action that is required. In this context, perhaps it is the desperation of the French that has been expressed in actions over the last several weeks, for example, the action on April 15, of the Croix de Lorraine—a good historic name. Perhaps it is worth remembering President de Gaulle from Lorraine and the Croix de Lorraine which is part of his symbolism. It is a a marvellous name to have on a ship, and a marvellous expression of French grandeur—if it does not have power, throw some muscle around a little bit any way. When that ship sails into the area with politicians on board and the media present, it creates an incident and attempts to dramatize the matter.

We should perhaps recognize in that action an indication of the desperation of the French as they find themselves under severe pressure, and find themselves getting caught. Are those the circumstances in which the Government of Canada should be giving anything away? I think not.

Let us look at the agreement that the Government came to, which was announced on April 28. The Secretary of State for External Affairs the Minister for International Trade, and the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans, all three of them, announced that agreement had been reached on a non-binding mediation procedure to assist in resolving the Canada-France fishing quotas dispute.

What is this about "non-binding mediation"? It is just about as bad as precedents that one cannot use, or agreements that do not amount to precedents. That is not what is wanted when the pressure is on the French. What is wanted is no fishing, or as little fishing as can possibly be allowed to the French until they recognize that this matter has to be resolved by arbitration and they are only going to get rights established through an arbitration process. The event yesterday adds insult to the injury of the April 28 agreement, where a French naval tug dragged a fishing boat, by means of a cable fastened to the bow of the fishing boat, into harbour in the French islands.

That additional act, which has produced the outrage in this resolution, only underscores the need for strong action. As I scan over the agreement I notice that there has to be agreement on a mediator by tomorrow, May 7. These are circumstances in which this particular announcement and the agreement should be torn up. These are circumstances in which to send the French back and say to them, "You can go and talk to Prime Minister Chirac", who is preoccupied with becoming president these days, a position he will likely not achieve on Sunday. "You go back and talk serious business".

We were all interested to note this morning in our news that the French people, at least Parisians who are at the heart of Metropolitan France in the capital city, have not been told about this matter. I bet the Chamber of Commerce or the fisheries in St. Malo know all about it. I wonder how many votes Prime Minister Chirac is hoping to get up and down the west coast. If some of the reporters took themselves out there and did a little checking, I am sure that everyone up and down the coast knows what is happening with this particular piece of tugboat diplomacy by Prime Minister Chirac, or as someone stated earlier, this particular "Chirac attack" that we have had off the coast of Newfoundland.

What is required is decisive and clear-headed action. We have had a little, but not nearly enough from the Government of Canada. We want a lot more. Let us keep the French out of the fishery as much as we possibly can, under the laws that exist, and get them into the arbitration that is required to settle the boundary dispute. Once that is resolved, and once we have the type of international decision, which we expect will be to the advantage of the fishermen of Canada while allowing some rights which have existed in European history, one is tempted to say, from time immemorial, that the French do some fishing here, once we have established how much of a right France has in this type of context, we will have an end to the difficulties that the French have been imposing, not so much on the Canadian people here, but on individual fishermen.

I have not said very much about those men who were fishing where they have fished for a long time, where the fishermen of St. Pierre and Miquelon and Newfoundland have fished together without dispute, and now to have the metropolitan power intrude as it has through the French Navy is entirely unacceptable. The Government of Canada is on its mettle to resolve this as fast as it can.

Mr. Siddon: I would like to ask the Hon. Member for Thunder Bay—Nipigon (Mr. Epp) a couple of questions. I appreciate the seriousness and the particular perspective on history which he brings to this issue. I am sure he is far more qualified than many other Members in the House to deal in questions of history. In view of his appreciation of history, he will realize that difficult international diplomatic problems are rarely solved in a fortnight or in a year, and sometimes even in a decade or more. I appreciate the fact that he has recognized some progress has been made.

If we look at the 1972 treaty, it is true that the treaty recognizes that historical presence going back centuries referred to by the Hon. Member. The economy and the people of the islands have depended on the surrounding resource as their main sustenance and their main reason for being on this side of the Atlantic. We also appreciate that. The Government has always wanted to be understanding and supportive of the people who live on St. Pierre and Miquelon. In some respects they are being exploited or used as a pawn in this international debate.

The agreement of 1972 was designed to phase out the Gulf fishery by a fleet from Metropolitan France, which in times past have not fished in the tens of thousands of tonnes which they did claim for that 15 year phase-out period. But it recognized, and France recognized, that at the end of the 15-year period, they were to be gone. As well, it recognized that unspecified quotas would be available in other parts of Atlantic Canada, once boundaries were extended and jurisdiction established.

The Hon. Member would appreciate that that jurisdiction cannot be finally established until the boundary around St. Pierre and Miquelon is resolved through international arbitration.

There was recognition in the treaty that the small boats operating out of St. Pierre and Miquelon should have certain basic quotas, and that is something to which we have attempted to be sensitive.

In my view, the treaty provides the possibility for solution, but it is something that will only start with the resolution of the boundary question. Certainly, this Government wants to be reasonable in its approach to this whole matter.

My question for the Hon. Member is whether he would not agree that the debate which was triggered on January 24, 1987, has a great deal to do with the progress that we have been able to make to date, in an orderly way. During that debate, Canada has shown that we are not going to play second fiddle to anyone in looking after the rights and needs of our fishermen.

Will the Hon. Member not agree that Canadian public opinion, not just in Newfoundland but from coast to coast, and indeed international opinion, has been polarized to recognize the basic justice of Canada's appeal that the boundary matter be resolved?

I have a second question for the Hon. Member. In view of the historical perspective of the Hon. Member, I would ask for his view as to why France would take actions which would appear to hurt its own citizens, the people of St. Pierre and Miquelon.

Mr. Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, there are moments when those watching the telecast of these proceedings see the House operating at its best, and certainly the exchange we are having at the moment is a good one.

I should like to pick up on some of the thoughts that the Minister has articulated, and to respond to them.

The importance of developing Canadian opinion in support of firm action by the Canadian Government is obvious. In terms of the agreement entered into in January of 1987, we had a fire-storm of protest in Newfoundland, and reaction in the House on the part of many Members. As the Member for Thunder Bay—Nipigon, a riding located on that large inland sea, Lake Superior, I join with others in support of a motion moved by a Newfoundland Member. In fact, the member of the NDP caucus who preceded me in this debate was the Member for Vancouver Island.

While the motion itself was moved by a Newfoundland Member, it is a motion that expresses, for Canadians generally, as happened in January of 1987, the importance of taking the appropriate and proper action.

We had the same reaction, of course, in January of 1987, when as well we had forceful representations made to the then Minister of Transport, the Hon. Member for St. John's West on the question of taking appropriate action in respect of the agreement entered into at that time.

The motion moved by the Official Opposition today calling upon the Government of Canada to take strong action in connection with this matter is very important in terms of making it possible for the Government of Canada to do the right thing.

The Minister, in the preamble to his question, talked about the importance of the history of this dispute. He spoke of the terms of the agreement and the importance of settling the boundaries dispute.

I can assure him in that respect that the notes provided by the Hon. Member for St. John's East in connection with this debate focused on the importance of the boundaries question and the fact that it is a matter that has to be resolved.

The background notes state that the dispute on the boundary should be referred to international and binding arbitration, without either party insisting upon any pre-conditions, such as access by the French to northern cod. If in a 16-year old or 17-year old treaty there is a promise of access to be had somewhere or other in the future, one might find people in External Affairs, given the calibre of advisers the Government surely has, to put context to that.

Was this access that would be worked out following on the resolution of the boundary question? And if so, then obviously the French are walking away from the bargaining table. If they are refusing to negotiate properly, they would have no right to access, with the result that it would remain unspecified—meaning, presumably, at zero, until France is prepared to settle the matter. Part of the settlement of the boundary question will be to arrive at the proper quotas for France, thus constituting recognition of their rights for all time in the future.

These are times when one might be tempted to invite the people of St. Pierre and Miquelon to forget their old ties with France and to become Canadians. In a country which, for some 20 years now, has been officially bilingual, and proud to be so, they might not feel all that out of place, or certainly one would hope not. But of course they are not simply residents of the New World, if you will; they are inhabiting those two islands in a French context.

Why a Government would do this type of thing to its citizens, I do not know. Is it possible that a Prime Minister desperate for the presidency would really forget about what happens to the little people, to the fishing folk of St. Pierre and Miquelon? Of course, he is thinking of the fishermen of St. Malo and the other coastal ports of France itself. I guess he takes the view that those closer to home will be voting more immediately, and more in number.

These are terrible choices that people make sometimes, and dreadfully wrong choices. But they make them nevertheless.

Mr. Marcel R. Tremblay (Québec-Est): Mr. Speaker, it is a great pleasure for me to have the opportunity to participate in this debate. At the outset, permit me to call to the attention of the Members of the House certain facts, as follows: The Department of External Affairs received a preliminary report concerning this incident about 2.30 p.m. yesterday, from the Canadian Honorary Consul in St. Pierre and Miquelon. The Consul had just been notified by the Maritime Administrator of SPM that the small Canadian trawler, Maritimer had been found fishing for cod within the 12-mile territory limit of those islands by a French naval tug, the Tenace, and was being escorted into harbour at St. Pierre.

The Maritimer was approached by a boarding party from the Tenace, and two men, apparently unarmed, were placed on board and remained there until arrival at St. Pierre.

According to Captain Willoughby Bolt of the Maritimer, this request was made at 3.40 p.m., or 1.40 p.m., Ottawa time. Less than an hour elapsed before the Department of External Affairs in Ottawa learned of the action of the French vessel.

The Maritimer arrived in St. Pierre about 7 p.m., after sailing some three hours. The vessel was met at the dock by the Canadian Honorary Consul, Mr. Jean-Pierre Andrieux for the purpose of providing all possible consular assistance to the captain and the four other crew members.

It was confirmed last evening by the Honorary Consul that the captain and crew members, all residents of Newfoundland, had not been arrested, and the vessel, which had only a small quantity of scallops on board, had not been impounded.

The Consul said that he had the key to the trawler's engine. The crew had all been courteously treated by the French authorities. The crew planned to sleep on the vessel overnight.

At 8 a.m. today, they attended before the fisheries authorities, the SPM Maritime Administration, at which time a decision was made to charge the captain and to impound the Maritimer. The crew was accompanied throughout by the Honorary Consul to ensure that their rights were fully protected. The charges are in respect of fishing without a licence in French territorial waters. The vessel was carrying 450 kilos of cod. Indications are that a bond in the amount of no less than 500,000 French francs, approximately $110,000 Canadian, will be required to obtain the release of the trawler. Arrangements are being made by the Canadian Government to post this bond with a view to releasing the vessel today.

There was never any question that the Maritimer was not fishing in the disputed zone where Canada and France have observed for some years mutual restraint in the enforcement of their fishery regulations. We were informed that the crew of the Maritimer have admitted to the French authorities that they were fishing within five or six miles of the northeasterly side of the Islands of Miquelon and Langlade, that it was their long standing practice to fish in that area without hindrance from the French authorities and they were unaware of any requirement to obtain a licence. The location of the incident was between these islands and Newfoundland, and thus within the maritime boundary allocated to France under the 1972 treaty.

In fact, Mr. Speaker, the inshore fishermen of both countries have for a long time, indeed decades, pursued their activities in each other's waters without hindrance. That was done in recognition of the particular circumstances of small inshore fishing vessels, and that practice has been long recognized. To change these traditions and abandon such reciprocity could have the most serious consequences for the communities along the south shore of Newfoundland and for St. Pierre and Miquelon as well.

Since the French Government appears determined to act against this long- standing practice, Canada will most certainly protest vigorously and take whatever action may be necessary. We have already been in touch with the French authorities to register our concern over this regrettable incident in which there appears to have been no deliberate flouting of French law.

In the present circumstances and until the matter is clarified to our satisfaction, it is unthinkable that the process of mediation in which we have been engaged and in which we were making substantial progress, can be allowed to follow its course as if nothing had happened. Indeed, we find it difficult to understand why this incident has occurred at the very moment our negotiator, Mr. Fortier, was en route to Paris. Canada cannot be counted on to show understanding and a spirit of compromise when simultaneously France, through the rigid application of the letter of its laws, modifies a long-standing practice by both sides of non-interference with the traditional activities of our inshore fishermen. These are the people who require and deserve the most generous treatment. We intend to continue protecting their interests with every means at our disposal.

External Affairs officials in Ottawa were in contact twice last evening and again this morning by telephone with Captain Willoughby who assured them that all the crew were well and in good spirits. He proposed to have their families advised by telephone of their well-being.

An External Affairs officer has gone to St. Pierre to assist with the consular representation of the members of the crew. The Canadian Government will continue to follow matters closely and will take whatever action is appropriate in the light of developments.

The Acting Speaker Mr. Paproski): Are there any questions or comments? Debate. The Hon. Member for Westmorland—Kent (Mr. Robichaud).

Mr. Fernand Robichaud (Westmorland—Kent): Mr. Speaker, I rise to speak in support of the motion moved by the Hon. Member for Gander—Twillingate (Mr. Baker) which says, and I quote:

> That this House deplore the unlawful arrest of a Canadian fishing vessel by the Government of France in Area 3PS off the coast of Newfoundland; and
> That this House condemn the Government for its failure to protect the Canadian fishing industry and its continuing inability to resolve the Canada-France fishing dispute.

Mr. Speaker, I deplore yesterday's events, first of all because here we have the captain of a fishing vessel and his crew who were arrested for working at the only trade they know, which means going out to sea, fishing and bringing their catch safely back to port for processing in the plants on shore, thus providing jobs for the families that live there. These fishermen were arrested in Area 3PS where, as the previous speaker mentioned, there has been a long-standing practice of non-interference. Now, all of a sudden, France decided to make arrests for reasons that are very much its own. The arrests have been made. The Government tells us it will take action, but from what we have heard today, the Government's position and the action it proposes to take are not very convincing. Mr. Speaker, Canadians are appalled at the failure of this Government to take a strong stand.

This Government is not prepared to defend the interests of its fishermen and the people of the Atlantic region, and I was also appalled when I heard the Secretary of State for External Affairs, (Mr. Clark), tell us that we should not act too aggressively, because we might harm other regions in the country. The Secretary was more or less implying we should sacrifice the interests of Newfoundland fishermen to avoid harming people in other regions, and that, Mr. Speaker, is really appalling. And I also deplore the fact, that this Government sees this action by the French as just another bizarre incident. Mr. Speaker, you will agree that the action taken by the French is an insult to all Canadians, not just to the people of Newfoundland and the Atlantic region but to all Canadians from coast to coast.

The Government should take advantage of this opportunity to take a strong stand. I am not saying it should go to war, but just take a strong stand and show the Atlantic fishermen that it intends to defend their rights, because when we talk about Area 3PS, we are talking about cod and treaties and the livelihood of the people of the Atlantic region. Newfoundland is often mentioned because the people there are very close to Area 3PS, but the fish that swim in those waters move all over the Gulf, which means there is an impact on fishermen from Nova Scotia, Prince Edward Island, New Brunswick and Quebec as well. So the Government should take this opportunity to take a strong stand and tell the fishermen: Enough is enough, and we intend to tell the French we mean it!

We have the tools to show the French we mean what we say. These tools are the current negotiations for the purchase and construction of submarines. We are considering buying submarines worth over $10 billion, and I don't think we need them, but in any case, negotiations are under way. So we should tell the French: If you don't want to negotiate in good faith, negotiations on the submarine deal are off and will stay that way until we settle the problem about the contested area.

Negotiations are also taking place between Air Canada and Airbus about the purchase of aircraft for a total of over $1 billion. There again, the Government could take a strong stand and tell the French: Until we settle the fisheries dispute, negotiations with Airbus are off.

The Prime Minister who had planned to visit France sometime in May should take also this opportunity to tell the French: I have decided to postpone my visit because of the bad faith you have demonstrated in the St. Pierre and Miquelon fisheries affair. Also, Mr. Speaker, we should recall our Chargé D'affaires again to emphasize to the French that the action they took was serious and an affront to Canadians.

I suggest that if the Canadian Government showed some resolve, the French would certainly be more prepared to negotiate an agreement to end once and for all the problem in that area.

Mr. Speaker, I could have dealt with the Treaty, those who signed it and under what terms. I could have spent time describing what was or was not done. But we are now faced with the de facto situation of a Canadian fishing vessel which was illegally arrested. I therefore urge the Government to be firm and demonstrate to the French that we are not going to roll over, that we are going to defend our fishermen's rights and that the sooner we can settle this problem, the sooner the whole situation between France and Canada can get back to normal.

Mr. Fretz: Mr. Speaker, I would like to pose two or three questions to the Hon. Member who just spoke, the Hon. Member for Westmorland—Kent (Mr. Robichaud). I would like to remind the Hon. Member of New Brunswick's lobster exports to France which I believe generate millions of export dollars for that province and indeed for Canada. Eventually, those dollars spin off into other industries including shipbuilding, processing and electronics. Is the Hon. Member aware of that? What would be the impact on his province if trade relations with France were discontinued or if this war were to be escalated? Does the Hon. Member indeed want to escalate the situation into a trade war? Would that help his Province of New Brunswick?

Would it not be the height of irresponsibility, as we heard the Minister say during Question Period today, to escalate this war? Would it not be the height of irresponsibility, both in terms of Canada's relations with other sovereign states and in terms of one region of Canada versus another?

Mr. Robichaud: Mr. Speaker, I am greatful to the Hon. Member for his question. I am certainly well aware of some trade being conducted between my province and a number of European countries, including France. I am also aware that we export lobster and various species of fish.

I must tell the Hon. Member, however, that New Brunswick fishermen are quite concerned about the overfishing in the 3PS zone, because they do not only fish off New Brunswick, but also both inside and outside the Gulf. I can tell you that when fishermen hear and know that there is overfishing in that area, they react in a very negative fashion. I am sure that if we were to act firmly to end this problem, New Brunswick fishermen would react positively.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The time for questions and comment is over. Debate.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): With the conclusion of this debate, the proceedings on the motion now before the House have expired pursuant to Standing Order 82(12). Shall I call it three o'clock?

CANADA-U.S. FREE TRADE AGREEMENT

Mr. Derek Blackburn (Brant): Mr. Speaker, I have the privilege to rise in my place this morning, under Standing Order 106, and present a petition from quite a few people in my constituency who are totally opposed to the Government's proposed trade agreement with the United States.

They call upon the Government to dissolve the House and go to the people so that they can decide whether or not they want this trade deal.

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, it is my honour and duty to present a petition on behalf of a group of constituents from the Shellbrook-Canwood area near Prince Albert, Saskatchewan.

They suggest that since the Conservative Government has no mandate from the people of Canada to conclude the free trade agreement, the Government should go before the people of Canada in order to give them the opportunity to accept or reject the proposed free trade agreement during a national general election.

HOMELESS—REQUEST FOR GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mrs. Thérèse Killens (Saint-Michel—Ahuntsic): Mr. Speaker, the petitions that I am tabling today are signed by residents of Halifax; Rimouski; Winnipeg; Burlington; Crysler, Ontario; Summerside, Prince Edward Island; Florenceville, New Brunswick; Saint-Bruno; Laval; Greenfield Park; Pierrefonds and Laval-des-Rapides.

These petitioners deplore the fact that more than 100,000 people were homeless in Canada last year, that the number of homeless young people, women and whole families is steadily growing, that the number of affordable housing units is always decreasing and that the Government has not yet done anything to solve this problem.

For these reasons, the petitioners humbly ask Parliament to act immediately so that all Canadians can be given healthy, appropriate housing and that social programs be established so that these disadvantaged Canadians can re-enter Canadian society.

(Question answered orally is indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the following question will be answered today: No. 301.

[Text]

CONTRACTS BETWEEN GOVERNMENT AND AMERICAN SUPPLIERS

Question No. 301—Mr. Howie:

1. At the present time are there any contracts for the procurement of goods and services outstanding between the government and American suppliers and, if so, what is the (a) number (b) total dollar value of these contracts?

2. To the knowledge of the Government, will this situation change following the full implementation of the free trade agreement and, if so, in what ways?

Hon. Otto Jelinek (Minister of Supply and Services): 1. It is impossible to provide a direct response which enumerates the number and value of contracts currently outstanding between the Government and American suppliers because the current system of data collection only carries contracts which have been formally signed during a given fiscal year. However, SSC awarded 10,331 contracts with a value of $750 million to U.S. based suppliers in 1985-86; representing 11.2 per cent of the total value and 3.3 per cent of the total number of contracts awarded. In 1986-87, 9,160 contracts with a value of $438 million were awarded to U.S. based suppliers, representing 5 per cent of the total value and 3.1 per cent of the total number of contracts awarded.

2. The implementation of the free trade agreement will result in some opening of both the Canadian and American government procurement markets. Additional opportunities valued at $3 billion will be opened to Canadian suppliers in the U.S. market, and opportunities valued at $400 million will be opened to U.S. suppliers in the Canadian market.

[English]

Mr. Hawkes: I ask that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

Mr. Speaker: Shall the remaining questions be allowed to stand?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

ALLOTTED DAY, S. O. 82—DROUGHT IN WESTERN CANADA

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt—Lake Centre) moved:

That this House urge the government to provide for emergency financial assistance to grain and livestock producers in the southern Prairies and in Central British Columbia in the event of a continuation of the current drought conditions in those areas, and to establish a long-term plan to deal with environmental disasters such as droughts, floods, and pest infestations.

He said: Mr. Speaker, the motion is put before the House today because of a disaster that seems to be looming but, more correctly, because those of us who have lived on the Prairies all our lives know that disasters do not occur necessarily this early in the season. It often appears very bleak in May and early June. Rains will turn that around. However, the statistics on this particular drought show that it is probably more all encompassing and more well entrenched than virtually any time previous in the history of recorded weather; and because the Government has said that as a result of the experience that we had with the 1985 drought it was to put into effect a long-term strategy to deal with such disasters. Since no long-term strategy was put into effect, we thought it would be desirable at this time to remind the House and the Government of the commitments that it made back then.

As you will recall, Mr. Speaker, in the speech to this House on November 27, 1985, the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) who is still the Minister of Agriculture said, and I quote from Hansard, as reported at page 8869:

The $150 million program we are announcing today will provide immediate relief and we will continue our efforts to develop a long-term approach to emergency funding.

He went on to say, as reported at page 8870:

It is disruptive to producers to live with the uncertainty of not knowing what back-up assistance they will receive when natural disasters occur. Nor is it easy for the federal Government to take on substantial new financial commitments which have not been previously budgeted. That is why we are viewing the Crop Disaster Assistance Program as a field test for a permanent emergency assistance program which could be offered to farmers as a complement or extension to the current Crop Insurance Program.

Later in the year the Ministers of Agriculture for all provinces met. A national agriculture strategy was outlined. In that strategy it was pointed out that such a long-term disaster program was of great necessity.

Here we are in May of 1988 and no one knows what the long-term disaster program is because it has not been put into effect. That is the point of my motion today.

The data that are facing us are quite overwhelming. We have a drought of proportions not seen in western Canada for a long, long time. Some of the data that I have collected show that we are in a type of dry spell that has not been recorded very often in the 100 or more years of recorded history in terms of weather in that part of the country. We should notice that the threat of drought, given the current Environment Canada statistics, is that there is only about a 30 per cent chance of recovery this year. Thus we have less than one chance in three of getting lucky on this one.

To point out just how well ingrained this drought is, we should note statistics from the various recording stations in the country. In Saskatoon this is the worst drought that has been seen for 81 years. In Prince Albert it is the worst in 96 years. In Regina it is the worst in 88 years, and in Swift Current it is the worse in 101 years. This is not just a short-term drought of a few months' duration; it is a very well entrenched type of drought.

The people from Environment Canada point out what most of us know, that is, south of the Yellowhead Highway it is very dry. When one gets farther south of the No. 1 Highway, which covers about 35 per cent to 40 per cent of the prairie grain belt, it is described as really, really dry. When one looks at the record of the small communities and the farmers who are trying to cope with this lack of moisture that has been building for close to a year now, one sees that the dug-outs are going empty.

For a big chunk of the territory about which I am speaking, in particular Palliser's Triangle, it is very difficult to strike water for wells. Surface moisture must be relied upon, and there is no surface moisture. There was no surface moisture in the soil last fall. All small sloughs and potholes have gone dry, as have many small lakes. Farmers were pumping water from whatever sources they could find to their dug-outs close to home, as were towns and villages. Many of those are now down to 10 per cent or 20 per cent available water supplies from reservoirs.

Governments cannot make water. They cannot create it. However, they can by setting out long-range programs to work out methods of coping with a shortage of water. The Prairie Farm Rehabilitation Administration has been doing that to some extent ever since a very bad drought in the 1930s. It has been supplying long pipelines and large pumps to transfer water from where it exists to where it is needed. The options are very limited. There are not very many sources left.

The problem is not limited only to the Palliser's Triangle in the Prairies or the area south of the Yellowhead Highway. It has extended with a vengeance into central British Columbia. To give Hon. Members some idea of this, I wish to quote from a couple of reports. An official from the Quilchena area, a spokesman for the Vernon irrigation district, said that they can only operate at about half supply this year. Five mountain reservoirs feeding the Vernon district stand at 10 per cent of capacity and are not expected to climb about 50 per cent during the melt and run-off. The official said: "We cannot create water, no matter what the public thinks we can do as a Government".

In the forest area foresters point out that the lack of moisture can create a very bad fire season this year. This will occur because some of the logs that are lying on the bed of the forest are now drying out and are becoming very combustible. This makes it easy for a forest fire to get started and to carry. This will have an effect on the tourist industry.

British Columbians in the central part of the province are already predicting a reduction in tourism, as they are expecting they will need bans on campfires and camping in the forest areas which attract people to that part of the country. As well, fishing lakes are now losing the volume of water they have and many lakes are significantly lower this year. The lower water levels result in more fish dying off. As well, it makes it very difficult for them to spawn and to move upstream. It is impossible for a fish to move up a stream that does not exist any more. Thus the long-term effects on the environment in that part of the country are quite scary as well.

On the Prairies the lack of surface water will have a long-term effect on the amount of wildlife that survives, particularly water-fowl that use the prairie region as their major flight path. Many species also use it as their major nesting site, including Canada geese and field duck. A great many of those species have their traditional nesting sites in farming areas on the Prairies.

We are concerned that the Government has failed to provide a long-term financial plan to deal with disasters such as those that occur with drought, flood, massive forest fires, or an influx of grasshoppers or other forms pestilence. The Government could have done something about that, but it has failed to do anything even though it promised to be back in the fall of 1985.

Apparently the Government has also not paid very much attention to the long-term trends that the Department of the Environment points out is a reality. I am speaking now of the greenhouse effect. Most Members in the House will know that is an effect that scientists have discovered over the past 10 or 15 years. It has resulted in a layer of carbon dioxide being formed in the stratosphere. As forests and fossilized fuels burn they create carbon dioxide which has not been recycled in the normal manner by the breathing of plants and trees to utilize the carbon dioxide and transpire oxygen. As forests disappear and the burning of carbon fuels increases, a surplus of carbon dioxide has been produced which has created a layer that has tended to trap the heat from the sun within the earth's atmosphere. That has been slowly raising the mean temperatures of the earth.

Environmental experts tell us that in Canada this will mean an increase of mean temperature from 2° to 5° centigrade depending on which part of the country one is speaking of. Of most pertinence to this dissertation is that the prairie region, particularly Palliser's Triangle and central British Columbia, will be the areas that appear to be most likely to reap the benefit, if one can call it that, of the 5° temperature.

According to scientific projections, this will come into full being somewhere around the year 2000 or 2010. I believe at the present time we are seeing the beginning of that phenomenon in Palliser's Triangle of the Pairies and in central British Columbia. This particular drought will not go away easily, but we will be faced with these high temperatures and limited rainfalls that are projected as the greenhouse effect exacerbates in those regions of the country.

This effect will require a massive change in technique for people to survive in that region. It will require some assistance from federal and provincial Governments. I think that the Ministers of Agriculture for the provinces and for the federal Government were correct in 1985 when their assessment was that there should be a long-term agricultural strategy which would take this effect into account. I regret that that strategy has not been put in place, and no long-term funding has been established on the part of the federal Government or in conjunction with the provinces in order to address these types of long-term issues. The answers will not be found by simply sitting back in a rainier part of the country and observing those areas with telescopes, preparing reports, or attending in the areas. Stringent scientific work will have to be done to delineate the problem. There will have to be recourse to the engineering and ecological knowledge that we presently have to make better use of moisture supplies in those areas in order that they do not turn into the semi-desert that the greenhouse effect is projected to have on those particular regions.

As I mentioned when I commenced by speech, 35 to 45 per cent of prairie grain land lies in this region; much of the fruit belt in the Okanagan is dependent on the water supplies that are generated in central British Columbia, as are the beef industry and the grazing industry, very large parts of the agricultural component of central British Columbia. As the pastures dry up and the water disappears, there will be less chance of producing calves and beef in that area. A reduction of 50 per cent in the water reservoirs will make it very difficult to keep the apple and soft fruit industries alive and healthy in that part of the region.

This particular drought is not only isolated to Palliser's Triangle in the Prairies; it goes much beyond that. I submit that because this is a well entrenched system and it has been well defined by international scientists that the greenhouse effect will be with us for a long time until the earth can be reforested and the consumption of fossilized fuels is reduced. Therefore, a long-term solution and plan developed if we are to keep populations on that semi-arid part of the Prairies as it turns into a semi-desert.

The Government was remiss in not acting upon its own good advice in 1985. I close my remarks by reminding the Government that it has neglected to handle the wealth of the country in a proper manner by putting water wells and collection sites in place in the intervening years. It has been remiss in not taking seriously the drought situation on the central Prairies and in central British Columbia. This motion draws the matter to the attention of the country and of the Government in order that the Government can correct its lack of policy for the last two and a half years.

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, the resolution before us today concerning the prairie drought situation calls upon the Government to take two actions. The first part of the motion seeks to provide emergency assistance to the Prairies facing the worst drought in a hundred years. The second part of the motion calls upon the Government to put in place long-term programs to deal with the drought situation.

As the Hon. Member from Saskatchewan has already indicated, the Government should have known in 1984 and 1985 that we were not dealing with a casual occurrence of an occasional drought. Clearly there have been two important influences on world weather patterns. The El Niñgo effect which caused tremendous drought in the Sahel region of Africa has had its influence in the last year or so in the prairie regions. That is a cyclical event; it comes along from time to time. But more important is the long-term problem of the greenhouse effect of warming of temperatures due to increased carbon dioxide in the upper atmosphere.

I am very conscious of the issue because in the fall of 1986 in my own constituency, which is on the shore of Lake Huron and has the same water table levels as Lake Erie and Lake Michigan, there was the highest water levels in 100 years. Yet one year later, in the fall of 1987, there was a drop of some two and a half feet in the lake level of Lake Huron, Lake Michigan, Lake Erie, and the compensating effect on Lake Superior.

Only through a tremendous increase in temperatures generally, with a corresponding reduction in moisture levels, could we have experienced a drop in the level of the Great Lakes Basin of some two and a half feet to three feet. The western Prairies have been hit by the same kind of reduction in moisture levels and the same kind of increased evaporation rate due to warmer temperatures, resulting in the lowest moisture levels in 100 years. The last time the western Prairies and certain areas of B.C. experienced moisture levels comparable with those being experienced today was in 1889.

The motion now being debated calls upon the Government to take appropriate action to deal with this emergency, and to put in place longer term mechanisms to deal with the drier prairie conditions being experienced.

I had occasion this morning to speak with a farmer in southern Alberta, who told me that the actual top soil was dry to a level of two and one-half to three feet. Given the total lack of ground moisture, the small showers that they do experience have practically no impact.

I had occasion last week to talk with some long time residents of southern Alberta, individuals who speak from actual experience when they speak of the drought of the 1930s, and they feel uncertain about the current situation. While everyone hopes that the present lack of moisture is a temporary situation, time is running out for this year's crop. Livestock operations are equally affected. Clearly, if there is no substantial rainfall by mid-May, summer pastures will be irretrievably damaged. Without sufficient moisture, we even face the possibility of grains not germinating.

I should like to quote from an article on the prairie drought which appeared in The Ottawa Citizen of May 2, 1988, as follows:

> Since last summer, parts of Western Canada, especially in southern Saskatchewan and Alberta, have had only about 50 per cent of normal precipitation. Some areas have received only one quarter.

That confirms the kinds of effects we have seen in other parts of the country.

The article goes on to quote a Mr. Allan Moore of the Prairie Farm Rehabilitation Administration, as follows:

> "I think it's as dry, if not drier, than the Dirty '30s," said Allan Moore of the Prairie Farm Rehabilitation Administration in the nearby town of Gravelbourg, Sask.
> "It's so dry, the land is just like a sponge".

There was also an article in The Globe and Mail of May 2, 1988. The article is datelined as originating from Tilley, Alberta, with the headline being: "Albertans bracing for drought".

The article quotes Mr. Thomas Jensen, of Alberta Agriculture as follows:

> "They're all sitting out there waiting, debating whether to seed. If we don't get rain in May it could be a catastrophe. But it's not just Alberta. There is a similar situation in California, Montana, Utah and Idaho. It's a continental thing."

And, of course, the "they're" refers to the agricultural producers.

A recent press release dealt with the desertification of the world, areas which are becoming drier, and drier, and drier. The maps which accompanied that press release showed eastern B.C. and the southern parts of Alberta and Saskatchewan as being among those areas which are becoming more and more desert-like.

The farm producers to whom I have spoken say that dug-outs are dry; that there is no spring run-off, and no possibility of those dug-outs, which are so important in terms of cattle operations, being filled this year. For the first time, many wells have run dry. In many areas of southern Alberta, one can go down to two and one-half to three feet without finding any moisture whatsoever.

We are experiencing one of the driest periods in the history of western Canada and, while we all hope that it will be of a temporary nature, clearly the Government must now indicate the type of emergency system that will be provided, whether it be by way of dug-out construction, the drilling of wells, the construction of water pipelines, or other measures.

The Government of Alberta has already indicated that it is prepared to provide some $20 million for the purpose of making emergency supplies of water available to these areas.

The second matter to be addressed is the provision of feed supplies for livestock. The situation in respect of grain crops will become clearer toward the end of this month, and certainly by early June. We may be faced with a situation of there being insufficient moisture to bring about germination.

The producers to whom I have spoken in the last week stress the need for a livestock assistance program on an urgent basis. They need to have a commitment from the Government on what it is prepared to do.

To sum up, what the western agricultural community needs is a commitment that there be provision for making emergency water supplies available, together with a commitment to address the ongoing problem of water shortages, and a commitment in respect of emergency supplies of feed to support the livestock.

In some areas of Manitoba, cattle can be moved to feedlots. However, that is not a solution for southern Alberta and Saskatchewan. It is simply not possible. The grass supply in the community pastures in southern Alberta and southern Saskatchewan is such that those pastures are refusing to accept any cattle. That is a first for those areas of the country.

In addition to the drought, the western agricultural community continues to face the whole farm debt problem, the insolvency of the Farm Credit Corporation itself, and the dropping of land values.

These are all matters that need to be addressed. In addition, the higher Canadian dollar vis-à-vis the U.S. dollar leads to lower prices, the reason being, of course, that most farm commodities are traded in U.S. dollars.

Clearly, there are a number of ongoing problems facing the agricultural community. Maintaining interest rates in Canada at 2.5 per cent above the American rate pushes the Canadian dollar up in value vis-à-vis the U.S. dollar. I suppose that is part of the "gentleman's handshake" on the Canada-U.S. trade deal. The result, of course, is that we end up with lower effective prices for Canadian livestock, together with higher interest rates.

What has the Government's response been to date, Mr. Speaker? In answer to a question which I put to the Minister, he said that he would probably be answering the need for additional assistance for water supplies and would consider taking money from the long-term soil conservation fund which the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) announced last December. He did not give any indication whether the full amount of the funding would be made available. The $75 million is a cost-shared program. Alberta has already made a commitment of $20 million. If the federal Government were to do the same, I suppose there would be enough in that fund, but it has not yet been indicated what the Government has not yet indicated what it will do. It seems to me this is an emergency and that we should not be taking funds out of the long time soil conservation and degradation fund. It seems to me that we have a contingency fund of a couple of billion dollars. That is from where the funds should be coming so we can get on with the long-term soil conservation and degradation program as has been done in other years when we faced this same kind of problem.

So far there is no clear commitment of assistance to move feed into the drought areas. There is no clear commitment as far as I can see on the number of dollars for emergency water supply funding or for emergency systems such as expanding or developing new dug-outs, wells, or pipeline systems. Equally important in the long run is the need for long-term expansion of PFRA funding for the water management program, to put in place measures and programs for improved water storage, new wells, and so on. We should have increased funding for that because this does not appear to be a short-term policy.

In the Minister's press statement of November, 1985, he indicated that the Government was working toward a long-term disaster assistance program in place of this year's plan. In the agriculture committee meeting a couple of nights ago, when the Minister of State for Grains and Oilseeds (Mr. Mayer) was asked whether the Government was going to put in place a long-term program, he said that it was difficult to have an ongoing emergency planning operation. By definition, if it is an emergency, it is pretty tough to know what it is one should be doing. Whether the Government will put in place a long-term emergency program is clearly not apparent at this time.

We need today a commitment from the Minister that, if the emergency continues to develop, there will be systems on an equalized basis for pipelines, for emergency dug-out development, for water supplies, and so on, as well as a commitment of funding for the provision of feed in the drought areas. That would strengthen prices which have dropped for stock cows and cow and calf operators at this time.

Those issues must be faced because long-term problems require time to develop fully. Clearly there is a need in the southern Prairies for more long-term water storage management and funding for the PFRA. From the presentation made last week by the various farm groups, such as the Canadian Federation of Agriculture, funds under the PFRA program are totally committed for this year. We need long-term funding for a consistent policy of developing water storage for irrigation. We may have to face this in the future. We may have to change the types of crops that are grown in some areas of the southern Prairies. We know that with the PFRA program projects have been put in place which ensure water supply and have made a big difference this year. Some farmers have been able to irrigate crop land and can seed a crop. That is perhaps not a first, but it is rare. Usually the irrigation system is used to supply moisture at a later stage, not just for the seeding operation itself.

These are urgent issues and I hope the Minister will be able to give a clear commitment of the Government's plan in this regard. The western drought situation, on top of the whole downturn in the oil industry and the whole downturn in commodity prices for grain, is leading to a big disaster. The West is waiting to know exactly how much of a commitment the Government is prepared to make to meet this emergency, to maintain livestock herds, and ultimately to provide assistance for the grain crops if and when that becomes necessary.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Are there any questions or comments? Debate. The Hon. Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise).

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I welcome this occasion for the House to pay attention to and examine the serious water conditions in western Canada and in certain parts of the Province of British Columbia.

I want to assure Members opposite, indeed all Members of the House, as well as all primary producers, and others in the agri-food industry that our Government is fully aware of the situation. The Prairies are faced with low soil moisture reserves, low spring run-offs, and virtually no rain to speak of.

Most areas of southern Alberta, southern Saskatchewan, and the southwest portion of Manitoba are those areas most seriously affected. Topsoil is dry in many locations. Dug-outs and water supplies for livestock are low. The below average quantity of snowpack in the mountains is a cause of concern for irrigation districts and for producers who rely heavily—and some rely exclusively—on irrigation for crop success.

In the Province of British Columbia, a serious lack of water this year may—and I underline the word may—affect livestock producers in the central and southern ranching areas and fruit producers in the Okanagan Valley. In some cases, below normal water levels have been experienced for several consecutive years. We are fully aware of these conditions, as are, I hope, most Members of the House. It is obvious, of course, that some Members are not aware of the considerable effort the federal Government is expending right now, even as I speak here today, to deal with these adverse conditions in western Canada.

We are actively monitoring the situation in co-operation with the provinces, and there are federal-provincial drought committees in each of the affected provinces. A special Agriculture Canada task force has been working for several weeks now to assess conditions and to look at the adequacy of our present programs. In fact, just last night, there was a meeting of Deputy Ministers, my Deputy Minister and his counterparts in the western provinces. I am pleased to say that the Assistant Deputy Ministers' committee is being formed to work with Agriculture Canada's task force and the provincial drought committees. They will advise Ministers, both federal and provincial, on a daily basis.

We are acting and we are responding. We have safety net programs in place to deal with the situation. We already have a framework for action to deal with drought and similar disasters. There are a number of elements in that framework.

The Prairie Farm Rehabilitation Administration, of course, is one of these elements, and a very important one. Since 1935, PFRA has been at work developing rural water supplies and conserving prairie topsoil. The federal Government set up PFRA to respond to the terrible conditions in the Dirty Thirties. Its job was to ensure that communities and producers got water when they needed it and to ensure that soil would not blow away and turn them into another dust bowl.

The PFRA continues to this day to develop water supplies to help drought-proof the Prairies, no small task. It has been a lot of work, but it has been a bona fide success story. Because the PFRA people are working very closely with the provinces to monitor the soil and weather conditions, we are ensuring that we get the maximum mileage out of our complementary water programs. We are providing technical assistance and advice. Pumping equipment is also being utilized. Of course, there are community pastures which are proving to be especially useful, and helpful, at this time.

PFRA will spend about $7.2 million on its rural water development program this year. It will help farmers dig wells, plan dug-outs, as it will help with stock-watering dams, and irrigation projects. In fact, since 1935, more than 165,000 farmers have obtained assistance for these projects from this program.

Grants and advice are available to groups of farmers wanting to build common reservoirs for irrigation projects. Small communities can receive financial and technical help for developing water sources and water resources.

Over the years, PFRA has built more than 100 major dams, reservoirs, and irrigation works. There is the Gardner Dam-Lake Diefenbaker project, built at a cost of some $100 million. More recently, there has been the Weyburn Dam in Saskatchewan, the Carseland Dam, the Brooks Aqueduct and the rehabilitated Bassano Dam in Alberta, and finally, the raising of the PFRA dam in Morden, Manitoba. These activities demonstrate the federal commitment to providing water to the ever thirsty Prairies.

In British Columbia, action is under way to use the federal-provincial agri-food development agreement, or ARDSA as it is called, to develop better long-term water supplies. We are working with the local irrigation districts in fruit growing areas to divert new supplies to reservoirs or to lower dam projects.

Very importantly, we are working to conserve water by using available supplies as effectively and efficiently as possible. In the cattle regions of British Columbia, we are looking at perhaps extending the ARDSA to help cover on-farm water supply projects such as digging wells. Cattle producers, fruit growers, and other farmers have the continued support of the federal Government as they seek solutions to their water problems.

It is clear that we are taking steps to deal with the present situation which is a water shortage situation, not a crop drought situation, as this debate will indicate today. We are working co-operatively with the provinces and with the producers. We will do what we can to ensure that our present programs help out as much as possible.

I am pleased that the motion before the House recognizes that additional measures are not necessary at this time. It is too early to speak of losing crops or of losing livestock. Agriculture Canada's research scientists are advising farmers on how to deal with the current soil and water situation.

For instance, the Lethbridge research station advises that the season is still early. Adequate and timely rainfall between now and August will still ensure a good harvest. I understand that the problem area has already been reduced in Manitoba as a result of rain on the weekend. There was also rain in certain parts of southeastern Saskatchewan, the Estevan and the Weyburn areas. It is too early to make predictions.

The motion before us asks the Government to establish a long-term plan to deal with emergencies like drought. I wonder if opposition Members have an appreciation of what PFRA has been doing in that specific area for the last 53 years: in two words, drought-proofing; in a phrase, making the prairie farming community more stable and viable. However, what happens in those years when crops are still hit by drought or some other disaster like floods or pests? We have a long-term plan to deal with crop failures. Again, in two words, it is crop insurance.

In 1959, the Crop Insurance Act was passed by the federal Government, and since then we have been providing to farmers a way of protecting them against crop losses. It is a vital element in our over-all strategy because there are now some 230 different insurance plans for the 87 crops that are covered across Canada. In 1987, some 134,000 farmers participated and more than 42 million acres were covered.

The federal Government contributes 50 per cent of the premiums in all provinces with the exception of Newfoundland and Quebec. In these provinces it pays 25 per cent and half of the administrative costs. In no province does a farmer pay more than 50 per cent of the premium.

In fact, last year, the federal Government paid some $181.5 million toward farmers' premiums and it was money well spent. It provides the kind of protection needed in the risky business of farming, and this Government is committed to crop insurance as the main way to hedge our bets against the whims of Mother Nature.

Let us look at the drought years of 1984 and 1985. For those two years a total of some $24 million was paid out in the Province of British Columbia, $79 million in the Province of Manitoba, $487 million in the Province of Alberta, and some $640 million in the Province of Saskatchewan. That is an awful lot of protection, but it was not perfect, so in 1984 and 1985 the federal Government paid a total of $75 million in livestock drought assistance. In November of 1985 we announced a $150-million prairie crop drought assistance program.

After these special measures, we took a hard look at crop insurance to see whether or not it was doing the job adequately. Indeed, the federal Government and the provinces agreed that it was doing a good job of covering crop losses at a reasonable cost. However, the federal and provincial Agriculture Ministers agreed that additional protection should be provided to meet widespread successive losses. This was so that special measures would not be required again.

More crops across Canada are now insurable, and in western Canada major improvements have been made. There is expanded and improved feed security-forage insurance and there is now a multi-year disaster benefit. We made special efforts this year to publicize the deadlines for both forage and crop insurance. I can report that western farmers, particularly livestock and forage producers, have responded quite positively. Not only is the number of farmers insured for forage up by 60 per cent, farmers have purchased some 130 per cent more protection. Increased participation is also expected for crop insurance. In short, we have long-term measures in place to deal with disasters. We have PFRA. We have all-risk crop insurance. Just as important, particularly at this very trying time for Canadian farmers, especially those in western Canada, we have the record of commitment by this Government.

Since September, 1984 federal spending on agriculture increased by over 400 per cent. In 1986, we introduced the Special Canadian Grains Program, the largest federal farm initiative in the history of the country. We put $1 billion into the pockets of grains and oilseeds farmers reeling from the effects of the international subsidy war. Again, in 1987 we outdid ourselves by extending the program another year, seeking an additional $1.1 billion for farmers. About $975 million of that is for western producers.

Last month, my colleague, the Minister of State for Grains and Oilseeds, announced a western grain stabilization interim payment of some $695 million, but that is not all. We are also writing down $750 million of the Western Grain Stabilization Fund deficit. We have extended the farm fuel tax rebate program until 1991. We put more money into the Farm Debt Review Boards, and we are providing additional funding to the Farm Credit Corporation.

On the specific subject of soil and water conservation, we announced a $75 million national soil and conservation program to prevent losses of our most precious resource. In the dry conditions being experienced in parts of the West right now, the need for soil conservation becomes all that much more important. We cannot let our future blow away.

Those are just some of the things which show the Government's commitment to Canadian farmers. I think that upon assessment by any fair-minded individual the record speaks for itself. The farmers of Canada know this Government has gone to bat for them and will continue to do so, both on the domestic and the international scene. They know we have supported them with technical and financial assistance. They know we have supported them with long-term development programs like PFRA and safety nets like the Western Grain Stabilization Fund. With the renovation and updating of crop insurance, they know they have the ongoing protection from disaster they need to continue in the business of farming.

In conclusion, we have built a sound foundation for the future. Our aim is a prosperous, stable agriculture industry in western Canada, indeed in all provinces and regions of this country.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Questions or comments.

Mr. Foster: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the Minister could indicate whether there will be a specific amount of money allocated for emergency water supplies. As I understand the situation, the most urgent need is for a commitment regarding emergency water supplies and funds for livestock feed. In 1984, I believe it was, the Government provided a direct payment of about $30 per stock cow. The Minister mentioned in the House on May 4 that he was prepared to take funds out of the long-term soil conservation and degradation program for emergency water supplies. Is the Minister indicating that he is prepared to match the amounts allocated, for example, by Alberta of $20 million for wells and dug-outs and pipelines? Is he prepared to indicate what the funding will be?

In addition, the Minister mentioned the all risk crop insurance. Does that preclude special assistance, as well, for grain producers who may not be fully covered by that insurance? I realize, of course, that question will not be fully canvassed until we receive information about the crop situation much later this year.

Mr. Wise: Mr. Speaker, I do not want the Hon. Member to take exception to my response. He has put some pretty good questions to me, but I am not so sure that they are not hypothetical. However, that is somewhat immaterial. What is important is that they are premature.

He talked about the emergency, the response I gave to him the other day with respect to the $75 million soil and water conservation program, and whether the revised crop insurance program would preclude any additional measures. I can only say at this point that the federal-provincial task force is continuing its job. It will do so on a day-to-day basis. As in the past, as things develop, at the proper time, and when they are in a position to assess the seriousness of the situation and report with certain recommendations to which we can respond in a reasonable and effective manner, then and only then will I be in a position to respond to those questions. I think the Hon. Member knows exactly what I have in mind.

When I responded to him in the House, I believe it was last week, with reference to the $75 million I meant this and nothing more. When we have an emergency situation, sometimes common sense and good judgment dictates that we change our priorities. First, I hope Mother Nature looks upon us favourably. Second, I hope it will not be necessary to respond with any special program because I hope ongoing programs meet the need. Consequently, I hope it will not be necessary for us, even during an emergency, to readjust our priorities so that perhaps we might have to consider taking money from that fund.

It is an important subject. We lose $1 billion worth of topsoil a year. We could not sit by as a Government and do nothing. We have been doing a fair amount through PFRA, of course, but because of its importance it needed additional funds.

Discussions have been ongoing between PFRA and the various provinces. In most areas, particularly western Canada, we are reaching the position where we are just about ready to sign accords with the various provinces. They can match dollar for dollar, and consequently we will have $150 million in funding in that area.

In response to his last question with regard to whether or not it will preclude it, that will depend on a number of factors. Even though participation in crop insurance has been at an all-time high, we will have to await the assessment of that federal-provincial task force. When it sends its recommendations to us we will respond.

Mr. Althouse: Mr. Speaker, in the Minister's response to the Hon. Member for Algoma (Mr. Foster) he mentioned that he believed he is about to be able to sign accords with the various provinces regarding to a long-term strategy. What has caused the delay over the past two and a half years? Did it take another imminent drought to get all the parties back to the bargaining table? What has been the delay since the national agricultural strategy was agreed to by the 10 First Ministers of Agriculture and the federal Minister himself?

The intention of all parties concerned seemed to be very clear. What has taken so long to get the four western agriculture Ministers to read an agreement? Was it not prepared until the drought became more imminent and the disaster became more real, or were there technical considerations in the way? What is responsible for the two and a half year time lag?

Mr. Wise: Mr. Speaker, there was not a two and a half year time lag. The Hon. Member refers to the national agricultural strategy. That, of course, was one document. Our $75 million soil and water conservation program was announced and made available when the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) spoke in December at the Agricultural Outlook Conference. December 1987, is not two and a half years ago. There has been no delay in this program at all.

Subsequent to that announcement in December PFRA officials began their negotiations with various counterparts across the country. Therefore, the contrary would indeed be the case. Significant progress has been made and was only made when we put that $75 million in the window, with the condition that it had to be matched by provincial funds. That made a lot of sense because agriculture is a shared and joint responsibility. In land use and matters more closely related to soil and water conservation one will find that there is an awful lot of provincial jurisdictional responsibility. If you do not think so, just challenge the provinces on that particular aspect.

The only way to make progress in that area is to put up some dollars, identify the problem as a serious one, and tell the provinces that as they have a responsibility as well they should match our dollars; then, at the end of the day, we will have $150 million which we can invest in this specific area.

Mr. Althouse: I take it from the Minister's answer that he was referring in his remarks only to the soil and water program rather than to the long-term crop disaster fund about which I thought he was talking; he sort of mixed the two together in his response.

I would like to shift to the central British Columbia problem with its low snow melt and shrinking reservoirs, some of which are at less than 50 per cent levels. Since those reservoirs are also being used as part of the water supply which provides power through an international river into the United States, could the Minister list for us what the priorities will be from the Canadian side with regard to power requirements, human use, food growers' use, cattlemen's use, watering lawns, and so on? Is there a priority list for usage? I would think that there must be some such plan in existence, since the problem existed last year as well and appears to be getting even worse this year.

Mr. Wise: Mr. Speaker, that is a timely and excellent question. I wish that I were in a position today to respond accurately and in detail to the Hon. Member. I am somewhat cautious to do so in the time available. While there may well be no question in my mind about what the priorities should be—and I think common sense would dictate that—I am cautious about listing them at this time because we may well be precluded by some international agreement. I would at least want to have the opportunity to check whether such an international agreement exists. I am quite certain that it does. I am sure that it is public information. I will be seeking that information and, when I find it, I will be happy to share it with the Hon. Member.

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Mr. Speaker, I want to say a few words in this debate about drought on the Prairies. I want to address my comments for a few minutes to a different area, that is, farm stress.

I came back from my constituency about a week ago where I attended 12 public meetings in the last four or five days of April. Some were in farmers' houses to which they invited their neighbours and friends to get about 15 or 20 farmers together. I was able to acquire a very good understanding of the situation farmers are facing.

As the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) knows, the drought problem is not as acute in my riding as it is in some, as my riding is a bit more toward the northeast. In fact, in the northern part of my riding, which is near Swan River, Manitoba, they have a bit too much rain. Mr. Speaker, you may have seen on the news that Swan River has a bit of flooding, and that comes into my riding a bit. However, when one gets further south near the City of Yorkton one starts running into the drought problems, and the farther southwest one goes toward Regina the more severe it becomes. Therefore, while the drought is a problem in my riding, it is not as severe as it is in the south near Swift Current and Moose Jaw.

However, we must do whatever we can to relieve what I call the farm crisis in general. In addition to the drought there is an economic crisis facing farmers. There are the grain wars between the Europeans and the United States. There has been a tremendous drop in farm income. A large part of farm income is now received from farm stabilization plans, the Western Grain Stabilization Plan, deficiency payments, and other such things. As a result of economic hardship and the very severe drought, there is now a great deal of stress and emotional problems for farmers right across the prairie basin.

My colleagues from Humboldt—Lake Centre and Algoma mentioned many of the statistical realities of the drought—farm income going down, water reservoirs going down, dugouts drying up, shallow wells drying up, the need to dig deeper wells, what is going to happen to the crops, the greenhouse effect, and the semi-arid part of the southern prairie belt which will turn into a quasi-desert if this situation continues.

We all know what happened in the 1930s as a result of the drought. Behind those headlines and those realities is another reality, that is, the tremendous stress upon the farmer and the families involved in this kind of an economic crisis. I want to spend a few minutes speaking about that this morning. I hope we can start thinking about what we can do to help farmers out of this situation.

Behind the headlines there is a great feeling of despair, a great feeling of helplessness, and a great feeling of hopelessness for the many thousands of farm families in the southern part of the prairie belt. A very recent study was commissioned by the provincial Government of Saskatchewan into the whole area of farm stress. The study by the Burgam Consulting Company talked about the tremendous increase in alcoholism, depression, family violence, suicide, drugs, and so on, with respect to farmers. I want to suggest that we all take a look at some of the findings. I have here a copy of the May 2 edition of the Regina Leader-Post which gives a very good report of the study conducted on this question. It talks about alcoholism being on the increase and how depression is increasing because of what is happening on the Prairies, not just because of drought but because of economic hardship in general. I would like to quote Derrell Rodine of Weyburn who, for a number of years, has conducted farm stress workshops across Saskatchewan. He says that many of the problems are as a result of shattered dreams. He states:

• (1220)

"You get married and have lots of dreams," Rodine said.

"When things begin to fall apart there are feelings of guilt and a person tends to turn on the people they love."

Every day Rodine sees the toll that tough economic times are taking on farm families.

"Some farmers are carrying an immense burden of guilt for not being able to manage their land well in either physical or financial terms," he said.

Many fall into a form of "psychological paralysis" and are unable to work.

While many rural people are under a great deal of stress and some have been pushed into depression, a few fall into the ultimate depression and take their own lives.

Two years ago 26 people killed themselves.

"I had a woman come up to me in tears—she said her husband stopped the combine in the middle of the field, got off and shot himself," he said.

The aftershocks of suicide rip through a family and the community, leaving scars that often never heal.

These are signals of what is happening right now across rural Canada. I am not sure whether the federal Government can provide more leadership on the problem of farm stress, but perhaps when I complete my remarks in a few moments, the Minister of Agriculture can make a response in the period for questions and comments whether or not there is any new initiative the Government is contemplating in terms of farm stress.

I want to refer to another study that was done by the University of Manitoba, which indicated that farmers in financial crisis suffer more stress than a police officer three days after a shooting incident. When I first saw that headline I found it hard to believe, but I would like to read the very short article that summarizes this particular state:

Financially troubled farmers face higher levels of stress than police officers in shooting incidents, according to a Brandon University study.

And farming is ranked in the top 10 per cent of high stress occupations, according to studies carried out in the United States.

The Manitoba farmers, interviewed for the Brandon study, suffer from headaches, marriage problems and irritability at a greater rate than Royal Canadian Mounted Police officers contacted within three days of a shooting incident, said the study by James and Lily Walker of the university.

Another study by the Walkers said 11 per cent of Prairie farmers had considered suicide. Meanwhile, a survey in north-central Saskatchewan found that 80 per cent of farm families exhibited signs of stress.

For their first study, the Walkers interviewed 643 Manitoba farmers and compared the results with a study of 56 RCMP officers involved in shooting incidents.

They found that 16 per cent of the farmers had increased their consumption of alcohol, compared with nine per cent of the RCMP officers.

Twenty-seven per cent of the farmers reported marriage problems compared with two per cent of the police officers and 58 per cent of the farmers experienced sleeplessness compared with 50 per cent of the police officers.

In addition, 78 per cent of the farmers said they were irritable and losing their temper, compared with 11 per cent of the police officers.

This is the result of a study conducted by Brandon University about the relative problems of stress between police officers after a shooting incident, which is a pretty serious thing, and farmers in severe financial difficulty. The stress level is higher for farmers living under severe financial difficulties. I think these kinds of studies point out in very vivid detail that there is a real crisis in rural Canada, particularly in prairie Canada where it is compounded by the drought situation which is forcing many, many farmers to the wall in terms of their very survival. There are increasing rates of suicide, drug abuse, alcoholism, depression, emotional problems, and so on. It is also creating very serious community problems.

When there is a crisis like this more and more farmers leave the land. We can see this in my riding and in many other rural ridings in western Canada. More and more people leave the small towns, and then the whole fabric of community organizations start to deteriorate and disappear. The people who are left feel more and more isolated because many of their friends have moved away to large towns and cities. Many of the services in these rural communities start to disappear because the population base drops, and of course the economic infusion drops. There are fewer people to support community events and activities. There are fewer people to organize sporting events, social events, and so on. In many ways the community itself then starts to re-enforce the depression and stress the farmer is facing, and people become very isolated. That is the very, very serious social problem facing many farmers in Prairie Canada today.

I referred to a series of excellent articles in the May 2 edition of the Leader-Post. It might be worth while reading it. It is a summary of the stress study done by the provincial Government of Saskatchewan and the University of Manitoba. There is also a reference to what is being done in the United States in terms of farm problems.

Also in the same newspaper is an article under the headline "Alcoholism Exacting a High Price in Rural Saskatchewan". It concerns the tremendous increase in alcoholism related to the economic and drought crisis now plaguing farmers in rural Saskatchewan. In some ways the very occupation of farming, because one is alone so much of the time, makes alcoholism a lot easier than in other occupations where one is working more closely with others. The farmer is often alone. He goes out on the combine or tractor, or he goes out to check the cattle. It is very easy to consume a mickey of hard alcohol, or even 26 ounces of hard alcohol, and be able to hide it from his family and friends. He can hide his problem a lot easier than if he was a teacher at elementary or high school. Alcoholism is a way of forgetting some of the economic problems one has.

I do not want to go on at great length and repeat the facts placed on the record today by my friends, the Hon. Member for Humboldt—Lake Centre (Mr. Althouse), the Hon. Member for Algoma (Mr. Foster), and the Minister himself. We all know there is a very serious problem in terms of drought in western Canada. We all know there is a very serious economic problem in terms of the grain wars around the world. We all know there is financial insecurity, deterioration of rural communities, and so on.

What I want to do this morning is point out some of the human consequences and tragedies behind the headlines of the newspapers and behind the television footage we see in terms of the crisis facing farmers. I was wondering if the Minister would get up in the question and comment period to tell us what his thoughts are about farm stress. Perhaps he could elaborate on what we could be doing as a Parliament and what he could be doing as the Minister to provide some type of support, more than what we already have provided to help farmers who are in this type of situation.

I know that he has been doing something in terms of initiative and in terms of the drought question itself. There are committees now at work. He has talked about various financial solutions. All these items are, of course, very helpful. I am wondering whether or not the Minister can add more in order to offer some hope to those facing farm stress crisis.

I want to underline that this is a very serious problem. We all hope, of course, as the Minister said, that Mother Nature intervenes to solve the problem for us. But that will not necessarily happen. Even if it does happen, the world trade wars which create financial crises, have created a lot of stress for the farmers of this country.

I will stop there and invite in a rather bizarre way the Minister to comment on these matters, or perhaps to ask me a question as a way of telling us what he is thinking about in terms of farm stress.

Mr. Wise: Mr. Speaker, I said when I began my speech a few minutes ago that I welcomed the occasion in the House to assess the potential drought problems in western Canada. Of course, I certainly do welcome the debate today. The lead-off spokesman for the Official Opposition and also the spokesman for the New Democratic Party were somewhat premature in dealing with the subject-matter today.

However, I want to compliment the previous speaker, the Hon. Member for Yorkton—Melville (Mr. Nystrom), for taking his time to touch on a very serious problem which exists today. More than likely, unfortunately, it will persist in the country for some time in the future. I suppose I am here to make certain that I respond. If there were no response it might leave the impression, the very false impression, that we were not aware of the situation related to stress that exists in certain sectors of the farm community. I hope the Hon. Member will appreciate that one can hardly be the Minister of Agriculture of Canada and not be aware of the tragic events in the primary sector, particularly during a time when certain sectors of the industry, primarily grains and oilseeds, are facing the toughest times ever in 50 years.

One observation I want to make is with respect to the fact that we often talk only about the stress on farmers. It is true that farmers have stress, but I wonder if we ever stop and think about on whose shoulders and in whose heart and mind that stress really ends up. It is at least shared. I think the heaviest share probably falls in the heart and mind and in the lap of the farm wife. This is why we have given a much higher priority to the concerns and day-to-day problems that have been overlooked and ignored for decades by previous Governments and how those problems and concerns relate to farm women.

Farm women have been the unsung heroes of the primary sector of the agricultural industry in Canada and, indeed, in many other countries I suppose going back to day one. We have been dissatisfied with that. We have given them a much higher profile. Indeed, we have increased our budget by some 300 per cent or 400 per cent to pay greater attention to the issues and concerns of farm women.

I do not want to leave the wrong impression here because we are fully aware of this. I think the Hon. Member will appreciate the fact that Agriculture Canada's responsibility, while recognizing this and trying to do something about it within its own shop, is really not the primary deliverers of programs of this kind. In fact, if one looked at some of the areas about which the Hon. Member talked, and they are shared, there is some federal responsibility. There is no question about it. If one examines the record one will see that the Government has responded in that particular area. However, a good number of them more appropriately fall within provincial jurisdiction. We do not have the facilities, the network, the people on the ground, or the extension people that provincial agricultural Departments have. There are reasons for this.

One must recognize what has happened in the past decade, or even less than a decade.

One has only to examine in detail the majority of cases that are going through the farm debt review process to find that almost without exception they fall into one category. That category includes those people who were told certain things and advised to do certain things in the early 1970s, because certain things were going to happen in the 1980s. They took that advice. They did those things. They expanded their operations very dramatically. Then, of course, they were hit by 24 per cent interest rates and had to refinance. Some of those people are able to get through with some real difficulties.

But people who are in the grains and oilseeds sector are the ones who unfortunately are not able to get through. These are really days of paradox in Canadian agriculture. There has been record farm income in 1986 and 1987. Record farm income is being predicted for this year, 1988. This would not be the case if it had not been for the support programs provided to Canadian farmers by the Canadian Government.

From an agricultural point of view nothing is perfect. However, the record will stand the test of time. We delivered on all our campaign commitments. We have increased the budget by 400 per cent. We have taken 585 initiatives, delivering more than $9 billion, most of which has gone out in the form of direct farm support.

After having said that, I would not want anyone either in the agricultural community or anyone in Canada for that matter to think that this Minister of Agriculture, my cabinet colleagues and my caucus colleagues are not very much aware of the stress mentioned by the Hon. Member. We are going to try to do everything we can not only to minimize it but, hopefully, to eliminate it completely.

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the comments of the Minister. A great many of these matters fall within provincial jurisdiction, especially in terms of social services, health, and so on. It might be worth while for the Minister to consider putting this item on the agenda for the next meeting he has with provincial Ministers of Agriculture. I am not sure when that is. I believe it is in July. They will be discussing the general problems facing farmers across the country. There might be some value in pursuing this item at a special conference. I do not want there to be a big study done, something which will delay things and cost all kinds of money. However, it may be worth while to have it as an agenda item and perhaps to have a working group from the federal and provincial ministers' conference to take a look at farm stress.

It is particularly important on the Prairies, as the Minister has said. In the grains and oilseeds sector there is a world crisis. That has been compounded by the fact that there is a drought. I am just thinking on my feet as we go along. I had not thought of this until the Minister got up. Perhaps it can be considered as an agenda item or for a working group to consider. It can offer some hope in this particular area. It can, if nothing else, co-ordinate the approach among the provinces.

The Minister mentioned one thing that is really important, which is the emotional weight falling on the shoulders of the farm woman. The study conducted by the Government of Saskatchewan stated that there is now an increase in abuse of the farm wife and an increase in the abuse of children. The report states: "According to one special counsellor there is an increase in wife and child abuse, including sexual abuse, but also non-sexual abuse". Obviously the load falls more heavily on the unsung hero who is the farm woman. Over the years the farm woman has made a tremendous contribution not only to rural Canada but to Canada in terms of doing more than her fair share of the work on the farm and of making it a productive unit. She is the person who often receives no wage, no pension plan, and does not have the social net that many women working outside the farm and outside the home would have in an urban setting.

Mr. Wise: Or, had her total salary go into the farm.

Mr. Nystrom: Yes, or have her total salary go into the farm operation. Even in the best of times, the role played by the farm woman is a very difficult role and must be a very stressful role.

I grew up on a farm. I left the farm and went to university in the city. I know many farmers in my own riding, and in my community over the years since I was a small child. I know the contribution made by many of the women during those days. Even in the better days, in the 1950s and 1960s, and the booming agriculture days in western Canada in the 1970s, there was still an extra burden borne by farm women. Today they have this type of stress. I can think of examples in my riding where the male farmer is horrendously depressed by of things he cannot control by his own hands or brain in terms of his own operation because of trade wars or the rain does not fall, and in many ways the burden is even greater on that farmer's wife.

I wish to underline what the Minister has stated, but perhaps he could consider the possibility of this being an agenda item at the conference.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is there unanimous consent to allow the Minister a further comment?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Minister of Agriculture.

Mr. Wise: I appreciate the unanimous consent granted, Mr. Speaker. I know that the time for questions and comments has expired, but I would just like to utilize this opportunity to respond to the Hon. Member's request that we place this item on the agenda at the next federal-provincial agricultural ministers' meeting.

I would like to indicate to the House that I will seek concurrence from my provincial counterparts to add this particular item to that agenda.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Resuming debate with the Hon. Member for Kent (Mr. Hardey).

Mr. Elliott Hardey (Kent): Mr. Speaker, today we are discussing the depressing problems of water shortages in western Canada, and the long-term strategies to protect Canadian farmers from flood, drought, and pest infestations. There are many other examples where Canadian farmers find themselves facing disaster. One example in southern Ontario relates to peach growers. In the late winter or early spring if temperatures have a dramatic change, for example if the temperature goes up to 15° or 18° Celsius for a few days signalling to those peach trees that spring is arriving, and then suddenly the temperature drops drastically to minus 15° or 20° for two or three days, just that quickly peach farmers in that area are denied a crop and there is a total wipe-out of the peach crop. I could cite other examples of disasters that happen on a gradual basis such as drought which is what the West is facing today, or something can be as fast or painful as the peach problem I mentioned.

When we are considering the role of the federal Government in attempting to develop strategies to guard against such problems and disasters, I wish to talk about the role of federal-provincial crop insurance programs that are specifically and exactly designed to protect against this type of crop loss.

Crop insurance is a proven, long-term strategy. For over a quarter of a century it has provided emergency financial assistance to Canadian producers. Today, it remains one of the best means available to aid farmers hurt by drought, flood, pest infestations, and other natural disasters.

Government supported crop insurance is necessary because all-risk crop insurance is too costly to attract private insurance carriers. The Crop Insurance Act was passed in 1959 to help the provinces establish all risk crop insurance programs. The federal Government contributes to approved crop insurance programs, administered by the province, that conform with the provisions of the Act.

The Act also provides for federal loans to provinces in years when indemnities greatly exceed reserves to pay claims. As an alternative to loans, the federal Government may enter into a reinsurance agreement with a province to cover a portion of the liability of the province for payments of indemnities under insurance plans.

The objective of the crop insurance program is to stabilize an individual producer's income by providing financial protection against production losses caused by uncontrollable natural hazards. This program helps producers to continue farming after they have gone through natural disasters. It reduces or eliminates the need for special and ad hoc assistance.

The federal Government must relate to all Canadians, not only regions. Crop insurance programs operate in all 10 Canadian provinces. There are two cost-sharing options available under crop insurance legislation. One, the federal Government contributes 25 per cent of the premium and half of the provincial administrative costs; two, it contributes 50 per cent of the premium, if the province pays for all administrative costs. Newfoundland and Québec have selected the first option, while all other provinces have opted to pay for the full administration costs and have selected option two. In all provinces the individual farmer pays no more than half the total premium.

Most major commercial crops are insurable across Canada. Approximately 230 individual plans offer protection to 87 crops. Crop categories include cereals, oilseeds, forage, tree fruit, small fruit, vegetables, and special field crops such as tobacco and white beans. Crop insurance also provides special extended coverage for fruit trees and unseeded acreage.

The responsibility for operating a crop insurance program lies with the province. Provincial officials are close to the local agricultural scene, so it makes sense that that administration takes place there. They are familiar with regional farming practices. They know about production problems and local risk factors. Provincial officials are in a good position to recognize local priorities. Insurance programs can therefore incorporate a degree of local flavour that helps to make the program more acceptable to producers.

The administration of the program is performed by an agency of the province, either a commission or a Crown corporation. The federal Government co-ordinates crop insurance policies to ensure that farmers are treated equitably across the country. The federal Government ensures the crop insurance plans are self-sustaining. We are constantly monitoring the plans to make sure that they are financially sound. In addition, federal officials provide advice and recommendations to the provinces about insurable crops, insurable hazards, premiums, and coverages.

The provincial governments, which are responsible for the enabling legislation for the respective plans, administer the all-risk insurance plans. The province appoints a board of directors, which oversees the day-to-day operations of the crop insurance program. This board acts as a liaison between the province and the program's management team. The management is responsible for calculating premium rates and coverage levels, marketing the insurance, adjusting losses, and paying claims.

The federal-provincial Crop Insurance Program is now 25 years old. At first, it was slow to be accepted. Manitoba was the first to join the pilot program, in 1960, with the last two provinces coming on board in 1974.

The farmers themselves did not embrace the program when it was first created. Many felt that the coverage was too low and the premiums too high, and that not enough crops were included. It has, of course, always been a volunteer program, with farmer participation being constantly encouraged.

The program has evolved. There have been amendments to the federal legislation, the most notable being a reduction in the farmers' share of premiums from 80 per cent to 75 per cent in 1966, with a further reduction to 50 per cent in 1973.

The program has also been made more flexible. Farmers can now opt for 60, 70 or 80 per cent coverage in some provinces. Since 1973, enrollment in federal-provincial crop insurance plans has increased significantly. Last year, almost 135,000 farmers participated in the Crop Insurance Program. More than 42 million acres were covered by insurance, with the federal Government contributing more than $180 million to crop insurance schemes across the country. Of that amount, more than $145 million was provided to western Canada.

Mr. Speaker, the Crop insurance officials are well aware of the dry conditions in much of western Canada. They well remember what happened in 1984, and again in 1985. This year, those officials have made a special effort to encourage farmers in the West to enroll in insurance plans. The deadlines for applications for crop insurance were widely publicized, and especially so in western Canada. Farmers had until the end of March to apply for coverage for forage and feed crops, and until the end of April for annual crops.

Estimates for this year indicate that more than 95,000 farmers from the prairie provinces will be covered by the Crop Insurance Program, with the breakdown being as follows: 16,800 farmers in Manitoba; 48,000 in Saskatchewan; and 30,500 in Alberta. Almost 3,000 farmers in British Columbia are expected to be covered.

The federal Government is pleased by the response of the producers. We are especially pleased that the registration of forage producers is up about 60 per cent, and that they have purchased 130 per cent more protection.

The federal-provincial crop insurance scheme has a proven track record. It is a vital part of the federal strategy, a strategy that very much addresses the concerns of the motion now being debated by this House. Crop insurance is in fact one long-term response of the federal Government to help protect Canadian producers against environmental disasters.

This Government is committed to crop insurance as the best means available to protect against crop loss. With crop insurance, farmers can be confident that they are well protected against the whims of nature—and that, Mr. Speaker, is what we are discussing this morning.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: On questions and comments, the Hon. Member for Prince Albert (Mr. Hovdebo).

Mr. Hovdebo: Mr. Speaker, I have both a comment and a question in respect of crop insurance.

As I am sure the Hon. Member is aware, one of the concerns with having insurance as a long-term tool is that we eventually stabilize at a lower level as a result of a continuing reduction in production levels. That is a concern of those farmers who have experienced lower and lower production levels over a period of three or four years. Farmers in that circumstance are now at a point where they are insuring at a level at which it no longer becomes worth while buying insurance.

In my region of Saskatchewan, the return on crops has dropped to a level where the insurance pay-out is not sufficient to pay one's production costs. That is a weakness of the Crop Insurance Program that is making itself felt in respect of a number of agricultural products.

I am wondering whether the Hon. Member has any suggestions to offer to federal-provincial crop insurance officials in respect of the problem of insurance levels dropping to the point where they no longer return even the cost of production to the producer.

Mr. Hardey: I appreciate the comment and the question from the Hon. Member for Prince Albert (Mr. Hovdebo). Certainly I am aware of the ongoing discussions aimed at making the Crop Insurance Program as lucrative as possible for the producer. The program itself is designed to insure against disasters of nature, providing for those who suffer from such a disaster a return close to the average that would have been realized in normal circumstances.

I hope that the Hon. Member for Prince Albert is not confusing the 5-year averages with the stabilization program, something about which we all have a concern in respect of the development of averages. Certainly in my area of the country, regional averages have not been dramatically adjusted as a result of natural disasters impacting on crops. While we are now facing average lower incomes as a result of market prices, yield averages have not been drastically affected, to my knowledge.

Individual production records are carefully maintained by the crop insurance officials and individual producers can develop their own averages, based upon their own pattern of production, with the result that an individual producer, in the event of a disaster, can realize a return that reflects that producer's past yield pattern. Certainly, this is the case in my area of the country, and I am sure that it is not very much different in the western part of Canada to which the Hon. Member for Prince Albert referred.

I agree that we should try to do whatever we can to make the crop insurance plan as workable and as lucrative as possible for the producer. We need to have ongoing efforts aimed at encouraging producer participation.

The crop insurance plan is there for a purpose, and it is achieving its purpose. That is not to say it cannot be improved. Every system can stand improvement, and certainly we encourage efforts toward that end.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being 1 p.m., I do now leave the chair until 2 p.m. this day.

At 1 p.m. the House took recess.

HOUSING

THE HOMELESS—GOVERNMENT RESPONSIBILITY

Mrs. Thérèse Killens (Saint-Michel—Ahuntsic): Mr. Speaker, a recent press release from the office of the Public Works Minister (Mr. McInnes) announced that the sale of federal property had yielded over $170 million.

The purpose of this program was to reduce the number of surplus federal properties and to help bring down the federal deficit.

We would have hoped, Mr. Speaker, that the Conservative Government would take this opportunity to ensure that some of these spaces and buildings were converted into housing for Canada's 100,000 homeless.

On reading this press release, I noticed that several properties will be developed by private consortiums. For example, the Canlands in Ottawa will become an administrative complex; an old office building in Vancouver will be transformed into chic retail spaces; the RCMP building in Westmount will be replaced with twin towers for luxury housing; Dufferin Street in Toronto will be used for an industrial development and office building project. Unfortunately, Mr. Speaker, the homeless have no voice in this House. The Minister has forgotten them.

On their behalf, I accuse the Minister of lack of leadership in this issue.

VISIBLE MINORITIES

JAPANESE CANADIANS INTERNED DURING WORLD WAR II—CALL FOR COMPENSATION

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): Mr. Speaker, about one month ago Canadians of Japanese origin held a giant redress rally on Parliament Hill. Since then the United States Senate has approved a redress package for Americans of Japanese origin which includes individual compensation of $20,000 per person.

As the House and the Government reflect on these events, I am sure that they will bear in mind the comments of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) as reported in The Globe and Mail for May 16, 1984:

> —Canadian citizens whose rights were abused and violated and trampled upon indeed should be compensated.

DISARMAMENT

STUDENTS AGAINST GLOBAL EXTERMINATION

Ms. Pauline Jewett (New Westminster—Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, I wish to congratulate the students and faculty of John Abbott College of Ste. Anne de Bellevue, Quebec, for having recently declared their school a nuclear weapons free zone.

The effort to establish a nuclear weapons free zone at John Abbott was spearheaded by the Students Against Global Extermination, SAGE. They are justifiably proud of their important achievement. In their letter to me the students wrote:

> We hope that in our act and the acts of groups like ourselves, in communities across Canada and the world, we will demonstrate that ordinary citizens will not tolerate the nuclear arm's race any further.

Their declaration is not simply a symbolic gesture. Rather, it is tangible evidence of a clear and compelling message that many Canadians share, that continued nuclear deployments, expansions, and modernizations are untenable and unacceptable.

ABORTION

RIGHT TO LIFE OF UNBORN CHILDREN

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Mr. Speaker:

> Why is there always such a controversy over when life begins? Even if there is doubt that it is a human being from conception, what gives one the right to take that life? Am I free to shoot a rifle at an object if I am not certain what it is, especially if it might be a human being? The doubt must give that little unborn child a right to life that is equal to that of the mother. If there is not a human being at conception, at some point the fertilized ovum becomes one. If I had difficulty in believing that human life began at conception, I certainly would not want to be in the position of deciding whether it began at eight days, one month, three months or at birth. Anyone who claims to do that is taking the place of God.

This quotation came to me from Rev. Father Ken Forster of Fort St. James, B.C.

I believe that life begins at conception. When we write an abortion law, let us make sure it is based on the truth that the unborn have the right to live.

DISASTERS

1985 GANDER AIR CRASH—JUDICIAL INQUIRY URGED

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—Port-au-Port—St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, evidence is mounting daily which seriously contradicts the findings of the Canadian Aviation Safety Board's preliminary report into the terrible tragedy which took the lives of 248 U.S. servicemen in Gander, Newfoundland, in December, 1985.

Members of the ground crew who worked on the ill-fated DC-8 prior to its fatal crash stated over the past weekend that "there was no ice build-up whatsoever on the aircraft prior to takeoff".

This is in direct contradiction to the findings of the Board's preliminary report which concluded that "icing caused this terrible crash".

Canadians are asking when the Minister of Transport will stop stonewalling this important issue and call for a full judicial inquiry so that the families of the crash victims and the Canadian public can learn the real facts behind this tangled web which was shrouded from the beginning in contradiction and mystery.

Lives have been lost, Mr. Speaker. We have to make sure it is our responsibility that this tragic incident is not repeated. We can only do that with the facts.

FINANCE

IMPORTANCE OF FLOW-THROUGH SHARES

Mr. Guy St-Julien (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, thanks to the new measures announced last week by the Progressive Conservative Government of this country, flow-through shares have once again become an attractive tax shelter. For the next two and a half years, flow-through shares will remain the best tax shelter available in this country.

We owe this victory to the Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Mulroney), the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Masse), the Minister of State (Forestry and Mines) (Mr. Merrithew), the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) and Deputy Minister Pierre O. Perron, who, thanks to his experience and competence, was able to correctly advise Members in mining areas, and Régis Labeaume, president of the Quebec Prospectors Association, the only association in Canada whose members have been digging in their heels since June 1987.

Mr. Speaker, ever since the White Paper on Tax Reform was tabled, I have fought side by side with our prospectors in Abitibi—Témiscamingue. It wasn't easy, but thanks to the joint efforts of our prospectors, the mining industry and the public, we have been able to make the mining industry in Abitibi—Témiscamingue and Quebec one of the pillars of the sustained economic growth we need in Quebec.

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES FREE TRADE AGREEMENT—MINISTER'S QUESTIONNAIRE

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, despite the Government's hard sell and $14 million in propaganda to try to push the U.S. trade deal, even the Finance Minister's own constituents are worried about it. I have here the results of a questionnaire sent out by the Finance Minister (Mr. Wilson) in his "Householder".

These results show that 38.4 per cent of the Minister's own constituents are strongly opposed to the trade deal while only 34.9 per cent strongly support it.

The biggest concern for those against the deal is the loss of Canadian sovereignty, with 36.1 per cent saying that was why they opposed the deal. They realize how this deal is eliminating Canadian freedom in energy policy, investment, publishing, automotive policy and so forth.

Nor do the Minister's own constituents see this deal as being a big boost to jobs. More oppose the deal because of job concerns than support it—

Mr. Speaker: I am sorry, but the Hon. Member's time has expired.

MANPOWER

MANPOWER ADJUSTMENT COMMITTEE OF SOUTHWEST MONTREAL

Mr. Claude Lanthier (La Salle): Mr. Speaker, last Friday in Montreal, I had the honour of representing our Government when a grant for $50,000 was announced to establish and fund a manpower adjustment committee for southwest Montreal, including Ville Émard, which is part of my riding.

As a long-time resident of this part of Montreal where my family has lived for generations, I am confident that those representing federal, provincial and municipal governments, employers, unions and community organizations on this Committee will make use of every available resource to revitalize the labour market and the economy in southwest Montreal.

A special word of congratulations to the Member for Verdun—Saint-Paul (Mr. Chartrand) who has been working on the Committee for two years and is now about to see his sustained efforts bear fruit!

TAX REFORM

ELIMINATION OF EXEMPTION FOR CHILDREN 18 YEARS OR OLDER

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, under stage one of tax reform, parents of healthy children 18 years or older who live at home lose the current personal exemption of $1,200. A tax credit of $850 is offered for handicapped children. There is also a tax credit for post-secondary education tuition fees, but an 18-year-old still attending high school is not eligible, and in Ontario most grade 13 students are 18.

Single parents are hit hard. A single parent who formerly claimed the equivalent to married deduction for a dependent child over 18, valued at $3,740, can no longer do so. Imagine the financial burden being placed on a single person with a child over 18 still at home, either in high school or unemployed. Family allowance payments have stopped, support payments for the child from the other spouse have more than likely stopped, and now there is no tax relief.

In November of 1987 the Finance Committee recommended that the Government reconsider these proposals, but the Government has decided against it. The high cost to parents of supporting 18-year-olds should not have been ignored by the Government.

FREEDOM OF SPEECH

MONCTON DEMONSTRATIONS AGAINST PRIME MINISTER

Mr. Gilles Bernier (Beauce): Mr. Speaker, a shameful incident occurred in Moncton, New Brunswick, during a demonstration organized by labour union leader Greg Murphy, a former NDP candidate. The wife of Canada's Prime Minister was insulted and attacked, and several children were injured. The demonstrators acted in a way that was degrading and harmful to the image of this country. In its Saturday edition, the Moncton Times reported that representatives of the federal NDP in Moncton had urged people to join the demonstration organized for that day.

The newspaper's report read as follows: "The Moncton wing of the federal NDP gave its unanimous support to a public demonstration organized to coincide with today's visit to Moncton by Prime Minister Mulroney".

I hope the Leader of the NDP will make a public statement to the Members of his Party and all those who contributed to this show of violence, and tell them that this kind of behaviour is anti-democratic and unacceptable for any political party in this country. We were familiar with the verbal violence of Shirley Carr and Bob White, the labour leaders who are in bed with the NDP. But now, with organizers like Murphy, we have seen physical violence in Moncton!

CRITICISM OF GOVERNMENT POLICY

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview—Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, the backing down by the Government last week on film distribution policy was another cave-in on our independent cultural policy, and it is certainly not the last as a result of the influence of the free trade deal. Listen to what Jack McAndrew of Video Atlantic has to say about it:

> Flora's bill has about as many teeth as one of my chickens—and they have more heart.
> Not only will Canadian distributors be required to bid against Americans with more resources; the Americans can use their clout in controlling the American market to force the addition of Canadian rights to U.S. rights. It simply means more paperwork in signing two contracts instead of one. Flora's distribution fund won't do much in the face of that economic power.
> We are seeing the first cultural casualty of the Free Trade Agreement.
> The Americans squawk like a rooster in heat, and the Tories furiously lay another egg—a cracked egg.

IMMIGRATION

BREACHES OF LAW CONDEMNED

Mr. John Oostrom (Willowdale): Mr. Speaker, the Liberal dominated other place has placed politics above the Canadian people by allowing the immigration system to become a world-class joke. Without passage of Bill C-55 and Bill C-84, Canada has to contend with the present inefficient and slow-moving refugee process.

The criminal element has seized this opportunity to escape prosecution in their own countries. Recently an American wanted for murder was using our liberal immigration law, which was passed by a Liberal Government, to thwart his return to the U.S. by claiming refugee status.

Our refugee laws are only to be applied to those who meet the UN definition of convention refugees. Criminals are exempt from these regulations. Only genuine refugees and the Canadian people are being hurt by the Liberal Senate's lack of responsibility.

FISHERIES

CANADA-FRANCE DISPUTE—ISSUE OF FRENCH PERMITS TO NEWFOUNDLAND FISHERMEN

Hon. William Rompkey (Grand Falls—White Bay—Labrador): Mr. Speaker, a common description of a dead codfish, as you will well know, is head-on-gutted. The Government of Canada looks even worse in its dispute with the French. It is both headless and gutless.

First, it failed to warn Captain Willoughby Holt that he would be arrested if he fished where he has always fished.

Today we discover that fishermen on the south coast of Newfoundland have forms in their hands which the French are going to issue as permits before they can fish where they have always fished.

It is about time that the Government got some guts and stood up to the Government of France and cancelled the Airbus and other negotiations. It is about time that the Government of Canada stood up and fought for Newfoundland fishermen.

Mr. Nickerson: I hope you will not take that applause from my time, Mr. Speaker, even though it was well deserved.

In his acceptance speech he asked what hope there was for the future of the planet if two close friends like the U.S. and Canada cannot make progress on environmental issues.

The Sierra Club recognizes the great progress we have made in co-operation with our great friend south of the border, even if the Opposition does not.

PUBLIC SERVICE

LANGUAGE TEACHERS—APPOINTMENT OF MEDIATOR IN LABOUR CONFLICT

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, a mediator has been appointed at last in the dispute between Treasury Board and the language teachers. As you know, the situation has been dragging on, and the Government has been particularly stubborn and very reluctant to reach a settlement. The parties will go back to the negotiating table tomorrow. We are optimistic, and we sincerely hope that the Government is prepared to negotiate in good faith and settle this dispute.

The mediation process must not be allowed to fail through the fault of an intransigent Government that claims it is doing everything it can to promote official languages. As was said recently by Huguette Labelle, Chairman of the Public Service Commission: "It must be very difficult, if not impossible, for a language teacher to teach 37 hours per week. We would never agree to those conditions. We have said quite clearly that as far as we are concerned, 25 hours per week is a maximum . . . ".

INDIAN AFFAIRS

GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, the Government seems to have a deliberate policy to denigrate the progress that Indians have made in economic, social, and educational advancement of their people over the years. The latest betrayal has been the Government's denial of the 1976 Saskatchewan formula for settlement of land claims. The Minister responsible is proclaiming the "first survey" solution which would eliminate a major portion of the claims in Saskatchewan and across Canada.

Besides that, bands are being put off in their attempts to upgrade their schools, both physically and educationally. Attempts to provide equity in education are being stonewalled wherever the bands are making plans for progress.

It is time the Government accepted the First Nations as citizens who need quality schools, homes, and a solid economic base on which to build.

PROSTITUTION

CALL FOR STRONGER LEGISLATION

Mr. Andrew Witer (Parkdale—High Park): Mr. Speaker, street prostitution continues to be an insufferable problem for urban Canadian residents and has caused a continuing headache for local police.

In Parkdale—High Park and the rest of downtown Toronto residents have repeatedly complained of encountering harassment, abusive language, and problems with drug trafficking in their neighbourhoods as a result of an increasingly bold population of prostitutes and their clients.

Municipal by-laws prohibiting street prostitution have been struck down by the Supreme Court. Although the new federal law has improved the situation, it has not resolved the problem.

I urge the Minister of Justice (Mr. Hnatyshyn) to move quickly to draft stronger enforceable legislation which will finally put an end to this longstanding blight on Canada's urban landscape.

FISHERIES

CANADA-FRANCE DISPUTE—FRENCH PROVOCATIONS

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Deputy Prime Minister. France has snubbed the Lieutenant Governor of Newfoundland, insulted the Governor General of Canada on a recent visit to Paris, deliberately provoked the arrest of a French fishing vessel, kept Canadian tourists from entering France, and has now improperly arrested a small Newfoundland fishing boat. More than that, the huge factory freezer trawlers continue to overfish the disputed zone off the coast of Newfoundland.

Has the Prime Minister told the French Government that, while Canadians can understand an isolated incident or a diplomatic error, Canadians cannot understand or tolerate a series of provocations on the part of France and that this series of events runs the risk of jeopardizing the good relations between our two countries?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, we take this most recent incident very seriously. We have been pursuing a negotiated solution with France on the larger question. This morning we delivered a formal note of protest to the French Government regarding the incident respecting the Maritimer.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, that note is a big deal. I am sure it will impress the people of Newfoundland.

REQUEST THAT SUBMARINE AND AIRPLANE NEGOTIATIONS BE SUSPENDED

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, why does the Government not stand up to France? The French have no more right to overfish off the coast of Newfoundland and treat those waters as their waters than we would have to lay a claim to the Palais de Versailles, the Champs Elysées, or the Eiffel Tower.

The Prime Minister is not here so I will address this question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Last week he ridiculed members of the Opposition who felt that the issue had become serious enough to suspend negotiations for the purchase of the nuclear submarines and the French aircraft. Today he will know that even the Conservative Premier of Newfoundland, Brian Peckford, is supporting the claims we made here in the House of Commons for the suspension of those negotiations for the purchase of both French aircraft and the nuclear powered submarines.

Is the Secretary of State for External Affairs prepared to ridicule the Premier of Newfoundland in the same tone as he ridiculed our members and the members of the Opposition last Friday here in the House of Commons?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I had rather hoped, when the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition began his questions, that he was going to take a more responsible tone than had been taken by some of his members the other day. Some of them, of course, were trying to use this very serious difference with France as the pretext for starting a trade war which may well claim several French casualties, but a trade war which would also claim very many Canadian casualties.

The Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition, better than other members of his Party, should know about the provisions of the 1972 treaty which is at the root of this difficulty because he was a member of the Government which concluded and signed that treaty.

• (1420)

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): The 1972 treaty is a bit of a myth of the right hon. gentleman and his colleague, the Minister for International Trade. It has nothing to do with this present dispute. It has no bearing on it whatsoever. I take it from the tone of his response to me, the Secretary of State for External Affairs is disowning the Conservative Premier of Newfoundland, and we will transmit that when we have an opportunity to be there.

OPPORTUNITY FOR CANADA TO TOUGHEN POSITION TOWARD FRANCE

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, the Government, in the person of the Secretary of State for External Affairs, claims it does not want to jeopardize good bilateral relations between France and Canada. Isn't it a fact that France has already jeopardized those relations? The Government claims that the arrest of a small Newfoundland fishing boat is only an isolated incident. However, it is the latest in a series of incidents including the insults to the Governor General, the harassment by French officials of Canadian tourists on the French border, and flagrant overfishing in our fishing zones by French trawlers.

The incompetent and weak approach taken by our ex-ambassador Lucien Bouchard has turned out to be a total failure. Mr. Speaker, isn't it time that the Secretary of State for External Affairs and the Prime Minister did something about this? Isn't it time Canada started to play hardball the way France has done, the latter without eliciting any any response from the Canadian Government?

[English]

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition refers to the statement issued by the Premier of Newfoundland. The Right Hon. Leader knows that I would never disown the Premier of Newfoundland and Labrador. He would also perhaps know that with my usual caution I have read the statement of the Premier of Newfoundland—

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Right here!

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): No, you are reading a press release. The Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition is reading a press release. He would be well advised, as a matter of general practice, to read the whole document and not content himself with press releases.

DISTRIBUTION OF FRENCH PERMIT FORMS TO NEWFOUNDLAND FISHERMEN

Hon. William Rompkey (Grand Falls—White Bay—Labrador): As I told you earlier today, Mr. Speaker, there is a common description for a dead codfish in Newfoundland. It is "head-on-gutted". The Government of Canada looks even worse. It is headless and gutless in this dispute with the French.

The Secretary of State for External Affairs talks about a note he sent. I want to tell him that permit forms are in the hands of fishermen on the south coast of Newfoundland today, French permit forms, that they are going to have to get to fish inside that 12-mile St. Pierre zone.

What Government is this? Is this the Government of Newfoundland or not? If it is, why won't the Minister show some guts? Why don't you cancel the Airbus? Why don't you cancel the nuclear submarines? Why don't you stand up and fight for Newfoundland fishermen?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, this Government has acted vigorously to protect the interests of Canada, and—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): —Canadian fishermen, including those in Newfoundland and Labrador, regarding this dispute with France. In the case at issue, the case of the Maritimer, for example, it had not before been the practice, when there have been Canadian fishermen involved in this kind of dispute, for the Government of Canada to put up bond. This Government has put up bond. It has not been the practice—

Ms. Copps: Big deal!

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Big deal, says the Hon. Member for Hamilton East. Yes, it is. It is a change in a precedent.

Mr. Rompkey: Will you pay the fine?

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): There has been a threat against Canadian interests. This Government, instead of being bound by the precedents and, indeed, instead of being limited by the treaty signed by the Liberal Government in 1972, this Government has been prepared to put up the bond, which had not occurred before.

Ms. Copps: Big deal!

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): It is prepared to offer legal counsel to the captain, which had not been the case before.

We have a proposal here by the Liberal Party that we should take this very serious incident, and it is unquestionably serious and we are pursuing it with France, and escalate it into a trade war. I think one knows that a trade war which might begin with this kind of issue would go on to something else. One of the things it might go on to, I say to those who are interested in the economy of Atlantic Canada, for example, might be the investment in Michelin Tire.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Come on! Get out of it.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): If there is a trade war, among the casualties in Canada of this trade war the Liberals are trying to start gratuitously, might be a thousand employees of Michelin Tire in Nova Scotia. The Liberal Party might want casually to throw those Canadians out of work. We are not interested in doing that.

• (1425)

NORTHERN COD STOCK—CANADA-FRANCE NEGOTIATIONS

Hon. William Rompkey (Grand Falls—White Bay—Labrador): Mr. Speaker, that is what the Secretary of State is not prepared to do. What is he prepared to do? Is he prepared to act at all?

If he is not prepared to do something let me ask him if the Government, which denied a quota of northern cod to Labrador fishermen, will also say no to the French? Will he give an assurance here and now that there will be no northern cod on the table when and if negotiations ever start with the French?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): What we are dealing with here is a long-standing dispute between Canada and France, a dispute that is rooted in an agreement signed by those two countries when the Liberal Government was in power in Canada, under the 1972 treaty. It is a matter that we want to have resolved. We had been moving toward mediation. The French then took an action which made it impossible for us to continue in those circumstances with the mediation arrangement.

We acted to stop the mediation. We have acted to protect the interests of the Maritimer, and its captain and crew. We have acted to follow the process through the courts. We have acted to establish a formal protest with the Government of France. We are following the matter now.

It is our view, and I take this opportunity to state it formally, that the established practices that had been followed respecting the smaller fishermen of Newfoundland and, indeed, of St. Pierre and Miquelon, should continue in the future to be followed as they were in the past. That is the position that we are putting forward to the Government of France.

Mr. Rompkey: Then say it publicly.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): The Hon. Member asks why I do not say it publicly. In my view when I say something in the House of Commons of Canada I am saying it publicly.

Mr. Rompkey: The French have not heard it.

TRADITIONAL ARRANGEMENT ENJOYED BY SMALL FISHING CRAFT

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Following the arrest, which the Minister called an invitation, of the Maritimer on Thursday, the French now require inshore fishers to have permits to fish off St. Pierre and Miquelon. On Friday the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans said:

> This is the first time that traditional arrangement has ever been challenged as it was yesterday, and in that respect, Canada will not stand idly by and allow this to happen.

Will the Minister tell us what Canada is doing so that this will not happen?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I have just been making the point in the House of the things that we have done since the French acted in a way to break traditional practices that had brought benefit to smaller fishermen from Newfoundland and smaller fishermen from St. Pierre and Miquelon. We want those former practices respected in every case. That is the position of the Government of Canada.

I should not have to tell Members of the House—I think they understand—that these events may well have been related to an election in France yesterday. I think that Hon. Members, whatever their interest on Friday was in a trade war, would want Canada to proceed calmly and positively to try to resolve the situation in a way that respects the traditions, practices, and interests of all Canadians, rather than jumping into an unnecessary and provocative trade war.

If we have to defend Canadian interests, we will certainly defend them. We as the Government of Canada have done that on scores of occasions. We believe that there may well be some change in the circumstances now as a result of the election yesterday. We want to take advantage of those changes that may occur.

CANADIAN POSITION

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands): Mr. Speaker, the Minister said that we want the former practices restored. He did not say what Canada is prepared to do to get those former practices restored. He did not say what Canada is prepared to do, instead of standing idly by and wringing its hands. When will Canada be prepared to take this issue as seriously as France obviously takes it?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, laying down our defences is a very odd position being put forward by one of the leading advocates in the House of Commons who wants to take Canada out of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization.

What he wants us to do is to take an issue that is serious and complicated in itself, a very specific issue, but instead of trying to solve it in the Canadian interest he wants us to use it as a pretext to start a trade war. That is a very odd kind of pacifism.

GOVERNMENT ACTIONS

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands): Mr. Speaker, I have not mentioned trade wars. I have not mentioned trade. I have been asking the Minister what he is prepared to do, and what the Canadian Government is prepared to do to defend the interests of Newfoundland fishers.

He said that the Canadian Government is not going to stand idly by. What is the Canadian Government going to do to protect Canadian interests? That is what we want to know.

• (1430)

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, let me repeat what I have said in the House before. We have provided the bail and the bond in the case of the Maritimer. We have indicated to the ship captain who has been involved here that we will take the very unusual practice of providing legal counsel.

We have protested officially to the Government of France.

We have suspended the progress that was being made toward mediation in the larger question that has occupied Canada and France. Those are particular actions that we have taken.

We are now waiting to see what the response of the French will be to the Canadian proposal that the traditional practices that have governed the relations between St. Pierre and Miquelon and Newfoundland, and have brought benefit to smaller fishermen of both sides, should be respected to the letter.

MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. The House and the people of Atlantic Canada, particularly in Newfoundland, are trying to understand the position of the Government.

Last Friday in the House the Secretary of State told us that we cannot take stronger measures because it may have an effect on Canadair employees. Today he is saying that we cannot take stronger measures because it may have an effect on Michelin Tire employees.

I am sure the representative of the Government of France in Canada is pleased to report back to Paris today that, essentially, the Secretary of State for External Affairs is advertising to the French Government that no stronger measure, other than words and protest, shall be forthcoming from this Government, and that the people and the fishing industry in Newfoundland are disposable in Canada's relationship with France. Is that what the Secretary of State is telling the House today?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the simple answer to that—

Mr. Tobin: Order.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): I have received a question, and the simple answer to that is no.

I wonder if the Hon. Member would sit down—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member.

FRENCH LICENCES

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, my question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs, who thinks this is amusing, and who thinks that Canadians who live in Newfoundland are disposable in the national interest, is the following. What action is the Government prepared to take?

Does the Government agree with France when it states that Newfoundland fishing boats, or for that matter fishing boats from Atlantic Canada, fishing off those waters from now on will have to have a French licence? Does he agree?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, in answer to the Hon. Member's second question of the day, as I have said before in the House, no.

Let us be very clear here. The Hon. Member's—I do not want to impute motives—version of what I have said in the House of Commons bears no relation to the facts. If the French report his version of what was said, then the French will be wrong, just as we believe the French are wrong—

Mr. Tobin: What do you believe? What will you do?

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): —on the elements of the issue. Just as it is our position, we have made it very clear again in the House and in direct conversations with the French, that we believe that the traditional practices respecting the smaller fishermen of St. Pierre and Miquelon, and of Newfoundland and Labrador, should continue to be respected to the letter. That is the position that we have made clear to the French.

Now, Mr. Speaker, we are asked what we have done. I was asked that question by a member of the New Democratic Party a moment ago, and I listed four or five of the things that we have done already. We are now waiting to see what the French response is, and naturally if the French response is not satisfactory to us, we will continue in the future as we have in the past—

Mr. Tobin: To do what?

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): —to put the interests of Canadians first and to protect those interests in negotiations with France.

Mr. Tobin: Supplementary—

Mr. Speaker: A very brief supplementary, in view of the mix-up.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: I think there was legitimate confusion, and I certainly will recognize the Hon. Member for a short supplementary question.

PRIME MINISTER'S SCHEDULED VISIT TO FRANCE

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, given that the Prime Minister is going to France in two weeks, as the Secretary of State well knows, is he not really telling the House that the reason there is no action forthcoming now or any meaningful gesture, is that they do not want to mess up the Prime Minister's photo opportunity at the Elysée Palace? Is that not what he is really saying?

Will the Prime Minister communicate to the Government of France that, if the matter is not resolved by the time he arrives in France, he will be telling the Government of France when he arrives that the submarine negotiations and the Airbus negotiations are off?

Is that not a reasonable position to take over the next two weeks?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I understand that the Hon. Member has been through a lot of stress recently, and I simply want to tell him the accusation that he has made in the House of Commons is an absolute falsehood.

Mr. Tobin: Joe, you are a coward personally and politically, and so is this Government.

An Hon. Member: Shut up.

Mr. Tobin: I won't be shut up; Newfoundland won't be shut up. We won't be traded off for jobs.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre.

CONSUMER AFFAIRS

INTEREST RATES CHARGED BY CANADIAN TIRE COMPANY—MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs which concerns the very substantial increase in profits announced by Canadan Tire for this year's first quarter.

Is the Minister aware of the fact that this increase is almost entirely due to Canadian Tire's credit card operations and is the result of the 28.8 per cent interest rate Canadian Tire customers have to pay?

Does the Minister believe that the rate charged by Canadian Tire on its credit cards is excessive? If so, what does he intend to do to protect consumers and reduce the interest charged on these credit cards?

[English]

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I am not sure I accept or reject the premise of the Hon. Member that somehow the credit card interest rates are responsible, because I understand that the rate he quoted is pretty well the rate that applies to all retail credit cards, be it Petro-Canada, Hudson's Bay, Eaton's, or any store. I was not aware of any analysis to indicate that the profits of these companies are exceedingly high because of their credit cards.

I will take a look into the matter and report back to the Hon. Member.

RETAIL STORES' CREDIT CARD INTEREST RATES

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the same Minister. Does the Minister not recall a few months ago the Finance Committee found "that the credit card rates charged by retailers were blatantly unfair when they were about 8 per cent higher than the rates being charged by the bank credit cards"? That gap has now widened to 12 per cent for The Bay, Eaton's, Canadian Tire, Home Hardware, Sears, Simpson's, and Zellers.

Is the Minister prepared to take action to protect consumers by investigating anti-competitive behaviour of the retailers, or by taking legislative action to bring those credit card rates down?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): I am not sure what the Hon. Member means by "anti-competitive behaviour". If the Hon. Member has some evidence to support collusion or some sort of monopolistic activity by these companies, he should bring it forward because that is a criminal activity and they would be charged.

Perhaps the Hon. Member was not present or had his mind on other matters when we showed a study by my Department which indicated that, in fact, depending on how one pays off one's account, if one pays it off in fairly quick order, in one or two months, it can be cheaper to use one of those higher rate cards than the lower rated bank card because of when the clock starts ticking for accumulated interest, and so on.

It is overly simplistic, as the Hon. Member should know, and not doing a service to Canadians, to try to imply that that rate and nothing else is determinate of profits, of monopolistic behaviour, or any other illicit or improper behaviour.

Mr. Cassidy: Twenty-eight per cent is fair, is what you are saying.

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES FREE TRADE AGREEMENT—REQUEST FOR ADJUSTMENT PROGRAMS

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Employment.

Last Thursday Lucien Rolland, Chairman of Rolland Inc., a paper company, said:

> The time frame for adapting to the free trade environment is very short, and we feel strongly that the federal government, having changed the rules of the game, has an obligation to put together, in co-operation with provincial governments, adjustment assistance programs designed specifically for industries which are affected.

• (1440)

If the Government is intent on proceeding with this bad trade deal, will it at least listen to these requests for special adjustment programs to help those who are hurt by it?

These requests are coming, not only from industry and labour, but also from two unanimous committee reports of this Parliament.

When will the Government act?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, as I have said in the House before, we have an instrument in place in the form of the Canadian Job Strategy, which has built into it flexibility for dealing with labour adjustment under any number of circumstances.

Labour adjustment is a normal fact of life. Much of the flexibility under the Canadian Jobs Strategy is directed toward allowing people to take advantage of new opportunities.

There are perhaps some people in the business sector who do not understand what instruments we have available now. Even in the committee reports, which I have reviewed in some considerable detail, free trade is not made a major issue.

The authors of those reports know that we are looking at the Canadian Jobs Strategy in terms of ensuring that it is flexible. We also have a private sector labour adjustment advisory committee, which will tell us, as we go along, whether there are additional needs, and we will, of course, be paying very close attention to the advice of that advisory committee.

EMPLOYMENT PLANNING PROGRAM—PARLIAMENTARY COMMITTEE'S RECOMMENDATIONS—MINISTER'S POSITION

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, on April 13 the Economic Council of Canada stated that 188,000 jobs will be lost as a result of the free trade agreement. Most of these jobs are industrial jobs that will be replaced by jobs in the service sector.

Mr. Speaker, this kind of situation requires a considerable adjustment, and the Canadian Jobs Strategy as it stands now is inadequate.

When will the Minister act on the forty-nine recommendations made by the Committee on Labour, Employment and Immigration, to change and improve this program for Canadian workers?

[English]

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, that is a very small number of adjustments, compared to the five million Canadians who annually change their jobs or cope with adjustments within their jobs.

In designing a flexible program we wanted to ensure that, whatever the reason for labour adjustment, the flexibility was there to accommodate it. It is for that reason that we designed the Canadian Jobs Strategy as we have, and it is a program that does work in conjunction with the provinces. As well, various industries themselves have put in place programs to assist in labour adjustment.

When compared to the over-all adjustment in the economy, that which flows from the free trade deal will be relatively small. Additionally, the free trade agreement will lead to new opportunities for many of those workers affected by it.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

CORPORATE AFFAIRS

ALLEGED COLLUSION IN REAL ESTATE INDUSTRY

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs.

It has been reported that, for the past year, the Bureau of Competition Policy has been investigating concerns over collusion in some areas of the real estate industry, which collusion has been costing Canadian consumers many millions of dollars.

Can the Minister confirm that that investigation is actually going on, and whether or not some evidence of collusion has turned up; and if so, tell us what he intends to do about it?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): The Hon. Member is correct, the Bureau of Competition Policy has indeed been investigating the commission structure within the real estate industry. Some months ago, in fact, the Office of the Bureau of Competition Policy had cause to gather evidence from a number of real estate boards across the country, and that information is now being looked at.

Because of the distance that has to be maintained between my office and that of the Director of Investigation and Research, I am unable, under law, to know precisely where that investigation now rests. I am told that it is being pursued with dispatch and that some recommendation will be made in the near future. Whether the decision will be to lay charges, I cannot say at this point in time.

PROVISIONS OF STATUTE—MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): By way of supplementary, is the Minister advising us that there are weaknesses in the law? And if there are weaknesses in the law, does the Minister intend to change the law; and if so, when does he propose to do so?

If the investigation indicates that there has been a contravention of the law, and no charges are laid, one has to ask why the law is not being applied.

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I am not prepared to conclude that there are weaknesses in the law. In fact, the new competition law, passed by this House in June of 1986, has shown itself to be a very useful tool in ensuring competition in a wide variety of areas. I would be pleased to go over with the Hon. Member the successes that have been achieved in this regard.

The investigation in question is a trans-Canada one, involving many jurisdictions. It is quite complex.

The Director of Investigation and Research is pursuing the investigation with dispatch, and I have total confidence in his ability. I am sure he will reach the proper conclusion in the near future.

COMMISSION RATES CHARGED TO CUSTOMERS

Mrs. Thérèse Killens (Saint-Michel—Ahuntsic): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the same Minister and is on the same subject.

I respect the fact that the Minister has to keep a distance between himself and the Bureau of Competition Policy. However, recently a spokesman for the Bureau of Competition Policy made the statement that the Government simply cannot lower commission rates.

My question for the Minister is this. Does he agree with that statement?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): In a general sense, yes, since there is no ability on the part of my Department, in any one of its branches, either to increase prices or lower prices from where they are. However, if in fact there are anti-competitive aspects involved, aspects that are contrary to the Competition Act, and those are removed, I have every confidence that competition in the marketplace would cause a lowering of rates. That is the objective. Certainly we cannot lower rates by fiat or direction. It is only through increasing competition that we can bring about a lowering of rates.

PROVISIONS OF COMPETITION ACT

Mrs. Thérèse Killens (Saint-Michel—Ahuntsic): The Minister knows that the Competition Act makes it illegal for anyone to conspire to fix prices or to lessen competition, whether in sales or in services.

Will the Minister intervene in support of the Canadian consumer? Or is the Minister willing to let the case go to court?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): I await the recommendation of the Director of Investigation and Research in respect of whether in fact there is evidence of collusion to fix prices and whether a successful prosecution could result.

More important, what I am after is to try to ensure that there is as much competition as possible in the marketplace, since I believe that that is the way the consumer will get the greatest benefit.

There was cause to be suspicious in this situation, and that is why the investigation was launched. But, in fairness, I have to await the results of the investigation before reaching any conclusion as to culpability, or otherwise, on the part of any of the participants.

THE ENVIRONMENT

BRUNDTLAND COMMISSION RECOMMENDATIONS—MINISTER'S POSITION

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview—Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of the Environment, who is no doubt aware that environmental groups are in Ottawa at this very moment to discuss their concerns. How does the Minister intend to respond to their demand for participation in the process of implementing the recommendations of the Brundtland Commission? Will there be a program in his Department to promote sustained development, and will environmental groups be able to obtain funding from his Department to promote sustained development?

[English]

Hon. Tom McMillan (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, as I am sure the Hon. Member appreciates, the Brundtland ethic, the sustainable development concept that was championed by the Brundtland Commission, is not the type of ethic that one funds on a project by project basis; it is something that we have to weave into the total fabric of all of the decision-making that is done, not only by the Government of Canada but also by the private sector and the provincial and territorial Governments within the country.

With that in mind, I informed the Environmental Network, during the course of a two and a half hour meeting I had with that group this morning, that of course I would be favourably predisposed toward any request for funding that would assist them in their advice to Government as to how that kind of ethic could be practised. I went on to inform the Network that, by the same token, they would have to understand, as they did, that we have to make sure that the Brundtland ethic is practised at all decision-making levels within the country.

Ms. McDonald: Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to see the Minister is looking at that, and we will start cheering when we have an agreement on acid rain.

ENVIRONMENT WEEK ACTIVITIES

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview—Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, the same groups expressed concern about the politicization of Environment Week activities. Would the Minister undertake to see that there will not be any political censorship of environment groups for environment week, that the groups will be able to speak their minds? Will he realize they are responsible groups who have a message and it should not be cleaned up for public consumption, with only the politically safe nice messages going out there?

Hon. Tom McMillan (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, the purpose of Environment Week is to instil and foster in Canadians a greater awareness of environmental problems and of ways in which individuals and groups can assist Governments and others with solutions to the problems. It is not a vehicle for partisanship of any political stripe, much less is it a source of funding to pursue any particular ideology. It is an effort by Canadians, involved in the total program to celebrate our environment, to ensure it is protected not only for this generation but for generations yet unborn.

TOBACCO FARMERS—PAYMENTS UNDER REDUX PROGRAM

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Agriculture. Last year the federal and provincial Governments set up a REDUX program to assist tobacco farmers out of the industry. Part-way through the year that program was enriched so we had two levels of benefits, much lower to the first 100 participants and much higher, almost double, for those in the second group, two-thirds of the beneficiaries.

Now that the provincial Government has indicated it is prepared to equalize the benefits between the two groups of beneficiaries under the REDUX program, is the federal Government prepared to come through and ensure that the program is made equal between the two groups?

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member might be in possession of information that I do not have. The last word I have with respect to the retroactivity matter was that the provincial Government has not made any final decision.

I had preferred to refer that matter to the producers, the Ontario Tobacco Marketing Board. When we introduced the program we did not go forward in isolation but rather in co-operation with the province and with the producers' organization. That is how the first program was developed. It was reviewed by that same group and recommendations for the revised program came from a task force which was representative of both levels of government and the producers.

There are a couple of things before the industry at the moment, namely, additional funds to accommodate the extra applications that have been received, and also the retroactivity question. The last word I have is that the industry was still giving consideration to what option it wanted to follow. The feeling from the producers' level was that, given a choice, they probably would prefer to have additional funds to accommodate the 40 some odd applications that were before the board, rather than deal with the retroactivity question.

REQUEST FOR ADDITIONAL FUNDING

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, I assume the Minister is saying that the provincial Government is prepared to proceed on the basis of providing funds to two groups on an equitable basis, but surely it is not retroactive if these funds are being paid out all in one fiscal year, practically all in one calendar year? That does not constitute retroactivity to some previous fiscal year.

Is the Minister prepared to provide the additional funding for the extra 40 or 50 producers who want to exit the industry and go into some other activity, in order that the program may be fulfilled and carried out very much along the lines recommended by the special committee on agriculture in the House of Commons?

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, in the last discussions that we had with the province and the producers it appeared it would be possible to secure additional funds for that purpose, but I underline the fact that they would be coming from other aspects of the general over-all program. It would be realistic to believe that we could accommodate one or the other with a very high degree of success.

Recognizing just what the availability of funds is within that over-all general program, I think it would be somewhat unrealistic and perhaps misleading to suggest that one could accommodate both. I think one could do one or the other. From my point of view I would prefer to take my directions from the producing groups themselves.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

DOWNSVIEW AIRBASE—REQUEST FOR RELEASE OF LAND FOR HOUSING PURPOSES

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Defence. The Minister's riding is close to the Metropolitan Toronto area. As a result of that he is well aware of the crisis in affordable housing in the Metropolitan Toronto area. He is aware as well that his Department is currently sitting on about 200 to 250 potentially surplus acres of land at the Downsview Airbase in Metro Toronto. If that land were made available, it would help very much to ease the housing crisis.

Will the Minister tell us today whether he is prepared to release that land and help provide needed affordable housing for Metropolitan Toronto?

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I have asked that a full review be done by my Department with regard to our current activities at Downsview and our projected activities in the future. We are completing that study at the present time and will be making a report to Treasury Board once we have had a chance to determine whether or not all of the land that we have at the base will be necessary in the future, or whether some of it will be declared surplus.

CANADA ELECTIONS ACT

DEFINITION OF ELECTION EXPENSES

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Government House Leader and Deputy Prime Minister.

Two months ago the committee investigating the election expenses of the Hon. Member for Frontenac said we needed a new definition of election expenses. A month ago our caucus chairperson sent a letter with the proposed definition on election expenses. Why has the Minister been unable to come up with a new definition? When does he expect to have a new definition ready for the House?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is aware, I am sure, that I wrote to both House Leaders of the other two Parties. I have had a response from the Hon. House Leader for the Liberal Party. I have yet to receive a response from the House Leader of the New Democratic Party outlining some suggested changes for Bill C-79, the prospect of withdrawing it and rewriting it.

In so far as the definition of election expenses is concerned, an ad hoc committee has been set up representative of all three Parties and I understand that the committee is dealing with this particular issue. As of this date, I have not received a comprehensive reply.

I think that all Hon. Members are aware that there are a number of housekeeping matters within the Elections Act that should be changed before the next federal election. I hope I can have the co-operation and support of both opposition Parties so we can move and get those matters clarified.

Mr. Murphy: Mr. Speaker, I have a copy of the Minister's letter to the House Leaders. All it says is that there will be a new definition of election expenses to be incorporated.

The Minister in charge of the Act should know that the ad hoc committee is not meeting on this issue. I would ask him to take immediate action to make sure that we do have a proposed piece of legislation in front of the House of Commons where it properly belongs.

ELECTION DONATIONS

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question. The Minister's Quebec caucus and the Quebec wing of his Party have called for a limitation on election donations, limiting corporate and union donations. In the Minister's letter to the House Leaders he makes no mention whatsoever of this issue.

Would he confirm that it is not his intention to act in this manner when we deal with the Elections Act?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the New Democratic Party better make up its mind. At least we know where the Liberal Party stands but we do not know where the New Democratic Party stands. I have outlined the suggested amendments. The letter clearly speaks for itself.

If the Hon. Member does not want to co-operate and modify the Elections Act in order to accommodate more Canadians and facilitate their ability to vote, then the New Democrats can well take that position.

Mr. Speaker: I want to point out to the House that, despite what is happening with the clocks, I have one here that works. Question Period is not yet over.

AUTOMOTIVE INDUSTRY

NATIONAL STRATEGY—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Industry. Over a year ago the Hon. Member for Langelier (Mr. Côté), when he was Minister of Industry, pledged on behalf of the Government that the Government would soon be introducing a national automotive strategy. The Minister himself made a similar pledge last September, but nothing has happened as yet.

Has the Government abandoned that commitment? If not, where is that strategy? Why do we not have it since it is so important to the future of tens of thousands of jobs in the Canadian automotive industry?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, I can only tell my hon. colleague that a number of the issues that were being raised at that point in terms of an automotive strategy were dealt with very directly in the agreement we are intending to sign with the United States. We have dealt with issues such as the rule of origin which will require significantly higher Canadian content than rules currently in use, encouraging increased parts sourcing in Canada. Much of the work has been done, and further work is continuing.

CAR IMPORTS FROM JAPAN AND KOREA—REQUEST FOR ANNOUNCEMENT OF STRATEGY

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, the agreement with the United States does not deal specifically with imports of cars from countries like Japan and Korea. The Minister, on behalf of the Government, has not given a commitment that there will be a policy in place that makes it necessary, if countries like Japan and Korea are to sell cars here, for them to have to source in Canada in the way required of North American producers.

Why is the Minister implying that the Government is giving up its pledge for an automotive strategy? Why does he not say clearly that there will be one, and announce it today?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, there will be one. I think we have dealt with a number of issues over the last 12 months. We have dealt with access to the U.S., with the future of the Auto Pact, with the future of duty-remission programs, with the common rule of origin, with the bilateral tariffs, and with used cars.

There are still issues that are outstanding, including the future of voluntary export restraints from Japan, for example, the government position vis-à-vis autos under the multilateral trade round, research and development, and assistance to the parts sector. We are dealing with those. There will be a policy. We have already made significant progress on six or seven of the key elements, and we are resolving the outstanding three or four.

Mr. Speaker: This will be the last question, a single question from the Hon. Member for Humboldt—Lake Centre.

TOBACCO REDUX PROGRAM—PAYMENTS TO PARTICIPANTS

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt—Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Agriculture and concerns the federal-provincial agreement on the tobacco REDUX program, as it is called, in Ontario. Although the 260 growers who have used the Canada-Ontario tobacco REDUX program in recent weeks are pleased with the dollars, the 102 producers who went through the program last year and got less feel cheated. I would therefore like to ask the Minister if there are any plans to make a retroactive payment to those who were in the program last year and were short-changed as a result.

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, that is basically the same question that was posed to me by the Hon. Member of the Official Opposition earlier during Question Period.

Ms. Copps: The real Opposition.

Mr. Wise: The real Opposition? We have to recognize that this Government, on many fronts, has had to break new ground and develop new programs.

The first REDUX program was developed in concert with the industry and the province. Of course the industry people felt that there were adequate levels of compensation and that the program would be successful. Experience indicated that the level of compensation was not quite adequate for a larger participation. I told the growers back in July that we were quite prepared to sit down and revisit the program. They agreed to this suggestion and went forward.

They have now brought forward recommendations for the revised REDUX program, and of course the takeup has been extremely high. I had indicated earlier that we are exploring at the moment the possibility of diverting some of the dollars in that general program to the specific purpose of making payments to producers. However, I caution that there are two problems here, and one is the question of retroactivity. The other is availability of dollars to meet the increased and unexpected demand. I hope that we can meet both, but I do not think there are financial resources available to meet them, and I have sent that message to the growers, and the growers at the moment are assessing which option they feel we should address.

Mr. Speaker: It is a question of how much, to whom, and when!

The Hon. Member for Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe is rising on a point of order.

POINTS OF ORDER

RETRACTION OF REMARKS DURING QUESTION PERIOD

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—Port-au-Port—St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, I wanted to rise at the first opportunity to apologize to the House for my totally uncharacteristic outburst. As Hon. Members know, I am ordinarily a very calm individual, and I want to apologize to the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) to the extent that my anger, genuine as it was for the moment, was directed at him.

I know that the Secretary of State for External Affairs wants to find a solution to this problem. The solution is not to be found in suggesting that one region and its problems must be ignored because of possible consequences for another region. I tell the Secretary of State for External Affairs that that comment was the source of my anger, and not the Secretary of State for External Affairs personally.

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, all of us from time to time lose our normal composure in debate, and while I disagree with the implications, although not the statement of the Hon. Member's elaboration, I certainly applaud his gesture in this House.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: I want to thank the Hon. Member for Humber—Port-au-Port—St. Barbe (Mr. Tobin), and I want to thank the Right Hon. Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) for his gracious comment.

CHAMBER CLOCKS

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, we have experienced a rather unusual phenomenon today in terms of the clock. Historically, the precision of a clock is an important element of our proceedings. I wonder if you might clarify for the House what the official clock will be until we get the main clocks in the Chamber put in order. There are 20-minute time limits and limits for questions and comments.

I think it is important for all Hon. Members to understand where indeed they might get information about what time it is for the balance of today.

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, I cannot let the opportunity pass to remind the Parliamentary Secretary that indeed the clocks have gone a bit crazy and that reminds me a bit of the way his agenda works sometimes. He wants to push things so much that maybe the clocks have started to be scared of him and are trying to advance things a bit faster than normal. I just want him to calm himself. We all have watches.

Mr. Speaker: I can advise Hon. Members that until the main clocks are fixed, the time will be kept track of by the Table Officers and, of course, the Speaker has a clock here as well. Hon. Members could synchronize their watches and that would probably avail us for the rest of the afternoon.

I must advise that I have no idea about what has caused the clocks to race ahead and extinguish an afternoon of important matters, but it may have started during one of the exchanges in Question Period, I am not sure. In any event, the clocks are still moving and I will send someone to stop them and to reset them.

ALLOTTED DAY, S. O. 82—DROUGHT IN WESTERN CANADA

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Althouse:

> That this House urge the government to provide for emergency financial assistance to grain and livestock producers in the southern Prairies and in Central British Columbia in the event of a continuation of the current drought conditions in those areas, and to establish a long-term plan to deal with environmental disasters such as droughts, floods, and pest infestations.

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to take this opportunity to say a few words on the motion my colleague has put before the House. Farming these days in most parts of Canada is not a particularly happy industry. The attack on farming has come not only from nature but from a variety of other sources as well. It has not been caused by drought, floods, insects or disease necessarily, but by many artificial sources including ourselves and other Governments in the world which are attempting to control the market.

A part of the difficulty with farming is caused by world events, world markets, low prices, price wars, and unfair subsidies. However, it is because of this rather unstable situation in which farmers find themselves, while attempting to produce the food the world needs, that we have before us a motion which suggests that we need to do something about stability in farming.

What farmers really need is some kind of long-term security. They need to know that what they plant and the animals they nurture will provide a return sufficient to pay the bills and to make a little profit so that they can have a decent life for themselves and their families. They need enough to make sure that they will stay alive, not only in the sense of having enough to eat, but in the industry they have chosen for themselves.

Prices and markets are artificial difficulties which farmers face. We are asking in this motion why we do not have in place a program which gives farmers some assurance that when they hit a bad year, when they are affected by those difficulties which nature sometimes throws up, they will have a program which allows other Canadians to be of support to farmers.

Back in 1985 the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) came before this House and made a very specific statement. This was during a time when there was a considerable amount of concern about drought in southern Saskatchewan. The Government acted on that concern and put in the works a considerable amount of money to assist farmers. It was a rather temporary approach, as the Minister said at the time. On November 27, 1985, at page 8870 of Hansard, he said:

> There is no question about the fact that there are many western farmers, good farmers, who, through no fault of their own, need special assistance measures at this time.

That is what he was providing; that was the announcement. He went on:

> But we all appreciate that ad hoc measures and programs are not an ideal solution. It is disruptive to producers to live with the uncertainty of not knowing what back-up assistance they will receive when natural disasters occur.

He went on to say:

> Nor is it easy for the federal Government to take on substantial new financial commitments which have not been previously budgeted.

Yet what the Government has been doing ever since is coming up with ad hoc programs when farmers need assistance. We are suggesting today that it is time that the Government looked for a program which will guarantee farmers that if they face natural disasters they can at least know—and that is the key—that there are programs in place which will help them in the circumstances.

Farming is a difficult business. Drought, floods, grasshoppers, disease, and bad weather are all disasters confronting farmers much more often than possibly we realize because we have a tendency to look at these things as they affect only our little area. They may not bother us too much because we may be affected by only one of them every few years. If we were to put in place a regularized structure, a disaster relief program, then the farmer would know that he or she would receive enough to live on in case of a disaster.

We can look at what has happened in Canada over the years. We have had tornadoes, floods, and other natural disasters, and I suppose in every case the Government has come forward with enough to allow the farmers to survive through the particular problem. The Minister and other Members of the House have suggested that crop insurance is now the solution to all such disasters. Perhaps under certain circumstances it is. Others have suggested that western grain stabilization or that kind of program is also an answer. Again I say maybe, but it is not always the answer. Farmers know that both those programs are based on historical production. The farmer's income is stabilized at a level which is the average of several years before.

Today, as well, several Hon. Members have said that right now we are faced on parts of the Prairies with the same kind of weather patterns we had in the Dirty Thirties. In fact, they have used those particular words, "the Dirty Thirties". One of the features of the Dirty Thirties was that the problems lasted for a good portion of the years between 1930 and 1938.

The Saskatoon Star Phoenix carried a little item this weekend entitled "Fifty years ago today, historical note". It said that 50 years ago today the Province of Saskatchewan received two inches of rain. It was the first general rainfall Saskatchewan had had for eight years. I am not being pessimistic and suggesting that that is what will happen now, but we have no emergency funding for such a long-term disaster. Insurance programs do not deal with such situations.

In fact, when the Minister made his comments on November 27, 1985, he pointed out to this House that one particular portion of the agricultural industry, the cattle raising industry, had had five continuous years of insufficient pasture. Stabilization programs do not help in such circumstances. The programs about which we have been talking will provide short-term relief, as the Minister said in a press release at that time.

Speaking about the program for drought in western Canada, as well as crop insurance and western grain stabilization, he said that this program would provide short-term relief while we developed a long-term approach to emergency funding. He explained that the Crop Disaster Assistance Program was being viewed as a field test for a permanent emergency assistance program which would be an adjunct to the current Crop Insurance Program. He said that in the past few months it had been referred to as "Phase 3" of the drought assistance plan. The Minister of Agriculture indicated this in a wire released early in 1986. He was pointing to the need for a long-term program which takes care of natural disasters as they come about.

The Hon. Member for Yorkton—Melville (Mr. Nystrom) keyed in on one of the results of not having in place programs which allow farmers to believe that when they plant they can harvest, that when they breed cattle they will be able to live off the products of those cattle. If, when in the process of planting or of raising cattle, you never know whether the results of your year's work will be enough to keep you and your family alive for the next year, you are under a tremendous amount of stress.

The aim of our motion today is to draw the attention of the Government and the people of Canada to the fact that there is a great deal of pressure on farmers these days due to the fact that they do not get sufficient return on their products to allow them to live, to pay their accumulated debts, and to pay the input necessary to produce the products they wish to market.

One of the results of this in many areas of the country has been an effect on the rural population which Members of this House and citizens of Canada abhor. There has been an increased number of family problems in the rural areas—increased alcoholism, suicides, drug use, and emotional problems. These are all much more prevalent in rural areas now than ever before. Not too long ago a statistic in Ontario suggested that more than one-third of the deaths in its rural areas were by suicide, related in most cases to inability to deal with the problems of farm production.

We are, therefore, suggesting today that it may be possible to eliminate some of the stress by putting in place an income security program based on the farmer as an important and integral part of society, because the farmer is an important and integral part of society. The only link in the food chain from the resource earth to the consumer which does not pay for itself is the producer, the farmer. The only link in the chain which does not make enough from the day-to-day work to pay itself a decent living, to pay for products and input, is the actual producer.

I have been talking about the need to eliminate as much of the stress of farmers as possible. The drought may disappear. It could rain tomorrow. However, we have a water shortage and that will not disappear tomorrow. A flood starts today and remains for a few days. A drought which causes water shortage does not happen overnight; it is built up over years. In western Canada the water shortage has been developing for many years, and it is not going to disappear.

Therefore we need not only expand the very successful and worth-while projects which PFRA has in place. We need to put in place a disaster program which will eliminate at least one of the causes of the great amount of stress put on the farmer as he tries to make a living.

Mr. Gustafson: Mr. Speaker, I have one short comment. I certainly recognize the seriousness of the drought problem in the Prairies which at this time particularly relates to water for the livestock operations. In the area I represent, the PFRA is working. It is pumping water into dugouts in community pastures, trying to make water available in as many cases as is possible so that there is drinking water for the livestock.

Another comment I would like to make is that having been the chairman of the task force on drought back in 1984-85, I can say that the Government did respond very positively. The positive news we have on the Prairies, as reported by the CBC this morning, is that approximately one-third of Saskatchewan has received sufficient rainfall, along with a better part of Manitoba. The drought area certainly lies in the western and central parts of the province. On a positive note, the Government has been responsive and I am sure will be responsive to these needs.

Mr. Hovdebo: In reply to the comments of the Hon. Member, I will say that all of us who live in Saskatchewan, Alberta and Manitoba, recognize the great value of the PFRA programs now and in the past. The PFRA was established for a good reason in the 1930s and the fact it has survived is a good indication that it has done a job and done it well. As far as water is concerned, based on the precipitation in Saskatchewan right now, there are parts of Saskatchewan that will have no problem, but there are parts which will be in trouble. Estevan, for example, has had 40 per cent of normal precipitation up until now. The chance it will reach normal precipitation levels by the end of June is only 24 per cent. In other words, there is one chance out of four that Estevan will have normal precipitation this year. I will go through the statistics very quickly. They are a good indication of how badly things are with respect to water on the Prairies. The statistics are only for Saskatchewan. There is only one chance out of three that Saskatoon will have enough rainfall by June 30 to be up to normal levels of precipitation. Prince Albert has 61 per cent of normal precipitation. It is by far the best in the area. Battleford has 29 per cent, Broadview, 27 per cent, Yorkton, 29 per cent, Estevan, 24 per cent, Regina, 34 per cent and Swift Current, 27 per cent.

Those percentages are indications that we may get some rain, but we need a considerable amount more. That is only part of our motion here today. The main part of our motion says we need in place something which can cushion the farmer so that he knows for sure he going to survive. I appreciate the point the Hon. Member made, that the Government has reacted in the past to give farmers assistance when they needed it, but it would be much less stressful for the farmer if a program was in place that was regularized and structured.

Mr. Hardey: Mr. Speaker, I do wish to comment and put a question to the Hon. Member for Prince Albert. I found his speech a bit confusing as I listened. He went through his points one by one. He began to deal with a motion for a strategy to deal with environmental disasters, but he tried to couple that with the problem many farmers face with respect to low commodity prices from time to time, particularly during the past two years when we have been dealing with the Special Grains Assistance Program and so on. I find it difficult to lump these two problems together. Why is the Hon. Member attempting to deal with the motion and at the same time trying to deal with low commodity prices? It appears as if he is attempting to deal with a type of insurance plan to cover both at the same time.

I also want to point out that we recognize that the crop insurance program is not perfect, but the Hon. Member seems not to be aware of how it is set up. Surely he knows that the individual farmer starts off on the program with a regional average as a basis to be paid in case he faces some type of disaster and does not harvest his crop, but as he participates in the program, the Hon. Member will know that each farmer has the opportunity to develop his own personal record of production, thereby increasing the level at which he would be paid in case he faces a disaster.

The Hon. Member is confusing that program with the stabilization program, and they must not be confused because it just confuses everyone who listens to the Hon. Member. So let us deal with environmental problems, and the disasters with respect to those environmental problems, such as grasshoppers, floods, droughts, and, as I pointed out previously, some of the frost problems. I would ask the Hon. Member if he would agree that we have to deal with those issues independently. Surely he knows the Government has a record of being there with special disaster funds, besides the insurance programs, and so on.

Mr. Hovdebo: Mr. Speaker, perhaps we did not make our motion broad enough. Disasters are the same whether they come about from low prices or from no rain. They are all a disaster when it comes to getting bread on the table. I want to point out that historically in my part of Saskatchewan, and the Hon. Member for Assiniboia (Mr. Gustafson) will recognize this, the use of insurance to cover crops is not very broadly used because we in my particular district have never been able to establish a level which would allow us to make use of the insurance program. I recognize the difference without any doubt between insurance and stabilization, but historically the two somehow seem to come together in our part of Saskatchewan because of the fact that by the time the farmer has paid the amount necessary for input and insured the crop at that level, he has already used up any possible returns he might get from insurance. Consequently, most farmers do not bother to buy insurance. It is only of marginal value to some people.

The other point I think I have to make is that when a farmer is under stress, when he is having a problem making ends meet, one of the things he has a tendency to drop is insurance, just as many people dropped Western Grain Stabilization when they should not have. It is that stress that builds up which causes the problems of alcoholism, suicide and family problems.

Stress causes the kinds of problems which some kind of a program that guaranteed a return under certain circumstances would eliminate.

Mr. Gustafson: Mr. Speaker, I have one short supplementary comment to make. The NDP in Saskatchewan has been opposed to the building of a dam called Rafferty Dam at Estevan, Saskatchewan. The Hon. Member for Prince Albert (Mr. Hovdebo) mentioned Estevan and the low rainfall in that area.

The Devine Government is moving ahead on this dam which will have a very positive effect on water supply in the whole southern area. Yet the NDP has taken the position of opposing this structure. Certainly, the building of dams for water supply has to be a very positive aspect. The Rafferty Dam is a very positive direction that the provincial Government has taken with the assistance of the federal Government.

There seems to be somewhat of a contradiction here in the NDP line in terms of suggesting on the one hand that we have to look at water supplies and then on the other hand putting road-blocks in the way of the provincial Government accomplishing the building of dams. Someone said that the NDP in Saskatchewan talks about dams and the Conservatives build them.

Mr. Hovdebo: Mr. Speaker, the Rafferty Dam in Saskatchewan is a political dam. It has nothing to do with water particularly. It is a political dam which is being put in place for the benefit of the Hon. Member. It will take 35 years to fill the dam, if it can ever be filled up. If the water level in the dam is dropped by one metre there will be 60 miles of mud-flats. This information has come out of a partially developed study which the Government of Saskatchewan never bothered to finish. It got the people to do the study with respect to this particular dam development and did not fill in the blanks that were necessary to make a decision on the building of the dam or the not building of it, which has nothing to do with the economy, water use or anything else about that particular area.

Mr. Lee Clark (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to enter into the debate which is, of course, of very considerable importance to the agricultural community in western Canada. In doing so I speak at least in part from my own perspective as a Manitoban. I might say that, unfortunately, some of my colleagues who I know wish to be here cannot be present today. I think in particular of the Minister of State for Grains and Oilseeds (Mr. Mayer) who could not be present.

I am pleased to report to the House that the situation in Manitoba has changed rather dramatically in the last 10 days. Rather ironically while all of us shared the concern about an impending and feared drought in western Canada some 10 to 14 days ago, in Manitoba we now have a situation of having to look at damage caused by flooding in the northwestern part of Manitoba in the Dauphin—Swan River area. I suppose this simply demonstrates how quickly weather conditions can change. In a sense we can go from one crisis to another.

The rains of the last two weeks have moved the area of concern to the West. I am advised that at least the eastern third of Saskatchewan has had enough moisture that it can look to reasonable chances of germination. That, of course, is good news. The problem for cattlemen and livestock producers remains since their water needs will not be met as readily as those who are involved in cereal grains.

If I may, I want to make some reference to the exchange that took place in the House a few moments ago with respect to the Rafferty Dam. So much of what happens in Canada depends on one's geographic perspective. In light of the fact that I represent the constituency of Brandon—Souris, and since the Souris River flows from Saskatchewan into North Dakota and back into Manitoba, I must advise my hon. friend, the Parliamentary Secretary to the Prime Minister (Mr. Gustafson), that there are as yet some unresolved concerns in my own constituency with respect to water supply. I simply say to him for the sake of the record that if I understand it correctly, the role of the federal Government is limited to that of providing its permission for construction to proceed. If I understand correctly, I think that that is still under review.

Mr. Foster: Take him out behind the barn, Lee.

Mr. Clark (Brandon—Souris): Mr. Speaker, the Member who just spoke on behalf of the New Democratic Party, a good friend of mine of several years standing, said that what western Canadian farmers want to a very large degree is an assurance that they can count on the federal Government to be of assistance if indeed the need for that assistance proves to be there. While all of us in the House understand how quickly weather conditions can change on the Prairies, the drought that we fear today could indeed be gone in 48 hours. Thus we do understand the importance of the concerns which are there.

We want to take this opportunity to reassure the prairie agricultural community, although it understands full well, that the Government has been there in the past when it was needed since 1984. I think the community understands full well that we will be there again if indeed our assistance is necessary.

I am pleased that there have been some changes to western grain stabilization programs and crop insurance, which have made them more responsive to the needs of prairie agriculture. For example, we now have provisions for livestock feed forage crops to be included under crop insurance to a greater degree than they were before. While I, like other Members, appreciate the need for long-term planning, it is very difficult in some instances to have the kind of long-term planning which some of us would seek. That is particularly true when talking about drought.

Part of the problem with drought is the fact that it does not necessarily follow a uniform pattern. For example, I think of programs which the federal Government put in place in 1984 and 1985 in which the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary to the Prime Minister played a very significant role. I remember some $60 million was provided in 1984. I believe that something in the order of $146 million was provided in 1985. I remember one of the problems at that particular time was the fact that for those programs to proceed there had to be provincial co-operation as well. Due perhaps to variations in economic conditions, and perhaps due to the attitudes of provincial Governments, some of the farmers in my own constituency were not able to participate in the latter program because the Government of Manitoba did not believe the crisis was as severe as the federal Government believed it was. Our neighbours to the west in Saskatchewan and Alberta were able to participate in those programs, and benefit from them.

As you may know, Mr. Speaker, the new Government of Manitoba was sworn in this afternoon. There is as of now a new Minister of Agriculture. I am sure that that new Minister of Agriculture will be very responsive and sensitive to the needs of the agricultural community, I believe to a greater degree than has been the case over the last few years. What the farm community understandably seeks, and what we as the Government are prepared to offer, is a statement of commitment on our part. One might well ask in view of the cynicism which exists among the public today just how the farm community is to determine that a Government's commitment is something which indeed will be honoured.

We as politicians live in a world of words. In fact, the very word "parliament" means "to speak". There are many who would suggest that there is far too much speaking that goes on in Parliament. I think there are some of us who would applaud that.If we cannot judge a Government or politicians by their words, the obvious question arises as to how does one judge a Government. How do we know that it will honour its commitments?

As a Member of the Government, and particularly as Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Agriculture, I am pleased to be able to say to you, Mr. Speaker, and to the prairie agricultural community that I believe this Government's commitment to the agricultural community will be respected and well received, not because of the words which we use here or elsewhere, but because of the actions which have preceded the words and the actions of the last four years.

I have no difficulty in saying that the crisis which has existed in agriculture for the past four or five years has been the worst that we have seen in Canada since the 1930s. I also have no hesitation in saying to the Canadian agricultural community that the record of the Government over the past four years is one of unprecedented support for agriculture. Nowhere in the history of Canada has there been a four year period of growing financial support for agriculture as there has been for the past four years. The strength of our commitment is to be measured and determined by that record of which I speak.

I have referred to the fact that when there was a drought in 1984 and in 1985, programs were put in place which met the needs of the agricultural community. We have also moved to try to strengthen the safety net programs to which we as government Members refer. I have mentioned amendments to the Western Grains Stabilization Act, amendments to crop insurance, and other Members have previously spoken on that.

We live so much in the age of dollars and cents that sometimes our record is measured only in those terms. Perhaps one statistic alone is more significant than any other, that is, our direct financial support to Canadian agriculture has increased by some 400 per cent since 1984. That is an unprecedented record of increased financial assistance to agriculture. That is why the farmers realize that when we say we will be there, we will indeed be there.

However, many of the problems which exist in agriculture today are not of a short-term nature, but of a long-term nature. Many are international in nature, rather than national or regional. That is why the Government has worked very hard to address these problems at the international level. That is why agriculture has been more on the international agenda than ever before in the history of Canada.

In June, 1986, Canada hosted a meeting of five major grain exporters to work toward solutions and problems in the grain trade. In September, 1986, there was a very important development when the Secretary of State participated in the launching of a new GATT round. We understand very clearly that GATT was tragically ignored in the last talks by the previous administration. Agriculture is on the GATT round for the first time. Much is expected of that, but indeed I think there is reason to be optimistic about what is expected.

In May, 1987, Canada and the Minister of State for Grains and Oilseeds played an integral part in the meeting of the Cairns Group, a group of 14 nations that are among the principal grain exporters moving toward trade reforms. In a similar fashion, at the economic summits, and at the OECD meetings, agriculture has been very much on the agenda as a result of initiatives that we have taken.

In addition, we have had a considerable amount of success in moving grain under very competitive circumstances. We have used short and medium term credit measures through the Export Development Corporation to facilitate those sales. We have had agricultural trade missions to Japan, the Soviet Union, and China. We signed a five year commitment with the Soviet Union, which continues to be a very important economic trading partner. As a result of that commitment, the Soviet Union has agreed to purchase a minimum 25 million tonnes of grain. There is a new three year agreement with Brazil. As a result of these various activities, the total representing last year was a record export of 31 million tonnes. This has been done at a time when some of our competitors have been attempting to give away their grain in order to take away markets that have been historically ours. We have succeeded not only in retaining our traditional markets, but adding to them.

At home we have done what we can to be of assistance. As I stated previously, we have done more than any other Government prior to us. For example, in October, 1984, although it is a long time ago in our memories, the St. Lawrence Seaway's tolls were frozen, saving farmers some $2 million. In January, 1985, a moratorium was introduced on the Farm Credit Corporation foreclosures until the Farm Debt Review Boards were in place. As a result of the Farm Debt Review Boards being in place, and those many agricultural-minded citizens who work on them, we estimate that some 2,000 farmers remain in business today who would not otherwise be there. Funding for those boards has been extended until 1991 because the need is evident. There is a further federal commitment in that regard of $40 million.

In February, 1985 the Western Grain Stabilization Act was amended in order that farmers could receive interim payments in time for spring seeding. As a result of some of those amendments, and as a result of the support for the program, that program has paid out nearly $3.6 billion, $2.4 billion of that amount having been paid in the spring when it is needed most.

In June, 1985, and I remember this well because I was Chairman of the Agriculture Committee, we succeeded in establishing tripartite stabilization programs for red meat producers. Unfortunately, many provinces have not yet joined in the beef area, Manitoba being one of them, but I think that will come in the not too distant future.

In October, 1985, there were special cash advances of up to $3,000 per farmer to help prairie producers pay for the cost of drying grain. The problem at that time was too much moisture, the opposite of what it is now. In November, 1985 there were cash advances for unthreshed grain on the Prairies. The list goes on, Mr. Speaker.

There are federal tax rebates for farmers worth some $200 million per year at the moment. In March, 1986, there was a $94 million branch line rehabilitation program. In April, 1986, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) announced a freeze on the freight rates paid by producers for moving their grain. In July, 1986, there was an investment of $35 million to promote the long term development of the livestock feed sector in Atlantic Canada. In December, 1986, there was the Special Canadian Grains Program, the first of two. The first was $1 billion, and more recently there was $1.1 billion in December, 1987.

In April, 1987, $64 million was provided to farmers to cushion them from a statutory increase in western grain freight rates. Presently there is another program of a lesser nature, but with the same objective. In December, 1987 assistance was given to the Farm Credit Corporation, recognizing that the credit crisis is not going to be resolved immediately. There was $30 million in extra funding provided in order that it could participate in lowering debts and interest rates with the Farm Debt Review Boards, and there is a promise of $100 million per year for each of the next three years to permit them to do the same thing.

There was also an attempt to strengthen the FCCs. Last December $100 million was announced to cover corporate losses, and a deferral of a $103 million loan payment which lessened the crisis they were facing. Of course, there was also the extremely important $1.1 billion program to which I have already alluded.

Despite the fact that some $29 billion is being spent on interest on the national debt, the Government honoured the commitment it made some four years ago that farmers would be entitled to substantial capital gains tax exemptions. We recognize that the land they own and seek to pay for represents their own pension fund. Farmers are treated in the unique manner they deserve as a result of tax exemptions of some $500,000 per farmer.

In the past four years, as a result of all those programs and many to which I have not referred, our financial commitment to agriculture has risen by some 400 per cent, virtually 100 per cent per year for each of the four years we have been in power. This averages out to some $20,000 per year to each commercial farm in 1987, as contrasted with figures of some $4,000 per year in 1984.

Virtually every farmer to whom I speak, and there are many, would prefer that these types of programs were not necessary. They would prefer not to have to come to Government in times of stress. They would prefer that all of their necessary income could be found in the market-place. But agriculture is a very unique industry, in the sense that it depends entirely on the weather. I remember well living in Saskatchewan north of Regina in my teen years during the dry years when as a young person one spent more time looking at the sky than anything else, not to enjoy the beauty of the sky, but to look for rain clouds and worry about what agriculture could mean to prairie people who are so dependent upon the climate and the weather.

Agriculture is unique not only because it depends on the weather, but also because it depends, to a very large degree, on what international markets are. On the one hand, the Canadian farmer is historically very much of an individualist, but on the other hand he recognizes that he is in a uniquely dependent situation. I can think of no sector of the Canadian economy where those who practise that economy are as dependent on others as is the case in agriculture, and are particularly dependent upon forces over which there is no control. In my own constituency until 10 days ago the dirt and the dust was blowing, reminiscent of the 1940s and the 1930s. What is so tragic about that situation is there is very little that the individual farmer can do about that.

The farmer is in the same position when the price of grain declines. Who else in this society has suffered a 40 to 50 per cent reduction in the price for their product? That is what has happened to the prairie grain producer over the last two, three, four years. Those are aspects of an agricultural operation which all of us regret, and they are aspects which we as a Government, in conjunction with our provincial counterparts, are striving to minimize to the greatest degree possible.

I wish it were possible for Members of this Government to stand in this House today and say that there will be no drought in the Prairies. That, of course, is not possible. No one can accurately forecast what will happen with the weather. Certainly no one was forecasting the flooding which has taken place over the last few days in the Swan River Valley.

I wish we could stand in this place and outline precisely what we intend to do should the drought continue. But that, too, is difficult to do, given that we do not know the nature of the crisis as it will unfold. We do not know how large an area will be affected. What we do know is that we, as Members of this Government, can stand in this place and say to the prairie grain producers that we have been there over the last four years to an extent that no government before us has been there; and we can say to the prairie grain producers that we will not abandon them in their moment of need.

We have demonstrated our commitment to agriculture over the last four years a way of which I am personally proud, and we say to the agricultural community today that, if the need is there, we will be there again, as we were in 1984, as we were in 1985; that we will do whatever is necessary to assist the prairie agricultural community in the manner in which they deserve.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: On questions and comments, the Hon. Member for Algoma (Mr. Foster).

Mr. Foster: I was interested in the comments of the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister regarding the Prairie Farm Rehabilitation Act. I remind the Hon. Member of the commitment made by the Progressive Conservative Party during the 1984 general election campaign to expand the Prairie Farm Rehabilitation Act into a national farm and forestry rehabilitation act, which act would include co-ordinating national concerns with respect to drought, water, soil management, conservation, wetlands management, and the general enhancement of the quality of rural heritage.

Perhaps the Hon. Member can advise us as to whether that campaign commitment has been met. Will the Government be bringing in legislation between now and the end of this Parliament to implement that commitment?

Mr. Clark (Brandon—Souris): Mr. Speaker, I cannot give the Hon. Member the commitment which he is seeking with respect to what the future agenda of this Government will be. As all of us know, there are more Bills now before the House than are likely to be completed in the normal course of events, let alone those which might be produced in the future.

Since its establishment in 1935, the PFRA has been associated with soil and water conservation. What was announced last December, as the Hon. Member well knows, was a special commitment to soil and water conservation, entailing a financial commitment of some $75 million, all in the expectation that those moneys would be matched by the governments of the Prairie provinces—and there is some indication that that will be the case.

Whether or not the umbrella of the PFRA is expanded, whether its name is changed, the type of work which PFRA has been associated with over the years is very much continuing now and into the future. I was very pleased to see that some of the individuals who have been associated with the work of the PFRA are now themselves becoming involved, in an administrative capacity, with the new soil and water conservation program. That augers well for the future on the Prairies.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Humboldt—Lake Centre (Mr. Althouse), on a question or comment.

Mr. Althouse: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Brandon—Souris (Mr. Clark), in his speech, spoke about certainty, and the difficulty that farmers have in feeling dependent. He should be aware that that is precisely the feeling that we are trying to address through this motion. The Government promised on November 27, 1985, in the Minister's statement, to continue its efforts toward developing a long-term approach to emergency funding. This motion is to remind the Government of that promise.

Until becoming a Member of this House, I depended upon farming as my sole source of livelihood, and I can tell the Hon. Member that farmers do not feel any sense of certainty from the kinds of statements that the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister has made today. The farmers can take no certainty in being told that this Party, or that Party or the other Party will look after their interests. The sense of certainty that farmers are looking for is that which comes with a law, the kind of law that gave us, as farmers, the Western Grain Stabilization Administration. We got that because the law was there, not because a given party was in power. We got that because it was enacted as a law of the land.

That is the kind of certainty that farmers are looking for with regard to emergency drought aid. They want to know the parameters of the aid and what is required before action is triggered. They want to know what federal and provincial committees have to be put in place.

This all happens after the fact, and a formula is worked out. But, it is not enacted with any certainty. No one remembers from one emergency to the next what steps have to be gone through. It is something that has never been spelled out in the law. That is what we are trying to remind the Government of, since it seems to have forgotten what happened some three years ago on the occasion of the last emergency confronting the agricultural community.

Farmers want to know that the processes and steps are the same from one emergency to another, and they want them set out in the law. At the moment, those steps and procedures are not set out in any orderly procedure, and there is no organization within any of the Departments to take over should we be in the middle of an election campaign at the time of a disaster, or going through a change of Government, or whatever.

Farmers must have the kind of certainty that can be had through having the steps and procedures set out in law, and that is what we are trying to stress through this particular motion.

Mr. Clark (Brandon—Souris): : I appreciate the security which a law may provide—and I say that as someone whose own farm is still within the dry area of Saskatchewan. On the other hand, it may merely lend to a false sense of security, inasmuch as one cannot anticipate, in advance, all that the weather can do in terms of its impact upon the agricultural sector. One can simply not foresee all of the vagaries of weather.

In 1985, I had farmers in my own constituency, in the Grand Clairiere area, who suffered from drought, as well as from grasshoppers. Because those twin disasters were, so-called, local in nature, they could not qualify for assistance. The provincial government of the day took the position that the drought was not serious enough. My own inclination would be to proceed on an ad hoc basis, in belief that when one responds to the real circumstances of the moment, one can respond more adequately when trying to foresee the future.

There was no law which required the Government of Canada, in 1986, to provide a special $1 billion program to the Canadian agricultural community. Yet, because of the need, the Government responded with a $1 billion program. And there was no law which required the Government to respond in 1987. Because the need was there, this Government did respond.

Those who believe that they can adequately prepare for the future through perfect legislation, legislation which encompasses all of the circumstances which the future will present, have a naive belief in the power of legislators to anticipate the future.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor), on a question or comment.

Mr. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, I have one or two comments and then I have a question for the Hon. Member. In my constituency, and probably in many parts of Alberta it is very, very dry. Last Saturday I dug down into the earth with my hands—I did not have a shovel—around eight or nine inches. The soil was bone dry. Hon. Members know that unless you have some moisture in the top four or five inches there is very little sense putting in seed because it will not germinate. There is a great deal of concern about this drought.

When I was in the Alberta Government, we explored plans for a catastrophe fund. People by themselves cannot provide for a catastrophe. You can provide for small happenings, but you cannot provide for a catastrophe. We checked with Lloyds of London and others for a catastrophe insurance fund so that something could be in place when a tremendous flood or a devastating fire occurred, wiping out neighbourhoods, et cetera. These things may never happen but if there is a fund in place, it gives people a sense of security.

The United States has programs in place for emergencies. Frankly, I would like to see an expanded insurance policy or catastrophe fund, whatever you want to call it, set up. It may not look after every catastrophe or emergency that arises—no one can foresee everything, as the Parliamentary Secretary said. There is a feeling today that, sure, the Government will come through, but no one knows how, why or when a catastrophe will occur. If we do not get rains in Alberta in the next two or three weeks, it will be terrible for growth. Farmers will be unable to put in their seed. That will cause a calamity not only for Alberta but for Canada. We depend upon the farmers to produce our food.

Would the Parliamentary Secretary take a look at an expanded insurance policy or having a catastrophe fund—I do not care what it is called—in place that will give the farmer a feeling of security if the grasshoppers come in hordes, as they did in southern Alberta a year or two ago, when they destroyed crops and ate paint off the houses. We have no provision for those sorts of things, but something should be done in conjunction with provincial Governments. I would like to see the farmer given a feeling of security that if some of these terrible things happen and he cannot seed, he will not be left high and dry. This has been done in the United States. Canada can similarly set up a program. It will not cover everything but at least something would be there in the event of a catastrophe. I would like the comments of the Parliamentary Secretary.

Mr. Clark (Brandon—Souris): Mr. Speaker, as the Hon. Member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor) knows, there is a need for both levels of Government to work together to try to provide some sort of catastrophe fund, safety net or whatever. I would be the first to admit that perhaps there are too many programs but we have created a series of programs, both federal and provincial Governments working together. We have crop insurance, western grain stabilization and soil and water conservation programs. We have done many things. I would readily concede that there probably has not been as much co-ordination and integration of those as I would wish. We are spending a very substantial amount of money on agriculture on the Prairies, as the Hon. Member knows well. I referred to some of those figures in my address. We subsidize the movement of grain and there are various programs to keep down the farmer's share of freight rates, et cetera.

Part of the difficulty, Mr. Speaker, and I am sure the Hon. Member is aware and sensitive to this, is that while we believe that some of our programs are advantageous, the farmers do not necessarily agree. For a variety of reasons they choose not to participate. I think particularly of the Western Grain Stabilization Program which has paid out a substantial amount of money to those who are in it. But what of the 13 per cent who are not in it? That is a problem this House will have to address in the next few days or weeks.

There are people who would advocate that we could take the various programs, roll them together and probably provide to a substantial degree the sort of insurance coverage to which the Hon. Member refers. But what of the 40 per cent who do not choose to be in crop insurance for a variety of reasons? What about the 13 per cent who are not in the Western Grain Stabilization Program? Part of the difficulty in providing that kind of a safety net is that we are left with the understandable desire on the part of individual farmers to reserve the right to participate or not participate. That is why in some ways this special grains program, ad hoc though it may have been, was a response that met the needs of agriculture, I would argue quite well, because it was there. It was drafted after the circumstances were known. We knew what the situation was. We knew how far the price had fallen. We knew the size of the crop and the quality of the grain. We said in consultation with the farm communities that it was available to the community as a whole.

I have no lack of sympathy for the Hon. Member's objective in terms of trying to integrate these programs. But what do we do for those who for a variety of economic or philosophical reasons do not wish to participate?

Crop insurance is not nearly as adequate as it should be. For that reason many do not buy it. Many are buying it this year for the first time because of their concerns, but it is not adequate for many. The Western Grain Stabilization Program only covers a certain percentage of production. I would like to see us try to bring all this money together into a more comprehensive fund. But what about those who do not wish to participate? That remains a philosophical problem.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 66, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: The Hon. Member for Algoma (Mr. Foster)—Trade—Canada-United States free trade agreement—Request that Government compensate grape growers/Request for guaranteed lines of credit; The Hon. Member for Broadview—Greenwood (Ms. McDonald)—Film Distribution Industry—Effect of Canada-United States free trade agreement/Effect of agreement on cultural industries; The Hon. Member for York East (Mr. Redway)—Energy—Low sulphur western coal—Proposed use by Ontario Hydro.

ALLOTTED DAY, S. O. 82—DROUGHT IN WESTERN CANADA

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Althouse:

> That this House urge the Government to provide for emergency financial assistance to grain and livestock producers in the southern Prairies and in Central British Columbia in the event of a continuation of the current drought conditions in those areas, and to establish a long-term plan to deal with environmental disasters such as droughts, floods, and pest infestations.

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview—Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, as the environment critic for the New Democratic caucus, I am pleased to take part in this debate today because agriculture is extremely important to Canada and primary production is something highly dependent upon the environment. We are dealing with what we hope will be treated as a renewable resource. Far too often we see agriculture treated as a mining resource, as something that is here today and gone tomorrow. It is with a view to looking at agriculture as sustainable development that I participate in this debate and address some of the questions that my colleagues have already raised, specifically with regard to drought in western Canada, the need for long-term solutions and some security for our farmers.

It is a very discouraging prospect for us to consider the matter of drought in western Canada. We think of the drought in the 1930s and we are told that some of these scenes are beginning to happen again with sand, dust and soil blowing across the Prairies as they did at that time.

Droughts are not necessarily caused by some mysterious forces of nature over which we have no control. Droughts can be "man-made". Certainly human activities can influence the weather. The weather is not a given—that comes from the outside. What we do in terms of our forests and the renewal of the cycle of moisture in the air will be extremely important. We have to look to the possibility of the greenhouse effect which means carbon dioxide building up in the atmosphere, trapping heat close to the earth's surface, raising the temperature world-wide and as a result melting the polar caps and raising the level of the sea. One of the consequences of that can be the wiping out of populations along sea coasts. One of the other consequences, more pertinent to the debate before us today, is massive changes in weather and the possibility of drought on a permanent basis in areas that right now are very productive.

What are we doing about this? The Government has set up an international conference of the air. That is one of the things at which this conference will be looking at the end of June in Toronto. I applaud the initiative taken to bring countries together to look at these basic, long-term potential environmental disasters.

What are we doing in the meantime? We continue to burn fossil fuels. We are becoming ever more dependent on them, and part of the policy of the Government is to increase this dependence. Under the trade deal, there will be an even faster use of our fossil fuels. Fossil fuels are major sources of the carbon dioxide that causes the greenhouse effect.

Rain forests in South America are being destroyed. We are not directly involved in that destruction as we are not there in person, cutting down rain forests, but we are part of a world-wide system. Rain forests are being cut down in order to make way for grazing land for cattle so that we may have beef for our fast-food chains. Canadians, as big beef eaters and big beef importers, are a part of this world-wide system that will mean the loss of rain forests.

Rain forests are crucial to the climate. Rain forests are crucial to the cycle that keeps moisture in the air. The destruction of the rain forests can mean a long-term change in weather patterns which again could mean that there will be even worse droughts than this immediate drought that is being faced now in western Canada.

We have to think about these things. They are not things that simply happen over which we have no control. We are a part of the world-wide community that is changing the surface of the earth and the surface of the earth reacts by setting up new processes. Some of the things we do have extremely negative long-term consequences. As responsible human beings, we must look at those consequences and consider what we can do to be productive and to use our resources in a fashion that will not deprive future generations of those resources and in a fashion that will keep those resources coming.

We need renewable resources. In agriculture, we are talking about productive soil. When agriculture began in Canada, the soil was very productive indeed. Productivity itself is declining through massive use of pesticides, chemical fertilizers, monoculture, not rotating crops and using crops that demand a great deal of the nutrients from the soil without replacing them or replacing them with more chemicals which are then taken out in the next crop year. We are beginning to get warnings about our agricultural practices through declining productivity and not very many of us are heeding those warnings.

There are some enterprising primary producers who are beginning to go into biological or organic farming, using methods that do not destroy the soil and view it very seriously as a renewable resource. I applaud those efforts. I am sorry to say that our own laws, tax provisions, subsidy systems, training programs and all of these things in which the federal Government participates by encouraging some practices and discouraging others at this time encourage the wrong kinds of farming practices.

Subsidies are still being provided for the kinds of agriculture that do not treat the soil as a renewable resource but as something from which one can get money right away by putting in certain ingredients, getting a crop out of it and then worrying next year about putting in more chemicals to make up for those that have been taken away in the past.

The decline of the family farm is a related concern. Family farmers, fewer in number in Canada, are very often in desperate situations. They are struggling to hang on. This drought will menace even more of them. Yet it is the family farm that is the best security for preserving the farming environment for the future.

Families do think of the future. Families are the means of reproducing for the future. Families see that young people grow up and inherit the farms. They have a very vital interest in seeing that the land that gets passed on to the next generation is productive and has the same possibilities for providing a livelihood as it did when the present generation inherited it. A family farm has no interest in simply killing off a resource, using it as a mine, taking out the nutrients and leaving nothing left for the future. We have a far better chance for developing a sustainable development approach to farming with the family farm.

If the family farm had adequate supports, it could do that. If the training centres and agricultural colleges and various kinds of assistance programs emphasized this, we would have an even better chance of seeing farm land used as a renewable resource, something very precious that should be kept productive, something that should be enhanced and not be allowed to be depleted.

I would like to make some remarks about the use of dams as a means for ensuring adequate water supplies for farming. Dams have historically been used to provide a water supply in a certain area for irrigation purposes. Certainly the immediate effects are favourable for a producing community. The effects may be unfavourable for those who are displaced, but clearly there is a positive impact on the people who are the beneficiaries of the new water sources in the new areas.

I think we must realize, however, that the long-term consequences of dams may not be as favourable as the short-term consequences. There may indeed be very negative long-term consequences. If we are to use dams as a strategy for seeing that there is water, we must do this very carefully and after very thorough assessment.

Dams do interfere with natural processes. They see that water is kept in one place and does not move to another place. Dams see that certain lands get irrigated but the water has to come from somewhere else. We cannot simply assume that the beneficial consequences will flow to those producers without there being unfavourable consequences to other people because of the changes involved. We have not done nearly enough to assess those environmental consequences before those kinds of decisions are made.

We now have a water policy which provides that there should be no inter-basin diversions of water. I was pleased to hear the announcement of that, especially since we must be very worried about the trade deal giveaway of our natural resources. Perhaps water would be explicitly included as one of those things that could be given away. I would suggest, however, that some of us are not quite so happy that this water policy only remains a policy and it is not legislated. It is something that could be changed.

If water ever were treated as a commodity that could be simply sold south of the border, then, according to the trade deal, it could be treated as other resources and we would have an obligation to continue to treat water as a commodity. If any Government were so shortsighted as to do this, future Governments would not have the opportunity to redress that mistake. That, of course, is one of the real difficulties with this so-called trade deal, this giveaway, this loss of sovereignty.

Decisions can be made by one Government that will have an impact for the foreseeable future. The provisions that bind us, the provisions that mean that Canada cannot make decisions about markets, dispute-settlement processes or panels or commissions on which Canadians are only a minority will all bind future Governments as well as the Government of the day. That is why they are so very unfair. They do not allow for the political process.

A Government is elected and comes up with a policy which is not the right policy and it has to pay the penalty by being thrown out in the next election. However, with the trade deal, we may throw the Government out in the next election, but those decisions are entrenched in a treaty. It will be very hard to undo that. We cannot renegotiate it. We would have to get rid of the whole treaty, and the longer it would be in place, the more difficult that would be. The dislocations that would already be caused would be substantial, and we would risk even further dislocations if there were to be an abrogation of the treaty.

Water policy is one policy about which we must be concerned for the long term. I am not very confident about what the Government has done so far. It has certainly not managed to meet the concerns that I would want to see met.

Not only is there a question about quantity of water, we also have to be concerned about quality of water. The quality of water on our farm lands has been enormously affected by the use of pesticides and chemical fertilizers. This has an impact on drinking water. It has an impact on the water used for irrigation. What I do not think people have been adequately concerned about is the slow build-up of toxic substances in the soil and, through run-off, in the water system. Pesticides can get on the market because they do not have too toxic an effect on human or animal health when they are tested on lab animals at certain dosages. However, no one is looking at the long-term consequences of using those quantities of pesticides.

I asked a question about that in committee and I was quite disappointed to learn, although not entirely surprised, that the Department of Agriculture does not conduct any studies on the long-term consequences of using pesticides at present levels. I asked a question concerning running projections on the basis that the same quantities would be applied over 50 years or 100 years and what would the quality of the soil be. What would the implications be for the quality of water? No one has looked at that. The tests are only about the effect on a lab animal right now with these quantities. The chemicals used may only be a certain weight per hectare. It is not an enormous amount. The soil can absorb it. However, what if that same amount, even if it is only a teaspoonful per hectare, goes in year after year? These substances do not disappear. They are not broken down into helpful substances. Pesticides by definition are killers. Quantities can build up. Yet there has been very little attention paid to the long-term consequences.

What is our soil productivity going to be after 50 years of use of these chemicals? How safe is the water going to be in agricultural areas? Why are we continuing to approve these pesticides when we do not know how safe it will be after a number of years, even 10 years or 20 years, of use? Can we not have a Government that thinks a little bit about the future? I am sorry to say we do not. Fifty years or 100 years is just beyond its comprehension. It is thinking only about the next election and bribing the voters. It is not thinking about the long term.

That is just not good enough. If we are going to be concerned about sustainable development, if we are going to look at agriculture as a way for people to make their living and provide food to eat year after year after year, we have to take a longer term approach to the question. We cannot afford to simply say "no lab animals died this week from this pesticide." We have to look at them all together and think about the long-term consequences.

We have concerns about the quality of water and we must have concerns about the quantity. We have to look at the environmental decisions we make. We have to begin to think of the recommendations by the wonderful UN Brundtland Commission chaired by the Prime Minister of Norway. It brought together producing countries from all over the world, north, south, east and west, rich countries, poor countries, countries that use a great deal of pesticides and chemicals in their agriculture, and countries that do not. A rather amazing set of conclusions came from the deliberations of the commission. We all have to change our ways. The planet is at risk. We are threatened with being buried under the garbage created in our own communities. We risk leaving future generations with depleted soil, depleted fish stocks, undrinkable water, depleted but important non-renewable resources. Instead, we will be left with tailings and pollution in those communities.

It is a very sad fact that over roughly the last 100 years we have been using the earth in this extremely irresponsible way and getting rid of our resources and leaving pollution for future generations. The acceleration of the pace in the Industrial Revolution, particularly after the last war, has been quite incredible. The result is that we are irresponsible citizens and the Brundtland Commission documented the abuses. However, it also left us with some hope. The report says we can change. If we are going to survive on this planet we have to change. We have to change how we look at agriculture, fishing, forestry and all these other things. We have to look at agriculture as a renewable resource and we must integrate environmental questions with economic decision-making. When we look at the question of how we use pesticides, or whether we should be damming a river or not, whether we should be diverting water here or there, we have to look at the long term from the point of view of sustainable development.

I can see my time is up so I simply want to say that I have taken this opportunity to raise some of these long-term questions. I congratulate my colleagues who are raising the short-term questions and the tragic situation of the families involved in this drought. I certainly hope the Government will respond positively, listen to reason, and begin to devise some solutions to meet these immediate questions and at the same time begin to come to terms with the long-term need for sustainable development in agriculture.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Questions or comments.

Mr. Foster: Mr. Speaker, although the resolution before us today concerns the emergency need for water supplies to deal with the drought problem in western Canada, and a long-term policy for water supplies for agriculture, clearly the Hon. Member who just spoke reminds us of the half-term report of the Science Council of Canada which indicates some of the dramatic and difficult problems facing our water supplies, even in Canada, for drinking purposes.

For example, the report, which came out last December, says things like: "The future is not bright". It refers to "a looming environmental crisis on a scale and depth of disaster far exceeding any met by earlier generations." This is in a country with some 10 per cent of all the fresh water resources in the world. It goes on to say that water shortages in southern parts of Ontario, Québec and western Canada will grow, leading to more conflict among water users and demands for costly and environmentally damaging water diversions. It says that Canada will be caught up in a global water crisis by the year 2000. Half the world's population will lack adequate water supplies. It also mentions that Canada lacks a coherent science policy for water. Research is under-financed, students are not educated about water issues, and universities have failed to treat water as a serious field of study. It points out as well that the marine ecology laboratory and internationally famous research centre, the Bedford Institute for Oceanography in Dartmouth, Nova Scotia, was just granted aid recently by the Department of Fisheries and Oceans.

I think the Hon. Member has raised some very important aspects of this whole topic. Although we are sort of looking at the need for water for crops, feeding cattle and emergency community water supplies in western Canada, it is not just a regional problem for Alberta and Saskatchewan and parts of B.C. It is clearly a matter of national priority and national urgency.

I wanted to make these comments because I was reminded of them by the Hon. Member's speech in which she drew attention, not only to the volume and quantity of water, but to how important the quality of it is, not only for the growing of crops but for the feeding of livestock and the feeding of humans as well.

Ms. McDonald: Mr. Speaker, I welcome the comments of the Hon. Member. I share with him the concern that Canadians cannot be complacent. We indeed have abundant water resources, but we certainly do not have too much, certainly not with the use we are making of our fresh water resources right now. We do face the prospect of severe shortages in the near future because the water available cannot be used for drinking because it is polluted. Therefore, I welcome his putting on record the very particular concerns highlighted in this report. It is a long-term issue. Research must be done and we have to look for long-term uses.

Mr. Angus: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for my colleague who, like myself, spent some time this past summer in a part of the world where they have done miracles in terms of finding water and using it to grow things from almost nothing. The State of Israel has a computerized irrigation system for its orchards. It distributes small hoses to the base of each tree and, through the use of a computer, adds the exact amount of moisture needed in order that there is no wastage whatsoever.

Has the Hon. Member any examples from her research in environmental matters which indicate a methodology which we could use to more appropriately utilize what we normally think of as an over-abundance of resource but which is really finite on the planet earth? Has she any other suggestions from which we can learn on how to protect that resource?

Ms. McDonald: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the specific example given of computerized irrigation to ensure that this precious resource is used sparingly and in the best possible way. The very thrust of the recommendations of the Brundtland Commission report is that we have to get more out of less, that we have to stop wasting so much, that we must challenge our resources much more effectively. The report is very rich in practical examples of how we can get more out of less, how we can use fewer materials but better know-how in order to accomplish this.

As a general point, we must build into the decision-making on whether a particular project ought to be pursued the economic consequences through environmental risk. We must look not only at what will happen to one community, but at the community which will be deprived of that resource. We must not look only at what will happen in the here and now, but what will happen to the next generation. We must figure out ways of costing this so that we will not continue to make mistakes. When we do something because it looks cheap right now, it means that someone else will have to pay the price in the future.

We need a different process. We must do our costing differently. We must build into the decision-making the costs to the environment and ensure that we do not continue to make the same kinds of mistakes as we have so far.

Mr. Althouse: Mr. Speaker, in pursuing the issue of getting more for less, would the Hon. Member care to make some comments about a number of different methods of damming water? One of the more popular systems which has developed in western Canada, and I guess other places in the world, is to go for the very large developments, to put in the very large dams. These are popular with politicians, I am sorry to say, and are not always as efficient as some of the alternatives.

There is a project in western Canada to which I will refer without giving its name. Local community farmers, ranchers, and environmentalists worked out a system of providing the same cubic acre feet of water through a series of 15 or 20 small dams across small creeks running into a river. They have saved the same amount of water for use by the rather scattered community. Wildlife has more access to the surface water under this system than would have been the case under the very large dam which was proposed, and there is much less likelihood of major damage to population centres if any one of them breaks. It is very unlikely that all 10 or 15 will break at one time, even if there is a flood situation.

As an additional extra, this seems to have provided a sponge effect over a relatively large area of the Prairies and has thereby maintained subsoil water supplies and the wells of some of the small towns and larger communities in the area seem to be benefiting as well.

Is this the type of interference by man which the Hon. Member has in mind when she speaks of getting more for less? Man seems to have drained most of the potholes in that part of the Prairies. Water used to go out very quickly down the rivers. It is now delayed and much is saved for use during the summer and future use.

Ms. McDonald: Mr. Speaker, again I welcome those comments and the very practical example of getting more out of less. We do have to learn the lesson that small is beautiful. Megaprojects are great for politicians; the bigger the dam, the bigger the bridge, the bigger the building to open, the bigger the ribbon to cut. All of this gives the taxpayer and the citizen the chance to see something big happening. Politicians fall for it all too often.

However, you can also get megaproblems from megaprojects and that is something which we want to avoid in the future. We should be paying far more attention to the careful use of this natural resource, respecting the diversity of uses, and respecting wildlife, something I did not go into. We must realize that agriculture has to coexist with environmental uses of a different nature for the long-term preservation of both. If we really want to think to the future we must be looking at these varieties of uses.

The small projects, which can be extremely efficient and productive, are a far better way to go. Megaprojects have a dramatic impact but it is very hard to estimate their future consequences. One can find out too late that the project did not produce that which it was intended to produce, or that it has detrimental environmental consequences. One thinks of the Aswan Dam, a major project, the unfavourable results from which are just beginning to mount now. People are beginning to wonder seriously whether it was the right decision.

If we are humble enough and have enough respect for nature we will stick to smaller projects for using our resources very efficiently rather than bringing on the major problems which can be part of megaprojects.

Hon. William Rompkey (Grand Falls—White Bay—Labrador): Mr. Speaker, the motion before us today calls on the Government to provide both short-term and long-term solutions to a very serious problem. I do not have many farmers in my part of the world but the people who I represent are very close to nature and have suffered from time to time as a result of their livelihood being curtailed through the forces of nature. It seems to me that that is exactly what we are talking about today as far as the short term is concerned, possibly not as far as the long term is concerned, but certainly as far as the short term is concerned.

The evidence seems to be overwhelming that there is a serious problem with which we have to deal immediately. The precipitation in the Province of Saskatchewan has been declining over the past little while. It is quite obvious that it is a very serious situation, indeed. For example, the percentage of normal precipitation at the Saskatoon recording station is 83 per cent whereas from November 1987 to March 1988, it was under 70 per cent. That kind of ratio can be applied to other recording stations in the Province of Saskatchewan. The evidence is overwhelming that there is a serious and immediate problem as far as water is concerned.

I think there has to be an immediate solution found by the Government of Canada, but I do not think the solution should be a drain on other programs put in place for developmental purposes. I think there are adequate precedents and adequate funds within the Government to react to the situation. For example, there is an emergency response policy that was always there whereby there is a shared co-operation between the Government of Canada and the provincial Government. As I understand it, the province must put in the first advance of funds, something in the order of $.5 million or less. If that is done then the Government of Canada, if the situation is categorized as an emergency, can respond on a pro rata and shared-cost basis depending on the total nature of the bill. Those mechanisms are there now. They are available to the Government. I think that is the approach which must be taken to solve the short-term problem rather than dipping into programs of a developmental nature which are designed, and should be used, for quite a different purpose.

I notice that the Government of Alberta, for example, has announced it will contribute. The Premier of Alberta has said he will provide help to rural municipalities and landowners suffering through this problem. There is money for building and rehabilitating dugouts and livestock water facilities, and so on. There is a certain movement on the part of at least some provincial Governments. The question now is if the federal Government will follow the lead of those provincial Governments which have made a contribution. Will it enter into a shared cost arrangement to solve in the short term this very serious problem?

In terms of the seriousness of the problem, we are told by the Alberta Agricultural Association that farmers want to seed by June 1. If they cannot do that, they might be able to plant barley, but they are sitting there waiting, debating whether to seed. A farmer, like a fisherman cannot go on with that amount of uncertainty. He has to be prepared for the season. If nature intervenes with an impediment, it has to be resolved.

These are questions we all face whether we live next to the sea or on the land. If we get our livelihood from nature, if we are primary producers, there will always be these accidents of nature which are going to have to be dealt with and which are no fault of the primary producers. That is what we elect governments for. We elect governments to deal with situations like that. It is easy to govern day by day when one can project what is going to happen three years down the road, but what is more difficult is to deal with emergency situations. But that is what governments are for. There is no way the individual farmer or fisherman can deal with a situation like this. It has to be dealt with by the Government. I believe that is what is needed here.

We are told, for example, that Ottawa may want to consider dipping into soil funds to ease the effects of drought in the West. As I said before, that is not the way things should be done. There is a need for the immediate resolution of the problem and there is a need for long-term development. I do not think we should take money from one to solve the other. There is a suggestion, for example, that the federal Government would consider taking money from the special $75 million soil and water conservation fund to help ease the effects of a drought in western Canada. I ask again, why do we have to dip into developmental funds? They are needed too. What is needed here is an immediate response from the Government. It has the funds and the mechanisms available to follow the lead of the provincial Governments and to respond in kind. That is for the immediate problem.

With respect to the long-term problem, I have to really support some of the things said by the Hon. Member for Broadview—Greenwood (Ms. McDonald). Indeed, we do have a long-term water problem with which the Government has not come to grips. There is the problem, for example, of acid rain. There has been a lot of talk about that but very little action. And there is the problem of soil erosion which is going on all over the world. I was able to travel to Ethiopia to see the kind of erosion going on there. That kind of soil erosion, to more or less of a degree, is happening everywhere. It is obviously not as serious in this country as in parts of Africa. It is a question of degree rather than kind. We must come to grips with that long-term problem.

There is another point to be made which I do not think is entirely irrelevant. That is the whole question of water supply. We are talking about a specific and immediate problem in western Canada, but there is also a water problem all across this country. I have villages in my riding in 1988 which do not have a supply of fresh water. In my opinion, there is nothing more important than that and there should be no higher priority. The Canadian Federation of Municipalities has asked the Government of Canada to join with it because there is now no federal program for participating in water problems anywhere in this country. There was such a program when the present Leader of the Liberal Party was the Minister of Finance and, hopefully, there will be again. We did have a program for contributing to water supplies but we do not have one now.

The Canadian Federation of Municipalities has asked the Government of Canada to participate with it because it cannot do it alone and some provincial Governments cannot do it alone, either, because in this country certain regions are richer than others. There are provincial Governments which would find it very difficult to get into the kind of expense that will be needed. Only the power of the purse of the Government of Canada can adequately respond to a situation like this. The Government of Canada has said to the Canadian Federation of Municipalities, no, that is your problem. Well, it is a problem. We have in western Canada an immediate problem and I think we have the ways and means to solve it.

I welcome this motion today. My Party has obviously staked out our position which was so well put by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Algoma (Mr. Foster), and I stand to give him some support from another part of the country, and to give support to those people who are so adversely affected in western Canada both in the short term and in the long term.

Mr. Jack Scowen (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure to discuss the water problem in western Canada. First, I should bring everyone up to date as to what my position is.

I have been a farmer since 1948. I was born in the southwest corner of Saskatchewan and experienced what was really the drought of all droughts, the drought of the 1930s. My father was a blacksmith and the community ended up owing him something in the neighbourhood of $100,000. However, he could not keep his family any more so he decided to move up to the northern part of the province to an area which is very similar to that which we see depicted in pictures in the Railway Committee Room. Most of the farms are covered in bush. The area was what one would call a homestead area. There were no roads. There was very little of anything. However, there was rain, growth and beauty. The move to that part of the province was well worth the time.

My father never did get paid his $100,000 or anything like it. However, he never wanted to go back to the part of the prairie where I was born. The memory I have of the prairie during the drought was of dust storms, grasshoppers and gophers—everything but green grass and growing crops. I was only too pleased to move to the area to which we did move. It has become a very productive farming area.

I must disagree that there is no long-term thinking in government. The Hon. Member for Broadview—Greenwood (Ms. McDonald) talked about pesticides, something which she hates. City people hate pesticides. However, they have come a long way, too, since the first ones were manufactured. The new ones leave less of a residue in the soil and are more efficient. They dissipate much more quickly than did the older ones. There has certainly been a big change in them. As time goes by I am sure that progress will be made in the use of various other types of pest control which may or may not be chemical. We are certainly going through a different type of control now that will be beneficial to the country in the long run. It has done very little harm to the soil.

As a matter of fact, in our particular area if we can get rain we can grow as good a crop now as we did when that soil was first broken. The control that we have over the weeds is of great help. Many people term pesticides chemical pesticides, something with which I do not agree. A great many of them do not hurt the soil but certainly help the farmers. Without them, all the government help in the world would not be able to keep the farmers in business.

Getting back to our long-term ideas with respect to what has happened over the years, I should speak a little about the Prairie Farm Rehabilitation Administration, the PFRA. In the 1930s farmers were under siege. Early in the decade drought struck western Canada, turning the skies brown and the soil was blowing all over the place. I quite well remember that. The Great Depression plunged wheat prices from $1.25 per bushel in 1929 to 40 cents per bushel in 1932. That had nothing to do with the drought but with protectionism that was put in place by various countries. The opposite should have happened but because of protectionism that is the price to which grain fell.

In 1933 an infestation of grasshoppers destroyed crops. Again, I missed that one since I had moved to the north country where we do not have grasshoppers. They do not like a lot of moisture. We avoided that plague, and grasshoppers still do not like our country. In 1935 a rust blight struck the region, by which time the drought had spread to more than seven million hectares. We called them acres in our day. Between 1929 and 1937 some 14,000 farms in Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta were abandoned. If we keep these high interest rates up, we will have a lot more abandonments.

By 1937 the total value of grain produced in Saskatchewan was just 10 per cent of what it had been a decade earlier. That was partly due to protectionism. The federal Government responded with the Prairie Farm Rehabilitation Act in 1935. The purpose of the Act was to secure the rehabilitation of the drought and soil drifting areas in the provinces of Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta, and to develop and to promote within those areas systems of farm practice, tree culture and water supply that would afford greater economic security. Initial legislation allocated funding to PFRA for a five-year period. However, in 1939, the Act was amended to allow the agency to provide planning and assistance for soil conservation and water development over the long term. The PFRA became a permanent agency.

Now the PFRA has evolved to meet the needs of rural communities. On-farm soil and water conservation programs began in the 1930s. Large dam projects began in the 1950s, and municipal water systems began in the 1970s. The promotion of soil conservation began in the 1980s.

I return to what the Hon. Member for Broadview—Greenwood said with respect to us not trying to improve our water supplies. The Government of Saskatchewan encourages dug-outs, small dams, and that so many acres are set aside for wildlife where there are beaver dams in order to create areas where the natural water level can be kept at the proper heights where conditions are available.

Today, as we grapple with the water shortage problem in western Canada the PFRA continues to play an important and relevant role. The PFRA now employs about 850 people. Its headquarters are located in Regina, with district offices in Winnipeg and Edmonton. It maintains a network of 21 field offices across the Prairies. Field staff provide how-to information to farmers seeking help with water supplies, soil problems, grazing space, water pumping and so on and so forth. I know that at the very moment it is very busy trying to fill dug-outs and municipal water supplies as well as water supplies to local villages and farmers.

One of the biggest projects that PFRA took up was the Community Pasture Program. Today that program has 87 community pastures in all three prairie provinces, mostly in Saskatchewan and Manitoba. They took over a lot of land that was badly eroded, that had suffered from wind and water erosion, and used the proper varieties of grass seed to fight the drought. They now have a good program going for areas that were once barren and caused a considerable amount of soil drifting and water erosion problems.

PFRA also took on a tree distribution program. Any Member who has been south of Saskatoon will see an example of many miles of trees that have been planted to keep the wind speed down. The trees have beautified the area, they keep the snow in place, and also keep up the water level. This has helped a considerable amount with the shelter-belts. Last year 10,000 farmers received well over one million seedlings from Indian Head, and they continue to plant trees at a nominal cost, the cost of which is mostly the shipping involved.

PFRA has also entered into a soil conservation program. Over the long term it has made the land more resistant to precisely the type of wind erosion associated with the dry conditions now facing the Prairies. PFRA has revitalized its mandate for soil conservation by establishing a soil and water conservation service.

In 1984 soil conservation programs were launched under the five year economic regional development agreement with Saskatchewan and Manitoba. The federal share was around $8 million to the Saskatchewan agreement, and $4 million was contributed to the Manitoba agreement. Under these programs 45 soil conservation groups have been formed; approximately 2,000 producers have received almost $4 million in incentives for soil conservation activities. The PFRA soil conservation program in Alberta is jointly administered with the Alberta Government.

The PFRA is giving prairie farmers the hard facts about soil conservation. The present day farming techniques have been major contributors to salinity, erosion, and organic matter loss in the soil. The PFRA is working to create new attitudes about how prairie farm land can be best used. The PFRA is providing information about farming techniques such as continuous cropping and zero till. It conducts workshops, provides field tools and involves many other activities to spread the gospel of soil conservation.

We hope today's innovation will be a common practice tomorrow. The PFRA rural water development program is providing timely and substantial assistance on the Prairies to alleviate the current dry conditions. In particular, the well program is providing water supplies in many water-short areas. Rural water supply pipelines are carrying water to parched areas. Dams and dug-outs are widely used to trap water. In the Prairies, 75 per cent of the water supply typically comes from the winter run-off. This year the winter run-off was nothing. There was no snow in the southern part of the province. Therefore, that creates many problems because water has to be pumped sometimes as far as 10 or 15 miles.

Beginning in 1935 the PFRA had a program to encourage farmers to build dug-outs and stock watering dams. Since the initial year of this program the PFRA has spent well over $70 million on almost 200,000 on-farm water supply projects. Last year PFRA provided almost $5 million to help fund more than 5,000 individual projects. For some irrigation projects the PFRA will pay up to one-third of a farmer's cost. The PFRA also gets involved in group and community water projects. Hundreds of reservoirs constructed by the PFRA now dot the Prairies. Last year, it invested in more than 80 groups and community water projects. Under its current program the PFRA will establish water supplies for groups of five or more farmers and towns with a population of up to 300. The costs are shared equally between the groups and the community and the PFRA.

While water is a natural resource, it is developed according to provincial strategies, the PFRA sometimes gets involved in large scale water related projects. It has contributed to building new water and sewage works in 49 towns in Alberta, Saskatchewan, and Manitoba.

The PFRA has played a key role in several major water projects. For example, the Bassano Dam rehabilitation project is assuring reservoir capacity meets the needs of area irrigation projects. Another example is the South Saskatchewan River project. Approximately 30,000 hectares is irrigated with water from Lake Diefenbaker. Irrigation has helped what was once primarily a wheat growing region to diversify. There are some problems with salinity because of irrigation. I know that PFRA is studying this problem and will be attempting to solve some of the problems created by the over-use of water in some areas.

The hydroelectric station at the dam site in Lake Diefenbaker is an important component of Saskatchewan water power. There is also a new dam that has been built very close to my farm which flooded a few acres approximately one mile from my farm. It will be beneficial to keep that area for the water that attracts the rain, and so on.

The sparse population of western Canada, its climate, and vast arable land has led to an economy based largely on natural resources, primarily agriculture. Soil and water are cornerstones of the western economy. They require careful conservation and development. Skilled management is essential. The Prairie Farm Rehabilitation program is certainly conducting some good studies and work in that particular area. That is a long-term program that has been very beneficial to the farmers in western Canada. It has done some exceptionally good work, and will continue to do so with the projects that it has and the projects that it is now starting out.

Drought is not the only problem in western Canada. It is my personal opinion that the biggest disaster to hit the farming community in western Canada was in 1982 when the Farm Credit Corporation was changed to become a bank. This was done by the previous Government with the help of the NDP. It allowed interest rates to follow the lending practices of the other banks. The Farm Credit Corporation is now the eighth or twelfth largest bank in Canada. This system of helping farmers has not been beneficial to the Farm Credit Corporation or the farming community in general. No industry can stand a 12 per cent or 15 per cent interest rate. At one stage of the game the interest rate was as high as 22 per cent. What we have today is worse than a drought. We have a situation where interest rates are the biggest bloodsucker to the economy in western Canada, and will continue to be so.

While Ontario is doing very well economically, that is not the case with the rest of the country. Western Canada is suffering as a result of high interest rates. In addition to impacting adversely upon the agricultural sector, high interest rates are having a negative impact in terms of business start-ups, thus affecting the broad economy.

We have to come to grips with the problem of high interest rates. More farmers will be chased off the land by high interest rates than by drought. If a farmer has to sell his crop for less than the cost of production, it is not possible for him to stay on the land. If we are to keep our young farmers on the land, we will have to bring about some changes. Under present conditions, it is not possible for the younger generation to carry on the family farm.

I met with one young man recently who is burdened by high interest rates. While he has been able to meet his payments to the Farm Credit Corporation thus far, he has had to do so through use of his operating loans, to the point where he is now faced with the situation where he can no longer make those payments. That young man now faces interest payments totalling some $32,000 in interest. There is simply no way that anyone can survive when faced with that kind of situation.

Mr. Speaker, I apologize for getting a little off the subject of the motion. However, the interest rate problem is one that is ever much as severe, in my mind, as the drought, and our planning has to address that question, as well as that of water conservation.

[Translation]

Mrs. Bourgault: Mr. Speaker, during the last three years I have been a Member of Parliament, I realized that Canadian agriculture was having serious problems, especially in Western Canada. As a member of the Standing Committee on Agriculture, I remember listening to representatives of farmers' groups, from the Prairies, who appeared before the Committee when we were looking at the possibility of drafting a report on farm input costs. At these hearings, the personal and very serious problems experienced by farmers and their families were also discussed, all the more poignant when we consider the pride of Canadian farmers who hate being dependent on government handouts.

Mr. Speaker, since the Hon. Member is very knowledgeable about his part of the country and is familiar with the wide open spaces of the Prairies we know that many farmers are at a considerable distance from urban centres, so when there are family problems, these are even more acute because there is no convenient access to services—I would like to know, since we in Quebec do not necessarily get the latest news every day, something about the human dimension of the present problems farmers are having because of the drought.

[English]

Mr. Scowen: Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure for me to answer the question.

It is difficult for one to describe the degree of social problem created by a drought, by a lack of water. For the most part, the agricultural sector is made up of family-operated farms, with the mother and the kids helping with the sowing and the harvesting, and it is a great disappointment for those families when they realize they are unable to meet the costs of the operation.

When confronted with a drought, the farming community suffers from an increase in divorces, in suicides, and in social problems in general, and high interest rates lead to the same situation.

We do have in place counselling centres for farming families, to assist in overcoming these problems. Certainly, this Government through its programs has shown that it is concerned about the problems which confront the farming community.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin), on debate.

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Mr. Speaker, I am happy to take part in this debate. It is not the first one I have been involved in since becoming a Member of this House in the fall of 1968. In that brief period, we have been through this type of debate on more than a couple of occasions. It is the same kind of debate that has prevailed since the West was first settled. There is nothing new about it. The Hon. Member for Mackenzie (Mr. Scowen), and the Hon. Member for Victoria (Mr. McKinnon), who is a south Saskatchewan boy, have both been there, and they know the score.

One has to ask when governments at the federal and provincial levels, regardless of their political stripe, are going to learn their lesson. When are we going to learn, from experience, that there will be cycles of drought; that there will be wet years and averages? That is the way Mother Nature operates. It has never been any different.

We continue to move from crisis to crisis. I can recall the spring of 1951 in Saskatchewan, when the southwest part of that province, along with southeastern Alberta, was covered with water. We thought we were into a flood comparable to that experienced in the days of Noah. In the main, southwestern Manitoba, all of the southern one-third of Saskatchewan, almost all of the southern one-third of Alberta, and the interior of British Columbia, chronically go through these cycles.

In the 1920s and 1930s there were many who asked that a long-term disaster fund be put in place. The view was that in years of good prices and good yields, the farming community would be willing to contribute to such a fund, with provincial and national governments also making annual contributions, thus enabling the fund to build to a point that it could be of assistance when disaster struck.

By way of example, the Western Grain Stabilization Fund went several years without having to be used. It built up, as I recall, something near $3 billion but that has all gone now. In fact, it is in deficit. My friend says it has gone the other way. We had a billion or two dollars in it but now we are a billion or two short. But you must have something in place like that all the time, Mr. Speaker. When a disaster hits or when you have a period of drought for three or four years in a row, what do you do? You have what is called good, sensible, long-term planning, which you put in place and leave there. If you get lucky and go 15 or 20 years without a drought or without a flood, so much the better. We never seem to learn our lessons. I have watched successive governments in the provinces and in this House still refuse to do anything. They always do things at the last minute. It is the barn-door syndrome. As soon as the horses are gone, shut the barn door and see how we stop the horses from getting out again.

It is dry on the Prairies. One thinks of all the black humour. I am sure my friend from Victoria will know a lot of stories. There was one a few days ago. In several towns in Saskatchewan it rained briefly. Two and three year old children who were playing out in the yard ran into the house screaming in terror. They had never seen rain in their lives. It was so dry in one little town in southwest Saskatchewan, this farmer was getting a little elderly and he fainted in front of the post office. They brought him to by throwing a pail of dust on him. There is another story I have mentioned in the House. It was so dry that every time the wind blew the dust was so thick that the gophers were 10 feet in the air digging. In fact, the last time I told that one in the House was when our friend Mr. Whelan was Minister of Agriculture. We were in the middle of a drought and he said he was going to see how dry it was. I told him he did not have to go because I could tell him but he did not believe me. He went anyway but was still late helping the farmers.

How long are we going to take to learn our lesson? We do not learn from history. We keep on repeating it. We have weather records in detail back over 100 years in western Canada. The cycles are fairly consistent. It will have to cost, to begin with, the federal Treasury, a chunk of money. This will be in addition to moneys the Government has already put into the Western Grain Stabilization Program, in addition to moneys the Government will have to put in by way of a deficiency payment as long as that stupid price war goes on between the United States and the European Economic Community. So you are looking at $3, $4 or $5 billion a year in the coming years. That is the name of the game. It will not matter what political Party is in power sitting on the Treasury benches, it will have to be done. The question is not whether or not it will be done but when and how much. That is what the argument will be about.

We have been looking at figures for Saskatchewan and the efforts being made by the Saskatchewan Water Development Corporation. It is all great stuff, this farm dug-out pumping. Lay down a few hundred yards or a mile or two of pipe or hose and fill a dug-out out of the nearest river, creek or slough. Dug-outs have almost doubled, from 46 to 88. I do not know but I think there are probably—I will get corrected by my colleagues if I am very far out—50,000 dug-outs in Saskatchewan alone. There are probably 100,000 dug-outs in the three Prairie provinces. It will be a little much to try to figure out how to try to pump water into them because mostly they are all dry.

Test drillings have done down. In 1987 we did 107. So far this year we have done only 93. What about deep wells? We had 26 last year and only 17 so far this year. As far as community wells are concerned, there were six last year and six this year. Then we have dug-outs and small reservoirs. We had 65 last year and we are up to 107 this year. Those efforts are all very worth-while.

Let me say to my hon. friend from MacKenzie who just spoke, if it does not snow in the winter-time and if it does not rain in the spring, those dug-outs, wells and reservoirs will be dry. It does not take a genius to know that. In fact, the water table has been lowered so much in the southern parts of the prairie provinces that drilling wells is tougher now than it used to be. You can drill all the wells you like, as worth-while an effort as that is, you have to try, but they will have to be deeper wells and a lot more expensive. Even if you were lucky and got an artesian flow, it might be enough for one farm, maybe two.

I suppose we could make the Prairies look like Swiss cheese and fill them full of holes. Surely it is not reasonable to expect that all levels of government and all the farmers could afford to drill enough wells to satisfy the water needs of every farm, every ranch in the southern parts of the three prairie provinces and the interior of B.C. Forget it, Mr. Speaker, you can't.

There will be years where there is no snowpack in the mountains. We had hardly any snow all year in Regina. The same situation applied to Moose Jaw, Swift Current and Medicine Hat. In fact, one day we got some snow in southern Saskatchewan and southern Alberta, about four or five inches, and a farmer thought just for the fun of it, as he still had a team of horses, that he would hook up the sleigh, go into town, get some mail and groceries and take the kids along. It was only four or five miles. Away they went into town, but the snow did not do any good. He was heading back home from town and one of those strong Chinook winds came up, blowing from the southwest, coming from the Crowsnest Pass and Lethbridge country. He had those horses going at full gallop. The Chinook was melting that snow so fast, the front runners were on snow and the back runners were on mud. That snow did not do very much good. It sank into the ground a little bit and a week later the dust was blowing again.

All the efforts we make with damns, reservoirs, dug-outs, well digging and everything else, you must have something else to protect farmers and ranchers from what is inevitably going to happen every few years in dry land areas. May I say that many farmers will have to smarten up about misusing their land. You will still find a farmer cutting down a bluff of poplar trees in the middle of a section of land where he should be planting trees. Trees hold snow. They provide more moisture. They keep birds around, and birds eat grasshoppers. Farmers should not be cutting down trees. They should quit cultivating to the point where the top six inches of soil turns into the consistency of flour. A slight breeze comes and blows it into the ditches, filling them up. We should be into a major tree planting campaign, even greater than what we did during the Dirty Thirties and forties. I wish we could double or triple the tree nursery at Indian Head. It is not only the farmers but also the towns, villages, municipalities and Departments of Highways which need to pitch in in the name of soil and water conservation.

There is as well the matter of over-grazing. There is a guy in my province who has 96 or 100 sections. It's easier to keep track of them by townships than it is by sections. That land ain't fit for more than one head per quarter section, but it is over-grazed. In dry years, the deer might be able to survive because they eat the tops of the brushes, but no livestock can get enough feed to survive. Since it has been badly over-grazed in previous years, after the first one or two dry years, there is nothing left. The great sand hills begin to expand.

Efforts to combat those sorts of things have to be substantially enlarged by both the federal and the provincial Governments. We also have to begin to set up a real crop insurance scheme. Just because Mother Nature does things to us periodically does not make them disasters. If we have not learned our lesson from the way nature operates in Canada, we never will. It is not a disaster, it is the normal course of events. The climatic changes run in a pretty routine cycle of wet years, medium years and dry years, and it goes around and around, every 10 or 20 years. We need to have in place a crop, drought and flood insurance program with sufficient capital so that no matter what happens, even if there were a 10-year drought, we could cope with it.

We will be spending millions this year, unless we get some rain, moving hay out of Ontario and the Fraser Valley and the northern part of British Columbia down to the Prairies. We may even have to move hay from northern B.C. down to southern B.C. Farmers will be reducing their herds and that will cut the hog and cattle prices. Farmers will reduce their herds because they will not have enough feed, they will flood the market and down will go the price. They will be in the same rat race again.

This brings me to the whole issue of prices. I spoke to one farmer early in April. I said: "Well, what are you going to seed this year?"

He said: "I have concluded that I will save money if I don't put any crop in. I've got about 25,000 or 30,000 bushels in the granary, the wife's got a part-time job and I got a part-time job. I'll be money ahead to just fill my quota, make my payments to the Farm Credit Corporation and to the bank for the fertilizer and spray I bought last year, and just not seed a bushel, not an acre. Let the damn weeds grow, and don't do anything with it this year".

I think that might not be a bad idea in some cases. Just do not bother putting in a crop. If there is some carry-over grain from last year and the year before, ride it out. Now, it is easy for me to talk. I am just relaying what one farmer said to me.

I know that there are other farmers who will need a lot more income than that just to keep their heads above water. Even if they do get a half-decent crop, unless there is a substantial improvement in the prices they receive for their product, they will continue to farm at less than the cost of production. I do not know of any other sector of the economy, except perhaps the fisheries sector, which experiences that. Only in agriculture and the fishery are we able to organize our economy such that they get less than it costs them to produce.

There is another old gag about the farmer who won $1 million in the lottery. They asked him what he was going to do with the money. He said: "I'll keep farming until it's all gone".

If you were to foist that principle onto the automobile industry, one can imagine what the big three automobile companies and the auto workers would do. If we were to tell them that they had to produce cars at less than the cost of production and the people who did the work had to get less money than it cost them to raise a family, we would have riots in the streets.

What would happen if we were to say to the financial institutions: "We are going to drive you money-changers out of the temple?" A fellow did that a couple thousand years ago, and they all snuck in the back door since. It needs to be done again.

When usurious interest rates are being slapped on to primary producers from coast to coast, it is no wonder that we have lost half a million farmers in the last 30 years. Where did they go? They went into the city. We didn't need any more in the city but we drove them out of a life they wanted to live. Our system drives people out of the kind of life they want to have. We stack the deck against them year after year. It is not a case of Conservative, Liberal or socialist Governments. Those are the kinds of things that any self-respecting national Government will damned well have to deal with. If there is to be an ideological war about it, the people of Canada and particularly the people of rural Canada will not pay any attention and will not vote for that kind of rhetoric. They want action and they want results.

Interest rates have to be reduced immediately. All the farm debts across Canada must be redone, and if that costs the banks a few million bucks each, tough cookie. They have ripped these people off enough for the last 20 years. They made profits in the billions of dollars and the big five did not pay a nickel's worth of income tax. Yet farmers write to me trying to get me to help them with an argument they are having with the income tax Department over a couple of hundred dollars.

The system has to be changed. It must have a fundamental change in its direction, its nature and its purpose. Without that, we will lose thousands more farmers. We will waste money trying to help them just barely make it. It will take them twice as long to go broke instead of half as long to get their heads above water and stay in business.

If this debate accomplishes nothing else, I hope that it has helped to concentrate the minds of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), the President of the Treasury Board (Miss Carney) and the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney). Nothing so concentrates the mind than knowing you are going to be hung in the morning. If they do not act, they are going to be hung one of these mornings.

[Translation]

Mrs. Lise Bourgault (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the opportunity to take part in the debate today, and I have listened very carefully to all Hon. Members who spoke to this Opposition motion. If we look at what is happening in developing countries, I am sure many people in this country would be astonished to hear we have a drought problem, a resource problem, a problem with soil erosion in a country as large and as productive as Canada. The problem is a very serious one. Emergency debates on the agriculture crisis have become more frequent, and today, throughout the world, negotiations are under way under the multilateral agreement referred to as GATT. I am sure that in the not too distant future, we will have to find the right answer to bringing Canadian agriculture back on its feet.

Today, Mr. Speaker, in connection with this debate, I would like to draw the attention of Hon. Members more particularly to the Canadian Crop Insurance Program. As you know, the Crop Insurance Act was passed in 1959 to enable the federal Government to help the provinces provide farmers with a form of protection, by minimizing the economic effects of crop losses caused by uncontrollable natural hazards, including drought.

The protection guaranteed under the Crop Insurance Program is available to all farmers who wish to take advantage of this offer, and applies to all Canadian provinces.

In recent years, this contributory program has played a vital role for insured producers. In fact, the federal Government's contribution totalled $181 million for 1987-88 alone. Today, crop insurance constitutes a safety net in case of disaster, offered by both levels of government to farmers. This shared-cost program is a vehicle of choice for the Government to provide producers with long- term protection, not just in emergencies.

This fact was also recognized when the Agriculture Ministers adopted the National Agriculture Strategy.

Crop loss assistance is generally a matter of provincial jurisdiction. However, the federal Government acknowledged the need for helping the provinces through financial contributions to crop insurance programs, and in 1959, it passed the Crop Insurance Act, which was subsequently amended in 1964, 1966, 1970, 1971, 1973 and again quite recently, to improve assistance to farmers. The first province to acquire a crop insurance plan was Manitoba. By 1975, all ten provinces were equipped with a crop insurance program which is still in effect at this time.

A sucession of widespread drought-related crop losses struck Western Canada in 1983, 1984 and 1985. This led to a call, at the First Minister's Conference in November of 1985, for a concentrated effort by both levels of government to develop a national disaster-relief program. Following the conference, a federal-provincial working group was established to develop recommendations.

In January 1986, the working group presented its preliminary findings. It recommended, and the ministers of agriculture agreed, that crop insurance was intended to cover disastrous crop losses and that the program was doing a good job at a reasonable cost. However, the ministers agreed additional protection should be provided under the crop insurance program to meet widespread successive losses.

As an interim measure, the ministers recommended that the crop insurance program be enhanced in the western provinces for 1986, in areas most seriously affected by successive drought-related losses in 1984 and 1985.

The enhancement, called the "Multi-Year Disaster Benefit", took the form of additional coverage equal to 10 per cent of the average yield up to a maximum of 80 per cent.

In August of 1986, the working group presented its final report, which recommended that an enhanced crop insurance program be made available to producers in all provinces beginning with the 1987-88 crop year.

The recommendations were tabled at the Annual Conference of Ministers of Agriculture in August 1986.

The report became the basis for the section in the National Agriculture Strategy dealing with production risk protection and was signed by all Ministers of Agriculture and endorsed by the First Ministers in November 1986.

In response to recommendations, the Government made the following improvements in the Program: First, a large number of crops are now eligible for crop insurance. Second, programs for forage and feed grain have now been improved. Third, coverage has been added in the event of a natural disaster affecting farmers several years in succession. Fourth, the methodology has been enhanced for setting the premium rate and indemnity payments.

Mr. Speaker, the assistance provided by the federal Government and producer participation in the Crop Insurance Program make basic crop loss protection available to farmers in the form of a production guarantee. Crop insurance is a form of long-term assistance offered by the federal Government. It plays a role similar to that of the fire brigade that rushes in when the neighbour's house or your own is on fire. The fire brigade is always on the alert and ready to help. Crop insurance is a little like fire insurance, and we are trying to encourage farmers to take advantage of this kind of long-term protection and assistance.

Deadlines for participating in the Crop Insurance Program are announced well in advance so that producers have plenty of time to buy the insurance. The guarantee applies to all farmers contributing to the Crop Insurance Plan, in all Canadian provinces.

The Program is very attractive to farmers. In fact, as I said before, federal contributions in 1987-88 totalled $181.5 million. During that year, 134,173 farmers insured 42,096, 702 acres of land. In Quebec, for instance, insured producers who were struck by a natural disaster received $21 million in payments, which included over $15 million from the federal Government. This protection is offered at a cost affordable to most farmers and taxpayers through government contributions. Producers pay only 50 per cent of the total cost of the program.

The guarantee provided is based on the principle of compensatory production for all fields of the same crop. Thus, when part of a farm incurs losses, it may be that with the above-average yield of some fields, the total production of the farm exceeds the base production guaranteed.

Mr. Speaker, I know that my time is limited. In closing, I wish to say that we now have 230 crop insurance plans for some 87 kinds of crops in Canada.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, the losses due to the water shortage that is now severe in the West are also covered by crop insurance and I am sure that with the sense of duty shown by the Prime Minister and the Minister of Agriculture when we intervened in March to solve temporarily, to be sure, the problem Western farmers were going through, with our Government's commitment, we will no doubt continue to play a leading role in Canadian agriculture.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: With the conclusion of this debate, the proceedings on the motion now before the House have expired pursuant to Standing Order 82(12).

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 66 deemed to have been moved.

Adjournment Debate

TRADE—CANADA-UNITED STATES FREE TRADE AGREEMENT—REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT COMPENSATE GRAPE GROWERS/REQUEST FOR GUARANTEED LINES OF CREDIT

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, on April 25 I put a question to the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) as to whether the Government of Canada would provide a line of credit for the grape growers who are being put out of business by the Government's free trade agreement.

This does not involve only growers in the British Columbian Okanagan Valley, but in the Niagara area as well. In fact, some 15 grape producers in Ontario have had to walk away from their farms because they could not get a line of credit. That information was revealed only on April 25.

A few days earlier a letter had been made public by Fred Somer who had been advised by the Kelowna and District Credit Union that they would no longer provide credit to him because, in their opinion, his financial resources in 1989, with the start of the free trade agreement with the United States, would in fact put him and the other grape growers in the Okanagan Valley out of business.

The letter from W. M. Redstone, the branch manager of the Kelowna and District Credit Union makes it very plain. It says: "Dear Mr. and Mrs. Somer: We refer to your letter of March 14, 1988, the communications we received from the federal and provincial Governments, and our subsequent conversations. Our concern is regarding 1989 and beyond. We feel reasonably assured that the 1988 crop will be purchased but income from that will only repay the operating loan, pay interest on the mortgage, and a small principal reduction. In 1989 you will have no income to service the mortgage interest and our security will be worth substantially less than the amount owing against it.

Unless you can provide one of the following which is to be acceptable to us, we regret we cannot make operating funds available to you in 1988 and we cannot pay any more cheques; additional security, compensation in the form of a lump sum reduction of the mortgage."

I spoke with Mr. Somer's son and he said that he had been on the farm for eight years and his father had been there for many years before that. Clearly it was the case that the Fred Somer family was the first victims of the free trade deal.

I asked the Minister whether, if the free trade deal is putting these people out of business, the Government would provide a line of credit. The Minister, of course, did not answer that. He usually does not respond directly to questions in the House. He talks about how great he is, how great the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) is, or how many billions of dollars he has spent, but usually does not respond directly to any questions put to him in the House. In this case there was no change. He did not respond to whether the Government would provide a line of credit to the producers who are being put out of business and that is where the matter lay.

It is interesting that the Minister for International Trade (Mr. Crosbie) went to the Okanagan Valley a few days later. He showed a great deal of concern. The press report in the Toronto Star of April 26 indicated:

> —Crosbie did say he would be "disappointed" if banks and credit unions began refusing loans to grape growers for no reason other than fears over free trade.

He was "disappointed". Mr. Somer and the other producers are not disappointed, they are devastated. They have hundreds of thousands of dollars invested in these vineyards and they are being put out of business. They cannot get a line of credit and therefore cannot look after their vineyards. There will be no crop and they will be destroyed by this action. All the Minister could do was mumble that he is studying the matter, negotiating with the provinces, and so on. However, as far as providing a direct line of credit to get them through this year until longer-term measures will be provided, there was nothing provided at all.

Although the Government has apparently made some representations to the Bankers' Association to support them, the Bankers' Association is saying "no dice" and essentially the Government is saying "no dice".

The Minister for International Trade talks in the newspaper article about visiting Kelowna. He said that in every arrangement there are going to be some winners and some losers. We have not learned of any winners. Certainly, the grape producers in Niagara and the Okanagan Valley are the losers. I think it is time the Government showed its goodwill to these producers who are being put out of business and provided them with an interim line of credit for the operation of their vineyards this year. If the Government is going to have a proper adjustment program, let it be put in place so that these grape producers know where they are going and know that the Government will stand behind its free trade deal.

Mr. Lee Clark (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I would like to begin by thanking the Hon. Member for Algoma (Mr. Foster) for his continuing interest in agriculture and particularly for raising the question of the position of the Canadian grape growers at this time. I certainly concur with the Hon. Member when he states that the Canadian grape growers and the industry they represent are experiencing difficulties. I do not, however, agree that the reason for those difficulties is solely as a result, or even primarily as a result of the free trade agreement.

As the Hon. Member knows, the grape growing industry in Canada has suffered for many years as a result of historical surplus production. Quite frankly, the federal Government has done its share throughout those years in purchasing that surplus production. In addition, of course, there have been some very real problems in the industry as a result of difficulties with GATT and a subsequent GATT ruling which, I am afraid, was anticipated by the Government and, I would suspect, by the industry as a whole.

During the course of the last eight years, the Government has been buying the surplus grape production even though it has recognized that that in itself is not necessarily a solution. Nevertheless, it was a type of assistance that the Government could provide. In fact, the Government spent some $13 million buying the surplus, and I am sure the Hon. Member applauds the Government's recent announcement that it will buy the surplus production in 1988, as it has done in previous years.

We believe that our efforts in buying the surplus production has given some degree of stability to the industry. Furthermore, we have on numerous occasions sat down with the industry and tried to address the problems that were anticipated with the GATT ruling. That is now with us and we are in the position, of course, of having to respond. The nature of that response will be very significant in terms of working out a long-term strategy.

With respect to the free trade agreement itself, I would suggest that the financial difficulties which exist in agriculture in general, and in the grape growing industry in particular, are not a result of a single year's events and not a result of a single development such as the free trade agreement. I think the difficulties which exist and which have been affecting those in the Kelowna area are the result of ongoing difficulties. Certainly the federal Government is committed to coming up with some sort of adjustment program. I too talked with producers in the area. I know how important it is that an announcement is made in the near future, and I anticipate that it will be.

FILM DISTRIBUTION INDUSTRY—EFFECT OF CANADA—UNITED STATES FREE TRADE AGREEMENT/EFFECT OF AGREEMENT ON CULTURAL INDUSTRIES

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview—Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I am rising to continue with the question of culture on the bargaining table for the so-called free trade deal. It is not a free trade deal. It is not free trade because we do not have protection against the American countervail power. It is simply not free trade. It is much worse than that. It is a loss of political sovereignty. It is a loss of our power to make decisions and it is a loss of cultural sovereignty.

The film distribution scheme is perhaps the first casualty from the point of view of culture because of the shameful act of the federal Government in giving up on a promise it made to Canadian producers, directors and film people that there would be some improvement to allow for film distribution in Canada. It was not going to be Canadian ownership as recommended by a task force, but there would be a film distribution scheme. The Government abandoned that.

Last week the Minister of Communications (Miss MacDonald) had the colossal gall to say that because of free trade not including culture this very minor measure could be proceeded with. The film distribution scheme recently proposed by the Government is a farce. It is a real capitulation from the not staggeringly strong measure that it had proposed a year ago. It is still far from Canadian ownership.

The point is that culture was always on the table. It is not just film distribution. It is a whole lot of things. There would not be a section on culture if it had not been on the table at all.

Article 2004 is on intellectual property. Article 2005 is on cultural industries. Article 2006 is on retransmission rights. Obviously, the Americans did not have confidence that the Government would proceed with retransmission rights although it had already promised to do so.

Article 2007 is a print-in-Canada requirement. This is a sudden repealing of the sections in the Income Tax Act which define a Canadian issue of a newspaper or periodical for purposes of deduction of income tax expenses. In order to get this, as a result of this provision, the production has to be printed or typeset in Canada. There was a great row when this provision was brought in. The American Government protested it for a very long period of time. It was not clear that it would go through at all. Finally, it did go through. Here we have with a stroke of the pen a provision which has enormously stimulated the magazine industry in Canada and which is now going to be taken away.

Those are four very specific provisions. There are also a number of areas in which tariffs will be reduced on cultural goods.

Article 2012 deals with the definition of cultural industry. It says what cultural industries are. However, it is made very clear that printing is not a cultural industry. We could not have told Gutenburg otherwise, that printing was not a cultural industry. Thus the printing trade has been simply wiped off the cultural map in negotiations in which, clearly, culture was on the table. This is one of the items that got lost. It got traded away, although we have a printing industry in Canada and we want to keep it and stimulate it. This means that provisions that deal with school textbooks being printed in Canada in order to get on school lists will be against the free trade deal.

Articles 2010 and 2011 in this agreement are on monopolies. However, we do not call them monopolies. We do not call the CBC a monopoly. We call it a public broadcasting corporation. We do not call TVOntario or TV Quebec a monopoly. They are provincial networks for broadcasting. It seems to me that if the trade deal had been in operation back in the 1930s when the CBC was set up, it could not have been established. The same goes for TVOntario and TV Quebec.

The monopoly section of this deal says that whenever an American corporation can make money in the trade deal it has the right to do so. The Government may not set up a public service in that service area. Or, if it wants to set one up it has to go through a process, it has to notify the American Government that it wants to do so. It has to consult with the American Government, if the American Government asks it to do that. It may be taken to binding arbitration. If we agree to go to binding arbitration we would go there. If we do not agree we would be taken to dispute settlement. In the meantime there can be retaliation of so-called equivalent commercial effect, which means that Canadians would be set against Canadians. Extra tariffs could be placed on lumber, fish or some other product in order to punish us for taking an independent stance in the area of culture. Compensation could be ordered, and it could be ongoing compensation. This problem exists most importantly for our social programs. It could also occur for our cultural programs. There is no specific exemption.

When we look at the so-called exemption for culture, it is made very clear that it is only a partial exemption, that notwithstanding any other provision of this agreement, a party may take measures of commercial effect equivalent to those that in our case Canada took. In this way the United States could retaliate if we do something to protect our own culture.

This is an agreement that is the beginning of the end for our political sovereignty for Canada. It strikes right at the heart of our cultural identity. It is a shameful agreement. What is even more shameful is the fact that the Canadian Government will not square with Canadians about it. It will not even admit it is going on. It buries the most important provisions at the back of the agreement where it hopes that people will not see them. It does not even mention monopolies in the elements of the agreement. It sneaks these provisions in and hopes that Canadians will not notice.

I hope that Canadians will notice. I hope that Canadians will protest and fight for Canada.

Mr. Lee Clark (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, although I respect the right of the Hon. Member for Broadview—Greenwood (Ms. McDonald) to interpret the free trade agreement as she sees fit, I simply cannot—and I say this at as a politician historian—concur with her assessment that the political sovereignty of Canada is in any way in jeopardy as a result of the agreement. However, the specific question before the House today relates to the cultural community and industry in general, and that is the point I would like to address.

We on the government side believe that our cultural industries are exempt from the free trade agreement, including Canada's publishing, film and video, music and sound recording, broadcasting and cable industries. The Government, as promised, has maintained all existing cultural support measures for cultural industries, as well as the ability to introduce new ones.

There are four specific undertakings in the free trade agreement touched upon by the Hon. Member. She identified them. We do not believe the ones identified by the Hon. Member have anything to do with the cultural role of these industries, and there are no other undertakings in the agreement which will apply to the cultural industries.

The exemption for the cultural industries makes it clear that the free trade agreement will not in any way limit our flexibility to introduce special measures to assist these industries, as required now or in the future.

Last week the Minister of Communications (Miss MacDonald) announced policies which were referred to by the Hon. Member in rather disparaging terms, with respect to new investment policies for the film industry and $200 million in new support programs to assist the production, promotion, and marketing of Canadian film and videos. The Minister also announced that she will shortly table legislation, as promised, to ensure that Canada operates a separate national distribution market. Through the additional funding and legislation to regulate the importation of films and videos, the Government has reaffirmed its commitment to the industry.

This policy was not negotiated as part of the free trade agreement. It is a Canadian solution to Canadian problems, developed in consultation with the film industry in Canada and around the world. Despite attempts by the Americans to raise the issue, Canada's cultural industries, including the film distribution issue, were kept off the bargaining table.

The free trade agreement will not in any way affect our ability to continue to develop cultural policies for Canada. In particular, the claim that the agreement will encourage U.S. retaliation against our future cultural policies is groundless. In fact, the opposite is true. At the moment the United States is free to take unilateral action against Canada in retaliation for what it considers to be unfair trade practices. The agreement will improve the situation, by placing some constraints on the ability of Congress to take action against any of our so-called cultural trade barriers. The United States will be required to demonstrate that a Canadian measure in fact contravenes the trade agreement. United States retaliation must be limited to a measure of equivalent commercial effect.

Furthermore, the U.S. will not be able to act unilaterally, as it can now. Advance notification and consultations with Canada would have to take place, in accordance with provisions in the agreement. The trade agreement is about trade, it is not about culture. It is a commercial arrangement that will put our economic relationship with the United States on a secure footing. Our culture can only gain from the stronger Canada that will result from this agreement.

ENERGY—LOW SULPHUR WESTERN COAL—PROPOSED USE BY ONTARIO HYDRO

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): Mr. Speaker, I know that I do not have to remind you that yesterday was Mother's Day. I know that you are well aware of that, and I am sure you celebrated Mother's Day as people right across this country did. I am sure that all of us paused to reflect on that very special day and to think about that special relationship that you and I, Mr. Speaker, and all Canadians have or had with their mothers.

Unfortunately, my mother passed away about five years ago. Mother's Day always brings back those memories and those feelings of that special relationship. Many times I think of the qualities and the character that she tried to instil in me with her own way with those various lessons that she taught me. I think, as well, about those little things that make the mother-child relationship so special—and certainly occasions such as Mothers Day bring back one's childhood memories.

I often think of the nursery rhymes my mother used to repeat, and the one that comes to mind this evening is one she used to say when it was raining outside. Her purpose in saying it was probably to get me out of her hair. It went along the lines: "Rain, rain, go away, little Allen wants to play".

That is a rhyme that comes to mind every time it rains. I am one who does not like to stay inside when it rains. I much prefer to be outside enjoying the rain, whether it be a teeming rain, a thunder-storm, a steady all-day rain, or drizzle, or a mist. I am one who always enjoyed the rain. However, it is not something that I enjoy as much now, the reason being that when I am caught outdoors in the rain now, it not only takes the press out of my pants but causes severe health problems.

We are all aware of the devastation caused by acid rain in this country, and across the world. Our forests, our lakes and rivers are being severely affected, as are our buildings. As well, human health is severely impacted. We know that acid rain can lead to respiratory diseases and to certain cancers.

Acid rain is a tremendous problem for the world today, and it is one that all Canadians are well aware of. The only people in the world who do not seem to be well aware of the problem of acid rain are the Americans, who seem to think that acid rain is caused by bird droppings, or something of that sort. Some Americans do not seem to be able to come to grips with what this problem is all about.

Half of the acid rain that we experience emanates from U.S. sources, and our Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) has been doing his best, in the last few years, to try to deal with that. He has put acid rain at the top of the agenda with the Americans. He has talked to the President about it; he has talked to the U.S. Congress. He has done everything short of going to war with the Americans. As a sovereign nation, we know that we cannot force the Americans to reduce their acid rain emissions. Rather, we have to do so by encouragement, by negotiation.

The other half of the acid rain problem emanates from within Canada—and again this Government has made enormous strides in controlling acid rain emissions from within Canada. The federal Government has now entered into agreements with seven of the provinces to reduce acid rain emissions by 50 per cent of what they were in 1980, with the target date for that reduction being 1994. In addition, the federal Government has introduced strict lead emission controls for cars and trucks.

Perhaps the greatest source of acid rain emissions is Ontario Hydro, and that is the case because of the fact that Ontario Hydro uses high sulphur American coal to generate power, instead of the low sulphur Canadian coal that has been proposed as a substitute by our Government. It is because of the use of the high sulphur American coal that we have this enormous acid rain problem, and it is one that we cannot seem to solve.

A short time ago, you know, Mr. Speaker, and I know the Governments of the provinces and the federal Government set up an action committee to deal with this problem to try to find a way to bring low sulphur western Canadian coal to Ontario so that Ontario Hydro could make use of it, and reduce these horrible acid rain emissions very substantially. That action committee was made up of the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski), the Premier of Ontario, the Premier of Saskatchewan, the Premier of Alberta and the Premier of British Columbia.

I have not heard of very much action from this committee. We have heard all the excuses. We have heard that Ontario Hydro can get cheaper coal from the United States, so why shouldn't it buy cheaper? We have heard the excuse that all these long term contracts are in place with the Americans, so we have to keep buying this high sulphur coal from them, causing acid rain emissions in Canada. We have heard the excuse as well that transportation costs from western Canada to Ontario are so high that it does not make economic sense. We have heard all the excuses, but what we are looking for is action.

I would like to ask the Parliamentary Secretary when you and I, Mr. Speaker, and all Canadians can expect to get some action out of the action committee so that I can start enjoying those rain storms again the way I used to when I was a kid. How about it, Mr. Parliamentary Secretary? When are we going to get that action?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Chair does think that is a good question. The Hon. Parliamentary Secretary.

Mr. Jack Shields (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for that non-editorial comment. "Jack Spratt could eat no fat, his wife could eat no lean, but together they licked the platter clean". I think that identifies the sense of co-operation which this Government has tried to bring to the country since 1984. It is because of that sense of co-operation in elements like the action committee that sometimes things are a little slower. It is easier in terms of speed to be a dictator, but it is not necessarily more secure in achieving what it is we would like to achieve.

It is particularly encouraging to stand in this Chamber today, and I speak as the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, from Alberta, one of the places from where low sulphur coal might come and deal with a question by a Member from Toronto. The interests of the people of Toronto, the people of Ontario and central Canada do coincide with the producing provinces which have the low sulphur coal. British Columbia, Alberta and Saskatchewan, the Member mentioned, were involved in these discussions.

We are pleased in western Canada to hear that Ontario Hydro has made a commitment to reduce its emissions by 50 per cent over eight years, between 1986 to 1994 and that progress is already under way. In terms of action, 1 million tonnes of low sulphur western coal was bought by Ontario Hydro this year due to an unexpected demand. Original concerns about price are starting to diminish. The price of western coal and its deliverability—transportation is a big part of it—is starting to come down. One of the first initiatives our Government undertook was the deregulation of transportation, bringing in more competition. We are beginning to see this important commodity become more price competitive.

The Member asks specifically when we can expect action. I wish he would use the words "more action". There has been action. Meetings have been held. The Secretariat has produced a report on coal technologies which will now be the subject of a high level meeting of the action committee that I understand will be held in the very near future. We expect out of that to have some financial commitments to continue to work on those technologies which reduce price, help Ontario consumers, help the acid rain situation, and help create jobs in western Canada which will ripple back to eastern Canada with an increased capacity to purchase goods and services, equipment, supplies and materials. It is good economically. It is especially good for the environment and to be able to demonstrate in this country that by working together we can lick that platter clean and produce a better situation for all Canadians.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly, this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at two o'clock pursuant to the Order made Wednesday, May 4, 1988.

The House adjourned at 6.30 p.m.

HARBOURS AND PORTS

PORT MORIEN, N.S.—OVERCROWDING AT WHARF

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, the fishermen at Port Morien, Cape Breton, Nova Scotia, are in desperate need of improvements to their harbour. The existing facility was constructed over 40 years ago to accommodate 20 small boats and approximately 5,000 lobster traps. Today it accommodates 48 very large vessels and over 10,000 lobster traps. At present, boats have to tie up five to six abreast. All boats use gasoline or diesel fuel, and if a fire should erupt aboard any one of those vessels all the fleet could be lost.

I call upon the Department of Fisheries and Oceans and the Minister responsible to provide the necessary money to construct an additional 150-foot extension on the end of the existing wharf, and a 150-foot finger wharf. The request by these fishermen is both reasonable and well thought out. It is time for the Government of Canada to act positively on such a reasonable request.

NATIONAL NURSES' WEEK

TRIBUTE TO WORK OF NURSES

Mrs. Mary Collins (Capilano): Mr. Speaker, for over 300 years dedicated and competent nurses have been serving Canadians. They have played an active and valuable role in the development of our national health care system since the time of Jeanne Mance, the first lay nurse in Canada, during the early years of the 17th century.

The importance of nursing in our health care system is illustrated by the fact that more than 200,000 practising nurses in Canada constitute over 50 per cent of our health care professionals. Nurses serve the community by caring for all groups of people. Their presence is felt in a variety of venues as they provide care in homes, occupational settings, clinics, hospitals, and in nursing homes.

The nursing profession touches everyone. In recognition of this important contribution I am sure that my colleagues will join me in recognizing National Nurses' Week, and May 12, Florence Nightingale's birthday, International Nurses' Day.

FINANCE

NORTHERN RESIDENTS TAX DEDUCTION

Mr. John Parry (Kenora—Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, I and my colleagues in the New Democratic Party continue to be profoundly dissatisfied with the manner in which the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) has handled the problems arising out of the eligibility list relating to the Northern Residents Tax Deduction. The Minister of Finance has refused to meet, even at his convenience, with the presidents of the northern Ontario municipal associations or with groups of elected municipal leaders to hear their concerns surrounding the matter.

Unable or unwilling to put forward a solution which will include all northern isolated communities on the eligibility list, the Minister is asking a $2.8 million task force to find the solution. This task force is being given a year and a half to report, which is far too long for communities not on the list to wait.

Six months of staff time was spent to produce the 14 pages of regulations that led to this problem, regulations which anyone with 15 minutes and a map could have determined were going to create divisions. Now we need $2.8 million and 18 months to solve the problem.

Members in this House, too, were led to believe by government Ministers that communities to be added to the list would receive the benefit retroactive to 1987, not 1988 as the press release now states.

Another concern is that the task force proposals are to be essentially revenue neutral. The Minister of Finance must reconsider the mandate of the task force before an already inequitable situation is compounded.

AWARDS AND DECORATIONS

ORDER OF CANADA—EDMONTON RECIPIENTS

Mr. William G. Lesick (Edmonton East): Mr. Speaker, this year's round of Order of Canada investitures included three Edmontonians, of whom we are not only very proud but to whom we wish to pay tribute.

Krishan Joshee, Chairman of the Alberta Gaming Commission, is a retired teacher who is widely known for his volunteer work and his dedication to a long list of committees which have fostered multiculturalism in Edmonton and all of Alberta.

Dr. Henry Kreisel is an author, scholar, teacher, and administrator. A former Vice-President of the University of Alberta he has contributed greatly toward the development of the Heritage Language Institute.

Mrs. Mary Lobay has, over many years, given most generously of her time to a number of community projects as well as to the University of Alberta, the Edmonton Police Commission, and the Canadian Ukrainian Museum and Archives.

On behalf of Canadians, it is an honour to salute these three distinguished Edmontonians.

APARTHEID

SOUTH AFRICA—CALL FOR MORE RIGID ECONOMIC SANCTIONS

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau): Mr. Speaker, Rev. Allan Boesak, President of the World Alliance of Reformed Churches and the leader of the United Democratic Front, was in Montreal last weekend urging the Canadian Government to act on its promises to impose more rigid economic sanctions on South Africa.

Rev. Boesak warned that the ultra right-wing Conservative Party in South Africa, which is gaining in popularity, and which totally opposes any reform of apartheid, is able to point to the promises made by the Canadian Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and the Canadian Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) as empty threats that South Africa can ignore without fear of reprisal.

Rev. Boesak also warned that if Canada fails to act on its promise, extremist groups which advocate the use of violence will gain more followers at the cost of moderate groups like the UDF.

When will the Canadian Government act on its promises? As we in the Liberal Party have long stated, mandatory, all-encompassing sanctions must be imposed on South Africa now.

CANADIAN EXPLORATION INCENTIVE PROGRAM

ESTABLISHMENT OF OFFICES TO EXAMINE REQUESTS FOR SUBSIDIES

Mr. Guy St-Julien (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, on May 6 in Val-d'Or, on behalf of the Hon. Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Masse) and the Hon. Minister of State for Forestry and Mines (Mr. Merrithew), I announced that a review office under the Canadian Exploration Incentive Program would be set up in Val-d'Or. At the same time, the Hon. Member for Timiskaming (Mr. MacDougall) announced that an office would be established in Kirkland Lake, not far from Rouyn-Noranda.

On page 3 of a letter dated May 5, 1988, the Rouyn-Noranda SDE wrote, "We serve northeastern Ontario since we are connected geographically to this neighbouring mining region."

Mr. Speaker, by setting up review offices in Val-d'Or and Kirkland Lake, thus drawing closer to the people of Abitibi, Témiscamingue and northern Ontario, the Government of Canada is greatly facilitating mining exploration, which makes a large contribution to the Canadian economy.

TREATMENT OF EMPLOYEES

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, where does one picture workers being searched and harassed as they enter or leave their place of work? Where does one envisage the stigmatization of all employees as thieves or drug addicts? What kind of society would ban handbags or purses on the job and force workers to ask permission to retrieve personal belongings? Would it be the Soviet Union, or maybe South Korea? No. It is Canada Post.

Canadian postal workers, especially women, face this degradation and invasion of privacy every day because of Draconian new regulations within the Post Office. Canada Post wants to curb mail theft and loss which amounts to a fraction of one per cent of all mail handled.

But why single out postal workers in heavily supervised plants? Why does Canada Post not look at its network of privatized post offices, none of which have security? Finally, why does the Minister responsible for Canada Post not call a halt to this needless harassment of Canadian workers?

CHARTER OF RIGHTS

CALL FOR INCLUSION OF PROPERTY RIGHTS

Mr. Andrew Witer (Parkdale—High Park): Mr. Speaker, the guarantee of property rights is a most important and fundamental right, and one that was neglected by the Liberal Government when drafting the Canadian Charter of Rights.

The sad fact is that, without a guarantee of property rights, the Charter remains a flawed document and a great disappointment to many Canadians.

The recent passage of a Private Member's Motion calling for the inclusion of property rights in the Charter is a clear indication that members of this Government are prepared to offer Canadians such rights, while the NDP, who voted unanimously against the motion, along with 20 per cent of the Liberals, would deny them.

Clearly, the Progressive Conservative Members of the House have reflected the concerns of Canadians through their strong endorsement of property rights. I urge the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) to take up this call for action and ensure that property rights are included on the agenda for the next First Ministers' Conference.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

BRITISH COLUMBIA—ALLEGED NON-ENFORCEMENT OF POLLUTION LAWS

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, Bill Andrews of the West Coast Environmental Law Association reports that, according to the federal records, both the federal and provincial Governments are not enforcing pollution laws for British Columbia's 22 pulp mills.

Environment Canada's records show that 21 mills consistently failed to comply with federal limits for one type of pollutant, and 18 mills went over provincial limits for another pollutant.

It would appear that every day last year the 22 mills dumped 2.5 million cu. metres of oxygen-depleting substances and toxic contaminants which end up in the food chain. Yet, Andrews could find no record that either level of government laid charges against even one pulp mill last year in British Columbia for exceeding limits on continuous discharges of pollution.

All this went on under the nose of the Minister of the Environment (Mr. McMillan) who likes to talk tough on polluters. The Minister should get on top of the situation in British Columbia and across Canada, and start practising what he preaches.

ABORIGINAL PEOPLES

TIMING OF DEPARTMENTAL INFORMATION LEAKS

Mr. Thomas Suluk (Nunatsiaq): Mr. Speaker, why is it that every time a meeting is scheduled between the native groups and the federal Government a timely leak develops? Whether it involves funding or aboriginal rights, it seems to be too much of a coincidence. Are these leaks happening to ensure that native representatives will be sufficiently angry, thereby guaranteeing failure?

Are these leaks designed to ensure that the process fails and is doomed before native leaders have even met with government officials?

Whenever Indians and Inuit are scheduled to meet with the federal Government, only negative aspects are brought out by the media, so that by the time the leaders sit down at the negotiating table everyone is angry and the whole thing falls apart, with the Indians coming out smoking.

FORESTRY

EXPORTS OF UNPROCESSED LOGS

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, when it comes to our forest industry one thing becomes crystal clear—we must have more value added associated with our timber resource. For years Canadians have said that we must process more of our timber into finished or semi-finished products. Yet more and more raw logs are exported each year.

For example, in 1985 British Columbia exported 2.5 million cubic metres of logs. Last year British Columbia exported 3.4 million cubic metres of logs. This means that we are exporting jobs, since most jobs in the forest industry are associated with timber processing and not with the harvesting of the resource.

It is time we made more of an effort to add value to our Canadian resources. Reducing the volume of raw logs exported would be a major step in the right direction.

I urge the Government to communicate this concern to the Government of British Columbia, and urge it to curtail the export of British Columbia jobs by curtailing the export of raw logs. The sooner the better.

Oral Questions

POLITICAL PROTEST

VIOLENCE OUTSIDE NEW BRUNSWICK PROGRESSIVE CONSERVATIVES' ANNUAL MEETING

Mr. Albert Girard (Restigouche): Mr. Speaker, with this statement I will present you with a resolution that was passed unanimously by the New Brunswick PCs at our annual meeting last Saturday in Moncton, and a newspaper article dated May 7, 1988.

What we witnessed outside was a most disgusting incident involving a handful of disgruntled individuals who felt obliged to make up for their lack of numbers with violence.

Canada is a nation of fairness and tolerance. I think most Canadians do not approve of the actions taken by these protesters. I know that New Brunswickers are not very proud of the shadow which has been cast upon our good character and our warm hospitality.

All political leaders should ask themselves if this kind of behaviour is what we should expect as a sign of things to come in the forthcoming election. I urge all political leaders to denounce this type of violence publicly and to serve notice that it will not be tolerated.

SOCIAL AFFAIRS

HAMILTON DROP-IN CENTRE—CARE FOR CHILDREN

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, the face of poverty in the country is changing. It is now the face of the child.

I had an opportunity last week to meet with constituents in my riding who are delivering a program in downtown Hamilton, a program on which I served at one time as a member of the board of directors. It has a drop-in centre for the down and out, those disadvantaged in our society who have nowhere else to go.

When I was on the board it served primarily older men, those who had dropped out for a number of reasons. Now, on average, 10 children a day drop into the centre. Four children, on average, under the age of one are brought into the centre. These are children who are part of a situation in which one in five in the country is living in poverty and has nowhere else to go but a drop-in centre. At one time this centre was a haven for the downcast, what we would call the downtrodden, the down and outers. Is this what society has come to?

Unfortunately, our own Standing Committee on National Health and Welfare has refused to study the question of child poverty, even though the cry has been ringing from one end of the country to the other to look at this question in a compassionate way to find solutions so that our children do not have to go to school hungry.

REGIONAL ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT

ESTABLISHMENT OF CANADIAN EXPLORATION INCENTIVE PROGRAM

Mr. Gabriel Desjardins (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, on Tuesday, May 3, the Progressive Conservative Government announced the creation of a new Canadian Exploration Incentive Program through the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Masse) and the Minister of State for Forestry and Mines (Mr. Merrithew). This new program (CEIP), which will last at least two years, will take effect on January 1, 1989. It provides for federal participation of some $210 million annually to generate private sector investments of around $700 million.

Given the importance of mining exploration for a region like Abitibi-Témiscamingue, this means hundreds of millions of dollars invested in our regional economy for several more years.

What good news for Abitibi-Témiscamingue! Many thanks to the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) and the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources for this new program!

Once again, it shows how sensitive our Government is to regional economic development and prosperity.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

INCOME TAX

APPLICATION OF MINIMUM TAX—NON PAYMENT BY WEALTHY

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. In the last general election all three national party Leaders favoured a minimum tax on wealthy Canadians. Indeed, the Prime Minister said during a nationally televised debate, and I use his words:

> It is unfair that an individual not pay a minimum tax . . . Anybody in this country of wealth—should pay tax and it should be a handsome tax . . . I have said it many times.

Would the Prime Minister explain why it is that he has broken his promise to the country declared on national television? Could he explain why, according to the latest income tax returns from Revenue Canada, more than 5,000 well-off Canadians did not pay a single cent of tax in 1986? Will he explain why dozens of people who made more than a quarter of a million dollars a year in income did not pay a single cent of tax?

• (1420)

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the minimum tax has been introduced, as the Prime Minister promised in 1984. That minimum tax is having an impact resulting in a clear reduction of those people who are in the higher income brackets who are not paying taxes.

When the minimum tax was introduced I made it quite clear that there would be some reasons why there would be some people who would not pay tax. The reason for that is because people have real losses.

The Hon. Member for Hamilton East is nattering away back there. I do not think that she quite understands that when people have real losses, the tax system in this country states that they should be able to carry those losses forward.

If the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition is saying that we should not allow these losses to be carried forward, then let him say so. That was the principle that he lived by when he was Minister of Finance and that we are following right now, because we think it is only fair. It is those people who are in those circumstances who are not paying tax, but many other people are directly affected by the minimum tax.

ELECTION PROMISE

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): The Minister, in effect, has admitted that his minimum tax is a phoney. When the Minister introduced it in this House, we said it was a phoney. We condemned it because there were loopholes that were not covered. We pointed out that even those Canadians who might pay a minimum tax in year one could get a refund in year two.

We said it was a scam, even though the Leader of the New Democratic Party said on December 4, 1985, as reported at page 9137 of Hansard: "I am pleased by what has been announced today—and I compliment the Minister of Finance . . . "

We saw through the scam, even if the NDP did not.

I do not wish to interrupt any consultation between the Prime Minister and the Minister of Finance, but I ask the Prime Minister the following. Why did he make yet another promise that he did not intend to keep?

Why do more than 5,000 well-to-do Canadians not pay a dime, a nickel, or a single penny of income tax, while income taxes on people who make less than $15,000 a year have gone up by more than 24 per cent since the Government came to power?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, if there is any political Party that understands tax scams, it is the Liberal Party of Canada.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): The scientific research tax credit, which was one of the first things that we cancelled when we came into office, cost the taxpayers of Canada $2.5 billion when the previous Finance Minister had stated it was only going to cost $100 million. Instead of $100 million, it was $2.5 billion.

We have changed many elements of the tax system to make it fair and to remove some of the reasons why people were not paying taxes, culminating in tax reform which starts this year.

The Hon. Member is bleating a lot about 1986 figures. They are a great improvement over 1985, and in 1988 when tax reform comes in, we will see a major change still. We have taken out practically every one of those unfair tax gimmicks that he and subsequent Finance Ministers of the Liberal Party of Canada introduced during their term of office.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, let it be noted that the Minister of Finance has virtually admitted that his so-called minimum tax is a phoney. He has not answered the question. He has not dealt with the numbers. He has hoped to create a bit of subterfuge over it, but Canadians are not fooled. The Minister and the Prime Minister misled them in the last general election, and the Minister misled the House of Commons.

EQUALITY IN INCOME TAX

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, the Conservative Party promised it would protect the rights of Canadian taxpayers. Instead, the Prime Minister has introduced a policy that favours taxpayers in the upper tax brackets. Only 1 per cent of the wealthiest Canadians in this country pay less income tax under this Government.

How does the Prime Minister or how does his Minister justify the fact that people earning less than $50,000 annually have seen their income tax increase by more than 62 per cent, although the Conservative Party promised it would not raise taxes?

Why are the Prime Minister and his Minister squeezing middle-income Canadians, when 5,000 well-off Canadians don't pay any income tax at all?

• (1425)

[English]

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition is saying that the people of Canada were being misled. That could not be further from the truth. We have stated absolutely clearly what the minimum tax would do and what it would not do. What we did was go to the heart of the problem. Why are people not paying tax? Because of loopholes that he and subsequent Ministers of Finance from the Liberal Party put into the tax system. We changed those systematically, from scientific research tax credits, to carve outs, to the income attribution rules, limited partnerships, all of these things.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): That's a phoney.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): The Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition says it is a phoney. I wonder how phoney it was when he was recommending to his clients as a private sector lawyer to take advantage of all of these. He was the one who was probably advising his clients to take advantage—

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Cochrane—Superior.

ABORIGINAL PEOPLES

DEPARTMENTAL DISCUSSION PAPERS—GOVERNMENT SERVICES

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane—Superior): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Indian Affairs. I have in my possession a set of departmental discussion papers which propose to severely restrict government services to Indian people. As I read these documents, I noted how closely they parallel the philosophy and spirit of the Nielsen Task Force report on Indian programs, code-named the "Buffalo Jump" of the 80s, which I thought the Prime Minister had repudiated some time ago.

This document admits that social and economic indicators for natives are among the worst for any social group in Canada. Despite this admission, these papers say the Government should carefully avoid expanding the scope of responsibilities for aboriginal people. How can the Minister expect the aboriginal people of Canada to trust the Government when this kind of callous, cynical thinking is going on behind the closed doors of his own Department?

Hon. Bill McKnight (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the Hon. Member's question because it gives me an opportunity once again to enunciate what is government policy. Government policy is decided by Cabinet and announced by Ministers. Officials may discuss.

The Hon. Member was quite fair in saying he has something in his possession that was used as discussion for officials. But the Member should also know, when it talks about limitation, that the departmental budget increase for DIAND since 1984 is over 40 per cent main to main. The increase this year is 10 per cent plus. The Hon. Member should then recognize there is no curtailment of services to Indian people in Canada by this Government.

CONDITIONS IN INDIAN COMMUNITIES

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane—Superior): Mr. Speaker, we heard this morning from Queen Beatrix of Holland that Members ought not to forget the problems that exist in the Third World. The House and the country and the Government should know that Third World conditions, and worse, exist in many Indian communities across Canada. So if the Minister is saying he rejects the philosophy of these papers, I want him to tell the House when he is going to announce accelerated programs to overcome the serious backlog of housing needs in Indian communities? When is he going to announce that good quality schools will be built in Indian communities where they are so badly needed?

• (1430)

Hon. Bill McKnight (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I know the Hon. Member has a real concern and I appreciate it. The Hon. Member can also recall that within the last 12 months in one province alone, the Province of Manitoba, $55 million was spent in northern Manitoba on school construction for Indian people, the largest single construction undertaken in education facilities by any federal Government in the Province of Manitoba.

The Hon. Member also knows and has to be aware that when we sat on the aboriginal affairs committee there was a proposal and discussion about the death rule, including discussion on Bill C-31. Regardless of what is in the story and regardless of what is in the paper, I asked for assistance. I would like to quote from the committee report. On March 17, 1988—

Mr. Prud'homme: Speech.

Mr. McKnight: I am sorry, Mr. Speaker, but some Members in the Opposition do not wish to have this discussed.

Mr. Prud'homme: It is still a speech.

Mr. McKnight: I said:

> I would be very pleased if all Parties sitting around this table would be able to sit together and find a way of addressing that failure . . . I would appreciate the opinion of all Members from all Parties on a way to do that.

Mr. Penner: It is irrelevant.

Mr. McKnight: The Member says it is irrelevant. The death rule is very, very important to aboriginal people under Bill C-31, and we hope to have the co-operation of two Parties to address it.

Mr. Prud'homme: You are the creator of it.

INCOME TAX

MINIMUM TAX—NON PAYMENT OF TAX BY WEALTHY

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance about the fairness of the tax system. The Minister will recall that the minimum tax was brought into this House so that average Canadians would know that when they paid their share of tax, people who were wealthier than they were were also paying their fair share. Now we find out that 5,200 Canadians earning over $50,000 paid no tax in 1986, and on the Minister's hit parade, the top 40 earning over $250,000, paid no tax at all.

Can the Minister say what is fair about a minimum tax that still allows wealthy Canadians to arrange their affairs so as not to pay a nickel in income tax in 1986?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I have answered that question which was put by the Leader of the Opposition. I would also point out to the House that both the Member and the Leader of the Opposition are using figures that have not been published. They have not been officially released so they should not be commenting in any formal way about them.

I want to remind the Hon. Member that, out of one side of his mouth he is saying you have to make sure that people pay more tax, while out of the other side of his mouth he is saying you cannot do anything about flow-through shares; you cannot make any changes in flow-through shares. It is the tax loopholes with flow-through shares that were changed in tax reform.

Mr. Riis: What about the minimum tax?

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): The Hon. Member cannot have it both ways. You cannot say you cannot touch any of these things in the tax system, and yet say that people have got to be paying more tax. We have changed things. We have changed the tax system incredibly over the last three and a half years. The result is there are far fewer people who are getting away with the gimmicks that were put in the system as a result of about 15 years of Liberal Government.

Mr. Rodriguez: You fooled me.

FAIRNESS OF SYSTEM—MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Finance has changed things so effectively that dozens of people earning over a quarter of a million dollars a year avoided paying any tax in 1986, and thousands of other Canadians avoided paying any tax in 1986. Average Canadians say that is not fair.

I want the Minister to tell me what is fair, now that we do have these preliminary reports, about a tax system where the average income of tax filer earning under $15,000 fell and yet his or her tax rose between 1984 and 1986. What is fair about a tax system that has increased the tax on these low income Canadians while at the same time the tax on those with incomes of over $50,000 actually fell? The Minister of Finance may believe that that is fair, but is there a single other Canadian who can say that that is fair when poor people pay more in tax and wealthier Canadians pay less?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I think this is probably a classic example of the old adage that figures lie and liars figure.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): There is a misuse—

An Hon. Member: That is an old adage.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: I am sure the Hon. Minister did not want to impute any wrong motive to the Hon. Member.

Some Hon. Members: No. Absolutely no!

Mr. Speaker: I would invite the Hon. Minister to continue his answer, of course making it clear that no improper motive was attributed.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): There is certainly no attempt to attribute motives, Mr. Speaker, but it is a very astute adage.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre could ask another question.

REQUEST THAT MINISTER CHANGE MINIMUM TAX SYSTEM

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): I regret, Mr. Speaker, that rather than trying to answer the question which the average Canadian wants answered, the Minister decided to resort to abuse.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An Hon. Member: Go back to Ontario, Mike.

Mr. Cassidy: I am in Ontario now.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member will complete his question.

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, my final supplementary is quite simply this. Since we are talking about fairness in the tax system, is the Minister satisfied with a minimum tax which still allows more than 5,000 Canadians earning over $50,000 a year to pay no tax? Or is he prepared to bring in changes to the minimum tax system in order to ensure that wealthy Canadians all pay their share to the Treasury of Canada?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the answer that I wanted to give to the previous question, where the New Democratic Party Member said that in the under $50,000 a year group taxes went up from $1,605 to $2,394, that is an increase which is significant, but the amount I think should also be taken into account.

I would also point out to the Hon. Member that since 1984 the increase in personal taxes paid by Canadians was 80 per cent as a result of growth in the economy.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): That is nuts. That is not right.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): The Leader of the Opposition is starting to mouth off again.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): If he checks the figures he will see that 80 per cent is as a result of the growth in the economy and 20 per cent is as a result of tax changes.

The specific answer to the question as to why there are still some people who are not paying any tax is this. I have said it before and I will say it again. We do not include alimony in the minimum tax. We do not include real losses in the minimum tax. There are other items such as that which are not included in the minimum tax. If the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre is prepared to stand up and say that we should include real losses and alimony, let him do it. If he wants a fair tax system, he will agree with the way we have done it. He will agree that by not including those items it is the fair and equitable way of treating people in the tax system today.

SUGGESTED LIMITATION ON TAX DEDUCTIONS

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance who disputes the published 5,000 plus figure but has not offered us another figure. However, clearly a large number of Canadians paid no tax in 1986 and, therefore, the Government has not kept its promise to make the system fairer.

Why did the Government not adopt the proposal of the Official Opposition for a simple and straightforward mechanism to limit the total amount a taxpayer could deduct for tax incentives so that everyone would pay a share of tax?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member said I have not answered the question. First, I do not comment specifically on unofficial figures because these figures will be made official and at that time I will be quite happy to do so. I have commented very specifically on the reasons that these numbers, which she and others have quoted today, have been leaked to a newspaper. We have kept our promise.

• (1440)

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): There are such figures, you admit it.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Are the numbers right?

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): The Leader of the Opposition asks if the numbers are right. They are unofficial. I do not know whether they are right.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): You certainly do, one way or the other. Come one, one way or the other, you know whether they are right.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Trinity has asked the question and I would ask her colleagues to co-operate in letting the Minister reply to her.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Mr. Speaker, we have taken a number of actions to improve the fairness of the tax system. We have eliminated the scientific research tax credit. We have gone to the heart of the reasons why people are not paying tax including the SRTC, the carve-outs that the oil industries used, the drilling depletion funds, MURBS, the allowable business investment losses, mining depletion, and the changes to the dividend tax credit.

All of these changes go to the cause of the problem the Hon. Member is referring to, and surely she should be on her feet saying that this is bringing fairness to the tax system, and congratulations should go to the Government. Possibly she might like to say that we should be doing more, but at least she should acknowledge the major changes that we have brought about over the last three and a half years in improving the fairness and equity in the tax system.

TAX SIMPLIFICATION—MINISTER'S POSITION

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, I am overwhelmed by the Minister's modesty.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Miss Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, the Minister also promised tax simplification and has in fact delivered a more complex form than previously. Now even Canadians with very modest incomes are paying to have their tax forms completed. Does the Minister intend to address this question at all?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member said that she was overwhelmed by the statements that I have been making. I would be overwhelmed if she would stand up and acknowledge some of the good works this Government has done in dealing with the problems she has recognized.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member has said that we promised tax simplification and we have done nothing about it. I regret to tell her that we have done something about tax simplification, in two ways. First, we have made a number of changes in the tax system, going from exemptions to credits, making it much clearer to Canadians what they get out of the tax credit. There is a change in the number of tax brackets from 10 to three so it is easier to understand.

As well, dealing with the problem the Hon. Member recognizes, that people feel that they have to go to tax practitioners to get their forms filled out, my colleague, the Minister of National Revenue, and I, have made a number of changes in the tax guide this year and we will make further changes next year. We have put in a number of tax tips to help

Canadians identify which parts of the tax guide and which parts of the tax form affect them, and which do not. It is much easier for people to use that tax guide when filling out their tax forms.

ABORIGINAL PEOPLES

DEPARTMENT'S BUDGET—HOUSING NEEDS OF INDIAN PEOPLE

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Indian Affairs. Three years ago the then Deputy Prime Minister, Erik Nielsen, produced and introduced what was known as the "Buffalo Jump" of the 1980s, the Conservative blueprint for the assimilation of Indian, Inuit, and Métis people.

When the Minister and the Government came to office there was a backlog of over 10,000 in housing units required for aboriginal people in Canada. That has grown since the Minister has been in office. The Minister's own documents now reveal that there will be fewer schools produced rather than more, and they have all kinds of ways of describing those as being better schools without talking about there being fewer schools.

On Bill C-31, the Minister above all knows that the budget that he has before the House right now is totally inadequate. Again, there are tens of thousands of aboriginal people being denied housing, medical coverage, and all kinds of other benefits. When will the Minister do something about Bill C-31, something about housing and something about schools, something good for aboriginal people rather than all this bumf and assimilation?

Hon. Bill McKnight (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, not being an expert on bumf, I will leave that to the Hon. Member.

The Hon. Member must be aware that the report about which he talks, the Nielsen report that called for cut-backs and was made public, came since 1984, but at the same time the budget for the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development has increased 40 per cent. The Hon. Member must also take some credit and some responsibility, because when Bill C-31 was introduced in the House it was supported unanimously by all three Parties.

REQUEST FOR INCREASED BUDGET

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question stems from the Minister's own Estimates, hardly a secret document. It proposes cuts in human resources development by 50 per cent, cuts in renewable resource development by 85 per cent, and cuts to self-government, to comprehensive claims, and to economic development on lands, reserves and trusts. These are cuts to a group of Canadians who are the worst off in Canadian society according to the Minister's own documents, individuals who have a life expectancy 10 years lower than Canadians generally. When will he come forward with a budget that will address these issues—now or after the next election?

Hon. Bill McKnight (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member identifies some programs which were sunsetted, programs which expired, and he calls those cuts. The Hon. Member must know about legislated programs, though I know that the NDP has not had the experience nor will it likely have the experience of administering a Government. If it did, it would realize that some programs are sunsetted.

Regardless, I know the Hon. Member has copies of releases provided within the last month indicating initiatives taken by this Government, including Indian child care. There has been consultation with Indian people in the provinces to establish Indian child care and return it to Indian people who are best able, in my opinion and I am sure in the Hon. Member's opinion, to handle Indian child welfare.

The Hon. Member recognizes that we are putting forward $20 million to assist Indian men and women who are on social assistance to be productive. We have taken these initiatives at a time when the budget has increased, and we are continuing to meet the needs of Indian men and women in Canada to the best of the ability of this Government.

RESEARCH AND DEVELOPMENT

QUEBEC'S SHARE

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State (Science and Technology) and I would like to draw his attention to the dwindling share of federal funding for research being allocated to Quebec. This time, I think the figures are quite clear. In 1984-85, when the Progressive Conservative Party had just come to power, Quebec received 20.2 per cent of research contracts. The following year, it was down to 10.5 per cent, and the year after, to 9.94, while last year there was a slight increase to 12.2 per cent. This means that despite formal protests from the Government of Quebec, the province continues to receive only crumbs in terms of research contracts. I would like to ask the Government what it intends to do to give us the assurance that Quebec will receive its fair share of research contracts from the federal Government.

[English]

Hon. Frank Oberle (Minister of State (Science and Technology)): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to respond to the Hon. Member's question. The figures indeed do not lie as he has quoted them, but they only reflect the transfers from the expenditures of one Department of Government, Supply and Services, which is involved in only 6 per cent of the total expenditures involving grants and contracts of the Government of Canada. Therefore, the figures are badly distorted.

I do have some real figures here involving all government transfers. In 1985, Québec received 34 per cent of all of the transfers and Ontario 38 per cent. These are the true figures.

SPACE AGENCY—MONTREAL

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, perhaps the Minister, who seems to be quite comfortable with all those figures, could explain what is happening in space research. We have heard that in March, $9.2 million worth of research contracts in the space sector were allocated by the National Research Council, but none of these went to Quebec. It should come as no surprise to the Minister that Montrealers are concerned, and I would like to ask him whether he now realizes why the people of Montreal want the space agency to be located in their city. When could the Minister inform the House when the location of the space agency will be announced, and is there still hope that Montreal will get the space agency?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, first of all, the Hon. Member mentioned the figures for one month. When we consider government expenditures, I think it is only fair to look at a period of more than 30 days. I realize that it may suit the Hon. Member to talk about a period of 30 days, but I think that in this particular area, we should consider the spending that has taken place over the last twelve, eighteen or twenty-four months, so as to have a more accurate picture of the geographical distribution of these expenditures.

As regards our activity in the space industry, quite recently we announced we would be taking part in the American space station. We have reiterated our participation in the European space agency, and we have said several times—and I am merely repeating what the Prime Minister said before—that we will have a space agency. The parameters of the program have to be determined, and as soon as Cabinet will be able to decide on the location, I should be delighted to make the announcement, if the Prime Minister will let me.

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES FREE TRADE AGREEMENT—CONSTITUTIONALITY OF AGREEMENT IN UNITED STATES

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. Has the United States informed Canada that part of the trade agreement is unconstitutional in the U.S. and therefore it wishes to have changes in the wording of certain sections for implementing legislation purposes?

Mr. John McDermid (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, the U.S. informed the trade negotiation office, I believe last week, that there could be some problem with the agreement. However, they have not confirmed that it is unconstitutional and have not asked for any amendments at this time.

SHIPMENT OF ALASKAN OIL

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, this morning on the floor of the U.S. Senate, Senators Byrd and Bentsen acknowledged that the provision concerning oil shipped via Canada to the Lower 48 from Alaska was unconstitutional. In view of that admission on the part of those Senators and on the part of officials in the Department of Energy here in Canada, what is the Canadian Government going to do in response to a serious situation where the U.S. seeks changes in the wording of the agreement and we have not been prepared to make such changes ourselves?

Mr. John McDermid (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, as I said in my earlier answer, the U.S. has not made any formal presentation to Canada. The question is purely hypothetical until we get that request so there is no sense making a definitive statement at this time.

MINES AND MINING

CANADIAN EXPLORATION INCENTIVE PROGRAM—IMPACT

Mr. Guy St-Julien (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister and Member for Manicouagan. Thanks to the new measures announced last week by his Government, flow-through shares will again be available as an incentive to mining exploration, and the new Canadian Exploration Incentive Program will have a very special impact on Quebec and Canada.

Could the Prime Minister inform the House whether this new program was designed to maintain an adequate level of mining exploration by small companies and whether it meets the economic needs of mining communities in Quebec and Canada? Thank you!

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the question was also addressed to me by the Hon. Member for Abitibi in my capacity as Member for Manicouagan, and it is with great pride that I draw the attention of the House to the presence in our gallery of the Mayor of Baie-Comeau.

In fact, I must congratulate the Hon. Member for Abitibi on his exceptional work in connection with the flow-through shares program. I would like to point out that—obviously the Liberals are not interested in flow-through shares—the Association . . . Mr. Speaker . . .

Mr. Speaker: The Prime Minister may proceed.

Mr. Mulroney: Mr. Speaker, this is a very important matter for Quebec and for northern regions generally. I am surprised at the tumult among Opposition Members, because the Prospectors Association of Quebec has stated that it believes these measures will ensure continued employment, a climate of confidence for investors and a more stable climate for businesses. That is the result of the action taken by the Government and the Hon. Member for Abitibi!

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Mount Royal.

Mrs. Finestone: Mr. Speaker, it would be nice to hear some real questions answered.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Would you mind sitting down, then?

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps the Hon. Member could put a real question.

Mrs. Finestone: I will be happy to, Mr. Speaker. Can you guarantee a real response?

IMMIGRATION

REFUGEE STATUS CLAIMANTS—REFUGEE CLAIMS OFFICERS

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, of the 47,416 refugees in Canada, we now have a backlog of 13,900 ready to be processed by the Government. However, only 16 of the 27 officers of the Refugee Status Advisory Committee are left to rule on the claims. I suggest that the delays are unacceptable and sad human tragedies, causing emotional hardship to individuals and families. Why has the Minister laid off 11 of the most qualified refugee claims officers since March if the Conservative Government is really serious and wants to, as it says, speed up the claims processing system? It just does not make sense.

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, first, there are no hold-ups as a result of this because, as the Hon. Member well knows, the Immigration Appeal Board stage, whose appointments are now before the courts, has essentially slowed down the process. That resulted in fewer cases coming to the refugee group and they are dealing with those on a priority basis.

Let me say as well that if we had our Bills we would not be in this position.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mrs. Finestone: To my knowledge the Government has an obligation to apply the laws that are on the books. If the Government wants to pass humane, intelligent, and sensible legislation, we will adopt it.

Mr. Speaker: I ask the Hon. Member to put her question, please.

REQUEST THAT CLAIMS OFFICERS HAVE CONTRACTS EXTENDED

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, will the Minister not extend the contracts of these 11 highly respected, top-notch individuals in order to keep the process going at a time when there are thousands of refugee claimants? She knows that she should be hiring more rather than cutting half the staff.

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, let me say first that we did not lay off these people, as the Hon. Member knows. Their terms expired and their appointments are currently under review.

In addition, I would like the Hon. Member to be just as eloquent before her colleagues in the other place.

SHIPBUILDING

CONSTRUCTION OF POLAR 8 ICE-BREAKER—PROPULSION SYSTEM

Ms. Audrey McLaughlin (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport. According to a CBC report last night the Coast Guard's ice-breaker, Henry Larsen, which was launched in January, 1987, has not moved under its own steam in the last 15 months owing to the cyclo-electric engine system that is in it.

Based on this success, the Canadian Government has recently commissioned a second ice-breaker, four times as large, the Polar 8, with the same kind of system, against the recommendations of the Bruneau Committee which recommended that this was not an appropriate technology for this kind of ice-breaker.

In light of the failure of the power system for the Henry Larsen, why did the Government ignore the Bruneau report and its recommendations?

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, first of all, the Hon. Member for Yukon mentioned the word "failure" in connection with the Henry Larson. I think that is incorrect. Two problems were identified. The first problem concerned the engine and it has been solved. Another problem is being dealt with and it concerns the transformers. Normally, the ship should be operational by July.

As for the Bruneau Report, I believe that far from being ignored, a number of recommendations were accepted. The report did not put any particular emphasis on the propulsion system but on other considerations, and basically, as concerns the kind of technology applied here, we must rely on the expertise of the Canadian Coast Guard which insisted on having this type of propulsion on the Polar 8.

SALE OF ICE-BREAKERS TO AMERICAN COMPANY

Ms. Audrey McLaughlin (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, the Minister has not told us which July. However, we do understand that there are two proven technologies under discussion. One has proven that it does not work and one has proven that it does.

Given this, why is the Government allowing the sale to an American company of six Canadian ice-breakers which work, while spending millions of taxpayers' dollars for a system to power the Polar 8 which does not appear to work at all?

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, my colleague does not have accurate information. The six ice-breakers to which she is referring have this exact kind of electrical propulsion. We want to put the same system on the Polar 8 as was on the Henry Larsen. It did not fail. Two problems were corrected, and the Canadian Coast Guard considers that the best technology we can have for propulsion is the electrical one which is to be installed on the Polar 8.

RIDEAU RIVER—DESTRUCTION OF PICKEREL EGGS

Mr. Barry Turner (Ottawa—Carleton): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Acting Minister of the Environment. As we all know, Sir, each spring the Rideau Canal is refilled with water from the Rideau River, and this spring was no exception.

However, the sudden and untimely lowering of the Rideau River level this year exposed and killed most of the freshly laid pickerel eggs in a critical part of the river, angering all of the conservation clubs in the national capital region.

Why was this allowed to happen? Can the Minister assure the national capital regional conservation authorities that this will never be allowed to happen again?

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, as the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Carleton knows very well, the water flows and levels in the Rideau River and Rideau Canal system are very closely regulated because of a number of competing uses for water, including recreation, navigation, and water supply but, above all, to ensure that the environment and natural fish stocks are properly maintained and managed.

This year we had an inordinately low level of snow pack, some 35 per cent lower than average. In the two critical months when the spawning occurs, that is, April and May, the volumes of water were very much lower because the run-off was lower.

I am advised, on behalf of the Minister of the Environment and the Ministry of Natural Resources for Ontario, which manages these matters, that these are the reasons for the low level of flow and some 20 per cent reduction, at maximum, in the spawning of pickerel this year. It is not expected to be a serious problem in the over-all spawn of this particular species.

BILL C-124—REPORT OF LEGISLATIVE COMMITTEE

Mr. Ernie Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, as Chairman of the legislative committee on Bill C-124, an Act to amend the Canada Labour Code, I have the honour to report the Bill to the House, in both official languages.

Your committee has considered Bill C-124 and has agreed to report it without amendments.

AGRICULTURE—SIXTH REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. Geoff Wilson (Swift Current—Maple Creek): Mr. Speaker, as Chairperson of the Agriculture Committee, I have the honour and duty to present, in both official languages, the sixth report of the Standing Committee on Agriculture concerning the regulatory process for farm chemicals and pesticides.

RESEARCH INTO PREVENTION AND CURE OF SCHIZOPHRENIA

Mr. Barry Turner (Ottawa—Carleton): Mr. Speaker, it is my honour and privilege to present a number of petitions signed by 526 constituents of the national capital region, on behalf of the Ottawa—Carleton Chapter of the Canadian Friends of Schizophrenics, calling our attention to the fact that much greater research efforts into this serious illness are desperately needed in Canada.

ABORTION—SUPREME COURT OF CANADA DECISION

Mr. Dennis H. Cochrane (Moncton): Mr. Speaker, it is my honour and privilege as the Member of Parliament for the federal constituency of Moncton to present, pursuant to Standing Order 106, this petition signed by a number of my constituents, particularly from the parish of Notre Dame de Lorette in Dieppe, expressing their concern with regard to the recent decision by the Supreme Court of Canada as it applies to the Criminal Code and abortion.

They urge this House to take immediate action in order to rectify this situation so that there will be limits placed upon such procedure in Canada.

IMMIGRATION—REQUEST FOR CLOSER CO-OPERATION WITH VIETNAM

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, it is my honour and duty, pursuant to Standing Order 106, to present a petition from a number of residents of the constituency of Spadina who point out that one of the purposes of the Immigration Act is to facilitate the reunion in Canada of Canadian citizens and permanent residents with their close relatives from abroad but that many Canadians from Vietnam find that it takes many months or years to bring in their relatives.

Therefore, they ask the House of Commons to ensure that the Canadian Government negotiates actively with Vietnam to secure an agreement providing for closer co-operation on immigration, including quicker action on Canadian sponsorship.

CANADA-U.S. FREE TRADE AGREEMENT

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, I have another petition from a number of residents of the City of Toronto who point out that the trade deal between the Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Mulroney) and the President of the United States threatens the sovereignty of Canada and has no mandate from the Canadian people. They say that it would in fact reduce Canada's ability to plan the economic, social, and cultural programs we need and would integrate Canada further into the North American defence industrial base.

Therefore, they ask Parliament to ensure that a national debate takes place on the Mulroney-Reagan trade deal and that this debate results in a national general election before such an agreement is finalized.

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, it is my honour and duty, on behalf of constituents from Stump Lake, Shellbrook, and Debden, to put a petition before the House.

Because the Government does not have a mandate regarding the free trade agreement, and for various other reasons, the petitioners call upon the Government to reject the free trade agreement or to allow the people of Canada to reject it during a national general election.

GOVERNMENT ORGANIZATION ACT, ATLANTIC CANADA, 1987

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed from Thursday, May 5, consideration of the motion of Mr. Mulroney that Bill C-103, an Act to increase opportunity for economic development in Atlantic Canada, to establish the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency and Enterprise Cape Breton Corporation and to make consequential and related amendments to other Acts, be read the third time and passed.

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have an opportunity to debate Bill C-103, an Act to establish the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency. We are at the final stages of this debate and, as New Democrats, we certainly intend to vote in favour of the legislation.

However, I want to qualify that support for the Bill. While we believe this Bill is a step forward, it is not a major step. It falls far short of what one would like to see. We support it because it has the potential to do some good toward diversifying the economy of Atlantic Canada.

When the Economic Council of Canada released its quarterly report in September, 1987 it said that while the overall economy of Canada will expand, one of the challenges we will face is the uneven expansion of that economy. We were forewarned of the continuing boom conditions in certain areas of central Canada where a very high level of prosperity has been generated. However, other parts of Canada have experienced very little growth and, in some cases, no growth at all. While the prosperity in areas of central Canada will continue, the regions of Canada in the Atlantic, the West, and the North will still face economic challenges.

In August, 1987, the Organization of Economic Cooperation and Development released its report. This organization, composed of the 15 wealthiest western nations, studied the western economy and also found that regional disparity was especially noteworthy in Canada. When one considers that geographically Canada is the second largest country in the world, perhaps it is not surprising that we would not experience uniform economic growth and development across the country. However, even this report points out that the Government of Canada would have to face this challenge.

The most recent unemployment figures show that there is a 7.8 per cent unemployment rate in Canada generally, which is a modest decline in the last number of months.

While we are pleased with that downward trend, let me remind the House that the unemployment level in Newfoundland was 17.8 per cent. This suggests that a little over 80 per cent of the people in Newfoundland are employed but included in that number, as many as 50 per cent in some areas, are part-time employees. Many of them are part-time employees because there is no alternative. While they would prefer full-time employment, they are stuck with part-time work.

Therefore, in real terms, the unemployment rate in Newfoundland is much higher than 17.8 per cent if one takes into account the number of people who are seeking full-time employment.

Newfoundland is one province in Atlantic Canada where regional disparity is most obvious. The difficult economic times continue in spite of the relative prosperity which parts of central Canada are experiencing.

In 1976, the unemployment rate in Newfoundland was 13.4 per cent; increased to 16.8 per cent in 1982; and reached 18.9 per cent in 1983, just before the federal election. In 1984, the year of the federal election, it was over 20 per cent and went up to 21 per cent in 1985. In 1986, the unemployment rate was 20 per cent today and is down to 17.8 per cent. I suggest that it is irrelevant whether the unemployment rate is 17.8 per cent or 20 per cent. It is obviously excessively high.

It has been stated for years that something must be done to address this tragic unemployment situation in Newfoundland. The Government had an opportunity to do something when it decided to establish the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency. However, I am afraid that it will fall far short of the objective to remove regional disparity in that area. It will fall far short of creating economic development and business growth in order to employ those thousands of Newfoundlanders and others in Atlantic Canada who are seeking employment.

This becomes most obvious when one considers the financial contribution to ACOA. A minute amount—15 per cent of 1 per cent of the national budget—is being invested into ACOA, which I know you would think unreasonable, Mr. Speaker. It represents $200 million spread over five years, an obvious drop in the bucket.

While this is a small step in the right direction, the financial resources are not available for ACOA to do the job that is necessary.

A particular concern that many Atlantic Canadians expressed to the legislative committee when it travelled in Atlantic Canada was whether this would be new money or money that would normally go into the development of harbours or other economic development initiatives.

We saw in western Canada how money that should have been spent from a soils budget, a fishery budget, or parks budget was coming out of the Western Diversification Office. That is wrong.

Atlantic Canadians are concerned that funds which should come from the fisheries budget, the harbours budget, or another budget will go into the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency. They are concerned that it will not be new money but a regurgitation of existing government programs.

I was most amazed to see that the final draft of the legislation for third reading contained no goal to reduce regional disparity, which I thought was its primary objective.

The Government frequently states in the legislation that it may carry out certain initiatives. We need legislation which states that the Government shall support small business, shall support the fishery, shall support the mining sector, and shall support farmers. Governments have an uncanny ability to use the word "may" very creatively. It sounds like it will do something when it has not made the commitment to do so. There is no goal to reduce regional disparity. There is no assurance of equity or fairness among the provinces.

Atlantic Canada is a region comprising several provinces. Is it possible that the Province of Prince Edward Island, for example, could get all or most of the funds from ACOA for one or two years at the expense of other provinces? In terms of our shared jurisdiction and the relationship that the federal Government has with provincial Governments, there ought to have been some inclusion that the funds would be disbursed on an equity basis. In this way every province would know that it is getting its fair share of the financial entitlements associated with this legislation.

I think that we would all agree that $200 million a year over five years is simply not enough. It is inadequate. It is a drop in the bucket. The total budget would be a little over $1 billion. That is simply inadequate when we consider the horrendous challenges that must be overcome to bring down the serious levels of unemployment in Atlantic Canada.

I am very troubled by the fact that Senator Lowell Murray said at the beginning of this process that he would be making the final decisions on who will be receiving the finances. He will be making the final decisions on who will be supported by this legislation. That reeks of political patronage and political favouritism. That is something about which we have to take extraordinary steps to get around. We must get away from the political manipulations of these funds so that the decision making is made on business, economic and industrial terms as opposed to political terms which favour one Party, one person, or one firm over another.

I know that this would shock you, Mr. Speaker, but there is no mention of single industry towns in this legislation. What are we going to do with all the single industry towns that are struggling to survive as their major business phases out or phases down?

What about affordable housing? Is there anything in the legislation which talks about housing? No.

Is a community initiative fund mentioned in the Bill? No. As a matter of fact, infrastructure for communities is eliminated. If you lived in a community, Mr. Speaker, that wanted to develop its industrial infrastructure, better sewage facilities, better water facilities, better streets, better lighting, or better harbours, it could not use this money for those purposes. The one thing that virtually every municipality in the country calls out for is federal government sharing in terms of the development of municipal infrastructure. That is prohibited. Again, it is a real shortcoming.

The Bill does not make much mention at all of a youth initiative fund. As a matter of fact, I can say that it does not make any mention at all of one. The whole matter of the youth of Atlantic Canada is not addressed. This is another serious oversight.

There is nothing in terms of assistance for technological change adjustment. With respect to companies which are modernizing, upgrading, and introducing technological change, there is nothing in the Bill to provide additional funds for training and so on of employees or future workers.

Primary industries are overlooked in the Bill. There is no mention of the fishing industry. There is no mention of agriculture. There is no mention of mining. It is rather amazing that forestry and all these other areas were simply left out. These have been some of the major mainstays of Atlantic Canada's economy. To think that we are not introducing special initiatives and special attention concerning them, I find quite amazing.

Obviously environmental clean-up which is a problem in a number of the Atlantic Canadian municipalities was purposefully left out of the Bill—another major oversight.

If the Government really wants to help Atlantic Canada, then we need to have more financial resources available to do so. Perhaps we need to have a rethinking or a rejigging of our monetary policy.

In the newspaper today there is an article with respect to the Bank of Canada's high interest rate policy that is in place to dampen the inflationary fires of pockets of prosperity in central Canada. Goodness knows, there are very few pockets of extreme prosperity in Atlantic Canada that are driving inflation up. Interest rate policy that may be appropriate for the booming and healthy economy of pockets in central Canada act as a retardant in Atlantic Canada by keeping economic development and business development down. In fact, it is very difficult to jack up real business activity there, to kick-start a local economy back into life, with interest rates being as high as they are.

The article states:

> While interest rates were intended to take some of the steam out of domestic spending in Ontario, they have bitten just as hard in provinces like Newfoundland, where there is no steam and unemployment is 17.5 per cent.

This indicates that a shift in monetary policy would do a great deal to help Atlantic Canada.

With respect to government procurement, Governments at the federal, provincial, and local levels could make a combined effort to be procuring more of their goods and services from Atlantic Canadian suppliers. This causes some of us in the Opposition a great deal of concern, because the trade deal signed with the President of the United States will prohibit the Government of Canada from participating in a number of regional development programs and also from having procurement programs just for Atlantic Canada. They will have to be opened up for all of continental North America, which means that the Americans can bid on our government contracts in terms of federal government procurement. Goodness, Mr. Speaker, you will recall that the Americans identified 50 different government programs which they said subsidized the groundfish industry of Atlantic Canada. If that is the attitude of the Americans, then once this trade deal goes into effect and they can identify 50 different programs which they say subsidize the groundfish fishery, it means that we will be slapped with countervails and other retaliatory action.

In closing, I want to say that the legislation is a minor step in the correct direction. There is much to do and a long way to go. I hope we all recognize that this is the first step. Perhaps the next Government of Canada and, more accurately the next New Democratic Party Government of Canada, will be able to follow up very quickly to overcome the shortcomings in today's legislation.

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton—The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, Bill C-103 which relates to the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency will not do the job of providing economic assistance to Atlantic Canada. It is unfortunate since a great deal has been said about this legislation. A great deal of hope has been created in Atlantic Canada because of it. It was felt that this would be the piece of legislation or the agency that would finally do something about regional disparity in the country.

When we look at all the legislation and the programs that have come forward to try to deal with regional disparity, and when we look at the situation today and find that regional disparity is actually widening, it is incredibly deflating and demoralizing. In a country such as Canada the Government has announced and repeated its wish to reduce regional disparity and then we see what the results are. The results are a widening of regional disparity.

This Bill was based upon a report that the Government commissioned to try to find, through somebody who knew something about regional development, a way to deal with regional disparity, a way to deal with economic difficulties in Atlantic Canada. What the Government did was take the report and change the terms of it that were most important for getting the job done. The report calls for independent directors, people who would be above politics, people who would be interested in the particular application and who would be interested in the project being suggested. Yet what do we have? We have a board of directors that has been appointed and which consists mainly of Progressive Conservative people, those who have been involved in that Party and who have lent support to it.

How are we to get an independent consensus of what a project stands for, if the directors are more interested in passing something that will help people of their own political persuasion? That is not at all in the interests of Atlantic Canada. How will we bring people to Atlantic Canada and have them establish industries in areas that badly need these industries, if we cannot have infrastructure as part of this legislation? There is no allowance for money to be spent on infrastructure. Therefore harbours or services cannot be constructed under this particular legislation. If that cannot be done, we will find that the people, although they are willing to come to Atlantic Canada, will not come unless the services that they want and have every reason to take for granted in other parts of the country are provided in Atlantic Canada. That is very unfortunate, because services are a very real part of regional development.

The Government seems to be backing away from the concept of regional development. This is seen constantly. For instance, it is seen in the free trade agreement. To the very core the free trade agreement is discouraging and killing the concept of regional development. With the free trade agreement we will be moving to a market economy, which is what the United States wants us to do. If we move to a market economy, we move away from a mixed economy which has been so successful for Canada since the Second World War. The medical programs, the health insurance programs, and the concept of regional development are parts of the fibre of that program, but, the Government wants to back away from that.

The Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap (Mr. Riis) has asked what will we do about one-industry towns. There are 800 one-industry towns in Canada. Without the concept of regional development and aiding those industries that need assistance to make them viable, providing that they can be viable, we will lose not only the industries but the towns.

The Government believes that the private sector can do it. That is not the case. The private sector is not doing it. A good example is a recent Small Businesses Loans Act report for the 12-month period ended March 31, 1987. This report was issued a few weeks ago in April. Not only do we have a report which shows that the Government's programs are not working, but the Government cannot get the report out until more than a year after the end of the period dealt with in the particular report.

In the report it shows that the Small Businesses Loans Act, which gives government support to the lending institutions to guarantee that losses under these loans will be a certain small percentage, is not assisting the areas that need it most. The 85 per cent guarantee the federal Government puts on moneys lent by the chartered banks of Canada is not going to the customers who really need this assistance. If we look in the report we will see that the four Atlantic provinces together only receive 6 per cent of the money allocated under the Small Businesses Loans Act. That is a travesty. One cannot say that the private sector will do the job of correcting regional disparity, and then allow the banks to provide these loans to their privileged customers and not to the people who need this assistance. The idea of that program was to guarantee the major part of a loan to those who would not ordinarily qualify because they were somewhat of a risk. It turns out that the loans are not going to these companies or these people at all.

An interesting aspect of Bill C-103 is that the first part deals with the establishment of the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency. The second part deals with the Cape Breton Development Corporation. This Bill deals with two entirely separate things. It also deals with the Government's intention to do away with the industrial development division of the Cape Breton Development Corporation and to establish a new Crown corporation which will be called Enterprise Cape Breton Corporation.

The Government has also brought forward Bill C-127 which deals with the Cape Breton Development Corporation. It increases the allotment of the coal division of the Cape Breton Development Corporation from $25 million to $50 million. That is where the part dealing with the industrial development division should be. In the Cape Breton Development Corporation there are two divisions—the coal division, which is dealt with in Bill C-127, and the industrial development division, which is the second part of the Bill being discussed today. There should have been one Bill dealing with the Cape Breton Development Corporation, Bill C-127. The Government wants to do away with the industrial development division.

The Cape Breton Development Corporation Act was first passed in 1967 under the then Government of Prime Minister Lester Pearson. At that particular time it was deemed that the economy of Cape Breton was in such a state of deterioration that a special piece of legislation had to be brought forward to deal with this very serious question. A Bill was put forward that had two parts, one dealing with the coal division and the second one promoting industrial development through the industrial development division, a second division of that corporation.

If in 1967 the Government of Canada felt that the situation was so serious that this Act was necessary, what business has the Government today in dismantling the industrial development division? The economic situation in Cape Breton is worse now than it was 21 years ago. At that time there were heavy water plants. This Government said that they would not be closed until alternate employment was found for the workers, but it closed them anyway without any alternate employment. There is a steel plant employing only 50 per cent of the workers that it was employing 21 years ago. There is a mining industry that has had a substantial reduction, with at least a thousand people less today than in 1967. Because of the downturn in the economy, industries and offices located in industrial Cape Breton have left and consolidated in other centres in Atlantic Canada, thereby losing very valuable jobs, good paying jobs, and adding tremendously to the problems in that area.

The Government is now saying: "Let us get rid of the industrial development division; the people in 1967 did not know what they were talking about". They knew what they were talking about; it was an excellent piece of legislation. The industrial development division is an excellent facility and is much needed in Cape Breton Island.

Once the industrial development division under DEVCO is done away with, there will be only one division—the coal division. That will make Cape Breton Development Corporation an ideal candidate in the mind of the Government for privatization. That seems to be what the Government has in mind. It is not the welfare of the people of Cape Breton that is most important; it is facilitating the game plan of the Government. People do not matter. The Government has a little chart and it wants to ping off Crown corporations, regardless of what that indiscriminate selling off will do to the people who will be most affected by those sales.

By doing away with the industrial development division, there is only one division, the coal division, which will easily allow the Government to fulfil its dream of privatizing the Cape Breton Development Corporation. The problem in doing away with the industrial development division is that it is also greatly hampering the chances of Cape Breton to have a meaningful economic revival. The industrial development division had a budget that was given to DEVCO and that it could use for the betterment of Cape Breton Island. It has been successful. I would say that it has not been as successful as it should have been, because it has not been used as well as it could have been.

The facility is there, the vehicle is there, and the ability of this division to add greatly to the industrial and economic benefit of industrial Cape Breton exists today as much and perhaps more than it has in the past. By doing away with that division we do away with this budget. The Government is saying not to worry about the loss of the industrial development division in Cape Breton, because it is setting up a whole new Crown corporation which will be called Enterprise Cape Breton Corporation. It already has an agency in Cape Breton called Enterprise Cape Breton. Now it is to set up another corporation called Enterprise Cape Breton Corporation.

Not only does the Government have no idea how to deal with questions of regional disparity, but it has absolutely no imagination. It will have one agency called Enterprise Cape Breton and a second one called Enterprise Cape Breton Corporation. One would not doubt that the Government is very dull, but it is hard to believe that its dullness has allowed it to make such an unimaginative move as to name one corporation almost exactly the same as an existing agency. What it really intends to do, of course, is to have a corporation called Enterprise Cape Breton and another one called Enterprise Cape Breton Corporation so that it can merge the two without anyone really noticing. No one will ever know which is which because they both have the same name. It is absolutely ludicrous.

However, this stance taken by the Government has a purpose, that is, to do away with one of the agencies gradually without anyone noticing it is gone. Of course the two agencies with practically the same name will both be under the umbrella of the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency. Although this is a separate Crown corporation which the Government is proposing, Enterprise Cape Breton Corporation, the president of the corporation will be the same president as the president of the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency. It is economically incestuous. It is absolutely incredible that the Government would actually try to pass this off on the people this country.

What we will have is two agencies with the same name, the same president, under the same umbrella, and ultimately reporting through a diverse and devious means to the same board of directors. What we will really have is the same agency. The Government is trying to tell us that these are two different agencies. That is like saying that when you get change for a quarter you have three times as much money because you have two dimes and a nickel. That is the extent of the ridiculous position the Government is trying to pass off on the people of Cape Breton, and it will not work.

The people of Cape Breton will not accept, yet again, another kick in the teeth by this Government. It has been one thing after another. Every time the Government makes a move, we find that what it has given back is only part of what it has taken away, if in fact it gives anything back. This has to stop. It is evident now,—and it will become more evident as we go along if this Bill is passed—that other Departments will gradually cut back their spending. They will point to the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency and tell us that they do not have to spend on small craft harbours, transportation, or other departmental expenditures on structures and institutions which increase much needed employment in these areas. They will not provide the tremendously important services which are necessary if we are to have economic development.

Although there are some good features in this Bill, the good features will be completely nullified by the sleight of hand of the Government in the actual operation. The people of Cape Breton suffer most of all because they will not have the industrial development division; it is to be taken away from them. They will be left with just a piece of an agency, they already have in two separate parts.

I would ask the Government to delete any reference to the Cape Breton Development Corporation, to delete Clauses Nos. 25 to 52 dealing with the Cape Breton Development Corporation, and to make important and meaningful changes to the rest of the Bill so that it will in fact be of benefit to the people of Atlantic Canada instead of the sleight of hand it is right now.

Mr. Cochrane: Mr. Speaker, I do not want to prolong debate, but I would like to make a few comments with regard to the Hon. Member's speech. He made a number of suggestions, and perhaps innuendoes with respect to the board and how it is constituted. Everyone knows the board is appointed by the Minister responsible. The existing 19-member board was appointed in consultation with the provinces. When we look at the list of board members, we note they represent provincial Governments. I believe there is someone from the cabinet secretariat of both the Province of Newfoundland and the Province of New Brunswick. It would be very difficult for us merely to choose from among our friends, as the Member has indicated, people who would pass or approve projects according to who they were.

One of the debates in Atlantic Canada when the committee held its hearings was on whether or not the board should have decision-making ability. The Government, in the way it set the board up and since then in the speeches of the Minister responsible and in the deliberations of the committee, agreed that the board should not have decision-making power. Therefore it is impossible for the board to make a decision on whether application a or application b will be accepted. That is done through the bureaucracy; the board is there to set policy. I, for one, as a Member from Atlantic Canada did not want to see a board that could actually make decisions with regard to applications. That would be too much like the political influence to which the Hon. Member made reference, and we have avoided it. This board is not making decisions on applications. It is there to provide policy and direction and guidance to the Minister based upon its work experience in Atlantic Canada.

I can tell the Hon. Member as a Member from Moncton that when I looked at the list of members of the board I saw a name I did not recognize. I can assure him that I have no idea of that individual's political inclination, nor did I have any input into that actual nomination. In fact, it may have come almost strictly from bureaucrats. I see that at one time he was an employee of DRIE in Atlantic Canada. He then realized, perhaps, the errors of his ways, recognizing there was an opportunity to make a fair amount of money in the manufacturing industry of Atlantic Canada. He is now a successful entrepreneur, operating a small business which is very rapidly growing into a large business in the Dieppe area of my constituency.

I think the suggestions with respect to the board and its influence are misleading. We all recognize that anyone appointed by a politician is obviously open to the question of their political leanings. I think in this case that the Minister and the Government made every effort, in consultation with their colleagues and counterparts in the provinces, to ensure that we set up a board which would have a great deal of credibility, as well as a lot of expertise.

The Member talked about infrastructure. It is true that this program is not designed to solve the problems of Halifax Harbour. He should realize as a Member from Cape Breton—and I can tell him that as the Member for Moncton—that with only $1.05 billion we cannot afford in any one year to give $206 million to Halifax. That is a matter that can best be addressed by the Province of Nova Scotia negotiating an ERDA agreement with the Government of Canada through ACOA and its Minister responsible. That is the best way to handle infrastructure problems in Atlantic Canada.

This particular piece of legislation provides infrastructure for specific site problems. If there is a situation where an industry can start, if there is infrastructure development to take place leading to that site, there is an option under this legislation for the Minister to act. Those are two areas I wanted to clarify with regard to third reading. I appreciate the points of concern the Member has brought to our attention, and I trust that he understands the explanation I have given.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member for Cape Breton—The Sydneys (Mr. MacLellan) on rebuttal.

Mr. MacLellan: Mr. Speaker, I can appreciate the point of view of the Member for Moncton (Mr. Cochrane) although I do disagree. I feel there is a great deal of political intervention in the appointment of these directors.

It was initially stated that when this agency was to be set up the decision was to be made in Atlantic Canada. The main objection in Atlantic Canada was that you could have approval locally but you sent the projects to Ottawa for internal review in the Department of Regional Industrial Expansion which either delayed them until the projects were not feasible any more or just turned them down. It was believed that by getting perhaps a little more objective support for what was necessary—perhaps a feeling for the needs of the people in the region of Atlantic Canada—that more of the viable projects would be approved. As the Hon. Member for Moncton has said, the Government has scuttled that. We are back to the old ways of doing things, of sending them back to Ottawa; let Ottawa sit on them and ignore the situation in the areas that really need assistance.

What the Government is proposing is a step backward and we cannot afford that. We have to move ahead. We must narrow the gap in regional disparity, not widen it as this Bill will do. With respect to infrastructure, we are not talking about a major program such as Halifax Harbour. I made no mention of Halifax Harbour. That is a subsidiary agreement between the province and the federal Government. What we need are projects not directly related to one particular industry but ones that will have an over-all effect in areas which are really in serious economic difficulty. This piece of legislation does not address that need.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions and comments are now terminated. Debate. The Hon. Member for Grand Falls—White Bay—Labrador (Mr. Rompkey).

Hon. William Rompkey (Grand Falls—White Bay—Labrador): Mr. Speaker, it is ironic that we should have this debate today, coming as it does on the heels of the debate yesterday which I think was far more revealing, namely, the dispute between Canada and France over fish. It seems to me that was far more revealing about the intentions and the attitude of the Government. What disturbed me in the debate yesterday when we talked about Atlantic opportunities were the comments of the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark), and I believe he made the same comments on Friday. I refer to yesterday's Hansard. In response to a question from me on whether he would take firm action and get tough with France, whether he would do something tangible, whether he would do something realistic to bring this matter to a head and show the Government of France that we were not happy with the kind of treatment that our fishermen were getting, he said:

> I think one knows that a trade war which might begin with this kind of issue would go on to something else. One of the things it might go on to, I say to those who are interested in the economy of Atlantic Canada, for example, might be the investment in Michelin Tire.
> If there is a trade war, among the casualties in Canada of this trade war the Liberals are trying to start gratuitously, might be a thousand employees of Michelin Tire in Nova Scotia. The Liberal Party might want casually to throw those Canadians out of work.

How silly, Mr. Speaker. When the head of Michelin Tire in Canada heard those remarks, he said: "Oh, my goodness". Then he consulted his lawyer and said: "We are in business. We are not going to deal with that kind of statement". Do we think for a minute the Government of France has any way of pulling Michelin Tire out of Nova Scotia? Does anyone seriously think that that is possible? Michelin Tire is in business to make money like any other business. Making money comes first with any business. It is silly to say that the Government of France will somehow force Michelin Tire out of Nova Scotia. It is okay for the Minister to try to protect jobs that already exist in other parts of Canada, but when it comes to jobs in a province like Newfoundland which is totally dependent on the fishery, fish mean jobs for us; if we do not have access to fish we do not have jobs. It is all very well for the Government to say to one part of Canada, "we are very interested in protecting your jobs and therefore we are not going to start a trade war with France but those jobs in Newfoundland, those jobs of the fishermen, are expendable."

We are hostages, Mr. Speaker. The question becomes: Are we real Canadians or not? Are we equal Canadians? Do we have equal opportunity? The answer that we happen to come to is no. We do not have equal opportunity. Moreover, it is very apparent that we do not have any influence or clout with the Government of Canada. The seven seats we hold in this Parliament are not enough to give us the kind of access to equality that we need if we are to survive.

Fish is what we are all about. We are an island. We fish. That is what we came for in the first place. If our fishermen do not have access to fish, they do not have jobs. If they have to get permits from the Government of France before they go fishing, what is this country coming to? I ask again: Are we Canadians or are we not? Do we have a government that is prepared to stand up and fight for us? What Government should we refer to? Should we go to the French Government? Should we go to the French Parliament and put our case there? I want to see this Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency in that context. We do not want a billion dollars. What we want is fish. The Government of Canada is saying, like Marie Antoinette: "Let them eat cake". It is saying: "Do you want fish? No, you cannot have fish. You can have a billion dollars. Take a billion dollars. Let them eat cake". That is what we are getting from the Government, and it disturbs me as a representative of Newfoundland in this Parliament that that can be said and that we have to be hostages in that way.

Canadianism means more to us than that. Canada means more to us than that. When we voted, only by 52 per cent in 1949, not that long ago, we thought that we were getting into a country where we would be equal partners and that we would have a country which would stand up and fight for us. That is what we are asking the Government to do for us. We are not asking for a billion dollars. We do not want money. We do not want hand-outs. We want the possibility to make it on our own. That means access to fish.

This is the same Government when talking about opportunity to fish that said "no" to the Labrador shrimp company on the Labrador coast which asked for a quota of northern cod. It said: "You may live next to that resource. You may have fished it for a very long time. You may depend on it for a livelihood, but you cannot have a quota of offshore cod. There are other Canadian firms that can have it. The European Common Market can have it but you", the Labrador shrimp company, "cannot have access to that northern cod". As a result of that attitude, in the community of Cartwright which is not very big, maybe made up of 500 people, 80 people have jobs in the fish plant, but that plant will be closed this summer. It will be open for the salmon season, which is a few weeks. The fishermen will make a few dollars, but then the plant will be closed down because the fishermen will not have access to a supply of northern cod. That is the kind of policy in existence, and we are talking about Atlantic Canada opportunities. I say again: "Who wants a hand-out?" What people want is access to fish. That is what gives us economic survival. That is what we have been told by the Government that we cannot have.

I have other problems with this Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency. As I said before in the House—and I want to say it again today—the problem is that the money has to be spent on business. We heard the Hon. Member for Moncton (Mr. Cochrane) point out that we can have infrastructure if it is project-related. We have a lot of needs in Atlantic Canada that are not project-related. We have a lot of roads that need building. We have a lot of water systems that need putting in place.

Those things have to be there if we are to provide a climate in which business can survive. No business will go into a community that does not have a water system, a paved road, three-phase power or the kind of infrastructure in which business can survive. It is meaningless to come up with $1 billion to encourage businesses to set up if we do not put the infrastructure in place first.

Donald Savoie, the man the Government appointed, said much the same thing. He referred as a model to the original agency that was set up for Atlantic Canada, the Atlantic Development Board. Mr. Savoie was quoted in Atlantic Insight as saying that a return to a more grass roots, self-sustaining approach would be the better alternative. The article reads:

> Savoie used the old Atlantic Development Board (ADB) as a model for his new federal agency. Created in the early 1960's—

—created by a Conservative Government, a Government which at that time had some imagination and foresight:

> —the ADB was given six years to spend $150 million to improve the infrastructure of the region. During this period the area's highways were paved, hydro plants were built and much needed information on the Atlantic Economy was collected—

The article in Atlantic Insight goes on to say:

> The board's last president, Ian MacKeigan, the 72-year-old former Chief Justice of the Nova Scotia Supreme Court, remains convinced that the ADB, with its local board of directors and less ambitious mandate, was a very better approach to regional development—

Then we moved on to DREE, and we saw the same kind of flexibility to respond to the real needs of Canadians, the flexibility which is missing in this particular proposal.

Even what is in place now is causing us difficulties. There is still the same old red tape. I was in Goose Bay last week, and a man who owns a laundry, George Shepherd, came to me and said: "I want to build a new laundry. The economy in Goose Bay is good now, business is booming. I want to spend $300,000, I will create 12 jobs and I want money from the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency".

Do you know what they said to him? They said: "You can't get any money because you are a retail outlet". They said this to the man who is the only such operator in a community of 8,000 people. He has contracts with the Armed Forces and with the German Air Force. Queen Beatrix spoke to us this morning. He has a contract to service the Dutch Air Force in Goose Bay. He services the Marine Atlantic and the coastal boats. He operates a service industry, not a retail industry. Yet the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency is telling this man that he cannot qualify because he is in the retail business. That kind of inflexibility has to stop if we are to make any progress at all and if this is to do any good at all. Otherwise the $1 billion will be useless, or if it is not useless, it will certainly not come to us. This has to be changed as well.

We are told that the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency will somehow get into training. The North Warning System is being constructed in northern Canada and there are several sites in Labrador. Maybe 5 per cent of those employed at some of those sites are local people. In the long term, the same percentage will hold. This is because local people do not have the skills.

Many of the people who live in those communities are native people. Do you know what the Government has just done, Mr. Speaker? The Government has just cut back on the amount of funds available for post-secondary education for native people. The North Warning System is an initiative of the Government of Canada, and I applaud the Government for it. It is a good idea and it needs to be done. There is 100 per cent support for that. However, the Government has also cut back on the amount of training funds that will be available for post-secondary education for native people. The Government cannot have it both ways. It cannot say that it wants local and native people to be employed by the North Warning System and then cut off the training funds. If these people do not have training, they will not get the jobs.

What will the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency do about that? Will it solve that problem? That is an Atlantic Canadian problem, a training problem and an economic problem. I do not see any evidence that the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency is doing much about that at this time.

The last point I want to make deals with opportunities in Atlantic Canada. In Labrador, there are 10,000 megawatts of electricity flowing to the sea every day, untapped. There are all sorts of markets for that in the United States. There is a lot of potential there. There are even potential markets in other parts of eastern Canada. However, as a result of a combination of the free trade agreement and the deregulation policy of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Masse), it is less likely now that producing provinces will have to consult with the Atlantic Provinces before they develop their hydro resources.

When Quebec developed a hydro resource for sale to the U.S. in the past, it had to go to other provinces and ask if they wanted the power. The province was forced to go to the National Energy Board to get clearance. There was a mechanism to see that the Atlantic Provinces could take advantage of and buy that power. That mechanism no longer exists.

I make this point because in 1992, in a province which has 10,000 untapped megawatts of electricity flowing to the sea every day, we will run out of power. What supports business and industry? What it is that makes it go? What is the juice, the blood that runs through the veins of business and industry? It is power, and if we do not have that, what can we do? What will our future be like?

In this debate on the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency, we must look at development in context. We must look at it in the context of the free trade agreement and in the context of the deregulation policy of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources who says that anybody anywhere can sell anything to the United States at any time for whatever price he can get, and he does not have to make any deals with Atlantic Canada or ask Atlantic Canadians if they want to participate and develop hydro resources together. That is the reality.

I hope that the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency will work. I must say that not too many other approaches have. Although we have caught up in relation to where we were in the past, we are still, in relative terms, far behind, too far behind, the rest of Canada. I hope that the agency will work, but it will not work unless the items I have identified are dealt with and are solved.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The question is on the motion of Mr. Mulroney that Bill C-103, an Act to increase opportunity for economic development in Atlantic Canada, to establish the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency and Enterprise Cape Breton Corporation and to make consequential and related amendments to other Acts, be read the third time and passed.

Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): All those in favour please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): All those opposed please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): In my opinion the yeas have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Call in the Members.

And the division bells having rung:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please. Pursuant to Standing Order 13(4)(a), I have been requested by the Chief Government Whip to defer the division until today at a later time. Accordingly, the division on the question now before the House stands deferred until after Private Members' Business later this day, at which time the bells to call in the Members will be sounded for not more than 15 minutes.

WESTERN ECONOMIC DIVERSIFICATION ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed from Tuesday, May 3, consideration of the motion of Mr. Mulroney that Bill C-113, an Act to promote the development and diversification of the economy of western Canada, to establish the Department of Western Economic Diversification and to make consequential amendments to other Acts, be read the third time and passed, and the motion of Mr. Hawkes:

That this question be now put.

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the opportunity to make a few remarks on Bill C-113 and the Department of Western Economic Diversification. I want to stress the importance of this issue to western Canada. Certainly we can see that importance when we look at the continuing high unemployment figures, particularly in British Columbia where they have been in double digits almost continuously for the last five years. We are very concerned that the trade agreement reached between the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and President Reagan is going to confirm that kind of high unemployment. The Tories say that agreement is going to open up new opportunities for western Canada. In fact, it will confirm western Canada in its present role of hewers of wood and drawers of water. Unfortunately, while we are hewing more wood and drawing more water, there are fewer people doing it.

I want to look at some figures just produced by the Council of Forest Industries of British Columbia. They talk about the number of jobs in B.C. in the forest industry between 1978 and 1985. In 1978 the logging industry employed 23,168 people. In 1985 it was 19,488, or a loss of 4,000. In the wood industry there were 50,955 jobs in 1978. In 1985 there were 39,603, or a loss of more than 10,000. In pulp and paper there were 20,655 jobs in 1978, and in 1985 this had dropped to 16,850, or a loss of 4,000 jobs. The total in all those industries in 1978 was 94,778 jobs. By 1985 that had dropped to 75,941, or a loss of 20,000. Yet at the same time production went up.

In 1978 in the coast forest region we produced 32,338 thousand cubic metres of log production. In 1987 it had increased to 33,791 thousand cubic metres. In the interior forest region it was 42,815 thousand cubic metres in 1978, and 56,800 thousand cubic metres in 1987. The total for all of British Columbia in 1978 was 75,153 thousand cubic metres. That increased in 1987 to 90,591 thousand cubic metres. At the same time as we lost 20,000 jobs we are producing more wood than ever before.

Unfortunately, we are not processing that wood in British Columbia or even in Canada. We are exporting it. In 1978 we exported 585,500 cubic metres. By 1987 that had risen to 3,394,900 cubic metres. In other words, we were exporting six times as much in 1987 as we were in 1978. We are producing more, exporting more, and yet we have fewer employees. The trade deal is going to make that situation worse.

We can see the urgent need for some kind of redress when we look at the question of federal procurement in western Canada. Again the situation is getting worse. Certainly members of the Conservative Party in 1981 would not have been very happy that only 15.5 per cent of federal procurement came from western Canada. In 1984-85, when the Government came to office, it had dropped to 13.9 per cent. Yet in 1986-87 it dropped again to 11.5 per cent. It has continued to decline whether under a Liberal Government or Conservative Government. It dropped from an already poor figure in 1981-82, to a disastrous figure where the four western provinces are getting only 11.5 per cent of federal procurement.

British Columbia, as you know, has 11.4 per cent of Canada's total population, yet that province, combined with Alberta, Saskatchewan and Manitoba, only gets 11.5 per cent of federal procurement. British Columbia itself gets only 3.6 per cent of federal procurement for its 11.4 per cent of the population. Compare that with Ontario and Quebec which together get 76 per cent of federal procurement. We have nothing against Ontario and Quebec, we would simply like to have our share. We are concerned that this Bill does not address that kind of systemic inequity directed toward western Canada and which, I might point out with reference to the Bill just passed, is also shared by Atlantic Canada.

We are concerned that the whole western diversification initiative is not part of a co-ordinated government plan which will see diversification and regional development take place in western Canada. For example, we can look at an editorial in today's Toronto Star which points out that the Bank of Canada's high interest rate policy is adversely affecting regions outside of central Canada. The article says that in his crusade to slow the Ontario economy, Bank of Canada Governor John Crow has asked the rest of Canada to pay an inordinate price. In March and April the other nine provinces together lost 7,000 jobs.

The Bank of Canada and the Government are concerned that perhaps the economy of southern Ontario is superheated so they want to cool it off a little bit. In doing so by raising interest rates and the value of the dollar, they are cooling off an economy which has been on ice for the last several years, the economy of western Canada and eastern Canada. We in British Columbia do not need to have our economy cooled off. We do not need high interest rates to prevent the boom from getting out of hand because we have not seen the boom. We are still trying to recover from the recession of 1982, 1983, 1984, 1985, 1986 and 1987. It is now 1988 and we are still facing some very difficult times.

There are people in my constituency who were laid off five years ago and still have not found work. Young people used to be able to expect that they would find work on Vancouver Island or elsewhere in British Columbia when they grew up. They are now having to come to Toronto to find work. We have policies geared toward central Canada which do not deal with the very real concerns in western Canada. Bill C-113 and the whole western diversification initiative does not begin to deal with that issue.

Raising the value of the Canadian dollar vis-à-vis the American dollar will make it much more difficult for our exports to compete in the American market. All the Government's very optimistic projections in terms of the trade agreement with the United States were premised on a 73 cent or 74 cent Canadian dollar. Now that it is up to 81 cents our products are much less competitive and the trade deal will definitely result in job losses for Canadians.

We are concerned that while the goal of Bill C-113, western diversification, is good, the commitment of the Government and the provisions of the Bill do not reach toward that goal in any significant way. For example, the Government has committed $1.2 billion over five years to this fund. That works out to something like $60 million on an average for each of the four western provinces per year. Considering the massive problems and the need out there, this will be no more than a drop in the bucket.

I want to emphasize that my concerns on this issue are not simply partisan. We see in the submission of the Canadian Federation of Independent Business to the committee that these concerns are shared by many people across Canada. As you know, Mr. Speaker, the Canadian Federation of Independent Business could not be accused of supporting the New Democratic Party as a general rule. It is not a group of closet socialists or anything. Their "Executive Summary" reads in part as follows:

> Yet our enthusiasm has been tempered by growing concern that the Western Diversification initiative is degenerating into at least one or all of the following:
> —a political slush fund to support vulnerable constituencies, lure in big business or bail out obsolete industries in hopes of getting short-term political profile
> —a bureaucratic slush fund available for other line departments and Ministers to raid in lieu of other national programs that should have their fair share spent in the West
> —a narrow and highly centralized approach to diversification with continued emphasis on megaprojects or traditional resource extraction and development
> —a confusing "black box" lacking clear criteria or policy direction, and on a collision course with a myriad of client groups who are inevitably going to see thousands of applications rejected and thousands of hopes dashed.

In other words, the Canadian Federation of Independent Business is very concerned that the Western Diversification Fund seems to be very unfocused, seems to be at the mercy of Departments which can raid it, and seems to be something that can be used for partisan political advantage. It is arousing all kinds of hopes but there is very little chance that the majority of those hopes will be fulfilled.

In exchange for this the Canadian Federation of Independent Business suggests that there should be a specific focus on the small business sector. It is important that we recognize the importance of the small business sector in this House, not only with our speeches but in the legislation that we pass. As the Federation points out in its brief, job growth in the past few years in western Canada has been almost exclusively from the small business sector.

In Manitoba in 1985, 64 per cent of new jobs were created by small business. In Alberta 66 per cent of new jobs were created by small business, that is businesses with less than 20 employees. In Saskatchewan 76 per cent of new jobs were created by small business, and in British Columbia the figure was over 100 per cent because big business, companies with more than 500 employees, lost 6 per cent of the jobs they previously had.

It is, therefore, important that we recognize the entrepreneurial spirit in ways which will help it to develop. It is not enough to say that small business and entrepreneurs will find a way to develop. One of the roles of government is to create the structures, the infrastructure, and the processes which will enable that small business spirit to take root.

If you look at the record of New Democratic Party Governments in Saskatchewan, Manitoba, and British Columbia, you will see that while we are sometimes accused of being over-centralist and everything else, in fact the initiatives which we have brought in have helped small business much more than some of the initiatives of the so-called free enterprise Parties. We need to find ways to help that spirit find outlets in ventures which have a reasonable chance of success.

The Canadian Federation of Independent Business suggests four major areas of activity, the first being community development. It is good to see that the Canadian Federation of Independent Business recognizes that development takes place in the community, that it is not simply a matter of the lone entrepreneur going out by herself or himself against a hostile world.

Therefore, the Federation suggests the following four major areas of activity:

> 1. community development, whether it be seed capital for establishment of local business advisory networks and economic planning at the local level, or through financing of sectoral trade associations to assist with market research and information
> 2. risk financing and equity investment in small business, through use of various regional tax incentives or W.D.O.-backed loan guarantees
> 3. promotion and support of a western entrepreneurial culture
> 4. advocacy throughout all federal agencies on behalf of the West.

These are some of the things we would like to see happening. I would particularly like to emphasize the role of women entrepreneurs because a great many of the new businesses which have been started in the last number of years, up to 65 per cent, have been started by women. In fact, new businesses started by women have a much higher rate of success than businesses started by men. Yet, very often, these are the very businesses which need help. That is a special need which should be recognized in this legislation.

Unfortunately, with regard to the funds being spent there seems to be a continued over-emphasis by the Government on megaprojects. We have seen no clear plan for spending the $1.2 billion in the Western Diversification Fund. For example, there was a commitment of millions of dollars to the Salmonid Enhancement fund in British Columbia. We all admit that that money was badly needed. However, it should have come from the regular A-based budget of the Department of Fisheries and Oceans. Instead, it came from the Western Diversification Fund which gives point to the criticism I read earlier of the Federation of Independent Business that that fund can be used as a slush fund for bureaucrats from other Departments which will raid it to get money for their projects.

That money should have come from the regular budget of the Department of Fisheries and Oceans. It is part of the Government's commitment to British Columbia, part of an ongoing commitment. To say that it is part of a new western diversification initiative is sheer nonsense and poppycock. The Prime Minister promised that the money for the western diversification initiative will be new money. It seems to me that it should have been new money for the Department of Fisheries and Oceans.

There was a commitment of $418,000 from the Western Diversification Fund for the BF Goodrich plant. There are no new jobs in that. There is $9.5 million to the second largest pulp and paper complex in Japan in order to establish a huge complex in northern Alberta. Surely large operations like that should be able to generate their own capital either internally or through bank loans. Why is an already limited Western Diversification Fund being frittered away in situations like this?

Let me refer again to the concerns that were raised by Mr. Dennis Young, President of the Canadian Association of Single Industry Towns, when he appeared before the committee. He pointed out that over 400 single industry towns have disappeared from Canada in the last 100 years. Certainly, many of those single industry towns that have disappeared were in western Canada. Yet the Bill does nothing to recognize the need to build on community strengths of single industry towns and help them diversify. There is nothing in the Bill that specifically guarantees that there can be help for community development, and for community infrastructure.

Mr. Young pointed to the need for a bottom-up approach to development. He pointed to the need for western initiatives to work with local communities for the kind of development that will be in line with what the communities as a whole want, rather than selectively choosing projects and approving them on a proposal by proposal basis.

Finally, I want to refer to some of the proposals that the New Democratic Party has made. We want a $1.2 billion annual fund for community infrastructure all across Canada. However, this would particularly help western Canada. We propose a $200 million annual fund for diversification of single industry towns; $500 million for affordable housing and to perhaps work on overcoming that backlog in native Indian communities to which we have referred. We propose funding for community initiatives and youth initiatives; funds to help people cope with the problems of technological change.

In conclusion, we do not oppose this Bill but certainly have no confidence that it will be able to do the very important job for western Canada that we believe needs to be done.

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Mr. Speaker, I have had some further thought on this Bill—

Mr. Fennell: Watch out.

Mr. Benjamin: —which I know my hon. friends opposite will be anxious to hear. I was in Saskatchewan last weekend and talked to many people. I deliberately raised the question of western diversification and three or four farmers to whom I spoke told me that it had been tried before. That is what I told the House earlier when I spoke to this Bill. When one looks at the history of western Canada, one can see that we have been through this scheme three or four times. Furthermore, they do not believe in this program. In fact, their disbelief is such that they even nominated me to run again in the next election. If they had believed in this program, they would not have bothered.

No matter what political party is in power, it must answer the question: Diversify to what? There must be a national industrial strategy which involves governments at all levels, the private sector, agriculture, the fishery, forestry, and the trade union movement. That is what has been done in West Germany, Holland, Sweden and Norway for the last 30 years. Such a strategy sets out a plan for the economy through consultation. The largest corporations in Canada plan their activities for the next 20 years. Yet governments in the last 40 years have devised temporary, ad hoc programs.

My hon. friend, the Hon. Member for Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands (Mr. Manly) referred to the comments of the Canadian Federation of Independent Business. That is hardly a group that can be referred to as wild-eyed socialists. They referred to this Western Diversification Program as nothing more than a narrow, short-sighted operation. Government Members who were here during the days of Otto Lang will recall speeches about political slush funds. That is what the Canadian Federation of Independent Business calls this fund. It is a highly centralized bureaucratic operation which creates the potential of conflict between Departments. The Bill does not give the Minister the authority he requires to deal effectively with other Departments.

I repeat that there must be a goal for diversification. There must be an industrial strategy that takes into account our geography, our climate and the distance over which we must move goods that are processed and manufactured in the regions of Canada. There should be a mechanism to equalize transportation costs so that they are a relatively neutral factor and would allow processors and manufacturers throughout Canada to deliver their goods to the market with an equal chance to compete.

The competition should be on quality and quantity of product, capability of delivery, warranties, salesmanship, advertising, all the things that go into selling something that someone is producing, manufacturing or processing. This Bill does nothing to attack a problem that we have always had in western and Atlantic Canada. We discriminate against people because of where they happen to live and where they happen to produce their goods. Therefore, this legislation cannot accomplish what the Government wants it to do, something which we all agree should be done.

There is a classic case in western Canada and Atlantic Canada where the so-called free market forces do not work. I say that because entrepreneurs in western and Atlantic Canada are disadvantaged. They do not have a full and fair chance under the classic free market forces because of where they are located. The deck is stacked against them right off the bat.

Let me illustrate my point, Mr. Speaker. In the late 1940s and the early 1950s we got into the growing of rapeseed, which is now called Canola. We established up to a dozen oilseed processing plants in the three prairie provinces. They were doing pretty good. They were gradually building up and establishing a market in central Canada, the United States and overseas. However, there was a problem with respect to the cost of moving it. There was a famous court case which dealt with the problem. It occurred when Mr. Diefenbaker was Prime Minister of Canada. Rapeseed was finally established as a grain, which took a lot of doing. Rapeseed products then became grain products. Thus by the late 1960s there were oilseed crushing plants going in all three prairie provinces. I think there were one or two in or near your city, too, Mr. Speaker.

What happened then? The next thing we know the Americans got great subsidies on soybeans, corn and cotton seed, as well as palmseed oil. They were putting stuff into Canada in the name of free trade. Our processors in western Canada were faced with transportation costs just to get their product to Ontario, not to mention the United States or overseas. To add insult to injury, this occurred when the Government of the day did not have an industrial strategy. What did they do? It gave, I believe it was, $6 million in grants to build an oilseed crushing plant. Do you know where that was, Mr. Speaker? In Windsor, Ontario. What did they crush? American corn and soybeans. There went diversification in western Canada down the drain. I do not think there are more than two or three oilseed crushing plants left in existence—

An Hon. Member: There are six.

Mr. Benjamin: Out of one dozen half of them have gone belly up.

Unless our geography and our industrial strategy is taken into account, this Bill will not accomplish what is the Government's objective, an objective with which we all agree. That means that under the industrial strategy we will have to discriminate in favour of a region such as western Canada, northern or Atlantic Canada which could well mean less growth, or a bit of a standstill in growth, in the golden triangle from Quebec to Windsor.

I put this question. Why do we want Toronto or Montreal to get any bigger? What for? Glorified ant hills is what they are. Why would one want to establish another manufacturing plant in that part of the country? As far as I am concerned Toronto needs another manufacturing plant like it needs a hole in the head. We have unemployed people in northern Ontario and northern Québec. There are pockets of unemployment in different parts of the country. With an industrial strategy that is workable and meaningful, those are the places to which development would be directed.

I received a letter this morning from a manufacturer of wood products in British Columbia. He has offices in Vancouver and Rossland. I understand that he ships about 1,500 to 2,000 carloads of plywood every year. One could call that some amount of diversification. There is an application before the National Transportation Agency to abandon the whole railway line on which he ships his product. It is the boundary subdivision, 100 miles of track running through Castlegar. While we are debating this Bill, this nonsense in the House, there is a business that has been in operation for many years, a very reputable business which produces a good product, which is losing that railway line. This means that it is finished.

What are we doing? We are sitting back and letting the two national railways go through the process of abandoning a total of 15,000 miles of railway tracks in the country over the next five years. Why would one want to locate a processing plant or a manufacturing plant somewhere out West or somewhere in Atlantic Canada? What for, when one has to resort to putting the product manufactured on overcrowded highways at higher costs while one is still as far away from the markets as was one before? Why would one bother? What incentive is there to diversify in the West or in Atlantic Canada? There is not any. Our market is not big enough.

I return to my main point. There must be an industrial strategy. It has been done in other places. It reminds me of the story of the rooster which went out for a walk one morning. Egg production had gone down in the hen house and the farmer was about ready to butcher all the chickens. The rooster was pretty worried about it because he was going to get the axe as well. So he went out for a walk one morning and happened to get into the zoo. He came across an ostrich nest in which there were some ostrich eggs. He ran back to the chicken coop and rounded up all the hens and took them over to the ostrich nest. He said: "Look girls, I am not complaining but just look at what they are doing in other places". That is what we need to be doing. I am not suggesting that we copy what other countries have done word for word or line for line, but we need to adopt an industrial strategy meant for Canada that suits our requirements. It must fit in with our geography and climate. Darn it all, out West and in Atlantic Canada we can produce things just as good as anybody else anywhere else in the country if we are just given a fair chance to do so. This legislation does not set up that fair chance.

People talk about a level playing field, whether it be with respect to free trade or anything else. It is all very well to have a playing field that is level, although I have never seen a level one yet. You will know, Mr. Speaker, that even a football field is not level. When we talk about level playing fields, that is fine, but when the other guy has the ball on our 10 yard line, then that ain't very level, is it? That illustrates what happens when something is being produced in western Canada in competition with the same thing in central Canada or in the United States. They have the ball on our 10-yard line. That is the name of the game. That might mean not only allocating where industry goes, agreeing where industry goes and allocating the area. It will mean a greater number of transportation subsidies. They can be called "subsidies" or transportation incentives, I do not care what name is put on it. If the Americans do not like it, tough cookie.

South of my province the States of North Dakota, South Dakota, and Montana are economic deserts. They have the same problem that we do. The distance that they are from their markets means that industry in those three states is minimal, if in existence at all. There the free market forces are allowed to continually be in play. That is not the Canadian way. That is not the way things have been done in Canada since before Sir John A. Macdonald.

If there was anything recognized by our forefathers and the people in Parliament in 1867 and thereafter, it was if the whole nation is going to be developed and kept together, some type of an equity of opportunity had to be built into our laws, transportation, and in government programs of various types. It is a fact of life in a northern nation like ours.

Again, Sir, I do not want to be partisan, because it will not matter what political Party is in power. Unless it is done in that manner, this Bill and others like it will not work. They are doomed to failure. We have gone through this before. Over the years we have had special agencies, special legislation, and special programs up to here. They last a year, or two, or three, and then die a deserving unnatural death.

I hope the Government will take into account what we in the Opposition, certainly my colleagues and I in the New Democratic Party, have had to say on this issue. We have tried to say those things in a positive and constructive manner to urge upon the Government to do it differently than we did it before. Let us not repeat the same mistakes and messes that were made before. We will all be happy about that. We will all make western Canada and Atlantic Canada much better places in which to live.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is the House ready for the question? A question or comment from the Hon. Member for Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands (Mr. Manly).

Mr. Manly: Mr. Speaker, we were all fascinated by the story of the rooster, the chicken, and the ostrich. I wonder if the Hon. Member could repeat the punch line for us.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I would like to congratulate the Hon. Member for being nominated for the next election.

Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The question is on the motion of Mr. Hawkes. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): All those in favour of the motion please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): All those opposed please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): In my opinion the yeas have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Call in the Members.

And the division bells having rung:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please. Pursuant to Standing Order 13(4)(a), I have been requested by the Chief Government Whip to defer the division until a later time. Accordingly, the division on the question now before the House stands deferred until after Private Members' Business later this day, at which time the bells to call in the Members will be sounded for not more than 15 minutes.

The Hon. Government Whip.

Mr. Fennell: Mr. Speaker, I would request that we suspend the House for five minutes until five o'clock and at that time commence Private Members' Hour.

SITTING SUSPENDED

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is it the wish of the House to suspend the sitting until five o'clock this day?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

At 4.55 p.m. the sitting of the House was suspended.

• (1700)

SITTING RESUMED

The House resumed at 5 p.m.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): It being five o'clock, pursuant to order made Wednesday, May 4, 1988, the House will now proceed to the consideration of Private Members' Business as listed on today's Order Paper.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' BUSINESS--MOTIONS

SENATE REFORM

REQUEST FOR CONSIDERATION OF REPORT OF SPECIAL JOINT COMMITTEE

Mr. Blaine A. Thacker (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, you will notice from the Order Paper that Motion No. M-84 is in my name. I am asking for unanimous consent of the House, and indeed we have had negotiations to that end, that the motion be switched from my name to that of the Hon. Member for Medicine Hat (Mr. Porter).

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is it so agreed?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Bob Porter (Medicine Hat) moved:

That, in the opinion of this House, the Government should give consideration to the report of the Special Joint Committee on Senate Reform, presented to the House during the second session of the Thirty-Second Parliament.

He said: Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure to speak this afternoon on Motion No. 84. Certainly, the issue of Senate reform has been something that this country has looked at and dealt with for a great many years. Very little over that time has in fact changed. However, I believe there has been enough discussion to suggest the current situation is unsatisfactory and is in need of change. There are those, I suppose, with views from all across the political spectrum. Some are opposed to the Senate and feel it should be abolished. I think members of the New Democratic Party hold that view. There are others who have studied this issue through the years and have come up with a variety of proposals for change to the Senate. The election of the Senate is only a first step.

In looking over the recent history, and I say "recent" in the perspective of this country, in the last 20 years there have been a variety of reports and studies, starting in 1969. The federal Government White Paper proposed a new Senate with half of the Senators appointed by the provinces and the other half by the federal Government. In 1972, a Special Joint Committee of the Senate and the House of Commons on the Constitution recommended increasing the number of western Senators and reducing the power of the Senate to a suspense of veto.

A 1975 constitutional amendment awards one Senate seat each to the Yukon and the Northwest Territories, bringing the total to 104 Senators. In 1978, Bill C-60 proposed replacing the Senate with a House of Federation, with the provinces and the federal Government each appointing half the members based on proportional representation. In 1979 the Supreme Court ruled that the proposals represent a constitutional amendment and would, therefore, require the approval of provincial legislatures as well as the federal Parliament.

The Canada West Foundation recommended replacing the Senate with a House of Provinces. British Columbia, the Ontario Advisory Committee on Confederation and the Canadian Bar Association also submitted reform proposals. In 1979 the Pépin-Roberts Task Force on Canadian Unity proposed replacing the Senate with a provincially appointed Council of Federation. In 1980, the federal and provincial Ministers responsible for constitutional matters discussed a new Upper House involving the provinces with no resolution. The report of the Standing Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs entitled "Certain Aspects on the Canadian Constitution" affirms the need for a nominated and substantially reformed Senate.

The Quebec Liberal Party's base paper entitled "A new Canadian Federation" proposed replacing the Senate with a federal council composed of provincial Government delegates. Again in 1981, the Canada West Foundation supported direct election of Senators based on single province-wide constituencies. In 1982, the Constitution Act provided for a six-months suspensory veto for the Senate with respect to constitutional amendment. Alberta also recommended provincial appointment of Senators, the Senate debates, the election of Senators by the people.

In 1983 a Special Joint Committee of the Senate and the House of Commons on Senate reform starts work in April. The Business Council on National Issues supports election of Senators. The final report, the one we are discussing today, the report of the Special Joint Committee on Senate reform, was tabled in January of 1984. A lot of work went into the tabling of the Joint Committee on Senate Reform. I think those who have read it will agree there are areas in that report that were certainly well worthy of consideration and study at the time and have merit in following up on some of the recommendations that have been made.

What kind of elected Senate would serve Canada's system of responsible Government? The Senate, I think, should have significant powers but should not be able to undermine Canada's well tried system of responsible Government. Senators should have a significant degree of independence of Party which would enable them to speak on local and regional issues without adhering to Party policy.

We should consider the original purpose of the Senate, and perhaps we tend to get away from this when we are looking at suggested changes. The Senate was created in 1867 to fill not one but two major roles in the new federation. One was to protect and represent, so far as legislation was concerned, what Sir John A. Macdonald termed "sectional interests". This included those peculiar to a region or linguistic or religious groups. The other major role was to help political stability by acting as a counterweight to the elected House of Commons. These two rules were carried out by the exercise of sober second thought in review of legislation emanating from the Lower House, the House that drew its mandate from elections based on population, although in those days the franchise was restricted.

Criticisms have been directed at the Senate for a number of years, probably more so in the last few years, and again in the last several months, where most of us in our constituencies have been reminded of some of the Bills which have been in the Senate for some time and the role being played by those in the Senate.

I suppose the appointment of Senators has to be a difficult issue for any Prime Minister to face. No matter what political Party involved, the question always arises as to the patronage aspect that comes forward in appointments to the Senate. Criticisms include the partisan nature of some Senate appointments, the poor attendance of some Senators, the under-representation of various groups such as women, aboriginal people and ethnic groups, the numerous Senate vacancies which are allowed to continue unfilled, the lack of balance in the number of Senators affiliated with different Parties, the constraints that Party discipline imposes on the independence of Senators and the fact that the present distribution of seats does not reflect the growth in western Canada's population. It is argued that all these deficiencies have seriously hindered the effective functioning of the Senate.

Most recent arguments for Senate reform have focused on achieving one of the original goals of the Senate, the protection and representation of regional interests. These arguments spring from a belief that Parliament needs a Chamber which represents those interests with more political authority than can be achieved with the Senate appointed in the present way. The Senate has been successful in the carrying out of its functions in improving legislation and investigating issues of public policy. I think it has been acknowledged that the Senate makes useful contributions to the work of Parliament in carrying out these functions—

Mr. Prud'homme: Sometimes.

Mr. Porter: —with reference to private and public Bills. The Senate holds public committee hearings. It is especially effective in a number of areas. I do not think there are Members in this House who at some time have not served on a committee with representation from the Senate. I think all of us from time to time have appreciated the contribution which those with expertise in certain areas have made to those committees. Certainly there are many capable people who have been appointed to the Senate who are contributing at the present time, and no doubt will continue to contribute, but we must keep in mind that the Senate itself comes under criticism by members of the Senate.

Perhaps I could comment on some of those criticisms. When we talk about change, some of the changes would have to be made constitutionally, others can be made in the Senate itself. Changes could bring about some restructuring, but does it mean that we are stuck with what we have now?

In a report which one member of the Senate gave, he said:

> Much can be done to improve the Senate without any constitutional amendments at all and the Senate's Lamontagne Committee of 1980 set it down in black and white. Some of it would only require ordinary legislation. Some of it the Senate could do itself.
> One of the problems with the present Senate is dead wood: Members who do not turn up regularly, let alone work. This is often exaggerated. My own experience is that at least two-thirds of the members do attend pretty regularly, and at least half do work hard and conscientiously when the Senate is sitting and in committees, which often sit when the Senate itself is in recess. Many are also active in their home communities, involved in various public activities, often doing constituency work . . . But some dead wood undoubtedly is.
> —provision to vacate a seat of any Senator who failed, for two consecutive years, to attend at least one-third of the sittings in each each year. The Constitution already stipulates that any Senator who fails to turn up at least once in two consecutive sessions loses his seat; and a fair number have lost their seats accordingly. But others have been literally wheeled in once in two sessions and so retained their seats. Moreover, a single session may now last for years (a recent one lasted for three), so that a resolute valetudinarian—

A person—

> —could retain his or her seat by a single appearance in seven or eight years.

Mr. Prud'homme: That is a shame.

Mr. Porter: I think it is a shame, and I think all of us who sit in this House appreciate the work that has to be done on behalf of those people whom we represent. Perhaps if there were an elected Senate there would be an onus on those in the Senate who felt that they had to represent their constituents with the same diligence as those of us on all sides of this House feel obligated to do as we make representations on their behalf.

I think it has been concluded by most of the groups, certainly the Joint Special Committee on Senate Reform, that we should have an elected Senate elected directly by the people of Canada.

Mr. Prud'homme: Hear, hear. I totally agree.

Mr. Porter: I am glad the Hon. Member for Saint-Denis (Mr. Prud'homme) agrees with me.

Mr. Prud'homme: My Party agrees too.

Mr. Porter: I am pleased to hear that. I do not hear very much from those sitting next to me in the New Democratic Party.

It is difficult for all of us to address the problems that we face with the Senate. We all have different perspectives of what should happen. We have different views, depending upon the region of the country one is from. Hon. Members are aware of the activity in western Canada of the Triple E Senate, the proposal made primarily in Alberta that will be gathering views in other parts of the country. One of the problems comes down to how we would elect the Senate, for how long and for what terms. But I think there is consensus enough within this country of ours at present to come up with proposals that would not only enhance the role of the Senate, the role of those as individuals who are there, but to make it more meaningful for what it was originally intended, that is, to represent the regions.

There is no doubt that regions have changed dramatically since the Senate was formed. Our population base has shifted. There are areas of Canada that feel through our electoral system that they are perhaps under-represented in this House. The shift in population in recent years I do not think is reflected as accurately as it might be. Some of the proposals coming out of the 1984 report point out some ways that could address those changes which so many of us feel are needed.

We are told frequently, after so many abortive attempts at Senate reform from time to time which come from vigorous action for fundamental change in the Senate, that it would be a mistake to adopt inconsequential reforms. Only a politically strong second chamber can dispute, when necessary, decisions taken by a government that is supported by the House of Commons. Therefore, only an elected Senate can satisfy the original intent of the Fathers of Confederation, namely, the provision of the Chamber that would balance judicially the power of the Commons, which is based on representation by population safeguarding the legitimate interests of the people of the less populous provinces.

I know there are others who wish to speak.

Mr. Prud'homme: Keep going. You are doing well. There are so many in the House that we have a stampede of people. This looks like the Senate in here.

Mr. Porter: Perhaps it does.

Mr. Prud'homme: We haven't got a quorum.

Mr. Porter: The Hon. Member has noticed. I did not mention that.

Mr. Prud'homme: I am here because I am interested.

Mr. Porter: We are talking about reform. Talk over the last 20 years obviously has not achieved very much. I think it is time that something was implemented. We have good groundwork on the report recommended by the joint task force. If there is a better method of Senate reform, let us examine it and the numerous options available and make the necessary changes. If we could do it in a non-partisan way, it would be most beneficial to Canadians. I would not want to curb the aspirations of members of this place who may not be back again either by choice or electoral preference for positions that may become open at some time. However, I think the time is long overdue that we take a serious look at what I, many in this House, and the vast majority of Canadians feel is the need for Senate reform.

• (1720)

Ms. Pauline Jewett (New Westminster—Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, I listened with interest to the Hon. Member's remarks, but had great difficulty relating them to the report of the Special Joint Committee on Senate Reform which was presented to the House in January of 1984 and which is the subject of this motion.

There were quite specific proposals for Senate reform made by the Special Joint Committee, the most notable of which was the proposal that Senators should be elected for one term of nine years. That proposal, of course, went down the tubes very quickly, but that was the main proposal, and I would have thought that the Hon. Member would have wanted to discuss it and indeed many of the other proposals concerning the powers of the Senate that were made in the Joint Committee report.

The Hon. Member might have also read the dissenting reaction to the report that was made by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Churchill (Mr. Murphy). In his report, he argued very eloquently that a nine year term itself was far too long but, more important, since under this scheme, a Senator would serve only one term and not be able to run again, the Senator would be totally unanswerable to the electorate. He would be unaccountable. He would not have to worry, during the nine years he is a Senator, about what he is doing on behalf of the regional and local interests he is supposed to be concerned about. He does not have to worry about those interests because he does not have to get re-elected.

Mr. Thacker: But his Party does.

Ms. Jewett: The hope was that there would not be as much emphasis on Parties, as mentioned by the Hon. Member for Medicine Hat (Mr. Porter). That is why this proposal was sort of laughed out of court and why none of us have paid any attention to it since. As I say, it is over four years since the proposal was originally made. The public is effectively denied the possibility of ever holding its elected representatives in the Senate accountable under this scheme of one nine year term.

The committee itself, in its report, stated:

> We realize that senators who serve for a single term would not be obliged to account for their actions to their electorate at a subsequent election.

The majority also made what I find to be the incredible statement:

> If senators are not able to seek re-election—they will be less likely to get involved in the kind of constituency duties that would duplicate those of members of the House of Commons, and they would be able to devote most of their energies to sittings of the Senate and its committees.

The majority of the committee is basically suggesting that the work of the Senators would be done here in Ottawa and that they would not worry about their constituencies. They would live in Ottawa, and we all know that if one stays in Ottawa too long, one can certainly lose sight of the needs of one's region, province or constituency, and we have seen many Members do so over the years. It seems to me that for the majority of the committee to suggest that is for it to say that politicians do not have to return home to mend political fences.

Indeed, my colleague from Churchill also made a number of other criticisms in his dissenting report. I found one of the most interesting ones was his criticism of the double majority votes that were proposed in the report. On certain linguistic and cultural matters, it was proposed that there would have to be a double majority, a Francophone majority and an Anglophone majority, before any matters relating to linguistic and cultural affairs could be passed. The Anglophone majority would be composed of all those who were not French speaking. This too was a quite shocking recommendation, certainly capable of offending the sensitivities and aspirations of native Canadians and of other Canadians who comprise the Canadian mosaic.

A third area of criticism could relate to the committee's emphasis on the role of the Senate in holding hearings and producing good, sound committee reports. In fact, the Joint Committee made this almost the raison d'être of the Senate, but it completely ignored the fact that even in January of 1984, the House of Commons had created several excellent all-Party committees and task forces and of course has since done so under the reform of the House, and has pretty much moved to fill the vacuum in the area of research and legislative study where the Senate in the past has been credited for doing its best work. The particular report we are supposed to be discussing today does not meet the main purpose of a democratic second Chamber, and that is probably why my colleague entitled his dissenting report "The False Front: The Elusion of a Democratic Senate".

The Hon. Member mentioned that the New Democratic Party is for the abolition of the Senate, and he was quite correct. We have been for some time. We are delighted to be joined by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) who, on August 23, 1987, told reporters that he had suggested abolition of the Senate during the Meech Lake discussions the preceding May, and indeed, on August 25, in the House in response to a question from the Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap (Mr. Riis), the Prime Minister said, as reported at page 8393 of Hansard:

> If my hon. friend is speaking on behalf of his Party, and if the Leader of the Opposition will undertake today to meet so that we can arrange for a resolution to go before both Houses to provide for the abolition of the Senate, I can assure him that I will bring it in as quickly as I can.

The Prime Minister subsequently backed down, citing the Meech Lake agreement, although it is interesting that the agreement had already been achieved when he made that recommendation for an all-Party resolution to abolish the Senate.

On August 27, however, the Prime Minister did agree to a meeting of House Leaders to review what could be done under present restraints. I must say that there has never been another word, even though the House Leader of the New Democratic Party wrote to the Government House Leader on September 17, 1987. He said that we were still interested in such a meeting of House Leaders to discuss a resolution on the abolition of the Senate and asked him to schedule such a meeting, but there has been no reply. In fact, it might be useful for Hon. Members to read that whole question and answer section of Hansard on August 25, 1987.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I regret that the Hon. Member's time has expired.

Mr. Dennis H. Cochrane (Moncton): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to be taking part in the debate this afternoon on the motion by the Hon. Member for Medicine Hat (Mr. Porter). The question of Senate reform and the future of that institution is both timely and important. With passage of the Constitutional Accord, Senate reform will be the priority item in future federal-provincial negotiations. This fact should be welcomed by all Members of this House.

With the adoption of an amending formula requiring the consent of the federal Government and all provinces, the Accord, in the words of the Special Joint Committee, will assure that provinces such as Alberta, which feel strongly about Senate reform, cannot be forced to accept a Senate reform package that does not live up to their expectations. Despite this, there has been some talk by opponents of the Accord who would have us believe that future Senate reform will be impossible as a result of the change to the amending formula. This charge must be challenged and I propose to address this accusation in my remarks today.

Under the changes to the amending formula in the Accord no province is singled out for special status. The Accord ensures full consensus on fundamental changes affecting the federation, including Senate reform, an item now guaranteed to be on the agenda for future constitutional talks. Surely it is reasonable that there be a strong consensus on a reformed Senate. How can it be otherwise? Surely no one can seriously suggest that a future reformed Senate be imposed on provinces such as British Columbia or Alberta as it could be under the present formula when those provinces have a particular and long-standing concern with this issue.

Critics of the Accord, including some members of the Opposition, have suggested that we should maintain the old 70-50 rule for changes to the Senate on the grounds that reform will be more easy to achieve. I want to emphasize that the unanimity requirement does not spell the end of Senate reform. It reflects the principle of equality of the provinces, unlike the procedure for Senate reform adopted in 1982.

Unanimity was achieved on the constitutional amendments of 1940, 1951, 1960, and 1964, as well as on the complex set of issues in the Meech Lake Accord. Unanimity is already required for certain important matters of concern to the country as a whole, such as the composition of the Supreme Court and changes to the amending formula itself. Most amendments will still proceed with the support of seven provinces representing 50 per cent of the population. As for additional matters on which unanimity will be required, the proposed amendment will guarantee each province a say where changes to key national institutions and the composition of the federation are considered.

The adoption of the Accord will allow Governments to proceed to address a range of issues with all provinces as full participants. The Accord guarantees annual First Ministers' Conferences on the Constitution, and two items, Senate reform and roles and responsibility in relation to fisheries, have been placed on the agenda for these conferences. Public discussion and debate in Parliament and the legislative assemblies will help Governments assess how they might consider other constitutional issues.

On the question of unanimity I would like to quote Peter Meekison, an expert on Canadian federalism and a long-time constitutional negotiator for the Alberta Government. He told the special joint committee that: "Senate reform is no more difficult under the proposed change than it is under the existing formula in that—it is very difficult for a province to cast a veto. The natural tendency—is to try to find a compromise." Many of the same factors that led to unanimity at Meech Lake will play a part in the process of Senate reform.

The Canadian Senate was originally charged with the responsibility for protecting what Sir John A. Macdonald called "sectional interests". The establishment of this institution was a critical part of the Confederation agreement. The Senate was to offset representation by population in the House of Commons. There are two important reasons why the Senate has been unable to protect regional interests adequately. First, non-elected Senators are not considered to be legitimate regional or provincial voices in Parliament. Second, the distribution of Senate seats gives a near majority to the two most populous provinces. It does not, therefore, provide an adequate means to temper the expression of majority will in the House of Commons. To the suggestion that the Accord will make Senate reform more difficult, Senator Lowell Murray said in a speech at a national conference on Senate reform last week in Edmonton that:

> I would simply reply that without Quebec's return to the constitutional table, Senate reform is impossible. Moreover, if the Senate is to become a vital national institution, we have to go about reforming it in the right way. We must recognize the vital interest that all provinces have in such national institutions, we must respect the principle of the equality of the provinces, and the need to secure consensus before making fundamental changes.

The interim procedure agreed upon for Senate appointments is not intended to be permanent. Rather, the proposed amendment explicitly states it is to apply "until an amendment to the Constitution of Canada is made in relation to the Senate." The unanimity rule will protect each province against an amendment to national institutions unacceptable to that province. Therefore, unanimity is as much a source of protection as it is a potential hurdle.

The Accord reinforces the federal character of the Senate by acknowledging the legitimate role played by the provinces in the choice of candidates who must nevertheless have the approval of the federal Government, which continues to make the appointments. As Senator Murray said in the other place on March 31:

> We have had enough of isolating provinces in constitutional processes. We have had enough of running roughshod over concerns that are vital to a province's interest.

I could not agree more. I would also like to refer to an address given to the Institute of Island Studies on April 11 by Premier Ghiz of Prince Edward Island. He noted that:

> Pending Senate reform, all appointments are made from lists supplied by the provinces. In an historical context—this provision is quite a reasonable one and in no way signals a lessening of the executive power of the central government.

I would conclude my remarks by saying that for future Senate reform to succeed, all parts of Canada must be assured that the Senate speaks in a particular way for their own specific interests. I personally feel strongly that Senate reform is necessary and no less possible with the adoption of the Meech Lake Accord. However, I cannot and will not at this time go on record as being in favour of an elected Senate.

This Government, under the leadership of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), is dedicated to seeking agreement on a reformed Senate that will ensure regional interests figure more prominently in national decision-making. There is strong support for Senate reform among the provinces and a desire to work together with the Government of Canada toward that end. The result will be a balanced national Government within a strong federation.

The skeptics and pessimists were proven wrong last June when they said Quebec could not be brought into the constitutional fold. I have no doubt they will be proven wrong again on the subject of Senate reform.

Mr. Maurice Tremblay (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, the motion moved by the Hon. Member for Medicine Hat (Mr. Porter) urges the Government to give consideration to the conclusions of the 1984 Joint Committee on Senate Reform.

Mr. Speaker, without wishing to downgrade the merits of the Committee's report, I would like to say first of all, that steps have already been taken to conduct talks on Senate reform.

Last year, our eleven First Ministers agreed unanimously, on April 30 at Meech Lake and later on June 3 in Ottawa, on a draft constitutional amendment that will soon change the practice of federalism as we have always known it.

This Accord would make it possible for Quebec to take its place again in the Canadian family and become once more a full participant in constitutional change in this country, doing so with honour and enthusiasm.

However, in addition to the return of Quebec and Quebecers as full partners in the Canadian federation, the Accord provides much more. It will provide for a more faithful reflection of Canadian reality in the Constitution and emphasize the great principles of federalism supported by most Canadians. The Accord will make Canada stronger by enhancing its unity and emphasizing respect for its various components.

With its recognition of Quebec as a distinct society within Canada, the Constitution will also recognize one of the fundamental characteristics of this country which is the presence of French-speaking and English-speaking Canadians from coast to coast. After its major efforts in the area of official languages and after achieving international recognition as partaking of these two great cultures as its rightful heritage, Canada will finally recognize this essential aspect of its identity in the Constitution.

By acknowledging that Quebec has special needs with respect to immigration and by offering the other provinces an opportunity to enter into arrangements responsive to their needs, the federal Government made it clear that to the extent that the national interest was secure, it was now possible to be particularly responsive to the needs of the regions. By adding this element of flexibility to the concept of federalism, the First Ministers helped to make more Canadians feel at home within our federation.

This willingness to be flexible while respecting national objectives and safeguarding the interests of all Canadians is particularly manifest in the section of the Constitutional Accord that deals with spending power.

Mr. Prud'homme: It sounds wonderful!

Mr. Tremblay (Lotbinière): It sounds wonderful? It does, but do you know what it means? That is the main thing.

Mr. Prud'homme: Absolutely!

Mr. Tremblay (Lotbinière): To get back to what I was saying, when Parliament feels it is necessary to establish programs in areas of exclusive provincial jurisdiction, it will no longer impose on its provincial counterparts its particular way of dealing with and solving problems, something we have experienced for many years. Provinces that feel they must adapt their programs to the specific needs of their population will be able to do so without being penalized—just imagine!—if they agree to make them compatible with national objectives.

The federal character of Canada is also clearly reflected in the section on our institutions. At last the Constitution will provide that when it is necessary to make changes in our central institutions, all partners in our federation will have the right to express their positions and protect their interests.

Prince Edward Island, Nova Scotia or Quebec will thereby be on an equal footing to protect the terms of their association with other parts of the country.

The federal nature of central institutions also will find its expression in the Supreme Court of Canada. From now on, Mr. Speaker, appointments to the Supreme Court will be made under a double veto system, based on the goodwill and co-operation of both levels of Government.

The First Ministers went further, because clearly, attempting to solve everything in one shot would be an invitation to failure, but also because they knew that the June 3rd Accord could only be the beginning of a more general reform process. They decided to hold a First Minister's Constitutional Conference once a year, in order to look at issues that are important to Canada's future.

Under the latter they have already agreed to consider Senate reform, including its role, functions, powers, the procedure for selecting Senators and Senate representation. The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), the Hon. Member for Medicine Hat (Mr. Porter) and many Parliamentarians recognized the importance of Senate reform and are ready to work at it over the next few years. A forum and a time-frame have therefore been identified for the federal-provincial talks proposed by the Hon. Member. And this time, perhaps for the first time in our history, this is serious.

As a token of good faith, Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister has waived his priviledge to select Senate appointees alone, pending a more encompassing reform.

Which removes you from the list, dear Member for Saint-Denis (Mr. Prud'homme)!

An interim appointment process has been set up to respect the spirit of federalism, whereby the provinces are involved in appointments to the higher Chamber. That process—

Mr. Prud'homme: Agreed!

Mr. Tremblay (Lotbinière): Are you suggesting that you also are the friend of provincial Premiers!

Mr. Prud'homme: Certainly!

Mr. Tremblay (Lotbinière): So I see.

Therefore that process, Mr. Speaker, by enhancing the Senate's legitimacy, also should increase people's interest in that institution, thereby ensuring increased participation in the discussions surrounding the coming reform.

Some people have suggested that this interim appointment procedure is nothing more nor less than our abdication on the part of the federal Government of its legislative power to the benefit of the provinces. We are told that provincially oriented and crooked-fingered politicians might even be able to gain control of the legislative agenda and disrupt the work of the duly elected representatives of the people.

I do not believe anyone can seriously undertake to defend this position, but even if it were so—imagining the unimaginable—and if the power of the elected Members of the House of Commons were to be the ransom paid to politicians of a different stripe, would the situation be all that much different from what it is today, and this query I direct to the Hon.

Member for Saint-Denis? Would it be better if the representatives of a defeated federal Government were given the power to control the destiny of a new House of Commons democratically elected by the people? Is the legitimate legislative power not held to ransom when senators appointed by a Liberal administration of an earlier generation are threatening to rule the law-making roost—until after the year 2000, if you can imagine! They cannot be serious. It is untenable, undefensible! Some time ago it was unimaginable!

Mr. Prud'homme: That was a long time ago.

Mr. Tremblay (Lotbinière): Well, if the Hon. Member will allow me . . . Mr. Speaker, I do not share the view—that is my right—of those who fear the legislative power will end up in provincial hands, and it seems to me the answer to such fears is relatively simple. If indeed the provincial governments are to recommend Senate appointees, the fact remains that the Queen's Privy Council for Canada, therefore the federal Government, will alone be empowered to make the appointments. You might as well be a candidate in the next election. I will tell you why, if you allow me to finish.

This power is not a mere formality, Mr. Speaker. The federal Government can refuse any list submitted by a provincial Government until one candidate is agreable to it.

It is clear that unabashed provincialists and straw men of provincial Governments will have little chance of being judged acceptable by the federal Government.

You are indicating to me, Mr. Speaker, that unfortunately my time is running out. I merely want to point out that it is a real need and that we were actively seeking to change the status quo, to implement recommandations which would lead to a fundamental reform of the Senate, in order to answer the present needs. The shameful paralysis of Government business has been going on for too long, Mr. Speaker, the Bills passed by the House are important, as they are designed to foster economic growth and job creation in Canada.

For all these reasons, we submit that the agreements with the Premiers will soon lead to serious and fundamental reform.

• (1750)

Mr. William G. Lesick (Edmonton East): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to take part in this debate on the motion of my colleague, the Hon. Member for Medicine Hat (Mr. Porter). The motion before the House calls upon the Government to give special consideration to the 1984 report of the Special Joint Committee on Senate Reform.

This is a most timely debate, especially for those of us from Alberta. It is now just over a year since the signing of the Meech Lake Accord on April 30, 1987. The Accord represents the beginning of a new era in Canadian federalism. As well as bringing Quebec into the constitutional family, the Accord provides new constitutional and institutional arrangements to encourage closer, more harmonious relations between the federal and provincial governments.

One of the most significant aspects of the Accord is its commitment to further constitutional reform and to Senate reform in particular. It is to this issue specifically that I address my comments this afternoon.

As Hon. Members will be aware, the constitutional Accord of June 3, 1987, provides for an entrenched second round of discussions aimed at fostering further constitutional development. In particular, the Accord requires the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) to convene a First Ministers' Conference on the Constitution at least once a year once the Meech Lake amendments have been proclaimed. Among the items on the agenda for these conferences will be Senate reform. This will include the role and functions of the Senate; the powers of the Senate; the method of selecting Senators; representation in the Senate.

As a result of a change in the amending formula, the consent of all provinces will be required for amendments to these matters. In future, each province will have an equal say on this vital issue. This contrasts with the present arrangement which grants a veto to Ontario and Quebec acting together, but not to any other two provinces acting together.

Finally, as a demonstration of the Prime Minister's good faith and commitment, the Accord provides that until constitutional amendments on the Senate are achieved, the federal Government will appoint Senators from among candidates proposed by provincial Governments and who are acceptable to the federal Government. The provinces thus will have a real say on appointments to the Senate until more comprehensive reform is achieved.

Contrary to what some critics of the Accord have suggested, the Accord provides for the full and open discussion that I believe all aspects of Senate reform deserve. It assures that all the major points that need to be addressed must be considered at annual First Ministers' Conferences.

Senate reform has been the subject of many studies and reports over the years. The report of the Special Joint Committee on Senate Reform was an important and useful contribution to this ongoing question. It recommended that the Senate be directly elected in order to "strengthen the authority of Parliament to speak and act on behalf of Canadians in all parts of the country".

The Hon. Member for Lethbridge—Foothills (Mr. Thacker) was a distinguished member of the Special Joint Committee which tabled its report in January, 1984. The report called for a directly elected Senate, with a weighted representation of seats to increase regional representation. Senators would be elected for a single nine-year term, with one-third of the Senators elected every three years. The Senate would have a 120-day suspensive veto over ordinary legislation, and ratification authority over Order in Council appointments to federal agencies with important regional implications.

Other reports may differ on the precise composition and powers of a reformed Senate. I think it is safe to say, however, that there is a strong feeling that an appointed Senate no longer meets the needs of the Canadian federation, especially in the area of regional representation.

I believe that we simply can no longer tolerate a situation in which an appointed, non-accountable body such as the present Senate acts to frustrate the will of the democratically elected House of Commons. We have seen the Senate take it upon itself to delay several important pieces of legislation over the course of this Parliament. These include Bills on immigration and refugees, drug patent protection, and copyright protection. That is clearly unacceptable in a modern, democratic society.

At the present time the Senate speaks for no one but itself and the interests of the majority party in that chamber. In doing so, the Senate has only managed to raise public awareness of the inadequacies of the Senate and the need for fundamental reform. Some critics have suggested that passage of the Accord should be made contingent upon Senate reform. There has been an agreement since August, 1986, that Senate reform is a second round issue. The terms of the Meech Lake Accord fully reflect the distinction that the First Ministers made between the Quebec round and the second round.

The requirement for unanimity has raised a fear in some quarters that Senate reform will be impossible. Senate reform is only impossible as long as Quebec is not at the table. Would it be healthy for confederation if a province were to have its representation on the Senate reduced without its consent? No. That sort of thinking belongs in the past.

The Prime Minister has said he will table a Senate reform proposal on behalf of the federal Government at the initial Conference of the First Ministers following ratification of the Accord. The Prime Minister also indicated in the House on August 26, 1987, that Parliament will have a role in paving the way for the discussion of Senate reform at that Conference.

As a further indication of the seriousness with which the Government approaches the question of Senate reform, I would refer Hon. Members to an excellent speech delivered last week by the Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations, Senator Lowell Murray. In his May 5 address before the National Conference on Senate Reform at the University of Alberta, the Hon. Senator said:

> I speak for the Prime Minister and all my Cabinet colleagues in saying that we know the importance that is attached to Senate reform by Canadians—especially those who live in Western Canada—and that we are convinced of its importance in the future of our country.

Those who support a directly elected Senate can also take encouragement, because as Senator Murray went on to say:

> When the present round is complete, the Prime Minister has made clear that the Government of Canada will put forward a proposal for Senate reform. While the basic elements of the Government's position are emerging—one thing, however, is clear.
> If the vitality of our democratic institutions is to be strengthened, the Senate should be elected. A second thing is also clear: we should ensure the Senate has the means to act effectively while preserving the accountability of the government to the House of Commons within our system.

In conclusion, I would like to express my agreement with Senator Murray that Senate reform is a national constitutional issue and the Senate is potentially a key national institution. This Government has consistently demonstrated its ongoing commitment to national reconciliation, including institutional reform.

I believe the Constitutional Accord outlines the best way to proceed on Senate reform. On this issue, as on several others, the Accord charts the right path to the future, a path that will encourage full federal-provincial collaboration as we consider changes to the key federal institutions and as we carry on the day-to-day business of the federation.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The time provided for consideration of Private Members' Business has now expired. Pursuant to Standing Order 42(1), the Order is dropped to the bottom of the Order Paper.

Mr. Prud'homme: Mr. Speaker, I know that it is too late now, but I wanted to take the floor. It was one minute to six.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Not by my watch, I am afraid. If you know it is too late, why did you get up on a point of order?

Mr. Prud'homme: I am sure that you saw me standing, Mr. Speaker. You rushed to six o'clock.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I would never rush to six o'clock when I see the Hon. Member for Saint Denis (Mr. Prud'homme) rising.

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Mulroney that Bill C-113, an Act to promote the development and the diversification of the economy of western Canada, to establish the Department of Western Economic Diversification and to make consequential amendments to other Acts, be read the third time and passed, and the motion of Mr. Hawkes:

That this question be now put.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Pursuant to Standing Order 13(4)(a) the House will now proceed to the taking of the deferred division on the motion for the previous question in relation to Bill C-113. Shall I dispense with the ringing of the bells?

Some Hon. Members: Dispense.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Accordingly the question is as follows. Mr. Mulroney, seconded by Mr. Clark (Brandon—Souris), moved that Bill C-113, an Act to promote the development and diversification of the economy of western Canada, to establish the Department of Western Economic Diversification and to make consequential amendments to other Acts, be now read a third time and do pass. Mr. Hawkes, seconded by Mr. Grisé, moved:

That this question be now put.

The House divided on the motion (Mr. Hawkes), which was agreed to on the following division.

Both Houses of Parliament in the HOUSE OF COMMONS CHAMBER, OTTAWA
Tuesday, May 10, 1988

Her Majesty was welcomed by the Right Honourable Brian Mulroney, Prime Minister of Canada, and thanked by the Honourable Guy Charbonneau, Speaker of the Senate and the Honourable John A. Fraser, Speaker of the House of Commons.

Hon. John A. Fraser (Speaker of the House of Commons): Order, please. The Right Honourable the Prime Minister.

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Your Majesty, Your Royal Highness, chers collègues, Honourable Senators:

It is a great honour for me to welcome you here today. On behalf of the Canadian Government, please allow me again to extend, Your Majesty and Your Royal Highness, our warmest welcome to Canada and especially to Ottawa. May I say it in a special way. When you are here in the House of Commons, Your Majesty, and in Ottawa, you are back home.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: In a special sense I say, "Welcome home, bienvenue chez vous".

The relationships that exist between our two nations are in many ways unique. They are based first on immigration, which binds us together with family ties. Nearly a million Canadians pride themselves on their Dutch ancestry, and their contribution to Canada has been absolutely magnificent. There is the legacy of valour of the Second World War, during which our soldiers, our young men and women, fought for the freedom of your country.

I must pay special homage to the Members of Parliament, both past and present, who participated in the liberation of the Netherlands, including our very distinguished Minister of Veterans Affairs, the Honourable George Hees, who is with us here, Your Majesty, today.

• (1110)

Mr. Mulroney: He says, Your Majesty, that he entered the Canadian Forces as a boy of nine!

This afternoon, Your Majesty and Your Royal Highness will be inaugurating "The Sweetest Spring", an exhibition of art and artifacts at the Canadian War Museum. This exhibit, jointly mounted by the Canadian War Museum and the Royal Netherlands Army Museum, underlines our close ties and reinforces our common values.

Our nations cherish the same important ideals of peace, justice and freedom. The presence of your family in Ottawa during the dark days of World War II formed the basis for a direct affinity between members of your family and Canada, and for a deep affection between Canadians and you yourself.

[English]

I know, Your Majesty, that you have fond memories of Stornoway, where you resided temporarily in Ottawa. I also have fond memories of Stornoway, where I resided temporarily in Ottawa. In fact, Your Majesty, all Leaders of the Opposition in Canada have come to regard this gracious home as essentially a temporary residence.

The splendid Dutch tulips, now in bloom on Parliament Hill and throughout our capital, are an enduring legacy of your family's wartime stay in Canada. This generous gift from Queen Juliana to the people of Canada is a unique tribute and one which all Canadians value, particularly at this time of year. When Princess Margriet was born here, the colours of the Netherlands were raised above these Parliament Buildings, celebrating the unprecedented event of a member of a reigning European Royal Family being born on North American soil.

Today this rich heritage has produced a wealth of political, economic, social, and trade relationships.

Your visit to Canada reaffirms the importance of our relations with the European Economic Community, with Western Europe and especially with the Netherlands. The history and the future of Western Europe are closely linked with our history and our future. Together we have formed an association as fruitful as it is diversified, based on political, economic and cultural ties, an unshakeable faith in democracy and an ardent desire to preserve our freedom.

The Netherlands have played a fundamental role in the development of Western civilization. To Canadians, Your Majesty, your country has always been synonymous with social justice and respect for human rights.

[English]

I am pleased to note that our dialogue in this area has been active and fruitful. I would like to underline, Your Majesty, the fact that we share similar views on major international issues should come as a surprise to no one. Our countries are committed members of the international community with similar political, economic, and trade objectives. Most of all, Your Majesty, our countries and our peoples are friends—friends who share values and traditions, friends who espouse the same principles, and whose children dream the same dreams.

On behalf of the Government of the people of Canada, I welcome you to Canada and, through you, extend our warmest greetings to the people of the Netherlands.

Your Majesty, may I ask you at this special and affectionate moment of home-coming to speak now to the Parliament and to all of the people of Canada.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Her Majesty Queen Beatrix of the Netherlands: Mr. Speaker, ladies and gentlemen, our meeting with the Canadian Parliament is taking place in the year in which we are commemorating the Glorious Revolution of 1688, which placed Dutch Stadholder William III together with his wife, Mary Stuart II on the throne of England.

The Glorious Revolution stands as a landmark in the development of British parliamentary democracy. By virtue of the Bill of Rights then presented to William of Orange and his wife before they ascended the throne, Britain's Parliament regained its traditional significance. The Bill of Rights re-asserted that the Sovereign could only rule with the consent of the representatives of his subjects. To many peoples in the seventeenth century that was a revolutionary principle; the people of the Netherlands, however, had adopted the principle a century earlier. The subsequent political development of both the United Kingdom and the British Commonwealth was conditioned by the principle of consent. In a few weeks, on the twentieth of July, the British House of Commons, the mother of all parliaments, will commemorate the events of 1688. It is pleasing to know that delegations from the Canadian and Netherlands parliaments will attend the ceremony.

In Canada in 1839 Lord Durham laid the foundations for a democratic form of government in his "Report on the Affairs of British North America". On the basis of the "responsible government" principle he entrusted the government of the colony to the colonists themselves. The policy of placing the responsibility for government with the people was thereby extended to Canada.

To our countries this form of responsibility has long ceased to be a matter of doubt or debate. In fact, we should now attach to the term "responsible government", the essence of the Durham report, a different, far deeper significance. Since then our dealings have become more international, our present more linked to the future. Besides to their own citizens, to whom governments are quite naturally answerable, they are therefore feeling increasingly answerable to those with whom we share the world and to generations as yet unborn. This is the new signification of "responsible government".

The peoples of countries such as Canada and the Netherlands are particularly conscious of their common destiny with the other inhabitants of our globe. National decisions are increasingly making themselves felt far beyond frontiers. Governments are also increasingly being confronted with tasks they can no longer perform alone.

An international task for Canada was implicit in the three basic principles, namely, Peace, order and Good Government, of the Constitution Act, 1867. The maintenance of "Order" is a function that a government could perform alone, but not the maintenance of "Peace". By definition, therefore, "Good Government" can imply nothing but to govern in collaboration with other countries.

Canadians have long been aware of the fact that their country is a member of a global community. It was this realization that led to Canada's willingness to make sacrifices in the great conflicts of this century. Canada made an impressive contribution to the victory of the Allies in World War I. She then played a prominent role as an active member of the League of Nations. Canadian participation in World War II was further evidence of her sense of international solidarity, which was of incalculable moment, particularly to the Netherlands. Much of Holland was liberated by Canadian soldiers, all of whom, exactly like their fathers, had crossed the Atlantic Ocean as volunteers to destroy a power and an ideology that posed a mortal threat to our common civilization. A few days ago, on the 4th and 5th of May, Holland gratefully commemorated the 1945 liberation and, as in every year, flowers were laid on the graves of members of the Canadian Forces who found their last resting place in our country.

After our common struggle in that war, our equally common conviction that democratic states should together safeguard their security found expression in new forms of co-operation among allies. Canada and the Netherlands have already been members of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization for 40 years. Both countries have from the outset regarded NATO as an organization that embraces more than mere common military defence. Article II of the treaty by which NATO was established speaks of the parties strengthening their free institutions, their democratic institutions, encouraging economic collaboration and creating a true Atlantic community. It is significant that this section was called "the Canadian Article".

A feeling of responsibility for the destiny of the world in general is also evident from the two countries' active participation in the work of the United Nations. An appeal to Canada for peace-keeping operations has never been in vain. Canada and the Netherlands are also co-members of many other international institutions. Not only do their representatives meet each other there, they often defend the same points of view. A noteworthy unanimity between two countries here bridges the difference that separates them. Countries like Canada and Holland can make a valuable contribution, especially internationally, in the form of ideas, initiatives and mediation. Backed by the confidence they have gradually managed to inspire in the world, the very countries that are not among the superpowers may thus play a sometimes disproportionately important role.

One of the main aims of our two countries is the global promotion of the international rule of law. This is where we touch the heart of our responsibility for relations in today's world, a world teeming with problems. I will name only one of them: the lagging behind of what we call the Third World, that extensive area in which equitable relations leave a great deal to be desired and where the international rule of law is least in evidence. The duty not to acquiesce in that lag in development is implicit in "responsible government". Canada and the Netherlands give high priority to aid for the Third World and to economic co-operation with Third World countries. Our two nations have for years done much in this area, both to alleviate poverty directly and to render assistance in the longer term, to help people to help themselves. It was no mere chance that the first compendious United Nations report on Third World problems was drawn up by a commission chaired by Lester Pearson.

But "responsible government" in the field of development co-operation may not stop at emergency aid and charity. Neither is the transfer of capital and know-how sufficient. The opening of our markets is, economically and psychologically, just as important. That is the only way in which we can make a real contribution toward growth in the countries themselves. Indeed, it is disturbing that some developed countries are again considering protectionist measures. Protectionism is ultimately bad for everyone, but the poor countries are the victims; they are the first and the worst affected. By giving in to the inclination to protect ourselves we cause multiple damage, we hamper economic growth and increase injustice in the world. An open economy is both a Canadian and a Dutch tradition. It is pre-eminently a tradition we may not abandon.

Mr. Speaker, Lord Durham's compelling plea for "responsible government" alluded to responsibility towards citizens. The passage of time and social developments have given the term a new signification. As distances shrank and the interdependence of countries severally increased, we became ever more conscious of our responsibility towards all those who with us populate the world. This realization goes very deep in Canada and the Netherlands.

Moreover, the recent past has given the term "responsible government" a new dimension, our answerability for the future, the obligation to leave behind for our children a world fit to live in.

Fifteen years ago the Club of Rome in its first report gave an urgent warning. As we see it now, the warning was perhaps not urgent enough. Not only is our highly developed society threatened by a future shortage of raw materials, but the very level of development we have already reached holds treats to our well-being, to say nothing of the hazards that loom if the creation of further opulence goes on at the same hectic pace.

It is essential that environmental research conducive to the adoption of rational measures be stepped up and that the efficacy of such research be increased through international co-operation. Preventive intervention is imperative in view of the irreversibility of certain processes that harm the environment. It is true that the very technical knowledge that threatens our future will often enable us to redress the damage done, but we only really control technology if we employ it to prevent damage. Only the courage to take unpopular measures now will safeguard the future for coming generations. The requirement that the quality of the heritage we have received and that we in turn shall have to hand on to posterity may not be impaired is not yet universally realized. Essential, fundamental alterations in our pattern of behaviour are overdue. The close attention of parliament and environment-conscious citizens is a requisite, a stimulus and a guarantee of an effective policy in this area. Politicians and industrialists must join forces and find the answers.

Illustrative of Canada's attitude is that the major United Nations conference on the ozone layer was held in Montreal last year, and that now Canada is again busy preparing a conference on "controlled development" as a follow-up of the Brundtland report.

There have been a number of successes in environmental protection, both national and international. A bolder approach at global level that takes the interconnection of matters concerning food supplies, the generation of power, development aid and the environment into account, is however required. The parallel Canadian and Dutch views on these problems and the approach to them invite a greater common advance in international planning.

In a bilateral context, environmental technology is one of the important fields in which Canada and Holland exchange know-how and experience. A Memorandum of Understanding between our governments on the subject was signed yesterday; similar memoranda with the governments of Ontario and Quebec are to be concluded shortly.

• (1130)

Mr. Speaker, Members of the House and the Senate, since the first parliament was set up, the elected representatives have fulfilled the mandate entrusted to them by the people. In our times, parliamentarians have been given another, double mandate: one by those with whom we live on this globe and one by generations as yet unborn. The commitment to "responsible government", which cabinets and parliaments must honour has thereby been made much more onerous a task, and it demands courage to commit oneself wholly to this objective.

The term we must now have in mind is moreover far longer than the life of a parliament. The sense of responsibility for others and for the future is nevertheless deeply rooted in this legislative body. It was in this parliament, where I am your guest today, that political democracy was established in Canada in the 19th century. It is heartening to note that the members of today's assembly realize that they are now the guardians of a responsible democracy. Thank you.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Guy Charbonneau (Speaker of the Senate): Your Majesty, Your Royal Highness, on behalf of the Senate I want to thank you most heartily for your remarks, which were a vivid testimony to the quality and vigour that characterize our bilateral relations, and to the importance of those relations.

Nor can I resist commenting on how very rare it is to receive within these walls the sovereign of a friendly and allied power who can point to a childhood spent, in part, in Canada's capital. It gives us, I think, an additional reason for our pleasure in welcoming you today to the Parliament of Canada. It is one of the distinguishing features of the links that bind our two countries. Our long tradition of working together to preserve the values that are dear to us reinforces the significance of the personal link, which has been extended in the most natural way by the many other family ties between Canada and the Netherlands.

Your profound statements come as no surprise to students of the political writings of your great philosopher, Spinoza. Your reign as we have seen, continues the admirable example of your predecessors who were mindful of the role Spinoza urged governing authorities to play when he stated, and this was in the seventeenth century, that the rights of the individual took precedence over the authority of the State. Need I recall in your presence his warning that the State that denied this principle would be mere power and be vanquished by power?

It is indeed very fitting to say in this Chamber that you have evoked the great humanist tradition that brought us the principle of intellectual freedom. We understand why Descartes, attracted by the tolerance and love of freedom of your people, spent twenty years in Holland, and why Pascal admired the dialectics of your philosphers. The tradition continues today, at a time when your thinkers have spearheaded the movement for religious reform throughout the world, taking the calculated risk of bringing about a moral crisis.

[English]

The friendship between our two countries is consolidated by the significant commercial exchanges between us. Renowned for their technological innovations and business sense, the Dutch are valued partners for dynamic, technologically advanced, and resource rich countries like Canada. Dutch investments in this country are already quite substantial and the possibility of more joint ventures and increased trade can only fortify our commercial relations.

Our cultural ties are also especially important for Canadians of Dutch origin who want to maintain their links with the Netherlands, but all Canadians cherish the spirit of friendship and co-operation which permeates our relations with your country. Our economic contacts, official visits, and the significant flow of tourists in both directions illustrate the wish of our citizens not only to retain our special ties, but also to nurture them for our mutual benefit.

Your Majesty, your visit to Canada will give you the opportunity to witness the vitality of our young country, but I have no doubt that the warmth of our feelings toward the Dutch nation will also become evident. I trust your trip will be a pleasant one and that it will provide you with more fond memories of Canada.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Your Majesty, Your Royal Highness—

Speaking on behalf of my colleagues in the House of Commons and of other honoured guests present in this Chamber, I wish to thank you for your most cordial speech. Canadians of Dutch descent have played a major role in many areas of Canadian society.

[English]

There have been people from your country, Your Majesty, in Canada from our earliest days. Their continuing presence explains why there is a certain resemblance between our two countries. We are convinced that this visit by Your Majesty and Your Royal Highness will help to reinforce those similarities and enable us to extend our co-operation along a number of promising avenues, taking as our starting point our already thriving relationship. Your profound appreciation of the need for international co-operation, especially in regard to our environment, has been most certainly noted in this Chamber today.

• (1140)

I would like to take this opportunity, presented by your presence within these walls, to ask you to convey the best wishes of the Canadian House of Commons to the people of your country and to assure them of our friendship. To you, Your Majesty, and Your Royal Highness, you will always be home in our country. God bless you.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: It is my duty to announce that the House will convene at two o'clock this afternoon.

FISHERIES

CANADA-FRANCE DISPUTE—RIGHTS OF NEWFOUNDLAND FISHERMEN

Hon. William Rompkey (Grand Falls—White Bay—Labrador): Mr. Speaker, three Newfoundland trawlers have been denied permits to fish inside the 12-mile zone around St. Pierre by the Government of France, in spite of a 1972 treaty with France that specifically allows them to do that.

• (1405)

This denial of permits comes after one Newfoundland boat was arrested, and is only the latest shot in the "cod war" with France, a war in which the Government has consistently shown itself to be lacking in courage and lacking in the responsibility to stand up and fight for the Newfoundland fishing industry.

It is a Government that has been accused by the Premier of Newfoundland of "regionalizing" the issue. I quote from a letter from the Premier of Newfoundland to the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark):

> It is most regrettable that in addressing this national boundary issue you have now regionalized this issue further and appear to suggest that the maintenance of jobs outside of Newfoundland is of greater importance than the maintenance of jobs in Newfoundland.

We in Newfoundland are equal Canadians, Mr. Speaker. We demand justice. We demand responsibility from this Government. We demand that the Government of Canada stand up and fight for our rights, because we are not "hyphenated" Canadians, or second-class Canadians; we are equal Canadians.

HEALTH

SUPPORT FOR BAN ON TOBACCO ADVERTISING

Mr. John Reimer (Kitchener): Mr. Speaker, I rise in the House today to commend the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) on the introduction of Bill C-51, the Tobacco Products Control Act.

This Act will prohibit the advertising and promotion of tobacco products. It will include stronger, more visible health warnings so that consumers will be more fully informed about the serious hazards of using tobacco products.

The Canadian Cancer Society, with over 350,000 volunteers, the Canadian Heart Foundation, with some 300,000 volunteers, the Canadian Lung Association, with over 100,000 volunteers, the Canadian Medical Association and the Canadian Nurses Association, with their hundreds of thousands of members, and School Principals' Associations all favour the prohibition of advertising and promotion of tobacco products.

For the sake of the health and welfare of all Canadians, I urge the Government to move this Bill on to report stage, third reading, and speedy passage through this House.

OPPOSITION TO SUPERMAILBOXES BY HANDICAPPED PERSONS' ORGANIZATIONS

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, those Members of Parliament who represent constituents who live in new suburban areas and who get their mail from the new so-called supermailboxes know how unhappy those constituents are. Their battle against the imposition of Canada Post supermailboxes has now been joined by another national organization. This time it is the Winnipeg based Coalition of Provincial Organizations of the Handicapped, which represents 15,000 disabled persons across Canada.

This organization has found that supermailboxes are especially difficult to get to for its members in winter, and their presence discourages the disabled from locating in new suburban areas.

Yet Canada Post continues to say that supermailboxes are the way of the future. The disabled reply that it is another step backward for them.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, we ask what is so "super" about supermailboxes? Is it that they are superfluous, or supercilious, or just superabundant? They are all of the above.

THE SEXES

POLITICAL REPRESENTATION

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, he or she who strays on to the field of battle between the sexes does so at his/her own peril.

When the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mrs. McDougall) told the Canadian Women for Political Representation that "men in politics are more confrontational and women work harder to reach consensus" one wonders whether she was thinking specifically of the Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps). One also wonders just how hard the Hon. Member for Broadview—Greenwood (Ms. McDonald) has worked to reach consensus with the tobacco industry.

Indira Gandhi, Golda Meir, and Margaret Thatcher all conjure up visions of mild-mannered consensus seekers. Or do they?

In the battle in question, I personally prefer fraternization to confrontation, and therefore resolutely refuse to rush in where angels fear to tread.

HEALTH

JONQUIÈRE REGION STATISTICS

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, a health study undertaken by the Departments of Community Health of Chicoutimi and Roberval shows that the number of deaths due to heart disease is 34 per cent higher around Jonquière than in the rest of Québec, that the incidence of lung and respiratory diseases is 78 per cent higher, and that the infant mortality rate is almost 40 per cent higher.

The number of deaths from cancer in the Jonquière area is 43 per cent higher than the provincial average. Unfortunately, the study does not draw any conclusions as to cause.

Greenpeace, currently conducting a tour of the St. Lawrence and Great Lakes aboard their ship the Beluga, point the finger at pollutants from Alcan's smelter as a likely cause of the health problems. The smelter's stacks emit 600 tonnes a year of toxic polycyclic aromatic hydrocarbons, known as PAHs. More than 100 current or former Alcan workers have been diagnosed as suffering from bladder cancer, one of the diseases linked to exposure to PAHs.

The people of Jonquière would like to know what the Minister of the Environment (Mr. McMillan) and the Minister of Health (Mr. Epp) will do to protect them.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

ABOLITION OF JOBS IN CAMPBELLTON

Mr. Albert Girard (Restigouche): Mr. Speaker, on Monday of this week the riding of Restigouche received some very distressful news from Canadian National Railways. We were informed that 38 jobs in Campbellton would be abolished. Sneaky public relations officers of this Crown corporation have assured us that the employees affected will have the opportunity to use their seniority in other regions, or they can accept a good compensation package. But what about the socio-economic impact on the community?

CN is completely cold and uncaring when it comes to the cruel results of its austerity measures. The city of Campbellton served the purposes of CN very well for many, many years. But now the people of Campbellton have been discarded by an inconsiderate group of executives who are enjoying themselves in their big office towers in Montreal. Are Mr. Lawless and company saying in the words of Marie Antoinette, "Let them eat cake"? Well, may the hurt and economic hardship that we have been forced to endure in Campbellton over the past years be returned to you, Mr. Lawless, many times over.

ABORTION

PARTICIPATION OF KU KLUX KLAN MEMBERS IN CALGARY RALLY

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands): Mr. Speaker, like Members of Parliament, people in all parts of Canada hold strong, sincere, and conflicting views on the question of choice in abortion. They write letters, sign petitions, visit their Members of Parliament. They march and they demonstrate. This is the Canadian tradition of participation. It is not part of the Canadian tradition for members of the Ku Klux Klan to take part in such demonstrations while wearing their white hoods.

On Monday, unfortunately, Klan members, one of them hooded, attended a rally outside Calgary's City Hall seeking funding cuts to the Calgary Birth Control Association.

I believe all Canadians, whatever their views on the subject of choice in abortion, can only deplore and repudiate the presence of these white-hooded thugs on Canadians streets.

They symbolize bigotry, cowardice, and viciousness. They have no place in Canada.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

ALLEGED REFUSAL OF SOCIAL SERVICES FOR NATIVE PEOPLES

Mr. Guy St-Julien (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, according to secret documents obtained by Canadian Press, senior officials of the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development have decided to deprive Native people of new social services by holding up the tabling of a Bill to grant them new subsidies.

Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. McKnight) did not attend this secret meeting. Senior officials at Indian Affairs and Northern Development may have secret discussions if they wish, but they will have to abide by the provisions of the 1977 James Bay Agreement on financing, building new schools and a number of other demands made by the James Bay Cree and Inuit, and they should not forget the Algonquins and Attikameks in the riding of Abitibi.

FINANCE

EFFECTS OF NEW METHOD OF CALCULATING FEDERAL SALES TAX

Mr. Alfonso Gagliano (Saint-Léonard—Anjou): Mr. Speaker, Quebec furniture manufacturers are very concerned about the new way of calculating federal sales tax that will become effective on November 1, 1988.

Mr. Speaker, this measure will mean an additional $34 million in taxes to be paid annually by Quebec furniture manufacturers. The measure will not close the gap that favoured imports and, in most cases, will make the gap even wider. Because it is so complex, this measure will result in substantial additional administrative costs. There is only one definition: What are the marketing costs and what are the distribution costs? How will small businesses be able to find their way through the fantastic amount of red tape created by this new way of collecting federal sales tax?

Furniture manufacturers feel this measure is a liability because of the lack of clarity as to the taxable amount. They also feel it is unfair to make the furniture industry pay for action taken by other industries. Considering that the Government is now in its second phase of consultations on tax reform, why introduce, at this particular moment, a measure that makes no sense at all and that discriminates against small businesses in Canada by imposing this huge amount of red tape?

TEMAGAMI WILDERNESS AREA—MULTI-USE CONCEPT SUPPORTED

Mr. John A. MacDougall (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, in response to comments in the paper today made by the Minister of the Environment (Mr. MacMillan) on the Temagami wilderness area I say to the Minister, who seems to be in the dark on this issue, that there is nothing as precious to the residents of the Temagami area as the forests. As northern Ontarians, we have come to share our resources and use these forests responsibly with a view to the future.

The facts are that the Temagami forests have been a multi-use area for over 100 years. As for the road extension which is at the centre of the controversy, simply put, its construction will ensure future growth and stability to the entire Temagami area. The Minister of the Environment should start to listen to his colleagues in the area in which they are involved. He should listen and become familiar with the Government's forest sector strategy, and he should stay away from what is clearly a provincial matter.

Multi-use management of the Temagami forests has worked and will continue to work for years to come. The Minister should start listening to the people of Timiskaming and the Temagami area, and not his environmental lobby groups in Toronto and Ottawa.

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES FREE TRADE AGREEMENT—ADVERTISEMENT INVITING FIRMS TO LOCATE IN U.S.

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, here is the future for average Canadians under the free trade deal with the U.S. An advertisement inviting Canadian firms to shift operations to Georgia appeared May 9 in The Financial Post. The ad says "The cost of labour is among the lowest in the United States." As well, "fewer than two in 10 workers belong to a labour union". It also says "What's more, we haven't raised our corporate tax rate since 1969."

That is what is ahead with the trade deal, Canadian companies shifting to low wage, less unionized southern states like Georgia, with Canada having to cut its tax rates to match

Georgia, reducing revenue for social programs for people here in Canada.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

DURHAM REPORT AND QUEEN BEATRIX OF THE NETHERLANDS

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, today I wish to condemn the Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Mulroney) and the Prime Minister's Office, and the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) and his office, for having failed to inform the Queen of the Netherlands that part of the Durham Report was unacceptable to French Canadians, especially where it recommended the assimilation of French Canadians.

Mr. Speaker, the Secretary of State for External Affairs, who is here in the House, and the Prime Minister must bear part of the responsibility for having failed to inform Her Majesty in advance that the Durham Report was not fully accepted by French Canadians in this country.

ATLANTIC CANADA OPPORTUNITIES AGENCY

POSITION OF LIBERAL MEMBERS OF PARLIAMENT

Mr. Lawrence I. O'Neil (Cape Breton Highlands—Canso): Mr. Speaker, it was with dismay that I witnessed the Liberal Members of Parliament vote against Bill C-103. This statute establishes the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency which gives to Atlantic Canadians the opportunity to control more of the economic development efforts in Atlantic Canada.

This new strategy of regional development has been welcomed by Atlantic Canadians, but Liberal MPs voted against it. They also voted against establishing the Enterprise Cape Breton Corporation which gives Cape Breton a separate Crown corporation for industrial development with a separate board of directors. Why did they vote against it? Because they were told to do so by a Member of the other place. Imagine, puppets on a string, swinging in the wind.

If Liberal Members were truly interested in ACOA, where were they when the hearings were held in Atlantic Canada? The Bill was studied and commented on by Atlantic Canadians, but the Liberals were not there to listen. That tells the story.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

GOVERNMENT POLICY

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I have questions for two Ministers concerning the Prime Minister's trade deal with the U.S. I want to turn first to the Minister of Communications who has allowed Canadian cultural policy to be dictated by the wishes of a few Hollywood film moguls.

As she and the House know, the Hollywood studios have a stranglehold over distribution of films in Canada. They control 90 per cent of the Canadian film market. As a result, a year ago the Minister sensibly announced that those huge Hollywood studios would no longer be allowed to distribute films in Canada which they did not make. Now she has backed down and allowed Americans to distribute independent and foreign produced films in Canada.

Why did the Minister change the policy she announced last year? What other reason could there be for changing that policy than to attempt to accommodate the Prime Minister's wish not to jeopardize the trade deal with the United States?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, I am well aware of the position of the U.S. majors. They did not want legislation. They did not want a separate market for film distribution rights in Canada. They wanted a box office tax on Canadian filmgoers.

But we will have legislation, we will have a separate market for Canadian distribution of films, and we will not have a special tax on Canadian filmgoers.

However, I would like to say to the Prime Minister—the Leader of the Opposition—

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Miss MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, I would like to say to the shortest-lived Prime Minister in Canadian history that the majors took a position when Francis Fox was the Minister of Communications. He was told to do nothing, and he did nothing. John Roberts was told to do nothing, and he did nothing. Mr. Faulkner was told to do nothing, and he did nothing. The Liberals were told to do nothing, and they did nothing. That was their policy, and that is their policy.

We are moving on legislation, to create a separate market for the distribution of films in Canada.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Minister will not be dismayed if I correct her history and advise her that a fellow Nova Scotian, Sir Charles Tupper, has the record. However, I recognize the Freudian slip of the Minister and I want to assure her that we will take care of that.

OPPORTUNITY TO MAINTAIN ORIGINAL POLICY

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, will she admit that she would not have had to waste millions of dollars in taxpayers' money to enable Canadians to compete with Hollywood, if she had stuck to her original policy and simply prohibited the Americans from distributing independent and foreign-produced films in Canada? Why didn't the Minister maintain her original policy and save Canadian taxpayers millions of dollars, instead of bowing to the demands of the free trade agreement initiated by the Prime Minister with the United States?

[English]

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, I am sure that the Leader of the Opposition knows something about film making. Perhaps he could expand on his role as a director of CFI. He may remember his role in Canadian Film Investments, a company which took advantage of the capital cost allowance to make films which used American actors and American themes.

That was the sort of film issue with which the Leader of the Opposition was personally connected. Perhaps he would like to explain to Canadians why that capital cost allowance was exploited at the cost of millions of dollars to the Canadian taxpayer to make films which were not Canadian.

We are putting money into distribution for the first time in this country. That is something which the film distributors welcome. We have put money into the making of Canadian cultural films which are winning awards around the world. The Leader of the Opposition might not like to acknowledge that, but we think it is a great thing.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, that performance of the Minister was not an award winning performance by any means. I can assure her that our films, good or bad, were at least Canadian films, and she can take some instruction from that.

CANADA-UNITED STATES FREE TRADE AGREEMENT—
CONSTITUTIONALITY OF AGREEMENT IN UNITED STATES

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, the Minister sold out Canadian culture for the sake of a trade deal. I almost feel sorry for her in trying to defend this policy because she knows, as I know, that it is a national disgrace for Canadian culture.

My supplementary question concerning the trade deal is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Can he confirm that the White House concluded that a section on energy in the trade deal is unconstitutional and the United States wants to change the deal in order to accommodate the State of Alaska? If that is so and the deal is to be changed to accommodate Alaska, will the Canadian Government be open to changes suggested by Canadian provinces?

Mr. John McDermid (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, we expect the United States to translate into their legislation the trade agreement as it stands now. If there is a constitutional problem in there, they will have to settle it down there.

As far as we are concerned, the free trade agreement stands and it will be put into legislation shortly.

GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, a year ago the Minister of Communications announced a film policy which was a fair solution to a serious problem in the Canadian film industry. But the Prime Minister, Ronald Reagan, and Jack Valenti sold her out while they were so busy designing a poor trade pact for Canada.

This new revised policy is a sham. The Minister knows that it is a sham, the industry people know that it is a sham even if they write her letters saying that they think it is—

Mr. Speaker: I want to point out that yesterday there were some complaints that not enough Members were heard. One of the reasons is that preambles, when argumentative, invite a very long answer.

Mr. Rossi: What about the answers?

Mr. Speaker: I think I indicated that when preambles are overly argumentative they invite a very long answer. I want to co-operate with Hon. Members who have come to me because they are concerned that they are not getting a chance to be heard. The Hon. Member.

Mrs. Finestone: Why did the Minister cave in, and break her promise to the film industry so that instead of having an effective increase in Canadian productions, placing this industry on a solid base, we have nothing really to speak of?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, I listen to the whining of the Opposition and I understand why, since they did nothing for so long—

Mr. Speaker: I have asked members of the Opposition to be more careful in their preambles and to put their questions more directly. I would ask the Minister to deal directly with the question.

Miss MacDonald: I quite understand why they are taking this stand. However, I want to say that I have heard from the Association of Canadian Film and Television Producers. They say to me: "You are to be particularly congratulated on advancing your distribution legislation to the penultimate stage".

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Miss MacDonald: They go on to say: "No previous Minister of Communications has succeeded in addressing Canada's film distribution problems to the extent that you have".

I want to tell the Leader of the Opposition that the British Columbia producers have also written to me. They say: "We believe that this new program is a major step forward in resolving the problems of the Canadian film industry". That is what the industry is saying. That is what is being said by the national associations and the regional associations.

I must say that, for an Opposition which did nothing about this for 40 years, I understand why they are still doing nothing.

Mrs. Finestone: It is too bad that the Minister cannot read the editorials that do not seem to agree with what she just said.

GOVERNMENT FUNDING—MINISTER'S POSITION

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, with the Minister of Finance having cut over $100 million from the private sector film money that was coming in, does the Minister not realize that she has engaged in a shell game when she tries to plug that gap with $29 million annually, which does not address the basic problem? Again, why did you cave in on this film distribution Bill, just to save your Prime Minister and—

• (1430)

Mr. Speaker: I would also ask Hon. Members to address Ministers through the Chair, and vice versa. The Hon. Minister will respond.

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Communications): Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I will rely on the industry for advice in this difficult dossier. Certainly it has been extremely helpful. The independents in Canada have had a great input. They also gave me one message for the Opposition, for the Liberal Party. They said: "For God's sake, don't let them screw up this legislation like they are screwing up the copyright".

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Oshawa.

Mr. Shields: Here is Shirley Carr's puppet!

Mr. Nystrom: Twenty-eight per cent, Jack!

Mr. Broadbent: I say to my caucus colleagues that I would just as soon have twenty-two letters, Mr. Speaker.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

FISHERIES

CANADA-FRANCE DISPUTE—ACCESS TO WATERS BETWEEN NEWFOUNDLAND AND FRENCH ISLANDS

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): My question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. On Monday in the House, with reference to the serious situation in Newfoundland, with particular reference to the waters lying between St. Pierre and Miquelon and Newfoundland, the Minister said: "We believe that the traditional practices respecting the smaller fishermen of Newfoundland and Labrador should be respected to the letter". The Minister said that on Monday. Yesterday the French responded by moving in the opposite direction. They denied access to these waters to three Newfoundland captains of trawlers. What is the Government going to do next?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, that is not quite what happened, as the Hon. Member, I think, will determine when he looks into the matter. There was a decision taken by three trawlers to apply for a permit which, in the view of the Government of Canada, they do not require. There was an administrative response to that request by officials on St. Pierre and Miquelon.

About the situation with respect to French policy, I will try to be as precise as I can. There was an action taken in advance of the French elections. A protest was delivered to the French Ambassador. He indicated that French policy had not changed. There is now a new Government in France. It has in hand a formal protest from me, and it also has in hand an indication of our view that it is in the interests of fishermen from St. Pierre and Miquelon and fisherman from Newfoundland and Labrador that the pre-existing practices be respected by both sides.

That new Government of France took office and the Prime Minister was sworn in just this week. They have not yet had the opportunity to respond to us. We expect them to respond with urgency on that question.

FRENCH PERMITS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I understand what the Minister is saying about the new Government, and one hopes there is a shift in policy as a result of that. But I would like to ask him with respect to our own Government's policy, in that narrow body of water we are talking about between St. Pierre and Miquelon and Newfoundland, is it the Government's view that in terms of international law the French have no right to be requiring or issuing permits for any part of that water?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): It is our view, Mr. Speaker, that it served the interests of both Canada and France, and the interests of the fishermen of St. Pierre and Miquelon and of Newfoundland and Labrador, that the practices that had been undertaken by both countries for a long time, practices that were broken in one instance by the French, that those traditional practices should be respected. We hope to be able to deal with the question on that basis. That is the position I have taken in the protest I have lodged with the Government of France. It is on that basis that we intend to proceed.

I should make it clear that while we have followed the practice, and intend to consistently, this important difference between our two countries should not be fought on the backs of small inshore fishermen. Obviously, the French will understand that if they intend to proceed with this variation in practice, we would have to reciprocate. We hope things would not reach that stage.

ACCESS TO TERRITORIAL WATERS—IMPOSITION OF CONDITIONS BY FRANCE—MINISTER'S POSITION

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, if I understood the Minister correctly, he said that according to international law, the French have the right to impose this condition for obtaining access to their territory near St. Pierre and Miquelon. Is that true?

[English]

Is that correct?

[Translation]

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the situation is as I described it. There was an agreement between Canada and France about giving notice of any change in this practice by either party. There was an agreement providing for at least three months' notice of any change in practice. We did not receive such notice from the French with respect to this traditional practice, and I repeat, our basic position is that the practice honoured by France and Canada is one that has served the interests of the people of Newfoundland and St. Pierre and Miquelon, and we feel that it is important to see that this practice is respected. That is what I told the French in our protest note, and we are now awaiting a reply from the new French government.

SITUATION OF NEWFOUNDLAND FISHERMEN

Hon. William Rompkey (Grand Falls—White Bay—Labrador): Mr. Speaker, my question is also directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs whose colleague, the Minister for International Trade, was in Labrador last week selling free trade while his Government was here selling out Labrador fishermen and Newfoundland fishermen. That is why the Premier of Newfoundland has called him a patsy and sent him this letter today, which is a stinging rebuke of government policy.

Is the Secretary of State for External Affairs really saying that the job of a Labrador fisherman is less important in this country than that of a man who works for Michelin, even if anyone were silly enough or stupid enough to think that Michelin Tire would really pull out of Nova Scotia? Is he saying that Newfoundlanders are hostages to Canadian fortune, that we are second-class citizens in our own country? Because, if he is saying that, we are going to roast the rear end of the Tory Party in Newfoundland in the next election.

An Hon. Member: Right on!

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, there is no question, in the view of this Government, that the people of Newfoundland, all of the people of Newfoundland, are first-class citizens of Canada—

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): —but it is not enough to talk about that. It is not even enough to defend their interests vigorously when they are contested by foreign countries, as we have done. It is also essential to put in place a series of programs that will improve the economic lot of people who live in Newfoundland. That is among the reasons we have brought in major programs to encourage economic development in Atlantic Canada.

Mr. Rompkey: Just give us the fish!

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Those measures were introduced yesterday, and Atlantic Canada will long remember that the Liberal Party voted against that initiative to help Atlantic Canada.

Mr. Rompkey: Let me quote Marie Antoinette again: "Let them eat cake". We don't want the billion dollars; give us the fish. That is what makes us what we are. You can keep the billion dollars. Just give us the fish, okay?

Mr. Mazankowski: You are getting in deeper.

Mr. Tobin: Shut up and eat cake, that's what he is saying.

FRENCH PERMITS ISSUE

Hon. William Rompkey (Grand Falls—White Bay—Labrador): I want to ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs about the three trawlers that were denied permits by France, guaranteed under the 1972 agreement that this Party signed when we were the Government. Is he going to be a patsy on that one, too, or is he really going to do something? Is he going to stand up to the French this time and fight for Newfoundland fishermen?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, one thing I am not going to do is take away from the people of Atlantic Canada $1 billion that could serve their interests.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): The Liberal policy is now abundantly clear. Not only are they against the agency we have set up to help encourage development in Atlantic Canada but they want us to cut federal spending in Atlantic Canada by $1 billion. That is their position. Well, we certainly do not agree with that position, nor do we agree with the kind of attitude that led to the signature of the 1972 agreement, a Liberal treaty that created this problem we are now trying to solve. We are trying to solve it on the basis of a particular incident that happened in a pre-election atmosphere in France.

I have delivered a strong protest to the Government of France. There is a new Government there. We expect them to respond to it urgently, and as soon as they respond, certainly we—

MINISTER'S POLICY

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver—Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I would like to return to the Minister of Communications and her infamous film Bill about which one Canadian distributor said: "Flora's film Bill has about as many teeth as one of my chickens, and they have more heart". So I want to ask her—

Since it is obvious the Minister has abandoned her film distribution and publishing policies because of the free trade agreement, when and why did she abandon these two essential policies?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, Ms. Marie-Josée Raymond, joint chairman of the task force on films and Chairman of the Sectorial Advisory Group on International Trade, stated: "The action taken with respect to films is a very important step and includes a set of measures beneficial to Canadian producers and distributors". That is what the joint chair of the task force on films had to say.

• (1440)

The people in the industry support what we are doing. They support it in Quebec, they support it in British Columbia, and they support it in their national associations.

The Hon. Member from the NDP may wish to quote an ex-Liberal candidate in support of what he is saying, but I listen to the voice of the industry recognizing what is being accomplished in this field. I am very happy indeed to have the support of the film industry.

I also say to the Hon. Member—

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps the Hon. Minister can extend her next answer. The Hon. Member for Vancouver—Kingsway.

MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver—Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Minister. It is not what an ex-Liberal cabinet Minister said, but what the present Conservative Minister of Energy, the ex-Minister of Communications, stated, as reported in the Toronto Star yesterday. He said: "What we have is a lack of policy. If we develop good policy then perhaps we can generate some money". He was not referring to the Liberal Party; he was referring to the Minister of Communications' film and book publishing policies.

Given that even her own Cabinet colleagues do not have faith in her publishing and film policy, who forced her, and why did she change her previous film policy to sell out to the Americans?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, I take some pride in my record as Minister of Communications. In the past year I have introduced a program of public lending right payments for 5,200 authors in this country, something which had been requested for 40 years and was never dealt with, and I brought it in.

We will be bringing in film distribution legislation and a $200 million support program. I have ensured the maintenance of the postal subsidy for our publications industry—

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for York West.

SIKH ORGANIZATIONS

REQUEST THAT MINISTER APPEAR BEFORE MULTICULTURALISM COMMITTEE

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Thus far the Minister has refused to co-operate and participate with the Standing Committee on Multiculturalism which is conducting special hearings into a recent letter that the Minister sent to the Premiers in which he urged a political boycott of three Canadian Sikh organizations. This is a slap in the face to the parliamentary process.

Given that these hearings provide Parliament with an opportunity for a rational discussion on a very sensitive issue, and given that these hearings were approved by all three political Parties and their members, why is the Minister aggravating the situation by refusing to participate? Will the Minister not do the honourable and responsible thing and come before the committee freely and voluntarily to discuss this most important and very sensitive issue?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, two very quick, brief responses to that question. First, with regard to the involvement of Parliament in the activities of the Secretary of State for External Affairs, I certainly am prepared to compare my record with any of my Liberal predecessors. For example, on the question of statements in the House, during the brief Government of my colleague, the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition, and his predecessor with the long shadow, among other things—

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): You had one with a long knife, my friend.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): The Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition corrects me—

Mr. Speaker: The Right Hon. Minister will complete his answer.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): His predecessor had the long shadow and the long knife. I apologize for only giving part of the answer.

Second, in accordance with my practice of responding to the wishes of Parliament, and in accordance with my schedule, I have accepted an invitation to discuss this question, which I regard as a security question, with members of the Standing Committee on Justice and Solicitor General, which deals with security matters.

MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, the answer shows contempt for Parliament and abrogates the traditions whereby—

Mr. Speaker: We have a long tradition of not imputing motives, and that is a pretty strong allegation. I know the Hon. Member can put his question in another manner.

Mr. Marchi: Mr. Speaker, the Minister can freely go to a Committee of Justice behind closed doors and discuss the matter with CSIS.

I ask the Minister again, given the fact that his letter is at the centre of a parliamentary investigation, why is he afraid to come before that committee and either retract or defend that letter?

Why is the Minister willing to precipitate an unnecessary show-down that will force the Multiculturalism Committee to subpoena him as a witness?

Why does he not come voluntarily and defend or promote his letter, and stand up as the Secretary of State for External Affairs, rather than hiding behind closed doors?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, it is not my practice to hide. The Hon. Member will know that there was a motion introduced on that very question in the House of Commons. He should know it, because he introduced it. There was a debate on the matter. I put forward the position of the Government of Canada. It is a clear position to which we adhere.

With regard to the invitation to a committee, I am not going to a committee to talk to members of CSIS. I am going to a committee to talk to Members of Parliament. I am going to the committee that is charged by this Parliament with security questions. They have invited me to come to discuss an issue which I believe to be essentially a security issue. I am responding to that invitation as a reflection of my continuing respect for the practices of the House of Commons.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

ACQUISITION OF NUCLEAR POWERED SUBMARINES—VIEW OF CANADIAN CENTRE FOR ARMS CONTROL AND DISARMAMENT

Ms. Pauline Jewett (New Westminster—Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister, and it concerns the Government's multibillion dollar proposal to purchase nuclear powered attack submarines.

Yesterday, in a scathing attack on this proposal, the Canadian Centre for Arms Control and Disarmament insisted that the Government was naive to assume that the submarines would compel the U.S. Navy to respect Canada's Arctic claims; that far from contributing to Canadian independence they would integrate us even closer into the U.S. forward maritime strategy; and that they would devalue Canada's own credibility as an active proponent of the nuclear non-proliferation treaty.

In light of this damning indictment, will the Prime Minister now give his assurance that the submarine proposal will not be proceeded with?

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, the Centre's position, just as the Hon. Member's position on this issue, are both predictable and not surprising in any way.

The position taken by the Government is that, after 20 years of neglect of Canada's Armed Forces, it is time that we develop the capacity to defend Canada adequately and to contribute to the collective defence of the West.

The Hon. Member and her Party do not agree with such policies, but that is the policy of this Government.

REQUEST THAT DECISION BE POSTPONED

Ms. Pauline Jewett (New Westminster—Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, I would have thought that the Prime Minister and the Minister of National Defence would have some respect for the very highly respected and expert Centre for Arms Control and Disarmament, and I am shocked at the Minister's reply.

I go back to the Prime Minister—

An Hon. Member: Order.

Ms. Jewett: Well, he smirks. He always smirks.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member will put her question.

Ms. Jewett: I go back to the Prime Minister, Mr. Speaker. Given the grave implications of the submarine proposal, both for Canada's sovereignty and our solvency, and our credibility in the non-nuclear proliferation world, will the Prime Minister at least give his assurance that no decision will be made on this matter until the Canadian people have judged it in the forthcoming election?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, we have respect for bodies that hold differing views.

Ms. Jewett: The Minister does not.

Mr. Speaker: I wonder if Hon. Members could allow the Prime Minister to respond; it makes it a lot easier and a lot quicker if there are not comments floating back and forth. The Right Hon. Prime Minister.

Mr. Mulroney: The Minister is most respectful of dissenting opinion. After all, he is a member of the Conservative Party, and we understand that from time to time.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Mulroney: But I should tell my hon. friend that we disagree with the statement that was put out.

• (1450)

We believe that this initiative is very much consistent with our obligation to protect the national interest and to assert the sovereignty of Canada.

The Hon. Member, having served long and well in this Chamber, will agree, I am sure, that one of the great moments of sadness for all parliamentarians was the realization that, after 20 years, the Government of Canada and the people of Canada were incapable of physically asserting sovereignty in our North.

This is an important part of the assertion of sovereignty that came about as a result of the White Paper, which I know will ultimately please a great number of the Hon. Members opposite.

CANADA PENSION PLAN

HOMEMAKERS' PENSION PROPOSAL

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Right Hon. Prime Minister. When he was Leader of the Official Opposition he said, and I quote:

> It is a great injustice that the work of the homemaker is so undervalued in this society . . .
> But I assure you tonight of my personal conviction that a pension for this country's homemakers is both just and equitable.

That was March 3, 1984. His Minister of Health and Welfare said today that there will be no homemakers' pension under the Canada Pension Plan in this Session of Parliament.

I would ask the Prime Minister to explain to the House, and to Canadians, why it is he is refusing to honour his commitment of 1984 to the people of Canada? Or is this just another broken Tory promise?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member knows exactly what the Prime Minister, what this Party, and what this Government said in respect of a pension for homemakers. I quote directly from the policy book: "We encourage the provinces to agree to the introduction of a homemaker's pension in the Canada Pension Plan, along the lines proposed by the Parliamentary Task Force on Pension Reform."

The position of this Government on a homemakers' pension is very clear. We want one. We also know that, under the Canada Pension Plan, we need the agreement of the provinces.

Additionally, the Hon. Member should know that we brought in changes on RRIFs, on retirement pension plans, on the Canada Pension Plan allowing for credit splitting, and a spousal allowance for widows and widowers.

Every one of those changes could have been brought in by previous Liberal Governments, and they did not do so, and in most cases the Opposition oppose these changes even now.

PRIME MINISTER'S STATEMENT

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, my question is also for the Minister of National Health and Welfare.

This Minister, and this Government, had almost four years to put in place a pension for homemakers, and all we hear is excuse after excuse.

An Hon. Member: What did Monique Bégin do for the homemaker?

Mr. Dingwall: Does the Minister not recall the words of his own Prime Minister, on March 23, 1984, and I quote:

> And I will personally urge our Party and the provinces to give their consent to a program resulting in a homemaker's pension.

When is the Progressive Conservative Party going to stand for a homemakers' pension and put it into place? When?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, this Party stood for a homemakers' pension in the 1984 election campaign, and continues to do so. I have just read again how the Canada Pension Plan can be used to accommodate a homemakers' pension.

That is where the Prime Minister stands; that is where this Government stands; that is where we all stand. And where do you stand? You had 20 years in which to do something, and nothing was done.

PENITENTIARIES

CONDITIONS IN KINGSTON PRISON FOR WOMEN

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Solicitor General and concerns the very tense conditions at the federal prison for women in Kingston.

In recent days there have been many knife-slashings, attempted suicides, macings, a dog on the range, all resulting in some 20 women being currently in segregation and the head of the inmate committee, Gayle Horii, resigning in despair.

Will the Minister personally look into this very serious situation at the prison for women in Kingston, and will he take immediate steps to ease the tensions at that prison where, to quote from a letter written to me by Gayle Horii, "hatred in the air can be sparked off with anything now".

Hon. James Kelleher (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I can advise the Hon. Member for Burnaby that indeed I am aware of the conditions at the women's prison in Kingston. I have had discussions with officials from the Correctional Service of Canada with respect to that situation. I am also aware of the need for additional facilities for women across Canada.

Indeed, while in British Columbia last week I had discussions with the Attorney General of that province regarding the possibility of building additional facilities in that province, to alleviate the overcrowding and its consequent problems at the federal prison for women in Kingston.

Mr. Robinson: Mr. Speaker, I would hope that the Minister will in fact look into the very tense situation at the prison for women in Kingston, immediately.

PROPOSED POST OF AUDITOR GENERAL FOR PRISONS

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Solicitor General. A group of very respected Canadians, including Professor Israel Halperin, Pierre Berton, Yvon Beaulne, and Clarke MacDonald, have called upon the Government to establish the post of Auditor General for Prisons, which office would report directly to Parliament on prison conditions at places such as the federal prison for women in Kingston.

Why has the Minister refused to implement this very important and helpful suggestion, a suggestion that would open up the prison system to greater public scrutiny?

Hon. James Kelleher (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, we now that the Office of the Inspector General for Prisons, and we feel that have office is adequately equipped to look after the needs of the inmates in federal penitentiaries.

Indeed, I am now looking at establishing, in legislation, this particular office, setting out the rights and obligations of the office. In my view, that would adequately take care of the situation.

INCOME TAX

NON PAYMENT OF TAXES BY WEALTHY

Mr. Patrick Boyer (Etobicoke—Lakeshore): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. I would ask the Minister of Finance to explain to the House how it comes to pass that some 40 Canadians earning over $250,000 annually were able to escape the paying of income tax last year.

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I have had the opportunity to review some of the figures that the opposition Parties made reference to yesterday.

From 1985 to 1986 there was a reduction in the number of those earning $250,000 or more and not paying tax, a reduction from 254 to 40, or 77 per cent. So, certainly we are making progress in dealing with this problem.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): In respect of those earning more than $50,000 a year and not paying any income tax, I can inform the House that, in the last full year under the past Liberal administration, the number of such individuals totalled 8,102, and that number is now down to 5,220, or a drop of approximately 40 per cent.

So, we are making good progress in this respect, and I think that is partly due to the fact that we introduced a minimum tax. It is also indicative of the fact that we have removed a number of tax shelters, such as the financing of yachts, the carve-outs that were used extensively by oil and gas companies, the scientific research tax credit, limited partnerships, MURBS, and so forth.

SOCIAL JUSTICE

EQUITY IN INCOME TAX—PRIME MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Right Hon. the Prime Minister.

After seniors were misled, we now know that 3 million Canadian women will not have a pension plan. I would like to remind the Prime Minister that he said on television that it was unacceptable and unfair that anyone in Canada pays no income tax.

Yesterday, Revenue Canada informed us that more than 5,000 people with annual incomes over $50,000 and even $100,000 did not pay a cent of income tax in 1986.

Could the Prime Minister explain to the old couples in my riding, for example the Doirons, whose Canadian Pacific pension income is $17,142 a year and who had to pay nearly $700 in income tax in 1986, how come the Prime Minister's protégés who earn $100,000 or more manage to pay no tax at all? Where is the fairness and why has the Prime Minister once again misled these people?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, obviously it is the Hon. Member who is once again misleading the House.

Indeed, when he was a Member of the former Liberal Government and sat in the House of Commons, there were 8,102 people in Canada who earned more than $50,000 in 1983 and paid no income tax. Last year, this number was reduced to 5,220, a drop of nearly 40 per cent, thanks to the tax reform presented by the Conservative Government and the present Minister of Finance.

We thus see that it is progress in the right direction. Together we are plugging the loopholes that did so much harm to the couples mentioned by the Hon. Member for Montreal Sainte-Marie. With the number of people who pay no income tax reduced from almost 9,000 to roughly 5,000, we see already that we have more money to help the disadvantaged. And that is what we are doing.

• (1500)

EQUITY IN INCOME TAX

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, nothing but words, words, words! The elderly and our families don't believe them anymore.

I have another example involving income tax, and this one is not from Statistics Canada. Mrs. Perreault, who lives alone and is under 60 years of age, has an income of $5,591 under the Quebec Pension Plan and gets $3,497 in welfare payments. I am not talking about the wealthy, the Prime Minister's friends! She also has to pay income tax.

Could the Prime Minister explain to the House why someone whose income is below the poverty line for individuals who live alone, has to pay federal income tax, while someone with an income of $100,000, ten times the poverty line figure, manages to pay not a single penny?

Why does the Prime Minister tolerate this kind of thing? Why doesn't he ask the Minister of Finance, as he did in the case of the elderly, to impose a minimum tax on all Canadians, irrespective of their income?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is asking for an answer on behalf of a Mrs. Perreault in Montreal. I would be glad to oblige.

His question is about the poverty line. From 1982 to 1984, 317,000 Canadians fell below the poverty line, while between 1984 and 1986, 525,000 Canadians became better off and managed to get out of this frustrating situation.

This accurately reflects the second part—he asked me an important question and I am trying to give him the answer. The answer to the second question is that when he was a Member under the Liberal Government, in 1983, 178 people in Canada with incomes in excess of $250,000 did not pay income tax, and that number has dropped this year to 40, a reduction of 77.6 per cent. Social justice is spreading in this country!

DEPARTMENT OF SECRETARY OF STATE

OPENING OF OFFICE IN ALMA—BY-ELECTION IN LAC-SAINT-JEAN

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Mr. Speaker, I also have a question for the Prime Minister of Canada. Could the Prime Minister confirm to the House that on May 2, the Department of the Secretary of State opened a temporary office in Alma, Quebec, in the riding of Lac-Saint-Jean, and that this office is paid for by the taxpayers of this country?

Could he also confirm, Mr. Speaker, that the lease signed with Mr. Raymond Malenfant will expire on June 21, the day after the by-election in which the Secretary of State is running as the Conservative candidate in the riding of Lac-Saint-Jean?

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, there are two points I would like to make. The New Democrats will have to get used to the fact that in Quebec we operate the same as anywhere else.

Mr. Speaker, the candidate... The Department of the Secretary of State now maintains it happens very often and this is not a precedent an extension of the office or the Department of the Secretary of State outside the National Capital area, for the purpose of dealing directly with matters that concern the Department.

Mr. Speaker, Canadians have a right to receive services, and wherever those services are provided . . .

Obviously, the Liberal Party has no candidate. It can't find one in this riding. As for the New Democrats . . .

ELECTION EXPENSES IN LAC-SAINT-JEAN—MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Mr. Speaker, the Minister may have noticed that the lease covers the period from May 2 to June 21, which coincides with the by-election in the riding of Lac-Saint-Jean. Could the Minister inform the House whether the rent and operating costs for this office will be declared as election expenses, since the Conservative candidate happens to be the Secretary of State? Will these expenses be declared as election expenses?

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, there are very strict rules on election expenses, and they will be observed. However, the Secretary of State has the right to maintain services for Canadian citizens, and he will continue to do so. The people of Lac-Saint-Jean hope you will find some worthwhile subjects to discuss during this campaign, but I think the New Democratic Party will have to change its tactics to convince Quebecers of its credibility. So far it has failed to do so, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: The time for Question Period has expired.

GOVERNMENT RESPONSE

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 106(8), I have the honour to table, in both official languages, the Government's response to 10 petitions numbered as follows: 332-4244, 332-4245, 332-4299 to 332-4301 inclusive, 332-4315 to 332-4318 inclusive and 332-4320.

[Editor's Note: See today's Votes and Proceedings.]

PUBLIC SERVICE COMMISSION OF CANADA

TABLING OF ANNUAL REPORT

Mr. Vincent Della Noce (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State and Minister Responsible for Multiculturalism): Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the Secretary of State of Canada and pursuant to Standing Order 67(2), I wish to table in both official languages the annual report of the Public Service Commission of Canada for 1987, together with a braille summary of the report.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' BUSINESS

PRESENTATION OF FOURTEENTH REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. Bill Kempling (Burlington): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present the fourteenth report of the Standing Committee on Private Members' Business, in both official languages. The fourteenth report deals with the selection of votable items pertaining to the twelfth draw which took place May 3, 1988.

May I note that pursuant to Standing Order 36(1)(b), this fourteenth report is deemed adopted when laid upon the Table.

[Editor's Note: See today's Votes and Proceedings].

OPPOSITION TO CANADA-U.S.S.R. AGREEMENT—EVIDENCE ON ALLEGED WAR CRIMINALS

Mr. Andrew Witer (Parkdale—High Park): Mr. Speaker, it is my privilege to present to the House today a petition on behalf of Canadian citizens who oppose the Memorandum of Agreement signed between Canada and the U.S.S.R. dealing with gathering evidence on alleged war criminals on the basis that the agreement pertains only to Nazi war criminals and not all war criminals, contrary to the government commitment in its response to the report of the Deshênes Commission of Inquiry.

The petitioners call upon the Government to renegotiate the agreement to reflect the prosecution of all war criminals.

PROTECTION OF RIGHTS OF THE UNBORN

Mr. Dennis H. Cochrane (Moncton): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 106 it is my duty and privilege to present to the House of Commons one of a number of petitions signed by residents of the federal constituency of Moncton regarding abortion.

The petitioners are protesting the recent decision of the Supreme Court of Canada. They urge the Government of Canada to introduce the necessary legislation to place limits upon abortion, thus protecting the rights of the unborn child.

Mr. Brian White (Dauphin—Swan River): Mr. Speaker, I am honoured today to present two petitions from over 300 citizens of the City of Portage la Prairie, Manitoba. The petitioners state that a majority of Canadians are appalled at the number of unborn Canadians killed by abortion each year. They therefore request legislation to protect the unborn from conception on, that a free vote be afforded each Member of Parliament and that no medicare funding be provided for abortion.

INCOME TAX DEDUCTION FOR ISOLATED COMMUNITIES

Mr. Fernand Robichaud (Westmorland—Kent): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to present a petition on behalf of New Brunswickers who say that the federal Government discriminates against residents of New Brunswick communities by not allowing them the tax deductions granted to isolated communities.

The signers of this petition come from Shippagan, Caraquet, Sainte-Marie-sur-Mer, Lamèque, Le Goulet, Cap-Bateau, Evangeline, Inkerman, Savoie Landing, Petit Shippagan, Pointe-Alexandre, Pointe-Canot, Tracadie, Bertrand, Pokemouche, Saint-Pons, Sainte-Rose, Pont-Lafrance, Pont-Landry, Allardville, Saint-Sauveur, Sheila, as well as from Sainte-Cécile, Chiasson Office, Saint-Raphaël, Bas-Caraquet, Centre-Saint-Simon, Saint-Isidore, Grande-Anse, Maltempec, Pointe Brûlé, and also, Mr. Speaker, from Six Roads, Val-Comeau, Leech, Saint-Irénée, Four Roads, Losier Settlement, Saint-Quentin, Edmundston, Gautreau, Bathurst, and I continue, Mr. Speaker, from North Tetagouche, Paquetville, Clifton, Atholville, Balmoral, Pointe-Verte, Petit-Rocher, and furthermore, Mr. Speaker, from Robertville, Pokeshedie, Haut-Saint-Simon, Anse-Bleue, Rang Saint-Georges, Pokeshaw, Notre-Dame-des-Érables, Bas-Caraquet, Val-Doucet and from several other communities too, Mr. Speaker.

These people ask the federal Government to be fair with New Brunswickers regarding the tax deduction for isolated communities.

CANADA-U.S. FREE TRADE AGREEMENT

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, it is my honour and duty to present a petition on behalf of a number of my constituents. Since the Government had no mandate to conclude a free trade agreement with the United States, and since the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) promised that any trade negotiations would not affect Canadian sovereignty, they demand that the Parliament of Canada dissolve and allow the people of Canada the opportunity to accept or reject the proposed free trade agreement through a national general election.

PROTECTION OF RIGHTS OF THE UNBORN

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, I am honoured to present a petition signed by Canadians living in Rockyford and Standard. Your petitioners humbly pray and call upon Parliament to immediately enact legislation notwithstanding the Charter of Rights to define within the Criminal Code of Canada specific penalties for the wilful destruction of the unborn from the moment of conception through to natural death. They ask that guidelines be enacted for the exclusion of medical payments from provincial health plans for the performance of abortions. As in duty bound your petitioners will ever pray.

OPPOSITION TO BILL C-72—OFFICIAL LANGUAGES

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, I have a second petition signed by Canadians living in Crossfield, Calgary, Cochrane and other areas of Alberta. Your petitioners humbly pray and call upon Parliament to cancel Bill C-72 so that unilingual speaking people have a chance for a position in Government. As in duty bound, your petitioners will every pray.

CANADA-U.S. FREE TRADE AGREEMENT

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour and duty to present several sets of petitions. Most of them are from constituents of mine in Regina East and some are in the constituency of my colleague from Regina West. All of the petitioners ask the Government of Canada not to proceed with the free trade agreement it has negotiated between Canada and the U.S. They point out that this agreement infringes on Canadian sovereignty. They also point out that the fabric of Canadian political and economic sovereignty will be destroyed by this agreement. They say that Canada has not secured access to American markets and therefore they humbly pray and call upon Parliament to dissolve and allow the people of Canada the opportunity to accept or reject the proposed free trade agreement through a national general election. This is what the petitioners want and demand.

NORTHERN TAX ALLOWANCE

Mr. John Parry (Kenora—Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour and privilege, in conformity with Standing Order 106, to present on behalf of my constituents their petition to the House of Commons wherein they ask that Parliament provide a remedy to the unjust and inequitable application of the northern residents tax allowance by declaring that all communities within the so-called Tier 3 ridings be designated as eligible to receive that allowance.

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: Nos. 302, and 303.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The questions as enumerated by the Parliamentary Secretary have been answered.

ARMED FORCES RESERVES

Question No. 302—Mr. Howie:

Has the Government established a timetable detailing the projected growth in the (a) size of (b) spending on the Armed Forces Reserves over the next five years and, if so, how does this forecast compare with changes in the Reserves over the past five years?

Mr. Bud Bradley (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Defence): Note: When using terms such as "Armed Forces Reserves" and "Reserves", it is important to acknowledge that one normally thinks only of the Primary Reserve. However, it should be noted that our "total force" structure will comprise approximately 25,000 Supplementary Ready Reserves as well as approximately 65,000 Primary Reserves. This response covers both types of Reserves.

1. Timetable. The staff in NDHQ are just finalizing the Canadian Forces Development Plan for the implementation of the 1987 white paper policies. It establishes how the Canadian Forces should grow and change over time to meet the assigned commitments. It proposes a timetable which synchronizes the personnel growth and training with the equipment acquisition program to ensure that the personnel are equipped, and the equipment is manned in the proper sequence and at the right time. It provides the models against which the actual funding allocations can be compared and decisions taken if the funding is different from that of the model.

(a) Projected Personnel Growth for Reserves. The Supplementary Ready Reserve is a new category within the over-all Supplementary Reserve. It is intended to create this element of 25,000 by recruiting approximately 13,000 qualified personnel by the end of 1989 and the remaining approximately 12,000 by the end of 1992. Over the next five years, the Primary Reserve is planned to grow at approximately 2000 personnel in each of the first three years and approximately 3,500 personnel in each of the remaining two years, for a five-year total of approximately 13,000 personnel. The actual personnel growth rates (Regular and Reserve) will be determined annually by the Department, based on financial and capability constraints. The figures presented here represent target growth rates and totals. Primary Reserve growth in the last five years has been approximately 230 personnel.

(b) Spending on Reserve Equipment. The Canadian Forces Development Plan has determined that spending over the next five years on the Reserve portion of the total force should be in the order of approximately $1.9 billion. Actual funding may cause a different result. Suffice to say that all forces which share the same task, whether they are Regular or Reserve, will share the same equipment in the appropriate proportions. In the past, equipment was bought specifically for the Primary Reserve. A staff check reveals that approximately $200 million was spent for this purpose over the last five years.

AIDS ADVERTISEMENT

Question No. 303—Mr. Nickerson:

Did the Department of National Health and Welfare sponsor an advertisement in the February 10, 1988, edition of The Hub of Hay River, Northwest Territories, the text of which read "Drunk, horny—and a perfect candidate for AIDS. Always use latex condoms with spermicide" and, if so, does it plan to continue to place such ads in family publications read by children?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): The Department has provided some of the funding for the AIDS Control Program for the Northwest Territories. However, the control of the content of the advertisements rests with the Department of Health of the Government of the Northwest Territories. In the future, if the Government of the Northwest Territories wishes to use the Health and Welfare logo, the content of the publication or advertisement will be approved by my Department in advance.

MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I would ask that you call Motion No. P-9 in the name of the Hon. Member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton).

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton) is not in the House at the present time, so I am sure the Parliamentary Secretary will move it at a later time.

Mr. Hawkes: I am quite prepared to have it at a later time, however I thought there was to be an agent on hand for the Member. I understood there had been discussions and that had been arranged, but if that is not the case then I guess we have no choice but to wait until he is here or has named an agent.

ALLOTTED DAY, S. O. 82—POLICIES AND PROGRAMS FOR ABORIGINAL PEOPLES

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane—Superior) moved:

That recognizing that "on average" - social and economic indicators for natives are among the worst for any social group in Canada, this House calls upon the government to revise its policies and programs for aboriginal peoples by:

(a) taking concerted action now to reduce the huge back-log in housing needs in Indian communities;

(b) ensuring quality education programs and facilities for Indian children with genuine Indian control;

(c) cancelling its "capping" of the post-secondary education assistance programs since it is preventing many hundreds of Indian young people from realizing their goals in life;

(d) facilitating Indian child care and family service programs with adequate resources to Indian agencies;

(e) eliminating the obstacles to settlements in current claims policies, including treaty land entitlements;

(f) repudiating its policy of restricting the creation of new bands and reserves;

(g) reinstating constitutional funding to aboriginal organizations and making a constitutional amendment on self-government a priority;

(h) instituting a self-government policy that recognizes self-government as an inherent right;

(i) providing greater assistance for the development of the necessary economic bases for self-government; and

(j) fulfilling its promise with respect to Bill C-31 that no band would be "worse off" and correcting the serious implementation problems with respect to the reinstatement of Indian people as a result of the legislation.

He said: Mr. Speaker, the debate today on this motion is essentially a debate about justice. We are talking in the House about justice, fairness, and equity for Canada's first citizens, our aboriginal peoples; Indian, Inuit, and Métis.

Chief Justice James McRuer, who some time ago headed up the Ontario Commission on Civil Rights, said: "Justice is beyond definition, but the humblest citizen travelling the highways of life has a fairly clear idea of what injustice is in any particular circumstance".

I submit to you, Mr. Speaker, that there is no debate in Canada today about the conditions under which most of our aboriginal peoples live. They are, it is widely agreed, and in the main, deplorable. The social and economic indicators for native peoples are among the worst for any social group in Canada. Many Indians and other aboriginal peoples in Canada live at the level of Third World peoples, and sometimes even below.

The statistics to which I have referred in general are dramatic, alarming, and depressing in the extreme. Let me not throw numbers at the House today, but let me request that all Members acquaint themselves with the facts, which facts are easily acquired, related to the number of Indian children who are taken into protective care; the levels of education attained by our aboriginal peoples; housing, both the lack of and the conditions of the existing housing stock in Indian communities; income levels and the number of aboriginal people who depend entirely on social assistance; rates of unemployment; the percentage of our prison population who are natives; health standards and the death rate; causes of death related to accidents, poisoning, violence, and suicides; infant mortality; life expectancy, and hospital admissions.

In this great, humane, tolerant, wealthy, and rights-oriented Canada, we have a small minority of our people, less than 6 per cent of our population, the aboriginal people of Canada, who live daily lives of despair, destitution, rejection, and domination by a non-native majority and by powerful provincial and federal governments.

This serves as the background for some departmental discussion by senior officials from the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development which took place at Mont Ste. Marie at the beginning of 1988. These officials, meeting in a behind-the-doors conclave, agreed, according to the departmental papers which, by the way, were marked "secret", that "the relatively poor quality of living conditions on Indian reserves has been well documented, therefore, any policy to restrict Indian access to necessary services and facilities would appear callous".

Let us call these officials bureaucrats in order that we can distinguish them from public servants. All Hon. Members will know the difference between a bureaucrat and a public servant. A bureaucrat is one who will give you at least 100 reasons why something cannot and should not be done. A public servant, on the other hand, will energetically and enthusiastically endeavour to help to solve a problem. The difference is between an obstacle, on the one hand, and a facilitator, on the other hand. We are definitely talking about bureaucrats and not public servants.

Having admitted the seriousness of the problem, they go on to change gears in a way which baffles any mind with even an elementary knowledge of logic. They go on to say: "We should therefore carefully avoid expanding the scope of our responsibilities for aboriginal people". This, they say, applies not only to native proposals, that is ideas that come forth from the leadership of the aboriginal peoples themselves, but also to what might be called native implications of general programs. They go on to give an example. They say, "for example, on-reserve child care needs".

I am sure the House did not fail to note that when the Government's child care policy came down, it was next to silent on the need for child care in Indian communities in Canada.

These bureaucrats go on to develop a strategy. This was a strategy meeting. What strategy did they devise? It was in essence to fashion a facade of fairness behind which lurks a cynical policy of containment and curtailment of programs and expenditures for Indian people. The mood and the spirit of this strategy is very much in keeping with another document which is familiar to Members who acquaint themselves with Indian Affairs policy. This strategy smacks of the Nielsen task force report on Indian programs. Incidentally, before that report became public it was leaked and had the code name "Buffalo Jump of the 80s". When that was revealed the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) was quick to repudiate it, or so we were led to believe.

The Nielsen task force report called for, among other things, the capping of expenditures. That is happening. For example, there has been a capping of the expenditure program for financial assistance to Indian students who are seeking post-secondary education. When that cap was applied, I and those who work in my office made a concerted effort to find out how many individual young people were denied access to post-secondary institutions because of the capping.

We did what I thought was logical, we wrote to each regional director across the country and simply asked for the figures. That was too much of a hot potato for the regional directors, so they sent those letters back to Ottawa. After six months the Minister finally got around to replying.

By his estimates, taking only three provinces into account, because he denied that he could get the figures for the other provinces, there were well over 600 denied access to post-secondary institutions. Our own extensive research reveals that the figure is at least 1,000. Since last September 1,000 Indian young people have been denied access to post-secondary institutions.

The Hon. Parliamentary Secretary is interjecting. I am quite prepared to share with him the research which led to the conclusion that at least 1,000 have been denied access to post-secondary institutions. A thousand young people with a thousand sets of dreams and hopes shattered. A thousand young people who could serve Indian First Nations in one capacity or another, tossed to one side.

I want the House and the country to know that the Liberal Party of Canada is on record as saying that a new Liberal Government would immediately remove that cap and open the opportunities for post-secondary education to any Indian young person who is qualified to enter one or another of those institutions.

The Nielsen Task Force Report also called for restricting the client group. I do not know who talks that way, but it means limiting as much as possible the number of people for whom you have to do anything at all.

To give these officials at least some credit, they did recognize, as the departmental papers reveal, that their proposed strategy which I just briefly sketched for the House was: " . . . unlikely to silence Indian and media critics who are seeking major funding increases to meet growing needs and backlogs in housing, elementary and secondary education, and economic development". In that one respect, these officials were certainly correct.

I want to ask the House: Where does our Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. McKnight) stand in all of this? He is the man who, under the Constitution of Canada, has a very special kind of responsibility. It is called a trust responsibility, which means a great deal more than the way in which we ordinarily use that word "trust". It means much more than having a kind of vague confidence. Trust in this case can be very explicitly defined and, in fact, has been defined by the courts. I will leave that definition to another day, but it is precise and it is demanding.

Where does the Minister stand in view of this strategy that has been revealed in these departmental papers? The Minister's first response in the House is to deny that this is Government policy. That will come as a surprise to many Chiefs and Councils and First Nations across the country who are daily feeling the effects of this policy.

The Minister argued yesterday that departmental officials do not make policy, they only discuss. The Minister certainly has a right to defend himself, but I ask his Parliamentary Secretary to tell him that in making his defence please do not take Members on the Opposition side of the House to be entirely naive. After all, it is the Minister who sets the tone for his Department. It is the Minister who establishes the guidelines. They may have discussions of all kinds, but the tone, the mood and the guidelines are there. It is under that umbrella that they have these discussions.

Cabinet documents are prepared by officials as a result of these discussions. The theory of separation of bureaucracy and government, of officials and the Minister is, in practice, simply a way of dodging responsibility.

Second, the Minister defended himself in the House by saying that since 1984 expenditures in his Department increased by a whopping 40 per cent. Last evening, on the CBC national news, that figure was simply reported, blandly and blindly, without question or comment. I say to the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation: So much for investigative journalism.

The Minister knows that the 40 per cent simply will not stand up to scrutiny nor to examination. The Indian people of Canada know it even better than I do because they feel it where it hurts the most, in the communities where they live and in the lives of their children. I challenge the Minister on this 40 per cent on three grounds. First, he fails to distinguish between nominal and real increases. The inflation factor must be considered.

Second, he fails to tell us that much of that increase is due to spending demanded and imposed upon him by the passage of Bill C-31, a Bill that allows for reinstatement of Indian persons who lost their status because of laws passed by this House. When this Bill was in committee, the Government promised that no band would be worse off because of these amendments to the Indian Act. Even that commitment has not been met.

Third, the Minister failed to mention that in the Indian community across Canada there is a baby boom and Indian leaders are facing the challenge of coping with a growing population. This growth creates major demands on education, on employment, on housing and for other services. If we account for inflation and the obligation imposed on the Minister by the House when it passed Bill C-31, we note that that 40 per cent increase since 1984 shrinks to less than 10 per cent. If we further take into account the increase in the number of Indian people, the increase in the population well above the national average, we note that the budget since 1984 has in fact remained flat. That is what Indian leaders across the country have been saying all along.

Those are the background circumstances under which senior Ministers today in Ottawa are meeting with aboriginal leaders to discuss yet once again the issue of constitutional recognition of their rights. Those talks are taking place against the fact that funding for aboriginal organizations for this constitutional work has been cancelled.

The Government continues to insist that recognition of the right of aboriginal self-government must be contingent upon negotiated agreements. It is strange that the Province of Québec can attain recognition as a distinct society without any definition whatsoever, yet that same recognition is denied to aboriginal peoples. The Liberal Party of Canada takes the position that the right to aboriginal self-government is an inherent right and, in making that assertion, we recognize that there is a sovereignty involved that has to be accommodated within our federal system in order to complete the circle of confederation.

We believe that this can be done by way of negotiation, by way of reasonable exchange. But the Constitution of Canada must serve as the imperative for the kind of action that we want to see taking place. The aboriginal people in Canada do represent only a small proportion of the Canadian population. Mr. Speaker, if the House would grant me another minute-and-a-half, I could conclude.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Scott (Victoria—Haliburton)): The Hon. Member's time has expired, but is there unanimous consent for him to conclude his remarks?

• (1540)

Mr. Penner: I thank the House for that courtesy, and I will be very concise. The aboriginal peoples of Canada represent only a very small proportion of the Canadian population. That we know. The officials in their meeting argued among themselves that their treatment is a highly visible test of federal-social policy both at home and abroad. One can only infer from a statement like that, that the compelling force for action of this Government in the field of native affairs is simply that of public relations, make it look as good as we possibly can, do only what has to be done in order to appear fair and reasonable. I say to you, Sir, that this is a cynical view of Government and it is having some undesirable effects across the country. It is creating suspicion, resentment, anger and hostility among the aboriginal people of Canada.

I say to you, Mr. Speaker, that we need to turn the situation around and act instead on the basis of what is right and fair. That is why the motion before the House today calls upon the Government to revise its thinking. We are not today condemning the Government. We are just asking the Government to rethink its position and strategy. Later today we will vote upon the motion and I think that ought to be a compelling reason for all Members to vote in the positive.

We need to turn the situation around and that is the commitment of the Liberal Party of Canada to the aboriginal peoples of this country. It was Justinian in the 5th century, writing in his Institutes who noted that: "Justice is the constant and perpetual wish to render to every person their rightful due". Can we ask for anything less for the first citizens of Canada?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Scott (Victoria—Haliburton)): Questions or comments? Debate.

Mr. Stan Schellenberger (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to join in the debate on the motion put forward by the Hon. Member for Cochrane-Superior (Mr. Penner) who delivered a good speech, as he usually does. He has a good reputation for doing so. I would like as well to respond to the Member by giving him the apologies of the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. McKnight) because he is not able to be here today to respond directly. I am sure the Hon. Member understands that there is a very important meeting in progress at this time regarding a constitutional conference and funding. Perhaps an additional conference may be held. Indian leaders are in the capital today meeting with the Minister to discuss this very important subject which is a priority of Indian leaders across this country. A conference on self-government is a priority of the Government and this meeting, I hope, will bring forward progress. That is the reason the Minister is not in the House today.

The Hon. Member put forward a good suggestion, one that is constantly on the minds of Members interested in this subject and Ministers who have responsibility for it. That is to continually rethink the way in which the Government of Canada responds to its trust responsibility and to the demands placed upon it by the aboriginal people. I have worked with the Standing Committee on Aboriginal Affairs and Northern Development for many years and I know it has been very consistent in offering that advice. As well, particularly in recent times, Indian leaders across this country are very vocal as to what their priorities are and what demands they place on the Government.

We all recognize that in our provinces and our territories examples can be given to the House where there is an inadequate response to the demands placed upon the Government with respect to the conditions of Indian people. I am going to have the same problem as the Hon. Member in going through the list he indicated today. We simply do not have sufficient time in 20 minutes to deal with it adequately. Hopefully, when the Minister is before the committee, the Hon. Member would put forward the list and ask for the Minister's response in detail. I can tell the Member right now it will not be wholly adequate because there is only so much a parliament can do in a brief period of time. However, if he looks at the last 10 years, I think he would agree that we have gone a tremendous way from the 1960s with respect to the conditions existing at that time.

Before I get into some of the detail, I want to point out that it is difficult when Members quote selectively. I know I can be guilty of that as well. However, I am concerned about quoting from the so-called leaked documents. When they are leaked, we all tend to have copies of them. The quote that was used by the Hon. Member was only part of a paragraph. Even though it is only a discussion paper from meetings held by public servants constantly in the Department, from time to time these discussion papers are marked secret, but I see a lot of documents on my desk marked confidential and I am surprised that so many people have them. I will not repeat what the Member quoted, but if one reads the whole paragraph, one will find it is not as ominous as the Hon. Member would like us to think. It goes on to say:

> In fact, however, I would argue that the majority of any incremental funding of this type should go into meeting preventive child welfare costs for bands which have little or no access to such services, rather than into day care when unemployment is so high on most reserves. Or the choice could be left to individual bands and tribal councils.

We all know that the Indian people have made child welfare their priority. They are coming to the Government with this priority and asking that we put in place policies to allow them to take over child welfare. They have made it their priority over day care. They have come and asked for it. In fact, we have concluded six such child welfare documents in Canada in recent months and are working on further cases which have been put before us. I am familiar with Alberta where they are beginning to get started, with some success. As we become more comfortable with the documents that have been signed, that success will be excellent, and they will accommodate the faith that has been put in them by the Government and their people to take over the responsibilities of self-government.

The other important point over which it is easy to become emotional, that is stating that 1,000 people cannot be educated because the Government has capped a fund, leaves the impression that they will never be allowed to go to university. That is not the case. I question the number of 1,000, but I am certainly open to the research. The number that was denied last time was more in the range of under 500. The policy is such that next year those people will be given priority to receive funding. The reason it is difficult to attach a definite number, and this applies across society, is that as people drop out of university or technical school, those funds become available for others to register. Therefore, the numbers are constantly going up and down. It is not only aboriginal people who sometimes have to put off post-secondary education for a year or two, there are many young people in Canada who first have to go out and find the funds before they can go to college, and they are usually successful in doing so. In this case, everyone will be funded. In some cases it will mean that they will have to wait for one year.

The other point made that requires an answer is with regard to the budget. The budget of the Department of Indian and Northern Affairs has risen by some 40 per cent over the last four years. The Member stated that there were no increases. We know that the population of the aboriginal people is increasing, and that has a draw on the budget of the Department. It is also a fact that the increase in the budget has gone from $2 billion in 1984-85 to $3 billion in 1988-89. Those figures apply to the Department of Indian Affairs.

Budgets of other Departments that are used by aboriginal people in Canada have also increased. The total increase has been some $900 million in those four years. Approximately $70 million of that is for Bill C-31. That may well be inadequate, and I know the committee is sitting on that very subject. It may bring to Parliament recommendations regarding the adequacy of that budget. To say that that is the entirety of the increase is not properly putting forward the debate on whether the Department is actively seeking funds beyond any other Department in government to assist people who have needs. That increase is for services. There are no cut-backs. If there are any cut-backs, they are in the institution itself.

When the Government came into power the Department had some 6,000 person-years. In the upcoming fiscal year the figure will drop to 4,600 person-years. The projection is that the Department will decrease its numbers beyond that in 1990 to 1991 to some 3,900 person years. That means that the number of public servants is decreasing in the Department of Indian Affairs. Why is that? The reason is that more and more aboriginal people are taking over the responsibilities that the public servants once put forth. If one looks at the overhead as a percentage of the money expended, one finds that it has decreased substantially. I believe that the overhead as a percentage of the total budget has decreased to 4.8 per cent. The per capita expenditure for on-reserve Indians is now some $9,000 per person. When we rethink, as we have been asked to do, and that is a very important part of what a Government should do at any time, the question is, how can we use this money more effectively? I know that the complaint is that so little of this money is reaching the people who have the need. There is a constant desire and need to rethink the manner in which the budget of the Department of Indian and Northern Affairs is spent.

For example, if one looks at education and post-secondary education, there are now some 14,000 Indian people who are post-secondary students. That is a tremendous increase over some 10 years ago. The Government is now providing a budget of approximately $130 million to support those students. That averages approximately $8,000 per student. Under the present rules any student can receive funds, whether they are rich or poor, or whether or not they live with their parents. Perhaps because some students are presently not receiving the support that they desire, if we look at the budget perhaps there are better ways that it can be spent. Perhaps there are ways that we can cut back on some to provide more assistance to others. That is a reasoned approach and it should constantly be discussed how programs can be improved.

Very soon the national organization will present a report on education across Canada. I expect within that report there will be some excellent points as to how the money can be more prudently spent and that more Indian people will achieve graduation from high school or university. That is a very important part of fostering self-government and continuing advancement across the country.

I appreciate the opportunity to discuss the situation in Canada regarding aboriginal people. There was a similar motion a month ago when we had the opportunity to discuss Indian conditions in Canada. We have been given the opportunity again today, and that is important because we seldom have the opportunity in the House of Commons to bring forward this type of debate.

• (1600)

Yesterday we had released the report of the Hall inquiry on the Westbank Indian band. That inquiry illustrated that, more and more, Indian leaders in this country are taking hold of the advantages, the opportunities afforded them. In the case of the Hall inquiry, we had an Indian chief who was eager to accomplish something. Perhaps, in his eagerness, he made a few mistakes; and perhaps the Department made a few mistakes. But, things did go forward. It is an example of people taking charge of their own affairs.

It is important that we put this into perspective. Notwithstanding this list of concerns, there has been progress. We all know that there is an inability to have a quick fix—and that is probably not the way to go, in any event. There are no magic solutions. But, with determination, with openness, with good faith and through consultation, the solutions are within our grasp.

Looking at the trends, one can see improvement, and that improvement is coming about because of a combination of native initiative and determination, together with increased federal funding and support. It is encouraging to see some of the advances that have taken place.

By way of example, we can look at the statistics on housing. While band membership has been increasing dramatically, so, too, has the number of houses. Twenty years ago, fewer than half of on-reserve houses had electricity; only one in six had a safe water supply. Sewage systems were virtually non-existent. Today, two-thirds of the on-reserve homes have running water and piped sewage, and electricity is available in every community.

While there is still a long way to go, the situation has certainly changed over the past 20 years. This year, with the help of federal direct subsidies totalling $94 million and $66 million in loan guarantees, Indian bands will build some 3,000 new homes, and renovate an additional 3,000. Approximately 30 per cent of the current housing stock on reserves today has been built in the last five years.

Certainly progress is being made in the area of housing. The same is true of education. Today, there are some 243 band managed schools, serving 28 per cent of the on-reserve population. Only 20 years ago, most of the native people attended off reserve schools, most of which were church-run. There are now some 82,000 students of Indian descent enrolled in elementary and secondary schools, and 14,000 attending post-secondary institutions. I was recently in Alberta and had occasion to attend a function at which the Alberta Indian Investment Corporation was allotted some $8.3 million by the NEDP and the Department, which was expected to create 500 new jobs and 250 new businesses. A few months prior to that, we were working on the oil and gas regulations and the establishment of Indian companies that could take over control of that area. I have witnessed on the reserve in my constituency advances made in the taking over of the oil and gas regulations and the receipt for the Indian band of some of the benefits of the oil and gas resources.

I had occasion to participate in an Indian art expedition held in Los Angeles, California, and witnessed the great demand for Canadian Indian art. Unfortunately, there is not sufficient time to deal with all of the advances that have been made. I can only say, in conclusion, that the commitment to sustain these positive trends on the part of the Minister and this Government is clear. I believe this Government can be judged by its actions. We are increasing the Indian Affairs budget steadily; we are acting to promote Indian self-government. I am pleased to be able to confirm to the House today that we will see that policy continue, with hopefully even greater successes in the future.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Regina East (Mr. de Jong), on questions and comments.

Mr. de Jong: Mr. Speaker, of great concern to various bands in Saskatchewan has been the decision, or the apparent decision, by this Government to bypass an agreement that had been worked out in 1976 between the Government of Saskatchewan and the Government of Canada, known as the Saskatchewan '76 Agreement, whereby the 1976 population figures would be used as the basis to negotiate land entitlement rights.

The bands have been attempting to get a definitive word from the Government as to whether it will honour that agreement, or whether it will insist that the population figures that existed at the time of the signing of the treaties will be the figures used in determining land entitlement rights.

I would ask the Hon. Member, who is the spokesperson for the Government today, to rise in his place and make clear the intention of this Government in this regard. Will it honour the 1976 Saskatchewan Agreement, or is it looking at another basis for determining land entitlement?

The native people of Saskatchewan are deeply concerned with this matter. They are concerned that the Government might renege on the agreement that had been entered into between the Government of Saskatchewan and the Government of Canada, thus leading to yet another broken promise. The Indian people in Saskatchewan, and Indian people across this country, have seen too many broken promises. They are asking themselves today whether this is to be yet another broken promise.

Mr. Schellenberger: Mr. Speaker, the 1976 "Saskatchewan Formula" is under discussion by the federal Government. The federal approach is to achieve the treaty land entitlement settlements, to the extent possible, under the established authorities, and to make headway wherever it can. That formula sets out some high goals, with some 300 per cent more land transfers than was actually the case under the treaty, and the authorities are attempting to meet that goal wherever it was established.

I know that the bands are considering court action in order to advance this matter, and I would hope that they would see that this may be premature at this time. The Cabinet is reviewing the issues on implementation, and is holding discussions with the provinces and the bands, and hopefully progress will be made on this very important issue.

Mr. de Jong: Unfortunately, that answer is not good enough. It leaves the Indian people in exactly the same position as they are now, that being the position of not knowing what the true intention of the Government is. The Indian people have been waiting for a long time for land entitlement settlements, and this Government is now saying that the data of first survey is the data that should be used, wiping out the agreement that had been reached in 1976 between the Government of Saskatchewan and the federal Government of the day.

With that agreement and that understanding, the Indian people had achieved some victory. To have that all wiped out again will set them back another 50 years. Surely the Hon. Member will agree that it would be grievous to do that to the Indian population of Saskatchewan. They are suspicious that the Government will not give them a straight answer until some time after the election. They feel that another agreement is being broken and they do not have the resources to go to the courts. What funding existed for land entitlement studies has been reduced by the Government, so the Indian people are caught in a catch-22 situation. In essence the Government is forcing the Indian people to go to court. Responses by the Minister in the House to questions by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton), seemed to suggest that if the Indian people want the Saskatchewan agreement to remain in effect, they will have to get the courts to force the Government to do so. If the Government forces the Indian people to go to court to keep the 1976 agreement in place while cutting the funds enabling them to make a court challenge, then the Government is dealing very unfairly with the native people of Saskatchewan.

Mr. Schellenberger: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is trying to put the worst case scenario on his question. I do not think I indicated that that was the case. If I did, I apologize. The Minister is approaching Cabinet on the 1976 Saskatchewan formula. Authority to implement the formula was never established. That is what is under discussion. Existing authorities enable reserve additions and creations under certain circumstances. I am sure the Minister will be happy to share these circumstances with the Hon. Member. He is in active discussion with the provincial government and the bands regarding the very important question of entitlement. If we proceed case by case, that entitlement is under treaty, without prejudice to a band's position for more. Discussions are proceeding very well in this area. We hope it does not proceed so slowly that bands in Saskatchewan may feel they have to move to the courts for a solution because a negotiated settlement is far preferable.

Mr. Penner: Mr. Speaker, the Parliamentary Secretary will be aware that yesterday in the House the Minister and myself had a vigorous exchange relating to departmental strategy. In the course of the Minister's response I thought he threw in rather inexplicably and irrelevantly to the question the matter relating to Bill C-31, now an Act of Parliament, a particular section known as the death rule. It sounds ghoulish to speak about the death rule. The Parliamentary Secretary will know, because we served together on the committee, it was never intended that Indian persons seeking reinstatement whose parents died prior to 1985 would be ineligible.

Apparently idle hands in Justice must have got tired of working on crossword puzzles or playing cribbage, picked up Bill C-31 and decided to cause some problems. We now have this death rule and the Minister says we are stuck with it. We in the Opposition, the New Democratic Party critic and myself, have agreed to co-operate with the Minister in amending the statute.

The Minister left the impression yesterday that somehow there was a problem on this side of the House. Can the Parliamentary Secretary tell us whether there is a draft amendment prepared. Is the Government prepared to take the opposition critics into its confidence so that we can take a look at the amendment? If we find it is workable and that it will solve the problem, I can assure the Government that we are prepared to deal with the matter expeditiously. We think this is an impediment in the Bill that was never intended and it ought to be corrected with haste. If the Parliamentary Secretary can help us on that issue, it would be appreciated.

Mr. Schellenberger: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the manner in which the question was asked. This matter is being given very careful consideration. I agree with the Hon. Member. When we were in committee, as he knows, we worked overtime with witnesses to attempt to make sure that we did not miss anything. For some unknown reason, this slipped through our careful scrutiny. Because of that, careful consideration is now being given to the issue and the options that can be put in place. I take the Member's assurance that if we take the critics into our confidence, perhaps we can deal with this expeditiously in the House. With that, I will go to the Minister and see if we can do that quickly.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Resuming debate. The Hon. Member for Yukon (Ms. McLaughlin).

Ms. Audrey McLaughlin (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to rise today to speak on this motion. I concur with the main intent of it, but we have to rethink what has been done. One can assume that the motion has at least in part been precipitated by the so-called leaked document which seems to indicate that we are not seeing a new vision and a change in the way things will be done. Despite the rather glowing report card which the Parliamentary Secretary gave, we have to consider why this matter generates so much discussion. If things have advanced as quickly as the Parliamentary Secretary has indicated to us they have, if things are as good as he has indicated to us they are, then why is it that none of us really has the time to explore the issues in the depth that we know need to be explored? There are so many problems and so many complications.

One thing about the document as my colleague, the Hon. Member for Cochrane—Superior (Mr. Penner), said, there does not seem to be a thrust for substantive change in policy but rather a sort of cosmetic better communications policy. In one section it says that the old ways have not worked. We know that. In another section it says that we are not seeking dramatic change. Why not, Mr. Speaker? The time is now for dramatic change if we have the political will to change the way we have treated aboriginal people in this country. I do not think we have yet seen a government that has the political will.

With all due respect to my colleague from Cochrane, whom I respect very much for the work he has done on aboriginal issues, his Liberal Government created much of this legacy. The 1969 White Paper of Jean Chrétien proposed that the vision would be for assimilation. These are not new problems. I suppose in that sense I can be somewhat sympathetic to the current Government that it is having to deal with a situation which has gone on for a very long time and which neither the previous Government nor this one have taken in hand to address appropriately. It is sort of like the acid rain question. Lots of consultation. Let us consult some more. At the same time the problem keeps eroding our country. It keeps eating away at the respect that we have for one another, for the honour we have for all of our citizens.

I notice that the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) today spoke about nuclear submarines and why we need submarines for our sovereignty. I beg to differ. Our sovereignty will not be defined by hardware in such things as nuclear submarines. It will be defined by our strength as a people. Nowhere in Canada does the way that we have dealt with aboriginal issues and rights exemplify our weakness as a people. If we look at other examples of sovereignty, we see in Vietnam that there was a lot of hardware and many troops but it was the will of the people who established sovereignty and won the war.

I want to give an example which I think exemplifies what we are really talking about. There are a lot of statistics, and they have been talked about today, but we are really talking about fairness and justice and correcting historical wrongs. One of my constituents is a man named Elijah Smith, a respected elder in the Yukon. He fought in World War II for his country, Canada. He returned home to the Yukon to establish the first native organization there because he realized that only by working together would any advancement be made. The native people could not wait for the rest of Canada to give it to them.

Fortunately, Mr. Smith did not have to give up his life for his country, but he did have to give up his Indian status, his definition as a person, in order to fight for this country. When the war was over he did not receive the same benefits, such as land, as many non-native members of the Armed Forces. When he returned from the battles he still did not have the right to vote in the country for which he had just fought. That is really what this is all about.

Today Elijah Smith and many like him still fight for their children and grandchildren, the Indian people. He is in the forefront of such issues as land claims. Having fought in World War II for Canada, we really have to ask why Elijah Smith has to fight today for the rights of his people.

I suggest that if previous Governments and the current Government had the political will, we would not be seeing yet another document that talks about consultation. We would be seeing a document that talks about implementation, about what we are really going to do. Nowhere is this better exemplified than in the question of land claims and the issue of aboriginal title.

As most people will know, the aboriginal people were not conquered. There were a number of treaties signed, but there were a number of areas where they were not signed, and that is the basis of the land claims negotiations. They were not a conquered people and therefore some compensation for lands assumed must be made. However, land claims is not just about land, it is also about how Canada's first people can regain the culture they have had taken away and destroyed. Let me give an example of that.

If you are a parent and your child is six years old and you are told it must go away, sometimes many miles away, to a strange place where they do not speak your language, where brothers and sisters will be separated and not allowed to talk to each other, you would be quite surprised. When you expressed some objection you would be told that you are doing something good for your child, something that will ensure your child's future, and that you have no choice. If you are the child and you are put on a bus and you said goodbye to your parents and went to a strange place where you are not allowed to speak your language and are told that two months of the year you will be allowed to go home, then you would see what we are dealing with today. We are dealing first with an attempt to destroy a culture. That did not work so then came an attempt to assimilate. That has not worked so now we are trying to find ways to settle it just a little bit better, but we are still not very serious about it.

This did not happen hundreds of years ago, as most people will know, but 20 years ago. If you wished to fight for your children, or study for a profession, or married a non-native person, you had to give up your Indian status, your definition as a person. Today of course that is quite inconceivable, but I want to mention some areas where this kind of philosophy continues in many of the policies we see today.

While there are other areas of the country where the same issues exist, I want to speak about my own area where I can do so most authoritatively concerning land claims. In the Yukon and the Northwest Territories the majority of the land, some 96 per cent in the Yukon, is controlled by the federal Government. Until land claims are settled no economic development can take place for native people or non-native people in a comprehensive way. It follows that no constitutional development can take place. The Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. McKnight) has said until the Territories can become economically self-sufficient, provincehood will not be a possibility. We are in a catch-22 situation. I believe very strongly that if there is a will to settle the land claims issue in a fair and just way, it will be done. I will give an example.

There is an excellent process taking place in the Yukon now where the three parties, the Indians, the Yukon Government and the federal Government, are negotiating. They travel from community to community so that people will understand what is taking place. After a lot of difficulty because the process is tough, they will come to a point where all three parties can agree. That agreement is then sent back to Ottawa to the bureaucrats, as my friend from Cochrane—Superior defined them, who know nothing about the experience or the history of this part of the country. They then start to assess and analyse the agreement and very often they assess it and analyse it right out of existence.

We have seen many examples of the negotiating process where there is certainly a non-political role. There is another role that very clearly is political. Clearly in this instance the Minister, in all of the land claims settlements, must say directly to his officials that he wants these land claims to be settled, that he wants the negotiation process to conclude in a fair and just way for everyone concerned. Yet we have this situation of agreements being made and then coming back to Ottawa where they are torn apart. This is not a helpful process. In fact, it is a very destructive process for aboriginal people as well as others.

The Lubicon land claim hardly needs to be repeated in the House. It is a legacy of 50 years where the claim still has not been settled, and there has been a refusal to appoint a mediator requested by the people. Why is there this kind of resistance? This is exactly the basis for the motion we are debating. It is the philosophy and the will to make a dramatic change and yet we have this leaked document which says no, we are not going to make a dramatic change. Dramatic changes are certainly needed. I would like to say a few words about the idea of self-government. The Hon. Parliamentary Secretary stated that talks are going on right now about the issue of self-government and further constitutional talks.

Yet the document which the Hon. Member referred to today talks about how the Department has received some 60 proposals representing 228 bands to initiate negotiations on self-government. The response in that document is to talk about the lack of resources to handle the growing number of community requests posing a serious threat to a strategy of demonstrating that practical arrangements can be worked out at the local level without constitutional changes. This is not the first time where the consultation process has been undertaken and the outcome defined in another forum. Therefore, I think we can quite readily understand the concern, indeed the suspicion, of many aboriginal groups and those of us who are not aboriginal people that if these matters are not settled we will all suffer, not just the aboriginal people. The United Nations has already found that we have not honoured some of our treaties and have shown discrimination. This is a shame to all of us.

I would like to touch on a few topics about which the Minister spoke as showing great improvement. Housing is one area in which he said some interesting improvements had been made. Figures in a report by the Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation of May, 1987, differ from those presented by the Minister who said that 20 years ago less than half of native housing had electricity. He said that two-thirds of the homes now have electricity available and that one-sixth did not have water supply.

However, according to this report, 36 per cent of on-reserve units are crowded as opposed to 2.3 per cent in the general population. We see that 43 per cent of the housing units are in need of major repairs as opposed to 13 per cent throughout Canada. Forty per cent do not have access to running water, indoor toilets, or bathing facilities, as opposed to 1 per cent across Canada.

Therefore, if we are to accept the Parliamentary Secretary's contention that housing has improved, it has certainly improved darn little. I am not sure that many aboriginal people would be able to accept that glowing report.

There are some rather ill-planned programs which exemplify the lack of a new political will and dramatic action. There has been an attempt, for a number of years now, to have joint funding for housing between the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development and Canada Mortgage and Housing. In my area people have received notices in the mail recently that their rents will go up by some 30 per cent to 100 per cent. If this happened in Toronto there would be riots. The people of one community have decided that, with summer coming, they will live in their tents because they cannot afford this housing, this great program which was to solve this problem for Indian people.

In another community three people have had to move out of the housing. The band has to keep up payments for the housing and is trying to rent the housing to a non-member of the band in order that they will not lose it. This is an absolutely ludicrous situation.

With Bill C-31 and the reinstatement of people who lost their status—another bureaucratic decision taken without any reference to the culture or the way in which the community operated—we see an increased need for housing and an increased problem without a direct focus on an answer to this problem.

The whole question of who is an Indian and who is not an Indian relates very much to this motion. The Government, which is willing to spend $7 billion, $8 billion, or $16 billion on nuclear submarines, is not willing to spend the money to address this problem. We therefore try to redefine who is an Indian. Aboriginal people know who the aboriginal people are, but the bureaucracy and Government decide to fool around with that and decide who is and who is not.

I referred to the loss of status for a variety of reasons. However, even when bands are attempting to constitute their membership, there are so many rules and hurdles about who is an Indian and who is not that it is ridiculous. It is the stuff of a good satire, but it is a tragedy for the bands which are attempting to build their communities and address the kinds of problems outlined in this motion. For example, band members are not allowed to transfer to another band. As the motion indicates, no new band can be created.

In my own constituency a band was amalgamated with another band in the 1950s by an Indian agent who thought that since they were all Indian people he could put them all together and it would not matter. Of course, that was totally ignorant of the culture and the way in which the band functioned. It has not worked, and the Government is not now prepared to separate those bands and redress that wrong.

Language defines a culture. The Tungavik of Nunavut, for example, want very much to have language included as part of their land claim. That may be a strange concept to some people. However, if one understands the culture one will understand the way in which we have attempted to destroy the language of a people that is absolutely key to their development. On that particular issue the Government has said no. However, the Inuit are very clear about the importance of their language, not just because it is all very interesting to have Inuktitut spoken, but because it is an essential part of their life.

As another example, the Secretary of State has said that we will have a national aboriginal language centre. Languages are regional, and it is very difficult for various areas to get funding for language development. The Six Nations Reserve, for example, which has one of the largest language programs in Canada, has been seeking five-year funding to get a really serious language program going. They cannot wait for 5 or 10 years. These languages are disappearing. Surely Canada must preserve the sacred trust of language.

There are many other issues including the need for band administration funding. Cut-backs, rumoured and real, continue and make it very difficult for the self-government and sound administration which we expect of the bands.

I am happy to support this motion on behalf of my Party. Tinkering with a few programs and making changes here and there is not the solution. The solution is a new vision and a political will to make sure, once and for all, that we institute the fairness and justice which aboriginal people deserve.

Mr. Langdon: Mr. Speaker, would my colleague from the Yukon give us a sense of the major priorities which she feels a New Democratic Party Government would wish to put into place with respect to Indian communities after an election?

Ms. McLaughlin: Mr. Speaker, certainly the most crucial aspect is to have control over one's life. We see many instances in which people make decisions for other people and decide how they should live by them. Whoever defines the problem defines the solution. For many years non-aboriginal people have talked about "the Indian problem". Aboriginal people, on the other hand, have talked about "the white problem". There is something to be said in the definition of the problem.

The only answer for all people is to have a degree and element of control over their own life and their own decision making, whatever form that should take. That form should be decided jointly by the aboriginal communities, the territorial and provincial Governments, and the federal Government.

The very fact that, as this document says, the Department has received 60 proposals representing 228 bands asking to initiate negotiations on self-government indicates the priority for people, which is just plain common sense. Imagine that, as I said in my speech, people who fought for their country and wanted to become a doctor or marry a non-native had to become enfranchised or say "I am not a native person". That is ludicrous.

The priority for a New Democratic Government or any Government must be to facilitate the self-determination of aboriginal people on appropriate cultural terms, in band administration and development, in economic development, and in constitutional development.

If one does not have some control over one's life, one is left with what this document defines as the old ways. The old ways are our defining for others what they should do to make their life better, generally in a culture that we do not even understand.

A New Democratic Government will change that. Indeed, any Government must change that in order for there to be any justice at all.

Mr. Penner: Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for her support for the motion, and I commend her for an excellent speech. The Hon. Member for Yukon (Ms. McLaughlin) will be familiar with the very important claim that is being negotiated in the North, in her constituency. It is the claim being negotiated between the Government of Canada and the Council for Yukon Indians.

The motion makes reference to aboriginal claims. We all know that the much heralded new claims policy fell well short of the recommendations contained in the Coolican report. Nevertheless, it is a new claims policy.

Does she believe this has facilitated to any degree at all the settlement of that claim? Can she tell the House, from her own knowledge, what exactly are the obstacles at the moment? So far only one claim has been settled in the North, with the Inuvialuit who occupy the delta of the Mackenzie River. It is the so-called Committee for Peoples' Entitlement Claim.

We have long expected a settlement in the Yukon but there seems to be delay upon delay. What are the obstacles that she has been able to detect?

Ms. McLaughlin: Mr. Speaker, the claims policy to which the Hon. Member refers certainly ran into a lot of deep water. It took two years to develop, which I find incomprehensible, given that the Yukon land claim has gone on for over 15 years. I think the issues were fairly clear.

My colleague referred to the impediment to the land claims settlement. I must reiterate what I said in my speech. There is a fairly open process now, with a lot of consultation with the communities. There is agreement on some major issues and there is still some outstanding disagreement, but of course I am not party to the ongoing negotiations.

The point I want to stress is that the Minister must convey to his Department the message that this land claim must be settled. There is the political will at the local level and there has been agreement on substantive issues. The problem arises when the strings are pulled from Ottawa, where there is no experience with what will work in the Yukon.

It is time we stopped working from the book and began thinking about what is practical, reasonable, and culturally appropriate for native people and non-native people in these land claims. Rather than formulate a bureaucratic, technically perfect document, let us look at what will work. We know well what has not worked, so there is a good basis upon which to settle the claims, if the Minister will make a strong statement to his Department that this must be settled now.

Ms. Mitchell: Mr. Speaker, I congratulate the Hon. Member on her speech. What are her views on the whole question of native child welfare? I believe I heard the Parliamentary Secretary suggest that native people are not interested in day care but want to give native child welfare a higher priority.

I believe I heard the Minister's representative suggest that money was going into this function. On the other hand, we have had complaints from aboriginal groups in Alberta and Manitoba that there is no funding going toward support services for families to help them strengthen families, provide their own foster homes, and care for their own children.

Ms. McLaughlin: Mr. Speaker, the whole issue of child welfare, like the cultural and language issues, is very important. One way to destroy a culture is to make sure the children are estranged from it, so that they lose the language and are detached from the family unit.

Child welfare involves the same issue of control over one's life and destiny.

During my speech I referred to the leaked document and some of its aspects which are rather cosmetic and do not address basic issues. The Parliamentary Secretary will be glad to hear me refer to something that is positive and for which I will hold the Government accountable. It states that child welfare is already identified as a first priority, and that the Government will be prepared to seek authority to lift the moratorium on new agreements and begin consultations in 1988. I hope that is true because the issue of child welfare is extremely important in aboriginal communities, as I am sure the Parliamentary Secretary is very well aware.

The sad fact is that generations of children were separated from their families and did not grow up in a family unit where they had role models. It has been a tragic legacy for aboriginal people and a shame for this country.

After quoting some aspects of this document which are less hopeful, I believe this is a positive one that I look forward to seeing implemented.

Mr. Robert Wenman (Fraser Valley West): Mr. Speaker, due to a meeting of the Standing Committee on Aboriginal Affairs and Northern Development, I regret that I have not been here to listen to all the debate. I would like to have heard the Hon. Member for Cochrane—Superior (Mr. Penner) who moved the motion, because as a member of the same committee I certainly know that he has dedicated much of his interest and concern to this subject.

I heard the beginning of his remarks, which he began appropriately by talking in terms of justice and injustice. Certainly this Parliament must address injustice toward native people generally, not only in this debate but in a constant attempt to find equal opportunity to build upon the full potential of the native people of Canada. When speaking of justice or injustice in terms of dollars, no matter how we argue the percentages we see that this Government has made a particularly important financial contribution.

In fact it is a substantial greater contribution than was made by the previous Government in the four years from 1980 to 1984. I suppose there is a bit of irony that the Member who proposed the motion was part of the Government which did not see justice in terms of dollars because its commitment was a lesser commitment than that of the current Government. Justice, of course, is not found in terms of dollars. If in fact one is a victim of injustice, as so many native people seem to be, any form of natural justice seems painfully slow as native people find their potential in Canada.

If one is part of that 30 per cent of the native population which can be found in the Canadian penitentiary system, if one is part of that penitentiary population, there in part because of cultural differences or because of lost or missed opportunity, one finds that justice is indeed slow. Those living on the streets of Vancouver, Toronto, or Montreal, broken down by drugs, alcohol or prostitution, cut off from their natural friends and relatives, are indeed victims of the system. We must address those very real, human concerns.

Those who are trying to find their way through the maze of Bill C-31 in order to find their status and dignity in that sense indeed will find that to be a difficult procedure as well. Certainly we can look at it negatively, as the Opposition must, but we must also try to look at the record which shows that the Government has made an increasing commitment of funds and effort to try to bring about change.

It is very easy just to deal with the status quo. Any long-term bureaucracy, establishment, or business unit always resists change. The Government has tried to bring about change and correct injustice with Bill C-31. As a result, over 40,000 Canadians have found their status. Another 40,000 Canadians have gained medical, dental, and educational benefits as well. There is a very positive story with respect to Bill C-31 for those people who now have health benefits and improvements in educational opportunities.

I would like to put some of our programs on record so that we can see the positive side. The Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development deals with programs and services which cover the entire range of services any modern community has come to expect and demand. In the current year the budget for Indian services, capital, economic development, local government support, education, and welfare totals $2.1 billion. That is $2.1 billion of the funds of Canadian taxpayers. It is a 9.8 per cent increase over the previous year. I would have to say that it is a pretty good increase during a period of financial restraint and attempts to bring the deficit under control.

Those of us who serve on the Standing Committee of Aboriginal Affairs and Northern Development and are particularly concerned about the Indian people would want to say that it is not enough. I am sure, when we come down to our report on Bill C-31, we will be advocating more to be done in many areas for the Indian people. I suppose when it does come down to the question of talking in terms of dollars—how much is enough—the answer is always "more".

Over the past 10 years there has been significant and continuing improvement in the ability of Indian Governments to provide the basic amenities and services to their people. I will give a bit of credit to the previous administration, because even it tried to improve the budget. In 1988-89 we are looking at a capital budget that totals $341 million. This is $341 million which will provide roads, sewers, water treatment plants, electrification, community buildings, and housing.

For example, one area about which I hear constant concern from native people is the area of housing. Sometimes one would think that nothing is ever done because we hear the complaints so often. However, in 1988-89, some $118 million will be used to assist Indian communities in meeting the household needs of their communities. It should be understood this is not an outright grant but a subsidy, the level of which depends upon the geographical location of the community. A contribution is made to an Indian band to assist in defraying the costs of construction of a house. Since 1979 there has been a requirement that these houses be built to the standards of the National Building Code. In addition, the band secures additional financing above the subsidy level to complete the unit.

In the last five years, 14,000 new homes and over 17,000 renovations have been completed on Indian reserves. It is never enough, but that is 14,000 new families located in homes in which they can take a sense of pride and where their children can bring friends, homes where enduring family traditions can be built.

Let us look more closely at the situation of housing in Indian communities. The quality of Indian housing has improved and will continue to improve. The overcrowding problem has been reduced considerably. In 1977 there was an average of 5.9 inhabitants per reserve house. Today we are looking at a number below 5.0 inhabitants per house, in spite of an increase in the birth rate. Over the past 10 years there has also been a significant improvement in the number of Indian communities that have access to the normal electrical services most people take for granted. By 1986-87, 87 per cent of on-reserve houses had full electrical service. Today the majority of Indian communities are serviced by provincial electric grids rather than by diesel generated systems. That integration of systems has indeed helped.

However, one would still wonder what kind of a backward nation we are when 1 per cent, 2 per cent, 10 per cent, or 12 per cent of houses are not electrified in Canada today. I find it incredible when I travel internationally and see homes without electricity. Surely electricity is a basic requirement in the Canadian lifestyle.

There is also an important side benefit to the housing program in terms of its impact on the Indian community. Virtually 100 per cent of home construction and renovation is managed by Indian bands themselves using Indian labour and, where possible, Indian supplied materials. This provides needed jobs in the Indian community and helps to reduce dependence on welfare. It also provides an opportunity to develop skills such as those of electricians and carpenters, skills that are essential to the long-term health and vitality of the community.

During the 1980s there has also been a significant improvement in the number and quality of houses constructed on Indian reserves. Adherence to the National Building Code has meant that quality housing is being built that will last well beyond what was once considered the norm in Indian communities. In raw statistical terms, the current budget foresees in this year that some 2,700 houses will be built, and a further 2,300 units will be renovated. This is not every house and does not go anywhere near the demand, but it is not an insignificant contribution by the people of Canada to the native community of Canada to assist in approving the housing situation.

Whenever one visits an Indian community one is undoubtedly aware of how vital and important education is for the future. Healthy communities that are capable of directing their own destinies require the skills and knowledge of modern education. This modern education system is evolving throughout Canada among native people. The Department currently supports more than 82,000 Indian students enrolled in elementary and secondary schools. Approximately 50 per cent of those students attend provincial schools, 28 per cent are in band operated schools, and the remainder are in federal schools.

Over 14 years ago the federal Government began transferring control of Indian education to bands. I noticed that even today when members of the Mohawk tribe appeared before the committee they stated that one of their major priorities was to gain full control of their own post-secondary and elementary education system. At the present time this process is being accelerated. In the past fiscal year a further 18 schools representing 2,300 students have been transferred. This year it is planned that a further 27 schools will be transferred. By 1991 it is anticipated that most Indian students will attend band or provincial schools. That is a pretty large sociological change over a brief period of time, and a tribute both to the previous Government and this Government that we should be accelerating that pace and measure of control.

The past decade has also seen an impressive school construction program. A significant portion of the capital budget has been allocated to this objective, resulting in a full 143 school facilities being built or renovated over the past 10 years. In 1986-87, there were 243 band operated schools compared with 135 in 1980-81. That is a 100 per cent improvement. The five-year, long-term capital plan foresees expenditures of approximately $290 million, comprising 1,800 school projects.

Perhaps the most dramatic evidence came last September in Manitoba. For years northern Manitoban Indian children have had to leave their communities and travel south, if they wished to carry on their education beyond grade school. It is often a traumatic experience, and we found that very few made it through to graduation. Last fall six new schools were opened in northern Manitoba. For example, the school at Cross Lake was a $16.7 million project, the largest capital project ever undertaken by a band and the Department in an Indian community.

New and modern educational facilities are a necessary part of any education system. However, quality represents a partnership between teachers, students, and the community. That is why the Government believes that local control and parental involvement are so important. Indeed, one can see the impact of those factors on the performance of Indian children in the schools today. More Indian children are staying in school longer, more children are graduating from high school, and more young adults are going on to post-secondary education.

In addition to those statistics, there are many other government programs such as the one I attended on Friday in my community. This was a manpower program that I assisted in starting, and here I found 12 native people aged from 19 or 20 to 40. The highest level that had been attained by those people was grade 10, and anywhere from grade 6 to grade 10 they had dropped out of the system. They are now back, and in five months most of them will complete their post-secondary education qualification. They are now developing plans to move on to other post-secondary institutions.

There are many programs to talk about, Mr. Speaker. For example, the programs conducted in jails where 150 out of 18,000 people received their literacy this year. In one year we graduated 750 heading up to 1,800. There are also great opportunities in this area.

Clearly, there are many things that need to be done. I could go on listing the quality of the programs that we have established in education and those that are being developed. Suffice it to say, there are now more than 14,000 full and part-time Indian students benefiting from the education program. Currently more than 2,000 students are enrolled in special post-secondary programs including management studies, teaching, child care, health care, agriculture, and a whole range of studies that can be found at any university and in any school. We are very pleased about these accomplishments.

If time allowed, I could go on to talk about child welfare opportunities and the child care services that are being delivered. This is another new area being approached by the Government of Canada, and we will be focusing on those types of programs as we develop into the future.

In summary, it is clear that there is much to do in Indian and native affairs. It is clear that enough is always "more". Those of us who were on the committee will be pressing the House of Commons to identify not only the need of the native people of Canada but the potential of the native people of Canada and, as we identify that potential, to provide maximum opportunities in order that these people might find their rightful place in our society, as so many already have. Educated and confident native people appeared before the committee, and they gave great guidance to the committee. I look forward to working with the results of the final report. I thank the Hon. Member for bringing this issue to the House of Commons. It is important that it is debated, discussed, focused upon, and that the Government and the nation recognize the great potential of the native people of Canada.

Mr. Penner: First, I wish to thank the Hon. Member for Fraser Valley West (Mr. Wenman) for participating in the debate today. We are colleagues working together in the Standing Committee on Aboriginal Affairs and Northern Development. I consider the Hon. Member for Fraser Valley West to be the fourth ranking member from the government side on aboriginal affairs and northern development, following the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. McKnight), the Minister of State, the Parliamentary Secretary, and the Hon. Member for Fraser Valley West who is the government spokesman on the committee.

Today the committee had a difficult time because this debate was being held in the House, and many Members who ordinarily would have been active in that committee were engaged in this debate. However, the Hon. Member for Fraser Valley West was present, and I believe he listened to the testimony of the Blackfoot tribe of Treaty 7 in the southern part of the Province of Alberta.

He will therefore know that this tribe has a particular problem at the present time with the Government of Canada concerning a cattle claim settlement. A long time ago the treaty allowed for those people to receive a certain number of cattle. That obligation was never met. It is the history of Canada that, in the main, these treaties were ignored. But, in the life of the last administration, finally an agreement was reached. Instead of cattle there was to be a cash compensation. That money was delivered to the tribe and distributed among its members. To their utter amazement when they received their regular social assistance they discovered that the amount of money received by each individual was subtracted from the social assistance payment. This seemed to them to be a violation, and I share this feeling. It was a violation of a treaty obligation. It was taking from one pocket of government and putting it back into the other pocket. It is a Peter and Paul situation.

The Hon. Member heard the grievance expressed this afternoon. He probably is familiar with the problem. Therefore, I wish to ask him whether he proposes to take to the Government the request that this be dealt with in a just fashion. What exact steps does he intend to take or suggest that the committee take regarding the grievance of the Blackfoot tribe on its treaty rights?

Mr. Wenman: Mr. Speaker, the committee is in fact studying Bill C-31 and its impact and effect. Like many pieces of information that come before the committee, this shows the scope of the problem with which we have to deal. While it does not deal directly with Bill C-31, it is indicative of an outstanding problem, and one that needs to be resolved.

I understand that meetings have been held with the Hon. Minister of State for Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Valcourt) and with the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. McKnight), and that a resolution is hoped to be found. Certainly any representation that is made to the committee will be acted upon.

The Indian people have been waiting for 107 years to have these matters resolved, and they should be resolved as quickly as possible. If the negotiation route fails to come up with a resolution, resort may have to be had to the courts. At any rate, the committee has been made aware of this problem, and it is something that was done in a positive manner. People come before the committee, not with aggressive demands, but with statements of fact. I will be taking those statements of fact up with the Parliamentary Secretary and the Minister, in an effort to bring about an early resolution.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Yukon (Ms. McLaughlin) on questions and comments.

Ms. McLaughlin: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member has said that our responsibility is to define the potential of the aboriginal people. I should like to suggest that our task is to ensure that the Indian people have the resources to utilize their demonstrated skills, and not some vague "potential" that we are going to define. The Indian people should have control over the establishment of their own needs.

While there are many issues that have been discussed today, I should like to focus on two which relate to the manner of funding Indian bands and the extent of such funding.

The late receipt of funds by Indian bands leads to tremendous administrative problems. Payments are inevitably late, with the result that band staff cannot be paid. Often, the band has to draw upon a bank overdraft, or borrow funds in some other manner in order to discharge its obligations. Because bank charges cannot be included in band budgets, funds for such charges have to come out of yet another budget, thus putting tremendous administrative stresses on the bands.

In addition to addressing the matter of late payments, I would ask the Hon. Member to address the level of band funding in respect of administrative functions. In terms of the programs that have been discussed during the course of this debate, and the implementation thereof, Indian bands are carrying a tremendous load. They cannot afford to pay band staff salaries that are comparable to those available on the open market, with the result that staff is lost to employment that offers higher salaries and greater security.

Band administration is something that is very difficult, and I would be interested in having the Hon. Member's views on that.

Mr. Wenman: The Government has embarked upon a program of education for band administrators. This is something that is done through native education centres and our universities.

In order to bring about greater efficiency, those handling the business transactions of the native communities need to be better educated. Toward that end, new educational programs are being developed, and existing ones expanded. That is something that is happening on a daily basis.

On the matter of the transfer of funds, hopefully that will improve as we move to more self-government, self-administration. The policy of this Government is to move toward self-government, and self-government will mean an ever increasing portion of a band's budget being controlled and administered by the band itself.

As we proceed with the devolution of authority and power from the Department to the bands, moving more and more to self-government, the transferring of the dollars from the Department to the band will become a smoother process.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Hamilton—Wentworth (Mr. Scott) on questions and comments.

Mr. Scott (Hamilton—Wentworth): Mr. Speaker, while in the vicinity of my riding there is the Six Nations reserve, I am unaware of having any Indian band member being resident in my riding. That notwithstanding, I was fascinated by the remarks of the Hon. Member for Cochrane—Superior (Mr. Penner), as well as those of the Hon. Member for Yukon (Ms. McLaughlin) and those of the Hon. Member for Fraser Valley West (Mr. Wenman).

Canadians have always wondered about the legal and historical bases in respect of Indian land claims. They have also become very sympathetic in respect of such claims.

The Hon. Member for Fraser Valley West has demonstrated in the past his sensitivity to those claims, and with that in mind I would ask him what advice he would personally give to the House—and through the House, to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. McKnight)—on the question of settling aboriginal land claims, on the question of the right of the native peoples of this country to land entitlement.

How soon does he think self-government will come about? That is something that is a matter of importance for all Canadians.

Mr. Wenman: Mr. Speaker, self-government is moving forward at an accelerated pace, with the Indian bands gaining more and more control over their affairs with each passing day, and the policy of this Government is to continue that accelerated pace toward Indian self-government.

The Hon. Member made the point that there is no Indian reserve within his riding. That would be true for most Members of the House, and particularly those representing urban ridings. However, there are many individual Indians living in the core areas of our cities.

If I were to give the Minister any advice at all, it would be in respect of status Indians who, for one reason or another, choose to live off the reserve. There can be any number of reasons for their choosing to live off the reserve, including a lack of land, an inability to meet the band code, or perhaps simply a lack of employment on the reserve. Because these Indians are living in the cores of our cities, there is no means by which to deliver services to them.

As the functions and powers of the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development are decreased, with more and more power being transferred to the bands themselves, these people get caught in the middle.

We need to provide, for such individuals, programs on drug abuse, as well as educational programs of one kind or another. We need these in the downtown Vancouver core.

• (1720)

Ms. Mitchell: You are cutting funds.

Mr. Wenman: I hope the Hon. Member will ask a question. I would like to comment on the fact that these people really have no one to represent them. The bands are on the reserves. They keep contact as best they can. We have the United Native Nations and others trying to build access. Access comes through the Department, but the urban status Indian is a very particular problem. Let me give Hon. Members an example.

I have nine young people enrolled in a native education program. Of the nine paid people, eight were recommended for funding by the bands. The ninth person, a status Indian but not registered with his band, had to work to raise his own money. He ran out of funds at Christmastime and had to drop out. He had a limited route to gain his right to education support which the others had gained through their band.

Who will look after that urban status Indian? Who will reach those who are on the streets and need to be helped off the streets and into treatment programs, not the traditional treatment programs but treatment programs that are devised by the native people themselves? We found the success rate of natives working with natives is so much higher than the success rate of natives being pushed into the mould of contemporary systems. Certainly, if I had some concern to direct, it would be to the urban status native most of us do not recognize in our own ridings throughout Canada who is not on a reserve but struggling to find a place in our communities. Members could help by getting to know the people, providing access for them, and helping them find their status. It certainly would be something that every Member could do to assist.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Would the House give unanimous consent to allow for two short questions from the Hon. Member for Vancouver East (Ms. Mitchell) and the Hon. Member for The Battlefords—Meadow Lake (Mr. Gormley)?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Ms. Mitchell: Mr. Speaker, I am told by the native people that I have the largest reserve in British Columbia in Vancouver East. I agree completely with the Hon. Member for Fraser Valley West (Mr. Wenman). There are many, many people on the streets and off the streets in Vancouver. There are excellent Outreach programs. The native education centre in my riding has a wonderful reputation with about 25 or 30 years of experience. It is doing terrific training in administration, modern skills, and child care for people who come off the streets.

Would the Hon. Member visit that centre, if he has not already done so, because it is an inspiration to anyone? Would the Member personally intervene with the Minister because the federal Department is cutting funding completely from that centre?

The very programs the Hon. Member has mentioned which are so important in achieving self-government, as well as in achieving more education and development for urban native people, are being destroyed by cuts in funding. It seems very sad that devolution means taking from programs like that. It is quite unrealistic to expect that bands will pay for the full cost of operating that program.

Mr. Wenman: Mr. Speaker, I have been to the native education centre in the Hon. Member's riding. It is an excellent institution, and it is oriented toward programs that native people themselves want to develop. The institution is teaching the kinds of programs which it thinks are important. Certainly I approve of that kind of facility very highly.

As we decentralize there are some basic questions to be answered. Can we turn control totally back to bands? Could we reach the absolute situation? No, we cannot. That is why there will always have to be a Department of Indian Affairs to find the balance and protection required for those who need it in settings like this. There will have to be concerted efforts by bands, as well, to find and identify their members and recognize that there will have to be services provided on and off reserves. As money is provided by the taxpayers of Canada to the bands, the bands, in turn, will have to recognize that there are people, to some degree, living off reserves as well. It is not an option.

The Mohawk Indians were before us in committee this afternoon. They told us they had 167 new people registered to their tribe as a result of Bill C-31. I asked them how many of the 167 had applied to register to come back to the reserve. They told us about six. The rest are living in off-reserve settings yet they have a right, a desire, and a need for basic services. They indicated that the new 167 members had probably received their medical benefits, their dental plan, and their educational opportunities, but that their contact was limited. They did not know how many would come back or would want to come back. We identify in the process of devolution a very important problem, namely, the urban status native whom I covered in my earlier response.

Mr. Gormley: Mr. Speaker, I wanted to touch briefly on the whole subject of constitutional reform and self-government. As one who represents a constituency with 19 Indian reserves, and after the next election 24 Indian reserves, clearly the issue arises on a regular basis about what has happened to the constitutional reform process with respect to self-government.

I think it has been suggested by certain native leaders—I do not think it is helpful to name them—that there is an opportunity in the Meech Lake constitutional process to start the movement to negotiate a constitutional self-government right for Indian people. I am not sure that that is entirely fair to the process.

Four First Ministers' Conferences have been held between 1983 and 1987. In 1985 we were within a whisker of reaching an agreement through the personal intervention of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney). There has been a series of ongoing discussions. I noticed just this week a group of native leaders has been meeting with the Ministers of Justice, Indian Affairs, and Federal-Provincial Relations to forward a joint proposal for work on a constitutional amendment.

While this is all rather preliminary, I want to make both a statement and pose a question to my colleague about where he sees the constitutional reform process presently moving toward. I think it is important that the Member reinforce, on behalf of the Government, that the door has not swung closed on constitutional amendment, that it has not closed forever. I wanted to sound the Hon. Member out on that particular point.

Mr. Wenman: Mr. Speaker, one of the great things about the Minister we now have is his unending patience and his willingness to try again. The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) set up a complicated system of dialogue, discussion and reform which seems to have broken down. I know that right now, in fact, the Minister is very concerned and says that the door is not closed. He is working very hard with the Prime Minister and others to try to find ways to open the doors again to that negotiation and dialogue.

I thank the Hon. Member for the question. The door is certainly open, and a new process must be found and initiated as soon as all Parties can find agreement on that process.

Hon. William Rompkey (Grand Falls—White Bay—Labrador): Mr. Speaker, constitutional reform would be a good place to start, but first let me thank my colleague, the Hon. Member for Cochrane—Superior (Mr. Penner) for bringing forward this motion today. I think it is a very timely and important motion. Let me thank him also for the work that he has done for native people over the years, particularly in this Parliament, and for the work that he has done for our Party.

Recently he was instrumental in organizing a forum on aboriginal and First Nations issues which brought together native people from all across the country to focus for several days on important policy issues. For us as a Party it is important to revisit the fundamental problems that native people face, and the Member is also to be congratulated for that.

This motion today covers a number of important issues with regard to the native community in Canada. As I said, let me start with constitutional reform. We have just heard the suggestion that the door has not swung completely shut and that the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) is trying to open it again. However, I think we have to admit as politicians on both sides of the House that we have not been very effective in advancing the cause of constitutional reform on behalf of native people.

It seems to me that if Meech Lake is approved as is, with no change at all, then it will be more difficult in future for native people to obtain constitutional change. Surely that is where power rests in the country. Where do native people get power? They get it from having enough money, from having enough local control over their own lives. They get it out of the Constitution of Canada and from political will. Yet if Meech Lake goes through unamended it will be more difficult, rather than less, for native people to bring about change in the future.

Reference was just made to a conference that came within "a hair's breadth". We all know what the "hair's breadth" was. We know there were certain parts of the country, certain people, certain politicians, who refused consent to a resolution which had widespread support. Yet those same people and politicians and areas are going to have more power in future, not less, to stop any kind of constitutional change like that.

It is not enough to say we are trying to get the door open again and get the consultation process going specifically if Meech Lake goes ahead with no change, because I do not see and native people do not see where there will be an effective constitutional opportunity for them to advance their cause in future. We have to recognize that and recognize it now because Meech Lake is coming up again and we will focus on that. That is one of the serious issues we have to deal with, and we have to demand some changes in order that that might come about because those changes are very important.

Where do many native people live? They live in the Northwest Territories and the Yukon. Some of them live in my riding. I have two Indian bands there. The Labrador Inuit Association has several thousand members and the Labrador Métis Association has about six to eight hundred members. I think I understand what they want. However, the great majority of native people live in the Northwest Territories or the Yukon. Apart from the effect on native people living there, those areas will themselves find it more difficult in future to achieve self-government. That is where they are going to get political power. That is an advancement of political power. Therefore, these issues are important to us when we come to discuss Meech Lake.

The other items listed in the motion are important. First, quality education and facilities for Indian children with genuine Indian control. That is so important. Look at language alone. If we do not take steps dealing with not only funding but curriculum to preserve the language, the culture will die. When the culture dies, the community is quite a different community; it is not the same at all. French Canadians have gone through that battle for many years. It is a battle over language. Why is language so important? It is because bound up in language is the essence of culture. The same thing is true of native people. If we do not put in place the proper funds and proper curriculum for native schools, if we do not emphasize native language and native culture, that will be a weakness in the process of self-determination and advancing their cause.

In my own province it is a little more difficult because we do not have any status Indians. In 1949, when we joined this country, it was agreed that funds for native people would be transferred to the province on a per capita basis. The same amount would be transferred as would normally be given to native people in other parts of the country on a per capita basis. That is what happened and a block of funds is transferred to the province. Native people in my province want some control over how that money is spent, but they do not have that either. They do not have easy access to those funds. Decisions are still made by the two levels of government without enough control by native people in the province. It is more difficult for them to get a handle on money for education.

The whole question of education is very important. Why? It is because in any country, not just this country, it is well known that the kind of job one has, and therefore the kind of salary one makes, is directly related to one's amount of education. There is a direct correlation between the two. That is the reason we have to emphasize education for native people. I am talking about secondary education, but let me go on to another important point.

I think one of the most tragic things the Government has done is to cap the amount of money available for post-secondary education. That is exactly what has been done. I want to read a letter from the Labrador Inuit Association which says:

> I understand through various media reports that you were very concerned that at the radar construction sites at Saglek, Labrador, only one position out of a possible 150 jobs was filled by a local resident.
> Enclosed please find a copy of a letter from the regional Department of Indian and Northern Affairs. This letter is informing the Labrador Inuit that funds are no longer available for any vocational training programs in Labrador. Without financial assistance for occupational training the employment situation in Northern Labrador cannot be expected to improve.

Let me put that in context. I remember going to the Northwest Territories with the Standing Committee on National Defence where we heard representations concerning the North Warning System. That system was a good idea, and it needs to be done. Native people have no problems with putting it in place. They say: If you are going to come up from the south and do that, fine, but are we part of it? What are we going to get out of it? What is it in for us"?

It is in that context that I want to read that letter. It says only one position out of a possible 150 jobs was filled by local residents. Do you know why, Mr. Speaker? It is because local residents do not have a lot of training. That gets us back to the issue that I raised concerning the amount of money available for post-secondary education for native people. That amount has been capped. The Government is building the North Warning System and putting 150 jobs in the community, but it is saying to local and native people, "that is fine, but we are capping the amount of money available to you for post-secondary education. We know it is the only way you are going to get those jobs, but we are capping those funds".

I know that in government the right hand does not know what the left hand is doing. I know there is no central planning agency. Yet all the native people are asking for is reasonable opportunity. I do not think that is too much to ask for. I do not think it is too much to ask that they be able to get training so that they can get jobs in this, one of the greatest countries in the worlds with unlimited resources. In 1988 that is not too much to ask. I really believe that if the Government has any sympathy at all, any compassion, any understanding of what needs to be done, it will reinstitute the program of post-secondary education with full funding.

Eliminating the obstacles to settlements in current claims policies, including treaty land entitlements, is another case in point. Let me start from the North Warning System again. In my area not only is the North Warning System going in, but we have low level flying in the same areas that people are hunting and fishing. I think these things can be carried on together with some safeguards, but all these activities should happen within the context of land claims.

The important thing is that native people want to deal with the North Warning System, low level flying, and industrial development in the context of land claims. The important thing for them is land claims because, unless they have some way of controlling their own lives and their own futures, they cannot deal with these issues.

Yet there is a continuous hold up of land claims. I do not think the land claims are unreasonable. I have not heard any native group say that they want complete, absolute, and utter control over what goes on in this area. They are not saying that. The Labrador Inuit Association is saying that it wants some say in the over-all future of a certain area and municipal control where people live which has to be fairly absolute. They want some input into policy at the provincial and federal levels, and they want some compensation. They want some natural resource rights.

That is not unreasonable. It is not separating a block of territory from Canada. We are not talking about an absolute Government but a reasonable approach to a reasonable degree of self-government. Unless that happens we cannot deal with the changes that are going on.

I have another letter from the Labrador Inuit Association telling me that the Memorandum of Understanding that had been agreed to by the Province of Newfoundland and the Government of Canada has now been washed down the drain. The Cabinet of Canada has rejected the Memorandum of Understanding which has been signed for a year. The Government of Newfoundland signed it a year ago, the federal Cabinet has just thrown it out, and we have to start again from square one to negotiate land claims in Labrador. The Labrador Inuit are completely frustrated and do not know where to turn.

That is a fundamental issue. Unless we are prepared to exercise the political will that is necessary to start those claims—not to settle them, just to start them, which will be a fairly long process—we are not giving the native people the power they need to determine their own future. Therefore I completely agree with the clause of the motion with regard to eliminating the obstacles to settlement in current claims policies, including treaty land entitlements.

I dealt at the beginning of my speech with reinstating constitutional funding to aboriginal organizations and making a constitutional amendment on self-government a priority. It is essential that we do that.

I see that you are indicating that my time is running out, Mr. Speaker. As I said in the beginning, I am pleased that we had the opportunity to debate this today. I congratulate my colleague from Cochrane—Superior. I hope that the Government will see the wisdom of reinstituting these programs now in the context of the forthcoming debate on Meech Lake.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Today has been a very important day in the House of Commons. We have heard a number of excellent speeches on the challenges and concerns facing native people. Unfortunately, we only had a chance to hear five speakers. I know that Standing Order 9(4)(a) would normally enable us to continue sitting beyond the ordinary hour of adjournment. I know that you are also aware that the Standing Orders require this debate to conclude at the ordinary time.

Therefore, I wonder if I could seek the unanimous consent of the House to allow the debate to continue until ten o'clock tonight, with the vote deferred until tomorrow, to allow those Members who have indicated an interest to speak on this important issue that opportunity.

Mr. Towers: Mr. Speaker, perhaps the Hon. Member is not aware that this is one of the most important nights in the life of the Canadian Parliament. It is what we call the Baltic Evening. Many of us are committed to represent our constituency to the Baltic community. I do not think it would be fair of us to allow the House to continue to sit.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, I take the remarks of the Member seriously. I would not want him to think that we are trying to prevent him from going to the Baltic Evening. However, I could give the undertaking that we will not call quorum and, on behalf of those of us who would like to participate, perhaps the House would see fit to accept the motion of the Hon. Member. Indeed, I would second that motion if possible.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the point raised by the Hon. Member in terms of the importance of Baltic night. However, the issue which we are discussing today in the House of Commons applies directly to hundreds of thousands of Canadians of native origin. If we agree not to call for a quorum count, only three or four members of the government Party would be required to stay in the House of Commons to speak in the debate. That would allow 207 Members to attend the Baltic night on behalf of the Government.

I am simply seeking unanimous consent to allow this important debate to continue for another few hours.

Mr. Caldwell: Mr. Speaker, parliamentarians are very busy. This is also a very important evening for the young people of Canada. Many of us have to attend Adventures in Citizenship tonight. Young people from many of our ridings have come a long distance to meet with their Members of Parliament, and I am looking forward to meeting the young people of my constituency.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for the Hon. Member's proposal?

Some Hon. Members: No.

[Translation]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being 5.45 p.m., it is my duty to interrupt proceedings and to put forthwith every question necessary to dispose of the supply proceedings now before the House under the provisions of Standing Order 82(9).

[English]

Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those in favour will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Call in the Members.

The House divided on the motion (Mr. Penner), which was negatived on the following division:

DEPARTMENT OF INDUSTRY, SCIENCE AND TECHNOLOGY ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of State and Minister of State (Treasury Board) (for Mr. Mulroney)) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-128, an Act to establish the Department of Industry, Science and Technology, to repeal the Department of Regional Industrial Expansion Act, and to make consequential amendments to other Acts.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House that the Hon. Minister shall have leave to introduce the Bill?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

PETITIONS

RESEARCH INTO PREVENTION AND CURE OF SCHIZOPHRENIA

Mr. John Reimer (Kitchener): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition on behalf of 253 residents of the Kitchener—Waterloo area in respect of the disorder schizophrenia. The petitioners consider schizophrenia to be a major illness in Canada, affecting about one per cent of the population, and they call upon the Parliament of Canada to put into place research efforts which are commensurate with the fact of schizophrenia being a major illness in Canada.

PROTECTION OF RIGHTS OF THE UNBORN

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, it is my honour to present a petition organized by the Pentecostal Church of Fort Smith, Northwest Territories. The prayer of the petition calls upon Parliament to pass into law legislation that will protect the life of the unborn child from conception and through all stages of development, with the exception of the extremely rare situation in which an abortion is performed in order to save the life of the mother.

CANADIAN OWNERSHIP OF UTILITIES, DAMS AND WATER LICENCES

Mr. Vince Dantzer (Okanagan North): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition from several residents of the southern Okanagan Valley of British Columbia. The petition asks Parliament to pass a law requiring majority ownership by Canadians of electrical utilities, dams and water licences so that Canadian citizens will be afforded sovereignty protection equal to that enjoyed by citizens of the United States in respect of electrical utilities in that country.

OPPOSITION TO CLOSURE OF POST OFFICE AT ROBICHAUD

Mr. Fernand Robichaud (Westmorland—Kent): Mr. Speaker, it is my duty to present to the House a petition from more than 500 constituents in Westmorland, and more particularly, in the community of Robichaud.

These individuals humbly state that closing the post office in Robichaud in the constituency of Westmorland, New Brunswick, will deprive the citizens of this community of a unique federal presence and will reduce vital postal service in this rural community. For these reasons, the petitioners humbly ask Parliament to reject the Canada Post Corporation plan.

PROHIBITION WITH RESPECT TO KNIVES

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, I am very honoured to present a petition from petitioners who live in Winnipeg, Manitoba, Vancouver, North Burnaby and Victoria, B.C. It is on a subject which I have raised many times in this House, that of the high incidence of crime associated with knives.

We have recently had more incidents in Vancouver. There have been very serious crimes of sexual assault involving knives.

The petitioners call on the federal Government to amend the Criminal Code to prohibit the carrying of knives by citizens in public places. The only exception to this ban would be for those whose knife is integral to legitimate work or where a knife is carried for religious purposes.

Order Paper Questions

CANADA-U.S. FREE TRADE AGREEMENT

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, it is my honour and duty to present a petition on behalf of citizens in my constituency. They believe that, since the Conservative Government had no mandate from the Canadian people to conclude a free trade deal and because the free trade deal does affect the sovereignty of the nation of Canada, Parliament should dissolve and allow the people of Canada an opportunity to accept or reject the proposed free trade agreement during a national general election.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of State and Minister of State (Treasury Board)): Mr. Speaker, I ask that all questions be allowed to stand.

Mr. Speaker: Agreed?

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

ALLOTTED DAY, S. O. 82—POSTAL SERVICE

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches) moved:

That this House condemn the government for its total and absolute failure to provide fair and equitable postal service to all Canadians by:

(a) instructing Canada Post to cut back postal services to Canadians living in rural areas;

(b) installing "supermailboxes" to take the place of door-to-door mail delivery in new suburban areas; and

(c) making hundreds of thousands of Canadians second-class citizens when it comes to the provision of postal service.

He said: Mr. Speaker, at the outset I move this motion in the absence of the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Keeper) who could not be here today. He is the official spokesperson for my Party on matters concerning the Post Office. As you probably know, the Hon. Member has done a tremendous job over the last several years in ensuring that the words of concern of those who have been denied postal service have been brought forward in the House of Commons. These concerns have been heard.

Post Office bashing in this country has become a national pastime primarily because of the actions of the Government. The Post Office has been involved recently in slashing services and by doing so it has made an already bad situation worse. It has come to my attention as well that sometime later today, probably at three o'clock, the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Andre) will be tabling in the House Canada Post's corporate plan, which will be followed by a press conference at 3.30 p.m., I believe, in which the Minister will attempt to convince Canadians that the policies and the actions of the Government respecting Canada Post have been the best thing since sliced bread.

As I understand it from what I hear through the rumour mill, the Minister will try to tell Canadians that for the first time in some years Canada Post will be breaking even. Yet, several months ago, the same Minister was trying to tell Canadians that Canada Post in this year alone would be making a profit of some $20 million. He will also tell us that Canada Post will continue with its supermailbox plan. He will go on to say, of course, after all that bad news—from his point of view good news—that Canadians will be faced with another increase in postal rates. I want to tell you, Mr. Speaker, that that will do absolutely nothing to improve the image of Canada Post across Canada.

I want to talk for a brief moment about what Canada Post has been doing in my own constituency and, indeed, in constituencies right across the land. About 18 months ago trucks appeared suddenly on the main drags in my own area and started picking up the corner mailboxes. They are being picked up in Vancouver, Winnipeg, Toronto and St. John's, Newfoundland, in fact, right across the country. Canada Post claimed that corner mailboxes were not being used to their fullest extent possible. But there was absolutely no consultation with Members of Parliament representing the areas or with the communities involved.

It was a totally arbitrary action taken by Canada Post. An owner of a corner store in my community, when he saw the truck picking up the mail box, went out to those doing it and asked them why. The guy said, "This mail box is not being used as much as it was in recent years. Therefore, we are removing it". The corner store owner asked them to open up the mail box to let him see what was in it. The box was practically full, but there it went on the back of a truck and it was gone. I got in touch with the public relations people at Canada Post in Toronto and asked them why they were picking up boxes. They repeated the same story, that mailboxes were not being used. Even when they heard that the particular mail box to which I was referring was being used they said, "The facts of life these days are that people no longer use corner mailboxes. Most people in Toronto work downtown and they take their mail downtown with them to their places of work and mail the letters there".

I have one of the largest senior citizen populations of any constituency in the country. These people do not work downtown. In fact, they do not work. They are retired. Canada Post's removal of these corner mailboxes is causing all kinds of problems for seniors in my community, especially if they happen to have a mobility problem. It is bad enough in the summer months when seniors have to walk several blocks to mail a letter, but in the winter when the sidewalks are icy or snow-covered it places a severe hardship upon them. It is bad enough in a place like Toronto, but when you go into some of the more remote areas of Canada where Canada Post is cutting service and where the winter is longer, communities lack sidewalks and that kind of thing, it is worse. Canada Post has made life extremely difficult for people with mobility problems, whether as a result of old age or disability.

In addition to that, there is a franchising or privatization of postal service which has resulted in the closing of a whole slew of sub-post stations in rural Canada. It is resulting in the closing of postal stations in areas like Toronto where people used to pick up parcels at corner stores that were fairly close to the places where they resided. Canada Post has closed those places up. In my own community, some people have to go about a mile out of their way now in order to pick up a parcel that they would have picked up within several blocks of their residences or sometimes a little further. That is what Canada Post has been doing.

In addition to that, as if Canada Post was not happy enough with that, it discontinued door-to-door delivery service in new subdivisions. They have supermailboxes now to which people have to go to pick up their mail rather than door-to-door delivery. In my own community, there is a new subdivision that faces onto a well established neighbourhood. The people on one block receive door-to-door delivery services and yet those a block away have to go to the supermailbox in order to pick up their mail.

The Government has made a whole number of Canadians feel like second-class citizens. They do feel as though they were second-class citizens. My colleague, the Hon. Member for Prince Albert (Mr. Hovdebo), will be speaking at some length about the problems faced by Canadian citizens who happen to live in rural communities and about the difficulties Canada Post has created for those Canadians.

For those who live in rural Canada, the closure of rural post offices is not just an economic move by Canada Post. For those people, the post offices are very often the centres of the communities.

Ms. Mitchell: And they are killing communities.

Mr. Young: When Canada Post arbitrarily closes down post offices, it is taking away a way of life that Canadians in this vast, diverse land have become used to. Not only have they become used to it but they have viewed the post office as the centre of life in their communities.

A resident of one of these communities has described in a very eloquent way what those post offices mean to life in those communities. This lady, who happens to live in Little Fort, British Columbia, wrote to her Member of Parliament. She said:

> The post office is where we learn about births and deaths, the happy events and sad, the everyday happenings in our village. Its postmaster is our friend and confidante. She has her finger on the pulse of our village. Postal rates may be high, but there is no charge for her cheerful "Good Morning". To some of the older folk who live alone, she is their connection with reality.

That rural resident has a certain view of the role that the rural post office plays in that particular community. When Canada Post, under the instructions of this Government, arbitrarily closed that post office it was, as the Hon. Member for Vancouver East (Ms. Mitchell) said a second ago, literally killing that community. It was killing a whole way of life, and it is being condemned by a growing number of Canadians.

If this Government thinks that this is an issue that will go away with the passage of time, it is wrong. The people will not forget come election day. The Government is making a bad, serious mistake. This issue will not go away. It is with us. Canadians know the value of postal services in Canada, and this Government will pay dearly in the next election for its treatment of Canadians, not only in rural Canada but in urban Canada as well.

One of the reasons given by the Government for the reduction in service was given by the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. The only way he can see it is as an improvement in service. Only the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs could make that kind of statement and expect people to believe him.

We watched this Minister do a number of things in his capacity as Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. I think his job description is all wrong. He does not protect consumers. The only thing he protects is corporate interests. We saw that with the amendments to the Patent Act. He told us that that Bill was in the best interests of Canadians. I recall question after question being put to him on that particular piece of legislation, and his continued response was to say that drug prices will not rise as a result of his actions. That was about two years ago, and he has continued that argument in the months since then. In Ontario, the cost of a whole classification of drugs for elderly people, disabled people and single-income families has doubled and tripled over the last several months as a result of the actions of this particular Minister. The title "Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs" is a misnomer, to say the least.

What is the Minister's argument in this case? He wants to improve services and cut costs, and in the process he will lay off something like 14 per cent of the workforce at Canada Post. If one says it quickly, it does not sound too bad: fourteen per cent of the workers. I want to tell Hon. Members what that means in real terms. We are talking about thousands of Canadian postal workers who will end up on the streets, at a time when many areas of Canada are facing totally unacceptable high rates of unemployment.

We are not talking only about postal workers and the impact on them and the reduction in services as a result of these lay-offs but about their families, their friends and their neighbours. Many of these letter carriers have got to know the people they deliver mail to by name. What happens when we lay these people off? The Government says that it is a cost-cutting move. Is it a cost-cutting move to throw someone out of a job and in the process slash services, necessary, essential services to Canadians?

There was a study done in the United States in the middle 1970s by the late Senator Humphrey. To my knowledge, there has not been a comparable study done in Canada. Senator Humphrey's study found that an increase in unemployment is associated with increases in other social problems like psychological problems, mental illnesses, wife battering and anti-social behaviour. The long-term effects of unemployment will not go away overnight when we restore full employment to the country, if that ever happens.

What about that postmaster in rural Canada who is laid off? In central Canada, and particularly in central and southern Ontario, we are not doing too badly right now. We are not doing as well as the Government would like us to believe we are doing, but we are not doing too badly. However, what happens in rural Canada? If a postmaster or postmistress is thrown out of work, he or she cannot walk across the street to find another job.

What happens to the person in Newfoundland, a letter carrier or an inside postal worker? In Newfoundland, there is an unemployment rate in the middle 20s. They simply cannot walk around and find other jobs. The same is true of those in the interior of B.C. and the Yukon. You cannot just walk across the street and find another job. There are thousands of people out of work in those communities. When the Government talks about improving the services and cutting costs, it has to consider the social implications of those actions. If it does not, it is being totally irresponsible. However, from what I have seen, that does not seem to matter.

Rather than cutting back on postal services, the Government should be expanding postal services. Why should Canada Post not only not run a deficit, why should it not make a profit? A sub-postmaster in Quebec asked why Canada Post does not do what other countries have done with their post offices. He says the new generation of postmasters might have an expanded role beyond providing traditional postal services. They could act as information agents for the federal Government on Manpower job-creation programs and serve as economic development agents as well. Rural post offices could easily generate more revenue by selling hunting and fishing licences, greeting cards and parcel wrapping materials in addition to accepting payment of utility bills. Over 2,000 small communities with post offices do not have banks, and banking is another service that could be provided following traditions in other jurisdictions.

I see my time is practically up so I just want to say that what we are seeing here in these actions taken by the Government has nothing to do with cost cutting and absolutely nothing to do with providing service to Canadians. We are seeing an ideological approach to governing Canadians. The Government does not believe in providing service to average Canadians. As I said a minute ago, this issue will not disappear. People in rural Canada and in urban communities, people such as Residents Against Mailboxes and Rural Dignity, will not allow the Government to get away with what it is trying to do. I want to tell you that we in this Party are right behind them. We believe in fairness, equity, and that there are no second-class citizens in this country. Members opposite are going to pay for this in the next election.

[Translation]

Mrs. Tardif (Charlesbourg): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask my colleague how come in the past, when people wanted to settle somewhere, they would first look to see what services were available and then choose where to live, in view of the services they considered essential.

Today, people have the idea that they want to go to live somewhere and then they are surprised afterwards that all the services are not the same.

Could the Hon. Member explain to me how he sees this phenomenon in Canada?

[English]

Mr. Young: Mr. Speaker, first, I think those Canadians who pay their fair share of taxes are entitled to exactly the same service as other Canadians who pay the same taxes. What the Hon. Member seems to be saying is something similar to what an official with Canada Post said to a spokesperson for Residents Against Mailboxes. That spokesperson said super-mailboxes are creating tremendous problems for the disabled, particularly those confined to a wheelchair. You know what the Canada Post official said in response? Disabled people do not buy houses in these communities. Talk about stereotyping and discrimination against the disabled! Disabled people can buy houses just the same as other Canadians.

I do not buy that kind of argument at all. It is the same as what the Minister said to a question I asked in the House several weeks ago. I said to him that if he thinks these supermailboxes are the greatest thing since sliced bread, why not plunk one of these down on his own front lawn. "Be an example to the Canadians you are trying to convince", I said. He responded that his front lawn was a mess. He not only had a mailbox, he had a hydro pole, a fire hydrant and all kinds of things. In my mind that conjured up a visual mass of pollution in front of his house. In fact, I felt sorry for him. Then he said everybody should expect that in today's modern world, that you are not going to be able to live the way you did a 100 years ago.

I called a friend of mine who happens to live in Calgary and asked him to nip down to Harvie Andre's house and take a look at his front lawn. Maybe you can get a petition among the neighbours and force the city to clean it up for the poor guy. They went down and took a little peek at this guy's house. He did not have a supermailbox there. He did not even have a mailbox. He did not even have a fire hydrant.

The Minister tends to exaggerate a little bit in trying to convince Canadians that we should accept the things the Government dictates. Canadians are not prepared to accept that, and I think every Canadian is entitled to equal service regardless of how the Government views it.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, in my constituency I have an area of old houses, very moderately priced. People who live there get door-to-door mail delivery. I also have areas with newer houses, much more expensive, running anywhere from $90,000 to $150,000. They pay higher income taxes than people in the older areas. They pay higher local taxes. They asked me why they cannot get the same door-to-door mail delivery as people in the older areas. They said to me that they did not accept as fact what the Government was imposing on them, that there are two classes of citizens. One class who get door-to-door delivery and another who does not.

I am wondering if the Hon. Member has heard the same complaint from people in his or other constituencies and whether he has an answer that is different from the one given by the Conservative Government and by the Liberals when they were the Government, that is, that we cannot afford it. Does he have an answer other than that which I could give to my constituents who are so angry despite the claims of the Post Office and the Minister that everyone is happy with the so-called supermailboxes?

Mr. Young: Mr. Speaker, I have absolutely no idea why people cannot get equality of service, because it is something Canadians expect. I do not think any reasonable person in the country would argue that Canada Post should operate at a deficit. I certainly would not make that argument. However, I have also pointed out some programs and policies which Canada Post could enter into that could make it pay for itself. I sincerely believe that.

I heard the Minister arguing at one point that if we were to continue to provide that service it would mean an increase in postage rates equivalent to a 60-cent first-class stamp. I looked into that and found that, first, the Minister is talking about a set of circumstances that no one has been arguing. He would argue, and he is probably right in his estimate, that if door-to-door delivery were to be provided to every Canadian it would cost 60 cents for a first-class stamp. No one has ever argued for door-to-door delivery in areas where it never existed, such as in rural Canada.

When we break down his 60 cent figure according to our argument, the additional cost to extend services to those residents who are now serviced by supermailboxes and those who will be serviced by supermailboxes would be a maximum of some 2.3 cents, raising first class postage to about 41 cents or 42 cents. Therefore, I think there is a slight exaggeration.

Another concern among many elderly Canadians is that the increased implementation of supermailboxes is essentially destroying a program which has been very beneficial to senior citizens and other shut-ins. It is the letter carriers' Alert Program where letter carriers keep an eye on elderly people. If they do not see someone during a certain period they would alert the necessary authorities that this elderly person may be in some difficulty.

I asked Canada Post officials what would happen to the letter carriers' Alert Program as a result of these supermailboxes being installed in these communities. They admitted that it would probably go by the way. That is extremely unfortunate.

People often criticize our postal workers for actions that are actually a policy of Canada Post. Yet, when workers themselves have instituted this program on a voluntary basis, I think it is a crying shame that the program, which has been of benefit to many seniors, will no longer be available. That is another side effect of this policy.

Mr. Beatty: Mr. Speaker, it had not been my intention to intervene, but I was intrigued by the question asked by the Member from Winnipeg and the response. It is perhaps the dialogue between the two socialist Members of Parliament that was most interesting this morning.

What particularly intrigued me was the suggestion by our colleague from Winnipeg who, in referring complaints of his constituents to the Hon. Member, said that they were affronted by the fact that people who were living in smaller and less valuable houses than theirs were getting better service, that they were paying more taxes and lived in better houses yet were receiving poorer service. This is an extraordinary thing to hear, particularly from a socialist.

Is it the position of the New Democratic Party that the quality of mail service a Canadian receives should be affected in any way by the wealth of the individual who is applying for the service? Surely the issue should not be one that is based on income or on the size or wealth of the house in which a person lives. I hope my friend from the NDP would go out of his way to make it clear that a policy where people living in better houses and receiving better incomes would have a right to insist on a better level of service than people with less income and poorer houses is unacceptable.

Mr. Young: Mr. Speaker, if the Hon. Member is sincerely concerned about such things as cost, as I believe he is, he only has to cancel that wacky idea of buying nuclear submarines—

Mr. Beatty: Give the money to Jean Claude Parrot instead.

Mr. Young: He has asked a question, I think he should have the decency to be quiet so I can answer him. His question was pretty snarky in the way he phrased it, but I will not respond in kind.

Mr. Beatty: Let's have the answer.

Mr. Young: Pardon?

Mr. Beatty: Let's have the answer.

Mr. Young: I will give you the answer.

Mr. Beatty: Thank you.

Mr. Young: You are very welcome, Sir.

The argument being made by the Hon. Member is exactly the same argument that I make. Canadians should be entitled to equality in postal service, regardless of income. That is the argument I make, and it is exactly the argument the Minister seems to be making in his own kind of slimy way, as only he can make it.

A Canadian should be entitled to equality of service, whether it be postal service, health care service, retirement income or anything else that Canadians hold dear.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Resuming debate. The Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mrs. Tardif).

Mrs. Monique Tardif (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I was very interested to hear the remarks of the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Beatty) and the Hon. Member for Beaches (Mr. Young), and it is my firm opinion that the comments of his colleague from Winnipeg discriminate against Winnipeg customers.

Mr. Speaker, I think all Hon. Members, and especially the Hon. Member for Beaches, can rest assured that Canada Post did not shut down certain routes in this country just to deprive rural communities of postal services.

Perhaps I may recall the Corporation's objective, which is to work with communities to find other ways of increasing the number of outlets, to facilitate customer access to postal services, and to extend business hours by making use of the resources of local businesses and thus maintain and improve services.

Mr. Speaker, perhaps I may draw a comparison. When a bank closes down, the service it provides disappears along with it. When the Canada Post Corporation changed its postal services, it started offering a broader range of services. I would like to refer more specifically to a situation experienced by my mother, who gets her mail through the rural delivery service of Saint-Augustin. One day, Canada Post decided to ask people to drive nearly 10 kilometers to pick up their registered mail or items that were too big to fit in the little green box. Do you know what the people did, Mr. Speaker? They signed a petition and asked Canada Post to give them a service outlet at the local convenience store. Why? Because the convenience store was open from seven in the morning till midnight, provided good service and would obviate the need for driving 10 kilometers.

I think the lesson we can learn here, Mr. Speaker, is that when changes are made, the wishes of the community must be considered. In many cases, for instance in new developments, people have become used to going to the convenience store instead of doing their shopping on a larger scale. Habits have changed, and I think that is also reflected in the service offered by Canada Post.

Unlike what was said by the Hon. Member, and I was struck by this aspect as well, some municipalities in Quebec have adopted resolutions in which they ask super boxes because they feel this is an improvement. Every time I hear the Hon. Member talking about super mail boxes, it sounds like he is talking about a major disaster! You must not forget that some people, and some of them live in my riding, are very pleased and want the super mail boxes instead of the green boxes which are always falling down, aren't very clean and are not installed as a permanent fixture. Some people want the super mail boxes.

So I think that people who claim that super mail boxes represent a drop in service should remember that many people who are directly concerned see the boxes as an improvement.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to name the municipalities whose resolutions I have here: Saint-Luc, Sainte-Anne-de-Bellevue and Verdun. In each case, the municipality has advised Canada Post that this is an improvement in service and that people want the super mail boxes installed as soon as possible.

To recapitulate, Mr. Speaker, in some cases the super boxes mean an improvement in services, and it is also very important that Canada Post make these decisions with the community.

The same principle applies to everyone, and Canada Post must use its resources and skills to sell postal items and postal services. If we look at the present situation in Canada, we see that home delivery represents 54 per cent of postal services; centralized delivery, 13 per cent; super mail boxes and community mail boxes, 7 per cent; rural routes, 7 per cent; post office boxes, 15 per cent; and general delivery, 4 per cent.

When the population and the number of households increase, delivery networks must be expanded. If we look at what is happening in other countries, we see that many postal administrations, including the United States, Australia, France and Sweden, have concluded that universal home delivery is neither profitable nor affordable.

Here in Canada, home delivery would mean additional operating costs totalling $1.3 billion over five years and would oblige Canada Post to increase the basic letter rate by 17 cents, over and above any regular increases. That is why Canada Post is maintaining home delivery where it already exists and provides the super box service in new developments.

In rural areas, mail delivery has traditionally been carried out by local entrepreneurs. This delivery service is efficient and as profitable for Canada Post as it was previously for the Post Office. Local entrepreneurs are given a chance to participate in postal service operations, while they remain free to conduct other business or to be otherwise employed.

Canada Post's objective, Mr. Speaker, consists in creating an efficient, modern and fully streamlined network of retail outlets that would improve access for customers, enhance Canada Post's image, provide a broader range of better quality and more regular services, and do so while making a profit.

Canada Post is trying to make its presence felt as an advanced enterprise in this country. A full range of postal products and services will be offered in the new network of postal outlets, which means that Canada Post will substantially increase the number of locations where retail services are offered, as well as upgrade the quality of those services.

Mr. Speaker, Canada Post expects to improve customer access by installing additional public mailboxes and super boxes where customers can both pick up and mail their letters. Another improvement will be to provide retail outlets in more convenient locations.

As far as mail delivery is concerned, Mr. Speaker, Canada Post has promised to maintain and improve the level of service provided to nearly 10 million addresses existing today. Home delivery will be continued in locations where it now exists, while present routes will be expanded to include both sides of the street, up to the present cutoff point.

Mr. Speaker, Canada Post wants to give Canadians the assurance that new urban developments will continue to be served—and not later than 90 days after meeting all the usual criteria—by community mailboxes or super boxes.

Postal services to customers who now receive mail in community mailboxes or through general delivery will be improved through the installation of super boxes on an on-going basis. In all, Mr. Speaker, some 340,000 rural and urban delivery points will be added to the superbox system over the next two years, and about 500,000 in three years, which should improve the present levels of service and accessibility.

Customers in cities where the population growth exceeds the capacity of the post office boxes at the local point of sale will have service at a super mailbox or community mail box.

In the year after Canada Post Corporation breaks even, it will adopt a policy of providing post office boxes free of charge for individuals whose only alternative is general delivery.

Rural route delivery service by private contractor will also be maintained.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I must mention that Canada Post Corporation, which had a $600-million deficit in 1981, expects modest profits as of the 1988-89 fiscal year. It is also the first year that the Corporation will not ask for government subsidies to cover its expenses.

And, to use a well-known expression, Mr. Speaker, for once Canada Post will no longer be "in the red" starting this year.

• (1150)

Mr. Langdon: Mr. Speaker, I have two questions I would like to pose to the Parliamentary Secretary. First, I would like to ask her to explain the discrepancy, as I understood her speech, between the 17 cents she talks about and the 60 cents the Minister has talked about in his wild and woolly way with respect to the differences in costs of basic service, first-class service, which would be required because of movement away from serving people with supermailboxes.

Second, and more important, I would like to challenge directly what the Member has suggested, that Canada Post is somehow committed to maintaining service door-to-door in every place it has existed. I can tell the Member that this is simply not the case and I can point specifically to sections of my constituency in which door-to-door delivery took place previously and which has now been cut out by Canada Post. If the Parliamentary Secretary wants the specific area, I can tell her it is along Highway 18, north of Amherstburg, an area which now has a condition in which half the area receives direct delivery and the other half, which is completely similar to the previous half, does not receive direct delivery. We had a situation prior to this Government taking office, and a situation prior to the changes which have taken place, in which everyone along that route received direct mail.

My last point is to say that there are small towns, urban areas, in effect, in my constituency which have every condition similar to that of the suburbs of the City of Windsor itself. Yet in the one set of conditions, they have door-to-door delivery, and in the other set of conditions, they do not have door-to-door delivery. There is an inequity here that is absolutely unacceptable to Canadians.

Does the Parliamentary Secretary not think that with the Charter of Rights setting forth the basic equalities which Canadians should have, it is quite likely there will be challenges by people who are faced with these inequalities, that they will directly challenge the policy that Canada Post, under the direction of this Government, has put into effect?

• (1200)

Mrs. Tardif (Charlesbourg): Mr. Speaker, to begin with, in answer to my colleague's first question about the extra 17 cents, I did say 17 cents over and above the costs and normal increases.

While the Minister mentioned 60 cents to mail a letter, I talked about 17 cents more. In both cases, we figured that with $1.3 billion more, there would be an increase that we would have to justify somehow. That is the explanation for the 17 cents. In one case, we are just talking about an increase and in the other, about the total cost of a stamp in Canada.

Regarding the maintenance of door-to-door services, with the example my colleague gave us from his own riding, I think that I did say existing door-to-door service would continue. Service would be extended only if it were on the same street or for something that was already done, for example. For new developments, we will have to think of other ways to meet the public's demands.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to add that what is important for me is that in all the changes to be made by Canada Post, the public always be considered, that there be close communication and cooperation with municipal councils and that the Corporation meet the people. For me, that is a requirement.

I do not think that we can talk about an overall solution. I think that this must all be considered and discussed with the people directly concerned.

[English]

Mr. Langdon: Mr. Speaker, I would like to clarify that this area which had its direct delivery cut was an area which was previously receiving such direct delivery. If the Hon. Member is suggesting that there is a new area, then that is simply not the case.

I would ask her, and I would ask Canada Post through her, to justify, as it has not been able to justify to the residents of this area, the fact that this direct delivery was cut. It has nothing to do with extensions to new areas. It has everything to do with cut-backs of existing services which did provide direct delivery to these residents.

[Translation]

Mrs. Tardif (Charlesbourg): Mr. Speaker, I think the Hon. Member is referring to a particular case of which I am not aware. The problems I experienced with this kind of case had to do with the extension of services within the same development but which began, for example, behind already serviced developments. I suggest he may have to do as I did and get in touch with Canada Post to find out how they can explain that change—he is talking about a change with which I am not familiar—and how that can fly in the face of what Canada Post has been promising all along, which is to maintain home delivery service for those who already have it.

Mr. Tardif (Richmond—Wolfe): Here is my question, Mr. Speaker. To some extent the remarks of my colleague would appear to justify or explain the course steered by Canada Post which had to cope with rather heavy operational deficits. Such are the facts, and they will simply have to slash the deficits or even balance their budget.

But what I think is significant in these circumstances is that there are two ways to go about it: either you cut expenses or you boost revenues. So my question to the Hon. Member is this: How can she explain that Canada Post management seem hellbent on systematically reducing services at a time when a small army of new companies is happily delivering mail?

Now I would think that if competition is that stiff or if so many companies are in the business it must be quite profitable. Instead of cutting services as it has been doing, why did Canada Post not consider expanding mail delivery which would have generated the additional corporate income needed to maintain adequate services for all Canadians without exception?

Mrs. Tardif (Charlesbourg): Mr. Speaker I remember Canada Post's experience several years ago when it tried to get involved in the mail order business seeking new ways to increase its revenues.

What strikes me especially in this instance is the fact that Canada Post, exactly as it did previously when trying to seek other revenues, is again forgetting that its main responsibility is to deliver the mail. The problems which Post Canada has encountered have made it possible for some private corporations to move into an almost unoccupied area and to make deliveries to the satisfaction of their customers.

I too believe that if Canada Post wanted to increase its revenues, it could for a fee provide a special service to a certain type of customers who are willing to pay anyway.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Resuming debate. The Hon. Member for Saint-Léonard—Anjou (Mr. Gagliano).

Mr. Alfonso Gagliano (Saint-Léonard—Anjou): Mr. Speaker, I wish to take part in this most important debate concerning the impact of Canada Post's decision to cut back on this vital and essential service to all Canadians.

We should realize nowadays that wherever we may go in this country, one of the main issues Canadians are concerned and wondering about is the postal service. I am sure that this is an issue which is certain to be raised during the forthcoming election.

This is so clear, Mr. Speaker, that as soon as Canada Post with its so-called responsible Minister learned this morning, or rather late last night, that we would deal today with an Opposition motion about postal services, it called a press conference to announce its action plan or annual report—we do not know which yet, but we will find out, I suppose, this afternoon—in an attempt to lead away from the real situation which we, as elected Members, will describe to Canadians during this allotted day.

First of all, I should like to start by saying that although on the one hand I was surprised to hear the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mrs. Tardif) (Charlesbourg) compare postal services to banking services, on the other hand it was not because, by comparing postal services to banking services, she provided us with the vary basic philosophy of the Tory party.

This is unbelievable, Mr. Speaker, in a country so large, so vast, and with such remote areas, as Canada! In a multicultural country! How vital must that postal service be! Some might say: hear now, when a bank decides to move a branch, nobody says anything, but when Canada Post Corporation decides to shut a post office down or move it, it becomes a problem.

This is exactly the point, Mr. Speaker. I believe this Conservative Government did not realize the importance of that service to Canadian communities, whether urban or rural. That service is a prime communications link, a highly important one, that we as a Government should be providing to Canadians.

When our Confederation was launched, Mr. Speaker, there were two major mandates: protecting and defending the country, and delivering the mail. But today we are wondering whether this Tory Government intends to continue. What we find is that with free trade, it intends to sell Canada out to the United States, and the experience with the postal service is clear evidence of that in my view.

Mr. Speaker, I should emphasize at this point that such is indeed Tory philosophy, and this is the reason why, in Canada Post's corporate plan tabled two years ago, it was clear that the Corporation was to shut rural post offices down, franchise urban offices and deliver mail to superboxes so that it could have it moved by contractors. In other words, Mr. Speaker, the Government's major goal was to privatize the postal service, and this is what it is trying to do by bits and pieces. But Canadians have caught on to that and it is my feeling that come the next election, we will hear about it, because it will be a highly debated issue and this Tory Government will get its answer.

Mr. Speaker, the other matter delved upon by the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mrs. Tardif) is that some municipalities passed resolutions requesting that Canada Post Corporation install superboxes because installing them would improve service.

Mr. Speaker, what the Parliamentary Secretary did not say is that indeed there were cases where citizens said: We would rather have a mailbox than have to pick up our mail after work in a main post office, because closing hours often are a problem.

Clearly, when people have nothing, no mail at all, no mail delivery whatsoever, they will say: After all, if we have a box, it will be close to home. But that is not necessarily the kind of service they want, Mr. Speaker. If all Hon. Members would take the trouble to listen to their constituents, they would realize that whether they happen to be in urban or rural areas, people want the same postal services. Every day, town councils are adopting resolutions. You know what is happening? Spring is usually the time to start work on construction projects, and so Canada Post is getting into high gear with its supermailboxes. However, town councils have passed resolutions saying they don't want Canada Post to instal the boxes. Today, the Corporation is starting to play hardball: If you don't want supermailboxes in your municipality, we won't deliver the mail!

There will be no deliveries at all, and the people in your community will have to pick up the mail at a post office pretty far from where they live. That is the kind of pressure they are starting to put on local authorities who realize there are Canadians who pay 37 cents to mail a letter, who pay the same municipal, provincial and federal taxes and that these people are entitled to the same services as everybody else. And that is the crux of the matter: the Government refuses to understand that delivering the mail to superboxes on a permanent basis, as announced, is discriminatory. Canadians will not accept it, and groups are getting organized across this country.

Not long ago, Mr. Speaker, I was in a Toronto suburb on a Sunday, at a meeting of some of these groups, including Residents Against Mailboxes, also known as RAM. Do you know what their slogan was?

• (1210)

"RAM the Mulroney box". That was their slogan. That is the kind of sentiment that is being generated these days. People are fed up with these supermailboxes. What they want is an efficient and fair mail service.

In rural areas, the Government intends to use collective mailboxes at major intersections. To my mind, this shows a lack of vision, a lack of understanding of the community fabric of Canada on the part of this Government. Everyone knows that the post office continues to be a gathering place in our villages and our small towns. It becomes an information centre for all citizens. It is where people go in search of information on the availability of social services; where they go to get taxation forms, scholarship forms, and job application forms. Often, the postmaster becomes a resource person.

Through the post office, the federal Government maintains a presence in our small towns and villages. Through the post office, the federal Government takes on human dimensions. It creates a link within the community, and it is a unifying force, a force which results in a feeling of belonging for members of the community.

To better express what I have been saying, let me quote from a letter which the Mayor of Trinity Bay, a small town, wrote to the President of the Canada Post Corporation. I quote:

> If the few businesses which we have and on which we rely for our survival stay here, it is because we have services such as the post office. Centralization for economy's sake must not be pushed to such an extent that it jeopardizes the existence of small communities . . . We urge you to find means to keep our post office, even if doing so would mean sharing with others certain of the most costly aspects of the postal service. For us here, sharing is a matter of survival, and we know something about it. For God's sake, do not help to destroy us!

• (1220)

Mr. Speaker, complaints are coming in from all over the country. Rural Dignity appeared before the Parliamentary Committee to describe the problem and explain how important it was to keep small post offices open in rural communities. We had citizens' groups like RAM appearing before the Committee to testify that supermailboxes are discriminatory. We even had test cases prove that homeowners living directly opposite newly installed super boxes saw the value of their homes go down, and as a result, municipalities gave them a tax rebate.

Of course, we also had the whole issue of closing down some post offices and privatizing others. In my riding, for instance, I still get calls from people who live across from the post office and who received a card saying that from now on they would have to pick up their registered mail at the pharmacy on the other side of town. They now have to travel two miles by bus or on foot, depending on their budget, to pick up a parcel or a registered letter. That is what Canada Post and the Minister mean when they say they have improved services! In Saint-Léonard—Anjou, we now have five more locations where we can pick up the mail. Mr. Speaker, although this does mean that some people can pick up their mail at the pharmacy or the convenience store, what about the person who happened to buy a home near the post office and who could depend on that service, and now the service no longer exists?

Why do the Government and Canada Post not allow these people who are right near the post office to continue to pick up their mail and registered letters there? The reason is simple, Mr. Speaker: It is because Canada Post has decided, in its secret plan to privatize the Corporation, to gradually eliminate employees because there would be less volume and then to say four or five years later that there was not enough volume in those post offices and to shut them down. That is what is behind all that, Mr. Speaker, and I repeat, it is the plan to privatize Canada Post, to gradually shut down rural and urban post offices and to deliver the mail in supermailboxes in urban areas.

Of course, the Hon. Member for Valleyfield, I think, would like me to shut my mouth! But I have the feeling that as soon as the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) has the courage to call an election, the citizens will really shut down the boxes and super mailboxes that the Conservative Government has set up, and as the RAM slogan goes, they will "ram the Mulroney mailboxes."

I think that this debate may be amusing for some Conservative Members, but it is important because some citizens across the country are concerned; they are disgusted and feel like second-class citizens. The Government is doing all this on the pretext of reducing the deficit. Well, Mr. Speaker, when Canada Post Corporation was created in 1981, with all three parties unanimously supporting the Bill, the new corporation had three objectives: namely, to improve service, reduce the deficit and improve labour relations. Today, the Conservative Government, after taking power, undid any improvement in labour relations that might have occurred from the time that Canada Post was created in 1981 until the Conservatives took power in 1984.

As for service, we know what that means: There are two classes of citizens, those who have home delivery and those who must get their mail from supermailboxes. The problem with this is that often you can see the mailman pass behind your house, through the yard, deliver mail to the neighbour, and on the other side of the street, or one street over, you must get your mail from a supermailbox. If that is not discriminatory, I would like to know from the Conservative Government what is, and I hope that this afternoon, the Minister can tell us exactly in the House if it is not discriminatory, just what it is.

Definitely, Mr. Speaker, we must reduce the deficit. We agree on that. But we cannot reduce the deficit as fast as they want. In the United States, a country with 10 times our population and larger than ours, they took 14 years to balance the books. Here in Canada, they want to do it in seven years. And this has completely unbalanced the plans accepted in 1981, instead of letting things continue to reach our objective. In 1986, the Minister of Finance really burned his bridges and let us say that this is what has created the whole postal mess we find ourselves in today.

Of course there are ways to reduce the deficit, but not only by cutting expenses. We can also look for revenue. And how many times in this House and also in meetings outside have I suggested to the Minister and the Corporation how they could increase revenue!

On a parliamentary trip in Switzerland, I learned that they sell advertising space in their post offices, they sell public services such as public transit, for example, but they have advertising. Why would it not be possible for Canada Post Corporation, which owns some 4,000 trucks, to sell advertising space on its trucks, as buslines do? This would bring in revenues without entailing expenditures. Why could it not sell advertising space in post offices especially, of which there are a number downtown where people are ready to pay very good rates for advertising. The Corporation's answer to that is that such advertising would be detrimental to its image. Good gosh! What kind of an image is there when Canadians are mad and blowing their tops at the Corporation? I therefore feel that if we had a policy of using its buildings, trucks, and equipment to increase revenues instead of cutting down on service to people, this would be a boon.

There is also the whole matter of direct mail. There are very clear studies to show that we are eight years behind, that we could move forward in this area and get . . . Indeed, according to one study, if we did a per capita update on direct mail as they have done in the United States, we could get $300 million in extra income each year. This would be enough to wipe out the deficit, have home delivery in urban areas and keep our post offices in rural areas.

This is a matter let us say of good will, but as suggested by the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of National Health and Welfare, this Government has decided to compare Canada Post Corporation, the postal service, to a banking service.

This means that a bank, as any other business, plans its operations and must gererate a profit at years's end. If the operation is not profitable, they either shut the branch down or move it elsewhere.

But such is not the case. The postal service is a basic communication service for Canadians. And in a country as large, as vast and diversified as Canada we must have the same postal service for all. We are going to fight to make the postal issue a priority during the next elections, Mr. Speaker, and Canadians will judge this Tory Government accordingly.

Mrs. Tardif (Charlesbourg): Mr. Speaker, I should like to return to my hon. friend's last statement to the effect that I compared Canada Post services to banking services. That is not quite what I said, Mr. Speaker. I said that after a bank closes, banking services are no longer provided. On the other hand, when Canada Post decides for instance to close a post office somewhere, it makes sure that somebody else will provide the service. This is altogether different, Mr. Speaker.

I should like to return also to another statement made by my hon. friend. He referred earlier to the objectives the former Liberal government was attempting to reach when postal services became the responsibility of Canada Post Corporation and no longer of a government department.

As far as I can remember, the previous Government decided to make the Post Office department into a so-called "independent" Crown Corporation so that postal services provided to Canadians would be free of political interference.

If that was the purpose then as well as to make sure that Canada Post was free to provide Canadians with services which could be financed by raising funds through the sales of stamps and services, I wonder what my hon. friend would say for instance in the case of collective bargaining when one must appear before a mediator to express his or her views or those of a group of unionized workers. When a Member of Parliament speaks out in favour of unionized workers before a mediator should this be considered as political interference? Does this mean that, depending on the situation, the Liberals with their global view of things could argue: "Our objective is to avoid political interference; just the same, when dealing with day by day issues, interference is sometimes necessary".

Is it more important to make sure that Canadians as a whole get postal services? As I said earlier, we are not trying to reduce postal services, only seeking different ways to provide them.

When you mentioned reduced services, is it because you felt that Canada Post employees are not good employees, that they are not providing Canadians with the services they should? This seems to be the gist of your remarks.

I can tell you, for sure, and I know a number of Canada Post employees, that most of them are good employees anxious to provide their customers with the services they have the right to expect.

• (1230)

Mr. Gagliano: Precisely, Mr. Speaker, the Parliamentary Secretary is telling us that nobody should interfere with the mandate of Canada Post which was created in this House in 1981 by a Liberal Government with the unanimous support of all Members.

As it happened, when the Conservative Government took over it did intervene and did interfere with this clear-cut three-pronged mandate: Better services, improved labour relations, and deficit reduction. Those were the three objectives of Canada Post. It was this Conservative Government—her Government, Mr. Speaker—which chose to interfere and completely alter the course we had plotted for Canada Post. With their new plan to shut down 5,000 rural post offices, install superboxes in urban centres and city outskirts, not to mention franchising and closing post offices in urban areas, that is when the whole debate on Canada Post was re-opened, precisely because the Conservative Government had interfered and got mixed in Canada Post operations to say: No, from here on in this is how you are going to operate.

It was the Government which interfered, not the Opposition.

As to the mediator . . . I was laughing earlier because I see that the Parliamentary Secretary is remotely controlled by Canada Post, and this spirit, the attitude which now prevails in the upper reaches of Canada Post, Mr. Speaker, and indeed any action that might be taken . . . I want my colleague to have a copy of the presentation I made before the mediator. She will see that it is a complete presentation on the way we could have broken the deadlock.

Mr. Speaker, I should like to refer to the conclusion of my presentation. I said to the mediator: Of course, both parties are to blame. So I was not siding with the employees. I even explained how to increase revenues, what labour relations approach to take to settle the whole dispute. Mr. Speaker, we must not forget that in the space of six months . . . There were no strikes between 1981 and 1987. In a six month period in 1987, we had two strikes for which this Tory Government was responsible. The Corporation could erupt like a volcano any 2 minute. This is precisely the attitude which I note in the comment made by the Parliamentary Secretary under the guidance of Canada Post Corporation when she stated that I appeared before the mediator to plead on behalf the union. I did not defend the union, Mr. Speaker. I said to the mediator that definitely all the blame was not to be laid on the same side. There has been abuse everywhere in that organization precisely because labour relations are in such a sorry state.

Therefore I said to the mediator: Sir, I feel that your work is extremely valuable. Your recommendations will have a direct and permanent effect on our postal service. I cannot overly insist on the necessity of maintaining for Canadians a fair and efficient postal service which will take into account the nature of this country as well as budgetary constraints. We should return to our three great principles, which are to harmonize labour relations, to improve service and reduce the deficit. Such were the basic principles when Canada Post Corporation was set up. If there is interference with the business of Canada Post, it is precisely that of the Conservative Government and its action plan. And we will see if the plan they put forward this afternoon is better or worse.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Richmond—Wolfe (Mr. Tardif) for a question or comment.

Mr. Tardif (Richmond—Wolfe): Mr. Speaker, I would like to make a brief comment and ask a question. As for the comment, somebody mentioned the banks and I think indeed there is an interesting parallel to draw here. As far as I know, in rural areas as in my constituency, there are relatively few banks.

However, there are Caisses populaires everywhere, even in the smallest communities. And, to my knowledge, in spite of the small number of people they serve, the Caisses populaires are very profitable because they were able to adjust, to tailor their services to people's needs.

As for my question, I would like first to congratulate my colleague. The Government seems to consider Canada Post merely as a private enterprise having to act and to face the same obligations as a private company. But, to me, there is a big difference between Canada Post and a private company, given its purpose and its unifying role.

My question to my colleague is this: How does he see Canada Post in relation to private enterprise?

Mr. Gagliano: Of course, Mr. Speaker, if Canada Post is to be considered as a private enterprise, I admit it would be easy to privatize it if the Government were to decide overnight to sell postal services in Toronto, Montreal or Vancouver and in every large city, then of course it could make good use of the money.

But what happens when you have to provide postal services to rural areas, to the North, to our remote areas? As I was saying in my speech it is important that the Government take a good look at Canada Post as everybody was unanimously prepared to do in 1981, and give it specific objectives. It should have been allowed to continue, and perhaps today we would not have a deficit but instead an improved and equitable service for all Canadians.

So, Canada Post cannot be considered as a private enterprise. Even in the Marchment Report, in the section on privatization, they make this comparison. They say that for large cities it would be easy to privatize, but who would pay for services elsewhere? Would the private enterprise be ready to pay the costs of shipping a letter to remote areas? That is what the universality of the system is all about. We pay 37 cents to send a letter to Ottawa or Toronto but also to Yellowknife. So you can be sure that if Canada Post were a private enterprise, with the deregulation system that is being pushed too far, Canadians living in remote areas, in the North for example, could not get any service.

So that is why we want to balance the books and take the time needed, but also we want to give Canadians the service they are entitled to get.

Mrs. Tardif (Charlesbourg): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask my hon. colleague why when comparing Canada Post and the private sector, he distinguishes between their customer service? When we talk about 37 cents postage it means whether the letter is sent to the same town or to the Far North, I think everyone agrees with this. This is one of the aims of Canada Post Corporation. It is precisely the reason why it is not a private company. On the other hand, one of its mandates was to operate on a balanced budget. There has never been any question that service to the people should not cost the same everywhere. We know full well that when we talk about new service expansion, Canada Post is of the opinion that in the years to come, the type of new project development will have to change.

Is it not the same for many other services? I am thinking of people who, in the old days, did their shopping at one main grocery store. Today, they stop every evening at the convenience store. Is it not also true that our way of life has changed in such a way that our habits have changed and one of the way Canada Post Corporation can meet the expectations of its customers is also to adapt to the new ways of a new generation.

Mr. Gagliano: Mr. Speaker, of course we all agree on paying 37 cents, no matter where we live in Canada. However, if you pay the same amount, you expect to get the same level of service as other Canadians.

But things work differently. For instance, in my riding, on a street not far from mine, people living on one side of the street get their mail delivered, others do not. Thus the postman delivers mail to citizens like myself living on one side of the street, whereas people who live just accross the street, in the new developments built in the Spring of 1985, must get theirs from a mailbox. Canadians find this unacceptable. Why this double standard on the same street?

As for the comparison between supermarkets and corner stores, I have to say that when we, Liberals, were in power, we opened postal branches and counters in drugstores. We did that to accomodate people, the same way corner stores do, so that people requiring immediately different postal services could get them right away without having to go to the main post office. But the main post office did, however, exist.

What is happening now is that with its new scheme, Canada Post is taking a postal branch that provides complete services in a drugstore or a convenience store, and franchising it. Those are the reasons why the plan does not work. Canadians are not willing to accept it. In that sense, Mr. Speaker, practically everybody living in a rural area is against it today. People are protesting because their small post office is closing down. For their part, city dwellers are critical because they must go to supermailboxes to get their mail. Furthermore, customers who need postal services are not satisfied to go to these franchised post offices. Therefore, a monster has been created which upsets everybody.

[English]

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, we in the Opposition are not the only ones to condemn the Government for its total and absolute failure to provide fair and equitable postal service to all Canadians. We are joined by a majority of Canadians who feel they were victims of the cut-backs by Canada Post, or had seen their neighbours or friends or parts of their communities affected by these government-ordered cut-backs. Even organizations such as the Catholic Bishops have stressed the need to provide services in communities where those services are an integral part of the survival of those communities. The United Church of Canada agreed and gave its support to the people trying to maintain the postal service at the level we are used to.

The Minister responsible for Canada Post keeps trying to convince us that there is no reduction in service. The statements he makes are a patent attempt to create a false image. This has made many people angry in the sense they feel that the Minister is being condescending towards them. It has affected the credibility of all the Minister's statements. In fact, it affects the credibility of the Government to a great extent because it knows services have been cut back. The Government knows fewer services are being provided now than in the past. It knows the service being provided in one part of the country or a community is not the same as that provided in a different part or community, even if conditions are exactly the same.

Everyone who lives anywhere near a post office which has been closed during the last three or four years knows that service has been taken away. Everyone who no longer has a rural route delivery knows there has been a reduction in service. When we say, as we do in this resolution, that we condemn the Government for its total and absolute failure to provide fair and equitable postal service to all Canadians, we are just representing people who have felt the reduction in service.

When the Minister says he has not reduced service, he is obviously talking through his hat because 200 rural post offices have been closed. Dozens of rural routes have been eliminated wherever possible. The Minister states that service is not being reduced, so that means he is giving a wrong impression and stretching credibility.

My special concern here today is that of reduction in rural service. We need to think about what rural life really is. What is the reality? Perhaps the Minister who defends Canada Post's actions to such a great extent should be given a course on rural reality. It might be more valuable to him than his Ph.D. In his attempts to defend the postal service he seems not to recognize that there is a special quality to rural life which must be recognized and nurtured to some extent. There is a rural infrastructure which we should build on. It provides the kind of lifestyle which many of our people are considering more and more important to the well-being of the country. A vibrant and viable rural community has built into it a range of services which are necessary to its survival and growth.

Rural communities are not just people who live on the farm. Rural communities include small towns, villages and hamlets. It is a combination of producers and consumers. To survive, a rural community must be self-sufficient within certain parameters. One of those parameters is the requirement for postal services. Certain communities cannot survive without certain services being available, and one of those services is postal service.

A removal of the postal service is almost a death sentence for a particular community. What are the realities of a rural post office? First, it is vital to the economic and social well-being of the community. It is the only federal presence in the community. Quite often a general store, a gas station or a post office are the centre of village life. If you remove the post office, you have removed one-third of the commercial presence of many small villages. You then move towards the elimination of that village entirely. If the people of a particular community are forced to go eight, 10 or 15 miles to another community down the road to get their mail, they very quickly start to do other business in that community and consequently their own village may well disappear.

Seniors in particular are seriously affected by changes in postal service. Many do not have cars to drive to the next nearest post office. They have to choose between increasing dependency on other people or isolation. They also find themselves in a very difficult situation if they are forced to go to supermailboxes which are quite often beside or along busy streets or highways. They do not have the kind of protection they are used to in their small local post office.

Women constitute about 82 per cent of Canada's rural postmasters and their assistants, so that elimination of those post offices eliminates many jobs for women. Closing a post office in many cases removes the only jobs available to rural women in a given area. Yet quite often that reduces the amount of service to the area. Furthermore, a store owner will give priority to someone buying groceries over someone coming to buy a 37 cent stamp.

Privatization of the post office also results in the postmaster and their assistants receiving one-fifth the salary they received previously, which also reduces the economic effect of the post office on that community.

The Minister has tried to convince us that there has been no change in service. Recently I gave him an opportunity to make an honest man of himself by opening up the 200 post offices that have been closed in the last two years, including a number of rural post offices.

My own rural delivery has been closed and I now drive 20 miles, twice a week, to get my mail, when I used to get it across the road from the farm. There are 35 other farm families in the same situation. That has to be considered a reduction in service.

In the last two years, 37 post offices have been closed in Saskatchewan. That number has probably increased significantly in the last few weeks because there is a meeting today in the small town of Pilger in an attempt to save the post office. Yesterday there was a meeting in the small town of St. Gregor, not far from Humboldt, where the postmaster is retiring and Canada Post is attempting to close the post office. I believe they have reached a compromise in that case.

The town of Clavet, situated close to Saskatoon, is also affected by this change in the post office. These changes are supposed to be improvements, according to the Minister, but in the minds of the people in the communities they represent a withdrawal of service.

The committee which dealt with this issue faced some difficulties. The committee, which was dominated by Conservative Members, refused to hear several witnesses who wanted to indicate their displeasure with the corporate plan that had been established by the post office. In its final report, even Conservative Members said that there should be no closure without meaningful consultation and the consent of the community affected, and that the retirement of a postmaster should not in itself constitute a criterion for closing rural post offices.

Unfortunately, these two recommendations, while accepted by the Post Office, have not been fulfilled.

Recently, there was a much publicized case in Saskatchewan where the sudden death of the postmaster was used as an opportunity by Canada Post to close the post office. It is rather difficult to give 90 days' notice in these circumstances. The post office has been moved to the local grain elevator. One can imagine where the priority will lie if someone comes to buy grain and another person comes to buy a 37 cent stamp.

Since 1986, post offices have been closed in almost every part of the country. The post office in Purple Springs, Alberta, closed on July 31, 1986. Those residents must drive 34 kilometres return to pick up their mail at Taber. The mail truck continues to pass through the small town of Purple Springs on its way to deliver the mail at Taber.

The post office in Ninga, Manitoba, was closed on August 1, 1986, forcing residents to make a 35 kilometre round trip to pick up their mail. Residents in Ravenscrag, Saskatchewan, must travel 80 kilometres return to Eastend to pick up their mail and conduct postal business.

The corporate plan that was presented by the Government in 1986 stated: "We have 5,221 rural post offices in Canada. Over the next 10 years, 1,700 smaller post offices are to be closed and replaced by supermailboxes". It goes on to say that 3,500 post offices are to be privatized. The post office would be closed, and retail services would be provided in a local grocery store, drug store and so on.

In response to this plan it was stated that employees would not be properly trained by experienced, sworn-in postmasters but by poorly paid store clerks with a high turnover rate.

This action by the Government constitutes a major change for people in these communities. We must recognize the need for the continuity of rural Canada which the removal of postal services does not provide. In many cases, the survival of the community is dependent upon the existence of the service.

When the Government moved against rural post offices in Canada, it moved against residents of rural Canada. The vision of Rural Dignity, an organization that was established to protect as many of these rural post offices as possible, represents a vision of a proud people who believe they are contributing to Canada. Recognition of that contribution can be made by allowing these people the best possible service, including postal service.

The downgrading of rural Canada is a contribution to the depopulation of rural Canada. In Saskatchewan, post offices have been closed in the communities of Aylesbury, Esk, Krydor, Elstow, Readlyn, Forgan, Tweedsmuir, and Crutwell. All of these communities feel they have been attacked by the Government. They want to fight back by requesting the continuity of their rural post offices.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The period for questions and comments will commence after Question Period.

It being one o'clock, I do leave the chair until two o'clock this day.

NATIONAL CAPITAL COMMISSION

WESTERN PARKWAY—NEW RULES FOR SUNDAY MORNING USAGE

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, during the 1980 election campaign the Rhinoceros Party promised Canadians that if elected they would make us drive on the left hand side of the road instead of the right hand side, and that this new system would be phased in starting with buses in the first year, followed by trucks in the second year, and cars later.

Well, the NCC has now updated this plan on the Western Parkway in Ottawa which has been used by cyclists and runners on Sunday mornings for the past 10 years. Motorists will now be driving in two different directions on one side of the road on the Ottawa River Parkway, while cyclists and runners will be using the other side.

An RCMP spokesman said about this new policy: "We're kind of crossing our fingers", obviously meaning that hopefully the regular users of the Parkway on Sunday morning will not be featured in Monday morning's obituaries. I have supported many initiatives of the NCC, but this clearly is not one of them.

I ask the Minister responsible for the NCC to put an immediate stop to this ridiculous new policy before it is too late, and to remind him that the National Capital Region also belongs to the people who live within the National Capital area.

YOUTH

WINONA HIGH SCHOOL STUDENTS—TELETHON CHARITY DRIVES

Mrs. Shirley Martin (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, the youth of Canada are our hope and inspiration for the future. They often demonstrate their beliefs and concerns for our nation by becoming involved in a project that will benefit their community. The students of Winona High School in Lincoln riding are an excellent example of Canadian youth working together for the benefit of their community.

May 14 will be Winona High's thirteenth telethon since 1974. In previous years the school has raised over $150,000 for charitable organizations such as the Multiple Sclerosis Society, Participation House, the Winona Senior Citizens Centre, and the Spinal Cord Society.

This concern for and commitment to the community demonstrated by hundreds of Winona students have earned for them the affectionate title of "The Small School with the Big Heart". Although this is Winona High School's farewell telethon, the spirit of Winona High will live on in the hearts of the students, the teachers, and the hundreds of citizens whom the youth of Winona High have helped through their telethons.

INTERNATIONAL NURSES DAY

TRIBUTE TO WORK OF NURSES

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, today being International Nurses Day and the birthday of Florence Nightingale who pioneered nursing, I ask Members to join with me in paying tribute to Canada's dedicated and caring nurses.

Nurses play a vital role within the health care system. Not only do they care for those of us who are sick but they provide pre-natal and post-natal clinics for new mothers, preventive health care in schools and in communities, and important support services which allow elderly and disabled people to remain independent in their communities.

I would also like to give special recognition to Jeanne Mance who was Canada's first nurse and hospital administrator. She established the first hospital in New France. Her belief in preventive health care showed remarkable foresight. She recognized that the maintenance of health and prevention of illness should be the most important goal of our health care system.

In Ottawa this evening the Canadian Nurses Association will hold a media awards dinner to recognize journalists from across Canada for their excellence in health reporting. The National Federation of Nurses' Unions has organized fund raisers. We are indeed fortunate that nurses care.

ABITIBI-TÉMISCAMINGUE BUSINESS WOMEN'S GALA

TRIBUTE TO 1988 PRIZEWINNERS

Mr. Gabriel Desjardins (Témiscamingue) Mr. Speaker, on Thursday May 5, the 4th Abitibi-Témiscamingue Business Women's Gala was held at La Sarre, in my riding.

The objective of this prestigious event was to emphasize the entrepreneurship and brilliant performance of business women. I wish in particular to congratulate Pierrette Ouellet-Dumont of Rouyn—Noranda, Pauline Gagné of La Sarre, Carmelle Nantel of Belleterre, Adrienne Larouche-Goyette of Amos, and Susanne Bernard-Turgeon and Diane Pelletier-Turgeon, both of Val d'Or, who were selected as the prizewinners for 1988 in Abitibi-Témiscamingue.

Through these women, I wish to pay tribute to all our local business women who, in increasing numbers, contribute with determination and aggressivity to the economic prosperity of our region.

I also want to congratulate the La Sarre Chamber of Commerce and its president Gilbert Rivard for holding a very successful, truly unforgettable evening.

YOUTH

YES CANADA—OUI CANADA

Mr. Gilles Grondin (Saint-Maurice): There are many organizations in Canada which give assistance to the 434,000 young unemployed across the country. YES Canada is one of them.

This dynamic organization helps young dropouts complete their basic training and provides them with the tools they need in order to meet the numerous challenges they face.

YES Canada will complete its pilot project in December 1988. The results to date speak for themselves: 78 per cent of young people who took part in the program have found a steady job or have gone back to school.

The Government should not only support this humanitarian project, but also allocate the necessary funding so that the program can be offered in French and gain national status. A bilingual program would be accessible to all young Canadians who urgently need support.

Will the Conservative Government take action to show that it is concerned with the situation of all young people in Canada by allocating funds so that young French Canadians can take advantage of a commendable project like YES Canada?

The Conservative Government tends to forget that all begins with youth and that young people are our most reliable resource.

FOCUS ON INPUTS ASSOCIATION'S WORK

Mr. Don Ravis (Saskatoon East): Mr. Speaker, Focus on Inputs is an association representing about 3,500 prairie farmers. This group is dedicated to providing practical economic benefits to farmers through research into generic herbicides.

The present process for registration of farm chemicals is an expensive and complex one. This process effectively produces a barrier to entry into the chemical manufacturing market. Prairie farmers faced with rising input costs and depressed grain prices are seeking ways to help themselves out of the present situation.

By seeking to have pesticide requirements modified to suit the interests of farmers better, Focus on Inputs is attempting to put farmers in a position to create a better future.

Including farm chemicals under Section 41 of the Patent Act would also be beneficial to our farmers. Farm chemicals could be treated in much the same manner as pharmaceutical drugs by the Patent Act through the introduction of compulsory licensing. This would allow the production of generic herbicides 10 years after a product was first registered. In return, the generic manufacturer would pay a 14 per cent royalty on sales until the original company's 17-year patent expires.

As you can see, Mr. Speaker, improvements in this area are necessary in order to reduce input costs for Canadian farmers.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

FUNDING OF WELFARE SERVICES FOR CHILDREN

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, several years ago an agreement was arrived at between the federal Department of Indian Affairs, the Manitoba Department of Community Services, and the Indian Child Welfare Agencies, under which the agencies took over the delivery of child welfare services for native children. It was agreed by Indian Affairs that the level of services provided for native children would be equal to the standard provided by the non-Indian agencies in Manitoba to other children.

However, the Department of Indian Affairs has refused to increase the funding required to provide those services, the cost of which has gone up substantially since the agreement was arrived at. I call on the Department of Indian Affairs to honour its agreement so that Indian children in need can get the same consideration as all other children in need in Manitoba.

REVENUE CANADA

INVESTIGATIONS OF FARMERS' CLAIMS MADE UNDER TAX CREDIT PROGRAM

Mr. Felix Holtmann (Selkirk—Interlake): Mr. Speaker, today is Manitoba Day. Northern Manitobans were delighted to hear that our Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) had decided to provide interim relief for areas north of the 55th parallel. Indeed, northerners across Canada are happy that our Government has seen fit to compromise on what was clearly an unfair taxation policy.

It is now time for Revenue Canada to make a similar concession to farmers across Canada. Investigations by Revenue Canada into the taxation records of hundreds of farmers making claims under the business investment tax credit program must stop. Farmers feel that they are being unfairly investigated and believe that they are the victims of arbitrary assessments by a callous taxman.

I agree with the farmers. The Minister of Finance has seen fit to apply taxation rules more fairly for northern Canadians. In the interests of fairness to farmers across Canada I ask that the Minister of Revenue (Mr. MacKay) consider applying taxation rules under the business investment tax credit program more fairly for our farmers as well.

CANADA PENSION PLAN

HOMEMAKER'S PENSION PROPOSAL

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, we heard another broken promise yesterday. I remember full well before the last election the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) said that he was going to come in with a pension for housewives to recognize the very hard work that they do inside the home. When he was questioned on that issue yesterday he did not even have the guts to stand up. He passed the question off to the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) because he realizes that another broken promise is not going to sit very well with the people of Canada.

Why did the Prime Minister promise the women of Canada a housewife's pension if he was not intending to deliver?

• (1410)

And why is it that, at this point in time, the Minister of National Health and Welfare blames the situation on the provinces, when he knows full well that he has not shown the leadership to make this issue a priority?

It is another broken Tory promise.

TOURISM

ABITIBI-TÉMISCAMINGUE

Mr. Guy St-Julien (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, National Tourism Week will be held May 16 to 22, this year. This is an opportunity to publicize the industry of the future in Canada: Tourism.

In 1987, the Abitibi-Témiscamingue area received 140,000 visitors, that is 10,000 Americans, 15,000 Ontarians and 115,000 Quebecers, who came to enjoy fishing, hunting or sightseeing, or to visit family and friends.

Mr. Speaker, we have the largest tourist area in Quebec, and we are ready to greet tourists with the following attractions: The James Bay hydro-electric project; the Desmarais Centre and its inhabitants; the cathedral and Pikogan village in Amos; the concession 2 school in Authier-Nord; the Normick Perron plant in La Sarre; Aiguebelle Park in Cadillac; Dumulon House in Rouyn-Noranda; the Bourlamaque mining village in Val d'Or; the regional mining museum in Malarctic; the Maison du colon, the Fort Témiscamingue Park and the regattas in Ville-Marie. The most popular places for fishing and hunting are around Matagami, Senneterre and Témiscamingue.

Welcome to Abitibi-Témiscamingue and Nouveau-Quebec!

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

CLOSURE OF MUNICIPAL INCINERATOR IN METROPOLITAN TORONTO

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, on Tuesday, May 10, the Council of Metropolitan Toronto took strong action for clean air and conservation by voting to close the Commissioners Street municipal incinerator on July 1 next.

Reports of the Environmental Protection Office of the Toronto Board of Health show that unacceptable quantities of dioxins and heavy metals from the incinerator are fouling the air Torontonians breathe.

After a campaign by groups such as Citizens for a Safe Environment, CUPE Local 43, including the garbage collectors, and the New Democratic City Hall Caucus, Toronto Council voted unanimously to close the incinerator, and Metro Council agreed by a majority.

The Citizens for a Safe Environment group now proposes that the 70 incinerator staff be re-employed at reducing waste destined for landfill by, (1) organizing reduction of industrial waste at source; (2) resale of usable waste—for example, wood—to appropriate users; and (3) recycling glass, for example, into new products.

Toronto has given a good lead, and I hope other cities will follow that lead.

PROJECTED TREND

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, the assumption in our tax laws and public policy is that one is either a farmer or one is not. However, testimony given by the Canadian Cattlemen's Association to the Senate Committee on Agriculture suggests that, in future, two different types of agriculture will emerge.

On the one hand there will be the sophisticated, large, capital-intensive agri-business operations; on the other, there will be smaller operations, owned and managed by people with off-farm employment. In the future, most of the rural population will have a job, either full or part-time, as well as being farmers.

We should recognize this trend and, in our future policies, make due allowance for the fact that, in the coming years, most smaller farmers will be engaged in farming on a part-time basis, deriving much of their income from non-farm activities.

PENSIONS

ESTABLISHMENT OF PENSION PLAN FOR HOMEMAKERS—ELECTION PROMISES OF PROGRESSIVE CONSERVATIVES

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, during the last election campaign, this Tory Government made all sorts of promises to Canadian senior citizens. Everybody remembers their promise to fully indexed old age pensions. They broke their word and tried to cut old age security pension payments.

They undertook to expand the New Horizons Program to meet the needs of senior citizens in golden age clubs. But once again, they reneged on their promise and reduced funding.

We were told yesterday that, during the last election campaign, this Government made a commitment to allow the 3 million Canadian homemakers to join the Canada Pension Plan or the Quebec Pension Plan. We were told yesterday for the third time that they went back on their word.

Mr. Speaker, I am sure that none of the Canadian senior citizens listening to us will want to vote for a Tory candidate because that party doesn't keep its promises.

IMPORTANCE OF NURSES

Mr. Fernand Jourdenais (La Prairie): Mr. Speaker, for over 300 years, competent and dedicated nurses have looked after Canadian men and women in Canada. The fact that Canada has over 200 000 active nurses, representing more than 50 per cent of the total number of health care professionals, is a good indication of the importance of that profession within our national health care system.

Mr. Speaker, we are all indebted to the nursing profession. Nurses are present in our homes, in the workplace, in our clinics, in our hospitals, in our shelters and in all our other health care institutions.

On behalf of all Canadian men and women and in recognition of their contribution to the public health and welfare, I remind Members of Parliament and the Canadian people that May 9th is the National Nurses Week in Canada.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

INCREASE IN RENTS

Ms. Audrey McLaughlin (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, the state of housing for Indian people is a disgrace. Forty per cent of Indian housing units do not have access to running water or bathing facilities, as opposed to 1 per cent of housing units across Canada. The Government's innovative solution seems to be to provide housing that no one can afford.

As of April 1, 1988, a number of band members in my riding received notices that their rents would be increased by anywhere from 50 per cent to 100 per cent. I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that if this happened in Toronto there would be a riot.

In my riding people have moved out of this housing and are planning to live in tents for the summer because they cannot afford the increases. Bands are left with having to make payments on units for which they receive no revenue. The Department of Indian Affairs and Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation have implemented a program which is not helping those the program was intended to help.

I call on the Government to place an immediate freeze on these totally unacceptable rent increases and to review completely the entire scheme with the bands involved.

CHALLENGE '88

MOUNT ROYAL RIDING—APPLICATION APPROVAL RATE

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, the Tory summer Challenge '88 program is a big disappointment for the youth of this country. It is unfortunate that only 42 per cent of applications for Challenge '88 could be approved in Mount Royal riding, and the same is true throughout the country. One hundred and thirty-two applications were submitted; less than half, only 56 students received grants in this riding.

The total amount allotted to Challenge '88 this year in Mount Royal was $193,340, considerably lower than the $272,635 of last year. This is a 38 per cent decrease, yet unemployment among the students is on the increase.

One has only to look around my riding to see students looking for work who should have been better served by the Government if this Government had had a strong commitment to youth and summer jobs, jobs which give students money and the valuable career experience they need.

The Government promised jobs, jobs, jobs. Well, all we have seen are cuts, cuts, cuts. Another broken Tory promise.

DEPARTMENT OF SECRETARY OF STATE

CLOSING DATE FOR ALMA OFFICE

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my question to the Minister who answers for the Secretary of State.

Mr. Speaker, Lucien Bouchard, the Minister or messiah who was going to rescue the Conservative Party from electoral failure was also supposed to make recommendations to the Prime Minister concerning ethical standards, conflicts of interest, and cleaning up election expenses.

But Mr. Clean, as he was already called, has lost most of his credibility in that field, and his shiny white suit now has a dirty spot.

Yesterday, in an attempt to justify the opening of a new Secretary of State office in Alma, the Minister of Transport said that it was to provide services for citizens. As recorded in Hansard, he even said it was to maintain Secretary of State services for citizens.

My question is simple: If the purpose is to maintain services for local citizens, how is it that this new office of the Secretary of State will close its doors the day after the election?

[English]

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I think it is important to distinguish between public business and campaign business in this particular case.

Ms. Copps: It certainly is.

Mr. Mazankowski: Because the Minister does have ongoing departmental responsibilities I doubt very much whether it would be acceptable for people to do departmental business in a political campaign office.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Mazankowski: In order to ensure there is ongoing departmental business conducted in an orderly manner, the Department has taken the decision to open up this office on a temporary basis to ensure that service is maintained.

JONQUIÈRE OFFICE—JUSTIFICATION

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Apparently, Mr. Speaker, the Deputy Prime Minister has not been told that in the next few days the Secretary of State will open a regional office in the neighbouring town of Jonquière just a few miles from Alma. It is rather strange that an additional office should be opening in Alma, in the very riding where the election is to take place! And if the purpose is to maintain services for citizens, why was the office manned by a political assistant instead of a civil servant familiar with departmental programs? Would it not be because the election campaign is on in the riding of Lac-Saint-Jean and they want to make sure that communications remain clear between this new so-called Secretary of State office and the political committee of Mr. Clean, the Conservative candidate?

[English]

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is aware, I am sure, that all departmental ministerial offices are staffed by what we refer to as exempt staff, and this is the case in this particular circumstance. I should point out that the person involved is totally disconnected from the campaign, and I think that is a very important differentiation. I can say further that it is my understanding that this matter has been cleared with the Chief Electoral Officer. He has been made aware of it.

If the Hon. Member is suggesting that, in order for the Minister to carry on departmental business, people who are interested in doing so would have to come to a political campaign office, I am sure he and his colleagues would be the first ones to complain about that, and it is for that reason that this particular office has been set up.

SERVICES PROVIDED BY ALMA OFFICE

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, the explanation does not hold water. There is another office that will be open on June 6 in Jonquière, the neighbouring city, and the work could be done out of there.

With regard to the Deputy Prime Minister saying that this Alma office will be completely disconnected from the campaign, we will return to that in a moment. Meanwhile, let me concentrate on the so-called services that are supposed to be dispensed to the local people.

If this is for the people to be served, why appoint a political hack, Mr. Jocelyn Francoeur, a former political caucus liaison officer with the former Secretary of State, the Hon. Member for Rosedale? Why not admit the truth, that there is an election going on in this riding and that this new Secretary of State office is nothing else but a branch of the Tory campaign headquarters in the riding?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, no one is denying that there is a by-election going on. That is pretty common knowledge. Certainly I am not denying it.

What is important is to distinguish between that which is public business and that which is campaign business. I am sure that the Hon. Member would be the first to chastise the Government and the Minister for wanting people who wanted legitimate access to the Minister on government business to be forced to go to a political campaign office to conduct that business.

RESPONSES TO TELEPHONE CALLS

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister as well, and it also concerns Mr. Clean. The Deputy Prime Minister will know that he said only moments ago in the House that the campaign office and the new office of the Secretary of State in Alma were completely disconnected, to use his words. Can he then explain to the House why, at 1.10 this afternoon, in response to a call from my office, Mr. Francoeur volunteered information on the campaign headquarters, suggesting how we could volunteer services if we wanted to work for the campaign? Five minutes later, during another phone call we made asking how to make a campaign contribution, we were given another number and directed how to make campaign contributions as well. Is that completely disconnected?

Is it not obvious that this is nothing more than a co-ordinating office for the so-called candidate in the riding of Lac-Saint-Jean?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I am not aware of the allegations to which the Hon. Member has referred, and before I would want to comment on them I would certainly want to check out the facts, because as has been the case in previous times he has been somewhat inaccurate in the presentation of facts.

REQUEST FOR CLOSURE OF OFFICE

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary for the Deputy Prime Minister. I would like to put it to him again that in a telephone conversation with Mr. Francoeur, the latter gave us the phone number 668-0704. When asked how one could make a donation, he supplied that phone number. When asked how one could volunteer for work, he also came up with a phone number. Is it not clear that that office is merely an extension of an election campaign office?

An Hon. Member: A patronage centre!

Mr. Boudria: Why is the Deputy Prime Minister not asking now that that office be closed down?

• (1425)

[English]

Mr. Speaker: The Chair is usually extremely reluctant to interfere even if a question seems to be very much the same as the one asked before. I would just point out that the phone number may have been different but the question seems very similar. I just draw to the attention of Hon. Members that putting a question in one language and repeating it in another is using up a lot of time.

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, without accepting the premise of the question or the allegations, I certainly will undertake to look into the matter to which the Hon. Member refers, and report to the House.

JUSTIFICATION FOR CERTAIN BENEFITS

The Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. The same day a by-election is announced in that constituency, the Office of the Secretary of State announces the opening of an office in that constituency, for the duration of the election campaign only, for the purposes of a by-election. In the Deputy Prime Minister's view, is it honest and fair to hand out some $1,000 of Government money to a Conservative candidate? Is that fair?

[English]

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I think it is common knowledge that the Minister is going to be in that particular area throughout the course of the campaign. As the head of a Department he has responsibilities to carry out. It only seems natural that one would have to have some facility for ensuring continuity and the ongoing discharge of those responsibilities. I think that is exactly what is being done in this particular case.

Mr. Broadbent: The Minister knows a decision has been made to open another office in the same region just a few miles away that would serve the regional purpose, if that was the purpose.

OPENING OF MINISTERIAL OFFICES IN CONSTITUENCIES

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, will the Minister be very clear on his logic. We think this is a very clever way of getting around the Election Expenses Act.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Hawkes: Like the municipal rebate, Ed?

Mr. Broadbent: People will see that. Since he says it is necessary for this office to be there so the Minister can do his job during the election campaign, is he telling us that when the next election is called every Minister of the Crown will have an office opened in his constituency so he can do his job during the election? If the logic holds, then he has to apply it to every member of the Cabinet in the coming election campaign, but he knows the people of Canada would totally reject that.

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I am somewhat surprised at the Hon. Member's observation because he knows very well from previous election campaigns where Ministers have ongoing responsibilities, their staff remains intact. If they have a ministerial office, whether it be in Edmonton, Vegreville, or Calgary, during the course of the election campaign that work goes on. He is really confirming and answering the question for me, and I thank him very much.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, I will give the Minister the benefit of the doubt and say he simply did not answer the question. I am asking about new offices—

Mr. Mazankowski: Oh, yes!

Mr. Broadbent: —not offices that are in existence. Oh, yes! That man was not even elected when you—

Mr. Mazankowski: Come on, Ed. Let Nystrom get in the gutter.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member will put his question.

Mr. Lewis: From his own seat!

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, we are talking about an office that was opened only for a campaign, and it has been announced that it will be shut down after the campaign is over. Therefore, is he prepared to say the Government will follow the same logic when the election is called, and each Minister of the Crown who does not now have an office for his ministerial functions in his riding will have one opened only during the course of the campaign? Is that what the Minister is saying, and if so, will he be honest about it?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is trying to establish a double standard. It was all right when the Liberals were in power to have departmental offices in their constituencies, but he is now saying because the Conservatives are in power it would not be appropriate. There have been departmental offices as long as there have been Governments.

• (1430)

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Broadbent: Bouchard did not have one.

Mr. Cassidy: This is a sleazy electoral trick.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Minister will complete his answer.

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Speaker, I think one point must be made very clear. The Hon. Leader of the New Democratic Party is suggesting that taxpayers' money is being used to fight an election.

Mr. Broadbent: Right.

Mr. Mazankowski: Taxpayers' money is being used to provide for a government departmental responsibility. That is very clear. A differentiation should be made, and is made.

PENSIONS

PENSIONS FOR WOMEN HOMEMAKERS—REQUEST THAT MINISTER REVEAL PROVINCES' DISAGREEMENTS

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, while the Conservative Government is muddying the reputation of all Members in this House, there are people in need, and my question is directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. The Minister admitted yesterday that during the course of this session the Conservative Government could not honour its commitment to introduce the homemakers' pension under the Canada Pension Plan and the Quebec Pension Plan because it could not get provincial agreement. Can the Minister indicate the reasons expressed by dissenting provinces for opposing the homemakers' pension?

[English]

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member stated in the preamble to his question that we were not going to fulfil our obligations. That is not correct. In fact yesterday in the House I quoted directly from our policy handbook. I do so again: "We encourage the provinces to agree to the introduction of a homemakers pension in the Canada Pension Plan, along the lines proposed by the Parliamentary Task Force on Pension Reform".

Furthermore, in discussions with the provinces on changes to the Canada Pension Plan, in 1985 a proposal to include the homemakers in the Canada Pension Plan along the lines proposed by the Parliamentary Task Force on Pension Reform was put to the provinces.

I also remind the Hon. Member that, following that, a report on the viability of a homemaker's pension in the Canada Pension Plan was commissioned. He should be aware of that report. I understand that it has been completed but I do not yet have it in my hands. Obviously I look forward to seeing its recommendations and how we can go beyond the proposals that we made in the campaign of 1984.

QUERY CONCERNING PROVINCES OPPOSED TO PROJECT

Mr. Jean-Claude Malepart (Montréal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, the Minister has not shown a very strong and clear will to move forward in the debate on that issue at the provincial level. Since the Minister will not state the underlying reasons for which some provinces would not agree to that project, I would like to know . . .

[English]

Could the Minister name the dissident provinces that refused to participate in the pension plan for homemakers?

[Translation]

May we know which provincial governments are delaying such an important plan to introduce a homemakers' pension?

[English]

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I think the characterization should be different from what the Hon. Member put in his question.

Ms. Copps: What's wrong?

Mr. Epp (Provencher): The Hon. Member for Hamilton East likes to return at certain points—

Mr. Speaker: The Member for Montréal—Sainte-Marie has put the question. The Minister is trying to respond. I am certain Members would want the Hon. Minister to complete his answer.

Mr. Epp (Provencher): Mr. Speaker, as the Hon. Member will be aware, unlike some of his colleagues, it requires seven provinces with two-thirds of the population for agreement to any changes in the Canada Pension Plan. That was a condition introduced in 1966 by the former Liberal Government.

I state very clearly that, once the report is completed, I hope we will get that kind of agreement and the same kind of co-operation on changes we brought in with Bill C-116. That is co-operation which the former Government never received and perhaps never thought important to seek. That is why it did not bring in the changes we have brought in on CPP.

DEPARTMENT OF SECRETARY OF STATE

OPENING OF OFFICE IN ALMA

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. It concerns the opening of this ministerial office/campaign office in Alma in the riding of Lac-Saint-Jean where a by-election is being held on June 20.

Recently Canadians responded to many polls across the country that they consider integrity and ethics as the key elements on which they judge politicians and political leaders. The Prime Minister has promised a new approach to fairness and honesty. Will the Deputy Prime Minister tell us if this is another example of fairness and honesty which Canadians expect of the Prime Minister and the Government?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I know the objective of the New Democratic Party is to make as much political hay out of this as they possibly can. I respect the hon. gentleman. He has been a long-standing Member and I certainly never doubt his integrity.

Let me say to him, however, that the Minister does have ongoing departmental responsibilities which he must conduct. Surely an office in an area where he will be occupied for the next two months is clearly realistic, reasonable, and feasible. Certainly in the discharge of that responsibility Canadians would want to separate political campaign activity from legitimate government departmental business activity. I think that is what is happening in this particular case.

REQUEST THAT OFFICE BE CLOSED IMMEDIATELY

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the same Minister. Since perception in politics is probably most important to Canadians, would the Deputy Prime Minister not agree that in this instance, when this office is being opened for exactly the same time as the election period, the coincidence is far too evident? Canadians know that telephones have existed for some time now. Will the Deputy Prime Minister not accept the fact that the perception is not healthy for the political process and that this office should be closed immediately?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the perception which the Hon. Member describes may very well be an accurate one in the eyes of the New Democratic Party.

Mr. Cassidy: Canadians as a whole.

Mr. Mazankowski: In the eyes of the New Democratic Party. I think Canadians would also recognize and want to be assured that when a Minister is given departmental responsibilities he has a duty and obligation to carry out those responsibilities wherever it may be. That is why Ministers have departmental offices or ministerial offices in their region or their constituency. That is why Members of Parliament have constituency offices, in order to serve Canadians better.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

BRITISH COLUMBIA—ALLEGED VIOLATIONS OF POLLUTION LAWS BY PULP MILLS

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of the Environment and of the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans, my question is directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare.

The West Coast Environmental Law Association reports that 21 of 22 pulp mills in British Columbia consistently violated federal pollution laws last year without being charged. Why did the Government of Canada allow such poor application of the law? What is the Government going to do to enforce existing federal pollution laws to protect the environment?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I will take the question as notice. I can only indicate to the Hon. Member that there is an outstanding issue relating to access to information which is due shortly and which I believe will cover that issue even more fully.

• (1440)

Mr. Caccia: We don't need access to information data to find out what is happening every day. The record for 1987 is matched by an even more miserable record in 1985 and 1986. We don't need any reference to the Information Act.

GOVERNMENT ACTIONS

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): My question is fundamental. When will the Government start to practise what it preaches in protecting the environment when it comes to the crunch? Will the Minister tell us when?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I think Members know very fully that the Minister of the Environment has been very active dealing with effluents from pulp mills, whether one is dealing with dioxins or fluorines. I think as well the Member, who was a former Minister of the Environment, would want to congratulate the present Minister who was awarded a very prestigious award in the United States by the Sierra Club for his work on the environment. I am sure the Hon. Member would want to congratulate his successor for receiving an award which he himself never received.

I am sure as well that the Hon. Member would want to take cognizance of the fact that the Environmental Protection Act has passed third reading. It is an Act which he was never able to get through the House, but the present Minister has. I hope the Liberal Senate will approve it as well. Those are the kinds of positive actions the Minister of the Environment has taken. Regrettably, some of those actions were not taken earlier by the questioner.

NATURAL RESOURCES

PRAIRIE DROUGHT CONDITIONS—STUDY OF POSSIBLE WATER DIVERSION TO NORTH DAKOTA

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of the Environment and of the Prime Minister, I would like to address my question to the Deputy Prime Minister. Given the severe drought conditions which have existed and continue to exist in the southern Prairies, and given the fact that the federal water policy of the Department of the Environment is to:

> ... take all possible measures within the limits of its constitutional authority to prohibit the export of Canadian water by interbasin diversions;

Why is the federal Government involved in a $1.6 million study with the Province of Saskatchewan to divert water from the Saskatchewan River basin and the Qu'Appelle River basin into the Souris River in order to supply North Dakota with a secure source of water? Why are you involved in such a study?

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, acting on behalf of the Minister of the Environment, I thought when the Hon. Member started off, the main thrust of his question would be the potential drought in western Canada. However, the latter half of the Hon. Member's question indeed dealt with another matter.

The only thing I can do at the moment is take notice of his question on behalf of the Minister of the Environment and request that the Minister seek the information requested by the Hon. Member and make it available to him.

SUSPENSION OF STUDY HEAD

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, Mr. Kendall, who heads the study, has stated that there is not enough water in the Souris River to supply the needs for the Rafferty-Alameda projects, therefore, Lake Diefenbaker will have to be drained. He has been suspended for two weeks on the insistence of the Saskatchewan Minister in charge of the Water Corporation. Since this is a joint federal-provincial study, why did the federal Government go along with this suspension?

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Again, Mr. Speaker, I regret that with no prior indication the question was going to be asked, I am not in a position to provide—

Mr. de Jong: How about hearing from the Saskatoon Minister?

Mr. Wise: —the details in response to the Hon. Member's question. It is a legitimate question and I am certain that the answer to it is available and will be forthcoming from my colleague, the Minister of the Environment.

Oral Questions

TEMAGAMI WILDERNESS AREA

Mr. John A. MacDougall (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. He is aware of the concerns of residents of northeastern Ontario with respect to the proposed Temagami wilderness area. He is also aware of a Toronto newspaper report yesterday indicating that the Minister of the Environment is prepared to become involved in this matter. Can the Deputy Prime Minister tell my many concerned constituents in the riding of Timiskaming what the federal Government involvement will be with this proposed wilderness park?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I am aware of the concerns which have been expressed and the concern of the Hon. Member. My understanding is that the comments by the Minister of the Environment have been misinterpreted somewhat and, in order to ensure that clarification takes place, my understanding is that he is prepared to meet with all the parties concerned and, hopefully, with the Hon. Member, to ensure this matter is clearly understood and that the concerns of those individuals which have been expressed will indeed be allayed.

TOBACCO ADVERTISING—BILL C-51—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Agriculture. It deals with the Government's failure to introduce legislation restricting advertising of tobacco products. I would like to ask him if the real reason behind the Government's delay of Bill C-51 is not reflected in a speech he gave in Tillsonburg when he said that under free trade American tobacco products will compete on an equal footing with Canadian tobacco products, yet Canada will be unable to tell American publishers what kind of advertisements they can carry, and I quote: "It doesn't make sense to put restrictions on Canadian publications and not have the same powers with respect to American publications"

Is it not really the free trade deal that is causing the stall on Bill C-51?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): No, Mr. Speaker, the free trade deal has nothing to do with Bill C-51 as the Deputy Prime Minister and other House officers have indicated. The Bill will come back for report stage and third reading and I look forward to continued support of the Bill. I think what is important for us as Canadians to keep in mind is that according to a report of the World Health Organization on tobacco consumption, of approximately 166 countries Canada was either eighth or ninth highest in the world.

The other point I think we have to make is that, as tobacco consumption is reduced in Canada, we do not simply replace our production or usage with diversion to the Third World. I think those are some of the difficult issues with relation to tobacco which should be addressed. The Minister of Agriculture has been very co-operative with me on this issue.

ATTENDANCE OF TOBACCO COMPANY PRESIDENT AT STATE DINNER

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, if there is no relationship between the trade deal and the Government's stall on the tobacco industry, I accept that the Minister of Agriculture is then recanting the statement he made in Tillsonburg. I would also like to ask the Government why the president of the company that produces Export A, Select, and Vantage cigarettes, was invited to the dinner celebrated between the President and the Prime Minister in Washington, the meeting that was supposedly to discuss trade?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I will look into that. Perhaps the Hon. Member is jealous over the fact that she was not invited and I will see that she gets included next time as well.

PUBLIC SERVICE

POLITICAL RIGHTS OF FEDERAL EMPLOYEES

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. It arises out of the Public Service Commission's decision to broaden the guidelines for political activity by federal government employees which was made public this week. Now that the federal Government's adamantine resistance to granting political rights to its employees has started to crack, will the Government assure the House that it will expedite legislation to provide federal employees with the right to political activity which they should enjoy under the Charter of Rights?

Will the Government do everything in its power, specifically, to expedite Bill C-273 on political rights when it returns to the House in the next few days?

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of State and Minister of State (Treasury Board)): Mr. Speaker, I agree with my colleague from the Liberal Party that this is a matter which is presently before a parliamentary committee which has heard witnesses. Members of the House sent it to the committee, and surely we should wait and allow the committee to do its work.

REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT EXPEDITE PASSAGE OF LEGISLATION

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, we were told in the legislative committee this morning by three constitutional experts that the law under which the guidelines were made public today will likely fall down because it will be in violation of the Charter of Rights. In other words, there was a need for new legislation and the Government in 1984 promised new legislation as part of its election platform.

Since the Government has not proposed legislation itself, but has left this to a Private Member's Bill, will it undertake that when Bill C-273 comes back to the House it will be expedited? And once the Bill has passed the Commons and the Senate, will the Government assure the House that it will be proclaimed and made law at the earliest opportunity?

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of State and Minister of State (Treasury Board)): Mr. Speaker, once again I want to review this for the Hon. Member. A Private Member's Bill was brought forward. It had full and forthright debate. Members of this House sent it to committee for the purposes of hearing witnesses and reviewing the wording of the Bill. In fact the Hon. Member is on that committee.

• (1450)

Surely we should allow the committee to do its work. I am not going to prejudge what this House does at report stage and at third reading.

Mr. Cassidy: What about the Tory promise?

Mr. Lewis: The promise is being fulfilled by the very fact that the legislation is going forward. When it gets back to this House for report stage and third reading, surely that is the time when every Member will make a judgment on the Bill.

WAR CRIMINALS

WHEREABOUTS OF ALLEGED KILLER OF CANADIAN SOLDIERS

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Justice who is aware that Wilhelm Mohnke has been located in Hamburg, West Germany. This individual was on Canada's most wanted war criminal list following World War II, alleged to have killed 52 Canadian soldiers who were prisoners of war after the Normandy invasion. The West German Government has indicated it is not planning to conduct any more investigations, or to prosecute this individual.

In light of the fact that the Canadian Government has collected its own evidence on the subject I want to ask the Minister whether he is prepared to get in touch with West German authorities to urge them to accept our evidence to complete this investigation, and to lay charges.

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member will understand as a former Solicitor General that it would be improper for me to comment on investigations that I am making with respect to criminal charges. He can rest assured, in any case, that the Government of Canada stands ready to co-operate with respect to prosecutions or investigations that may be undertaken. I can give the Hon. Member that assurance.

We are prepared to co-operate. Indeed, the Hon. Member has written to me, and I have responded to him, to give him that assurance. If he has any information that would be useful, I wish that he would turn that information over to my Department.

REQUEST THAT MINISTER URGE WEST GERMAN GOVERNMENT TO LAY CHARGES

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, the Minister has the information. I am not asking him to co-operate. I am asking him to take an initiative. Canada is the aggrieved country. We are talking about Canadian soldiers who were allegedly murdered during World War II.

I want to ask the Minister again at least to undertake to review the material that is there, and to make representations to the West German Government urging it to change its decision, and to lay charges.

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I reiterate and give the Hon. Member the commitment with respect to any information that is turned over, or any investigation, that clearly we will co-operate in order that the interests of justice are in fact achieved. I do not think the Hon. Member wants me to comment with respect to information that we might have in our investigation.

The Hon. Member wrote to me. I have, as a result of his letter, communicated with the British Labour Member of Parliament to whom he referred with respect to information. I have asked my Department to be in communication with him to see if there is any additional information that he can bring forward.

I simply say to the Hon. Member that in our system of justice we do not make public details of the extent of our investigations that are taking place, except to say this, that as Attorney General I can assure the Hon. Member that where there is a legitimate case, a serious and credible situation, and there is evidence, we will be co-operating with other countries, or dealing with the matter in our own jurisdiction.

Oral Questions

MUNITIONS

EXPORTS OF GUNPOWDER

Mr. John Parry (Kenora—Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Deputy Prime Minister. The Secretary of State for External Affairs has yet to fulfil his commitment to the House of April 22, and I quote: "I will report to the House once I have some result to those investigations" with respect to the EXPRO matter.

Since the Minister of Supply and Services has stated in a letter to me that the last three shipments went to Holland, whereas we have a packing slip that shows that one of them was destined for Portugal, when will the Government admit to the Canadian people that, because of systemic failure or negligence at the administrative level, in fact a Canadian company was a principal supplier to the Iranian artillery?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I will have to take that question as notice. I cannot tell the Hon. Member why the Secretary of State for External Affairs has not gotten back to him. I will certainly draw it to his attention. I apologize for not having that information at the present time.

WITHDRAWAL OF FINANCIAL SUPPORT TO EXPRO—MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. John Parry (Kenora—Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Minister of Supply and Services.

He acknowledged in his letter to me that EXPRO had received a loan of some $8 million from the account for military production loans. What will he do now that EXPRO has locked out its employees to withdraw that financial assistance, the effect of which would be to finance a lockout?

[English]

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker—

Hon. Otto Jelinek (Minister of Supply and Services): Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Crosbie: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: There is only one way to settle this. The Hon. Minister.

Mr. Jelinek: Mr. Speaker, this goes to show you how anxious all Ministers are to answer questions from members of the Opposition.

In answer to the Hon. Member may I let him know that the situation with EXPRO is well under control. Both the RCMP and European police forces have looked into the situation. The loan went ahead in order to protect some 600 jobs. The negotiations are ongoing in terms of the lock-out. We believe that the negotiations are going on in a positive manner so that the situation can be resolved to everybody's benefit in the very near future.

SUPERMAILBOXES—OPPOSITION OF HANDICAPPED PERSONS' ORGANIZATION

Mr. Alfonso Gagliano (Saint-Léonard—Anjou): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Deputy Prime Minister. Another national organization has joined many others to denounce Canada Post's discriminatory supermailbox. The Coalition of Provincial Organizations of the Handicapped stated that supermailboxes must go and home delivery should be restored to improve independent living of disabled people.

Will the Government order Canada Post to restore home delivery in order to assure the handicapped that they too are first-class citizens?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, my understanding is that the corporate plan of the Post Office will be tabled at a later time today. The results of the actions that were taken by the Minister in charge of the Post Office are very revealing. If I recall correctly, when we assumed office the Post Office was losing some $400 million. It is my understanding that in this fiscal year it will show a profit.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mazankowski: That will mean a reduced burden to the taxpayer, lower rates to the people who are using the Post Office and, finally, a greater degree of reliability and better service for all concerned. The Hon. Member should be applauding that.

Mr. Gagliano: The Post Office might show a profit at the expense of the handicapped and the seniors. I do not have anything to compliment the Government on for that.

SUPERMAILBOXES—OPPOSITION OF CERTAIN MUNICIPALITIES

Mr. Alfonso Gagliano (Saint-Léonard—Anjou): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a supplementary question. Why is Canada Post trying to blackmail municipalities which refuse to have superboxes in their area by telling them: "No superboxes, no mail delivery!" Why such blackmail?

[English]

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is footloose and fancy-free with taxpayers' dollars. When his Party was in power it left the Government with a $38 billion deficit which had to be toned down. I realize that his answer to governing is spend more and spend more, and drive the deficit up higher and higher. We take a different view of these things.

In many areas throughout Canada the supermailbox concept is working very well. Throughout the Post Office system services are being improved, reliability is being improved, and costs are being contained. What more would the Hon. Member ask for?

HOUSE OF COMMONS

PRESENCE IN GALLERY OF NEW ZEALAND MINISTER OF FINANCE

Mr. Speaker: I regret that I was not able to make this announcement earlier.

I would like to draw to the attention of all Members the presence in the gallery of the Hon. Roger Douglas, Minister of Finance for New Zealand.

INCOME TAX

NON PAYMENT OF TAX BY CORPORATIONS

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of State for Finance.

Yesterday the Minister of Finance was asked to explain how it is that, despite his tax reform program, more than 5,000 high income Canadians paid no income tax at all last year, and he defended the situation by saying that the numbers had been reduced substantially since the Government took office.

I would ask the Minister of State for Finance to explain how it is that, despite tax reform, a number of the largest corporations in Canada, corporations which made substantial profits, in fact paid no income tax at all in 1986.

Alcan Aluminum, with profits of $306 million, paid no corporation tax; Brascan, with profits of $186 million, paid no corporation taxes; Power Financial, with profits of $131 million, paid no corporation taxes; Hees International, with profits of $117 million, paid no corporation tax.

Indeed, most were able to accumulate tax credits for future use.

Hon. Tom Hockin (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, the answer to the Hon. Member's question is that tax reform came into effect in 1987 and not in the year to which the figures that the Hon. Member has quoted apply.

DEFERRED TAXES

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, does the Minister not realize that the reason these corporations paid no taxes and that nothing has changed is that they were able to defer the taxes that they should have paid, and that in fact those deferred taxes will never be paid?

Given that these corporations will continue to build new buildings and acquire new equipment, those deferred taxes will never be paid, with the result that these corporations will pay no corporation tax at all.

When is the Government going to plug those loopholes?

Hon. Tom Hockin (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, I have to say to the Hon. Member that I find questions respecting tax reform coming from the NDP to be hypocritical.

Last year the New Democratic Party took the position that flow-through shares represented an illegitimate deduction for the rich, and it has now totally changed that position. The views of the New Democratic Party on tax deductions—which can lead, on occasion, to a lack of tax revenue—seem to change with the political wind; they are not based on principle.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

WEEKLY STATEMENT

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I would ask that the Deputy House Leader for the Government give us the usual statement of government business for the coming week.

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of State and Minister of State (Treasury Board)): Mr. Speaker, I wish to advise that tomorrow will be an allotted day, as will Monday, May 16. On Tuesday, May 17, we intend to call certain Bills on which there has been some agreement as to their progression through the House.

In respect of Bill C-60, we will be dealing with the response of the House to the message received from the other place. As well, we shall deal with Bill C-127, which is known as the Cape Breton Bill, and Bill C-92, respecting amendments to the Wheat Board Act.

We are still discussing what business might be conducted by the House on Wednesday, May 18. I shall be having further discussions on that with the Opposition House Leaders.

ALLOTTED DAY, S. O. 82—POSTAL SERVICE

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Young:

That this House condemn the Government for its total and absolute failure to provide fair and equitable postal service to all Canadians by:

(a) instructing Canada Post to cut back postal services to Canadians living in rural areas;

(b) installing 'supermailboxes' to take the place of door-to-door mail delivery in new suburban areas; and

(c) making hundreds of thousands of Canadians second-class citizens when it comes to the provision of postal service.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): When the House rose at one o'clock, the Hon. Member for Prince Albert (Mr. Hovdebo) had concluded his remarks on debate. Still remaining is the 10-minute period for questions and comments.

The Hon. Member for Saint Léonard—Anjou (Mr. Gagliano), on questions and comments.

Mr. Gagliano: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Hon. Member in respect of rural postal services.

In his speech, the Hon. Member spoke of the fact that the parliamentary committee heard from a number of rural Canadians, and he went on to point out that the committee had brought down a unanimous recommendation that there be no closure of rural post offices or changes in postal service generally without meaningful consultation with the community to be affected.

The Hon. Member then went on to speak of some rural post offices being closed in his area of the country.

I am wondering whether he is aware of any instance where the Canada Post Corporation in fact respected the unanimous recommendation of the parliamentary committee, a committee on which all three political Parties in the House were represented, not to proceed with such closures without full community consultation.

Perhaps the Hon. Member can give us his experience in respect of rural post office closures since the tabling of the report of the parliamentary committee.

Mr. Hovdebo: Mr. Speaker, I can give a couple of examples where the recommendation of the committee was ignored, one of which is the attempted closure of the post office in Aylesbury.

In that instance, Canada Post took advantage of the untimely death of the postmaster to try to close down that post office, and it tried to do so without providing 90 days' notice.

In several other instances, the notice has been minimal. There are a number of cases in Saskatchewan where, while notice has been given, the recommendations and concerns of the communities involved are not being considered in any way.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow), on a question or comment.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Hon. Member for Prince Albert (Mr. Hovdebo).

During the course of his remarks, he indicated some of the effects that the cut-backs in service have had on rural communities. I am wondering whether he can cite other areas in which the reduction in services that has been put into effect by Canada Post Corporation is having any effect.

Mr. Hovdebo: I am aware of a number of very good examples where the changes in procedures are proving to be detrimental to postal services.

One example that comes immediately to mind concerns a voluntary organization in Prince Albert, Saskatchewan, which sent out 50-odd letters which, because they were of an irregular size, were rejected by Canada Post Corporation, with a request for 10 cents additional postage per letter. I hold in my hand one of those letters. The reason given for their being rejected was that they were "not machinable".

There were some 56 pieces of mail altogether, each containing a notice of meeting, and they were not returned to the sender until three days after the meeting had in fact been held. In other words, this organization wasted $20.72 in postage.

That is the type of action Canada Post Corporation is taking to save money. As a result, the public is being put to great inconvenience.

Another problem is that the hours of business in the new postal outlets are often quite different from what people had become accustomed to, thus inconveniencing the public even further.

While these changes are supposedly aimed at improving the efficiency of the Post Office, they are in fact resulting in a reduction in service to the public.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow), on a supplementary question.

Mr. Orlikow: By way of a supplementary question, I would ask the Hon. Member whether he has had expressed to him any complaints from publishers of weekly newspapers and publishers of non-profit magazines, such as churches, respecting rate increases, or anticipated rate increases, and how any increase could affect such publications.

Mr. Hovdebo: I think most Members of Parliament have heard from such organizations. By way of example, the United Church was required to pay additional postage on a paper which it was distributing on the ground that the paper did not contain a sufficient number of articles on religion to warrant the lower rate. Those things are being done supposedly to save money but it does represent a reduction in service.

• (1510)

I feel strongly that the Post Office is there for the service of the people and that service should be available the best possible way regardless of whether or not it balances the budget.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, I have a question arising out of the Member's last answer. Is the Member saying that the Post Office has delayed the mailing of the United Church Observer because it prints criticisms of our foreign policy or criticizes apartheid in South Africa et cetera? Will we have that kind of monitoring and control of publications using the postal charge as an excuse for that kind of monitoring?

Mr. Hovdebo: Mr. Speaker, I am afraid I cannot answer that question specifically. I do know that people at the Observer are questioned for content—I do not know exactly what the content was—but the Observer did not fulfil the basis under which it was being given postal service. That, I suppose, is a responsibility. If the organization using the mail is using it for a particular purpose, the organization has to fulfil the purpose. The over all approach is what I am objecting to. The Government of Canada by putting restrictions on the postal service, is in effect reducing the service available to the people of Canada. I object to it particularly because the Minister responsible keeps getting up in the House trying to project the image that the Post Office is giving better service now than it ever did before. Everybody out there knows that it is not. The service has been reduced considerably, particularly in rural areas.

Mr. Felix Holtmann (Selkirk—Interlake): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure to participte in this debate this afternoon. Oddly enough the motion was introduced by the Hon. Member for Beaches (Mr. Young). I would have thought such a motion today would have been introduced by my Manitoba colleague from Winnipeg Centre who is so knowledgeable on all postal matters, especially as he has been sitting on a committee which we have chaired from time to time over the last three years. I was amazed that the New Democrats had found among themselves a new expert on postal matters.

Ms. Mitchell: We are all experienced, so are the people of Canada.

Mr. Holtmann: Even if we checked Hansard, we would be surprised to find the Member from Beaches having ever commented on the postal system. Yet here he has taken the place of my colleague from Winnipeg.

Mr. Hovdebo: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I will recognize a point of order, but there will be an opportunity for questions and comments after the Hon. Member for Selkirk—Interlake (Mr. Holtmann) finishes his speech. I would appreciate hearing his speech and then we can carry on with questions and comments. The Hon. Member for Selkirk—Interlake. In the Hon. Member for Prince Albert (Mr. Hovdebo) rising on a point of order?

Mr. Hovdebo: Mr. Speaker, my comment has nothing to do with the speech, but the allegations which the Member is making about any Member who has had to deal with the Post Office is not an expert—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): That is debate. It is not a point of order. The Hon. Member for Selkirk—Interlake.

Mr. Holtmann: You notice, Mr. Speaker, I made no reference as to whether or not the Member for Winnipeg Centre was here. I was concerned that someone might stand up on a point of order on that.

Let us take a brief look at what the motion says. It reads:

> That this House condemn the government for—
> (a) instructing Canada Post to cut back postal services—

What utter nonsense. There is no other word for such a ridiculous statement. The Hon. Member for Beaches ought to be ashamed of himself for suggesting that this Government instructed Canada Post to reduce services. How could he make such an allegation? Where has he ever seen that written? Whoever said that on behalf of the Government? Who said that we instructed Canada Post to do such a silly thing? Members of the New Democratic Party sitting in this House ought to be very concerned about statements made by some of their Members. The Member for Beaches went on to say:

> That this House condemn the Government for—
> (b) installing "supermailboxes"—

Did our Government install supermailboxes?

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Holtmann: Do any Members sitting in this House think that the Government of Canada installed supermailboxes?

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Holtmann: Do Members not recall that the New Democrats were part of the decision to make Canada Post a Crown corporation? The New Democrats agreed to have Canada Post Corporation handle the affairs of the Post Office which was run so terribly when it was a Department of Government. The New Democrats were part of that decision, and now they are condemning their own decision to allow a Crown corporation to handle the Post Office. The Member's motion went on to say:

> That this House condemn the government for—
> (c) making hundreds of thousands of Canadians second-class citizens—

The Hon. Member for Beaches suggested that the Government of Canada instructed Canada Post to make this person or that person second-class citizens. The New Democrats were part of the decision to make Canada Post a Crown corporation and to allow it to function with a mandate. Look how the New Democrats have turned things around. These are the very people who made Canada Post Corporation possible. Let us look at some of the New Democrats' ideas.

The New Democrats have instructed their union friends, whoever they may be, and not all union members support the New Democratic Party about a program. Let there be no mistake about that, that not all union members support the New Democrats or they would be in power today. The New Democrats do not have that kind of support. Not all union members support what they are doing, especially when they instruct their union friends to take out a program to oppose the Government. We have all seen the billboards. One reads, "Do you think that Brian Mulroney would provoke a postal strike to make him forget about scandals?" What an unbelievable suggestion.

The New Democrats condemned the Budget of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson). The New Democrats said that 100,000 jobs would be lost. Do any of them remember that? Does the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Keeper) remember saying that 100,000 or 150,000 jobs would be lost? Where is the credibility of the New Democrats when more than 1 million jobs were created because of the Budget of the Finance Minister? Where is the credibility of the New Democratic Party? I think Canadians ought to know that in this House New Democratic Party members have made those ridiculous statements. Once again we have a ridiculous statement, and I want to expand on it a little. I admit that I have chaired government operations. I have had members of all Parties in meetings. We have concerns, and through the Government Operations Committee we have reviewed some of the concerns about the way Canada Post has conducted itself, just as we review our concerns with different Crown corporations. That is the way Government handles things.

I will admit that my colleague from Winnipeg Centre had brought forth some interesting viewpoints, suggestions and recommendations which were carried out.

Mr. Parry: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. The Hon. Member for Selkirk—Interlake (Mr. Holtmann) is correctly complimenting our Party spokesman on some of the excellent suggestions he has made with regard to postal service, but he should be instancing the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Keeper). His riding is not Winnipeg Centre.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): That is not a point of order.

Mr. Holtmann: Mr. Speaker, obviously the New Democrats are very rattled by what they have done today. I heard a rattle just now. The NDP thinks we have made second-class citizens because all Canadians do not receive door-to-door delivery When have they ever all received door-to-door delivery? In what country can they show me that every person receives door-to-door delivery? How much will it cost?

• (1520)

In the Province of Manitoba, the New Democrats were finally defeated because they could not handle the finances of the province. They ran Crown corporations so poorly that it cost Manitobans hundreds of millions of dollars. They sit there smugly saying that we should give everyone door-to-door delivery, regardless of what it will cost.

Such an idea is wonderful. It would be a Utopia, I suppose. If Canada ever becomes affluent enough, we could in fact deliver parcels to everyone door-to-door. We could even deliver everyone a free bottle of milk, but where is the limit?

What would this cost? There are estimates. They may have theirs. I think the Minister said that it would cost about $1.2 billion. Is the Member from Winnipeg North, sitting across from me, suggesting that we should spend an additional $1.2 billion, just pull it out of the air or pull it out of some taxpayers' pockets, to deliver everyone's mail tomorrow? Does he realize instead that we should recover some costs and charge more for stamps? For whatever reduction in the use of the postal service there would be, we would have to go back to the Government to find the money.

What are members of the NDP really suggesting? That is the problem with today's motion. They condemn the Government. They make such ridiculous statements condemning the Government, and then they talk about these silly supermailboxes. I will admit that they are probably not the best mailboxes that ever were made. I will admit that, but members of the NDP have not built a better one, designed a better one or decided what other way we have to go. They have never thought of that, they only said—

Ms. Mitchell: Why do we have to have one?

Mr. Holtmann: The Hon. Member asks why we have to have one. There are people in some places in my riding who would love a supermailbox. These people have asked me for supermailboxes. That is better than driving 50 miles to get their mail. I am talking about an Indian reserve. What do Members opposite have against Indian reserves? Why should they not get postal service? The Jackhead band in fact wrote me to ask if I could get them a supermailbox. That would be a marked improvement over what they have.

We talk about privatization. One of my colleagues from the Liberal Party was with me in Washington looking at the U.S. postal system. I must say that with the heads of the U.S. postal delivery unions and the inside-worker unions, I found a tremendous desire to work together with the U.S. postal services. In fact, there has only been one strike since 1970, I believe. It only lasted for three days. Somehow they have been able to accomplish as much for their workers as we have here in Canada where every two or three years there is violence on the picket lines. Here is a Party that advocates more of that kind of nonsense.

In fact, the head of the U.S. postal union told me that he would love to come to Canada to assist labour and management in working together. I thought that was a great idea. There was a proud individual who said: "We want to work together to make a better U.S. postal system".

I am not saying that the United States of America is perfect, but I never see this kind of nonsense there, this kind of propaganda suggesting that the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) created a postal strike to cover up a scandal in his Government. That is the kind of nonsense Canadians are looking at with the New Democratic Party. That just does not wash, and I do not think that Canadians will look at that. They will look at what has happened in Manitoba.

I will admit that I wish my Party in Manitoba had gotten in stronger, but they literally wiped out the NDP because the NDP do not know how to manage a dollar and never will. They may some day come back to power in Manitoba, but they are out now because the people have listened to the kind of nonsense that I and others have to listen to.

This afternoon we have to deal with the proposition that it was the Government that made thousands of Canadians second-class citizens. Can you imagine, Mr. Speaker, the NDP deciding that you, Sir, and I are now second-class citizens? This is a Government that created a million-plus jobs, even though the NDP thought the opposite would happen. There are more people able to build houses in suburbs than ever before, and they are now being called second-class citizens. They have higher income expectations, and in fact, even more people are paying taxes than ever before.

I heard someone mention that there are still, what was it, 40 Canadians who got away without paying taxes. In fact, the Minister decided that we should try to improve on that, and I think that is a worth-while cause. I do not think that 40 Canadians making that kind of money should not pay taxes, but they are certainly not second-class citizens.

Let me talk about some of the privatization that is going on. The Government of Canada and Canada Post Corporation has in most cases defended the small rural post office. However, there has been some privatization, and that is not bad. Let me tell Hon. Members what I mean by that.

I monitored a post office in my riding very closely because I was concerned about what the impact would be. In fact, every person who used the postal system in that small town not far from where I live was very appreciative of the privatization. They are not sure how the postmaster in that store is earning her living, because she is clearly not receiving the same money the previous postmaster received, but the people are happy with the service. In fact, they are getting service for longer hours, six days a week, 12 hours a day. They quite clearly think that that is not a bad idea. I have never received one single complaint from some 300 users. That is telling me that it can be worked out, a system can be put into place. Perhaps privatization is not such a terrible thing. I recognize that union people are involved, and in that particular union, they have been most co-operative with the Government and with Canada Post.

The Member from Saskatchewan talked about Hilbre as an example, and it was a very good example. I recall that particular case well. When the postmaster died, the post office was closed like that. It seemed to be an extremely sneaky way of doing business, and I objected to it. I hope that Canada Post Corporation has rectified some of that meanness that I think it had when making change-overs and using different systems for postal services.

We have not solved every problem, but should the Canada Post Corporation not be instructed by the committee on which members of all Parties sit? We have, I think, had a tremendous influence on what was going on in the post office, and I hope that will continue. However, we cannot be there for every single little problem that comes up. I found, when looking at the U.S. system, that every time a letter does not get through in five days, there are no Congressmen screaming at the President of the United States.

I am sure that we want the whole system to function very well. For the first time we are seeing that the Canada Post Corporation is using different coloured ink. For the first time the taxpayers of Canada are not having to dig into their pockets to keep the postal system going. I think there has been a marked improvement in efficiency in the Post Office, and the workers ought to be congratulated as well as the management. What is wrong with a little efficiency in Government? We see too little of it. What is wrong with the corporation being a little more effective in its delivery?

I understand that the time it takes for a first-class letter to be delivered has improved remarkably over the last four years. Maybe it is still not perfect. Maybe there are still some problems. My hon. colleague mentioned something about the types of letters that were not able to enter the postal system because the equipment jammed, but those are technical problems that I realize we must address. I am happy that the Minister of Communications (Miss MacDonald) has agreed to continue to assist those publications that we all would like to see continue. I am glad to see there is a fair amount of money going into that, albeit not what it was years ago under the Liberal Government where money meant nothing. They felt that throwing money at a problem was the answer. We were not elected to deal with problems that way and we will not do it that way.

We would very much like to find solutions to problems, not just look for confrontation, which is what we see on the other side. Perhaps that is because an election is coming up. Perhaps it is because some of the NDP's friends in the unions think that is the only way they will get the support and votes of union members. However, I suggest it would be very foolish for the NDP to think that kind of strategy is going to work. I think it is clear that it will not.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions or comments.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member asks if there is any evidence that the Government ordered the installation of supermailboxes or cut-backs in rural mail deliveries or the closing of rural post offices. He says that was done by the Crown corporation. After all, he says, Liberals and New Democrats supported the concept of a Crown corporation for the post office. Of course we did. Of course the post office is making these changes which are so resented. However, they are doing so because the Conservative Government ordered them to cut the deficit very quickly.

Does the Hon. Member really believe that the people in the suburbs of my constituency or that of Winnipeg—Assiniboine who have to pick up their mail at supermailboxes do not really resent it? Does he think they like it? He must be living on cloud nine. I invite him to come with me to the suburbs in my constituency. We will go door-to-door and people will tell him what they think of it. They object to it. They hate it.

Is he telling me that his rural constituents are not resentful of the fact that the mail service they were getting until a year or so ago has been drastically reduced? Is he telling me that they do not object to the closing of rural post offices? That is not the message that we get from all parts of Canada.

Of course, the Hon. Member is happy about the defeat of the NDP Government and the election of a minority Conservative Government in Manitoba, just as I am unhappy about it. However, given the fact that his Government is now sitting at the 28 per cent support level in the Gallup poll, he ought not to be so gleeful about an election. Elections are won and lost, and his Government is going to lose the next election, no question about that.

Mr. Holtmann: Mr. Speaker, I will be happy to respond to the Hon. Member about what the people in rural Manitoba are resentful of. The town of Argyle is a wonderful community just north of where I am. The residents of that town were told by someone, I think it was Rural Dignity, that the post office there was going to be closed. Consequently a petition was taken up. Who would not sign a petition and send it to whoever asked for it to protect their post office? In fact, there never was an intention to close that post office. That is what they resent. They resent having to experience the fear of having their post office closed. That fear was probably started by the Party the Hon. Member represents. This is the kind of nonsense that every Member of Parliament had to put up with for a while because someone was out there spreading fear about post offices being closed.

I called the Canada Post Corporation and said I was quite concerned. I have a petition on my desk signed by 220 users of the Argyle Post Office. They are afraid that it is going to close. I was told that there was no such indication that they did not know what I was talking about. It is there as long as it is working the way it is. There is no problem. It was nothing but fear. That is the Party of the Hon. Member, Sir, using that kind of fear tactic to try and make this Government look mean-minded when it instructs Canada Post to operate efficiently. That is what the Hon. Member's Party has been doing and that is what people object to.

Certainly not everyone loves supermailboxes. Yet we have had green mailboxes in the country for 50 years or more. The Hon. Member for Egmont (Mr. Henderson) has probably had them at least that long. There have been different systems for delivering the mail ever since the beginning of the Post Office. The Hon. Member knows that. Not everyone is pleased with the way they are getting the mail, but are they ready to spend another 30 cents a stamp or another $1.3 billion of taxpayers' money? I suggest that if he did that the roof would fly right off the House of Commons because of a mean-spirited Government charging such a ridiculous amount to mail a letter.

Canada has a fairly low postal rate compared to many countries. I remember when the rate was increased a cent and a half or two cents, I forget which. His Party vehemently objected to the increase. Which way do they want it? Do they want a 90-cent postage per letter, and everyone has their mail delivered? Will people still use the Post Office at the rate they are now in that case or, will we find a one-third reduction in its use?

I ask the Hon. Member to consider some of those things and stop going around the country suggesting that everyone is going to get a supermailbox or all rural mail delivery will be cut off or your rural post office and mine are going to be closed tomorrow. That is nonsense. It is spreading fear.

I have corresponded with many postmasters across Canada, and we have not always solved their problems. I had one close in my riding which contained nine boxes. It just could not support itself. It was costing in excess of $4,000 a year to operate nine boxes in a store. The change was made and the people were genuinely pleased with the change.

I caution the Hon. Member and his Party not to go out and make ridiculous statements and spread fear. They are the ones who said that our policies would cost 100,000 jobs when in fact we ended up creating a million jobs.

Mr. Parry: Mr. Speaker, I would just like to nail the Hon. Member on this blatant distortion whereby he proclaims that the Tory Government is innocent of forcing the shut-down of services and instructing Canada Post to implement these cuts. How does he believe his Government can evade responsibility for the Canada Post Corporation acting in accordance with the financial instructions the Government gives it? How does he believe the Canada Post Corporation, when ordered to reduce the deficit of some $240 million, I think it was, to zero in two years could possibly do that without some cuts in service? Has he ever run a business himself?

Mr. Holtmann: Mr. Speaker, that is the beautiful thing about the Conservative Party, most people in it have run businesses. It is when you go across the way that you really run into problems concerning who is capable of running a business.

Certainly there has been some change in service, there is no doubt about that. You cannot instruct a corporation to try and reduce its deficit without changing the service. The Hon. Member suggested that it was a total reduction of service. That is utter nonsense. A change to service may mean a reduction to some, but to others it may mean an improvement.

• (1540)

For example, if I could pick up my mail 24 hours a day as opposed to three or four hours a day, it would be a very good improvement in service for me, even though it is a change in service. However, I am going to stick with my local postmaster. I told her that as long as there is no change in the postmaster there will be no decision to change the policy on how the mail is delivered. From time to time there are changes in service, and it is to the benefit of all Canadians.

ALLOTED DAY, S.O. 82—POSTAL SERVICE

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Young:

That this House condemn the government for its total and absolute failure to provide fair and equitable postal service to all Canadians by:

(a) instructing Canada Post to cut back postal services to Canadians living in rural areas;

(b) installing "supermailboxes " to take the place of door-to-door mail delivery in new suburban areas; and

(c) making hundreds of thousands of Canadians second-class citizens when it comes to the provision of postal service.

Mr. Alain Tardif (Richmond—Wolfe): Mr. Speaker, I am also delighted to deal with the important issue of the Canada Post Corporation's action plan.

First, if I may, Mr. Speaker, I should like to congratulate and pay tribute to my colleague the Hon. Member for Saint-Léonard—Anjou (Mr. Gagliano) for his tremendous job in following this issue through.

Because he is an accountant by trade, Mr. Speaker, my colleague has adopted a positive and constructive approach.

My hon. friend is aware that Canada Post is faced with an enormous deficit. He was and still is aware of the need, under these circumstances, to make decisions aimed at reducing and eventually eliminating this deficit. He has come up with a constructive approach in every respect by proposing all sorts of solutions to help the corporation secure additional revenues and compensate for its lack of revenues, so that individual Canadians may continue to enjoy services which are reasonable, equitable and especially the same for all. I pay tribute to him for the job he is doing and has done over the past few months.

Having said that, Mr. Speaker, I suggest that this Tory Government has adopted toward this issue an offhand attitude which is altogether unacceptable.

The Progressive Conservative Party which seems anxious to follow constantly in the footsteps of the Americans, would like for all practical purposes to apply or copy systematically in Canada every move made in the United States.

Mr. Speaker, our Conservative friends seem to overlook the fact that Canada is a very large country with a population of hardly 26 or 27 million people. Needless to say, for the operation of a Corporation such as Canada Post, this may create disparities and conditions which make it absolutely impossible for Canada to behave like the United States.

In Canada, there are many remote areas, communities are often quite isolated, and all Canadians have a right to decent and equitable services.

Our hon. friends across the floor would like to turn Canada Post into some kind of private company which would not only cover its costs, but would eventually make a profit that, as we know, would be reinvested to the benefit of the wealthiest Canadians.

Mr. Speaker, I think that trying to set Canada Post on such a course is an insult to Canadian society, particularly to residents of remote areas and developing communities that are going through booming residential development.

I believe Mr. Speaker, that whether one lives in Montreal, Sherbrooke, Richmond, Asbestos, Saint-Denis-de-Brompton, Saint-François, or anywhere else in the province, or in Canada, one has the right to equal services.

A second report was recently tabled which contains some very interesting elements. The committee was happy to say that its report was unanimous. It says that decisions taken by the Canada Post Corporation in the last few months will only account for insignificant savings. It is saving a few thousand dollars thinking that that will be enough to cover a deficit of hundreds of millions of dollars.

So, I think that it was absolutely realistic and reasonnable that the committee came to such a unanimous conclusion.

This report also states "that the Committee regrets the heavy-handed way Canada Post has gone about shutting down certain post offices and wishes that in the future a minimum 90 days' notice be given before closing a post office to allow for consultation with the people concerned." And the Committee's findings and recommendations are as follows: That no rural post office be closed and that no postal service be altered without prior consultation with an approval by the community involved; that the period of consultation be at least 90 days; that Canada Post corporation immediately inform a Member of Parliament when shut-downs or changes are proposed in their ridings; that local officials be also consulted; that, during consultations, not only the changes proposed by the Corporation but also the alternative be closely examined; finally, that a postmaster's departure or retirement not be the sole criterion for shutting down a rural post office or for altering postal services.

Mr. Speaker, this report which, may I remind you, is unanimous, seems, under the circumstances, to depict a completely abnormal and unreasonable situation. In my riding, for instance, there is a large community called Saint-François, where the people learned one morning, out of the blue, that Canada Post Corporation was not going to renew the postmaster's mandate and that, to get the services provided up to now by the post office, they would have to go to a grocery store.

Of course, there was a flood of protest. My feeling was that I should go and consult the people who were particularly affected by this policy change. I sent a personal letter to every member of the community in this village, asking for their comments. I must say— and the results of my survey were positive—that a little more than half of the people saw a number of positive elements in this policy. They said for instance: from now on, the post office will be open longer for us to pick up the mail.

When Canada Post realized I was doing this survey, a month later it decided to do its own consultation. This proves that the whole exercise was rather haphazard. Obviously, Canada Post could have used a survey to involve the community in this decision and thus avoid the spate of criticism, disagreement and confusion. In any case, a number of people protested vehemently against the post office closings and I will tell you what their comments were. I must say I found them extremely significant. Mr. Speaker, I think we should realize that in a village, things do not work exactly the way they do in our big cities. It often happens that the grocer or the owner of the general store gives customers credit.

There may be only one grocer in the whole village. So imagine the following scenario: Mr. or Mrs. so-and-so is expecting a very important letter and, before these changes, would have gone to the post office, and since confidentiality is the rule, there are no problems. But because of Canada Post's decision, Mrs. so-and-so now has to go to the grocer where she has run up a bill of $200 or $300 or $400, and it has now been two, three, four or five months since she was able to meet her financial obligations. Mrs. so-and-so is more or less being told she has no choice and that she has to go to this particular location to pick up her mail.

I heard another comment which I also thought was very apt. People feel, and rightly so, that mail should be a confidential and private matter. You must understand that at a convenience store or grocery, for any Tom, Dick or Harry, it is the clerk who is there when the customer arrives who must deliver or receive material that for many people is extremely confidential.

There is also something else. You must understand that in these villages, for the past few years, in most cases this coincides with the coming to power of this Government. These small post offices have been tied to schedules that are, for all practical purposes, unreasonable and poorly thought out. It is not at all unusual, for example, to go to a country post office at 12.30 or 1 p.m. to find it closed. It is not at all unusual to go at 8.30 or 8.45 a.m. and still find it closed. Indeed, hundreds, even thousands, of people who would be entitled to get their mail find the door closed. What do they do? They leave, they go to the next town, to a larger centre, to buy their stamps, to do in a way what could and should be done in the village. So at the end of the year, the financial results of rural post offices are not as good as urban post offices'. This is used as a pretext to say that it just does not pay. Let us get rid of it, it does not pay! Now, I think it is just the opposite of what we should do: keep the post offices in these regions and in the countryside, provide more services, give more opportunity to those who are used to the services to have them and thus make these operations much more profitable.

Mr. Speaker, my constituency is quite rural and I have many times seen how important the mail is.

To observe this basic importance of the mail service, several times in the morning I have followed the rural mailman who uses his vehicle to distribute mail from house to house on country roads and in the countryside. To my great surprise, I noticed that not only is he waited for, but in very many cases people are at their box waiting for their mail. In cases where people are not there before the mail arrives, in the next few seconds or minutes, they come to claim it. I think that for many people, it is the only means of communication, a very important one in every respect. You must also understand that for most of the people who live in these regions, this is how they get their pay cheques, information and printed matter. And the services which all these Canadians receive are basic and essential services, so much so that the mere suggestion that they might be reduced or cut has a tragic impact.

Mr. Speaker, again last week I got a letter from the municipal corporation of the parish of Saint-Rémi-de-Tingwick, as follows: "Following the March 7 regular sitting, the municipality of Saint-Rémi-de-Tingwick urges the residents to sign a petition against closing the post office and reducing our normal postal services. " Sir, with this letter I enclose the petition signed by the residents of Saint-Rémi to voice their strong opposition to closing the post office and reducing normal postal services.

Mr. Speaker, I know that community and practically everybody in the village signed the petition. In light of the famous report which was unanimously endorsed, it seems to me the human, decent and normally acceptable approach would have been to consult the people, give them an explanation, and ask them what they think their post office should be like. I can tell you that out in the country the post office is very often a meeting place, and more often than not the only federal Government presence. As I see it, it would not be unrealistic or unreasonable to suggest that these post offices can be maintained and, as far as I am concerned, turned into profitable operations.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, may I take a hint from my colleague for Saint-Léonard—Anjou (Mr. Gagliano) who not only criticizes agressively the Government's attitude on that matter but also comes up with explanations or proposals for the Corporation to get extra revenues in order to provide a decent service that would be acceptable to all. At one point the Hon. Member suggested selling space on the trucks. Mr. Speaker, we have seen a multitude of new companies go into business in the last few years. Whether it is Purolator, Selco, or this or that, to my knowledge those companies are not losing any money. So the Corporation is depriving itself of substantial revenues that could be used to provide decent, acceptable service in rural areas. We have the example of telephone service. The cost is the same for both urban and rural areas, and this brings in enough income for everyone in Canada to enjoy reasonable, fair and equitable telephone rates. Through intensified use of those new services, the Corporation could therefore get the income needed to balance its books.

Mr. Speaker, I will conclude by suggesting that there is tremendous discontent, and this week's latest survey explains part of the story at Canada Post.

Mr. John Parry (Kenora—Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, I am glad to have the opportunity today to participate on this opposition day motion put forward by my Party concerning what the Government has done to Canada's postal service. I know from my records that I have participated twice before in opposition day debates on this subject, which is an indication of the importance of postal service to residents of the approximately 120 communities in my riding of Kenora—Rainy River.

I am very glad to say that our spokesman on postal issues, the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Keeper), although not able to speak to this particular motion, has consistently and in a very committed and dedicated fashion addressed the concerns of both rural and urban dwellers in regard to Canada Post service. I must say that this is a question in which vigilance has indeed been the price of continued service for many across the country.

The Hon. Member for Selkirk—Interlake (Mr. Holtmann) in his speech seemed very taken with the first part of the motion, that is, that the Government had instructed Canada Post to cut back on postal services to Canadians living in rural areas. He seemed to feel that the Government was innocent of that particular charge. However, that innocence is something that I believe on examination of the facts is quite impossible to maintain. In fact, the Government has ordered those cuts just as effectively, if not as specifically, as if it had gone to regional managers and individual postmasters and said: "Cut this service. Cut that rural route. Cut out that particular box".

What we are seeing in the case of Canada Post is management by financial control. For some years Canada Post had been running a deficit, and the Government simply said: "Well, you are not going to be able to run a deficit any more. We are cutting you off. You can deliver what postal service you can. You can raise revenues or cut the costs, but you are not going to get the money from the federal exchequer". That, of course, is management by financial control.

Anyone who has studied business in any depth whatsoever knows that when there is a deficit there are three ways that the deficit can be covered. The first is by borrowing, something which the Government ruled out. It ruled it out in a fashion which very adversely affected the potential that Canada Post had a few years ago to decrease its deficit, and perhaps even to make a profit, and also to deliver service to Canadians. But the Government ruled out the possibility of the corporation borrowing for the purchases of new equipment for the purpose of parcel handling which would have enabled it to compete with the couriers in the inter-city markets in particular where courier companies are doing so well because of the Government's obstruction of Canada Post's potential entry into the market. It also ruled out the purchase of other sorting equipment and mail processing equipment.

The other two ways of eliminating a deficit are to raise revenues and to cut costs. I must say that I feel that Canada Post has not been effective enough in terms of raising revenues, in terms of collecting more for some of its under-priced services and in terms of extending some of those services which have good revenue potential. Instead it seems to have concentrated on cutting back on its costs, particularly as regards the rural and suburban service networks, but which also affects urban offices as well in some of our major centres.

Because the Government has framed its instructions in dollar terms rather than in specific orders cannot absolve the Government of responsibility for the effects. Simply translating instructions into dollars cannot take away the fact that it is the Government that is behind these costs. Canada Post is being treated essentially as order takers and told to get on with the job, which is to balance the budget. Thus we have the consequences that my constituents have felt and which constituents in rural ridings across the country have felt and seen. In many cases they have very drastically affected the whole way in which they see their community.

We have had cases where the only building in a community that flew the Canadian flag no longer flies it because the Post Office has been closed, or it has been privatized to a hard-pressed local retail outlet which has been under all sorts of financial and psychological pressure to take on the service, a service which is very poorly paid for by Canada Post. The Crown corporation seems to expect, essentially, that grocery store to provide a service on a grace and favour sort of basis at rates which in fact if they were salary rates would not be allowable under any provincial labour law in the country. However, it expects these people to do it because it knows that it has them over a barrel once the post office is gone.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, I had the privilege to represent my Party in February 1988 at the founding conference of the Vision of Rural Dignity organization.

Mr. Speaker, I travelled to a village with a population of 600 on the South Shore in Quebec of the St. Lawrence river, to attend that conference along with more than 800 people who came from all across rural Quebec, in addition to people from the area itself, and also from other provinces, including Newfoundland, Saskatchewan, New Brunswick and Ontario. They gathered to establish an organization that will speak for rural communities faced with postal service shutdowns.

Mr. Speaker, Visions of Rural Dignity has experienced significant growth, even since that founding conference was held.

This organization now speaks for all communities in this country who are threatened by postal service cancellation and post office shut downs.

But despite these efforts, and I must congratulate those who have set up this rural organization for their dedication and commitment, rural Canada has lost 194 post offices in the last couple of years through closing-down or privatization and, at the end of the month, this figure will have reached the 200 mark.

Mr. Speaker, it is obvious that Canada Post will not stop after closing-down these 200 post offices because their internal budget forecasts a profit, a surplus of some 38 million dollars in the next fiscal year for Dignité rurale du Canada and its work.

Mr. Speaker, I believe that, in such a situation, Canada Post should be studying ways of improving postal services to rural Canadians rather than reducing them further, as we see in this budget.

Mr. Speaker, Dignité rurale du Canada has become the main spokesman against cuts in rural postal services . . .

[English]

There have also been organizations which have been formed to fight against the use of these pernicious supermailboxes.

I am afraid to say that there has been a great deal of blatant propaganda put out by Canada Post about these so-called supermailboxes. The very name should have alerted us to the wool being pulled over our eyes. Of course there have been public opinion surveys very cleverly phrased and presented about the supermailboxes. The message through these surveys has always been: "How do you see a supermailbox compared to door-to-door delivery?" They have not been: "How do you see a supermailbox compared to a green mailbox or compared to no delivery at all?"

Supermailboxes for all their presentation and the attractive PR that was put out when they were introduced have encountered some problems. We recall the almost commando descent by Canada Post technicians on, I believe it was, St. John's, Newfoundland, in order to fix up some of the problems with supermailboxes that were giving out mail to the wrong people. There were mechanical failures. They have become an eyesore. Recently, the Ontario Municipal Board even reduced the taxes of some people who had supermailboxes put in front of their homes.

The installation of these supermailboxes was not properly planned, either in terms of their siting or in terms of the maintenance of the site. In many cases, they presented an obstruction for snowplows. Another complaint was that they were often placed in areas which proved unsafe for those making use of them. With the advent of the supermailbox, we had a gratuitous and unnecessary mixing of pedestrian and vehicle traffic—something that obviously ought to have been foreseen as a hazard. Generally, they were looked upon as an eyesore and an inconvenience, something that people would only put up with if offered no alternative. It is the fact that no alternative has been offered that has led to some of the anomalous situations which we now face. Not only are the supermailboxes seen as inefficient and ineffective, but fundamentally unfair for those forced to use them.

We have a situation in the community of Fort Frances where of the four homes at one intersection, three receive door-to-door delivery, with one being forced to use a supermailbox, that house having been built after the extension of door-to-door delivery had been abolished by Canada Post. That is a very strange situation. It gives one the feeling that one's neighbours are being somehow regarded as superior, and certainly they are inasmuch as they are being offered a superior service.

Paragraph (c) of the motion makes the point that hundreds of thousands of Canadians have been made second-class citizens when it comes to the provision of postal service. That is a telling accusation, and I believe it to be one that is eminently sustainable. It is one that applies not just to the consumers of the postal service, but to those involved in providing the postal service itself.

In my own community, I am aware of a tourist operator who now faces a 65-kilometre round trip to pick up his mail, whereas previously service was provided via a rural route. In order to save costs for Canada Post, individual members of the public are being put to additional cost and inconvenience in order to get their mail.

If this type of measure were to be properly evaluated, I think it would be seen as a false economy. While Canada Post Corporation is saving money, it is doing so on the backs of those it is supposed to be serving.

There are reserve communities of the Nishnawbe Aski Nation in my constituency which can only be reached by air, and for such communities there are numerous inequities in respect of the postal service provided. Mr. Eno Anderson, the chairman of the Shibogama Tribal Council has been following the matter up with me on a regular basis. He has raised with me the fact that the clerks who carry out the postal duty are underpaid for the time that they put in; that often they turn up at the airport only to find out that there is no mail on board.

In those instances, they receive no compensation. Nor are they compensated for taking the mail from the airport to the post office, which might be up to 15 kilometres. As well, they are forced to work on a sporadic and intermittent basis, going from periods of very high activity, very high pressure, to having to take care of the details of the job, when really they should be having free time.

There is also the matter of the irregularity of mail delivery, and the fact that many communities only receive mail once a week. There have been also been problems for contractors. I am aware of one contractor who held a route for many years, providing excellent service year-in and year-out, who was replaced by an individual who put in a lower bid, only to find, within one week, that he could not deliver the service for the amount of the bid.

Canada Post eventually went back to the same contractor. But, at what cost? It went back to the person who knew how to do the job, the person who had done it for years. But, at what cost in terms of disruption, in terms of stress and strain, both for the original contractor and the individual who had submitted the low bid? That individual had obviously been sucked into submitting a bid that he could not live with.

I am aware of one contractor with over 35 years of service in different capacities with Canada Post who is now getting out of the business. He knows that the next time his route is up for bid, others tempted by the possibility of acquiring the contract will bid unrealistically low, only to find themselves handicapped in trying to deliver the appropriate level of service.

We have had mailbox shortages in our communities. Those losing rural route service come into town to acquire a mailbox only to find that there are none available. While there is a waiting list for mailboxes, rural routes are being cut.

There are many cases where, if provincial labour laws were to apply, Canada Post would be taken to court. For example, Mr. Speaker, I quote from Dignité Rurale du Canada:

[Translation]

"The statistics for this province show that under these contracts, the Postmaster gets only one-fifth of his present salary, which works out to $2,000-$2,400 per year, or between 47 cents and 83 cents an hour".

[English]

I also have an article from The Toronto Star, an article which speaks of some of the problems facing family-run convenience stores, the so-called Mom and Pop convenience stores, in trying to oblige Canada Post in setting up postal outlets, in some cases under something of a subtle threat that if they do not, they will be penalized. But, in trying to oblige Canada Post, they have ended up being paid ridiculously small sums of money for the services they are providing.

In the few minutes remaining, I should like to consolidate the case that fair and equitable and equal postal service across Canada is not simply a justice issue or matter of equity, or a matter of how we view ourselves as Canadians, as equals, but a matter of economic efficiency—and this is something that should appeal to my friends opposite.

To review the history very briefly, the first penny post was introduced in England under the leadership of Roland Hill, in 1840. It cost one penny to send a piece of mail to any part of the kingdom. Before that, mail moved by the 19th century equivalent of today's couriers, the stage coach, with those using the service paying a sixpence or a shilling to have a letter taken 100 miles.

With the introduction of the penny post, mail could be sent anywhere in the kingdom for one penny. Well, I need hardly make the contrast between a public service that functions on a utility basis and a privatized service that was run simply for profit.

Perhaps that might have some of my friends opposite in fact cheering for the profit opportunities inherent in a private service; but let us not forget the very nature of our federal country, the very nature of the remoteness of some communities, the vast distances between communities—all of which, of course, render all of the comparisons that the Government Members have been making to the U.S. postal service irrelevant. Let us not forget that we should see Canadians as Canadians, wherever they live. I am very glad to see the Hon. Member for Nunatsiaq (Mr. Suluk), here today. I believe that he could talk very eloquently of the problems of remote communities.

Let us remember that there were two reasons for the establishment of a federal Government in the first place in Canada. One was national defence; the second was to ensure that the mail was run effectively. Let us not forget that the Canadian flag flying over post offices is a very visible reminder, and in some communities the only reminder, of the fact that we have a federal Government in Canada, a Government whose duty it is to bind all Canadians together.

When the Government fails to make provision for Canada Post to perform that essential equity function, it undercuts the whole significance of Canadian unity. The solution is not for the Government to subsidize Canada Post indefinitely, or without a bottom to the funds that are made available; the solution is for the Government to allow Canada Post to compete effectively. The solution is for the Government to give Canada Post realistic and reasonable subsidies to carry out that very important national unity function that Canada Post has served heretofore, a function which is so endangered by the imposition of purely financial goals and financial measures on this most essential of all Crown corporations.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member for Erie (Mr. Fretz), on a question or comment.

• (1620)

Mr. Fretz: Mr. Speaker, I appreciated hearing the speech given by the Hon. Member for Kenora—Rainy River (Mr. Parry), a Member for whom I have a great deal of respect. He certainly debates issues with eloquence and fairness. He did not use a lot of rhetoric as some Members across the way have done today.

Having said that, I want to read part of the opposition motion:

> That this House condemn the government for its total and absolute failure to provide fair and equitable postal service to all Canadians by:
> (b) installing "supermailboxes"—

I want to make a couple of points and then pose a question. Where I live in the Town of Fort Erie, which is a community of about 25,000 people, there is no mail delivery. There have been what we call group boxes for a number of years, as long as I can remember, which I suppose today if they were installed somewhere could be called supermailboxes. People have used those and, to the best of my knowledge, they have used them without complaint. I drive a mile to the post office to get my mail. We have never had delivery in my part of the town. The place where I live, Ridgeway, which is part of Fort Erie, may have a population of about 2,000 people. We have always gone to the post office and picked up our mail.

Let us look at two other areas in the Town of Fort Erie, the old part, where the population might consist of about 12,000 people, and Crescent Park in the Town of Fort Erie which has a population of perhaps 3,000 people. Those people have mail delivery, which leaves us with a population of about 10,000 people in the Town of Fort Erie who do not receive mail delivery. Yet the New Democrats are condemning the Government for its failure to provide fair and equitable postal service to all Canadians.

Is the Hon. Member implying that those 10,000 Canadians, including myself, should have mail delivery service? Is he implying that everyone in the town should have it, that just because 15,000 people have mail delivery the other 10,000 should, otherwise it is unfair and inequitable?

I want to remind the Hon. Member that I pay—I am not sure because my wife usually writes the cheque—about $12 a year for a postal box. We get the biggest one we can.

Mr. Lewis: Just $12?

Mr. Fretz: It may be $15, I do not know. We pay for the privilege of getting in the car or walking, if we feel well enough, to go to the post office to pick up the mail, whereas other people who pay the same rate of postage, 37 cents have their mail delivered to their homes. If the Member wants to look at that and say that is inequitable, that is his privilege. Is that what the Hon. Member is saying?

I have two questions. The first is with regard to the boxes which I have indicated are group mailboxes which help those people in the part of the town in which I live, and the second concerns the inequity of those 10,000 people in my town who have never had mail delivery. I have lived there 61 years and never once have I had mail delivery.

Mr. Parry: Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank my colleague, the Hon. Member for Fort Erie (Mr. Fretz), for his question and say that Fort Erie must be a marvellous place to live if he has spent 61 years there. In my opinion, he really does not show the wear and tear of those 61 years.

Mr. Lewis: Because he walks to the post office instead of sitting at home.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Parry: Perhaps it is his daily walk to the Post Office, Mr. Speaker, as the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary said.

I would have to say that the Hon. Member must recognize that he places me at a disadvantage in discussion of his particular circumstance. He surely cannot believe that in my 18 years of residence in Canada, none of which has ever been within 100 miles of Fort Erie, that I could have attained as intimate a knowledge of the geography of that community as he has in his 61 years.

To address the question directly, in terms of equity of postal service, there should be measures, and my understanding is there are measures in some context but not in others, by which growing areas qualify for door-to-door delivery. Density must play a part. I learned from my experience in planning legislation in Ontario that there are many cases where development occurs in a patchwork fashion. It occurs in strips or in isolated mini-subdivisions where I do not think people are looking for home delivery of mail by virtue of the rural nature, shall we say, of the surroundings in which they have decided to live. If Canada Post had sets of rules that covered these sorts of situations which were applied equally across the country, then that would constitute an equitable mail service. I am not suggesting that all group mailboxes, the old style green mailboxes, should not be replaced with supermailboxes. I think that supermailboxes are a useful tool for the type of situation that presumably once existed in the area in which the Hon. Member lives but which now, as a result of the growth of the communities, I am sure under progressive leadership, no longer pertains.

Ms. Copps: Are you crossing the floor or what?

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Parry: Equity does not consist in the provision of identical service. It consists of addressing the concerns of those people who feel deprived or disadvantaged by a particular type of service. Perhaps the Hon. Member is suggesting, without wanting to state it openly, that people who receive door-to-door delivery should pay an annual fee similar to the fee that the Hon. Member and I pay. I do not have a big mailbox like the Hon. Member for Erie. All my mail comes here. I would rather see the fees waived in the case of the mailboxes in the small post offices, but we know that might lead to a proliferation of requests for the boxes. The door-to-door fee might be an easy way of resolving Canada Post's deficit, but I do not think it would be universally popular. While I feel that the provision of mailboxes is a Canada Post responsibility, we have to recognize that there will always be market factors ruling in that sort of case.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Are there any further questions or comments? Debate. The Minister of State (Mr. Lewis).

Mr. Parry: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Without fuelling any further the suspicions of the Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps), I would like to apologize to the Hon. Minister of State (Mr. Lewis) for previously referring to him as the Parliamentary Secretary. The Hon. Minister of State.

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of State and Minister of State (Treasury Board)): Not to worry, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased to have this opportunity to enter today's debate on this motion. The Hon. Minister responsible for Canada Post is in his riding today and I am happy to participate and put forward the Government's point of view with respect to this motion. I think I should point out a few things before getting into some personal observations which I am able to make on behalf of the Minister and on behalf of myself with respect to the improved service of Canada Post.

First, Canada Post is a very large corporate employer in Canada. It employs approximately 47,000 people. It is a corporation which was set up under the previous Government to try to bring into place some new management methods, and to improve postal service for Canadians. In doing so it has made some very fundamental corporate changes. The focus of the entire corporate plan is on service. The whole purpose of its existence is to provide Canadians with efficient, reliable and affordable postal service.

• (1630)

The five-year corporate plan which was presented today is also a business plan. We do not see any conflict between providing a service and the objectives of a well run business. I think it is obvious that if a business does not provide good service to its customers, it will not stay in business, whether it is providing a product like automobiles or postal service.

The key elements of Canada Post's service thrust are reliability, accessibility, delivery and value for money. First I want to deal with the question of reliability.

Canada Post has taken several steps to ensure that operations are properly monitored by control centres and that they are managed according to corporate systems seven days a week and for 24 hours each day. We have instituted a policy of auditing, through independent auditors, the performance of the delivery standards. Clarkson Gordon has been retained by Canada Post to do this job, and it recently released its findings.

I point out to the House that Canada Post is the only postal service in the world that has its performance standards publicly measured by an independent auditing firm. The second quarterly report was released last month. It has shown a continued and steady improvement in service performance and Canada Post is working to improve that performance even more by identifying any problems it has in the system and by correcting them.

Another aspect of this improvement in service is to improve access. This means making it easier for Canadians to buy the products and services and to pick up parcels and mail requiring a signature. I point out that the corporation is doing this in a big way. Canada Post already has more retail outlets than all the banks and financial institutions in Canada combined. Over the next several years, the number of locations where Canadians can go to purchase postal products and services will increase even further from 13,800 to 18,000.

On a personal note, I want to point out that two or three years ago when the present Minister was made responsible for Canada Post, I said to him one day at 10 minutes after six: "Harvie, here is a package of cigarettes and a stamp. Where do you buy the cigarettes? You can buy those anywhere. Where do you buy the stamp?"

Obviously, to buy a stamp, one has to find a post office that will sell a stamp. That is the point. Why should Canadians be restricted when buying stamps when they can buy lottery tickets and cigarettes anywhere 24 hours a day? That is the point of the improved access we are driving at.

The Opposition would have all postage stamps in Canada sold from nine 'til five, five days a week, in post offices. Our attitude is, let us make it easy to mail things. Let us not restrict it to certain places the way the Opposition wants us to do. Let us make it easy for Canadians to buy postage stamps. Why not? Why should it be such a sacred thing to sell a postage stamp? That is the whole idea behind the privatization of the post office facilities.

I cannot for the life of me figure out why the NDP and the Liberals do not want Canadians to have that kind of accessibility. Why not? Why not let Canadians buy postage stamps anywhere, just like cigarettes and candy? What is the big secret about it? I want to know that. I want to hear from opposition Members about that.

That is what we are doing about accessibility, and we are doing it through business, through that partnership which can exist with the private sector. We are expanding facilities. I want to explain this to my friends because they have blinders on. I want to tell them what is happening in my riding in the Township of Oro, a rural township, and my friend, the Hon. Member for Humboldt—Lake Centre (Mr. Althouse), will know about this.

Previously, there were three sub-post offices in the Township of Oro. What were their hours? Their hours were from 8.15 to 12.30, an hour off for lunch, and closed at 5.15. That was for only five days a week. On Saturday, it was 8 'til 12, no service Saturday afternoon, Saturday evening or Sunday. That was the situation in Shanty Bay, Oro Station and Hawkestone.

Now we are privatizing. My constituents in Oro Township will be able to get stamps in three places, the same villages, Shanty Bay, Oro Station and Hawkestone. Guess what? These are the new hours of operation: 7 a.m. until 10 p.m. in the first location at Shanty Bay. It is a little restricted in Oro Station. It is only open from eight in the morning until nine at night, and the same in Hawkestone. Guess what? All three of them are open Sundays. Isn't that terrible? Now my constituents in Oro Township can buy stamps on Sundays. My friends in the Opposition, the NDP and the Liberals, do not like buying stamps on Sundays.

That is the kind of increased access to service we are giving. Not only that, but at Fuda's Marketplace on Highway 11, they are putting in a new operation. My constituents will get three locations with expanded hours and a new fourth location. That is what Canada Post is doing. However, the Opposition is not bragging about that, it says that we are restricting service.

We are expanding the delivery network. We notice that our friends are pressing for expanded door-to-door delivery. Let me talk about door-to-door delivery.

What about the Town of Penetanguishene? Under the previous administration, my friends, the Liberals, the people in Penetanguishene had to go to the post office. Those 5,000 people got their mail from the post office in Penetanguishene. No one has ever complained to me about that. I have been in Government for three and a half years now and no one has ever asked for door-to-door delivery in Penetanguishene. They like going to the post office. No, as far as my friends are concerned, that is a restriction. We cannot have supermailboxes.

I, like my friend from Erie, also have a post office box. We are three and a half blocks away from the post office, the same as it would be from a supermailbox. It is more efficient. I pick up my mail once a week, get all the magazines and all the bills, more bills than I need, and it is all there. Why do I need a postman to make five trips for me? Members of the Opposition make it sound as though people pay bills the day they get them. Everyone pays his bills once or twice a month. What is this need for door-to-door delivery all about?

In rural townships, we get delivery at the end of the concession road. What is the difference? Why is Canada Post being condemned for that kind of delivery service? I think it is giving good service. Members of the Opposition are back in the horse and buggy days. We are living in a day when most people go out every day. They pass convenience stores and the supermailbox locations. They do not have the trouble my friends have. Canada Post has modern techniques. It is trying to do the best job it can.

My friends do not mention that in the United States, the door-to-door delivery service has not been expanded since 1979. The Americans are using community or cluster boxes to expand the service in suburban areas. We call them supermailboxes because we think it is a long-term solution, a modern solution, not a horse and buggy solution which the NDP support. It is a modern solution to delivering mail to people.

Supermailboxes appreciate the fact that people are not home all the time to take delivery of parcels or registered mail. There is a method in the supermailbox, through the parcel compartment, to allow for that. We can assist people. They do not have to go to the post office anymore to do things like pick up registered mail and parcels.

• (1640)

The NDP make going to the post office box sound like such a big problem. My friend should come to Edwards Point outside of Midland with me some morning, even in the winter. Come about 10 o'clock in the morning and you will see people walking up the street to the mailbox to get their mail. It is a community centre. They get out of the house and meet their neighbours and talk. What have the NDP got against people meeting people? What have they got against people getting a little exercise? What is wrong with the NDP? Why are they back in the horse and buggy age? Next they will condemn the Government for not having a Pony Express. I cannot believe it.

We are struggling to bring the NDP into the 1990s and new methods of doing things. It is just unfortunate that they cannot get up to speed.

We are looking at value for money. When we brought in the corporate plan last year, we announced that we were going to continue to adjust our basic letter rates annually to compensate for the impact of inflation and other expenditure increases. The planned rate increases in the basic letter rate during the next five years will continue to be below the rate of inflation as projected by economic indicators. Canada Post announced today that it is gazetting a proposal for a rate increase to take place January 1, 1989. The increase in the basic postal rate will be one cent. That is 2.5 per cent for a standard letter. There will be other products affected by the rate increase and that is available in the information package that was distributed.

Even with this modest rate increase, Canadians will be paying the second lowest postage rate in the world when you compare average wages. In fact, using the same measurement, they pay roughly the same today as they did 32 years ago.

The NDP say they want door-to-door delivery, and all we have to do is raise the price of a stamp to 60 cents. I cannot understand why the NDP wants to raise the price of stamps to 60 cents. Why not adopt some modern methods and put in the supermailboxes, do what we can to improve things, but not give door-to-door delivery to everyone as the NDP suggests and raise the price of stamps to 60 cents? That ignores market realities.

We are monitoring the price tolerances of our products because we realize that Canada Post is in a highly competitive market. About 80 per cent of its volume is generated by business. If we exceed that price tolerance then business will look elsewhere to have its products delivered. Therefore, when we look at rate increases, we are really reflecting the reality of the market-place. To do that we have to increase our volume so that we can be competitive. We are restructuring our products and services to better reflect the requirements of the market-place and improving our courier service in the face of very keen competition. We are doing this so that we can get Canada Post back to the place it once enjoyed in this market.

This fiscal year is very significant for Canada Post because this is the year that the ink goes from red to black. After losing under the Liberals several million dollars a year, the Post Office is now going to break even under the Conservatives. For the first time in 25 years it is forecasting a modest profit from operations.

Canada Post is trying to build a postal service for the future, not for the horse and buggy age of the NDP. To do that it has to finance new equipment and introduce needed innovations to provide a truly modern, reliable and efficient service. That profitability means it will be able to recommend that the shareholder, the Canadian people, reinvest in the corporation to continue to improve that service. We think with that profitability and some support Canada Post employees will begin to feel a greater sense of pride in themselves and the work they do. They will know their efforts have helped and will continue to help create a vital and progressive corporation.

Several years ago the corporation set up consumer panels to obtain feedback from people and to get their impressions of the service and its plans. They wanted input for the future. We see these activities becoming more and more important as we go into the 1990s, as Canada Post gets into an even more competitive environment. That is the intention of the corporation, to develop this theme and establish a national postal users council to provide it with the input needed to understand their customers and provide the best service and best product available.

In doing that there will be some fundamental changes. We appreciate that the NDP, the Party of the status quo, does not like change. They cannot understand this new world they find themselves in. We understand that. We are trying to bring them along slowly. Change is never easy but we believe that with implementation of this change, Canada Post will continue to meet the challenges of postal service and the people who work there, those who make these changes a reality, will feel more pride in the corporation they are working for.

I guess to summarize what I have tried to say today, Canada Post has made a very real effort to improve postal services for Canadians. I say this without hesitation: There is no cut-back in postal service to Canadians living in rural areas. I represent a rural area. As I demonstrated with Oro Township, we are getting improved postal service. I say that installing supermailboxes to take the place of door-to-door delivery in new suburban areas is the way of the future, the way of efficiency, and not the way of the past which the NDP espouses.

I say without hesitation that in no way is Canada Post making second-class citizens of hundreds of thousands of Canadians when it comes to providing postal service. We have a corporation which has turned itself around and is doing a good job for Canadians. I regret very much that the NDP would bring forward such a destructive motion.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions or comments.

Mr. Althouse: Mr. Speaker, I found it quite interesting that the Hon. Minister would spend so much time talking about the horse and buggy days and his modern solutions. As one who is much older than he, I can speak with some credibility about the horse and buggy days because during the last war when petroleum products were in short supply, our family shifted back to the horse and buggy. We went our six miles into town and we found at the end of our travels a group of boxes inside a post office. It was always dry and it was usually warm. It was open most of the time. At that time the postmaster operated six days a week, seven or eight hours a day. Those were the old days. Those were the horse and buggy days. Now, my much younger brothers and sisters, who still live in rural areas, get into their cars and drive 10 miles to a post office.

They can always get into the boxes in the post office building 24 hours a day, seven days a week. It is warm and dry and if a post office box is accidentally left open, the contents do not get wet from the rain or blow away in the wind.

Some of the rural towns in the rural area that I represent, including Zelma, Elstow and Bradwell, no longer have that kind of horse and buggy era service. They have had to modernize and now have superboxes, which is supposed to be the brave, new world into which the Conservative Government is leading us. These supermailboxes do not sit inside a nice, dry shelter. They are out in the elements. The doors freeze shut or do not stay shut. These supermailboxes have their own perverse personalities. One may have to turn the key while kicking another mailbox in order to open the door. At the same time, perhaps four others will open and the neighbours will lose their mail. This is all in the spirit of modernization which no one minds very much, according to the Hon. Member. However, the truth is that they do mind very much. My rural constituents believe they should continue to have the kind of postal service that existed in the horse and buggy days, as the Hon. Member puts it.

I want to point out to him that the supermailbox is not returning us to the kind of good service we had in those days. It is putting the service out on the street, so to speak, in the open and subject to the elements so that we have to stand in the rain or in the wind to open the box. If an elderly person or handicapped person loses their grip on a parcel or letter they are pulling from the box, they will not be able to recover it. That is not exactly modern service. I want to make certain that my hon. friend knows about this.

A number of post offices in my community are being subjected to a closure notice, in spite of studies by Clarkson Gordon which are supposed to tell us the costs involved. When Canada Post visits those communities, it seems to refuse to inform us about the revenue and cost data for the post office.

The chief criterion for shutting down a post office seems to be whether the postmaster has submitted his or her intention to retire. That triggers a move to close the post office. Canada Post tells me privately that it takes this step because it is more difficult to close the post office if a new postmaster is hired temporarily. Very often, it makes its move in advance, before the post office begins to show a deficit. It tries to convince the community to accept the supermailbox solution or convince one of the local businesses to take over the job.

My hon. friend spoke of this as a great solution. However, in three or four communities that are facing closure of their post office, small business people say they are not so sure they want this post office franchise.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I hope the Hon. Member will finish. A number of other Members wish to ask questions.

Mr. Althouse: Mr. Speaker, faced with the sale of two or three tankfuls of gas versus the sale of a 37 cent stamp, business people are not so sure that it is a good trade-off, and most are resisting it.

The only communities in my riding which have taken it on as a small business project are some of the small co-op stores. The board of directors have determined that it is better to have the post office inside rather than on the street and are doing it as a community service. They do not believe they can make a buck or do it more efficiently, they simply want to supply a community service. The Hon. Member should be made aware of the real facts in these small rural areas. We are not going back to the horse and buggy days. He is taking us far beyond that, to a time when there is not even housing for postal services.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I like the Hon. Member's idea of going to the post office 24 hours a day for mail. How would he buy a stamp?

Mr. Rodriguez: From a machine.

Mr. Lewis: So you would have a machine.

Mr. Althouse: Buy them like you buy everything in the country. A month's supply at a time.

Mr. Lewis: I respectfully listened to the diatribe from my friend, perhaps he can give me an opportunity to speak.

I am from the snow belt area of Ontario. I know what it is like when it is cold. I cannot believe how long it takes my hon. friend to open a mailbox. It is not the longest procedure in the world. One simply puts in the key, opens the door, and removes the mail. He makes it sound like we have to shovel our way back to our cars. That is ridiculous.

It may take that long for my friend to open a mailbox, but most Canadians can easily open a mailbox with a key and take out the mail. If you want to make it a day-long process, go ahead.

I think the Hon. Member made the case for the supermailbox during his remarks. It is much easier.

Mr. Althouse: Keep it inside a post office.

Mr. Lewis: We don't need a post office. We have the co-op store. You know as well as I why the co-op store took them. It is a draw for customers. That is why they have them in Simcoe North and that is why they have them in my hon. friend's riding.

Mr. Fretz: Mr. Speaker, I am grateful to the Minister for sharing with the House reminders of some of the improved service that Canada Post has brought to Canadians.

However, I believe he failed to mention what Canada Post has done in the area of fiscal responsibility. Did he tell us what was the deficit in the post office when we came to power in 1984 and what that deficit is now? Could he relate that to fiscal responsibility by the Government and the post office?

I believe our socialist friends have indeed forgotten to even look at that question today. It does not matter to them what it costs to operate, just spend the bucks.

What was the deficit when we took over in 1984 compared to today, and could he relate that to the post office deficit?

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I can give the Hon. Member some quick figures. When we took office the deficit left to us by the previous Liberal administration was some $38 billion. My hon. friend will know that we brought that down to $28 billion.

When the Liberals were in office, for the first part of 1984 the post office had a deficit of $300 million. It was $300 million in the hole. This year, for the first time, it is forecasting a modest profit of $26 million. Not only have we improved the service, but we are able to say to Canadians that the post office is no longer a losing proposition, that it is making some money. Not only that, it will now be able to buy new and innovative production and processing equipment so that we will have a state of the art post office in terms of delivery and service to the public.

Mr. Gagliano: Mr. Speaker, in his speech, the Hon. Minister said that for the first time since its incorporation the Post Office balanced its books, it is breaking even now and next year it might even make money. I would like to remind him that for the first time since the Canada Post Corporation was created, we had two strikes in six months. I would like to remind him that for the first time, the Canada Post Corporation, with the agreement of his Government, brought in the supermailboxes or the community green boxes as a permanent solution. Therefore, any new houses built in Canada since 1985 will not receive door-to-door mail delivery. That new corporate plan was confirmed.

The Canada Post Corporation wants to close 5,000 rural post offices. Yes, it balanced its books but it did it at the expense of Canadians by reducing their service. Sure, it is easy to turn the key of these post boxes, but what about in whether of 30 below zero when everything is ice? Will senior citizens be able to open their box to get their mail? Does the Minister have a box in front of his house? It is ridiculous.

Anyone can balance books. Anyone can reduce a deficit by cutting services. How about reducing the deficit by increasing revenues and not by cutting service? How about using the postal facility to increase revenues such as using advertising panels and improving the direct mail service, which would bring in millions of dollars, instead of reducing the service and creating two classes of citizens.

How would the Minister feel with one of these in front of his home? What if he lived on a street where citizens on one side of the street were using the mailbox and the citizens on the other side of the street were receiving their mail at their door? Is that not discrimination? Is that not two classes of citizens who are paying the same 37 cents for a stamp, who are paying municipal tax, school board tax and federal income tax? Why are they not getting the same service?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Minister of State (Mr. Lewis) for a short rebuttal, please.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I would remind my hon. friend that door-to-door delivery extension was suspended in 1974 under the Liberal Party. I ask my hon. friend why the Town of Penetanguishene does not have door-to-door delivery service? Five thousand Canadian citizens live there who have never complained to their Member of Parliament. They go to the post office to get their mail. It is no great hardship.

Slipped into my hon. friend's remarks was a very interesting comment. He asked why the Post Office does not give the service by increasing revenues. To give the kind of service my hon. friend wants would mean a 60 cent stamp. Is it the Liberal Party's policy to have a 60 cent stamp?

Mr. Rodriguez: You don't have to increase the price of stamps. There are other ways of increasing revenues.

Mr. Lewis: Yes, it would mean a 60 cent stamp. The Liberal Party's policy is a 60 cent stamp for every Canadian. I do not think that is fair.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The time for questions and comments has now terminated. Debate.

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, I think it should be noted that a number of members on the government side of the House have sat silent on this issue. I am not surprised. We finally smoked out the ex-Parliamentary Secretary, now Minister without portfolio, who usually, if one looks at the history of debate in this House, tends to get put up as the "smoking gun" when no one else in the caucus has the guts to come forward and talk about an issue which they know is going to be deadly to them come the next election. They know the message coming forward from RAM is getting across not only to the people in this House of Commons but to the whole of Canada. So I am not surprised that most of the members on the government side have chosen to refrain from this debate.

I am also most pleased that the New Democratic Party has had a change of heart and is now speaking more strongly on the issue of postal service than it was even last summer.

Mr. Rodriguez: Where have you been?

Mr. Cassidy: Where have you been, Sheila?

Ms. Copps: I remember last summer during the postal strike when I was on the picket line in front of my post office, I did not hear from the NDP. I never heard from the Leader of the NDP (Mr. Broadbent) because it was a touchy issue in terms of the public and since he was starting to climb in the public opinion polls, he dared not speak out for the workers for fear of being labelled a union radical. We did not hear from the Leader of the NDP.

It is touchy, but I congratulate the NDP for finally coming on-side and committing itself with the Liberal Party, which was the first Party in this House to commit to door-to-door daily mail delivery service. We are glad the NDP are joining us in our fight. We believe this is a service that is worth fighting for.

I would like to spend some time on some fallacies perpetrated by the Minister who is really working under a misnomer, the Minister for Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Andre). He should drop the "consumer" moniker. He is really the Minister for Corporate Affairs. He does not do anything to protect the rights of consumers. He has stood in this House time and time again and said: "We will not move without full consultation". Full consultation has been the promise of the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. Yet my own colleague, the Hon. Member for Glengarry-Prescott—Russell (Mr. Boudria), revealed in secret Post Office documents what was meant by "full consultation". In fact, the Post Office actually put out a brochure or internal memo telling its people how to organize a meeting so that as few as possible could come so it could divide and conquer its opposition.

Strawberry Hills, in the far east end of Hamilton, will, as of this July, be in the riding of Hamilton East. It is currently in the Lincoln riding. A man woke up one morning in Strawberry Hills and lo and behold there were people with a backhoe at his front door waiting to install a great green monstrosity. He wanted to know what it was and discovered he had been targeted for a supermailbox. This is from a Government that claims it wants full consultation, that nothing will be closed down, nothing will be done, without full consultation with the people. In fact, the consultation has been an absolute farce.

The Government has continued to cling to the notion that these wonderful supermailboxes, extolled by the Hon. Member for Simcoe North, do nothing to property values. That particular fallacy was blown apart by the Ontario Municipal Board when it rightly determined that the loss in property value should reflect a 5 per cent drop in property taxes for people who have a supermailbox on their property.

I ask you, Mr. Speaker, all other things being equal, if you were a new homeowner or if you are looking for a new home—if you can afford it with the price of houses these days—and you look at two identical homes, one without a supermailbox on its front lawn and the other with one, which would you choose? It does not take a Rhodes scholar to realize that every single Canadian, given that choice, will choose the home without the supermailbox. It has a direct effect on the attractiveness of property. It has a direct effect on the amount of traffic back and forth. If you have children, you do not want them run over by cars that are constantly pulling up. Furthermore, the supermailbox itself is an infringement on the right of Canadians to equal service in the sense that a person living on one side of the street can have door-to-door daily mail delivery and a person on the opposite side of the same street can be faced with having to go to the supermailbox.

We heard the Hon. Member for Simcoe North say, no problem, everyone can run over and stick the key in the lock. I asked him at the time, and he did not answer because he could not answer, what happens if one is in a wheelchair? The Speaker will know that nowadays, thank goodness, we are moving out of the dark ages in relation to integrating the handicapped into our population. In most cases new housing developments tend to be built in that way. I know that in the Province of Ontario, for example, the new building code requires in many instances that homes be made with wider door frames in order to give greater accessibility to the handicapped. It is natural to incorporate plans into the master plan of a house that will permit people in a wheelchair to live in new housing developments. If they do have a chance and if they can afford it, they want to move into a new housing development and perhaps plan a house which will have lowered counters so that they can do cooking in the kitchen. Lo and behold they might find the home of their dreams, but they are faced with supermailboxes.

We just heard that in the corporate plan that was tabled by Canada Post today, for the first time it is saying that for the next five years all new housing developments will have no door-to-door mail delivery, that there will be supermailboxes. If a person is in a wheelchair, it is no mean feat in the middle of a snow storm—or for that matter at any time of the year—on a crowded, busy street to jump out of the car, get into the wheelchair and wheel over to the supermailbox, wheel back to the car and get back in. It is a detriment. It is also a detriment to senior citizens who perhaps depend on neighbours to be taken out to grocery shop and to get around. Perhaps some senior citizens have had to give up their cars. Perhaps they are not able to drive or cannot afford to drive and they depend on buses. All of these individuals are definitely discriminated against when it comes to the supermailboxes.

That is why the Coalition of Provincial Organizations of the Handicapped has sent a personal letter to the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) asking him to cancel the supermailboxes and restore daily door-to-door delivery so that the independence of those people who are handicapped can be enhanced. In 1988 we are supposed to be moving forward and not backward in relation to the handicapped. That particular demand has gone by the wayside. Today, we saw that Canada Post is fully intending to go ahead with its plan to dismember door-to-door daily mail delivery with its five-year plan.

If you look at the list of postal increases, Mr. Speaker, which I just received this afternoon, not only will you see an increase in the price of stamps but you will also see an increase in the cost of purchasing a money order. I will just put this on the record. There will be a 15 per cent increase in the cost of purchasing a Canadian money order. Money orders up to $200

now cost 85 cents. According to the newly tabled rates the cost will be going up to $1. However, Mr. Speaker, if you want to buy a U.S. money order—and I think this is probably a reflection of the priorities of the Government—you can buy one for an increase that is less than 10 per cent. Why should Canadians pay 15 per cent more for a Canadian money order and pay only about 8 per cent or 9 per cent more when it comes to a U.S. money order? Is it because the Canadian Government with the trade deal and all its other policies—

An Hon. Member: Free trade will look after that.

Ms. Copps: Free trade is the cause of that. The Hon. Member's Government is intent on having us spend all our money on U.S. money orders, even to the point where Canada Post is actually bringing in increases which are more preferable to U.S. money orders than they are to Canadian money orders.

Mr. Cassidy: They are going to phase out Canadian money orders. That is what they will do. We will not have any Canadian money left.

Ms. Copps: That is right. We will not need Canadian currency. We will be notched to the American rate. The continental integrated economy is only one step away from complete continental absorption by the United States.

It is not only a question of the supermailboxes specifically. Let us look at the tactics of the Government and the tactics of Canada Post in attempting to intimidate employees. I refer specifically to the most recent gesture which states that women are not allowed to bring their purses to work, and they cannot take care of personal hygiene on the job. I would like to read a letter from the Alberta Liberal Women's Commission which passed a resolution as follows:

> Phyllis Ayers, President of JP GROWL, a Women's Liberal Club in Edmonton has been instructed by the membership to protest the obvious discrimination against women employees. Canada Post Corporation has initiated a rule to search and seize women's purses; however, men are still allowed to carry wallets. What has happened to human rights? What has happened to women's rights?
> Since 55 per cent of CUPW are women, this is another example of crushing women employees. The Government of Canada is on a power trip.

That was passed by the Alberta Women's Liberal Commission and passed along to a number of Members of Parliament, and Members of the legislature.

I have a confidential memo in my hand from CUPW which basically points out how the employer, specifically Canada Post, has been intimidating arbitrators. We in the Liberal Party believe—and I am sorry that the Government may not agree—

Mr. Cassidy: You believe in six and five, that is what you believe in.

Ms. Copps: It is incredible how members of the NDP are a little touchy because I happen to point out the fact that when the postal workers—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please. Hon. Members know that there will be a time for questions and comments, if they will only let the Hon. Member finish her speech. The Hon. Member for Hamilton East.

Ms. Copps: Mr. Speaker, it really does bother me that members of the NDP hate it when I call a spade a spade. They do not mind dishing it out, but they surely cannot take it.

Mr. Rodriguez: Look at who is talking.

Ms. Copps: I wanted to read this memo into the record. I realize that CUPW memos do not interest members of the NDP. They are only interested in management's perspective.

In any case the CUPW memo points out the fact that Canada Post Corporation was actually moving to intimidate arbitrators. In fact, in a decision the arbitrator stated that it was clear from the conduct of the Post Office lawyer that he was frustrated not only with him but, it also appeared, with the panel of arbitrators in general. The Canada Post lawyer called names and disparaged several arbitrators and also quoted calculated percentages in respect of findings for, or against the corporation. According to the arbitrator, who is supposed to be independent in these matters, the Post Office lawyer went so far as to suggest that arbitrators rejecting the employer's position might be doing so for reasons of personal financial gain. The arbitrator sums up his response to Post office arguments by saying: "I found this whole presentation unacceptable and totally uncalled for".

What the Post Office lawyer was claiming was that arbitrators were somehow being bought off. The Post Office lawyer actually made a presentation in which he was accusing arbitrators of acting in a fashion which could at best be called illegal. I think it is outrageous that Canada Post, aided and abetted by the Government, continues on a program of harassment and denigration and, essentially, chipping away at postal services, not only by way of supermailboxes but also by way of decreasing services available to specific communities.

In talking about new communities, Westdale in Hamilton is not a very new community. It is a rather old residential area of Hamilton, close to the university. I received a letter recently from an irate professor at the university who was extremely upset over the fact that with no consultation whatsoever, with no survey of public opinion, the Westdale Post Office has now had package delivery chopped. In fact, the professor pointed out that he arrived at the post office to pick up a parcel only to be told: "We no longer do this. If you want to pick up a package you have to go to Campbell's Pharmacy". The professor made an inquiry of the clerk at Campbell's and was told that all pick-ups had been transferred out of the Westdale facility, if one lives in the L8S district, and that there were plans to shut down the Westdale branch of the post office.

The reason I received this letter was that a constituent wanted to know what happened to the Government's promise to consult. He stated in his letter: "I would like to learn whether this is in fact true and whether there is any intention on the part of Canada Post to consult with affected members of the community on this matter . . . I personally think this is wrong and is an affront to those of us who have financially supported the postal system".

• (1720)

On calling Canada Post, we were told that, at the moment, there is no plan to close the Westdale branch. However, we did learn that the services in respect of the parcel pick-up and registered mail have been moved to a pharmacy. If in fact there is a commitment on the part of the Post Office to keep the Westdale branch open, why is it moving some of the more important services offered by that branch to a private commercial pharmacy?

At the main post office in my community, which is located at King and John Streets, three employees have been let go, and the hours of operation have been cut back. As a result of three wickets being closed, there are long line-ups. Those wishing to pick up their mail on their way to work cannot do so because of the cut-back in business hours, and they are in an uproar about that. In addition, Saturday service has been cut. It is fine for the Government to say that it is reducing the deficits, but it is doing so at the expense of the public.

As the Hon. Member for Saint Léonard—Anjou (Mr. Gagliano), who has been on top of this issue from the beginning, has said, the goal of decreasing the deficit is being used by the Post Office to cut back on essential services, to cut back on essential services provided through Canada Post branches, rural post offices, and so forth. And that means being used to cut back on those essential services is to use the supermailboxes.

We have heard voices from across the country decrying what is happening with Canada Post. We have heard from the Alberta Women's Liberal Committee, from a professor at McMaster University, and from residents of the Strawberry Hill community in my own constituency.

One would think that Canada Post would respond to the complaints that have been levelled. Instead, it tries to divert attention from the discussion. Even as this debate was launched in the House today, in a cynical attempt to avoid facing Parliament on the issue, Canada Post Corporation called a press conference, in an effort to divert attention from the debate that is going on in the House.

In the House itself, we are constantly called upon to witness Government Members trying to hide behind the fact that Canada Post is an arm's length corporation, a corporation in which the Government has no say and no authority in terms of the cut-back in services.

I think the organization known as RAM—which in fact means "Ram Mulroney's Mailboxes", for those of you who are unaware of what the acronym stands for—has it right when it says that it is not enough to point the figure at Canada Post but at the Government, given the fact that Canada Post is only carrying out the wishes of a Government that takes the position that the deficit has to be eliminated within two years. Further, it is the position of this Government that the Post Office, in eliminating its deficit within two years, cannot investigate revenue generating areas which would put it into competition with the private sector, including such endeavours as direct mail, the provision of telex services, and so forth.

The postal corporation has had its hands tied. On the one hand, it has been given a mandate by the Government to—. . . make up the deficit, but at the same time, it does have the necessary tools to do so, because it is not allowed for example to do direct mailing or to undertake other income generating projects.

I shoud like to remind you, Mr. Speaker, that it is not the management of Canada Post but the union which launched a project in Calgary some time ago in an attempt to find some ways or means to generate more incomes for Canada Post. Finally, it is management and the Government who refuse to approve services which could compete with the private sector.

It is rather funny, Mr. Speaker, that the private sector can compete with Canada Post but that Canada Post may not compete with the private sector.

I think that it is a matter of bad management by the Government and that it will have to pay dearly on the mail issue during the next election.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions and comments. The Hon. Member for Perth (Mr. Brightwell).

[English]

Mr. Brightwell: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps) has demonstrated, once again, her great ability for overstatement. Perhaps it is because, as she has said, she gets her information from clerks in variety stores. Maybe this is an example of how the Liberals get all of their information and how unsubstantiated it is.

Mr. Cassidy: Oh, shame! And what is wrong with clerks in variety stores? Shame! Are you an elitist?

Mr. Brightwell: The Hon. Member did in fact say that she got her information from a clerk in a variety store. She then came out with a crushing proposition, that being that governments should intrude on private industry, that governments should compete with private industry.

I would be interested in hearing what private industry would have to say about the proposition that Government should go out and try to take away business from those earning a living from it.

An Hon. Member: Go back under your shell.

Mr. Brightwell: I take exception to the Hon. Member's assertion that it is unfair for those who do not have home delivery. I represent a riding in which more than 50 per cent of my constituents have never had home delivery of mail. On many farms, the mailbox can be a distance of well over 600 feet from the house. For other services, one has to travel to the post office in the nearest village or town. Yet, the Hon. Member wants everybody to have home delivery. That is just simply not possible.

What does the Hon. Member have to say in respect of the handicapped who live in areas that do not have door-to-door mail service? How do those people get their mail? Why are the handicapped living in our cities to be treated differently from those who live in the rural areas?

Ms. Copps: Mr. Speaker, I think what we have heard are two ridiculous comments rolled into one. First of all, what is wrong with getting information from a store clerk? Perhaps the Hon. Member for Perth (Mr. Brightwell) got elected by talking only to lawyers and doctors, and bank presidents, but where I come from it is important that parliamentarians speak for all of the people. An individual working in a store has as much right to voice an opinion—

Mr. Brightwell: A clerk in a variety store can provide you with postal information?

Ms. Copps: Mr. Speaker, in point of fact I was reading a letter from a professor. Perhaps the Hon. Member will accept the information since it comes from a professor. What the Hon. Member is saying is that it is fine if the information comes from a professor, but not if it comes from a store clerk. There is no question that in rural Canada the handicapped find it difficult to get to a post office, to get to their mailbox.

Mr. Brightwell: And you do not feel sorry for them?

Ms. Copps: What the Hon. Member seems to be saying is that we ought to inflict the same situation on the handicapped living in new developments. If you recognize that there is something wrong with a system that does not provide adequate access for the disabled, surely you would not want to add to that.

If in fact the Hon. Member for Perth is truly interested in integrating the disabled into the mainstream of the community, surely he will recognize that we ought to do all that we can in new developments to accommodate the disabled. In addition to architecturally designing new communities in a fashion that will permit the disabled to live independently within the community, we should also provide them with accessible mail service—and supermailboxes are simply not accessible for the disabled. We are supposed to be moving, in 1988, toward more accessibility for the disabled, not less.

Granting the Hon. member's proposition that it is extremely difficult for handicapped persons in rural areas to get to a post office, surely that is something that we should not add to elsewhere.

Mr. Brightwell: You do not care about the handicapped in the rural areas?

Ms. Copps: I am not saying that at all. You are suggesting that because there is a difficult situation that exists in the rural areas of this country, we should exacerbate that situation in the future by eliminating door-to-door mail service. If you view the lack of accessibility to mail service to be a problem for the handicapped in rural Canada, surely you should be speaking in support of extending that service, which is the aim of this debate today.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy), on a question or comment, to be followed by the Hon. Member for Lambton—Middlesex (Mr. Fraleigh).

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, we have a situation in my constituency which sounds to be remarkably similar to what has gone on in the Westdale area of the Hon. Member's constituency of Hamilton East.

In the Glebe area of Ottawa, an area within a 10 or 15 minute walk of the House of Commons, we had a similar situation, where one day, without prior announcement, the Post Office decided to move the registered mail and parcel pick-up services from the Fourth Avenue Post Office branch, a branch which has been at the heart of that community for a number of years, to a commercial establishment on Main Street, and when it did not work out at that location, it was moved to a grocery store at the corner of Fifth Avenue and Bank, and then to premises in the upper level of the Fifth Avenue Court complex, and from there to a confectionery on O'Connor Street, with the result that it is now removed from the area where people shop. While it has been there for some time now, goodness knows where it will end up.

The Glebe Community Association tried to arrange for a meeting with the Minister responsible for Canada Post, but were unsuccessful.

Why should a community association be denied the right to meet with the responsible Minister?

I met with people from the Glebe community, and together we talked to officials from the Rideau Division of Canada Post. They went away saying that they would get back to us, and in fact they did, saying that they were not prepared to make any changes. We were told that because other people had accepted this deterioration of service, we, too, should be happy, and that, no, we could not talk to the Minister. They took the position that because the Post Office is a Crown corporation, they were not going to listen to us.

What kind of redress is that?

• (1730)

[Translation]

... Mr. Speaker in the Ottawa area, the National Capital region which should be bilingual, it is increasingly inpossible for those who wish to be served in French to obtain such services in post offices due to privatization. Is this warranted when the Canada Post Corporation is a national service, a federal service?

[English]

I would like the Hon. Member to comment on those problems which seem to be found not only in her constituency but in Ottawa Centre and everywhere else.

Ms. Copps: Mr. Speaker, I dare say that it is not only a problem in Ottawa Centre. The problem I raised with respect to Westdale was actually in the riding of Hamilton West, which is held by a Conservative colleague. He has been the recipient of a letter also, although I do not know what he has done about it. I understand as well the Hon. Member for Saint-Leonard—d'Anjou is facing a similar situation in his own area. This is why I made the point, and I am sorry the Hon. Member who spoke earlier did not understand, that the Post Office is still taking the position with respect to the Westdale facility that it is not closing, that it is a mere cut-back in service.

Because the Government saw the big uprising, the revolt and the kind of political haemorrhaging it suffered on the issue of the rural post offices, even in the urban areas it is intending to kill by amputation—it is not a complete strangulation—first it will amputate the hand, then the arm, and then the rest of the body. Eventually the Westdale Post Office will probably close.

The Government, because it realized that it had such a political backlash when it closed the rural post offices, again has a secret agenda. The secret agenda probably will not become fully apparent for another couple of years. How can one say that the Westdale Post Office will remain fully operational when one of the essential services is being farmed off to the private sector? Obviously if the intention was to keep the service at optimum level, you would not see part of the service being taken, split off and given to a pharmacy, a confectionery or whatever.

Mr. Fraleigh: Mr. Speaker, first I would like to direct some comments in support of the Hon. Member for Perth (Mr. Brightwell) with regard to those millions of Canadians who for 100 years, since the start of postal service, have walked to pick up their mail. When they got to the end of their walk, they also paid for the privilege of having a box in which the Post Office put the mail. Those people are not complaining in any particular way. It is the way they have lived for 100 years and they do not expect any change.

I want to point out that we do have inclement weather in small-town Canada. The Hon. Member may not have been out there lately. We have seniors, we have handicapped people, the same as the Hon. Member has in her riding in small-town Canada. Does the Hon. Member know how people get their mail? Their neighbours get it for them. Isn't it an awful saying that a neighbour would have to help someone who is handicapped or who is a senior? The Hon. Member can shake her head if she likes, but it is the way we live in Canada, maybe not in the never-never world in which the Hon. Member lives.

I can understand how people who have had the privilege of having their mail dropped through a slot in their front door would hate to give that up. But I ask the Member to think about those people who for 100 years have paid for the privilege of having to walk to a post office. The Hon. Member can sit down because I am not finished yet.

Ms. Copps: This is supposed to be a question.

Mr. Rodriguez: Ask a question.

Mr. Fraleigh: The Hon. Member should be careful or he will have another heart attack.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): This is a chance for questions and comments. If there is a question which the Hon. Member would like to put, he still has an opportunity to do so. Does the Hon. Member have a question?

Mr. Fraleigh: No, Mr. Speaker.

Ms. Copps: Mr. Speaker, I do not understand whether I was in the same room as the Hon. Member or whether it was something I said that went in one ear and out the other. I never in any way disparaged or said that people who live in rural Canada in some way are or should be treated as second-class citizens. On the contrary, what I said to the Hon. Member for Perth was that if there is a problem in the delivery of the service then surely it is our job as Members to make it better and not bring it to the lowest common denominator of service.

The Member's suggestion is a wonderful one that neighbours will go and get one's mail. I do not know what inner city community the Member has been to lately but in my community I have a section of apartment dwellers. If you look at the average rate at which people move, it is usually once every three years.

In Strawberry Hills they are not getting delivery. They get supermailboxes.

Mr. Brightwell: Is it inner city?

Ms. Copps: I live in a densely populated community. I will take the Hon. Member there and show it to him. If we could live in a society where we could count on our friends and neighbours, that would be terrific. I think it would be wonderful to have such a close-knit way of life. Unfortunately, that is not the reality in 1988 in most major urban areas. There are many people who live in communities who do not know the names of their next door neighbours. I am not saying that is right or it is a situation which should be imitated, but it is reality. The Hon. Member suggests that with supermailboxes people will be able to call on friends and neighbours, but that is not always possible. Would that it were so, I think we have something which he should cherish and defend. The Hon. Member has to recognize that in planning Canada Post must look at reality and not the ideal world that in most urban centres does not exist.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions and comments are now terminated. Debate. The Hon. Member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez).

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, I want to say that the House owes a debt to the Hon. Member for Beaches (Mr. Young) in presenting this motion for consideration today. I want to put the motion once again on the record:

> That this House condemn the government for its total and absolute failure to provide fair and equitable postal service to all Canadians—

I heard the Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps) speak about the great defence of postal workers who were out on strike and that the Liberal Party was all together on the issue. It is about the only issue the Liberals have been all together on in recent years. I am sure CUPW and the posties would be delighted to know that they brought the Liberal caucus together. There is a uniting force here.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Rodriguez: Who does the Hon. Member think she is kidding, Mr. Speaker? Was I on another planet when the Liberals were in Government and Bryce Mackasey accused the postal workers of being Marxist, that they were destroying the Post Office? Did not this whole process of bad human relations within the Post Office not get exacerbated by Liberal Governments? I recall Bryce Mackasey saying: "I know the problem with the Post Office. I know what it is. It is Marxism. They are all Marxists". His brilliant deduction was that the problem with the Post Office was Marxism. We do not have Mr. Mackasey with us any more. We now have a Conservative Government.

Ms. Copps: We didn't talk about replacement workers.

Mr. Rodriguez: No, the Hon. Member did not talk about replacement workers. But what the Liberals were looking for was a scapegoat on which to hang the problems of the Post Office instead of doing what any sensible Minister in Government ought to do. Any Minister should take a look at the Post Office and see how to improve the service and should not look for scapegoats on which to blame problems. That is where it all started. What if one were to extend this logic of the Government with respect to the postal services in this country to other essential services, for example, the fire department? Can you imagine the fire department running on a profit basis? Imagine charging people so that the fire department could generate a profit. That reminds me of the year 13 B.C. when Marcus Crassus owned the only fire department in Rome, and when there was a fire, they would call Marcus Crassus out and he would arrive at the scene of the fire and start negotiating with the home owner the cost of putting out the fire. History clearly shows that Marcus Crassus, in this way, became one of the wealthiest land owners in Rome.

• (1740)

Imagine if we were to extend this logic of the god of profit that the Conservative Government worships, the logic which says that the Post Office has to make a profit. How crazy it would be to extend that to the fire department. The Government would be laughed out of this place if it did that.

What about the police force? Do we expect the police departments across Canada to show profits? No, we do not. We recognize that fire protection and police protection are services to which all Canadians are entitled, and we do not provide first class and second class service. The same is true of garbage collection.

I am not aware of the fact that there are two kinds of garbage collection services. They do not go to Forest Hills in Toronto to pick up the garbage with white gloves. I understand they used to go around to the back door, but they have cut that out now. The fact is that the same service is provided, whether it is once a week or twice a week.

The same should be true of the Post Office. In fact, I would suggest that the Post Office is probably the only visible indication of the federal Government in every little community across Canada. It seems to me that in most small towns, there is a post office which flies the Canadian flag. It is the national presence in those towns. It is a unifying element.

In the small town that I lived in in northern Ontario for some 10 glorious years, the Town of Coniston, the post office was right in the centre of town. After the mail had been delivered and sorted, everyone would go to the post office. It became the social centre. The retired folk would meet there. They would see each other and chat there.

What has happened now? The Minister, speaking earlier in this debate, said that when the Conservatives came into office, there was a $300 million deficit in the post office. It seems that the Government did not bat an eyelash when it had to fork over $1 billion to bail out a bank. It did not make much fuss about that. However, to provide quality mail service across Canada, it does not want to spend that $300 million.

The Post Office had some options and the Government had some options. The Government wanted to show a profit in the Post Office, so what were the options? One was to institute a plan that would eliminate the deficit. That could be done by cutting back services and by laying off workers. That was one option.

The other option with which the previous Government had toyed at one time was to expand the services of the Post Office; in other words, to increase the revenues of the Post Office, not by increasing the cost of the service but by increasing the number of services the public could take advantage of through the Post Office.

Mr. Cassidy: Good idea.

Mr. Rodriguez: It is an excellent idea. When I was in Switzerland two summers ago at an ILO conference, I took a couple of hours to go to the post office in Geneva to see how that post office is run. When I walked into the post office, I thought I was in a McDonald's restaurant. There were advertisements for McDonald's burgers and for Burger King burgers. The local department store was also advertising in the post office. I asked the postmaster what was going on. He told me that they raise millions of dollars in revenues from permitting those advertisements.

What is wrong with cancelling mail with a stamped advertisement? If the stamp is for Sears' 50th anniversary sale, that stamp could be put on cancelled letters and would be distributed across Canada. Who would complain about that form of revenue for the Post Office? It is a simple idea.

What about letting people pay their utility bills at the post office? Why is all that baksheesh left for the big banks? I recall a time when at the post office, people could actually deposit money in their savings accounts. However, nobody now is suggesting that the Post Office go into the banking business.

Surely clients of the Post Office ought to be able to pay their utility bills at the post office. That option was not followed, however. The Government did not tell the Post Office to find new sources of revenue.

After months and months of dithering, the Government handed the post office a business plan in which Canada Post was instructed to cut jobs by 15 per cent, 8,700 jobs. It was to close 5,200 rural post offices across Canada. It was to then embark on the favourite saw of the Conservative Government, privatization. In fact, that is the hidden agenda of this Government. It wants to privatize Canada Post. That is its ultimate aim. Every time a Conservative rises to say that that is not so, we know that it is so because every time they say no, it means yes.

Canada Post was also told to embark on a system of supermailboxes in urban communities. The Government has a fixation about the deficit rather than about what ought to have been the more positive approach which is how to increase revenues for the Post Office.

If it were up to me, I would have said something to all the top echelon people at Canada Post, people who are paid piles of money and have Ph.D.s from business schools and set up business models for the post office. None of them have ever worked on the line. They do not know what it is to work on the line. They do not know what the occupational health and safety record of Canada Post is. They never see the conditions in which those people eat lunch. They are the ones who say that the employees have to check their purses because they cannot go on the job with their purses. They do not have to check their wallets or briefcases. They go to their nice, posh offices and sit around. They get their nice big cheques every two weeks.

I would have said to those people: "You go out and come back with a plan showing how we can raise revenues. I don't want to hear about cut-backs in services and I don't want to hear about raising the cost of postage stamps and mail services. I want creative ideas for how the Post Office can earn more revenues, that is what I want to hear. That is music to my ears, not this stuff that the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs loves to hear, privatize, privatize, cut back, cut back".

Let me deal with a couple more things. I have heard it said that it is only members of the NDP who are complaining about the supermailboxes. The Minister who spoke earlier said that we suggested rural folk ought to have door-to-door delivery. Small town Canada ought to have door-to-door delivery. This Party has not said that. None of our speakers in this debate said that. What we are talking about are those urban communities where one side of the street is getting door-to-door delivery and the other side has to use supermailboxes. These boxes are monstrosities. Not only are they an inconvenience, they have created a class system within urban communities. On one side we have door-to-door delivery, on the other we have supermailboxes.

• (1750)

Is it just the NDP who are complaining and saying we do not want supermailboxes? No one in their right mind would suggest that the Peterborough City Council is made up of raving democratic socialists. I hardly think so. Yet that council sent a letter to the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Andre) saying that it does not endorse the installation of supermailboxes in urban subdivisions. Canada Post has given the council until May 13 to comply with the request. "If it refuses, Canada Post Corporation will have no alternative but to redeploy resources for implementation in other communities". That is Mr. William Lockman, to the manager of the supermailboxes. He is Mr. Superbox. He wrote that in a letter to the mayor of Peterborough.

One of the aldermen on the Peterborough City Council said: "I am shocked by Canada Post's attitude. I didn't realize to what length they'd go to ensure our participation in the supermailbox program." He is speaking for the community of Peterborough.

Again, is it just the NDP that is saying the Government is wrong in discontinuing door-to-door delivery in urban communities and putting in supermailboxes instead? I hardly think so. The Coalition of Handicapped Persons in Canada had this to say: "The supermailbox is one more case of people with disabilities taking a step backward. Once again they have to turn to others for help. Canada Post thinks that simply providing lower mailboxes makes mail more accessible to disabled people. They are defining what is accessible but we know what is accessible." That is an organization particularly concerned with the establishment of the supermailboxes.

Another interesting article comes from Mississauga, again an area not known for its raving democratic socialists. This article appeared in The Globe and Mail on March 22 and it says "Postman Never Rings in New Subdivisions". It goes on to point out that when this gentleman has to pick up his mail he has to get in his car, fight traffic for five miles and hope he will find a parking space near the busy intersection where the post office is located. He says that he pays the same taxes and the same price for a postage stamp as everyone else. Why can he not get the same service as everyone else? In British Columbia, a group organized to fight the establishment of supermailboxes says it is a step backward, not a step forward.

In my long period of time here, first as postal critic and then just observing the Post Office scene for years, I came to the conclusion that the major problem with Canada Post has to be its industrial relations, the relationship between the workers and management. Imagine if you can that there are in the order of 36,000 grievances in the Post Office. When the workers win a grievance at first or second stage, Canada Post appeals it all the way through the process. They have a backlog of 36,000 grievances. Do you understand the cost to the taxpayers of resolving those grievances? A lot of them could have been avoided in the first place if there was a more understanding, a more sensitive management in the Post Office.

Just to give one example of the stupidity of the Post Office, they have a new rule now that workers on the line cannot take their purses on the job.

Mr. Brightwell: Why?

Mr. Rodriguez: According to Canada Post, there is theft and this is its way of avoiding that. There is also alcoholism and drug use on the job and this is the way Canada Post will keep it off the line. Yet in the very next breath a spokesman for Canada Post said they have less than 1/2 per cent theft in the Post Office. If someone wants to smuggle drugs on to the line you do not need a purse to put them in. What do they do next? Do they have a man pull his pockets out and leave them out on the line? Do we have them sort mail naked? Do we send in some of those goons to do a body search?

Post Office management in its relationship with its workers has to be somewhere in the Middle Ages. I have seen it time and time again. The bulk of Post Office problems stem from that kind of Neanderthal thinking on the part of management. There are no modern techniques being used. Maybe we should send them all down to that new Honda plant in Alliston. Maybe they might learn a few things about how to treat people.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[Translation]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 66 deemed to have been moved.

RAILWAYS—CANADIAN NATIONAL—SWITCHING YARD CONTROL CENTRE—GOVERNMENT POSITION/ REQUEST FOR MINISTER TO INTERVENE

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, my comments this evening are further to a question I directed to the Minister of Transport, concerning information I was given by CN employees in Montreal to the effect that the switching yard control centre might be transferred from Montreal to Toronto. Imagine the impact this would have on employees, especially those with families and children of school age who would have to move the whole family, sell their house and go to Toronto, and there is also the language aspect. To realize what the impact would be in this respect, I think we should remember the case of les Gens de l'air, our air traffic controllers. Employees at CN have more or less the same responsibilities, except that they are responsible for railway traffic.

Mr. Speaker, the Minister's reply, if we can call it that, was that he was not aware of anything or at least gave the impression he did not know what was going on. The Minister's behaviour and his attitude were certainly not new. As far as Quebec is concerned, we got much the same reaction when discussing the safety aspects of the Jacques-Cartier Bridge and the Champlain Bridge. Today, the Minister of Transport happens to be from Quebec, but I must say that the response has not been any more satisfactory to Quebecers who are seeking assurances or formal guarantees that these jobs will remain in Montreal and will not be transferred to Toronto. There is another issue which concerns a contract for building locomotives, and this particular contract for thirty locomotives was awarded to a company in the United States, while it is common knowledge that CN headquarters are in Montreal and that Bombardier's locomotive workshops are in Montreal East.

CN, which is a Crown corporation, just happened to award contracts to the United States instead of letting Quebecers do the job, and the Minister didn't have the gumption to answer my question. If he is so reluctant to have the contract revised to give Bombardier the order for thirty locomotives, I think that, since General Electric in the United States has previously worked with Bombardier, the Canadian content of the thirty locomotives that will be built in the United States should be at least as high as 60 per cent and that Bombardier, which has expertise in engine manufacturing, should make the engines, and the assembly work could be done in Montreal East.

Unfortunately, I have yet to receive a satisfactory reply and the same applies to the possible transfer of jobs now located in Montreal. The reason given was the need for modernizing equipment. To do this, and in connection with the federal Government's deregulation legislation, what I call the law of the jungle, the CN now says that what counts is cutting costs, and bilingualism certainly costs money. Since the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) and the Prime Minister want to cut costs, all operations will be concentrated in Toronto. Only one language will be used. They can put in a bilingual employee who can talk to the people in rural Quebec, but it makes no sense to appoint someone to work in French in Canada. That is just for Quebec, and even in Quebec some can be bilingual and that should be enough.

Mr. Speaker, let me tell you, and the Parliamentary Secretary who is about to reply, that Quebecers will not stand for this. We can take care of ourselves. Recently we had Queen Beatrix who came to tell us about the Durham Report—we can see the federal Government's attitude, but we will never let ourselves be assimilated! We will never lose those jobs! We refused to separate. But if it doesn't work out, Mr. Speaker, we could tell the rest of the country that if they don't take us as we are, we will go elsewhere.

I hope that we will not come to such conclusions and that the Conservative Government will realize the linguistic importance of Quebec and guarantee French-language jobs in Quebec will stay there. We don't object to the upgrading of equipment in Toronto, Montreal or Winnipeg. Even Montreal workers agree. In order to maintain linguistic duality in Canada and preserve the French language in Quebec, the Federal Government could order CN to maintain the jobs of switching yard control workers in Montreal and provide any additional funding required to protect those jobs and the French language within CN as well as Canada.

Mrs. Pauline Browes (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to have an opportunity to respond to the Hon. Member with regard to his question of some time ago. Let me begin by referring to a report concerning a 1986 collision between a Via Rail passenger train and a CN freight train at Bernieres, Quebec, which I understand happens to be in the riding of the Hon. Member for Lévis (Mr. Fontaine), an outstanding Member of the House of Commons.

The Canadian Transport Commission ordered CN to upgrade the technology of the dispatching control equipment for its St. Lawrence region. The upgraded, computer assisted equipment must be operative by mid-1990. The CTC order calls for a significant financial investment by the railway. A study is currently under way to determine how best to comply with the order.

I would like to remind the Hon. Member that, being a Crown corporation, CN has an obligation to the federal Government and to Canadian taxpayers to operate in a safe, efficient, and profitable manner. A consolidation of the Montreal centre with the one in Toronto is being examined, but it is only one of the many options being considered. The railway has not completed its examination and no decision has been taken.

The perception that Montreal, as the Canadian hub of transportation, may lose its pre-eminent role is indeed not correct. CN's employment level in Montreal and in the Province of Quebec, expressed as a percentage of total workforce, has remained virtually unchanged at about 25 per cent to 26 per cent. With regard to the use of French as the language of communication for train operations in Quebec, the Government has already expressed its concern to CN in this matter. I am confident that such concerns will be very carefully considered by CN before it makes its final decision.

Finally, I would like to remind the Hon. Member for Montreal—Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart) that Crown corporations have the legal and financial scope, authority, and responsibility to manage their own affairs without interference from the Government.

THE ECONOMY—GOVERNMENT'S PERFORMANCE

Mr. Gabriel Fontaine (Lévis): Mr. Speaker, on April 29, 1988, I asked the Minister of Finance of Canada (Mr. Wilson) to comment on a report of the Conference Board concerning our economic situation in general. Since oral question period does not lend itself to developing a particular theme, I want to take these few minutes to explain further the Conference Board's position, which is also shared by the editorialists of various specialized magazines in the country on our economy, by the major banks, in other words by those who make economic decisions and ensure that Canadians have a good standard of living.

For example, it is mentioned there that interest rates have gone down by 4 per cent since 1984.

This means that someone with a $50,000 mortgage saves $2,000 a year or $166 a month because we have created a climate favorable to lower interest rates.

Mr. Speaker, take another example. If you have a car that cost you $12,000 and your interest rate is 4 per cent lower, that means you save $40 every month. Since it normally takes 36 months to pay for a car, the savings are substantial.

Low interest rates are beneficial not only for consumers but also for producers, business people, and entrepreneurs. It is important to have lower interest expenses when you want to expand or launch a new business. This too is possible, thanks to our good, sound management.

We also said in this report that we helped control inflation. Those who have thought back to 1970, 1975 and 1980 recall that in those years, the purchasing power of Canadians declined 10, 12, 13 per cent a year. Increasingly, the same $100 bought less groceries or rented a smaller house or apartment and this especially affected older people, Mr. Speaker. We had a smaller car, shorter outings, less travel, because the Canadian dollar, due to the interventionist, spendthrift policies of the socialists and Liberals . . . In other words, Canadians were spending money they did not have. This weakened the Canadian dollar and reduced the savings of the elderly.

The report also indicates that we have very well managed our deficit. It is for this reason and also because the Canadian Government has borrowed less that interest rates are down. Fewer are the Canadians who want to borrow, cheaper is the money. We have succeeded in creating a climate where money is cheaper. We have done that by making very good use of the taxpayers' money.

Finally, the report mentions two other points: First our tax reform. Since 1917, nobody had ever heard of income tax coming down following a tax reform. So it is the first time since 1917 that 85 per cent of Canadian taxpayers will pay less income tax because of a tax reform; it is the first time that 90 per cent of senior citizens in Canada will no longer pay income tax. What does this mean? It means more money available for Canadian taxpayers and, what is more important, more money for contractors and businessmen who, realizing that the State has become a less demanding partner with a possibility to pay less income tax on their benefits, will expand their businesses further.

Finally, the Conference Board of Canada emphasized that the Government had signed with the United States a trade deal which would make it possible for our manufacturers to be protected through secured access to the American market. As you know, one Canadian out of five is working because of the goods we are exporting to foreign markets. One Canadian out of four is working because of the goods we are exporting to the United States. Our exports to the United States amount to $95 billion a year. That means jobs!

And this market is being jeopardized because the Americans are having problems with their balance of payments and they have decided to stop some of our exports, including lumber, hogs, salted fish, and all sorts of goods when they cross the U.S. border. We have decided to streamline Canada-United States relations and prevent any unilateral action on the part of our American neighbours through a Free Trade Agreement. It is this agreement which will increase our market in the United States by as many as 250 million customers.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, I see that the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Vincent) is here to reply. If possible, I should like him to tell Canadians what would have happened if, instead of having a Conservative Government which is aware of the value of money, of the need for an economic recovery, we had lived again under a Liberal-Socialist coalition, meaning indiscriminate spending, money squandering, uncontroled borrowing, no new businesses, no new jobs, no trade with the United States and increased employment. What would have happened, Mr. Speaker? This is the question I am directing to the Parliament Secretary to the Minister of Finance, my friend the Hon. Member for Trois-Rivières.

• (1815)

Mr. Pierre H. Vincent (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I should like to commend my colleague the Hon. Member for Lévis (Mr. Fontaine) for the outstanding job he has been doing since 1984 here in the House of Commons and in his riding. We know that he is a well known and experienced administrator who, before jumping into the political arena, had a brilliant career. I am sure he will also have a brilliant career on the political scene.

As I listened to my colleague from Lévis talk about economic matters, I could appreciate that indeed he has worked in that sector before, and since 1984 he has been keeping a close watch on everything the Government has done.

Mr. Speaker, he is right when he says that the Conference Board projections have been revised upwards. Like most other trend indicators who predicted a better economic performance throughout the country, they proved to be wrong: Canada's performance has been even better than expected.

When my colleague from Lévis talks about the Opposition and a coalition, whether it is a coalition or either one of the other two Parties in office, we see and we know their forecasts. Mr. Speaker, like my colleague from Lévis, I am sure you too recall that when the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) tabled the documents of his 1984 economic statement, both the Leader of the Official Opposition and the Leader of the New Democratic Party said that we would lose hundreds of thousands of jobs. Mr. Speaker, jobs were created in 1984.

When he tabled his Budget in May 1985, the reaction was the same: Both Opposition leaders said the Budget would make us lose jobs. Mr. Speaker, jobs were created in 1985.

When the Budgets came out in 1986, 1987 and 1988, all we could hear from the two Opposition leaders—Liberal or NDP, it does not matter—was that we would lose jobs, it was bad for Canada, and what have you. Those were negative remarks which failed to take the Canadian reality into consideration, Mr. Speaker. My colleague from Lévis knows what the Canadian reality is. He is living it, he works with the Government, he makes constructive comments, he takes a positive approach. That is what has been done by the Conservative Government since 1984.

Mr. Speaker, nearly 1,300,000 jobs have been created since 1984, although every time this Government tabled bills with an impact on the economy, the Leader of the NDP (Mr. Broadbent) and the Leader of the Liberal Party (Mr. Turner) made dire predictions that jobs would be lost. Every time we presented major projects, such as the free trade agreement . . .

Mr. Speaker, everyone agrees the agreement will create jobs in this country and protect existing jobs.

The Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) says he will tear up the agreement. Mr. Speaker, even a child of six can see the Leader of the Opposition doesn't have the strength to tear up the agreement. He can't even lead his own caucus, much less tear up the agreement. The Leader of the NDP, who has enjoyed the benefits of free trade in his riding for twenty years, also says the agreement is no good for Canada. So what is good for Oshawa isn't good for Canada? Come on, Mr. Speaker!

I appreciate the positive comments made by the Hon. Member for Lévis and, in concluding, Mr. Speaker, I again wish to congratulate the Hon. Member on the excellent work he has done in the House of Commons and in his riding.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS—NITROGEN OXIDE EMISSIONS—DISCUSSIONS IN GENEVA/POSITION OF UNITED STATES

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview—Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I rise to pursue a question about emissions that cause acid rain, particularly nitrogen oxide emissions. This is an extremely important question. We are beginning to make some progress in Canada on the sulphur emissions that cause acid rain, but a very important question for acid rain is the so-called NO_x emissions.

• (1820)

Negotiations have been ongoing in Geneva about this matter—and a draft protocol has been circulated—for quite a while. We are trying to find out where they are and to what extent the Americans, who are a major source of NO_x emissions in Canada and a major source of acid rain and other health problems, are responsible.

We find that the Government's response is that all is well and that we are making progress. The Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark), when asked a question by the Leader of the New Democratic Party, said that we had a win in Geneva in the negotiations. What were the Americans trying to do in Geneva? They were trying to get something into the protocol stating that instead of choosing 1987 as the year against which a freeze in emissions would have to be measured, they could choose any year. They could take an earlier year. They took the year 1978. Their emissions were higher then, so they would be able to increase their emissions by 10 per cent and still not violate the protocol.

Increases in these emissions would be extremely dangerous for Canada. The increase they would be allowed would be the same amount as the total emissions for Canada itself. What good would it do for us to decrease our emissions if the Americans could increase theirs? It is very important to get this loophole out of the protocol. However, there was no win.

When I asked the question of the Minister of the Environment (Mr. McMillan) subsequently, he said that the Americans could have chosen 1978, their highest year, and that we had eliminated the clause "any previous year". He referred to another proposal and said: "It is a double win for Canada".

Earlier today I had the opportunity to raise this question at the committee studying acid rain with the officials of the Department. They conceded that this question of taking out the previous year had not been agreed upon by the Americans. Further discussions are going on. The Americans are taking the matter back to their Government from Geneva. We will not know until Canada Day, July 1, whether the Americans will agree. We also found out that the Americans are objecting to some very basic approaches to this question. They are not so sure they want to look at critical loadings. They are not quite sure about the accuracy of using those.

I have questions about critical loadings as well. They may be too generous in allowing emissions. We do not have very thorough information about the health consequences as opposed to the consequences for lakes and forests. We know less about the human health consequences. It is possible that we should be allowing even fewer emissions than we are.

It is also true that the American are resisting the measurement of transboundary fluxes. They are not so sure they agree with our proportions on what amount of their emissions come to Canada and create problems for human health, for lakes and forests, and so forth. We are very far from getting an agreement with the United States when the Americans are not sure about how to measure and how to deal with this question.

We have to realize that NO_x emissions are still increasing even with this freeze. With more vehicles on the road, even if we have improved standards, those emissions will go up. We are not even at the stage of reducing emissions. We are hoping to get to a freeze that will come into effect by 1994. These are modest objectives indeed, and we are not sure whether we will get international agreement.

There are four ways NO_x causes problems with people. Acid rain is probably the best known. There are also problems of ozone in cities. In the case of Vancouver they are locally produced. In the case of a number of our cities, Windsor along to Toronto up to Montreal, in that corridor, ozone comes from the United States. There are health consequences, respiratory problems, and children are especially vulnerable. We do not have very good data nor estimates on where the danger levels are. We are probably exceeding them very often.

Another problem coming from NO_x emissions is nitrous oxide, an ozone depleting substance in the atmosphere having an effect something like that of chlorofluorocarbons on which we have just negotiated the treaty for a reduction over the long term. Nitrous oxide lasts 150 years. It is a very stable substance. It contributes to the greenhouse effect, something we are only beginning to study. We are only beginning to worry about the possibilities of major climate changes, of raising of the oceans' levels, as the swamping of cities on the coast, of making some areas uninhabitable and others drought areas. It would change enormously the climate. We are only beginning to understand the consequences of this aspect of NO_x emissions.

• (1825)

We cannot have any optimism that the measures we are even contemplating right now will be adequate.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, the Special Committee on Acid Rain will visit Washington in June, which is in a few weeks time, and will be there from June 6 to June 8 to present Canada's policy to the Americans, to Senators, Congressmen and officials. The purpose is to explain to the Americans our specific claims and our concerns about the disastrous effects of acid rain. This visit is particularly important because the Canadian Government is not doing enough to convey our concerns to the Americans. In my view, this is because of the free trade negotiations. The Canadian Government cannot negotiate two agreements at the same time, and I think it is no accident that we do have a free trade agreement and we do not have the agreement we need to regulate and reduce the emissions that cause acid rain.

Mr. Speaker, one of the overriding concerns of Canadians is to reduce emissions that cause acid rain, and the Government must take this concern seriously.

[English]

Mrs. Pauline Browes (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, the negotiations in the Economic Commission for Europe, the ECE, to draft a protocol to control nitrogen oxide emissions are nearing completion. The officials testified at our acid rain committee meeting today, that special committee of the House of Commons, and those officials representing the Canadian Government are to be commended for their negotiations in Geneva. On July 1, 1988, Canada will declare its intentions concerning its signature of this protocol.

The negotiations in the 35-member ECE have shown Canadians just how justified our claims have been all along when we have called on the Americans to take action on acid rain. Before and during the April 27 and 28 meeting in Geneva, our Government was using every lever available to us to gain the support of the European nations. We asked for their support to ensure that Canada would not fall victim to increased NO_x pollution from the United States as a result of credit language in the draft protocol.

It appeared as if the Europeans might be willing to accept a protocol that would result in increased damage to Canada's environment, just to bring the Americans into the protocol. Thankfully, this did not happen. The Europeans supported us because they too recognized the dangerous precedent this would have set for all future international environmental law. The Americans were sent a very clear message that they should join the international fight against acid rain.

The draft protocol now contains no credit clause. Canada's proposal to delete the so-called American credit clause was supported by all but the U.S. delegation. The phrase "any previous year" is now in square brackets, meaning that it is still being considered, and is qualified by another square-bracketed phrase which states that there will be no increase in transboundary fluxes from the 1987 level for the period between 1987 and 1996. Again, Canada's position was supported.

If the U.S. signs the protocol, Canada will have earned a complete freeze on transboundary fluxes until the second step of the protocol is in place in 1996. In this situation we will have succeeded in eliminating any negative effects on Canada of the use of any previous year as the baseline for freezing emissions. The second step in the protocol requires the establishment of critical loads, reductions required to meet those critical loads, and measures and a time-table commencing no later than January 1, 1996 to achieve the reduction. The review process required by the protocol will ensure that the second step goals are in fact met.

Our experience in Geneva has shown yet again that Canada is not only a valued member but a leader of the world community in the fight against air pollution. We put our case forcefully to the Europeans and we won. We will continue to press our case with the Americans on acid rain. The world community is on our side.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 10 a.m., pursuant to Standing Order 3(1).

ALLOTTED DAY, S. O. 82—RESEARCH AND DEVELOPMENT

Mr. David Berger (Laurier) moved:

That this House condemn the Government for failing to provide adequate non-tax support for Reseach and Development and for its counter-productive policies and administration of tax support for Research and Development, including,

(1) tax reform measures that disourage research and development by reducing funds available for R & D, by increasing the costs of R & D and by delaying investment in R & D facilities and delaying the introduction of new products and new processes, all of which generally impair the ability of Canadian companies to compete in global markets; and

(2) management of R & D tax programs that has led to serious disagreements between industry and Revenue Canada over the kinds of activities that qualify for the investement tax credit for Research and Development resulting in long delays in obtaining refunds needed to finance ongoing Research and Development activities.

He said: Mr. Speaker, this debate should be seen in the context of the commitment made by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) to double national spending on research and development during his first term.

Mr. Speaker, I may recall that this commitment was made by the Prime Minister when he was Leader of the Official Opposition. Speaking to the Montreal Chamber of Commerce on March 22, 1984, four years ago, the Prime Minister said and I quote: "We intend to double our collective national commitment to research and development during our first term. This would make it possible to create hundred of thousands of jobs and billions of dollars in new sales for Canada, on an annual basis".

However, since it came to power, the Conservative Government has reduced, not increased, support for research and development, the result being that our national effort in this respect has dropped. Before the election, nearly 1.5 per cent of GNP was spent in this country on research and development. Since the election, this percentage has dropped and is now around 1.3 per cent.

My second point is that we must not forget Canada does not provide the same level of support for research and industrial development as certain competitor countries. A study published in 1986 by the Canadian Manufacturers Association shows that tax support in Canada compares with levels in the United States, Germany, France and England. However, non-tax support for research and development lags far behind what is provided in these countries.

As I intend to demonstrate in my speech today, the Government is undermining support measures that work well. I am referring to tax measures instead of increasing non-tax measures to levels comparable to those in other countries. They are trying to undermine tax measures which, as I said before, work very well in this country.

It is a fact that in many other countries, non-tax support takes the form of massive procurement programs, often related to defence or space programs, or, as in Japan, it could be the development of a new generation of computers.

This type of program does not exist in Canada, Mr. Speaker, and that is why we have depended mainly on tax measures to stimulate industrial research, something the Government is once again undermining as a result of its tax reform measures.

• (1010)

[English]

The first part of today's motion reads:

(1) tax reform measures that discourage research and development by reducing funds available for R & D, by increasing the costs of R & D and by delaying investment in R & D facilities and delaying the introduction of new products and new processes, all of which generally impair the ability of Canadian companies to compete in global markets;—

Of course, this should be considered in light of the Government's trade initiative, of decreased barriers to international trade and of the need for Canadian firms to be competitive in global markets. Of course, that includes being able to compete right here in Canada in our own domestic market which is but a small part of the larger global market.

In essence, the first part of this motion is the conclusion of a Conference Board survey of some 47 industrial R and D performers which, between them, performed over $1 billion of research and development in 1986. The survey also concluded that the tax reform measures "hold the potential to harm research and development efforts being pursued in their companies and in the economy as a whole".

This survey by the Conference Board was undertaken during the fall of 1987 and was published in December of 1987. It was conducted for the Science Council of Canada which put out a statement at the time of the publication of this report from which I would like to quote. The Science Council believes that some of the proposed tax reforms will be seriously counter-productive in their impact on research and development performing firms. They will penalize the very firms and sectors taking the sorts of risks necessary for Canada to survive in a more competitive world economy and to move with greater confidence into the 21st century. These were the general conclusions of the Conference Board survey and the assessment of the Science Council.

The comments of respondents to the survey showed the extent to which the tax reform measures will damage research and development in Canada on a much more descriptive basis than did the general conclusions that were arrived at by the Conference Board. I would like to quote selectively from the comments contained within this survey. When I say "selectively", that does not mean that I intend to convey only a partial view. I will certainly be quoting from excerpts which I think convey the general thrust of the results of this survey. However, time does not permit me to quote at length from the survey.

There has been a tax reform change on the eligibility of buildings and structures. Buildings and structures are no longer eligible for the 20 per cent investment tax credit. One of the respondents, a large forest products firm, saw a direct impact of this change with both short and long-term consequences. There has been a deferral or cancellation of plans to construct a new research centre which represents an investment of some $15 million to $20 million. That means that $15 million or $20 million has gone down the drain in one forest products company alone.

Similar impacts were expected at a large chemical company, a biotech company, a petroleum firm, and a telecommunications concern. The large chemical company had this to say:

> We expect to expand a laboratory next year or in 1989. The abolition of the 100% write-off and the 20% Investment Tax Credit on research buildings will roughly double the cost of this expansion.

The biotech company said that this tax reform measure will affect the ability of the firm to service export markets which likely will be serviced through a facility in those markets rather than in Canada.

The petroleum firm said that a proposed new $46 million research complex in Calgary may not proceed or may be significantly downsized. I do not know if there are any Members from Alberta, from western Canada or from Calgary more particularly in the House at this time, but I am sure they are interested in this petroleum firm in Calgary saying that a $46-million research complex will not proceed or will be significantly downsized.

The telecommunications firm said that the effect of this measure will be, and I quote:

> Migration of R & D projects out of Canada over the next few years by large international companies. Cancellation of large long term R & D projects which proposed building new buildings (2-5 years). Reduction of new projects which would involve increased requirement for work space because of losing ITC on base cash—

• (1020)

This survey is full of similar examples which indicate that the tax reform measures proposed and implemented by the Government will have a devastating effect on research and development in Canada, and on the ability of Canadian companies to compete in global markets. If some Members of this House think the survey does not provide conclusive evidence of the damage these tax measures will cause, I refer them to a recent article about Jean de Grandpré, Chairman and outgoing Chief Executive Officer of Bell Canada Enterprises, which appeared in the Report on Business magazine of April, 1988. As the article points out, when economic commentators say that Canada is a world leader in telecommunications, they do not mean Canada, they mean Bell and Northern Telecom. If anyone knows anything about research and development in Canada you would expect the Chairman of Bell Canada Enterprises, owner of the largest research firm in Canada, would know something about it.

I am glad that the Minister of State for Finance (Mr. Hockin) is listening to these comments because Mr. de Grandpré, referring to the Government's plan to eliminate tax deductions for buildings, said: "I told the Deputy Minister, do you think you can do R and D without a roof over your head?" He continued to say that politicians "are all saying the same thing, that we have to have more R and D capacity in Canada, that the future of this country rests on high technology products." However, he says, "The tax reform measures amply demonstrate that politicians don't understand how the game is played. The effect of these tax changes will be that Bell will do its research in some other country and take away several hundred well-paid jobs from Bell Northern Research, the largest private R and D facility in Canada". In what is probably the most devastating comment, he says "Canadians who are graduating from our universities are going to walk over to BNR and say, can I have a job? And we will say, sorry, but we are not expanding our R and D facilities in Canada. They will say, why? Well, because the Government has introduced this stupid piece of legislation."

Here is further evidence of the devastating effect of the Government's tax reform measures. I was at a conference on university research in Edmonton two weeks ago and an official from Connaught Labs revealed that as a result of the tax reform measures, Connaught Labs had to abandon plans to raise $60 million in Canada through an R and D limited partnership. There had been some research developed in Canada at the University of Toronto to come up with an innovative therapy to control diabetes which Connaught Labs wanted to market and further develop here in Canada. The Connaught official said this research work would now be transferred to a large offshore multinational. I referred to this in a question in the House last week and asked the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) to review his tax reform measures. Unfortunately, I did not receive a specific reply to my question.

I would now like to refer briefly to the second part of the motion which refers to the management of the investment tax credit for research and development. A survey conducted earlier this year by the Canadian Advanced Technology Association has once again identified serious disagreements between industry and Revenue Canada over the kinds of activity that qualifies for the investment tax credit, and delays of up to 18 months in obtaining refunds. Consequently, many businesses which had been counting on refunds to finance ongoing activities have encountered serious financial difficulties.

One has to put this in context. Very often R and D companies are start-up companies, they are in their first years, short of financing, and they devote every cent they get to ongoing research and development. They are trying to come up with new products to sell here and abroad. They have to devote already limited resources, both financial and people, to justify previous research and development activities rather than concentrating on ongoing R and D. Imagine the situation of some of these companies. They are run by people who are really at home in applying their energy and talents to creating new products. I have spoken to some of them and they told me that they have had to spend an inordinate amount of time dealing with accountants and lawyers trying to justify their previous R and D claims to Revenue Canada rather than concentrating on ongoing research and development activity.

The Government recently made a few changes to its administration of the R and D tax credits which address one aspect of the problem, the tremendous delays incurred by certain companies, proven R and D performers, in obtaining refunds. The extent to which this will apply to new companies, start-up companies, which have new R and D activities remains to be seen. However, none of the changes affected the definition or the possibility of disagreements. Very significant problems remain, once a project is accepted by Revenue Canada, regarding the kinds of costs that you can attribute to a project, such as, for example, overhead, training and travel.

Furthermore, Revenue Canada has been unable to come to grips with companies that develop and sell prototypes. Some tax practitioners have told me that Revenue Canada is simply applying what it perceives to be the current views of the Department of Finance in that it is narrowing what qualifies as R and D. That flies in the face, of course, of all the commitments made by the Government and the Minister of Finance in the past couple of years.

Tax credits are generally supported by industry. They are the favoured form of support in industry because they are self-administered. They are not a program, you do not need to stand in line and apply. Firms choose the type and amount of R and D they want to conduct.

• (1030)

Again, I have been told by a number of tax practitioners that Revenue Canada regards these tax credits very much as a grant program. They want to control the type and amount of research and development, which contradicts the very nature of this kind of self-administered program.

I understand that the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. MacKay) will intervene in this debate later today. I want him to state what are the costs of this degree of control. If the administrative costs are higher than the revenues that might be lost if we had less rigorous controls, or if the administrative costs are higher than the kind of revenues that firms would be able to generate by concentrating on R and D rather than spending their time in accounting and legal nightmares, then I suggest the Government really should opt for less rigorous controls. It would make good economic sense. It would only be a matter of common sense to opt for less rigorous controls.

I hope that putting forward this motion today and debating a subject which is often fairly technical and which very often involves the intricacies of the administration of our tax system for which we must rely on the explanations of accountants and lawyers, will advance the debate and indicate to the Government that people in the private sector are seriously concerned about these issues. They will watch the debate today and hopefully we will not hear from the Minister the kind of rhetorical response to which we are accustomed in the House, certainly during Question Period, but a serious attempt will be made to address issues which are of great concern to the private sector.

As I have indicated in my motion, these matters seriously affect research and development in Canada and the ability of Canadian companies to compete in global markets.

Hon. Tom Hockin (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to participate in this debate today because it is not only important that the Government explain its record and approach to research and development, but also puts it in the context of tax reform. I invite the Hon. Member for Laurier (Mr. Berger) to consider what I have to say and perhaps we can have a dialogue following my speech.

The motion before the House is one that must be properly considered in the context of tax reform. It must be considered in the context of the benefits of tax reform. As we know, the central objective of tax reform is to lower tax rates because there is no better incentive for growth, investment and job creation than lower tax rates. Lower rates mean that more Canadians keep more of every additional dollar they earn and they, not the Government or accountants, will decide how best to use that money.

How do we lower rates and still have revenue flow to allow a Government to promote and progress further with objectives that are important for the country? This is accomplished by broadening the tax base and reducing the number of tax preferences. That will allow us to lower the rate. Special incentives that remain will be fewer but more effective. They will continue to be sensitive to the needs of Canadians in all parts of the country.

[Translation]

A tax system with lower rates and fewer tax breaks will be fairer for all taxpayers. It will fully reflect our commitment to economic growth and social justice.

[English]

The benefits of tax reform will be felt by most Canadians, first through lower personal income taxes, and again over the years as tax reforms have a positive effect on the economy. That is the basic premise of tax reform and that is how it is developing.

In fact, for 9.7 million households, over 85 per cent of the total, tax reform will mean reduced income taxes. The average tax reduction for these households will be about $490 per household. This results from the fact that the gains from tax rate reductions and the conversions of personal exemptions into credits far outweigh the reduction in any tax preferences. Some 850,000 lower-income families, of which about 250,000 are elderly, will have their income tax totally eliminated as a result of tax reform.

[Translation]

Older Canadians who depend mainly on pension and interest income will come out ahead from tax reform. Nine out of ten Canadians aged 65 and over will pay less income tax.

[English]

The corporate income tax proposals also present us with a somewhat similar story. They achieve three major objectives. Corporate tax rates, like the personal tax rates, will be reduced. This will promote growth and job creation in Canada by maintaining a corporate tax system that is competitive with other countries, particularly the United States.

Yesterday, I, along with other Members of the House, held very interesting meetings with the Minister of Finance of New Zealand. The Labour Government there has unleashed very strong economic growth through a number of programs, including privatization and freer trade, as well as by reducing corporate tax rates. It has resulted in unprecedented economic growth in New Zealand.

That is our strategy for the corporate tax structure as well as the personal tax structure. The elimination or reduction of many special tax breaks on the corporate side will pay for lower corporate and personal tax rates and will return the profit motive to investment by rewarding success. It will encourage investment decisions based more on economic initiative and opportunity than on tax considerations. That is the key.

The Hon. Member for Laurier was curiously old-fashioned in his remarks. He wants us to return to the 1960s and 1970s when incentives were distorted so that people focused on obtaining some sort of tax preference or loophole to make an investment decision. That is not the way to run a corporate tax system. We have tried to prune the system of these preferences and lower the rates.

A broader tax base with fewer preferences will mean that profitable corporations will pay a bigger share of the corporate tax burden and the corporate income tax will be a more predictable and reliable source of revenue.

Throughout the entire economy, corporate tax reform will strengthen incentive for firms to invest in profitable ventures. The rate of tax and the return for new investment will be reduced and the tax treatment of capital in this country will continue to encourage risk taking, initiative, growth and job creation.

The Hon. Member for Laurier stated that the Government is not doing enough in this context to support research and development in Canada. My colleague will refute this later this morning with respect to non-tax support for R and D. He will go through the support for R and D brought forward by this Government on the non-tax side. I will refute this with respect to tax reform and the tax treatment of R and D generally.

• (1040)

I am disappointed that the substantial support in fact provided by research and development tax credits is not fully recognized by the Hon. Member for Laurier (Mr. Berger). In 1986, for example, over $700 million of R and D tax credits were generated by R and D companies. This is a very significant level of commitment in the face of competing fiscal pressures. This Government has many fiscal pressures, and that is a large level of tax credits compared to any other activity of the Government.

[Translation]

This Government is committed to promoting science and technology in Canada. I am surprised to see the Hon. Member for Laurier (Mr. Berger) trying to create a negative perception of our tax incentives for research and development.

[English]

Tax reform generally represented a move to a more results-based corporate income tax system featuring broader based incentives provided through lower tax rates. In general, there is an elimination or reduction of selective up-front deductions or credits. That is what tax reform did in general. It tried to eliminate these very selective up-front deductions so that incentives could be delivered, as I have said, through a reduced rate.

However, incentives were retained, and the Hon. Member knows this, in certain strategic areas. Tax reform recognized the importance of R and D to the economic future of the country. That was one of the strategic areas. In fact, Canada continues to offer the most generous package of R and D tax incentives among the major industrialized countries. The OECD did a study, which I examined six months ago, which ranked the Canadian tax approach to R and D very, very, highly as a very generous system. We have retained that even with tax reform.

For example, the United States only provides credits for increases in R and D spending—the Hon. Member for Laurier should consult what the Americans do—while the Canadian system provides credits for all of R and D spending, not just the increases. This fact is widely acknowledged and applauded by the R and D community.

Does the Hon. Member object to this? This is a very generous approach. This is more important than loose interpretations of R and D. More important than that is to provide credit for all of these expenditures. Because of our commitment to science and technology, these generous R and D incentives were maintained. We maintained them because of our commitment to it. For the most part, following tax reform, we maintained this notwithstanding the reduction or elimination of many other incentives.

The Hon. Member's approach is a bit different. He in fact wants loose interpretation of rules, probably to bring back the scientific research tax credit approach which cost the Canadian people billions and billions of dollars. As far as anyone can tell, it promoted almost no research and development at all. That approach is to construct a great wide-open door—put research and development inside and people drive trucks through it. In fact no research is being done at all, but you get the tax benefit for it. What we have done is to maintain the special status of R and D, but we want it to be R and D.

[Translation]

In fact, despite what the Hon. Member for Laurier said, tax reform has indeed increased the effect of the main tax provisions for research and development.

[English]

For example, the rates of the R and D investment tax credits were maintained following tax reform notwithstanding the fact that the general and regional ITCs are being eliminated or reduced to reflect reduced tax rates. By maintaining the rates of the R and D ITCs, while reducing tax rates, the relative benefit of these tax credits is increased. The same level of R and D will now entitle the R and D performer to credits which will offset the tax on more income. This enhances the incentive impact of our R and D provisions.

I ask the Hon. Member for Laurier, does he not approve of that? Does he object to that? It is very generous and a very, very important part of how our ITCs work in Canada.

Changes were made to the R and D tax incentives to ensure that as a package they operate in an efficient and cost-effective manner which is consistent with other government priorities. We want things to be efficient and effective. We do not want simply labels that say R and D, through which tax reductions are received but through which very little R and D is done.

As the Hon. Member knows, as part of the tax reform changes, expenditures made for the acquisition of a building will no longer qualify for the R and D tax incentives. The Hon. Member mentioned this. Buildings normally depreciate slowly over time, if at all, and they have very long, useful lives. They are eligible for debt financing, which is not generally available for more direct R and D expenditures. Accordingly, a 100 per cent immediate write-off in the R and D ITC was considered to be inappropriate in a post-tax reform environment. Is that what the Hon. Member wants? Does he want to neglect those realities? By excluding these expenditures, the tax treatment for R and D buildings in Canada will be more in line with that found in the other major industrialized countries, and the high rate of ITC could be maintained for other R and D expenditures.

The final tax reform package also provides that investment tax credits cannot offset, in general, more than three-quarters of a corporation's tax otherwise payable. The introduction of limits to the amount of ITC which a taxpayer may claim in a year is an important part of the tax reform package. It improves the fairness of the system by ensuring that large profitable corporations pay at least some tax, including those corporations that perform R and D. Corporations that perform R and D should pay some tax. Part of tax reform is to restore to our system a sense of fairness across industrialized groups. We have had some industrialized groups, for example, the real estate sector and the financial institutions sector. The R and D sector has to be part of it. They should pay some tax. Tax reform allows for that.

This limit was originally set at 50 per cent of a large corporation's federal tax liability for a year. However, consultations with industry indicated that this limit would have a greater impact on R and D-intensive sectors than was originally anticipated. Accordingly, the Government reacted and this limit was increased from 50 per cent to 75 per cent of a large corporation's federal tax liability. To be sensitive to what that sector is saying was very important to us. We listened and we increased the limit.

[Translation]

It will help strike a better balance between the need to encourage research and development, on one hand, and the assurance that large profitable corporations indeed pay income tax, on the other hand.

[English]

The tax credit limitation is in line, in fact, with tax law in the United States, where the general business credit, which includes the U.S. research credit, is subject to a tax credit claiming limitation of 75 per cent of tax liability over $25,000.

Over the last few days we have had questions in the House about corporations not paying tax. The opposition Members complain that a number of corporations do not pay tax. We are trying to ensure that corporations do pay tax, and the Hon. Member is criticizing that.

These limits may have some impact, I have admitted, on ITCs earned before tax reform and carried forward. It is important to note that ITCs earned before tax reform were earned when tax rates were higher. With the reduction in tax rates resulting from tax reform, existing banks of unused ITCs can now offset a tax on a greater amount of taxable income. Most accountants know that. I encourage the Hon. Member for Laurier, who has been talking to his accountant and hearing these complaints, to ensure that his accountant knows this. From a tax theory perspective, these existing banks of ITCs could have been reduced to reflect these lower tax rates with some justification. Indeed, this was the approach taken in the U.S. tax reform.

In Canada, however, this approach was not taken. Instead, the introduction of the ITC limits obviates the need for such a reduction. The ITC limits also better serve the competing objectives of providing the maximum incentive of R and D through the tax system and ensuring that the tax system is fair and is perceived to be fair by ordinary Canadians. That is how we make it fair. That is how we ensure that people feel it is fair, to limit the amount of these credits, to ensure that corporations across Canada all pay tax.

The final tax reform proposals also contain changes to the Income Tax Act designed to prevent the syndication of R and D incentives through limited partnerships and similar arrangements. When these federal R and D incentives were first introduced, they were intended to be available to R and D performers only. They were designed to have some relationship to the taxpayers' business rather than be a tax shelter flow-out mechanism. We do not want everyone in Canada trying to protect their income by trying to identify some R and D that is really not R and D. What we wanted to do was to encourage the solid R and D performers. We have done that.

• (1050)

In response to flow-out strategies which were developing at the time, the disastrous scientific research tax credit mechanism was introduced by the Liberal Government in 1983. This was disastrous for reasons with which the House is very familiar. It did not work. It produced very little R and D. Billions of dollars worth of revenue were lost to the Canadian Government. With the repeal of this mechanism in 1985 by this Government and its replacement with the refundability features of the R and D investment tax credits, the expressed policy of this Government was that R and D incentives be used by the R and D performer itself, not as a flow-out mechanism to somebody else.

We recognize that no matter how generous the R and D ITCs might be, they would not provide sufficient incentives to those small and start-up R and D companies which may have little or no taxable income and therefore no tax to offset through tax credits.

What did we do in this case for the small R and D performers? Accordingly, for small corporations the enhanced 35 per cent tax credit available in respect of the first $2 million of R and D expenditures of a current nature was made fully refundable. In effect, this provides a direct payment of up to $700,000 per year for eligible corporations.

Allowing R and D tax incentives to be transferred to passive investors at this time would be particularly inappropriate in view of the Government's tax reform philosophy and approach. We have improved the fairness of the system. We have had to do this by eliminating more and more flow-out shelters. For these reasons the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) announced amendments to the Income Tax Act on December 16, 1987, relating to R and D incentives. These amendments will have the effect of preventing the flow-out for federal tax purposes of R and D incentives to passive investors. Instead, it is important that steps be taken to ensure that the refundable R and D ITC program works well and provides refunds to small and start-up corporations on a timely basis.

Since 1985, this part of the R and D tax credit program has already provided a cumulative stimulus for R and D of more than $1 billion. The Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of National Revenue (Mrs. Mailly) will be explaining this.

The Government has taken a number of important steps to ensure that funds are delivered to qualifying claimants through this program on an expeditious basis. The Hon. Member wants an "open sesame" in interpretations. That is not what the Canadian people want. What they would like is expeditious processing of requests. These changes accomplish two objectives. They will ensure that companies with a proven track record in R and D do not experience administrative delay. First, they will also permit Revenue Canada to concentrate greater efforts on validating the refund claims of first-time claimants in a shorter period of time. That is very good news.

A great deal of credit for improvements in this program since its introduction must go to Canadian industry. Revenue Canada received excellent advice directly from the industry and through its technical liaison committee.

[Translation]

These changes will considerably improve the operation of this important program.

[English]

In conclusion I take the view that this Government's support for R and D, both directly and through the tax system, is and continues to be substantial. The record of billions of dollars of investment for R and D is there to prove it.

Mr. Berger: Mr. Speaker, I thank the Minister for his contribution. I feel that the debate today in the House will advance the debate in the country. It will certainly allow people to understand the opposing philosophies that are being put forward by the Government and by our Party.

The Minister said that the question of R and D tax incentives has to be considered in the context of over-all tax reform. I can tell him that I have serious questions about tying ourselves to tax reform measures in the United States, which has not had a great record in innovation in recent years and in competing with other countries where approaches may be somewhat different.

I think that he has to look at the matter in the context of what his leader said a few years ago. He said that R and D is the lifeblood of a successful company. He has to consider it in light of the fact that Canada's performance in R and D is half of what occurs in other countries. Our industrial research and development activities are anaemic. Only 2 per cent to 3 per cent of firms in Canada whose future depends on technology do any R and D.

He said that our tax system was very generous. It is equivalent to that of our major competitors, as I indicated by referring to a study by the Canadian Manufacturers Association. Where we are really deficient is in non-tax support, where we are not even in the same league as the United States, France or Japan.

What I suggest that his Government is doing now is, rather than beefing up the non-tax support, reducing the support in the tax system which is the only type of support that is available to industrial R and D performers in Canada.

Regarding the assertion that I am asking for a loose interpretation of the rules and that the SRTC be brought back, at no time did I suggest during my comments that we should bring back the SRTC. The current R and D tax credit program is a horse of a different colour. R and D has to be performed before a refund is applied for, which is far different from the SRTC mechanism.

What I suggested to him, and I make the suggestion again, is that there is an obligation on the part of the Government to tell us what are the costs of the degree of control that the Government is exerting at the present time. Gordon McNab, the head of Pre-Carn a pre-competitive R and D consortium which is in the course of being established, said in Edmonton a couple of weeks ago that the current philosophy in Revenue Canada is that one is guilty until proven innocent. What are the costs of this degree of control? Not just direct costs but the opportunity costs.

I put it to the Minister again that if administrative costs are higher than the revenues that would be lost if we had less rigorous controls or less restrictive interpretations, and if firms are able to generate greater revenues by concentrating on research and development, then the Government should opt for a more expansive definition and less rigorous controls.

Mr. Hockin: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the comments made by the Hon. Member for Laurier. I am not too sure whether there are any questions in his comments, but I will take his comments and reformulate them into a question, one which I think he is putting to me.

He is saying that we have simply tightened the tax provisions for R and D and therefore we are against R and D. I think that is the burden of his argument and the burden of his comments of a moment ago. In fact, what we have done is to have lowered the rate of corporate tax generally. He forgets that. That is very good news for anybody investing in R and D, and anybody aiming for profitability.

Second, we have made a number of important improvements since the Budget of 1985. I mentioned in my speech the change that we brought about to ITCs—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I regret to interrupt the Hon. Minister but it is 11 a.m. and the House must proceed to Statements by Members pursuant to Standing Order 21.

AGRICULTURE

SUGAR-BEET PRODUCERS—INTERIM PAYMENT UNDER STABILIZATION PROGRAM

Mr. Felix Holtmann (Selkirk—Interlake): Mr. Speaker, Canada's sugar-beet producers will soon receive an interim stabilization payment from the National Tripartite Price Stabilization Program. The interim payment, amounting to $6 per field tonne, will be paid to 970 eligible producers in Manitoba and Alberta by the end of May.

In total, some $6 million will be paid out. The federal Government will advance $4.3 million to make this interim payment possible.

In spite of opposition from the former New Democratic Government of Manitoba, a sugar-beet tripartite plan is now in place. The establishment of that plan has allowed for this needed interim payment, and shows the federal Government's commitment to specialized Canadian agriculture.

The former New Democratic Government of Manitoba showed no commitment. This is why it is the "former" Government.

New Democrats, both provincially and federally, have never understood Canadian agriculture.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

PROPOSED ACQUISITION OF NUCLEAR-POWERED SUBMARINES—CALL FOR PUBLIC ENVIRONMENTAL ASSESSMENT

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, there are many compelling arguments against the Government's proposal to purchase nuclear-powered submarines. This week the Canadian Environment Network added yet another, pointing out that nuclear powered submarines are floating nuclear reactors in the fragile Arctic environment.

We therefore urge the Minister of the Environment (Mr. McMillan) and the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Beatty) to launch a public environmental assessment of the proposed nuclear powered submarines.

While this is important, there are at least two more urgent priorities: a real, national, first-class day care program for the next generation, and the badly needed sewage and water treatment program proposed by the Federation of Canadian Municipalities.

Canadians, Mr. Speaker, want basics, and not the "Beatty" nuclear power trip.

QUÉBEC MINISTER OF FINANCE CONGRATULATED ON BUDGET

Mr. Gabriel Fontaine (Lévis): Mr. Speaker, today we want to pay tribute to the Government of Quebec and Minister of Finance (Mr. Lévesque) for the excellent Budget he has just unveiled: lower taxes, reduced deficit, expenditure control, and harmonization of provincial and federal tax measures.

The current economic upsurge called for lower expenditures and taxes in preparation for more difficult years. The Government of Quebec did act in light of this economic tenet. Unfortunately, in a very similar context the Liberal Government of Ontario ignored this economic precept and increased both expenditures and taxes. Congratulations to the Government of Quebec!

SUPERMAILBOXES—REMOVAL ADVOCATED

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver—Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, higher postal rates are to take effect in January, with the cost of mailing a standard letter going from 37 cents to 38 cents.

While rates will go up for all Canadians, some Canadians are suffering cut-backs in service. For example, those buying a new home in a suburban area of Canada, such as Port Moody, Port Coquitlam, or Coquitlam in British Columbia, will get their mail from a supermailbox, while their fellow citizens get door-to-door delivery.

This is not fair. My Leader, the Member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent), and I recently met with the Mayor and Councillors of Port Moody on this issue. We visited a "Mulroney" mailbox in the area.

Some Hon. Members: Order!

Mr. Waddell: I attended public hearings in Port Coquitlam on this issue, and I learned that supermailboxes cause litter, lower property values, and result in traffic that is dangerous to young children, in addition to providing a lesser level of service.

Supermailboxes should be removed. The Post Office should be a public service, not a money-making machine. Canadians must be treated fairly and equally.

This is going to be an issue in the upcoming election.

NATIONAL FILM BOARD

PRODUCTION OF NEW DOCUMENTARY ON BILLY BISHOP, V.C.

Mr. Gus Mitges (Grey—Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, Canada's National Film Board has finally found a producer to take on its promised new feature documentary on Billy Bishop.

The previous so-called documentary on Billy Bishop, "The Kid Who Couldn't Miss", was bitterly condemned by Canadians in all walks of life for defaming the legendary World War I Canadian hero.

The producer of the new film, George Pearson, wants firm guarantees of further extensive research into all aspects of Bishop's life before proceeding with the film. This would include information from books personally written by Bishop and his son, and from all other sources.

I believe Mr. Pearson should have these guarantees, Mr. Speaker, because I do not think the public would be satisfied with anything less, and we could thus ensure that the entire production of the film would be based entirely on facts that can be substantiated.

I do not believe that Canadians across Canada would accept anything less, nor would Billy Bishop. So, let's get on with the film.

REQUEST FOR HOME MAIL DELIVERY

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, Canada Post has just announced its five-year plan, indicating that revenues are expected to increase and that it will again charge more for postage stamps.

Will we be paying more for postage in exchange for more services, Mr. Speaker? No way! As a matter of fact the number of so-called superboxes—for those who are not aware of this, superboxes mean reduced services—will rise from 232,000 to 340,000.

Mr. Speaker, people who live in Glengarry—Prescott—Russell, Orleans and others elsewhere in the National Capital Region simply do not want to have anything more to do with the Prime Minister's superboxes. What they want is home delivery. Nothing less is acceptable!

MINES AND MINING

CANADIAN EXPLORATION INCENTIVE PROGRAM

Mr. Bill Tupper (Nepean—Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I wish to commend the Hon. Marcel Masse, Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, and the Hon. Gerald Merrithew, Minister of State for Forestry and Mines, on the introduction of the Canadian Exploration Incentive Program, an initiative that has been exceptionally well received by the Canadian mining and petroleum industries.

The program is designed to assist junior mining and oil and gas exploration companies in raising equity in the marketplace, in addition to contributing to regional economic development in Canada.

Mining is a major industry, directly employing about 105,000 Canadians. Closely related downstream industries employ another 230,000 Canadians.

The Exploration Incentive Program will provide for more than 12,000 person-years of employment, and will contribute to Canada's economic development.

In addition, the mining industry produces a market for high technology goods and services. It is more than 70 per cent Canadian owned. Early indications are that the free trade arrangement will result in Canadian mining companies increasing their ownership in the American mining industry.

This incentive program, Mr. Speaker, is good for the Canadian mining industry. It is good for the regions, and it is good for Canada.

SOCIAL AFFAIRS

BRITISH COLUMBIA—PREMIER'S COMMENT ON CARE OF HUNGRY CHILDREN

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands): Mr. Speaker, once again B.C. Premier Vander Zalm has shown his ignorance and insensitivity when it comes to poor kids and their families. He suggested that children who go to school hungry have parents who do not love them enough; that if they do not have lunches, it is because "their parents lay in bed, not really caring".

Such a callous attitude by B.C.'s First Minister must cause real despair and anguish among the thousands of British Columbia parents who live in poverty and have to watch their children grow up in poverty.

These parents already know the impossibility of trying to stretch inadequate welfare cheques into the last week of the month so that they can pay the rent while at the same time providing their children with decent food.

Children constitute the fastest growing poverty group in Canada. Instead of blaming the parents, Mr. Vander Zalm should look to himself.

The Premier and his Government have said "no" to school lunch programs; the Premier and his Government tried to cut welfare rates for single mothers.

Premier Vander Zalm's heart must be very small and very cold. It seems there is no room in his heart for hungry children.

HOUSING

NORTHWEST TERRITORIES—CMHC EXPENDITURES ON SOCIAL HOUSING PROJECTS

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, recently opposition Members have been criticizing the Government for not doing enough for housing in remote areas.

In respect of the Northwest Territories this accusation is categorically false.

In 1987, apart from insuring over $60 million worth of mortgage loans, CMHC spent some $48 million on social housing projects in the Territories, amounting to nearly $1,000 for every man, woman, and child. Included was some $15 million for 214 Homeowner Assistance Program houses, amounting to an outright grant of over $70,000 for each unit.

This is not miserliness, Mr. Speaker; this is generosity—almost to the point of abandon.

SOCIAL POLICY

OPPORTUNITY TO DERIVE INSPIRATION FROM QUEBEC SOCIAL MEASURES

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montréal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, I would like to know why this Conservative Government does not follow the example set yesterday by the Bourassa Government's Budget on family matters. Yesterday, the Bourassa Government recognized the importance of families and children with a $500 tax credit on the first two children, while this Conservative Government only provides for a meagre $65. Moreover, for a third child the Bourassa Government introduces a $3,000 tax credit, while the Prime Minister's (Mr. Mulroney) Conservative Government only provides for a meagre $130, Mr. Speaker.

Moreover, the Liberal Government extends a tax exemption on family allowance, while this Conservative Government de-indexes family allowance. Mr. Robert Bourassa's Liberal Government is granting $60,000 for child care services in Quebec, while this Conservative Government does nothing for those people. While Mr. Bourassa's Liberal Government brought in a $772 million tax reduction for families, this Conservative Government has brought in increases, Mr. Speaker.

Why is this Conservative Government not following the example set by a good Liberal Government?

TOURISM

INDUSTRY'S CONTRIBUTION TO GROSS NATIONAL PRODUCT

Mr. William G. Lesick (Edmonton East): Mr. Speaker, next week marks a very important one for Canadians. It is National Tourism Week which recognizes one of this country's fastest growing industries.

Tourism employs over 600,000 Canadians. That is more than mining, forestry or agriculture. It generates over $20 billion in revenue and contributes 4.5 per cent to the Gross National Product. In addition it is the third largest industry. Tourism is not only big business, it is every Canadian's business.

Canada and Canadians have a great deal to offer visitors, our distinct culture, our unique heritage and, of course, our beautiful country.

I hope that Hon. Members and all Canadians will take the opportunity to help observe a week which symbolizes one of Canada's most important industries, tourism.

TOURISM

TRAVELLERS CHEQUES—BANKS SERVICE CHARGES

Ms. Audrey McLaughlin (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, next week is Tourism Awareness Week. The tourist industry employs 600,000 and is a $20 billion industry in Canada. Each year foreign visitors who come to Canada, we hope are welcomed with open arms.

In an effort to promote a good image for Canadian tourism, most of the chartered banks cashed travellers cheques without charge during Expo 86. But since then, with the exception only of the Bank of Montreal, the banks are levying a substantial service charge to cash travellers cheques. There has been a great deal of protest from private citizens and small business alike over this move.

Tourism plays a vitally important role in our economy. Let the banks do their part. I encourage these financial institutions to reinstate their 1986 policy, and let foreign travellers and Canadians alike know that we welcome tourists in our country.

POLITICAL PARTIES

FINANCING OF LIBERAL PARTY

Mr. Jean-Guy Guilbault (Drummond): Mr. Speaker, over the week-end the Liberals are holding their fund-raising brunch. According to their so-called Quebec Leader, the Hon. Member for Laval-des-Rapides (Mr. Garneau), there should be 1,000 guests. How do they get them, Mr. Speaker? In my constituency, they are giving away the $300 per person tickets for that brunch and there is some arm-twisting going on to get people to attend. Is that what they call democratic funding? What does that prove, giving tickets away? Mr. Speaker, is that good management? Can Canadians trust a Party that sank us into debt through mismanagement?

An Hon. Member: That reminds us of the penitentiary!

An Hon. Member: They are a conniving brunch!

Mr. Guilbault (Drummond): Yes, that is it just like a conniving party!

Mr. Speaker, their leader is paying $300 per person to listen to him. Is that showing leadership and unity? How much is an unwanted leader costing the Liberal Party, Mr. Speaker?

POLITICAL PROTEST

INCIDENT AT MONCTON MEETING

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, the Mila mêlée has reached hyperbolic proportions. We hear the Chairman of the Québec caucus of the Progressive Conservatives now comparing Canada to South Africa because of an unfortunate incident.

I think all Canadians were very disappointed and discouraged with what happened in Moncton those few short days ago, but I think once again the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) does not know when to cut the rhetoric, and when to recognize that an incident which should have been avoided and was not has turned into a political disaster for himself and his Party. He has had the Minister from the province telegram and suggest somehow that the labour movement was involved in inciting violence. He has now suggested in a speech to students that we should have an end to "brutality", but the hype had to be when the Chairman of the Quebec caucus compared Canada to South Africa.

It is ridiculous. It is outrageous. Let's have an end to the Mila mêlée.

THE ENVIRONMENT

BENEFITS OF BILL C-74

Mr. André Harvey (Chicoutimi): Mr. Speaker, the coming agreement between the Quebec Government and the Canadian Government on the St. Lawrence River clean-up and on the establishment of a marine national park in the Saguenay fjord is sparking a lot of interest. The enactment of Bill C-74, the Environmental Protection Act, is raising a lot of hope among all Canadians. All my fellow citizens have asked me to ask the Liberal dominated Canadian Senate to pass that extremely progressive bill, which is the most advanced in any western country, as soon as possible. For the first time indeed a federal statute includes a definition of the term "environment", Mr. Speaker. The definition of "toxic substances" now provides for protection at three levels—protection of the environment as such; protection of the environment as it interacts with human life; health protection for Canadians. Chemical substances also will be controlled at every stage of their life cycle, that is from either import or research and development to final disposal, through manufacturing, transport, distribution and use. Moreover, Mr. Speaker, in order to be really effective, it provides for strict penalties against offenders. Serious offences under the Act can now lead to charges under the Criminal Code, and the maximum penalty provided for is life emprisonment.

NUCLEAR ENERGY

EXPOSURE TO RADIATION—CESIUM 137 ALLOWABLE LEVELS

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview—Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, other countries are responding to research trends showing that the harm of even low level exposure to radiation has been underestimated. Other countries are bringing in tougher standards. Canada should be doing the same, yet a report of the International Institute for Concerns for Public Health suggests that Health and Welfare Canada is trying to raise the allowable level of cesium 137 by more than tenfold.

Radioactive fallout from the Chernobyl accident and from nuclear weapons testing in the 1950s and 1960s is particularly harmful in the far north. The caribou are contaminated by the lichen and the Inuit eat the caribou. If the new weaker standards are accepted, this will legitimize the federal Government's practice of not warning the Inuit or protecting them, yet cesium 137 is responsible for cancer deaths, birth defects, genetic damage, and a weakening of the immune system.

We need a public process to ensure that adequate standards are set and maintained. The federal Government must not be allowed to get away with this dereliction of duty.

PROGRESSIVE CONSERVATIVE PARTY

THE GRAND DREAM

Mr. Nic Leblanc (Longueuil): In 1984, Mr. Speaker, the Progressive Conservative Party had a great project: create jobs, set the country on a sound financial base, establish good relations with the provinces, tighten our ties with other countries, improve national security, and attract investors to Canada.

This great project has now become reality: we did create more than 1,200,000 jobs since our election, business is flourishing, and Canadian men and women stand prouder and have renewed faith in their future. Canadians, Quebecers and the people of Longueuil feel better and live more comfortably with our Party.

SUPERMAILBOXES—PROJECTED INCREASE IN NUMBERS

Mr. George Baker (Gander—Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, yesterday the President of Canada Post said that for the first time in 30 years:

> This is the year ink goes from red to black.

Canadians everywhere would be delighted to know that Canada Post has stopped losing money, if only it was not losing our mail at the same time and taking twice as long or longer to deliver it.

Speaking of delivering, I would like to ask the Minister representing Canada Post in this House today whether he still believes, considering the boastful announcement by Mr. Lander yesterday "that Canada Post would increase the number of supermailboxes up to 400,000", double the present number, that the superboxes are an adequate way to deliver mail in this country in the face of nation-wide rejection of them.

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, we are very pleased that the Hon. Member has taken the time to point out the tremendous achievements of Canada Post under the direction of the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs who, I know, the House will wish to congratulate on his fine record.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crosbie: For the first time in 30 years Canada Post will make a profit this year estimated at $26 million.

Mr. Allmand: It is not a business, it is a service.

Mr. Crosbie: In 1981-82 the deficit was $588 million when the hon. gentlemen opposite were in the middle of their wasteful and profligate careers in the Government of Canada.

We are very pleased with the progress being made. In terms of average wages, Canada's stamp prices today are the second lowest in the industrialized world. I want to thank the hon. gentleman for giving me the opportunity to point that out to the House and to say that this fine record will continue.

• (1120)

INSTALLATION OF SUPERMAILBOXES IN RURAL AREAS

Mr. George Baker (Gander—Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, the Minister must be blind, deaf, and dumb to the complaints of Canadians. We received another one just yesterday. If a person mails a letter in one of the supermailbox slots after 11 a.m. on Friday, it will remain there all day Friday, all day Saturday, all day Sunday, to a minimum of Monday, unless it is a holiday and then it is not picked up until Tuesday. This Government dares to brag about improvements in service.

One of the places that Canada Post will pepper with supermailboxes is rural Canada. How can the Cabinet now condone the continuation of Canada Post's 10-year plan totally to eradicate post offices in rural Canada, 5,221 of them that will close? How can he condone the replacement of many of these rural post offices with these infamous supermailboxes?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, there is, of course, no such plan to eradicate rural post offices totally. There is a plan for the steady improvement of rural post office service and that plan is under way now. The supermailbox that the hon. gentleman seems not to be in favour of is, by many people, found to be very helpful in the postal system.

I might point out to the hon. gentleman that if we had door-to-door delivery for all Canadians, this would mean that we would need to have a 60-cent stamp. While I know that that does not shock the hon. gentleman opposite, most Canadians do not want to see a 60-cent postal stamp.

I might finish by saying that the hon. gentleman froths at the gills about fish, and now he is frothing at the gills about the Post Office. He should cease frothing and relax.

STANDARD OF SERVICE

Mr. George Baker (Gander—Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, in the past four years we have seen our postal service disintegrate to the point where many urban Canadians are no longer receiving door-to-door delivery, where all rural Canadians have lost or will lose their traditional post offices as they knew them, where mail now takes longer than ever before to be delivered, where loss and damage of mail are on an alarming increase, all due to the policies of this Tory Government. Does the Minister not think that, instead of bragging about black ink in the House today, we should be hanging out black crêpe to mourn the loss of the postal service in Canada?

Mr. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman opposite will obviously be black and blue if he continues with such a silly line of questions. He says that he wants to continue the traditional post office. The traditional post office, a hundred years ago, had a spittoon in the corner. Is he insisting that we continue the spittoon regime, or should we not move into the 21st century which is the direction we are moving in, and give a better service at a lower cost?

THE SECRETARY OF STATE

ALLEGED USE OF GOVERNMENT HELICOPTERS BY LUCIEN BOUCHARD

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): In the same line of thought, Mr. Speaker, there is no doubt that the Conservative Party has jumped ahead into the 21st century!

Last April 29, Lucien Bouchard landed at the Alma airport on his way to announce he would be running as Progressive Conservative Party candidate in the Lac-Saint-Jean riding. But like prophet Elias who rode down from the sky in his chariot of fire, he boarded a Transport Canada helicopter to travel the short distance between the airport and downtown Alma.

I want to ask the Government why a Government helicopter was used to such partisan ends? How much did such unwarranted luxury cost the taxpayers? And how many more abuses will the Government tolerate in an attempt to have the Prime Minister's school chum elected?

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, one has to be grasping at straws to come up with this kind of silly questions. As far as I know, on April 29 the Secretary of State did not fly in a Transport Canada helicopter to go from the Alma airport to I do not know where, for the simple reason Mr. Speaker, that Alma is not Montreal and therefore it is faster to use a car to travel around.

I think my colleague has been badly advised, and we are in for a very long election campaign if they always come up with this kind of information. I would suggest you deal with more serious issues, please!

[English]

REQUEST THAT MINISTER CONDUCT INVESTIGATION

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, the answer is that the Minister has never heard that the other number one Minister used a helicopter on his way to announce his candidacy as a Tory candidate in the Lac-Saint-Jean riding. I would like to ask the Minister to double-check and to provide us with the information as to whether or not such a helicopter, owned and operated by Transport Canada, took the Minister from the airport to Alma, and how much it cost. I would like the Minister to double-check on that.

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I would like to be very serious. I cannot understand that a serious Party could raise that kind of misleading information about Mr. Bouchard and the assessment that he could use a Transport Canada helicopter.

I am the Minister of Transport and I am not even aware that we have any helicopters with Transport Canada in Lac-Saint-Jean. The helicopters belong to the Department of National Defence and they are based in Bagotville. There is not any way that Mr. Lucien Bouchard used them.

Once again, it is unbelievable that we can advance any kind of information when the Party opposite is not even able to find a candidate in Lac-Saint-Jean. I do not understand. If you want to be political, do it properly, please.

TAXATION

CHALLENGES OF MINISTER OF FINANCE AND OF NEW DEMOCRATIC PARTY

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of State for Finance and it concerns the loopholes in the minimum tax that have enabled more than 5,000 Canadians with good incomes to avoid paying any income tax in 1986.

This week, the Minister of Finance challenged my Party to tell him how the minimum tax should be strengthened. My answer to this challenge is: Why have the Minister of Finance, the Minister of State and the Government ignored the suggestions that New Democrats have put forward to eliminate the loopholes in the minimum tax?

I challenge the Minister: Is the Government now prepared to take the New Democrats' suggestion to strengthen the minimum tax by including all capital gains that are not affected thanks to the $100,000 exemption and by including the excessive financial costs used in calculating the minimum tax? Or do you intend to maintain a minimum tax that is both ineffective and unfair?

Hon. Tom Hockin (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member knows that we have eliminated many loopholes. What have we done with the money? With it, we have improved the spouse's allowance and the refundable sales tax credit, increased the child tax credit, provided advanced payments for the child tax credit, increased services for the disabled, etc. That is what we have done with the money from all the loopholes that we have eliminated.

[English]

APPLICATION OF MINIMUM TAX

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, perhaps the Minister has forgotten that in 1984 Canadians wanted fairness from the tax system. One of the things they felt they were promised by the Prime Minister was a minimum tax that would ensure that wealthy Canadians paid their share of income tax.

Does the Minister recall that the Finance Department itself estimated back in 1985 that three out of four of those upper-income Canadians who were avoiding paying any income tax at all would be caught by the minimum tax? Does the Minister of State for Finance think it is fair that only one-third of those wealthy Canadians who were not paying tax have been caught by the minimum tax? Is the Minister prepared to take the NDP's challenge to come up with new additions to the minimum tax that will ensure that it is fair and that it makes wealthy Canadians pay?

Hon. Tom Hockin (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, a few days ago in the House the Minister of Finance explained the tremendous progress we have made in terms of getting high-income individuals who paid no tax to pay tax. The number of high-income individuals who paid no tax declined significantly between 1985 and 1986.

• (1130)

In 1985 the number of those with incomes of $50,000 or more and who paid no tax was 7,947. In 1986 it was 5,220, a decrease of 34 per cent. Those with an income over $250,000 who paid no tax went from 254 to 40, an 84 per cent decrease.

Why are there still a few high-income Canadians who pay no taxes? The Hon. Member knows why—medical disability expenses, alimony expenses, charitable contributions, union dues. Is the Hon. Member saying he wants to do away with the deduction for union dues, or alimony, or medical disability payments?

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, let us talk about the 40 high-income Canadians, the top 40 on the Minister of Finance's list, who had income over $250,000 in 1986 and did not pay a dime of income tax. That is not a group which has to pay union dues. That is not a group with a significant amount of alimony to pay.

Mr. Holtmann: How do you know?

Mr. Cassidy: We have checked the figures with Revenue Canada. What we do know is that almost three-quarters of those wealthy Canadians had carrying charges amounting to an average of $227,000 apiece. That is how they were able to bring their income tax down to zero. I will repeat that since the Minister looks a bit surprised. Twenty-nine of those 40 wealthy Canadians had carrying charges amounting to an average of $227,000 apiece. That is how they were able to bring their income tax down to zero.

TAX LOOPHOLE

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, will the Minister accept the NDP's challenge to bring in a minimum tax which is fair and just? Will the Government act so that where interest costs exceed a person's investment income, that is where there are excessive carrying charges, that loophole cannot be used by wealthy Canadians as a way of avoiding paying the minimum tax? Will he move on that now?

Hon. Tom Hockin (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, I noticed a few months ago that the NDP changed its view on a major tax deduction, flow-through shares. This Party has always believed in flow-through shares because of what they meant for northern Québec and Ontario and the development of the mineral industry in Canada. His Party totally flip-flopped on this issue. Deductions for flow-through shares can put you in a position where your tax liability is greatly reduced or eliminated. The NDP is now in favour of this, and maybe that is the reason why there are still a few who will not be paying taxes.

RADIO-CANADA

BUDGETS OF FRENCH NETWORK

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montréal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, the Tories are jeopardizing the future of the French language in Canada. According to the Gens de l'air, French is downgraded by Air Canada; a study made by the Quebec Government indicates that French-speaking athletes are neglected at international events and the fact that a coalition has been formed to promote French at Radio-Canada are additional proof that such is the case; the French language network of the CBC is seriously affected. The Coalition for the defence of the French language services in the CBC has denounced the discrimination shown against the French network where budgets are reduced while those of the English network are increasing. As an example, the Coalition draws attention to a program Le Point, a program whose budget is much lower than that earmarked for The Journal of the CBC.

My question to the the acting Minister of Communications is as follows: Is the government ready to accept the recommendations made by the Coalition: 1. That the specific character and special needs of the French language network be recognized and 2: That the budget provided by Government to the French language network of the CBC be discussed and adopted separately from those granted to the English language network?

[English]

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Communications is absent today and I am trying to fill in for her, and that is certainly difficult. The answer to the hon. gentleman's question of course is that the way in which the CBC allocates its budget among various priorities is a decision for the CBC and not the Government. If the Government interfered, the hon. gentleman would be one of the first on his feet screaming about the interference.

I believe the President of the CBC and other executives appeared before the Standing Committee on Communications and Culture yesterday to discuss their Estimates. These concerns could have been raised there. Perhaps they were. I want to assure the Hon. Member that the Minister is aware of and certainly supports the importance of the distinctive character of French-language broadcasting and this will be reflected in the new broadcasting legislation.

RECOMMENDATIONS MADE BY COALITION FOR DEFENCE OF RADIO-CANADA'S FRENCH SERVICE—MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, the persons who formed this coalition did not do it for the fun of it or to play politics. These are serious non-partisan people of all political stripes. The reason is that the situation is serious, urgent, and alarming. I am not asking the Minister to get involved in Radio-Canada's affairs, but to exercise his own and his government's authority.

These people have presented two other recommendations. Firstly, they ask that Radio-Canada's budget be managed separately. That is surely the Government's business, and I hope that the Minister will have a good answer because the coalition will meet with the Liberal caucus next Wednesday. Secondly, they want the Government to increase the French network's level of funding to ensure that all French-speaking Canadians get the same quantity and quality of service as the English network.

[English]

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I can certainly say that would be our objective. We want to see French-speaking people across Canada receive that kind of service. I will bring the hon. gentleman's comments to the Minister's attention and I know she will certainly do whatever she can to see that French language broadcasting is improved and strengthened in Canada.

STANDARD OF SERVICE—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, my question is also directed to the Acting Prime Minister. As you know, he is well known for his words and his definition of words, and I wonder if he can answer this.

We are seeing postal substations being closed, rural post offices being closed, rural routes eliminated, and 200,000 Canadians have been told that they will be forced to use supermailboxes. The regular corner mailboxes are being removed. How can the Government describe this as an improved postal service?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I think the facts speak for themselves.

Some Hon. Members: That's right!

Mr. Crosbie: We now have a Government and Minister consulting with postal users on the merit of an independent third-party review of Canada Post's rates and services. Our predecessors would never have contemplated that.

When compared to average wages, our stamp prices are the lowest in the industrialized world. In fact, when we take account of inflation, Canadians are paying the same today for a stamp—you will hardly believe this because of the franking system—as they did in 1952. Stamp revenue this year will account for less than one-third of the needed revenue to make up for increased costs. The rest is made up by efficiency, productivity improvements, and volume growth. All of these are signs of tremendous improvements in performance and service.

Mr. Murphy: The Acting Prime Minister spoke the truth in 1983 and 1984 when he said if the Conservatives ever told the people of Canada what they were going to do they would never have been elected. If he is calling that improved postal service, he is obviously not telling the truth to the people of Canada.

RESIDENTIAL MAIL DELIVERY

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, will the Government guarantee that there will not be any increase in postal services until some effort is made to make sure that Canadians now receiving their mail at the door will continue to receive that service even if they move to the suburbs?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman has requested that we ensure there be no increase or improvement in postal services. That may be the NDP's objective, because their objective is to sabotage the postal service, or assist in the sabotaging of the postal service wherever they can. We are committed to an improved postal service and that is what we are accomplishing at less cost for the taxpayer, with the consumer paying for the service. The Minister is to be congratulated for his tremendous record.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

OTTAWA—FUTURE OF CENTRAL EXPERIMENTAL FARM

Mr. David Daubney (Ottawa West): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Agriculture. He will agree that the Central Experimental Farm partly located in my riding is the flagship of Agriculture Canada's excellent research effort and contributes greatly to the unique beauty and character of the nation's capital. Will he confirm for the House that the Government has no intention of disposing of any part of the Experimental Farm proper, and in particular that part bordered by Merivale and Fisher Avenues in the city of Ottawa?

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the Hon. Member's continuing interest in the future of the Experimental Farm here in Ottawa. I want to take this opportunity to indicate to him that Agriculture Canada, my Department, has no plans or thoughts whatsoever concerning disposing of any portion of that property at any time. There is no question about that.

• (1140)

I appreciate also the complimentary remarks the Hon. Member made with reference to that very unique facility. It has made a tremendous contribution to Canadian agriculture. It is one of the four original experimental farms established across Canada over 100 years ago.

In fact, next to the Parliament Buildings, the Experimental Farm is the second most popular tourist attraction here in Ottawa.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

BY-ELECTIONS

NUMBER OF OFFICES AT EXCLUSIVE SERVICE OF PROGRESSIVE CONSERVATIVE CANDIDATE IN LAC-SAINT-JEAN

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Government. I would like to get back to the by-election in the riding of Lac-Saint-Jean and the ministerial candidate who, after being temporarily parachuted into the riding via helicopter, will pick up his toys the day after the election and go play in his own backyard. It seems there are four offices in the riding, paid for with taxpayers money: two in Alma, one in Chicoutimi North, and a fourth office will open in Jonquière on June 6, and this is not counting the candidate's election office.

I want to ask the Minister how many offices this Conservative candidate needs to "fix" his election?

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the question is extremely partisan. However, I realize that considering the Hon. Member's situation . . . Mr. Speaker there are two offices. One, an office of the Department of the Secretary of State, operates in Alma, with someone from the Department to respond to requests made in connection with Mr. Lucien Bouchard's function as Canada's Secretary of State. I think this is just a matter of providing a service to Canadians, which is normal. There is another office—all candidates have one in every election—to take care of the political side. We have said it before and we say it again, and, I think we can hardly accuse the Chief Electoral Officer of being partisan, that even he has stated he was aware of the situation and that operating expenditures for this office have no impact at all on election spending.

I think the Hon. Member is well aware of that. Canadians realize that there is an administrative side as well. Canadians are entitled to receive services from the Department of the Secretary of State and the Secretary of State, and they get those services and have access to them. The people of Lac-Saint-Jean are entitled to have a political office operated on behalf of a Conservative candidate, and I think the two are completely separate, and there is no connection between the two offices.

REQUEST FOR ACCOUNTING OF EXPENDITURES

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, there are two other offices, constituency offices. I mentioned them in my previous question. One is in Chicoutimi North and one is in Alma. That makes five offices if one counts the election office of the candidate.

I want to repeat my question because it is very important. Four of those offices are paid for by public funds, voted for by this House. How many offices does Mr. Clean need to get elected? Will the Minister give a full accounting of public funds used in Alma, what has been spent to date to promote that candidate, and will he file with the House a complete accounting of all the money spent to keep those five offices open?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, of course the Liberal Party is desperate because it has not even found a candidate yet to run in that district. When it does, we hope it does not have any difficulty finding an office, because they were experts at finding offices when they were in government.

There is no office opened as yet for the Secretary of State in Jonquière. It was announced some months ago that the Secretary of State Department will be opening a regional office there. It is not yet open.

Mr. Boudria: You are paying rent.

Mr. Crosbie: It will be opened later in the summer.

Mr. Boudria: Next week.

Mr. Crosbie: The office that is now open is a temporary office. Everything has been operating properly.

I might say that when phone calls come in making inquiries about anything to do with the campaign at all, they are referred to a phone number to get information if they want it. These entrapment devices of the hon. gentleman opposite have been an absolute and complete flop.

THE ENVIRONMENT

RISKS CAUSED BY NUCLEAR SUBMARINES

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview—Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of the Environment I would like to direct my question to whomever wishes to reply for the Government.

It is common knowledge that nuclear submarines pose a threat to the environment, especially in an environment as fragile as the Arctic Ocean.

Will the federal Government initiate an open and public process to evaluate the kind of dangers to which the environment might be exposed?

[English]

Hon. Paul Dick (Associate Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member makes a statement in the form of a question. There has been no known leak from French, British or American nuclear submarines into the environment or the waters. They have 3,000 years of experience in their operation, and we believe it is a very good and safe system if treated properly. We intend to have safeguard mechanisms along with properly trained personnel to make sure that high level of expertise continues when we have nuclear-powered submarines in our Forces.

REQUEST FOR ENVIRONMENTAL ASSESSMENT

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview—Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, there is a federal environmental assessment process but it happens to exclude the military. This project could cause far more harm than many of the projects that are evaluated. Would it not be right, given the importance of this matter, the environment, and the number of lives whose survival depends on there being no nuclear radiation in the far north, to have an environmental assessment applied to the nuclear submarine project according to the same criteria?

Hon. Paul Dick (Associate Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, it is somewhat of a difficult question. The nuclear powered submarines will be out in the ocean. As the Hon. Member knows, when we are trying to neutralize used uranium in the Pickering plant in Ontario, for example, they put it into a swimming pool full of water. There are very few swimming pools in this world that are larger than the Atlantic or Pacific Oceans.

TABLING OF 5-YEAR PLAN—CLOSURE OF POST OFFICES IN RURAL REGIONS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister responsible for the Canada Post Corporation or to the Minister speaking on his behalf today.

Yesterday, Canada Post tabled its five-year plan which indicates, among other things, that the corporation's deficit will be wiped out very shortly.

In light of this fact, could the Minister explain to the House why the policy to close down rural post offices is still being pursued? Is he prepared to make a commitment today, on behalf of his Government, to put an immediate end to this policy? Could he also give the House the assurance that all post offices closed since the Conservatives came to power will be reopened and that this will be done as soon as possible?

[English]

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman seems to think that the crass repetition of something that is untrue will somehow, some day make it true. That is just not the case. There is no program of closing rural post offices.

Ms. Copps: There certainly is.

Mr. Crosbie: The hon. gentleman knows the policy. If a postmaster retires or is otherwise incapacitated, a review is instituted to see whether service can be better provided in that area by using someone in the private sector and making an arrangement with the private sector to perform a postal service. In most cases there is an improved service because the facility is open longer and a better service is provided at lower cost. There is no danger that there will be closing of rural post offices. The policy is as I have explained it, and no amount of misinformation, or whatever it is that the hon. gentleman spreads—he is from a farming area—will change that.

Mr. Boudria: I won't apologize for my rural background, Mr. Speaker.

SUBURBAN MAIL DELIVERY—USE OF SUPERMAILBOXES

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Minister knows full well that I revealed in the House an internal document from Canada Post which explains how to shut down rural post offices. It is not a question of whether there is a policy of shutting them down because we know that is the case.

Let me return to the issue of suburban mail delivery. Given that this deficit is soon to be eradicated, is the Government planning to stop immediately the policy of installing new supermailboxes? Why can we not have the delivery to which Canadians have been accustomed and for which they have been paying? What is wrong with getting delivery of the mail?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, the delivery of the mail and the on-time delivery of the mail are improving all the time. I gave some of the facts and figures this morning. I pointed out earlier this morning that if we were to have door-to-door delivery to all Canadians, it would cost something like $1.3 billion and would result in a 60-cent stamp. If the hon. gentleman wants to go out and campaign on the basis that Canadians should pay a 60-cent stamp, and that we should not try to improve the efficiency and economy of operating the Post Office, well, he can do that, but we will meet him on the corners, and we will meet him on the doorsteps, and we will fight him door to door on that issue, and win.

• (1150)

Mr. Boudria: We will fight you supermailbox to supermailbox.

IMMIGRATION

REGISTRY OF REFUGEE STATUS CLAIMANTS

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. As the Minister knows, the immigration staff is creating a massive new registry of nearly 50,000 refugee claimants in Canada. Since Mr. Peter Harder, the senior assistant to the special adviser to the Minister, testified before the Standing Committee on Labour, Employment and Immigration on April 26 that the proposed new refugee division will not have enough members and support staff to process this backlog in addition to the new incoming claimants, will the Minister confirm that this new registry of claimants is to be used for a new administrative review or amnesty as was proposed to the Cabinet in early 1987?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I was very interested to read this article this morning myself, but if the Toronto Star cannot understand the difference between counting people and an administrative review, I do not know how to explain it, but I will try.

This registry was set up in 1986, at the same time as the last administrative review, to give the Department and Members of this House an accurate picture of what is going on in the area of claims processing, for example, how many claimants are there and at what stage are all of these claims, and what are the characteristics of particular claims. This began in 1986. I do not in any way put that together with dealing with the current backlog.

Let me say that I will not deal with the backlog, and I have said so publicly and in the Senate committee myself, that until I have the new Bills working on behalf of refugee claimants and the immigration process in Canada to make it better and faster, I will not make any decisions on the backlog.

DEPORTATION PROCESS

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, the project to which the Minister refers as the "old" one has been renewed and rearranged and reorganized. This is what is reported by many people other than the Toronto Star. I am asking her, if it is not intended to use an amnesty or administrative review, if it is not intended to have these people processed by the new refugee division, which is what Mr. Peter Harder told us in the committee, why is she speeding up the deportations of people who have been under the administrative review in the past so that perhaps a few hundred will be deported before all the rest are given the amnesty?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, there are three ways to deal with the refugee backlog. First, would be a general amnesty. Second, would be an administrative review along the lines taken before, with more or less rigid criteria. The third would be to set up some temporary facilities for dealing with the backlog, which has been discussed as well in a number of committee hearings. I will not make a decision on those, I repeat, until the Bills are up and running. That is the most important priority for this Department.

Let me say as well that we are not speeding up deportations. There is a process in place in this country with which the Hon. Member is very familiar. He knows full well that once a claimant has been through that process, which ends for many in the Federal Court, those orders are executed. He also knows that I deal with special cases before they get to that level on a case by case basis, and will continue to do so.

FREE TRADE

BENEFITS OF AGREEMENT MADE WITH THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA

Mr. Gabriel Fontaine (Lévis): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister for External Trade. Yesterday, the C.D. Howe Institute published a report stating that free trade with the United States will not lead to an exodus of U.S. subsidiaries. In fact, free trade will expand investment in this country and in the U.S.

Mr. Speaker, considering the Liberal-Socialist coalition's promises to tear up the agreement, I wish you would tell Canadians today about the benefits of this agreement and its impact, and give them the assurance that it will be implemented very shortly.

[English]

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Well, Mr. Speaker, I will recognize the Hon. Member's concern because the Official Opposition is going to tear it up and the unofficial opposition is going to tear it down, so it is going to be quite a competition between them whenever they get their chance.

There has been a study by Professor Sopherian—

Mr. Gauthier: It is a bad deal, and you know it.

Mr. Crosbie: Please pay attention to this. He has concluded that companies in both countries are likely to respond to the free trade agreement by increasing their foreign direct investment and technology context, that we have a good reason to welcome foreign investment—and listen to this, Mr. Speaker—because foreign control of Canadian industry has fallen to 26 per cent at the present from 36 per cent during the Liberal 1970s.

We agree with his conclusions that the liberalization of Canada-U.S. trade will increase new investment and will not lead to widespread closures of existing subsidiaries in Canada. We welcome this report.

EMPLOYMENT

SHORTAGE OF SKILLED WORKERS IN METROPOLITAN TORONTO

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. Yesterday the community colleges in Metro Toronto released a report indicating that there was a serious shortage of skilled workers in that region principally because this Tory Government has cut the budget for training every year since 1984. In fact it has cut these budgets by 32 per cent, from $2.2 billion in 1984 to $1.6 billion in 1988.

Does the Minister not realize that skilled workers are essential for a dynamic economy and this means more dollars now? If the Minister and the Government will not listen to us Liberals, will she at least listen to the community colleges and the advisory committees in the Toronto area?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member clearly misunderstands the cause of the shortage of skilled labour in Toronto. The cause is a very vibrant economy generated by the policies of this Government.

Mr. Crosbie: Tory times are terrific times.

Mrs. McDougall: As the Hon. Member knows, because he comes from an area that is not as prosperous and does not have the same kind of problem, this is a unique problem to Toronto. What we have been doing through the Canadian Jobs Strategy has two sides to it. One is the economic side, through the Skill Shortages Program, if employers are having problems getting people, then we put those on the list and move those trades ahead faster. The other side is the human side. We are trying to help the long-term unemployed and ensure they get training and they get jobs. Those persons exist throughout the country and we are continuing to make that a high priority.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member on a short supplemental.

COLLEGE DEAN'S CRITICISM

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, it is not myself and the Liberal Party, as I said, who are making the criticism, it is CITAC, the advisory council in Toronto, and the community colleges. In fact Fred Etherden, the Dean of Seneca College, said: "Ottawa's Canadian Jobs Strategy Program is keeping women and the unemployed from getting quick access to job retraining programs that could help meet the growing demand". When will the Government make the changes necessary so that this program will do the job that is required? When will we have some action and less rhetoric, some dollars into this program?

• (1200)

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, first, there have been very important changes to the program criteria which Mr. Etherden was not familiar with until I discussed this matter with him yesterday.

There are two matters which are germane. The first is that the 24 out of 30 criterion, whereby a person had to be unemployed for 24 out of the last 30 weeks in order to qualify, has now been eased. Second, the requirement that women had to be acting as homemakers for the past three years in order to qualify for that portion of the program has also been changed.

Let me also say that the over-all level has not been slashed. Quite the reverse is true. It is the same as it was four years ago.

The difficulty is that the direction of the fund has changed because 42 per cent of the funding is now private sector driven, market driven, so that there is more flexibility within the training program.

Mr. Speaker: A single question from the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain.

FAMILY VIOLENCE

BATTERED WOMEN—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Ms. Marion Dewar (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister responsible for the Status of Women. Family violence remains a major problem in Canada. In 1986, the National Clearing House on Family Violence estimated that about one million Canadian women were the victims of domestic violence. Unfortunately, only 60,000 of these women could be helped in 264 shelters across the country.

When does the Conservative Government intend to keep its promise to help women who are victims of family violence?

[English]

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the short answer, which I am sure you will appreciate, is very soon.

The slightly longer answer is that the Minister of National Health and Welfare has been working quite hard on a policy regarding family violence. My officials have been working with him as well. We will be producing a policy on this matter very soon.

Mr. Speaker: This will be the last question of Question Period. A single question from the Hon. Member for Hamilton East.

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES FREE TRADE AGREEMENT—EFFECT ON JOURNALISTS

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, my question concerns the disastrous trade deal, the effects of which are only beginning to be felt.

When the Canadian and U.S. negotiators signed a deal which stated that Canadian journalists who do not have university degrees will not be allowed to ply their trade in the United States, did the Minister for International Trade agree that the reason these people would not be allowed to go to the States was because "the Americans are worried about semi-skilled and blue collared workers"? Does the Minister really think that Peter Mansbridge and Mike Duffy constitute a semi-skilled profession and should not be allowed to practise their trade in the United States?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I certainly sympathize with the hon. lady's desire to get on The National tonight. I hope that Mr. Peter Mansbridge and Mr. Duffy will be able to attain the high qualifications which we think are required for them to become journalists.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

POINT OF ORDER

QUESTION ON USE OF HELICOPTERS

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, earlier today during the Question Period a question was asked about the Secretary of State and helicopters. Since that question was asked, we have had an opportunity to talk to the Secretary of State. He cannot recall in his entire life being in a helicopter of any kind, certainly not within the riding.

There is some difficulty to the line of questioning over the last two or three days in relationship to the Secretary of State. I think it would be wise for the House and for Members who intend to ask questions to perhaps check their sources before laying innuendo on the House when somebody is not in the House and able to defend himself.

Mr. Speaker: I have listened carefully to the Parliamentary Secretary on his point of order. I might respond by saying that the Chair has also listened carefully to the questions that were asked and to the answers that were given. Of course the Chair will continue to do just that.

PETITIONS

GOVERNMENT RESPONSE

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 106(8), I have the honour to present, in both official languages, the Government's response to petitions, Nos. 332-4077 to 332-4101 inclusive, 332-4113, 332-4128, 332-4129, 332-4132, 332-4133, 332-4135, 332-4140 to 332-4142 inclusive, 332-4145, 332-4146, 332-4149 to 332-4155 inclusive, 332-4157, 332-4161, 332-4162, 332-4165 to 332-4167 inclusive, 332-4181 to 332-4184 inclusive, 332-4186, 332-4197 to 4208 inclusive, 332-4212, 332-4224 to 332-4227 inclusive, 332-4335, 332-4236, 332-4241 to 332-4243 inclusive, 332-4284, 332-4298, 332-4312, 332-4319, 332-4323, 332-4329, 332-4335, 332-4339, 332-4344, 332-4346, 332-4348 to 332-4351 inclusive, 332-4371, 332-4374, 332-4381 to 332-4385 inclusive, 332-4458 to 332-4463 inclusive, 332-4470, 332-4478, 332-4479, 332-4481 to 332-4485 inclusive, 332-4512, 332-4517 to 332-4519 inclusive, 332-4521 to 332-4523 inclusive, and 332-4540 to 332-4548 inclusive.

[Editor's Note: See today's Votes and Proceedings]

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I am not sure whether this matter will correctly fall under a point of order or a question of privilege. It arises with respect to the Government's response to petitions tabled by the Parliamentary Secretary. The responses I received are with respect to Petition Nos. 332-4481 to 332-4485 inclusive under my name. The responses are identical word for word. However, one set of petitions has to do with the calling of a general election on the free trade agreement. The other set has to do with the free trade agreement with the United States. Nowhere in the response from the Government on the first group of petitions is there any mention of what the petition calls for, namely, a general election on the free trade agreement. Yet I have received the identical response to two different petitions.

I wish to protest this. I ask the Government to look at its responses again.

If you rule, Mr. Speaker, that I have a point of order or if the Chair thinks it is more properly a question of privilege I will be glad to move the proper motion at a suitable time.

Mr. Hawkes: I am unsure of the point being made. I am unsure as to whether the wrong response was tabled in responding to the Hon. Member's question, or whether the Hon. Member is dissatisfied with the response given.

The particular point to which he draws the attention of the House is a difficult one, inasmuch as it is not the Government, under our British style of democracy, that has the power to call an election, but the Governor General of Canada. It is the Governor General of Canada who dissolves the House and indicates that an election is to be held.

If the Hon. Member's constituents wish to see the House dissolved, their request might more appropriately be directed to the Governor General. It is not something that is within the power of the Government of Canada.

That may be the issue. I am simply unsure as to the issue that is being raised by the Hon. Member. Certainly, I would be glad to speak to him privately in an effort to see if we can correct what may indeed be a legitimate complaint.

Mr. Benjamin: You are nit-picking.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I am sure I can rely upon the two Hon. Members in question, being two distinguished and experienced Members of this place, to settle the matter between them.

PETITIONS

CANADA-U.S. FREE TRADE AGREEMENT

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour and the duty to present a petition signed by a number of Canadian citizens most of whom reside in Swift Current, although there are a few from Saskatoon, Regina and even one from Edmonton. They state in their petition that the Government has no mandate from the Canadian people to conclude a free trade agreement with the United States and that the proposed trade agreement would deny Canada the policy freedom to determine its own economic future and undermine our ability to build a society distinct from that of the United States. Therefore the petitioners humbly pray and call upon Parliament to dissolve and allow the people of Canada the opportunity to accept or reject the proposed free trade agreement during a national general election.

REQUEST THAT TREASURY BOARD CONCLUDE COLLECTIVE AGREEMENT WITH LANGUAGE TEACHERS

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, I have the duty to present a petition according to Standing Order 106.

Whereas the Government of Canada, represented by the Treasury Board, has not recognized the principle of a fair and reasonable amount of time of class preparation for federal language teachers; whereas that situation seriously undermines the bilingualism policy in Canada; wherefore the undersigned, your petitioners—and the names on the petition cover several pages, Mr. Speaker—call upon Parliament to commission the Treasury Board to negotiate a collective agreement with the federal teachers of the ED Group that provides for a preparation time of 15 hours a week.

PROTECTION OF RIGHTS OF THE UNBORN

Mr. Walter Van De Walle (Pembina): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition from the residents of Fort Saskatchewan, Vimy, Westlock, Morinville, St. Albert, Sherwood Park, and Legal, Alberta. The petition calls upon Parliament to enact legislation to protect the life of the unborn from the moment of conception.

IMMIGRATION—INCLUSION OF SONS AND DAUGHTERS IN FAMILY CATEGORY

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition on behalf of a number of residents of the City of Toronto, who are concerned with the immigration policy of our country as it relates to unmarried sons and daughters of all ages and the promise of this Government of nearly a year ago that they would be treated as members of the "family" class for immigration purposes, and that married children and brothers and sisters would be allowed 15 instead of 10 points.

The petitioners are concerned that the Minister has not yet fulfilled that promise, and they ask that the House ensure that the Government fulfils its promise now.

CANADA-U.S. FREE TRADE AGREEMENT

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, I have a petition to present on behalf of a number of residents of Toronto, who are concerned that the fabric of Canadian sovereignty is threatened by the proposed Mulroney-Reagan trade deal, a deal for which the government has no mandate from the voters.

Because this deal would reduce Canada's ability to plan the economic, social, and cultural programs we need, and because it would integrate Canada further into the North American defence/industrial base, the petitioners call upon Parliament to ensure that a national debate take place on the Mulroney-Reagan trade deal in the form of a national general election before such an agreement is finalized.

CIDA—CONTRACTS AWARDED IN CONSTITUENCY OF CALGARY SOUTH

Question No. 295—Mrs. Sparrow:

Between (a) January 1, 1982 and December 31, 1984, (b) January 1, 1985 and December 31, 1987, inclusive, were contracts awarded in the constituency of Calgary South by the Canadian International Development Agency and, if so, in what numbers and, in each case, in what amount?

Hon. Monique Landry (Minister of External Relations): 1. Statistical information of the Canadian International Development Agency are recorded on a fiscal year basis, April 1 to March 31.

2. The following tables present the number and total value of contracts awarded and contributions allocated by CIDA form January 1, 1982 to December 31, 1984 and from January 1, 1985 to December 31, 1987 inclusive.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

ALLOTTED DAY, S. O. 82—RESEARCH AND DEVELOPMENT

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Berger:

That this House condemn the Government for failing to provide adequate non-tax support for Research and Development and for its counter-productive policies and administration of tax support for Research and Development, including,

(1) tax reform measures that discourage research and development by reducing funds available for R & D, by increasing the costs of R & D and by delaying investment in R & D facilities and delaying the introduction of new products and new processes, all of which generally impair the ability of Canadian companies to compete in global markets; and

(2) management of R & D tax programs that has led to serious disagreements between industry and Revenue Canada over the kinds of activities that qualify for the investment tax credit for Research and Development resulting in long delays in obtaining refunds needed to finance ongoing Research and Development activities.

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, the motion put forward by the Hon. Member for Laurier (Mr. Berger) on behalf of the Liberal Party criticizes the efforts of the present Government in the area of supporting and encouraging scientific research and development in Canada. As such, it represents the height of Liberal arrogance and Liberal gall. There is quite a difference in how the Liberal Party talks when sitting in opposition as compared to when it is sitting on the government side.

For 33 of the 39 years between 1945 and 1984, this country was governed by Liberal Government. And what was the record of the Liberal Party when it came to scientific research and development? What was the view of those most knowledgeable in this area, the scientists themselves?

While the western industrialized countries belonging to the OECD and Japan were spending in the order of 2 to 2.5 per cent of Gross National Product on scientific research and development, Canada consistently, in all of those years, spent substantially less than 2 per cent. Notwithstanding the pleas of scientists in the university community, scientists in the private sector, scientists in government laboratories, Liberal Governments in that period refused to deal with the problem. Through all of those years, Canada was consistently last or second to last when it came to dedicating resources to scientific research and development.

That is the reality. For the Liberal Party now to criticize the Progressive Conservative Government, notwithstanding that it is deserving of criticism, constitutes an attitude of cynicism which is amazing.

And what about this Progressive Conservative Government? When the present Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) was the Leader of the Official Opposition, he promised that, if elected, a Progressive Conservative Government would "move rapidly to increase those expenditures and to set the goal for expenditures at 2.5 per cent of Gross National Product".

Well, Mr. Speaker, we are now some three and a half years into the mandate of this Progressive Conservative Government, and rather than seeing an increase in scientific research and development, we see that we are spending even less, with the scientific research and development budget being down to around 1.3 to 1.5 per cent of Gross National Product.

We are now spending even less on scientific research and development than was the case when the Liberal Party formed the Government.

How does the present Conservative Government propose to deal with this very serious problem? Well, it has suggested several ways. First of all, it proposed the establishment of a National Advisory Board of Science and Technology, with broad representation from the scientific community, from the university sector, from business, from labour. It was a board to be chaired by the Prime Minister, to emphasize how important a role it would play.

Well, Mr. Speaker, that board was in fact established, and has held meetings and made recommendations. It has analysed what is being done, and it is very critical of the Government's efforts in respect of scientific research and development—and I shall come back to that later in my remarks.

Yesterday we had the announcement by the Government that it proposes to establish a new super Ministry of Industry, Science and Technology, a Department which would have $1.3 billion to spend over the next five years.

What that Department will do, no one really knows. The National Consortium of Scientific and Educational Societies has called upon the Government to use $500 million of that $1.3 billion to double the base budgets of the agencies that now fund university research. Those granting councils have not had any real increases.

To show how deficient the effort has been, and continues to be, let us compare the niggardly efforts being made in Canada, rationalized on the basis of this Government's determination to reduce the deficit, with what is being done in Japan. Let me quote from statements made by Richard Samuels, Director of the Japan Science and Technology Program at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology. About the future, he said:

> The real economic challenge is to generate new products and services. And that depends on a country's ability to educate and encourage people with ideas and to develop expertise in science and technology.
> That's where Japan comes in. In the 1988 fiscal year alone, the Japanese Government plans to spend about $17 billion on basic scientific research, unrelated to defence. Total spending on research in Japan, including work by industry and universities, will amount to more than $100 billion.

Then he goes on to talk about the need to train students who are expert in scientific research. He says:

> For example, there are 13,000 Japanese students in the U. S. and of those who will earn doctorates, 80 per cent are in science and engineering.
> Japan now accounts for more than 10 per cent of the world's research spending and between 1983 and 1987 Japanese industry has opened some 80 new corporate research and development centres. Japan has had a trade surplus in technology products since 1974.

Where are we in Canada? We are not in the same ball game. We are not even in the same league. The Government proposed to deal with the problem and get greater effort by essentially freezing government expenditures on R and D and by persuading the private sector to increase its efforts substantially but it has not worked. The Government also indicated that it believes we have concentrated too much of our efforts, such as they are, on basic fundamental research and claimed that what we should be doing is putting greater efforts in research that will lead quickly to products that can be used commercially. That approach has been rejected by the two Nobel prize winners Canada has had among scientists, Dr. Hertzberg and Professor Polanyi.

Let us just look at how this supposed major effort to get industry involved is working. One of the best ideas to get industry involved was to set up an organization, Pre-carn Associates of Ottawa, headed by Gordon McNabb, to which belongs 35 major corporations in Canada including Alcan Aluminum, CAE Industries, Bell Northern Research and Falconbridge Limited. Just as it is getting going, the Government is proposing to change the federal Income Tax Act which will wipe out investment tax credits for consortium members who invest in research not directly related to their businesses.

I agree with the Hon. Member for Laurier who spoke earlier that the biggest and best research effort being done by any private sector business has been done by Bell Canada and Northern Telecom. They are part of this consortium, and their efforts to co-operate with other companies will be destroyed by the Government's very bureaucratic decision. Why did the Government make that decision? I suppose because it realized too late that the scientific tax research credit system established by the former Liberal Government was a scam. Instead of the $100 million which Mr. Lalonde, then Finance Minister, thought it would cost taxpayers, it actually cost $2.5 billion, and very little of that $2.5 billion went into real research. The present Government could have cut the $2.5 billion loss in half if it had not permitted the grandfathering of very preliminary proposals which had been made.

Let me give another example. Here we have the Canadian Advance Technology Association. Its President Roy Woodbridge said a few days ago:

> —a survey of 212 companies involved in 325 claims for R & D tax credits show that fully one-third of the claims took more than a year to be paid after they were submitted, and 22 per cent took more than 18 months.
> —the Government's cumbersome approval process for tax credits seems to be an overreaction to the political embarrassment it suffered from the program's predecessor, the notoriously sloppy Scientific Research Tax Credit, or SRTC, program.

That raises another question. What we have seen in the United States, both on the East Coast and on the West Coast in California, is a host of new small companies getting started, taking some of the new basic research findings discovered at universities like Harvard, MIT, and the California Institute of Technology at Berkeley, using those ideas to develop new products which will have large sales in the increasingly technological world. These new companies are just getting started. They have as yet made no profits. If they have made no profits, tax credits are of no use to them and the Government has not dealt with that situation at all.

Let me go on, Mr. Speaker. The Prime Minister made a great deal about the establishment of that National Advisory Board on Science and Technology, to which I referred earlier, with broad representations. It has been in operation for some months now. It has had an opportunity to look at government programs. What did the board say? It said that without a massive increase in spending on science and technology and industry, Canada's economic future is bleak. It said that any boost in spending must be accompanied by a major effort to upgrade workers' education and skills.

What is actually happening? In fact, as the Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East (Mr. Allmand) pointed out there have been cut-backs in these programs by this Government in its determination to control and reduce the deficit. There have been cut-backs in funding for training. There have been no increases in the ability of universities to train people in the scientific areas in which training is badly needed.

Let me talk for a few moments about what this advisory council on science and technology has said to the Government. It has warned that Canada's weakened industrial position will deteriorate further without a massive increase in spending on science and technology to improve competitiveness. Among the problems cited by the study are that Canada ranks lowest of seven countries in research and development spending as a proportion of Gross National Product; in scientists and engineers as part of the labour force—I gave some indication of what Japan is doing—in international patents per 1,000 people; in industries in the high-tech field with a trade surplus, and in industry funded research and development as a share of economic output. The study points out that high levels of foreign ownership in Canada contribute to this situation and that Canadian-owned firms spent 60 per cent more on research and development as a percentage of sales than foreign-owned firms.

Some years ago in discussing this same subject, I pointed out that one of the largest and most successful companies in Canada with a very large labour force, Ford Motor Company, had not one person with a Ph.D. employed in Canada doing research. I doubt that anything has changed in that respect even now. The council recommends a number of initiatives which could come into conflict with the terms of the free trade agreement, including the use of government procurement to support emerging Canadian industry, although government procurement in the United States is a major way of fostering industry and research and development.

The council also recommended targeting government funds to firms which create new technology for world markets. That proposal could be challenged as being contrary to the terms of the free trade agreement. It recommended accelerating the purchase of Canadian developed high-tech products for use in Canadian industry through low-cost financing. Those are policies we have followed in the past through our regional development programs, and they could be challenged.

The report also calls for much more emphasis on developing science and technology training as part of the business school curriculum, improvements in labour adjustment programs and the establishment of paid educational leave to assist Canadian workers to adapt to the changing needs of a high-technology economy. These suggestions came from an advisory committee, broadly based, established by this Government. Is the Government listening to those recommendations? Is the Government trying to answer those criticisms? It is not, not as far as anyone can see.

The Government plans to spend, it says, an additional $1.3 billion on science and technology over the next five years. I have not been able to find out, nor has anyone else as far as I can tell, whether in fact this extra $1.3 billion will be added to the money which was devoted to scientific research and development efforts in the past or whether it is just a recycling of old money.

We know, for example, that when the Government made its decision to get involved in a major way in space research and in the development of the space platform at a cost of $750 million, a substantial part of that $750 million was to come from cuts in scientific and research programs which had been funded in other areas in the past. We know now, as some of us warned at the time, that the $750 million would not be the actual amount needed. In fact, we knew then and were told then, both in Canada and in the United States, that the estimates for the cost of building the space platform were escalating very rapidly. Now we are told that instead of $750 million, we will have to spend $1,250 million.

Where will that increased funding come from? Will it come from further cuts to programs which are already underfunded? I ask again, as I have in the past, where there is any scientific evidence that in fact the research efforts in space will be more productive, will produce more jobs and more scientific information which can be used by Canadians, than the research done in the areas in which hundreds of thousands of Canadians have worked since Canada became a nation. We have funded scientific research in agriculture, forestry, fisheries, human resources and medicine and all that research is now being restricted in order to help fund scientific research in space. We say that that is wrong.

Let me conclude by pointing out to the Minister the concerns of the universities. University research funding, which has been inadequate in the past, and was so admitted by the Conservatives when they were in Opposition, will be further eroded and harmed by the direction this Government has taken. The universities have called for a doubling of support for scientific research and development in universities over what the Government has proposed at this time.

We support this motion, although we have no confidence that the Liberals would have done better, nor did they do any better, than the Conservatives have done in their disastrous program.

Mr. Hockin: Mr. Speaker, I want to know if the Hon. Member is aware of a report prepared by a working group of officials of the Inland Revenue and Treasury of Great Britain in March of 1987. It said that for large manufacturing firms, the corporate tax system as a whole in OECD countries provides a strong incentive in Australia and Canada for firms to invest in R and D, and it goes on to talk about lesser incentives in other countries. It also says that in several countries, notably Canada and Germany, the fiscal system, broadly interpreted to include general grant programs, is much more favourable to R and D investment by small firms than by large ones.

This report was based on OECD research and was done for the British Government. It gives us some sense of the regard with which the Canadian tax and grant systems for R and D is held by other OECD countries. I wonder if the Hon. Member was aware of that.

I listened carefully when the Hon. Member made a point about small corporations. I agree that we have to take a special look at that, not simply looking after the large corporations. I do not know if he heard what I tried to make clear before Question Period which was that the enhanced 35 per cent tax credit available in respect of the first $2 million of R and D expenditures of a current nature was made fully refundable in tax reform. In effect, this provides direct payments of up to $700,000 per year for eligible corporations. Making it fully refundable is the way we avoid the criticism he worried about which is that ITCs would not be useful.

Finally, the Hon. Member asked me a question in the House yesterday on another subject. He asked why so many corporations are not paying tax in Canada today, and I think today the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy) asked why so many individuals are not paying tax. Then, in the last half hour, the Hon. Member made a speech about increasing tax preferences still further, increasing the flow-out provisions to allow individual investors to shelter income against tax. He seems to be talking out of both sides of his mouth.

The Hon. Member wants us to make sure that no wealthy investor escapes paying tax, but then his prescription for the R and D sector is to have more flow-out provisions which allow investors to shelter their income from further taxes. One cannot have it both ways. I would like to hear his answer on that as well.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, the Minister asked so many questions that I think I will have difficulty answering them all. First, there is almost universal consensus in the university and scientific community in Great Britain that the British universities and research facilities which, for almost 100 years, were at the leading edge of scientific research and were comparable to almost every other country, are now in a state of disaster. British universities are becoming second and third-grade universities because of the Thatcher Government's determination to leave everything to the private sector.

Second, as far as scientific research in Canada is concerned, we have no objection to grants or tax credits if they are really used for scientific research. However, I remind the Minister that that scam which Mr. Lalonde fathered was only the last of many attempts by Liberal Governments to encourage the private sector to do research. There is very little evidence that the Conservative Government's attempts and proposals have had any better effect.

Mr. Hockin: The SRTC is gone.

Mr. Orlikow: The SRTC is gone, but we have nothing in its place. Let me put on the record some suggestions which make very good sense to me. They are contained in an article which appeared in The Toronto Star on February 9, 1988. It was written by Dr. John Evans, President and Chief Executive Officer of Allelix Incorporated. Prior to that he was President of the University of Toronto. He said, referring to corporations:

• (1240)

> Only 2 per cent invest in R and D and of these, fewer than 7 per cent account for nearly two-thirds of all R and D performed.
> But 98 per cent of Canadian companies have little appreciation of the potential of technology in improving the competitiveness of their products.

He also said:

> First, industries not engaged in science and technology should be encouraged to develop technological awareness and competence through exchange programs from universities and governmental labs.
> Second, industries with R and D activity should be encouraged to invest some of their R and D budget externally in university and government research groups—

He made some very concrete suggestions:

> —one approach to draw in more of the 98 per cent would be an R and D levy of about 1-2 per cent of pre-tax profits on all corporations—

He then went on:

> Those corporations performing R and D above this level would have their contributions refunded. The remainder would contribute unwittingly to the national support of R and D.

We are not opposed in any way to real efforts by the private sector, but we say they have to be made in conjunction with government laboratories. I remind the Minister that it was a government laboratory which developed rape seed, now a multimillion dollar product for Canadian farmers. We need support for our universities, and they are not getting it. We need support for basic research, yet the Government seems to feel that it is not necessary or should be done elsewhere.

Mr. Gagnon: Mr. Speaker, I am totally astounded that a member of the NDP can stand up and say that they want to put in place tax credits which will allow individuals and corporations to avoid paying taxes while their Leader is running around saying it is not proper for profitable companies not to pay taxes. Obviously if we go along with the suggestion made by the Hon. Member, profitable companies can use R and D tax credits to avoid paying taxes. His Leader is running around in the meanwhile saying all profitable companies should pay tax. I think he is speaking with a forked-tongue.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, of course all profitable corporations and all wealthy individuals, indeed all Canadians, should pay a fair share of taxes. Of course we are opposed to corporations making hundreds of millions of dollars and paying no taxes because the tax they should have paid is deferred because they invest in new buildings or equipment and so on. Some of them may very well never pay taxes and are proud of that fact.

We are saying we can accept the idea that companies or individuals will get tax credits if they actually do scientific research and development which is useful and will increase the ability of Canada to manage in the increasingly technical world in which we are and will be living for many years to come. We are saying we support that.

What we are opposed to is the kinds of things done by past Liberal Governments, and now by a Conservative Government, which permit companies and individuals to avoid taxes by claiming they were doing scientific research when in fact they were not.

[Translation]

Mr. Fontaine: Mr. Speaker, this is the first time that I speak in the House after the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow) since the crushing defeat of his party in Manitoba, where he worked for the provincial government for five weeks using his expense account as a Member of Parliament.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: May I remind the Hon. Member that his question or comment must be pertinent to the speech given by the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow). I would ask him to remember this, please.

Mr. Fontaine: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member boasts about technological development and research. I find him inconsistent, as usual, because when we were talking about Bill C-22 on pharmaceuticals, we even saw this Hon. Member rise several times to prevent its passage. This Bill would have immediately created 1,300 jobs in Montreal, 3,000 in Canada, and resulted in investments of $1.5 billion; he was against it. I ask him today as well why he speaks for the development of research and technology and is against free trade, which would help our high-tech companies, the best in the world, go to work in the United States without restriction. Free trade lets them sell their services and specialize, but he is opposed to it! So I find, Mr. Speaker, that his representations today are completely unacceptable and inconsistent, as one would expect from him. He is as inconsistent as the Hon. Member for Laurier (Mr. Berger), who presented the motion today. He too was against Bill C-22 and is against free trade. They are inconsistent with their policy. Today they are making us waste another day in this House because of their inconsistency, the inconsistency of the Liberal-socialist alliance.

[English]

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, in our criticism of Bill C-22 there was not a single word in opposition to pharmaceutical companies, multinational or Canadian—

Mr. Fontaine: You forget!

Mr. Orlikow: I listened to the Hon. Member and did not interrupt. I would hope, particularly as my time is almost up, that he would do me the same courtesy.

We do not object to pharmaceutical companies doing research in Canada. What we object to is extending the length of exclusivity the companies had. We said, and all the evidence is there, that under the law we had until that Bill was passed the multinational corporations were able to recoup their investment in research and make substantial profits. We said drug companies are among the most profitable corporations of any in Canada. We said it was not necessary for them or anyone else to have this legislation in order to do research. For the Hon. Member to say that our opposition to that Bill would in any way harm scientific research is the same kind of nonsense we hear from him almost every day of the week.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Resuming debate.

Mr. Len Hopkins (Renfrew—Nipissing—Pembroke): Mr. Speaker, first I want to compliment my colleague, the Hon. Member for Laurier (Mr. Berger), for putting forward this motion today. It is needed in order to bring out some of the inequities, indeed some of the misleading information, coming from the mouths of government Members.

In my speech today I want to zero in on the fact that the Government is reducing funds available for R and D. That certainly is true with regard to Crown corporations. At the same time, the Government is trying to give the impression that it is promoting private enterprise instead. I want to point out where that is not necessarily true either.

• (1250)

The Government has a habit of making high profile announcements so that people do not realize they are getting cheated. The Government makes its announcements in the midst of all kinds of publicity, with two or three cabinet Ministers in attendance or even the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney). The Government leads Canadians to believe that it is performing wonders, but they have come to understand the Government and the way it operates. That is why it cannot maintain credibility across the country. While it pretends to be doing more for the country, it is in fact doing less in many areas.

For example, the Government says that it is promoting private enterprise and will downgrade Crown corporations. It is creating the impression that it is against public institutions because private enterprise should lead the way. Today I want to point out how private enterprise is still living off the Government quite substantially in some areas.

On the other hand, we have seen the Government drastically cut the budget of one of the best research institutions in this country. In the 1985 Budget of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), the Government cut 50 per cent from its grants to Atomic Energy of Canada Limited in the research and development field.

Since then, it has lifted $60 million of that $100 million from Atomic Energy of Canada Limited, as well as $70 million from the reserves of that Crown corporation. This represents a total reduction of $130 million to date. That is the Government's contribution to one of the great research and development Crown corporations of this country. At the same time it was going to reduce the contribution to Atomic Energy of Canada Limited by another $25 million this year and another $15 million next year, which would give the Government its pound of flesh of a $100 million reduction.

However, the people who manage AECL have informed the Government that it just cannot continue to operate if it loses another $25 million this year. The Government has spent months thinking about this situation and finally decided on one amendment. It will require the Crown corporation to reduce its budget by $11 million this fiscal year, but has said absolutely nothing about next year or the year after. The Crown corporation does not know what its financial future will be. What will happen to the other $29 million that the Government still wants to reduce from the budget of AECL?

Many people only think about nuclear energy when we talk about Atomic Energy of Canada Limited. Not only does it deal with the peaceful use of nuclear energy, AECL does research in many fields. For example, it is at the labs of AECL in Chalk River where the new O-ring for the space shuttle has been developed. People will recall that the failure of the O-ring in the Challenger was cited as the cause of that explosion. The development of the new O-ring was done at Chalk River where AECL labs were contracted by the United States. That is just one example of the major projects it has done for international governments.

AECL also performs research and development for private enterprise. It can do this much cheaper because it already has the facilities to carry out R and D. The Government is of the opinion that if it dumps more money into major private companies, the money is better spent. The fact is that it could be duplicating research activities. Furthermore, a private enterprise company that receives substantial funds in the form of tax breaks for other incentives will likely request the right of property to that new research. Therefore, it will not be shared on a broader base in Canada.

When research and development in Canada is done in Crown corporations or government Departments, that research and development is available to all individuals and companies across the country. If they cannot perform the research and development, it can be contracted to a Crown corporation like the National Research Council. That is another Crown corporation which has suffered budget cut-backs by the Government since it took office in 1984.

Let me explain how the Government wants private enterprise to proceed and stand on its own feet. It is very interesting to analyse a financial report delivered by André Plourde of the Department of Economics of the University of Ottawa in October, 1987. It was prepared for Energy Options, a conference highlighted by the attendance of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Masse).

This financial report deals with exploration expenditure, tax expenditures and grants, northern and offshore eastern Canada. In 1985, these companies spent a total of $2.078 billion. Mr. Plourde points out that of the $2.078 billion, $1.587 billion was paid by the Government of Canada and the company paid $491 million. That is the Government's idea of private enterprise standing on its own feet without support as the Government would support Crown corporations. This means that 23.6 per cent of the total expenditures on exploration by oil and gas companies in Canada was paid for by private enterprise companies. The Government, which says that private enterprise must stand on its own feet, paid 76.4 per cent. So they are paid over 75 per cent of the money that those oil and gas exploration companies paid out during a one year term of this Government.

The Government says that private enterprise must stand on its own feet, that we are going to bring Crown corporations into line. But it cuts the budget of one of the best Crown corporations in Canada, Atomic Energy of Canada Limited, by 50 per cent, at the same time that it is giving 76 per cent of taxpayers' money for exploration by the oil and gas companies. Canadian citizens are certainly not seeing those benefits showing up at the gas pumps of this country.

AECL cannot write off taxes because it is not a profit organization. That is why it is a Crown corporation. But it can do the research cheaper, and the work it does for the companies is returned to those companies which in turn pay taxes to the Government. Long-term benefits is what we have to look at and the Government is looking at short-term, opportunistic politics and, of course, highlighting everything it does is its policy of leading people to think that it is doing more when in fact it is doing less.

The cost to the taxpayers of the oil and gas companies under this Government runs into the billions of dollars. Yet, it will cut the budgets of the National Research Council of Canada, which serves all people, all businesses and all corporations in Canada. It is the same with our other Crown corporations such as Atomic Energy of Canada Limited. We have also seen the cancellation and closing down of the Algonquin Radio Observatory in Algonquin Park in eastern Ontario. This was done without a whimper from the Associate Minister of National Defence (Mr. Dick) who tells us he is the Minister to protect eastern Ontario. Some protection. He never uttered a word.

This Government is paying out these billions of dollars to companies which are doing research and exploration for non-renewable resources, whereas in the nuclear energy field Canada has the safest and best record in the world for research. We have enough energy in that field alone to last for hundreds and hundreds of years. It is also cheaper.

I would like to read from an article in which Mr. de Grandpré was interviewed by a certain reporter. When asked whether Canadian politicians help or hinder companies like Northern Telecom to compete internationally it indicated: "He snaps forward and starts speaking with animated intensity, particularly with this Government. The politicians are all saying the same thing, that we have to have more research and development capacity in Canada, as the future of this country rests on high technology products. Yet Ottawa's new tax reform package would reduce the tax rates for research and development." There it is from one of our major industrialists. He says that that amply demonstrates that politicians "don't understand how the game is played".

He is quite willing to tell you what he is doing about it. He has written letters to key politicians and is making his arguments face to face with cabinet Ministers in the present Government. As a leading member of the powerful Business Council on National Issues, he has urged other chief executives of big corporations to do likewise.

I will relate back to something I have already said, and repeat that billions of dollars are being paid out to the gas and oil companies of this country by the Government which says it wants private enterprise to stand on its own feet. Do you, Mr. Speaker, think that the large corporations that represent oil and gas will speak out against the Government as long as they are getting these kinds of tax breaks from the taxpayers of this country? They are going to leave well enough alone. The article goes on to indicate that he was confronting senior bureaucrats about such matters as Ottawa's plan to eliminate tax deductions for the expense of buildings where R and D is done, and to say: "I told the Deputy Minister, 'do you think you can do research and development without a roof over your head?'".

There is a threat. If the Government reduces the tax rates, Mr. de Grandpré says that his company will do its research in some other country and take away several hundred well-paid jobs from Bell Northern Research, the largest private research development facility in Canada. He also says: "The Canadians who are graduating from our universities are going to walk over to BNR and say: 'Can I have a job' and we will say: 'Sorry, but we are not expanding our research and development facilities in Canada'. They will say: 'Why?' Well, because the Government has introduced this stupid piece of legislation.

When Mr. de Grandpré talks like that, the politicians have to listen because his company has single handedly given Canada an international presence in technology. When economic commentators say Canada is a world-wide leader in telecommunications, they do not mean Canada, they mean Bell and Nortel. That is part of the story.

I would also like to say that Crown corporations and government institutions in this country are still very capable of doing a lot of R and D in their field as long as the Government does not continue to cut the ground out from underneath them.

I talked about the good return companies get by contracting out research and development to Crown corporations such as Atomic Energy of Canada Limited. I talked about how foreign companies and other international governments ask that certain research projects be done. The Government does not seem to understand, nor does it want to understand, the nuclear industry side of research and development of AECL. It does not understand that it is doing a broad basis of research in this country, not just the narrow things that people attribute to it.

For example, the cobalt therapy unit which is used today not only in hospitals in Canada, but throughout the world, for the treatment of cancer, was designed at the Chalk River nuclear laboratories of AECL. That is something that is not talked about very far and wide today because we have critics of the peaceful uses of nuclear energy who want to have people think there is something horrendous about all of this. At the same time this type of research and development has produced CANDU the safest reactor in the world, which produces enough power to run 50 per cent of the industry in the Province of Ontario. Hence it can take credit for supporting 40 per cent of the jobs of the labour market in Ontario alone.

• (1310)

That is the type of research and development that has been done by this Crown corporation, Atomic Energy of Canada Limited, which is the Crown corporation from which the Government has cut its research and development budget by 50 per cent, from $200 million down to $100 million. It has lost some good scientists over this matter. The sad part of the proposals of the Government is that when our leading scientists find out that there is no support for their future in this country in high-tech fields they leave to go elsewhere.

I call upon the Government today to take serious note of the financial problems of National Research of Canada and of Atomic Energy of Canada Limited and to do something about it. It should treat these entities seriously because there is more involved than what the Government is paying attention to.

[Translation]

Mr. Fontaine: Mr. Speaker, while the Hon. Member for Renfrew—Nipissing—Pembroke (Mr. Hopkins) was making his speech and commenting on our scientific research programs, my colleague who happens to be a financial expert from the Province of Quebec, Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance, and Member for Trois-Rivières (Mr. Vincent) was telling me that the team of which he was a member in 1983 had advocated the scientific research tax credit program. It had been proposed by the then Minister of Finance MacEachen who is now blocking our legislation in the Senate. He had stated that the program would cost $100 million, but twenty-odd months later $2.5 billion had been sunk into it and we put an end to the program because it had not produced anything worthwhile.

I have a question for him. What would have happened had the $2.5 billion been wisely spent on genuine scientific research? Why did they fail to impose some kind of restraints on these scientific research programs? Why did they go ahead with this scientific research program which ended up costing Canadians an additional $2.5 billion?

Second, with respect to atomic energy research development, he said we could do a lot more to promote research in that field. I think it is a debatable issue because his own Government, his own Leader or so-called Leader of 11 out of 33 Members—22 are against and 11 in favour—and the Member sitting in the front row has been saying lately that he is against nuclear submarines... As his representative in caucus today, can he say he supports nuclear research while at the same time speaking against putting the results of that research to good use in our own nuclear submarines?

I wish he would enlighten me on these two questions.

[English]

Mr. Hopkins: Mr. Speaker, with regard to the program mentioned by the Hon. Member, he cannot defend his statement that there were no positive effects from that program. There were. I pointed out to the Government today where it has gone wrong. It still has not seen the light. The Hon. Member does not see very many lights around here either, as we hear him speak from time to time.

The Hon. Member talked about the nuclear submarine program. I want to point out to him that I was at a defence committee meeting when representatives of the nuclear industry were present. I asked them a question about what benefits this program would bring directly to Atomic Energy of Canada Limited. They said that they did not want to mislead anyone, that there would not be all that many benefits to that Crown corporation. The benefits would largely be to the nuclear related industries of Canada on the private enterprise side. The Hon. Member is trying to make a mountain out of a molehill.

He talked about 22 Members in this caucus. First, he cannot identify the 22 Members. As a matter of fact, I understood after it was all over—I was busy in a nomination contest at the time—that even my name was thrown around. I want to point out to the Hon. Member that my name was never involved in that.

When we consider the results of the polls that came out the other morning I think what the Hon. Member should be doing for the Conservative Party of Canada is recommending some differences in his own Party out in the open. He would be surprised at how they might rise up in the polls across Canada. The Hon. Member has a guilt complex. In fact, I think the way the Hon. Member discussed this when he was on his feet shows that he has a guilt complex. He is not speaking out against things with which he disagrees with his own Leader and other Members of Cabinet. Surely he cannot support the Government. I know that the Hon. Member is one who gets up dynamically to say things—not always well informed—but he says them anyway. I know that a Member such as that in that massive caucus has all kinds of disagreements about the Government of Canada.

Mr. Fontaine: No, sir!

Mr. Hopkins: Why does he not have the intestinal fortitude to stand up to be counted? He is always talking about people standing up to be counted. I do not mind standing up to be counted. I support my Leader. He is ahead in the polls—way ahead of the Leader of the Government. I know that the Hon. Member has a guilt complex and is very concerned. He is worried about the next election.

In the number of years that I have been here, I have seen vocal Members such as the Hon. Member come into the House, and I have seen them leave, too. Some of them leave within four years and some after having served one term. They do so because they are always up on their feet. The public realizes that they do not always have their facts correct.

I think that the Hon. Member might be jealous of being behind in the polls. He might feel a sense of guilt because he is not coming out and saying the things that he he really means to say. I suggest that he go up to the Chalk River nuclear laboratories and get a top-notch briefing so that will understand what the Government is doing to the nation.

At the same time would he ask the President of the Treasury Board (Miss Carney) why, when she was Minister of Energy, when the cuts were made she would not even see a delegation of municipal Governments from the upper Ottawa Valley who came here to talk about these massive cuts and what they would mean to the economics of the area and to employment? The Government talks about jobs, jobs, jobs. When the Government took office there were 2,350 jobs at that site. They are now down to 1,900. There will be more cuts if the Government continues the way it is going.

I plead with the uninformed Member opposite to go to the Chalk River nuclear laboratories, taking some other people who sit over there with him. They should find out what is going on in the high-tech field in the country so that they can then stand up with pride in the House to ask intelligent questions about energy, for example, and about research and development. He does not have to drag a red herring across the floor of the House about some mystical 22 Members in the Opposition Party and talk about their Leader. We have the best Leader in the country today. The Prime Minister of Canada lacks credibility, as does his entire Government. If the Hon. Member continues in the way he is going he will not have any left either.

• (1320)

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Member for Vancouver—Kingsway (Mr. Waddell), on a brief question or comment.

Mr. Waddell: I find the logic of the Hon. Member really strange. Here we have a Liberal saying to a Progressive Conservative that, if the PCs stab their Leader in the back, maybe they too will go up in the polls. That is extraordinary.

Mr. Hopkins: They did it in 1982-83.

Mr. Waddell: Given the fact of the Chernobyl and Three Mile Island accidents, and given the fact of a lack of sales for CANDU reactors, and given the fact that Atomic Energy of Canada is all but bankrupt, where does the Hon. Member see the new thrust for nuclear energy coming? Or are we in fact at the point where atomic energy has perhaps seen its day, with energy consumers moving to non-generated forms of energy?

Mr. Hopkins: The question is typical of questions coming from the New Democratic Party.

Mr. Waddell: It was a straight question.

Mr. Hopkins: It is very typical of a New Democratic Party question. Here we have yet another uninformed Member. As a matter of fact, what the Hon. Member does not know is that the Soviet Union built many "Chernobyls" inasmuch as it failed to build into its nuclear plants the kind of safety features built into the CANDU reactor.

What the Hon. Member has not said to this House is that the reactor that was in use in Chernobyl, and which is in use in other similar facilities in Russia, has no relationship whatsoever in its mode of operation to the CANDU reactor. It is a different system altogether.

The Soviet Union built its nuclear plants without due regard to safety. That is not the case with the CANDU reactor. The Chalk River nuclear laboratories not only developed a safe reactor in and of itself, but built into it one back-up system after another. It is for that reason that the CANDU reactor does not suffer from the same problems as those in use in the Soviet Union.

And what is going on in the Soviet Union now as a result of the Chernobyl accident? The New Democratic Party Member does not make mention of what is happening in the Soviet Union now, because to do so would be to show the flaw in his argument. The Soviet Union today is accepting advice from Great Britain. As well, Canada has offered to the Soviet Union expert advice on developing nuclear energy for peaceful purposes. And I want to point out that when we are talking about CANDU reactors, we are talking about the peaceful uses of nuclear energy.

Is the Hon. Member saying that 40 per cent of the labour market in the Province of Ontario is not important to him or to his Party? As I pointed out earlier, were it not for the CANDU reactor, those jobs would not exist in Ontario today. At this point in time, 50 per cent of the energy consumed by industry in Ontario is generated by CANDU nuclear reactors.

To have that same level of energy generated by coal-fired plants would have involved the importing of over $7 billion worth of coal from the State of Pennsylvania.

The Hon. Member and his Party, the New Democratic Party, make a good deal of the fact that they pay a great deal of attention to the environment of this country. Just imagine what the burning of $7 billion worth of more coal would have done to the environment of the North American continent, to say nothing of Canada itself.

I think it is time that the New Democratic Party stopped talking out of both sides of its mouth. It is time that members of that Party got their facts straight. Nuclear-generated electricity is the cheapest energy source available. Without it, Ontario electricity rate payers would be paying an additional 33 1/3 per cent on their hydro bills.

We have the safest system in the world, and it is a system that produces sufficient energy to fuel 50 per cent of the industry in the Province of Ontario, Canada's industrial heartland. Just imagine what would happen to the social programs in this country without the industrial base in central Canada to generate the tax revenues to support such programs?

In knocking this program, the New Democratic Party is knocking the system that funds old age pensions, that funds the unemployment insurance program, and other social programs. In taking the position that it is in respect of this issue, is the New Democratic Party saying that it no longer supports labour in this country; that it no longer supports cheap electrical power for those Canadians who can avail themselves of it—and this service is available to citizens in parts of Canada other than Ontario. The CANDU is a Canadian-developed reactor, and it is the safest nuclear reactor available in the world today. In addition to being the safest, with built-in back-up systems, it is also the least expensive.

Are the members of the New Democratic Party saying that the taxpayers of this country should introduce a totally different system for hydroelectric generation, a system that is going to cost far more money and one which will take money away from every household in Canada?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Ottawa West (Mr. Daubney), on debate.

Mr. David Daubney (Ottawa West): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased that the Hon. Member for Laurier (Mr. Berger) has raised the issue of research and development for debate today. It seems to me that these issues are not debated often enough in this Chamber.

The Hon. Member and I served together on the Standing Committee on Research, Science and Technology. In fact, we are both founding members of that committee. The fact that that committee was only founded in this Parliament is in itself an indictment of the policies of past Liberal Governments. Prior to the present Government taking office, there had never been a committee of this House dedicated to looking at the key issues of research, science and technology.

I have the greatest respect for the Hon. Member for Laurier, and I am pleased that he has raised the issue, inasmuch as the debate provides me with an opportunity to review for the House the Government's record in the area of research and development.

Today's economic environment is one of intense international competition. In this new order, science and technology have become the driving forces in national economies, in international trade, and within our workplaces and our homes. Over the next 25 to 30 years, these developments will produce social and economic changes as profound as those we have experienced over the last 200 years.

Innovation will clearly be the key to success, and it is industry that must lead the innovation process. But, in order to effectively execute science and technology, industry needs the support of Government. Government must provide the leadership, the co-ordination, the policies which foster a spirit of innovation.

Over the last four years, the Canadian Government has made it an urgent priority to pursue our national economic and social goals through the more effective use of science and technology. More important, it has approached that task in a thoughtful and co-ordinated fashion.

We all, of course, know that not everything can be accomplished overnight. Similarly, as our predecessors in Government showed us, little is gained by adopting a "quick fix, let's throw money at the problem" approach. The issues we must deal with are so pervasive and so fundamental that we literally require a complete rethinking and transformation of government policy, with science and technology at the centre of the government agenda.

I should like to touch briefly on some of the specific policy initiatives which the Canadian Government has brought forward, actions which underline its commitment to making technology and research and development national priorities. One of the federal Government's first tasks was to develop a national agenda for science and technology.

The Minister of State for Science and Technology (Mr. Oberle), and his colleagues, held major consultations with hundreds of individuals, groups, associations, and businesses across the country, as well as with other levels of Government. Up to the time that this Government took office, there had never been a meeting of federal and provincial science Ministers. Here we are, almost at the end of the 20th century, and successive Liberal Governments up to this point had not thought it worth while for Ministers at all levels to meet in order to deal with these fundamental issues. It is little wonder that this country fell so far behind other Western countries.

Last spring an historic national science and technology policy was signed by the federal territorial and provincial Ministers. Once again, Mr. Speaker, for the first time in our history we had a national science and technology policy. We had never as a country had such a policy, a shocking indictment of the previous Government. Through this agreement all regions of the country will work together to use science and technology to promote economic, social and regional development. The policy emphasizes that governments at all levels will work in partnership with business, universities and labour to encourage the widespread diffusion of technology throughout Canada. Every effort will be made to strengthen applied research and industrial innovation. Canadian industry will be encouraged to develop strategic technologies geared toward the manufacturing, service and natural resource sectors. Canadian universities will be supported in their efforts to turn out the highly qualified people we need to develop and work with the new technologies.

For the first time federal, provincial and territorial governments have committed themselves to promote entrepreneurial activity, to recognize how critical research and development are to our economic, social and cultural future and to set about removing the barriers to research, development and innovation in Canada. The national policy was the first instalment of the science and technology framework for action. The second was launched on March 24, 1987. Innovaction is a five-track strategy which focuses Canada's science and technology efforts in five critical areas; development of strategic technologies; industrial innovation and technology diffusion; effective management of federal science and technology resources; human resources for science and technology and, perhaps most important, public awareness in science and technology.

Under Innovaction, specific initiatives have been announced to strengthen key areas of science and technology where Canada's performance has historically been weak, and to build on areas of traditional Canadian strength. These initiatives have included a $97 million federal micro-electronics strategy, a technology diffusion policy and increased funding for a number of industry support programs which have been proven effective. Our Government has also taken concrete action to ensure that Canada remains on the leading edge of space technology. Just last month the Government announced that Canada would be participating in this space station project. Our participation in this project, the most significant international space project of this century and the largest international technology development project ever undertaken, is a measure of our technological maturity as a nation. The benefits that this initiative holds for all regions of Canada for our industries and universities are immense. We estimate that more than $5 billion in space and terrestrial spin-offs and 80,000 person years of employment will be realized in Canada over the next 15 years from the space station project. I daresay that even Hon. Members opposite would have to admit that this is a wise investment, an investment in excellence, an investment in our future.

May I say a word about the Canadian space agency which the Government has announced. It will be established to co-ordinate our activities in space. For perhaps the twelfth time my strong commitment is that the space agency be headquartered in the national capital region reflecting the truly national nature of Canada's space industry. Ottawa is not alone in having important space elements. Montreal is not alone in the excellence it has developed in the aerospace area. As I wrote in an article which appeared in Montreal's newspaper, The Gazette on March 31, 1987:

> Significant space related industries exist now in Vancouver, Toronto, Cambridge, Ontario, Saskatoon, Winnipeg and the National Capital region.

As well as Montreal. My article went on:

> The space program cannot be seen as the child of any region, without losing credibility with the rest of the country. Its headquarters must be located in politically or regionally neutral territory, so that the sub-contracting of some of its scientific facilities to the regions will not be subject to suspicions of regional favouritism.
> Canada does not need a single, regional centre of excellence in Montreal.

Or anywhere else for that matter:

> We need to make Canada a national centre of space science excellence. This means targeting all of our regional scientific resources to play a role in the development of our space program, and ensuring effective central scientific and political co-ordination of the program.

As I have said, working for and with all sectors of Canadian society, industry, universities, organized labour, researchers from the public and private sectors and young people is the cornerstone of our federal science and technology effort. It was one of the prime reasons for the National Conference on Technology and Innovation which the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) hosted in Toronto this past January. I had the honour of attending that conference which brought together over 200 key decision makers from industry, universities and labour from across Canada.

Participants discussed some of the crucial challenges facing the economy as well as the ways in which we can take co-ordinated action to mount a truly national response to these challenges. I do not think I am being biased when I say that this event was a great success. I believe that most of the participants would agree with me when I say that the dialogue we forged in Toronto in January bodes well for the future.

As we speak, we are building on the consensus we achieved in Toronto and on the concerns and recommendations which were brought forward by the participants through a series of regional conferences. Regional conferences have already been held in Vancouver and Regina. The Atlantic regional conference is taking place today in Saint John and we will be convening conferences next week in Hamilton and two weeks from now in Montreal. These regional conferences have allowed more Canadians from all areas of the country to have input to this vital national dialogue. During January's national conference, the Prime Minister announced $1.3 billion in funding for new science and technology initiatives under the Innovaction strategy. Our universities, I am pleased to say, will be the primary focus for these new funds. For example, we have already announced an $80 million National Scholarships Program to recognize and encourage our brightest young men and women to pursue studies in the sciences and engineering. We will also be establishing national networks of centres of excellence designed to support and enhance world class research in order to provide the scientific and technological base for our country's future long-term competitiveness.

Still on the subject of university research and training, the federal Government in the February, 1986, Budget introduced the first ever five-year financial plan for the granting councils totalling $3.4 billion over five years. This represents a $1.1 billion or a 50 per cent increase over the previous five-year period. A second announcement was made at the conference. While it did not receive the same volume of attention as the Prime Minister's announcement, it will likely have an even more pronounced impact on our future property as a nation.

The Minister for Science and Technology announced the launching of a $10 million national co-operative effort to increase public awareness about the importance of science and technology to Canada. This initiative will provide enhanced federal support for public awareness projects and activities undertaken by organizations outside of government. We will also be proceeding with a long-term national campaign involving governments, industry, educators and others to raise public awareness of science and technology.

Briefly, the Government's goal with respect to public awareness is to foster the development of a science culture in Canada. It is vitally important that we strengthen those cultural characteristics which can nourish the inquisitive mind the intellectual genius of our people.

More Canadians should be made aware of the significant accomplishments of our scientists, our engineers and our researchers. We also have to make more Canadians aware of the increasingly inexorable link between science and technology and economic growth and prosperity. Perhaps most important, we want to inform the young people and particularly young women of the opportunities offered by science and technology. We want to encourage them to study math and sciences and to make them aware of the exciting careers that they can pursue if they do so.

Having established a national policy and a federal strategy designed to improve our international competitiveness and create sustained economic growth and prosperity for Canada, the Government initiated a series of organizational measures to support and promote these developments. In February of last year, the Prime Minister chaired the first meeting of the National Advisory Board on Science and Technology, the first time in Canada that such a board has been chaired by a Prime Minister. The board, whose membership includes some of Canada's most eminent scientists, educators and industry and labour leaders, is assessing national goals and policies for science and technology and their application to Canada's economy.

We have established for the first time a council of science and technology Ministers to monitor the implementation of the new national policy and to continue consultations with Canada's science, technology and entrepreneurial communities.

As the House will know, yesterday the Government tabled legislation for the creation of a new Department of Industry, Science and Technology. The elevation of science and technology to a senior Department is yet another clear signal of the Government's priorities. The new Department will have the mandate to work toward a closer integration of Canadian industry with Canadian scientific knowledge and technological skills. Success in this regard will require a concerted effort with the business and science communities. One of the new Department's principal objectives will be to mobilize and to catalyse this effort.

Industry will come to see the new Department as its advocate with respect to other government Departments and agencies, whether we are talking about taxation policy as we are today or trade, resource development and regulations governing, for example, transportation or communications. The new Department will seek to ensure the efficiency of Canadian production processes, technological and managerial skill levels, availability of risk capital, access to markets and many other key issues in this all-important area of research and development.

Another key activity of the new Department of Industry, Science and Technology will be to foster the development of strategic technologies such as biotechnology, information technology and advanced materials. When talking about integrating science and industrial development, the strategic technologies are of particular importance. To this end, the Government will continue to pursue such vehicles as joint investments with firms and consortia, targeted research in government laboratories, international prospecting efforts and increased funding for the training of highly qualified personnel.

As a Member from the National Capital region, may I say a word about our national laboratories. Many of these laboratories were established over 100 years ago, and I think of the research being done at the Central Experimental Farm about which I asked a question in the House today as an excellent example of that. These laboratories have been contributing to the growth of science and technology in Canada for many, many years in an effective way. The scientists and researchers who work there are dedicated public servants who are enhancing our lifestyle and improving our national effort in science and technology. They need to work, in my opinion, in a closer way than they have in the past with the universities, community colleges and business. This is a part of the Government's effort in this area, building on the strength of those laboratories which are funded to the tune of $4.4 billion in the last fiscal year, while ensuring that the technology and ideas developed there are adapted and applied in the real world where they can create jobs and new opportunities.

All of us here are familiar with phrases like the information economy and the second industrial revolution. They are used in many obscure ways, but what they mean is quite simple. Science and technology no longer can play a minor supporting role in our society. Science and technology have become the key driving forces for social and economic growth. The task which confronts Canada in restructuring our economy, rethinking our attitudes and refitting our industries is immense. It presents all sectors of our economy and society with formidable challenges, and I can say with great pride that our Government's response to these challenges has been exemplary. Our track record in science and technology is commendable. It bodes well for the future of this great nation.

In closing, I again thank the Hon. Member for Laurier for giving me the opportunity to highlight some of the Government's significant accomplishments in science and technology.

Mr. Berger: Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for his contribution to this debate today, and I would say as well that I have enjoyed working with him on the Research, Science and Technology Committee. I would point out to him that while it is indeed the first time there has been a Research, Science and Technology Committee, there was another committee of the House on which I served for a number of years which dealt with these issues. Therefore, the question was not totally ignored, as some people might conclude from the Hon. Member's comments.

I would have appreciated it if the Hon. Member had spoken to the motion a bit more than he did. By way of this motion, I have tried to raise some legitimate concerns which have been raised with me by people who are involved in research and development in Canada. I would have liked to have heard the Hon. Member's comments on that.

I realize that we do not always solve these problems through debate in the House, but my intention today was to put this on the agenda to indicate to the Government that we were indeed watching and that there is a concern about this. Hopefully, we will be able to see some further progress in addressing some of the concerns relating to tax support for research and development.

The Hon. Member indicated that the imperatives for science and technology would require a rethinking and transformation of the Government's agenda. I think I know what he has in mind. Certainly those people who are intimately familiar with science and technology and the rapid pace of technological change tell us very often that we in Canada lack an R and D culture. He referred to the need for enhanced public awareness.

I would remind the Hon. Member that John Evans, the President of Allelix, a company doing research in biotechnology in Toronto, spoke to the National Conference on Technology and Innovation in January. He said that if we are talking about developing an R and D culture, why should the Department of Finance be excluded. Indeed, the kind of concerns that Dr. Evans raised are the ones I tried to raise by way of the motion before the House this afternoon.

The Hon. Member talked about the national science and technology policy. I would suggest to him that a statement of objectives alone does not make a policy. The so-called policy that has been put forward by this Government is a laudable statement of objectives, but it is very difficult, in reading that policy, to conclude how the Government intends to go about reaching those objectives. That is what is really required to have a meaningful policy against which we can measure the Government's performance and indeed, the performance of the economy. I would also say that one important objective has not been committed to, and that is any kind of a spending target for R and D. I would like to ask him to comment on that.

I would remind him that the Leader of his Party, before taking office, committed his Government to doubling spending on research and development over the life of his first mandate. We know that has not happened. It has gone down. Not only that, there is no mention whatsoever of a target and we do not even know if the Government considers it a worth-while objective to try and raise spending to any particular level by 1990, 1992 or 1997. Does the Hon. Member regard that omission in the so-called national science and technology policy as a serious deficiency? Does he regard it as important that such an objective should be stated by the Government along with some kind of guideline so that we can judge the progress we are making? Does he not feel that in order to make this statement of objectives a true policy we need such a target?

I put it to him that all of the items he mentioned are worthy of mention. Before I go too far, some of them I would take issue with. He talked about the granting councils. I ask him to try and be accurate when he talks about a 50 per cent increase over the previous budget. He knows very well that the budgets of the granting councils have in effect been frozen and that even with the Government's contribution to match those of the private sector, the budgets of those councils will barely keep pace with inflation. Yesterday afternoon people from the Association of Universities and Colleges of Canada appeared before our committee and confirmed for the umpteenth time that that is the case. They talked about a decrease in purchasing power of the council's budgets since 1984 when the Government took office.

In any event, does he not consider, as a loyal Conservative if you will, that in business thinking we talk about a bottom line? There is a bottom line when it comes to R and D and that is the amount of spending as a percentage of the GNP. That is the common indicator used to compare the performance of one country versus another. If one goes by that bottom line, the Government, despite all its initiatives, has lead us in the wrong direction. We have moved backward in R and D spending since the last election. We have not increased scientific activity and spending on research and development.

Mr. Daubney: Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for his series of questions. I wrote down about eight of them and I doubt that in the few minutes I have available I will be able to deal with them all. However, I will deal with them quickly in the order in which he raised them.

He referred to a previous committee of this House which dealt with these issues. I was also a member of the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates and, as the name implies, it was a grab-bag or catch-all committee which dealt with about 19 government agencies or Departments as I recall. It was a very disparate group of agencies which previous Governments felt did not justify their own committees. That meant we would meet perhaps once or twice a year to deal with key issues such as the estimates of the National Research Council and other agencies. That just was not good enough and I am delighted and proud that our Government recognized that and finally addressed the issue by creating this agency two and a half years ago.

The Hon. Member was concerned that I had not spoken to the motion. Let me say a few words about R and D from a tax point of view. I remind him and the House that prior to 1985 only scientific research was allowed for tax consideration, leaving aside the terrible boondoggle involved in the SRTC scam which robbed the national Treasury and taxpayers of billions of dollars. We are still counting the losses. That set back the whole process immeasurably, I am afraid. Leaving that aside, it was only in the 1985 Budget introduced by this Government that we added experimental development to the definition of research for tax purposes. That is a significant increase in the scope of eligible expenses for tax consideration. Our committee played a role in that.

I remind him that I and other members of the committee got together with the Deputy Minister of National Revenue and people like the Canadian Advanced Technology Association and, under parliamentary reform, we were able to get the kind of changes which have improved the tax situation for our high-tech firms. In fact, the level of R and D spending through the tax system is higher in Canada than in most other OECD countries. That level has increased significantly over the last four years. A number of international companies have looked to our tax system as one which encourages research and development. That is not to say it is perfect or that some of us would not like to see further changes.

Another area where I have fought a number of battles on behalf of firms in my riding concerns what in my view has been a slow process in the Department of National Revenue in getting tax audits of scientific research and development spending so that these credits can be approved and put into the hands of the companies so they can do the new research they want to do. I am pleased to say as a result of pressure from myself and other Members, the Government announced on April 11 a process to expedite refunds for research and development claimants.

Let me talk about this culture, which was the next issue the Hon. Member raised. I am very excited about the public awareness program because to me this country needs to be made aware in a popular way, perhaps through a program similar to Participaction which was so successful in the fitness area, of just how fundamental these issues are to our growth as a country. One of the really exciting things to me about free trade is it is going to force Canada to think more about research and development issues. Free trade is all about competitiveness and productivity. R and D is a key to attaining both those objectives without which we are destined to be, and would have been had we followed the thinking of the previous Government and the NDP, definitely in the ranks of Third World countries at the turn of the century. Free trade will force us to do a lot more R and D and be more focused in our management and spending in this area. That in itself will contribute, I am confident, to this science culture that we have to cultivate in Canada.

I see my time has expired, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Resuming debate.

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, I, too, wish to compliment the Hon. Member for Laurier (Mr. Berger) on introducing this motion today. It is important because the question of R and D and technological innovation goes to the heart of the well-being of our country and its future. All Members who have spoken in the debate this afternoon have emphasized the importance of research and development to the nation's future. Indeed, all Members agree on the importance of research and development.

• (1400)

Statistics show that investment in research and development guarantees more employment per dollar than any other form of investment. A study conducted by the Ministry of State for Science and Technology showed an employment growth rate 2.3 times higher than that of industries classified as performing no research. Those research-intensive industries showed a 66.5 per cent higher rate of real output. The study also showed that these industries had a 43 per cent increase in productivity and a 57 per cent slower rate in price increases.

As this and many other studies indicate, the greater the research and development, the greater the increase in productivity and job opportunities. As well, there is a substantially lower increase in cost of products produced than in industries that do not carry out research and development.

There is another dimension to research which has not been mentioned in this debate. I believe all Members will also agree that research and development also leads to a growth in human knowledge which, in itself, is an important goal. It is important that Canadians participate in this tremendous explosion of knowledge in the 20th century.

I recall listening to the famous futurologist, Buckminster Fuller, addressing a conference in which he stated that 90 per cent of all the important discoveries that have occurred in the history of the human race were made in his lifetime. There has been a tremendous acceleration in human discoveries and knowledge in almost every field which has made life so different than ever before.

Canadians are proud that there have been some very significant Canadian contributions to this growth of knowledge. Concern has also been expressed that we are not doing enough to ensure that Canadians continue to be involved in the growth of knowledge from which the Canadian economy and our way of life can benefit.

Let me emphasize that research does not only involve industrial benefits, but involves human benefits as well. An increase of human knowledge increases not only our philosophic understanding but our understanding of the universe. Increased knowledge will provide a better understanding of medicine so that we can alleviate sickness. An increase in knowledge and understanding allows us to manage our environment and reduce environmental risks. In short, knowledge in its fullest sense can contribute to the well-being of our way of life.

In a debate such as this we must also discuss the record of the present Government. I think it is fair to say that when the Government was elected in 1984 there was a fair amount of optimism and hope among scientists and the research community in Canada. After all, in his book Where I Stand, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) devoted much importance to increasing research and development. He pointed out that the goal of a Conservative Government would be to increase research and development in this country substantially. He wrote: "Even if Canada does reach the goal of 1.5 per cent of the Gross National Product by 1985 we will still lag behind other countries. In fact, if the U.S. effort were to stand still as of today, American R and D spending will be 14 times Canada's". He went on to propose that R and D under a Conservative Government should reach 2.5 per cent of the Gross Domestic Product.

The Prime Minister was right in his criticism of Canada's record on research and development. Compared to all other industrialized countries, Canada spent just a little more than Australia and Spain. In 1986, the last year for which figures are available, Canada spent 1.35 per cent of its Gross Domestic Product on research and development.

Let us compare that to the largest 12 OECD economies. In the United States, 2.89 per cent of its Gross Domestic Product went to research and development; Japan, 2.81 per cent; Sweden 2.79 per cent; Germany, 2.66 per cent; France, 2.38; United Kingdom, 2.33 per cent; Switzerland, 2.28 per cent; Netherlands, 2.06 per cent; Italy, 1.47 per cent; Australia, 1.14 per cent and Spain, 0.48 per cent. Canada did a little better than Australia and Spain.

The statistics show that we do not have a good track record in terms of what we spend on research and development as a percentage of our Gross Domestic Product.

This situation existed for years under the Liberal Government. Following the 1980 election I had the privilege of serving as the spokesperson for my Party on the Committee dealing with research and development and science and technology. There were many committee meetings in which we heard from the heads of granting agencies, the head of the National Research Council, from representatives of industry and universities as well as the scientific community. All were bemoaning the fact that there was insufficient funding.

They stated that Canada was losing its scientists and universities were unable to buy proper equipment or provide enough scholarships to keep graduate students at home. They stated that we were missing out on the growth of research and development and the job opportunities that it entailed.

We tried to get a permanent committee to deal with research and development. Even though we got the lip service from the Ministers, we never really did get any action. I must commend the present Government for at least establishing a permanent Standing Committee to deal with research and development. It is an important step in the right direction. However, I think government Members would have to admit that the Government's record is not quite what I think they intended or hoped it would be at the beginning of its term. I think it is true to say that we have not come close to the goal of 2.5 per cent goal of our gross domestic product going to research and development. The fact is that even though we have increased marginally since the Conservatives were elected, we are still at far less than the original goal.

One other area where I think we have really missed out, and the present Government is as bad as the previous Government, is the funding of the Social Sciences and the Humanities Research Council. Doing the research is one part of a process, doing the innovation is the second part which surely must be considered in devising a national strategy. We can do all the research we want, but unless we have a strategy that will help with the innovation of the newer technologies, we are going to miss the boat. That is why the Social Sciences and the Humanities Research Council must play an important role.

Unfortunately, funding for that granting agency has been significantly reduced under this Government. I must say that I find that extremely regrettable living in this day and age, an age of many changes, not just technological changes but economic changes, psychological changes and cultural changes. Surely the Social Sciences and the Humanities Research Council must play a pivitol role in allowing our society to adjust to the changes going on all around us. Cutbacks to the funding of that agency, I think, is a regressive step.

There is another area I would like to raise in this debate because I do not believe Hon. Members have made this point. Why is it we have so much less investment and expenditure in research and development than other countries? Why are our industries, in particular, investing less than other countries? I agee with government Members when they say it is not just up to the Government to increase the R and D expenditures. Industry must play a role. The Lamontagne committee, a number of years ago, pointed out part of the problem. The study by the Ministry of Industry, Trade and Technology in Ontario, printed in 1988, also points to the same problem. The major reason industry in Canada has such a low commitment to R and D is because most of our industry are branch plants. Branch plants do not do their research and development in Canada. They do their research and development at home, mainly in the United States. When we compare the amount of research done by Canadian-owned firms, we find that in many fields it is comparable to the research and development done by those same firms in in the United States.

Let me put on record some of the statistics the Ontario study came up with. For example, in business machines, the amount of R and D in the United States is 11.8 per cent. In Canada, it is 1.5 per cent. But Canadian controlled companies do 8 per cent while foreign controlled companies only do 1.3 per cent. In other machinery, in the United States it is 2.1 per cent, in Canada it is 0.9 per cent but Canadian-controlled companies do 1.1 per cent whereas foreign-controlled companies do 0.7 per cent.

In aircraft and parts, 11.4 per cent of the total outlays in the U.S. is devoted to R and D. In Canada it is 10.2 per cent, but Canadian controlled companies have a 19 per cent rate, whereas foreign controlled companies in Canada have only 5.2 per cent. It is the same in communications and equipment and drugs and medicine. The Canadian average is 4.7 per cent. Canadian controlled companies do 7.5 per cent, whereas foreign controlled companies do 3.5 per cent. It is the same situation with other chemicals. Canadian controlled companies do 2.6 per cent, whereas foreign controlled companies do 0.7 per cent, and the list goes on.

This table demonstrates that it is Canadian controlled and owned companies that are doing the industrial research and development in Canada, whereas the multinationals, the branch plants, do not do any at all. That is the major reason we have such a low R and D expenditure in Canada. The foreign controlled companies are not doing their fair share. It makes sense that a multinational corporation will have its research and development done in its home country rather than in countries like Canada.

To achieve our goal of 2.5 per cent of our gross domestic product going to research and development—and I think all Parties and all Hon. Members agree with that goal—is not a simple problem. Again, I agree with government Members when they state that just throwing money at it is not going to solve the problem. It is important and we are going to need money and we are going to need a public commitment. But it also requires intelligence to ensure that the public money we will invest, whether it is through tax incentives or direct grants, is fine tuned and directed so it is not wasted, so it goes to a group of winners that can support a broader industrial strategy.

We must use intelligence and husbanding of our scarce resources, in this case, money, to ensure that we get the maximum benefits from our investment in R and D. Such a strategy requires the co-operation and the working together of the public sector, that is, Government and universities, provincial Governments as well as federal Governments, industry, and I should also add labour.

One of the models we could look at that is very successful in research and development is the Scandinavian countries. These countries involve labour. In Denmark and Sweden there are labour contracts where the unions insist that management introduce new techologies. The trade union movement is in the forefront of technology change in those two countries. The reason is that the working men and women in the Scandanavian countries recognize that if there is technological change, there is also a social net. If a newer technology does away with a job, they know they will not lose the mortgage. They know they will be retrained. They know they will get another job.

In such an atmosphere you find that the labour movement fully participates in technological innovation. It has many important contributions to make. It is the person on the shop floor who will know how best to use the equipment to get the most out of the new machines. Very often, as the Swedes have shown, it is not the individuals making decisions in the management office, but the individuals on the shop floor who, in most cases, get the most out of the new machines being introduced into the firm.

It is a model of co-operation. It is a model of working together. We can take our scientists who are working at the universities or in the labs of companies and put them together with the trade union movements, the workers, and the public sector and co-ordinate them. Such models also exist in Japan and in Germany. In fact, such models exist in the more successful industries in Canada.

I know the Government has tried to bring some of these pieces together. However, to be honest, the Government has to admit that it has not succeeded. It has not created a critical mass that has brought all the actors together so that we have a strategy and so that our money, our energies and efforts are also focused. If the Government had done that we could claim that Canada is in the forefront of technological discoveries, innovations and development. Instead, I am afraid we remain behind. We are followers rather than innovators. Unfortunately, the Government has not lived up to the expectations, the hopes and promises that existed in 1984.

I find this not from a partisan point of view but as a Canadian unfortunate. We missed an opportunity here. As so often happens, opportunities do not come again and again. Hopefully, at some future date we will have an opportunity to bring all the elements together so that we can have a policy that is focused and which can indeed make a major contribution to the well-being of our country.

Mr. Berger: Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the Hon. Member for his intervention in this debate. I listened with interest to his remarks, in particular when he referred to the contribution of the social sciences and humanities. Our committee yesterday afternoon met with representatives of the Social Science Federation of Canada. We were talking about the new Centres of Excellence Program.

There is concern that while, nominally, the Government says that research and the social sciences is not excluded from the Centres of Excellence Program, as medical research is not excluded from the program, the actual fine print will mean that no proposal from the social sciences field will be entertained. There was a criterion in the Ontario program which required industrial support, industrial funding for any Centres of Excellence project to go forward. As the Hon. Member knows, this in some cases may prove to be an insurmountable obstacle to a project involving the social sciences because of the dearth of private sector companies which are willing to contribute to research in that area. I do not think that it is out of the realm of possibility that some such support could be developed in the future.

A related obstacle is the provisions of the Income Tax Act which the Hon. Member referred to, if I am not mistaken. Therefore, for this Centres of Excellence Program to include the social sciences and to cover that field of endeavour, it will be necessary to pay close attention to the criteria as they are developed by the Government. It will be incumbent upon the Government to make some consequential changes, or this long awaited change to the Income Tax Act which will ensure that indeed there can be individual or corporate contributions to research in the social sciences, otherwise the Government's statement that social sciences are not excluded is meaningless.

Mr. de Jong: Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for his question. It is a problem that the social sciences face.

I am part of the Finance Committee and was instrumental in getting it to make a recommendation, which was unanimously approved, to ask the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) to change the definition of science in order to broaden it. It was suggested that it should allow some of the work that is done by the social sciences and the humanities people to be included, therefore to become eligible for some types of tax credits and similar treatment. The Department of Finance is a little unwilling to do that, and in some ways understandably so. By opening up the definition, we open up the possibilities of abuse.

For example, is motivational research which results in a different type of packaging proper research? In terms of the social sciences, motivational research is a legitimate form of research. Can what a firm spends on advertising be stuck in and be claimed to be part of legitimate research? It is a problem that I understand people in the Department of Finance have. Part of the difficulty I have in dealing with scientific research under a tax regime is that we come up against these definitions, thus opening the door to abuse.

Hon. Members have mentioned the Lalonde boondoggle which was supposed to have cost around $100 million and which ended up costing $2.5 billion. While Conservative Members point this out, I hasten also to point out that one-third of the $2.5 billion lost in tax revenues occurred when the Conservatives took office. They recognized that it was a scam. In October they tried to put a halt to it but they grandfathered it instead. This meant that if two people had an agreement written on the back of an envelope then it was still a valid agreement. The Government allowed whatever deals were made to continue until finally in May, 1985, it became too much and it shut the program down.

The whole effort by Mr. Lalonde illustrates how easy it is to abuse the tax system. Programs really have to be very well defined. Because of that the social sciences and the humanities have suffered.

The initiative of the Government to act through the income tax system as a way of boosting R and D expenditures is not the appropriate way for the social sciences to receive increased funding for the Social Sciences and Humanities Council. They must go much more into a direct granting system. Unfortunately, the government policy, both with respect to the Centres of Excellence Program and by using the income tax system, as a means of getting more R and D investment will invariably hurt the humanities and the social sciences.

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the opportunity this afternoon to take part in the debate on the motion tabled by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Laurier (Mr. Berger).

First of all, I would like to congratulate the Hon. Member on the admirable motion he moved in the House today. It is, of course, a motion to condemn the Government for failing to provide adequate non-tax support for research operations.

Mr. Speaker, I think it is important to recall the promises and commitments made by the present Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) as Leader of the Conservative Party, before he became Prime Minister of this country, because, as all Canadians are aware, the Prime Minister made a habit of promising just about anything . . .

Mr. Berger: The moon!

Mr. Boudria: Yes, the moon, as the Hon. Member for Laurier (Mr. Berger) just said. The Prime Minister promised the moon to just about anyone who would listen, before he became Prime Minister.

I have here a collection of all the promises made by the Conservative Party. We note the promise made by the present Prime Minister on March 2, 1984, when he said, and I quote:

"We will double our common national commitment to research and development during our first term. This will create hundreds of thousands of jobs and produce billions of dollars' worth of new sales for Canada, on an annual basis".

The Prime Minister, who was Leader of the Opposition at the time, made this promise on March 22, 1984, when he spoke to the Montreal Chamber of Commerce. I know it isn't fair to quote the Prime Minister verbatim, Mr. Speaker, and I am sorry I should have to do so. However, Canadians have a right to hear this, and as the Official Opposition, we have a duty to remind Canadians of the commitments made by the Progressive Conservative Party.

Now, what has happened since? Before the 1984 election, the previous Government spent or invested 1.5 per cent of GNP for research and development. Since the Progressive Conservative Party came to power, this percentage has dropped and is now only 1.3 per cent.

So, remember the promise the Prime Minister made in 1984, and I will get back to the Prime Minister's promises later on. You already know what has happened since the present Government came to power.

[English]

In the unlikely event, Mr. Speaker, that you think me partisan—and I know that that is probably the furthest thing from your mind—let me present you with some evidence of the fact that I am not the only one who takes the position that this Government is not doing a good job in the area of research and development. For that matter, it has not been doing a good job in any other area, either.

Restricting myself to research and development for the moment, in addition to my view and that of the Hon. Member for Laurier in respect of this Government's lack of effort in terms of research and development, we also have the view of the Canadian Manufacturers' Association, as set out in a discussion paper published in February of 1986. The document is entitled: "Improving our Industrial Competitiveness: A Science Policy for Canada". One could certainly not consider the Canadian Manufacturers' Association to be a partisan group. It is a totally independent group.

At page 17 of the publication in question is a table showing tax and non-tax government support for industrial R and D as a percentage of R and D performed in industry. The table sets out what various countries do in terms of government tax support and non-tax support as a percentage of total industrial R and D.

In the United States, the table shows that 33 per cent is funded through non-tax support means and 7 per cent via tax support means, for an over-all grand total in terms of government support of 40 per cent. When the table speaks of non-tax support, it has reference to government grants or other incentives, including government procurement.

For the Federal Republic of Germany, the figure is 18 per cent for non-tax support and 6 per cent for tax support, for a total of 24 per cent. For France, it is 22 per cent and 7 per cent respectively, for a grand total of 29 per cent. For Canada, it is 12 per cent and 8 per cent, for a total of 20 per cent; and for the United Kingdom, 29 per cent and 8 per cent for the same respective categories, for a total of 37 per cent.

In terms of that group of countries, Canada is clearly last in terms of government support for research and development. These are not my figures. These are figures which come from the Canadian Manufacturers' Association, as set out in a discussion paper provided to Members of Parliament in February of 1986.

We have no reason to believe that there has been any substantial improvement since. That same level of funding continues to be the case. In fact, one could argue that it has become worse, or it will get worse with the passage of time.

Several prominent Canadians have indicated to us that, with the Government's tax reform program, investments in the area of R and D will diminish. I readily admit that using tax vehicles to fund research and development has its drawbacks. We are all aware of what happened with the Scientific Research Tax Credit.

We know that some people rejoice when certain tax incentives are discontinued. Without naming anyone, those of that view sit to my left in the House, and they are sometimes known, collectively, as the "not-so-new" New Democratic Party. Members of that Party sometimes rejoice when tax incentives are removed, only to end up, a few days later, asking questions in the House as to why the Government cancelled an incentive that they were asking be cancelled. However, I will let the NDP worry about the effect of their changing their policies mid-stream on the same issue.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa—Carleton): They are confused.

Mr. Boudria: The Hon. Member across the way says that they are confused. I suppose they are. Otherwise they would not belong to the New Democratic Party to start with.

In coming back to the use of tax vehicles and how they can be beneficial in the area of research and development, I should like to bring to the attention of the House the views of Mr. Jean de Grandpré, Chairman of Bell Canada Enterprises, as reported in the April 1988 Report on Business Magazine.

Certainly Mr. de Grandpré is not one who spends his time looking for issues to assist the Opposition; rather, he spends his time for the benefit of the corporation for which he works. But listen to what he had to say about Ottawa's new tax reform. I quote:

> The politicians "are all saying the same thing, that we have to have more research and development capacity in Canada, that the future of this country rests on high-technology products." Yet Ottawa's new tax reform package would reduce the tax breaks for R & D. That, he says, amply demonstrates that politicians "don't understand how the game is played." And he's quite willing to tell you what he's doing about it.

The article goes on as follows:

> And there is a threat. If the government reduces the tax breaks, de Grandpré says his company will do its research in some other country and take away several hundred well-paid jobs from Bell-Northern Research, the largest private R&D facility in Canada. "The Canadians who are graduating from our universities are going to walk over to BNR and say, "Can I have a job", and we'll say "Sorry, but we're not expanding our R&D facilities in Canada." And they'll say "Why?" "Well, because the government has introduced this stupid piece of legislation."

• (1440)

That is Jean de Grandpré speaking. That is not the opposition Member from Glengarry—Prescott—Russell who may be slightly partisan from time to time.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa—Carleton): Never.

Mr. Boudria: I am getting reactions from the other side of the House, Mr. Speaker. I am glad that I am keeping Members awake on this Friday afternoon. It is important for all of us to remember what the head of the largest research and development company in our nation is saying. We are cutting from underneath him what has been effective in the past.

The Government is promising to increase R & D. I read a while ago a promise made by the Conservative Party which came from the great book of 338 Tory promises, which I happen to have right here, Mr. Speaker. If any Canadian wants a copy of it, anyone can write to me, no postage stamp is necessary, and I will gladly send it out. I may have said that before but it is always nice to make the offer again.

I want to refer to other promises made by the Government. I read promise number one a while ago which had to do with increasing research and development to 2.5 per cent of GNP. The Government reduced it, so there went that promise. The second promise is to change and simplify the tax system—listen to this folks across the way—"to strengthen the capital base of Canadian companies and provide greater incentives for private sector investment". Do you hear that, Mr. Speaker? The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) promised this. Because the Prime Minister always tells the truth, I figured this would happen, but that is not what Mr. de Grandpré said. He said that we are not expanding our R & D facilities in Canada because the Government has introduced its stupid piece of legislation. That does not seem to coincide too much with the promise made by the Prime Minister. It is important for us to remember that.

I have another document here called Research and Development Impacts of Corporate Income Tax Reform by Kenneth D. Hart, principal research associate to the Conference Board of Canada. It is a manuscript report prepared for the Science Council of Canada. The document talks about the effect of some of these tax reform measures on research and development. Here is one effect. The proposed new $46 million research complex in Calgary may not proceed or will be significantly downsized. I say to my Conservative colleagues from Calgary that this is almost enough to make a Member of Parliament from Calgary not want to run again. If I were a Tory from Calgary I would not run again, having heard what the Government is doing to my city.

Mrs. Mailly: Jealousy will get you nowhere.

Mr. Boudria: I do not wish that I were a Tory, Mr. Speaker. Believe me, that is one thing I do not wish.

Mrs. Mailly: Especially, in Calgary.

Mr. Boudria: That is a fate worse than death.

The next item is migration of research and development projects out of Canada over the next two years by large international companies, cancellation of long-term R & D projects which proposed building new buildings, reduction of new projects which would involve increased requirements for work space because of losing its ITC on base cash.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa—Carleton): Shameful.

Mr. Boudria: Shameful, as the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Carleton (Mr. Turner) says. I want to say to the temporary Member for Ottawa—Carleton that this is prepared for the Science Council of Canada by the Conference Board of Canada. Again these are not partisan groups which know very objectively—

Mr. Turner (Ottawa—Carleton): I worked there.

Mr. Boudria: Yes, the Member says he worked there. He knows that these are very credible remarks. He surely realizes what the Conservative Government is doing to research and development in Canada. I hope he has that intestinal fortitude required to twist the arms of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) and can tell him to scrap that tax reform proposal or at least change it in such a way that it will not have the ruinous effect on research and development that it has now.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa—Carleton): Talk about free trade.

Mr. Boudria: The Member says talk about free trade. I do not know what the Member intends about trade in the area of research and development. But I say to him that with some of the provisions of the free trade agreement, we as Canadians will be less able to encourage government purchases and many other purchases from the private sector giving preferential treatment to Canadian companies and we will thereby decrease opportunities and decrease encouragement to those same companies to invest in R & D. We got nothing reciprocal in that area. I say to the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Carleton that he should know of several restrictive measures in the United States in defence procurement and so on which deliberately encourage United States research. There is no parallel here. Whatever little bit we had we gave away in the Prime Minister's trade deal. That is the sad reality.

The Government is saying it is doing all kinds of nice things. It produces nice brochures. I have to compliment the printer. There is always a nice picture of a Minister in them. There is one here of the Minister of State for Science and Technology (Mr. Oberle). It is a beautiful pamphlet. I do not know what it is supposed to do. It is glossy in any case. Maybe it encourages research and development in the printing industry for the people who produce the reports. I have another pamphlet here called National Science and Technology policy. There is not much policy in it but it has lots of printing. It is a little science and technology kind of document. You could actually make a placemat out of it, it is so neat. But it does not contain anything. It is a sort of charter of economic sell-out, I guess. I really do not know what it is but it does not do anything that would encourage research and development in Canada.

I want to talk about the flow-through shares provisions that were altered in the last Budget and, of course, in the tax reform proposal as well. There is a company in my constituency which installs low head hydro generating stations. These are installed in northern Ontario and elsewhere. It is a good industry, a new one, which developed with these tax incentives. It has mini-hydro generating stations which are plugged into the grid in my Province of Ontario. They delay construction of such megaprojects as nuclear stations and so on. They provide good jobs. These stations are generally 50 megawatts or less. They are small hydraulic plants. Things have been going fairly well. A company in Toronto did the research, manufacturing and development of these mini stations and this company in my constituency had been installing them. Both of them are seriously threatened. As a matter of fact both companies may actually go down the tube. Here was a Canadian industry with research done in Canada, development done here and so on. Now it is all gone or it will be if the Minister does not do anything. I wrote to the Minister of Finance. He wrote a two page letter to me dated April 22, 1988 in which he described all the different deductions and so on. He never said he would change anything or assist this industry which had been thriving until the Government stepped in and made a mess of it.

In concluding, I would like to congratulate the Hon. Member for Laurier (Mr. Berger) for deciding to remind Canadians of the fact that this Government has unfortunately failed to remember or deliberately chosen to forget its promises to the Canadian people. However, Mr. Speaker, there is still time. I hope the Government will take today's message to heart and take immediate action to increase research and development in this country.

Mrs. Mailly: Mr. Speaker, I had the good fortune to write Mr. de Grandpré's speeches when he was executive vice-president for Bell Canada's Eastern Region and I must tell you that the language he used then was very different from the expression that the Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell (Mr. Boudria) seems to have given us today. I do not know why Mr. de Grandpré is frustrated, but I must tell him that when I wrote his speeches, what frustrated him most was the wastefulness of the Liberal Government of the time and also the very little research and development that were done precisely because of the total anarchy in Canada's development and science and technology policies. That is a personal comment.

I would also like to quote a document. It is a thesis prepared by . . .

[English]

—the Department of Communications of the Simon Fraser University, who said exactly the same thing that Mr. de Grandpré said in 1971 and in 1972 when I was working for him and writing his speeches. The paper is entitled Policy anarchy, Industry, technology and the political agenda in Canada; the case of government support for R & D.

Mr. Leiss makes it very, very clear that this anarchy has existed since 1947 and it came to an ugly apex in 1983 under the SRTC. In his document, he quotes the Auditor General talking about R and D expenditures being out of control, but he also adds that outstanding disagreements about the meaning of the basic components of R & D activities as well as the habitual avoidance by many participants in the ongoing debate of any mention of evaluation criteria are in part the logical outcome of two decades of R & D policy anarchy.

He makes it very clear that this is a problem that existed for a long time. He also makes it very clear that something had to be done, and in that piece, he congratulates Revenue Canada for the way it has handled this absolute necessity of finding some clear evaluation criteria for these programs.

He says it is such a pity that so much money was wasted when it was required for our development, and he says also that the frequent changes in tax incentives make the task of evaluation almost impossible to perform, since various provisions are not in place long enough for meaningful comparison with R and D performance to occur. He says that this is even supposing that adequate data is being collected or analysed, and this is why, in his article, he congratulates Revenue Canada for coming up with a structure that allows for such a good analysis. He refers, for instance, to the fact that for the first time in Canadian history, there is consultation with scientists in a structured way, analysing the tax incentives which are given in these programs.

[Translation]

Furthermore, Mr. Speaker, I would also like to point out to my hon. colleague that when he talks about election promises, one of them was to clean up government finances, and I believe that we have done so. Indeed, the policy of grants and assistance for research and development was changed precisely to fulfil this election promise of making our programs more effective and of restoring our public finances to health. For example, when the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) announced changes in May 1985, he talked about encouraging investment through tax credits that would be particularly beneficial for private companies controlled by Canadians.

So rather than burying his head in the sand and shouting that the nasty Americans are coming to take everything, he should remember one thing: we cleaned up the finances and solved the problems we had in that regard. We are now solving the problems of program effectiveness; besides, I have just come back today from a press conference held by a multinational in my riding that has invested $130 million over five years. Two hundred employees work for Erco in Buckingham, so it represents an investment of $65,000 per employee. I do not see why he is trying to pass his crazy ideas on to us this afternoon. It is always the same story. It is a tale of fear and exaggeration and it will do nothing to help Canada's development. Quite the contrary! Properly applied policies, such as those to clean up the public finances and those for research and development that are not based on wishful thinking, percentages tossed around at random—we really have to know whether we get results. And considering that a billion dollars has already been invested thanks to the existing R & D policy, I think that . . .

[English]

The proof is in the pudding.

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, no, the proof is not in the pudding, or at least not in the pudding that the Hon. Member is trying to make us eat here today. The proof of the pudding is in the eating, as my colleague from Laurier so eloquently says.

I was talking about the comments of Mr. de Grandpré on the Minister's recent tax reform. That did not exist 20 years ago, though the Hon. Member can try to make us believe that.

Let me read some of those comments again. I kind of like reading them. The article reads:

> Yet Ottawa's new tax reform package would reduce the tax breaks for R & D. That, he says, amply demonstrates that politicians "don't understand how the game is played."

When someone asks Mr. de Grandpré if he could have a job, he will say: "Sorry, but we're not expanding our R and D facilities in Canada". He'll ask why, and the answer is: "Well, because the Government, this Government, has introduced this stupid piece of legislation". That refers to this present Government's tax reform package, not the package of 1969, 1972 or 1947. It is not the package of 1931 or any of those other years before I was born. This is something that is going on right now. This is the April 1988 edition of the Report on Business magazine, an interview with Mr. Jean de Grandpré.

The Hon. Member says that we are fear-mongering. She thinks that my comments are a tad partisan. That is okay, as unrealistic as that proposition may be. However, surely she cannot say the same thing about the Conference Board of Canada which has prepared a serious document on Research and Development entitled Research and Development Impacts of Corporate Income Tax Reform, and it dealt with all these cancellations in construction facilities, one of them which is right in Calgary. I see that an Hon. Member from Calgary is over there.

Mrs. Mailly: What year?

Mr. Boudria: This document was presented in December of 1987. It was made in response to the Government's tax reform package, not by me or by one of my caucus colleagues but by the Research and Development section of the Conference Board of Canada.

Mr. Gagnon: Mr. Speaker, I noted that the Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell (Mr. Boudria) attributed to me motives for not seeking the nomination and not running in the next election. The motives he implied are totally false.

If the truth be known, I am tired of listening to the drivel, the half-truths and the misstatements of people like the Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell. Furthermore, if Amnesty International or any impartial body were to sit here and listen to this sort of thing, they would call it cruel and unusual punishment.

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, I know that it is hard to take. If I were a Tory, perhaps I would have a hard time taking it too. However, I have the good fortune of not being a Tory, thank God for that. The reports I was citing today are indeed very credible reports, and I say that it is time this Government smartened up.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being three o'clock, it is my duty to inform the House that pursuant to Standing Order 82(12), the proceedings on the motion have expired.

This House stands adjourned until Monday next at 11 o'clock a.m., pursuant to Standing Order 3(1).

OPPOSITION TO CANADA-U.S.S.R. AGREEMENT—EVIDENCE ON ALLEGED WAR CRIMINALS

Mr. Andrew Witer (Parkdale—High Park): Mr. Speaker, it is my privilege to present to the House today a petition on behalf of Canadians from Vancouver who oppose the Memorandum of Agreement signed between Canada and the U.S.S.R. dealing with the gathering of evidence on alleged war criminals on the basis that the agreement pertains only to Nazi war criminals and not to all war criminals, contrary to what the Government promised in its response to the report of the Deschênes Commission of Inquiry. The petitioners call upon the Government to renegotiate the agreement to reflect the prosecution of all war criminals, and I add my strong support to their petition.

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the following question will be answered today: Question No. 316.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The question as enumerated by the Parliamentary Secretary has been answered.

UI—ADVERTISING OF RULES AND REGULATIONS

Question No. 316—Mr. Young:

Does the Government spend any money on advertising the rules and regulations pertaining to applying for unemployment insurance and, if so, on average, in what amount per year?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of Employment and Immigration): While the government does not spend money to "advertise" UI rules and regulations it does have an extensive public awareness strategy to inform UI claimants, employers and the general public about the UI program. The strategy consists of both audio-visual presentations and print material.

The 1988-1989 budget for this strategy is $2.9 million which includes the production of brochures, information sheets, posters and inserts on the UI program for approximately three million UI claimants and the general public; a yearly direct mail campaign of the Record of Employment Guide to close to 700,000 employers; and the production of three audio-visual presentations for claimants, employers and the general public on the UI program.

In addition to the above strategy, all people have access to the UI Act and regulations at any Canada Employment Centre.

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY, S. O. 82—CANADA-U.S. FREE TRADE AGREEMENT—POLITICAL SOVEREIGNTY

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview—Greenwood) moved:

That this House condemn the government for voluntarily relinquishing political sovereignty in the "trade" deal with the United States, namely by limiting the power to decide on new or expanded social programs and cultural industries, including those by the federal, provincial, territorial or municipal governments, present and future.

She said: Madam Speaker, I rise on this Opposition Day to deal with the loss of political sovereignty in the trade deal. This is not a free trade deal which has been negotiated with the United States. It does not save us from countervailing duties being applied by the Americans. It is not free trade under GATT. It pursues a deviation allowed by GATT for two countries to come together when they want to achieve an economic union. We know there is a political price to pay for economic union because institutions have to be changed. It is called harmonization, and that means a loss of our distinctiveness as a country in favour of adopting American institutions, and increasing influence by the American market.

What this is really all about is constitutional change. This deal will bind future Governments. The federal Government is saying it has the power to negotiate an international treaty, but while it is doing so it will bind the provinces, the municipalities and even Indian bands. Indian self-government will be affected. The Territories lose as well. They all lose the power to make economic decisions, create jobs, and pursue social programs unhindered by external considerations such as the trade deal.

Women understand this very much better than men do, it seems. Prominent in the struggle against the trade deal are women's organizations. Right now we have the National Action Committee on the Status of Women in a lobby session with parliamentarians. They have focused on the trade deal because women are going to be prominent among the economic losers. They also care a great deal about our social programs and institutions such as public broadcasting. They see the need to continue to have the power to design institutions to suit Canada's needs.

Women are not so ideological. They are not in pursuit of the buck. They are prepared to use the public sector, the Government, political power. Women are increasingly entering the mainstream of political life and they do not want to come in and find that their votes do not mean very much because the decisions are going to be made in the U.S. by market forces instead of citizens as voters and parliamentarians.

The Americans understood this aspect of the trade deal very well. They welcomed, for example, the section expanding control over services. They say the agreement establishes the very first international understanding of a comprehensive nature over the service industries under which each side will provide treatment to each other's citizens that is no less favourable than that granted to its own citizens with respect to all new measures affecting services. The agreement provides the right of establishment, the right to cross border sales, and disciplines on public monopolies.

What does that mean? It means whipping them into shape, keeping down the public sector, providing more space for markets and profits. They welcome that. This reference to discipline on public monopolies never appeared on the Canadian side of the elements of the agreement. Why not? Because the Canadian Government is a little bit embarrassed about giving away power, acceding to pressure from the Americans to put this in the trade agreement.

How will the exercise of power be affected by this trade deal? First, if a province wants to start a new social program or expand an existing one or start something like car insurance or a cultural program, it will first have to consider whether it will constitute an unfair subsidy. We do not know the answer to that question in many respects because unfair subsidies remain to be decided upon. We also know that covered services are going to be expanded. We have a list of certain services covered already but more are going to be included as negotiations proceed.

The provinces will also have to consider whether or not whatever it is they want to do infringes on the monopoly section. That refers to covered services which may expand in scope. They will have to look at Section 210 and Section 211 of the trade deal. If what they want to do constitutes a monopoly under the deal, they would have to ask the federal Government to in effect to negotiate on their behalf. The trade deal requires that the provincial, territorial and municipal Governments, as well as Indian bands, ask the federal Government to notify the U.S. Government of an intention to establish a so-called monopoly. In the meantime, the U.S. could retaliate against Canada in some other sector to get equivalent commercial value for the anticipated benefits it might not get if the so-called monopoly went through.

What if the provincial Government concerned is a more progressive Government than the federal Government and wants to do certain things? Perhaps the federal Government will not have a veto, we do not yet know what is in the legislation, but the provincial or territorial Government might not have a great deal of confidence that its interests will be well looked after by the federal Government.

If the matter goes to dispute settlement a panel will be set up. Who is on the panel? At least two Americans, at least two Canadians, and a fifth person to be decided upon by the other four. If they fail to decide, the fifth person would be chosen by lot from a list of potential panel members. These panel members are supposed to be objective. I wonder how objective they can be. Are they going to ignore totally the interests of their country or region? What if there is a conflict? What if the federal Government puts on its list of potential experts only those with the privatization ideology? What if they do not really represent the point of view of the provinces, territories or municipalities which might want to do something a little bit different? We do not know.

I was in a briefing session recently and asked trade officials about car insurance. We have four provinces with public car insurance services. Right now insurance of all kinds is a covered service in the trade agreement. The officials told us they did not know if car insurance would be affected by the trade deal. We would just have to trust them and wait and see. I do not think this is good enough.

Mr. McDermid: That is not true. That is nonsense.

Ms. McDonald: I was at the briefing and certainly it was stated that we would not know if car insurance would be included as a covered service. I suspect it would be.

Child care is not covered right now. Fortunately it looks safe. It would not be a monopoly in any event, but what about the management of this service? The management of health care and all kinds of other services comes under the trade deal and that means American corporations have to be treated the same as Canadians in working in what we have normally treated as public sector areas.

Mr. McDermid: Our rules.

Ms. McDonald: It will not be we who decide. That is what is crucial.

Mr. McDermid: It certainly will.

Ms. McDonald: It means we will not have the power to undo decisions made by a previous Government.

Mr. McDermid: Nonsense.

Ms. McDonald: We have some give and take. For example, FIRA was brought in by a Liberal Government to allow review of foreign investment for a particular purpose to see what good it would do Canada. The Conservative Government had a mandate and changed that as it was entitled to do. It got rid of FIRA. However, under this trade deal we will not be able to make these kinds of changes. Investment policy will be right in the trade deal and the threshold goes up with respect to the kind of decisions that can be reviewed. If another Government comes in and wants to change it back, which is normal in our political process, it will not have that power. That power will be traded away in the trade deal. It is a weakening of the power of people to use the political process. That is being given away in one fell swoop. These things will be incapable of correction. This weakens the political process.

• (1120)

Women are especially concerned about health care. Large numbers of women work in this industry. Women, of course, are major consumers and they are the health care organizers for their families. This deal looks toward increasing Americanization of our health care services. We have achieved a very high standard of non-profit, publicly organized health care. We are proud of our system. It has been called the best health care system in the world.

The American system excludes coverage of many people. It provides excellent services to some people, those who can afford to pay for highly specialized services, but it is a two-tiered system. If we allow our institutions to be changed in that direction we will move toward having a two-tier system with costly services available to some and high quality care not available to all.

We have chosen a different route, the not-for-profit route. Our system is so efficient that there are complaints that it constitutes an unfair subsidy because employers in Canada can rely on our health care system to provide benefits. American employers have to bring in private plans which allow for a profit. They cost a great deal more money and are inefficient. They consider our system such a benefit that it can constitute an unfair subsidy.

According to our Constitution, health care is supposed to be entirely a provincial matter. We have joint programs, but the jurisdiction is provincial. However, under the trade deal aspects of health care get bargained away. The management of all technical services related to the health care system has to be open to American corporations. That is interference with something which should be under provincial jurisdiction.

Our hands will be tied in a very special way in culture despite all the promises that culture was not on the bargaining table. Section 2005 of the trade deal contains a very special notwithstanding clause which is a very important loophole in the deal. It reads:

> 2. Notwithstanding any other provision of this Agreement, a Party may take measures of equivalent commercial effect in response to actions that would have been inconsistent with this Agreement but for paragraph 1.

Paragraph 1 otherwise exempts culture. Again, it is an exemption with exemptions from the trade deal. It is a clause notwithstanding any other measure in that agreement.

It has been said, and I think correctly, that the trade deal says that we can do whatever we want in culture, with some exceptions, but the Americans can do anything they want in retaliation. This is a very considerable loophole for us.

Further, the Americans realize this and they welcomed it. I will read from the text of the summary of the Canada-U.S. free trade agreement put out by the United States Embassy—right from the horse's mouth. It says:

> The U.S. recognizes the importance to Canada of maintaining its cultural identity. At the same time however, the U.S. wants to ensure that Canadian cultural policies do not constitute a discriminatory and unnecessary barrier to U.S. trade.

In other words, whenever they can make a buck they want to be able to make it and not be impeded by our so-called exempting culture. I quote further:

> Recognizing Canadian sensitivities, the U.S. has agreed that certain cultural areas are not subject to the specific provisions of the agreement.

Certain are not, but it is very clear that certain are. It continues:

> However, the U.S. retains the right to redress any adverse commercial effects of any future cultural measures enacted by Canada.

In addition, Canada has agreed to alter some other things. It says, therefore, that we are on warning that they can retaliate if we take any measures in the future to improve our distinctive Canadian cultural identity.

For example, film distribution is a cultural industry. Is it covered in this agreement? Suppose we wanted to have a policy of Canadian ownership in film distribution, as we have in broadcasting, as was recommended by a task force established by the Government. The current Government does not want to pursue this, but if a future Government wanted to pursue it, the United States could retaliate on behalf of the film distribution interests in the United States. They could use Section 2005 2 against us.

We do not know how many other things they may want to use against us. What about the All News Channel? Would that be against the trade deal? What about newspaper ownership? Suppose we had the threat of a major take-over of our newspapers and wanted to have Canadian ownership. Would our hands be tied in the future? Would we have the possibility of limiting foreign ownership in the cultural sector? It is not at all clear that we could this without retaliation because Section 2005 allows for retaliation.

[Translation]

Madam Speaker, with Meech Lake, Quebec will again become a member of Canada's constitutional family, but what good will that do? Because of the changes imposed by the free trade agreement, the Constitution will have lost much of its strength. Both federal and provincial powers will be diminished. The provisions of the free trade agreement are in fact so many major amendments to the Canadian Constitution, amendments that cannot be changed later on because there is no formula for amending the free trade agreement. With this so-called international trade treaty, the federal Government is about to weaken the political powers of our federal, provincial, territorial and municipal governments.

Understandably, there is a mass movement of protest against this agreement. The unions, churches, environmentalists, women and Quebec's united stand against free trade are to be commended.

Quebec has used government measures to promote its social programs, investment, performance standards, culture and the use of energy resources to create jobs. A distinct society needs such measures. Quebec needs them. Canada, across the border from a society that is ten times as big as this country, needs such measures.

The free trade agreement with the United States relinquishes the power to use such measures, both at the federal and provincial level. Why become a distinct society under the terms of Meech Lake, without the tools to do the job?

I understand why the big corporations in the private sector support this agreement, especially the multinationals which rely on large imports from the United States. Any pressure to lower salaries and social benefits is very much to their advantage. Newspapers controlled by big corporations share this attitude. However, I fail to understand why Quebec's two major political parties have sided with the corporations against the interests of the vast majority of Quebecers. They must have overlooked those parts of the agreement that relinquish political power to the U.S. market.

I accuse this Government of abandoning all principles of honesty and fair play as far as this agreement is concerned. I accuse this Government of proceeding without a mandate from Canadian voters. I accuse the Conservative Government of relinquishing the political powers of the provinces and the federal Government to the economic forces of the U.S. market. On behalf of my Party I demand that an election be held as soon as possible.

[English]

We want an election. If ever there was a Government without a mandate, this is it. It has broken promises and attacked social programs. It has failed to achieve tax reform or bring in adequate child care programs. It has an appalling record on patronage and friends in high places. It has refused to plug the loopholes in election law and to bring in real controls in conflict of interest. Its trade deal has sold out Canada in our distinctive culture, our social programs, our natural resources and in the possibilities for industrial strategies, job creation and regional equalization.

• (1130)

For all of these reasons, I call on the House to condemn the Government and I call on the Government to go to the people of Canada by calling an election now.

Miss MacDonald: You cannot even get anyone in the House to support you. Not a single Member.

Ms. McDonald: The Hon. Minister wonders where some of our Members are. The NAC lobby is on the Hill presently. Most of our Members are meeting with the National Action Committee on the Status of Women, answering their questions and their concerns. I think they ought to be at that lobby, and they will certainly be in the House to deal with this question for the rest of the day. They are where they ought to be now.

Mr. McDermid: Madam Speaker, a great deal of what the Hon. Member said today is not exactly accurate. I will cover that later in my remarks.

All that the NDP and Liberals do is to knock the trade deal. Neither have come up with a policy—the Hon. Member from Montreal, a former Minister, holds a document. Have you read that?

Mr. Allmand: Yes.

Mr. McDermid: It certainly does not make any sense to us. It does not meet the realities of what is going on in the world today.

How does the NDP propose to handle the protectionist mood in the United States today? How does it plan to handle the various good Canadian industries that are under attack by special interest groups in the United States? How does the NDP propose to handle these problems in Canada?

Ms. McDonald: Madam Speaker, I do not think giving up our political sovereignty and caving in time after time is a very good way to handle the problem. We heard constantly before this trade deal was signed that it would save us from the countervail powers of the United States. We were told it would be a trade deal to cut off the protectionist pressures in the United States. It did not achieve that.

We have seen the Government cave in time after time, with film distribution as the latest example of a government without the courage to pursue Canadian interests.

The Government has no mandate to act this way. Before the election it was against any kind of bilateral trade deal. It said clearly that it would not pursue that kind of option because Canada would be smashed. It used the elephant and the flea analogy. The Government's mandate was to oppose the trade deal. It does not have a mandate at all to pursue a trade deal.

What would we do positively? We have spoken frequently about what we would do. We issued a report stressing other objectives—

Mr. McDermid: Like nationalization.

Ms. McDonald: Our report outlines possibilities for development of municipal infrastructure for local job creation, mechanisms to deal with irritants on a particular case basis. It is not a question of a bilateral deal that includes everything and in which we give up the power to act in the future. We would deal with matters on an industry by industry basis. We believe that is the safest way to proceed and also defend Canadian interests. It is a way to make sure that regional interests are not lost in the deal.

The Conservative Government has simply caved in in the hope that the friendship between the President and the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) will save us from U.S. protectionism. It has not saved us from any protectionist measure by the U.S. in the past and it will not in the future.

Mr. McDermid: Madam Speaker, I understand the NDP policy on trade is to help municipalities with job creation. That is what the Hon. Member answered.

Ms. McDonald: One measure among many.

Mr. McDermid: The other measure she says is to handle them case by case as they attack our industries one by one. That is what she said.

That is what has been happening in the past and it has been costing industries in Canada millions and millions of dollars to defend those actions. The NDP policy is to perpetuate that. That is what the Hon. Member just told the House. I cannot believe it.

Ms. McDonald: You are just going to cave in.

Mr. McDermid: The NDP are back in the 1960s. They do not want to change. They wear blinders so that they will not see what is happening around them. They want to look straight ahead rather than see what is happening. They are a bunch of standard bred horses with blinders. I might add that they are not breaking any track records with their attitude.

The NDP has no policy. We know what it opposes but we certainly do not know what it proposes.

Ms. McDonald: Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member talks about being against change. What is most profoundly offensive about this so-called trade deal is that it prevents change in the future. It takes away the flexibility of the federal Government, provincial Governments or territorial Governments to make decisions because the deal binds future Governments. It states that we cannot use the political process 10, 20, 50 or 100 years from now when conditions may be different and a different strategy may be needed. We will not be able to use a different strategy because the decision has been made.

For example, there has not been nearly enough discussion on the section dealing with monopolies. There has been a cover-up on the part of the Government because it does not want Canadians to know what it has given away.

The section on monopolies provides for a dispute settlement by a panel on which we do not control the membership. We would be a minority on that panel.

Mr. McDermid: Wait a minute.

An Hon. Member: Horsefeathers.

Ms. McDonald: We have two Canadians, two Americans and a fifth person chosen by them.

Mr. McDermid: Chosen by whom?

Ms. McDonald: Chosen by two Canadians and two Americans.

Mr. McDermid: Where does the panelist come from?

Ms. McDonald: We have no idea.

Mr. McDermid: It could be the Chairman of GATT.

Ms. McDonald: We have no idea who the fifth person would be. We know further that the panel reports to a trade disputes commission, the Canada-U.S. Trade Commission. We do not know how many members would be on this commission in terms of people, but there are two parties to it. It could be the two trade ministers. Their decisions would be made on the basis of so-called consensus. How can there be a consensus with just two bodies, one of which is 10 times more powerful than the other? What kind of recourse do we have when that body says: "Do it our way or else?" We are trapped in that decision. We cannot develop another strategy because we are bound to it.

It is not like the system in Europe which has a Parliament with permanent institutions involving a variety of countries that give their power to a whole.

We are giving our power to a neighbour 10 times larger and 10 times more powerful than us. We will not be able to stand up to their demands.

Therefore, the Government is closing off options for the future and taking away decisions that should be made in this Parliament and the legislatures of the provinces and the territories, decisions that should be made by local councils, Indian bands, all of these citizens who have minds and hearts, and care about Canada. It is giving away that power to panels and a commission that we do not control either now or in the future.

Mr. Kilgour: Madam Speaker, the Member knows that I have much respect for her. However, I say with great respect that what she has said this morning represents, if anything, the line of Bob White and the Canadian Auto Workers. I suggest to her that it is anathema to the outer eight provinces in Canada and those who work in the forestry and mining industries in British Columbia.

Let me confine the argument to her own Province of Ontario. Does she realize that if the trade agreement is not ratified, the Auto Pact can be cancelled on one year's notice? Does she realize that the trade agreement would enshrine the Auto Pact so that if it is cancelled, everything would be cancelled? In that sense, it provides protection for the 100,000 or more people who work in the automobile industry in Ontario.

Does she realize that we have had free trade in the auto industry since 1968, other than for a few months in the early 1980s when Chrysler was in trouble? Fortunately, Ontario has been the great beneficiary of that free trade.

Is Mr. White not saying that what has worked so well in Ontario with respect to the auto industry is something that must not happen in other parts of Canada?

Will she deal with the argument relating to the Auto Pact?

• (1140)

Ms. McDonald: Madam Speaker, the Auto Pact can be cancelled, as the whole trade deal can be cancelled, according to the terms. It is not free trade in the automobile sector. It is managed trade with the possibility of the reintroduction of tariffs if investment is not made according to what is specified. It is very, very different. Here we are going to be wide open to investment going both ways. We lose the protections. We lose the penalties in this trade deal that we previously had in the Auto Pact.

The Auto Pact was not supposed to be on the bargaining table. We ought to have more Auto Pacts. That is the kind of thing we should be pursuing on an industry by industry basis so that other parts of the country can profit from it.

The Hon. Member refers to British Columbia and Alberta. All the provinces lose political sovereignty. All the provinces lose the power to make decisions about natural resources. Natural resources are supposed to be a provincial responsibility, according to our Constitution. By having a continental approach to resources, it is giving away the provincial jurisdiction over resources we have in our Constitution. That means that the federal Government is assuming that jurisdiction illegally, in my opinion, and handing it over to the Americans in a continental energy pact. That is flagrantly wrong.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The time provided for questions and comments has now expired. Resuming debate. The Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East (Mr. Allmand).

[English]

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East): Madam Speaker, the Liberal Party fully supports this motion before the House today because it restates the position the Liberal Party has taken with respect to this bad trade deal ever since it was revealed to the public last year. We have said over and over again that this trade deal between the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and the President of the United States threatens our present social programs, our medicare, health care, family allowances and old age pensions and limits our ability to bring in new social programs such as day care, and so on.

We also say that this bad trade deal threatens other social programs and programs related to social life in Canada such as marketing boards, affirmative action programs, environmental programs, and in a moment I will spell out exactly how that will happen. Even this morning, in answer to questions from the National Action Committee on the Status of Women, our Leader, the Right Hon. John Turner, made it very clear again, that is our position, and that is why we will support this motion today.

Before I get into the substance of the matter, I want to respond immediately to the question put by the Hon. Member from Brampton to our colleague in the New Democratic Party. He asked: "What is your alternative if you do not do it our way?" Well, the Liberal Party has published an alternative and I stated it in an ad lib way when he was posing his question to the Hon. Member, to which he replied: "Well, it is not worth anything". First he says we do not have an alternative, and when I point out very clearly that we do, he then dismisses it. Of course, he will dismiss it because it completely disagrees with his approach on these matters.

What is our alternative? It is to pursue trade barriers through the multilateral process and through the sector process. I want to point out that it has worked in the past. We cannot understand why the Conservative Government would change that pattern, that approach, and in doing so give up vital elements of our sovereignty and independence.

Let us look at the record. Since the end of the Second World War, mostly under Liberal Governments, we have been able to reduce tariffs between Canada and the United States to the point where approximately 80 per cent of all goods and services now move between the United States and Canada without tariffs. That was done through the Kennedy Round, through the Uruguay Round, through the Tokyo Round. It was done through multilateral bargaining to the point where 80 per cent of our goods and services now move between these two countries without tariffs. In addition, when we started this process back in the 1940s and 1950s, the average tariffs between Canada and the United States were about 29 per cent. They have been reduced to about 7 per cent only on the 20 per cent remaining goods and services. That is a pretty successful record in lowering tariff barriers.

The major outstanding barrier that remains between Canada and the United States is not the tariff barrier. It is important but it was going down anyway. The remaining outstanding barrier is countervail. This deal between the Prime Minister and the President does nothing about countervail. It is the most harassing barrier against Canadian business and traders, and this agreement does not do one thing about it. When the Conservative Government started out, that was its goal, to get some sort of agreement that would reduce the applicability of countervail by the Government of the United States against our Canadian business and traders. That was not done.

When Members opposite ask for our alternatives, I find it quite amusing. I like to put these quotes on the record as often as I can. During the Conservative leadership campaign in 1983, what did leading Conservatives say about a possible free trade deal with the United States? In 1983, before the election of 1984, the Prime Minister said: "Canadians rejected free trade with the United States in 1911. They would do so again in 1983. Canada must increase its share of total world trade which has dropped by 33 per cent in the past two decades". The Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) said: "Bilateral free trade with the United States is simplistic and naive. It would only serve to further diminish our ability to compete internationally". What a flip-flop. That is what was said in 1983, and in 1985 they are saying exactly the opposite.

The former Minister of State, the Hon. Member for Rosedale (Mr. Crombie), said about a potential free trade agreement with the United States: "It is silly. Canada must improve relations in trade with the United States, of course, but our natural destiny is to become a global leader, not America's weak sister". Is that not a great statement? No wonder he left the Cabinet. I suppose he was feeling uneasy about some of these things and thought he would take the honourable way out.

The Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) in 1983, at the very same leadership convention, which was manoeuvred by the Prime Minister to get rid of Mr. Clark, said the following: "Unrestrained free trade with the United States raises the possibility that thousands of jobs could be lost in such critical industries as textiles, furniture and footwear". This is what the leading members of the Conservative Cabinet said in 1983 about a so-called free trade agreement with the United States. That was one year before the election of 1984, and in the 1984 election campaign they did not give us one hint they would pursue this kind of agreement which threatens our social, environmental, affirmative action policies, and so on.

What did happen? Our Prime Minister, at the first opportunity, went down to Washington and did an Irish jig with the President of the United States and they patted each other on the back and drank champagne. The Prime Minister jumped right into the President's pocket and there he was ready to accept anything the President proposed to him. We ended up negotiating the free trade deal which will sell out our sovereignty and independence unless we defeat it.

This so-called free trade agreement, and I call it "so-called" because it is not really a classical free trade agreement, not only limits our ability to decide on new social programs in the future but threatens our present social programs. How does it do it? It does it in two ways.

• (1150)

First, it does it directly since it forbids, in many ways, subsidized programs. The Americans like to have what is called a level playing field. That means that all businesses must compete without any subsidy and under the same rules no matter whether they are big, small, new or old, and regardless of what their hold is on the market-place. With that sort of clause in the free trade agreement our regional development policies are threatened. Our marketing boards are threatened, as are our environmental programs. They all involve subsidies to small businesses, to start up businesses and so on. That in turn affects our social policy, particularly in the slow-growth areas of Canada such as Atlantic Canada, the North, some of the prairie provinces, and northern Québec. That is how the deal directly threatens social programs and the levels of social welfare in Canada.

However, it also attacks them indirectly, and in this regard I mentioned some of the programs. I mentioned our health programs, our minimum wage, our unemployment insurance program, our old age pensions, and others. It attacks them indirectly because there will be very strong pressure to harmonize our Canadian programs with American programs.

How will that happen? Let us look at some of the testimony that was given to the Standing Committee on External Affairs and International Trade by certain big businesses. I am referring particularly to McCain's. My hon. colleague behind me is from New Brunswick. He knows what McCain's said about the deal. I also refer to the President of Quaker Oats.

These people have said the following. At the present time in Canada they buy their raw food materials for food products which are processed from marketing boards. They have said that they do not oppose marketing boards in general. They feel that they are good for farmers since they give them a steady and fair income over the years. However, they said, if this deal is brought in and they as food processors have to compete with American companies that do not have to buy their raw food products from marketing boards and they can sell to Canada without tariffs, then they will be at an unfair advantage. They said: "We are against marketing boards in that particular environment. You will have to get rid of the marketing boards so that we can buy our raw food products on the free market, or we will move to the United States where we will have access to the Canadian market since there will be no tariffs or barriers".

What this agreement has done is to have put some of our food processors into a position in which they say: "Either get rid of marketing boards or we go to the United States". That is what it has done. At the present time they are not facing that dilemma. We are suggesting to the Government that it should not have put these companies in front of that dilemma.

The same is true about many other programs since Canadian companies that have their plants and head offices here in Canada will have to compete on this so-called level playing field with American companies that have lower social programs in the United States, lower minimum wages to pay, and lower unemployment insurance. Yet our Canadian companies that have to pay the taxes to support these social programs, which we believe are important, will say at one point: "Because we are in Canada, we are paying taxes to our provincial and federal Governments to support important social programs. We have always paid those taxes and we have not objected to them. But now, because we have to compete with American companies that are not paying taxes to support medicare and a reasonable unemployment insurance system, those companies are coming into Canada and underselling us". These Canadian companies will say to the Government: "Either you reduce these programs so we can compete, or we will go to the United States".

The pressure will arise. I might say that that sort of pressure arose when we were discussing the Bill on pharmaceutical drugs during the last year. People in Montreal were saying: "Either you support the Government's Bill to weaken support for reasonable drug prices or we are going to do our research and development in the United States or some other country". They were trying to put that pressure on us even then. But of course the Government had made this deal with the United States. It pushed through its Bill despite the objections on this side of the House. We have now seen drug prices go up in Canada for ordinary Canadians. Already they are paying the price for the Government's policy on free trade.

I have already mentioned with respect to jobs—I forget how much time I have left, Madam Speaker. I could spend the whole day attacking this agreement.

With respect to jobs—

Miss MacDonald: In Montreal, in the pharmaceutical industry.

Mr. Allmand: I have dealt with that. The Government has already raised the price of pharmaceuticals through its Bill. We will be watching to see how much research and development and new employment there will be in Canada as a result of it. We have not seen it yet, but we will be watching very closely. With respect to that Bill, we had a formula as a result of a commission that would have solved the problem without selling out to the United States. So there was another way of doing that without pursuing the same means that the Government put before us.

This trade deal with the United States is a means of entrenching a Conservative agenda for a long period of time. That is the hidden side of it. What this agreement will do is more or less to entrench us into a free market system with a Conservative agenda, an agenda against reasonable social programs, minimum wages, unemployment insurance and affirmative action programs. Once we get into this deal with the United States it will be hard to change. The sort of society which prevails in the United States will be imported into Canada through this deal. For the Government to suggest otherwise is complete nonsense.

When a country of 25 million people, Canada, is up against a country of 250 million people, the United States, one does not need much intelligence to conclude who will win. It certainly would be nice if the Americans would harmonize to our medicare programs, to our hospitalization programs, to our unemployment insurance system and so on, but they will not. The pressure on Canadian companies will be to do it the same way as they do it in the United States so that we can compete.

Very often the Government likes to compare the Canada-U.S. trade deal with the European Common Market. It says: "Look, free trade works in Europe, therefore, this is a great deal. It is similar, it will work here. The Canada-U.S. trade deal is not at all the same as the Common Market. First, the European Common Market involves a large number of countries. Several of them are larger countries, such as Britain, Germany, France and Italy. There are some smaller countries, such as the Netherlands, Belgium, Spain, Denmark, and others. They all have their own languages and their own cultures. There is not the opportunity for any one of those countries to overwhelm the other. The Germans will not overwhelm the French, and the French will not overwhelm the English. They balance each other off so that one side will not predominate.

Unfortunately, in this particular deal we have a country of 25 million people, Canada, in which two-thirds of the people speak English. We are already bombarded by American magazines, television, films and so on. We are side by side with a country of 250 million people who speak the same language as two-thirds of our own people. The threats that are present in this one-on-one deal are not present in the European Common Market. One cannot compare the Common Market to this particular deal. Nor can it be compared to the Auto Pact. The Auto Pact is not a free trade deal. It is a managed trade deal. It obliges the United States to invest in Canada. It obliges the United States to maintain so many jobs in Canada. It is a managed trade deal. It does not allow the United States to do whatever it wants with respect to these matters.

With respect to jobs, we have all sorts of estimates. I suppose that jobs are the ultimate social policy. One's policy on employment is one's ultimate social policy because the first goal is to have people working in good, solid jobs. There are safety nets in case they are not working, for example, if a worker is ill, handicapped or thrown out of work.

There have been so many statements with respect to jobs. One day the former Minister of Employment said that 300,000 jobs would be lost. The next day he retracted on that and was contradicted by the Minister of Finance. There have been all sorts of estimates. Some were that we would lose jobs, and some were that we would gain them. The most recent one, about a month ago, in a report of the Economic Council stated that over a 10-year period we would have a net gain of over 200,000 jobs. That is an average of 20,000 to 25,000 jobs per year in all of Canada. That is what was said we would gain.

The report pointed out—and a great many people did not look into the fine print of that report—that 188,000 jobs would be lost. Most of those jobs are in industry. Most of the jobs that would be gained are in the service sector. We all know that, for the most part, in industry the jobs are high paying, full time, unionized, with benefits, pensions, and so on. The jobs that will replace them under this deal will be non-unionized, minimum wage, part-time, and involve contracting out. That is the American way; lay off full-time workers and contract out to a small company that can avoid the minimum standards of national programs. They will hire the same people to do the job whether it is maintenance or repairs, and it will be done at the minimum wage, whereas before it was done for a reasonable wage where a man could support his family. That is what will happen as a result of this deal. There will be good industrial jobs lost to service type jobs in this wild mêlée with the United States over trade and markets.

Despite this adjustment that will have to take place between industrial type jobs and service type jobs, it is interesting to note that the Government has not provided for any special retraining or adjustment programs. Two committees of the House, in unanimous reports, recommended special adjustment programs. That means that the Conservative Members on those committees agreed with those reports, because they have the majority.

In the Standing Committee on Labour, Employment and Immigration there are five Conservatives, one Liberal, and one New Democrat. Together, the seven of us issued a report stating that there must be special adjustment programs in order that the person who has been kicked out of an industrial job and has to go into a service type job will have some type of retraining.

What did the Government say when we asked for those special adjustment and training programs? It stated that the present programs are good enough. People all over the country are saying that they are not good enough. Last week the community colleges in Toronto said that the Canadian job strategy was not adequate. They stated that they could not train people to fill the jobs in Toronto at the present time where there is a very good economy. They said that they cannot even get the people trained to do those jobs.

The reason that the Canadian job strategy is not doing the work that it should do is that the Government has cut training programs by 32 per cent since 1984. In 1984 those programs received $2.2 billion, and now they are down to $1.6 billion. That is the type of programming that will be used to adjust workers who are thrown out of good jobs when the free trade agreement goes into effect. No, Madam Speaker.

I wish to reiterate that we support this resolution. The trade deal threatens our social programs. It threatens our job policies. It threatens our cultural programs. This agreement is not only about trade, and it is not only an economic agreement. This is a deal with very serious social and political implications. The real question in this debate, not only here today but throughout the months to come, is what type of country do we want. What type of place do we want Canada to be? What is our vision and dream for Canada? Is it a Canada that is a semi-sovereign appendage of the United States, harmonized to United States standards, harmonized to United States social programs and culture? Is it submitting to the doctrine of manifest destiny which was enunciated in the United States over 100 years ago? Or is our vision of Canada of a free, independent Canada, friendly with the United States and other countries but developing its own policies, pursuing its own goals, maintaining its own identity and sovereignty? That is what this debate is about. My choice is with the latter option, and we will completely oppose this agreement to the bitter end.

Ms. McDonald: I agree with a great deal of what the Hon. Member had said about condemning the Government on this trade deal. I particularly agree with the Hon. Member on his interpretation of the trade deal as bringing in the Conservative agenda, that the Government would not have the nerve to attack our social programs and our cultural institutions in a direct manner. Therefore, in this indirect manner it is able to pursue the neo-Conservative agenda along with Ronald Reagan and Margaret Thatcher. I heartily agree with all of that.

I would like to ask the Hon. Member why, given the concerns that he has raised in his speech, Quebec Liberals are not opposing the trade deal? It seems that because of the loss of sovereignty, the loss of power to make decisions, to pursue the distinct society, to use performance requirements, to have a provincial energy policy as opposed to a continental energy strategy, to use the energy sector for job creation, to have a differential pricing policy, and all of those things that Quebec has used effectively in the past, under the trade deal Quebec will lose the opportunity to make those types of decisions. I wonder why Quebec Liberals are not fighting with the Hon. Member against the trade deal.

My final question is the following. With the increasingly hypothetical possibility of the Liberals forming a federal Government in the near future, how can we be sure that they would tear up the trade deal? Some days they say that they would tear it up, and on other days they are not so sure that they would. What type of day would it have to be for the Liberals to decide one way or the other on this absolutely crucial question for the future survival of Canada?

Mr. Allmand: I wish to make it clear that it is the Quebec Government, a government of the Québec Liberal Party, which has taken that position. There are many Liberals in Quebec who take the same position as the federal Liberal Party which means that they oppose the deal. The Government of Robert Bourassa supports the deal. If the Hon. Member is asking me to explain why they are supporting the deal, I am afraid that I cannot explain why Mr. Bourassa is supporting the deal, because I do not agree with him. Unfortunately, I take issue with Mr. Bourassa on this. By the way, the Liberal Party, different from the New Democratic Party, has two separate Parties in Quebec. There is the Quebec Liberal Party and the federal Liberal Party in Québec. A large number of people belong to both Parties. The reason they split years ago was that things are often seen from a federal perspective or a provincial perspective.

Having said that, I guess one would have to elicit the reason for the Québec Government supporting the deal. I feel that the deal is contrary to the interests of Quebec; Québec farmers are opposing the deal, Québec workers are opposing the deal. If energy is the principal reason why Mr. Bourassa is supporting the deal, I do not see that as a legitimate reason. Mr. Bourassa is already selling a good deal of Quebec energy to the United States. It is true that he has to respect the mechanisms of the Energy Board, as long as it stays in place., The fact of the matter is that I do not know how this would help Québec in promoting its energy business.

On the other hand, I think it would hurt Quebec citizens since they may not be able to have a lower price for their own energy as they have had for years. It has always been a natural thing to do that if there is a lot of electricity, oil or gas, the citizens of that province receive a lower price. We have been benefiting in Québec from low hydro prices for many years. If I understand the deal correctly, and many experts have told me that this is the case, we will not be able to charge one price to Quebecers for energy and another price to Americans. The same price will have to be charged. Therefore, if a market in the United States dictates a higher price, then that is what we will have to pay in Québec. I am not an apologist for the Quebec Government of Robert Bourassa, and I cannot tell the Hon. Member what his arguments are. In any case, I do not support those arguments.

The other point raised by the Hon. Member was that on one day we say that we will tear up the agreement, and on another day we say we will not. I would like the Hon. Member to cite the days when our Leader has stated that he would not. He states that, if elected to office, as the Leader of the Party and as the Prime Minister of the day, he would tell the United States that this deal is not acceptable to us and we want out. He has stated that over and over again. I do not know what the Hon. Member is talking about when she says on some days he states that he would tear up the agreement and on other days he states the opposite.

• (1210)

I challenge her and anybody else in this House or elsewhere to show me one quote from the Hon. Member for Vancouver Quadra (Mr. Turner) where he would agree to this trade deal. He said over and over again that he will not agree to this trade deal, that he prefers the alternatives set out in our Liberal Party booklet called "Reaching Out. A Liberal alternative to the Canada-U.S. Trade Agreement", which is to pursue lower tariffs and lower trade barriers internationally through the multilateral process and through sector agreements as we have done for years and years with great success.

Mr. Winegard: Mr. Speaker, let me comment on my hon. friend's discussion. I think everybody in this House wants a free and independent Canada. We want a free and prosperous Canada, but we also want a Canada able to afford its social programs, own cultural programs and its own sovereignty. The choice is not between the status quo, as many would have you believe, Madam Speaker, and free trade with the United States; the choice is really between a competitive, vigorous Canada and a Canada which will sink into an abyss of protectionism and government intervention to make us uncompetitive in the whole world. That is what this is all about.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Ms. McDonald: Why didn't you say that before the election?

Mr. Winegard: I have two questions for the Hon. Member. Where in the agreement, specifically, I ask the Hon. Member to give me page, chapter and article number, does it say that Quebec cannot make any deals it wants on electricity with whoever it wants to sell it to? I ask the Hon. Member to give me the article number.

Second, could he give me the article number where it says that we cannot protect our cultural industries and cannot continue to promote the CBC, where we cannot subsidize all the things we have been subsidizing now, and where the United States cannot take reciprocal action. It is not in Section 20.05. Section 20.05 specifically says that under Section 1 of that article the cultural industries with the exception of 4 are protected. Why don't people learn to read the thing properly, Madam Speaker?

Mr. Allmand: Madam Speaker, first, the Hon. Member suggests that we need this deal in order to afford our social programs. He says we need this deal in order to become competitive and work toward a growing economy so that we can have social programs. Canada has developed one of the best social networks in the world without a free trade agreement with the United States.

Mr. Stewart: With a deficit.

Mr. Allmand: The Hon. Member says "with a deficit". Since the Conservatives have come to power the deficit has increased by billions of dollars.

Miss MacDonald: No, it has been reduced.

Mr. Allmand: It has gone down.

Miss MacDonald: Yes. The deficit has gone down.

Mr. Allmand: It has not gone down. The deficit has gone up. Everybody in the country knows it has gone up. The Minister of Finance has even announced that.

In this country we have developed excellent social programs without a free trade deal with the United States and over the years Canadians have ensured good jobs and prosperity. As a matter of fact, in the last year for which we have trade figures Canada had a $200 billion trade surplus with the United States. Yet the Government was begging for this free trade agreement with the United States which gives up our sovereignty and threatens our social programs.

The Hon. Member asked me where in the agreement it says that certain social programs are threatened or our ability to bring in new programs is limited.

Mr. Winegard: What about electricity?

Mr. Allmand: I will deal with electricity. Of course it does not say that explicitly, but I refer to the the testimony of the people from Quaker Oats, the people from McCains and others who have said that if they are to compete with American companies in Canada they will not be able to afford the taxes and special payments which they make for these social programs if they compete with these companies which do not have that same infrastructure.

With respect to energy, what the agreement does say—I have the elements of the agreement here and I will have somebody here this afternoon with the final agreement—is that there is broad agreement to ensure the freest possible bilateral trade in energy, including non-discriminatory access for the United States to Canadian energy supplies and secure market access for Canadian energy exports to the United States.

One has to ask, and many experts have, what does non-discriminatory access by the United States to Canadian energy supplies mean? It means that you cannot charge a higher price to Americans than to Canadians. I will go on with the elements of agreement at page 17. It states that both sides have agreed to prohibit restrictions on imports or exports including quantitative restrictions, taxes, minimum import or export price requirements or any other equivalent measure subject to very limited exceptions. It goes on. If the Americans are to have non-discriminatory access to our energy supplies, then it means we cannot charge them a higher price than we charge Canadians.

By the way, Peter Lougheed, former Premier of Alberta, was asked that question when he came to the committee chaired by the Hon. Member. He said, "Despite the fact that we will not be able to give Albertans a lower price for oil and gas because of this deal, I still support it because, on the balance", according to him, "it was a good deal". He supported it despite the fact that he would not be able to give a lower price to Albertans for oil and gas and other energy supplies in that province. That is what Lougheed said to the committee. It is on the record. Look at the transcript.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Resuming debate with the Hon. Minister for Communications (Miss MacDonald).

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Communications): Madam Speaker, it has been a very interesting morning so far as we have listened to the spokespersons for the New Democratic and the Liberal Parties trying to outdo one another in undermining Canada's position as a trading nation. Obviously they are completely, introverted in their outlook. It does not say anything much for the future of the country when we get such a narrow introverted policy being espoused by members of the opposition Parties.

Within a few days now the House of Commons will debate in earnest the free trade agreement which was negotiated between Canada and the United States. If what I have heard so far from Hon. Members opposite is any indication of that debate, then I think it will have less to do with the future of Canada and more with the election hopes of the New Democratic and Liberal Parties.

In fact, as I read this motion and as I listen to the arguments put forward so far I really do not have any sense that Members in the Opposition really believe what it is they are saying simply because they know just how ludicrous their claims are. But I very much have a sense that they want the people of Canada to believe what they are saying. They want Canadians to believe that the Government would abandon its social or its cultural policies despite overwhelming evidence to the contrary that has been shown time and time again. But one thing stands in the way, the truth. Not a version of the truth, not a perception of the truth but the truth, plain and simple. That is really what the people of Canada are seeing. The truth proves indisputably, clearly, that Canada's sovereignty, Canada's right to establish and expand our social policies and cultural policies is as strong today six months after the agreement was signed as it ever has been.

Of course, the New Democratic Party is not about to let a little thing like the truth stand in the way. New Democrats want people to be frightened. That is the aim. They want people to doubt the future of this country, especially those in our society who are the most vulnerable, our older Canadians on fixed incomes, single parent mothers and children, Canadians on disability pensions and veterans' pensions, and Canadians in job retraining programs who rely on child care allowances in order to learn new skills. These are the people to whom their remarks are directed in the hope that they will create fear and concern among them. However, the truth sets out quite clearly what has been the trend in Canada over the last 50 years.

For the last 50 years, Canada and the United States have been progressively liberalizing trade between our two countries. Today, just 15 per cent of our trade carries any sort of tariff or any sort of restriction. The other 85 per cent is already free, and one must ask oneself what exactly is the result of these 50 years during which we have been reducing trade barriers to arrive at 85 per cent of our trade free. What exactly has happened? Have we seen our social programs diminished? Have we seen our powers limited in any way? Of course not. The exact opposite to that has occurred.

This half century has been marked by the greatest progression forward of social and cultural policies in our history. Programs such as medicare which is available to every Canadian, the Canada Pension Plan with disability allowances and survivors' benefits, the spouse's allowance, the child tax credit and many, many others. These have all been implemented during the time when our trade with the United States has been progressively liberalized.

What holds true for Canada's social programs also holds true for our cultural programs. Obviously, we have been introducing programs in both fields over this period of time when our trade has been liberalized to the point where only 15 per cent remain with any kind of barriers, tariffs or restrictions.

Mr. Allmand: Through the multilateral process.

Miss MacDonald: Through bilateral and multilateral processes.

The fact is, and the record will prove, that the free trade agreement with the United States guarantees and strengthens the bonds of Canadian culture and identity by writing into the agreement a special exemption for culture. As with social programs, it is precisely the last 50 years, in which we have seen trade barriers and tariffs being reduced between the two countries, that we have seen as well an establishment and growth of independent and viable cultural industries and institutions in Canada. Because they are independent and because they are here, we insisted on having exemptions in the field of culture. We do have an independent culture, a culture that we can be proud of, one that we want to see grow, because it is so very special to each and every one of us.

This, of course, brings me back to this petty-minded motion that is before us today. Those who support this motion show that they have not understood the first principles, not only of the exemptions but of our Canadian culture itself. What do the cultural exemptions which Canada insisted upon in the free trade agreement mean? The exemptions mean that Canada will use support and policy measures to promote the financial viability of Canada's cultural industries, whether they involve individual artists or large organizations. Our purpose is to promote the ability of Canada's creators to reach the Canadian audience.

Opposition Members are so tied up with relying on what Americans have to say that they forget the purpose of our cultural policies. Cultural industries are exempted because the arbitration of continental market forces alone, with economics of scale determining success, should not govern whether an adequate Canadian choice is available in our lives.

The exemptions mean that Canadian content rules will continue to apply in broadcasting policy. They mean that simultaneous substitution and Bill C-58 as it applies to advertising will remain cornerstones of the Canadian broadcasting system. Why is this? It is because we insisted that those exemptions should be there.

The exemptions mean that the CBC will remain a central figure in the way our cultural growth and development take place, as with the Canada Council and our other cultural institutions. Every one of them is free to develop as they and the Government of the day see fit. Why is this? Again, because we were determined to see that all of these industries and agencies were exempted from the free trade agreement.

The exemptions mean that our publishing industry will continue to grow and prosper under majority ownership, because the Baie Comeau policy is preserved intact. In fact, if anything, free trade strengthens the policy by insisting that when there is no other Canadian purchaser available, the Canadian Government itself will pay fair market price for a foreign-owned publishing concern that is required to be sold under the divestiture terms of the policy. That is a new and even better guarantee for our publishing industry, and we have done that in the case of Ginn and Company.

I might also observe that the Baie Comeau policy has now been applied on four different occasions, directly or indirectly. It has been applied on Doubleday, Holt, Rinehart & Winston, Ginn and GLC. However, I might say that we are not in the business of protecting warehouses, whether American or British, as in the case of the Penguin takeover of NAL. Instead, we have directed our attention to the retention of postal subsidies and to the retention of Bill C-58 as it applies to advertising because these too are part of our exemptions. That, of course, is what Hon. Members opposite seem to forget.

These exemptions strengthen and secure the roots of a thriving Canadian culture, no matter what opponents may claim to the contrary. It is thriving, because for the last three and a half years, this Government has made an unprecedented commitment to an independent and secure cultural future for Canada, equal to and, in the opinion of many, surpassing anything that has been done before. Opposition MPs, of course, pull no punches when telling the people of Canada what the Government has failed to do in this area, or what they think it has failed to do.

Just let me give Hon. Members a brief sampler of the things that have been done. If Hon. Members object to these, I would like to see them rise and say so. It is this Government which set up the Canadian sound recording development program, a program to give Canadians an opportunity to hear their own singers, their own songwriters, their own composers and their own musicians. For the next five years, $25 million has been put into this program, and it is having tremendous benefits.

It is this Government which created the Public Lending Right Program, something for which writers had argued for 40 years. This Government brought in a program that has given long overdue recognition and compensation to Canada's writers for the public use of their works.

It is this Government which established the Baie Comeau publishing policy to ensure Canadian control of this vital industry. It is this Government which created the book publishing industry development fund. We have moved to strengthen Canada's national museums and their contributions to cultural activity all across Canada.

It is this Government which achieved what no other Government in over 60 years has achieved, that is, to begin revision of the Copyright Act which is so absolutely vital to our creators. If Liberal Members opposite would just convince their colleagues in the Senate to pass the copyright Bill we will provide a greater guarantee for creators than we have seen in this country heretofore.

It is also this Government which made the broadcast program production fund an ongoing program involving $60 million every year. It has made Telefilm Canada a major producer of quality Canadian programming. We have also created a separate five-year $165 million fund for feature films. It is this Government which accomplished what other Governments only talked about, an independent film distribution system. This is not a record of abandonment or limitation. It is not a record of faint measures. I might add for the benefit of Hon. Members opposite that much of this was achieved in the past two years precisely while negotiations for a free trade agreement were going on.

There are others who say what I have just said as well. It is not just I. In an editorial last autumn the Winnipeg Free Press said that "Canadian authors have enjoyed national and international success. More Canadian plays have been appearing in Canadian regional theatres. A host of Canadian ballet companies have sprung up. Canadian films have begun to make their way on to Canadian and foreign scenes. Canadian television programs are finding larger Canadian audiences. Certainly if culture expression is any measure, the Canadian identity has never been stronger". Never stronger, Madam Speaker, directly because of the contributions and initiatives of this Government.

Let us look at what has happened since the signing of the free trade agreement and its tabling in the House. Just look at that period of time alone. If the agreement signals, as Hon. Members opposite would say, the "voluntary relinquishing" of Canadian sovereignty to decide upon newer expanded cultural programs, then surely we would see some indication of this. Yet what do we see instead? Just take a look at the last six months in the Department of Communications alone. We have increased the public lending rights to authors by some $800,000. We have increased grants paid out through the Canada Council by $8 million. We have announced the go-ahead on the CBC's new broadcast centre in Toronto. CBC resources have increased this year by $53 million. In fact, total program spending in this portfolio will increase by $115 million this fiscal year alone.

The new Canadian film distribution program, as I have already said, has accomplished what no Government before ever attempted. That is, we have created a separate national film distribution market by governing the importation of foreign films. That is something which has been requested for years. The Hon. Member for Broadview—Greenwood (Ms. McDonald) may not want that measure in Canada, but those of us who believe in the future of Canadian culture and films certainly do.

That policy, of course, does even more than establish rules giving access by Canadian distributors to independently produced films. It also creates a $85 million film distribution fund to help Canadian distributors achieve this objective and invest in and market Canadian-produced films. The program also gives another $115 million to Telefilm Canada and the National Film Board to make culturally significant Canadian films over the next five years. Again, the Hon. Member for Broadview—Greenwood may not want to see that come into effect, but those in the Canadian film industry do. As Peter Simpson, President of Norstar Distributors said, it is a terrific piece of legislation. The people in the industry know.

Then there is another program, that of postal subsidies. Canada's publishing industry sees this Government's billion dollar plus commitment to continue postal subsidies as yet one more affirmation, one more proof, that this Government has lived up to its word on culture and free trade. It is building for the future. Governments have traditionally renewed postal subsidies one year at a time. We have moved to give the publishing industry long-term security and stability by announcing that this program will continue in effect for the next five years so they are able to plan adequately.

What we have done in film programs we have done in the field of sound recording and so many other fields. Only Members opposite cannot see what we have accomplished and what the industry recognizes as the contribution made to them. The reason they cannot see that is that they do not have either the foresight or hindsight, they only have the short-sightedness to look at themselves, what it is they want to carp about at any particular time, with no policies whatsoever in this field.

In closing, I want to say that the evidence that we have respected and lived up to in the free trade agreement with regard to culture is all around us. We see it reflected in the industries as they grow and develop and become stronger. Others during this day will speak to some of the issues raised this morning. I close merely by saying that fear and the creation of fear will get Hon. Members opposite nowhere because Canadians understand the game they are playing. Canadians understand what it is they are trying to do and they simply will not buy it.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Questions or comments.

Mr. Allmand: Madam Speaker, at the beginning of her remarks the Minister acknowledged that over the last 40 years there has been a considerable decrease in tariffs between Canada and the U.S. My figures show that at the present time about 80 per cent of goods and services are without tariff. She said, about 85 per cent. She also acknowledged that during that period of time there was a great increase in social and cultural programs. What she did not say was that all that was done without a special comprehensive trade agreement with the U.S.

If we were able to bring down tariffs to the extent that she acknowledges without a special bilateral comprehensive trade agreement with the U.S., why is it necessary to enter into such an agreement in order to get these decreases in tariffs?

In order to get further decreases in tariffs we have to give them, one, non-discriminatory access to our energy supplies. We have to treat all American companies as nationals. We have had to abolish our capacity to screen foreign investment to control U.S. investment in Canada. In order to get further tariff reductions we had to throw our agricultural industry into the same market-place as the Americans, even though we have long and harsh winters with all the costs associated with them. We had to weaken the Auto Pact.

Why was it necessary to enter into such an agreement when we were getting lower tariffs over the last 40 years without such a comprehensive agreement, without selling out our energy, our ability to screen foreign investment, our agriculture, and the Auto Pact? Why was it necessary to enter into such an agreement when we were getting these things through another process which was effective?

Miss MacDonald: Madam Speaker, I know that the Hon. Member is a student of history and he may want to look back at the beginning of this arrangement whereby we have seen, over the past 50 odd years, the liberalization of trade between Canada and the United States.

It began in 1935 with the signing of the Most Favoured Nation Treaty between Canada and the United States. At that time that was the largest trading arrangement between any two countries in the history of the world. That Most Favoured Nation Treaty went on to become the forerunner of the GATT. After World War II that agreement between Canada and the United States became the prototype for the establishment of the GATT.

We have progressively followed that route bilaterally and multilaterally over the past 50 years. With the free trade agreement we now see the possibility for history to repeat itself, for the free trade agreement between Canada and the United States to become another model for the GATT with regard to the liberalization of world trade which most countries desire. That is what the Uruguay Round is all about. In fact, we can help to move that process forward as we did in 1935 when we signed the Most Favoured Nation Treaty between our two great countries.

Ms. McDonald: Madam Speaker, I remember when the Hon. Minister was an ardent nationalist and an activist within the Committee for an Independent Canada. I would have thought that she would be the Conservative who would lead the exodus from the Conservative Party over this trade deal. I thought that she would stand up for Canada and fight the deal instead of succumbing. She is today defending the indefensible, and I would like to ask her some very specific questions.

She talked about Bill C-58 but she did not talk about Article 2007, the print in Canada requirement which says that Canada shall repeal various sections of the Income Tax Act which define a Canadian issue of a newspaper or periodical for purposes of deduction of income tax expenses. This was the very controversial measure brought in to give a boost to magazine periodical publishing to encourage advertisers to advertise in Canadian publications.

Without this measure we probably would not have had the weekly Maclean's. Maclean's thinks it can do just fine without it in the future, but I do not think it could have got started without it. Certainly it only went weekly after we got that. Many magazines, which constitute a thriving industry in Canada now, depend on that. Would the Hon. Member comment about the pressure she has received from the smaller magazines especially which provide a very important cultural service for Canada and would want that?

She talks about the exemption for the cultural industries but it is a fairly limited list. Printing is not on the list. I wonder what Gutenberg would think about the suggestion that printing is not an artistic cultural activity. What about a province that wants to improve and develop book publishing within its own jurisdiction? What if it wants to see more Canadian publishing? We know it is important to get more textbook publishing done in Canada and some provinces, particularly Ontario, have had a printing policy. Would it be possible for a province to have a requirement that school textbooks be printed within the country, or would this be against the trade deal?

With regard to film distribution and ownership, the Minister has talked about her scheme, which is a very pale imitation even of the one about which she spoke a year ago. That, itself, was a far paler imitation of what had been recommended by the task force set up by her predecessor, that is, to have film distribution Canadian-owned.

My question on this is very specific. I cannot see the Liberals doing this because they have chickened out on this issue so often in the past, but if Party X gets into government and wants to bring in a film distribution ownership scheme, would that be against the trade deal? Would Canada be able to stand up on that issue.

What does it mean when the Government of the United States, in its summary of the free trade agreement, states very explicitly:

> However, the U.S. retains the right to redress any adverse commercial effects of any future cultural measures enacted by Canada.

Would the Hon. Minister tell us what kind of future cultural measures the United States Government might have in mind? This is not fear-mongering. What are these future cultural measures that the United States would be able to stop as a result of this shameful trade deal?

Miss MacDonald: Madam Speaker, it is always a sad spectacle to hear people speak who do not believe in their own creators, their own artists, and their own culture. It is a very sad state of affairs when we hear this kind of comment emanating from the Hon. Member for Broadview—Greenwood.

Ms. McDonald: Answer the questions.

Miss MacDonald: She is so nice and polite, Madam Speaker. First, she asked about the book publishing field. Printing is not a cultural activity, it is an industrial activity. Printing is carried out back and forth across the border now. People have their books printed where they can get the best possible financial deal. That is what is referred to. Nothing else in Bill C-58 has been touched; nothing to do with the cultural aspects of the measures of Bill C-58. Of course the Hon. Member would never think to acknowledge that, as she has never acknowledged anything that has been done.

The Canadian Book Publishing Industry Development Program funding has been increased substantially over the past few years. She would not acknowledge that of course. The postal subsidy has been maintained, a billion dollar plus program which, of course, the Hon. Member did not even mention.

Ms. McDonald: It wasn't supposed to be on the table. You're admitting it was on the table.

Miss MacDonald: Let me tell you what the book publishers and the periodical associations are saying. They say:

> The members of the Canadian Book Publishers' Council, a national trade association representing more than three quarters of all books sold in Canada annually, congratulate the Hon. Flora MacDonald, Minister of Communications on her successful and critically important efforts to freeze the postal subsidy at its current level for five years.

The Canadian Periodical Publishers' Association says:

> I am writing on behalf of the CPPA's 268 members to express our appreciation for your tireless efforts—to maintain the postal subsidy programme.

Ms. McDonald: You're not answering questions about the trade deal.

Miss MacDonald: These are the programs that are so critically important to our publishers and they were exempted from the free trade measures and maintained here in Canada.

Ms. McDonald: What about the others?

Miss MacDonald: The Member has asked about Section 2005. She cites this Section as being somehow sinister to Canada's cultural purposes and undermining the significance of the cultural exemption. Since she does not seem to be able to recognize this, I will explain to her that this is both a clarification and a protection. On the one hand, it makes clear that since cultural industries are exempt under the agreement the dispute settlement mechanism specified in the agreement generally does not apply. For actions taken by one side or another in the area of cultural industries the existing trade remedy laws continue to apply, as they have in the past.

• (1250)

The difference is that while in the past the U.S. could take counter measures of any value against Canada, with this agreement they can only do so to the equivalent value of the measure taken in this country. In other words, it is a big improvement on what we have at the present time.

Ms. Marion Dewar (Hamilton Mountain): Madam Speaker, I am pleased to participate in this debate because some of the matters involved in the trade agreement have been grossly misunderstood. Certainly the Conservative Party seems unwilling to share its information with the people of Canada. It has been packaging a sales deal without discussing the real substance of the agreement.

We were told that many items would not be open for negotiation at the table, including culture and social services. We were asked to trust the Government and wait for the agreement. We are very concerned about what we see because the Minister who just spoke admitted that the question of postal subsidy was on the table and was a struggle to protect.

Miss MacDonald: That is right. But we protected it.

Ms. Dewar: We were assured that it would not even be part of the discussion. We are concerned about how many other items were on the table and how many long-term deals have been made.

The Minister talked about protecting 15 per cent of the market for the Canadian film industry.

Ms. McDonald: We are going to get 20 per cent.

Ms. Dewar: We did not think there would be any suggestion about any percentage. Traditionally, we have only had 3 per cent, but we now find that Canadian industries must compete internationally against huge corporations in the American market. They will only be subsidized with some funds to help them make proposals, but there is no guarantee for any part of their own market. That certainly interferes in our cultural industry.

We were also told that social programs would not be part of the negotiations in this trade deal. Lo and behold, we find that the administration of health care is part of the deal. Private corporations will be able to administer our non-profit public institutions.

A profit oriented health care system will cost the consumer more. Second, it reduces the delivery of service to the consumer. We must also compare non-profit health care delivery in Canada with that in the United States where health insurance is voluntary. We know that 40 per cent of the American population is not covered and that we have been able to provide health care services at less cost than the Americans. Yet the Government has opened the doors to the Americans for them to administer our health care system and our hospitals for a profit.

Ninety-seven per cent of Canadians treasure our health care delivery system and will not give it up easily. We will not accept this measure in the agreement, and the Government will recognize that as soon as it goes to the electorate for support.

We are also concerned about child care. There are some two million children under formal child care with standards of which we are not certain. For the first time in our history, the Government is providing public funds to private sector corporations in order to subsidize child care. This means that our tax dollars will go to help multinational child care facilities make a profit from child care.

Those who have been closely involved with child care over the years say that a lobby group has asked for a reduction in the standard of child care for such things as the number of staff, health conditions and space. The reason is that the current standards are too expensive and prevent the facilities from operating at a profit. The Government is saying, with its so-called national child care strategy, that it is willing to subsidize these multinationals with public funds.

We know that the trade agreement will require American companies to be treated the same as Canadian nationals. Canadians never thought their Government would go so far as to allow their children to become pawns in an agreement between two countries.

Never before has a trade agreement in the western world included services. Government officials, the Economic Council of Canada and others have consistently stated that they do not know the implications of trading services and have recommended that the Government not enter into such an agreement. Yet that is what the Government has done, and it is absolute nonsense to suggest that our sovereignty is intact.

I am sure the Minister was influenced by this trade deal and could no longer protect 15 per cent of our market for our film distribution. There was also great pressure on the Government to pass its drug legislation in order to tell the multinationals it could have free access to Canada with higher drug prices. It was trying to show the Americans that we have an enticing market.

We heard this morning that the reduction of tariffs over the years has been positive for Canada and that we have been part of the GATT negotiations. Everyone agrees that there is a need for freer trade. But the Government accuses the NDP of trying to keep a fortress, protectionist mentality. The Government has made sure that we have a North American fortress mentality so that we will be unable to experiment and take on the challenges of the Pacific Rim or expand our trade to become an equal player in the world.

The Government's action means that we will have to answer to another country when we want to expand our trade. We cannot review any kind of foreign investment. If we will have no say about foreign companies operating in Canada because the national interest will include the North American continent, according to this agreement. That is not acceptable to Canadians.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): I am sure the Hon. Member will want to complete her remarks after lunch.

It being one o'clock, I do now leave the chair until two o'clock this day.

At 1 p.m. the House took recess.

EMPLOYMENT

FOREIGN STUDENTS—PERMISSION TO WORK IN CANADA

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, on February 24 the Minister of Employment and Immigration and the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) announced a change in policy which would allow foreign students studying in Canada at Canadian universities to work in Canada for their universities and for agencies of the universities. The policy also permits the spouses of international students to work in Canada.

This policy went into effect on March 1, two months ago, in all provinces of Canada except Québec, simply because the Conservative Government did not properly consult with the Quebec Government beforehand. Since there are thousands of international students in Quebec who need employment this summer, when will the Government straighten out this mess it created?

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

METROPOLITAN TORONTO—CALL FOR PRESERVATION OF ROUGE RIVER VALLEY

Mr. John Oostrom (Willowdale): Mr. Speaker, the housing crisis has reached a critical stage in Metro Toronto. A solution for affordable housing must be found or Toronto will be facing social upheaval in the near future. However, the Peterson Government, for purely cynical, political opportunism is eyeing the hundreds of undeveloped acres in the Rouge Valley.

The Rouge River Valley is the last remaining land in Metro which contains much of the flora and fauna which were indigenous to Toronto before concrete became king. The Rouge Valley is a priceless opportunity for present and future generations to experience the beauty of our natural environment.

The Minister of the Environment (Mr. McMillan), after touring the Rouge, has added his support to preserving this national treasure. The Peterson Government should look at the causes of the housing crisis, such as rent controls, instead of destroying our heritage.

FINANCE

YELLOWKNIFE—TAX RELIEF FOR HOUSING ADVOCATED

Ms. Audrey McLaughlin (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, a number of federal Departments have combined to deny residents of Yellowknife, Northwest Territories, their legitimate northern tax benefits for housing costs. Upon the advice of CMHC, Revenue Canada has singled out Yellowknife as the only community north of 60° to have a viable rental and housing market for tax purposes despite the fact that Yellowknife, like all northern communities, has a very atypical market where most housing is employer supplied, and where waiting lists and large minimum deposits are a way of life due to a 10-year zero vacancy rate.

The result of this arbitrary housing assessment has been that Yellowknife residents are experiencing a substantial increase in their tax burden despite paying very high rents, or housing expenses equal to those in surrounding communities not so designated. Most Yellowknife residents will no longer receive the full value of the northern allowance's deduction and some will lose access to other tax benefits, such as single-parent families who are losing a proportion of their child tax benefits.

In the interest of fairness to northern Canadians, I call upon the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) and the Minister responsible for Revenue Canada (Mr. Mackay) to end this discrimination against Yellowknife residents and accord all communities in the North equal status for the purposes of providing tax relief for housing.

REGIONAL ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT

GRANTING OF FINANCIAL ASSISTANCE TO BAIE BLEUE PRODUCTS INC.

Mr. Darryl L. Gray (Bonaventure—Îles-de-la-Madeleine): Mr. Speaker, during the weekend, I had the pleasure of announcing that federal financial assistance was approved for Baie Bleue Inc., a company in the riding of Bonaventure—Îles-de-la-Madeleine. The federal funding is provided as part of the industrial development plan for Eastern Quebec. The company will also be able to take advantage of lower interest rates and loan insurance under the Atlantic Enterprise Program.

The project, which is expected to cost a total of nearly $1 million, will create at least fifteen new jobs in my riding.

When a commercial mussel farm is established in Carleton—St-Omer, where the mussels will also be prepared and processed, the Company will be the biggest producer in Quebec.

I want to say in concluding, Mr. Speaker, that this is another example of our Progressive Conservative Government's commitment to regional development.

[English]

I thank you, Mr. Speaker, and once again everyone is welcome to invest in Bonaventure and the Madeleine Islands.

ENERGY

ALTERNATIVE ENERGY INDUSTRY—EFFECT OF TAX CHANGE

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, the chickens are coming home to roost. When the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) chopped capital cost allowance write-offs for people investing in energy conservation equipment, he was warned that such a move would have a serious impact on the alternative energy industry in Canada. "This decision has already meant the collapse of small hydro, wind, gas cogeneration, solar and biomass projects across the country", says Jeff Passmore, Chairman of the Conservation and Renewable Energy Industry Council.

One estimate calculates that as much as $800 million in investments will be lost as a result of the Minister's removal of the tax incentive to invest in alternative energy projects.

We urge the Minister to read the Brundtland Commission report and restore the tax incentive he removed last February.

THE NATIONAL GALLERY OF CANADA

TRIBUTE TO BUILDERS

Mr. Claude Lanthier (LaSalle): Mr. Speaker, this week, which will be memorable for the opening of the magnificent National Gallery of Canada, it is a pleasure and an honour to invite the distinguished Members of this House to pay tribute to the outstanding construction team that built this monument to Canadian architectural genius.

Mr. Speaker, three cheers for the Canada Museums Construction Corporation, ably directed by Mr. Art Wilson, who carried out this masterly project designed by the brilliant Montreal architect, Moshe Safdie, whose solidly avant-garde work confirms his international reputation as a master of aesthetics and practical design.

This is another impressive accomplishment by one of our world-class Quebec architects.

NUCLEAR ENERGY

TREATMENT OF NUCLEAR WASTES—MINISTER'S POSITION

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview—Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, the prize for the most incredible answer in Parliament must surely go to the Associate Minister of National Defence (Mr. Dick) for his response to my question last Friday concerning an environmental assessment of the risks of nuclear submarines, particularly in the fragile environment of the Arctic Ocean.

The Hon. Minister said:

> The nuclear powered submarines will be out in the ocean. As the Hon. Member knows, when we are trying to neutralize used uranium in the Pickering plant in Ontario, for example, they put it into a swimming pool full of water. There are very few swimming pools in this world that are larger than the Atlantic or Pacific Oceans.

I wonder if the Minister would care to take a dip in the nuclear swimming pool at Pickering, or any other nuclear swimming pool, perhaps with the Minister for National Defence (Mr. Beatty). Would the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) go along with him, or the Minister of the Environment (Mr. McMillan)?

This is incredible policy for the environment, that nuclear wastes would simply be spilled into the Atlantic or Pacific Ocean. Shame on the Government!

TOURISM

CONTRIBUTION OF INDUSTRY TO ECONOMY

Mrs. Barbara Sparrow (Calgary South): Mr. Speaker, this is National Tourism Awareness Week. It is important for all Members of Parliament, and all Canadians, to reflect on the significance of tourism to our country. We have established a tourism industry which has built upon Canada's strong and unique attractions, and our reputation for providing world-class hospitality.

Canadians can expect tourism to be our second largest industry by the year 2000.

Canadians were proud of the way in which all sectors pulled together to put Canada at the centre of the world in Expo 86. We did it again this year with the Calgary Winter Olympics which turned our winter weather into a Canadian asset.

I am proud that our Government is a full participating partner with the private sector in building a strong tourism industry. I fully support the Government's view of tourism as a priority industry of great importance to Canada's future.

TOURISM

NATIONAL TOURISM AWARENESS WEEK

Mr. Fernand Robichaud (Westmorland—Kent): Mr. Speaker, this week is National Tourism Week, and this year's theme reflects the importance of tourism for this country.

Tourism is one of our most important industries. It generates over 600,000 jobs directly in this country and more than 600,000 jobs indirectly, which means that one out of ten Canadians is involved. Tourism is the fastest growing job creating industry. It is already worth $22 billion to our economy.

[English]

Tourism is a vital industry in Canada. Its job creation capability and other positive economic spin-offs for our economy cannot be overestimated. Tourism is presently Canada's fifth largest industry, and is expected to be second largest by the year 2000. Though it is expected to grow, the Government still has a great deal to do to help the industry along and provide leadership where it is necessary.

Canada grows with tourism, and National Tourism Awareness Week is a good opportunity to reflect on the many positive benefits Canada receives from this vital industry.

REGIONAL ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT

DEVELOPMENT OF EAST MONTREAL—CONGRATULATIONS TO GOVERNMENT

Mr. Edouard Desrosiers (Hochelaga—Maisonneuve): Mr. Speaker, on behalf of my constituents, I would like to pay special tribute to the greatest Prime Minister of all time.

Mr. Speaker, as you know, in my riding in Montreal East we had twenty years that were absolutely disastrous. Montreal East was abandoned, hundreds of thousand of jobs were lost and the Liberals showed a total lack of concern for this area.

From 1980 to 1984, Mr. Speaker, 4,000 jobs were lost in the riding of Hochelaga—Maisonneuve. Since 1984, 114,000 permanent jobs have been created.

That is why, on behalf of my constituents, I wish to thank a Government that has invested hundreds of millions of dollars in Montreal East. This is an extraordinary example of economic renewal. Mr. Speaker, on behalf of my constituents, I wish to thank the Prime Minister and his Cabinet who have done a fantastic job for Montreal East.

ABORTION

SUPREME COURT DECISION—POSITION OF GOVERNMENT

Ms. Pauline Jewett (New Westminster—Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, despite an historic Supreme Court ruling last January that struck down Section 251 of the Criminal Code, women of this country still do not have access to comprehensive reproductive health services.

The federal Government has refused to take any leadership to ensure that women are not denied access to safe therapeutic abortions. It has allowed several provinces not only to ignore the intent of the Supreme Court ruling, but it has allowed them to ignore the principles of the Canada Health Act.

The Canada Health Act clearly states that medical services should be comprehensive and accessible. These are the principles that should guide the Government's policy on abortion as on all other health services for Canadian women.

At the same time the federal Government should finance the search for safe and effective methods of birth control, and it should support the work of responsible education organizations such as Planned Parenthood, rather than drastically cutting back its funding.

S. O. 21

STATUS OF WOMEN

CRITICISM OF GOVERNMENT

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, this morning we heard from the National Action Committee on the Status of Women about the litany of difficulties facing women across the country. No matter what the issue, it seems that the Government has broken a promise.

It started off with the Government's promise that we would have an expanded, accessible child care system across the country. Instead, it brought in a sham which is completely unacceptable. It has not been brought forward in Bill form, but it certainly does not reflect the aspirations and wishes of the women across the country.

On the issue of Indian women, with much fanfare the Government brought in legislation which stated that Indian women would be treated equally across the country, but the Government refuses to put its money where its mouth is. We are seeing a situation where discrimination still exists among our aboriginal peoples, discrimination which the Minister of Indian and Northern Affairs (Mr. McKnight) refuses to address. He will not even meet with the women's groups involved.

Homemakers' pensions are another broken promise. On the issue of family violence the federal Government has totally washed its hands of responsibility for federal programs in this particular area.

I would not be surprised if the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) does not participate in the women's debate in the next election, because he knows that he will be held accountable for the list of broken promises that characterize his Government's work on the issues that affect women.

CHALLENGE '88

INCREASED FUNDING FOR HIGH UNEMPLOYMENT AREAS

Mr. William C. Winegard (Guelph): Mr. Speaker, I would like to take a moment to say a few words about Challenge '88, a program designed to help students find summer jobs which, for the most part, are career related.

At the moment the economic performance in Ontario is very good. The same is true for some parts of Québec. Unfortunately, it is not true for the country as a whole. Some parts of the country are in difficulty, and the Government must respond accordingly.

Within the total funding of $180 million, Newfoundland will receive an increase of 92 per cent over last year; New Brunswick will receive an increase of 45 per cent over last year; and a large portion of the funds allocated to Ontario will go to Northern Ontario.

What a pleasure to see a Government responding in the proper manner to the realities of Canada, and using our taxes in the right manner. We owe the Minister our thanks.

TRADE

SUPPORT FOR CANADA-UNITED STATES FREE TRADE AGREEMENT

Mr. Ron Stewart (Simcoe South): Mr. Speaker, all morning I have listened to the purveyors of doom and gloom—the NDP-Grit coalition—decrying free trade. Free trade is the greatest thing for Canada since Confederation. I abhor David Peterson and the Leader of the NDP (Mr. Broadbent) for their fearmongering.

I polled the chief executive officers of the 27 largest employers in the city of Barrie and asked: "Do you favour free trade?" One replied "No", one replied "Undecided", and 25 replied a resounding "Yes". Overwhelming approval.

Support is strong. Who are opposed? Socialists, unionists, and left-wing media. Individuals such as Bob White, Mel Hurtig, and Shirley Carr. Why do they oppose free trade? Because it implies a free market economy, and this is diametrically opposed to the vital principle of a left-wing Government which believes in state control of the economy.

John Turner has more ups and downs than a Moldex toilet seat in a bus terminal. What about his paranoia? He who says he will tear up the free trade agreement. Well, I don't want that doubting Thomas tearing up my children's and my grandchildren's future.

TRADE

FISH EXPORTS—UNITED STATES SENATOR'S ACTIONS

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands): Mr. Speaker, last fall on the initiative of a United States' complaint GATT ruled against Canadian regulations prohibiting the export of unprocessed herring or salmon. This directly threatens the jobs of some 4,000 to 6,000 shore workers in British Columbia, many of whom are women.

In an attempt to protect these jobs the Government announced that it would bring in regulations requiring that all these fish would have to be landed in Canadian ports.

Now we have an American Senator, George Mitchell from Maine, bringing in regulations requiring the United States to retaliate for any action that Canada takes in this regard.

How much longer will Canada submit to this kind of action on the part of the United States? How often will we back down to U.S. action in the Government's mad desire to get an agreement, any agreement, on the free trade proposal?

IMMIGRATION

REFUGEE STATUS ADVISORY COMMITTEE—REVERSAL OF DECISION

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Deputy Prime Minister. It concerns the extraordinary interference of the Secretary of State for External Affairs in the independence of the refugee determination system over the case of Mr. Santokh Singh.

Following a unanimous ruling in favour of refugee status by the three distinguished members of the Refugee Status Advisory Committee, two former ambassadors to the Vatican and the UN, and one former head of the RSAC itself, the Secretary of State for External Affairs wrote two secret letters to the then Minister of Immigration, and on the basis of what seem to be purely personal, political, and diplomatic pressures, the Minister asked for and received an immediate reversal of this decision.

Can the Deputy Prime Minister inform this House and through this House give Canadians a rational explanation why an independent favourable decision based on advice from refugee experts was suddenly and politically overturned, and why the Department of External Affairs is allowed to dictate how refugee policy is run and operated in this country?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I think the Hon. Member is stretching it a bit when he suggests that the actions of the Secretary of State for External Affairs could be classified as extraordinary interference.

I think what we have here is an exchange of correspondence between two Ministers of the Crown. Obviously certain information was brought to the attention of the Secretary of State for External Affairs, which he has a duty and an obligation to impart to the Minister and the officials responsible, and that is precisely what was done.

Mr. Marchi: The Deputy Prime Minister ought to realize that the Secretary of State for External Affairs is the External Affairs Minister for Canada and not the Foreign Minister for India. He ought to be pushing for Canadian interests, respect for Canadian institutions and Canadian citizens. That has not happened in the simple exchange of correspondence.

DEPUTY MINISTER'S MEMORANDUM

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, I have another question for the Deputy Prime Minister. In this correspondence there is a suggestion that the letters were written from a security viewpoint. Can the Deputy Prime Minister explain to this House a memorandum dated February 10, 1988, from the Deputy Minister of Immigration to the then Minister, which stated that both the RCMP and CSIS concluded that "no evidence or intelligence exists to substantiate the suspected involvement of Mr. Singh in any subversive activities"?

If the gentleman was such a security threat, can the Government explain why this man was allowed to stay in Canada for over two years and there was no effort by the Government either to deport him, as it could have, to detain him, or to exercise the extradition treaty which the Government recently signed with India?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I think it would be unfair to suggest that there was any interference with due process. The Secretary of State for External Affairs in imparting the knowledge to the then Minister of Employment and Immigration enunciated certain concerns that had been expressed to him of a general nature. He simply suggested and asked the Minister of Employment and Immigration to consider seriously the factors when evaluating the recommendation.

I think that is an appropriate and a responsible manner in which the Minister involved should act and respond.

• (1420)

REFUGEE PROCESSING SYSTEM—REQUEST FOR RE-EVALUATION OF CASE

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, I will direct my third question to the Minister of Employment and Immigration who, I hope, realizes the serious damage that has been done by the harassing actions of the Canadian Sikh community by the External Affairs Minister, and the capitulation to those pressures by the then Minister of Employment and Immigration. Therefore, I would like to ask the current Minister of Employment and Immigration what steps she plans to take to ensure that the Canadian system of refugee processing will not be interfered with blatantly and politically, thereby undoing the foundation of independence and individual merits of cases. Can she also inform the House if she plans to re-evaluate the case of Mr. Singh so that he can receive a most favourable and fair decision, and through that attempt to repair the damage that has been done to our system?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, there are three things I would like to point out. One is that if a colleague of mine felt that he had some information that was germane, from whatever source, I would not be offended if he wrote to me. I would be offended if he did not.

The second point I would like to make is that in Bill C-55 the way the refugee determination process is structured is that, if there are two opinions, the decision will always be made on behalf of the claimant. That is in the legislation.

Third, in the case under discussion today there is the right of appeal. I believe there is a 15-day period still to come in which this decision can be appealed to the Immigration Appeal Board, and I do not want to comment any further on it in case that appeal goes forward.

WOMEN

TRAINING AND ACCESS TO LABOUR MARKET

Mrs. Lucie Pépin (Outremont): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister responsible for the Status of Women.

[English]

We know that there were large cuts in the language training program and we also know that immigrant woman have no access to the official language training which the Government offers to heads of immigrant households.

When will the Government end this discrimination against immigrant women, discrimination which condemns them to a life of isolation outside the mainstream of Canadian society, and restricts them to the kind of low-paying, low-skill manufacturing jobs which will be eliminated by the trade deal?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, let me just say that 22,093 women received language training as compared to 27,724 men. That is about 64 per cent men and the rest are women. The Settlement Language Training Program was also introduced as a pilot project by this Government in order to provide language training for people who are not headed for the labour force, a group which largely includes women.

We have made it a real priority to assist immigrant women to participate fully in our economy. The jobs that immigrant women have in some industries in Canada, such as the apparel industry and the textile industry, are threatened with competition not from the United States, so free trade will not have an impact on that. The impact comes from overseas countries, and indeed, because the Canadian industry is so competitive we believe that there will be more opportunities under the free trade deal.

GOVERNMENT EXPENDITURES ON DAY CARE

Mrs. Lucie Pépin (Outremont): Mr. Speaker, I would like to remind the Minister that the 1988-1989 Estimates reveal a $9.7 million cut in spending on immigrant language training in the past year.

[Translation]

As you know, a lack of day-care facilities prevents women from having access to the labour market. I wish the Minister would inform the House why funding allocated for day-care when mothers participate in trading programs is discontinued when these women are qualified to enter the labour market. Why does the Government give with one hand and take away with the other? Why does it provide training and then prevent access to the labour market? Why does the Minister accept this lack of continuity on the part of her Government?

[English]

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I would like to remind the Hon. Member that when day care was declared an urgent problem in 1970, the Party to which she belongs did absolutely nothing. It was this Government that brought in a day care strategy. She has done nothing but talk about this issue, and nothing was ever accomplished.

• (1425)

We do regard this as an urgent problem. We know how difficult it is for women in training programs. We do provide child care allowances, and the new child care strategy will also incorporate more subsidized spaces which will help women in training and those already working, as well as those who stay at home.

IMMIGRATION

REFUGEE STATUS ADVISORY COMMITTEE—REVERSAL OF DECISION

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the same Minister concerning the important refugee case. She will know that Canada was selected in 1986 by the UN as the country of the year for dealing in an equitable way with refugees, which is a human rights problem on a global basis.

The Refugee Status Advisory Committee unanimously ruled in favour of Mr. Singh. According to what we see in the press today, both the RCMP and CSIS said there was no security problem whatsoever in this case. Therefore, could the Minister explain to the House of Commons how this incredible decision could be reached by her Department when it seems to fly in the face of fundamental human rights?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the normal processes were followed in this case. Advice came from the Secretary of State for External Affairs. The Minister had an internal advisory process, and this happens frequently in cases from the Refugee Advisory Council where there is some controversy. There is a right to appeal to the Immigration Appeal Board, and I suggest that the Hon. Member allow that appeal to continue without inflaming the issue in a way that may bias the hearing.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, I have very often heard Ministers say that a certain matter was sub judice and therefore they did not want to comment in the House. However, I think the Minister has just set a record. She is saying there should be no comment even before it has been appealed. It is not before the Immigration Appeal Board. It is not before the courts. It is before her Department and she is responsible for her Department's action.

LETTERS WRITTEN BY SECRETARY OF STATE FOR EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I want to direct my supplementary to the Deputy Prime Minister. The two letters written by the Secretary of State for External Affairs, one last April and one last June, do not deal with the merits of a particular case, they simply make two points. One is that bilateral relations with India and not genuine refugee status claims ought to determine such cases. Second is the incredible offer of legal advice to the Department of Immigration, suggesting that his Department would help them get away from the cumbersome or perhaps embarrassing decisions of the IAB.

Does the Deputy Prime Minister think such irresponsible recommendations by the Minister ought to be tolerated?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, may I repeat that I think the Hon. Leader of the NDP would be the first person to criticize the Secretary of State for External Affairs for failing to draw the attention of a Minister, in this case that of Employment and Immigration, to certain information about a certain person who was proceeding through the refugee process. Certain facts were drawn to his attention. He had a duty, a responsibility, and an obligation to make that information known to the Minister of Employment and Immigration, which he did. He asked that it be considered as one of many elements which have to be considered when this matter is being adjudicated.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, if we were talking about something other than a particular case of which we have information, what the Minister said might make sense. However, we know, according to what has been said, that the particular gentleman was cleared by CSIS, the RCMP, and a special advisory committee, composed of very distinguished Canadians, which looked into his case also said he ought to be accepted.

• (1430)

We on this side of the House say that the Secretary of State for External Affairs is simply continuing unwarranted persecution of the Sikh community. That is what the evidence points to.

[Translation]

REQUEST THAT TWO LETTERS BE TABLED

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): But the Minister suggested that the opposite was true. The Secretary of State for External Affairs wrote two letters to the Minister of Employment and Immigration, and Canadians have a vital interest in the contents of these letters. Will the Deputy Prime Minister decide to have these two letters tabled in the House?

[English]

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, it is very important that there is a process in place, and all the information will be made available throughout that process. There is an appeal process which can be followed. Whatever the Hon. Member may think about commenting on it at this stage, it is a sensitive matter and I am not going to jeopardize the potential for this appeal.

INFORMATION PROVIDED BY SECRETARY OF STATE FOR EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, continuing on the same subject, both Ministers have indicated that there was certain extra information which they felt it was justified for the Secretary of State for External Affairs to bring to the attention of his colleague and which, of course, resulted in the adverse decision being made. The Minister claimed that due process was followed in this case.

I will direct my question to either Minister. Was that additional information, of which CSIS and the RCMP evidently were not aware, brought to the attention of Santokh Singh in order that he would be able to challenge it if he did not consider it to be true?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, all the information in the file at the time was made available to the Chairman of the Refugee Advisory Committee. Given that the decision was only recently released, Mr. Singh has an opportunity to appeal. All relevant information will be made available should he choose to do so.

GOVERNMENT POLICY

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, it is known in Canada that there are foreign countries which try to manipulate their expatriates who live in Canada for their own political purposes. In fact the CSIS legislation passed in the last Parliament recognizes and defines that as a threat to our national security.

I will direct my question to the Deputy Prime Minister. Should it not be the policy of the Government of Canada, as it has been in the past, to protect multicultural communities from that type of pressure coming from abroad, rather than acting as henchman for foreign powers in their attempts to manipulate domestic events inside our country?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, of course it is the duty and obligation of the Government to protect the multicultural interests of Canada. That has become a very clear characteristic of our country. However, at the same time all Ministers in the Government that is mandated to govern the country have the clear obligation and responsibility to ensure that the security of the nation is preserved.

Whenever anything is drawn to the attention of any Minister that suggests certain security threats, certainly that information must be examined, looked into, and considered. That is exactly what was done in this particular case.

DEPUTY MINISTER'S MEMORANDUM—REQUEST THAT MINISTER'S LETTERS BE TABLED

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration and deals with a matter which, contrary to the what the Deputy Prime Minister just said, is not a matter of security information according to the evidence we have quoted from the correspondence.

We are told that the Deputy Minister, Mr. Lussier, wrote:

> —Mr. Clark suggested that the Canadian Government's granting of convention refugee status to Bagga would have a negative impact on Canada's bilateral relations with India.

Although this does concern the rights of one person which will no doubt be examined by the Immigration Appeal Board, it also concerns the integrity of the whole process, including the Immigration Appeal Board itself, with regard to whether there will be interference, not on the basis of law and fact as to whether he is a refugee, but on the basis of whether Mr. Rajiv Gandhi would be unhappy if this person were accepted by Canada.

Therefore, will the Minister table in Parliament the correspondence, in particular the two letters from the Secretary of State for External Affairs, inasmuch as they concern not only the case of one person but the entire process and the integrity and credibility of the Immigration Appeal Board?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I want to go on the record supporting the integrity of both the Refugee Advisory Committee and the Immigration Appeal Board.

This information was appropriately shared with the Minister of Employment and Immigration at the time as one piece of information which should go into the making of this decision.

In terms of tabling the letter, it is a Minister-to-Minister letter. That is not something which the Government will table in this House. We will conduct ourselves on the advice, not only of Ministers, but of other people. This was one piece of information.

INTEGRITY OF IMMIGRATION APPEAL BOARD

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, I reiterate that this does not concern one case only. No matter what the Minister says about supporting the Immigration Appeal Board, the question is whether the Canadian people will believe in the integrity of an Immigration Appeal Board which appears to take orders from one or another member of Cabinet, contrary to their oath of office.

In the memo Mr. Lussier noted:

> —although Indian Government officials advised the RCMP in April 1987 that they were considering extradition they have not pursued with matter with either the RCMP or External Affairs since that time.

Is it the case that India had no grounds for extradition and therefore asked the Secretary of State for External Affairs to use extraordinary and unusual procedures to have Mr. Bagga forced to return to India? If it is not the case, will the Minister table those letters in order to clear the Secretary of State for External Affairs?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, first, the integrity of the Immigration Appeal Board is in no way in question because this has not yet even been heard by the Immigration Appeal Board. When and if it is, all relevant information will go to the Immigration Appeal Board.

In terms of our responsibility, Mr. Speaker, it is to investigate information which comes to us. We would be letting the people of Canada down if we did not do that. We must act appropriately and fairly on all available information.

REGIONAL INDUSTRIAL EXPANSION

AWARD OF CF-18 FIGHTER CONTRACT

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion. Documents, albeit censored documents, acquired under the Access to Information Act and published this past weekend make clear that the Minister of DRIE and the Government of Canada systematically misled the people of Canada and, in particular, the people of Manitoba, about the awarding of the CF-18 fighter contract in 1986.

On October 31, 1986, the day the contract was awarded, the Minister of DRIE said: "Let me be very, very clear on this. This was not given on the basis of regional disparity, this was given on straight economic and financial terms".

The released Cabinet documents make clear that the Minister's statement was not true.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member is completely within his rights in raising this general issue. However, the Hon. Member is getting outside his procedural rights by making an allegation that a Minister has made a statement in this House which is untrue. I know the Hon. Member will understand that, and I would ask him to rephrase his question appropriately.

• (1440)

Mr. Tobin: Given that the Minister's statement is totally at odds with the evidence contained in released cabinet documents, is he prepared to set the record straight today, and apologize to the people of Canada in the process, particularly the people of Manitoba? Perhaps he might consider a resignation.

Hon. Robert de Cotret (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, the answer to the last part of my hon. colleague's question is a definite no.

I mentioned at that time, and say again today, that we had two very good contenders. In terms of technical merit, at that point I indicated that one company had been evaluated at 926 points out of 1,000, from the other at 841 points out of 1,000.

I indicated at that time that the bid from one company was $100.54 million and the other company was $104.0 million. I indicated at that time that these two excellent companies provided a choice which the Government had to make, and a choice that the Government did make within its mandate and its authority to give out contracts. It was a choice that was based on economic considerations. I stand by the statement I made at that time.

REASON FOR GOVERNMENT DECISION

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, an expert evaluation done in May, 1986, by Supply and Services, involving a panel of 75 experts, recommended Bristol Aerospace. The Cabinet documents released last weekend show that on technical and financial bases the winner was Bristol Aerospace.

Indeed, the Government does have a right to make a choice. Indeed, the Cabinet has a right to choose Canadair. No one questions that. However, we say that if Winnipeg and Bristol Aerospace are not entitled to the contract on financial and technical grounds, they are at least, a year and one-half later, entitled to the truth.

Will the Government admit today that the decision was made on a political basis, not on a technical and financial basis? Will the Minister apologize today for making a statement on October 31, 1986, that is at complete variance with the facts as we now know them and which the Minister had in his possession at the time he made his statement? Will he apologize today?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion and Minister of State for Science and Technology):

Mr. Speaker, we had two excellent contenders at the final moment—

Ms. Copps: You said that before.

Mr. Tobin: We heard the press release.

Mr. de Cotret:

—through the bidding process. They were very close on technical merit and on cost. We looked very closely a the issue of technology transfer because it is an important issue for the country. The Government had a choice, and it made a very deliberate choice to favour Canadair because we felt that the downstream technology transfer could be better done through the existing facilities of Canadair than by the competing consortium because Canadair is a producer of aircraft as well as being in the maintenance business.

Ms. Copps: Table the document.

Mr. de Cotret: Well, it is page 947 of Hansard, October 31, 1986. It has already been tabled. You call that a political decision? It was a government decision.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

FAMILY VIOLENCE

FORTHCOMING ANNOUNCEMENT OF PROGRAM—REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT ENSURE ADEQUATE FINANCIAL RESOURCES

Ms. Marion Dewar (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, last week the Minister responsible for the Status of Women announced that the Government would shortly introduce a program for women who are victims of family violence.

Studies have estimated the number of battered women across Canada at one million annually.

Could the Government give Canadian women the assurance that the new program will have sufficient financial resources to meet the real needs of battered women and their children?

[English]

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I want to confirm to the Hon. Member who has asked questions on this topic before that the Government has been working on a response respecting family violence.

The Hon. Member also asked about funding. Funding has also been part of that package which I hope to be able to announce relatively soon. However, I cannot give details beyond that today.

REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT ALLOCATE $50 MILLION TO PROGRAM

Ms. Marion Dewar (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, currently only 60,000 women and children can be housed by existing shelters. During the 1984 leaders' debate, the Prime Minister said that a Conservative Government would not be inhibited by dollar amounts. Will the Minister keep the promise of his Government and guarantee that the initiative to be announced this week, or soon, will be allocated at least $50 million?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, again, I cannot give the Hon. Member the amounts. She is trying another way to get the same answer. I can tell her that we have looked at this very carefully and part of the component of addressing family violence must be more shelters and more spaces. We have been working with CMHC on the proposal.

There are various ways in which space can be handled. I think we have been fairly innovative in terms of putting those proposals together for my Cabinet colleagues.

CANADA POST CORPORATION

COST OF DOOR-TO-DOOR MAIL DELIVERY

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister responsible for Canada Post. On Friday the Minister answering for Canada Post replied to my question: "If we had door-to-door delivery for all Canadians we would need a 60-cent stamp". Rural Canadians have never asked for urban delivery, no more than urban Canadians have asked for rural delivery in the past.

Given that Canada Post's business plan contains figures proving that door-to-door service in urban areas would cost $38 million, or a postal increase of two cents per stamp, can the Minister tell the House where he dug up his figures?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I know the Hon. Member dug up his figures from a newspaper article. The reporter is not accurate.

The fact is that since the Post Office was first formed there have always been several ways of delivering the mail, including door-to-door, rural routes, general delivery, and lock boxes. There are now five million households that do not receive door-to-door delivery.

If the Hon. Member is suggesting that everyone have the same type of delivery system, as he seems to be saying when talking about second-class citizens and so on, the cost of that is a 60-cent stamp. Where would he draw the line between who gets door-to-door service and who does not?

Canada Post adopted a policy that new subdivisions would receive their mail by group boxes. That is a policy followed by post offices throughout the world. Only in Canada are there opposition Parties wanting to turn back the clock because they do not want to see any change.

HOME MAIL DELIVERY SERVICE—MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary is for the Minister, and I will speak slowly so this time he will understand what Canadians want to know.

Considering the fact that it would cost not more than 2 cents to offer all residents in urban areas door-to-door mail delivery, is the Minister prepared to inform the House today that he will offer this service, and if not, why not? And the reason isn't a 60 cent stamp. The Minister knows that as well as I do.

[English]

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, whether the question is in French or English, the answer is the same. The figures the Hon. Member uses are wrong and it is as simple as that.

The Hon. Member may not be aware of the fact that other postal jurisdictions have recognized that, in this modern era with different lifestyles and different approaches, delivery systems designed for the 1920s, the 1930s, or 1940s are not the most appropriate today. We no longer have door-to-door milk delivery or bread delivery.

There has been no extension of door-to-door delivery in the United States since 1978. That country is not falling apart. Their stamps are cheaper than ours and, according to some measures, their service is better than ours. We want to achieve an efficient, effective, and economic postal service in this country. Canada Post is working toward that.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

SUDAN—REQUEST FOR REVIEW OF CANADIAN AID PROGRAM

Mr. John Oostrom (Willowdale): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister for External Relations.

[English]

Recently, some stories have appeared regarding the misuse of Canadian aid by the Marxist Government of Ethiopia.

[Translation]

On the border of Ethiopia lies Sudan, a country that still tolerates opposition, accepts criticism of the government and also has a free press.

• (1450)

[English]

Presently the Sudan has over 2 million refugees within its borders who are struggling for support. Will the Government review our present aid to the Sudan in order that at least this country, which has a rudimentary democracy, can be allowed some economic breathing room?

[Translation]

Hon. Monique Landry (Minister for External Relations): Mr. Speaker, I thank my colleague for his interest in this matter, which is also a great concern for the Canadian Government. We are now assessing the various options and ways of sending emergency aid or humanitarian assistance to the people suffering from the conflict raging in the region. Until quite recently, it was very difficult to consider emergency relief for the southern region, precisely because of the conflicts.

The International Committee of the Red Cross and the Sudanese government authorities are now looking at how food might be sent to the affected populations. And I can tell my hon. colleague that I would be glad to allocate funds from our humanitarian aid budget once an agreement has been reached between the two parties.

CHILD CARE

NATIONAL STRATEGY—REQUEST FOR REDRAFTING

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Prime Minister my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. He will recall that during the 1984 election campaign the Prime Minister promised to introduce an effective system of child care across the country. After waiting three years, the Government's ineffectual strategy was introduced and it has been rejected by women's groups, child care groups, child care advocates and Canadian families from coast to coast.

Will the Government, in view of these objections, now go back to the drawing board? And will it reintroduce a child care program which really deals with the need of Canadian families for effective, quality, licensed child care services?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, we have taken the views of Canadian women into account. We have taken the views of Canadian families into account. We have taken into account the views of women in isolated communities. We have taken into account women in cultural minorities. We have provided flexibility and dollars. For the first time ever we have provided new funding. We have provided $5.4 billion for new spaces, for tax credits, so that women have the option to work at home rather than in the workplace, if that is what they choose. We have taken the needs of farm women in isolated communities into account. We have taken all the needs of women into account, and those women like the strategy.

Ms. Mitchell: Mr. Speaker, I just wish the Minister had listened to the groups from across the country which spoke to our child care committee. That is not the message we got from them, I can tell you.

GOVERNMENT FUNDING

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, the Minister's facts are not correct. The Government is not putting $5.4 billion into new spaces. It is not even putting in enough money to keep up the introduction of new spaces we have now. We are going backward. Therefore, I want to ask this Minister, who professes to be concerned about women, what she will do, as far as the Government is concerned. Will she go back and insist that they must have adequate funding for adequate child care spaces? There is a crisis and the Government program is not dealing with it.

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, the Government has listened. The majority report brought forward by the special committee was reflected in the proposal as the Minister of Employment and Immigration has stated. We have listened to those groups.

I cannot help it if the Hon. Member who asks the question was of a minority and somehow today likes to translate that she was of the majority, when in fact she was not.

Additionally, if one takes a look at the numbers under the Canada Assistance Plan, and the evidence given by me as recently as last week in front of the Senate Committee, she will find very clearly that there is more money of the $5.4 billion, or the $3 billion of the $5.4 billion, for new spaces and for capital costs, capital costs which were never covered before. So the point I make to the Hon. Member is that it is substantially more than under the Canada Assistance Plan which is today about $150 million. Even at the end of the seven years' boost period, it would be at least $600 million. If the Hon. Member cannot understand that $150 million is less than $600 million, she is in even bigger trouble than I thought.

Oral Question Period

CANADA-FRANCE DISPUTE—FRENCH GOVERNMENT'S POLITICAL AGENDA

Mr. George Baker (Gander—Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, the meaningless and insulting offer by France on Friday to delay for three months any further arrests of Canadian vessels is as unacceptable as Canada glossing over France's actions. Our Prime Minister said: "One would have to be a fool not to expect such actions during a presidential election".

[Translation]

Well, now we have a general election. What will France do to Canada now?

[English]

Now I ask the Minister—

[Translation]

Must Canadian fishermen live in fear of France's political agenda?

[English]

Why do Canadian fishermen have to live in fear of the political agenda of the Government of France?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the Secretary of State for External Affairs made formal representation on May 5 and filed a note of protest to the Government of France. As the Member knows, elections have now been called. We are prevailing upon the new President to restore the normal and traditional practices which have been in place for a number of years.

The Government of Canada has made it abundantly clear that our first objective is to protect the welfare of the Canadian fishermen. There will be no quotas for French vessels in Canadian waters unless and until a general agreement on the issue is resolved and, particularly, the boundary issue sent to an international tribunal. We have taken a number of unprecedented steps to back that up, and we will continue to work very closely to try to resolve this matter as quickly as we possibly can.

CANADA-FRANCE FRIENDSHIP

Mr. George Baker (Gander—Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, Article 2 of the 1972 Fisheries Agreement states that French nationals have the right to fish in these waters:

> Subject to possible measures for the conservation of resources, including the establishment of quotas.

The metropolitan fleet from France has violated that four and five times every year, only since this Government came to power. That is over the last three years to four years. That is why it is the common enemy of Newfoundland and St. Pierre.

I ask the Minister to verify that our Prime Minister received a letter dated December 23, 1985, from M. L. Perouas, representing the metropolitan fleet, wanting to know if they could fish beyond the 1972 agreement? Our Prime Minister, in his continuing efforts to be loved by the whole world, instructed the Secretary of State for External Affairs to respond by saying: "This Government will not abandon the people of France. It is because of our friendship with France that you will be able to fish in Canadian waters in 1986 and well beyond that". Is friendship with France more important than fidelity to our own fishermen?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member knows that unprecedented action has been taken. For example, no French vessels have been permitted to conduct their normal fishing inside the Canadian zone. No quotas have been granted. We have closed our ports to the French. These are all pressures that have been imposed upon the French in order to bring them back to the bargaining table and to ensure that we can resolve this matter in a proper manner.

The fact of the matter is, and the Hon. Member I am sure acknowledges it, the problem we are in today goes back to the 1972 treaty negotiations in which the Government of the day, of which he was a supporter, sold the fishermen of Newfoundland and the Atlantic Provinces out, out, out!

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion. In answer to earlier questions today on the CF-18 he gave two reasons for the decision, first, there was some type of technological transfer that benefited the Canadair bid, and he knows his own officials said that was not true, and, second, that the technical merits, the markings given by the Department and the officials, were 926 out of 1,000 to Bristol, and 843 for Canadair. He makes it sound like those two marks are the same. Perhaps he could ask the schoolteacher who is his seatmate if he believes that a mark of 84 is the same as a mark of 92?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, I have answered that question time and time again. All I would like to tell my hon. friend is that my answers today are the same as my answers were when the announcement was made. Nothing has changed. I stand by those answers. They were based on the information that was available, which information has now been made public.

• (1500)

REASON FOR GOVERNMENT DECISION

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the same Minister. He has also said: "In no way was this prejudged on a regional basis". It is evident from the papers that have been released that, month after month, officials were looking for some type of basis upon which to get the Government to change its mind and to ignore the financial and technical advice. If it was not made on a regional basis, why were the officials and political advisers spending so much time trying to make sure that the Government gave the contract to Canadair?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, as I have said time and time again, we had two excellent companies and two bids that were very close, both in terms of the financial aspects and in terms of the technical merits.

We looked at the technology transfer. My hon. colleague may think that technology comes in a box. It does not.

Essentially, technology comes from experience. It comes from knowledge. It comes from know-how in engineering design, in analytical techniques, in systems configurations, and in the use of advanced materials. That is what real technology is all about.

If there is one company that is a manufacturer of an aircraft, then its technology is worth more for the nation than technology from a company that is not. It was on that basis that the decision was made.

Mr. Speaker: I want to advise the House that the following will be the last series of questions in Question Period. The Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East.

STATUS OF WOMEN

EFFECT OF CANADA-UNITED STATES FREE TRADE AGREEMENT

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Employment and Immigration. As the Minister knows, the National Action Committee on the Status of Women was in Ottawa today. Once again it said how bad the Canada-U.S. trade agreement is for Canadian women. Not only does it threaten social programs that women consider very important, it also threatens those jobs in which women are found in greatest numbers, such as textiles, clothing, and footwear. This is not criticism coming from the opposition Parties but from an umbrella organization representing hundreds of Canadian women's groups.

Why does the Minister not call an election now—have the Government call an election now so that women can give the Government a clearer message that it will understand about this deal?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the last time I looked, the powers of my Department did not include the calling of an election.

Let me say that as women across the country are examining the real answers to their questions, many of which are included in the book that we published last week on women in free trade, they will see the opportunities for them. Some 84 per cent of women who work outside the home in Canada are employed in the service sector. There is evidence that those industries will grow as a result of free trade.

Our manufacturing industries, in which there are a large number of women, such as apparel and textiles, are at risk from the Third World and not at risk from the United States.

There are opportunities for women in this deal. Certainly, when I have spoken to women across the country on this matter they start to see the opportunities, if people would stop scaring them to death.

Mr. Speaker: A very short supplementary, please.

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, a large percentage of Canadian women work in the manufacturing sector. These jobs are very much threatened by free trade. As the Minister knows—

Mr. Speaker: I hesitate to interrupt the Hon. Member but we have gone too long. I did ask for a short supplementary. Orders of the Day.

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY, S. O. 82—CANADA-U.S. FREE TRADE AGREEMENT—POLITICAL SOVEREIGNTY

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Ms. McDonald:

> That this House condemn the Government for voluntarily relinquishing political sovereignty in the "trade" deal with the United States, namely by limiting the power to decide on new or expanded social programs and cultural industries, including those by the federal, provincial, territorial or municipal Governments, present and future.

Mr. Speaker: When the House rose at 1 p.m. the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Ms. Dewar) had the floor. I recognize the Hon. Member.

Ms. Marion Dewar (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, the ability of our health care services to be eroded by this trade agreement is very real. Since health care administration is now part of the agreement, we recognize the fact that it will not take very long before people come into our system and say that the capability of making profit over quality of service delivery can be a priority.

Mr. Clark (Brandon—Souris): Wrong!

Ms. Dewar: Not wrong. We have delivered one of the best health care delivery systems in the world.

Mr. Clark (Brandon—Souris): That's right!

Ms. Dewar: We do not need to have people from other countries coming in to make a profit out of that system. It is important that we do not allow that to happen. It is the slim edge of the wedge before all of a sudden our social service programs become eroded. That is of great concern.

With the increasing pressure to harmonize employment practices and social and economic programs with those of the United States, Canadian economic policy will be set by trade legislation rather than by domestic priorities and policies. The wonderful thing that has happened in Canada over the years has been that we have been very conscious of the fact that we wanted to set our own domestic priorities. Through that we have established a very strong social service network. We have also proven that when we deliver those types of services we do so efficiently and universally. More and more we are concerned that this type of deal will erode that very seriously.

I have in my hand some quotations of people who have looked forward to the trade agreement. The Canada West Foundation states that free trade between our two countries will inevitably lead to wages being equalized between Canada and the United States. It states that this will occur because a high cost producer will not be able to compete against a lower cost producer if goods are traded freely.

What is really being said is that if there are no minimum wages for labour and in some states in the U.S., let alone Canada, we know that the transfer flow of economy is taking place from the north to the south, then that will allow that type of abuse to take place. Certainly, what has happened in Canada is that we have recognized that we are a small population, a population that occupies a thin strip across the country. With that we have stood firm, strong and free. We have established a network that is very different from that in the United States.

We must recognize that with this agreement there are two visions of Canada. There is a vision of Canada about which many people—I would say the majority—say that social policy is important, that the weak and the vulnerable in the country need to be protected. That vision states that we recognize that there has to be a sharing of our resources if we are to have the type of civilized community that I think we have chosen to live in.

The other version of Canada is the version that states that the only economy that makes sense is a market-driven one so that profits can be maximized and so that people can be exploited to the maximum. In this way we would become a North American fortress which says that we will maximize our profits in North America to the exclusion of the rest of the world, and ensure that we protect what we have here for the greatest profit. It is not a value system which Canadians have had over the years. It is not a value system that we want to have in the future.

When we talk about our sovereignty being eroded we are very serious about it. We know of the ability there is to take the whole military industrial complex and to have our country driven by what the United States foreign policy is all about as if to say that unless we have military jobs we will not have jobs at all. There is that type of talk going on. That is not what Canadians want. It certainly is not what our ancestors fought for over the years. It is not what we want to look forward to in the future for our children and our grandchildren.

When we talk about the trade agreement eroding our sovereignty, hurting our culture and interfering and weakening our social service network we recognize how important it is not to allow that to happen. This agreement must be stopped. It is important that it be stopped. I become quite upset when I hear people I have known for years who have attempted to protect the Canadian culture, now saying "We can compete anywhere in the United States or in Canada. We know that our writers, our artists, and many of our people could not compete if they had not been able to get some help nationally from Canada Council, from research, and those types of things".

• (1510)

Mr. McDermid: They still can.

Ms. Dewar: But the Government has talked about how they can still get it, but it has not identified what is a subsidy.

Mr. McDermid: That is cultural. It is outside the agreement.

Ms. Dewar: Culture is not outside the agreement. We saw last week what happened in the film industry. One year ago our Canadian industry was asking for 15 per cent of the market. It was not asking for great numbers, only a small piece of that market. What has the Government done? The Government has stated that that is far too much, that it will give some money to assist in making proposals internationally, and the film industry can compete with everybody else, but as far as the Canadian market is concerned, the industry has no right to have any exclusion in its own market. That is the type of agreement that we have in front of us.

When I hear people from the Government saying that the issue of culture is not on the table or that it is not affected, it certainly is affected. It means that we will continue not being able to see Canadian films. Those films can compete internationally, they have shown that. We have listened to the Government tell us that it has reduced tariffs over the years. We know that, and we have worked at making sure we do have freer trade among all nations. We know that that is a good thing. However, this trade agreement is putting us into a North American fortress mentality. It is saying that we in North America must protect ourselves against everything else. That is not a vision that most Canadians have of this country.

We certainly see our economic development as involving multilateral trade, at getting a foothold in the Pacific Rim, and looking at the ability of trading our goods with people from other countries with massive populations. Perhaps with an enlightened Government we would not be tying all our aid to trade, but looking at what it is to be competitive in a multilateral way, and at the same time looking at the whole planet as part of the human family.

It is with great concern that we recognize that, if the agreement continues, the social service network will be threatened. We have seen what has been done with health care. It is on the table, and it is in the agreement. We know that the administration of the health care is there. We know that a subsidy has not been identified. We also know that unemployment insurance and health care are part of many of our labour agreements which could be seen by companies outside of Canada as a subsidy. The Government was afraid to identify what a subsidy was. We know that there have been complaints about our social services being part and parcel of our labour practices.

A well-known Vancouver entrepreneur, Jimmy Pattison, stated: "We are looking at manufacturing along the Mexican border and shipping into Canada. If we do that we will shut down plants in Canada and transfer to Mexico". That is lovely! Is that the type of Canada we want? That is not the type of Canada that we are looking for. The Jimmy Pattisons can go off to Mexico, but we do not want him to start shipping in here. What is happening is far too serious.

I heard the Government state that with this agreement we will end up with better consumer prices. It has been proven that a family will save approximately $50 a year on consumer prices. That is $50 a year to lose what we would lose. Over and above that, we would see the inability of consumers to purchase. If one does not have a job, it is very difficult to participate in consumerism.

The time has come when the Government has to come clean with the Canadian people. It has been packaging a sales package and stating that it is good for us. When specifics are asked for, one is told, "Trust us". In this day and age we have to learn that there has to be more than trust and more than a leap of faith.

We know what will happen to the data processing industry in Canada. We know how those jobs are flowing south of the border, and with the regulation gone of collecting the data in Canada, it looks upwards of 200,000 jobs per year. That study was produced by the Computer Association of Canada. When we look at the background in this agreement, we recognize that all we are getting back is a sales pitch and a trust. We know that our vision of Canada is too important to buy into a sales pitch without any substantive foundation. It is high time that the whole trade agreement was eroded.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Questions or comments. The Hon. Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of International Trade.

Mr. McDermid: I have known my hon. friend as a person who served on city council, as Mayor of Ottawa for many years, and now as a distinguished Member for Hamilton Mountain. With the greatest respect, Madam Speaker, I think that was probably one of the most unfactual statements I have heard in the House in many a moon. I wish to cover some of the statements made by the Hon. Member and throw them back, if I may.

On day care the Hon. Member stated that multinational companies will come in, and children are the ploy of the trade deal. It is very obvious that the Hon. Member has not read the agreement.

Ms. Dewar: Yes, I have.

Mr. McDermid: Does Annex 1408 ring a bell with the Hon. Member? The provision of day care is exempt from the agreement. Does the Hon. Member understand Annex 1408? She obviously has not read or understood the agreement.

The Hon. Member further stated that Canada cannot review foreign investment under the deal. We can. It means that we can review the top 500 Canadian companies. To make the statement that Canada cannot review foreign investment is absolutely false.

The Hon. Member also stated that Canada will only trade with the United States. The Hon. Member obviously does not understand that the spin-off from this agreement, when Canadian companies grow in economy of scale, it will make them more productive and more competitive on the world market. That is what this whole thing is all about. Until the NDP understand that, and understand how business operates, and how when production is expanded there is economy of scale and we can compete better in the world, only then will the NDP understand the importance of international trade in all areas of the world to Canada and to our economy. Thirty per cent of what we produce is exported. We rely on trade more than any other country, with the exception of Germany. It is so important to our economy. For the New Democratic Party to make totally false statements without substantiation is a disservice to the Canadian public.

Ms. Dewar: I think it is about time that the Government understood, and certainly the Hon. Member recognized that, that when we start to put all our eggs in one basket and trade with only one major trading partner, we reduce our ability for multinational trading. One does not have to be overly intelligent to figure that out.

We must also recognize that, for the first time, the Government has allowed public dollars to go into private profit-making day care delivery. As multinationals come in, they will be able to get that type of subsidy from the Canadian Government. That is wrong. That is the type of thing that makes a ploy of Canadian children. The Government must start to recognize what are the true needs in this country. One of the true needs is the delivery of quality care service to our children. We know that there are 2 million children in informal care, and some of it is pretty disastrous. I think if we were really committed to that notion we would not be looking at trying to find ways for people to make a profit and saying that we will put public dollars into profit-making centres.

We have to recognize that much child care now is under the aegis of multinational companies. When those companies come into Canada they will be treated as national companies, and there are the kinds of things that start to erode our social services system. The Hon. Member, with good intention, is defending an indefensible kind of accord. My sympathy is with him. I recognize that he probably does mean well, but when you get an agreement like this, which really gives the country away and invites the Americans to come into Canada under their terms not ours, that is pretty hard to defend. I can understand why outrageous statements are being made.

Mr. McDermid: Madam Speaker, I just want to correct one thing. The provinces will continue to regulate and set standards for child care services under the new Canada Child Care Act. Provinces will continue to decide which child care centres receive funding not the Americans, not the federal Government but the provinces. The provinces set the standards and the quality of care. Canadian provinces are in charge of day care. They will set the standards and say where the funding can go, nobody else. When the Hon. Member makes the statement that foreign companies will come to Canada and take over our child care operations, she is absolutely wrong.

Ms. Dewar: Madam Speaker, my short answer is that the Canadian Government has already set the stage for that by allowing the multinationals to come into child care.

Mr. Manly: Madam Speaker, when we look at this trade deal there is a lot of talk about competition. Canadians are fully capable of competing. We are able to compete when we work and when we have the advantage of Canadian resources and the advantage of Canadian programs. This deal seems to open the door for Americans to come here and have access to our resources and we will not have the advantage of our own resources. The Americans will continue to have the advantages of their resources and of a huge financial pool. They will continue to have the resources of established markets and brands in those markets. We will have to compete with them after we have given away our competitive edge. The long-term effect is that Canadian companies, in an attempt to compete, will have to compete by cutting the standards of Canadian workers to the standards of workers in American states where there are right-to-work laws and where there are no minimum wages.

Mr. McDermid: No, that is phoney.

Mr. Manly: The Hon. Member says it is phoney. I challenge him to show how it is phoney. Perhaps he can speak later on.

Will my colleague comment on this whole question of competition and the ability of Canadians to compete if they are given half a chance and the ability of Canadians to compete if the whole competitive edge for Canada has been wiped out by this trade deal?

Ms. Dewar: Madam Speaker, I thank my hon. colleague for his question. Many of us are becoming very tired listening to the propaganda coming from the government side, saying those who are against this deal really are afraid to let Canadians compete. I think it is very clear how well we have competed internationally up until now. Certainly in the communications technology field we have shown how well we can do, and we constantly hear how well Canadian companies are doing now. We know that the United States has a trade deficit with Canada. With all of that, certainly Canadian companies are doing well and Canadians workers are doing well. We have confidence in their competition.

Mr. McDermid: It is the status quo.

Ms. Dewar: It is not the status quo. This country has never lived in the status quo. Anybody knows that the status quo is suffocation. We know that unless you generate, initiate and support creativity you shrivel up and die.

We are looking for, and certainly what New Democrats want to see, is an economy that is bubbling and a strong economy with Canadian direction in it that will be very competitive in the world. That is the situation we are starting into right now. This deal will tie us very much into large companies. Decisions will be made by boards of directors in head offices south of the border. We will not have the ability to have the same kind of competitive edge that we have now, and I think it is important that people understand that. I understand my colleague's frustration at trying to defend an indefensible deal.

[Translation]

Mrs. Lise Bourgault (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Madam Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to take part in today's debate.

Since the beginning of our term in September 1984, our Government has always stressed the fact that Canadian women should enjoy their fair share of the results of our efforts to expand the economy.

Madam Speaker, the New Democratic Party should be cheering the Government on today instead of tabling motions condemning the Government for signing a free trade agreement with the Americans.

Madam Speaker, I intend to quote just a few figures to show that the Conservative Government has definitely kept, I would say . . . 90 per cent of its promises.

We created nearly 1,223,000 jobs, of which 82 per cent are full-time jobs, and 679,000 of those full-time jobs are held by women.

The Opposition Parties talk about unemployment and the unemployment rate. Madam Speaker, three and half years ago this Government came to power, and although I agree that more remains to be done, I think we should realize that the unemployment rate, which was 11.7 per cent in September 1984, dropped to 7.7 per cent in April 1988. They should be applauding, because this is indeed a real accomplishment. And what about interest rates that have gone down enormously, and today, and I see this in my own riding of Argenteuil—Papineau, we are enjoying economic growth as never before. We have never had so many construction starts, for instance. Everybody knows that when the construction industry is in good shape, the economy is in good shape. I see that in my riding!

Reducing the deficit has also been a very important achievement. As for real economic growth, Canada has the best record of all members of the OECD. Isn't that something to applaud, Madam Speaker?

Fewer Canadians are living at the poverty line, and I agree we cannot afford to be complacent about our achievements because much remains to be done, but we have made some headway.

Foreign investment has doubled since 1984. I referred earlier to the construction industry, consumer spending, price stability and the increase in farm income.

Madam Speaker, I simply want to say today that as far as I am concerned, Canadian women have everything to gain from the Agreement because they will get a substantial share of the opportunities and advantages arising from the free trade agreement.

On May 5, the Minister responsible for the Status of Women (Mrs. McDougall) released a report on free trade and women, which assesses the impact of the agreement on Canadian women. Her conclusion was clear. She said that free trade will mean better job opportunities for women.

Madam Speaker, I fail to understand why, for instance, the National Action Committee on the Status of Women, in Ottawa today for its annual lobby meeting, is against the Agreement. They are here to tell us about their objectives, I say to them that women should support the agreement, and all eminent experts who have examined the agreement and its various sections and the impact on women, say that many new jobs created as a result of the agreement will be in the service industry. Canadian women are in a very good position to take advantage of this expansion, because they already represent more than half the work force in the service industry in this country. In fact, 84 per cent of Canadian women working outside the home are employed in this industry.

With free trade, existing companies will grow to take advantage of the more secure access to the American market. Increased trade and greater demand for consumer goods will lead to the creation of new businesses.

Madam Speaker, the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs also conducted a study on the impact of free trade on consumers. The largest consumers of goods and services in our society are women. They do the shopping for the children, for groceries and so on. So women consumers themselves will benefit from lower prices, because with increased trade, there will be more products and prices will keep going down. I am sure, Madam Speaker, that when free trade will be fully implemented, Canadian women consumers will be even happier to see their purchasing power greatly increased.

The paper also looks at the impact of the agreement on women working in the manufacturing sector. Under free trade, according to Department of Finance estimates, manufacturing production in Canada could rise by 10 per cent.

The abolition of customs duties, the lowering of non-tariff barriers and the increased security of access to the American market are all factors that will help Canadian manufacturers improve their efficiency and achieve economies of scale. With lower input costs, these manufacturers will be able to become more competitive. More efficient, more competitive companies will be able to create more and better jobs for Canadians, men and women.

Madam Speaker, once again, as this document points out, the female work force in manufacturing is divided among the various industries of this sector. Thus these working women are in a good position to reap the benefits this sector will enjoy after the Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement takes effect.

Certainly, Madam Speaker, and we do not deny it, some adjustments will be necessary. But I do not think they will be major. In fact, it is expected that the dislocation will largely be offset by the overall growth in trade and the employment opportunities created by free trade. In the past, working women have had to make many such adjustments and they have come through them well. God knows, Madam Speaker, as you do, that women come through all right everywhere!

Furthermore, the changes required by free trade will be gradual, since a ten-year transition period is provided in the Agreement.

There has been much talk of adjusting workers to free trade. Through programs such as the Job Strategy, and the Industry Adjustment Program, we are now in a position to respond to situations where women could need training or adjustment, or are in an industry or community undergoing changes of some kind.

We are hopeful that our programs are adequate to meet the adjustment needs deriving from free trade, but in order to ensure the fastest and most efficient response we have set up an adjustment advisory council including representatives from business, labour, consumers' associations and education institutions, to assess our programs and ensure that we are in a position to adequately respond to any new situation. Just like the Hon. Member from the New Democratic Party, I can state, Madam Speaker, that as a Government Member in this House, I am concerned with and especially interested in the advancement of women in our society, and I can state that on this side of the House, all of us women Members, including you, Madam Speaker, have looked at the free trade agreement from top to bottom to ensure that the free trade agreement in no way hinders the advancement or even the jobs of women.

Madam Speaker, I can assure my women constituents that I have a special interest in that matter, and I can assure them today that, despite what the New Democratic Party might suggest, women are not victimized by the free trade agreement, quite the opposite. We can expect there will be a larger number of non-traditional job opportunities in primary industry for women. The new markets opened to small businesses are another area of interest to women, because the latter are playing an increasing role in Canadian small businesses.

Earlier, Madam Speaker, I referred to the Action Committee on the Status of Women, and their suggestion that Canadian women oppose free trade made me wonder, because I know a number of women in the small and medium-business sector who support and welcome free trade.

So, when the Canadian Action Committee suggests that women oppose it, I tend to wonder because women own more than one third of Canadian small businesses. Free trade will bring to these entrepreneurs both new business opportunities and greater access to the huge American market.

The free trade agreement also is good news for women farmers, since women have an essential role in Canadian farming, Madam Speaker. They account for 30 per cent of farm labour in this country. In co-operation with their husbands, they operate a very large majority of family farms. It is a well-known fact, Madam Speaker, that without women participation in agriculture, family farms would not be what they are today. Again, family farms account for 99 per cent of Canadian farm operations.

In addition, 23,000 women operate their own farms. The free trade agreement features a series of important measures which will give Canadians more generous and more secure conditions to export agricultural products to the huge American market. Canadian producers, men and women alike, will gain real benefits. Plentiful Canadian agricultural and food products, meats, grains, oil-producing seeds and potatoes will be in a position to compete fairly with American products on the U.S. market.

Madam Speaker, I can tell you that if the free trade agreement were in effect right now the Notre-Dame-de-la-Paix potato growers who have to cope with overproduction and all sorts of problems would find a secure market and they probably would not be experiencing the difficulties they have now.

The agreement does not restrict the right of the federal and provincial Governments to establish and maintain programs designed to protect and stabilize agricultural income. Free trade will not affect the future of wheat, dairy, chicken and egg marketing boards, nor Canada's right to set up new marketing boards. This sector will not be affected. I can say that because there are ongoing negotiations on potatoes, and I am sure that with the free trade agreement we would still be able to create a potato marketing board. Canadian farmers can indeed look forward to the day free trade does become a fact of life. Much the same thing can be said about Canadian consumers, for they too will benefit from more generous conditions with respect to agricultural trade between Canada and the United States.

As consumers, Canadian women—I said this earlier—take a special interest in the impact of the free trade agreement on prices, if only because a larger share of their personal or family income goes for basic expenses such as those for food, clothing, and housing. Madam Speaker, you know how much money women have to spend on clothes. Fashion being what it is these days, we like our shoes to match the colour of our outfits. As consumers, we need access to better products in a wider market, but at more reasonable prices, of course.

The Canada-U.S. trade agreement will do away with tariff barriers which inflate prices and restrict the consumer's choice. It will make prices more competitive, widen the selection of goods and services, and increase the quality of products.

It is estimated that tariff elimination will reduce the cost of American products by 5 per cent. After the Agreement comes into effect, the price of Canadian products should equally fall by 3 per cent during the transition period. That reduction will be achieved by a lower cost of inputs and an increased efficiency resulting from the economies of scale.

Madam Speaker, it means that a family—the Hon. Member for Hamilton-East finds that funny—would save between $300 and $800 each year and be able to buy more products. The document released on May 5 gives an estimate of the savings that can be made by consumers in general and four different groups of women in particular. This is an important point because Canadian women play a significant role in the support of families.

One last word, madam Speaker. Canadians are proud and rightly so of their social security system. Many of the programs which make it up have already been implemented to meet the needs identified by women and their organizations. The Agreement in no way affects the basic system, nor does it preclude the establishment of new programs. In fact, the economic growth which will flow from free trade will strengthen the financial foundation of our social programs.

Again I do not understand the obstinate and erroneous contention of the opposition Parties that the Free Trade Agreement will jeopardize our social programs. How inconceivable, how incomprehensible for members of this House to make such assertions! The Free Trade Agreement is an economic agreement, no more no less. We are not relinquishing our sovereignty. On the contrary, we are exercising it since, by concluding this Agreement, we will improve our position vis-à-vis the United States and other countries. For women, this vision of the future would appear as a culmination of the efforts of many of us to improve our life and hopefully of other women's. Change is not a bad thing when it implies an improvement. For women, free trade will open up a new range of opportunities. To cling to the past inevitably leads to failure. Women know something about that.

Madam Speaker, I will conclude by saying that I am most proud to be part of a Government which has looked to the future instead of gazing at the past, which was able to sit down and negotiate an agreement. As the Prime Minister has said, this agreement is by no means perfect, but it allows us to face the future more optimistically and without the threat of protectionist measures, to react, in case of an emergency, as a unified country, not as provinces and regions, since the agreement will benefit all of Canada. That is why I think the opposition parties should applaud the government and try to cooperate in improving the agreement instead of saying that they will tear it up. Madam Speaker, those are the attitudes of people who cling to the past and who are not looking into the future. In conclusion, the Progressive Conservative Party looks into the future determined to pass on to our children the same kind of economy we have enjoyed.

Ms. Copps: Madam Speaker, first, I want it to be clear, once and for all, that I totally disagree with the comment of the Hon. Member that we should support the Mulroney-Reagan Agreement so that we, as female consumers, can find shoes that match our dresses. That is ridiculous! It is a shame to argue in the House of Commons that we should support the free trade Agreement to have a wider selection of shoes in Canada.

I would like to ask this to the Hon. Member: Is she aware that the United States Government, with which her Government wants to harmonize all our laws, including legislation on social programs, does not accept the 1975 Convention of the International Labour Organization which stated, as a general rule, that women should not be laid off as soon as they get pregnant? Does she agree with this American decision not to sign the 1975 Convention of the International Labour Organization?

Mrs. Bourgault: Madam Speaker, obviously we do not agree with that U.S. policy. We have our own policies here in Canada and I will say once more that Opposition members cannot have much to say to raise such ridiculous points.

Madam Speaker, we have our own policies here, in Canada, and obviously I do not agree with the U.S. policy.

In answer to the first statement of the Hon. member for Hamilton-East (Mrs. Copps) when she said . . . In my speech, I mentionned the garment industry as an example, Madam Speaker; I do not say that we must accept the Free Trade Agreement simply because of that industry.

I find rather inappropriate that the hon. member should quote only one example out of my speech rather than the whole speech.

Ms. Copps: Madam Speaker, could the Hon. Member give us her definition of the term "harmonizing"?

Mrs. Bourgault: Madam Speaker, when the Hon. Member raises such a question, the term "harmonizing" . . . harmonizing programs.

Well, harmonizing means in my view that currently, we are importing into Canada products from the United States . . . The Hon. Member is noting the term "harmonizing" . . . I think what we will do in Canada is ensure that American goods coming into Canada are harmonized to our laws, our labelling methods, in the sense that the goods will have to meet the standards set up by Canada as to their acceptability to consumers.

Mr. Kilgour: Madam Speaker, could the Hon. Member tell us, if she can do so, how much money we will enable Canadians to save in western Canada or eastern Canada or the Maritimes that is, if that agreement can work, what kind of savings will it bring consumers? How much money each year? Would she have figures, by any chance?

Mrs. Bourgault: Madam Speaker, the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs did a study on that matter, and it is our contention that in real terms the free trade agreement will save consumers between $300 and $800 a year. This does not include for instance the case of a couple buying a new home, because they could save tremendously on building materials, and also on appliances.

So there are substantial savings to be derived by Canadians from the free trade agreement when they want to build a home.

Ms. Copps: Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member just stated that harmonizing would only start with standards concerning goods that are imported into Canada. How come then the Committee on Subsidies will be sitting for the next five or seven years?

Mrs. Bourgault: Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member insists on criticizing part of the agreement instead of taking a comprehensive view.

I simply want to remind her that anyone who is interested in bilateral trade should look at what is happening in other countries. I think we should look at what happened in Europe and in New Zealand and Australia. From what I gathered upon reading the documentation, Madam Speaker, before these agreements were ratified the socialist parties and the unions were against the free trade agreement that now exists within the European Economic Community. Today, the same organizations, and I hope the New Democrats are listening, view with some embarrassment their erstwhile objections to an agreement that has enhanced the economies of the Common Market countries, while New Zealand has benefited enormously under the free trade agreement signed with Australia.

Ms. Copps: Madam Speaker, I am delighted the Hon. Member asked us to look at the situation in Europe. She should have known that in Europe, they started with a trade agreement and now they are harmonizing their social programs, including retirement age. For instance, we know that in Italy, the retirement age for women was lower than for men, but that is now changing. Programs for maternity benefits, hospital benefits and day-care facilities are all being harmonized according to the present policy followed by the Common Market. So how can the Hon. Member take this particular instance as an example of an economic agreement, when we know that in Europe, what they are doing is social harmonizing of social programs?

Mrs. Bourgault: Madam Speaker, trying to compare the European Economic Community with Canada and the United States is like comparing apples and oranges.

Madam Speaker, those discussions were held with the Council of the European Economic Community. That does not mean that Canada will reach the same conclusion; I hope not. Look, when she points out that European countries are harmonizing their programs, that is their business. As far as we are concerned, we are in North America, a completely different situation. There is just no comparison. In Europe, you can travel from one country to another in an hour or two, but we know how big Canada is. There is no comparison whatever. We have provinces, each with its own jurisdiction.

So, Madam Speaker, this issue, this statement is not very relevant.

• (1550)

[English]

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, I am glad that the Member now states that there is no relationship between this deal and the European community because only a few short moments ago the Member herself said: "Look to the European community to see what kind of a terrific deal they have signed". If you examine the history of the European community, you will find that first comes an economic deal and then comes the so-called harmonization of social policy. The Government time and again claims that harmonization has no bearing whatsoever on this trade deal, but it will devastate the social safety net we have established in this country and the benefits and protections which we have provided to women through such things as pregnancy benefits.

An Hon. Member: Cheap shot.

Ms. Copps: The Member says "cheap shot". I do not think it is a cheap shot to talk about what is going to happen with the future of the country. In the course of harmonization over the next five to seven years the leaders of our country, who have been selling us down the drain for the last four years, will get together with American leaders to try to develop a so-called check list of what constitutes an unfair subsidy. Do government Members think that it is our social policy and our laws that will harmonize with the Americans? Do the Members think they will accept pregnancy benefits similar to those which we have in Canada and unemployment insurance such as we have? No, we will harmonize to their programs.

I would like to provide a check list of what we can expect under the Mulroney-Reagan trade deal which inherently involves the harmonization of social programs because "harmonization" is the hidden watchword, the hidden buzz word, the ticking time bomb in this deal that will change the very fabric and face of a country which we have fought so hard to build.

The United States has yet to ratify the International Labour Organization Convention of 1975 which sets standards for all women workers. Section 103 of the ILO Code states that there must be a minimum leave period of 12 weeks for pregnant women, protection against dismissal, and a minimum standard that cash benefits during pregnancy leave be sufficient for the full and healthy maintenance of the child. These are the standards which the U.S. has refused to sign. They have refused to sign because in their jurisdiction the protection of pregnant women simply does not exist.

The social safety net of unemployment insurance for unemployed workers in that country falls far short of even respecting the poverty level. In fact, there are only five states in the United States which provide publicly paid pregnancy leave for women. If a woman happens to have a child in those states she can leave work for six to eight weeks. The stellar states include California, Hawaii, New Jersey, New York and Rhode Island. In 45 other states there is no public law providing any kind of financial assistance for women who leave the job during a period of pregnancy.

Mr. McDermid: What a shame.

Ms. Copps: That is a shame, it is a damn shame. I would like to know why the Government is committing itself, in the trade deal, to harmonization of social programs, social benefits and a subsidy committee which, over the next five to seven years, will play Russian roulette with the social programs and benefits for which our Party has fought and will continue to fight.

Mr. Merrithew: You're full of it.

Mr. Andre: You sure beat the devil out of that straw man.

Mr. McDermid: You're not even telling the truth. Tell the truth for a change.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Order.

Ms. Copps: The truth hurts.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): All Hon. Members will have the opportunity to debate. It is very difficult for the Speaker to hear what the Member who has the floor is saying when there is such very loud talking across the floor. The Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps) has the floor.

Ms. Copps: Thank you, Madam Speaker. The net result of the lack of national social policy which currently exists in the United States is that only 40 per cent of working women in the United States are entitled to any paid maternity, including from private companies, of at least six weeks duration. I do not think we want to see such a program here.

Earlier today, during Question Period, we heard the Minister who is supposed to be responsible for the Status of Women say that this trade deal has no effect on women and no effect on the textile industry because our threat is from the Third World countries, pays d'outre-mer.

Does the Government recognize that textile workers in the southern sun belt states of the United States pose a real threat to competition in Canada? Would we like our minimum wage laws harmonized with American minimum wage laws? Nine American states have no minimum wage whatsoever. Twelve states have a minimum wage under $3 U.S. The minimum wage in Texas is $1.40 an hour. The Government has the gall to say that this will have no effect whatsoever in the trade deal which basically says that Canadians and Americans are supposed to be able to compete on an equal basis. I do not want my constituents working at Coppley, Noyes & Randall, a clothing factory, to have to work for the equivalent of $1.40 U.S.

The harmonization process which will take place as a result of this deal will not only see devastation in social programs and in the national health care system which Canadians hold very dear, but will also see a downward pressure on wage scales because we are supposed to compete with states which have right- to-work laws which abolish the right of the union to automatic dues check-off, that do not believe in minimum wages, and which, frankly, have gone a different route in terms of national economy and national social structure and social policy.

Let us look at the issue of health care. The Parliamentary Secretary guffaws and chortles over there. It was not I who said before the travelling trade committee in Vancouver that medicare would be under threat as a result of this deal. It was the President of the B.C. Council on National Issues. That group came before the committee and said that it is okay that this deal will threaten medicare because they have to become more competitive.

With regard to the harmonization of our health care system with the United States, let us look at the auto worker in Canada. The wage package portion of an auto worker's salary in Canada, which includes premiums for health, accident, dental, vision, and life insurance, is equivalent to approximately $2,800 Canadian. The same firm in the United States, because of the absence of a national health care plan, pays about $8,900 Canadian per worker in annual premiums for health, accident, dental, vision and life insurance. What happens, for purposes of discussion, if once this infamous trade deal is set in motion American auto makers come to the table and say that they think the medicare system in Canada is an unfair subsidy because their employers have to pay $8,900 per worker whereas in Canada they only pay $2,800?

Mr. McDermid: Why haven't they done it then?

Ms. Copps: The Member asks why they haven't done it. They did it. They did it with the shakes and shingles and they did it with ground-fish. With regard to shakes and shingles, a 1983 complaint against Canada was struck down and in 1987 a complaint was upheld. The same thing could happen in the area of unemployment insurance. The same thing could happen in the area of health care.

Let us look at what is available for Americans in the area of medical insurance. A quarter of American women of child bearing age have no medical insurance whatsoever. America's infant mortality rate is 40 per cent higher than Canada's. Is that the direction in which we want our social programs to go? Do we want to see an increase in infant mortality which is directly related to inaccessibility to a universal health care system such as we have developed in this country?

• (1600)

On top of 47 million Americans who have no medical coverage whatsoever, 15 million have inadequate coverage. The American Medicaid program is actually targeted to the lower half of people living below the poverty line. One must be in the bottom half of those living below the poverty line in order to be eligible for Medicaid.

A recent study from the auto workers shows that those people who were hardest hit, unemployed workers, are the ones who dropped off from medical coverage. Only 30 per cent of unemployed American workers had any health insurance at all.

We know that Annex 1408 of the trade agreement identifies health care facilities management services as a sector in which we are extending national treatment. If health care is not under discussion, why does Annex 1408 of the trade agreement open the door for an influx of private sector, profit oriented companies to come into Canada to establish their own systems like we have seen with American Humana Corporation. Is that the kind of health care system we want for our country?

Mr. Reimer: What does that have to do with the trade agreement?

Ms. Copps: Again the question is asked: "What does that have to do with the trade agreement"? The trade agreement calls for a harmonization of our laws. When the European Common Market first set up a trade agreement, the natural sequence of a trade agreement was social benefit harmonization. That is why a subsidy committee was set up. Over the next five to seven years it will sit down and play Russian roulette with these social programs and the benefits and guarantees that have been given to working men and women in this country.

I, for one, do not trust the statement from a Government and a Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) who first came into office saying senior citizens' pensions will not be touched. The same Government and the same Prime Minister is saying that social programs will not be touched.

Let us talk about the food sector industry. A short time ago I received a letter from the plant manager of an American multinational in my community known as Procter and Gamble. The plant manager wrote a letter saying that we should be supporting this wonderful trade deal. However, he did not include a memorandum which had been circulated to the Liberal trade committee. It is a private letter from the Vice-President of McCain Foods, who just happens to be a good Conservative.

Mr. McDermid: McCain kept loaning his plane to Pierre all the time.

Ms. Copps: I am sorry that the Government is not aware of the facts surrounding this letter. I will spend a few moments reading parts of it into the record. It states: "Dear Miss Carney: I am writing to you as a member of the agriculture SAGIT and as a hard core Tory . . . " The letter is from Archie McLean, who was with McCain Foods. This hard core Tory points out how this trade deal will not only devastate the dairy, poultry or feather, horticulture, beer and wine industries, it will reek devastation upon the food processing industry across this country. He also implies in the letter that one of the reasons that most corporations in Canada have not spoken out against the deal is because most of them are 100 per cent U.S. owned.

Let me run through the table. They include Procter and Gamble. I will say right now to those workers in my riding who would like to know whether they can buy matching shoes and dresses, in reference to comments made by the Member who spoke previously, that they will not be able to buy matching shoes and dresses if they do not have jobs. Procter and Gamble in my community will have very little lifetime left in Canada if this trade deal goes through. It has 100 per cent U.S. ownership, with annual sales in Canada of $939 million.

Other companies include Nabisco Brands with 80 per cent U.S. ownership; Kraft, 100 per cent U.S. owned; General Foods, 100 per cent U.S. owned; Coca Cola, 100 per cent U.S. owned; Beatrice International, 100 per cent U.S. owned. Do Members really believe these companies are fighting for the jobs of Canadians?

This same vice-president of McCain Foods stated clearly that the President of Heinz has already told him they have plans to move their plant production to the United States if this trade deal goes through. Naturally, they are not standing up one by one to decry this deal, because they are owned by American multinationals.

Only three companies in this sector are majority Canadian owned. They are B.C. Tree Fruits, McCain Foods Canada and Canberra Foods. The vast majority of the food processing industry in Canada is owned by Americans.

It is like Camco in my community, a company which makes refrigerators. Everyone believes that they will be able to buy cheap refrigerators once this deal goes through. However, I have spoken to officials with Camco Corporation who say that if this deal goes through, there will be excess capacity in American manufacturing plants that can service and sell a refrigerator to every Canadian with some left over. Camco will be on the chopping block as well.

The Government says that there will be some minor adjustments as a result of this deal. The Finance Department figures which came out last summer and allegedly gave us a sector by sector breakdown of what we could expect in terms of winners and losers were an absolute farce. They could not indicate in absolute numbers what industries would be on top and what industries would falter. I know that in my community the steel industry is supposed to be a winner. However, the Canadian steel producers stated categorically to the trade committee, that they had no intention of selling more steel in the U.S. market.

The status of the Canadian dollar is also a hidden time bomb. Early last week, we had breakfast with the Canadian Foundries Association, who are terrified about the increase in value of the Canadian dollar. As it continues to increase, probably as a result of some back room deal signed between Americans and Canadians in the same way they allowed the drug Bill to go through—the competitive edge upon which the original premise of the deal was based is eroded. The steel producers themselves will say that an 80-cent dollar will wreak havoc on what is now a competitive industry.

While these are many questions, the most important one concerns the ultimate direction of our country. Government Members chortle and say this has nothing to do with social programs. The key watchword is harmonization. Will this committee sit down over the next five to seven years and bargain away our national health care system? Will it bargain away any expansion of that system with something like parental leave for fathers, or ruin any potential plan for an increase in a national child care delivery program? Will it say that affirmative action programs and regional development programs are subsidy oriented and therefore cannot be permitted? Are we as Canadians willing to abdicate our right to develop our own future to some committee that will sit down over the next five to seven years and wipe out all the gains we have made in establishing a separate and different identity?

The Government Members consistently kowtow to their American neighbours. They accuse us of being anti-American. I certainly do not categorize myself as anti-American. However, I believe that as a country we have determined a future course which is different from the Americans. I do not want to see an infant mortality rate 40 per cent higher than what we have now in Canada. I do not want to see legislation that does not protect pregnant women, so that they can get kicked out of their jobs merely because they got pregnant. If we move to harmonize, that is the direction in which we will go. That is why it is so important that we fight tooth and nail to prevent this Bill from ever becoming the law of the land.

• (1610)

Mr. Kilgour: Madam Speaker, I listened with great interest to the Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps). I would like to ask her a few questions. She said there is a term in the agreement that talks about harmonization of laws. The problem, in my view, is that in our system of Government, whatever the Government proposes, with very few exceptions, opposition Members have to oppose it as if their lives depended on it. That, in my view, explains a good deal of the absolutely empty rhetoric we are hearing today from the opposition Parties.

Would the Member tell the House where in the agreement the expression "harmonization of laws" appears? Where in the agreement does the expression "harmonization of social programs" appear? In my respectful submission, the Member should know, if she does not, that there is nothing in the agreement that says that social programs shall be harmonized. For example, Governor Dukakis of Massachusetts, as the Member probably knows, is arguing for a health care plan similar to the one we have in Canada. If Governor Dukakis is elected, presumably the United States will have a health care plan along the lines of our health care plan.

An Hon. Member: Without free trade.

Mr. Kilgour: Without free trade, of course. I submit respectfully that the Hon. Member is not arguing on the merits of the agreement. What members of the Opposition are doing is what President Lincoln once said about an opposing attorney: "If you do not have a good case, abuse the plaintiff's attorney". Opposition Members are not talking about the merits of the agreement. They are simply trying to scaremonger along the lines my journalist friend, David Crane, has been doing.

When the Member talks about her extreme affection for Americans, I recall an interview a couple of years ago in which the Member and I were both interviewed by someone from the Los Angles Times. The reporter found it most amusing that the Member made exactly the same point and then in the next four paragraphs of the interview, she did nothing but attack the United States as she has been doing here in the Chamber. I put it to her that it rings a little bit hollow to say she has extreme affection for Americans, talking about her husband's country of origin, when she in fact, from everything I have ever read the Member saying, has nothing but contempt for the United States. I put it to the Hon. Member that if we had Peruvians or Bolivians living there, or anyone else on earth, the Member and the New Democratic Party would have quite a different view. The reality is that there are 23 industrial democracies in the world today. If this agreement goes ahead, as I very much hope it will, only one of them, Japan, will not be a member of a trading agreement.

Ms. Copps: Mr. Speaker, I would like to start by addressing the Hon. Member's last point first. My father-in-law will be very surprised to learn when he comes up for a visit that I hold Americans in contempt. Perhaps it is because I have spent some time in my husband's home State of Florida that I have a little concern about what we are getting into with the so-called free trade agreement. Almost every time I go there to visit my in-laws, I hear about someone killing themselves because they cannot afford to face the financial burden of an accident. The last time I was in Florida, there was a double murder suicide. A woman's young son had injured himself in a motorcycle accident and had ended up a quadriplegic. The drain on the family's economy in dealing with that young man who was very seriously debilitated was such that the family had been driven into bankruptcy. They had lost everything they owned. The woman felt the only honourable way out was to kill herself and her son.

Perhaps I feel this way because I have looked at some of the legislation there which does not protect working women or ordinary working people. We have a system here which has developed in a different way. Yes, it has more government involvement. Unlike the Conservatives, I am not radically opposed to government involvement at any cost. I feel that we as a society have developed programs to support the regions and minorities in a way that has not been the case in the United States. I like our way of life. I do not want to trade it for what I see south of the border however much I may admire and respect and have friendships with the people south of the border.

I am a Canadian. I think my leader said it best when he said: "We may pay a little more to put chicken on the table in Canada". Yes, we do pay a little more because we have marketing boards which feel that farmers are entitled to an honest living and should not be simply at the mercy of the rise and fall of the market-place", as we can see with the devastation of the family farm in the United States. I do not begrudge it because, as a Canadian, I feel it is a price worth paying.

Second, on the issue of harmonization, if the Hon. Member does not believe me, I ask that he consider a statement by Health and Welfare Canada. There was an assessment done by the Canadian Council on Social Development which basically deals with the question of subsidies and the fact that since there is currently no definition of "subsidy" in the agreement, the next five years to seven years will tell the tale as to what happens to social programs. I ask Canadians if they think that when we are sitting at the table with American negotiators, negotiating what constitutes an unfair subsidy, our subsidies and our programs will win out, or will the American programs win out? I tend to think we will be sinking to the lowest common denominator in terms of public programs. That is why I do not want the deal to go through.

Once the agreement is implemented, according to the Canadian Council of Social Development, Canadians could face countervail after we have reduced our tariffs. This is no idle threat, since the Trade Bill before the U.S. Congress includes a very broad definition of subsidies and since U.S. negotiators have already indicated that Canadian social programs could be considered subsidies. These are not my words. These are the words of a bulletin issued by Health and Welfare Canada.

Mr. Reimer: Madam Speaker, I listened with interest to the comments of the Hon. Member and I wonder if I might ask a question. In one of her comments the Hon. Member referred to the fact that one of the consequences of a freer trade agreement, say, the European example, was social benefits, harmonization. I think those were her words. I would like to quote the C. D. Howe Institute study of September of 1987. It talked about the lessons of the European Economic Community for freer trade between Canada and the United States. In the conclusion it was stated:

> The European experience suggests, and theoretical considerations confirm, that free trade is compatible with an amazing degree of diversity. In fact, one only has to look within federal states to see just how much diversity survives after decades, if not centuries, of economic unity. The harmonization of laws is simply not necessary. Sweden can retain its extensive social welfare system—and the high level of taxation that goes with it; Switzerland can remain at the other end of this spectrum, with a maximum of self-help and low levels of taxation; Austria can run its economy on largely state-owned lines; Finland can retain its special relationship with the Soviet Union.

Here we have some of these countries which are in the European Free Trade Association that trade with the European Common Market and, according to the conclusion of the C. D. Howe Institute, the harmonization of laws is simply not necessary. Yet the Hon. Member suggested that harmonization has to follow, that it is a natural consequence. Why then has it not occurred in Europe? Why is it that the C. D. Howe Institute, in looking at the lessons of Europe and at the European Free Trade Association and its association with the European Common Market, suggests the contrary?

From 1981 to 1984, which is the last year for which I have the figures available for the amount of money we put into our health care program, compared to what the Americans put in as a percentage of their GNP, the Americans on average put in 10.4 per cent. We put in 8.6 per cent. Yet we have a comprehensive universal scheme. Therefore, if we can service all Canadians, and we can do so cheaper than the Americans, then on whom is the pressure, them or us? I would like the Hon. Member to comment.

• (1620)

Ms. Copps: Madam Speaker, first, obviously, the Hon. Member does not know what the European community is since three of the countries he mentioned are not even in the European community.

Mr. Reimer: I said three trade associations.

Ms. Copps: I said the European community. It does not include Finland, Austria and Switzerland. If the Hon. Member is talking about FTAC countries, that is one thing, but if the Hon. Member is talking about countries in the European community, which is what I referred to, then the Hon. Member is talking about countries that are moving toward a harmonization of their social programs. Obviously, the Hon. Member is not aware of the objective of 1992.

I will give Members of the House a very specific example of how harmonization of social programs is currently in effect in Europe, and moving into effect. In Italy, a country from which many of my constituents originally came, until this point in time there was a retirement program which is different for men and women. The mandatory retirement age for women in Italy is 55, while it is 60 for men. The reason that was originally instituted was to recognize that during the years of childbirth women undergo physical strain which means that they should be given a different retirement age.

Under the harmonization of social programs, which is currently being carried out in the European community, Italy has been advised to change its retirement age. I suspect that when Italy moves to revise it, it will not say to all men: "You can now retire at age 55". It will be moved upward. The age of retirement for all women in Italy is being changed, not because of a social policy change in the Italian Government but because of a directive from the European community which is moving to harmonize social programs.

Mr. Reimer: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. As a point of clarification, the countries named in the C. D. Howe study at which I was looking concerns countries outside the European Common Market that have trading relationships with the European Common Market. It is that study which I quoted.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Resuming debate with the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister for International Trade.

Mr. John McDermid (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister for International Trade): Madam Speaker, I have been listening to the debate with great interest today. I welcome the opportunity to talk about the free trade agreement and to participate in the debate on the motion put forward by the Hon. Member for Broadview—Greenwood (Ms. McDonald). I take the Hon. Member's motion seriously, even though it is seriously flawed. The motion condemns the Government for "voluntarily relinquishing political sovereignty in the 'trade' deal".

I submit that any international agreement, any contract between two parties, imposes limits on the scope of the action of those parties. In 1974, the Liberals signed an agreement with the International Energy Agency of which Canada is a member, along with our 25 partners in that agency. That agreement stated that in a time of oil shortage throughout the world these 26 countries would share their resources equally. At that particular time in signing that agreement, an agreement with which I agree since I feel it makes sense, we gave up some of our sovereignty. We agreed to share our energy resources with our 25 partners in the International Energy Agency. I submit that any contract imposes limits on the freedom of individuals, just as international agreements or treaties for as long as they are in force impose limits on the sovereignty of countries.

When Canada helped to establish the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade some 40 years ago, it agreed to abide by the rules and regulations defined in that agreement. That was our commitment to our 96 partners now in GATT. The GATT thus prevents us from fully exercising our sovereignty in trade matters. We saw that recently in the decisions handed down by a couple of GATT panels, one which dealt with the discriminatory pricing of liquor and wines and the other which dealt with fish and how it is handled on the west coast of Canada. There are certain rules that we have to follow. In following those rules we give up a little bit of our sovereignty. But we do that with any agreement that is signed.

I suggest from reading the Hon. Member's motion that she is suggesting that we never sign international agreements because they limit some freedom to exercise sovereignty. Surely that is not what my friend, the former Mayor of Ottawa, and now the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Ms. Dewar), was saying in her remarks when she was speaking to this motion. We only accept limits on our sovereignty in exchange for limits on the sovereignty of others.

I have been involved in the free trade agreement very closely for the last couple of years. It is interesting to hear some of the arguments put forward in the United States that that country has given up some of its sovereignty. Americans have complained to their elected representatives that they have given up some of their sovereignty in signing this agreement with Canada. That is right. We both give and we both take. That is what an international agreement is all about. That is what any agreement is all about.

The sovereignty debate on this matter is a red herring. Let us go beyond that. I believe that the Hon. Member's concern centres on the ability of all levels of Government in Canada to establish programs or plans related to such matters as day care, auto insurance and cultural industries.

Let us deal firstly with day care. The provision of day care is exempt from the agreement. It does not appear in the list of the services specified in Article 1408 of the agreement. I want to remind the Hon. Member that it was this Government, after the free trade agreement was signed, that introduced a national day care policy. This is something which mothers and fathers have been seeking for 20 years. We announced our national day care policy shortly after the legal text between Canada and the United States was signed and made public. But nothing in this agreement prevented us from having such a program, and the Hon. Member knows that.

Ms. Mitchell: Your day care program feeds right into it.

Mr. McDermid: We can debate the benefits of the day care program another time. All I am saying is that we have every right to introduce social programs that we want.

Let me deal now with the cultural industries. Article 2005 specifically exempts cultural industries from the agreement. Article 2012 defines what is meant by a cultural industry. I wish to read this into the record so that people will know what we are talking about. Under Article 2012 it states:

> a) the publication, distribution, or sale of books, magazines, periodicals, or newspapers in print or machine readable form but not including the sole activity of printing or typesetting any of the foregoing,
> b) the production, distribution, sale or exhibition of film or video recordings,
> c) the production, distribution, sale or exhibition of audio or video music recordings,
> d) the publication, distribution, or sale of music in print or machine readable form, or
> e) radio communication in which the transmissions are intended for direct reception by the general public, and all radio, television and cable television broadcasting undertakings and all satellite programming and broadcast network services;

Could the agreement be any more explicit? Could the list of cultural industries be any more exhaustive? I do not think so.

Who introduced a publishing policy which promoted Canadian interests and control in that vital cultural industry? We did. We, the Progressive Conservative Government of Canada, did. Who introduced a film policy which provides Canadian film production more money than ever before and which establishes Canada as a distinct market for foreign films for the first time in history? We did. We, the Progressive Conservative Government, did.

Who brought amendments to the Copyright Act so that authors and artists would begin to receive some fair treatment for their creative works? The Government led by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), that is who did it. Who is fighting it in the other place? The Liberal Senators. They do not want our artists and authors to receive fair compensation for their work. They are holding it up in the Senate.

• (1630)

As far as Canadian publishing and films are concerned, what did the Official Opposition say, bolstered by their socialist friends in the New Democratic Party? What did they do over 20 years in power? To use a much hackneyed expression, "the square root of nothing" is what they did over the last 20 years. Perhaps that is not quite accurate. They talked a lot about it, they attended cultural events and had their pictures taken with our great Canadian stars, but that is about it.

Nothing in the free trade agreement in any way, shape, or form prevents this Government, or any succeeding Government, from introducing other policies to protect and enhance Canada's cultural industries. As a Government we have already done so, and we will continue to do so.

In ending this part of my remarks, Madam Speaker, I might say it was difficult to explain to the American people our concern for protecting our cultural industries. It was difficult to get through to them. Because the culture in the United States has never been under attack or threatened, they could not comprehend why we in this country would worry so much about it. We did worry about it. We took the appropriate action, and we are very proud of what we accomplished.

As I understand it, the Hon. Member for Broadview—Greenwood and her colleague, the Hon. Member for Essex—Windsor (Mr. Langdon), have a particular interest in the potential impact of the free trade agreement on the establishment of provincial auto insurance plans. The free trade agreement in no way prevents any provincial government from introducing such a plan. As I understand it, the Members are worried about Article 2010 which concerns the establishment of monopolies. It states as follows:

> 1. Subject to Article 2011, nothing in this Agreement shall prevent a Party from maintaining or designating a monopoly.

This is subject to the bilateral consultation provisions in the agreement.

First, if the Hon. Members are specifically referring to the Province of Ontario, and I am sure they both are because that is where the discussions have been going on at the present time on establishing a potential provincial auto insurance plan, we do not yet know the nature of that plan, or if the provincial Government has even decided to establish such a plan. But let us assume for the purposes of the argument that Ontario does so—perish the thought—but let us assume that it does. The plan could take several forms. For example, companies which currently sell auto insurance could end up being full participants in such a plan. If that is the case, and the United States firms have the same rights and obligations as Canadian firms under the plan, there would be no basis whatsoever under the free trade agreement for American complaints under the agreement.

Another possible arrangement could be the creation of a provincial auto insurance agency which would co-exist with private insurance companies. Again, the United States companies have the same rights and obligations as Canadian companies. The principle of national treatment is respected, and again there would be absolutely no basis for complaint.

What if the Government of Ontario established a provincial monopoly that excluded the private sector from the auto insurance business, if it just decided to take it over holusbolus? First, under Article 2010 of the free trade agreement it would have every right to do so. Second, should the scheme give rise to expropriation, or nationalization of an investment, the agreement provides for compensation at fair market value on a non-discriminatory basis.

In other words, if there is expropriation or nationalization, those that are being nationalized will receive fair compensation. Is that fair? Does that not make sense? In expropriation or nationalization, and the victims—and I use that term advisedly—would be compensated at fair market value. That is fairness.

The Hon. Member seems to be considering this issue from only one point of view. Apparently, she does not believe that Canadian firms are active in the United States and that they will enjoy exactly the same protection and benefits under the monopolies clause as U.S. firms will in Canada. Perhaps the Hon. Member does not care about the hundreds of Canadian firms that do business south of the border. Perhaps she thinks that Canadian firms do not invest, establish plants, or do much business in the United States market. The fact is that Canadians are major investors in the United States, and we have seen some of that lately. Our businesses have billions of dollars worth of investment there. If any state government decides one day that a state monopoly should be established in this, or in any other industry, Article 2010 will provide the Government of Canada and the Canadian businesses affected with a useful instrument for protecting Canadian interests there.

The Hon. Member and many of her colleagues keep making the same mistake about this country, about this Canada that we all love and are proud of. They underestimate what has taken place over the past 20 years or so. Their positions, proposals, and policies are consistently based on what Canada was in the late 1960s and not what Canada is today.

Why do the Members opposite not come to terms with the fact that the global economy has radically changed, and Canada has changed also. Why do they have this intellectual reflex to establish barriers instead of bridges to opportunities in the world economy? Why is it that labour thinkers and policy makers in countries such as Sweden and Great Britain are opting for policies to eliminate barriers to international trade and to stimulate market forces, whereas here in Canada the socialists, that great New Democratic Party, arm in arm with Shirley Carr and the Canadian Labour Congress, persist in opting for central planning models and technocratic intervention? I find it depressing, if not bizarre.

I have heard it in a couple of speeches today from both the Liberal Members and the New Democratic Party members that we are too small, we are not ready, we are too weak, we are vulnerable, or we are not able to adjust. Right down the line they underestimate Canadians. They think that they have all the knowledge and the ability over there, that they can control everything in this country. That is just not true.

With that type of pessimism and hopelessness, our forefathers would never have built this great country. The greatest moments of this country have been when it faced great challenges. Whether or not the Opposition chooses to see it, every day the 3 million Canadians' jobs that depend on trade face great technological and competitive challenges in the global market-place. Those people are not saying that we cannot compete. They are not the ones who are opposing the trade agreement. They are saying that we can compete, and we will compete. But the Opposition persists in underestimating them. The opposition will continue to insist that big brother look over everybody's shoulder. Most Canadians have come to a very definite conclusion that, after bigger and bigger government, an enormous deficit, and mushrooming Crown corporations run by bureaucrats, big brother is a lousy manager. Canadians can see what has happened to the firms that were privatized by the Government.

For example, firms like Canadair. Near my area, De Havilland employs 1,500 more people than when the Government had it, and it is going lickety-split. The Member from the riding where de Havilland is located fought that privatization. He said it will cost jobs. There are 1,500 more jobs. Fisheries Products International is now financially sound. It is employing more people than ever before. It is exciting. But, oh, no, the NDP do not think so. They think what is happening is terrible. They want those big deficits to come back. They want big brother back on the shoulders of Canadians. I wish they would wake up to the fact that big brother's time has come and gone. I will tell you whose time has come under this Government. It is the time of those Canadians who want to be free to build, to innovate, to trade and be rewarded for their initiative and enterprise as well as to provide assistance and protection to those Canadians who need it most.

I listened to the Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps) talk about the inadequate social services in the United States. I agree with her wholeheartedly. But she sets up a straw man and then proceeds to knock him down. We are not harmonizing our social programs, not one bit. As a matter of fact our social programs are the envy of the Americans. Why is a presidential candidate saying he would love to implement the health care program that we have in Canada? I have great faith in Canadians. I know Canadians believe that we do not want in any way, shape or form to destroy what we have built up in this country. Canadians know the last thing we want to do is to spoil the social safety net that has been developed. It is one of the things that makes us unique. I also know that if our economy is not doing well, if we are not trading, if we are not paying the bills and creating jobs, then we cannot pay for those wonderful social programs. That is the bottom line, Madam Speaker.

Canada has a great growth record going now, the best of the OECD countries, because we freed capable, innovative Canadians from the stifling and overbearing reach of the technocracy so favoured by the NDP and the Liberals. The free trade agreement is a vital part of that approach. It provides Canadians free and secure access to a market 10 times bigger than our own. This access will, in turn, put our businesses, large and small, in an even better position to diversify the markets in Europe, in Japan and in all major markets of the world. I ask the Hon. Member for Broadview—Greenwood, who brought this motion to the floor of the House today to consider what I have said and free herself from the ideological blinkers of her Party. I ask the Hon. Member to see Canada as a dynamic and growing part of the world, not as a timid northern territory lost in the shadow of its neighbour. Once she sees that and takes time to read the agreement and understand it, then I think we will have her support.

Ms. Mitchell: Madam Speaker, I have a question for the Parliamentary Secretary. Could he explain why the Government decided to include the service sector in this deal when it is the fastest growing sector in Canada and is creating the most jobs, particularly jobs for women? Can he explain why we are doing this when other countries have consistently resisted this through the GATT agreements? What are their reasons for not doing so? Why have we suddenly decided to open the doors to the Americans in the service sector?

I might point out, as the Hon. Member knows only too well, that the Macdonald Commission, when it did a very extensive and expensive study of our economy, came out in favour of free trade and did not include the service industry. Why is that? The Economic Council of Canada when it initially considered the impact of jobs did not consider the service sector. Does the Hon. Member not agree that the U.S. has a surplus of jobs in the service sector, so Americans are very anxious to export and infiltrate their service sector into other economies without any tariff barriers? Many Canadians feel that the Government has been naive in this area, the area where jobs will be most affected.

Why did the Government include our large and developing service sector in this deal, making us very vulnerable to the intrusion of the expanding American system when other countries refused to do so under GATT arrangements?

Mr. McDermid: Madam Speaker, I am glad the Hon. Member asked that question. First, the service industry accounts for two-thirds of the economy. It is the fastest growing industry in the world. Our GATT partners have asked for services to be part of the GATT negotiations in the Uruguay Round that is going on now. Services are very prominent on the agenda. To say our GATT partners have not wanted that is totally inaccurate.

Second, the Hon. Member for Hamilton East likes to give examples from her riding. I do too because that is what we know best. I have Picker X-ray in my riding which is a major company making huge X-rays for hospitals. It sells many into the United States, but it has trouble getting its service people down there to service equipment. After sales service, as the Hon. Member may or may not know, is a very important part of any contract. This is the maintenance and the upgrading of a particular product. We give Americans problems coming here to service equipment as they do with ours. Canadians and Americans with tool boxes under their arms were having to lie at the border, saying they were going on holidays. Things were that bad. But the agreement will facilitate—it is not a labour agreement—a temporary movement for the servicing of products both ways.

Speak to our architects and see if they cannot compete in the United States. See if they do not feel that they can go there, do extremely well and bid on jobs in the U.S.

Ms. Mitchell: They are elite Canadians, not ordinary Canadians.

Mr. McDermid: The Hon. Member is talking about ordinary Canadians.

Ms. Mitchell: And women particularly in the service industry.

Mr. McDermid: I have one architecture firm in my community which has three women architects and a number of support staff. The Hon. Member talks about ordinary Canadians. I have not met any more ordinary Canadians than those people. They are very fine people.

The service industry is now going through a revolution throughout the world. That is why some rules and regulations are being established to cover service. It only makes sense. The Hon. Member cannot ignore that end of it. I have a fellow in my constituency who is a brilliant individual when it comes to software programs. He has to lie every time he goes into the United States to sell his product. This agreement will facilitate that kind of movement. Canadians are good and we can go to the American market and sell. I have faith and pride in Canadians. The vice-president of IBM tells me that the most productive plant he has is in Bromont, Québec.

Ms. Copps: They said that about Firestone and closed it this year.

Mr. McDermid: Firestone was making a product that no one was buying. That was the problem.

The second most productive plant IBM has is in Don Mills, Ontario. The Hon. Member talks about moving firms back and forth. This will not happen. We in Canada are productive. I keep hearing about the southern United States. I keep asking my hon. friend why hasn't everybody moved down there now if it is so good? The tariffs are only 9.2 per cent average. People do not go because the southern U.S. does not have a well educated labour force and its force is not very productive. Our productivity is way higher than the southern States and in Florida where my hon. friend from Hamilton East likes to visit her in-laws. Hon. Members opposite put down Canadians every time they stand up and ask those questions.

Ms. Mitchell: We are proud of unionized Canadians.

Mr. McDermid: The Hon. Member knocks Canadians. She doesn't think they are any good. She does not think they should go into the United States. We do. That is the difference between the socialists, the Liberals and the Conservatives.

Ms. Mitchell: Don't be so arrogant.

• (1650)

Ms. Copps: Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member brought up the issue of productivity. Does he really think that most American multinationals which are located in the States and 100 per cent American owned value productivity when push comes to shove, when they have to reorient, retract and shut down a plant? Firestone, which was located in my riding, was employing 1,400 people and had the most productive workforce of the Firestone chain of 13 plants across North America for three years running. It had won awards from the company for being the most productive, highly effective and economical plant. When the time came to find a plant to close down, why is it that the head office in Akron, Ohio, sent a three paragraph telex to the Hamilton plant saying that after over 100 years in that community, the plant is shut down?

If the Hon. Member thinks that an American multinational will make a dispassionate decision based specifically and solely on the bottom line, then he does not understand United States politics. Anyone sitting in a head office in Akron, Ohio, finds it much easier to close a plant in a foreign country than to close a plant in their own country. If productivity is the criterion, why was Firestone shut down in Hamilton?

Mr. McDermid: Mr. Speaker, because it was making a product that was not being purchased by the public, that was the problem. A lot of it has to do with the consumers. Goodyear closed in Hamilton but is opening up a new, modern plant and is hiring people in Canada.

I look at Oshawa. My friend, the Hon. Leader of the New Democratic Party (Mr. Broadbent), does not mind foreign investment in his area.

Plants come and go. They have ever since they were established. In my community of Brampton, there were three or four industries that formed the base of Brampton. We were known as the flower town of Canada with Dale Estates and Calvert Estates there. There were 60 acres under glass producing beautiful roses, but they do not do that any more. It is just not economical to do that any more.

In Brampton, we had William's Shoe and Hewitson Shoe. Their plants became outmoded and their products were not accepted any longer. They closed. Those workers went on to new plants and new challenges. Change happens all the time. Over two million Canadians a year change their jobs. Change goes on all the time.

The Hon. Member wants to keep plants open, whether or not they have customers and whether or not they are productive. Just keep them, prop them up, give them more tax dollars, keep them going, shove them along. That is her attitude and it is also the socialist attitude, and it does not work.

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Madam Speaker, I would like to introduce my remarks, quite sincerely because these are things in which I believe and not just rhetoric, by explaining why I, particularly as a New Democratic Member, oppose the Tory government trade deal. There are many reasons for this, of course, which I have no time to go into, but basically, we feel very strongly that this is not just a trade deal but it is much more. In fact, it changes the very nature of Canada.

As the social policy critic for my Party and as a person who is very concerned about health and welfare programs and status of women programs, I feel very strongly that the ethical and social principles for which we as Canadians stand and which most Canadians hold dear are really being threatened by this deal. These principles include our concern for each other which overrules market-place philosophy and the making of a buck, and particularly our concern for the poorer regions of Canada and our absolute conviction that we must help one another and therefore we need to have regional development programs. Another is our whole concept of social rights which I believe is imbedded in the Canadian psyche and certainly in Canadian institutions. I do not believe that that principle is embedded in the same way in the American society. We in Canada feel very strongly that we must have a floor of social programs so that when times get tough, people do not starve, although some who are on social assistance come pretty close to it.

We also believe that we must have a competitive economy and we have to be aware of market trends. However, we temper this belief with a certain amount of government planning, nationally, provincially and regionally. This combination of public and private which is very characteristic of Canada is another thing that makes us very strong. That is why we believe that we must have certain essential services that are public services. We also need to have certain Crown corporations which carry out functions that would not be carried out in the market-place if the Government were not involved to some degree.

These are things that are very important to us in Canada and these are things that the trade deal threatens. Many of us feel this very deeply. I do not think that my hon. friend has convinced me, and I doubt if he has convinced many concerned Canadians, through his remarks today that these things will not be affected.

Those of us in western Canada are rich in resources and have a resource-based economy, but we are subject to boom and bust cycles. Therefore, we must diversify. It has been very difficult to diversify. There are very fragile manufacturing and high-tech industries that are just getting started in British Columbia and these industries are threatened. They need government assistance to get started, and under this deal, they will not be able to get government assistance. We believe it will be very difficult for the Government to give leadership in helping western Canada to diversify.

The trade deal will also create in the future a continental energy policy. This concerns us greatly. Canada should have control over its own resources. We will not be able to charge preferential prices for gas to secondary industries in Alberta such as the petrochemical industry, and I believe that has been done in the past.

We will have an open-door policy for U.S. investment under this deal and that will surely mean more branch plants than we already have and a transfer of jobs to the United States. It will certainly mean a move to do away with unions in Canada. Of course, that is a trend that this Government started, so it is not unreasonable at all that government Members are in favour of the trade deal.

Many of us do not agree that that is the way we want Canada to be. My friend, the Hon. Member for Broadview—Greenwood (Ms. McDonald), has already spoken eloquently about the impact of the free trade deal on our culture and our sovereignty. We know that jobs will be lost in key industries and especially in industries that employ women. There will be less access to U.S. markets than the Government anticipates because the Americans were pretty cagey about what protections they wanted in the deal.

Some of the trade problems we face in British Columbia which are related to tariffs on shakes and shingles and the export taxes on softwood lumber will not be resolved by the free trade deal. The deal also makes us so absorbed with Canada-U.S. trade that we are completely disregarding in our thinking, our motivation and our policies the tremendous potential in the Pacific Rim.

I have just returned from Japan and Korea where I went with a parliamentary group led by the Hon. Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. Hees). The Governments and the business people in Japan and in Korea as well are very concerned that we are not giving them a fair deal because of our complete absorption with this trade deal.

I would like to speak particularly about the impact of the trade deal on women. Many of the remarks I will be making deal with facts that have been researched extensively by Marjorie Cohen, an outstanding economist who is very active in the National Action Committee on the Status of Women, a group which met this weekend.

Both NAC and our Party argue that the trade deal will have devastating consequences for Canadian working women. The deal opens Canada to free trade in services. The service sector contributes two-thirds of our national income and employs 70 per cent of our labour force. Some 83 per cent of service sector jobs are held by women. They will be jeopardized by a trade agreement in services. We are not talking about sophisticated, highly trained architects or highly skilled computer programmers. They will of course have some advantages. We are talking about the masses, particularly the 83 per cent of service sector jobs held by women. They will be jeopardized by this deal.

The deal will eliminate many clerical jobs in data processing by cancelling laws which now require data to be processed and stored in Canada. We have already, without a trade agreement, lost 180,000 data processing jobs. With the agreement that could go as high as 500,000.

In the manufacturing sector, industries most threatened by free trade are those that employ 66 per cent of women; textiles, clothing, food processing, electrical and electronic products, and leather products. There are a couple of industries in my riding where, given the threat of this deal and existing policies of the Government, women are losing jobs. Many of these women are immigrants whose English is not a strong asset. They work in the garment industry and the fish plant industry. Jobs are already being threatened and many more are likely to be threatened in the future. Many of them are immigrants, older women, or those with low levels of education, and they will be losing jobs. It is difficult for them to get into ESL language training programs, much less retraining for the high-tech jobs which the Parliamentary Secretary mentioned as one of the benefits of this deal.

The harmonizing pressures exerted by free trade will cause a drop in Canadian wages and working conditions. We know the Government and the trade deal will definitely undermine the trade union movement. Women will lose their unionized jobs, of which there are not enough anyway, and will be concentrated in low wage occupations. They will suffer the most.

The benefits and social programs which are the right of all Canadians will be threatened by the agreement. Child care and maternity benefits may be considered unfair subsidies by the U.S., which certainly does not give these programs a high priority. Women will be particularly hard hit by a loss of such benefits. Americans have weak health and safety regulations, lower wages, poorer environmental protection, and ineffective equal rights legislation. Our standards will be threatened and this will harm all Canadians.

I asked the Parliamentary Secretary why the Government included the service sector in this agreement. European countries have resisted this change and certainly Third World countries have been very concerned about it. The Macdonald Commission did not include the service industry in its study of trade. The Economic Council of Canada did not initially include it in its projections of the impact on jobs. Obviously this was added later. We know the Americans were very anxious to include this sector because they have a surplus of services and are only too eager to move their service industries into Canada with no tariff barriers and with a decline in the kind of unionized jobs we should be protecting in Canada.

This deal allows U.S. firms to move in and run institutions for a profit. They can even receive Canadian subsidies for institutions in the service field which they are already moving into Canada. U.S. firms are given the right to be treated as Canadian firms, whether they are located in the country or not. This kind of invasion will result in job losses, depressed wages and working conditions for workers, particularly women.

Marjorie Cohen is an outstanding economist who specialized in this field and she said this deal will also severely affect the quality, accessibility and universality of our social services. I would like to refer people to the document she prepared called Americanizing Services. She made very many important points and I will be able to touch on only the highlights.

First, the trade deal talks about the management of all health and most social services. This includes management of hospitals, including general hospitals, mental hospitals, childrens' hospitals, management of other institutional services such as homes for the physically handicapped and disabled, homes for disturbed children, homes for single mothers, and the management of non-institutional services such as ambulances, rehab clinics and public service clinics. These services are up for grabs. Annex 1408 of the agreement, I think it is, will open these services to American firms coming into Canada, taking over and expanding the administration of these services. These are the areas of secondary health services which are not protected by the Canada Health Act. They are not protected by the five principles of medicare which are so important.

This deal makes it harder to protect these services from erosion. The federal Government left the door wide open for U.S chains to continue to own and operate homes for seniors, indeed chain day care operations which have been established for profit, not to serve children. They are already moving into Canada and this trade deal plus other government policies will certainly give considerable incentive to expand this program and we are very concerned about it.

Studies show that the standards are very minimal in these chain operations. Wages are very low and there is a high turnover of staff. There is not the same quality of service and there is no real protection in the sense that there is in non-profit services. It is grossly unfair that such commercial operations, such low quality commercial operations will be eligible for Canadian subsidies. There is no protection against that happening.

A hospital can contract out its management. This is the trend in British Columbia already. The British Columbia Government is privatizing everything in the public service. It even wants to privatize the servicing of highways, and certainly all the human services. It is contracting out to non-union kinds of operators and when you add the trade deal to this along with federal government policies on privatization, it just creates a tremendous threat to the quality of our social service sector, particularly our health care services. We believe we should have much more in the way of public, non-profit systems. It has definitely been proven that this is better quality service. However, the trade deal will not encourage that.

The effect on the nursing care labour force will be very great. There will be a great increase in part-time jobs and computerized services to replace the human care that nurses provide. Unionized jobs for nurses will also be threatened. This means poorer services for patients. There will be less time for personalized services in the hospitals and the same will be the case in for-profit day care services.

• (1710)

Another section which concerns us is Section 2010, the rules on monopolies. The new rules on monopolies will make it almost impossible for any government in Canada, and I think particularly of British Columbia of course, to extend public provision of services for those in the private sector. We are concerned about that because there are services which should be public services which, if we become the Government, we will not be able to return to the public sector.

Many of us have spoken about access to government services. Although the agreement does not explicitly say that service firms will not be given access to government subsidy, there is nothing in the agreement which allows the right to give preference to non-profit services in many cases where the Government provides a fee for service.

We are also concerned about the subsidy section. This is where people are saying there is likely to be a real threat to our social programs. The deal does not clarify the definition of a subsidy or what kinds of services and industries will be considered subsidized services in the future. As you know, the deal stipulates that during the next five to seven years negotiations will continue so that new rules about what constitutes a subsidy will be established.

This could include any of our social programs which are already considered subsidies by many Americans. Unemployment insurance, social service programs, old age pensions, and so on could very well be considered subsidies.

We have heard several Members speaking about women in jobs. I am not going to concentrate on that except to say that the service sector concerns women, who are still the poorest sector of our society, who will be the biggest losers if we allow the erosion of social programs and the part-time jobs which will result from privatization. This trade deal is a great threat to women's jobs in particular.

Finally, the Parliamentary Secretary wants to debate child care programs at another time. We will not debate it at another time. The national strategy on child care is the forerunner of what we will see developing with this trade deal. It leaves the door wide open. In fact, it encourages provinces to develop and fund for-profit child care services. So it is there already and there is nothing in this deal which will protect for-profit child care. As was pointed out by one of the previous speakers, child care in the United States is of very poor quality. They do not even have maternity and parental leave policies there.

That is because the United States views social services from a market-place point of view. Making profits rather than service to people is their goal. We do not want this in Canada. We want services, particularly child care services, that are concerned with children, pay decent wages to care givers, and will have public subsidies for good quality child care.

I could go on and on, Madam Speaker, but I see that my time is up. In conclusion, we are very concerned about this trade deal as are growing numbers of Canadians, the more they study and learn about this deal. It is basically a sell-out of Canada. I say that with great emphasis. It is particularly harmful to Canadian women. We will do everything in our power to stop this deal and to enable the people to express their views in an election.

Mr. Kilgour: Madam Speaker, the Member is from western Canada. In her province two of the three major industries are forestry products and mining.

Mr. Manly: What about fishing?

Mr. Kilgour: Of course fishing is another one. Does the Member not think that it is in the interests of a great many British Columbians to have a more secure access to the United States market than they have had during the past year in terms of shakes and shingles, softwood lumber, and fish? There is a long list of items in western Canada that have been harassed by U.S. trade laws and actions under those trade laws.

Has the Member looked, for example, at the recent data of the Canada West Foundation which shows that large numbers of western Canadian jobs would be more secure if this trade agreement goes ahead than they are at present? At present what you might call anarchy exists in our trading relations with that market.

The Member might wish to do more trade with Japan and other countries of Asia and the Pacific, China included, of course. The reality, as she probably knows, is that approaching two-thirds of the exported goods and services from western Canada go to the United States whether or not she or I like it. In other words, by my figures the pay cheques of roughly 600,000 western Canadians depend on access to that market.

With regard to the social programs and the seven years, at least she is more responsible than the Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps) who said unequivocally that all our social programs will go down the drain if we form this agreement. This Member, if I remember correctly, said that they could be changed by the seven years of negotiation. Does the Member not think that it is important to the livelihoods of young people, middle-aged people, and the next generation to have some security of access to the United States?

Bob White is eviscerally opposed to this agreement even though, as I said this morning, we have had, for all intents and purposes, free trade in the auto sector since 1968 except for a few months in 1980 and 1981. The Member's Party calls it managed trade but it has, in fact, worked as free trade since 1968, three years after the Auto Pact.

Does the Member have to take Bob White's word on this issue when she and I know that western Canada needs this agreement? All provincial governments in western Canada and all independent bodies of research except for Mr. Bob White, as far as I can see, know that this agreement is in the interests of men and women throughout Canada. Does the Member not think that the prospect of having a job and a pay cheque at the end of the month is a fairly important social program to Canadians throughout the country?

Ms. Mitchell: Madam Speaker, I agree completely that having a job with a decent pay cheque is extremely important. It should be a basic right of all Canadians. This is particularly important to Canadian women. The point of what I was saying is that Canadian women, who are already marginalized and earn 60 cent dollars compared to men, will be really hurt by this deal. I made that point in my remarks with great sincerity.

The Hon. Member asked many questions and made many comments in his statement. As far as the western provinces are concerned, I am surprised that he seems so naive about it. I visited his Province of Alberta a few months ago and found considerable anxiety there. If any part of Canada needs to diversify, it is the West. We want secondary industries and more opportunities for secondary manufacturing jobs. We want to be able to export to places other than the United States. It is this open door policy which is a real giveaway to the United States which concerns us so much.

As far as the problems which we have had in British Columbia in the forest industry and the fisheries, as far as I can understand there is nothing in this deal to solve those problems. In fact, they are still there. I know that the Member of our Party who will speak next will comment on this further. I have a very close relationship with fishing people in my riding, particularly women working in the fish plants, and they are very concerned that this deal will not solve any of the problems they are facing. IWA members are solidly against this and the forest industry has real reservations in many instances.

Ms. McDonald: Madam Speaker, I very much appreciated the discussion by my hon. colleague from Vancouver East (Ms. Mitchell) about the situation of women and the effect of the trade deal on their job opportunities in particular. I would like to ask her a question about the political aspects of the deal. She is a western Member and I am a former British Columbian.

• (1720)

It is my experience that westerners are patriotic Canadians who are proud of their Canadian institutions. They want an independent Canada and take pride in our public social programs. They take pride in our cultural institutions which are nationally funded and which we have operated differently from the Americans. Westerners are no less patriotic than any other Canadian. They may have their gripes against the East on some issues, but they are true Canadians and want strong Canadian institutions. They pay their taxes and want that money to go into regional diversification, social programs, old age pensions, medicare and all of those programs, the same as Canadians from coast to coast.

Will my colleague comment on the loss of political sovereignty and the weakening of the powers of the federal and provincial governments to create and expand social and cultural programs for the good of the people within their territories?

Ms. Mitchell: Madam Speaker, I do not think I have to say that westerners believe in Canada. Of course we believe in Canada and are very proud Canadians. Sometimes we think central Canada should listen a little more. The Parliamentary Secretary made some very central Canadian comments earlier and said nothing about some concerns of the West. However, there is no question that we feel very strongly about Canada. We believe strongly in the potential of the Pacific Rim and that our trade relationship in this area is not being adequately developed.

As far as social programs in British Columbia are concerned, I am deeply ashamed of our Premier for what he is trying to do to undermine social programs and social service jobs in that province. This deal will add to that threat, and that is one reason why an increasing number of British Columbians are joining anti-free trade lobbies and coalitions. British Columbians are real fighters, as they are on the Prairies.

We are very proud that British Columbia is a highly unionized province. The Tories constantly talk about Bob White and Shirley Carr. Not only are they paranoid, they should have a guilt complex because they are trying to destroy unions in this country. Their policy of privatization and this free trade deal will certainly contribute to that. There is nothing they would like better than to eliminate unionized jobs for contracting out, to put women in part time jobs so they can return to the home and so on. I am very much afraid that rather than look to the future of Canada, this policy will take us back.

Mr. Tobin: Madam Speaker, as I listen, I understand the dichotomy to which Canada would be reduced if we had a war of wills between those on the extreme right and those on the extreme left. This is not a debate between General Motors and Bob White. This is a debate on a free trade deal that affects every Canadian, including those who are not necessarily tied to General Motors or the Canadian Autoworkers Union. It concerns people who are in business and members of unions and see for themselves and their families great changes and potentially great harm.

How does the Hon. Member respond to the Government's claim that the trade deal will be a cure-all for the problem of regional disparity in this country? Presumably, the various states in the United States are the beneficiaries of free trade within those United States, but there is still regional disparity in many of the southern states. That regional disparity is growing in some of the rust belt, or northeast United States.

The Government would tell a province like Newfoundland or an area like Cape Breton or parts of northern Canada that this free trade deal will solve their regional disparity, yet the reality in the United States is that gross regional disparity exists notwithstanding the fact they have all the so-called advantages of the American economy. How does the Hon. Member respond to that?

Ms. Mitchell: Madam Speaker, perhaps my hon. friend was not in the House when I began my remarks. I stated clearly that what concerns me and many Canadians is that Canada is unique because we care about each other in the different regions of Canada. We have a system in which there are certain written and unwritten social rights, including a concern for all regions so that people have equal opportunity and equal protection in all regions.

We must have regional development programs and the Hon. Member is absolutely right that this trade deal will gradually erode them. While the Government says this will not happen, the five to seven years in which to define subsidies is certainly a cause for concern.

Mr. William C. Winegard (Guelph): Madam Speaker, I was rather hoping today that we might have a debate based upon the free trade agreement. However, what we have had is another debate with a lot of rhetoric, exposing once again what I call the myths of free trade.

I want to examine some of those myths this afternoon because I think it is important to set the record straight on what is and is not in this particular trade agreement. Since it was just mentioned, let me deal with myth No. 1. It is that regional development programs are at risk. We have heard that over and over this afternoon. I do not know how to respond to that, except to say that it is pretty close to absolute nonsense. They are no more at risk under the free trade agreement than they are now.

Under the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade, which has been mentioned so often in this debate, Government subsidies are recognized as legitimate tools of governments to help promote regional development. All that GATT requires is that countries should not use subsidies in a way that injures other countries. Subsidies in themselves are not illegal.

Under existing Canada and U.S. law as well, subsidies are only countervailable by the importing nations if they are not generally available. Those persons who would have us believe that regional development programs would go down the drain should know that the ones they are talking about are generally available.

• (1730)

Only very few of the Canadian regional development subsidies have been challenged as countervailable in the United States. Only a fraction of those that have been challenged were found by U.S. authorities to be injurious to American producers. Since 1980, no countervailing duty on a regional development subsidy has exceeded 1 per cent of the export price. One of the advantages of being an engineer is that I always ask myself, what are the numbers? Never mind the rhetoric, what are the numbers? I remind people of the 1 per cent of the export price. Even if the subsidies were found to do harm, we can still put them on if we wish. It is entirely our decision. The free trade agreement does not in any way take away that decision from us.

Let me go now to what I call myth No. 2. I have so many myths here that I am going to lose count. The next myth is that Canada's cultural sovereignty is at stake. How? Article 2005 of the agreement stipulates that with four very limited exceptions, nothing in the agreement impedes Canada's ability to pursue cultural policies and programs of its own. If we look at the four that are taken out, we find they are hardly going to shake this country's cultural policy. We are going to eliminate tariffs on musical instruments, cassettes, films and records. In other words, the U.S. will be able to export records and tapes into Canada free of tariffs. We will be able to do the same.

Under Article 2006, both Canada and the United States will provide copyright protection to owners of television programs broadcast by distant stations and retransmitted by cable companies. Article 2007 is the typeset and printing section. None of these changes our ability as a nation to do what we have always done, to call for Canadian content regulations, to support the CBC, to support our national galleries, to support the Canada Council, and to support our artists and writers. None of these things are changed in this agreement. There is a myth out there that we have given up our cultural sovereignty. In fact, culture has been taken right out of it. There is nothing in the agreement that we do now that we cannot do.

The next myth is that free trade will destroy Canada's social programs. Well, we have heard this afternoon about how somehow or other—no one says quite how—we are going to harmonize our health care system. Why would we want to harmonize anything that is working very well right now? There is nothing in this agreement that talks about harmonizing our health care system. It is our system. It will remain our system.

My opposition colleagues talked often about the GATT today but under GATT, generally available social programs are not countervailable. Why should we be concerned about changing our health care system? It is another straw man put up to frighten people. As an aside, you know, Madam Speaker, and I know, that the United States has already examined the fishermen's disputed unemployment insurance benefits, and they were found not countervailable.

Finally, on this one subject, the preamble of the agreement itself clearly sets out Canada's ability to take measures to defend the public welfare. We are no less Canadian because we are entering into a free trade agreement with the United States. In fact, it is so typically Canadian that we would reach out to have more trade. That is what Canada is all about. Our health care system is in no way in danger, neither are our social programs. Read the agreement, Madam Speaker, that is where it says they are not at risk. They have been taken out of the agreement.

Another myth, and the committee heard this myth when it was on the road travelling across the country, startling as it may seem and almost incomprehensible to Members of this Chamber, is that free trade will lead to a flood of American pornography and hand-guns coming into this country. One person even said that the streets of Toronto will not be safe. I do not know how something like this gets started, but it has about as much relevance to the free trade debate as the price of hot dogs at Maple Leaf Stadium. Pornography is already dealt with under the authority of Canada's Criminal Code. There is nothing in the agreement that says we have to change Canada's Criminal Code. That is nonsense. The GATT already provides the authority for Canada to control the import of both pornography and firearms. Article 407, chapter 5 and chapter 12 of the free trade agreement makes it clear that these powers remain absolutely untouched.

The next myth is that free trade will unleash wide-open competition in services. Article 1402 of the agreement makes it clear that existing laws and regulations governing services remain untouched. The agreement relates only to future laws and regulations. I am always concerned when people talk about services as if somehow or other this is a departure that will ruin Canada. But I ask, when the GATT was established in 1947, what was the world trading in? It was trading primarily in goods. In 1987, if we were establishing the GATT, it is incomprehensible to me that it would not talk about goods and services because services have become more important in the world in terms of trade than goods. In some instances, I do not know how one tells the difference between what are goods and what is a service. What is a floppy disk? Is it a goods or is it a service? Of course, it is a combination of both. To say that service should not be in a modern trading agreement, to me, hearkens back to the horse and buggy days. Of course, they belong in a trade agreement. Canadians are good at these sorts of things. We have nothing to fear in terms of services. We sell our services across the whole world and we want this agreement to be the forerunner of what the GATT should be. We will win on this at the GATT.

Another myth is that Canada's trucking industry will be destroyed. The services annex of the agreement does not include transportation, not at all. Like the cultural and social programs, the trucking industry is not affected in any way by the agreement. "Canada should depend on multilateral negotiations in the GATT rather than bilateral free trade with the United States". We have heard that statement several times through the course of the last few months. Well, of course, Canada depends on both, and will continue to do so.

The free trade agreement itself sets out our continuing commitment to ensure that we trade multilaterally in all aspects. The agreement that we have here is consistent in every way with Article XXIV of the GATT, the article that provides the framework for negotiating the free trade agreement.

Both countries retain their existing GATT rights and obligations. It strikes me that not many of the people who are concerned about this and talk only of the GATT are traders. Not many traders would tell one to stick only to the GATT. Most of the talkers do but not many traders do. If one is a trader then one knows that it is easiest in Canada to trade with the United States. It is our natural market. That is what Canadian business does. It moves with the United States.

There have been two Governments in the last few years that have tried to switch that around. Mr. Diefenbaker's Government tried to do it, as did Mr. Trudeau's Government, with a spectacular lack of success. Those things cannot be dictated to traders and to business people. They must be allowed to do their own thing. They would prefer to trade with the United States.

We can therefore use this agreement and our experience in trading with the Americans, our ability to compete with them and our ability to produce world product mandates, to then trade with the rest of the world, which is what part of this is all about. Both the United States and Canada are founding members of the GATT. We want the GATT to be successful, but we want the GATT to move away from where it is now.

Let me finish by talking for just a moment about child care, something which we have heard so much about this afternoon. There is nothing in the agreement that foresees or encourages, provides for or allows health and social services to become tradable services. If a United States firm comes into Canada to operate a child care facility it may do so. However, if we read the agreement, we find that it is not entitled to national treatment for the conduct and operation of that facility since that right flows only to covered services. Day care is not covered.

Let us do away with the myth and let us look at the agreement. There is nothing in this agreement that causes a change in any Canadian standard or criterion governing services within the health, education, social service or child care field.

Ms. Mitchell: How about management of institutions?

Mr. Winegard: Hon. Members now want to talk about health management. That is a good one for Canada since, once again, people do not understand what Canada is doing. They are so afraid of the United States that they do not understand.

Do Hon. Members know who will win with respect to health care facility management? It will be Canadians going down to the U.S. marketing and operating their facilities. We do it now. We are big operators there, and we will continue to be big operators. Most of the people who talk about this have no experience in running a health care facility, none whatsoever. Some of us have. Some of us know how good we are.

One of the tragedies about this is that so few people have yet to learn that this agreement is typically Canadian. It is an agreement that reaches out and says: "We are good. We can do it. Let us have the opportunity".

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Order! It being 5.45 p.m., it is my duty to interrupt proceedings and to put forthwith every question necessary to dispose of the supply proceedings now before the House under the provisions of Standing Order 82(9).

[English]

Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): All those opposed to the motion will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Call in the Members.

The House divided on the motion (Ms. McDonald), which was negatived on the following division:

INTERPARLIAMENTARY DELEGATION REPORTS

PRESENTATION OF REPORT OF CANADA-JAPAN INTERPARLIAMENTARY GROUP

Mr. Bill Kempling (Burlington): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 101, I have the honour to present to the House, in both official languages, the second report of the official parliamentary delegation of the Canada-Japan interparliamentary group which visited Tokyo, Japan, for a study on trade matters from April 11 to April 14, 1988.

PRESENTATION OF REPORT ON INTERPARLIAMENTARY CONFERENCE IN GUATEMALA

Mr. Benno Friesen (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 101, I have the honour to present to the House, in both official languages, the report of the official parliamentary delegation which represented Canada at the interparliamentary conference in Guatemala City, Guatemala, April 11 to April 16, 1988.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

NOTICE OF MOTION

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, consideration is presently being given to a motion, but at the present time the House Leader for the Official Opposition is not in the House and he has asked that we defer this matter until 3 p.m. I ask permission of the House now to revert to Motions at three o'clock.

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: Is there consent?

Mr. Guilbault (St-Jacques): Wait a minute. I think that, if the Government is ready to proceed with the motion, the Official Opposition would be.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, I want to make it clear that there have been some very delicate negotiations going on between the three House Leaders on this most important issue and, rather than agree now to allow the motion to be put later in the day, I am sure there would be unanimous consent to do that at three o'clock. I suggest that we give consideration to just letting this stand for the moment and come back to it at three o'clock. Hopefully by that time the delicate negotiations would have been completed.

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Nowlan: What is the motion about?

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Annapolis Valley—Hants (Mr. Nowlan) on a point of order.

Mr. Nowlan: Mr. Speaker, I am asking what the subject matter is of the delicate negotiations. All we have heard about is some motion about some delicate negotiations. I kind of think I know what it is, but I would like to know for sure what the subject matter of the delicate negotiations is. Surely that should be in the public domain.

Mr. Gauthier: Ask your Government.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Annapolis Valley—Hants has the floor.

Mr. Nowlan: I am not trying to be obstructionist, but I heard the exchange and if you are asking Members to give unanimous consent on a blank motion dealing with sensitive discussions, I think it is a fair question to ask what the subject matter is.

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): Keep talking.

Mr. Speaker: For whatever reason, I think the wish is just to put this matter over at the moment. I think I can indicate to the House that I will hear the Hon. Minister of State (Mr. Lewis) at three o'clock on this matter and then I will see what the disposition of the House is.

Mr. Murphy: You will know at three o'clock.

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, may I understand what is happening procedurally? I believe the Government House Leader asked for unanimous consent to defer consideration of this matter until three o'clock. Maybe I missed something, but I did not hear the question put to the House as to whether there was unanimous consent. If it is put, we on this side of the House will give consent. However, I would like it to be clear that this discussion is not being postponed until three o'clock this afternoon by request of the Official Opposition. On the contrary, we are perfectly ready to discuss this matter right now.

• (1110)

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker: I understand the position taken by the Hon. Member for Saint-Jacques (Mr. Guilbault), but I think the Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap (Mr. Riis) has asked unanimous consent for a discussion later today, probably at three o'clock.

[English]

Perhaps the Hon. Minister of State can give the Chair further guidance.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, perhaps there has been some mix-up. I am not attributing it to anyone, but my latest information was that the House Leader of the Official Opposition wished to do it at three o'clock. In view of the comments of my colleague, the Member for Kamloops—Shuswap (Mr. Riis), perhaps we should defer until three o'clock. I will discuss the matter with my colleague, the Member for Annapolis Valley—Hants (Mr. Nowlan), and perhaps we can proceed at three o'clock.

Mr. Speaker: For the record, the situation is that there has been a discussion but the matter has not been settled at this time. As I have indicated, the Minister of State will be heard at three o'clock and the House can then decide to deal with this as it sees fit at that time.

OPPOSITION TO BILL C-55—REFUGEE DETERMINATION

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, it is my pleasure to present a petition on behalf of a number of British Columbians who are concerned about the issues surrounding Bill C-55. They believe that it threatens Canada's traditional commitment to assisting refugees and sets out measures designed to keep refugee claimants out of the country as opposed to ensuring that genuine refugee claimants are given protection.

The petitioners believe that Bill C-55 will result in many, perhaps most, refugees who reach our borders being turned away without having their claims heard on the merits of their case.

The petitioners go on with a whole set of other concerns regarding Bill C-55, but they are basically asking that Parliament withdraw this Bill and substitute legislation embodying the principles of fair and quick oral hearings of claims of refugee claimants before a refugee board, independent of the Immigration Commission. They say, as well, that universal access to such hearings ought to be provided for every applicant in Canada as well as the right to appeal on the basis of fact.

CANADA-U.S.S.R. AGREEMENT—EVIDENCE ON ALLEGED WAR CRIMINALS

Mr. Bob Pennock (Etobicoke North): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour and pleasure to present a petition from many residents of the riding of Etobicoke North as well as other centres in Ontario. The petition deals with the Memorandum of Agreement entered into by the Department of Justice between Canada and the U.S.S.R. dealing only with Nazi war criminals. My constituents call upon Parliament to enter into negotiations to amend the Memorandum of Agreement to reflect the prosecution of all war criminals in order that not only Nazi war criminals will be singled out.

CANADA-U.S. FREE TRADE AGREEMENT

Mr. Derek Blackburn (Brant): Mr. Speaker, I, too, have the honour to present a petition, pursuant to Standing Order 106, signed by several constituents of mine from the federal riding of Brant. The petitioners are totally opposed to the Government proceeding at this time with the trade agreement with the United States. They call upon the Government to call an election so that the people can decide whether or not Canada should enter into this agreement. They fear that many jobs will be lost if the present agreement goes through unamended.

PROTECTION OF RIGHTS OF THE UNBORN

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have a petition signed by some 500 members of Holy Cross Parish in my constituency of Ottawa Centre with respect to the question of abortion. The petitioners note that the Supreme Court of Canada has nullified the only federal law concerning abortion and has given Parliament the responsibility of passing, as soon as possible, new legislation on this matter. They pray that Parliament enact a new law which fully guarantees and protects the right to life of all unborn children from the time of conception onward.

Mr. Dennis H. Cochrane (Moncton): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 106 it is my duty and privilege to present to the House of Commons today one of a number of petitions signed by residents in and around the federal constituency of Moncton. The petition deals with abortion.

The petitioners are cognizant of the fact that the Supreme Court of Canada's recent ruling has virtually removed all laws which apply to the abortion process in Canada. They are urging this House to introduce the necessary legislation to place limits upon abortion and protect the rights of the unborn child.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of State and Minister of State (Treasury Board)): Mr. Speaker, I ask that all questions be allowed to stand.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Shall all questions be allowed to stand?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

COPYRIGHT ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND— CONSIDERATION OF SENATE AMENDMENTS

The House proceeded to the consideration of amendments made by the Senate to Bill C-60, an Act to amend the Copyright Act and to amend other Acts in consequence thereof.

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, I regret that we are back in the House of Commons again to deal with Bill C-60. As you know, Canadian artists, composers, and writers have been waiting too long for this particular piece of legislation to amend an Act which has been substantially unchanged since 1924. Canadian creators need protection, fair compensation, and adequate remedies for infringement. They need these things now. At the same time, users of copyright works must have quick and easy access to these works at a reasonable cost.

Bill C-60 makes all this possible. It defines new forms of intellectual creativity such as computer software which has not been subject to copyright until now. It will now be subject to copyright legislation. At long last, this Bill provides appropriate penalties for the commercial theft of copyright.

[Translation]

This Bill enforces the principles of existing artistic creative rights by providing for the establishment of collectives, which give both the creator and the public a legal means to arrive at fair compensation for use of those rights.

Liberal Senators have voted to make two amendments to the Bill, one to delete exhibition rights and the other to delay the implementation of the new Copyright Board's power concerning the collective administration of copyright.

Bill C-60, as passed by this House, is a good piece of legislation. It is reasoned, it is fair, it is sensible and it is workable. And it is long overdue.

[English]

First, I will address the amendment which proposes the deletion of the exhibition right, the first amendment proposed by the other place. I will then address the proposal to amend the Bill to provide for a minimum one-year delay in the coming into force of the provisions dealing with collectives.

I want to make it very clear at the outset that I cannot support the deletion of exhibition rights. That amendment is anti-artist and anti-creator. The exhibition right, which was rejected by the Liberal Party in the other place, is an economic right designed to benefit visual artists, many of whom are not all that well off. The Bill would allow these artists to be paid for the exhibition of their works even after they no longer own the work. It allows them, if they wish, to be paid for the assignment of the exhibition right as part of the purchase price of their works of art. It can be paid for at the same time as the work of art is originally sold. This right is long overdue and something which artists in Canada strongly support.

The report of the Senate committee acknowledges that the various museum associations stated that they supported the principle of compensation for an exhibition right. But not so with Liberal Senators. Indeed, the Chairman of the Senate committee himself refused even to endorse the principle of the right when I appeared before the committee in the other place.

In 1985, all three Parties in this House worked together on a subcommittee to conduct a study of possible changes to the copyright law. All three Parties unanimously recommended that an exhibition right be provided in new copyright legislation. This all-Party recommendation, which came out of the subcommittee's work, was based on very extensive inquiry. I understand that the all-Party subcommittee reviewed over 300 written submissions and heard 111 witnesses in public hearings all over the country. After months of this work, the provision of a new exhibition right for visual artists was unanimously recommended by all three political Parties through their representatives on the subcommittee.

Subsequently, Bill C-60 was drafted to include this recommendation, and Bill C-60 itself was the subject of very careful and lengthy analysis by a legislative committee of the House.

The legislative committee considered general changes that should be made to the copyright law as well as specific changes such as this. Bill C-60 was tabled last May, one year ago. It was the subject of eight months of study. Over 100 briefs were reviewed and 30 sets of witnesses appeared before the legislative committee.

[Translation]

And yet, Mr. Speaker, after only a few days of cursory analysis, Liberal Senators say that this right, which would benefit our artists who contribute so much to Canadian life, should be deleted. The Liberal committee chairman said in the other place the bill "goes too far" in protecting creators. Well, Mr. Speaker, they are wrong. This House must support the artists of Canada by rejecting the amendment to delete the exhibition right.

[English]

Let me reiterate what I said about new exceptions to copyright. Members of the House will be aware that Bill C-60 is phase 1 of a two-phased approach to copyright reform. Work on phase 2, in which exceptions to copyright are being addressed, is progressing very well. I am pleased to hear of the work of the consultative committees of users and creators. I should be in a position to table phase 2 legislation within a few months.

With respect to exhibition rights, my Department and I will continue to consult with both creators and users of visual art. If all parts of that community reach a solid and mutually satisfactory understanding with the Government concerning exceptions to the exhibition right, then the phase 2 Bill will be drafted accordingly.

I now want to address the second amendment proposed by the Senate committee. This amendment would delay for a year the implementation of the Copyright Board's powers with respect to new collectives. I must say that this amendment makes absolutely no sense to me because the work of the Copyright Board will be to the advantage of both users and creators. Its function is to help arrive at a decision when there is no mutually agreed upon process between creators and users.

The Copyright Board would operate to ensure a balance between the interests of the consumer and those of the creator. By establishing the new board as a fully independent agency, by granting it quasi-judicial authority, and by making it the final arbiter in financial disputes between creator and user, Bill C-60 provides the proper balance and a solid guarantee of fairness to those who create works and those who use them.

One can only try to imagine why certain members of the other place would want to delay copyright reform by proposing a technical amendment that really does not benefit anyone.

Canadian creators have been most emphatic in their desire to have Bill C-60 passed quickly. Last month, a diverse alliance of creator organizations, some 36 in all, issued an unequivocal statement to the members of the other place. These groups represent thousands of Canadian creators and, in delivering their message to the other place, both to Senators personally and through the public media, they said:

> This Bill affects the livelihood and existence of Canada's creative community: composers and lyricists, authors and poets, visual and performing artists, choreographers, computer software designers and record companies, among others. It was discussed for more than a generation by our cultural industries, associations, panels, users, politicians both in and out of power, and by various governments. Many of the players in this process have died of old age. So let's get on with the copyright revision. We need protection, fair compensation and adequate remedies for infringement, now.

That was the message that an alliance of 36 creator organizations sent to members of the other place. Unfortunately, these words fell on deaf ears among certain members of the other place.

The Bill is now back in our court. Since it was this House which originally endorsed Bill C-60 in February of this year, I do not think I should need to convince Hon. Members once again of its importance and its urgency.

With Bill C-60 we can stop commercial piracy, be it of software, sound recordings, audio tapes or video tapes; we can end the outrageously outdated two-cent compulsory licensing of sound recordings; and we can establish the framework of a workable regulatory system for the collection of royalties earned by our creative artists.

By acting promptly, we can save 8,000 jobs. That is the estimate placed on the cost in lost employment due to computer software piracy alone. That is what Bill C-60 is able to do. It is able to correct these inequities and bring in new arrangements. Our writers, composers and our artists, including our software creators, as well as all the others who so richly endow Canada's cultural life, deserve to receive the benefits to which they are justly entitled. They have subsidized the public's enjoyment and benefits of their efforts and talents for long enough.

For 64 years they have waited to see basic creative rights respected. If we are truly serious about the value and importance of maintaining and encouraging the growth of Canada's unique identity, of our culture, then we must deliver those rights to our creators and artists, and we must do it now. Therefore, I move, seconded by the Minister of State for Small Business and Tourism (Mr. Valcourt):

> That a message be sent to the Senate to acquaint Their Honours that this House disagrees with both amendments made by the Senate to Bill C-60, an Act to amend the Copyright Act and to amend other Acts in consequence thereof, because this House believes that the amendments contradict the principles of the Bill which will provide new rights for creators and a new board to adjudicate between the interests of creators and users of copyright material.
> More specifically:
> Amendment 1 deletes the new exhibition right to the detriment of visual artists who should be compensated for the exhibition of their works.
> Amendment 2 delays the coming into force of sections giving the Copyright Board jurisdiction over the collective administration of copyright, to the detriment of both users and creators of copyright material, for whom the Board would be an adjudicative tribunal operating to assure that royalties to be paid will be equitable.

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, I rise today to speak to the consideration of amendments made by the Senate to Bill C-60, an Act to amend the Copyright Act. I understand the need and urgency for this copyright revision, and I am pleased the Minister was able to bring this revision into the House, which will allow new economic rights for creators and a series of other rights to which I will allude in a few moments. I would acknowledge that that is an extremely worthwhile goal.

Certainly, this society is ready to recognize these Canadian creators as those who expose, propose and propound Canadian values and cultural perspectives which are key in today's society and have become even more important as we move toward changing the Canadian pattern of operation. However, I do believe that legislators have, as a fundamental responsibility and obligation, as well as a duty, to strike the necessary balance between the competing interests of the creators in establishing their economic rights and in ensuring a fair return through the recognition of their works and that of the public having access to them.

Canadian creative talent should be available to Canadians at a fair price for both the user and the creator. There is a fault in the Minister's Bill. There is a problem we have had to face with this Minister who has not seemed to understand and who has been trying to dump a guilt trip on the other House, trying to indicate a sense of culpability, when it was merely fulfiling a very important obligation which is set out in the Constitution of this land, which is to be a place of sober second thought. The Senate is there to look at the kinds of legislation going through this House and to make solid concrete, intelligent, well reasoned recommendations to the Minister and to the Government. The recommendations should be considered so that we would end up with the best kind of legislation to meet the fair and equitable needs of all Canadians.

It is sad that this Minister does not care to acknowledge that. The Minister said yesterday in the House, and I quote from Hansard at page 15478:

> I close merely by saying that fear and the creation of fear will get Hon. Members opposite nowhere because Canadians understand the game they are playing. Canadians understand what it is they are trying to do and they simply will not buy it.

Canadians who have been writing and speaking to me certainly know the game the Minister was playing. The Minister forgot to put together a whole Bill. She decided to do it in two phases. She would have been able to come in here with glowing pride, with a tremendous sense of accomplishment, had she followed the thinking of 1924 when the Bill was brought in. They did a complete overhaul then. They did not put it into two phases and leave half the population wondering where they are. It is for this reason that we had to fight long and hard in committee. We had to bring in over 150 amendments to the Bill because the Minister wrote such inadequate legislation. The Senate then had to add amendments along the way.

I would like to suggest that the 1924 overhaul did not address copyright in a patchwork fashion the way this Government has chosen to. This is an extremely complex law, as the Minister knows. The other House has outlined in its background report to this House that the copyright is a legal recognition of the exclusive right of a creator to determine the use of a work and to share in the benefits produced by that use. That is very sensible. It goes on to state that since 1924, technology has changed dramatically, increasing the number of ways in which the results of artistic endeavour may be exploited.

The Copyright Act has proved remarkably adaptable to the new technology, considering that its framers could not have foreseen the advent of such inventions as television, photocopiers, videos tape recorders, computers and other devices. I wish this Minister had been as foresighted as the Minister who drew up that Bill in 1924. I will not go through the history of all the various committees which have looked at this over time. The Bill was brought into this House on May 27, 1987, by the Minister. The two cents per song for recording artists was absolutely ludicrous. On March 11, 1987, I brought it to the attention of the Minister. I had public meetings on the issue and asked for the abolition of Section 19, the two cents per song compulsory licence, so that we could move forward without waiting for half time, part time, incomplete phase 1, phase 2 legislation. The Minister did not see the light of day then and she still has not seen the light of day.

It is true that this legislation has had a long, hard row before it saw the light of day. I would like to point out the complexities of this particular Bill. We are dealing with the first stages containing approximately 25 per cent of the revisions and recommendations which flowed from the From Gutenberg to Telidon document and then, from that study to the Charter of Rights for Creators. It addresses exhibition rights, which introduces a totally new right and a new concept into the country. I welcome that right. It would provide the holder with the sole right to present artistic works at public exhibitions.

• (1140)

Second, it addresses moral rights, which expands existing moral rights and defines the nature of an infringement. I am pleased that there are some very strict conditions contained within those moral rights.

It abolishes the compulsory licenses of sound recordings at the rate of two cents per side. But, of course, it does not deal with the whole concern of performing rights.

With respect to collectives, it provides the statutory foundation for the collective administration of all economic rights for creators under copyright.

It has a provision for a Copyright board which reconstitutes the existing Copyright Appeal Board as the "copyright board" and expands its jurisdiction. The Minister knows that there are some concerns about that.

With respect to choreographic works, it provides copyright protection for any choreographic work regardless of whether or not it has a story line. That is a very innovative provision.

With respect to computer software it explicitly extends copyright protection to computer software. This is a provision which is long overdue and which should have been brought in by the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. I am sorry that we had to wait this long for it.

With respect to copyright infringement, it substantially increases the penalties for infringement of copyright and penalties for piracy.

With respect to industrial design, it clarifies the relationship between industrial design and copyright protection. With respect to computer software and industrial design, it is regrettable that the microchip was not dealt with. It is regrettable that such a provision did not come out under the auspices of the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs.

The Senate Standing Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce heard evidence touching on each one of these issues. There is no doubt that it supported overwhelmingly the thrust of this Bill. It understood the need to support the economic rights of artists, and was well aware of those issues.

The Minister can snicker and make all kinds of faces, but the reality is that the Senate certainly did recognize those rights.

Mr. Nunziata: Don't make faces, Flora.

Miss MacDonald: She is so petty.

Mrs. Finestone: I would like to suggest, Mr. Speaker, if there is any pettiness in this House let the wearer wear it.

Miss MacDonald: You are doing well.

Mrs. Finestone: The Bill goes on to address some of the very serious issues with respect to which we have had some concerns. I suggest that, as copyright is both a means of securing financial benefits to creators for previous productions and an inducement for further creative activity, copyright law represents therefore a trade-off or balance between rewarding and encouraging creators on the one side of the coin, something which is absolutely fundamental, and ensuring fair reward through negotiated distribution of their creative output, which is the other side of the coin.

Those of us who took our legislative responsibility seriously in attempting to achieve that fair balance have been charged with being guilty of obstructionism. May I say that I do not feel that that was fair criticism. I suggest that what we were attempting to do, something which is a legislator's responsibility, was to look at what was in the best interest of fairness for both the users and the creators because we have to know the rules of the game. When we do not know the rules of the game we certainly are not on a level playing field.

Let me say once and for all that we were never opposed to creators, nor were we ever trying to restrict creators unduly from getting fair return for their work. That is not the issue. The creators are certainly well aware that that was not the issue.

However, we do feel that there must be an element of fairness. I do not believe that this Bill has been totally fair to all concerned. It asks users to wait to see what is in the second phase of copyright. How long will we have to wait until these exemptions are addressed? We need only take a look at the Government's legislative agenda in this respect, and you tell me, Mr. Speaker, when phase 2 is likely to see the light of day.

Meanwhile, in phase 1 we provide no protection for continuing industry practices that have been acceptable for many years, and which in all fairness did not create unfair economic penalties for the creators. As an example, I turn the Minister's attention to the broadcasters who are required by the CRTC to retain tapes of complete broadcasts for 30 days, or with respect to the use of ephemeral recordings. It has other implications. These have been practices which have been in place for decades. As a result, now, broadcasters have no protection if they keep a tape to fulfil CRTC requirements or use a recording for re-broadcasting because of the time zone differences since Bill C-60 does not address specific exemptions.

This accepted practice could be deemed to be in violation of copyright law. There is the potential of penalties of anywhere up to $25,000 for violations. I ask: Is this what the Government means by fairness to our Canadian broadcasters?

The 1924 Copyright Act, although very progressive in its day, has certainly fallen short in providing creators the vehicles by which to enforce their economic rights. The Government's attempt to right these errors by its creator's Bill and the inclusion of stiffer penalties, as well as codifying the role of creative collectives, is an excellent initiative. But while this Bill has been updated, it has become highly contagious in certain areas. As a recent bulletin of the Canadian Conference of the Arts states:

> It pits the cultural community not against the Philistines or the prudes, but against itself—visual artists versus galleries, authors versus libraries, composers versus record companies, even, at times, artists versus each other.

Those are not the words of Members in the other place. Nor are they the words of Members of the Opposition. Those were the words of the spokespersons for the Canadian Conference of the Arts. I suggest the Minister would have done well had she heeded them. It is unfortunate that such dissension has been created between everyone on this very vital issue.

Those of us who asked questions and moved amendments were attempting to provide the necessary mechanisms by which users could be provided that particular balance. It has been said that users had it their way for over 60 years. I am now asking: Does that mean that we should punish them by having inequitable and incomplete legislation? I do not think that is the way this place should work. I suggest that not striking a fair balance with the opportunity that we had to do so is inappropriate.

I would like to quote the words of one of the Senators, Senator Sinclair, who said on April 27, 1988:

> The Minister appeared before the Committee and talked with some pride about the fact that she was leading the parade. She was proud that "Canada was going to lead the way," she said. There is nothing wrong with leading, where the harm comes is when you lead and you do not know where you are going.

Not only does the Minister not know where she is going but nobody else does either. That is what is troubling to the people who must use this Bill. That is what has been most unfair.

Mr. McDermid: Who wrote that for you?

Mrs. Finestone: I am quoting the words of a Senator in the other place. I suggest that it is too bad that the issue of fairness was not fully regarded at this time.

Let us look at the Senate amendments and what we are addressing today.

Mr. Nunziata: Open your ears, Flora.

Miss MacDonald: You mean we shouldn't do anything about it? That is really sad.

Mrs. Finestone: I would suggest that it was not a case of not doing anything at all. I would suggest that it was a case of doing things right and doing things fairly. But the Minister is either so thin-skinned or so thick-skinned that she does not wish to hear what we are saying. What we are addressing here today from the other place after hearings and after careful study are two amendments to which the Minister does not care to listen. The first would delete the lines dealing with exhibition rights. The second would have delayed the coming into force of collectives for one year after they were assented to, or on such later day as may be fixed by proclamation. By making these amendments the Senate was attempting to achieve balance.

• (1150)

Essentially, it is a shame that the Senate had to bring these amendments in. I would have preferred none of these amendments, and the Minister knows that. The Minister knows I attempted to negotiate with her behind the scenes in order to bring in a Bill that would alleviate the fears that she has created in the artistic as well as the users' world. But, no, the Minister did not care to listen. Therefore, the Senate was forced to move in this direction.

After the Senate Standing Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce tabled its report in the Senate, I wrote a letter to the Minister of Communications (Miss MacDonald) suggesting a compromise until phase 2 and the fair use provisions were introduced. First, I said that we would have reinstated the following principle to Clause 2 on page 2 dealing with exhibition rights. That was "to present an artistic work, for a purpose other than sale or hire, not owned by a museum and presented by that museum for a public exhibition". As a temporary measure that would have found favour right across the board.

This amendment resulted from a meeting held on February 22, 1988, organized by the Canadian Conference of the Arts. I take this opportunity to commend them for taking such initiative. It is too bad that the Minister had not thought to do the same. The meeting was attended by the Canadian Artists' Representation, CARFAC, VIS-ART Copyright Inc., the Royal Canadian Academy of Arts, RCAA, the Association of National Non-Profit Artist Run Centres, ANNPAC, the Canadian Museums' Association, and I will turn to them in a minute, the Canadian Art Museum Directors' Organization, CAMDO, and the Professional Art Dealers Association of Canada, PADAC. It was strange, Mr. Speaker, but these were all the people the Minister is standing here and telling us we were fighting against, and they were trying to get the Minister to listen.

With respect to the presence of the Canadian Museum Association, in her speech earlier today the Minister stated that all three Parties got together and all three Parties agreed to the exhibition right. She forgot to add that when the three Parties got together to review the report From Gutenberg to Telidon and wrote their charter of creators report, they had totally ignored and had not invited the museum representatives to even speak their piece on this particular Bill, when it has such a serious impact on the manner in which they function and operate. I do not call that a complete hearing.

I would suggest to you, Mr. Speaker, that after all these groups got together under the aegis of the Canadian Conference of the Arts, the week after that meeting, George Horan of CARFAC wrote to the Minister of Communications stating the objectives of both creators and users, and that they could be met through the agreement that they had made. That agreement encompassed the following. One, expanding the right to the entire life's work of an artist; two, simplifying the administrative burdens of the institutions; three, avoiding potential abuses such as redating works of art; four, recognizing and encouraging public institutions' public collecting functions; five, creating a new economic base for practicing visual artists and their heirs.

On their own, creators and users had struck that elusive balance that the Minister could not seem to find, but were told by the Department of Communications, "No, wait until phase 2". As a result, the agreement fell apart, and that is sad. Through the use of an all-Party agreement this amendment could have been passed in a matter of minutes in the Chamber, and we would not have to be dealing with the Senate amendment.

Now museums and artists will have to wait until phase 2 to address their agreement. I would like to forewarn the Minister that she may not be the Minister, the players in the game may not be the same, the heads of all those organizations who came to an agreement may not be the same, and we may have missed that important window of opportunity, that important moment in time. It is quite regrettable. I hope the Minister feels a sense of discomfort, because she earned it.

I would hope that the Minister would consider amending the definition section, including a definition of artistic works, and a definition of public exhibition. We asked the Minister to consider these amendments, she refused, but I do understand that she is well on the way to that definition. I do wish she had brought that amendment into the House to clarify just what is an artistic work in today's society.

My second proposal to the Minister was to amend Clause 26. The Minister has the contents of that proposal, which was that 26(1), Sections 12, 13, 15, 17, 20, and 25 shall come into force on day or days to be picked by proclamation, giving the Minister all kinds of latitude; 26(2), Sections 50.1 to 50.6 of the Copyright Act, and the headings in relation thereto, as enacted by section 14 of this Act relating only to those licensing bodies giving access to repertoires of literary works, shall come into force on the day, that is one year after the day they are assented to, or on such later day or days as may be fixed by proclamation; 26(3), Section 50.7 of the Copyright Act, and the heading immediately preceding that section, as enacted by Section 14 of this Act, shall come into force on a day to be fixed by proclamation.

These were reasoned amendments that would have allowed for the absence of phase 2 at this particular time. They addressed the concerns raised by the educational community. That is a very large constituency out there that trains and educates our children through public school, high school, university, and post-secondary education of all types. It talked to the whole area of repography, the use of photocopies. My amendment was made applicable only to collectives dealing with literary works. The recording industry would have been able to negotiate fair return because of the removal of the compulsory licence. Through Bill C-60 the fears of educators, who felt that they were being forced to enter into negotiations with collectives before phase 2 of copyright addressing fair use or exceptions was even introduced, could have been allayed.

As Lorraine Flaherty from the Canadian School Trustees Association stated before the Senate Banking Committee, "We know very clearly that once Bill C-60 is passed, the collectives will be ready to start negotiations. In addition to not knowing where those negotiations will take place, we feel we are at a terrible disadvantage in not even knowing what it is we are negotiating".

It is pretty sad that they cannot know what they are supposed to be negotiating. At least in the U.S. copyright legislation is an exemption for the use of copyright material within a classroom or in an educational setting. Our universities and the Canadian Association of University Teachers told the Minister that they do not even know if they can use this material for examination purposes, which should obviously be exempted from copyright. Witnesses have stated that they are unaware whether such exemptions will appear in phase 2. I would suggest that that is leaving our educators in a very difficult position. How can they negotiate a fee, be asked to acquire a licence, when they do not know what the repography practice of the collective will be and what the definitions are in respect of this whole area? I would suggest there are some serious concerns that have to be addressed in this particular area.

On a number of occasions the Minister of Communications has also indicated that it is her intention to introduce phase 2 very soon. The Minister wants to introduce a broadcast Bill. She wants to introduce a telecommunication policy. She wants to introduce a film policy. She wants to introduce second phase of copyright. This Government wants to put through the Meech Lake Agreement, the free trade agreement, all types of reform on tax measures. There is a whole list of important legislation on the docket. When does she think that this one will come into play?

As phase 2 is to address exceptions and as literary collectives are in the process of being formed and will not be ready to commence negotiations for some time, this was a reasonable delay that was not an excessive burden. It would simply ensure that before negotiations began, all the rules, the level playing field and all the exemptions would at least be on the table for discussion. After all, one does not buy a house without seeing all the rooms. Why would one expect them to enter negotiations without knowing all the terms?

As well, the Government assumed that the provinces would negotiate with collectives for schools under their jurisdiction, similar to the way the Quebec Government has done with the Union des Écrivians du Québec and the Society for the Advancement of Rights in Audiovisuals. Under those agreements, the schools of Quebec have immediate access to a repertoire of literary and audio-visual works in exchange for $1.5 million a year which is negotiated with the Quebec Ministry of Education. As a result, creators are ensured their economic rights while users have immediate access to the things they need. The youth are benefiting from modern technology and from immediate access to information without having their teachers confront fines.

The Quebec example works well, and it is what the Government envisioned happening in the rest of the country. If this is what the Government envisioned, it failed in encouraging that relationship between the provincial Ministers of Education and the collectives. As a result, educators and their students may well be the losers.

This Government has constantly stated that it is its goal and it has always been its goal to reduce tensions between the federal and provincial jurisdictions, that harmony is its goal and that we need to have a level playing field. If this Minister had pursued that logic, then perhaps she would have paid closer attention to or even heeded the communiqué dated February 26, 1988, from the Council of Ministers of Education of Canada which stated that the Parliament of Canada should postpone the enactment of Bill C-60 until the more substantive elements of copyright reform are known. The Minister should have been aware of that, and certainly the Senate brought it to her attention.

Although I would not agree that there should be a total delay of this Bill, I would certainly agree that the concerns of the provinces, the Ministers of Education and the educators were well worth heeding. Certainly they should have been able to sit down with the Minister to come to some kind of interim agreement in this regard.

The last area I would like to address is that of broadcasting. A very serious error on the part of the Minister has been made. We have heard from the Canadian Association of Broadcasters and from the CBC that the recent decision of the Federal Court of Appeal in Bishop v. Télé-Métropole, involving the temporary copying of a performance of a song for broadcast at a future time, will have serious consequences for broadcasters. This decision is awaiting possible appeal to the Supreme Court. We have been told that unless the Federal Court's decision is overturned, broadcasters fear they will have to pay composers large fees for reproduction of their works or will face the stiff penalties for piracy imposed under Bill C-60.

The Government, in its response to the Charter of Rights for Creators in 1986, indicated that an ephemeral recording exception would be granted to cover not only the CRTC requirements and the time zone requirements to which I referred at the outset of my remarks but also the routine pre-recording of works for later transmission. Such a right would be granted for six months after the initial transmission. Upon the expiry of that period, the recording would be kept only for research and study purposes.

These ephemeral recording exceptions are by no means novel. These exceptions are incorporated in copyright law in many other jurisdictions including the United States, the United Kingdom, Australia, Finland, Holland, Italy, Sweden and Luxembourg. It is only this Minister and this Government that do not care to include it at this point. As a result of the Government not proceeding with this particular exemption, it could potentially be very costly to broadcasters.

The CBC, appearing before us on Estimates last week, estimated, upon questioning from me, that the costs would be $31 million. Upon further investigation, the Canadian Association of Broadcasters has estimated that the lack of this ephemeral right will potentially cost them $18.5 million. That amounts to $49.5 million or close to $50 million. The Department of Communications and the Minister were well aware of this and had a very comprehensive analysis done for them about it. I would read into the record the following:—

[Translation]

"An estimate of additional costs the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation may incur as a result of the implementation of certain recommendations contained in the Report of the Sub-Committee on Revision of Copyright, a Charter of Rights for Creators".

We estimate that the proposals concerning performers' rights, record producers' rights and ephemeral rights would result in an additional annual expenditure for the CBC of nearly $37 million. We will analyse in greater detail our separate estimates for each of these three categories.

Mr. Speaker, I will comment on only one of these, namely ephemeral rights. The estimate for this particular category works out to nearly $31 million, that is, $22,600,000 for radio and $8 million for television. These figures are based on rates commonly paid in 1985 for rebroadcasts with musical content. In the case of radio, the rate is $10 to $12 per thirty seconds, depending on whether the rebroadcast is on the French or the English network, and for television, from $16 to $18 per thirty seconds, depending on the network.

For radio, at the present time only broadcasts that are to be repeated require payment of copyright. We calculate that with 326 hours of broadcasts per week, including network and local broadcasts, this works out, at the above-mentioned rates, to $434,640 per week and $22,601,280 annually.

All these radio broadcasts are produced using prerecordings, in order to maximize use of studios and personnel. The requisite rights being previously obtained from those who hold broadcasting rights.

For television, we calculate 73.5 hours of broadcasts per week, which at the rates mentioned works out to $150,720 per week and $7,837,440 annually. The comments regarding prerecording for radio apply, substantially, to television as well.

There is absolutely no doubt that copyright comes under the Berne Convention and that protection must be extended to foreign creators.

As for Recommendation 80 rising from the Charter of Rights for Creators, the exemption it provides for the making of ephemeral recordings by broadcasters is designed only to accommodate the broadcast of programs in different time zones, provided the recording is erased after eight days.

The Report stresses that the exemption should not apply to prerecordings, which are common practice and which allow broadcasters to maximize the use of their studios and collect material and contributions when convenient for those participating.

If the exemption is adopted in this very limited form, it would be of no use to broadcasters. There is no reason why prerecordings should be subject to authorization or payment, when the material in question has been released for broadcasting. This is confirmed by the exemption provided under Article 11*bis* of the Berne Convention.

In accordance with this provision, many countries have included in their copyright acts an exemption allowing for the making of ephemeral recordings by broadcasters. The Minister was aware of all this, Mr. Speaker.

Many of these countries, including Finland, Sweden, the Netherlands, Luxemburg, the United Kingdom, Italy and even the United States, are not even signatories to the Berne Convention. The exemption allows prerecording and provides that the recording may be used for a period of six months in the United States, one year in Sweden, Finland and Australia, and so forth. One could say that the limitations proposed in the Sub-Committee's report are far more restrictive than any of the rules on ephemeral recordings adopted by other countries thus far. If Canada were to adopt provisions governing ephemeral recordings as recommended in the White Paper From Gutenberg to Telidon, which allow for a six-month period, Canadian broadcasters would be able to avoid the additional expense.

• (1210)

[English]

I just think it is too bad that the Minister did not listen and that these ephemeral recording exceptions, which are by no means novel, were not included. As a result of the Government not proceeding with this particular exemption it could potentially, as I have said, be very costly, costly to the extent of $50 million. That does not include the other concern of the broadcasters involving the incidental use of an artistic work in a broadcast, that is, music background at a hockey game or having a marching band in a Santa Claus parade. At a time when the Minister of Communications said that her goal was for Canadians to see themselves, the Government has cut out the support system from under the industry through cuts in capital cost allowance for film production of $100 million and now potential costs of $50 million for an exemption which should have been included in this legislation for fair use. This could be a loss in total of $150 million in revenue for an industry that must fulfil Canadian content requirements.

What type of a message is it that the Minister is sending to Canadians and to our broadcasters? Was this a message which the Minister was sending to the American Congress so she could get her free trade Bill through? I have a sense that, if you read what the Minister had to say yesterday in this House, it would tend to confirm that what I am saying is a reality. She said:

> Opposition Members are so tied up with relying on what Americans have to say that they forget the purpose of our cultural policies.

When a Minister is removing potentially $150 million from the film and audio-visual industry, I would suggest the Minister had better re-read her words and re-think her philosophy.

Notwithstanding the foregoing, Mr. Speaker, the Minister will have her Bill with the heartaches, with the costs, with the legal entanglements and with the lack of attention to fairness which will certainly not add to the glow of starting what was very much needed, copyright revision, which if it had been done properly, if it had been done in its fullest extent, certainly would have earned the Minister a very important place in the history of the evolution of copyright in Canada.

While we are dealing with the amendments brought forward by the other place, I will read the last of the comments which the other place had to make. I hope the Minister will remember them. The conclusion reads:

> The Committee would like to reiterate its support for the broad thrust of Bill C-60 which is certainly responsive to the creators' need for legal protection of the fruits of their efforts. At the same time, it is necessary that the rights of users also be adequately protected and thus a balance maintained. The amendments suggested in this report seek to engineer such a balance between creator and user needs while keeping alterations to the proposed legislation at a minimum.

I hope that the Minister will reconsider and think about all aspects of our Canadian society.

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver—Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the New Democratic Party, I would like to reply to the Minister's motion and to the Senate amendments. I just cannot believe what I am hearing from the Liberal Party. The Hon. Member for Mount Royal (Mrs. Finestone) said, "Notwithstanding the foregoing, the Minister will have her Bill". After all that, the Liberals will vote for the Bill.

Mrs. Finestone: I did not say that.

Mr. Waddell: That is what it seems to be. The Senate said it will support the thrust of the Bill, then it goes back to the rights of the users. We have been through that debate. The Liberal Party cannot have it both ways. That is the problem. The Liberals wonder why, as the Official Opposition and supposedly the alternative to an unpopular Government, the people are not embracing them. They should look right at this Bill and their position here in this House and in the Senate. The Member for Mount Royal said that the Minister was guilt-tripping the other House, meaning the Senate. The Senate was merely fulfilling its constitutional job as the place for sober second thought. Technically, yes, the Senate is fulfilling its job. The other place has to look at the legislation that we passed in the House with all-Party agreement, remember? We had hearings. The legislative committee had 256 briefs and heard from over 80 witnesses. I was not part of the committee then, but the committee heard all these arguments. The Senate has not found anything new. One has to ask, was the Senate really fulfilling its duties as the place of sober second thought? We have had the House debate. The parliamentary committee heard witnesses. Sometimes you have to make a decision, and you cannot be on both sides of every issue as the Liberal Party is.

My colleague, the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez), refers to the Liberal Party as Noah's Ark. The Liberal Party takes two of every animal on it. One for one side and one for the other side. The Liberals do not stand for anything. They are the classic mugwumps. Do you know what a mugwump is, Mr. Speaker? You sit on a fence with your mug on one side and your wump on the other. When the question is asked, "What position do you take?" you answer, "I am a mugwump". The Liberals support the Bill here in the House then reject it in the Senate. It comes back here and the Liberals support it in the House. Who speaks for the Liberal Party? This was the Party that used to be for the Canadian artists. The Liberals prided themselves on that.

The Conservatives and the New Democrats have also pushed artistic policy. The Liberals have abandoned Canadian artists because they have to choose. They have to change their mind-set. We have to choose to pay the creators. We have to give them a bit of a break. We have seen the professor who comes along and xeroxes a whole book and sells it to his students. Maybe now they are going to have to pay the artist. The galleries show creators' work. Of course, they pay the salaries of their staff, the maintenance people, the cleaners and the people who produce the catalogues. Now they are going to have to pay the creators. Creators are the worst paid people in this country. The average artist makes less than $10,000 a year.

I say the Senate was not fulfilling its constitutional duty of sober second thought. It was out of touch. It was lobbied at the last moment by a group that does not want to accede to this change in mind-set. Senator Ian Sinclair introduced these amendments. He has never run for anything in his life, being the former Chairman of CPR, except maybe running to the bank to deposit his money. Yet he does this. I say it is hypocrisy of the worse kind by the Liberal Party. I never thought I would see that in the Liberal Party. They supported the Bill in the House and it looks as though they are going to support it again.

Mrs. Finestone: You don't even know what the Bill is all about.

Mr. Waddell: Yes, I know what the Bill is about. If the Hon. Member would listen for a minute she would understand.

Miss MacDonald: She never does.

Mr. Waddell: She speaks about fairness. What about fairness to the average artist?

Miss MacDonald: That does not count.

Mr. Waddell: What about fairness to the House that spent all this time considering the Bill? What about fairness to the legislative committee and the Standing Committee on Communications and Culture? They considered these positions and had to make a difficult choice. It was not easy and I congratulate the Minister for bringing this Bill back to the House so quickly.

Sometimes you have to make decisions. That is why you have leadership. I consider the Liberal Party critic on this matter a personal friend outside the House, but if she were the Minister tomorrow she would be postponing this Bill until hell freezes over.

Miss MacDonald: That is right.

Mr. Waddell: She talks about the provinces having to be consulted. She talks about another committee. There has to be further consultation with the Senate and so on. That is a recipe for not getting anything done. We see that when the Government does not want to do anything. They say all these things.

Mr. Nunziata: That is what you are proposing on Meech Lake.

Mr. Waddell: We have a Liberal Party which has failed to take an opportunity to show leadership. As Pierre Berton and the other artists said when they came to Ottawa, the Senate has other things to hold up, why is it holding up this Bill to help our poor artists?

Mr. Gauthier: Pierre Berton?

Mr. Waddell: He was speaking for the others because his name is well-known. He is not a poor artist, but the vast majority are. Finally the Government gives them a break, and what does the Senate do? It holds it up.

I think the Senate has another agenda. The Liberal Party is badly split—you have the Senate group, the Trudeauists, who seem to be opposed to the Turnerists, the minority in the Liberal caucus. This gets confusing! The agenda may be to just hold up the House of Commons. That is done in a number of ways, and it may be a legitimate strategy with respect to free trade and the Constitution and things like that. Yet why bring the poor artists into this? What was the Senate doing sending this Bill back when we have had all these debates? It is hypocrisy of the worst kind. It is an abandonment of the traditional feelings of the Liberal Party for the Canadian artist. It is a slap in the face of the House of Commons. It is gross hypocrisy.

Mr. Nunziata: How about your position on Meech Lake?

Mr. Waddell: My position on Meech Lake is well-known. I do not have to apologize to anyone. I stood up and voted against it in the House. My Party's position is also well-known. I want to know his position on this Bill. Why is he letting down Canadian artists? Has he read the Bill? We have not passed an amendment to the copyright law in 64 years. As I said, it takes some leadership and needs a change in mind-set. The mind-set is that you have to pay the creators.

There are problems with it and I am going to discuss some of the things that I think the Minister could do. I know she has to leave so I will just jump ahead to one of them.

I was a little concerned with the Minister's speech when she talked about phase 2. She said it was progressing very well and she would table it within a few months. I am not being critical, but she has said that on other occasions with respect to other Bills and because of circumstances, drafting and various things, it is difficult to do.

Miss MacDonald: It is in the drafting stage.

Mr. Waddell: I do not want members of the Senate, who will be reading this debate, to think that now they can sit on these amendments when we pass them today because they are waiting for phase 2 of the Bill. I congratulate the Minister for being firm and I have some suggestions for the phase 2 aspect which may help the librarians, the museum people and some others who feel this will somehow restrict their use of artistic materials. We do not want to do that, and neither do the artists.

I take it from the way the Minister is nodding that that was not meant to give a message to the Senate to delay this Bill. We want the Senate to pass it. We will campaign against the Senate and the Liberal Party with the artistic community in the upcoming election if it does not pass it. They should know that very well. There are also some Senators, like Senator Royce Frith, who understand artists. They have pushed hard for passage of this Bill.

Bill C-60 is the first of two phases of copyright reform promised by the Minister. The second phase is expected to address some of the concerns of user groups and complete the revisions to the Bill by dealing with a number of issues not dealt with in Bill C-60. The process of having two phases does make for a bit of uncertainty. The Minister first promised that phase 2 would be introduced last fall and then said it would be sometime in the spring. She is now saying it will be very shortly, and I welcome that.

As an example of what we in the NDP would like to see in phase 2, I would like to cite the concept of spontaneous use. This concept was proposed by the Canadian Teachers' Federation and Trustees' Association. It means that as part of negotiated agreements, educators would be able to use articles from newspapers or magazines for their immediacy. In other words, you want to use it for the class now or exhibit it now or put it on television now without having to ask the owner of the copyright beforehand. Spontaneous use means just that. One could not under this provision save something to be used in four months. If this is clearly spelled out in future legislation it should pose no threat to creators because it provides a mechanism for the most recent work to be used while still receiving just remuneration. There is a good balance. It should also help teachers to get access to up-to-date materials. The idea of spontaneous use as one of the terms of reference of the Copyright Appeal Board should help creators and users find common ground to make the legislation work.

I think we can find some common ground here. I believe it can be found in ongoing negotiations involving creators, libraries, educators and museums. After all, creators want their rights respected, but they also want their books to be read, their paintings to be viewed, their music to be listened to, all by the widest possible audience. Artists do not simply create to make money. They want these expressions of their soul to be shared. That is the essence of being an artist. Neither should there be starving artists in our society. Neither should they be the last people to get paid. That is what this copyright reform changes.

The Bill provides artists with some needed protection to help them exercise their craft. With the co-operation of both sides I think this revised copyright law could work. However, you have to bite the bullet. You have to come down on the side of helping the artist. You cannot have, as the Liberal Party does, one view in the Senate and one in the House of Commons and then contradictory views in their speeches.

I want to summarize. I thought the Minister would probably have to leave and I wanted to get those remarks in about phase 2. I welcome the continuation of phase 2.

I will conclude because a lot has been said before in this debate. This comes at the end of a long process. There was the Government's White Paper in 1984, From Gutenberg to Telidon, the House of Commons Subcommittee on Copyright report, and Charter of Rights for Creators. We have heard witnesses, had the debate, and made the decision.

In fairness, what is the Senate doing? What kind of game is it playing? We have debated this issue and have come down on the side of helping creators. We can smooth the rough edges in phase 2. If it is a reasonable Bill, we in the New Democratic Party hope to speed it through. We will support the Minister in getting it into the House for debate.

I ask the Senate to pass this Bill as soon as possible. It is not perfect legislation, but it represents an important step. The Liberal Senators, who make $76,000 a year, are holding up a Bill which would help artists whose average income is less than $10,000 a year. Is that fair? I do not think it is. I think the Canadian people will respond to this unfair act of the Senators.

Therefore, I, on behalf of the New Democratic Party, will support this legislation with one speaker today. We hope that it will go back to the Senate and that the Senate will pass it.

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, I would just like to ask a question rather than make a speech, which will take far less time, because I, of course, do not want to delay the passage of this Bill either. I listened attentively to the partisan diatribe of my colleague from the New Democratic Party which lasted some minutes. He said that the Bill was carried unanimously at second reading. Does he still believe that that is correct?

Mr. Waddell: Mr. Speaker, I was not the critic at that time. The Member may correct me. I believe that the Liberal Party supported it. Indeed, the Party speaker said today that she basically supported it. I believe it was supported by the Liberal critic in the House of Commons Subcommittee on Copyright. If the Bill was not supported unanimously, the Member can correct me and I will be pleased that he put that on the record.

The Member made reference to my speech being partisan. Yes, it was partisan, because I really believe that the Liberal Party is letting artists down. We do have to make a decision. The Hon. Member is a good Member. He is decisive and I believe he would make a decision on this. One must choose sometimes. We must make a choice here. We could delay this, as I said, until hell freezes over. We have a very small window of passing this. If it is held up, we will not see another Bill before the election, and then God knows when we will see another Bill.

We have done precious little to help the average artists in this country. This is the end of the process and it need not be needlessly held up. It is wrong. The only way to get it through the Senate is to tell the Liberal Party that it will have to pay a political price for it.

The Member will be campaigning in the next election campaign. I am sure there are artists, creators, and performers in his riding. They are upset about this. They came to Ottawa with a brief representing a wide section of the community. I suggest that the Member put some pressure on his Liberal colleagues in the Senate to get on with this Bill. They have drawn attention to something about which they are concerned. The Minister today promised a speed up of phase 2. We have suggested spontaneous use, which can take off the rough edges. The Liberal Party critic had some suggestions. Let us get on with it.

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, the Member said that during the election campaign we may run across authors and so on in our constituencies. I myself am a member of the Composers, Authors, and Publishers Association of Canada. I am, therefore, aware that the Bill does enjoy the support of a large number of authors.

In closing I want to state that the Senate has every right to propose amendments. We in the House can say what we like about them and dispose of them, but to say that other Members of Parliament, whether in this House or the other House, do not have the right to speak seems quite strange, particularly from a Party which calls itself "new" and "democratic". One of the basic elements of democracy is to allow others to speak.

In order to give others the time to speak I will end my remarks right now because I do not want to delay this Bill further. However, I did not want to allow the occasion to pass to respond to someone making accusations which were, at best, not totally accurate.

Mr. Waddell: Mr. Speaker, I was not saying that people could not speak. I was not saying that the Senate did not have a right under our Constitution—unfortunately as far as I am concerned since they are not elected to anything—to speak. Under the Constitution they indeed have a right to propose amendments and veto Bills, except for constitutional Bills.

I am asking the Hon. Member and his Party to make a decision. Are they for it or against it? Do not say one thing in one place and another thing in another place. That is why the Liberal Party is unable to govern this country. This is a very good example of how weak the Liberal Party is.

Mr. Berger: Mr. Speaker, my intention is just to make a very brief comment which I will address to the Member for Vancouver Kingsway (Mr. Waddell), as is our custom. However, I will take advantage of the opportunity to make a comment perhaps to obtain an assurance from the Minister, which she can perhaps give me after this debate.

I understand that this phase of the Bill contains no exemptions.

Miss MacDonald: All the exemptions which are presently in copyright continue.

Mr. Berger: The Minister replied briefly. I will make known the nature of my concern. I understand, from speaking to an organization which makes talking books for blind people, that they have always been in favour of an exemption for such use of copyright material for the blind. I am not sure whether such an exemption is contained within the present legislation. I understand that it may be coming up in phase 2 of the legislation.

Miss MacDonald: That is right.

Mr. Berger: I just want to indicate that I consider this an extremely important matter which should, therefore, be dealt with expeditiously. I therefore add my support to that of those who have expressed the view that phase 2 ought to be advanced as quickly as possible in order that there not be unintended and adverse consequences as a result of this legislation for people who are working with the blind.

Mr. Waddell: Mr. Speaker, I think that is a very reasonable comment and I agree with it.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion (Miss MacDonald) agreed to.

CAPE BRETON DEVELOPMENT CORPORATION ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

Hon. Bernard Valcourt (for the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion and Minister of State for Science and Technology) moved that Bill C-127, an Act to amend the Cape Breton Development Corporation Act, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

• (1240)

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, I take part in this debate for two principal reasons. First, I want to comment on the proposed amendment to the Cape Breton Development Corporation Act. Second, in a more positive sense, I want to bring some good news to DEVCO and the people of Nova Scotia, particularly those in Cape Breton, about this Government's commitment to the future of coal mining in Cape Breton and Nova Scotia.

The proposed minor amendment to the Act is important because it supports the fact that there has been substantial expansion of the Cape Breton Development Corporation coal division in recent years. In keeping with the more commercial mandate which the division has been pursuing, the Corporation must be given the necessary support and operating flexibility for this growth to continue.

The amendment to Section 19(2) of the Cape Breton Development Corporation Act addresses this requirement by providing the coal division with up to $50 million of working capital advances from the Consolidated Revenue Fund.

In order to understand why it is necessary to increase the present limit on working capital advances, it is necessary to review the changing and expanding operations of the coal division.

When DEVCO was established in 1967, the Act to create the Corporation included a provision whereby the Minister of Finance could, out of the Consolidated Revenue Fund, on the requisition of the Corporation and the Minister responsible for DEVCO, authorize advances to the coal division for working capital. However, the total amount of advances outstanding at any time under this provision could not exceed $10 million.

The expectation at that time, of course, was that there would be a gradual phase-out of coal-related activities by DEVCO. It is interesting to note that at the time the original $10 million limit was established, the current assets of the coal division were only $7 million, the total assets were $12 million, and the total annual operating revenue was approximately $20 million.

In the 1970s, the increasing demand for coal following the world-wide oil crisis led the Government of Canada to emphasize the important role which an expanded and modernized coal industry could contribute to the economy of Cape Breton.

These changing circumstances and the growing activity of the coal division meant that the original $10 million limit on working capital advances was insufficient to meet the Corporation's expanding operating requirements.

Accordingly, in 1975, the Government of Canada amended Section 19(2) of the CBDC Act to provide the present limit of $25 million for working capital advances.

By the end of the 1975-76 fiscal year, the current assets of the coal division had grown to $37 million, the total assets had expanded to $108 million and coal sales had more than doubled to $53 million.

Since then, even greater growth and improvements have taken place. For example, during the past four years the Government of Canada has invested more than $400 million into DEVCO's coal mining operations. That capital investment is almost equal to the total amount invested by all the previous federal Governments.

A major portion of this substantial investment, approximately $218 million, was used to develop the new Phalen colliery and the associated expansion of the Victoria Junction coal preparation plant.

This new colliery, which became operational during the summer of 1987, has an eventual design capacity of over 2.6 million tonnes of coal annually, currently employs between 650 to 700 people, and uses state of the art mining equipment and mining methods. When the full design capacity is attained by 1989-90, the total run of the mine coal produced by the Corporation will be approximately 4.6 million tonnes.

The management of the Corporation, and the people of Cape Breton, who built the new Phalen mine and expanded the coal preparation plant, should take pride and be commended for completing these major projects on time and within the approved $218 million budget.

The challenge now is to ensure that these new assets reach their full operating potential and successfully contribute to a stronger and more viable coal division.

Already there are indications that expanded production, as well as the many important efficiency measures which have been implemented by the Corporation in recent years, are having a noticeable impact.

Preliminary indications are that the coal division's operating results for the year ended March 31, 1988, will be very close to the budgeted loss of $1.8 million. This shows continuing improvement when compared to operating losses of about $17 million in each of the previous two years.

For the current 1988-89 year, the Corporation is forecasting its first ever operating profit, excluding depreciation, of $13.1 million. This will also be the first time that the coal division will be in a position to contribute toward its annual capital investment requirements with a positive cash flow generated internally from its own operations.

Unfortunately, the expected operating profit will not be enough to offset the capital expenditures required to maintain the Corporation's mines and surface infrastructure in top working condition. The federal Government will, therefore, still have to provide funding to cover most of the $43.1 million in ongoing capital requirements. This expenditure will ensure that the Government's investment in DEVCO's assets is maintained in a safe and efficient working manner.

Part of these expenditures relate to the continued development of various coal technologies, primarily coal-water-fuel, so-called carbogel research, wherein Devco is acknowledged as a world leader. The Corporation is hopeful that this technology will be ready for commercial exploitation when world energy prices rebound to a level whereby coal-water-fuel sources can successfully compete.

While the signs are most encouraging, and Cape Bretoners should again start to take pride in a much healthier and more viable coal industry, one should not become complacent.

Further out in the future for 1989-90 and 1990-91, the Corporation is again forecasting operating losses. These losses are mainly attributable to anticipated reduced lower coal price agreements with its main customer, the Nova Scotia Power Corporation, as well as increased operating costs.

The Corporation is looking closely at these problems and will be recommending what action the Government should consider to ensure that the Cape Breton coal industry continues to be as efficient and competitive as possible.

The recent increase in the operating activity of the coal division has led to higher working capital requirements with corresponding increases in the working capital advances provided from the Consolidated Revenue Fund.

Again, it is worth-while to compare some of the current financial statistics against those of 1975 when the previous working capital advance limit was established. While final numbers are not yet available for the year ended March 31, 1988, the preliminary numbers indicate that the current assets of the coal division have increased to $75 million, total assets are approaching $600 million, and annual coal sales are about $200 million.

During recent months, the working capital advance account has been fully drawn by the Corporation to its current maximum permitted level of $25 million. Unless this limit is quickly raised, the lack of available financing could unduly constrain the future operations of the Corporation.

There are several operating and financial factors forecast to occur within the next five years, which will continue to influence the working capital requirements of the coal division and which will result in the need for working capital advances significantly higher than the present limit.

The most significant factors leading to an increased working capital requirement are those of increasing production levels and correspondingly higher inventory levels for both coal and materials. Saleable coal production is forecast to be 4.3 million tonnes by 1991-92. Coal inventory projections show increasing levels over the next four years in both volume and dollar value. The addition of the Phalen colliery has already resulted in an increased requirement for materials inventory. As well, the Corporation has found that there are operating and financial advantages to carrying additional operating materials on a program basis in inventory as opposed to ad hoc purchasing of inventory requirements.

As a result of these forecasted higher annual production levels, substantially larger amounts of coal will have to be sold in presently unsecured markets where tough international competition exists. Shipping schedules to these markets will have to comply with market locations and demand. As well, the requirement to have coal aged a minimum of 30 days, and sometimes longer, to allow the methane gas to dissipate prior to loading, is another factor influencing inventory levels.

The constraint on winter shipping due to ice conditions can also result in inventory build-up during that period of year. This may result in inventory build-ups during certain periods of year because of delivery constraints. Competitive forces in some of these markets may also result in extended payment terms, adding further pressure on the Corporation's working capital requirements.

As I indicated previously, although the coal division is forecast to have a positive cash flow from operations for 1988-89, there may be periods during the year when temporary working capital requirements will occur. The Corporation has undertaken a detailed analysis of the trends and ratios for its working capital requirements. Based on this historical analysis, future requirements have been projected, allowing for the impact of the many financial and operating factors which will influence this situation.

Based on this analysis, the Minister is proposing that Section 19(2) of the CBDC Act be amended to set a new upper limit of $50 million which, I believe, is reasonable given the future operating results which I described previously. He is also proposing that a simpler mechanism for future amendments be provided in Section 19(2), through the proposed wording, which will identify the future limit as "such other amount as may be established by an appropriation Act or other Act of Parliament".

It should be understood that although these changes will give the Corporation access to additional working capital funds from the Consolidated Revenue Fund, such funds or portions thereof will only be drawn as required and then only for such periods as are necessary.

The Corporation utilizes strict cash management procedures and maintains cash balances at the minimum levels which allow for normal operations to be maintained. As a result, during any period when the working capital and cash positions are improved, any available cash in excess of the normal operating requirements is used to reduce the balance outstanding on the working capital advance account by returning those moneys to the Consolidated Revenue Fund.

In addition to the internal cash management practices followed by the Corporation, officials from the Department closely monitor and approve all draw-downs for working capital purposes, as well as draw-downs for the approved annual budgetary appropriations to the Corporation.

In closing, let me say that the proposed amendment to Section 19(2) of the CBDC act will provide the coal division of the Cape Breton Development Corporation with access to funds for working capital purposes in an amount of up to $50 million, an increase of $25 million from the previous limit. The fact that this increased amount is required is clearly supported by the current and projected activities of the coal division.

The growth and improvement which has occurred in the Cape Breton Development Corporation in recent years is commendable and important to the future of the Cape Breton coal industry and, indeed, the entire economy of Cape Breton Island. The commitment by this Government to assist with this growth and improvement has been substantial, and will continue to be so.

I, therefore, ask all Members to support this proposed increase in the limit of working capital advances which can be made available to DEVCO so that the growth of the coal mining industry in Cape Breton will continue unimpeded.

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, it is fast approaching one o'clock, but I do want to say at the outset that I can assure my colleague, who spoke for the Government, of my support, and the support of my Party, with respect to the substantive parts of Bill C-127, namely, to amend Section 19(2) of the Cape Breton Development Corporation Act, and to replace the upper limit, which shall not exceed $50 million, or such other amount as may be established by an appropriation Act or other Act of Parliament.

In supporting this particular provision, I hope it is not interpreted that I or my Party are in agreement with a number of the activities which have been taking place with this particular Crown corporation in Cape Breton. In fact, I would hope that the Parliamentary Secretary, who I know has considerable interest in the subject matter itself, would want to give some careful consideration to a number of activities taking place within the Corporation. I believe they directly relate to what we are talking about here today, namely, some of the ways in which management and its attitude implements different policies and procedures within this Crown corporation.

I listened to my colleague on the government side go through a number of aspects of the life of the Cape Breton Development Corporation. I thought he would have explained perhaps in greater detail some of the many sacrifices which have been made by coal miners and other employees of the Cape Breton Development Corporation toward improvements and, indeed, the success we have been able to see with respect to our small economy on the island of Cape Breton.

One major fact which seems to have eluded my colleague—he may have touched upon it but he certainly did not go into detail—was that the Cape Breton Development Corporation for a good number of years supplied coal to the Nova Scotia Power Corporation. It obtained that coal at a preferential rate, substantially low cost to the Nova Scotia Power Corporation. Then, through a series of protracted discussions and negotiations, the price of that particular coal was increased to reflect both the cost of mining the coal as well as the true value of the labour component which was so necessarily a part of that particular price.

The Government of Canada, at the behest of the provincial Government, has now reduced substantially the price of this coal to the Nova Scotia Power Corporation. If one were just a paper tiger, one could conceptually say that perhaps there is nothing inherently wrong with what is taking place. However, I wish to point out to my colleague opposite that there are a number of factors which must be reflected upon and, indeed, given due consideration.

I would hope that this lower price of coal given to a federal Crown corporation will not jeopardize labour's attempt to receive now and in the future a reasonable price for its labour and efforts. I would hope that all Members of the House will concur and agree that when labour is paid a fair and decent wage, that in itself goes a long way in assisting and improving our local economies. It is these individuals who purchase goods and various items.

I see it is one o'clock, Mr. Speaker, I would like to call it one o'clock and resume debate later this day.

Mr. Forrestall: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, if there was some agreement across the way so that the Member's remarks might be made on a continuous basis, we would be quite prepared not to see the clock, and possibly even finish the matter.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Reimer): Is there unanimous consent?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Reimer): There being unanimous consent, the Hon. Member may continue.

• (1300)

Mr. Dingwall: Mr. Speaker, I was saying with respect to the price of coal being paid by the Nova Scotia Power Corporation that I hope—and it is my sincere desire, and I underline "sincere"—that the price of this coal will not reflect negatively upon those men and women who have contributed so substantially over the years. When they do look forward to receiving additional increases in their living wage I hope that they will not be jeopardized by the fact that the federal Government has lowered the price of coal thereby lessening the revenues going to the Crown corporation.

As I was saying a moment ago, it is these individuals who contribute substantially to our economy through the purchase of various goods and products. It is through their wages that we have a better society. I hope that the Hon. Member will give due consideration to that particular fact of life which is now part and parcel of the Cape Breton Development Corporation.

There has been some mention of the activities of the Corporation, but nowhere was there to be found mention of the fact that in excess of 600 individuals previously employed with this Crown Corporation are now without meaningful employment. One of the objectives of this particular Crown Corporation was to assist and to facilitate the improvement and the enrichment of employment opportunities. I think that the Government has made a number of mistakes in its handling of this particular Crown Corporation. I draw again to the attention of all Members the fact of the serious job losses that have occurred at this Crown Corporation.

Again, I impress upon my colleagues opposite that the attitude of management in the implementation of human resource policy and its insensitivity both to the traditions and the history of coal mining in Cape Breton have left a scar on the community. There are serious problems with regard to those individuals who have a hearing loss. There are serious problems with those individuals who were on pre-retirement leave and seeking assistance from the Crown Corporation and the Government so that they do not have to pay any more unemployment insurance benefits. As the Hon. Member opposite knows, I can refer to many different programs under which unemployment insurance premiums are not requested of such individuals, but they are being requested here. There is a serious problem with the concept of continuous service for the purposes of individuals embarking and being successful in obtaining early retirement from the Cape Breton Development Corporation.

Those are just three of the many difficult problems that are inherent in the Corporation. We do not seem to be getting any real satisfaction from the Government of Canada with regard to resolving those particular problems. These problems are complicated. Their seriousness is enhanced by the fact that some—not all—members of management have a preconceived attitude toward labour that somehow it is looking for a free lunch. They think that somehow labour does not want to contribute to the productivity of the Corporation. They think that somehow labour does not share the objectives of the Crown Corporation, and that it is not willing to participate in doing its fair share.

I believe that that attitude is a wrong attitude for senior members of management to have in terms of exercising their responsibility. I hope that the Government of Canada will impress upon management, and do some reflection itself, with respect to how these policies and procedures are being followed. It is the Government who has designed and conceived the policy that management is presently carrying out.

There has been some mention of some of the moneys which have been directed to the coal water fuel project at the Cape Breton Development Corporation. I thought that my colleague from Nova Scotia would have given due credit in that respect for it was I as the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources who initiated that project back some years ago. The Cape Breton Development Corporation, in co-operation with other agencies, has been able to pursue this policy. Quite frankly, that was the initial stage some years ago. What we need today is a very substantial commitment from the Government of Canada research and development of new technologies at the Cape Breton Development Corporation.

Again, I point out to my colleague and my colleagues that the coal water fuel technology program and the synthetic fuels project are just two of many programs that the Government of Canada ought to be pursuing with vigour and enthusiasm in trying to solicit the assistance of the private sector in order to see them realized. They will provide meaningful jobs and, indeed, income for individuals who reside in this particular area of Canada.

I must draw to the attention of all Members that the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency in its present form has a tremendous impact on the future viability of this particular Corporation. I say so with great sincerity for ACOA, which was supposed to be set up to facilitate regional economic development, is in the process of considering the possibility of financing another coal mining operation in Nova Scotia. Upon reflection, one sees that that will mean a net loss to the Province of Nova Scotia of some 100 jobs. But, in particular, it will have profound negative effects on the future viability of the Cape Breton Development Corporation, both from a revenue perspective and in terms of its coal markets.

This new coal mine would also be selling its product to the Nova Scotia Power Corporation. It would have a negative impact on employment. It would certainly have a negative impact with regard to men and women who are attempting to obtain a fair and decent salary increase from the Cape Breton Development Corporation. This, again, is another issue of grave concern to the miners and all the individuals at the Cape Breton Development Corporation as to what is transpiring at this particular Crown Corporation.

The Chairman of the Cape Breton Development Corporation on Saturday made some very interesting remarks with regard to the splitting of the legislation which would do away with the industrial development division of this Crown Corporation and leave it as a coal company, thereby creating a new and separate Crown corporation. Basically, I suggest that the Chairman, who was appointed by the Conservative Government, is questioning, and I say quite sincerely, the thinking as well as the rationale for doing this to the Cape Breton Development Corporation at this time. Again, I hope that my colleague opposite will give careful consideration to this particular aspect of what is taking place in that Crown Corporation.

I have listed numerous concerns that I have with the Cape Breton Development Corporation. The Hon. Member has heard me on many occasions on the floor of the House, and he will continue to hear from me as I question what is taking place at the Cape Breton Development Corporation. But with respect to the particulars of Bill C-127, and in terms of the amendment, and in terms of increasing the sum from $25 million to $50 million, he has my blessing. We are prepared to move rather quickly with that.

However, in no way should members of the Government or, indeed, members of the media conclude that I am in agreement with the Conservative policy on coal development in Cape Breton. Nor am I in agreement with the senior management, in cahoots with senior cabinet Ministers, as to the present goings-on at the Cape Breton Development Corporation.

I believe that there has to be some fundamental changes, some of which I have touched upon. To respond to my colleague, he has my support as well as that of my Party in approving this particular amendment to Section 19(2).

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Reimer): The Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion (Mr. Forrestall).

Mr. Skelly: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. The agreement was that the previous Member would be allowed to speak, and then it would be one o'clock. I now would expect that it is one o'clock.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Reimer): The Hon. Member for Comox—Powell River (Mr. Skelly) is correct that that was the agreement. Is the Parliamentary Secretary for the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion rising on a point of order?

Mr. Forrestall: I was wondering whether we could conclude second reading. It is a very important Bill, Mr. Speaker, and I think we could probably deal with it in all stages in the next 20 or 25 minutes, if the House would agree.

Mr. Skelly: The New Democratic Party does recognize the importance of this Bill, and would have our contribution at three o'clock this afternoon. Therefore, that is the way the ball goes.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Reimer): It being 1.10 p.m., I do now leave the chair until two o'clock this day.

At 1.10 p.m. the House took recess.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE ACT

SICK PEOPLE—DENIAL OF EXTENSION OF BENEFITS

Mr. George Henderson (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, Section 20, VII (a) and (b), of the Unemployment Insurance Act, discriminates against sick people. When one of my constituents on regular UIC benefits had a stroke, his sick benefits were terminated after just one week because he was not in the initial benefit phase of his claim.

The initial benefit phase covers up to a maximum of 25 weeks and sick benefits can only be paid during this period. My constituent got sick on the 24th week of his claim and, pursuant to the regulations, the Department of Employment and Immigration rejected his request for an extension to his benefit period to cover the time of recuperation from his stroke.

Apparently, had my constituent been in jail or on full workers' compensation, he would have received this extension. What a ridiculous regulation. People cannot schedule their illnesses to occur within this initial benefit phase. Their families desperately need this money during those difficult times. I would urge the Minister to review this regulation and ensure that sick people are treated in a just manner.

STATUS OF WOMEN

BEHAVIOUR OF NATIONAL ACTION COMMITTEE

Mr. Jim Jepson (London East): Mr. Speaker, yesterday was the National Action Committee on the Status of Women's annual lobby day on the Hill. As in previous years, members of the National Action Committee group were strident, rude, and showed little or no respect for the democratic process. Their performance, not only yesterday but at the weekend meetings, clearly demonstrates that this group does not speak for the majority of women.

Originally this group brought about much needed reform and equal opportunity rights for women in Canada, but it has become evident that it has forgotten its grassroots membership. In reality, it has now been taken over by a militant executive, not interested in the best interests of the grassroots membership but more interested in promoting the political agenda of the Hon. Member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent) and the NDP.

I believe that we should not fund advocacy groups, but in a democracy if we fund one women's group, we should fund all. We are not seeing wise stewardship of taxpayers' dollars in funding the National Action Committee on the Status of Women, and I urge the Minister to take away its funding.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

PLIGHT OF MASSEY COMBINE CORPORATION EMPLOYEES

Mr. Derek Blackburn (Brant): Mr. Speaker, the former employees of Massey Combine Corporation need help. The Government has both the responsibility and the means to help them.

These men and women lost their jobs, benefits, and a lot of hope when Massey went into receivership. Their families are looking for some action to restore their lost benefits and to provide retraining to get them back into the workforce. However, so far, the Government has done nothing. It cut the Labour Adjustment Benefits Program which used to help the people in the farm machinery industry. It has talked about replacing the LAB Program with a program for older worker adjustment, for over two years.

Meanwhile, the Government is sitting on about $30-million worth of shares in Massey Corporation. It got these shares in the agreement to bail out Massey in 1986. Now that Massey is in receivership, these holdings serve no useful purpose. The Government should sell these shares and use the proceeds to help the Massey workers. These people and their families have waited long enough, and many of them are very desperate.

BRIDGES

BRIDGE CONSTRUCTION PROJECT ON SAINT-MAURICE RIVER

Mr. Michel Champagne (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister for External Relations): Mr. Speaker, I take this opportunity to reiterate for the people of the riding of Champlain my complete, total support for the construction of a bridge on the Saint-Maurice River at Mattawin.

It is most urgent to carry out this project, especially since the ferry has ceased to operate due to a major breakdown, resulting in huge economic losses for the community.

Local groups and individuals, coordinated by the Mékinac county government, have worked seriously over the last three years to acquire this essential tool for economic development.

The Conservative Government has believed in it by saying that it is ready to grant $2 million for the project. It is now up to the Government of Quebec to do its part and to invest the same amount as the federal Government.

In closing, I would like to remind you that building this bridge is not a local whim. Quite the contrary! It affects the forestry, mining and tourism industries. The economic future of a whole region is at stake and as a responsible government, we have understood that.

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES FREE TRADE AGREEMENT—EFFECT ON WATER RESOURCES

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, through the trade agreement we have invited a third party, the Americans, to our resource table. They now have unfettered access to Canada's water resources. This could seriously impede Canada's development of exciting sunrise industries based on new evolving technology, and thwart jobs that come from water resource development.

The trade agreement gives the Americans access to our water and many of the jobs and expertise related to its development. This is wrong, Mr. Speaker. The trade agreement should have exempted water, then we could have created the technology and skills for the whole world, not just for us.

What could the Government possibly get from the Americans that is worth giving up control of our water resources? Check Article 409 in the free trade agreement. The Government has made a serious mistake. I hope it will repair it.

THE ECONOMY

GROWTH IN JOBS—DECLINE IN UNEMPLOYMENT

Mr. John Reimer (Kitchener): Mr. Speaker, we can never have enough good news. When that news concerns Canada's economic indicators, it just keeps getting better and better. Since our Government took office in 1984, Canada has seen more than 1.25 million new jobs created with 82 per cent of them full-time. The unemployment rate has fallen four full percentage points to 7.7 per cent.

In the Kitchener-Waterloo region the unemployment rate continues to be in the low 5 per cent range, with the April monthly figure at 4.5 per cent. With the exception of Toronto, the Kitchener-Waterloo area has consistently enjoyed the lowest unemployment rate in Canada. It is encouraging to note that this economic prosperity is evenly spread throughout the local industry, with the auto parts manufacturing and construction sectors doing especially well.

Canadians are to be congratulated for their enterprise and industry. Their efforts have made Canada's economy the envy of the industrialized world.

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES FREE TRADE AGREEMENT—EFFECT ON STEEL EXPORTS

Mr. John Parry (Kenora—Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, the U.S. steel industry is continuing lobbying efforts to try to force Canada to agree to restrict Canadian steel exports to the United States. The Government has not agreed to join a U.S. steel restraint program in the past, and we demand that it not now capitulate to pressure from the United States.

Recent statements from U.S. steel industry spokesmen show again how flawed the trade agreement is for Canada. A spokesman for Inland Steel Company of Chicago said this week in Toronto that the trade pact does not preclude the establishment of a formal restraint agreement between the two countries, meaning Canadian exports can still be restricted, and he is correct.

Canadian exports will still be vulnerable to U.S. trade remedy laws and arbitrary U.S. trade actions under the trade sell-out. Furthermore, the agreement does not allow Canada to stop the harassment of Canadian exports to the U.S. nor does it guarantee our access to U.S. markets. Canada has made significant concessions in the agricultural, cultural, energy and manufacturing sectors, in return for minimal guarantees of access to U.S. markets.

The deal stinks, Mr. Speaker. Let Canadians decide.

DROUGHT IN WESTERN CANADA

Mr. Felix Holtmann (Selkirk—Interlake): Mr. Speaker, I rise in this House today to bring to the attention of all Canadians the seriousness of drought in western Canada.

It is estimated that it takes 300 years to produce one inch of top soil. Two weeks ago in one 24-hour period more rich agricultural real estate changed hands in my riding than could have been possible with all the earth-moving equipment in Canada. Mother nature lifted the powder-dry top soil until it blotted out the sun and headlights were required to see the road.

During this period of arid and semi-arid conditions, which now prevail over the western Prairies, all farmers should implement tilling practices which would reduce further wind erosion.

For this region all Canadians could pray next Sunday for rain as rain, is the only assistance Conservatives were not able to deliver. But we are working on it, Mr. Speaker!

WOMEN

GOVERNMENT PROMISES

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, on Monday, representatives of women's groups were right to be disappointed with the Conservative Government's performance. First of all, the Government has not respected its commitments regarding the equality of women in the work place, whether in terms of wages, working conditions or fringe benefits. We recall that the Conservative Government has still not respected its commitment to allow homemakers to participate in the Canada and Quebec Pension Plans, i.e. a homemaker's pension.

Also, we remember that the Conservative Government has not respected its commitment to allow more maternity leave under the Unemployment Insurance Act. Mr. Speaker, I think that the women of Canada realize that they have been deceived, as were seniors, the sick and the family in general, by this Conservative Government.

GENERAL AGREEMENT ON TARIFFS AND TRADE

CALL FOR REFORMS TO ACCOMMODATE WORLD AGRICULTURE

Mrs. Barbara Sparrow (Calgary South): Mr. Speaker, a recent ruling of a GATT panel recommended that a tariff on European Economic Community beef imports into Canada be dropped. The panel ruled that Canadian cattle producers cannot bring a complaint against the EEC because they produce cattle and not meat.

The panel ruled against a Canadian Import Tribunal ruling which placed a countervailing duty on heavily subsidized EEC beef imports. The panel report implies that GATT offers no protection to cattle producers and other primary producers world-wide.

With GATT negotiations now beginning, I urge our Government to take the lead in seeking reforms in GATT to accommodate world agriculture.

BANKS AND BANKING

SERVICE CHARGES—PUBLIC OPINION

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, Canadian banks are like the television character Alf. When faced with evidence that they have bungled, they say "No problem". Despite massive increases in bank service charges in recent years, bankers such as CIBC Vice-President Warren Moysey say "Service charges do not concern our customers".

The Canadian Bankers' Association cited polls alleging that 73 per cent of Canadians are satisfied with banks. Yet another banker, Janice DeStein of the TD Bank, calls our committee investigation of the issue "unjustified and unnecessary". Like Alf, the banks seem to come from another planet.

A Gallup poll released yesterday said 50 per cent of Canadians believe service charges are unreasonably high. In fact 69 per cent said a committee probe into bank charges was very necessary.

Alf's TV family may accept his insatiable gluttony, but Canadians will not accept the greed of the chartered banks. It is time that the banks pull their heads out of the sand and clean up their collective act.

FREE TRADE

IMPACT ON CANADA

Mr. Gabriel Fontaine (Lévis): Mr. Speaker, this House will soon vote on the Free Trade Agreement. The issue is simple: the Americans want to stop foreign imports because of their trade balance deficit. Each year Canadian sales to the United-States amount to $95 billion. This represents 20 per cent of our whole annual production or, to put it another way, one out of every five jobs. The Free Trade Agreement guarantees us continued access to this $95 billion market and allows us to improve on it. Every time a Liberal or a Socialist speaks against the Agreement, he speaks against jobs, against one out of every five Canadian jobs.

To put it simply: to oppose free trade is to accept the loss of one out of every five jobs.

MEECH LAKE ACCORD

DEMOCRACY

Mr. David Berger (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Transport (Mr. Bouchard) assured us last week end that he would leave politics if the Meech Lake Accord was rejected. I wish him well.

Obviously, the Minister still does not understand that the Constitution does not only involve some 10 or 11 people but that it is on the contrary the fundamental law of the land that protects the freedom of all Canadians. To amend the Constitution, we must have the assent of Parliament and of provincial legislatures and a period of three years is even provided to ratify such a change. It is a trully democratic process that requires a certain involvement, I would even say a necessary involvement of the citizens of this country.

On the contrary, the Meech Lake Accord provides us with a fundamentally undemocratic vision since, for example, Supreme Court judges are to be appointed by Cabinet Ministers only, without consulting legislators and citizens. That maybe convenient for the minister of Transport, Mr. Speaker, but for me and for many Canadians it is not!

TOURISM

NIAGARA FALLS TOURISM ECONOMIC IMPACT STUDY

Mr. Rob Nicholson (Niagara Falls): Mr. Speaker, I was proud to join with my colleague, the Minister of State for Tourism (Mr. Valcourt), yesterday to unveil the Niagara Falls Tourism Economic Impact Study.

Niagara Falls served as the model for this study, and other towns and municipalities throughout the country will now have a valuable tool for measuring the over-all economic impact of tourism on their local, regional, and provincial economies.

The study confirmed what we have known for a long time in Niagara Falls, that is, that tourism is a gigantic business. Over 11 million people visited Niagara Falls last year and spent over $500 million. The economic spin-off for Ontario was $1.2 billion and 28,000 jobs, 15,000 in Niagara Falls alone.

This is National Tourism Week. The federal Government, in conjuction with the City of Niagara Falls and the Niagara Falls Visitor and Convention Bureau, has shown in this study its firm commitment to developing tourism in Canada.

I know that my colleagues and constituents will join with me in extending a warm welcome to all Canadians intending to visit the beautiful Province of Ontario and, of course, one of the world's natural wonders, Niagara Falls, Canada.

HEALTH

AIDS—FUNDS FOR EDUCATION AND RESEARCH

Mrs. Lucie Pépin (Outremont): Mr. Speaker, I rise in this House today to respond to one of the most dramatic health problems which Canada faces today, AIDS. Apparently the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) has no idea how to tackle this serious problem. We read in the papers this morning that this Conservative Government only provides a meagre $750,000 for AIDS education programs, while Great Britain and Australia are spending millions of dollars.

In April, the Royal Society of Canada suggested that the Federal Government spend $80 million a year on education and $35 million on research. This Conservative Government has done nothing yet, Mr. Speaker. Already 1,761 cases of AIDS have been diagnosed in Canada, 978 of which have resulted in death. An estimated 50,000 individuals are exposed to the virus. According to estimations from the Federal Centre on AIDS, 7,000 people across Canada will have the illness by 1991.

The lack of Government action in that area is deplorable. This minister of National Health and Welfare and this Government must stand ready to give monies towards AIDS education in our society, they must be ready to spend on research and encourage young people to use healthy and enlightened sexual practices. If not, this Government, bear the blame for the lack of responsibility of Canadian men and women in the face of this terrible disease.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES FREE TRADE AGREEMENT—
PROVINCIAL JURISDICTION

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. Yesterday American Senators and the White House insisted that Canadian provinces must comply with the trade deal.

We believe in a strong national government, but the provinces do have certain areas of jurisdiction under our Constitution which the Americans now want to rewrite. The Government has agreed to let them do it. The Prime Minister's Government wants to take away those provincial rights and hand them over to the Americans.

It is one thing for Canadians to disagree among ourselves about how our country should operate. It is another thing to allow a foreign country to dictate how we should operate.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): On what basis does the Prime Minister conclude that he has the right to let the American Congress challenge the Canadian concept of Confederation?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, of course the comments by the Hon. Leader of the Opposition are quite grossly exaggerated, as we have come to expect in this House.

The Senate Finance Committee is considering a mark-up of an administration suggested Bill to implement the Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement in the United States. They can only deal, of course, with American law with respect to implementing the FTA. Individual Senators can make whatever statements they like about what they would like to see with respect to compliance by Canada or provinces of Canada with the free trade agreement.

The situation is that the U.S. administration will look to the Canadian Government to provide assurances that we are in a position and have the capacity to implement the agreement signed between the U.S. and Canada. The Prime Minister has already given them those assurances, and we will give them those assurances again once Parliament has enacted the legislation which we propose to put before the House.

All that has been said in the United States is that they would like to have the provinces comply with the U.S.-Canada Free Trade Agreement. Naturally, that is our position as well.

• (1420)

DISSIDENT PROVINCES—PRIME MINISTER'S POSITION

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, we will wait for the Minister's Bill. Meanwhile, we should take a look at the text of the agreement with the United States. According to Section 103 of the trade agreement signed by the Prime Minister, the federal Government will take all necessary measures to oblige provincial and local administrations to conform to the agreement. The Prime Minister and his Minister are aware that taking all necessary measures means the federal Government could use its spending power or fiscal power to this end.

Mr. Speaker, will the Prime Minister answer my question? Does he intend to cut federal spending in provinces that do not accept this agreement?

[English]

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, that was a technique that doubtless would have been tried by the Liberal Party when it was in power. In fact they attempted every bullying tactic imaginable in the years 1980-1984.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crosbie: The hallmark of our Prime Minister is conciliation, co-operation, consultation with the provinces. He met with the Premiers 10 times in negotiating the Free Trade Agreement.

I can give the assurance in response to this canard thrown out by the Leader of the Opposition that we will not threaten to reduce spending in any province in this country that happens to disagree with us. This is a democracy, and we will not act like the Liberal bully boys of the past.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

POSITION OF FEDERAL GOVERNMENT

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, if that is not what the phrase "take all necessary measures" means in this text of the agreement, will the Minister be good enough to tell us, in his opinion, exactly what it means? Will he tells us how far the federal Government is prepared to override provincial jurisdiction in order to please Americans? Tell us that.

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I can only say that the clients of McMillan Binch must be thanking God that they are not getting this kind of legal advice any longer from the Leader of the Opposition.

Mr. Kaplan: Answer the questions.

Mr. Crosbie: It means nothing of the sort. It means that we will be introducing legislation to this House which hopefully will be passed by this House and the Senate, unless there is another attempt by the unelected, discarded autocrats appointed there by the hon. gentleman's predecessor to stop this process.

We will be asking them to pass legislation and we will be able to provide assurances to the U.S. Government that we are in a position and have a capacity to implement the agreement. When the hon. gentleman sees the legislation, he will understand that. We will be in a position to implement it, despite the fact that the Premier of Ontario does not want it implemented even though he is only one of 10 Premiers.

IMMIGRATION

REFUGEE STATUS ADVISORY COMMITTEE—REVERSAL OF DECISION

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. It concerns the political interference of the Secretary of State for External Affairs in the refugee hearing for Mr. Santokh Singh.

In one of his two secret letters to the Minister of Employment and Immigration, one reason that was cited for refusing the applicant was: "Indian authorities have made strong and repeated representations for his return to India". However, yesterday in Calgary, both the Foreign Minister for India and the Indian High Commissioner to Canada insisted that India never applied any pressure, never sought his extradition, never suggested refusing him refugee status, and concluded by saying: "As of now, there is no case".

Will the Prime Minister explain to the House and Canadians this very glaring and serious contradiction which now hangs over his Government's actions like a cloud? If it was not due to overtures from India, and since both CSIS and the RCMP gave this claimant a good and positive security report, what were the reasons that motivated such an overwhelming and unprecedented political intervention into a unanimous decision by the Refugee Status Advisory Committee?

• (1425)

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, if we remove all the rhetoric and inflammation from that question, we will see that all the hon. gentleman is complaining about is that the Secretary of State for External Affairs takes seriously his duties as a Minister to bring to the attention of his colleagues matters they should consider when making decisions themselves in areas such as immigration.

In fact the request of the gentleman, to whom the Hon. Member referred, for refugee status was initially rejected by the Refugee Status Advisory Committee on April 15, 1987, as manifestly unfounded. There were changes when other panels heard this matter later. It is quite obvious that people acting in good faith, looking at the same kind of information, can come to different conclusions.

The Secretary of State for External Affairs was acting most properly and in accordance with his public duties when he made these representations to his fellow Minister.

Mr. Marchi: Mr. Speaker, I do not know why the Minister for International Trade is answering refugee questions, but if the Secretary of State for External Affairs was doing his job properly he owes, in decency and honesty, the real reasons behind the decision. If he is not prepared to table those reasons, he ought to table his resignation as soon as possible.

REQUEST FOR RE-EVALUATION OF CASE

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): I would direct my supplementary question to the Minister of Employment and Immigration, not the Minister for International Trade. Since the Government's promotion of the Refugee Advisory Committee as an independent and impartial body has now been shattered by the actions of her colleague, and given that this may prompt lawyers to apply to the Federal Court to rule on the bias of this Refugee Advisory Committee, which could in effect paralyze the entire system, will the Minister move immediately to re-evaluate the Singh file according to the merits and facts of the case, which should have been done in the first place, and, therefore, signal that she will not tolerate any political interference in the judicial processing of a refugee claim at the Refugee Advisory Committee stage?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the first thing the Hon. Member knows and is ignoring is that the Refugee Status Advisory Committee is just that, it is an advisory committee, and there are always other factors that go into these decisions. This case still has the possibility and, indeed, the lawyer for Mr. Singh said this morning that he intends to appeal to the Immigration Appeal Board. I fully intend that the Immigration Appeal Board will have an opportunity to hear this case without biased comments either from him or from me.

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES FREE TRADE AGREEMENT—PROVINCIAL JURISDICTION

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Hon. Minister for International Trade who said yesterday of the trade deal: "I don't consider it as being an intrusion into anyone's jurisdiction". The Minister will be well aware that in areas such as liquor pricing, energy pricing, and a whole host of others, it obviously intrudes into provincial jurisdiction. Yesterday the United States Senators asked the Canadian Government to pre-empt provincial laws.

If the deal does not intrude into areas of provincial jurisdiction as the Minister maintains, why does the American Senate want to block the deal until and unless the provinces have complied with its terms? Will the Minister explain this obvious contradiction?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I not know where there is any contradiction. We want the United States to implement the U.S-Canada Free Trade Agreement and to have an agreement that will also be binding with respect to the State Governments. There are 51, are there?

An Hon. Member: Fifty.

Mr. Crosbie: Fifty.

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): We are 51. You said it that time, John.

Mr. Crosbie: The hon. gentleman has the type of mentality that would make him an ideal fifty-oneth, of that I can assure him.

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): A Freudian slip, John.

Mr. Crosbie: We would naturally want and expect the American States to be bound with reference to the U.S.-Canada Free Trade Agreement, and the American legislation contemplates that position exactly.

With respect to the provinces, there is only one area at the present time where any positive action has to be taken with reference to the U.S.-Canada Free Trade Agreement, and that is in the area of wine and liquor regulation, which has also been found to be an area where action must be taken as a result of the GATT panel that reported in that area some months ago.

• (1430)

There is one province that is refusing to comply with the recommendation of the GATT panel, and also with the U.S.-Canada Free Trade Agreement. It is too bad that one province chooses to set itself up above the rest of the nation and all other provinces in that respect.

When our legislation is introduced to the House we hope to be in a position to say that we are in a position and have the capacity to implement the agreement. We certainly do not propose to intrude on the jurisdiction of the provinces but to exercise our own constitutional jurisdiction—

Some Hon. Members: Time!

Mr. Crosbie: —with respect to the implementation of the trade and commerce power.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate that the Minister for International Trade at one time wanted part of Canada to become a fifty-first state, but we get somewhat nervous when the Minister responsible for international trade is not certain about the number of States in the United States.

THREAT OF COURT ACTION BY PROVINCE

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is this. All along the Prime Minister and other members of the Government have indicated that there would be no problem in getting the provinces to go along with the trade deal. The Minister for International Trade said again yesterday that we are not going to force Ontario to do anything. The Minister is well aware, as he just indicated, that one province is now threatening to take the federal Government to court. The United States Chief Negotiator, Peter Murphy, when he was asked about provincial objections, said: "You can count on it, it is a problem".

Once again, will the Minister explain why, if there is a province that is threatening to take the federal Government to court, and if the U.S. negotiator says that there are serious problems in terms of the provinces, the Government continues to say that there is absolutely no problem in forcing the provinces to go along with this deal?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman's introductory remarks certainly could be described as risible.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): Try it again, John.

Mr. Crosbie: I know that English is not the strong point of the hon. gentleman opposite.

Back to this particular question, there is nothing strange or unusual in a province or a government, federal, provincial or municipal, or a person, male, female, or whatever, taking a matter to the courts to ask the courts to give an interpretation of whether a province or the federal Government has certain powers or not. The courts are there for that exact purpose. We have a judiciary that is independent. It will render decisions if asked to.

There is nothing unusual in Ontario suggesting that it might ask a court to examine legislation, which it has not even seen yet, to determine if it does x, y, or z. There is nothing to get alarmed about. It happens in this country in every way—every day people are going to court.

USE OF FEDERAL POWERS

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, what there is to be alarmed about is the fact that the Government signed Article 103 of the deal which obliges the Government to take all necessary measures to enforce provincial compliance, even if the measures are beyond the jurisdiction of the federal Government.

My question to the Minister for International Trade is this. Is the Government prepared to use its extraordinary powers to accomplish this? Is the Government prepared to use these powers to step on provincial jurisdiction? How far is the Government prepared to go in trampling on provincial rights when it comes to areas of their jurisdiction?

Mr. Shields: Like the NDP did with the national energy policy.

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, there was never a word heard from the NDP when the last Liberal administration used its powers to crush the West with the national energy policy.

Mr. Waddell: That is a lie!

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): That is not true.

Mr. Waddell: You are lying, John!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Riis: That is a mistruth, John, and you know it.

Mr. Shields: You wanted it to go further, that is what you wanted.

Mr. Crosbie: Mr. Speaker, there was no talk then of trample. No, Members of the NDP supported the Government of the day in full voice.

Mr. Waddell: You're lying!

Mr. Shields: You wanted it to go further.

Mr. Crosbie: Is the Government of Canada only to exercise its legislative jurisdiction when the NDP agrees with what it is doing, or is it entitled to do it whenever, whether the NDP agrees or not?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

DEFINITION OF SUBSIDY—UNITED STATES POSITION

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is also for the Minister for International Trade. Canadians have been under the impression from reading Article 1907 of the agreement that there would be a five to seven year negotiation of an acceptable definition of subsidy, which would accommodate Canada's regional development and other industrial and social policies such as those that deal with resources, agriculture, day care, et cetera.

Today's The Wall Street Journal reports on a plan—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Kaplan: It's a good paper.

The newspaper reports on a plan settled yesterday by the U.S. administration and the Senate Finance Committee under this section not to develop rules concerning Canadian subsidies but, I am quoting the article and the plan, "to end Canadian subsidies within seven years".

Is this the interpretation of the Canadian Government as well of Article 1907? If it is not, will the Minister get in touch with the Americans and let them know that this U.S. objective and this U.S. plan are not acceptable to Canada?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, if the hon. gentleman opposite is going to get upset by every article he reads in an American paper between now and the end of this year, he will be in a constant state of upsetness.

Is this the basis for Question Period in this House? The hon. gentleman scans The Wall Street Journal, sees some suggested story about some purported plan by some purported, alleged Senator, that suggests that the U.S. Administration should not agree on a definition of subsidy, and he brings the matter up in the House now and expects it to take it seriously. Really!

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

PROVINCIAL JURISDICTION—FEDERAL POSITION

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, it is clear that the Americans do not like the way that economic activity is organized in Canada, or the role of the provinces. I want to ask the Minister if he can assure us that the Government of Canada will not use the trade deal or the legislation that it proposes to introduce to assert paramountcy, and effectively expropriate and take over areas in which provinces have been exercising jurisdiction and legislating in relation to industries ever since Confederation.

Mr. McDermid: You guys should know about expropriation.

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, is it not interesting to see how the Hon. Member is shocked now by the suggestion of expropriation? This is the 25 per cent backer-inner.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crosbie: They backed in and expropriated 25 per cent from all the oil and gas producers of the country, and now we see the crocodile tears dribbling down the Hon. Member's face at this suggestion.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crosbie: The Government does not propose to expropriate anything at all. It proposes to use its proper constitutional jurisdiction with respect to the treaty power and the trade and commerce power to see that this country has a national government that is able to act in those areas given to it by the Fathers of Confederation in 1867. We do not propose to intrude upon anyone else's jurisdiction whatever.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

IMMIGRATION

REFUGEE STATUS ADVISORY COMMITTEE—REVERSAL OF DECISION

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Employment and Immigration. It arises out of the case of Mr. Santokh Singh. Yesterday the Minister declared before the House that she supports the integrity of the Refugee Status Advisory Committee and the Immigration Appeal Board. Yet she knows that when three highly qualified members of the Refugee Status Advisory Committee—Mr. William Barton, Mr. Yvon Beaulne, and Dr. Ed Ziegler—unanimously found Mr. Santokh Singh to be a refugee, the Minister set aside their recommendation and replaced it with an opposite recommendation from three immigration officials who are not members of the Refugee Status Advisory Committee.

Therefore will the Minister tell this House who were these immigration officials whose recommendation she preferred to the legally constituted committee? What were their qualifications for judging refugee status?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the officials in question were officials of the Department of Immigration: Mr. Dubois, Mr. Beaupré, and Mr. Robbins, who have long experience in dealing with immigration and refugee matters.

• (1440)

REQUEST THAT COMMITTEE RECOMMENDATION BE REINSTATED

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, since the Minister claims to support the integrity of the refugee status advisory committee and of the Immigration Appeal Board, and the Minister knows that the Immigration Appeal Board has been crippled by a Federal Court decision on a very similar matter, that is, relating to the tenure of the officials on the board, will the Minister restore the credibility, at least of the Refugee Status Advisory Committee, by reinstating the original RSAC recommendation, and also by reinstating the appointments of Messrs. Barton, Beaulne and Ziegler who were discontinued after they gave their recommendation?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, what I have said that I will do, and I think that we should do, is let the process take its natural course.

Mr. Orlikow: Why didn't you do that in the first place?

Mr. Rodriguez: It is not a natural course.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Minister is answering the question. The Hon. Minister.

Mrs. McDougall: Mr. Singh has very able legal counsel who have stated that they will appeal to the Immigration Appeal Board.

The advisory committee is an advisory committee; it is just that. I do respect its integrity. All proper procedures were followed and will continue to be followed.

CSIS SECURITY CHECK

Mr. John Nunziata (York South—Weston): Mr. Speaker, this is not the first time that the Secretary of State for External Affairs has made irresponsible and unsubstantiated allegations of criminal activity by members of the Sikh community.

In his letter dated April 1, 1987, to the Minister of Immigration, the Secretary of State for External Affairs stated, and I quote: "Major Santokh Singh Bagga is wanted in India because of his suspected involvement in a conspiracy to assassinate the Indian Prime Minister and a number of other subversive activities".

Will the Solicitor General confirm that this statement by his colleague is untrue? Will he further confirm that Mr. Singh was security cleared both by the RCMP and the Canadian Security Intelligence Service?

Hon. James Kelleher (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I can advise the Hon. Member, as is usual and normal in cases where a person is applying for this status, that CSIS is requested to do a security check. I can advise the Hon.

Member that, yes, indeed, a security check was done, and was given to the relevant Ministers.

The Hon. Member knows that, for security reasons and for matters under the Privacy Act, we do not reveal the contents of those checks or make them public.

CONSPIRACY ALLEGATION

Mr. John Nunziata (York South—Weston): Mr. Speaker, I spoke to Mr. Singh about 20 minutes ago. He asked me to ask the Solicitor General to confirm that he was cleared both by the Canadian Security Intelligence Service and the Royal Canadian Mounted Police.

If that was the case, can the Solicitor General explain to Mr. Singh and to Canadians why the Secretary of State for External Affairs would allege that Mr. Singh was involved in a conspiracy to assassinate the Indian Prime Minister?

Hon. James Kelleher (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I can only repeat what I have already said. For privacy and security reasons we do not reveal the contents of security checks that are done on individuals.

Is the Hon. Member suggesting that every time we do a security check on somebody in Canada that I should rise in the House and tell the people of Canada personal information relating to that individual? Is that what the Hon. Member is suggesting?

BANKRUPTCIES

PROTECTION OF EMPLOYEES AND SUPPLIERS—REQUEST THAT LEGISLATION BE AMENDED

Mr. Jim Jepson (London East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. As the Minister knows, the bankruptcy laws are hopelessly outdated. We desperately need new laws to be brought in to protect many thousands of employees, as well as suppliers.

Can the Minister tell the House if we can hope to see some legislation brought forward to address the many shortcomings in the present legislation?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank the Hon. Member for his question and for his continuing interest in this very important subject.

I am very hopeful that I will be able to introduce legislation in this session. It rather depends upon the ability to gain the co-operation of the opposition Parties in dealing with the legislative program of the Government.

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): Put it on today, this afternoon.

Mr. Andre: I would be pleased to join with the Hon. Member in talking to the New Democratic Party to see if we can get them to act responsibly, and perhaps we will have an opportunity to make corrections to the Bankruptcy Act.

HEALTH

PULP MILL OUTFALLS—DIOXIN LEVELS IN CRABS

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Hon. Minister of Health and Welfare. When it comes to dioxins the Conservative Government takes the same position as Ronald Reagan does on acid rain, lots of studies but no action.

While a 20-part-per-trillion tolerance has been established for 2378 TCDD, tests conducted near the outfalls of B.C. pulp mills have shown alarming levels of dioxins in crabs and oysters far above that level of tolerance.

Why has the Government not put a complete ban on all crab fishing near pulp mill outflows when dioxin levels up to 24,968 parts per trillion have been found in the hepato-pancreas of crabs, and when the Minister knows that many people consider the hepato-pancreas a delicacy?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I think the Hon. Member has to be a little careful in making certain statements as if they are facts.

The release that was issued yesterday on behalf of the Government, and two of my colleagues, very clear states the type of sampling that was done, and the type of sampling that will continue. I would direct the attention of the Hon. Member to the backgrounder which I think is accurate.

In respect of the dungeness crab, I asked very clearly whether there were people who were using the pancreas for purposes of their own food supply. I say to the Hon. Member that the edible parts of the crab, also included in the backgrounder, were well within the tolerance levels. I still wish to have sampling done even beyond that.

For the Hon. Member to say that some of the intestinal tract will not have certain dioxins or other toxins in it, and to make that statement as he did, is obviously stating a fact that all of us know. That is why, if the Hon. Member looks at this background paper, he will find that is why we made it the way we did.

Additionally, I asked yesterday if there were Vietnamese communities eating the pancreas and that is also being checked out further.

Mr. Manly: I think the Minister illustrates the problem. Things are being checked out and there is a real and present danger there.

EXAMPLE SET BY SWEDISH PULP MILLS

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Minister of the Environment. The alarming nature of dioxin levels can be seen by the fact that at Crofton there is a three-fold increase in dioxin levels in the eggs of the blue heron, and not one egg hatched last year out of 57 active nests.

What is Canada doing to follow the example of Sweden where the great majority of pulp mills have cut dioxin levels by up to 80 per cent, and where people are encouraged to use unbleached and semi-bleached paper products in an attempt to cut down on the use of chlorine in pulp mills and dioxin contamination in the environment?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, on that point also, if the Hon. Member had read the material that was prepared yesterday, he would find that with chlorine bleach if we move toward the oxygen method, while that reduces the dioxins by approximately 50 per cent, it does not eliminate them.

If the Hon. Member looks at the action plan in the paper to cover further sampling to see what other action can be taken by the Government of Canada in respect to protection, that is the issue that has to be dealt with.

I would suggest to the Hon. Member that, when he rises and makes statements, he make them on facts, rather than the type of impression he was attempting to leave in the House today.

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES FREE TRADE AGREEMENT—
CANADIAN STEEL EXPORTS

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of International Trade. Yesterday, David Hawley, an official of Inland Steel in Chicago, told a conference in Toronto that the United States steel industry is withholding its support for the free trade agreement, and it is pressing for a formal restraint agreement to limit Canadian steel exports to the United States in spite of the free trade agreement.

• (1450)

Can the Minister advise the House if the United States Government has asked for a formal restraint agreement on steel exports from Canada? What guarantee can the Minister give to Canadian steel producers that there will not be a formal restraint agreement to restrict Canadian exports of steel as a result of pressures from the United States Government?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I received no request for such action to be taken. It is well known, however, that the Canadian steel industry is extremely efficient and productive and that it will be one of the greatest beneficiaries of the U.S.-Canada Free Trade Agreement. That is why, when I spoke in Hamilton yesterday, many illustrious members of the industry were present at the meeting to applaud heartily whenever I spoke positively about the U.S.-Canada Free Trade Agreement.

Ms. Copps: You weren't applauded in Hamilton, so disabuse yourself of that notion.

Mr. Crosbie: I missed the hon. lady's comment, but I could have heard her voice in Hamilton yesterday had she been speaking here in the House.

One of the main reasons for the U.S.-Canada Free Trade Agreement is to be protected from such suggestions of U.S. figures as we will be—

Mr. Benjamin: We are not; we are not.

Mr. Crosbie: —when the U.S.-Canada Free Trade Agreement takes effect. Please read the agreement, Mr. Benjamin.

UNITED STATES OFFICIALS' COMPLAINTS

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, yesterday United States officials also complained about the subsidies provided to Sysco steel, and the countervail duty and the dumping duty provisions of the free trade agreement. Since the U.S. will still be free to use the countervail duty and dumping duties against Canadian steel exporters, does this not really make a sham of the whole agreement?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, we export steel and steel products to the United States and they export steel and steel products to Canada. We have an extremely efficient industry. Last year when the Americans introduced their voluntary program, we were exempted from it.

Twenty countries were supplying steel products to the United States. They negotiated voluntary restraint arrangements with 20 countries and we were exempted because of the integrated and mutually beneficial nature of the two-way trade in steel between Canada and the U.S., and because Canadian steel exports were found to be fairly traded. That has not changed. Thank God, when we have the Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement in place, we will have all the protection we need for products that are fairly traded.

CONSUMER AFFAIRS

CHRYSLER CORPORATION—FALSIFICATION OF ODOMETERS IN CERTAIN CARS—MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs.

Last August, the former president of the Automobile Protection Association, Phil Edmonston, wrote to the Minister about the offer made by Chrysler. The company intended to offer compensation to 6,000 Canadians who purchased a demonstration model.

In a letter dated August 22, the Minister answered, and I quote: "The falsification of odometers is also a criminal offence under the federal Weights and Measures Act". The Minister added: "The matter has been referred to the Solicitor General who is responsible for enforcement of the legislation".

What has been done about this matter? Have charges been laid to protect consumers?

[English]

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I gather Mr. Edmonston has received his nomination for the New Democratic Party, has he?

If the Hon. Member wants the kind of details for which he has asked, he should give me some warning that he will ask for that. I will look into the questions he has raised and get back to him.

REQUEST THAT CORPORATION BE PROSECUTED

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, the Minister responded that Chrysler indeed had broken the weights and measures law regarding the disconnecting of the Chrysler odometers. There are 6,000 Canadian consumers who have not been compensated by Chrysler. In the United States, Chrysler has been prosecuted. Will the Minister stand up for Canadian consumers and prosecute Chrysler, and ensure that Canadian consumers get a deal?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I have replied, and I repeat I will look into the matter and get back to the Hon. Member.

HEALTH

AIDS DISEASE—ADVISORY COMMITTEE

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Almost two years ago he said on the subject of AIDS that "Canadians are concerned about this dreaded disease and expect their Government to take action". How can he explain then why his own advisory committee on AIDS has not met for six months and why, according to the director of the centre, there are no meetings scheduled in the near future? Why is it that the federal Centre for AIDS, established with much fanfare when the Minister made his original announcement, is now running on overdraft because there is no money for an operating budget?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, first, the term used by the Hon. Member, "overdraft", is not the case. That is not a word that describes in any way the situation with the federal Centre for AIDS. As she knows, the Government came forward with $39 million for a five-year program.

The second point she made was that the national advisory committee did not meet for six months. Today I asked the Deputy Minister to check it out, and she said very clearly to me that, if a meeting had been called, the money would have been there for them to have a meeting.

FEDERAL FUNDING

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, again the Minister is misleading on both counts. My office spoke this morning to his appointed director, Dr. Alastair Clayton, who said that there were no meetings scheduled in the near future, and in fact it was a member of the advisory committee, Kate Hentchen from the Montreal General Hospital, who advised me specifically today that the federal Centre for AIDS has run out of funding and is operating on overdraft. It has no money for any more meetings and there are no meetings scheduled, according to the director of the centre. How can the Minister claim that he is doing everything possible when the bodies involved cannot even meet together to discuss this extremely serious issue?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I already answered the first question so that answer stands. Second, I have also said quite publicly that the Government is considering additional initiatives on the matter of combating AIDS, including public education, and that announcement will be made in due time.

CANADA-NOVA SCOTIA OFFSHORE FUND

USE OF MONEYS

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources and concerns the Canada-Nova Scotia Offshore Fund. I am sure the Minister is now aware that the Auditor General is investigating some of the management and spending practices regarding moneys from that fund.

Some $2 million of the Offshore Fund has now been funnelled through the City of Dartmouth into the hands of a private developer called Portland Estates to pay for the sewer costs of this private development. Does the Minister think it is appropriate to use funds from the Offshore Fund to pay the sewer costs of a private development when the terms of reference of that fund are to provide the moneys for infrastructure costs related to resource activity in the offshore? Is that an appropriate use of the fund? Is it an appropriate use of taxpayers' money to pay the sewer costs of a private developer?

[Translation]

Hon. Marcel Masse (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, two years ago, the Government of Canada signed an agreement with the Government of Nova Scotia, providing for a development fund to help the people and the private and public sector in Nova Scotia take advantage of offshore development.

These agreements are governed by an accord between the Government of Canada and Nova Scotia. The projects have been submitted to the respective committees, Mr. Speaker, and the Auditor General is examining the situation, and we will comment as soon as the results are known.

[English]

AUDITOR GENERAL'S INVESTIGATION

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Mr. Speaker, I remind the Minister that there is now an Auditor General's investigation into this matter, and I would like to inform him that the private developer in question is a Mr. Allan Stockall, the fellow who received some $2 million to defray sewer costs.

• (1500)

Is the Minister aware that Mr. Stockall contributed some $1,500 to the Conservative Party in 1984, and some $1,500 to the Conservative Party in 1985? As the Minister responsible, does he justify this kind of expenditure of the taxpayers' money when the main beneficiary is a high-ranking Nova Scotia Tory, a private developer for whom sewer costs are being paid, when that money should be going toward the costs of offshore development for the people of Nova Scotia? Does he justify that?

[Translation]

Hon. Marcel Masse (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I do not think Canada has a law preventing citizens from contributing to political parties. Furthermore, I am not in the habit of checking whether contributions were made before approving a project proposed by the Government of Nova Scotia.

HEALTH

AIDS DISEASE—FUNDING FOR RESEARCH

Mr. David Berger (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. In 1985 and 1986 the Health and Welfare Committee of this House heard from pretty solid witnesses, like Dr. Phil Gold, the physician in chief of the Montreal General Hospital, who told us that we were spending "about one-tenth of what we should be spending for AIDS research".

On the basis of this testimony and testimony similar to that, the Health and Welfare Committee of this House recommended substantial funding for AIDS research.

Why is it that two years later the Government still has not provided adequate funding for AIDS research in Canada? When will it do so?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member refers to the committee report as well as reports that I have received, including from Dr. Gold, Dr. Gilmore and others. When we came in with the initial program of $39 million I said at that time that, if that was not enough, I would go back to my Cabinet colleagues on it.

The report of the committee said pretty well the same thing that additional money was needed.

It was that response, and the Royal Society's report, which we asked to have done and for which we paid $250,000, which have given us a broad ranging view of the various aspects of the AIDS illness. It was from all of those recommendations that I made recommendations to the Government. In response to the Hon. Member, as I responded to his colleague earlier, the answer stands as to the announcement.

Mr. Berger: Mr. Speaker, I thank the Minister for his answer, but I remind him that the funding he provided for research was substantially less than that recommended by the Health and Welfare Committee of this House and again substantially less than the kinds of sums mentioned by people like Dr. Phil Gold.

GOVERNMENT PRIORITIES

Mr. David Berger (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Prime Minister. What kind of priorities has he set for his Government and for this country when he can find billions of dollars for nuclear submarines but has difficulty coming up with a few millions for research into a problem such as AIDS? Why is it mega-bucks for subs but peanuts for AIDS research?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I think my hon. friend has been misled. As he may remember, one of our first initiatives was on behalf of spousal allowances benefiting Canadians between the ages of 60 and 64. We have moved on social policy to child care.

On the social side of the ledger we have attempted—

Ms. Mitchell: Two years ago you made a commitment and you have done nothing about it.

Mr. Mulroney: On the social side of the ledger, be it from the spousal allowance to child care—

Ms. Copps: What are you talking about?

Mr. Mulroney: —the Government has made a very significant effort. There is a special problem—

Mr. Ouellet: Answer the question. Do you know what the question is?

Some Hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Mulroney: A special problem has arisen with respect to the AIDS infection—

An Hon. Member: Sit down!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. Could Hon. Members allow the Prime Minister to answer the question, please.

Mr. Mulroney: Mr. Speaker, what is particularly regrettable about the intervention of the Hon. Member for Papineau is that he comes once a month to the House of Commons. I would have thought he would do a little better.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Mulroney: The issue raised by—

[Translation]

Mr. Rossi: You're out of your depth!

[English]

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Rossi, we are going to put the police on you.

Mr. Rossi: Okay, stupid.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

[Translation]

Mr. Mulroney: Carlo, just a minute, please!

[English]

My hon. friend raises a very sensitive and important national issue, Mr. Speaker. The AIDS problem deserves the highest attention not only by this Parliament but by Governments, agencies, and research institutions across Canada. We have committed large amounts of funds to this matter. The Minister of National Health and Welfare has indicated a number of times that if those funds are insufficient he will return to his Cabinet colleagues for further funding.

Ms. Copps: He already has.

Mr. Mulroney: He has already done that. He is in the process of bringing forth more initiatives that we believe will be of great benefit to Canada in its pursuit of a solution to this very, very challenging, very sad, human problem. I hope my hon. friend will agree with the approach of the Government in this regard.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of State and Minister of State (Treasury Board)): Mr. Speaker, earlier this morning there was an agreement among the Parties to revert to Motions at this time in order that I could put the following motion which has been discussed with the House Leaders of the two opposition Parties and the independent Members of the House. I move:

That consideration of the motion of the Minister of Justice—

Mr. Gauthier: The Member has to have unanimous consent. I do not want to be operating outside of the rules.

[Translation]

Mr. Gauthier (Ottawa-Vanier): Mr. Speaker, on a point of order.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier), on a point of order.

[English]

Mr. Gauthier (Ottawa-Vanier): Mr. Speaker, I just want to clarify the situation. I was here this morning. We gave unanimous consent but it was not sought by the Chair. I would just like the Chair to make sure the rules are followed, that is, unanimous consent be put at this time to revert to Routine Proceedings. I think that we should operate under the rules.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is there unanimous consent to revert to Motions at this time?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

DISPOSITION OF CONSTITUTION AMENDMENT, 1987

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of State and Minister of State (Treasury Board)): Mr. Speaker, there has been discussion among the Parties and I think you will find there is unanimous consent for the following motion. I move:

That consideration of the motion of the Minister of Justice for amendments to the Constitution of Canada (Government Orders, Government Business, Number 23) shall be conducted as follows;

(1) No later than 6:00 p.m. on Tuesday, May 17, 1988, the Leader of the Opposition and the Leader of the New Democratic Party, or a Member of their respective Parties acting on their behalf, may each give notice of a motion incorporating amendments described in addendum A and B, respectively, of the report of the Special Joint Committee on the 1987 Constitutional Accord, tabled in the House on September 21, 1987, and, when the said Government Order is taken up on a subsequent sitting day, the Speaker shall, after the main motion is proposed, notwithstanding any Standing Order or usual practice, declare these motions to have been duly moved and seconded;

(2) No later than 6:00 p.m. on Wednesday, May 18, 1988, other Members may give notice of amendments substantively different from those of which notice has been given pursuant to Section (1) of this Order, and when the said Government Order is taken up on a subsequent sitting day, the Speaker may declare these motions to have been duly moved and seconded;

(3) No amendment shall be permitted other than as provided for by Sections (1) and (2) of this Order;

(4) During the debate on the said Government Order, and any amendments thereto, no Member may speak more than once;

(5) At the conclusion of debate on the said Government Order, the Speaker shall put forthwith and successively, without further debate or amendment, all of the questions necessary to dispose of all of the proposed amendments and of the Main Motion, as amended or not amended, as the case may be, in the following order:

(I) The motion proposed by the Leader of the Opposition or a Member acting on his behalf pursuant to Section (1) of this Order;

(II) The motion proposed by the Leader of the New Democratic Party or a Member acting on his behalf pursuant to Section (1) of this Order;

(III) Any motion proposed pursuant to Section (2) of this Order;

(IV) The Main Motion;

(6) For the purposes of this Order, a Whip may request a deferred vote on all questions set out in Section (5) of this Order for 48 hours.

(7) During consideration of this Government Order, the provisions of Standing 9(4) shall not apply.

• (1510)

I might advise the House before you put the motion, Mr. Speaker, that this has been discussed with all Parties. This is exactly the same order used when the debate ensued last fall. I would also advise that we intend to start the debate on this question on Thursday of this week. I will also formally advise the House that tomorrow will be an allotted day.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Does the Hon. Minister have unanimous consent of the House to move the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The House has heard the terms of the motion. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

POINT OF ORDER

WITHDRAWAL OF UNPARLIAMENTARY LANGUAGE

Mr. Jack Shields (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, during Question Period today my friend from Vancouver—Kingsway accused the Minister for International Trade of lying. I am sure he would want to withdraw that statement.

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver—Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, yes, I did. It is unparliamentary for me to call the Minister for International Trade a liar and I therefore withdraw that unconditionally. I would express the hope that the Minister would show some integrity—

Some Hon. Members: Order!

Mr. Waddell: —and look at the votes on the National Energy Program where my friend and I both voted against the provisions of the NEP. I wish the Hon. Member would tell the Minister that so the Minister is informed.

I unconditionally withdraw, and express the hope that my good friend over there will talk to the Minister and inform him so he is not ignorant about these matters.

Mr. Shields: Mr. Speaker, I would ask the Hon. Member to read his own speeches where he implied that the NEP did not go far enough and that we should go after one of the big boys like Imperial Oil and nationalize it. It is clear that the NDP voted against the policy but only because it did not go far enough.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: On another point of order, the Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap (Mr. Riis).

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, I will try something totally different from the point made by the Hon. Member for Athabasca (Mr. Shields). I would like simply to say that we appreciate the co-operation offered by my friend, the House Leader for the Official Opposition, as well as the Deputy Government House Leader in negotiating today's special order. I appreciate their co-operation.

CAPE BRETON DEVELOPMENT CORPORATION ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. de Cotret that Bill C-127, an Act to amend the Cape Breton Development Corporation Act, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, I want to take this opportunity to say a few words about Bill C-127 which will increase the present working capital provision of DEVCO from $25 million annually to $50 million annually. We in this Party have no problem with that.

Mr. Lewis: Let's vote on it then.

Mr. Rodriguez: We will support it and vote for it in due course, brother. I want to take this opportunity to say a few things about DEVCO and just where the Government is headed in Cape Breton with DEVCO.

There was a time when the DEVCO workforce was up around 6,500 employees. That was in 1965. Over the years the workforce has been eroded to 3,400 employees at present.

DEVCO had two arms. There was the coal mining arm and the industrial development division. That concept placed DEVCO in the picture of economic development in Cape Breton. In fact, DEVCO not only dealt with the coal mining operations on the island, it was also plugged into the diversification of the economy of Cape Breton. That seemed to be a proper approach.

What has happened now, of course, is that the Government established ACOA. The industrial development division of DEVCO has been put into Enterprise Cape Breton and it will now go under ACOA. ACOA will be administered by a Minister whose head office is here in Ottawa. The headquarters of ACOA will be in Moncton, New Brunswick. However, the major decision-making will be centralized here in Ottawa. DEVCO will simply be the coal mining operation.

At present there are three coal mines under the jurisdiction of DEVCO that need development work. We know the Government inherited DEVCO from the private sector. It was originally DOSCOE. The private sector could not make enough money. It never really invested in modernization of the operation and so the company left the shores of Cape Breton. The Government of the day had to save the jobs and avert disaster in Cape Breton. That is how it inherited DEVCO. It was not a planned initiative by the Government to enter the market-place. There was no planning to it. It was the private sector defaulting on its responsibility to the community, not living up to its social responsibility in Cape Breton, and pulling out. Like so many other Crown corporations, it is a history of the failure of the private sector, and the inability of Governments to hold the private sector responsible for their actions in a community. That is the history of DEVCO and it is now being sheared off and set up.

The question which the people of Cape Breton, the workers at DEVCO, have in their minds is: What is the long-term aim of the Government? What is the agenda?

Mr. Heap: Does it have one?

Mr. Rodriguez: It has. Every time the Government says it is not going to do something, it is going to do it. It said it was not going to privatize Air Canada, and we know what happened. The Government's "no" means "yes".

In this particular case the Government said it has no intention of selling off DEVCO to the private sector. We know that is the hidden agenda, and the people of Cape Breton are concerned. The workers at DEVCO are concerned. They know that there is a private operator in Pictou County called Westray. They are establishing a coal mine operation in Pictou County, Nova Scotia. The people of Cape Breton are concerned about what will happen once Westray is established. Of course they have probably already approached ACOA hats in hands for some hand-outs. I understand it is $75 million. You notice how these capitalists operate? They are all against government involvement in business. They want nothing to do with that. They want no regulations. They want governments off their backs. I hear it all the time. They condemn people who are on welfare. The John Bullochs of this world are all against the unemployment insurance program and our other social programs. They say they are disincentives to work.

• (1520)

However, why is it not a disincentive for the Corporation to go hat in hand to the Government for a $75 million hand-out? That is what is happening. They have a proposal before ACOA for $75 million. Therefore, on the one hand the Government will fund the establishment of coal mines in Pictou County in Nova Scotia while, on the other hand, setting DEVCO up by sharing it off and leaving it in left field.

We can see what will happen. DEVCO will be squeezed, it will not be advanced the money it needs to develop its mines. There will be no marketing for its coal and no money for research and development.

Mr. Forrestall: Nonsense.

Mr. Rodriguez: DEVCO has a very interesting experimental program under way called carbogel. It is still in its early stages. It is a coal and water process to develop energy, a liquefaction program. It is funded to the tune of $1 million or $2 million a year out of DEVCO. It seems to me that the Government will not give DEVCO the funds it needs. It will fund this other operation in another part of Nova Scotia, and eventually you will see that once the workforce of DEVCO has been cut back and DEVCO has been made profitable the Government will allow DEVCO to be bought out. I have no doubt that Westray may very well be the company which eventually takes over DEVCO.

These are the concerns that the people of Cape Breton have. When we get into Committee of the Whole we are going to try to get a commitment from the Government with respect to the long-term prospects for DEVCO. For example, is the Government prepared to forbid any more lay-offs and allow an attrition process to take place? Is it prepared to make a commitment that DEVCO will in fact become more aggressive in terms of finding new markets for its coal? Is it going to give a commitment that it will not allow this new company in Pictou County, which the Government is going to fund with taxpayers' money, to raid the major customer of DEVCO, the Nova Scotia Power Corporation? Is it prepared to make those commitments? Those are the kinds of things we are looking for.

In fact, the Government owes it to the people of Cape Breton to ensure that their major coal mining operation enterprise, DEVCO, is not destroyed, is not sold off to the private sector which will eventually close it out. When the Government is questioned, then it will say that those decisions are taken in the private sector and it has no responsibility for them.

The downsizing of DEVCO, the future of DEVCO, a commitment from the Government with respect to the funding of DEVCO, its expansion and its marketing are the issues we will seek to have clarified in Committee of the Whole. As I said, we are going to support the Bill, but we are gravely concerned, as are the workers and people of Cape Breton, about the future of DEVCO.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Forrestall: Mr. Speaker, before you put the question, I suggest that, were you to seek the unanimous consent of the House you might find agreement to deal with this matter in Committee of the Whole. At a later stage I may ask for unanimous consent for third reading.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is there unanimous consent that the Bill proceed to Committee of the Whole?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the second time and, by unanimous consent, the House went into committee thereon, Mr. Danis in the Chair.

The Chairman: Order. House in Committee of the Whole on Bill C-127, an Act to amend the Cape Breton Development Corporation Act.

Shall Clause 1 carry?

On Clause 1—Advances to Corporation for working capital

Mr. Rodriguez: Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the Minister responsible what the Government's intention is with respect to DEVCO. Is it the intention of the Government to allow the company to shrink, to allow the workforce to shrink, and eventually to phase out or sell the company? What is the Government's intention?

Mr. Forrestall: Mr. Chairman, the hon. gentleman's question is appreciated and quite legitimate. It is a matter of some regret that the Member was not here when I spoke earlier in the day. At the very outset of my general remarks earlier today I indicated that there were two matters I wanted to address. The first was the nature of the amendment and the underlying history behind it.

Second, and most important, in a most positive vein, this amendment, as well as dealing with the commitment with respect to cash flow, is also a long-term commitment to the future of coal mining in Cape Breton. The Government has no intention now or in the foreseeable future of abandoning DEVCO. I can give that undertaking with complete assurances.

Mr. Rodriguez: Perhaps we can be a little more specific. Can the Parliamentary Secretary give a commitment that the workforce at DEVCO will not be shrunk through lay-offs but that any process to reduce the workforce would be through attrition rather than lay-offs?

Mr. Forrestall: Mr. Chairman, the Hon. Member will be aware that in large measure the downsizing of DEVCO is as much a product of the productivity of the miners. It is, second, a consequence of the new mine with state of the art mining procedures and processes. There are 650 to 700 people employed there.

As good an indication as I can give to the Hon. Member may be that DEVCO has increased from a $7 million or $8 million corporation to one approaching a $500 million business. That alone speaks with certainty of the future.

• (1530)

The Hon. Member knows that I am not in a position to give undying assurances. I can suggest to him, however, that the workforce has been downsized but should now grow with the growth of the coal industry in Cape Breton Island.

Mr. MacLellan: Mr. Chairman, I rather take exception to something the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary said with respect to the productivity of the workforce of the Cape Breton Development Corporation. The workforce of the Cape Breton Development Corporation has one of the finest productivity rates in Canada. If there is a problem with DEVCO, it is the lack of concerted effort by the Government to have a strong management team.

The Hon. Parliamentary Secretary will admit that we have gone for months without a president of the Cape Breton Development Corporation, for no real good reason other than the federal Government has refused to appoint one. A president and chief executive officer for a Crown corporation is very important. When will the Government deem it fit to appoint a president?

Mr. Forrestall: Mr. Chairman, let me assure the Member that I was making no derogatory comments on the productivity of Cape Breton coal miners. It is quite the opposite. I was saying that it was due to their productivity that built-in efficiencies have occurred so that this year DEVCO will show an operating profit. It still has a couple of years in its plan, but at the end of the cycle when Phelan is fully operational and efficiencies of the new processes are working at their maximum, the question of productivity or lower numbers will not even come into question. Indeed, it should grow.

The Government hoped that the new president could have been named some time ago. I can only give the Member the assurance that when he hears the news, perhaps as early as next week, he will be relatively pleased.

Mr. Dingwall: Mr. Chairman, will the Parliamentary Secretary confirm or deny that in the next seven days Mr. Ernest Boutiler, the current President of Sydney Steel Corporation, will be appointed president and chief executive officer of the Cape Breton Development Corporation?

Mr. Forrestall: Mr. Chairman, Mr. Boutiler will be pleased to hear those comments by the Member for Cape Breton—East Richmond. I am not sure whether it will come as a surprise to him or not.

Mr. Dingwall: Mr. Chairman, is the Parliamentary Secretary confirming his appointment here today?

Mr. Forrestall: Of course not. Perhaps he is a candidate himself, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Dingwall: Mr. Chairman, the Parliamentary Secretary is well aware that documents have been provided to the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency, the Government of Canada and particularly the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion (Mr. de Cotret) with regard to the position of the Cape Breton Development Corporation concerning the funding of a coal mine in Pictou County. I tabled those documents in the House some time ago.

Will the Parliamentary Secretary give an undertaking to the House, since we are dealing with this federal Crown corporation, to provide to Members who are interested, including myself and the Member for Cape Breton—The Sydneys and the Member for Nickel Belt, all the information from the Government of Nova Scotia suggesting that a new coal mine in Pictou County will in no way compete with the Cape Breton Development Corporation?

A submission was made by the Government of Nova Scotia regarding this particular matter. In the spirit of openness and the spirit in which this Bill is being passed today, will the Parliamentary Secretary provide that information and all other information which the Government of Canada and the Government of Nova Scotia have on this new coal mine in Pictou County.

Mr. Forrestall: Mr. Chairman, I think the distinguished Member is very aware that it would be quite inappropriate for me to give that kind of undertaking. However, I would be pleased to make available to the hon. gentleman that which he can get by a phone call himself, which is the information that the province is quite prepared to release at this point in time with respect to Westray and the Pictou area. That matter is under very active consideration now and no decision has been made with respect to it.

Mr. Rodriguez: Mr. Chairman, this whole Westray operation is very interesting. I recall when the uranium industry was being started in Elliot Lake. Stephen Roman, who owned Denison Mines, began that mining operation. In order that the mining magnate could develop the mine and assure income, governments were quite willing to guarantee the price for uranium. In fact, they guaranteed the price for uranium, guaranteed contracts and the length of the contract. For example, Ontario Hydro helped make the Roman empire.

DEVCO's major customer is the Nova Scotia Power Corporation. Some 60 per cent of the coal mined by DEVCO goes to Nova Scotia Power Corporation. Has the Government made any attempt to ensure that there is a long term 30-year contract for coal delivery to Nova Scotia Power Corporation, similar to what Ontario Hydro had with Denison Mines? Has there been any attempt by the Government to secure that market for DEVCO and at least give some assurance to the workers that their jobs will be protected for the future?

Mr. Forrestall: Mr. Chairman, it would be very difficult to respond to the Member's question in detail. The phenomenal growth of DEVCO, from the concept of a Crown corporation established not only to downsize but phase out coal mining, from a $7 million entity a few short years ago into a half billion dollar enterprise today would suggest that any government would want to carry on that kind of phenomenal growth.

It is the stated intention of the Province of Nova Scotia to move away from dependency on imported oil and into coal. Indeed, the present Government of Nova Scotia intends to generate excess capacity for hopeful sales to New England states.

The coal industry in Nova Scotia is very vital to the provincial government and is crucial to this Government's long term economic planning.

Mr. Rodriguez: Mr. Chairman, this is the concern of the people of Cape Breton and the workers in those mines. I think it is incumbent upon the Government to clear up some of the rumours and some of these concerns with respect to the opening up of the coal mine in Pictou County. The workers and the people in Cape Breton are concerned that the Government is going to put up money for Westray to open a new mine for coal and that coal is going to be supplied to the Nova Scotia Power Corporation and obviously there will be some cutbacks to the coal from DEVCO. I think it is incumbent on the Parliamentary Secretary to give assurance to the people of Cape Breton that whatever is done with respect to Pictou County and ACOA that it will not interfere with the coal contracts that are now in existence between the Nova Scotia Power Corporation and DEVCO.

• (1540)

That is the foundation of DEVCO's present existence. Sixty per cent of its production goes there. God knows, it has been a declining production over the years. Surely, we are not going to let happen to DEVCO what we let happen to Sysco with respect to the production of railway lines.

Mr. Forrestall: Again, Mr. Chairman, I can only repeat to the Hon. Member that the coal production forecasts are for some 4.6 million tonnes within the next couple of years. That does not seem to me to be a negative thing. It seems a very positive thing. The people responsible for DEVCO will have to ensure that any further development in the coal area in Nova Scotia is not incompatible one with the other. Neither the Government of the Province of Nova Scotia nor the present federal Government is in the business of putting people out of work. That is not our role. I am sure it is not one the Hon. Member would support.

I think what I am saying is that on any development with respect to Westray, I am sure the consideration being given to that development is based in no small measure on that compatibility. I am a little more positive than the Hon. Member. He has some scepticism with respect to the future of the employees of DEVCO, but I do not. I have great faith in the future of coal and the development of coal mining in the Province of Nova Scotia. I have absolute faith in the capacity of DEVCO to find that type of market.

As I mentioned earlier today, DEVCO and the federal Government have in place a series of talks dealing just exactly with the concerns raised by the Hon. Member with respect to finding new long term sales opportunities.

Mr. Dingwall: On that note, I would like to ask the Parliamentary Secretary if he can confirm today whether or not the mandate for the Cape Breton Development Corporation has been changed in view of the statements made by the previous Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources when she indicated very clearly that DEVCO was not to be in the business of exporting its coal abroad. Could the Parliamentary Secretary confirm to the House that that direction is no longer being given to the Cape Breton Development Corporation?

Mr. Forrestall: Mr. Chairman, I think I can put to rest the Member's fears. When I talk about finding long-term markets, I am talking about the long term markets that will derive from the value added to that coal, and that is in the generation of electricity.

Mr. Dingwall: The Parliamentary Secretary is very clear by his answer that internationally there will not be a thrust in terms of the exporting of coal, but let me ask him another question with respect to the health services program at the Cape Breton Development Corporation. Will the Parliamentary Secretary indicate to the House why senior management, either at the behest or the direction of the Government of Canada, is attempting to delude the health services program at the Cape Breton Development Corporation, thereby reducing the number of nurses at the various stations throughout the Cape Breton Development Corporation. At one point in time it was in the position of seriously doing away with the employee assistance program. However, I am now informed it is not proceeding on that but it is proceeding with respect to downsizing the number of nurses at the Cape Breton Development Corporation. Could the Parliamentary Secretary indicate whether or not the Government has plans to change this regressive direction?

Mr. Forrestall: Mr. Chairman, I must apologize to the Hon. Member. I do not have the answer to that question. It would come as somewhat of a surprise to me if there is a downsizing of nurses as suggested by the Hon. Member. I would undertake to the Hon. Member to find the answer to that question and provide it to him at a later date.

Mr. Dingwall: Mr. Chairman, with respect to the continuous service aspect for pre-retirement leave, the Parliamentary Secretary will appreciate that coal miners at the Cape Breton Development Corporation are entitled to what they call a compassionate disability leave. Under the compassionate disability, one of the things written into the collective agreement is that one must have x number of continuous years of service. However, about two years ago the Government of Canada came with an early retirement incentive plan to provide older miners who worked in the coal industry an opportunity for pre-retirement. It was very clearly spelled out what the conditions were. The conditions were different from that of compassionate disability in that members did not need to have x number of years of continuous service with respect to the early incentive retirement plan at the Cape Breton Development Corporation. Coupled with the fact that the Supreme Court of Nova Scotia adjudicated clearly and convincingly that if continuous service is not spelled out in the collective agreement and/or the agreement reached with the Government of Canada, management then does not have the discretion to say one must have continuous service. I wonder if the Parliamentary Secretary would care to comment on that situation. There are a large number of individuals who could in effect go on pre-retirement early leave if the continuous service argument was not applicable, as it should not be applicable with respect to that incentive program.

Mr. Forrestall: Again, Mr. Chairman, I am sure the Hon. Member will appreciate my necessary response. It would be quite inappropriate for me to comment on a matter of internal responsibility such as that. Let me assure the Hon. Member that the situation is being watched very closely and his comments are not lost.

Mr. Dingwall: Mr. Chairman, I appreciate the sensitivity of the Parliamentary Secretary to these issues. Another issue which is of burning significance to a great number of employees at the Cape Breton Development Corporation is what is known as PRL, Pre-Retirement Leave which took place back in the early 1970s. I am glad to see the Minister of National Health and Welfare has entered the House. He might want to participate in the debate since it concerns pension and pension reform. On the pre-retirement leave plan of some years ago, individuals who went on pre-retirement leave then and now, some 15 years or 16 years, have had to pay unemployment insurance premiums when in fact they could never and will never be able to collect unemployment insurance. But they must pay the unemployment insurance premiums. The unfairness and discriminatory aspects of that is that other individuals who are on pre-retirement leave, compassionate disability, and so on, do not have to pay unemployment insurance premiums.

There has been a hassle between the senior management of the Cape Breton Development Corporation and the Government of Canada as to whether they want to change that, for example, having some 267 people not pay unemployment insurance premiums any longer. I suggest with great respect that it is not a lot of money to the Government but it is a lot of money to those individuals who are on a fixed limited income.

• (1550)

I would ask the Parliamentary Secretary if he would give due consideration to those concerns to see whether or not he and the Government would be prepared to change that regressive aspect of the employee relations at the Cape Breton Development Corporation.

Mr. Forrestall: The representations are very sensibly given. I take them as such. I would be very pleased to pursue them.

Again, I must say that apart from the principle that is involved, which I do not find myself in any serious disagreement with, the matter is still very much in the jurisdiction of the corporation itself. It would be somewhat inappropriate to try to respond in a major policy way with respect to that particular question. However, I am sensitive to it.

Mr. Dingwall: Mr. Chairman, there are other issues of equal importance. However, again, I raise them for the benefit of the Parliamentary Secretary.

Some 600 individuals were not tested at the Cape Breton Development Corporation, people who made claims to the effect that they had serious hearing loss as a result of employment at the corporation. Management in its wisdom decided that in order to adjudicate, to provide some degree of fairness and to expedite those claims that it would take a number of the tests with specialists. These were local specialists. There were also specialists involved from Halifax. The management talked to Compensation officials, its doctors and what have you. It felt that it would be in a position to adjudicate those various claims.

I want to ask the Parliamentary Secretary through you, Mr. Chairman, this question. In view of the large number of hearing loss claims at Cape Breton Development Corporation, and in view of the fact that these men in many instances are one mile down, or six or seven miles underneath the ocean mining coal, and due to the fact that the new machinery has a noise volume which is rather excessive to say the least, will the Parliamentary Secretary undertake to once again look at this situation and try to have the Government adjudicate it in order to resolve these matters in an expeditious way?

I say to the Hon. Member that many of these individuals are being told by senior management people that they will have to wait not one day, not two weeks, not three weeks, not one month, but maybe five years before their claim can be adjudicated. I would ask that the Parliamentary Secretary, with due sensitivity to those concerns, respond in perhaps a positive light.

Mr. Forrestall: For the sake of those involved, I trust that the Hon. Member is not exaggerating. I have not heard any suggestion that they might have to wait up to five years. However, his representation is one that I will bring forcibly to the attention of the Minister at the earliest possible opportunity.

Mr. Dingwall: My final question, Mr. Chairman, to the Parliamentary Secretary goes back to the initial question with regard to the new coal mine in Pictou County. The Parliamentary Secretary, with his many years of experience, was able to respond that he would provide information. I understand that this is information that the Department has on file with regard to this particular matter. I sincerely ask the Parliamentary Secretary to provide expeditiously, not information which is of a confidential nature in terms of cash flow of the particular company—we are not specifically after that—but the thinking, the rationale and the full explanations that have been given to the Government of Canada, not only by senior management of the Cape Breton Development Corporation but, indeed, by the Premier's office, and the Nova Scotia Power Corporation with respect to what they are saying with regard to this particular project.

I can tell you, Mr. Chairman, union representatives have requested of the Premier written assurances that there will be no downsizing with regard to the Cape Breton Development Corporation. I want to be absolutely certain that the information that one source is getting all sources are getting, and that it is of the same quality and of the same nature. In other words, I do not want to have information which could be misinterpreted or which could be misplaced or could be questioned in another chamber.

I hope that the Parliamentary Secretary who has shown some concern here could provide that information to Members who are interested in this subject matter.

Mr. Forrestall: Mr. Chairman, I can only reiterate my undertaking of a few moments ago to do what I can with respect to information.

I can reassure the Hon. Member, as I did a few moments ago, and my colleague from Nickel Belt, that the Government is not in the business of putting people out of work. It is in the business of creating employment, employment opportunities and economic opportunities. Coal mining in Nova Scotia is one of those opportunities.

Mr. Rodriguez: Mr. Chairman, one of the concerns of the people of Cape Breton is, of course, the level of employment at DEVCO. It is also a concern of the workers. However, there is another concern. It is to work in a safe and healthy environment.

Everyone knows that one of the dangers for coal miners, one which they live in constant fear of, is black lung disease. The present regulations provide for coal dust levels of two parts per million. However, in actual fact it is somewhere up around six parts per million—I am getting a signal that I am being a bit conservative—small "c" conservative, Mr. Chairman.

I am being signalled that it is eight parts per million in reality. Can the Parliamentary Secretary give us a commitment, since he is in a committing mood here today, that in fact greater resources will be directed toward bringing the levels of coal dust in the mines closer to the two parts per million that we have been unable to achieve so far?

Mr. Forrestall: I can give the Hon. Member this assurance. If we can get on with this stage of the Bill and increase the working capital limits for DEVCO that the management of DEVCO will have whatever pressure I can lend with respect to achieving that goal. I must say that I was not aware that it was eight parts per million. I must claim that I have no expertise with respect to the significance of the difference between two and eight. It does seem like a significant amount. I would be pleased in terms of commitment to ensure that that question is raised.

Mr. Rodriguez: If the Government had come forward with a Bill stating that we can raise the capitalization not up to $50 million but up to $100 million, and if one of the prime efforts on which we were to concentrate would be how to get that level down to two, or even to eliminate it completely, we would be more than willing to support that effort. However, I want to say that there is another effort that is important to the existence of DEVCO and to its future. That is to say the research that is going on at DEVCO in these situations with respect to carbogel, which is the coal water process. I understand that is taking place under DEVCO's jurisdiction. I understand that the corporation puts annually into that effort $1 million to $2 million. It is extremely important in terms of looking to the future.

• (1600)

Can the Parliamentary Secretary tell us if there will be any greater commitment to that research that might be reflected in a greater amount of money put into the effort of that process?

Mr. Forrestall: My information with respect to that is that the level of $1 million to $2 million is a flexible level, and that the moneys required for adequate research are available as and when needed. There was a project under consideration, and the corporation together with other institutions has been expending approximately that much on an annual basis, with some promising results.

Mr. Rodriguez: I noticed in the Estimates that in 1985-86 the Government transferred to DEVCO $160.8 million. In 1988-89 the Estimates indicate a transfer of $45 million to DEVCO. I presume that the reason it is down is because of greater productivity, greater earnings, and the downsizing of the workforce somewhat; am I correct? I see the Parliamentary Secretary is nodding.

Can the Parliamentary Secretary give a commitment to the House that should the price of coal drop, and support from the Government is needed, the Government would be prepared to contribute to DEVCO in the same amounts as it has in the past to ensure that the operation continues?

Mr. Forrestall: I have given assurances to the House, both at second reading and during the committee stage, that through this amendment the Government is demonstrating its very firm commitment to precisely the question the Hon. Member raises. When funds are necessary, as has been the practice in the past, those funds will be available in the future. The well-being and the efficiency of DEVCO and coal mining in Cape Breton is very important to all of us, and in that sense I can certainly give the Hon. Member that understanding.

Mr. Rodriguez: We hear the Parliamentary Secretary beating his chest and pleading his commitment to Cape Breton and to DEVCO. Some of the mines are in need of upgrading, for example, the Lingan mine facility and the Donkin-Morien mine. Could the Parliamentary Secretary be more specific. Does he think $25 million is enough? There needs to be a commitment to upgrading the mines. Can the Parliamentary Secretary be specific with respect to the intent of the commitment? Can he give us a figure, a commitment, to the upgrading of those two mines?

Mr. Forrestall: Let me reassure the distinguished Member that if $50 million in working requirement is not sufficient, I believe the most pleased people in the world to increase that would be this Parliament. That would mean that things were working well, expansion was taking place, and necessary modernization programs were in fact ongoing and being put in place. For the time being, I think the doubling of that is a reflection of the very significant growth at DEVCO, but more important, it is a matter of faith of this Parliament, previous Parliaments, and I trust Parliaments to come in DEVCO and its future in Cape Breton Island.

Mr. MacLellan: I wish to return to the question of employment at the Cape Breton Development Corporation. The question of a mine in Pictou County is one thing. The Parliamentary Secretary has said that he is optimistic about future coal sales and the future of the coal industry. Since the Government came into power there have been approximately 600 jobs lost at the Cape Breton Development Corporation. As the Hon. Member for Cape Breton—East Richmond has stated, the number of employees is down to 3,400.

If that enthusiasm and confidence is in the Cape Breton Development Corporation, certainly the Government should be prepared to state emphatically that there will not be a further reduction in the job level at the Cape Breton Development Corporation, by attrition or otherwise. It is not only a question of jobs, it has become a question of maintaining the economic base of that area. Maintaining that job level is vital. As the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary knows, that industry is a cornerstone industry and it cannot afford to have further job reductions.

Mr. Forrestall: The Member will be aware that the new colliery is beginning to approach its production capacities. The downsizing has now come to an end, and I think the Hon. Member would share that view. What happens from now on can only be positive and could only result in an increase in the labour force, not a further reduction.

In the definitive sense, DEVCO is a Crown corporation that stands on its own. The management will have to answer that question. I have no sense of anything other than absolute confidence that, quite the contrary to any further reductions, there will be an increase in the workforce.

Mr. MacLellan: I grant that management has the hands-on decision as to the actual workforce in the Cape Breton Development Corporation. The reason that DEVCO is a Crown corporation is because of the economic situation on Cape Breton Island. We need the Government to have the ability to decree public policy and direct the corporation.

I wish to mention one such case which has been important, a case of which the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary has actual knowledge. It is the case of stockpiling of coal at the international piers. The Parliamentary Secretary will remember the concern that caused to residents of Sydney in the Whitney Pier area. The Parliamentary Secretary may or may not know, but the Government should certainly know that that stockpiling is taking place again. The Government gave its assurance that no stockpiling would take place. What is the Government going to do in reaction to what has obviously been a disregard for the Government's instructions in this matter.

Mr. Forrestall: Perhaps that speaks loudly for the urgency of naming a new president and chief operating officer, a matter which I hope will happen within the next several days. The situation is a very serious one. Stockpiling and the buildup of inventory will be necessary over the next two or three years as a result of a number of situations which I dwelled upon at some length in my remarks earlier today, Mr. Chairman.

The Hon. Member's comments are noted. We are very much aware of the situation, and very concerned about it. Hopefully, with the appointment of the new president very shortly, these matters can be rectified.

Mr. MacLellan: It is one thing for the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary to say that some stockpiling has to take place. The Government assured us that no stockpiling would take place because it was of very great concern to the people in the Whitney Pier area. Once stockpiling takes place, where does it stop? The Government is not saying that there will only be 20,000 tonnes stockpiled. The Government has gone from saying that stockpiling was not allowed under its previous directive to the Cape Breton Development Corporation, to now saying that stockpiling is allowed. There is infinity between the two positions. Surely the Government can at least clarify the contradiction in those two positions.

• (1610)

Mr. Forrestall: Mr. Chairman, I did not say that there would necessarily be stockpiling at the pier, I said that there would be a buildup of inventories because of the nature of markets and the capacity to deliver into a very real market on time when required. Several other factors are involved. Under certain circumstances, it is cheaper to build and hold inventory than it is to approach it in another way. That inventory buildup will probably be necessary, but it does not necessarily follow that there will be stockpiling at the pier.

Mr. MacLellan: Mr. Chairman, I would then ask the Parliamentary Secretary to look into this question and to assure the people of Sydney that stockpiling which seems to be re-emerging will in fact cease and that the Government will reinforce the directive it has already given to the Cape Breton Development Corporation to that effect.

Mr. Forrestall: Mr. Chairman, there has been no change in that policy in that regard.

The Chairman: Shall Clause 1 carry?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Clause 1 agreed to.

Title agreed to.

Bill reported.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: When shall the Bill be read the third time? By unanimous consent, now?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Hon. Jake Epp (for the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion) moved that Bill C-127, an Act to amend the Cape Breton Development Corporation Act, be read the third time and passed.

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton—The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, I will be brief, because I think this Bill is a good one. However, a great deal needs to be done to the Cape Breton Development Corporation, but as far as it goes, I think this Bill can be supported.

I listened to my friend from Nickel Belt speak at second reading stage. I was surprised at the strident position that he and his Party are now taking with respect to supporting the Cape Breton industrial development division of the Cape Breton Development Corporation. We certainly could have used that support from his Party last week when this came up for a vote and members of the New Democratic Party chose to support Bill C-103 which unequivocally, without hesitation or remorse and without afterthought completely terminated and absolutely abolished the industrial development division of DEVCO.

My friend and colleague from Cape Breton—East Richmond and I realized that that abolishment was in the Bill, and we had been speaking long and hard on the injustice of doing away with the industrial development division. Certainly our Party took the position that this was completely unjustified.

The Cape Breton Development Corporation legislation was brought forward in 1967. The legislation came about because of the will of the Canadian people, through the Members of Parliament of the time. The economy of Cape Breton was in such a difficult position that not only did the coal industry in Cape Breton have to be strengthened and perhaps diversified but as well a development agency had to be set up to bring new jobs into the Cape Breton area.

That was the situation in 1967. The economy of Cape Breton is really no better off right now. In fact, the number of jobs in the coal industry has decreased since this Government took office. The Government has closed two heavy water plants, despite the assurance of the then Minister of Energy and now President of the Treasury Board (Miss Carney) that these heavy water plants would not be closed until alternate employment could be provided. However, these two plants were closed.

The Sydney steel plant in Cape Breton has reduced employment, and even though the Government seems to have approved the second phase of the modernization of Sydney Steel, this program is being delayed again and again, to the extent that one really wonders about the commitment of the Government to actually see this program brought forward.

There has been some encouragement with respect to the special investment tax credit and there has been an indication that certain industries will be locating in Cape Breton, but the actual number of jobs that have been committed to by industries starting in industrial Cape Breton has been a small fraction of the jobs that we lost. Not only have we lost jobs in the Crown corporations, but because of the downturn in the economy in industrial Cape Breton, an area with about 120,000 people, we lost other jobs as well as regional companies decided that they did not want to maintain offices in industrial Cape Breton and went to areas like Halifax. Jobs have been disappearing, to the detriment of the economy.

This Government has said that it will get the private sector to do it, that the private sector should be at the forefront of regional development. That has not been the case, however. We have seen no evidence of that at all. In fact, in the recent annual report of the Small Businesses Loans Act, a report which was over a year late, we saw that all of Atlantic Canada, four of the 10 provinces of Canada, only received 6 per cent of the total business investment loan money available under the Small Businesses Loans Act which was passed by this Government.

The chartered banks are not allocating the money which the Government has guaranteed they will not lose. If these loans are not repaid, the chartered banks are guaranteed to receive 85 per cent of the money back from the federal Government. This is a good program for the banks. They can take this money and allocate it to areas that are in economic need, but that is not what is happening. This money is not going to Cape Breton or to northern Ontario, it is going to the areas which do not need it as much, the areas where there are more companies able to raise funds on their own.

The Government is saying on the one hand that the private sector should be investing in regional development, but on the other hand, we are seeing proof in documents from the government's own agencies that that is just not taking place. As a result, we are not only losing jobs, but, because of the legislation put forward by this Government, we are losing the legislative infrastructure needed to be able to rebuild the economy.

The Government is saying that it will do away with the industrial development division of Cape Breton Development Corporation. What should have been done instead? Bill C-103, the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency Bill, should not have included the abolishment of the industrial development division.

● (1620)

That portion of the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency should have been put in Bill C-127 so that the whole question of DEVCO could have been dealt with in one Bill instead of forcing us in the Liberal Party to vote against a Bill that would give funding to Atlantic Canada. Although we find many faults with the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency, that was wrong. It was trying to place Members of Parliament in a position of acting against certain areas of Atlantic Canada. That is not the way industrial development is meant to be enacted.

That portion should be in this Bill so we could deal with the whole question. Nevertheless, what is being brought forward for the coal division is appropriate and much needed in view of the fact that the Cape Breton Development Corporation Act was initiated about 20 years ago. This increase from $25 million to $50 million is long overdue.

I ask the Government not to do away with the industrial development division. To do so would be to reduce DEVCO to a coal producing company, subjected to privatization which, of course, will be a consideration of the Government as all Crown corporations are, and thereby cause further unrest and concern in Cape Breton. Surely, Mr. Speaker, this Government has caused enough economic difficulty in Cape Breton without bringing forward further uncertainty with respect to the Cape Breton Development Corporation. To do away with the industrial development division and replace it with Enterprise Cape Breton Corporation will not anywhere near compensate Cape Breton for its loss. First, the industrial development division has its own budget.

Enterprise Cape Breton Corporation will be another arm of the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency which already has Enterprise Cape Breton. We have Enterprise Cape Breton. Now we will have Enterprise Cape Breton Corporation. The Government is not even showing the originality of having a different name mainly because it hopes it can gradually merge the two without anyone really knowing. We feel that this is not the time to be doing away with an agency as important as the industrial development division of DEVCO.

I ask that the Government follow through in the spirit in which it is thinking with regard to Bill C-127 by increasing the allotment of the coal division, to consider further the industrial development division of DEVCO and to consider further the economic needs of industrial Cape Breton. By doing this, I am sure the Government will then rethink the position on the industrial development division and put a stop to that absolutely silly move it is making which will be very damaging to the economy of Cape Breton.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 66, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the Hon. Member for Etobicoke—Lakeshore (Mr. Boyer)—Medical Research Council—Guidelines on ethical conduct of research involving human subjects; the Hon. Member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia)—Environmental Affairs—Acid rain—Damage inflicted by emissions from United States/Acid Rain—Damages suffered by maple syrup producers—Possibility of compensation—Government position; the Hon. Member for Cape Breton—East Richmond (Mr. Dingwall)—Consumer Affairs—Views of Ralph Nader/Minister's position.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

CAPE BRETON DEVELOPMENT CORPORATION ACT

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. de Cotret that Bill C-127, an Act to amend the Cape Breton Development Corporation Act, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, I am indeed saddened that the Hon. Member for Cape Breton—The Sydneys (Mr. MacLellan), a colleague for whom I have great respect, would actually reflect on a vote of the NDP caucus on Bill C-103. He knows perfectly well why we voted for Bill C-103. It had nothing to do with taking moneys away from the people of Cape Breton or indeed from the people of Atlantic Canada. It saddens me because we all know the way things developed in Cape Breton came about not in the last four years of the Conservative Government but came about as a result of years of Liberal rule.

The Liberals were absolutely bankrupt of any ideas other than the patronage approach of Allan J. MacEachen who moved moneys into his riding. That was their big development project. The Liberals' only approach to development with respect to Cape Breton was the shipping out of Cape Bretoners, people with fantastic capabilities and qualities. They tried to ship them out to other parts of Canada, it was an export of Cape Breton's human resources. When it comes to creative ideas for economic development in Cape Breton, in Atlantic Canada or in northern Ontario, do not look to the Liberals. It is like trying to find eggs in a cuckoo clock. You will not find any. That is why I was saddened by the comments of my colleague.

I just want to say a few words to wrap up Bill C-127. We support this capitalization program. I outlined at the second reading debate the kinds of concerns we had. We tried to reflect the concerns of the people of Cape Breton and the concerns workers of DEVCO had about its future. We tried to get some commitments. I wonder whether the Minister really knew what the Parliamentary Secretary was going to commit himself to. It is on the record. The Parliamentary Secretary was in a committing mood today. He committed everything and I must say what he committed were good things. These are not the kinds of commitments that would run him afoul of the Criminal Code or anything.

To what did he commit himself, Mr. Speaker? He committed himself that every effort would be made to reduce the level of coal dust. He said that if it meant we would have to come back, get more money and capitalization, that this Parliament—and he is quite confident—would not deny increased amounts if that is what it took to reduce the level of coal dust to the accepted two parts per million. He said that the future of DEVCO would continue. He committed himself to that. There was no plan or agenda to downsize DEVCO, to get rid of it or to close it. That was a commitment. He committed himself that nothing would be done to jeopardize the present DEVCO operation. He committed himself that greater employment opportunities would come as a result of the capitalization included in Bill C-127. He made the commitment that nothing would be done with respect to any other investment in Nova Scotia that would adversely affect DEVCO's operation. He was just a font of commitments.

I hope now that we have the Parliamentary Secretary on the record that he will remember what he said. I hope his Minister does not follow the practice of his Leader who was prepared to say that this is the way it is today but maybe six months later say no, this is not the way it is.

We will support Bill C-127 and the commitments which the Parliamentary Secretary has made on behalf of his Minister and on behalf of the Government. They are now part of the record. We will ensure that those commitments are distributed widely in Cape Breton. We have had the past history of the Liberals, their legacy of disaster in Atlantic Canada and in northern Ontario. Now we have the Conservative commitments. They are on paper. They have been in office for four years and the people of Cape Breton will judge them.

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I have a few comments before the debate comes to a conclusion. I have to say at the outset that my colleague, the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez), is distorting the facts and history when he makes reference to things that have occurred on the Island of Cape Breton about who was responsible and who was not responsible. I think he clearly and succinctly told us about the lack of appreciation and understanding that his particular Party has for the development of a successful and long-lasting regional economic development policy. In particular, we know what has happened in Cape Breton in the last number of days. The New Democratic Party is running for cover. They are hiding under the tables or in the bushes. They are scared because one of their candidates very clearly agreed with the position of the Liberal caucus concerning ACOA and the industrial development division of DEVCO. We can understand, and I am sure the Parliamentary Secretary can as well, the sensitivity to bruising of the intellectual ego of the NDP.

• (1630)

Mr. Rodriguez: Who was the candidate?

Mr. Dingwall: We have to appreciate their sensitivity because we will run the hell out of them in the next federal election on that issue, not only in Cape Breton but in all of Atlantic Canada. They will have to tell us why they wholeheartedly concur with the philosophy of the Conservative Party of Canada, which is to rack in one agency their entire regional industrial development policy. That is the philosophy, that is the program, that is the intellectual bankruptcy of the NDP on regional economic development. They are sensitive and ought to be sensitive on this important issue.

Regarding Bill C-127 and its substantive provisions, let us not be drunk with delusion. Let us be very candid with one another. This does not provide new working capital, as the NDP and the Government would have you believe, to open up new coal mines in Cape Breton. It is simply a line of credit which has been increased from $25 million to $50 million. Let us not be under any illusions whatsoever that the Government is somehow kowtowing to the interests of the coal miners and the coal industry of Cape Breton. It is emphatically not.

Finally, I do not think any reasonable—and I underline that word reasonable—Member of Parliament could object to this legislation being passed. All it does is amend something that took place some 13 years ago, that being the extension of a credit line. Therefore, I give my concurrence, as does my Party and I believe other Members who have spoken about it. I hope the Parliamentary Secretary will in good faith take under active consideration the suggestions and concerns raised in this debate and try and provide at the soonest possible opportunity responses to the real human problems, real human tragedies, involving pensions, pension reform, definition of continuous service, pre-retirement leave, unemployment insurance, job losses, and the terrible insecurity and instability the people in Cape Breton feel over the prospects of the new coal mine in Pictou County. I hope he will give serious consideration to all those concerns as he indicated he would at the outset of the debate.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the third time and passed.

RAILWAY SAFETY ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House proceeded to consideration of Bill C-105, An Act to ensure the safe operation of railways and to amend certain other Acts in consequence thereof, as reported (with amendments) from the Standing Committee on Transport.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: There are seven motions on the Order Paper for amendments at the report stage of Bill C-105, An Act to ensure the safe operation of railways and to amend certain other Acts in consequence thereof,

[English]

All of the motions are in order and each will be debated and voted upon separately. I shall now put Motion No. 1 to the House.

Hon. Jake Epp (for the Minister of Transport) moved:

That Bill C-105 be amended in Clause 13 by striking out line 6 at page 12 and substituting the following therefor:

"not exceed eighty per cent of the construction or alteration cost of".

Mr. Blaine A. Thacker (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to speak for a moment on Motion No. 1, but before I do I will just give a brief summary of where the Bill comes from.

At the committee stage, which was the Standing Committee on Transport rather than a special legislative committee, we heard over a dozen witnesses from across the country, from railways to unions to municipalities and special interest groups. There were some 40 plus amendments proposed, some 30 by the Government and some dozen by the opposition Parties, all of which were accepted. We are now at report stage with seven additional motions for change.

Motion No. 1 increases the maximum federal contribution towards grade separation projects from 50 per cent to 80 per cent. There was a good lobby by the municipalities which showed it should be left at 80 per cent and thus it will be. It also changes the words "capital cost" to "construction and alteration cost" pursuant to the change made to other clauses of the Bill. The reason the motion is before us is that it required Royal Recommendation and therefore had to come back at report stage.

Motions Nos. 2, 3, 4 and 6 are technical amendments picked up by the Clerk of the Committee and the Department of Justice and the drafters, and are moved by the Government. Motion No. 5 standing in the name of the Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin) will require some debate and we will hear from that Hon. Member. Motion No. 7, standing in the name of the Hon. Member for Humboldt—Lake Centre (Mr. Althouse) flows out of an earlier Private Members' Bill and the Government is prepared to accept it.

I believe in general the Bill speaks to the good work done by Hon. Members.

I would certainly like to commend those Hon. Members, starting with the chairman, the Hon. Member for Annapolis Valley—Hants (Mr. Nowlan), the vice-chairman, the Hon. Member for Bonaventure—Îles-de-la-Madeleine (Mr. Gray), the Hon. Member for Thunder Bay—Atikokan (Mr. Angus), the Hon. Member for Fraser Valley East (Mr. Belsher), the Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin), the Hon. Member for London—Middlesex (Mr. Clifford), the Hon. Member for Moncton (Mr. Cochrane), and the Hon. Member for St. Catharines (Mr. Reid) who always works hard at committee. He attends committee meetings faithfully and always has questions.

I would also like to commend the Hon. Member for Westmorland—Kent (Mr. Robichaud) who had some very good amendments in the debate. I would also mention the Hon. Member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor) and the Hon. Member for Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe (Mr. Tobin). All those Members did a magnificent job on the Bill and I think that explains why several dozen amendments were accepted.

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to hear from the Parliamentary Secretary his remarks about the members of the committee. We cannot help it if we are so good.

Mr. Robichaud: It comes naturally.

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, my Party supports the Government's intention to amend the Royal Recommendation to restore the cost sharing formula under the Railway Relocation and Crossing Act which the Bill was originally going to repeal. However, after representations from the Canadian Federation of Municipalities, members of the trade union movement and railway management, as well as members of the committee from all sides, the Government was wise to agree to restore the cost sharing formula for things like grade separation and rail line relocation.

• (1640)

I want to remind the House that, regardless which Party is in power, if we are going to do what needs to be done on grade separation alone we are looking at $200 million a year over the next five years. I know that sounds like a bundle, and it is. However, when we think of what it will save in terms of railway safety in particular and public safety in general and of the fact that we will have put that many more people to work who will pay taxes, we see that it is not all net cost by any means.

This is something which should have been started years ago. It remains to be done yet. The fact that the Government has agreed to retain the cost sharing formula from the old Railway Relocation and Crossing Act makes me a little bit optimistic. It has to do not only with the cost of safety but with the cost of roads and public safety as well.

This legislation also deals, in a somewhat indirect manner, with rail line abandonment as well as rail line relocation which also deals with maintaining maximum safety. Of all the modes of transportation railways are still the safest. When there is a train wreck it is in the headlines, but it is still the safest way to move goods and people.

The Canadian Federation of Municipalities was almost totally ignored on other pieces of legislation. I must be fair and say that the Federation of Municipalities was somewhat lax on other items of legislation. It was not before the Transport Committee when it should have been and it was left up to individual municipalities. However, on this legislation it showed up to represent all the municipalities of Canada.

The Federation made it extremely plain to the Government, through the committee, that it does not want any more transportation of goods transferred from movement by rail to movement by road. My hon. friend, the Parliamentary Secretary, will verify that the Federation was very explicit that it is in no position to provide greater funding not only for maintenance and repair but for construction of additional roadways to handle an ever-increasing amount of truck traffic.

The CPR is presently attempting to abandon 100 miles of track in southern British Columbia, the boundary subdivision.

Over 2,000 carloads a year move on that subdivision. The railroad claims it is losing money. Since a truck does not hold as much as a long railway flat car, if that rail line is abandoned it would be safe to say that 3,000 truckloads of traffic will be transferred from the rail on to Highway 3, a narrow, winding road, something which the municipalities of southern British Columbia neither need nor want.

Therefore, safety goes beyond how well railway cars are maintained and constructed and how well track is maintained. I am most pleased that the Government has acceded to the request of the municipalities and members of the committee to retain the cost sharing formula of the Railway Relocation and Crossing Act and to consider rail safety as more than just how safe railway trains operate.

You may be wondering, Mr. Speaker, what this has to do with Motion No. 1 changing the Royal Recommendation. Without changing the Royal Recommendation to restore the formula to up to 80 per cent of the cost paid by the federal Government, not a municipality in Canada would bother to put in a grade separation because they could not afford it. A small municipality could not pay 50 per cent of a grade separation which costs $5 million. It would have trouble paying 20 per cent. It would have to try to persuade the province to pay at least half of that.

A grade separation of eight lanes of traffic and a clover-leaf would cost $20 million, $30 million or $40 million. If this were required in a large municipality, the cost per taxpayer would be as great for a large municipality as for a small one. That is why I commend the Government for its wise decision to retain the cost sharing formula. I would have done more than that. The revolution has not yet arrived, but it will.

That is all I want to say on Motion No. 1. I hope that the Government will proceed to arm the respective Departments and agencies with a number of inspections and enforcement and will assist railways and railway unions to establish good functioning employee assistance programs. Members of the committee from all three Parties were not inclined to obstruct or hold up this Bill. I agree with the Parliamentary Secretary that as a result of the work done in the committee we have a better Bill. It is too bad we cannot do this on a few other Bills.

[Translation]

Mr. Fernand Robichaud (Westmorland—Kent): Mr. Speaker, I support the comments of two of my colleagues who spoke earlier about the exercise we had on the Transport Committee when we were considering this Bill, and I must say it was a most positive experience. We had full co-operation from all Parties, which greatly simplified the Committee's work.

Regarding Motion No. 1, to change the maximum grant level from 50 per cent to 80 per cent, I fully agree with this recommendation, especially since it applies to work on construction or alteration of grade separations. Mr. Speaker, it is a fact that most railway accidents happen at grade crossings.

This measure is therefore a very positive one, and I support it wholeheartedly, Mr. Speaker.

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The question is on Motion No. 1 standing in the name of the Minister of Transport (Mr. Bouchard). Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion No. 1 (Mr. Bouchard) agreed to.

• (1650)

Hon. Jake Epp (for the Minister of Transport) moved:

Motion No. 2

That Bill C-105 be amended in Clause 24 by striking out line 28 at page 21 and substituting the following therefor:

'pesticides under subparagraphs (i) and (ii);'

Mr. Blaine A. Thacker (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, Motion No. 2 essentially involves two amendments. It changes the word "subsection" in the Bill to "subparagraphs", which is the proper technical wording that should have been used.

As well, in the French version, in reference to weeds, it adds the words: "along a line of railway", which is omitted in the Bill.

[Translation]

Mr. Robichaud: I quite agree. It just clarifies the terms of the clause.

Motion No. 3

That Bill C-105 be amended in Clause 35 by striking out, in the English version, line 37 at page 33 and substituting the following therefor:

'reasons therefor, after the physician or optometrist has'.

Mr. Blaine A. Thacker (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, this amendment just adds the words "or optometrist" to the word "physician" pursuant to the evidence that was received.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.
