LABOUR CONDITIONS

CAPE BRETON CONSTRUCTION INDUSTRY UNEMPLOYMENT—FEDERAL OFFER TO WORKERS

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I rise once again to bring to the attention of the House the plight of the workers represented by the Cape Breton Building and Construction Trades Council. The Minister of Labour (Mr. Cadieux) will know that I addressed this issue on November 2, 1987, requesting that he take action with respect to an older workers' adjustment program.

In the last 24 hours it has come to my attention that the Minister is expected to offer workers approximately $1,020 a month exclusive of any other income they might have. The Government has not made a formal commitment on this matter, but the federal Minister of Labour has apparently given a Nova Scotia Cabinet Minister, the Honourable Edmund Morris, his word that the offer will stand.

I call upon the Minister of Labour to confirm to this House that the present offer to the Cape Breton Building and Construction Trades Council workers will stand. Should he be able to do this, it will alleviate many concerns and worries of the unemployed Cape Breton construction workers. I trust and hope that the Minister of Labour will respond favourably to this request.

RELIGIOUS AFFAIRS

SIKH RELIGION—ANNIVERSARY OF FOUNDATION

Mr. W. Paul McCrossan (York-Scarborough): Mr. Speaker, on April 13, 1699, the tenth and final Guru, Gobind Singh, laid out a code of conduct which established Khalsa in the Sikh religion. This new religion stressed the equality of humanity regardless of caste, creed, or sex. Each Sikh has a clear obligation to serve particularly the poor or oppressed. At the same time, Guru Gobind Singh established the distinctive dress code of Sikhs to remind them of their religious obligations each day.

There are approximately 200,000 Sikhs in Canada who have added significantly to Canadian life. Today in Parliament members of all political Parties will be meeting with Canadians of the Sikh religion. I am particularly pleased to bring to public notice, Mr. Speaker, that you are representing Parliament as guest speaker at today's reception.

I am sure that all Members of Parliament would wish to extend their best wishes to the Sikh community in Canada on the anniversary of the formal birthday of their religion.

RELIGIOUS AFFAIRS

SIKH RELIGION—ANNIVERSARY OF FOUNDATION

Mr. Ernie Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, today Sikhs around the world are celebrating the anniversary of their faith, Baisakh. On behalf of my colleagues in the New Democratic caucus, I wish to speak in recognition of that great event.

• (1405)

It was on this day in the year 1699 A.D. that the tenth prophet of the Sikhs, Guru Gobind Singh, challenged a great gathering of Sikhs to rededicate themselves to the faith. His call brought forward the Five Beloved Ones in symbolic sacrifice. It also led to the institution of baptism into the Sikh faith, and produced the five Ks of commitment to the faith.

In the succeeding 289 years followers of the Sikh faith have become a distinctive community in many countries of the world. Canada is honoured to be the home of one-quarter of a million Sikhs.

On this Baisakh, I join with Canadian Sikhs in celebrating a New Year of dedication to their faith. May this be a year of good understanding like that manifested by the people of Woods Harbour, Nova Scotia, when they welcomed the Sikh refugee claimants to Canada's shores.

May this Baisakh call us to renewed regard for the lives of our fellows, and respect for the rights of their communities.

SENATE DELAY IN PASSING LEGISLATION

Mr. Rob Nicholson (Niagara Falls): Mr. Speaker, in the last couple of months I have canvassed many of my constituents concerning Bills C-55 and C-84. These are the two Bills that will restore some common sense to Canada's refugee determination system. These are also the laws that are being stalled by the unelected Members of the Senate.

Over 1,400 individuals from over 40 communities have contacted me to call upon the Senate to abide by democratic principles and end the confusion in Canada's refugee determination system. Their refusal to pass Bills C-55 and C-84 is nothing short of a disgrace which is condemned by my constituents, and I believe by all Canadians.

AGRICULTURE

POTATO STABILIZATION PROGRAM—DELAY IN PAYMENTS TO FARMERS

Mr. George Henderson (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, the potato farmers of Prince Edward Island have waited a long time for stabilization payments on their 1985 potato crop. On March 22 the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) told the House that the farmers should have their cheques by Easter. Some farmers are still waiting. We now know why.

Their cheques were sent by the Department of Agriculture to the Farm Credit Corporation. This is absolutely unfair.

Many farmers are in a financial crisis, especially our potato farmers who have had some very poor years. But to find out that their cheques were sent to the Farm Credit Corporation is the last straw.

Understandably, the farmers are very upset. Apparently the Farm Credit Corporation has agreed to send the cheques on to the farmers now.

I urge the Minister of Agriculture to investigate this blatant disregard for the dignity of our hard-pressed farmers and ensure that this never happens again.

ABORTION

NURSES FOR LIFE—INCLUSION OF CONSCIENCE CLAUSE SOUGHT IN NEW LEGISLATION

Mr. Gus Mitges (Grey—Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, Nurses for Life is an organization which is concerned with the ethical issues in nursing from the perspective of respect for life and quality of care for all their patients. Therefore, to insist that nurses assist with procedures in which the main objective is to kill one of their own patients as in the performance of an abortion is illogical and thoughtlessly unprofessional.

Abortion is a violent act which is directly opposed to the philosophy and practice of nursing. Nurses for Life requests that a conscience clause be enacted whereby no doctor, nurse, or others involved in health care facilities, including hospitals, be required to counsel, assist, perform, or participate in any way in any treatment or procedure to which he or she has a moral, religious or personal objection.

Nurses for Life therefore calls upon the Government to bring forth legislation to enact conscience clauses to protect health professionals from being forced to abandon their principles or lose their employment.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

PRESENCE OF TOXIC WASTES ON INDIAN RESERVE

Mr. John Parry (Kenora—Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, the most pressing environmental concern for many communities across Canada is that of toxic waste storage. Toxic wastes are a proven health hazard. Governments must do everything possible to ensure safe living conditions for all their citizens.

In remote northwestern Ontario, in the Nishnawbe-Aski Reserve community of Big Trout Lake, the people are very upset and frustrated by the delays in removing PCB wastes which are, ironically, the property of Environment Canada.

The Chief has physically removed these wastes from their present storage site and has threatened to fly them to storage sites in southern Ontario if the provincial and federal Governments do not move them quickly and act in accordance with existing regulations. The people of Big Trout Lake did not ask for these chemical wastes. All they are asking is that the PCBs be removed from the reserve.

I call upon the federal Minister of the Environment (Mr. McMillan) to show the leadership he has committed himself to in the past and immediately secure the necessary provincial approval for the transportation of these wastes off the reserve.

VISIT TO ABITIBI DAIRY FARM WITH MINISTER

Mr. Guy St-Julien (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, on March 29, 1988, the Minister of State for Agriculture (Mr. Blais) visited one of the most productive dairy farms in the Abitibi, the Tenhave farm in Val Senneville.

The Minister first went to the Val Senneville town hall, where he met Mayor René Paré and the councillors. The Minister and I then went to the Tenhave farm, where we donned overalls and helmets to tour the site.

This farm is one of the best known in the region for its rapid growth and the quality of its products. It has won many prizes for excellence, including one awarded last fall by the eastern Abitibi branch of the UPA for first place among Holstein growers.

Mr. Speaker, the Minister took the time for a leisurely conversation with Mr. and Mrs. Tenhave and their two sons, Paul and John.

This was an excellent meeting for the farmers; it gave them the opportunity to discuss with their Minister of State for Agriculture the future and the situation of dairy farmers in the country and in Quebec.

SOCIAL AFFAIRS

VIEWS OF MR. ROBERT CAMPEAU CRITICIZED

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane—Superior): Mr. Speaker, it has been said that there is no fool like an old fool. If the old fool is also very rich, that foolishness may be compounded.

It is reported that Mr. Robert Campeau, who became rich on government contracts with guaranteed returns—

Mr. Murphy: Liberal government contracts.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: I am sure the House is waiting in anxious anticipation for the completion of the Hon. Member's remarks.

Mr. Penner: I hope that that is not taken from my time, Mr. Speaker.

It is reported that Mr. Robert Campeau, who became rich on government contracts with guaranteed returns, and who went on to greater and greater rewards, now admires the rugged individualism of the American republic and he thinks that there is too much social concern and humanity in Canada. He points with much disdain to our social security programs and our medicare system, and he calls on us to have them reduced.

I would say that the frankness of his views does help us in at least one respect. He has enabled us to understand better the parable of the camel, the rich man, and the eye of a needle.

SUPPORT FOR PRIVATIZATION

Mrs. Mary Collins (Capilano): Mr. Speaker, 51 years ago the first Trans-Canada Airlines plane, a 10-seat Lockheed Electra, departed Vancouver's Sea Island on a flight to Seattle. Much has changed since that first flight. TCA became Air Canada, one of the world's major airlines with 22,000 employees.

Now, with great foresight, the Government has announced plans for its privatization. The naysayers in the Opposition, like an over protective parent, would have us keep Air Canada in the pampered and sheltered yoke of government control.

After 51 years in the public sector, Air Canada has fulfilled its mandate, and the time has come for the company to spread its wings. The Government's planned share offering will give Air Canada the flexibility that it requires to update its fleet and remain competitive into the 1990s and beyond.

Privatization works. With 13 Crown corporations sold or in the process of being sold, our policy is right on track, indeed, in full flight.

FISHERIES

GEORGES BANK—CALL FOR BAN ON OIL EXPLORATION DRILLING

Mr. Jack Harris (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, the jig is up. The Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. Siddon), and the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Masse), can no longer sit on the fence between the interests of the fisheries and the demands of Texaco Canada Resources on the issue of oil exploration on the Georges Bank. The Governments of Nova Scotia and New Brunswick, fishermen, fish processors, fishing communities, and the organization NORIG have all insisted on banning drilling and oil production in this most concentrated area of fisheries resource which is very vulnerable to environmental contamination.

In late February the Gulf of Maine Advisory Committee agreed, and wishes the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans to support amending Bill C-75 to ban drilling in this area which it calls a vast nursery of lobsters, scallops, cod, haddock, and other species of critical importance to the economies of southwest Nova Scotia and the south coast of New Brunswick.

No more stalling by the Minister of Energy! No more inaction by the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans! Amend Bill C-75, ban drilling on Georges Bank, and protect this vital fishery.

IMMIGRATION

Mr. Bob Pennock (Etobicoke North): Mr. Speaker, we cannot allow our immigration system in this country to deteriorate any further. This is precisely why Parliament was recalled in August to deal with this urgent problem of our refugee determination system, a system under siege.

Everyone agrees that Canada's refugee policy needs an overhaul. The policy of our Government is to increase legitimate immigration; provide a safe haven for genuine refugees; establish a fair and expeditious refugee determination system to eliminate queue-jumping and bogus refugees; and follow the due process of law.

The solution to this problem is obvious—the passage of Bills C-55 and C-84. This seems easy, right? Think again! The Liberal dominated Senate has stalled these Bills in the Upper Chamber because it is motivated by political rather than by humanitarian reasons.

I think it is time the Senate came down off its high horse, respected the will of the elected House, and passed this legislation so that we can begin to rid our country of its antiquated immigration system, its inadequacies, hypocrisy, and long delays.

RELIGIOUS AFFAIRS

Mr. Robert Wenman (Fraser Valley West): Mr. Speaker, I rise today because I, like yourself, have come to know and appreciate the very special contribution made by the Indo-Canadian community, particularly in British Columbia and the Fraser Valley.

This special day, April 13, is Baisakh, the first day of the new year for Hindus, Sikhs, Jains, and Buddhists here and around the world.

Baisakh is of particular importance to members of our Canadian Sikh community because on this day in 1699 the Sikh religion or "Brotherhood of the Pure" was created.

The festivities associated with welcoming in a new year are also a reminder of the rich and enduring spiritual heritage of these groups, a heritage that the celebration of a new year strengthens and reaffirms. It is a heritage which encourages strong family ties, community involvement, and peaceful coexistence. Of course these are values understood only too well by Canadians.

Their communities are helping to enrich the country's multicultural identity in many different ways. I would therefore urge all Hon. Members to join me in extending best wishes for a prosperous and happy new year to Canadian Hindus, Sikhs, Jains, and Buddhists, and to all Indo-Canadians who are part of our diverse Canadian family.

SCIENCE AND TECHNOLOGY

FUNDING—QUEBEC SHARE

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, yesterday Quebec's External Trade Minister, Pierre MacDonald, published figures clearly showing that under a Conservative Government, Quebec does not receive its fair share of funding for research and high technology projects. The figures show a shortfall of $1.3 billion. I would like to ask all Hon. Members from Quebec to put pressure on the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and the Conservative government so that in future, Quebec receives its fair share and also on all Conservative members from Quebec to put pressure on the Prime Minister for him to respect his commitment to have the space agency in Montreal.

PORTS

PORT OF CHURCHILL—NON-ATTENDANCE BY CANADIAN NATIONAL AT ANNUAL CONFERENCE

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, this week I attended the forty-fifth annual conference of the Hudson Bay Route Association. This group, composed of representatives of many communities in all prairie provinces, has a long history of working to promote the use of the Port of Churchill.

I was disappointed to discover that CN no longer shares my high opinion of the Hudson Bay Route Association and its commitment to the use of the port. CN, as the railway responsible for the maintenance and use of the Bay Line, the only land based shipping route connected to the port, has been in regular attendance at meetings of the Hudson Bay Route Association throughout most of its existence. By declining to attend the Hudson Bay Route Association conference this year, CN has taken a further step in its campaign to close the Port of Churchill and has closed off contact with a major group which is defending the port.

This action is only the latest in a long series of betrayals of the port which have occurred in the last couple of years. We have seen provincial Tory Governments in Alberta and Saskatchewan cut off funding to the Port of Churchill Development Board. We have listened to Otto Lang, a former Liberal Minister of Transport, malign the port time after time.

We have watched federal Conservative Members of Parliament and cabinet Ministers use the anti-port arguments and half-truths of the grain elevator companies and CN.

Now it is time for the new Minister of Transport (Mr. Bouchard) to declare his support for the Port of Churchill and to fight against the attempts by CN and others that are trying to close the port.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

SALE OF SHARES

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. At 11.51 yesterday morning in the House of Commons the Deputy Prime Minister made the following statement:

> The legislation will permit the transfer of all Air Canada shares to the public.

At 2.18 yesterday afternoon in the House of Commons the Prime Minister made the following statement: "There is a possibility that shares in Air Canada will be sold to the public, but the Government would certainly retain the majority interest".

One of the two statements made to the House of Commons yesterday is false. The question the public—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, come on!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): It is right on. The question the Canadian public is asking is: who is speaking for the Government? The Prime Minister—

• (1420)

Mr. Speaker: I am sure the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition means that a statement is incorrect. I ask that he conclude his question.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Who, then, is speaking for the Government—the Prime Minister or the Deputy Prime Minister? Will the Government retain majority control and the majority of the shares of Air Canada, or are all the shares up for sale and is this a total sell-out of the airline?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I wish the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition would stop being so silly and childish, indeed irresponsible. If he wants an explanation he can come into my office right after Question Period and I will explain it to him. He should read the whole statement. It is very clear. Legislation will in fact be brought before the House and then he can see precisely what we will be doing.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Obviously the Deputy Prime Minister has a weak case. If he wants to tell me in private, I say tell me in public right here on the floor of the House of Commons.

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, in January 1985 the Prime Minister said: "Air Canada is not for sale". Yesterday, Canadians realized that he really meant Air Canada was not for sale just then. Yesterday, the Prime Minister said the Government would certainly retain a controlling interest in Air Canada. Today, it seems the Government will do so but only for the time being.

If the Government is really determined to sell Air Canada, which I think is a poor decision, it should come right out and admit it, as it should admit that the Prime Minister of Canada misled Canadians in 1985 and again yesterday, here in the House.

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, we just heard the distorted truth, the distorted reality from the Leader of the Opposition. He said: "The Prime Minister stated Air Canada was not for sale". However, on January 15, 1985, the press quoted the Prime Minister as follows: "There is a possibility that Air Canada shares will be sold to the general public, but the Government would certainly retain a controlling interest".

[English]

And in English: "Prime Minister Brian Mulroney said Monday—" this was on January 15, 1985, "—that Air Canada is not for sale but did not rule out selling a minority interest". What is taking place is exactly consistent with what I indicated at the time, with the needs of Air Canada. We are talking about the future, of making Air Canada an important instrument of growth and unity. We are strengthening Air Canada.

We want to talk about the future. I invite the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition to focus on the future and the needs of Air Canada and Canadians. We will take him on on that any day of the week.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): The Prime Minister once said that Air Canada is not for sale. Now he says not at this time.

CONTROL OF CORPORATION—RETENTION OF MAINTENANCE FACILITIES

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, yesterday the Prime Minister said that the Government would retain a majority of the shares, but the Deputy Prime Minister said no, all the Air Canada shares are available to the public. That is what he said yesterday morning.

Mr. Andre: False.

Mr. Tobin: True.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): I do not know how the two gentlemen reconcile those two statements. They certainly have not succeeded this afternoon.

Yesterday the Prime Minister and the Deputy Prime Minister also assured Canadians that Air Canada would keep its maintenance facilities at Winnipeg, Montreal, and Toronto. However, Canadians were also told by the Deputy Prime Minister yesterday morning that the Government's shares in Air Canada would be voted in accordance with the wishes of the private sector shareholders. Therefore, the Prime Minister and the Deputy Prime Minister know that they have no way of knowing or guaranteeing that the maintenance facilities will be kept in Winnipeg, or in Toronto or Montreal for that matter, because they have yielded control over the voting preferences of the shares they retain, if they retain them.

Why did the Government make a promise yesterday to the people of Winnipeg that the maintenance facilities would be kept there when it has already abandoned the power to control the voting of the shares?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I do not think I have to repeat to the House again the commitment that Air Canada has made on behalf of the people of Winnipeg. The Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition was very rarely interested in this subject, but I guess because there is an election going on in Manitoba he chooses to raise the issue in an attempt to politicize it.

• (1425)

The fact is that there have been a number of Crown corporations which have been privatized to which conditions have been attached. I invite the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition to go back and look at the series of them, some 13 of them. Each and every one of those Crown corporations had one or more conditions attached, and there is no reason to prevent that from happening in this case as well.

FUTURE OF MAINTENANCE BASES

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. The House should be clear on what the Government is telling us. The Government is now saying that it can give no assurances to the people of Winnipeg, Montreal or Toronto, and that it can only repeat the assurances of Air Canada officials. The Government is saying that, having recognized that Air Canada officials, and particularly the chairman of the board, will be directed to vote their shares in accordance with the majority of the private shareholders. That is what the Government has admitted.

Again I would tell the Deputy Prime Minister, whether there is an election going on in Manitoba or not, perhaps now is the time to come forward with the full facts, not with fantasy.

How can the Government, given its own privatization plan and its own determination to give up its voting control and direct it to private shareholders, give assurances, either directly or through the management who will give up their 55 per cent share block, that Winnipeg, Toronto, Montreal, or Stephenville, Newfoundland, will not be negatively affected by this privatization venture?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the best way to secure the success of Air Canada and its continued operation and expansion in Winnipeg is for it to be a healthy airline, and we are giving it the mechanism and the facilities to become a healthy airline.

As I said earlier, there were conditions attached to the privatization of Canadair and they were upheld.

Hon. Members opposite, if I recall correctly, talked about the loss of thousands and thousands of jobs when de Havilland was sold to Boeing. We have not heard a peep lately because 1,000 or 1,100 new jobs have been created—

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mazankowski: The Hon. Member can dwell on the past and support his own ideology, but he should listen to some of the workers of Air Canada. Yesterday on the CBC news an unidentified worker said:

> It's a profitable company right now and when employees have a share in their company then I believe that they will take care and more care in what they actually have.

Another one said:

> I think it is a fantastic investment. The employees will care more and I think there'll be a lot more profit potential within the company.

Another one said:

> —we're in the alliance, we're in the service business, it must be competitive and by being privatized it just might become a bit more competitive.

They are living in the real world. Those guys across the way are in fantasyland.

CONTROL OF SHARES

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, of course that begs the question, where was the Hon. Member for St. John's West, the former Minister of Transport, living? He said a year ago that it would be best to sell all of it or sell none of it, and he said two months ago that the Government should put $300 million worth of capital into Air Canada because it is basically a fundamentally sound and healthy company.

Yesterday, David Cape of Ryerson Polytechnical Institute in Toronto, a transportation economist, said that given the structure of this privatization and given this half-baked scheme, it is possible that, "In practice, a control block of stock can be quite small. About 5 per cent or 6 per cent can give effective control".

Given that the Government will make 25 per cent of the shares available to foreign owners in time and 11 per cent available to foreign investors immediately, I ask the Deputy Prime Minister how the Government can assure Canadians that Air Canada is not on its way to becoming Air America.

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Maz Air.

Mr. Mazankowski: The Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition and his colleague have to dramatize things because they know they have not got a case. I would rather listen to the workers, and this is what the workers say. Nicole Lanctot from Montreal has said: "This is great, good news. If I were rich, I would buy shares. Maybe I will buy shares if they aren't too expensive".

Mr. Tobin: "If I were rich, I would buy shares". Right on.

Mr. Mazankowski: Wait a moment—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Mazankowski: "I will buy shares if they aren't too expensive".

Second, Joyce Carette has said: "I would buy shares. I'm very excited." Ruth Kershaw said: "The public will benefit in the long run". Glen McLaren said: "I'm delighted, absolutely delighted". The Chairman of Air Canada, who has spent 40 years with this company, said: "This is welcome news indeed".

SALE OF SHARES—PRIME MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, Canadians expect their Prime Minister to be straightforward with them. They expect the Prime Minister to be honest and to indicate clearly where he stands on important national issues.

Mr. Andre: They expect responsible opposition too.

Mr. Riis: On January 15, 1985, the Prime Minister said very clearly that Air Canada is not for sale.

Mr. Andre: Read the whole thing.

Mr. Riis: Yesterday he indicated that that is not quite what he meant. He went on to explain. He said that Air Canada is for sale but he did not rule out selling a minority interest. The Government then indicated clearly in this House yesterday that the legislation, when brought forward, will permit the transfer of all Air Canada shares.

My question is for the Right Hon. Prime Minister. Why was he not honest with the people of Canada in 1985?

Some Hon. Members: Order!

Some Hon. Members: Sit down!

Mr. Riis: Why did he not say at that time that his intention was to sell off all of Air Canada?

Some Hon. Members: Order!

Mr. Speaker: There are different ways to stray very close to what is not accepted. I know that the Hon. Member would want to make it clear to the Chair and to the House that his question is, would the Prime Minister please explain what seems to be, in the mind of the Hon. Member, a difference in one statement compared to another.

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend says that Parliament is entitled to a responsible position from the Prime Minister. He is quite right. It is also entitled to a responsible position from the NDP. As a beginning, if my hon. friend is going to quote the Prime Minister or any other Member of the House, I hope that he would have the decency and the integrity to make that quote complete, because the manner in which he quoted is false and misleading.

[Translation]

I will give him the quote as reported in The Gazette and La Presse. I wish he would either quote everything I said or stop misquoting me here in the House. The quote is as follows: There is a possibility that Air Canada shares will be sold to the general public, but the Government would certainly retain a controlling interest. There may be good reasons for selling Air Canada.

And the same day, in English, in The Gazette . . .

[English]

> Prime Minister Brian Mulroney said Monday in Montreal that Air Canada is not for sale but did not rule out selling a minority interest.

This is perfectly consistent with not only the interests of Air Canada but what I have said and the position which the Government has adopted. If the Member wants to quote me or any other member of the Government, let him have the decency and honesty to quote fully and completely. He should stop distorting what I said.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, I want to remind the Prime Minister that he not only has an obligation to be straightforward with the Parliament of Canada but also has an obligation to be straightforward and honest with the people of Canada.

Some Hon. Members: Order, order!

Mr. Riis: It is time that he started to do just that.

Mr. Shields: I would ignore that.

Mr. Murphy: That's all right, you lied to pensioners too, all of you. All of you lied to pensioners right across the country.

Mr. Shields: Union tactics, that's what it is. We know all about that.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I ask Hon. Members, in putting questions, to lay the facts upon which a question is to be asked, to use the preamble for the appropriate purpose. I would ask Hon. Ministers, when replying, not to stray unduly into argument. The Hon. Member.

DECISION-MAKING POWERS

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is also for the Right Hon. Prime Minister. The Prime Minister just indicated, in extensive quotes, what he said at one time or another. He indicated that he would ensure that the Government of Canada would maintain majority control of Air Canada. That is what he just said in the House of Commons.

What kind of a business transaction would give complete decision-making powers to a group of minority shareholders? Why did the Government not at least have the consideration to do what the British did? They maintained a golden share so that the British Government would always have, in the final analysis on critical matters, complete decision-making. Why is the Prime Minister prepared to give over the decision-making rights for Air Canada to a minority set of shareholders?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I think my hon. friend asks an entirely appropriate philosophical question. There can be an important philosophical disagreement as to the manner in which this ought to be handled. It is no secret that this Chamber represents different political ideologies and they will find an expression, no doubt, in the fundamental debate and the approach to this matter. I will be happy to engage my friend in debate on this at any time.

Last night, for example, on the CBC Allan Gow, the labour reporter, said:

> Most of the workers here think that privatization is a great idea. The union leadership, though, has quite a different view.

He then quoted Bob White who said:

> I think it won't stand the test of time.

Here is where the ideology enters into it and where the differences appear. Bob White is a Vice-President of the NDP and I understand his point of view. However, Mr. Gow concludes:

> Union leaders will have a hard time convincing anyone that privatization of Air Canada is anything but good. Their members are already anxious to get a piece of the action and the general public will continue to hear from the Government that privatization will mean a more efficient airline.

There is a fundamental point of view. The NDP disagrees with it. We will debate it in the House of Commons and allow the people to decide whether this is the proper way to go.

PRESERVATION OF JOBS—REQUEST FOR LEGISLATIVE GUARANTEE

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, when the Prime Minister indicates what this particular initiative will do to the men and women working for Air Canada, he ought to be reminded of the experience in Britain with the privatization of British Airways. Twenty-three thousand men and women lost their jobs as a result of the privatization process.

The Prime Minister knows that the previous comments by the Deputy Prime Minister about the situation of Air Canada today do not hold for the future because the decision-making will be done by a minority group. If the Prime Minister is committed to preserving those jobs for the men and women who presently work for Air Canada, will he indicate that he believes what he says and, as a result, when the legislation is brought forward, if it is in fact ever brought forward, it will include provisions to guarantee the jobs for the men and women who presently work for Air Canada?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I did not say what the workers said; they said it themselves. The CBC quoted the workers directly saying that they thought that privatization is a great idea.

We listened to my hon. friend and the NDP when the privatization of de Havilland was debated. We heard the predictions of doom and gloom and they are on the record of the House. When Fisheries Products International was debated, it too was supposed to go down the chute. It is bringing prosperity to the fishermen of Newfoundland.

De Havilland has been a success story and Fisheries Products has been a success story. Every company that we have privatized has been a success, as Air Canada will be, because this initiative meets with the general desire of the workers and will strengthen both Canada and Air Canada as a corporation.

REGIONAL ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT

REQUEST THAT MINISTER ANNOUNCE PROGRAM FOR QUEBEC

Hon. Jean Lapierre (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion. Today we read that the provincial Minister responsible for research and development accused the federal Government of being $1.3 billion behind in real spending and that Quebec was suffering the consequences.

We know that, as far as regional economic development is concerned, for the past year the Government has made several announcements about setting up agencies in Western Canada, Atlantic Canada and Northern Ontario, and there again, Quebec was left out in the cold.

I want to ask the Minister when he intends to announce a real program for Quebec?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, I can inform the Hon. Member that as far as regional economic development is concerned, Quebec is certainly not lagging behind other regions in this country.

In fact, when we consider the contribution made by this Department in Quebec in recent years, it is clear that it constitutes a very adequate percentage, and the same applies to research and development.

PHASE II OF EASTERN QUEBEC DEVELOPMENT PLAN—MINISTER'S POSITION

Hon. Jean Lapierre (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary. That is all very well, but we know that as of March 31, for instance, Phase II of the Eastern Quebec development plan expired, and that the Minister promised to make an announcement before that date. Today, there is still no news, and although the Minister responsible for the region kept saying the announcement would be made by March 31, nothing has been done.

Could the Minister please explain why he is dragging his feet?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, for the first time, unlike the previous Government, we are setting up a comprehensive development plan for the entire province of Quebec. Unlike the previous Government, we have respected the constitutional jurisdictions of both levels of government. We have been engaged in active discussions with Quebec for the past six weeks, with a view to reaching a joint agreement that will help peripheral areas, central Quebec, the Montreal metropolitan region and in fact the entire province.

As for the date of the official announcement, I can inform the Hon. Member that we intend to extend the plan for Eastern Quebec. There is no doubt about that. However, we do not want to restrict our regional development initiatives to a specific region. We will have a comprehensive plan with sub-plans, and the announcement should be made very shortly. We are waiting until discussions with Quebec have been concluded.

JOBS—POSSIBILITY OF DOWNSIZING

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay—Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Right Hon. Prime Minister and it concerns employment guarantees at Air Canada.

The Government has indicated it will instruct the Chairman of Air Canada to vote with the majority of public shareholders. Given that, what protection is there for the workers in various centres across Canada, including Winnipeg, that under this new situation, should it be approved by this House, the minority shareholders will not direct Air Canada to downsize, consolidate maintenance facilities, and reduce services? What will prevent that from occurring if the Government is prepared to give full control of Air Canada to that very small group of people who may buy shares?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I think the Hon. Member would agree that what is desirable and what is required from the airline is that it be a healthy, productive and growing airline. We will be giving it the mechanisms to do just that. As the Chairman of Air Canada indicated at the press conference yesterday, and I think I quote him correctly, this initiative will be good for the employees—

Mr. Waddell: It will be good for him.

Mr. Mazankowski: —good for customers, good for communities and good for Canada.

I hear some smart remark to the effect that it will be good for him. I think that is a great disservice to a man who has distinguished himself and provided over 40 years of dedicated service from the bottom right up to the top. I think, rather than snarky remarks like that, the Hon. Member should be praising the man for the leadership and inspiration he has given.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Angus: Mr. Speaker, it is clear from the Minister's answer that the Government is not prepared to provide any guarantees. In his own words, it will be a clear arm's length relationship and there is no way to protect existing employees, routes, and facilities because the Government will let that small group of shareholders tell Air Canada what to do.

REQUEST FOR LEGISLATIVE GUARANTEES

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay—Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, is the Deputy Prime Minister prepared to stand in this House today and indicate that in the legislation he is bringing forward there will be a clause that will guarantee existing facilities, routes, and services? Is he prepared to make that guarantee?

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Was this question planned, Nelson?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): A little more fear mongering from members of the NDP.

Let us put this in perspective. We have debated privatization in this House on a number of occasions.

Mr. Shields: And they say the same thing every time.

Mr. Mazankowski: It is really unfortunate that the NDP do not get their act together. They talk about intellectual honesty. We have another nice little quote here by the Hon. Member for Vancouver—Kingsway. One of these days the NDP are going to have to stand up and be counted. They cannot be all things to all people. This is what the Hon. Member said about privatization on February 13, 1987, as reported at page 3426 of Hansard:

> I wish to reiterate what I have stated. I do not think that all companies need to remain in the public sector. There could be room for privatization. The argument has to be made, and the onus is upon the Government. It has to tell us whether it is a practical reason.

We have told you that this is a practical reason.

Some Hon. Members: What is the reason?

Mr. Crosbie: That's the way, Waddell. We want Waddell!

Mr. Mulroney: Why would a good man like that lose his seat?

Mr. Mazankowski: Give him a seat in Alberta.

Some Hon. Members: What is the reason?

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for The Battlefords—Meadow Lake has the floor.

EXCISE TAX ACT

FARM FUEL REBATE—ALLEGED DELAY IN PASSING BILL C-117

Mr. John Gormley (The Battlefords—Meadow Lake): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Finance. I understand that Bill C-117, presently stalled by the opposition Parties, provides an additional rebate of one cent a litre on farm fuels for farmers across the country. As they are doing the spring seeding now, could the Minister tell us if a delay in passing the Bill will mean farmers will be delayed in collecting their much needed rebates?

Hon. Tom Hockin (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for his very pertinent question. The Government of Canada has rebated sales and excise taxes to farmers in the past. This is worth $200 million a year to the farmers and we want to do it again through Bill C-117. The sooner we can pass it, the better. Until we do, the farmers will not get their rebates. So I urge the Liberals and NDP to pass the Bill as soon as possible.

OFFICIAL LANGUAGES

QUERY WHETHER PRIME MINISTER WILL ASK SASKATCHEWAN PREMIER TO WITHDRAW BILL 2

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Right Hon. Prime Minister. I understand that he will travel tomorrow to Western Canada and will probably meet the Saskatchewan Premier, Mr. Grant Devine. In view of the reaction of several groups to the fundamental issue before us, Bill 2 and the impact it may have had on national unity, would the Prime Minister be prepared to stand up in his place today and tell us that he will ask Mr. Devine to withdraw his Bill?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I hope to meet the Saskatchewan Premier tomorrow and have discussions with him to advance this difficult but so very important issue for Canada and Saskatchewan. Accordingly, I intend to discuss the matter with him tomorrow and I will report with pleasure to my hon. friend here in the House as soon as possible.

NON-NEGOTIABLE RIGHTS

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): I have a question for the Prime Minister. Yesterday, Mr. Speaker, we were told that negotiations were in progress between the Federal Government and the Saskatchewan authorities. I trust the Prime Minister will agree with me that basic and vested rights are not negotiable. We have in Canada a national policy on official languages and it is out of the question to negotiate existing vested rights. I ask the Prime Minister to repeat . . .

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Gauthier: . . . and tell Mr. Devine on behalf of the Canadian people that basic rights such as those he tried to set back with Bill 2 are not negotiable and must be maintained.

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): In fact, I have already indicated to my hon. friend that I fully share his views. There are no differences between the Hon. Member and myself. I have already emphasized the fact that in 1982, I think, the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier had felt it necessary to vote against the last constitutional initiative because in his view some of the Ontario Francophones' rights were not protected.

Problems exist in Ontario, in Saskatchewan and elsewhere and it is our duty to try to build a society which better respects the rights of linguistic minorities wherever they exist, whether it be the Anglophones in Quebec or the Francophones in Manitoba or elsewhere. That is, I think, the objective of the Parliament of Canada and it is certainly my own objective.

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES FREE TRADE AGREEMENT—EMPLOYMENT PROJECTION

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister for International Trade whom I would like to congratulate on his new position. I would also like to ask him about the Economic Council report this morning. That report showed a reduction from 189,000 jobs to only 76,000 jobs in its analysis of direct 10-year effects from the trade agreement. Does this not show that Canada in fact got a worse deal than the Economic Council expected last summer, and that in fact we were badly out-bargained by the United States?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the Hon. Member for his kind words with reference to myself. He and I must be reading from different news releases. I have here in my hands a news release from the Economic Council of Canada.

The Council cautioned against Canada repudiating the agreement because U.S. protectionist forces would probably succeed in having new trade actions launched against this country. That is one of its statements.

At the end of its second release the Council noted that Canadians should not focus on the precise numbers of the projections but on the general thrust of the results.

> The projections "tell a consistent story" that approving the free trade agreement will promote economic growth and employment in Canada..

All across Canada. That is the important thing. It is a very positive report.

Mr. Langdon: Mr. Speaker, may I suggest next time that the Minister read the report rather than reading the press release.

FORECAST BY ECONOMIC COUNCIL OF CANADA—MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): I have a supplementary for the Minister. Does he agree that according to this analysis, the five or six cent change in the value of the dollar means that the figures of the Economic Council are no longer valid

[English]

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, all studies and forecasts are based upon assumptions. Therefore, the results depend on the assumptions one makes. The hon. gentleman, I believe, was connected with the academic world before he entered the House. We can tell because he makes many assumptions himself and they are all unfavourable to the Government. For example, the Council says:

> . . . that it expects the accord will lead to an additional increase in employment of . . . about 250,000 jobs . . . if productivity grows as strongly as it should.

It says:

> Under the most probable scenario, all provinces and most industries would gain in employment and output.

This is what the Council says. It says that the reason for the difference between its former projections and the projections now was that we did not get access to American procurement to as great a degree as previously had been thought. This explains its projections. It says:

> If the trade pact is not approved, Canada might lose rather than gain jobs and investment as the United States might react by imposing new protectionist measures against Canadian exports.

The hon. gentleman shows every day his fear about U.S. protectionism. Why doesn't he support this protection against U.S. protectionism?

EXTERNAL AID

FOOD AID FOR ETHIOPIA—MINISTER'S POSITION

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister for External Relations. Does the Minister realize that famine may again strike thousands of Ethiopians, and could the Minister therefore explain to the House why generous amounts of Canadian aid routed to this country were sent exclusively to the South? Finally, what does the Minister intend to do to ensure that food aid is sent as soon as possible to the North, at least before the rains start, which is in about six weeks?

Hon. Monique Landry (Minister for External Relations): Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the Hon. Member for his question. I can inform him that the Government and I are also very concerned about the present situation in Ethiopia. As the Hon. Member is probably aware, I visited Ethiopia in February and reported at the time to the House. Of course, the situation has changed since then. We know that the war going on in the North is a threat to many millions of lives because it may prevent the food from reaching these people. However, I can inform the Hon. Member that food has been delivered in the North and that all Canadian commitments have been delivered so far, except for two shipments. One is expected to arrive in a matter of days, and its delivery is guaranteed. As for the other shipment now under way, we are looking at various alternatives to find out whether the shipment can be delivered to the people. I can assure the Hon. Member that we are concerned about the situation and that together with other donor countries and multilateral agencies, we are looking at various alternatives to ensure the population is not penalized by the present situation in Ethiopia.

QUERY CONCERNING MEASURES NECESSARY TO ACHIEVE CEASE-FIRE

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate what the Minister said, but she herself must admit that despite all the efforts and all the good will of Canadians who have responded very eagerly and with exemplary charity, food aid is not going where it should. And the reason the famine is raging again is the war, this unspeakable war that is continuing. Can the Minister tell us on behalf of the Canadian government what Canada can do concretely to work for a ceasefire as soon as possible in that country?

Hon. Monique Landry (Minister of External Relations): Mr. Speaker, I would first like to tell my colleague that so far, until a few weeks ago, food reached the affected populations. I was able myself to observe the delivery of food in northern Eritrea and Tigré. Now, I agree with the Hon. Member that the new situation, namely the state of war, that exists of course threatens the delivery of food to the affected populations. As I was just telling you, the multilateral agencies and donor countries are now consulting each other and we are now, to begin with, of course putting pressure on the Ethiopian Government to ensure that international agencies can return to the northern part of the country and supply food.

Also, the United Nations Under Secretary General's mission is now in Ethiopia. We are counting a great deal on this mission and hope that it will result in a more favourable situation and commitments from the governments involved.

CANADIAN HUMAN RIGHTS COMMISSION

REQUEST FOR GREATER POWERS

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Justice. Max Yalden, the Chief Commissioner of the Canadian Human Rights Commission, in his recent annual report called upon the Government to give the Commission greater powers to enable it to play a more active investigatory and regulatory role on pay equity for women. He also wants tougher powers to deal with discrimination against the disabled and visible minorities, instead of responding on a complaint by complaint basis.

Will the Minister of Justice respond positively to these important recommendations in the very near future in order to promote full equality for Canadian women and for Canadian minorities?

• (1500)

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I was very pleased to receive the first report of the commission under its new Commissioner, Mr. Yalden, for whom I have, the very greatest of respect, and this view is shared by the Government. I wish him well in the performance of his responsibilities.

I can only say that I am waiting for the detailed recommendations with respect to the matters raised in the report. I will give them the attention that they obviously require. When I receive these matters I will have a chance to respond to the House at the earliest possible date.

REQUEST THAT ATLANTIC CANADA BE REPRESENTED ON COMMISSION

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is for the same Minister. The Minister says that he will wait. For nearly six months there has been no representative whatsoever from Atlantic Canada on this important national commission, despite repeated pleas by Max Yalden for the Government to move finally to fill that vacancy. In fact, there is no one on the commission from east of Montreal.

When will the Minister finally move to fill this vacancy? How much longer will he wait before ending this insult to the people of Atlantic Canada?

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I have to give the Hon. Member marks for originality. That is the same question he asked me in committee two weeks ago.

Mr. Robinson: That's right.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: The fact of the matter is that I responded to him at that time to point out that the vacancy on the commission was as a result of the transfer of Mr. Fairweather, who represented that area very effectively, of course, as the commissioner at the time. I am looking now at a list of very important and impressive candidates. I will make sure that this position is filled—

Mr. Mulroney: The Hon. Member may be a candidate.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: The Hon. Member would not qualify on a number of counts. One is that he does not come from that area.

I will make sure that we get a good candidate. I will want the support of the Hon. Member when I make the announcement.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Algoma on a single question.

PROCESSED FOOD IMPORTS FROM UNITED STATES

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister for International Trade. The special advisory group to the Government on international trade for agriculture and food recommended that where imports of processed foods from the United States contain more than 10 per cent of ingredients produced under our supply-management system in Canada, that is, marketing boards, they be placed on the import control list. The free trade deal makes no provision such as that.

Will the Minister go ahead to implement that provision which was recommended by his own advisory group, and which has been recommended by practically all agriculture groups in Canada, even though it is not in the free trade agreement?

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the Hon. Member's question. He will know that there are ongoing discussions between industry people, international trade people, and representatives of Agriculture Canada. We will continue those discussions until we reach an agreement, a mutually agreed upon solution. Of course, we will then implement it.

I remind the Hon. Member that some time ago we had similar ongoing discussions with people in the dairy industry. When we concluded those discussions and reached an agreement we followed through with the commitment we made earlier that we would in fact shift certain commodities from the tariff list to the import-export list. We did that for the dairy industry. I expect that we will be doing the same thing with other industries under supply management.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Churchill on a single question.

SASKATCHEWAN AND MANITOBA LAND CLAIMS

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Indian Affairs. During the state of severe unemployment on Indian reserves in western Canada, and the fact that native people need a secure land base in order to develop their opportunities and get away from the welfare cycle that exists, why has the Minister reneged on the Saskatchewan formula as it applies to the provision of land and entitlement lands to the bands in that province? Why has he reneged on the agreement with the Manitoba chiefs and the Manitoba Government which was initialled by his officials over a year ago which would have provided the land base which those people so badly need?

Point of Order

Hon. Bill McKnight (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, there are two parts to that important question.

The Saskatchewan formula, which has been in effect since 1979, has only seen two transfers of land take place. The entitlement bands in Saskatchewan have changed their decision from that originally of land to land and, in some cases, cash, and to some land which is not rural but urban. To calculate the quantum to those changes, it was necessary to review the policy of the Government of Canada.

The date of first survey is still in place. Without prejudice, the Government of Canada will meet that date of first survey entitlement.

With respect to Manitoba, the Manitoba Government initialled a memorandum among officials that allowed for the Government of Canada to purchase in southern Manitoba all the land necessary for entitlement, completely excluding any responsibility by the Government of Manitoba to provide much needed land to Indian entitlement bands in that province.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. member for Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe rises on a point of order.

POINTS OF ORDER

WITHDRAWAL OF UNPARLIAMENTARY WORD

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, yesterday in responding to an answer by the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski) I said: "—that selective quote, I am sure, will be answered by the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry for the deliberate mistruth that it is."

I want to withdraw the word "deliberate". I would not want to suggest that the Deputy Prime Minister, even when he is dealing with faulty information, would deliberately convey that information to the House of Commons.

Mr. Speaker: I appreciate the Hon. Member's gesture without having to be asked. I know that that still leaves a difference of opinion between the Hon. Member and the Hon. Minister.

CORRECTION TO STATEMENT

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. It arises out of a question placed by a Conservative Member to the Minister of State for Finance (Mr. Hockin) concerning Bill C-117.

I am sure the Hon. Member who put the question would not want to mislead the House. He spoke of the Bill being delayed by members of the Opposition. I should point out that the Bill was brought on by the Government for only two days of debate. In fact, those were not two full days. This was just before the adjournment.

Six members from my Party, including myself, spoke on the debate. I believe an equal number of members from the New Democratic Party spoke on the debate. For some reason Conservative Members chose not to participate in the debate.

I am sure that the Hon. Member would not want to mislead the House by suggesting that two days of debate and 12 speakers on a major tax Bill constitutes undue delay as opposed to responsible comment.

Mr. John Gormley (The Battlefords—Meadow Lake): Mr. Speaker, in response to the Hon. Member's point of order, it was certainly not my intention to mislead the House. I think that if she were to check the "blues" she would find that the words which she has attributed to me about delay are indeed true. I talked about being delayed by the Opposition in general terms. I did not use a term such as "undue delay" or the sort of words that she has described.

My concern about this Bill, and I acknowledge it is a significant tax Bill, is that the clause to which I have expressed a concern is the clause that deals frankly with the fuel tax rebate. In my part of the country, as in all agricultural areas of Canada, there is a considerable interest in ensuring that federal fuel tax rebates are prolonged and extended by the Government. That was my reason for asking the question. I was concerned.

Mr. Speaker: I might indicate that this is perhaps straying beyond a point of order, but out of respect for the Hon. Member for Trinity I will hear her briefly.

Miss Nicholson: Mr. Speaker, I do not want to prolong this matter. I cannot help but comment on the fact that if the Government had not imposed the additional tax there would not be a need for the rebate the Hon. Member talks about.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: It is perhaps time to close off this exchange.

CORRECTION TO STATEMENT

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Yesterday, during the Adjournment Debate as reported at page 14407 of Hansard I referred in the closing paragraph to Bill C-84. The Bill should be Bill C-79. If our permanent record were to reflect that fact, then future historians would have a better record of what we were talking about.

CALL FOR GOVERNMENT SUPPORT FOR INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT AND PEACE IN ETHIOPIA

Ms. Carole Jacques (Montreal—Mercier): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure to table in the House today a petition signed by more than 1,300 Canadians who are asking the Government to propose a plan for international development and peace in Ethiopia, including an immediate ceasefire, and to take the necessary measures to put a stop to the famine that threatens the people of Ethiopia.

CANADA-U.S. FREE TRADE AGREEMENT

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, it is my distinct honour to present a petition pursuant to Standing Order 106 on behalf of a number of constituents who are very concerned about the Government's trade deal with the United States. The petitioners believe that the United States trade deal would have a fundamental impact on Canada's economic, cultural, and political independence. They believe that the trade deal will result in a massive loss of jobs, not only in many sectors of the economy, but in many regions of Canada.

Therefore, the petitioners are asking that the Parliament of Canada obtain a clear mandate from the people of Canada through a national debate on this deal, and that this debate result in a national election prior to the signing of any such agreement.

CALL FOR END TO HOSTILITIES IN ETHIOPIA

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Walkerville): Madam Speaker, as a Member of Parliament I have the distinct honour to submit a petition which has been gathered by the rather spectacular efforts of one Cheryl Verney.

The petition consists of some 1,200 signatures of Canadians who ask this Parliament to demand of the Government that it use its good offices to secure a peace settlement in Ethiopia, in order that the needs of the people in that tragic country can be met with respect to food, and ultimately to accomplish the long-term development there which will provide the security and the long-term survival of the people of Ethiopia.

CHARGE THAT ISRAEL WITHHELD FOOD TO CONTROL RIOTS

Mr. Peter Peterson (Hamilton West): Madam Speaker, I would like to present a petition signed by numerous residents of the Hamilton area. The petitioners are concerned about recent statements made by the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) with regard to the situation in Israel, especially the claim that Israel was using food as a weapon to control the riots in both the West Bank and the Gaza Strip.

The petitioners believe that there is irrefutable evidence that such is not the case. They call upon the Minister to provide them with evidence to support his charges.

NORTHERN TAX ALLOWANCES

Mr. John Parry (Kenora—Rainy River): Madam Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 106, I have the honour and privilege to present two petitions.

The first petition is signed by residents principally of the communities of Keewatin and Kenora in my riding. The petitioners call for the Government to remedy the inequitable and bizarre situation that has been created by the application of the northern residents' tax allowance whereby some people have been granted the allowance, and others, their very neighbours even, have been denied the allowance.

The petitioners humbly pray and call upon Parliament to provide a remedy by designating all communities that are placed in Tier III ridings as eligible for the deduction.

The second petition is signed by some 40 residents of the community of Ignace, Ontario. It is in the same vein and it seeks the same remedy, namely, that all communities that are remote and isolated should be designated as eligible for the northern residents' tax deduction.

CANADA-U.S. FREE TRADE AGREEMENT

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Madam Speaker, I have the honour to present petitions from the ridings of Trinity, Spadina, and other parts of Toronto, from people who say that since Canadian sovereignty is threatened by the proposed trade deal between the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and the President of the United States, for which the Prime Minister had no mandate from the Canadian people, and because this would reduce Canada's ability to plan our economic, social, and cultural programs and will integrate Canada further into the North American defence industrial base, therefore the undersigned ask the House of Commons to ensure that a national debate takes place on the Mulroney-Reagan trade deal, and that this debate result in a national general election before any agreement is signed.

NORTHERN TAX ALLOWANCES

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Madam Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition on the same subject matter as the one presented by the Hon. Member for Kenora—Rainy River (Mr. Parry) relating to the taxation of northern benefits.

In my riding the communities of Thompson and Bowden will not receive this tax benefit. The Government, through its rules and regulations, has deemed these communities which are over 700 kilometres north of the City of Winnipeg to be southern communities as far as it is concerned. People in the riding object strongly to the classification they have been given.

This petition has been signed by a number of people, many of whom work for the federal Government.

A similar petition was signed by over 4,500 residents of these two communities and was ruled ineligible by the Clerk of the House because it was not in proper form. However, it signifies that a very large percentage of people living in these two communities object to the discriminatory ruling of the federal Government and are very concerned about the issue.

I should also point out to the House that a number of people in the City of Thompson are deliberately going to misfile their tax forms as if they were northern residents, which they believe they are.

It is a very serious situation that the Government of Canada has created.

CSC—NORTHERN PSYCHIATRIC TREATMENT CENTRE

Question No. 268—Mr. Kaplan:

1. Has the government conducted any studies, on its own or in conjunction with the government of Ontario, into the impact on Sault Ste. Marie of locating the Northern Psychiatric Treatment Centre within the city limits of that community?

2. Did the Correctional Service of Canada (C.S.C) select the particular site in Sault Ste. Marie for the construction of the Northern Psychiatric Treatment Centre and, if not, did the C.S.C. or any other branch of the government object to the construction of the Centre in close proximity to a public school and a residential area of Sault Ste. Marie?

3. Does the Northern Treatment Centre Agreement entered into by the Correctional Services of Canada and the Ontario Ministry of Corrections provide (a) for the future construction of additional correctional institutions in the Sault Ste. Marie area (b) for the citizens of Sault Ste. Marie to become directly involved in the treatment and re-integration into the community of the Centre's inmates?

4. Will copies of the Northern Treatment Centre Agreement be released to the public and, if so, on what date?

Hon. James Kelleher (Solicitor General of Canada): In so far as the Correctional Service of Canada is concerned:

1. The cost of establishing and maintaining the Northern Treatment Centre will be shared by the federal and provincial correctional services. However, the Centre will be constructed and managed by the provincial Government. Therefore, the establishment of the Centre, including site issues, is the responsibility of the provincial Government who, since the beginning, has been making various decisions concerning the Centre in accordance with its normal practices and policies.

Consequently, no federal impact studies have been conducted, nor has the federal Government participated in any provincial studies related to the Northern Treatment Centre.

2. The Correctional Service of Canada did not select the particular site for the Northern Treatment Centre. Given the security safeguards provided by the Centre design, the Correctional Service of Canada does not consider there is any need to object to the site selected.

3. (a) The Northern Treatment Centre Agreement does not speak to future construction of additional correctional institutions in the Sault Ste. Marie area.

(b) The Northern Treatment Centre Agreement does not speak to the question of community involvement. Since the operation of the Centre will be managed by the provincial government, requests for specific details on the provincial policy on volunteer programs should be directed to the Ontario Ministry of Correctional Services. Generally speaking, however, the federal and provincial correctional systems encourage the involement of the community on a volunteer basis.

4. Copies of federal-provincial agreements are not available until all formalities have been concluded. It is anticipated that these formalities will be concluded in the near future.

CENTENNIAL FLAME

Question No. 282—Mr. Boyer:

1. Are the coins in the Centennial Flame fountain retrieved by employees of the government and, if so, what is their average yearly value?

2. Has the government any plans to rebuild the present structure of the Centennial Flame, originally intended to be temporary, or to replace it with a new one?

Hon. Stewart McInnes (Minister of Public Words): 1. The coins in the Centennial Flame fountain are retrieved by an employee of Public Works Canada. They are counted, weighed and given to the Finance Branch of Public Works to be deposited in a bank account in the name of the Government. These funds are donated annually to charity as designated by Secretary of State.

The amounts retrieved yearly are in the order of $1,000.

2. There is no actual plan to rebuild the present structure of the centennial flame nor to build a new one.

JUSTICE THOMAS R. BERGER

Question No. 299—Mr. Kaplan:

Since Thomas R. Berger's retirement from the Bench, has he been paid any periodic amount ex gratia by the government?

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): No.

[English]

Mr. Hawkes: Madam Speaker, I ask that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

NORTHERN CANADA POWER COMMISSION (SHARE ISSUANCE AND SALE AUTHORIZATION) ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

Hon. Bill McKnight (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development) moved that Bill C-125, an Act to enable the Northern Canada Power Commission to issue shares, to authorize the sale of those shares to the Government of the Northwest Territories, to repeal the Northern Canada Power Commission Act, and to provide for related matters, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

He said: Madam Speaker, I should like the indulgence of the House to take one or two minutes to speak to this very important piece of legislation respecting the Northern Canada Power Commission (Share Issuance and Sale Authorization) Act, which will transfer the assets and the authority of a very important utility to some 13,000 consumers and the duly elected legislative Government of the Northwest Territories.

In keeping with that I will conclude my remarks and ask that the Hon. Member for Western Arctic (Mr. Nickerson), who is one of those 13,000 consumers and one of the electorate in the Northwest Territories, be allowed to continue debate.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Is that agreed?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Madam Speaker, first I should like to thank the Minister for allowing me to make the remarks which he would have made this afternoon. I am going to sandwich them between a prefix and a suffix of my own making. I should also like to thank the opposition Parties for allowing the matter to be dealt with in an expeditious manner this afternoon.

My part in the process goes back some 15 years. This is how long we have been working on this transfer. This measure today restores my faith in the parliamentary process, the Canadian political process, in that this is taking place. It shows that in this country if one has good ideas, and if enough people are persuaded of the rightness of those ideas and work collectively to put them into effect, this can be accomplished.

The history goes back many years. One could perhaps single out 1973-74 as the start of the process when a committee of the Legislative Assembly of the Northwest Territories, under the chairmanship of Tom Butters who was then and is now the MLA for Inuvik, did a study of those areas of jurisdiction which at that time were under federal control but which normally were under provincial control. A list was made, and since that time we have made a lot of progress on transferring items from that list, from the responsibility of the federal Government to that of the territorial Government where they rightfully belong.

The idea of transferring the responsibility for electrical power was endorsed by the three political Parties within the Northwest Territories. If anything we were vying between ourselves as to who was the most forceful in recommending that the transfer take place. I guess the big difference between the Parties is that local Conservatives were listened to by the national association, and this might not have been the case with at least one of the other Parties.

Another major step came in 1980 when the report of the Prime Minister's special representative on constitutional development in the Northwest Territories, the Hon. Bud Drury, was tabled in the House. It addressed itself to this very question and to many others.

Very good work was done on this question in the early 1980s by the House of Commons NCPC subcommittee of the Standing Committee on Indian Affairs and Northern Development chaired by our good friend, the Hon. Member for Cochrane—Superior (Mr. Penner). It is interesting to note that many of the recommendations in that report have been acted upon over a period of time, and the major recommendation is now being acted upon.

In 1985 there was a memorandum of understanding agreed to by the Government of Canada, by the then Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, the Hon. Member for Rosedale (Mr. Crombie), and the Governments of the Yukon and the Northwest Territories which put into effect the guidelines for negotiations leading to the transfer.

In 1987 the Yukon part of NCPC was transferred to the responsibility of the Government of the Yukon. That was a good move. It was supported by all Parties in the House and dealt with in an expeditious fashion.

That brings us to today where, following the February 8 agreement signed by the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. McKnight) and the territorial Minister responsible for energy, the Hon. Nellie Cournoyea, we have before us Bill C-125 which will actually put the transfer into effect and authorize the disposition of the shares.

Now I come to the meat of the sandwich—the speech which would have been given by the Hon. Minister. On February 8 this year in Yellowknife, the territorial Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, the Hon. Nellie Cournoyea, and the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development signed an agreement in principle for the sale of the Northern Canada Power Commission to the Government of the Northwest Territories. The legislation which is in front of us is designed to authorize the sale.

It means that for the first time residents of the Northwest Territories will have full ownership and control of their own electric utility. Along with ownership will come responsibility, something which northerners have long sought and long deserved. The Northern Canada Power Commission is a federal Crown corporation and the principal producer of power in the Northwest Territories. In 1987 it sold some 385 million kilowatt hours of electricity to some 13,000 customers.

Until a year ago, NCPC was also the principal supplier of electricity in the Yukon. However, in March of last year this House gave all-Party support to Bill C-45 which provided for the sale to the Yukon Government of NCPC's Yukon assets. Today we are proposing the sale of NCPC to the Government of the Northwest Territories through legislation equally deserving of all-Party support.

Also, Members will be happy to learn of the realization of a critical objective, the right of all employees of NCPC to continue their employment with the new utility to be formed by the Government of Northwest Territories.

We are eager to complete this sale for a number of reasons. For instance, this transfer is entirely in keeping with the federal Government's northern framework, the policy which guides this Government's approach to northern economic and political development issues. Among the Government's principal goals under the framework are the goals to assist northerners in achieving economic independence and to aid in their attainment of more responsible government.

In order to achieve this, we are committed to transferring responsibility for provincial-type programs to the territorial Governments. In this regard, the Government has recently transferred to the Government of the Northwest Territories responsibility for forest management and forest fire fighting, and we are in the process of transferring the residual health care responsibilities from the Department of National Health and Welfare.

The ability of residents of the territories to manage and develop their utility has been a growing concern for some time. In 1982, a subcommittee of the Standing Committee on Indian and Northern Affairs recommended that the Northern Canada Power Commission be transferred to the territorial Governments. The step we are taking today completes the response to the recommendations of that subcommittee.

Again, we have to acknowledge the hard work of the subcommittee and especially the Chairman, the Hon. Member for Cochrane—Superior.

The Government of the Northwest Territories has expressed a willingness to assume responsibility for the utility and has indicated its capability to operate the facility under a territorial corporation to be called the Northwest Territory Power Corporation. It will be the responsibility of the Government of the territories to ensure that the affairs of the corporation are managed for the best possible benefit of northerners.

The transfer of the Northern Canada Power Commission will be accomplished by means of a sale of its shares to the Government of the Northwest Territories. Bill C-125 will authorize NCPC to convert $43.1 million of its total debt of some $96.1 million owing to the federal Government into share capital. The remaining $53 million will stay as debt on the NCPC accounts.

This legislation will permit the federal Government to sell these shares and the debt with a total worth of $96.1 million for a cash price of $53 million to the Government of the Northwest Territories. While it is a little more complicated when one reads the fine print, that is the gist of the deal. This deal will enable the utility to operate in a viable and efficient manner, and allow the Government of the Northwest Territories to assume its social responsibilities to protect customers.

This is another example of the ability of the Government to act responsibly and co-operatively. I am proud to advise the House that as a result of the sale and transfer of NCPC, all NCPC employees will continue their present employment with the new utility, uninterrupted. They will also continue to participate in the federal pension plan. We have also ensured that the benefits package employees will be entitled to is comparable to the one they now enjoy. There will be additional benefits available to them through a dental plan and improved maternity leave arrangements.

As I said at the outset, the sale of NCPC is consistent with the federal Government's northern framework, which includes the goal of transferring programs and responsibilities of a provincial nature to the territorial Governments. Northerners are eager that this occur—I can personally vouch for this—and the territorial Governments are ready and able to take on the job. Proof of this is to be found in the successful transfer I mentioned earlier. Bill C-125 is an important step in the transfer process.

The territorial Government is off to a good start. It had its legislation in place before the March 31 deadline while we are a couple of weeks late. It is establishing the Northwest Territories Power Corporation, a territorial Crown corporation, and has already named the new board. It is a very good new board, and I recognize a number of the names, particularly that of the Chairman, Mr. Jim Robertson of Inuvik. I am sure they will do a good job.

One of the first jobs they will be called upon to perform is the selection of a new president, or chief operating officer. That will be a very important decision, and while we are on the subject, we should render our compliments to Mr. Jack Beaver, who, despite rather ill health, agreed to stay on. While he thought it would only be for a matter of months, it turned out to be somewhat longer. He agreed to stay on to make sure that the transition went smoothly. Mr. Beaver has done an excellent job over many years and we in the North thank him for that.

There will be a number of other decisions to be made, one of which will be the location of the head office. Presently it is in Edmonton and will have to be moved north. As we all know, there is considerable debate as to where it should go, and, in a way, I am fortunate that it will now be a territorial decision rather than one in the hands of federal representatives.

When the head office is transferred, we will have to take special notice of the Edmonton employees, many of whom will not want to move north. Generally speaking, I think we have done a very good job with the employees of NCPC, although some of them are still not quite sure where they stand. That will have to be made known to them. In particular, the new owners will have to devote some attention to the Edmonton employees.

The new corporation will be faced with some rather serious problems, including upgrading the facilities. Some of the facilities are in need of renewal. I understand it has already started on a new power line and is already doing the clearing for a new power line from the Snare Hydro site to the City of Yellowknife. The corporation is faced with the loss of its biggest customer, Pine Point Mines. That will cause some problems which it will have to overcome.

The territories will also have to take over what we might call a social responsibility. As this sale takes place, the federal Government will no longer be providing subsidies to very remote areas. That will become the responsibility of territorial authorities. Of course, there will be an ongoing debate as to whether a territorial Crown corporation, per se, is the best way to provide electrical energy to consumers in the region. Perhaps we could look at the Yukon model, which is a kind of a joint system between private investors and a territorial Crown corporation. We could look at other ways for investor involvement perhaps to occur. There are a number of other models and maybe some completely new ideas that ought to be looked at. As well, the territories will have to reassess the functions and authorities of the public utilities board.

All in all, I think that this is an excellent move on the part of the Government. A lot of hard work has gone into this on the part of people who have been involved in the negotiations including those with NCPC, those with the federal Government and those with territorial Governments. It has been a long, hard road to slog, but we have now reached the goal. It deserves the support of all Hon. Members so that northerners might soon realize the same economic control over their destiny enjoyed by their counterparts south of sixty.

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane—Superior): Madam Speaker, I am certainly very pleased to participate in this debate because we are doing something today that is positive and helpful for the development of Canada's great North. Bill C-125 authorizes the Northern Canada Power Commission, a federal Crown corporation, to be sold to the Government of the Northwest Territories.

As has already been indicated by my friend from Western Arctic, this Bill is really a piece of companion legislation to one with which we dealt last year, Bill C-45, which permitted the Yukon assets and operation of the Northern Canada Power Commission to be transferred to the full ownership and control of Yukoners. Bill C-125 which is now being considered and Bill C-45 which has already been passed are, in general, though not in every specific point, in keeping with the recommendations of a report prepared for Parliament by a subcommittee of the Standing Committee on Aboriginal Affairs and Northern Development. That report is entitled Electrical Power North of Sixty Degrees. It was certainly a great pleasure for me to work on that subcommittee along with my good and able friend from Western Arctic.

In examining the organizational arrangements of the Northern Canada Power Commission, the subcommittee to which I have referred found that the territorial Governments had almost no legislative and regulatory jurisdiction over the Northern Canada Power Commission as a federal Crown corporation. This was a bone of contention. It was a grievance that existed in the North.

Second, in examining the organizational arrangements, the subcommittee found that the federal Government's powers, decision-making and budgetary processes do not make the Northern Canada Power Commission fully accountable to the people it serves. When accountability is remote, as it was under the NCPC arrangements, there are bound to be problems, and that was exactly the case.

These findings caused the committee to recommend that the federal Government enter into discussions with the territorial Governments for the purpose of creating separate territorial Crown corporations to assume present NCPC responsibilities. In 1985, the then Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development reached a memorandum of understanding with the Government of the Northwest Territories. This MOU led to negotiations between the federal Government and the Government of the Northwest Territories and resulted in an agreement in principle. That agreement in principle was signed on February 8, 1988.

The principles which governed the sale and transfer of NCPC to the Government of the Northwest Territories called for a speedy process. The agreement in principle actually mentioned a date of March 31. As has already been noted, we have missed that target date because of the Easter recess of Parliament, but not by very much. We in this Party support in principle the thrust of this Bill and we want it to be passed quickly. The Northwest Territories Legislative Assembly passed its legislation on the target date, March 31. Its resolution has now received assent from the territorial Commissioner.

After the transfer, the Government of the Northwest Territories will continue to operate the utility on a commercially viable basis. The objective of the transfer is to achieve a fiscally responsible, self-financing and dependable utility operation providing power to the North at reasonably stable rates. Viability, however, will not exclude certain social obligations of the Government of the Northwest Territories, and I will return to the social obligations a little later.

The agreement does not write off totally the existing debt of the Northern Canada Power Commission as the subcommittee had recommended, but NCPC's long-term debt of some $96 million will be replaced by a new capital structure. This capital structure will be composed of a promissory note of $53 million and share capital of $43 million. These two items, amounting to $96 million, will be sold to the Government of the Northwest Territories for $53 million in cash. However, the Northern Canada Power Commission has some retained earnings of $25 million, and these, I understand, are included in the transfer price. Therefore, if my arithmetic is correct, the total cost to the Government of the Northwest Territories would be about $28 million, and on top of that there is to be some Public Works housing transferred to the Government at no cost, and I will return to that a bit later.

The rate of return on this $43-million worth of shares will allow the Government of the Northwest Territories to continue its program of subsidies for remote communities. The federal Government's obligation for those power subsidies will be discontinued. This is an important concern to me because these remote and isolated communities depend on electricity produced by oil-burning generators. The cost is high to these people. There is the maintenance factor to be taken into account as well. At times, the climate is extremely cold. Many of the people who live in these communities are living in or very close to poverty.

The agreement also recognizes the desire of the Government of the Northwest Territories to relocate NCPC's head office from Edmonton to the Northwest Territories. The background paper from the Minister notes that the head office employees in Edmonton will eventually be relocated to the Northwest Territories, so there still seems to be a delay factor there. My friend from Western Arctic, however, has pointed out that where the headquarters are to go is now no longer in the hands of the Government of Canada but is up to the Government of the Northwest Territories itself.

I am curious, and I have not found the answer anywhere, about where exactly the revenues from the sale of the headquarters in Edmonton will be directed. I assume for the moment that they will go into that big drawer that we have here in Ottawa called the Consolidated Revenue Fund. When I first came to Parliament, I had the idea that money was actually divided up in different places. Then someone told me that that is not true, it is all in one big drawer called the Consolidated Revenue Fund, and all of that reference to envelopes is really a good deal of mythology.

The agreement in principle, and this is absolutely the most important part of the legislation and the agreement, called for the equitable treatment of Northern Canada Power Commission employees. To the best of my knowledge, having studied the Bill with some care, I think that concern is reflected in Bill C-125.

All employees of NCPC will become members of the Northwest Territories Public Service. They will maintain their current positions within the utility if they so wish. Those employees who are unionized will continue to have their own bargaining unit but at the same time they will become part of the union of northern workers. Wages and benefits will be comparable to those now enjoyed. In fact, I believe they are going to get some additional benefits, including a dental plan and maternity leave. Past service will be recognized for purposes of severance, seniority, and pensions.

The agreement in principle also made reference to housing, and I referred to that a moment ago. They saw housing as being necessary for the continued operation of the utility, so Public Works Canada housing will be transferred to the Government of the Northwest Territories at no cost. That is part of the deal. This will be an important factor for those employees of NCPC who decide to relocate to the North and become N.W.T. public servants. They will want to be assured that they will have good and affordable housing.

The agreement envisages the possibility of a role for the private sector. The Government of the Northwest Territories will develop some options for involving companies or individuals in the provision of electricity in the Northwest Territories. That may involve, for example, a private utility taking an equity position at some future time. The Government of the Northwest Territories wants to determine whether the private sector could finance, develop and own future electrical projects in the Northwest Territories. Once again, that will be their decision, just as the decision was taken in the Yukon to involve the private sector.

The Yukon did it in a slightly different way. It was not an equity position. It was not development or ownership. In fact, the Yukon Government decided that the best approach was to combine on the one hand public sector ownership and, on the other, to have efficient and effective management from the private sector. What they did was to negotiate a management contract with the private sector and, to the best of my knowledge, that arrangement is working well.

The agreement in principle noted that after the transfer the electrical utility operations will be subject to regulation by a regulatory agency appointed by the Government of the Northwest Territories. However, the background notes from the department say that the N.W.T. Power Commission will eventually, after a transition period, be regulated by the N.W.T. Public Utility Board. I must express to the Minister and the House a modest degree of concern about this eventuality. I believe that the regulatory powers should be in the hands of the N.W.T. Public Utility Board as quickly as possible.

I want to say that we in the Official Opposition support the Bill. I certainly want to commend the Minister for carrying forward recommendations from a parliamentary committee even though the work was done in a previous Parliament. I just want to make reference again to committees in case it is missed along the way because I always take pride in the way in which parliamentary committees can contribute to the process of Government. I think there is too little of that in our system. Our parliamentary committees could do so much to give us better Government. Often, what they recommend is put aside, and I sometimes wonder why. I often feel that there is some jealousy on the part of official policy makers, some feeling that parliamentarians are out of their league in the formulation of public policy. Not at all. We have here a case in point.

It was a subcommittee of the standing parliamentary committee on northern affairs that in 1981 recommended that complete federal devolution to territorial Crown corporations be accepted quickly, along with forgiveness of federal debt, and the commencement of a process of discussion by the territorial Governments involving private utilities as well as the NCPC. This recommendation reflected the findings of the subcommittee that the federal Government's powers, decision-making and budgetary processes, do not make the NCPC fully accountable to the people it serves, and that the territorial Governments have almost no legislative and regulatory jurisdiction over NCPC.

Over the last few days I checked with the Government of the Northwest Territories, its Minister of Energy, and her officials, and they tell me that they have examined the Bill and they find it fully acceptable and in keeping with the agreement in principle to which I have been referring. Therefore, my concerns are modest in nature.

I really want to know how long the Minister thinks it is going to take before the headquarters are transferred from Edmonton, and where those particular assets will go. I wonder why there should be a delay in transferring regulation to the Northwest Territories Public Utility Board.

I cannot help but note as well that the recommendation of the subcommittee that there be a full write-off of the debt was not accepted. However, I must assume there was some hard bargaining in the negotiations between the Government of the Northwest Territories and the federal Government, and that the Government of the Northwest Territories got the best possible deal consistent with the realities that we here in Ottawa face with a consistently and persistently high federal deficit.

I want to commend the Government of the Northwest Territories for its abiding concern for its employees. I wish them well as they take another step in the direction of devolution of full responsible Government. As this process continues, I do have a lingering question about the future role of the Department of Northern Development with its approximately 800 person-years. When the Minister meets the Standing Committee on Aboriginal Affairs and Northern Development with his Estimates, I want to probe further as to why this Department is not being wound down in the interests of expenditure reduction. It is becoming more and more puzzling to myself and other members of the committee what exactly is the role of the Department of Northern Development now that so much devolution has taken place and now that so many other departments are active in the North, including the Department of Fisheries and Oceans, the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources, the Department of the Environment, and so on.

I cannot conclude without once again expressing the hope—although I have to believe it is probably futile to do so—that somehow the Meech Lake Accord could be amended to deal with the concerns of the North, our Canadian citizens who live in the Yukon and Northwest Territories. However, in raising these additional concerns I wish in no way to detract from the progress we are making in this House today in the interests of Canada's North. What we are doing today is a good move. It is a welcome step. It is a positive development.

Ms. Audrey McLaughlin (Yukon): Madam Speaker, I, too, am pleased to rise and make a few comments on this Bill and, on behalf of my Party, to say that in essence we support the Bill and the transfer of the Northern Canada Power Commission to the Northwest Territories. As a Member for the Yukon I am particularly interested in what this kind of transfer represents to northerners. As was mentioned by other speakers in March, 1987, the responsibilities for the Northern Canada Power Commission for the Yukon were transferred to the Yukon. There is indication that that is going very well in the Yukon, that the territories have shown that they are able to manage these corporations well. I am sure the same will be true for the Northwest Territories.

I was interested in reviewing the Minister's comments at the time that the transfer to the Yukon took place. On March 25, 1987, he said that it is consistent with the philosophy and policy of the Government that government services should be provided as close as possible to those who are directly affected.

That is really the intent in principle of the Bill we are discussing today. For that reason, as a northerner who has often said exactly the same thing about a number of issues, I can support it, as does my Party.

There are a number of aspects to this Bill which, again, represent principles of devolution which many northerners have been fighting and speaking for for a long time, that is, the principle of transferring the assets and the ability to administer the program and giving full control over to the territories. This is a particularly important point to which I would like to return in a few minutes.

There are a couple of concerns about the Bill which the other speakers have raised. I understand, through my discussions with the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources for the Northwest Territories, that there are a couple of outstanding items to be negotiated. One in particular is contained in Section 11 of the memorandum of understanding between the Government of Canada and the Government of the Northwest Territories concerning the Inuvik Utilidor.

Many people will probably think that this is something from outer space. The Inuvik Utilidor is actually very interesting. It was a model project in 1959. An above-ground system for water, sewer, and heat was developed for an Arctic community which has proven to be a very interesting model for Arctic communities. Of course, 28 years have passed since 1959. This facility is in need of repair and is still essential for the community. This remains an outstanding item in the agreement and it is hoped that this can be satisfactorily resolved.

We know of the difficulties in so many areas in our municipalities with the lack of funding for municipal infrastructure. One who is familiar with the northern communities flags this issue in particular when reading the agreement. This is clearly an area in which I hope the federal Government will continue to negotiate favourably with the NWT and give them the assistance required.

Another section of the agreement to which I, as a northerner, thought should be paid attention is Section 10 which says that future capital projects of this utility will be financed by funds raised from sources other than the federal Government. It seems to me that this could certainly pose some problems in the future because the tax base is very low, as we know. It has been mentioned that this utility services about 13,000 households. Therefore, the revenue which can be raised is pretty limited. However, as has been mentioned, the Legislature of the Northwest Territories has given its assent to this Bill and these are issues with which it will obviously have to deal itself in the future.

As I mentioned earlier, the devolution of responsibilities is an extremely important factor to consider in looking at Bill C-125. One must understand the underlying principles of this. Although it has taken considerable time, the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. McKnight) has followed through on his promise made in 1987 as he did with the transfer of NCPC to the Yukon Government.

There are other outstanding issues. People have heard northerners talking for a long time about the need for self-sufficiency saying that devolution of programs and responsibility to our duly elected legislatures, both in the Yukon and the Northwest Territories, is extremely important to the constitutional development of those territories.

The previous speaker mentioned the Meech Lake Accord. It is very important that we understand that the transfer of programs such as this to the territories underscores the ability of the territories to manage their own affairs. The Minister certainly deserves considerable credit for that in this Bill concerning NCPC. He has not had quite as much success with his colleagues in other similar Bills concerning energy, interestingly enough.

The Minister has been attempting to come up with a policy under the Northern Accord which would transfer much of the potential revenue from gas and oil resources, both onshore and partially offshore, to the Northwest Territories and the Yukon, but it seems to have been bogged down. It is important to mention this while discussing a Bill which transfers responsibilities because it illustrates one of the essential problems with which the territories are forever having to deal.

The Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development has a good understanding of the North. He has travelled there, spoken with many people, and dealt with many groups. He supports things such as the Northern Accord and the transfer of these responsibilities. However, as the Calgary Herald of November 1987 said, one of the biggest stumbling blocks of the Minister is his colleagues, and particularly his colleagues in energy and finance who are worried "that transferring one-third of Canada's energy reserves to 50,000 people is fraught with folly".

For many years federal Governments have tended to look at the North as the storehouse of resources for the South. As the previous speaker alluded to, it is also a bit of a storehouse of work for federal bureaucrats at times as it is an area left in the country over which bureaucrats can have some control at the federal level.

There is often resistance to this kind of transfer. In the Northern Accord we see an instance in which the Minister responsible can see the legitimate value and need for this while his colleagues are much more reticent about it. This, of course, has very much to do with money and with who will receive the revenues. The territories now receive substantial revenues from the federal Government and the intent of things like NCPC and the Northern Accord is to ensure that the territories will be able to raise their own revenues and become much less dependent on federal revenues, to become much more self-sufficient which, indeed, has been a stated goal of the Northwest Territories' Government as well.

The Government Leader, for example, is quoted in the Edmonton Journal in January of this year in reference to this energy accord describing what it really means to the territories. He states that the ensuing royalties could provide the means to "break the cycle of economic dependence on the South, so that we can solve our frightening social problems such as drug and alcohol abuse and a Third World birth rate".

As the previous speaker said, the elected government leaders of the territories do not even attend First Ministers' Conferences and therefore often do not have input into many of the policy and decision matters which are taking place in Canada today. We must work toward building the blocks of self-sufficiency. I would agree that the Bill under discussion today does that.

I would like to outline a number of principles which this Bill represents which are very much the principles which we would like to see developed in other areas in the transfer and devolution of programs to the territories. I am sure my colleague from the Northwest Territories would agree with these principles as well. First, this Bill is built on the basic principle of a commercially viable operation. In this case, the NCPC has to have the assets and administrative control in order to develop a commercially viable operation. At the same time, it cannot be saddled with a huge debt load accumulated by previous administrations. So the assumption of the debt load by the federal Government has certainly been a positive aspect of this territorial transfer. The other principle, of course, is the deference paid and the consideration of the workers, the fact that a number will be asked to transfer from the head office in Edmonton to some community in the Northwest Territories.

They would be welcome to come to the Yukon, but I suspect the Government of the Northwest Territories would like them to move there. There has been fairly careful attention paid in this agreement to the requirements of the workers with respect to severance benefits where required and to ensuring that current employees can have a position with the Northern Canada Power Commission should they wish to move to the North. That is another very important principle.

I would like to give an example of how that principle in other areas is not as easily developed. For example, in the Yukon at this time there are a number of programs under discussion for devolution, one of which is the health and the hospital program. The hospital in the Yukon was built in the 1950s and certainly needs to be replaced. It has many requirements. It is under-financed and under-staffed at this time. Therefore, there has been a reluctance on the part of the Yukon Government to accept the transfer of that understaffed and under-financed facility. The federal Government, on the other hand, is quite willing to transfer the administration of an under-financed facility, but we in the Yukon are certainly not going to accept that.

It would be wished that other ministries, in this case, the Department of National Health and Welfare, would accept the same principles that have been accepted and elucidated in this Bill, the principle of making these things financially viable. Transferring a program that is under-funded, giving the territories responsibility for programs which already do not have enough funds is not enhancing the self-sufficiency and autonomy of the territories. It is simply moving a problem over to someone else. As I say, fortunately in Bill C-125 this is not the case.

Under the principles governing the sale are the particular points with respect to consideration for staff. Again, in other items of devolution and transfer to the territories this has not been a consideration. It would be hoped that in the future some example would be taken from this kind of agreement undertaken with the Northwest Territories.

There are a number of areas one can talk about when one talks about the North, the assumption of powers in the North and the transfer of federal programs. I mentioned having consulted with the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources in the Northwest Territories, and we are in agreement with the passage of this Bill. We have some minor concerns but they are ones which will basically be negotiated between the Government of Canada and the Government of the Northwest Territories. I think it is important to look at this Bill in the context of its importance for the territories and their self-sufficiency.

There is an interesting article on the political evolution of the Canadian north by Gurston Dacks. He states in part:

> Will the North stagnate or will it grow politically? The answer to this question will depend on many factors, but chief among them will be the policies of the federal Government. As in all colonial situations, the colonial power, Ottawa, has the ability to define the terms of political debate. It alone has the power to respond to claims for greater self-determination.

In conclusion, I would say that it is our view that this Bill in many ways does that. It has been the subject of fairly lengthy negotiations, as these things usually are, but it is an example of a transfer of responsibility that will enhance the eventual political responsibility of the territories, in my view. On that note, I would like to say simply that I am sure, as has been the case in the Yukon, that the Northwest Territories will very efficiently and effectively manage this resource.

Mr. Penner: Madam Speaker, the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. McKnight) is present in the House. You will have noted, Madam Speaker, that there is unanimity among all the Parties. May I ask, therefore, if the Chair would seek the consent of the House for us to proceed through all stages of the passage of this Bill so that it can be ready to go for Royal Assent?

Mr. Riis: Madam Speaker, I just want to indicate that there had been previous discussions between the Parties and, as a result of the nature of the issue being examined today, we are in complete agreement that we ought to proceed through all stages. Therefore, may I say on behalf of the New Democrats that we are quite prepared to complete all stages of this legislation in terms of moving it expeditiously today.

Mr. Hawkes: Madam Speaker, speaking on behalf of the Government, let me say that we would be inclined to accept that offer. Am I to understand that we will be guaranteed completion of all stages expeditiously today? There will be no carry-over? Is my understanding correct? I gather the discussions took place between the opposition critics and the Member from the Northwest Territories on our side and that this is where this agreement originated. Is this the sense of the agreement? I would just like to be sure of what I am agreeing to.

Mr. Penner: Yes, Madam Speaker, in reply to the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary, we in this Party would be prepared to move through all stages expeditiously. During the Committee of the Whole stage I will have just a few brief questions to put to the Minister, but that would not fall outside of the definition of "expeditious".

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Is there unanimous consent?

Mr. Hawkes: Madam Speaker, the House Leader for the New Democratic Party, I think, was about to rise to say that my understanding was correct.

Mr. Riis: Madam Speaker, I appreciate the Parliamentary Secretary's eye. I was attempting to rise to indicate that it is our intention to move through all stages today, although one is never able to predict the actions of the House. Assuming that all goes according to Hoyle, it would be our intention to complete the debate in all stages today.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Is there unanimous consent for the motion to be changed accordingly?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the second time and, by unanimous consent, the House went into committee thereon, Mrs. Champagne in the Chair.

• (1620)

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Order, please. The House in Committee of the Whole on Bill C-125, an Act to enable the Northern Canada Power Commission to issue shares, to authorize the sale of those shares to the Government of the Northwest Territories, to repeal the Northern Canada Power Commission Act, and to provide for related matters.

Mr. Penner: Madam Chairman, if Clause 1 were called I would be prepared to raise a few questions, although not many, with the Minister. In this way we could move expeditiously, which is what we promised to do.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Because of the Standing Orders I have to stand Clause 1, which is the title. All that the Hon. Member has mentioned can be done on Clause 2.

On Clause 2—Definitions

Mr. Penner: Madam Chairman, I thank you for that correction. I meant to say Clause 2. It was a slip on my part.

I want to begin by asking the Minister about the headquarters in Edmonton. I recall from the occasion when the subcommittee visited Edmonton and spent some time at headquarters that it was a very good quality building. I would like to know if the Minister can share with the House any information about when this asset may be disposed of. Is there some other plan that the federal Government has of which the Minister is aware? I know that this matter is not his direct responsibility but that of the Department of Public Works. However, since the building is now being occupied by NCPC, I would like to know what future plans there are.

As well, I am curious as to whether in fact it is a Public Works building or whether it was owned outright by the Crown corporation. That is something about which I am not certain.

If the building is sold and if in fact it is a NCPC asset where will the revenues from its sale go? Will they be part of the write-down that was referred to in the Bill, a $43 million write-down? What exactly is the destination of those revenues?

Mr. McKnight: Madam Chairman, at the outset I would like to thank both opposition Parties, and in particular the Hon. Member for Western Arctic who conducted the negotiations on behalf of the Government, with respect to proceeding to all stages today.

The Hon. Member for Cochrane—Superior has a great deal of knowledge about NCPC and has expressed points of view on which he and I agree in the report that was tabled. He was a member of the committee. The report recommended the divestiture.

The headquarters, which the Hon. Member correctly described as being valuable, are part of the assets of NCPC and will be included in the shares transferred to the Government of the Northwest Territories. The Government will become the owners of the asset through the share purchase. Therefore the revenues that would accrue from the divestiture by that Government would be used by that Government. It is not a Public Works building. It is part of the assets and will be transferred with the shares.

Ms. McLaughlin: Madam Chairman, I have a question for the Minister. I understand from the memorandum that the issue of the Inuvik Utilidor is an exclusion, or that there is some dispute about it. I suppose it would be correct to say that there is a difference of opinion about who it belongs to and so on. Can the Minister say something about what kind of negotiations will go on about that?

It is obvious that for that type of infrastructure there is a certain amount of maintenance that is required. I understand that there is some reworking that has to be done in order to allow it to continue to be functional. It is essential to the community of Inuvik. Can the Minister comment on what plans the Government might have around that specific item? I know that it is somewhat ancillary to this, but it is mentioned in the agreement.

Mr. McKnight: The Hon. Member for Yukon is correct, it is mentioned. There have been discussions and it was not part of NCPC's assets. It is an important utility in Inuvik. At present the Government of Canada is discussing with the Government of the Northwest Territories the future of the commitments that both Governments will have to make towards its upkeep. It is not an asset which is sought after by either Government. That, I think, would be an accurate way of putting it. We realize that it is important and we are having discussions with the Government of the Northwest Territories. I am sure that we will come to an agreement in due time to continue to have the upkeep and the necessary maintenance dollars expended. It will cost some money to maintain that utility.

Mr. Penner: Madam Chairman, the agreement in principle of February states in Section 8(1) that after the transfer the electrical utility operations will be subject to regulation by a regulator appointed by the GNWT. I take it that that will be a public utility of the Northwest Territories.

I am curious, however, that in the background information that was provided to my office by the Minister and his department, for which I thank the Minister, it states that NWTPC will eventually, after a transition period, be regulated by the NWT Public Utility Board. I am curious as to why there is a transition period. As soon as this Bill is given Royal Assent and gazetted why could that authority not take place immediately? Is there some difficulty, some problem of which the House should be aware? Does the difficulty lie with the Northwest Territories? Is it something that it wants to resolve? Or is the Government of Canada in any way creating some sort of an impediment to this full transfer of regulatory power?

Mr. McKnight: Madam Chairman, both parties agreed to the transition period. It was up to the Government of the Northwest Territories to regulate. They wished a period of time to become familiar and to establish a board and to establish the groundwork for a board and what other utilities or activities could be undertaken by the board. It was entirely at the request of the Government of the Northwest Territories. We were pleased to assist them. They wish to take this over. They wish the responsibility, but they also wish to do it properly and to be prepared when it is done.

Mr. Penner: I want to check my arithmetic with the Minister to ensure that my calculations are correct. The $96 million of debt of NCPC is being put into a new capital structure, $53 million in promissory notes, and $43 million in share capital. It is the $43 million that is a write-down by the Government. The sale is going to the Government of the Northwest Territories for $53 million. It is also noted that there are some $25 million of retained earnings. Therefore, the actual cost to the Government of the Northwest Territories is $28 million. I want to receive confirmation from the Minister that that is in fact the case.

Mr. McKnight: I am informed that indeed the $25 million is part of the share offering that will be transferred. I am also informed that one may not necessarily calculate the $25 million off the $53 million. For some reason that may not be accurate. It is part of the asset and the costs could be written or prescribed, or I would assume that other shares could be written or issued by the Government of the Northwest Territories including the $53 million, not only the $53 million minus $25 million.

Mr. Penner: I will not push that particular item. I would like to make a request of the Minister that perhaps there could be a clarification in writing from the officials in order that I could read it once, twice, thrice, and actually understand it.

I wonder if the Minister could advise Members as to the total value of the Public Works housing that is being transferred at no cost to the Government of the Northwest Territories. The Minister may not have that figure handy, or it may not be in his possession because it is another government department.

Mr. McKnight: There is not a market value assigned to the DPW housing, but the replacement cost could be identified at anywhere between $8 million and $10 million. The market value is not something that we prescribe to those structures.

I assure the Member that we will provide the information as to the mathematics of sale.

Mr. Penner: This is my final question, Madam Chairman, and perhaps it is a rather large question. I would only like some indication from the Minister. For a long while now the standing committee has been concerned about the continuing role of the Department of Indian and Northern Affairs as devolution continues a pace moving toward full responsible government. Also, the so-called old Chrétien formula has long been abandoned. In the days of his Ministry it was strictly adhered to that no government department, Minister, or agency went into the North without the consent, advice, and counsel of the Department of Indian and Northern Affairs. That has long since been abandoned. The big players now are Energy, Fisheries and Oceans, Environment, Transport, and so on.

I wish to ask the Minister whether any thinking is going on among his policy makers that eventually we can wind down northern development with its 800 person years. I know that in the last four years the Government has been attempting to find ways to reduce the deficit. I continue to be puzzled as to exactly what these people do except research so extensively the polar bear that I am sure there is not a polar bear's toenail that has not been looked at. Surely to goodness this is a big price to pay for so much research. I think it could be done easier in other ways.

Would the Minister share with the committee what is his thinking about the future of this government department?

Mr. McKnight: The question that the Hon. Member puts is a question that I observed when I was given the responsibility of northern development. The history, which is known to the Hon. Member, going back to 1966 and the creation of the department of northern development has had ups and downs.

I can say that in the department of northern development and the Indian services side of the Northwest Territories and Yukon, we do find that we have a duplication. It is not my intention to make changes at this time.

The role of the Department of Indian and Northern Affairs, other than some of the esoteric research referred to by the Member, has been that of being involved in the devolution process. I think the Member will understand that it is easier to devolve services and be very supportive of that when they involve other departments rather than when they involve one's own. That being a fact of life is an important role for the department at this time.

We have been involved in the transfer of forestry, we have been involved in the transfers of health, and in that way reducing the federal presence and allowing the people who reside there to have the responsibilities for which they are certainly capable and should have.

The only other point on the energy side is that we are having discussions about a northern accord. The role of the Department of Indian and Northern Affairs in the issuance and the onshore energy side is a paramount role, and it is one that will allow us to have discussions and continue discussions with both the Yukon and NWT as to the strengthening of the role of the people and legislative assemblies of those territories in controlling that important aspect.

I do not wish the Hon. Member to think that we want to stay there any longer than necessary. But I do believe that the Department, as it is described and as its mandate was originally intended, allows us to be active in the important role of devolution with the Governments of the two territories.

Ms. McLaughlin: I would like to follow that issue up a little in that it also refers to NCPC, as the Minister is well aware. With the land claims negotiations continuing, there is much discussion about the devolution of programs separate from that process. Many of the aboriginal groups feel that no devolution should take place, and others feel that it should take place with consultation. In areas like the Northwest Power Commission, was there any consultation with aboriginal groups outside of the NWT, because I know that was the main negotiator?

Mr. McKnight: There were discussions between the Government of the Yukon and CYI before that transfer took place. There were discussions with the Government of the Northwest Territories before the transfer took place.

I believe that if the legislative Governments of both territories wish to become involved in the devolution and receive the responsibility that it is up to those legislators to have discussions with their electorate as to the appropriateness. In NWT, particularly in the transfer of forestry, there was an agreement by the Dene/Métis to have that transferred. Other transfers such as discussions on a northern accord in the NWT have led to discussions with the Inuit and the Dene.

ELDORADO NUCLEAR LIMITED REORGANIZATION AND DIVESTITURE ACT

The House resumed from Tuesday, April 12, consideration of the motion of Mrs. McDougall that Bill C-121, an Act to authorize the reorganization and divestiture of Eldorado Nuclear Limited and to amend certain Acts in consequence thereof, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee, and the amendment of Mr. Benjamin (p. 14369).

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Madam Speaker, I am pleased to have an opportunity to resume debate on Bill C-121, an Act to authorize the reorganization and divestiture of Eldorado Nuclear Limited, as well as a number of other initiatives. Of course the issue we are addressing in the Bill is the whole issue of privatization, the turning over of certain Crown corporations to private investors. I want to say very clearly that this is becoming a trend.

Specifically we are discussing today an amendment which would see Bill C-121 set aside for six months to enable the Government to get its house in order, to get its program, plan, or strategy together, so that there is a clear indication of just what direction it is taking on the entire matter of the privatization of Crown corporations which are owned by the people of Canada.

I realize that our remarks today should be focused on Bill C-121, but they would still be appropriate if we were referring to the most recent announcement that the Government plans to proceed in a relatively similar way with Air Canada. However, we need not get into that at this moment. I expect that we will have ample opportunity to deal with that in future when the Government brings in appropriate legislation.

My concern today is the environmental implications of Bill C-121. In considering the environmental aspects of Bill C-121, consideration should be given at the same time to the situation not only at Eldorado Nuclear now but to the wider implications of uranium mining in the newly merged company, which will inevitably encounter various challenges when it comes to the mining of uranium.

Eldorado Nuclear has severe environmental problems to deal with, especially at its Port Hope, Ontario refinery and at its northern Saskatchewan mine sites. Essentially its Port Hope dump site is full, which situation has been summarized by the Library of Parliament research staff. I think it is appropriate to read this report into the record because the implication is absolutely staggering. I should like to quote from the document wherein it indicates:

> The effluent treatment process at Port Hope refinery produces approximately 600 tonnes/year of solid waste that is mainly calcium oxide (lime) containing calcium fluoride and uranium at 500 to 1000 ppm.

This is quite astonishing, as an aside. It continues:

> This material, and much smaller quantities of other solid wastes that contain metallic impurities including arsenic, are dumped at a licensed site near Port Hope (the Granby dump site). This depository is close to being full and yet no alternate site or plan has been selected. Eldorado has been waiting for the federal government to decide what should be done with this dump, and presumably the new company will also wait for direction. Any plan that requires the removal of the material to a new site will be very expensive (mainly transportation), and according to the details released with the merger plans, the costs will be borne mainly by the federal government (possibly to as much as $100 million).

The resolution of the Port Hope situation is mainly to dump the responsibilities on to the federal Government which will pick up the bulk of the costs. The first $2 million will be borne by the company. Of the next $98 million, 23.5 per cent will be borne by the company and 76.5 per cent will be borne by the federal Government. About $100 million of clean-up costs will be borne by the federal Government in total.

This raises the following spectre: What are the economics of the deal? When the federal Government picks up the entire financial obligation of clean-up and assumes a good part of the debt, naturally it is a good deal for the private sector. However, once again it is the taxpayers of Canada who are picking up the tab and the benefits are accruing to persons in the private sector.

We must ask why there is such a sweetheart deal for a company being purchased as is. Companies are normally purchased with assets and liabilities. However, some of the key liabilities in this transaction have been taken over by the federal Government.

Let us look at the mergers and takeovers which have taken place in Canada in the last 2.5 years. I think in excess of 3,000 Canadian companies have been taken over. When they are taken over or purchased by a foreign company, the foreign company buys both the liabilities and the assets. This would be traditional in a business transaction of this nature, but not in this case where the key liabilities have been taken over by the federal Government.

The question is why. I know that is the question which most Canadians listening today must be asking. Why is this the case? The answer is simple. It is that the Government is desperately anxious for a good share price in the flotation of the new company stock. Let us face it that the whole matter about which we are talking is flotation, the flotation of stock at the best or most attractive price possible. What better way than for the federal Government to assume the liabilities of environmental responsibility as well as Eldorado's enormous debt.

Eldorado's environmental difficulties do not end with the dump sites. Madam Speaker, I know that you would not think for a moment that we are simply concerned about the dump sites. There are further problems at Port Hope and in the Saskatchewan mines.

Returning to the report to which I referred earlier, it indicates:

> Continued operation of the Port Hope facility, especially at the present high rates of production . . . ,will generate considerable levels of solid and liquid waste. With the proximity of the plant to both Lake Ontario and the town site, the new company would do its image a great deal of good by committing itself to efforts to recycle or clean up and sell all such wastes.

Most of us have been disappointed because no mention was made of this type of approach in the legislation. There has been no indication of what will happen in terms of the efforts to recycle waste materials or to clean up in some way. That is the disappointment which most Canadians feel in terms of this legislation.

Clean-up problems also exist at the mills in Saskatchewan. While we have been focusing our comments on this one facility, there are clean-up problems in Saskatchewan which must be addressed as well. The tailings that are produced contain small amounts of uranium, radium and other elements. Very good effluent treatment is required on an ongoing basis and a thorough understanding of the principles involved must be taught to the personnel involved. Historically, such an understanding has been suspect, at the very best.

These are two areas that have been identified as problems which the Government has yet to acknowledge. It leads to the suspicion that the Government feels that the less said about environmental aspects of uranium production the better. We know where this attitude has led us in the past.

Here are two critical environmental areas that fail to be addressed in the legislation. This is unfortunate when we consider that this Government assumed office with the expectation that it would examine the inherent difficulties of the nuclear fuel cycle. During the election campaign in the summer of 1984, commitments were made on a number of occasions that the whole matter of the future of the Canadian nuclear industry was of concern to the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney). The Prime Minister has been in office for nearly four years but still there is no initiative in terms of a public inquiry into the nuclear fuel cycle. When he was asked about this, the Prime Minister indicated that it was not a priority at this time.

Fortunately for Canada, such an inquiry is now under way. It is being conducted by the New Democratic Party, chaired by the Member for Winnipeg—Birds Hill (Mr. Blaikie) and the Member for Vancouver—Kingsway (Mr. Waddell). They have been examining the process surrounding the nuclear fuel cycle for some months and will soon submit a complete report based on their evaluations and on public and private hearings that have been held at various locations across the country.

It appears that the Government is backing away from involvement in the nuclear industry while indicating sincere concerns about uranium mining. At the same time, it is proposing legislation that essentially passes this matter on to new jurisdictions without any indication of improved categories of safety. I do not want to deal entirely with the environmental problems associated with this legislation.

There are problems in this legislation in terms of processing and mining itself. I do not believe we should proceed with this legislation until the Government has a clear policy on the nuclear industry. Perhaps the appropriate place to raise questions of this nature would be in the legislative committee where presumably this legislation will move very quickly.

We are also concerned about this legislation in light of our history of dealing with the nuclear industry. This country's track record is not very good. I can recall the government sponsored uranium cartel in the 1970s which, quite frankly, has never been satisfactorily explained to the people of Canada. The causes of the cartel were economic and brought about by an over supply and closure of the U.S. market in 1984. The cartel had a profound effect on the price of uranium, which went from $7 a pound in 1973 to as high as $40 a pound two years later. The cartel was investigated and lawsuits were brought in Canadian courts. However, to my recollection no knowledge of this cartel has ever been made public from a governmental point of view, and the charges were ultimately dropped.

A whole set of questions were left unanswered. Eldorado was a member of the cartel alongside Denison Mines. There was an investigation under the Combines Investigation Act by the director of research, Mr. Robert Bertrand.

I believe that all of this should be made public, as was demanded by the present Government when it was in opposition. This is a chance to clear the air and an appropriate piece of legislation by which to do it. The Government's only commitment in this area is to say that the new company will be subject to Canadian competition law. That does not bring much comfort when one considers that Canadian competition law is probably one of the weakest of any country I know. It is very little comfort to know this company will be subject to our competition law. The legislation also overlooks the very messy episode of uranium marketing in Canada. The possibility of that happening again is a spectre that haunts us to this day.

The reaction to this legislation by the men and women who work for Eldorado Nuclear or the SMDC has not been positive, in spite of what others have implied in earlier speeches. The United Steel Workers and the Energy and Chemical Workers have indicated clearly that they oppose this transfer of authorization. The steelworkers who represent the employees at the Key Lake mine and Rabbit Lake and the three locals at Eldorado uranium refinery at Port Hope are clearly on record as opposing this initiative. They fear for their health and safety, for which I do not blame them.

The privatization of these companies will not be a major step in the right direction toward workplace health and safety. More than 1,000 men and women in Canada are killed in the workplace each year, to say nothing of the tens of thousands who are seriously injured. When a man or woman who works in the police force is killed on the job, people are quite rightly outraged at that act. However, these people are in an environment of occasional violence. When one considers that there is not much comment ever made about the hundreds of men and women who are killed on work sites every year in this country, it indicates that we must pay much more attention to what is happening there. In that respect, this legislation is certainly not a step in the right direction for the men and women working in the mines, refineries and mills of the companies we are concerned with today.

Ms. McLaughlin: Madam Speaker, I want to make a short comment on my colleague's interesting debate on the proposed amendment. I think many Canadians understand that when the federal Government has responsibility for a particular company, organization or Crown corporation, the expectations are greater than those for the private sector that such things as a regard for environmental issues will be particularly addressed by the Government and it will assume responsibility for the resource company that it owns.

My colleague mentioned the kind of public inquiries being undertaken by some New Democrats in this House into the whole nuclear fuel cycle. I would like to ask my colleague what his views are on the responsibility of the federal Government to have one of its Crown corporations clean up its act before it is sold on the private market. The Hon. Member raised the question about nuclear dumps, and I would like the Hon. Member to comment on that aspect of it.

• (1700)

Mr. Riis: Madam Speaker, it is a pleasure to respond to that thoughtful comment and to the question that followed it. What is the responsibility of the federal Government? It is clear that it is not responsible for the Government to simply wipe its hands and walk away from this.

If there is one thing common to Canadians, it is that they have more questions than answers when it comes to the nuclear industry. There are whole sets of questions that have yet to be answered satisfactorily. I suspect the most obvious such question is how to guarantee the safety of a nuclear installation.

We are all still haunted to this day by the Chernobyl incident, and we are still finding around the world the results of that particular disaster. Other disasters come to mind as well, but I believe that was the most graphic one which indicated that when something goes wrong in one of those installations, the implications are anything but minor, they are horrendous, and that the final impact may perhaps be unimaginable.

As well, there is the whole question of waste material. I referred briefly in my comments to the dumps at Port Hope and the hundreds of thousands of tonnes of waste material that has not been adequately dealt with there. It cannot be dealt with adequately because we do not know how to get rid of nuclear wastes in a safe and satisfactory way. Until we do, I think it is folly to continue on as we have and particularly as Canada has been doing.

I feel that we have made a gross error in judgment with the whole matter of food irradiation. We are developing irradiated food technology in an effort to market it in the developing countries. Quite frankly, that is frightening, and of course the responsibility of the federal Government ought to be to proceed with caution. The only way to proceed with caution in this instance is not to proceed at all.

The Hon. Member has raised the appropriate question, which is what is the Government's responsibility. The Government's responsibility is vast and that responsibility is not present in Bill C-121. It seems to me that the Government is simply wiping its hands of the opportunities it would have if this legislation were not to be passed.

Mr. Hawkes: Madam Speaker, I listened with interest to the Hon. Member on Monday when he indicated in the closing part of his speech that it is time we send this matter to committee for closer examination. I do agree with him that the matter is complex and that the committee, where we may hear from witnesses, is the proper place to get on to the public table his concerns, some of which I share.

I was encouraged to hear the Hon. Member say that it should go to committee soon. I simply wanted to comment that I concur with him. I think it should go to committee soon.

Mr. Riis: Madam Speaker, I appreciate that the Parliamentary Secretary is anxious to get on with dealing with the various witnesses and the clause-by-clause examination of the Bill. However, we were interrupted today to deal with Bill C-125 which we have just completed through all stages. That Bill, of course, was the Bill to enable the Northern Canada Power Commission to issue shares.

It is unheard of for opposition Parties to volunteer to set aside the traditions of the House in order to facilitate the movement of certain legislation. We were convinced that it was in the nation's business to do just that, and I am pleased to say that we were more than pleased to co-operate with the Government and to approach the matter in a business-like and thoughtful way. We did our homework, and consulted all the parties involved and worked expeditiously. The Parliamentary Secretary has indicated that he was pleased with that and we were pleased to co-operate.

In the closing moments of the day, we are continuing the debate on Eldorado Nuclear. We have already debated the matter for a few hours. Considering the extreme importance of a debate about the nuclear industry and the federal Government's role in it, the Government is taking quite a significant step.

As I say, we are pleased to participate in this debate, and of course it is not our intention to prolong it, but let us have all the appropriate views presented. I know that my colleague from Broadview—Greenwood wishes to make some comments regarding the environmental impact of this legislation and some of the environmental issues on which it touches. Knowing how interested the Parliamentary Secretary is in environmental issues, I know that he will be anxious to hear her comments. With that, I will wrap up my comments by saying that we look forward to proceeding expeditiously with this Bill but not particularly to rushing legislation of such profound importance to the country.

Mr. Skelly: Madam Speaker, I have a question for my colleague from Kamloops—Shuswap. When this Government came to power, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), recognizing how seriously Canadians feel about the entire nuclear question, had, in my recollection, promised an inquiry into the nuclear industry and nuclear energy in Canada. Would it not be appropriate for the Prime Minister to come clean on his election promise before we sell off an operation like Eldorado Nuclear? Would it not be more appropriate for the Prime Minister and the Conservative Government to live up to their election commitments to launch an inquiry into the concerns of Canadians over this industry before they sell off this corporation?

Mr. Riis: Madam Speaker, this is getting exciting. I am hearing many thoughtful questions about why the Government has not lived up to its commitment.

I think it is appropriate to say that the Government has failed in living up to this particular commitment. It has not conducted an inquiry into the nuclear fuel cycle. That was a promise made by the Prime Minister, the present Minister of Transport (Mr. Bouchard) and my friend from Mission—Port Moody on a number of occasions. However, because of the Government's unwillingness to proceed at this point, we have had to conduct our own inquiry.

Once again, the New Democrats felt that someone had to do this inquiry. We do not have the resources the Government has, but it is too important to set aside so, with limited resources, we held our own inquiry. We held public hearings across Canada. We talked to the experts and the people interested in the issue. If my memory serves me correctly, within a few weeks the reporting process will be completed and I hope we will have a chance on an opposition day to present our views, our findings and our recommendations to the Government on the future policy direction for the nuclear industry of Canada.

Mr. Skelly: Madam Speaker, I have a further small question for my colleague from Kamloops—Shuswap. It is my understanding that when the Conservative Government sold Teleglobe Canada, there were some very serious concerns about the way that particular government operation was sold. I wonder if the inquiry launched by Consumer and Corporate Affairs into the propriety of the sale of Teleglobe Canada should not be issued to the public and to the House before we launch into another divestiture of a Crown corporation. In this way, some of the problems that occurred in that divestiture that I am sure would be brought to light if the report were to be released could be avoided when dealing with this one. I wonder if my colleague has any comments about the Government releasing that report before the House goes ahead with this venture.

Mr. Riis: Madam Speaker, I think it would be appropriate for a whole set of reasons. Without going into those reasons, I would simply refer to the fact that one of the major players in the uranium business has been Denison Mines. Mr. Paul McKay, in a very special report in The Globe and Mail of April 9, 1988, had this to say:

> Medical records and royal commissions have shown that a pathetic army of the miners Mr. Roman employed at his uranium mines in Elliot Lake, Ont., have gone to their own early graves because their lungs were needlessly poisoned with radioactivity and mine dusts.

The late Mr. Roman used to head up Denison Mines. The article goes on but because of the time, I will not have a chance to comment on pages and pages of these reports indicating the very serious dangers those people involved in the mining industry face. For that reason if for no other, more effort should be made to inquire into the propriety of turning this company over to private interests now.

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview—Greenwood): Madam Speaker, I cannot say I am pleased to be rising to speak on Bill C-121. Certainly we do not want to see this Bill before the House at all. I guess I am more pleased to be speaking on the proposal to suspend a decision on this Bill for six months in order to look at the whole question more thoroughly.

While we have to look at the question of privatization, we have first of all to look at what kind of industry this is. After all, Eldorado is not producing popcorn. It mines and processes uranium. That, of course, is a very dangerous product for which we have as yet no safe means of disposal. That alone is reason enough not to proceed with this industry. The question of whether it should be a public or private industry should be addressed if we are going to have such an industry at all. However, I suggest the more fundamental question is why should we be pursuing this means of energy production when there are so many better and safer forms, forms which would create more jobs and not pollute the environment. We should be exploring those options and not the question of whether we want our uranium in private or public hands.

Frankly, if I thought we would be able to get rid of this harmful industry by privatizing it, if I thought the terrific liability entailed in uranium mining and processing, and in nuclear facilities, would be ended, I would be happy to see it privatized. We are only beginning to count the cost of the harm this industry has caused because it is of course a very complex matter. How do we develop the figures on the mortality rates, the diseases that normally take a very long time to develop? We are talking about leukemia and other forms of cancer. We are talking about birth defects which are the result of exposure to radiation, including low level radiation. All we have are estimates.

When we have instances of sudden death from a product, whether it is some kind of toxic poisoning or some accident, we have very firm figures. The House is quick to act when that happens. I am thinking of the mollusc poisonings when a couple of Canadians died. There was a terrific outcry, as of course was only proper. When a couple of people are killed by toxic poisonings of this sort there should be an outcry. However, why is there not more of an outcry when thousands of people are harmed, sickened or who die prematurely after exposure to low level radiation from the various stages of uranium mining, processing and the use of nuclear facilities?

The Standing Committee on the Environment and Forestry conducted a study of the disposal of high level radioactive wastes. As a result, the committee recommended there be a moratorium on nuclear facilities until a safe means of disposal became available. Some members of the committee thought a safe means of disposal was almost around the corner or would be discovered in time. They were more optimistic than I am that we are going to find a safe means of disposal for high level radioactive wastes. However, it was nonetheless unanimous that we should not be going ahead without such ability. Since we do not have it, we should not be going ahead.

That concerns just high level radioactive wastes. When you look at the low level radioactive wastes, that is a quantitatively much worse problem because there is more than a hundred million tonnes of such wastes. We have uranium tailings from mines, Eldorado being prominent among them. These tailings are not properly stored. We do not have adequate protection for the public. I have met with people in the Paudach Lake region near Bancroft, Ontario. They have old tailings which have been around for decades, before the AECB insisted on at least some measure of clean-up after the fact. It was not perhaps adequate enough and there is some in storage now, but these old tailings are still there and there has not been adequate containment of them.

That is just one very modest example of inaction on a problem which has been ignored for a long time. A company makes a profit from the mine and the tailings are the responsibility of the public. The taxpayer has to fork over the money to do this. That is precisely what we have in this Bill before us today. This company will be privatized if the Government proceeds with this ill-advised scheme. What happens to the responsibility for waste disposal or waste management for the thousands of years to come? The profits will go to the owners of this company and the responsibility will go to all taxpayers, whether they can afford it or not. It seems to me that this is extremely unfair. It is the public who is left to pay the bill for things which cannot be counted in dollar terms, things such as illness, early death, communities upset by living close to mines or processing facilities. All of those are good reasons to be extremely concerned throughout the process.

I would like to highlight a couple of particular reasons. Of course, much of the product of Eldorado has gone to military use. This supposedly stopped in 1972 because we have an understanding that our uranium will be used only for peaceful purposes. In fact, we have been responsible for some proliferation contrary to our intentions, and there are two major ways in which our uranium goes to military purposes, contrary to our public undertakings. One is in the process of enriching uranium for military purposes and nuclear reactors for the production of electricity. For every six pounds of uranium that is treated in this way, only one pound goes to domestic use and the production of electricity. The five pounds left over, the so-called depleted uranium, can then be used in further processing into plutonium for weapons purposes.

Canada exports uranium from Eldorado mines to France where it goes through this process. The military end product from the so-called depleted uranium in France is tested in the atmosphere, contrary to all our understandings that nuclear weapons should not be exploded in the atmosphere at all. Canada is still doing that and that is the kind of question we should be addressing. Why should we be doing this with this resource? Why should it be used for destruction? Why should it be used in a way that will cause cancer, birth defects and premature death of a large number of people?

I can think of other scandals in the history of Eldorado. It was a major player in the evolution of the uranium cartel in the 1970s to drive up the price of uranium after there had been a drop because of the loss of American markets. This scandalous cartel was protected by some of the worst censorship legislation we have ever seen in this country. We have never had a proper accounting of what happened in that incident. The Government appointed the Bertrand Commission and a report was produced.

Members of the Government, while they were in Opposition, demanded publication of this report because the scandal goes back to the Liberal Government days. The Conservative Government, which protested at the time and demanded the publication of the report, now has the power to act and produce this report in order that we can be a little wiser as to what happened in this period of the uranium cartel. I call on the Government to do that, as have other people. I hope the Government will see the wisdom of coming clean on this information and giving us the full information.

Eldorado Nuclear is involved very substantially in Saskatchewan. The New Democratic Party caucus task force held hearings recently in Saskatoon before which many Saskatchewan environmentalist groups, the mining association, and people on both sides of the issue appeared. One of the major concerns raised there was the plans for uranium mining at Wollaston Lake.

There is a proposal for three new uranium mines to be dug under Wollaston Lake. This is not a very deep lake. It is a very sensitive lake, and it is impossible for people who know that area to imagine how there could be any containment of the uranium to keep it from entering the lake itself. There is, in fact, commercial fishing in this lake which is important to the economy of that region. Yet, plans are still going ahead to permit uranium mining in this extremely environmentally sensitive area.

I must flag again the horror I feel that the alternatives are not being examined. All of this concern is raised when it is theoretical for sustainable development. The federal Government itself has approved the Brundtland Commission report on development and the environment. The Saskatchewan Government and all provincial governments across the country have endorsed those recommendations in principle. Those recommendations say very clearly that damage to the environment must be counted, that the cost must be estimated, and that the costs must be plugged into economic decision-making.

In the case of uranium that means looking very carefully at the costs to the local environment, the health costs, and the long-term waste disposal costs. All of those costs, which are not being taken into account now, must be added into the decision. I suspect that many, if not all, of the decisions to open new mines, to create new facilities, and to increase transformation and so forth, would be economically foolish if all of the environmental damage costs were added up. On economic grounds alone we would not be in favour of this industry. I refer to Wollaston Lake as only the latest in a long list of horrors along this line.

Let me quote the Inter-Church Uranium Committee from Saskatchewan and Ploughshares Saskatoon. They say:

> Eldorado Nuclear wants to build three new uranium mines in and underneath Wollaston Lake, a huge and magnificent lake in northern Saskatchewan and a valuable commercial fishery source. One of these mines . . . is to be constructed 230 yards out into Wollaston Lake where waters are currently 45 feet deep. It is difficult to believe Eldorado's claim that Wollaston Lake will not be permanently scarred and polluted.

I find it difficult to believe that as well and I find it difficult to understand why those kinds of questions do not occupy the Government's mind when it considers the issue of what is going to happen.

We have been told that uranium is safe, cheap power. I would like to contest both those aspects of the Government's argument. With regard to the safety, we do not have an adequate accounting of the health costs. Estimates have been made by Dr. Rosalie Bertell, a world acknowledged expert on this, who counts the premature death world-wide from low-level radiation in the millions. When you infer estimates from the epidemiological studies, there are millions of people who are affected in some place or another from the mining, processing, transportation, and disposal.

It is not safe and it is not cheap. There has been no adequate accounting of the disposal costs. What will it cost to pay one night watchman to guard an area for 300,000 years, which is the half-life of some of the radioactive isotopes in the waste which must be disposed of from this immensely dangerous product? It is arrogant of people to suggest that we have a solution around the corner.

A solution around the corner for waste disposal which can take 300,000 years? How can we be sure that there will not be an earthquake or some other kind of environmental disaster for 300,000 years? Whatever the safe disposal mechanism is which might last for 50 years, we cannot be sure that there will not be erosion and seepage of the radioactive wastes into the rivers and drinking water systems of people who may live far away from, let alone near to, those sites.

How many sites are there going to be? We already have enough on our hands now. If we continue and expand this industry, as is the Government's intention, there will be even more. We have not even been able to solve the problem for the wastes we have at the present and it is arrogant to suggest that we can handle even more of it in the future, that we can find even more waste disposal sites which will be safe.

There are implications for the uranium question in the Mulroney-Reagan trade giveaway. The Government tried to seek more access for Canadian uranium to the United States because in the past there have been American politics and American supply questions which have meant that our uranium sales have been curtailed. Canada gave away the requirements to process in Canada in order to ensure access to American markets. This decision was made without any consideration for the environmental consequences.

The Government agrees with the principles of the Brundtland report on integrating the economy and the environment in decision-making and then signs this trade deal, one of the elements of which is to expand uranium as an energy source and to look for new markets for uranium without having solved the problems which we already have. I consider that to be enormously irresponsible.

Canada produces 19 per cent of the uranium in the world's market. It is the greatest producer and the greatest exporter in the world. We like to think of ourselves as being environmentally conscious and as peacemakers in the world, yet we allow proliferation and allow our uranium to be used for military purposes so long as it is done by the back door and not the front door.

We are now seeking even more markets for our uranium without any greater safeguards. The domestic uses themselves are equally as dangerous. I am not objecting only to the military uses by any means. The health consequences and the environmental damage happen irrespective of the ultimate use, whether for weapons or the production of electricity.

I would like to close by referring to the fact that we do have alternatives. In terms of job creation, these are not good jobs. It is a capital intensive industry so not many jobs are produced, and there is a great deal of danger. We should be seeking alternatives for the people who work in this industry. In the case of energy production, which is enormously important for our economy, we should be seeking other forms of energy. We should be developing renewable sources of energy. We should be looking at energy which does not pollute. We should be putting our research and development money into creating an energy future that will be safe, cheap and will provide jobs for Canadians. We do have options.

The Bill before us today is an extremely misguided measure which I hope this House will defeat. I hope at this first stage that Members at least will support the six month's hoist. I hope they will take another look at the whole question of our nuclear future.

Mr. Skelly: Madam Speaker, I would like to congratulate my colleague on her excellent speech. Hopefully, the Government will see the wisdom of her remarks and withdraw the Bill.

One of the most dangerous aspects the Hon. Member pointed to during her speech was, of course, the use of the products in the nuclear cycle which produce weapons. I wonder if she would elaborate a little more on the dangers of that particular aspect and Canada's role in exporting that material.

The other area is the area of occupational health and safety which is extremely important to the people who live and work in the areas where this product is mined and processed. Would she elaborate a little more on the important and dangerous aspects of this particular industry?

Ms. McDonald: Madam Speaker, I am pleased to respond to both very important and complex questions. To begin with respect to the military question, I think the hypocrisy of the Canadian Government is particularly disturbing. It is not just this Government, but previous Liberal Governments also. We are supposedly a non-nuclear country, a nuclear weapons-free country, yet we participate in the production of the major necessary element for nuclear weapons.

Throughout the 1950s massive amounts of our uranium went into the American nuclear weapons stockpile. Fortunately, those weapons have not been used, but they are stockpiled and they contain our uranium. Who knows if they will be used, and we participated in their production.

We supported the non-proliferation treaty. We were a signatory to that treaty. However, we have allowed the export of our Candu reactors and our uranium, so we have some responsibility for the reprocessed uranium from reactors for subsequent military purposes. It was not intended in the first place, but that is what happened. Canada has not been careful enough in ensuring that it would not happen.

Military uses and the so-called peaceful uses of this power are intertwined. When military uses of nuclear power became so horrendous to people, the nuclear industry realized it could not survive without a respectable front. So we had hope, and perhaps for some people it was a very genuine hope, that there would be the peaceful atom and peaceful uses. Indeed, a nuclear future could help as an energy source for Third World countries. All kinds of idealistic aims were given for the development of the nuclear industry. But I think we should look behind this front. It is a very pious front, the peaceful uses of nuclear energy. The industry needs both. In order to do the production for military uses, it has to have the pretence that it is going into peaceful uses.

Both France and the United States, where our uranium is enriched for some reactors, process uranium for both peaceful and military purposes. They do it at the same place. We have this fiction that our uranium is being processed only for peaceful uses and this kind of mythological accounting system that our uranium goes in and the enriched uranium that goes out for military uses did not come from our uranium. Perhaps it came from someone else's uranium that was sent to the same processing facility. So the Government convinces itself that it is really not Canadian uranium which is going into those atmospheric tests in France or into even more nuclear weapons in the United States. I think we should be disillusioned with this idea.

The question of occupational health and safety is a very complex one. I know other Members have dealt with it in their remarks so I will just say very briefly that we do not have adequate safeguards at all. Miners have considerably higher risks of lung cancer from exposure to radiation at the workplace. Accident rates are very high.

Occupational health and safety is an extremely important matter. Perhaps with better technology these risks could be reduced somewhat, but I do not believe anyone could be so naive as to suggest that this will ever be a safe industry, a really desirable industry, one in which people can look forward to working under healthy and safe working conditions. It is always going to be a highly risky industry. That is another reason why I would much prefer to see the development of renewable sources of energy that will not be harmful to health and which will be less capital intensive for the number of jobs produced and which will result in the creation of even more jobs. We need to have a switch over. We need to develop those alternatives. We need to provide safe and healthy jobs for people. Certainly uranium mining and processing is not a place where we find these things.

Mr. Skelly: Madam Speaker, I have another small question which I think is of critical importance to this particular debate. From my perspective and from the perspective of many people in this House and in this country, the nuclear energy question is a critical one. People justifiably fear it. They know of the dangers and disasters which have occurred. I want to call to the attention of the House the complete absence of the Liberal Party. There is not a Liberal Member sitting in this House, and there has been absolutely no demonstration of concern for the issue. I think the Liberal Party when it was in Government was one of the most profound malefactors on this issue—

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): I will interrupt the Hon. Member and remind him of something he does know, I am sure. It is not proper in this House to mention the absence of Hon. Members who may be detained elsewhere. I know the Hon. Member knows that quite well. There is one minute left in the question and comment period, if the Hon. Member for Broadview—Greenwood (Ms. McDonald) cares to answer.

Ms. McDonald: Madam Speaker, without referring to their presence or absence in the House, I can certainly refer to their position on the debate. Their position has been wholly unsatisfactory. The Liberals have been in Government for most of this period and they have ignored the health and safety questions. They have turned a blind eye to the military uses of nuclear energy. They have spoken pious words about proliferation but have not done anything to ensure it does not happen. They talk in the environment committee about soft energy paths and say pious things there, but they have not dealt with the really tough questions of research and development, and developing alternative sources of energy so we would not be dependent on a source of energy that is killing people in increasingly larger numbers.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The time for questions and comments is now over.

Mr. Hawkes: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Members of the New Democratic Party indicated earlier that the House could expect this matter to go to committee soon. We are currently dealing with the six month hoist amendment. Can Your Honour check with the Members of the House to see if there is a disposition to dispose of the amendment and go back to the main motion?

Mr. Skelly: Madam Speaker, I rise on the same point of order. I appreciate the Parliamentary Secretary's concern. Before any consideration of unanimous consent is given, and my colleague from the Liberal Party who has just appeared in the House will want to comment on this, if this matter is referred to committee might the committee be prepared to travel across Canada to hear the concerns of other Canadians? Perhaps this might be considered before we think about giving unanimous consent to the Hon. member's request.

Mr. Hawkes: Madam Speaker, the traditions concerning parliamentary form are that decisions have to be reached first by committees as to the best way to undertake their examinations. The committee members are not named until the debate has been completed. I think that we would have to wait and see. In principle, the Government would have no objection.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Is the House ready for the question?

Mr. Skelly: On debate.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Resuming debate with the Hon. Member for Comox—Powell River.

Mr. Ray Skelly (Comox—Powell River): Madam Speaker, I feel the same reservation about having to speak on this particular legislation as my colleague the Hon. Member for Broadview—Greenwood (Ms. McDonald) expressed. We are not pleased at the prospect of seeing what we consider, and what many Canadians consider, to be a completely irresponsible act of the Government undertaken. I refer to the privatization of Eldorado Nuclear Limited. This is a move which indicates that the Government is willing to put into the hands of the private sector a very questionable industry. It is one that should be carefully regulated.

There has been a history not only in Canada of incidents that have indicated how dangerous this industry is. There have been a number of incidents at Chalk River. There are a number of Armed Services personnel who we refer to as atomic veterans who have received profound injury. It has taken them years to have the Government acknowledge the damage that they suffered as a result of radiation. We know of the dangers of this particular industry.

We have heard Members of the House talk about the danger of a massive amount of radioactive tailings that are in the environment associated with this activity. There is no effective way to store these particular wastes. From the danger point of view, privatization is completely irresponsible.

With respect to Bill C-121, there are also some concerns about the privatization mechanism. The House and the country are looking with serious concerns at the Teleglobe privatization in which there were serious accusations of wrongdoing. Those accusations of wrongdoing have not yet been adjudicated. The Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs undertook to do an investigation into the matter and to put together a report, which has not been released. The House is entitled to see that report and to see what government investigations revealed in terms of that privatization initiative before we embark on another initiative such as the one that is before us.

We are quite prepared to ask in the House whether or not friends of the Conservative Party will benefit from assets of the people of Canada. This is a serious question which must be answered. We want the report from the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs before this Bill goes forward.

Privatization in the nuclear industry should not take place. Indeed, there is a good argument that greater government involvement in this area is justified. As was pointed out by other colleagues, is the Government now prepared to let a private sector operator go in, make a profit on this industry while at the same time shift the major costs dealing with nuclear waste storage and any potential harm that may come from it on to the taxpayers of Canada? That is completely unacceptable.

If the Government would listen to the people of Canada, it would not privatize this industry. It would hear the message very clearly. It hears it from members of the New Democratic Party. If there were any Members of the Official Opposition in the House then it would hear it from those Members as well.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): It must be getting late in the day. Hon. Members have very short memories. However, the rules are still the same.

Mr. Skelly: Madam Speaker, I apologize. It was certainly an oversight. As Your Honour pointed out, it is nearing the magic hour.

Mr. Oberle: But you are right.

Mr. Skelly: The Hon. Member from Prince George—Peace River (Mr. Oberle) has noticed the absence as well. Thus my point is clear.

I wish to move on to a second serious point. It is that Eldorado Nuclear became involved in a cartel. There was the international uranium cartel which was investigated by the competition branch of the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. We would like to see the report on that matter. That report deals with the way in which those companies joined together to fix the price of uranium and to drive it up.

We can see in the future that in the private sector it will be even easier for this to happen again. It will be easier to create artificial shortages and to increase prices. In terms of the ability to market the product, who knows how loose it will get. In terms of our experience with the previous uranium cartel it is important that this company not be passed into the private sector, and that it remain under the control of the Government of Canada and that the Government use great care in supervising its activities.

There is another example of the type of scrutiny that the previous Government gave with respect to the question of cartels. In the past we saw a question with respect to oil companies, another energy group in which there was a massive inquiry conducted by the Director of Competition, Mr. Bertrand. In the final analysis the Government took no action except to organize an inquiry which cost the taxpayers of Canada hundreds of thousands of dollars.

With respect to any protection the Government might give in terms of Eldorado becoming involved in a monopoly or a cartel type operation, it is clear that the Government has no effective competition legislation. It has no political will to protect the people of Canada in any way whatsoever. We want the report on the previous uranium cartel. We want effective action in terms of controlling situations such as that before the question of privatization is even asked.

With respect to tailings, my colleagues have pointed out that we are dealing with 100 million tonnes of nuclear waste. We have no effective method of dealing with this waste. We are prepared to put into the environment radioactive wastes and saddle future generations with them for God knows what length of time. The Government is quite prepared to extend uranium mining, as are other Conservative Governments in Canada. This will generate 200 million tonnes or 300 million tonnes of waste before an effective plan of disposing of it is developed. Thus it would be completely irresponsible, and we are not saying that the Government is not completely irresponsible, to consider the privatization of this particular company before we resolve the issue of radioactive tailings and radioactive wastes. Those questions have to be resolved before any rational Government or any rational individual in the Government ever considers turning that company over to the private sector.

Not only is the Government not prepared to deal with the question of the safe storage of those wastes in order to protect Canadians and future generations of Canadians, it is quite prepared to offer inducements to go ahead and to expand the activity. There is a great deal of concern in British Columbia in this respect. There has been a moratorium on the activity in that province. There is a fear that we will see uranium mining again in British Columbia. We will see expanded uranium mining in Saskatchewan. The Government is extremely enthusiastic about the prospect of creating a much larger—

Mr. Hawkes: It is called jobs.

Mr. Skelly: —danger to Canadians. The Hon. Member opposite says that is called jobs, these dangers which are being created for Canadians. That is an issue which the Hon. Member's Party ought to be going to the polls on. There are millions of Canadians who want nothing to do with the nuclear industry. They say that Canada and the world will be safer if we were well out of it. The hypocritical position that has been taken on this nuclear issue cannot be tolerated. If the Hon. Member thinks that the majority of Canadians are looking for jobs in this sector, he should get out on the hustings because he is absolutely dead wrong, the result is very clear, and Canadians will tell you that.

My colleagues, the Hon. Member for Broadview—Greenwood (Ms. McDonald) and the Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap (Mr. Riis), and other people who have spoken in this House have spoken with great concern about the fact that Canadian uranium which we suggest is strictly for peaceful purposes is a major component in the nuclear weapons race in the world.

We are selling it to France, we are selling it to the United States, and we are working behind a facade that says; "Our uranium is being used for peaceful purposes", when in reality that uranium forms part of an enrichment process that follows a fuel cycle into nuclear bombs. There is no doubt that we as Canadians have dirty hands in this business. If the wishes of Canadians were followed, that Canada would be a nuclear weapons free zone, we would not produce the material that nuclear weapons are made of. It is one thing to produce it and sell it to somebody else and say "What a dirty bunch they are", but in reality we have dirty hands on this issue, or the previous Liberal Government did and now the Conservative Government definitely has dirty hands on this issue.

The previous Government sold India a package from which it built a nuclear weapon. The previous Government proposed to sell to some of the foremost countries in the world, countries at that time operating with a tremendously high moral standard such as Argentina and Brazil. They talked about selling nuclear weapons to South Korea, Taiwan, and to a number of other countries that were quite excited about producing nuclear weapons, if they had been given the opportunity. They probably lost out in the competition because of more successful weapons merchants through the guise of nuclear plants. But certainly Canada is involved in supplying materials for nuclear weapons and Canadians are totally opposed to that. If it read the population and the electorate correctly, the Government would know that this is the case and that this should stop.

On the issue of occupational health and safety, the unions involved are absolutely opposed to those sales in privatization. The unions are concerned that if the Government walks away from this industry, standards will relax and the workers lives and their families will be jeopardized. In Canada we know the massive problem of occupational health and safety. In this particular industry the question of occupational health and safety is critical. These people are working in a dangerous environment. They are exposed to very deadly materials. In the private sector, it is not difficult to visualize those standards being relaxed and a failure to adhere to the responsibilities that the corporate sector has in many other areas. The matter of occupational health and safety is a critical issue.

The second matter is the broader issue that also concerns the unions, the fact that they have 100 million tonnes of tailings that are not being properly handled. In the processing industry there are environmental concerns about the highly radioactive materials that come from that sector. They are not only concerned about the occupational health and safety on the job, but they are certainly concerned about the broader environmental impacts. They have children, they will have grandchildren, and they realize what the Government is proposing to saddle Canadians of future generations with.

Therefore, there is a great expression about the broad environmental concerns of the manner in which this industry is treated. In order to make a profit, and in order to maximize a profit for the companies that become involved in this privatization, there will be a very large incentive to relax the occupational health and safety and also the broader environmental concerns and standards. When a company does not invest in preserving those standards, it maximizes or improves its profit picture, and there is a serious incentive in the private sector to do this.

If a person believed that the nuclear industry in Canada was a useful contributor to the economy and the country instead of building a danger today and a time bomb for tomorrow, one could believe that it was a public utility, a thing that is so dangerous and of such great concern that it should be closely controlled and under the responsibility of the highest authority in the country, the federal Government.

When the nuclear industry first started in Canada, Canada took control of that industry under its discretionary power in the Constitution. That is the type of priority that Canada gave to it. Today the Conservative Government, in an act of what I and my colleagues would define as complete irresponsibility, is proposing to turn this over into the private sector where the motive for profit will place a constant constraint on occupational health and safety, and a constant constraint on spending in environmental protection. It has been repeated many times that only a Conservative would not learn by experience.

My colleague from Saskatchewan expressed great concern about the developments in the Wollaston Lake area, about the possibility of three mines being dug in this very environmentally sensitive area. Eventually those mines will produce hundreds of millions of tonnes of tailings that, unless the technology for handling those tailings is developed, will create another environmental danger and time bomb to be paid for by future Canadians. This enthusiasm, a clear signal that by turning this into the private sector and saying "Let's get rolling with it", by increasing the activity of the uranium mining in northern Saskatchewan, by increasing the activity in British Columbia, is building a very serious problem for the future. If the Government was prepared to go to the polls on this issue alone, it would be defeated.

Mr. McDermid: You are dreaming in Technicolor.

Mr. Skelly: "Dreaming in Technicolor", say the Conservatives. If one can believe the former Minister for International Trade and her recent statements in Vancouver, we will be getting a chance to raise this in the polls this fall. She made a very clear statement that we will be going to the polls and we will in fact get a chance to read the Canadian—

Mr. McDermid: That is not her prerogative.

Mr. Skelly: I did notice that she was trying to cover her derrière today, and was having a great deal of difficulty doing it.

Mr. McDermid: What a sexist statement.

Mr. Skelly: We all have derrières and from time to time we are all forced to attempt to cover them. I tend to believe the former Minister for International Trade that we will be going to the polls, and we will certainly be getting an opportunity to test the population, and then we will see who is dreaming in Technicolor.

Mr. Hawkes: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Given comments made earlier by the House Leader of the New Democratic Party and supported by the Government, I think that there is a predisposition in the House to get this matter to committee. I notice that we are nearing the normal hour of adjournment. I would ask that you might seek permission of the House not to see the clock in the normal fashion in order that we might enable Members to make the comments that they want to make, yet still conclude, in order that we can move on to other important matters tomorrow, and perhaps even more important the committee can begin its work to examine the types of issues which the New Democratic Members are putting on the table. There will be expert witnesses, it would be helpful to the Canadian people, and it would be helpful to Parliament to have that examination begin as quickly as possible. I would like to seek unanimous consent of the House to not see the clock until we have disposed of this second reading debate.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The Hon. Member for Comox—Powell River.

Mr. Skelly: I would like to continue with the debate and the committee question. The committee question is that we are very concerned that the Government has attempted to limit the number of witnesses in a number of committees. If this Bill ever goes to committee, and we would hope that enlightened—

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Do I understand from the Hon. Member that there is unanimous consent to continue the debate?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Skelly: Absolutely not.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): It being six o'clock p.m. this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 11 a.m. pursuant to Standing Order 3(1).

The House adjourned at 6 p.m.

PETITIONS

PROHIBITION WITH REGARD TO KNIVES

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, I am honoured to present a petition from people living in North Vancouver, Surrey, Port Coquitlam and Burnaby, British Columbia. They are all very concerned about the recent increase in murders which are connected with knives.

These people call on the federal Government to amend the Criminal Code to prohibit the carrying of knives by citizens in public places. Exemptions from this ban would include only activities in which the use of a knife is integral to legitimate work such as in construction and fishing, or for religious purposes, such as with the members of the Sikh religion who carry a ceremonial knife as part of their custom.

RIGHT TO LIFE OF THE UNBORN

Mr. Bill Vankoughnet (Hastings—Frontenac—Lennox and Addington): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition signed by over 300 constituents of the federal constituency of Hastings—Frontenac—Lennox and Addington who are requesting that Parliament pass a law to protect the right to life of the pre-born child at all stages of development.

The petitioners cannot accept a law that protects pre-born babies from the fourth or fifth month only. They are calling upon Parliament to amend the Criminal Code so that unborn human beings are protected by law from abortion.

PROHIBITION WITH REGARD TO KNIVES

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt—Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have a group of petitions from people ranging from the area of Dawson Creek, British Columbia, to the St. John's area of Newfoundland. They are calling upon Parliament to amend the Criminal Code to prohibit the carrying of knives by citizens in public places, the only exception being for those who use knives for legitimate purposes as part of their work, such as in construction, fishing or farming, or for religious reasons.

• (1110)

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver—Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, my petition follows the petition of my colleague, the Hon. Member for Vancouver East (Ms. Mitchell). This petition is signed by a number of residents of the downtown east side in Vancouver. It petitions the House of Commons about the incidence of crime, including crime committed with knives, which is on the increase in the east side of Vancouver.

The present law allows citizens to carry knives for self-defence; whereas the carrying of knives by persons in public places is directly responsible for knives then being used in a variety of crimes and fights where self-defence is claimed.

The petitioners ask that the Government amend the federal Criminal Code to prohibit the carrying of knives by citizens in public places. Exempted from the ban would be legitimate uses of carrying knives, for example, when people are engaged in construction work, fishing, or because of a religious belief such as that of the Sikhs wearing kirpans, small ceremonial knives. But where knives are carried in the streets, in the downtown east side of Vancouver, in the beer parlours, and in other places where people are carrying knives and using them, the petitioners ask that the Government take action to stop this.

CALL FOR RESEARCH INTO SCHIZOPHRENIA

Mr. Peter Peterson (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, I have a petition signed by residents of my constituency of Hamilton West, and the surrounding area. The petitioners would like to point out to the House the seriousness of an illness called schizophrenia. The petitioners humbly pray and call upon Parliament to ensure that research efforts related to schizophrenia will, in the future, be commensurate with the seriousness of the illness in Canada.

PROHIBITION WITH REGARD TO KNIVES

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Mr. Speaker, it is my duty and honour to present to the House a petition on behalf of citizens of Richmond, Burnaby, and Vancouver, British Columbia. The petitioners humbly pray and call upon Parliament to amend the federal Criminal Code to prohibit the carrying of knives by citizens in public places. Exemptions from this ban would only include activities where the use of a knife was integral to the legitimate work of construction on the work site, fishing, or for religious reasons, for example, the Sikh religion where the wearing of a ceremonial knife is part of the custom.

The federal Criminal Code, and court decisions allow citizens to carry knives for self-defence. Your petitioners request that this not be allowed any longer, for which they will ever pray and hope that the Government will act.

REQUEST THAT CANADIAN EMBASSY IN ECUADOR BE REOPENED

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, from time to time one of the responsibilities and duties of a Member of Parliament is to submit petitions on behalf of the electorate of Canada. I have one in hand which has been properly certified by the Clerk of Petitions. It seeks a response to its request of Parliament that the situation evolving from the closing of the Canadian Embassy in Ecuador be corrected by reopening the Canadian Embassy in Ecuador. It urges the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) to reverse the decision to close that embassy.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member for Vancouver—Kingsway on another petition.

Mr. Waddell: I apologize, Mr. Speaker, I forgot it on the previous occasion.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I would like to bring to the attention of the Hon. Member that the Hon. Member requires the consent of the House to bring in another petition to allow it this time.

CANADA-U.S. FREE TRADE AGREEMENT

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver—Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, constituents in my riding believe that the Government's trade deal negotiated with the Americans will threaten the very fabric of Canadian political and economic sovereignty.

The petitioners pray that Parliament be dissolved and that the Government allow the people of Canada the opportunity to accept or reject the proposed free trade agreement during a national general election. I have a suspicion that the Government is going to do that, so why does it not do it sooner rather than later?

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I ask that all questions be allowed to stand.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is it agreed?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

The House resumed from Wednesday, April 13, consideration of the motion of Mrs. McDougall that Bill C-121, an Act to authorize the reorganization and divestiture of Eldorado Nuclear Limited and to amend certain Acts in consequence thereof, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee, and the amendment of Mr. Benjamin (p. 14369).

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member for Comox—Powell River (Mr. Skelly) had the floor. Since he is not present, I will recognize the Hon. Member for Humboldt—Lake Centre (Mr. Althouse) on debate.

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt—Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise to support the amendment moved by my friend, the Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin), to put a hoist on this motion and permit the House to have more time to consider the proposal the Government has put before it to dispose of the shares in Eldorado Nuclear Limited.

What is being proposed here is the floating of a share issue. It appears that the Government is proposing to use that issue of shares to assist in the debt reduction for the corporation of some $550 million, and to carry out its philosophical commitment to privatize as many Crown corporations as it can.

We have a great many questions about this particular initiative, not only on the whole question of privatization and whether that in itself is a good idea, but also on whether it does serve the economy better to have the shares of a public Crown corporation owned by private citizens as opposed to all of the citizens.

The proposal is an attempt to shift some of the debt from Eldorado Nuclear to other owners. We have some grave concerns about the timing. At a time when uranium prices are as low as they have been for a long time, demand seems to be extremely low, this particular initiative brings to mind the initiative of the Government of British Columbia a few years ago when it sold shares in BCRIC, British Columbia Resources Investment Corporation. Those shares were offered to the public at $5 a share, which the Government said was a good deal and which appeared to be a good deal. Those shares continue to be traded on the stock exchange and are now selling in the range of 90 cents.

The timing could not be worse. The prospects for the nuclear industry are very low at the moment. There is a surplus of uranium, if one looks at the market price for uranium. We see our main market for the commodity, having been the United States, attempting to resist the inflow of any further amounts of uranium. In spite of the clauses in the free trade agreement, which the Government states allows access to the U.S. market,

I would remind the House that it does this under U.S. terms. One of the clauses in the agreement has decreed that the further processing of uranium has to occur on the American side rather than on the Canadian side. What extra jobs might accrue to the industry through the processing of the product will occur on the American side rather than on the Canadian side.

The main reason, rather than being one of good economics, good business, and good timing for having Eldorado Nuclear as a Crown corporation in the beginning, was a clear and urgent need perceived by the Government of the day. I think that need has not changed a great deal over time, that is, to have as much control as possible over a very critical industry which has large implications in the defence field. It is not just a source of energy. It is even more critical for the survival of the human race to consider it as a very cogent part of today's defence needs.

The original concept was to permit the Government, as the sole shareholder, to exert its needs and desires in terms of control over the sale of the product. Subsequent Governments have not always utilized all that control power. We have seen many examples of uranium being sold to countries that are not using it in a responsible manner. They have in fact taken it through its first stage in the nuclear reactor to extract power and have taken the waste to develop weaponry with it.

The list of countries which now have the technology to create nuclear arms has expanded greatly, because we have not exerted full control over the waste product from the first reaction. We have permitted that to be dispersed throughout the world, and now a great many countries, although they are not particularly world powers, have the capability of preparing and using nuclear weapons. I do not have the list of possible countries in front of me, but from memory it seems that countries such as Israel, Pakistan, India, and China are known or believed to have nuclear weapons. Other countries such as Brazil and Argentina are probably capable of producing nuclear weapons. South Africa is believed to have an operating unit. The list goes on and on. It is scary that these countries are also countries wherein extreme political instability exists either internally or in their relations with their immediate neighbours. The risk of nuclear war or of the emergence of a nuclear holocaust because of some loss of control of the industry has followed.

The answer which the Government is proposing, simply to privatize the industry, is not a responsible direction in which to go. Not only are the questions of defence and world instability at stake here both politically and on a war footing, we have equally urgent concerns about control over the nuclear industry as it applies to the environment which the Government appears to be giving up with this initiative. The chances of controlling Eldorado Nuclear in its use of waste, its factories, its reprocessing, and its use of tailings are much more in the hands of government regulators when it is a Crown corporation than when it becomes a private corporation. Almost every citizen can recall a private corporation which has polluted the environment and has escaped any penalty for so doing. The Great Lakes are becoming very close to being polluted to the point where the quality of drinking water is at risk. Some of the lakes have a turnover—that is, the water in, the water out, and the flushing capacity—in the hundreds of years.

Once the full saturation point is reached they are virtually dead to the use of humanity without applying a great deal of technology to purify the water before it is made usable for the people who live in the neighbourhood of the lakes. The preponderance of the population and the industry of North America is located around the lakes. This is an extremely important factor. Part of the industry about which we are talking today, Eldorado Nuclear, has contributed somewhat to the environmental problems in the area, although because it has remained under federal control they have been kept to a minimum. The Department of the Environment has done a fairly good job of containing this Crown corporation. I submit that it has been more successful in containing a Crown corporation than would have been the case had it been a public corporation.

Earlier I raised the question of declining demand and some U.S. actions which have made that demand drop even faster. I remind the House that just in the past month the United States Senate, by a vote of 62 to 28, passed a Bill which would penalize the use of foreign uranium including imports from Canada. Granted, this is a direct violation of the proposed trade agreement. It violates the stand-still aspects whereby both parties agreed not to implement such legislation. I realize that the legislation has not yet completed the full process in the United States, but I think the 62 to 28 votes against permitting further access to the American market for Canadian uranium is very significant.

This is a crucial presidential election year and there is an opportunity for the House of Representatives to change completely, but the Senate vote is a good indicator of what the U.S. public thinks about imported uranium. I submit that the prospects for uranium do not look good. Any potential buyer of the shares would certainly be taking that into consideration when he or she, or if it were a publicly traded corporation, decides to place an evaluation on the shares when submitting a bid.

In short, I do not think the Government will recover very much money with the sale of this organization. It has agreed to continue to be responsible for a good chunk of the debt, the $550 million to which I alluded earlier.

What will the public be gaining from this particular initiative? It is not clear to me that the public will gain very much. The sale of shares will not do much more than change the control structure of Eldorado Nuclear Limited, a control which I submitted in my previous argument should not be given up by the Government of Canada. It should be retained because of the special nature of the nuclear industry with regard to defence, as it affects the environment, as it affects future generations of people, and as it affects the over-all future economy of Canada.

For these reasons I recommend that the House support the hoist motion of the Hon. Member for Regina West. We should delay action on the Bill at this time until we have had an opportunity for further study, so that the full impact and the full implications of this proposal can be more correctly analysed.

Mr. Waddell: Mr. Speaker, I congratulate the Hon. Member for Humboldt—Lake Centre (Mr. Althouse) on a very thoughtful speech. I notice that, with very short notice, he is able to give a thoughtful and cogent analysis.

I want to ask him a question about Saskatchewan. Perhaps he could tell us a little more about environmental problems and the history of Crown corporations in Saskatchewan. My colleague will know that there are some measures in the Bill respecting the liabilities of Eldorado Nuclear. The Government is selling this Crown corporation, but usually when one sells a company one sells the liabilities and the assets. The Government is not selling all the liabilities in this company. The big liability is for environmental clean-up. It is estimated there are something like 1,200,000 tonnes of low-level nuclear waste around the Port Hope area. As you might know, Mr. Speaker, the New Democratic Party has an inquiry going on into the nuclear industry. The Government would not institute one, so we did. We visited the Port Hope area and heard from the local people. There is a big problem with respect to cleaning up what we call low-level nuclear waste. It is not the high-level nuclear waste from the hydro nuclear plants, but low-level waste from the production of uranium. I think this low-level waste is also a problem in Saskatchewan.

I want to ask the Hon. Member, since Saskatchewan Mining Development Corporation is involved in this sale of the Crown corporation, if he could tell us something about some of the problems in his own Province of Saskatchewan with respect to the liability of low-level nuclear waste and the failure to clean this up and the kind of costs that would be involved in cleaning it up.

I will remind the Hon. Member that 25 per cent of any cost over $2 million, up to $100 million, will be paid by the company that buys Eldorado Nuclear, which could be Denison Mines, and we all know of its record with respect to safety and the environment. It is bad. Seventy-five per cent of any costs will still be retained by the Government of Canada. Over $100 million, it is 100 per cent. Would the Hon. Member tell us whether there are low-level nuclear wastes in his own Province of Saskatchewan? Saskatchewan was the home of Crown corporations, and it has used Crown corporations in a very Canadian way in helping people develop their own province. Perhaps the Hon. Member could say something about that as well.

Mr. Althouse: I can, in the short time I have, tell the Hon. Member a little about some of the projects that exist in Saskatchewan. As the House will know, there a number of mines operating there. One of them was a mine owned by Eldorado Nuclear at Uranium City which, in the last five or six years, closed, resulting in the virtual closing of the town. It also resulted in some of the $550 million debt the Crown corporation is now carrying because there were substantial improvements made to the tunnelling in the mines. After expending these moneys the ore ran out very shortly thereafter, so it was a bad management decision by the operators of the mines at Uranium City which were owned by Eldorado Nuclear.

With regard to the Saskatchewan mines, a number of them have been approved for development. Deposits of very high-grade uranium ore, by far the highest grade of ore in the world are under the northern lights in Saskatchewan. As I understand it, because of the process required for SMDC to control those mines, to meet the environmental needs, it has in many cases formed alliances with other developers, but SMDC still controls the operation. SMDC is a Crown corporation.

I understand a number of the projects were opened up by the process of draining a lake. The ore was mined using virtually a pit process. The tailings such as exist are kept on the site. When the mine is played out a long time from now, my understanding is that the lake will go back into place and the water will keep the radiation at bay, serving the same function it has served for millions of years before the opening of the mines. The tailings will not have the same radiation value as the ore, so we ordinary people accept advice of the experts and presume that that will keep the radiation at bay with no environmental problems.

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Speaker, I have sat here very patiently. This is the fourth day of debate on a government proposed initiative to combine two companies in the uranium business, one owned by the Government of Saskatchewan and one owned by the federal Government, into a larger, more efficient company, with better quality jobs—

Mr. Waddell: You assume that.

Mr. Hawkes: —better marketing potential—

Mr. Benjamin: Where?

Mr. Hawkes: Members of the NDP say we assume that. We do not have to make an assumption. We know from the past history of this Party that every time this Government moves to privatize, on ideological grounds the NDP says jobs are at risk, all these awful things are going to happen. In every single case, from de Havilland on through the system, when we privatize, we create better marketing—

Mr. Waddell: Why?

Mr. Hawkes: —and we create better quality jobs and more jobs. There are now 14 privatization proposals on the table. We have completed a number of those, and this happens in every single case. Every single time we get the same stupid, foolish argument.

It is common sense and it is logical that if we take two smaller units in the same business, we reduce the input costs in part in terms of administration, research and development—

Mr. Benjamin: Baloney! That is not true.

Mr. Hawkes: It happens every single time. That is why there are so many mergers of private sector companies. They want to reduce their overhead costs. They become more aggressive as marketers because they have people out in more centres trying to sell their goods and products. We have mergers all the time because they end up with a healthier corporation which does a better job, with happier employees when there is employer ownership, and that is part of this proposal. All these positive things happen.

We have a lot of important issues coming up in this country such as free trade, abortion, and so on, but the NDP, for some set of silly, bloody reasons, has decided to drive us into a fourth day of debate with two mouths. The Leader of the Party stands in the House and says this should go to committee soon, and the back-benchers of the NDP Party stand up and filibuster and move silly motions to try to kill a piece of legislation. What is this country coming to? Is the NDP Party going to stand in this Chamber and do what is right and it is best for the Canadian people or is it going to continue to behave in a nonsensical, ideologically nonsensical way?

Mr. Waddell: Call an election, then.

Mr. Hawkes: Which are they going to do?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is that the question?

Mr. Hawkes: That is the question. What are they going to do?

Mr. McCurdy: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I think the Hon. Member in his fit of apoplexy must have lost track of the English language and the appropriate way to refer to Parties in this House. It is the New Democratic Party. We are not having a party. It is a political Party.

An Hon. Member: Come on, sit down!

An Hon. Member: Order!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I will allow the Hon. Member a minute to answer the question.

Mr. Althouse: Mr. Speaker, I think that if the Hon. Member for Calgary West (Mr. Hawkes) had been paying full attention to my speech he would have noted that I did not take very much time at all on ideological arguments. I was dealing with economic arguments. I am a person from Saskatchewan, a person who pays taxes there and who is an owner of SMDC through the Government of Saskatchewan. As such, I cannot see the economic advantages for me as a Saskatchewan taxpayer of taking over part of the debt of this company. As a Canadian taxpayer, I cannot see the advantages of being saddled with the balance of the debt.

Saskatchewan already has the advantage of having most of the good concentrates and good ores in the uranium field. We do not particularly need this deal. The deal that is being offered apparently permits SMDC to have some options on facilities Eldorado Nuclear had that SMDC might buy for a very low price. The point I was making is that this low price is in fact a problem for me as a Canadian taxpayer and also as a Saskatchewan taxpayer, because I am concerned about why we need this deal.

Saskatchewan has all the advantages in the uranium industry. If we want to develop it, we can develop it at our own speed. We are sitting on several hundred years of the best uranium mines anywhere in the world. We are in charge of them. I do not think that there is any advantage to me either as a Canadian taxpayer or a Saskatchewan taxpayer to go through with this deal.

I have not seen any data presented by the government side to convince me or my colleagues or my neighbours that it is a good deal. Although this debate may have gone on for a short time on three or four different days, that data is still lacking. Through the motion of my hon. friend from Regina West, we are trying to give the Government an opportunity to present that information to us. What will be the advantage to the Canadian taxpayer and to the Saskatchewan taxpayer?

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure to have this opportunity to participate in a debate which, in the view of my Party and of my House Leader, is one which should be pursued. If there is anything silly about the motion that was introduced by my hon. colleague, it is that it has elicited a silly, obscene response from the Hon. Member for Calgary West (Mr. Hawkes).

The Hon. Member alleges that this debate is based on some ideological imperative. Let us make it clear that the question of privatization is not subject to ideological imperatives. That is a fact and a consideration that I wish the government Party would take into account.

Mr. Hawkes: That's what you say every time. No common sense—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): There will be an opportunity for questions and comments later.

Mr. McCurdy: What I said is like a worm that drew a fish to speak. It is not this Party which has raised the issue of the ideological content of privatization, it is the Government.

Recently, we had presented to us a ridiculously unprepared proposition for the privatization of Air Canada. That will be open to considerable debate, but it raises the question of whether or not the Conservative Party is so totally committed on the basis of an ideological imperative to privatization that it very nearly loses its senses whenever the issue is raised in the form of debate.

We have before us the proposition to merge and privatize the Saskatchewan Mining Development Corporation and Eldorado Nuclear. If ever there was an example of a case of privatization in which ideological considerations have overrun all other considerations, it is this one, and so it should be examined. This is a Government—

Mr. Hawkes: In committee.

Mr. McCurdy: I am very pleased that I am being listened to carefully, because the Hon. Member for Calgary West (Mr. Hawkes) could stand further education and an examination of his own motives.

Not too long ago, various spokesmen for the Government expressed their support for the Brundtland Commission report which drew the world's attention to the tremendous significance of the massive numbers of environmental problems the world faces. One of the propositions enunciated in that report was that there should be a movement in the direction of sustainable development.

For the Hon. Member for Calgary West, whose mind turns to a complete blank every time any question is raised about privatization, sustainable development means development that incorporates in the estimates of the costs and in the determination of whether or not to proceed the costs of all the environmental impacts. Surely even the Hon. Member for Calgary West should understand that the nuclear industry is not beyond question. It is not devoid of widespread concern. For that reason alone, one would have thought that the Hon. Member for Calgary West would have had the common sense to understand that this, therefore, is not just any old deal, it is one that requires the most careful scrutiny. It would get that scrutiny if this Government were not so totally committed to its ideological imperative.

In this instance, there is not only an ideological imperative that is being pursued but considerable environmental considerations that must be taken into hand. We know, for example, that the Port Hope refinery produces hundreds of tonnes of waste each year and that the capacity of the disposal site is on the verge of being completely exhausted. There are no alternatives, and when an alternative is found, will it be the burden of the new owners of this merged company to pay for the disposal of these wastes? No, the Government will pay $75 million for it in the estimated costs, according to the legislation we are considering today.

We must also be aware that there are similar problems with the mines owned by the Saskatchewan Mining Development Corporation. The most significant problem we have with the nuclear industry in its peaceful use is the environmental impact of the waste generated by it and the disposal problem which has not been resolved.

In debate the other day, one of my hon. colleagues indicated that the half-life of some of the waste contamination produced was 300,000 years, and he was talking about it taking 300,000 years to get rid of it. The half-life is 300,000 years—

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. The Hon. Member is bringing up interesting general information about the nuclear industry, and indeed the committee might decide that some of that information is required from expert witnesses in order to deal with the nuclear industry, but what does this have to do with the motions being debated by the House, either the amendment or the original motion which provides for the merger of two Crown corporations?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I am sure that the Hon. Member will get to the point.

Mr. McCurdy: Mr. Speaker—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I do not think that whatever the Hon. Member said was recorded because the microphone was off. Again, I said that I am sure that the Hon. Member will return to the amendment. The Hon. Member for Windsor—Walkerville (Mr. McCurdy) has the floor.

Mr. McCurdy: As I said, the Hon. Member for Calgary West (Mr. Hawkes) is undergoing considerable mental strain, I see, in trying to understand the obvious.

This is obviously in support of the motion. It takes no great difficulty to understand that we are pointing out some of the considerations that need to be debated and considered by the Government before this legislation is even considered in the House. That I would understand to be the purpose of a hoist motion. It is to allow the Hon. Member for Calgary West and his colleagues to consider what it is they are doing.

Even the bare facts that I have indicated strongly suggest to any rational individual that we are dealing with an industry which should not be privatized. If there is any source of dependable control over an industry that people fear, it resides with Government. Why, then, do we suggest that we abandon the kind of control that will provide the necessary assurances that the nuclear industry will be handled in such a way as to protect the interests of the people and the environment?

We could talk about the workers and the proposition advanced by the former Minister responsible for privatization, which I will only paraphrase, which suggested there would be vastly increased efficiency as a result of privatization. It will be rationalized in order to achieve that efficiency. When matched against the notion of stock being available to the workers, it surely is of some importance to these workers to be sure that their interests will be taken into account in a fashion modelled on what happened when the industry was subject to a vast lay-off under circumstances of government ownership.

Apart from the foolishness associated with privatizing the nuclear industry, one has to raise the question of whether in the long run it would be profitable for the private sector owners. In addition, there is the question of whether we should perpetuate this industry ad infinitum. Would it not be better to look in other directions and not place in the hands of private interests an opportunity to expand the nuclear industry? Would it not be better to put more commitment into exploration of alternative energy sources which would be renewable and non-contaminating, and based on the notion of sustainable development? It has been only a couple of weeks since we pointed out that there is such an alternative available to us in the form of hydrogen technology.

We have here, then, a proposition which is environmentally threatening and flies in the face of undertakings to move in the direction of sustainable development. It is economically doubtful in view of American action to restrain the import of uranium to the U.S. in flat contradiction of the free trade agreement. We have a deal that involves a stock flotation where, as my colleague indicated, the Canadian people will sell something they own and then turn around and have to pay for a great deal of the cost of that operation, with our taxes amounting to something in the order of $350 million.

I will admit that this intervention is a kind of random walk through the considerations which apply to this legislation, intended for one purpose only, to demonstrate that the Hon. Member for Calgary West and his colleagues are so absolutely committed to their ideological imperative that they refuse to consider the implications of what they are doing, so overwrought are they with ensuring that further mergers and so on continue as a matter of principle. They believe they should encourage them for reasons which are perhaps not ideological in some instances, perhaps more patronizing in a certain sense,I might suppose. Certainly we heard earlier suggestions that mergers have been of economic benefit to this country. If that is the principle being applied here, then that is under question, too.

I will conclude by saying that it seems to me self-evident, as I am sure it is to my colleagues in this House, that this Bill should be hoisted. The Government should take some time to give some thought to the matter. I do not think Members opposite want to be accused again of doing something thoughtless and in an ill-considered manner, a reputation which they have rightfully earned. Here is an opportunity for them to withdraw, reconsider, and perhaps not do at all.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions or comments.

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Speaker, they speak out of two sides of the mouth, maybe three. The NDP Government in Manitoba is in trouble in large measure because it is inappropriate for elected representatives, I believe, to have control of certain kinds of management paths related to public enterprise. It is the management of Crown corporations where indeed elected Members of Parliament do not have the expertise that has got the NDP Government in trouble in Manitoba.

Mr. Waddell: Where?

Mr. Hawkes: Where? We will see on voting day just exactly the size of the trouble.

The arguments being advanced on the other side would force Canadians to conclude that when they go to the ballot box they should be choosing people who know how to run a mining and processing company. That is the logic of their argument; elected representatives are better able to manage a mining enterprise. I am sorry, but my background does not prepare me to manage a mining company. What I think I am asked to do when I come to this Chamber is to protect the environment, protect public health and safety, and produce a policy climate that will enable enterprises to flourish and jobs to be created. I am here to try to help people reduce their tax load so that they have more discretionary income and they can enjoy a higher standard of living.

We are dealing here with two Crown corporations, one owned by the Province of Saskatchewan and one by the federal Government. We are simply saying: amalgamate the two of them so we have a more efficient enterprise so when you do research into things like the environment you have more resources to do it and the environment is better protected. We will have a better marketing wing and the health and safety standards we lay down in this House of Commons, which is our job, will be better complied with by the company because it is a healthier enterprise.

I was in this Chamber when the Liberal Government of the day, supported by the NDP, decided to nose around in an industry and take control in many ways, control which Members of this Chamber were not prepared by background to take. That industry was the oil industry. I saw job losses, wife beatings and suicides as a result. I saw unemployment rise from 4 per cent to 12 per cent because a group of politicians on some kind of ego trip decided that they could run the world. Well, we cannot. Neither should we be responsible for running a mining operation. We were not elected to do it.

Years ago, when the markets and technology were brand new and private investors had no experience in this area, it may have been appropriate for Government to help get something started. However, we are now dealing with a tremendously sophisticated and competitive world-wide business. We need strong companies to compete successfully in markets around the world, and this is one of them. This is what that legislation is designed to do. We need it to be controlled and managed by knowledgeable people rather than not knowledgeable politicians.

They have taken four days in this Chamber and have spoken out of the two sides of their mouths. The filibuster continues. On Monday of this week we heard the House Leader say that this should go to committee soon. We heard him make another speech on Tuesday and another speech yet on Wednesday.

Mr. Benjamin: Who?

Mr. Hawkes: The Member for Kamloops—Shuswap (Mr. Riis), the House Leader.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Will the Hon. Member put the question please.

Mr. Hawkes: I would be happy to, Mr. Speaker. What is the honest statement of reality? Is the New Democratic Party, as expressed by its leadership, moving this Bill to committee to hear expert witnesses to see if we got it right, or is the back-bench revolt a planned revolt? Is the House Leader saying one thing in this Chamber which is different from what the behaviour tells us? From which part of the NDP are we hearing? What is the lie and what is the truth? Is this going to committee or is it going to get filibustered?

Mr. McCurdy: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Calgary West has become downright revolting. We do not have back-bench revolts over here. I suppose that in his environment the Hon. Member thinks that all Parties are subject to back-room revolt. We do not have any little cabals in our Party or anything of the sort. The Hon. Member should disabuse himself of that kind of silly observation.

I have never heard such an abject confession of the ideological basis of this and so much else that the Government is doing. The Hon. Member says that he was not elected here as someone competent to do a number of things. A government does a great many things, and I am sure that we would all agree that the Hon. Member is not competent in any of them. However, I do not understand why the Hon. Member would submit the argument that it follows that if we are not competent in mining we are not competent in public health, medicine, science, or forestry.

The Hon. Member has said clearly that the motivation behind this legislation is thoughtlessly ideological and because it is thoughtlessly ideological we have a piece of thoughtless legislation before us now which disregards the proper role of government.

Let me disabuse the Hon. Member of his perception of where this Party stands. This Party is a social democratic Party. If the Hon. Member is so narrow in his understanding and knowledge not to know that the highest percentage of private ownership exists under a social democratic Government in Sweden, then he knows nothing, but then he has confessed that previously.

This Party understands that there are certain situations in which it is in the national interest that certain industries and certain businesses be in government or Crown hands. It understands as well that there are industries and businesses which should remain in private hands. The decision is to be made in the interests of the public or national welfare, whether that be in terms of the production of jobs, which is the highest priority, or the environment, which is of equally high priority. Those kinds of considerations may so heavily weigh in favour of public ownership that we, in those circumstances, would propose it.

However, that does not necessarily mean that private ownership, in the vast majority of circumstances, would not be in that same interest so long as what is done is on the basis of a strategy of prosperity for this country. I hope that that will provide a basic understanding for the Hon. Member which has been so difficult for us to provide to him.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions and comments are now terminated. The Hon. Member for Kenora—Rainy River (Mr. Parry).

Mr. John Parry (Kenora—Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, I am glad to have the opportunity today to address a few remarks of my own to the privatization of Eldorado Nuclear. The New Democratic Party opposes this privatization for much the same reasons that we oppose the deal which has been made with the United States, because it is fundamentally a bad deal and one which does not hold the prospects of profit or benefit for the people of Canada.

The deal is structured in such a way that the private sector, presumably the eventual owners if this Bill passes, of Eldorado Nuclear will get the profits, profits generated not only from the commercial activities of the company which will be formed by the eventual merger of Eldorado and the Saskatchewan Mining Development Corporation, but profits also that have been made possible by the very heavy public subsidies that have been given to the uranium mining industry over a number of years in the form of favourable taxation, marketing arrangements, sweetheart contracts and, I might say, some forms of political manipulation and protection as well. We have no assurance that the Government even recognizes the benefit that it is conferring on the private sector by this privatization.

I think that Canadians would more readily excuse the Tories if they were to say honestly that they are going to give things to the private sector at less than their full value on the basis of potential income generation because, as Tories, they believe in the private sector and see this as a useful way to further that belief and their own ideological agenda. However, it does not seem that the Government has had the straightforwardness to confess to the Canadian public. I can assure the Government that if it were to make the confession in such terms, it might get a better response than it has received to this sly way of using the backroads to sneak through another privatization on the Canadian people.

The Government is now putting it to the Canadian people that the public sector, the people of Canada, is ultimately bearing and underwriting all the risk components which might be in this deal because the Government is assuming the potential liability of the nuclear waste problem at the Port Hope refinery at a cost of perhaps $75 million, and because the Government is assuming financial liabilities that might arise.

The Government would receive from the newly merged company about $250 million, but that would still leave some $300 million of debt which the Government is essentially going to have to take over and write down to nothing. Yet that only represents the tip of the iceberg on the investment which has been made in Eldorado in the form of government equity.

The Government is going to take a loss on this transaction. It is going to tell the taxpayers of Canada that now is the time to take the loss. However, it also means that the previous investment is liquidated to zero and that the people of Canada will not share in any future profits which come from the uranium industry.

I wonder, Mr. Speaker, whether there is any certainty for the Government in trying to seek a high share price in order to diminish its losses. Obviously it does not want to end up like that great Socred experiment in British Columbia, the British Columbia Resources Investment Corporation, where the shares were sold to the public at $5 each and are now valued at 90 cents. If the Government seeks that high share price for this privatization it must face the reality that uranium markets are chronically over-supplied and prices are depressed at the moment. After all, if the United States Government were to go against the spirit of the free trade deal and pass the Bill presently before it concerning penalties on utilities which use foreign-enriched uranium, that would drastically reduce the market for Canadian mined uranium within the United States and would of course, depress the prices.

This gives me the legitimate opportunity, which I shall not pass up, to point out again to the Government the degree to which that trade deal signed with the United States Government is one-sided and unrealistic. While we are even waiting in this House for the introduction of the omnibus Bill which will harmonize all the Canadian legislation with the trade agreement that has been signed, Bills are coming forward in the American Congress that would provide for obvious restraints on trade with Canada.

Therefore, we have a deal that is no deal at all because it does not change the future from the past. All that has changed is that certain programs have been given a blessing or said to be legitimate, yet they can still be treated before the U.S. Trade Commission and in the U.S. Congress as if they were not legitimate. So it is with American legislation. There surely must be a large corpus of American legislation that can be very readily recognized as protectionist.

I do not think I need to go into examples about the Jones Act, about quotas on Japanese automobiles, about some of the military procurement regulations that prevail in the United States. The fact is that the Government has signed a trade agreement that really does very little to reduce not only the protectionist legislation that is in place in the United States but the protectionist legislation which is to come in the United States.

Therefore, to say that we have a trade deal really is flaunting a Pollyanna approach in front of the Canadian public. Much more is left unregulated, uncontrolled and at the mercy of the whims of the U.S. Congress in that deal than is settled in it.

What are the other advantages to this Eldorado privatization? Are there job guarantees? Is there any security for the workers of those two companies that are to be merged? Quite the opposite is true. The Minister spoke of rationalization, which we all know is the Tory code for lay-offs. There are no guarantees for jobs in Bill C-121.

What are the research and development prospects? After all, there are prospects for change in the way in which uranium is enriched. That will require substantial research and development investment but there is no guarantee in this Bill that that research and development investment will be made.

There is no guarantee that if it is made, the research and development will in fact be done in Canada. In the Minister's own words, the future prospects of the entire uranium industry have been heightened by lessening the uncertainty over possible U.S. import restrictions on uranium. But how is that to happen? The trade deal with the United States has us dropping our requirements for the processing of imported oil. How will this happen, beyond the United States saying that they want our unrefined uranium and if they do not get it they will subject the refined version to the countervail provisions of their trade law.

Environmental problems are an issue that could really be the subject of a separate speech. Something that must be remembered and that I do not believe the government side would challenge is that it is far easier for a private company to avoid or evade nuclear regulations and obligations than for a public company to do so. Indeed, I would suggest that it is far easier for a private company to tailor the regulations to its taste than it is for a public company to do so, where of course the board of directors know that they are subject to the Government. That is something that private companies would often chance their arm at. The unions of the facilities believe that private ownership could lead to a reduction in those safety standards.

I believe we should look at privatization in the context of other privatizations that have occurred. The Government is pursuing an agenda of privatization, much the same as the Conservative Government in the United Kingdom. Some of their privatizations have been touted as successful by the Government, but they are only successful in the degree to which they have conferred windfall benefits on private investors. They have not been successful in terms of returning the fair market value of the privatized company to the people of the country through the Government which previously held the shares.

That is a consideration to make when we look at the broad scheme of privatization and the broad scheme of the Government's ideological agenda for privatization within Canada. Rather than judge it on a case by case basis, I think we should say that the Government is obviously running this risk and is prepared to do so. It is prepared to see the profits on a privatization go to private hands. It is prepared to call the privatization successful if the shares merely change hands, whether or not the shares subsequently increase significantly in value and generate windfall profits for the investors. That is quite harmonious with the ideological agenda of the Progressive Conservative Party and is something that the Government will not take into consideration even though, in every other context, the objective of deficit reduction is highly touted and widely used. However, when it comes to selling off a company below the market price, this is not quite such a pressing consideration when the Government gets to that point.

Let us look at the safety agenda once again. In the 1940s the federal Government recognized the importance of nuclear energy by first expropriating the assets of Eldorado and using the declaratory power present at that time in the BNA Act to take jurisdiction.

If the Government gets out of the nuclear industry and does not have hands on experience, how will it get the information so readily that it requires to improve safety regulations and to continue to enforce safety regulations? Instead of a Crown corporation, with workers understanding their link through to the Government and their responsibility to the people of the country, there is a danger that an ethic may develop whereby workers will see themselves as being responsible to the company and see a necessity to keep some things secret that would be better in the public domain.

If we look at the behaviour of some of the companies in the American nuclear industry we can very readily see how that type of mentality can build up and possibly do damage in Canada.

The social cost of withdrawal from the nuclear industry as result of this privatization could be immense. Some of the key liabilities in this transaction have been taken over by the Government, and I see a situation whereby the Government will assume the full environmental responsibility while the company will escape scot-free, without bearing the costs of that environmental responsibility. I believe that would be a very bad paradigm to lay before Canadian industry and the Canadian people because we have seen in the past that many industries have prospered and returned profits to their shareholders by socializing the real cost of their operation, particularly in the environmental areas. This is something that dates from the industrial revolution when waste chemical was first poured down a sewage system and taken out into a stream.

Simply because it is only in recent years that the true costs have been identified does not mean that we can afford to drop the vigilance that is necessary to ensure that any resource or mining or manufacturing operation pays the full cost of its operation and does not arbitrarily socialize costs which, in many cases, may be immense.

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, I want to compliment my colleagues who have spoken today and brought new material into the debate. I want to say for the benefit of my colleague for Calgary West (Mr. Hawkes) that from his remarks one would think that MPs and MLAs in places where there are Crown corporations will be managing them. I do not know of a single MLA or MP anywhere in Canada who has been managing a Crown corporation. In every instance, whether federal or provincial, top-notch experts were hired to be managers. I am wondering if the Hon. Member for Calgary West is trying to say that Petro-Canada is poorly managed.

Mr. Hawkes: Yes.

Mr. Benjamin: It is the most successful oil company in all of North America.

Mr. Hawkes: Bull-roar.

Mr. Althouse: What is the shareholder doing, then?

Mr. Benjamin: If it is being poorly managed then the responsibility is on the Hon. Member for Calgary West and his colleagues.

Even if it were the case that MPs and MLAs were managing Crown corporations, I have been trying to think of something that the Hon. Member for Calgary West could manage. I decided that it could be nothing more than a chicken coop.

It is the Conservative Government which has been talking about running the Government using sound business practices and bringing business ethics into government. It has come to a point now where we socialists have to give Conservatives lessons on sound business practice and good business ethics. It has always been my understanding, and I want to ask my colleague for his opinion on this, that in the private sector where there is sound business management and good business ethics if one buys a business one buys not only its assets but also its liabilities.

What does my colleague think of this ridiculous, hare-brained, bone-headed proposal of the Governments that the taxpayers of Canada will keep the hundreds of millions of dollars worth of debt and that the eventual private owners of this new company which will be privatized will get off scot-free and get the gravy? Would my colleague like to express an opinion on those types of business practices?

Mr. Parry: Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank the Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin) for his perceptive comments. Indeed, I would like to respond to the first part of his comments in which he was criticizing what I can only describe as the caricature that the Hon. Member for Calgary West (Mr. Hawkes) made of the actual structure by which Crown corporations are managed.

It is of course entirely inappropriate for the Hon. Member for Calgary West to suggest that Members of Parliament or even members of the Government would be involved in an operational way in the management of Crown corporations. For him to caricature the real situation in this way I would say is an abdication of a parliamentarian's responsibility to describe, whatever his or her preconceptions, things as accurately as they know how.

As the Hon. Member for Regina West said, the situation is quite clear. The Government appoints a board of directors for a Crown corporation. The board of directors hires the management. The Government acts as the shareholder, whereas in a private situation there are many shareholders. But the principles of corporate organization remain the same. The board of directors instructs the management. The board of directors of course accepts direction in policy matters and policy matters only from the Government.

It may be that Tory Members have been getting involved in mischievous ways in attempting to interfere with and run Crown corporations. Maybe what we are hearing is not so much a caricature as perhaps a confession. I would have to point out that in provinces such as Saskatchewan, Manitoba and British Columbia, which have had the benefit of Crown corporations established by New Democratic Party and CCF Governments, those distinctions have been observed. Those distinctions have been made to work. Indeed, Crown corporations have been run in accordance with sound business principles.

If the Tories' plan is to deviate from that trend, then let them do so. When I hear the Hon. Member for Calgary West in response to a question about whether Petro-Canada is well managed or not say that it is poorly managed, then I say it is obvious that if that is a comment made on behalf of the Government and not one merely arising out of frustration, it is the responsibility of the Hon. Member to put that opinion and that analysis to the shareholder, which is the Government. After all, he represents the riding which is directly adjacent to where Petro-Canada has its headquarters.

He should make the Government the beneficiary of the knowledge and insight that he has into the operations of Petro-Canada. I am sure that the Government knows, even if the Hon. Member for Calgary West does not, the correct way to communicate such an opinion to the board of directors of Petro-Canada. The board of directors of Petro-Canada of course, if it agrees with the analysis, has the power to make those changes in management that it feels are appropriate under the circumstances.

Turning to the other part of the question, it is obvious that there are enormous costs out there, unestimated, unanalysed and unknown, for the Government if it sells off merely the assets of a corporation without selling off the liabilities as well. That is something that flies in the face and is totally contrary to sound business practice.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The time allotted for questions and comments has now terminated. Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The question is on the amendment of Mr. Benjamin. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the amendment?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): All those in favour of the amendment will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): All those opposed to the amendment will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Call in the Members.

The House divided on the amendment (Mr. Benjamin) which was negatived on the following division:

INDIAN AFFAIRS

ABANDONED HOUSES IN SCHEFFERVILLE—REQUEST THAT MINISTER NEGOTIATE AGREEMENT WITH MONTAGNAIS

Mrs. Thérèse Killens (Saint-Michel—Ahuntsic): Mr. Speaker, on Tuesday, April 12, the Montagnais Indians were in Ottawa to condemn the failure of the federal and Quebec governments to take action with respect to the situation in Schefferville. Schefferville has, to all intents and purposes, been abandoned, and many houses, for which the Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation is responsible, are empty. Meanwhile, the Montagnais in the area are living in multi-family dwellings, with a bare minimum of services, and without any play areas for the children. The empty houses in Schefferville are deteriorating, despite the Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation's attempts to provide maintenance.

I therefore ask the Minister responsible for Indian Affairs, the Minister responsible for housing and the local Member who is the Prime Minister himself, to negotiate an agreement with the Montagnais under which they will be able to move into these houses, which would be a first step towards giving the Montagnais responsibility for their own economic development.

VISIBLE MINORITIES

JAPANESE CANADIANS INTERNED DURING WORLD WAR II—GOVERNMENT DISCUSSION WITH REPRESENTATIVE ORGANIZATION

Mr. Ross Belsher (Fraser Valley East): Mr. Speaker, this Government has been determined from the very beginning of its first term in office to redress the wrongs of the past as best it can today. Ministers have met with the Japanese Canadian community, listened, and searched for the appropriate set of actions. This is not a matter we as a Government take lightly.

Most recently, the previous Minister of State for Multiculturalism offered the following to that community: an official government acknowledgement of the injustice, to be formally adopted by Parliament; the introduction of new emergency legislation to replace the War Measures Act; and compensation to the community as a whole. This Government is at least willing to talk.

Our new Minister of State for Multiculturalism (Mr. Weiner) committed himself this morning to continuing discussions with the National Association of Japanese Canadians, proof that we are trying to find a fair and equitable solution to this problem which has been ignored for too long.

FINANCIAL DIFFICULTIES FACED BY FARMERS

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt—Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, today members of the National Farmers Union are holding a national day of protest to raise public awareness of the seriousness of the farm crisis. Rallies will be staged across Canada, including mock funerals in Edmonton and Regina. The caskets carried by honorary pallbearers symbolize the death of the family farm.

Government policies are not adequately addressing the burgeoning debt and low income problem of farmers. The Farm Credit Corporation has still not clarified the problem of longer term leases, an initiative it was supposed to have addressed a year ago. As well, the Chairman of the Standing Committee on Agriculture has not vigorously continued the investigation into equity financing or land bank schemes.

Another year has gone by. Another year has been wasted. Another year's crop of farmers has been lost. I call on the Government to make a greater commitment to ensure the survival of the family farm.

ACCESS TO JUSTICE

THEME OF LAW DAY

Mr. David Daubney (Ottawa West): Mr. Speaker, as Chairman of the Standing Committee on Justice and Solicitor General I am pleased to invite my colleagues and all Canadians to celebrate the sixth annual Law Day which takes place tomorrow. For six years now Law Day has given us an occasion to reflect upon the rights and freedoms which define our society and which benefit all Canadians. This year's theme, "Access to Justice", reflects the right of every Canadian to have equal access to information about the law as well as equal opportunity for access to the courts.

Tomorrow across Canada members of the Canadian Bar Association and other lawyers from the private and public sector will be engaged in a variety of activities aimed at bringing the law to the Canadian public. I look forward personally to speaking to students at Woodroffe High School in my riding about the work of our committee.

As Members of this House it is our duty to help our constituents become more aware of the law and how it affects them. All Canadians should feel that the law exists for them and that it allows them to live in a fair and just society. It is up to each one of us to help make access to justice a reality for all.

WELFARE

CHANGES TO BRITISH COLUMBIA SYSTEM

Mrs. Lucie Pépin (Outremont): Mr. Speaker, I rise today in the House to voice my complete indignation at Premier Vander Zalm's reorganization of the B.C. welfare system. We heard this morning that in the restructuring of the welfare program Mr. Vander Zalm has decided to cut back on welfare benefits for single mothers. Even Mr. Vander Zalm's allies find inconsistency in the fact that Mr. Vander Zalm is trying, on the one hand, to promote family life while, on the other hand, making life more difficult for single head of family mothers.

According to Mr. Vander Zalm's new restructuring, women who do not find work within 15 weeks of the birth of their children will face a financial penalty. How can Mr. Vander Zalm reconcile the promotion of family life with the fact that he is virtually ruling out the possibility for single women to have a child by imposing harsh restrictions on their access to welfare benefits?

I see no promise for universal day care in Mr. Vander Zalm's new program, only a vague promise of personal intervention in the harshest cases. Single mothering is itself a harsh case, Mr. Speaker, a case Mr. Vander Zalm is making harsher. We must voice our disdain for a plan so completely devoid of compassion or understanding.

AIRPORTS

HAMILTON INTERNATIONAL—TRILINGUAL PLUG

Mr. Geoff Scott (Hamilton—Wentworth): Merci, M. le President. Bienvenue a l'aeroport internationale de Hamilton!

Mr. Speakah, Ah want to welcome y'all to Hamilton InterNayshunal Eiry-port.

Viva! La Aero-puerto Interna-TZion-Ale di Hamilt-Don!!

You see, Mr. Speaker, it does not matter which language you use, the name "Hamilton International Airport" has a nice ring to it. It is also becoming an urgent ring because of potentially greater chaos and confusion at Toronto with the construction of a third terminal building there. Many pilots and passengers are suddenly becoming aware of Hamilton's superb runways and facilities.

With regularly scheduled services such as Pan Am Express and Alleghany Airways to the United States, and with NationAir coming on stream with flights to London, England, and hopefully beyond to continental Europe, we are now virtually an international airport.

I am formally inviting the new Minister of Transport (Mr. Bouchard) and the new Minister of State for Transport (Mr. St. Germain) to see for themselves what should become Canada's newest international airport—Hamilton International Airport.

Merci, Thank Yew, Dankeschön, and Muchos Gracias.

OPPOSITION TO SALE OF SHARES

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Mr. Speaker, Canadians are asking a lot of questions about the Government's scheme to sell Air Canada and to sell them out. Canadians want to know why it is okay to give General Motors $250 million in subsidies but not to give Air Canada a similar injection of cash. Why have the Government and Air Canada not considered capital refinancing plans that do not involve selling out the company?

Why should the public buy shares in something it already owns?

Air Canada is an important instrument of national policy. It serves small and remote communities with jet aircraft with cargo capacity. It allows public monitoring of pricing practices and guarantees adherence to safety and maintenance standards.

The Government can make no guarantees about Air Canada concerning safety, service, bilingualism, or jobs if it abdicates control of the company to a small group of private investors.

As was said in this morning's Globe and Mail, "we cannot afford to lose public accountability in deregulated skies. In the U.S. ruthless corporate managers have savaged workers' jobs, wages, and working conditions, brought chaos to passengers and shippers, and cut corners on safety and maintenance". We must not allow Air Canada to become Air Texas.

CANADIAN JOBS STRATEGY

COMMITTEE'S LITERACY SKILLS RECOMMENDATION

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, the second report of the Standing Committee on Labour, Employment and Immigration entitled "A Review of the Canadian Jobs Strategy" reports as follows:

> A great deal of concern was expressed to your Committee regarding the fact that many individuals are unable to fully utilize the Canadian Jobs Strategy because they lack literacy skills and/or are in need of basic academic upgrading.

This is certainly the case in the region which I represent and I commend for careful study by the Government the recommendations made by the committee to deal with this serious problem.

LOBBYISTS

CALL FOR AMENDMENT OF BILL C-82

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, this week a legislative committee is studying Bill C-82 on the registration of lobbyists. The Bill has some gaping omissions.

First, the Bill does not prohibit lobbyists from charging contingency fees. This means that a lobbyist can charge an extra fee contingent on the outcome of the lobbying activity.

• (1410)

In most provincial jurisdictions this type of practice would be prohibited. Why should it not be prohibited for lobbyists as well?

Second, the activity of information gathering for the purposes of lobbying is not addressed in the Bill.

Third, the goal of transparency of the lobbying industry is thwarted in the distinction between Tier 1 and Tier 2 lobbyists in the Bill.

I urge vigilant Members of the House to lobby our legislative committee to amend the effects of the lobbying effort of the lobbyists on the lobbying Bill.

SOCIALISM

FIELD OF INQUIRY

Mr. Gabriel Fontaine (Lévis): Mr. Speaker, my Government is about to proceed with its fourteenth privatization. This is its fourteenth message of confidence in the creativity and productivity of Canadians. It is the fourteenth challenge to the Socialist Party, a Party that does not trust Canadians to create jobs and prefers to place its trust in protectionism and trade barriers.

Every day, socialism wants to give the keys to our economy to laboratory technocrats. Canadian workers know by now that privatization creates employment and more businesses. Collective ownership does not make sense.

Not a single country in the world has been able to apply this concept and we are certainly not going to start here in Canada.

IMMIGRATION

ADMITTANCE OF REFUGEES—GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mrs. McDougall) keeps repeating the high sounding principle that Canada cannot morally allow economic refugees to use up the spaces allotted to real refugees. She is busily deporting Turks to prove her point.

However, during the past two years Canada has doubled the number of so-called refugees selected abroad for entry into Canada from Nicaragua. What is going on?

Nicaragua does not have the busy death squads such as Chile, El Salvador, and Guatemala. The United Nations and Amnesty find that Nicaragua's performance on the rule of law and human rights is clearly better than those countries, and the Central American Verification Committee found Nicaragua the only country seriously complying with the Esquipulas cease-fire agreement.

Canada seems to favour well off professionals and political opponents of the Sandinistas, by bringing in over 900 of them to take the places of other real refugees.

If this is the Tories' high class immigration policy, that is their choice. But to call it a refugee policy is hypocritical nonsense.

HISTORIC EVENTS

HOLOCAUST DAY

Mr. Fernand Jourdenais (La Prairie): Mr. Speaker, today is Holocaust Day, Yam Hasho'ah, a day of remembrance for the six million Jews and the uprising of the Ghetto of Warsaw during World War II.

We pray for the orphans, the widows, the innocent victims whose ashes have been scattered around by the Nazis. Their only flaws—they were Jewish by birth, and they were taken to Auschwitz, Dauchau, via Drancy, and the velodrome d'hiver and many other camps of slow deaths. They were tortured, they were destroyed on account of their identity. They were innocent victims of barbarians.

We too, here in our country, are not proud of what the then Liberal Government did to them, in returning them to the concentration camps in Germany.

We can only pray in silence to pay tribute to their memory. We undertake not to let such an evil repeat itself in this century or ever again.

My colleagues on all sides of the Chamber will no doubt rise with me and offer a tribute to their memory.

CAPE BRETON DEVELOPMENT CORPORATION

PRE-RETIREMENT LEAVE PLAN—PAYMENT OF UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE PREMIUMS BY PARTICIPANTS

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, the Cape Breton Development Corporation pre-retirement leave plan was designed purposely to have the workers affected continue to be employed under a contract of service to Devco in order that they be eligible to continue to earn entitlement to various benefits, including the Canada Pension Plan. With very few exceptions, income from employment for purposes of one of the Acts I have mentioned is income from employment for the purposes of the other.

Since the pre-retirement leave plan of 1971, many miners have now gone for a compassionate disability pension and programs under the Labour Adjustment Program. Under these programs, individuals were not be requested to pay UIC. Hence, individuals who participated in the Devco pre-retirement leave plan must pay employment insurance. This is financial discrimination since these persons will never obtain employment with that Crown corporation.

I call upon the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. MacKay) to write to the Board of Directors at Cape Breton Development Corporation and encourage them to change this absurd and unfair deduction. The Minister relayed to me in a letter that he believed only Devco could change this rule. I encourage the Minister to help show Devco the light by providing it with his assistance.

IMPACT OF PRIVATIZATION ON REMOTE REGIONS

Mr. Guy St-Julien (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, the privatization of Air Canada has been on my mind for many months. On May 7, 1987, I wrote to mayors, chambers of commerce, school boards, development corporations, LEAD corporations and the CRDAT in the riding of Abitibi, suggesting they send resolutions to Mr. Jeanniot, President of Air Canada, to the effect that "in the event Air Canada is privatized, the Abitibi—Témiscamingue region is not penalized by cut-backs in staff and in the excellent service it has always received".

On August 6, 1987, I met privately for an hour with Mr. Jeanniot in Montreal to discuss the privatization of Air Canada. The decision was made by Ottawa.

This is Canada's fourteen privatization. This airline has an excellent record, and I agree with letting its employees become shareholders.

This morning, I received confirmation from the director of Air Canada for Abitibi—Témiscamingue, Mr. Jean-Claude Tétrault, that there would be no cut-backs in staff or services.

Mr. Speaker, Air Canada has a duty to provide outstanding service to isolated areas. We will all be most vigilant in this respect, and I intend to see to it that privatization does not mean sacrificing the interests of the public.

VISIBLE MINORITIES

JAPANESE CANADIANS INTERNED DURING WORLD WAR II—CALL FOR INDIVIDUAL COMPENSATION

Mr. Ernie Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, this is an historic day for Canada as the National Association of Japanese Canadians and many other representatives of organizations gather in Ottawa to call upon the Government of Canada to recognize the enormous injustice done the Japanese Canadian community during the 1940s, and to urge the Government of Canada to act upon a proper redress.

This matter was put before the people of Canada by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) four years ago. Yet, in the intervening four years, the Government has hesitated at the decisive and important step—the essential step—of recognizing that individuals who suffered so profoundly and suffered so much have to be compensated as individuals if we are to be sure that a Government in the future will be deterred from taking action of this sort.

I call on the Government and the Prime Minister to enable the new Minister of State for Multiculturalism (Mr. Weiner) to carry the redress to its full conclusion, to negotiate a proper redress, to recognize the necessity of individual compensation, to arrive at a proper figure, and to remove this blot from the Canadian record.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

UNITED STATES OMNIBUS TRADE BILL

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister for International Trade. Since his appointment the Minister has not distinguished himself by his tasteless and insulting remarks to the citizens of Toronto who oppose the trade deal with the United States. I want him to know that on this side of the House we do not think he is being very funny. Those of us who oppose this deal from all parts of the country consider it a very serious matter.

The Minister knows that we have in our possession a document which is the agreement between the United States Senate and the House of Representatives on the content of the U.S. omnibus Trade Bill. Why did the Minister not advise Canadians of the existence of this agreement which is obviously so harmful to Canada in that it extends the application of unilateral trade remedy laws as authorized by Congress?

The document is dated April 6. Why in Washington did the Minister not publicly object to the stance taken by the U.S. Congress? Will the Minister now admit that Canada will not receive an exemption from the U.S. omnibus Trade Bill and therefore be subject to a wide range of harassment from American trade interests?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, the hon. apartment dweller from Toronto, whose rent is met of course by his own Party, must be one of the few Canadians who does not know that an omnibus Trade Bill is being considered by the U.S. Congress. Everybody else knows about it.

Today he had a press conference because he had a document dated April 6—eight days ago—which is supposed to be a lay summary of tariffs and tariff law provisions of this legislation which is now before a conference committee of the House of Representatives and the Senate. It has not been reported out yet. We will not have the legal text of whatever is agreed upon for several weeks after it is reported out. It may be reported out today.

Canada has made strenuous representations in connection with it. The omnibus Trade Bill is considerably improved compared to what it was in its original state.

• (1420)

Everything that the Leader of the Opposition says is just one more argument in favour of the U.S.-Canada Free Trade Agreement, because if we do not have that agreement, we have, as he points out today, little protection against U.S. protectionist actions which it is adopting against the rest of the world.

Some Hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Crosbie: I would like to quote what Mr. Gerald Regan, the former Minister for International Trade, stated on April 10—

Some Hon. Members: Sit down.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps the Hon. Minister would find an opportunity on subsequent questions to give the House the information that he desires to impart.

The Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver—Quadra): Mr. Speaker, if the Hon. Minister continues in that tone we would be delighted because he is not going to do his cause any good across the country.

EXCHANGE VALUE OF DOLLAR

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): The document which we have represents the consensus of the House of Representatives and the Senate, and it will form the basis of that agreement for drafting the text of the U.S. omnibus Trade Bill. Therefore, the Senators and members of the House have agreed on the substance of that Bill, and that is in the document. It is a very dangerous document for Canada.

One of the items in that agreement—and Canada has no exemption from it—suggests that the United States will have the power to determine the level of the currencies of those with which that country trades, including Canada.

Will the Minister not admit that that document substantiates some of the suspicions we have had from the beginning, namely, that the value of the Canadian dollar and the interest rate structure necessary to maintain it, are an implicit part of the agreement with the United States, and now can be made mandatory as a result of the omnibus Trade Bill?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Leader of the Opposition is in a state of anticipatory panic about an omnibus Trade Bill that is not even passed. As Gerry Regan, the former Minister for International Trade said, "Canada cannot expect to get special treatment from whatever path they take in the future unless we have some very specific, very comprehensive deal with them".

Perhaps the Leader of the Opposition should go down and tear up the omnibus Trade Bill since he is going to tear up the free trade arrangement.

Some Hon. Members: Sit down.

Mr. Crosbie: Oh, you can't take it.

With respect to the question about exchange rates, the Leader of the Opposition at a press conference this morning was a dismal failure. He made misstatements. There is no provision in the U.S. omnibus Trade Bill that gives the U.S. Government any right to intervene in Canada's right to set exchange rates, which is what the Leader of the Opposition said in his press release.

What it says is that they propose a provision that would say that whenever, in the course of negotiating a trade agreement, the President is advised by the Secretary of the Treasury that a foreign country that is a party to the negotiation manipulates its currency exchange rate, the President shall initiate exchange rate discussions with that country on an expedited basis. That hardly gives them the right to intervene to set some other country's exchange rates. Try to be factual and correct in your statements.

EXEMPTION FROM U.S. BILL—COMMITTEE'S RECOMMENDATION

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I think the pathetic side of this argument is that the Minister only came into possession of the document after we drew it to his attention, and he obviously has not had time to read it.

The agreement is not worth the paper it is written on, the Prime Minister has admitted, unless there is secure access to the American market. There is no secure access to the American market without a specific exemption from U.S. trade law.

Articles 1902 and 1904 in the agreement with the United States do not give us that. Now this new current Bill before the House of Representatives refuses to have it as an exemption, so the very basis of any bilateral arrangement with the United States is down the drain. That is what I am trying to convey to the Minister.

The House of Commons committee on trade, unanimously, including all the Conservative Members, gave as its advice to the Prime Minister that he should cancel his trade deal with the United States unless there were specific exemptions given under the U.S. omnibus Trade Bill. It now clear that they are not going to be given.

My question to the Minister is the following. Will the Minister now admit that the Government has been taken to the cleaners by the United States, that there has never been any intention on the part of the Congress or the administration to give us an exemption, and will he follow the advice of a unanimous House of Commons committee to move towards cancelling that agreement?

• (1425)

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, if the Government did any such thing it would be moving against the advice of former International Trade Ministers of the Liberal Party such as Gerry Regan, and former Liberal Ministers of Finance such as Donald Macdonald. I could give them instance after instance.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Could the Hon. Minister complete his answer?

Mr. Crosbie: Mr. Speaker, what the agreement does is give Canadians more secure access to the U.S. market. That is why we have this bipartisan support.

I quote Mr. Gerry Regan who says: "There is a large amount of support for free trade at all levels of the Liberal Party", and he says whole-heartedly: "I think it's the best way of combating regional economic disparity that I can think of". Those are the comments of a former Liberal International Trade Minister.

CANADA-FRANCE DISPUTE—OVERFISHNG BY FRENCH METROPOLITAN FLEET

Mr. George Baker (Gander—Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, since the Government took over, the French metropolitan fleet from France has consistently overfished its quota. It is overfishing right now in area 3PS off the south coast of Newfoundland. It will overfish by four times its quota like it did last year, totally destroying the fishing resource, while the Government does nothing about it.

I would like to ask the Minister of External Affairs, or the Acting Minister of External Affairs, why is the Government of Canada only now flexing its muscles with one vessel from St. Pierre and Miquelon loaded to the gunnels with politicians and film crews just begging to be arrested? Why not chase the real culprit, the French metropolitan fleet right from France, or is the Government afraid of the sharks and only chases the minnows?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, the fact is that we have taken a firm position on the question of protecting the interests of Canadian fishermen on the east coast of Newfoundland. We did not give away the shop as was done in 1972 by the Government which entered into a treaty with France, the Canada-France Treaty of 1972, that gave them access to fish in Canadian waters.

As a result of the recent dispute we have taken a firm position. We closed ports to the French fishing vessels until they complied with the law and stopped overfishing in disputed area 3PS.

We closed the Burgeo Bank. We closed the fishing area of the western gullies. We have taken firm action, and the result is the incident we see occurring today, where a vessel from St. Pierre and Miquelon has deliberately come into Canadian waters to try to create some kind of incident.

I want to remind the hon. gentleman that we have 5,000 fishermen and 70 fishing communities along the south coast of Newfoundland. We are protecting them, and we are going to continue protecting them, the interests of whom were given away by the hon. gentleman's Government in 1972.

REPORTED DECISION TO SEND DISPUTE TO ARBITRATION

Mr. George Baker (Gander—Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, that 1972 agreement says specifically "subject to resource being available".

Since the Hon. Minister brought up agreements, I would like to ask him to verify for the people of Canada that the Government of Canada, through its negotiator, has now agreed with the Government of France, through its negotiator, to send the entire fishing dispute to arbitration, and that that arbitration will be non-binding, not binding on either party.

Why such a loose agreement when we have such a strong position? We have been "Chiraced". We have been shellacked and, with non-binding arbitration, we are going to be "Exlaxed".

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): There has been a series of negotiations with France by Canada during which we have been as reasonable as one could expect. We have made offers of quotas of fish to French fishermen and the fishermen of St. Pierre and Miquelon on the condition that France agrees to go to international arbitration on the question of the territorial boundaries of St. Pierre and Miquelon vis-à-vis Canada. It has refused to do that.

Canada has not agreed to any non-binding arbitration or any binding arbitration on the question of fish quotas in Canadian waters. We do not intend to agree to any such arbitration. In the last three or four weeks there have been meetings and discussions as to whether a process of mediation might be agreed to by Canada and France, whether a mediator, under the proper terms and conditions, could be employed to help bring a resolution to this problem. That is not yet settled. There will be other meetings in connection with that possible process within the next week or 10 days.

Some Hon. Members: Order!

Mr. Crosbie: If you don't want to have the answers, don't ask the questions.

An Hon. Member: Sit down!

SALE OF SHARES—WINNIPEG MAINTENANCE BASE

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg—Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. It has to do with reports today by the Manitoba Conservative Leader, Mr. Filmon, that he has guarantees from the Government with respect to the preservation of Air Canada maintenance jobs in Winnipeg. These are guarantees the Government would not give to the House in Question Period yesterday and the day before. I wonder if the Deputy Prime Minister is prepared to say what kind of guarantee he gave to Mr. Filmon. Or was this just to get Mr. Filmon through the next difficult few weeks for him during the election campaign?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, the guarantees I gave Mr. Filmon are the same guarantees I gave in this House. It was outlined by Air Canada, and indicated in the announcement that there clearly would be provisions for the establishment of Montreal as its home office and the maintenance of the major overhaul operational centres, namely, Toronto, Montreal, and Winnipeg.

REQUEST FOR LEGISLATIVE GUARANTEE

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg—Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, the fact is that the Deputy Prime Minister gave no guarantees. All he did was quote Air Canada at the same time as he announced a plan to turn the control of Air Canada over to someone other than the Government. How can the Government give a guarantee and at the same time relinquish control, unless it is willing to do what it was willing to do for Montreal, and that is to put legislative guarantees in for Manitoba and Winnipeg? I ask the Deputy Prime Minister why is he not willing to do that for Manitoba? Is Manitoba to be betrayed again like it was with the CF-18?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is referring to an age-old problem where the Liberal Government of the day removed a large installation from Winnipeg, which was an Air Canada installation. Since that time there has been a certain amount of nervousness, and a lot of nervousness from the New Democratic Party because it is running third, I understand, in Manitoba. So it is trying to engage in cheap politics here on the floor of the House of Commons. If the Hon. Member wants to fight the provincial election in Manitoba, he should go back there and do it.

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg—Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, the Deputy Prime Minister may want to make fun of the anxiety that all Manitobans have about the future of Winnipeg in the aerospace industry, but it is a legitimate anxiety. He is right, it does go back to the Liberals. For that matter, so does privatization of Air Canada. But two rights don't make a wrong.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Blaikie: Or two wrongs don't make a right. I am sorry.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: They do not make a question, either. The Hon. Member will put his question.

Mr. Blaikie: They all knew what I meant, Mr. Speaker. What I meant was that the Liberals and the Conservatives have a record of shafting Winnipeg when it comes to jobs in the aerospace industry. It appears the Deputy Prime Minister did not give a guarantee to Gary Filmon any more than he gave a guarantee to this House. The only guarantee that Manitobans will accept will be a legislative guarantee. Until that guarantee is forthcoming, we know the Conservatives are setting Winnipeg up to be shafted once again.

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, the only anxiety quite obvious is the anxiety of the New Democratic Party in losing the provincial election in the Province of Manitoba. That is quite clear. It is engaged in an act of desperation to use any cheap political trick to try to enhance its popularity.

DIRECTION AND CONTROL OF CORPORATION

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, both the Deputy Prime Minister and the Member for Winnipeg—Birds Hill are trying to fly on one wing. Everyone knows the only one soaring in Manitoba is Sharon Carstairs.

Ms. Copps: Right on!

Mr. Tobin: Can the Deputy Prime Minister confirm today in the House the suggestion he made when he announced the Air Canada sale, that is, that the Chairman of the Board of Air Canada, who, after the first 45 per cent of the shares are made private, shall be directed by the Government to vote the majority shares in the same way as a majority of the minority shareholders, that the Government and Air Canada management shall not exercise their control block but rather shall take direction from the private shareholders? Could he confirm that today in the House?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member should know that under the Canada Business Corporations Act, all directors, no matter who they are appointed by, must act in the best interests of the company and all shareholders. The Government's commitment not to intervene simply re-enforces our intention to ensure that the Canada Business Corporations Act is complied with.

DEPUTY PRIME MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, I thank the Deputy Prime Minister for his convoluted but nevertheless straight answer. What the Deputy Prime Minister is now telling the House is that neither the Government, nor Air Canada management, who shall act under direction of the minority private shareholders, can give any assurances to anybody anywhere, Winnipeg, Toronto, Montreal or Stephenville, Newfoundland, which now has an Air Canada service.

Why does the Deputy Prime Minister continue to interfere in the Manitoba election campaign by making statements that cannot be substantiated and do not reflect the fact of the privatization plan announced by the Government? Why is he doing that?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and President of the Treasury Board): Very simply, Mr. Speaker, for this reason. In previous privatization initiatives there have been conditions that have been attached to the privatization, whether it has to do with official languages or with certain operations of the company. That becomes part of the legislation and/or the Articles of Incorporation. Clearly in the case of Canadair there were conditions. In the case of de Havilland there were conditions. In the case of Fisheries Products International there were conditions. In the case of Eldorado Nuclear there were conditions.

Why does the Hon. Member not go back and read the Air Canada Act of 1977? The Air Canada Act of 1977 said that it must perform and operate as a commercial company in anticipation of profit. That is a pretty clear mandate for the corporation.

CANADA-FRANCE DISPUTE—BOARDING OF FRENCH TRAWLER

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans. He will know that at this moment Canadian fisheries officials are boarding the French trawler off the coast of Newfoundland. This obviously is a most serious international provocation on behalf of the French. The French officials on board the craft have indicated they plan to resist any efforts at arrest. Considering that the Minister's officials are now boarding this particular craft, and our officials and our ship are armed, what does the Minister plan to do from this point on?

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, as the Hon. Member points out, this is a very serious matter indeed. We have had the St. Pierre and Miquelon based trawler Croix de Lorraine under surveillance for several hours while it has been sailing within the undisputed waters of Canada. We now have sufficient reason to believe that an infraction of Canadian law has been committed. For that reason we are commencing normal activities, as the Hon. Member has implied, according to standard operating procedures. When further information is available on the progress of this exercise, I will have more to say.

MINISTER'S PLANS

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, this is obviously a serious international provocation on behalf of the French. French politicians are on board the craft. Television crews are on board the craft. It is obvious they plan to make this a serious incident.

Mr. Mazankowski: Is that where Broadbent is?

Mr. Riis: It is not a joking matter, Mr. Speaker. It is a very serious international incident. The people of Canada would like to know precisely what the Minister's plans are. Does he plan to arrest the fishermen? Does he plan to arrest the people aboard this craft?

Mr. Shields: If the cameras are there, Broadbent will be there.

• (1440)

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, as the Hon. Member has recognized, this is not a matter to be laughed at. It is indeed a very serious matter. It is also a matter on which we should not speculate or hypothecate here in the House of Commons.

Our two coastal patrol vessels, the Leonard J. Cowley and the Cape Roger, have engaged in an enforcement action according to standard operating procedures. When that action is completed, I will have something further to report.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

PRESENCE IN GALLERY OF MEMBER OF THE HOUSE OF LORDS

Mr. Speaker: I wish to bring to Hon. Members' attention the presence in the gallery of Lord Carlisle of Bucklow, Member of the House of Lords and Chairman of the British Parole System Review Committee.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

PRESENCE IN GALLERY OF WESTERN EUROPEAN UNION COMMITTEE MEMBERS

Mr. Speaker: I wish also to draw to Hon. Members' attention the presence in the gallery of the members of the General Affairs Committee of the Western European Union, led by Dr. Karl Ahrens.

TRADE

UNITED STATES OMNIBUS TRADE BILL

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, I would like to address a further set of questions to the Minister for International Trade in relation to the agreement between the two Houses of Congress to proceed now with the Trade Bill that contains many measures which are clearly detrimental to Canadian economic interests.

On March 6 the ambassador of Canada in Washington outlined a series of objections and concerns about that legislation. A reading of the document shows that most of those concerns have not been answered and that the measures to which the ambassador took exception are still contained in the agreement that is now going forward as part of the omnibus Trade Bill.

Taking that into account, I want to ask the Minister why it is he said in the House, in response to the Leader of the Opposition, that he considers the new Bill to be a major improvement and that it has many improvements in it. Does the Minister still stand by the position taken by Ambassador Gotlieb that the measures contained in the omnibus Trade Bill are contrary to the spirit of both the multilateral and the bilateral trade agreements which we are negotiating with the United States and will have serious implications for the passage of any future Canada-U.S. agreement? Do we still stand by the ambassador's statement?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I think the ambassador of Canada sent a letter to the Congressional committee on March 1 outlining a number of our concerns with respect to the omnibus Trade Bill to which we had strong objection. There have been changes made. Some of the more onerous provisions have been changed.

The Bill has been improved in quite a number of respects as a result of our representations and those of others. For example, among proposals dropped that were of particular concern to us were the House proposals to amend the definition of a countervailable subsidy, certain amendments to revise the anti-dumping law, the Gephardt amendment, and I cannot go into them all because the list would be too lengthy. The Bill has been improved. We do not know the final version of it yet.

In addition, if there are any provisions in an ominous Trade Bill—omnibus trade Bill passed by Parliament—ominous is also right because, I will tell Hon. Members this, if we do not get our U.S.-Canada free trade agreement agreed to, there will be many ominous moments with the United States Congress which is in a very protectionist mood.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Oh, yeah, just knuckle under. Oh, boy!

Mr. Crosbie: We are hardly knuckling under when we have secured changes in this legislation. If there are any provisions in the omnibus Trade Bill that are contrary to the free trade agreement stand-still arrangement, we will be expecting the American Congress to attend to that in the legislation that goes before it to approve the free trade agreement, if there are such.

Now, there will be changes, not concrete, to the stand-still agreement that we object to which will be in the omnibus Trade Bill. But next year, thank God, with the passage of the agreement, we will no longer be as vulnerable as we are now.

DEFINITION OF SUBSIDY

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, as the Hon. Minister well knows, any measures passed in the omnibus Trade Bill by the U.S. Congress will become entrenched as part of the Canada-U.S. agreement. We will be obliged to administer that part of the U.S. trade law. It will be a classic case of shooting ourselves in the foot.

Ambassador Gotlieb clearly outlined that one of the most serious reservations was about a definition of subsidy, because it would limit a number of very important government economic and development programs. That measure is still in the omnibus Trade Bill, still clearly restricting any subsidy that has very specific application to industry. Does the Minister stand by the commitment made by the ambassador that we will not proceed with the Bill and that we will have to provide our own Canadian legislation to offset that kind of damage that will be caused by the passage of this legislation in the U.S. Congress? That is a very important commitment. I want to know if the Minister stands by it.

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of International Trade): Mr. Speaker, what I stand by is this. I do not know of any outside country that can control the legislation that is passed by the U.S. Congress. I can assure Hon. Members that the countries that will be best favoured when dealing with the United States will be those that have firm arrangements with the United States in their trade relations. As the Hon. Gerald Regan said on April 10, Canada cannot expect special treatment from whatever path they take in the future unless we have a specific, very comprehensive deal with them.

If we have a deal which is torn up by some other Party or some other Party Leader, then God help Canada and any—

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

CONSUMER AFFAIRS

DRUGS—PROTECTION OF CONSUMERS

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. Miles Laboratory is trying to mislead the public and take advantage of the vulnerability of the sick. In a so-called educational bulletin called Heart Beat, the company uses fear tactics to persuade angina sufferers to get the company's medication instead of using the cheaper generic drug. My question is this: How does he intend to respond to this situation and protect the Canadian consumer, now that his friends in the Pharmaceutical Manufacturers Association seem to be able to do anything they like?

[English]

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I am not sure precisely what the Hon. Member is getting at because the drugs in question, I understand, are all prescription drugs. One can only obtain them if a physician gives one a prescription for them.

Is the Hon. Member suggesting that I or someone else on behalf of the Government write to the physicians of Canada saying to beware, prescribe the right drugs, or something? I am not sure what problem he is alluding to. These are prescription drugs and physicians will prescribe the drug they think appropriate for their patients.

NATURE OF ADVERTISING

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, it might be excusable if the Hon. Minister had missed the translation of the question, but it is inexcusable that he has not been reading the newspapers. Miles Laboratories has been sending out, under the title of an educative newsletter, a statement or article to the effect that generic drugs are substantially more dangerous than the patented original. This is misleading advertising.

The Minister is supposed to protect the consumer. What will the Minister do about this clear example of misleading advertising being used to sell a drug on the basis of the fear of patients? Will he not take action?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, there are provisions within the law against misleading advertising. If the Hon. Member feels that this is misleading advertising, he can bring it to the attention of officials in my Department whom he knows—

Mr. McCurdy: I am.

Ms. Mitchell: He's trying to bring it to you right now.

Mr. Andre: Just a minute. If the Hon. Member would close his mouth and leave his ears open for a moment I would explain to him that the officials operate with an independent mandate. I cannot direct them to instigate an investigation or lay charges or so on. They do that independently as provided under the law.

I repeat again, the products in question are not products that consumers can purchase on their own. They are prescription drugs which are prescribed by physicians. For the Hon. Member to suggest that the Government should intervene and make judgments as to the quality of information being given to physicians—

Mr. McCurdy: Yes, yes.

Mr. Andre: The Hon. Member is shaking his head affirmatively. I think he wants to think about that before he shakes his head affirmatively.

PCB CONTAMINATION IN BIG TROUT LAKE INDIAN COMMUNITY

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane—Superior): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of the Environment. Since 1985 the Government of Canada has known about the serious PCB environmental problem in the Indian community of Big Trout Lake located in northwestern Ontario. Government tests show that PCB contamination of quite a number of individuals is above the level of concern. In fact, many are approaching an above the alarm level. Representatives of that community are in Ottawa today protesting the lack of action by the Government of Canada through the Minister of the Environment and the Minister of National Health and Welfare.

I ask the Minister why it has taken so long for action to be taken in the community of Big Trout Lake? Why has he not acted in the way the Health and Welfare report calls upon him to do, that is, in a determined and thorough manner?

Hon. Tom McMillan (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, the immediate issue at hand concerns a capacitor containing PCBs which was stolen from a storage facility of the Atmospheric Environmental Service of my Department by the band council in question. The storage was under the most rigorous authority and a permit was given by the Ontario Ministry of the Environment for that purpose. Storage was on an approved site in an approved fashion, and yet the facility was broken into and the capacitor is now in the hands of the band. I think that situation, Sir, is the most immediate risk to the health of the Indians whose cause the Hon. Member is championing.

I will give the Hon. Member my assurance, on behalf of the federal Government, that if the band will co-operate with the Crown, no charges will be pressed. I will dispatch the highest official possible to retrieve the capacitor. It will be stored under the best of authority, and as far removed from the area in question as the band would like.

TOXIC WASTE SPILL

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane—Superior): Mr. Speaker, the Minister has not been fully briefed on this problem. He will be when he meets Chief McKay and members of the council this afternoon. Chief McKay will carefully explain that he knows of Government of Canada transformers buried in the landfill site in the community. One is even exposed down by the lake. Another was found to be leaking. Knowing that, the Government of Canada has taken no action at all.

When there was a PCB spill on the Trans-Canada Highway the Government acted promptly. When there is one in an Indian community it drags its feet. Is there a double standard in this country—one form of action for all other Canadian citizens and another form of action if you happen to be a native Canadian?

Hon. Tom McMillan (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member's question is replete with equal measures of inaccuracy, hyperbole, and exaggerated rhetoric. There is no foundation whatever to the substance of the Hon. Member's question.

My Department, the Department of my colleague, the Minister of National Health and Welfare, and those of some of my other colleagues met with the Indians in question on January 12. Subsequent meetings were cancelled by the Indians themselves. I understand another meeting has been scheduled for April 21 and I look forward to it. I share, and the Government shares, the deep-seated concerns of the native people themselves. We want to work hand in glove with them to resolve any outstanding questions. However, I do not think the Indians' cause or the cause of accuracy or justice is served by the Hon. Member resorting to the kind of question that he just put on the record of the House of Commons.

REQUEST FOR ASSURANCE OF WASTE REMOVAL

Mr. John Parry (Kenora—Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, my question is also directed to the Minister of the Environment and also concerns the situation in the community of Kitche-Nuhmaykoosib, known in English as Big Trout Lake.

The Minister should be the foremost protector of Canadians in hazardous situations caused by—

Mr. Speaker: Given the time, I ask Hon. Members to put their questions as directly as they can.

Mr. Parry: Mr. Speaker, is the Minister prepared to give the community of Big Trout Lake the assurance that those wastes will be moved from the community at the first possible opportunity?

Hon. Tom McMillan (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, I think it should be acknowledged, and I believe the Hon. Member would be the first to do so, that while government authorities have detected higher than normal levels of PCBs in blood samples from some of the Indians in question, no one, least of all the Government, knows the primary source of the PCBs. We have a particular situation concerning one capacitor, but that is clearly not the source of the problem. The source resides elsewhere. We are eager to work with the Indians to identify the real source. It is not evident to anyone.

REQUEST THAT MINISTER MEET PROVINCIAL COUNTERPART

Mr. John Parry (Kenora—Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, is the Minister prepared to meet with the Ontario Ministry of the Environment to co-ordinate the identification of the sources of waste that the Hon. Member for Cochrane—Superior mentioned, and their removal as soon as is practicable?

Hon. Tom McMillan (Minister of the Environment): Yes, Mr. Speaker. If he is referring to the capacitor, we already sought from the Ontario Ministry of the Environment the relevant authority to remove the capacitor. In the meantime the Indians in question stole the capacitor, now have it, and we are trying to retrieve it because it does pose a danger to them when not handled by professionals.

As to the other sources of PCBs, we have been working with the Ontario Ministry of the Environment and different Departments at the federal level have been working with one another. Together we are eager to work with the Indians themselves.

HORTICULTURE

IMPORTATION OF SOUR CHERRIES FROM UNITED STATES

Mr. Joe Reid (St. Catharines): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Agriculture who knows of the more than average difficulties with which the fruit growers of this country are faced. For example, last year our sour cherry producers were up in arms because they were hurt by provisions of the Canada Agricultural Products Standards Act which allowed an over-generous importation of sour cherries from the U.S. to this country.

Can the Minister give some hope to the fruit growers of this country as they look to this year's cherry harvest, and introduce the amendments he proposed last year to the CAPS Act?

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the Hon. Member's question. I also appreciate the continuing representations that the Hon. Member for St. Catharines and other members of the government caucus have made on this subject.

The record will indicate very clearly and without exception that when this Government makes promises to the agriculture industry, it keeps them.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Wise: When we make commitments, we keep them. I can clearly indicate to the Hon. Member on this specific issue that we fully intend to keep this commitment as well. In fact, we could be in a position as early as next week to introduce those amendments. With co-operation from Members opposite we could have them within a week or 10 days.

VISIBLE MINORITIES

JAPANESE CANADIANS INTERNED DURING WORLD WAR II—MINISTER'S MEETING WITH DELEGATION

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Multiculturalism and concerns the emotional issue of Japanese Canadian redress. I would first like to wish the Minister well in his new responsibilities, particularly in dealing with this issue.

A few moments ago the Minister participated, as did I, in a very moving meeting organized on Parliament Hill by the National Association of Japanese Canadians to move the Government towards a solution and overcome the lack of a proper and legitimate negotiating process that would give justice a chance. Given that the Minister told the delegation that his door is open, can he inform this House that the door is open to a commitment to ongoing negotiations so that we avoid a unilateral decision and instead obtain a satisfactory compromise that would do honour to this Parliament, the community, and the country?

Hon. Gerry Weiner (Minister of State (Multiculturalism)): Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank members of the National Association of Japanese Canadians for coming here today and joining in the rally sponsored by the Coalition for Redress. I want to say how wonderful that is for the democratic process. It will help us all in our understanding of the issue.

The Hon. Member is certainly in no position to raise the issue. Forty years of successive Liberal regimes were unable and unwilling to face the problem head on.

• (1500)

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps the Hon. Member for York West would ask a short supplementary question.

REQUEST THAT NEGOTIATIONS BE CONTINUED

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, the Minister is the fourth Conservative Minister of Multiculturalism. Given that during the election campaign and as Opposition Leader the Prime Minister gave his commitment to a settlement and to negotiations, in a tone of co-operation and to try to de-escalate the emotions contained in this redress issue, can the Minister assure us that he will start his responsibilities on the right foot and commit his Government to a process of continued negotiations so that, in an atmosphere of give and take, a Canadian compromise position on this issue will be attained and we can cleanse the soul of a very dark blot?

Hon. Gerry Weiner (Minister of State (Multiculturalism)): Mr. Speaker, I indicated clearly to the community and all other Canadians this morning that I will continue to meet with the community, that I am prepared to listen, and that we will explore the issue completely. My door is open. We are prepared to redress the injustice. We are prepared to acknowledge the injustice. We are committed, we are dedicated, and we are hopeful that we can work together with the community.

REGIONAL PLANS—REQUEST THAT MINISTER MEET URGENTLY WITH QUÉBEC PRIME MINISTER

Mr. Charles Hamelin (Charlevoix): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion. People have been looking forward to the announcement that various regional development plans will be implemented in Quebec's peripheral areas. These plans were to have been announced on March 31. As a courtesy to the Government of Quebec, you engaged in a series of consultations, and unfortunately, there have been no results so far, since the plan for Eastern Quebec is being held up, and the North Shore and Saguenay—Lac-Saint-Jean plans as well. Everything is at a standstill. Isn't it time the Minister asked for an emergency meeting with Premier Bourassa to get out of this impasse which is harming the interests of Quebec's peripheral regions?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, first of all, I would like to thank the Hon. Member for his generous question. My answer is that negotiations with Quebec are progressing rapidly, considering the circumstances, and that for the first time, Quebec's peripheral regions to which the Hon. Member referred will have plans adapted to their respective strengths and weaknesses, the ultimate goal being to reduce regional disparity and respond to the needs and wishes of the people in each region, as expressed during the consultation process.

I hope that in a matter of days or at the most a few weeks, Quebec will agree to a joint agreement that respects the constitutional jurisdictions of both levels of Government, this ensuring that these plans will proceed in the best interests of the people in these areas.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: I want to advise the House that there will be a single question from the Hon. Member for Edmonton—Strathcona and a single question from the Hon. Member for Thunder Bay—Nipigon, and that will close off Question Period.

VISIBLE MINORITIES

JAPANESE CANADIANS INTERNED DURING WORLD WAR II—SETTLEMENT OF ISSUES

Mr. David Kilgour (Edmonton—Strathcona): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Minister responsible for multiculturalism who will know that the galleries are full of senior Japanese Canadians from right across Canada today. The Minister knows that there are six issues, and I think the Government is agreeable on five of them.

Can the Minister say anything to the House about those five of the six issues, if he cannot speak to the sixth today, in the non-partisan way in which we are trying to deal with this issue?

Hon. Gerry Weiner (Minister of State (Multiculturalism)): Mr. Speaker, I know that my colleague shares my pride in representing a Government which has finally attempted to deal with the injustices that the Japanese Canadians suffered in those days of yore. We will attempt to do this in a very open manner. I have indicated clearly that we are prepared to meet and to listen. I hope that, after a period of reflection, we will find a solution together.

REQUEST FOR RESOLUTION OF ALL ISSUES

Mr. Ernie Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the same Minister who is familiarizing himself with the issues in the matter of redress for the great wrong which Japanese Canadians suffered. I ask him, under the eyes of many Japanese Canadians, whether he will ensure that there are discussions and decisions taken on all matters of a non-monetary nature which have never been resolved to ensure that those components of redress will be resolved. Will he also seek authority to agree to individual compensation which is absolutely essential to a just redress acceptable to the Japanese Canadian community of Canada?

Hon. Gerry Weiner (Minister of State (Multiculturalism)): Mr. Speaker, I want to express my thanks to the Member and the other members of his Party for their support in trying to reach a solution to a very difficult issue. Forty years has been too long to wait for some acknowledgment of the injustices which have been suffered by Japanese Canadians.

As I have said, I have committed myself, with an open door, to continue to meet, to listen, and to explore all ways in which this situation can once and for all be put to bed.

PRIVILEGE

ALLEGED REFECTION OF WITNESSES BY COMMITTEE

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege as a western Member of Parliament deeply concerned about the way the legislative committee is handling Bill C-113, the Bill on western diversification.

I want to remind you, Mr. Speaker, that when this House gave second reading to Bill C-103 to establish the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency Members of the House of Commons and the Government took it very seriously. A legislative committee was struck and it asked permission to travel because of the importance of this particular issue in Atlantic Canada and the obvious need for people living in Atlantic Canada representing individuals, groups, and various agencies, to express their reactions to the legislation as easily as possible.

Therefore, the committee decided to travel. It visited St. John's, Charlottetown, Port Hawkesbury, Halifax, and Fredericton. It held open public meetings so that all people of Atlantic Canada would have access to the process as the legislative committee proceeded with its work.

The committee saw, in a formal way, 35 witnesses including representatives from labour, business, women's groups, academic groups, co-ops—

Mr. Speaker: The committee may well have done all of that but, as I understood the Hon. Member, he was raising a point with respect to another committee and another Bill and I would ask that he bring his comments to a conclusion.

Mr. Riis: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As a western Member of Parliament I believe it is only right that western Canadians have an opportunity at least to express their views. The committee members have not requested travel to western Canada but have asked that witnesses who represent the interests of western Canadians appear before it. The list of witnesses was not long. I believe a list of less than half a dozen witnesses was offered by the Hon. Member for Yorkton—Melville (Mr. Nystrom) and a similar sized list by the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy).

That modest request was rejected. The Conservative Members who form a majority of the legislative committee rejected the request to hear from some witnesses. As a matter of fact, they recently decided to hear no witnesses. Before that final decision on witnesses was made they decided to proceed clause by clause with the legislation.

How can the committee proceed in a thoughtful, business-like way to evaluate the legislation when no witnesses have been invited or heard? As a westerner I find that to be the ultimate affront. We are simply asking—

Mr. Speaker: Order. The Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap (Mr. Riis) has raised a matter which clearly gives him very great concern and may, in fact, give concern to other Members. I have listened very carefully to the Hon. Member and the difficulty the Chair is having is that the decision of which he complains was made by a committee. As Hon. Members know, it is not the place of the Chair to interfere with committee proceedings unless something quite extraordinary took place which would literally amount to an Hon. Member not being able to attend the committee or not being able to carry out any function whatsoever.

The question of what witnesses will be called to committees is one which all of us who have been here for some years know is often a matter of debate within the committee. It is not for the Speaker to say whether the decision the committee has made is a correct one or an incorrect one. I can certainly understand, as other Members probably can, that there is clearly a complaint brought to the floor of the House by the Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap.

However, I must say that while I have sympathy with the Hon. Member's position, procedurally I have very great difficulty understanding how the Chair can resolve the issue.

• (1510)

The Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy) is seeking the floor. I will hear him, but very briefly, in view of my comments.

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, I do not want to interrupt the Hon. Member, but during your comments you said that we would only bring this to the attention of the full House if something exceptional happened. Let me say that something exceptional did happen which I believe seriously impairs my privilege as a Member of Parliament. It is that it was not a matter of which witnesses were called, there were no witnesses allowed at all.

If people whom I represent in my province, who have contacted me with a deep interest in appearing to represent a strong case for their interests in this legislation, are denied any opportunity even to be heard, I consider that to be a very serious breach of the privileges not just of myself but of all Members of the House. It is a real abuse of the rights of the majority and the minority and I think something should be done about it.

Mr. Speaker: I thank the Hon. Member for assisting the Chair with that intervention. The Hon. Member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor).

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, if Hon. Members from the West are so interested in the West, I wonder why they are trying to hold up this legislation.

I want to give the facts as Chairman of the committee. There has not been one application to come and make representation. The Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy) and the Hon. Member from the New Democratic Party presented about 10 names—

Mr. Axworthy: That was the deal we have with them. A point of order, Mr. Speaker. That is a distortion of the facts.

Mr. Speaker: If the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy) feels that it is important to assist the Chair further, I will of course recognize him. However, I would like to hear from the Hon. Member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor).

Mr. Taylor: We did not have one application. When the motions were made, they were discussed and then refused. There was not one application from them and there was no indication that they were interested in coming. A motion was then moved that we would hear the Federation of Independent Businesses. That motion was agreed to, with the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry walking out and not even waiting to vote. While the Hon. Member from the New Democratic Party abstained, he did stay.

I asked the Clerk to contact the Federation of Independent Businesses to see if they wanted to come. The Clerk contacted representatives of the federation who said that they were not interested in coming but would be glad to accommodate us if we invited them. However, they did not have anything to offer to the Bill.

The Members raised questions about that, so we adjourned the meeting yesterday. I telephoned the Federation of Independent Businesses to see if they wanted to come, and they advised me again that they had nothing to offer. They had no dispute with the Bill and said they would come if we wanted them, but had nothing to offer in regard to the improvement of the Bill.

I went back to the committee and there was no representation, so there was a motion that we proceed with clause by clause study and we did so. We went through six clauses and during the afternoon the Hon. Member from the New Democratic Party pointed out, properly so, that once we begin clause by clause study there is no precedent for hearing further witnesses.

Today I received a phone call from the Federation of Independent Businesses, the gist of which is that they were being hounded to come and appear before the committee. I asked if they wanted to come and they said: "No, we do not want to come but if you want us we will".

Why are the Hon. Members trying to misrepresent this when there are hundreds of people in the West who want to get the loans and get this in operation?

Mr. Axworthy: On a point of order.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps I can assist the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy). I will take it upon myself to adjourn this particular intervention. It is still on the floor of the House.

I am not telling members of the committee to do something because I cannot do that, but I am asking Hon. Members to see if this matter can be resolved. I will ask the committee chairperson, the Member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor), to call me later in the afternoon.

Let me say this to Hon. Members: This is the very reason why we have had a rule for many years that the Chair cannot resolve disputes within the committee unless there is a most extraordinary situation.

The Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry properly brings to my attention—I do not think I was completely aware of it—that the situation here involves no witnesses. I understand that that is a serious complaint.

However, I have listened to the Hon. Member for Bow River and there seems to be some explanation for that. The difficulty the Chair is in is that I cannot settle that dispute.

I am asking all Hon. Members to co-operate with the Chair. I am adjourning this application and I hope that Hon. Members will meet and perhaps later this afternoon the Hon. Member for Bow River, the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry or the Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap (Mr. Riis) can call and indicate to me whether any resolution of this has taken place. I thank Hon. Members for their intervention.

Mr. Axworthy: A point of order, Mr. Speaker. I will not address the substance—

Mr. Speaker: May I ask the Hon. Member if this is about the same issue?

Mr. Axworthy: I wanted to raise a point of order about the remarks of the Hon. Member. The Chairman of the committee did not state the facts as they were and I think the record must show that the facts were that when the committee first met it was an undertaking by members of the committee to contact witnesses. Second, I did vote on the motion.

Mr. Speaker: I do not—

Mr. Axworthy: Those are the facts. That is the truth. He should start telling the truth.

Mr. Taylor: Is there something wrong with you?

Mr. Lewis: At least Lloyd is on the committee.

Mr. Speaker: I would ask all Hon. Members, if they need to address each other, to do so in the lobby or through the Chair. At the moment the matter is adjourned as far as I am concerned. I will hear from Members later on this afternoon.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

WEEKLY STATEMENT

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, it is Thursday afternoon and time for the usual question which I would like to put to the Deputy House Leader, Minister of State (Treasury Board) (Mr. Lewis), Minister of just about everything for a Government that is very fortunate to have him! Perhaps he would have the kindness to inform Members of the business of the House for the next few days and give them a priority list of the business he will table in the House in the near future.

[English]

Mr. Doug Lewis (Minister of State and Minister of State (Treasury Board)): Mr. Speaker, in the time remaining today, we will continue debate on Bill C-117, which is the amendment to the Excise Tax Act, and the back-up Bill that is shown on today's Order Paper.

Tomorrow we will continue debate on Bill C-117, and the back-up Bill will be Bill C-121, the divestiture of Eldorado. Next week we will be looking at Bills on which we had hoped to make better progress this week. Due to the delay in dealing with the Bill on Eldorado, we have not been able to do that. That will be Bill C-117, the Excise Tax Act, if we do not finish it tomorrow, and Bill C-121, the divestiture of Eldorado Nuclear, if we do not finish that tomorrow. We will also deal with Bill C-110, the trade tribunal, and Bill C-30, the National Parks Act.

The arrangement of those Bills will depend upon the availability of spokespersons because we are trying to accommodate the opposition Parties.

As soon as we are finished with these Bills, I want to advise the House that we hope to move to the Atlantic Opportunities Agency, Bill C-103, which is at report stage and third reading, to the important changes to the Environmental Protection Act which is at report stage and third reading, and to Bill C-30, the National Parks Act.

If we get those other items out of the way we will be able to move on to these very important Bills that we wish to send to the other place.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, I asked the Minister to give me some information as to what the Government intends to present in terms of its priorities. We are dealing with a very difficult situation. The Minister knows that. We have 46 days of House time left for the Government, and we have a heavy agenda.

As a matter of fact, I did a search of the documents today and found that there are about 40 items on the list of the Government including abortion, the Meech Lake Accord, the trade agreement, tax reform legislation, massive excise tax increases, child care, immigration Bills, tobacco advertising, Atlantic development, western development, lobbying, replacing the War Measures Act, western development, official languages, multiculturalism, conflict of interest, and now as of yesterday the privatization of Air Canada.

This sounds to me like enough work for a whole year. Is the Minister trying to set up the House to be yelling "foul" or "obstruction" in a couple of days because the Government fails to give us a list of priorities today in terms of the items I just mentioned? If the Government does not have a priority list then it will run out of time by June. It had darn well better start thinking about being serious now. I am asking the Minister to please give us a priority list so that we can get organized.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, one has to admire my hon. friend's ability to keep a straight face as he went through that list. I will say this to the House. We are making every effort to priorize not only our agenda but also to fit in with the agenda of spokespersons of the opposition Parties who have other commitments.

My hon. friend and the House Leader for the New Democratic Party know that. I appreciate my hon. friend's concern for our legislative calendar. If he were to review the record, and I see that he has done some review as to what is ahead of us, what he might look at is what is behind us. In three years and two months to December 31, 1987, some 230 Bills were introduced in the House and some 180 were passed. If he were to review the record of the previous Liberal administration he would see that it took four years and two months in which to achieve the same record. I ask the Hon. member to bear with us.

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): You have a more co-operative Opposition.

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order since the Government has indicated its plan for the next number of days. I agree with the Deputy House Leader that in fact the House has been productive considering that 180 Bills have been passed. There is a clear explanation for that success. It is the willingness on all sides of the House to co-operate and to facilitate the business of the House.

I want to say that that element of co-operation is led by the Government. If the Government is prepared to co-operate then the opposition Parties are inclined to co-operate. We are then able to conduct the House of Commons in a business-like way.

What we have seen in the committee examining the western diversification office is not co-operation. I am sending a very clear signal to the Deputy House Leader. If that is the way the Government will lead, allowing that type of skulduggery to take place in terms of procedure in committees, then there will be little inclination on our part to be co-operative.

The Minister knows, as does the Whip for the Official Opposition, that this place works when we co-operate. The type of situation in the committee does not indicate good faith in terms of a willingness to respect views and the concerns of the opposition Members but simply to bulldoze ahead. This place cannot work under those circumstances.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate my hon. friend's comments. We will certainly do our best to co-operate. I appreciate that in view of today's news he is under a bit of stress. I repeat, we will do our best to co-operate.

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask the Minister a question. In doing so I am not asking for a fixed figure, but can he give some indication, whether it be in terms of the number of days or the number of weeks, before the Government will finish the drafting and be prepared to present for first reading the Bill to privatize Air Canada? I ask this question in light of the large amount of interest that there is in the matter and because of my particular responsibilities in my Party.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I do not have a reading on that at this time. However, I will make the inquiries for my hon. friend to see if I can get some sort of reading as to when that Bill might come forward.

Mr. Benjamin: On a further point, Mr. Speaker, I ask the Minister this. From my reading of his response to the Whip of the Official Opposition and to my colleague, our House Leader, is it in the cards that we will be called back to sit during the summer?

Mr. Speaker: I wish to assure Hon. Members on the government side that the Speaker has nothing to say.

Mr. Lewis: My hon. friend will know that we work to a parliamentary calendar and that we came back early last summer because of the emergency refugee legislation which, unfortunately, is still delayed in the Senate by Liberal Senators. Barring any unforeseen emergency I think my hon. friend will have his normal summer—perhaps an abnormal summer—but it will not involve parliamentary proceedings.

Mr. Gauthier: I have one final point, Mr. Speaker. In the interests of good management will the Minister share with us next Thursday what the priorities of the Government are so that Canadians and the House can operate more efficiently and perhaps even get the program of the Government in the works? He has a whole week in which to ask the various Ministers what their priorities are.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, we will certainly take a look at the matter. If my hon. friend will provide me with the travel plans of his official spokespersons—

Mr. Gauthier: There are no travel plans and you know it.

Mr. Lewis: —we could then co-ordinate government business with the time parameters of members of the Official Opposition.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, I gave notice before Easter that there will be no travel by members of this caucus between Easter and the end of June. I have no control over trips that were approved previously. I gave the Minister notice before Easter and I give it to him now. I will not give consent to trips.

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver—Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Government House Leader to help some of us, for example, myself, our Party's critic for communications and culture. Is the film distribution legislation a priority for the Government? If not, will the Government say that? If it is, will it tell us when it will be brought in?

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, there are several items that the Government has on its agenda. We are proceeding to review them and to draft the appropriate legislation. As soon as that legislation is ready to be introduced, I am sure that my hon. friend will be among the first to know.

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed from Tuesday, March 29, consideration of the motion of Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre) that Bill C-117, an Act to amend the Excise Tax Act and the Excise Act, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Finance and Economic Affairs.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): When Bill C-117 was last before the House, the Hon. Member for Montreal-Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart) had the floor. Since he is not in the House, I will recognize the Hon. Member for the Yukon (Ms. McLaughlin) on debate?

Ms. Audrey McLaughlin (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to speak today on the Bill to amend the Excise Tax Act. This is legislation to implement the federal sales tax and excise tax changes that were announced as early as February 18, 1987; February 10, 1988; June 18, 1987; and through the 1987 tax reform paper.

The Bill will deal with the imposition of taxes such as the 10 per cent tax on telecommunications services that was imposed on January 1 of this year. It will deal with an increase in the sales tax on such items as paint and wallpaper, and the acceleration of federal sales and excise tax remittances, that is, changing the time between such remittances which must be given to certain businesses. It also deals with an increase in federal sales tax on beer, spirits, and wine; an increase in specific excise tax and duty rates for tobacco products; an increase in the air transportation tax levy; an increase on the excise tax on gasoline and aviation gasoline by one cent per litre.

This is a summation of the policy of the Government to tax through what is often called a system of regressive taxation, or hidden taxes, in common understanding. The dictionary meaning of "regressive" is moving backwards and reasoning from effect to cause. As I continue, Mr. Speaker, you will see some of the deleterious effects that this Bill will put into effect through law.

Regressive taxation is pernicious in the sense that most consumers do not know that they are paying it. It is included in the price of the product and consumers are not aware that it is an additional tax. Perhaps one exception is at the gasoline pumps where it is outlined for the consumer how much of the gasoline price is sales tax and how much is excise tax. The difficulty with those taxes is that they are indiscriminate and tax all consumers regardless of their income bracket and, therefore, hit both the middle income and the low income earner more severely than a high income earner. For that reason, regressive taxation, both the hidden aspect and the fact that it tends to affect everyone regardless of income, makes it a very serious and onerous tax for many people.

The same reasoning that led the Government to institute this continuing series of sales and excise tax is perhaps similar to the type of reasoning made by the current Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) when he was in opposition in early 1984. At that time the current Minister of Finance when in opposition stated: "We would cut spending. We would not raise taxes. Tax levels in Canada are already too high".

Since 1984 when the Government came into power, some $22 billion has been raised through increased taxes, again mainly hitting the lower income and the middle income person, leaving out the 60,000 corporations that make profits but do not pay taxes, and hitting the average person.

As I outlined at the beginning, this Bill not only raises taxes, but it does so indiscriminately. I wish to talk about a few areas that concern the general public, and in particular those of us who live in northern or rural areas who are hit particularly hard by a couple of those areas.

For the ordinary person, the distinction between excise tax and sales tax is a moot one. We know that excise tax was originally imposed supposedly on luxury items such as beer and wine. For the person who drives his or her car as a tourist, or who requires a car to get to work, gasoline can hardly be considered as a luxury item. Yet gasoline is subject to excise tax.

An interesting example was brought to my attention by one of my constituents. Before the constituent did so, I was not aware of it. This example exemplifies how ludicrous is the combination sales tax and excise tax on one particular industry. With a combination of sales tax and excise tax certain products are taxed twice as opposed to once.

This particular issue concerns the jewellery manufacturing industry. The January, 1988 periodical Jewellery Manufacturing contained an article which outlined the types of concerns faced by that industry. They note that at the present time there is a 22 per cent combined sales and excise tax on jewellery manufacturing. The article raises an interesting point to take into consideration when looking at a tax system that has become very complex. What has happened as a result of this 22 per cent tax, which I think anyone will agree is very high, is that it tends to lead to the possibility of evasion of tax through a loophole system that I am sure only a minority of people might find. The industry maintains that there tends to be a black market in jewellery where jewellery is sold for cash in order that the person can evade paying the tax. A representative of the industry stated:

> A loophole in the tax legislation allows small manufacturers to make up to $50,000 worth of jewellery annually without paying tax.

That seems fair enough. What many of the legitimate producers in the industry have found is that some business people have taken advantage of this by changing the name of their company. Once the $50,000 limit is reached, they change the name of the company and remanufacture to stay under the $50,000 limit.

That is an example of a sales and excise tax at an excessive level which has a negative impact on this particular industry, and also on the confidence that people have in the tax system. In the same manner as the justice system, when people do not have confidence in the fairness and equity of a system, they then begin to look for ways to circumvent it.

We all realize that taxes are essential for schools, services, and many of the things that we take for granted in this country and wish to preserve, such as the medicare system. When the system becomes perverted to the extent that people are looking for more ways to get out of it because they see it as unfair, then we have a serious credibility problem.

There are a couple of other items contained in this Bill that are worthy of note because of the unfair and inequitable burden they place on certain consumers. One of those is the tax on telecommunications and long distance telephone calls. For rural residents, and residents of northern Canada and isolated areas, this means a significant increase in doing business, because many business calls are long distance. It has recently been brought to our attention, again by one of my constituents, that there is a tax on mobile phones.

In rural areas many people must use a mobile phone because there is no alternative. For example, trappers on a trap line for safety reasons need to have a mobile phone. They have to pay tax on what for them is an essential service. If they lived in downtown Ottawa or Toronto, they would not need this type of phone for safety reasons; they would not need this type of phone to call their child's school, to make a dental appointment, or to call the doctor. But in a rural area many of those calls become long distance calls which are taxed.

We all recognize that small business is one of the main employers in the country. In the business community this tax is particularly onerous in more rural areas. For example, in my constituency in the Yukon much of the business and ordering of supplies is done outside the territory for which people must make long distance calls. Of course, the extra tax will be passed on to the consumer. Where else is it going to go? In that sense consumers get nicked twice—once with what they pay on their own bills and again on the additional cost of doing business which in some instances must be passed on to them.

I should like to touch on another area in the few minutes I have, that is, the 1 cent per litre tax on gasoline. Since 1984, when the Government came into power, the tax on gasoline has increased by about 23 cents per gallon. This is in approximately four years. It has been sort of a sneak-up approach—1 cent in one Budget, 1 cent in another, and so on, until cumulatively we now have about 23 cents per gallon. This is a tax on gasoline fuel for both personal and business vehicles. I realize that there are some exemptions for primary producers such as farmers and fishers, but there are not exemptions for many other groups.

In the North we are very reliant on transportation for everything from the importing of goods to, if I may say so, the importing of tourists. For example, I received a communication from Ernie Berken of Whitehorse, Yukon, indicating his concerns about the imposition of an additional gasoline tax and that gasoline costs may discourage both Canadian and U.S. tourists and damage our economy through unreasonably high prices. In the case of the Yukon, tourism constitutes a very large part of our economy.

While it is a system of raising taxes on the one hand, it takes away business on the other hand. Were there a flat tax on business and so on, we would be able to pay our fair share in that way rather than the Government looking to this hidden kind of tax.

Previously I mentioned the telecommunications tax. The finance committee in its fall report recommended that people living in the remote North be subject to a 10 per cent tax on long distance calls only to a maximum of $3, if indeed it was to be imposed at all. While we would like to see no imposition of taxes, it was a reasonable compromise which would have taken into account the additional cost but not necessarily penalize people to as great a degree. Of course that particular recommendation is not reflected in the Bill.

Also earlier I mentioned the effects of this kind of tax on business and subsequently on the consumer. It was interesting to receive this week, from the Canadian Federation of Independent Business, a very interesting survey which it recently did of its 21,000 members across Canada, some 119 from the Yukon. In canvassing its members on what they felt were the most serious problems with which they had to deal as small business people, overwhelmingly the number one concern across the country was the high tax burden, and following that was red tape and paperwork. Those of us who visit with and meet with many small business people, or those of us who have been in business ourselves, can empathize with the question of red tape and paperwork.

As I noted earlier, in the Bill we are discussing there will be an acceleration of tax remittances. This means that some businesses, which formerly remitted their taxes once per month and then twice per month, will almost be on a weekly remittance basis. Anyone will recognize that that is a severe cost, particularly to small businesses, another cost that will be passed on to taxpayers.

Again referring to the study by CFIB because it made some very interesting points, it indicates a consistency across the country which we do not see very often. There is also a consistency across the type of industry which it found identified these problems. For example, on the question of high tax burdens, all provinces and territories identified it as being their number one problem. It varied a bit from province to province, but it was fairly consistent to almost 60 per cent of the 21,000 members. They said it was the most serious problem with which they had to deal.

The second issue of red tape and paperwork has a consistency across Canada, across the provinces and the territories.

I should like to say that this is an interesting survey. Very often when we see surveys by a number of groups that do not include the territories. I am pleased to see that this particular group did so. It is certainly a much better reflection of what is actually happening in the country when the Yukon and the Northwest Territories are included in such surveys. As I mentioned earlier, we have particular problems surrounding transportation, and of course small business has to deal with a much smaller scale than the large provinces. It is very important that these kinds of surveys include us, because they give us a comparative sense of the kinds of issues other parts of the country are dealing with and how they relate to what we must deal with. It is very interesting and reinforces many of the other comments I have made today about the Bill.

Small business is one of our major employers. They find that the exact items about which we are talking are the ones that make it most difficult for them. Often we hear the Government saying that it is for business, that it is for small business, but the Bill certainly does not reflect that. Not at all does the Bill reflect that the Government is for business.

Canada is the only remaining major industrial country with a sales tax at the manufacturing level. We now collect more revenue from taxes on goods and services than most OECD countries. We must look seriously at the concerns of independent, small business people and take them into account if we want to make a truly vital and strong economy.

I have pointed out a number of concerns that I have about the Bill. The telecommunications tax, as I mentioned, is particularly onerous for people in our area. The gasoline tax affects many of us and, in the end, will affect all consumers badly. More important, it is the idea of this tax which is extremely serious. In view of that, I should like to move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap (Mr. Riis):

> That the motion be amended by deleting all the words after the word "that" and substituting the following therefor:
> "Bill C-117, an Act to amend the Excise Tax Act and the Excise Act, be not now read a second time but that it be read a second time this day six months hence.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The House has heard the terms of the motion. Debate is now on the motion.

Mr. Cassidy: Questions and comments, Mr. Speaker?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): No, I am sorry. We must now begin debate on the amendment. Questions and comments are not permitted after the amendment has been put.

• (1550)

Mr. Cassidy: On a point of clarification, Mr. Speaker, what you are saying is that in the case where an amendment is moved, because debate switches over to the amendment, the normal process of questions and comments is therefore sidetracked, is that correct?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Exactly. We are now on debate on the amendment.

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, I was prepared to speak on the main motion, but in putting the amendment, obviously the Hon. Member for Yukon (Ms. McLaughlin) is letting Members know that she is not very much in favour of this Bill. That is basically one of the reasons I would be very happy to speak to the amendment as well. It is a bit of a difficult situation because here we are in the House examining tax changes which have already been put into effect. We are actually being asked to retroactively approve an attempt to gouge the Canadian taxpayers through indirect excise and sales taxes.

Just for the record, if we look at the history of tax measures imposed by this Government, a Government that came to power promising to cut taxes and simplify the process, we can see a litany of excessive taxation in an indirect and direct fashion. We can start off with the Budget back in February 1987 which took effect on July 1 where the Government is actually taxing by 12 per cent snack foods and ice cream. Those of us who come from Ontario will know that there was another government that came to woe when it made a decision to tax the candy in the mouths of babies. That was the Conservative Government of Ontario.

The Conservative Government was in power 43 years without ever having been defeated. One of the things that brought it to defeat was its decision to bring in measures of taxation that the people considered wrong, in particular, taxing things like snack foods and ice cream to the tune of 12 per cent. That tax stuck in the minds of the people of Ontario and when they were looking for change and saw a new and progressive Government that was willing to take the reins, obviously they left the Conservative Party in droves and became supporters of the Liberal Party. This was put in motion when the then Conservative Government actually had the gall to say it was taxing things that were not essential, and then actually decided to tax tampons which it told the House was not an essential item. Those things stuck in the throat of the Ontario taxpayer who ultimately decided to make that Government pay the price.

If we examine the tax measures which have already been implemented and which we are retroactively being asked to approve, we see they include a 12 per cent tax on snack foods, a $4 per ticket increase on air transport, and a sales tax on leaded and unleaded gasoline which will bring in a revenue of $30 million. When the Government decided to equalize, why did it not equalize down? Why does it always equalize up to a higher price for the consumer?

In the package we are now looking at we see a 10 per cent tax on long distance telephone calls. People who live in urban areas where there is a very wide range of telephone services available on a local level might say that long distance telephone calls are a luxury and, therefore, should be taxed. However, when we consider that many Canadians live in rural communities and the only way they can communicate is perhaps by long distance telephone, is it right that these people who already suffer the expenses of living in distant communities which may have higher food prices and higher transportation costs, be also asked to pay a tax to talk to people? Perhaps that might be effective here in the House. If we had a tax on talking, we might cut down a bit on the rhetoric. However, those people living in rural areas of the country should not be taxed to talk. The practical reality of this 10 per cent on long distance telephone calls is that they are being taxed to talk to their friends, neighbours and children.

As a society, I think we can be rather proud of the fact that we have a fairly sophisticated telephone network where we can talk without having our words measured on local measured rates. We can talk without necessarily having to pay exorbitant prices. Of course, we know that this is not the kind of issue which is going to defeat the Government tomorrow. I do not think we are going to see the Government fall on a 10 per cent tax on long distance telephone calls. But every time my cousin, who lives in the Northwest Territories, makes a telephone call, she is going to remember why she is paying 10 per cent more. It is the kind of tax measure that will remain in the minds of the voters long after we in this House have actually passed this Bill and sent it on to the other place.

There are these other rather niggling taxes. The tax on paint and wallpaper has been increased from 8 per cent to 12 per cent. If someone wants to improve their standard of living, someone living in a small apartment in the City of Toronto, paying $500 or $600 a month, if someone wants to put a bit of life in the apartment with new paint and wallpaper, they are going to have to pay more for it because of higher taxes.

And there is the kicker. This kicker is an absolute tax grab on the part of the Government. It is insidious in that it is not even laid out in the form of a straight measure. What it is is confiscatory bookkeeping in the sense that we are calling on all small businesses across the country to speed up the payment of sales and excise taxes. This particular measure got sort of slipped in under the table. It is going to generate for the Government $1.6 billion in new revenues in 1988-89. Will the Government then cut back on its expenditures? Will it then deal with the deficit problem? No, it is simply transferring that same problem to the small business community in the same way it transferred the problem of the transfer payments for education and health services.

It is fine to say that the Government is reducing the deficit but when the deficit is being borne by a small business which may be scratching by its fingernails merely to survive on a month-to-month basis, then the Government is not being fiscally responsible. It is engaged in legal confiscation of moneys that should have been collected when they were due in the way they had been collected in the past.

That single measure looks on paper as if the Government was really getting its act together, that it is really starting to deal with the deficit problem. But think of where that $1.6 billion is coming from. It is coming from the small business people in my community and, like the Hon. Member for Yukon, I have received a number of personal letters and issue orientation letters from the Canadian Federation for Independent Business, and from small businesses. They say: "Hey, we are being hit hard enough as it is. With this new measure there will actually be instances where we are supposed to pay the Government in advance for money we have not collected".

The receivables of a small business are not always received. It may have the money on paper but if the receivables have not been collected, then the payables will not be able to go out in a way the Government would like. That of all the tax measures we are required to look at today is probably the single most insidious and confiscatory tax measure being imposed by the Conservative Government.

This Government actually rose to power claiming that it wanted to free the business community from the shackles of government control. Freeing the business community from the shackles of government control actually means that the business community will have to send double the number of payments that it did under the previous program and it will have to send them earlier. This will cost the business community forgone revenues of $1.6 billion. It is incredible that this is buried here among tax measures dealing with wallpaper and other items.

We also saw, effective February, an increase in the tax on motor fuels by one cent per litre. We remember the old 18-cent-per-gallon debacle that actually saw the fall of the former Government. Looking at the record of this Government since it came into power makes 18 cents per gallon look pretty darn good. We would like to go back to the old Crosbie days of 18 cents per gallon, and I am sure there are some on the other side who might like to join us. To say that after the four-year record of this Government in the area of motor fuel taxes, an 18-cents-per-gallon increase looks desirable is to really say something.

We have before us a series of tax measures which have already been implemented, and we are being asked to vote on them here in the House today. We must also keep in mind that we cannot consider these tax measures in isolation. Because there has been a White Paper, a Green Paper and a number of other papers on the issue of tax reform, we understand that after we pass these measures, the Government will be waiting with a second kick at the can in the way of tax reform. For example, it plans to levy a generalized over-all consumption tax. We will see more and more erosion of the purchasing power of poor and middle-income Canadians. There will be more and more cuts into the standard of living of those who are already the poorest of the poor.

What has the Government's response been? When the Government introduced original changes to the sales tax legislation, it said, and of course we took it at its word, that it would offer a sales tax rebate to poor Canadians in order to ensure that they were not losing because of what was essentially a regressive tax, and sales taxes are clearly regressive because they hit out at the poorest of the poor. In fact, that particular credit amounts to only $70 per adult and $35 per child. This particular tax measure does not apply equally to all poor families, though. Using the Senate subcommittee on poverty's standard as the benchmark, we should be offering a sales tax rebate to all families with incomes of below about $23,000 per year.

more or less, depending on the circumstances.

However, it seems families with an income of more than $16,000 are less entitled to this tax credit which now is only $70 per adult and $35 per child. This is ridiculous. If we accept the fact that sales tax is a regressive tax that hits the poorest of the poor, then why impose new sales taxes which, in the very words of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), are regressive taxes and kill jobs. He said so himself: "It is a job killer". This is not a Liberal quote.

So if we accept that principle, then at least when the Government introduces all kinds of taxes the way it is doing now, including a tax on kids' ice cream, a 10 per cent tax on all long-distance calls which will hit the poorest of the poor living in remote areas, in Northern Quebec and Northern Ontario and other parts of Canada outside our urban centres—all these taxes should at least be offset by a tax credit for those on low incomes. To say that $70 is enough for a family with an annual income of $16,000 is absolutely outrageous. I think that if the Government really wants to go ahead with this legislation and the sales taxes and excise taxes on all sort of things including alcohol, tobacco, all the taxes we have here, and even the tax on gas—the 18 cents a gallon introduced by the former Minister of Finance (Mr. Crosbie) looks good now, because since this Government came to power, it has increased taxes by a total of 23 or 24 cents a gallon, and now they want to add another cent per litre as of April 1, "La journée du poisson". Is that correct, Mr. Speaker? In English we say April Fool's Day.

An Hon. Member: Le poisson d'avril!

Ms. Copps: For Canadians, "Le poisson d'avril" was that they would have to pay one cent more in addition to 23 or 24 cents per gallon they were paying since this Government came to power, a Government that promised Canadians it would not increase taxes.

It is clear this Government is not for the working man. This is a Government that does not want to give those who are less well off enough to help them raise their children. Now really, Mr. Speaker, $35 per child per year in exchange for the thousands of dollars of sales tax the Government is bringing in now—this is ridiculous!

That is why we cannot support this Bill and why we must support the amendment which gives the Government a chance . . . It will give them another six months to reflect on what they want to do, and we hope that six months from now they won't be around any longer, because they will be beaten in the next election, which may be in October.

So if we wait, if we support this motion for a six-month hoist, it would provide a flicker of hope for the poorest of the poor in this country. We will have a chance to get rid of these taxes which are inequitable, and this includes the way small businesses will be taxed, which will have an impact on the tax system, but will not reduce the deficit.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions and comments.

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke-Centre) that Bill C-117, an Act to amend the Excise Tax Act and the Excise Act, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Finance and Economic Affairs, and the amendment of Ms. McLaughlin (p. 14479).

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate your use of French, and I hope your colleagues and compatriots in Alberta and Saskatchewan will in future do likewise.

[English]

I would like to speak to Bill C-117, second reading of which we have proposed be deferred by six months. That, of course, is a means within Parliament to indicate that we are dissatisfied with a particular piece of legislation and with the way the Government is proceeding.

What does Bill C-117 do? The main thing it does is perpetuate the federal sales tax. It puts a number of modest patches on it. It increases the gasoline tax by one cent, and it imposes new taxes, particularly the 10 per cent telecommunications tax.

Had I been able to raise the issue with my colleague from the Yukon, I would have been able to get more precise information from her about the impact of the Government's refusal to listen to the finance committee which recommended that there should be a cap on any telecommunications tax. This cap would take into consideration the problems of people in Canada's North whose telecommunications are almost all long distance and for whom, therefore, a limitless telecommunications tax represents a very major burden indeed. Northerners can have long distance bills of up to $100 or more a month because they have no other means of communicating. The committee suggested, unanimously I believe, that there should be a cap of $3 a month on this particular tax, bearing in mind in particular the problems of residential subscribers and people living in Canada's North. That was ignored.

The basic question in looking at any tax proposal by a Conservative Government in power since 1984, and which mercifully I think will not be in power after the next election, is: Has the Government been fair? Has it been open and honest in the way it dealt with the tax system and average Canadians? The answer to those questions is no.

For example, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) said that 850,000 people are being taken off the tax rolls. What he forgot to say was that people going off the tax rolls were those people who were paying a very small amount of tax in the beginning, and that since 1984 something over 850,000 Canadians have been added to the tax rolls. In other words, the Government had been adding people to the tax rolls because of the deindexation which has been in force for several years, and it is now turning around and saying it went a little bit too far and is going to take them off the rolls. It is duplicitous to tell average Canadians they are benefiting because some people are going off the tax rolls when it is those same people who in many cases were put on the tax rolls by the Government.

As well, the Government says the average family will get a tax cut of $200 or $250 per annum under tax reform which went into force on January 1 this year. That, too, is not being particularly honest or straight with Canadians. What the Government forgets to mention is that since the 1984 election the Conservatives have raised taxes on the average Canadian by something like $1,300 per annum. That is a lot. Over four years we are talking about $5,000 in additional taxes on the average Canadian family under a Conservative Government.

I talk about the average Canadian family. There, too, the Government is less than fully open and not very fair when it talks about what it has been doing. If you look at the over-all impact of the Government's changes in taxation you will find one group which actually benefits. I was quite surprised by something that happened when I was speaking to the Canadian Tax Foundation in Montreal the other day. They were appreciative even though they were listening to a democratic socialist. It was a very interesting experience to speak to them. However, at one point I raised my voice in a certain amount of anger and concern over the fact that the average taxpayer earning over $100,000, or most of them, was going to get a tax cut of some $4,365. I suggested there was grounds for indignation over that. Much to my surprise, the room erupted in a round of applause for Michael Wilson and the tax cut for the tax accountants and tax lawyers and people like that making over $100,000 a year. They were applauding where their interests lay.

As much as I have respect for the professional capacity of people in the tax field and look forward to working with them from the government side rather than the opposition side some time in the near future, I have to say that they are not by any stretch of the imagination average Canadians. They are well-paid Canadians. They are well paid for their capacity to, among other things, steer corporations and wealthy individuals away from having to pay as much tax as was originally intended in this Parliament.

Another example of where the Government is not being particularly fair in the information it has given to average Canadians relates to the question of the Canada-U.S. trade agreement. We have been told about all the wonderful things that are going to happen there in job creation and those kinds of things. However, we are not told whether or not Canadians are going to have to pay anything for that deal. Yet in the Budget that came down on February 11 the Government brought in an increase in the gasoline sales tax which, lo and behold, over the next two years will be just about equivalent to the reduction in revenues anticipated by the Government because of the decline in tariffs in the first year or so of the Canada-U.S. trade agreement. That decline is in the order of some $515 million over the first two years; $55 million in 1988-89, and $460 million in 1989-90.

We are assured from time to time by government Members that there is no such thing as a free lunch. As a matter of fact, this is a real loss of revenue because we will not be getting revenue from tariffs on those items coming here from the U.S. There may also be losses from tariff revenues on imports from other countries if this trade agreement concentrates trade between our two countries at the expense of trade with the rest of the world.

The interesting thing is that in the first year the new one cent a litre gasoline tax which, I remind my colleagues, is already in force despite the fact it has not been enacted, will bring in $275 million. In the second year it will bring in $300 million. That adds up to a total of $575 million. That means that before Congress has made up its mind on the trade agreement, before this House has even seen the Government's huge Bill that it is allegedly in the course of preparing on the agreement, we are already paying at the gas pumps an additional one cent a litre in order to offset the anticipated loss of revenue that the Government will experience over the next couple of years.

I had the opportunity this week to meet with Judith Maxwell, chairperson of the Economic Council of Canada. I asked her specifically, because the Council just came forward with a study on the trade agreement, what is going to be the impact on revenue. How do you compute this? She said that they assumed that the $2.2 billion in tariff revenue which Canada gets every year on its trade with the U.S. would be translated into an increase in personal income tax. What that means is that the average taxpayer paying perhaps $300 or $400 a year in tax will pay $150 or $200 a year more one way or the other in order to pay for the Canada-U.S. trade agreement. If the Government was open with Canadians, it would be telling them that in all of the literature it distributed through supermarkets and other ways to the Canadian public about the Canada-U.S. free trade agreement. However, I did not see any mention of that. I have seen no mention of the fact that average Canadians are going to have to pay a substantial increase in income taxes.

When you think of it, it is very interesting to note that this increase in income taxes will be more or less equivalent to the reduction in tax which the average family will allegedly get under the tax reform package we will be debating in this House in a very short time.

I want to come back to the question of the sales tax in this sense. We had stage one of tax reform, which is now coming back to the Standing Committee on Finance and Economic Affairs shortly. Then we had stage two, which is sales tax and which the committee has been considering for some time but on which the Government appears to have pulled in its horns. It has decided not to act but to do another patch through the manufacturers sales tax, which is not contained in this legislation. Then we have stage one and a half which is here right now. That is a heck of a way to run a tax system or a fiscal railroad.

I participated with the committee when it took the opportunity to spend some time in New Zealand in February looking at what that country had done with the tax system under a democratic socialist Labour Government. We were looking at the comprehensive goods and services tax, the GST as they call it, which that country has put in. It was extremely interesting to compare the approach taken by that Government with respect to tax fairness with the approach taken by this Government to tax fairness and a comprehensive tax base.

In Canada we have had increases in taxes of $1,300 on the average family over the last few years under the Conservatives. There was a 1 per cent increase in sales tax in 1984, another 1 per cent increase in 1985 or 1986, and there is now an increase in the gasoline tax. In fact, it is interesting to note the extent to which Canada's current inflation problem is not a result of over-heating in the economy but a result of over-zealous tax gathering by the Finance Minister and his colleagues over the course of this period of three or four years.

What have we had to compensate average families? Well, for the first three years of Conservative Government we had next to nothing. In fact, the major move was to withdraw the tax reduction for average families, which was a feature of the fiscal system prior to 1984. The Government has brought in an increase in the sales tax credit and asked us to say "Ain't that wonderful". The increase is from $50 to $70 for an adult and from $25 to $35 for a child. Sure, I can say "Ain't that wonderful". A 40 per cent increase is magnificent, except nothing on top of nothing still winds up being nothing. That is precisely the situation we have right now.

I have some estimates here. A family with an income of $16,000 a year—which is poverty income for a family with children in many of our major cities today—at the current federal sales tax rate is paying $500 or $600 per annum in federal sales tax on different goods and services which they purchase. It is hard to know the exact amount but the estimate is in the range of $500 to $700.

What is that family going to get back in terms of these tax credits? It will get $70 for the breadwinner, $70 for the spouse if there is a spouse, and $35 for one or two kids. That is a maximum of a couple of hundred dollars. Therefore, the net effect on that family is that instead of paying $600 worth of tax, they will pay $400 worth of tax because they will qualify for all of the sales tax credit.

We know that that sales tax credit is sharply declining. It disappears very quickly. It amounts, as a matter of fact, to a very severe incremental rate of tax to people on modest incomes as they go from inside the sales tax credit zone to outside the sales tax credit zone. People with very substantial incomes, on the other hand, wind up paying just a little higher rate of sales tax than the family on a poverty income. This is the patchwork system we have.

In New Zealand the Government wanted a comprehensive goods and services tax. At that point it decided to make it apply to everything in the country, something with which I disagree. It included food, and my Party and I make it clear that we disagree profoundly with that. However, there is no question that it is quite possible to exempt one particular area as we propose now, if we ever get to stage two.

At the same time as the Government of New Zealand was bringing in the goods and services tax, it knew that the effect would be somewhat inflationary because it represented a substantial increase in revenue. It took several steps to offset that and to protect people from an undue effect of this new tax. It increased the social assistance rates under the system of social benefits. It changed the minimum wage and changed the child allowance very substantially. I do not mean by only a dollar or two the way this Government might have done, but by something like $35 a week in New Zealand dollars which meant that there was a substantial increase in what the average family would receive for their kids compared to the levels of family allowance in this country which are unfortunately too low.

The Government of New Zealand took all of those measures together and at the same time reduced the rate of personal tax for people on middle incomes. It moved at all of those levels at once. We were surprised and very interested in the fact that far from being opposed to that particular tax, there was a substantial amount of support for it because people felt that the Labour Government of New Zealand had acted fairly in the way in which it introduced that tax.

On top of that, it put a great deal of energy and effort into explaining how that tax worked, in showing how it was fair, and in showing how it overcame some of the weaknesses in the existing manufacturers' sales tax which we have in Canada or equivalent excise taxes which were applied on an ad hoc basis to different commodities and goods which had previously existed in New Zealand.

It reached the point that the chairman of our committee, the Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn), was stating publicly in the press in New Zealand—and I am sorry that he has not yet said it here in Canada—how he wished that Canada could have had Roger Douglas as Minister of Finance. A man like Mr. Douglas, he said, would make a fine Minister of Finance in any country in the developed world. I presume that he meant Canada as well. I am not sure if that was a vote of non-confidence in our present Minister of Finance, but it certainly made me think about the fact that we have a Minister of Finance who looks as though he is about to step into a telephone booth to strip off his clothes and become Superman, only he can never get the door of the telephone booth open.

It was very interesting to go to another country and see what happens when you have a dynamic, a radical, and a somewhat progressive Minister of Finance. I did not agree with all of his measures. I was a bit surprised by some of them. Things seemed a little bit upside down down under from time to time in certain measures implemented by our colleagues in Socialists International in the Labour Party in New Zealand. Nonetheless, there was a dynamic and coherent idea of what should be done and the ability and political will to put it into force.

We are patching together this system despite the fact that the current system has enormous weaknesses. As my colleague from Regina pointed out in debating this Bill just a few days ago, the burden is different on different commodities, the burden is different with the manufactures' sales tax which we have right now depending on what kind of goods and trade channels it passes through. We tax production goods and, therefore, discriminate against Canada's exports, not only to the United States but to every country in the world. We also discriminate in favour of imports because importers get a better deal. While that may change a little bit with the patching job which is being proposed to the committee right now, that is nonetheless a problem which remains. In addition, the system is unreasonably complex, particularly for smaller manufacturers and small businesses.

This tax is making Canadians pay for the free trade arrangement. The Government could in fact have applied the same political will, the same amount of energy, to putting into place a stage-two revision which would have been radical and important while at the same time bringing in measures to alleviate the impact on Canadians who are on modest or low incomes, not $50, not $70, but a substantial tax credit to persons who are on very low incomes. Unfortunately, that was not done. I regret that because I think the Government could have moved in that particular area.

I want to conclude by making a comment about comments made by Mr. Robert Campeau this week. I tried to raise this in Question Period but was unable to because of other issues which were also important. Mr. Campeau attacked the federal Government for spending too much on social programs and specifically argued that Canada's medicare program is a mistake.

I wanted to raise this because we had established that the Campeau Corporation has not paid a nickel of federal income tax in Canada since 1980 on some $300 million of Canadian profits. There is something wrong when a free-loader like Mr. Campeau turns around and criticizes the Canadian Government for having social programs that are excessive.

If he wants to criticize the Government, he and his corporation should be contributing to the cost of taxpayers. I think it is time we had a minimum corporate tax of 20 per cent in this country so that people like Robert Campeau make a real contribution to the country rather than constantly bringing it down.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I simply want to bring to the attention of the Hon. Member that I gave him an extra three minutes.

Mr. Waddell: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate that you gave the Hon. Member extra time. I assume that can be taken off questions and comments.

I do not know whether the Member had an opportunity to finish with respect to Robert Campeau. Personally, I was shocked when I heard this. I am quite concerned because Mr. Campeau is a big Liberal fish who got a lot of patronage and money. As a matter of fact, in Ottawa they do not call the place across the way Place du Portage but Place de Patronage. That is because he received so much money.

He is a great friend of Trudeau and was at the Trudeau dinner the other night. Did this fellow and his corporation that made all that money not pay any taxes to the Canadian treasury? He turns around and tries to criticize our Medicare plan in Canada. That has to be gross hypocrisy.

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, as a matter of fact it is a classic example of someone biting the hand that feeds them.

I am a bit surprised. I thought that perhaps Mr. Campeau had become a Conservative. He has become a big promoter of the trade deal, yet as my friend from Vancouver—Kingsway (Mr. Waddell) points out, he attended the dinner for Pierre Trudeau. I believe Mr. Trudeau is still a Liberal but one can never tell these days. The Liberal Party may have to go into bankruptcy shortly, but maybe Campeau will come along.

I read in the paper today that the former president of the Liberal Party suggests that Canada's banks should rally around the Liberal Party and lend the money rather than leave the bad debt in the hands of the Royal Bank and Banque Nationale du Canada. Getting back to Mr. Campeau—

Now that Mr. Campeau has become an important businessman in the United States, he advises the Canadian Government to get rid of medicare. I find it interesting that while the average taxpayer in Canada is starting to pay for free trade through this one cent per litre increase, we hear Mr. Campeau, who is big business in Canada and the United States . . .

An Hon. Member: A big Liberal fish!

Mr. Cassidy: . . . advising Canada to get rid of medicare because with free trade, there will be pressure to eliminate social programs. The Government keeps insisting, Mr. Speaker, that social programs will be protected under a free trade agreement. Now, however, even before the Free Trade Agreement is ratified, big business interests which support the Conservative Government on free trade have started a campaign to get rid of social programs.

Mr. Speaker, this shows the hypocrisy of both the Conservative Party and the Liberal Party and its big backers.

Ms. Copps: Mr. Speaker, I would like to comment, because I heard the Hon. Member, who happens to be his Party's finance critic, say that Mr. Campeau was very well known in Canadian and American business circles, and I think he is . . .

[English]

He is in the process of quoting him. On the other hand, he is calling him a big Liberal fish. Which is it? Is he a very well known respected Canadian businessman or a big Liberal fish?

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, I am delighted that my colleague from Hamilton has raised this point. It is clear from these anguished cries of financial pain that we are hearing from the Liberal Party every day on television and in the press that the big Liberal fish have deserted them and are no longer contributing to her Party. Perhaps she should organize a game of tombola in her constituency by which the Liberal deficit could be overcome.

If the Liberals want to form a government and eliminate the deficit of Canada, I think they should begin by demonstrating they can eliminate their deficit and run their Party in the prudent and effective way we New Democrats have run our Party for so many years.

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, I have been listening with some degree of amusement to the remarks of the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy), having just returned last evening from a couple of days of campaigning in the shopping malls and on the streets of Manitoba where his Party is now generally known in the parlance as in political free-fall. The reason is that the people in Manitoba resent the imposition of a whole new regime of taxation from the NDP Government in Manitoba.

The people want to know why a Party that once enjoyed the support of a large base of working class, middle income ordinary Manitobans are now deserting them by the thousands and transferring their allegiance to the Liberal Party of Manitoba. The reason is because of the severe and heavy taxation that was imposed by that regime.

The Member for Ottawa Centre, in only a fashion of which he is capable, is demonstrating the purity of principle when his colleagues in Manitoba are now suffering the wages of sin and being visited with the ultimate sanction of a democracy, which is to be thrown in the ashcan of political has-beens.

When Manitobans fill out their tax forms they see the additional surtax, the additional payroll tax, the additional tax burden and the additional premiums. That is the reason why the poor, unfortunate and in many cases good representatives of the New Democratic Party are facing their problems.

I suggest to the Hon. Member that while he is in the throes of cackling about the well financed union funds that flow into his Party, he may want to relate that to the other statistic which appeared yesterday. It is the latest opinion polls which show that despite all the difficulties he ascribes to our Party, we seem to be gaining favour while his Party is losing theirs.

It will be interesting to note from the Member for Ottawa Centre how he explains that rationale. Is it because they are too well funded by the unions? Is it because they are too much dominated by one group or because their finances are so carefully managed by their political masters at headquarters that they may not have to depend upon the ordinary gifts and contributions of individual Canadians?

Mr. Waddell: Like Robert Campeau.

Mr. Axworthy: Mr. Speaker, I just heard from the Member for Vancouver—Kingsway (Mr. Waddell) who has admitted in his earlier remarks that Mr. Campeau deserted the Liberal Party.

Mr. Waddell: I am not saying he deserted the Liberal Party.

Mr. Axworthy: In his comments he suggested that one of the problems of our finances is because the big corporate giants are leaving us due to our stand against the iniquitous trade proposal of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney). It shows that when it comes to our Party and fighting for a principle of an issue, we do not care who finances us. I am not so sure I would say the same thing about the New Democratic Party if they had to fight an issue that the CLC does not favour.

Mr. Waddell: Was he not at the dinner?

Mr. Axworthy: I do not follow Mr. Campeau's dinner itinerary. He means nothing to me. The fact of the matter is, I am talking about the Liberal caucus, the Liberal Party as it presently exists. If Mr. Campeau goes to a dinner, that is his business.

Mr. Parry: That is all it does, exist.

Mr. Axworthy: It exists No. 1 in the polls. I say to the Member for Kenora—Rainy River (Mr. Parry) that it exists No. 1 in the polls and you are No. 3.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I know that all of this refers to the Bill, but I would ask Hon. Members to delay their questions and comments until the Hon. Member finishes his debate.

• (1640)

Mr. Axworthy: Mr. Speaker, I was only taking my cue from the presentation given by the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre who, in his fashion, forgot a few pertinent facts. I thought that the House would probably want to understand those facts and to have them on the record as to how things are financed and how that relates back to finances. I am sure that the Hon. Member is not enjoying my exposition. Other Members of the House certainly are because they are always prepared to be educated.

With respect to the Bill, I think that the Manitoba case is a good example as to why this Bill should be opposed. There is an underlying undercurrent of tax revolt going on in the country. People are getting fed up with the Government in Ottawa, as they were with the Government in Manitoba, imposing personal taxes on them, putting taxes on their snack foods, watching television and driving a car. Those are not luxuries. We are not talking about something that is a frivolous exercise of activity. We are talking about something that is part and parcel of everyday life.

Who is suffering most as a result of these excise taxes? If we consider one group in the community, and there are many, who suffers the most? It is older people who rely on their telephones and their television. There are probably many Members in the House who have a high percentage of senior citizens in their ridings, as I do. If one visits the apartment blocks in which they live, one will see that many of them are confined during winter months. One of the joys they are able to exercise is the picking up of the telephone to call a relative, a son or a daughter in another city. Television is also very important in terms of a means of communication.

What do we do? We put a tax on those items. In fact, the imposition of taxes on consumption has been the highest level rise of any form of taxation in the last three years when compared to corporate taxes or income taxes. We have placed more taxes, regressive taxes, on people's ordinary necessary consumption than on any other level.

I believe that the increase has been over 70 per cent since the Government came to power. Let us consider what those taxes have been on. They have been on gasoline, snack foods, cablevision and paint. That is not tax reform. That is not a regime of receiving revenue that applies taxes according to the ability to pay or according to lifestyle.

If there is any clear indication of the distortion and bias in our tax system, it is this very Bill we are debating today. It shows how a burden is being put on those least able to bear it. Rather than trying to achieve a system of fairness and equity that would balance the need of revenue on the ability to pay, we seem to be reversing that formula. We seem to be working at it in opposite and contradictory style.

I hope that members of the Government will understand why there are such concerns. When this excise sales tax is laid on top of those being imposed at the provincial level, and increasingly at the municipal level, the levies against those least able to pay become heavier and heavier while many of those who can afford it are being let go. We are reducing the rate for them. An excise tax on cablevision may not count to the family or individual earning $50,000, $60,000 or $100,000 per year. It certainly counts for a senior citizen whose disposable income may be $20 or $30 per month. I think you know that, Mr. Speaker. You have people like that in your own riding. I do not understand this.

If there is to be true tax reform, then one may want to look clearly at this Bill as being the wrong example to follow. As I read it, the Government intends not just to follow it but to expand upon it, to broaden it, to enhance it and to enlarge it so that we will have a much broader base of consumption tax. Then, the Government will try to sell it by saying; "We will offer a tax credit to relieve some of the burden of those on lower incomes."

One need only look at the level which applies here. The threshold is $16,000. That is below the poverty line for a family in our cities across Canada. At least we put the threshold at $22,000 on the child care issue. That is the problem with using the tax credit method. It is that it becomes subject to this type of niggardly approach. The Ministers of Finance, if they are short a little revenue, can always bring the threshold down and say; "We are helping those on lowest incomes". They are not helping the working poor, or even working people themselves. All they are doing is restricting their access to some very basic necessities.

I think one of the most pernicious parts of this Bill is the one that incorporates the tax change that was brought about in this spring's Budget. There is a very important story to be told. We have been told that the trade agreement, this great economic bonanza, is nothing but good—jobs, growth and productivity. We know that that has been disputed. The report of the Department of Finance and the Economic Council of Canada mentioned less than one half of one per cent growth per year, perhaps 20,000 jobs per year, which is marginal in terms of the over-all macro-economic scale. What we are now finding out is that we will have to pay increased taxes because of that proposed trade agreement. Not only does it not deliver the bonanza that has been promised, but we will have to pay more. If one looks at the calculations of the Council and the Conference Board, we are talking about an additional $2 billion annual taxes when the trade agreement, if it ever comes into effect, would finally be fully implemented.

How does the Government of Canada intend to make up the $2 billion? Here is evidence case number one. It will increase the tax on gasoline by one cent per litre. That is a beginning. It will raise $450 million. It is not coincidental that in the financial papers accompanying the Budget there were two lines which stated: "revenue loss because of trade agreement 400 some odd million dollars", while the other states revenue gained from additional gasoline tax 400 some odd million dollars. It is a clear replacement tax for the revenue that we are losing. It is being placed on people who drive cars. We know that in a country such as Canada with our climate and geography that driving a car is not a luxury, it is a necessity. The tax falls heaviest on those who can least afford to drive.

I come back to my friends in the NDP. Why are they being defeated? Because they raised the Autopac premiums. They put another tax on that particular service. The people who really got mad are those who are driving a 1972 Chev or something and all of a sudden their Autopac premiums go up 300 per cent.

Mr. Waddell: Like mine.

Mr. Axworthy: The Hon. Member would be mad too, I say to the Hon. Member for Vancouver—Kingsway. He would even vote against the NDP in Manitoba if he lived there.

The fact of the matter is that this is a tax that falls upon those least able to bear the burden. If we have to make up or replace not $400 million but $2 billion, and we see how the Government approaches the problem, it will not provide extra taxation for all those big corporations which are out humping for free trade, but put it on the people who do not want it. It is putting a tax on those who are carrying the burden. It is a free ride for the free trade advocates, but a very heavy load for those working people who cannot afford it. That is why this Bill has a pernicious element to it.

Let us say for the sake of argument that the full $2 billion deficit will have to be made up by increasing the tax on gasoline. That will mean an extra couple of dollars to fill up a tank. If it does not come from there, where will it come from? From the television set? From the telephone system? That is the real problem, and that is one of the stories that Canadians better understand: there is no free ride with free trade. Canadians will have to pay through the nose, or in this case pay through their telephone set or at the gasoline pump.

That is why this is a very important Bill. It clearly demonstrates the type of financial and economic shenanigans that we are getting ourselves into because of this trade agreement, and the type of losses that we will suffer that will have to be made up through heavier burdens of taxation, probably on consumers, because that appears to be the favourite choice and mode of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson). The Minister of Finance may not be around long enough to carry through on that threat. I am sure that he will not be. What we are debating today is one of the reasons why he will not have the chance to carry through on this particular formula that he has introduced in this Bill.

What we see today in Manitoba, the disillusionment and tax revolt that is going on by ordinary people who say that they have had enough, is happening right across the country. They are not fooled by the tax reform fable that has been spilled out in the country. I know for sure that Canadians see through that in spades.

Mr. Heap: That's right in Ontario.

Mr. Axworthy: It may be. I think that there is a real lesson here for all Governments, and I do not care of what stripe. The Hon. Member's colleagues in Manitoba are finding out in the most disastrous manner.

Mr. McCurdy: Yes. They are trying to raise taxes with a $600 million surplus.

Mr. Axworthy: Well, they did. I am sorry, the Hon. Member does not know what he is talking about. They did raise taxes.

Many ordinary people are saying that they have had enough. If we are going to fire this Government, we had better find a more equitable way of doing it than putting a tax on the basic necessities that Canadians consume.

That is why this Bill is an awful lot more important for Canadians than just the revenue it raises. It stands as a clear lesson and example of what is wrong with our tax system under the present regime, and it provides them with a very clear symbol as to why they are mad, indignant, and turning against so many of the proposals that too many Governments are attempting to get away with.

Mr. Waddell: I do not wish to get into the Manitoba election, since I am not from Manitoba, but the Hon. Member from Manitoba did mention that. I want to point out to him that I am from British Columbia and last week I renewed my auto insurance. Previously it cost me approximately $400 and last week it cost me $561. Auto insurance is increasing all over the country. No one likes that, but it is a fact. I know the Hon. Member likes to put it into Manitoba and pretend that it is only Manitobans who are suffering this, but I wish to tell the Hon. Member out of personal experience that I had to pay last week.

I also would like to note that in B.C. the conservative Government has cut our social services terribly, and taxed us too. The Pawley Government never cut back social services, as far as I could see as someone from outside of Manitoba. That province had pretty good employment with low unemployment rates through a difficult period. It was about half the rate of British Columbia. I also see a Premier who was pretty honest and took full responsibility for the defeat of his Government. From an outsider's point of view, Manitoba does not look all that bad.

I am confused about the Campeau matter. The Hon. Member said that Campeau was going to a dinner of Polish waiters—not polls—Polish. The Hon. Member was also talking about Gallup polls, and so on. I understand that was the dinner for Mr. Trudeau. I wish to ask the Hon. Member if he went to that dinner along with Mr. Campeau, and whether he agrees with the very serious remarks made by Mr. Campeau which seem to be in contradiction of his speech. I understand that Mr. Campeau, a very prominent Liberal, received many favours and many contracts from the Government of which the Hon. Member who just spoke was a member. This man is against medicare. Is that the position of the Liberal Party that the Hon. Member from Winnipeg represents?

Mr. Axworthy: First, I do not know what dinner Mr. Campeau attended. I was only using it as a turn of phrase that he went to a dinner for Mr. Trudeau. He may have. I was not there. I do not know if Mr. Campeau was there. I do not follow his social agenda, and I do not know which dinner he attended.

I can tell the Hon. Member, without any reservation, that I do not like what Mr. Campeau said either. I think that it was despicable. The statements made by Mr. Campeau about the blessings of another system after he has enjoyed this one is one that many of us regret, and I share with the Hon. Member a sense of indignation for the ingratitude of a man like Mr. Campeau who was given opportunity in this country.

I may have a different philosophy from the Hon. Member. I do not in any way bring down someone because they have made good. Someone who has succeeded and done well, built up a business or an enterprise deserves some credit and respect. But at the same time I think that they should also acknowledge that along the way they were able to enjoy many benefits in this country. I agree with the Hon. Member that Mr. Campeau ignoring his recent history brings shame to him and deserves the calumny that has been expressed by so many in this country, and I have no argument with that.

While we are not here to debate provincial politics, I wish to say to the Hon. Member that I do sympathize with the burden he bears of being a citizen of a province governed by the present Premier. As I have often stated, I think he took his experience in Fantasyland too seriously and is now trying to apply it to Government.

I was struck by the Hon. Member's description of the increase in his auto premiums. If I am not mistaken, he said that it went from $400 to $561. My auto insurance went from $400 to $700. Perhaps it is just that extra bit of difference in Manitoba that is the reason why Mr. Pawley is now going to lose his seat and every other seat in the province along the way.

I am not trying to make the case, and I am sure the Hon. Member knows, that Governments do not have a right to tax or to provide services. I strongly believe in that. But I am saying that there are serious problems in this country that the burden of taxation is falling on the wrong people, and that too many Governments, federal and provincial, are trying to put it at the consumption level and ignore other areas which are far more effective.

Clearly, the tax revolt going on in Manitoba is an indication. I would only ask the Hon. Member to consider the following. I also admire Mr. Pawley as being an honest man, but I do not think that his Government became very good in its second term. I think it lost its way in the second term. It started cutting back on social services, education, and other programs of that type. That became a problem for that Government, and as a result it lost the support of people who are prepared to be taxed if they receive value for it. But they do not wish to be taxed to blow a bunch of money on a telephone enterprise in Saudi Arabia, which is what the Manitoba Governments was doing, or blow money on mega projects rather than investing it in higher education or training.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): It being 5 p.m. the House will now proceed to the consideration of Private Members' Business as listed on today's Order Paper.

Mr. Alex Kindy (Calgary East) moved:

WHEREAS the Constitution Act, 1867 provides in section 17 that there shall be one Parliament for Canada, consisting of the Queen, an Upper House styled the Senate, and the House of Commons;

AND WHEREAS it is expedient that the electors of Canada be more directly involved in the legislative process;

AND WHEREAS an initiative and referendum process is an appropriate mechanism for the determination of questions of national interest;

AND WHEREAS the Parliament of Canada should be bound to enact any measures necessary to implement decisions of the electors of Canada on questions put to them by referendum;

NOW, THEREFORE, the House of Commons resolves that an amendment to the Constitution of Canada be authorized to be made by proclamation issued by Her Excellency the Governor General under the Great Seal of Canada in accordance with the schedule hereto.

SCHEDULE

1. The Constitution Act, 1867 is amended by inserting, immediately after section 19 thereof, the following section:

"20. (1) A referendum on any matter coming within the classes of subjects enumerated in section 91 may be initiated by proclamation of the Government of Canada or by petition of not less than twenty per cent of the electors of Canada addressed to the House of Commons.

(2) A decision of the electors of Canada in a referendum held pursuant to this section is binding on the Government and the Parliament of Canada and shall, within a reasonable time after the holding of the referendum, be implemented by them in a manner consistent with their powers and authority.

(3) No referendum shall be held on a question that is substantially the same as a question on which a referendum has been held within the previous four years.

(4) The Parliament of Canada shall, before the expiration of the first parliament following the coming into force of this section, enact a measure consistent with it to provide a reasonable procedure for the orderly administration of referendums to be held pursuant to this section."

2. This amendment may be cited as the Constitution Amendment, 1987.

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. You may have noticed at one o'clock when we concluded our vote this afternoon that we were seeking the floor on a point of order. The Hon. Member for Windsor—Walkerville (Mr. McCurdy) is here at this time, and I wonder if I might simply invite the Hon. Member, on a point of order, to recognize that it is a very important principle of this place, that before one votes in the Chamber, one is in his or her place when the question is put.

Inadvertently, I am sure, the Member was somewhat tardy in arriving in the House and achieving his place earlier this day, but I do note—and I have checked with the Table—that a vote was recorded. Even though it is not particularly important in this particular instance, I think that it might be in the best traditions of the House for the Member to ask that his vote held earlier this day not be counted. That would give us a chance to clear the record before the proceedings of the day are sort of written in stone in Hansard or the proceedings are published.

Mr. McCurdy: Mr. Speaker, if in fact the evidence indicates that I failed to hear the putting of the motion, then I would be perfectly willing to defer to the request of the Hon. Member, but that is not what I understand to have been the case.

I heard the motion being put. I got into my seat just in time to hear the beginning of the statement and, under those circumstances, although I came in subsequent to the rising of the Speaker, I do not believe that I missed the putting of the motion.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member for Calgary West (Mr. Hawkes) should give notice to the Speaker, because this has not arisen out of this portion of business. Therefore, upon doing this, the Speaker will rule on it.

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I would like to emphasize the fact that immediately upon the conclusion of the vote we shouted: "Point of order" and attempted to be recognized, and we were not, at one o'clock. I did not think it was appropriate to raise it at a subsequent point until the Hon. Member was in the House.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): That is fine, except that I was in the chair and I did not hear it. I did not see the Hon. Member come into the Chamber and therefore you will have to raise it with the Speaker as written notice.

Mr. Kindy: Mr. Speaker, my motion today deals with a very important issue, that of direct participation of Canadians in the democratic process.

As we all know, there is no provision in Canada or in the provinces to have binding referendums on Governments. As we move into the 21st century it is extremely important that people be consulted. Therefore I have presented this motion to the House.

As you know, Mr. Speaker, a Private Member's Motion can be voted upon only if it is not talked out. I am looking at the clock; if nobody is talking one minute before six o'clock, the motion can be voted upon. I hope for the sake of democracy that those present in the House will abide by the wishes of their constituents so that the Private Member's Motion can be voted upon.

I will read my motion. It indicates:

WHEREAS the Constitution Act, 1867 provides in section 17 that there shall be one Parliament for Canada, consisting of the Queen, an Upper House styled the Senate, and the House of Commons;

AND WHEREAS it is expedient that the electors of Canada be more directly involved in the legislative process;

AND WHEREAS an initiative and referendum process is an appropriate mechanism for the determination of questions of national interest;

AND WHEREAS the Parliament of Canada should be bound to enact any measures necessary to implement decisions of the electors of Canada on questions put to them by referendum;

NOW, THEREFORE, the House of Commons resolves that an amendment to the Constitution of Canada be authorized to be made by proclamation issued by Her Excellency the Governor General under the Great Seal of Canada in accordance with the schedule hereto.

I will read the schedule because it is important to note the mechanisms of a referendum and it needs an amendment to the Constitution:

1. The Constitution Act, 1867 is amended by inserting, immediately after section 19 thereof, the following section:

"20. (1) A referendum on any matter coming within the classes of subjects enumerated in section 91 may be initiated by proclamation of the Government of Canada or by petition of not less than twenty per cent of the electors of Canada addressed to the House of Commons.

(2) A decision of the electors of Canada in a referendum held pursuant to this section is binding on the Government and the Parliament of Canada and shall, within a reasonable time after the holding of the referendum, be implemented by them in a manner consistent with their powers and authority.

(3) No referendum shall be held on a question that is substantially the same as a question on which a referendum has been held within the previous four years.

(4) The Parliament of Canada shall, before the expiration of the first parliament following the coming into force of this section, enact a measure consistent with it to provide a reasonable procedure for the orderly administration of referendums to be held pursuant to this section."

2. This amendment may be cited as the Constitution Amendment, 1987.

I read the motion so that the people of Canada will be cognizant of the fact that we need a referendum.

Why do we need a referendum? At the present time there is no federal enabling legislation for Canadians to initiate a vote on public policy or law. The closest example of direct federal legislation is the Canada Elections Act, which governs the election of Members of Parliament. Nevertheless, it is not a law of general application as the public has no mechanism to invoke its application. This means that once Members are elected they cannot be revoked even if they vote against the wishes of their constituents.

My motion before the House is to consider an advance of the referendum process in Canada. The referendum process is created to enhance a direct democracy. It means the participation of constituents in the legislative process. A federal referendum process will enable electors of Canada to become more directly involved in the legislative process.

The particular advantage of the referendum is that it permits the severance of a specific issue of national importance from political party philosophies and enables the public to determine the value of specific national objectives.

Referendums can become a democratic tool to encourage greater public input and control over national objectives by individuals. Presently Canadians are frustrated by public policy being influenced by unelected Senators and appointed judges. More and more Senators and judges are creating legislative policy in Canada rather than interpreting existing legislation.

Conversely the referendum process establishes a method of presenting or referring important legislative issues to a direct public vote of the whole society. The results of a referendum would bind the federal Government to enact legislation to reflect the public will.

There are precedents for this in other countries. For instance, Switzerland enacted in 1848 a referendum process whereby 50,000 signatures can direct the Government to have a referendum on a specific issue. Switzerland is one of the best direct democracies in the world. It has a system that enables public input on different issues. For instance, recently we had a vote on capital punishment but the public had no input whatsoever. Therefore, it is extremely important that the public be consulted continuously.

In Switzerland, which has these types of referendums, 50,000 signatures can demand a referendum. Even if the upper and lower House have voted on a Bill, that Bill remains not proclaimed for three months. If the 50,000 signatures demand it, the Bill is put to the whole country. It happened quite frequently in Switzerland, that even though both Houses voted on a certain Bill, the Bill did not pass the test of direct democracy.

In Canada, as we know, we have representatives of the people, Members of the House of Commons. But we have as well the non-elected Senate appointed by the Prime Minister of the day. Those Senators are not accountable to anyone but themselves.

Mr. Waddell: We should get rid of them.

Mr. Kindy: As the Hon. Member says, we should vote for a referendum so we can get rid of those Senators or have Senators who are elected. In western Canada, we believe that it is essential to have a Triple E Senate, an elected, effective and equal Senate. This would have brought more democracy to our Confederation. But as the House knows, with the Meech Lake Accord, it will be extremely difficult to bring about an equal, elected and effective Senate because we have created with the Meech Lake Accord a third government institution, the conference of First Ministers. I would say that those are the 11 backroom boys who are going to determine the fate of Canada. It certainly is not a democratic process. We are moving away from direct democracy, a representative democracy, to a Government of 11 First Ministers. Recently, they have determined we should have free trade. On this issue all but two or three First Ministers were in agreement. But a question of national importance should be put directly to the people of Canada. Referendums create a democratic forum where the public will be involved. Federal general elections do not represent single issues of policy and law. Referendums will not be greatly influenced by personalities and political loyalties.

It has become apparent to many Canadians that Parliament is no longer the sole forum of Canadian political policy formation. Our constitutional system of Government has reduced the control and input of individual Canadians in the federal Government. The growth of the Constitution and its Parliamentary rule in Canada has weakened the traditional role and contribution of individual Members of Parliament. The growth of the constitutional rights and laws have created corresponding powers for the courts.

In the past five years we have witnessed unelected judges not only interpreting laws but in fact creating new federal policies based upon their interpretation of Canadian society. We have permitted a constitutional democracy to develop whereby the policies of a duly elected Government of Canadians can be declared unacceptable by five appointed judges who are not directly accountable to Canadians. As I said previously, the Meech Lake Accord has further reduced the public's representative role in Canadian policy development. An unelected Senate will remain enshrined in the Constitution with appointment powers delegated to the provincial Premiers.

A referendum process will enable Canadians to directly introduce policies of national importance to rectify such judicial powers. Judges employ the interpretation of laws based upon their personal interpretation of Canadian values and morals. The recent Supreme Court Morgentaler decision is a clear example of a constitutional system enabling judges to set social standards upon Canadians. Referendums will be an effective mechanism for categorizing and articulating the popular will of Canadians directly into the parliamentary process. Referendums would also enable the consistent protection of Canadian public policy as changes in elected Government often leaves important social issues exposed to change by bureaucrats.

The federal civil service has become the permanent Government of Canada, always present to protect its role and status in policy development. It has become clear to Canadians that upper echelon civil servants, the mandarins, control exceptional power in our public policy domain. Many mandarins possess greater access to cabinet Ministers than do the duly elected Members who compose the accountable Government of Canada. Referendums could act as a control mechanism to provide the Canadian public greater accountability from the permanent Government of Canada and its accountable mandarins.

Referendums are a concept that has been advocated by advocates of direct democracy. This is what we want, direct democracy. People should be able to express their will upon the Government. I think this is a fundamental principle of democracy. I hope that Members of this House will allow this motion to be voted upon because if they do not, I think at that point they do not believe in direct democracy.

We have created in Canada a monster. I would call it a monster of governments. We have the unelected Senate which does not represent the will of the people. As we have seen recently, it is refusing to pass a Bill on immigration that is so important to Canadians. If Meech Lake is accepted, it will contain a unanimity clause which will prevent us from getting rid of this institution that prevents Canadians from having input into their legislation.

It is proposed that a referendum on any matter within the exclusive jurisdiction of the federal Parliament could be initiated by proclamation of the Government of Canada or by a petition of not less than 20 per cent of the electors of Canada. I use the figure 20 per cent. In Switzerland, they use the figure of 3 per cent but we must have safeguards and I accept the figure of 20 per cent. Those electors address their petition to the House of Commons, thereby petitioning for a referendum addressing an issue of national importance as determined by the electors of Canada.

I would hope that once this motion passes, the provincial Governments and municipalities would as well accept a referendum process. Such a process exists in Switzerland where there is a referendum process at the national level, at the canton level which corresponds to our provincial level and at the municipal level. The process is binding on those Governments.

Issues of monetary policy of national interest, whether it is abortion or capital punishment, should be voted upon directly by the people if the people feel that their representatives have not brought forward a Bill in accordance with the wishes of the majority of Canadians. As I said, I hope that Members across who believe in direct democracy will not talk out this motion. I hope they will be faithful to their electors and will permit the motion to be voted upon.

I see Members from the New Democratic Party and from the Liberal Party here. I am sure they believe in democracy. Therefore, I would ask them to let this motion be voted upon.

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, it was interesting to hear part of the argument presented by the Hon. Member in defence of his motion. I think he will find that it is not likely to be deemed altogether defensible on both sides of the House. His problem is not that Members on this side will keep it from coming to a vote. The probability is that Members on all sides would defeat it on the basis of what they know to be the parliamentary system.

I would like to discuss this motion in the context of the experience to which I am privy as the Member from Windsor—Walkerville, a riding which is close to the American border. I will refer to a few examples of what he has suggested be done and will indicate what the dangers are if what he proposes were to be done. Of course, we understand that the Hon. Member's philosophical bent would not necessarily reject the situations that have arisen as a consequence of the acceptance of his proposition in the states of the United States at least.

During the course of the Hon. Member's intervention, he indicated, as an example of his complete misapprehension of what the democratic process is all about under a parliamentary system, that during the debate on capital punishment, the people were not allowed to be heard. If it were not unparliamentary to say so, I would say that that was a flat-out lie, but I cannot say that it is a flat-out lie. All I can say is that it certainly was not the truth.

The fact is that the people were heard. They were heard extensively. I for one, and I am sure most Members of the House as well, considered very carefully the views of those who expressed themselves as they did to a very extensive degree on the question of capital punishment. We reached a conclusion based, we think, on well informed opinion and a strong sense of responsibility.

I do not want to be trite by quoting the historical references with respect to the duties of Members of Parliament to be advised by their own intellect and their own knowledge and to strain in so much as possible to make decisions on behalf of those who elect them on the basis of good, solid information and careful thought. Nevertheless, I will remind the Hon. Member, as most of us have been reminded repeatedly, that there is a view of this House which imposes upon us that responsibility. To suggest for a moment that it is a contradiction of democracy to state quite clearly that there are issues so complex as not to be easily subject to a referendum method does not follow that view.

Let us look at some of the consequences of the Hon. Member's particular point of view in the State of Michigan, for example. In the State of Michigan, as in so many other states of the United States, there is the most horrible kind of poverty in large urban areas. This occurs in states which have referenda. Why is this? It is because those referenda have allowed the taxpayers to make decisions about when the taxpayers will or will not, for example, pay taxes and whether or not taxes will be paid.

It would take some kind of empty-headed thinking process to believe that the responsibility we have to raise taxes from time to time would be given a favourable response from most taxpayers. In the United States, the consequences of this have been clear. The majority have seen that the black minority in Detroit, for example, is without satisfactory schools. A situation has been created where there is no chance of that being corrected. The Hon. Member would have the majority make every decision without limitation and without assuring a process of careful deliberation of all the factors involved in any decision.

We have a responsibility here which I consider to be a very important one and at times a very trying one. It may be the Hon. Member's bent to avoid the necessity of making decisions, but I for one, and I am sure other Members of the House as well, recognize that the democratic process is not one which is satisfied by collecting signatures on referenda or petitions. It is a question of the electorate choosing those who will represent them best, not because they always reflect the majority opinion but because they are equally able to defend the rights of minorities and, much more important, because they are willing to give the study to any issue that is necessary to reach a decision that will be in the interests of all the people, without conceding to a method which, on the basis of our experiences with petitions, would lead to a fallacious image of democracy and in fact to its utter failure. Therefore, if this motion comes to a vote, I will vote against it. I would support the Hon. Member on only one thing. Let us have the vote and let us reject the proposition.

Mr. W. R. Bud Jardine (Northumberland—Miramichi): Mr. Speaker, it gives me pleasure to take part in this afternoon's debate. My colleague, the Hon. Member for Calgary East (Mr. Kindy), is asking us to consider an amendment to the Constitution entitled the Constitution Amendment, 1987. This amendment would allow for referenda to be initiated on any matter coming within the purview of Section 91 of the Constitution Act, 1867, by proclamation of the Government of Canada or by petition of not less than 20 per cent of the electors of Canada.

I would like to begin my comments by reminding Hon. Members of another constitutional amendment, the 1987 Constitutional Accord. On October 23, 1987, by an overwhelming majority of 246 to 16 votes, and with the support of all three Party Leaders, this House approved the 1987 Accord which truly marks a turning point in our constitutional history. The Accord closes the difficult chapter that began when Quebec was left out of the agreement leading to patriation and to the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms in 1982.

The 1982 reform was a major advance. Besides patriation, it included constitutional recognition of equality and other fundamental rights of our multicultural heritage, aboriginal rights, the rights of official language minorities and our regional strengths.

However, the 1982 Agreement was incomplete: It did not include Quebec. Quebec's return to the constitutional fold is the signal achievement of the 1987 Accord. To bring Quebec fully into the constitutional fold, to strengthen and reaffirm the partnership of Confederation, and to establish a framework for building the partnership of tomorrow are proud achievements, and ones which strengthen the fabric of Confederation as a whole.

Quebec was, of course, legally bound by the Constitution Act, 1982, but it rejected the legitimacy of the new Act, including the Charter, and subsequently announced its intention not to participate in the constitutional process until its constitutional concerns had been addressed.

This was damaging for Canada in two respects. Quebec's isolation made constitutional amendments more difficult to achieve, as we witnessed in our discussions on aboriginal constitutional issues. However, more importantly, Quebec's continued isolation ran the risk of festering and creating a very serious problem for another generation to resolve, perhaps in less tranquil times. That is why it was such a joyous occasion when First Ministers reached unanimous agreement on an Accord which satisfies Quebec's aspirations within Canada and allows Quebec to embrace voluntarily and completely the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms.

A major reason for the success of the Quebec round of negotiations was the agreement by all Governments to deal with the Quebec issue as a constitutional priority and to defer discussions on other constitutional issues. This distinction between the Quebec round and a second round of constitutional negotiations effectively prevented linkage and was key to the Meech Lake success. With great respect to my colleague, the Member from Calgary East we must not lose sight of that objective by entertaining further amendments to the Constitution of Canada, however commendable those proposals may be, before the Accord is ratified by all provincial legislative assemblies.

The place to deal with further constitutional progress is in the second round. The Accord itself guarantees a forum for further constitutional talks at annual conferences of First Ministers. In particular, the Accord requires the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) to convene a First Ministers' Conference on the Constitution at least once a year. Agenda items will include Senate reform, roles and responsibilities in relation to fisheries, and such other matters as may be agreed upon.

Before I sit down, I would like to reflect briefly on the role of public participation in the constitutional process and in particular with regard to the 1987 Accord.

The Accord was forged in the democratic tradition of our country. The issues it resolves have been debated for years in past constitutional negotiations, by the media, by scholars, and by interested Canadians. First Ministers scrupulously respected and surpassed the procedures laid down in the 1982 amending formula.

The hearings of the Special Joint Committee on the Accord ensured that the terms of the Accord were well communicated to the people of Canada and that it was carefully scrutinized. During four weeks of intensive hearings, the joint committee elicited 246 briefs and communications, and heard testimony from more than 80 individuals or groups. The joint committee concluded the Accord represents a reasonable and workable package of constitutional reforms and recommended its adoption by Parliament.

I might point out that the hearings of the joint committee were the first of their kind to have been held on a specific constitutional amendment. The timetable of the hearings was a demanding one, and one which required all involved to focus their energies and attention on the task at hand. While recognizing the magnitude of their task, the committee concluded their schedule was not an unrealistic one or one which excluded meaningful public participation. As the committee put it, "The process has provided us with a strong basis upon which to evaluate the 1987 Accord." The committee also noted that "any fundamental flaws in the Accord would have emerged in the course of this process." However, it is clear that we as parliamentarians, and our opposite numbers in provincial legislatures, could do more, and I welcome the joint committee's recommendations for an expanded parliamentary role through the committee process in giving expert and interested Canadians a voice in proposing the agenda items for First Ministers and in exploring issues First Ministers have agreed to address.

I do not think anyone can realistically quarrel with the joint committee's conclusion that "a conference of First Ministers will likely always be necessary as the final step to reach agreement on proposed constitutional amendments." Nor, however, can we quarrel with the committee's observation that flexibility after First Ministers have made a decision will always be limited.

In this regard, I note the committee's recommendation that, together with the other place, we create a standing joint committee on constitutional reform, to, as the committee recommends, put "the emphasis on a more open process before First Ministers meet to discuss constitutional issues." I think this is an interesting idea and one which merits further consideration. Indeed, it seems to me that a committee process might provide an ideal forum to examine proposals such as the one we have before us today. Public hearings could be held where Canadians, experts and interested individuals and groups, could make known their concerns and contribute their ideas into the process. Through such processes, Canadians could have a real influence on the course of constitutional reform.

In the meantime, let us not forget that our immediate task is to do everything in our power to ensure the Accord is adopted as quickly as possible, so that the second round can begin on a sound basis, with Quebec's full participation.

I am pleased to note that, in addition to this House, the Accord has been ratified by the legislative assemblies of Quebec, Saskatchewan and Alberta, and debate on the resolution is well under way in Nova Scotia, Newfoundland, and Prince Edward Island. The Ontario Select Committee has nearly completed its hearings, and I understand from media reports that debate has begun in British Columbia.

It is heartening to see that the momentum generated by First Ministers on June 3, 1987, continues. For the Constitutional Accord of 1987 is not an ending. It is a beginning. It will set the constitutional reform process on the road again.

Mr. Charles Hamelin (Charlevoix): Mr. Speaker, I want to take this opportunity, before this numerous audience, to speak to the motion of the Hon. Member for Calgary East (Mr. Kindy) in which he proposes to amend the Constitution of Canada by introducing the referendum concept. The Hon. Member would have us include this concept in the Constitution of Canada because he sees this process as absolutely essential to our democratic system. This means that we would put what he calls questions of national interest to a direct vote by all citizens of Canada.

Referendums and direct democracy are not exactly new. In fact, the very concept of democracy, of demos kratos, the strength of the people, apparently originated in Greece, and more precisely in Athens, many centuries ago. At the time, when Athens, like all other cities, was actually a City State, all citizens would be called on when decisions had to be made.

Whenever a decision had to be made on politics, on the polis—the city—on the city's administration, everyone was called to a meeting and a direct, democratic vote was taken.

However, as the city's territory grew, its population realized that direct democracy created certain problems. People were constantly being asked to come and vote on any number of questions related to the city's administration. The farmer in his field and soldiers in their barracks had to drop everything to come and vote. So people said: Direct democracy is all very well, but it might be better to elect a few people to represent us and save us the trouble of going back and forth all the time. This led to an initial form, which developed over time, of a parliamentary system with elected representatives. People chose certain other people to represent them and to speak on their behalf.

That is how a government administered directly by the people changed, over time, and not without great difficulty, into a parliamentary system in which the people elect a number of representatives. In other words, we have people who become part of the government and who defend the general and more specific interests of the people they represent.

Obviously, people opted for a functional rather than an ideal government. And I think the very concept of a referendum is probably the "tentatively" ideal government, provided that referendums are held often. However, we must not forget that a referendum is a kind of snapshot of public opinion at a given time on a given question. These images change over time. Opinions change. The ideals, customs and morality of one era are gone in the next.

The referendum concept, idealistic though it may be, is not without problems. For instance, how are we to define what the Hon. Member refers to in his amendment as national interest? Of course, we cannot have referendums at the drop of a hat, but are we not about to deny the importance of our parliamentary system? If we go back to direct democracy, we are saying, to a certain extent, that the people who represent us today are not doing their job, do not represent public opinion and do not stand up for the fundamental interests of the citizens of this country.

The changing nature of public opinion is one problem. And what about the protection of minority groups? Referendums can be fatal to minorities.

In his proposal, the Hon. Member suggests that 20 per cent of Canadian citizens would be sufficient justification for applying the referendum formula. It sounds like a lot. This is nearly three million people. But consider the city of Toronto. It would be relatively easy to get three million people to support an emotional issue of so-called national interest.

In that case, what about Prince Edward Island? What about Newfoundland? What about the minorities in the Northwest Territories? What about the Yukon? What about francophone or, in some cases, anglophone minority groups? What would happen to our aboriginal communities?

You know, in a referendum, what with the emotion and public pressure, some rather startling events widely broadcast on television can make public opinion swing and waver; it does not take so long. We saw a striking example of that recently with the refugee issue. A child crying on television has much more impact than a minister's speech. However, with the rather massive arrival of people from abroad, Canadians might say no to any further immigration, if asked in a referendum. It might come down to such a referendum.

And you know what happened in the United States, in California, with Proposition 13 where Californians said they were fed up with taxes. So they put it to a referendum. It was decided that there would be no more tax increases.

At first, that seemed like a bright idea, a good thing to do. It is true that we are burdened by taxes; everyone is fed up with them. Of course the referendum carried by an overwhelming majority, but what have the consequences of this famous Proposition 13 been? It has deprived the government of some $100 billion since 1978. Everyone will say, "Great! Way to go! They got $100 billion less—that money would have come from us. Wonderful!" But what have the consequences been? The highway system is deteriorating. All kinds of municipal and government facilities are running down because of a referendum, a snapshot of public opinion reflecting a temporary fashion, what almost amounted to collective vengeance, because of too many tax increases too close together, perhaps, but now Californians are paying the price. It is the same individuals and communities who are paying for it. Everything is deteriorating, compared to other surrounding states or municipalities that may have undergone tax increases, but at least have quality services.

So there are dangers in going the referendum route. Of course, compared to a constitutional document, for example, a referendum seems to be supported by the whole country. Let us have Canada's Constitution ratified by the whole population. I, for one, would have liked the BNA Act to have been endorsed by a strong majority, and by that I mean most of the citizens. We would have been on much firmer ground had the Constitution Act of 1982 been the subject of a referendum with a very strong majority in favour of it. But what happens when a referendum is won by something like 50.1 per cent or lost by 49.4 per cent? You will find yourselves in situations leading to the kind of divisions which leave no room for change or negotiation.

So, Mr. Speaker, imagine the people being asked directly to consider a Bill of some 350 pages, 12 paragraphs, 14 subsections, printed as big as this.

An Hon. Member: Fifteen appendices!

Mr. Hamelin: And 15 appendices, says my colleague. It will be impossible, I admit, you can see for yourself, Mr. Speaker, you will readily admit it in spite of your great intelligence, we have a hard time figuring out what is what. So think of the ordinary man who is given an 18-inch thick document and told to make up his mind. Are you for or against? Even we are lost. What a mess, Mr. Speaker, you know that, we have to work full time at it just to be able to single out the positive elements of national interest—when there are any, which does not happen very often.

So there is danger in these referendums which may indeed put us in a straitjacket from which escape does not come easily. The advantage of the parliamentary system is that we can be thrown out every four years or so, we can propose new policies or seek re-election. Like you, Mr. Speaker, I hope we will be able to keep up the good work. But if we have to revert to direct democracy in every instance, then we have problems.

There is an other aspect to the question. The laws, as we know, are often ahead of or lag behind public opinion. There may be some pieces of legislation in Canada that are some years ahead of public attitudes, but, Mr. Speaker, some others are reactionary and need to be adapted to take into account the will of the people. But could we accept a decision based on an occasional and dangerous snapshot of opinion polls? I find it hard to live with that but despite all the shortcomings of our system, despite the theoretical and almost romantic appeal of direct democracy, I would not put such a proposition in the Constitution, at least in Canada.

Mr. Speaker, it is our role to represent this country and our constituents.

Mr. Ricardo Lopez (Châteauguay): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased in turn to take a few minutes of the House to express my views on the motion just tabled by the Hon. Member for Calgary East (Mr. Kindy). In the first place, Mr. Speaker, I would like to commend my colleague for Calgary East for the work he put into the preparation of his motion. I would like to add that for a major part of his presentation, Mr. Speaker, I can but agree with him on that part, certainly, that deals with the Senate's encroachment on elected Members of this House. There are many other things also on which I had to fight alongside the Hon. Member for Calgary East and on which I was in total agreement with him. I also note that a lot of work went into his motion, his bill, a lot of research coming from a man of absolute integrity and a very able Member.

As to the actual contents of his motion, Mr. Speaker, this is another story, and I cannot agree with the motion as such. He constantly refers to democracy, direct democracy. Mr. Speaker, each election is an exercise in democracy. That is a democratic process, direct democracy needless to say.

I feel that Canadians are rather bored with being called upon to vote so often. They often told me: We elected a Government, we elected a Member, let him do his job afterwards. If we have to give our views each time the Government has a decision to make, we have other things to look after. We should trust our elected representatives, that is what we elected them for.

If each time the Government wants to make a decision, everyone had to go out and vote, there would be no end to that, and there would be no need for the House of Commons, with its Speaker, for a Prime Minister, etc., if on every major decision we went through direct democracy. As you know, Mr. Speaker, major questions are like an accordion. Some might say for instance that what is significant is the budget, or capital punishment; it could be abortion, it could be a million matters. And each individual would have his or her own priorities. Will these matters be put directly to voters each time, in order to know what is the significant issue? Would that not lead to chaos? In my view, it would also be a loss of time, it would be disturbing our fellow citizens in an absolutely needless way, not to mention the costs. As we know, a referendum is very expensive, just as elections are, and Canadians have other things to do than spend money for absolutely no reason and also be disturbed at every moment.

Some colleagues referred to the process in Switzerland. Apparently this would be the country in which there is the greatest number of referendums. Even in that country, Mr. Speaker, the credibility of that referendum process is declining. Initially, it would seem that from 60 to 65 per cent of citizens used it, went to vote. But currently the percentage has sunk below 40 per cent. So if the Swiss could be called the fathers of referendums, they themselves do not believe in it anymore.

My colleague for Calgary East (Mr. Kindy) also referred to the vote we had a few weeks ago, or rather a few months, concerning capital punishment. But on that I think he overlooked one essential aspect. What did he forget? Something I am sure he, like most of my colleagues, did: before voting in the House, he made an effort to find out what the people thought. And since it was a free vote, I should now congratulate our Prime Minister for having allowed us to hold a free vote on an extremely important and controversial issue. I did it myself: I consulted my constituents before voting. Of course, I am not here to represent myself or to defend some personal idea but to represent my constituents' ideas. So when the issue is extremely important in my view, as capital punishment was in the past and other issues will be in the future—I am thinking about abortion legislation, etc.—we should ask Canadians what they think. This kind of consultation would be much less costly than a referendum and make it possible for us to find out just what our constituents think.

You know that when only 20 or 25 per cent of the people respond through a referendum they do not necessarily represent the interests and the will of the whole population.

We have excellent tools at our disposal to be able to consult the people, such as parliamentary bulletins, and we can send householders four times a year. I should think that is enough. We can consult people four times a year on what we feel are major issues, and it does not cost us a cent. I do that all the time and I urge my colleagues to do the same thing. If we really believe in democracy, which consists in representing the views of our constituents as eloquently and faithfully as we can, that is an essential tool to ask them what they think. We could always include a removable page which they can return to us. A constituent does not have to change his routine, he does not have to leave work to go and vote, yet at the same time he can tell us what he thinks. In a case like that they just send us the removable page and tell us their views, and after that the parliamentarians or the Members should act accordingly.

To me that kind of democracy is much more direct than . . .

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 66 deemed to have been moved.

OFFICIAL LANGUAGES—SASKATCHEWAN BILL—REQUEST THAT FEDERAL FINANCIAL ASSISTANCE BE OFFERED TO PROVINCE / SURVIVAL OF MINORITIES

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, I rise on the adjournment motion to refer to a question which I put to the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) on April 12 last as recorded on page 14 387 of Hansard. I do so because I think that the Prime Minister erred in his answer and I should like to bring a correction to Hansard and stick with the facts.

I put a question to the Prime Minister about conditions in Saskatchewan and pointed out that the Government has introduced and is discussing Bill 2 which according to many is a step backward and will restrict considerably language legislation confirmed on February 25 last under a decision delivered by the Supreme Court.

It will be remembered that the Supreme Court had pronounced judgment in the case of Saskatchewan and perhaps also with respect to Alberta because both provinces were carved within the same territory; it decided that section 110 of the legislation creating the provinces had been copied as it were from the same legislation concerning the Northwest Territories . . . therefore clause 110 directed the Government to allow English and French in the legislature and in the courts.

The Supreme Court rendered its judgment and gave the government two options, as we all know. The first option: You can declare you are unilingual by adopting legislation that says all statutes enacted since 1905 are valid. The second option: Instead of saying you are unilingual, you could have your statutes translated and negotiate appropriate arrangements with the official language minority group.

I put the question to the Prime Minister to establish that many premiers, Mr. Bourassa as well as Mr. Getty and Mr. Devine, are using the language question in Saskatchewan for their own political and provincial purposes. I am sorry I have to say this, but I think it is high time these premiers took action and stopped making promises or the kind of unacceptable statements made by Mr. Bourassa who said, substantially, and I am quoting from an article that appeared in La Presse on April 12: "I wouldn't want other governments to interefere with the way we treat our Anglophone minority in Quebec, and so I respect the way the province is treating its Francophone minority".

I could quote many more instances, Mr. Speaker. The papers are full of them. Mr. Getty said he would proceed like Saskatchewan did but that in any event, Alberta would take care of its own business. Mr. Devine tells us that in ten or fifteen years the province of Saskatchewan will be bilingual. No kidding!

The majority of the population of Saskatchewan is anglophone. We know that. The Province has statutes, and under those statutes, it had certain statutory obligations. There was one obligation that had not been met, through no fault of the Saskatchewan Francophones who, until recently with Father Mercure, lacked the money and the legal arguments to go before the courts and stand up for their rights.

Hon. Members will recall that Manitobans were given back their language rights when George Forest, in 1974-75-76, decided to go before the courts to stand up for his rights in Manitoba. Finally, in 1979, he won his case.

However, my main point today is the point I was trying to make to the Prime Minister, namely that asking Francophone communities to put their faith in Mr. Devine's statements would, in my view, be asking too much of this minority which today has yet to receive from the Saskatchewan Government the most basic, the most essential services as far as education is concerned. In fact, the courts have been asked to decide whether Section 23 of the Constitution Act of 1982 gives Francophones in this province the right to have their own autonomous school boards.

He should not go too far in his suggestion that there is much good will on the part of the Government.

In his reply, the Prime Minister said:

> If I am not mistaken, Mr. Speaker,—

—I am quoting him verbatim—

—the report of the Commissioner for Official Languages indicates that in recent years there has been substantial progress in Saskatchewan with respect to the use of French.

I perused the report of the Commissioner for Official Languages which I had read before and tried to find the comment which could have given the Prime Minister this idea and suggest that in recent years there had been substantial progress in Saskatchewan with respect to the use of French. Well, Mr. Speaker, there is no mention of that in this report; on the contrary, and I should like to quote a statement made by the Commissioner for Official Languages on page 159, and I quote:

Their relative weight no doubt accounts for some of the special difficulties they—

—the Fransaskois—

. . . face and for the sharp debates which sometimes surround the issue of official bilingualism in the West.

—I continue—

—the year—

—this is 1987—

—witnessed a number of unfortunate confrontations over demands for French language schools, legal battles over the right of accused persons to trials in the official language of their choice and controversy surrounding the status and use of French in provincial legislatures.

I was quoting the Commissioner for Official Languages. What he said is entirely different from what the Prime Minister stated in the House in his reply on April 12 when he said that there had been substantial progress. He should not try to . . . I am not saying that he tried intentionally to mislead me, but the Prime Minister should state openly that there are serious problems in western Canada. These are serious problems which must be dealt with. We are going to solve them if we deal seriously with western Canadians and declare outright that the rights of minorities should be respected wherever they are, whether in Saskatchewan, Alberta, Manitoba or Ontario, in short, all Canadian provinces, including Quebec. They have a right to survive in Canada and I hope that the Prime Minister whom I know very well will make sure from now on—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please! I must regretfully interrupt the Hon. Member, but his time has expired. The Hon. Parliamentary Secretary has the floor.

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member must realize that there have been many Commissionner reports and many words in this one, but this is not the gist of the issue. I am sure the Hon. Member realizes that the Prime Minister has already been questioned at length on the issue of language rights in Saskatchewan. He clearly explained his own and the Government's position on this issue.

The Prime Minister also recalled his own and the Government's commitment to promote the full recognition and the use of French and English in Canadian society. But there is a difference between the parties in this House, a difference of attitude. We, the Conservatives, believe that discussion and co-operation have more to offer than confrontation. But the Liberals and the NDP believe that confrontation is better than co-operation and discussion.

[English]

There is a big difference on a very important and fundamental issue in this country, the issue of language. I do not think the nation is well served by any political tactic that attempts to heighten divisions. It is surely an issue in this country, and I commend the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) for the degree to which he provides that co-operation and discussion of leadership on this very important and essential issue to the fabric of our nation.

I urge the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) to study the issue in the same non-partisan spirit that he demonstrated when previously taking stands; he will recognize, as did the NDP leader, that the Prime Minister is making positive and constructive efforts in that matter.

• (1810)

[English]

He is meeting today in the Province of Saskatchewan. He has offered the House his willingness to report fully and completely on those discussions.

I simply say to the Hon. Member opposite: "Be non-partisan on this issue, invite the Prime Minister to report to the House". Surely co-operation and discussion is the way to advance national unity on the language issue.

IMMIGRATION—QUERY WHETHER MINISTER HAS CONSULTED CANADIAN BAR AND THE SENATE/ REQUEST FOR 60-DAY DELAY ON DEPORTATIONS

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, I am very happy to have a chance to speak on a question that I raised two weeks ago. The question concerned the problem or collection of problems that our country has in connection with the backlog of refugee claimants and the need for new legislation on refugee determination.

The legislation has been stalled by a number of causes, which I will not take time to go into now because I have discussed them before, and the backlog has been increased by the allowing of various national groups to enter through a loophole without imposing a visa restriction as early as could have been done. Also there have been no convictions yet of any of the operators of those scams and no legislation yet to provide the means for better regulating those operators, or no proposal for legislation.

However, the problem is with us. Two weeks ago I asked the then Minister to consider the need for consulting to resolve a practical problem. I asked him if he would consider a package as follows: (1) a 60-day delay on deportation, that is of backlog members, to allow time for consultation; (2) consultation with the Canadian Bar Association and the Senate to make Bill C-55 workable under our existing Constitution and Supreme Court; and (3) creation of a new administrative review that fairly identifies the people who are effectively established in Canada, taking into account help from their relatives and their work record.

I want to take up each of those points in order. The 60-day freeze is an arbitrary number that I picked, two months, to give time for consultation. I agree with the words that I heard from across the way, from the speaker for the Government, that there are times when confrontation is not wanted. I think this is a time when consultation could be appropriate.

At present the Turks are being deported, although Canadians where they are living have said that they want them to stay. Obviously there are many others of the 48,000 who will come into question in the very near future and farther. Many people doubt that this Government will in fact deport 48,000 people during this year. The number might be greater, or it might be smaller, but it is in the tens of thousands.

The suggestion therefore is, rather than deporting a few and then perhaps working out a plan that would have treated them differently had it been in operation earlier, that we hold in order to treat all in the same way. During that two-month hold we could do two major things. There could be consultation on Bill C-55. Granted there has been a lot of talk on it so far, but the main point on which we should consult is to bring it into line with the Supreme Court decision given three years ago which says that everybody who comes here—that is, if he claims refugee status and if he is in Canada—has a right to have his or her claim fully heard by the people who will decide on the merits of the claim. That is denied to most people by Bill C-55. Furthermore, what we have for those people who do go to have their claims heard is a double process, two hearings instead of one. If we could get rid of that screening, in accordance with the advice of the Bar Association and all the lawyers in private practice who have discussed this with anyone I know of, we would do two things; we would speed up the process of Bill B-55 itself, which we all agree is desirable, and we would be bringing it into line with the Supreme Court decision on the meaning of our Constitution.

If we do not do that, what we have is a Bill that is unworkable. Even if it were declared today, it would be found to be unworkable. We have that on the advice of all the lawyers who are not being hired by the Government to support it. That is part of the reason for its delay.

The second thing that could be done would be to work out fairer plans for a new administrative review, to review the backlog of refugee claimants on an individual basis to find out who is or who is about to be adequately settled. The Government has already done that with tens of thousands of people. The Minister issues tens of thousands of permits every year. There is nothing extraordinary and certainly nothing illegal about this procedure. It would not be hurting the regular immigrants because the Government last year, according to its figures, brought in 9,000 more than it had planned to bring in. So for the ones who were brought in in the administrative review last year, it did not block them.

It should be made more fair than the last administrative review. It should take account of the people who are receiving genuine help from their families in getting settled. It should take account, for example, of a Guyanese woman who is earning $13,000 a year in a factory. That does not come up to our Stats Canada standards, but she is in fact supporting her two children. She has done that for several years. That should be recognized. She, like many Canadian born people, is paid less than what we consider an acceptable wage but she is surviving. She is working and looking after her family. She should not be turfed out because she does not come up to an abstract wage standard.

Likewise, people in areas of high unemployment should not be penalized because they are in areas of high unemployment. Therefore, I am hoping the Government will consider a package like this which would benefit the Government, the refugees and the country by resolving this impasse.

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member and I have served for some considerable period of time on inquiries into immigration. In many ways we have similar attitudes about many kinds of solutions. However, I think the Member is off base in several ways. He starts his discourse today by he saying he cares about the operators of scams and the fact that none have yet been convicted, but there is a problem in the current law in getting evidence and convicting. Then the Member says that nothing is on the table that would change that situation. Bill C-84 is on the table. It has very clear-cut provisions designed to stop that kind of scam, to get convictions, and to stop the assault on Canada's immigration borders. I think the Hon. Member knows that. I am not quite sure why he said what he said.

There is an argument on the constitutionality of some of the provisions in Bill C-84 and Bill C-55. These two pieces of legislation were dealt with by this House on an emergency basis last summer. They were stalled in the Senate month after month after month.

My experience goes back to June of 1985 when we got into a real clear understanding of the refugee situation. We were dealing in this Chamber with a piece of legislation designed to increase the strength of the number of people in the Immigration Appeal Board so they could deal with the reunification of family members, the real immigration side, and the assault on refugee claims by bogus claimants. We were delayed by the New Democratic Party and the Liberal Party. We have had this since June of 1985. Every time the Government tries to do something positive to straighten out the situation, to clear up the difference between bogus claimants and real refugees, to really help refugees and to help the family reunification process, we get delays.

What is the Hon. Member asking us to do? The very first thing out of the box in his original question and again today, is a 60-day delay. Well 60 days more delay will invite more scams. This Government says no to more scams. Let us get on with it. Let us get the deal back from the Senate, get it in place and start to clear up the mess.

TAX REFORM—REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT PAY INTEREST ON INCOME TAX COLLECTED

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, on March 18, I pointed out to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) that the Government had just given itself an interest-free loan of over $1 billion. This is because, under what the Government is pleased to call tax reform, income tax has been reduced for Canadians since January 1, 1988, in some ways, but they will not see this reduction in their pay cheques until July 1988.

I noted as well that the Conservative chairman of the finance committee had been quoted as calling this situation a rip-off. The Minister did not say that he would do the correct thing by paying the interest on this loan back to Canadians. Instead, he responded that this situation exists for various administrative reasons.

I would like to point out again today that this rip-off is just one of many rip-offs imposed by this Government since it came to power. It is just one of others that the Government has tried to keep rather quiet about.

Another silent tax grab is the Government's requirement that employers deduct their income tax, unemployment insurance premiums and Canada Pension Plan contributions and remit them weekly instead of fortnightly. That was increased from once a month in January of 1987. This gives the Government a one-time increase in its cash flow for this year of $1.6 billion.

The Government made another silent tax grab in the 1985 Budget when it deindexed the income tax system. By doing this, the Government has made inflation work for it. Each year since 1985, the rate of increase of benefits such as family allowance has not kept pace with inflation. Neither has the rate at which taxpayers could deduct certain allowances for income tax purposes. This year alone, as a result of deindexation, taxpayers had to pay an extra $750 million to the Government.

I would ask again, when will the Government admit to Canadians that it is at their expense that the smoke-and-mirrors routine that is miscalled tax reform is being carried out?

Mr. Murray Cardiff (Parliamentary Secretary to Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, with reference to the question posed by the Hon. Member with regard to the Government paying interest on income tax collected as a result of the tax reform measures, I would offer the following comments.

In June of 1987 when the White Paper on tax reform was tabled in the House, we were aware that we would not introduce the detailed Ways and Means Motion early enough to change the withholding tables for January 1, 1988, given the time necessary for detailed consultation and review by the parliamentary committee. Therefore, it follows that the earliest date for adjustment to the withholding tables could not be before July 1, 1988. Accordingly, the changes were scheduled to take effect with respect to withholdings on salary and wages paid after July 1, 1988.

It would have been difficult to provide for earlier implementation of these measures for the following reasons. The Government's fiscal year runs from April 1 to March 31. Government expenditures for the year to March 31, 1988, have been based in part upon the revenues collected under existing regulations. In addition, the current fiscal framework was one of the fundamental premises upon which the personal tax rate reductions, introduced as part of the tax reform process, were based.

If such an approach had not been adopted, the reduction in tax rates for 1988 may not have been as significant. The legislation has not yet been introduced to the House and there is no authority which would permit the withholding of lesser amounts. In addition, while the draft legislation respecting the tax reform proposals has just been made public, there may be changes made to the legislation as a result of further input from the public and the finance committee.

While most taxpayers will benefit from the lowering of rates through increased take-home pay, some taxpayers may also have an increase in tax liability due to the elimination of certain tax preferences and the restriction of certain other deductions. This situation is no different from any other year in which relieving measures are introduced in the Budget.

While these measures take effect in a particular year, employers will deduct amounts from salary and wages based upon the tax tables issued as of January of that year. The taxpayer will not receive the benefit until he files his return. Interest is paid in the normal course on refunds paid after April 30.

In closing, it is only reasonable that there be a transitional period for the implementation of such major tax revisions and it is commendable that this has been kept to a short period of six months.

The House resumed from Thursday, April 14, consideration of the motion of Mrs. McDougall that Bill C-121, an Act to authorize the reorganization and divestiture of Eldorado Nuclear Limited and to amend certain Acts in consequence thereof, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Western Arctic (Mr. Nickerson) that this question be now put.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, several of my colleagues wish to speak on this Bill. This was a type of underhanded manoeuvre of the Government, on a Friday, of all days—never on a Friday used to be the rule around here.

I hope that the Government will reconsider. We are down to 10 minute speeches, and obviously at some time today we will be forcing a vote on the Bill. It is not necessary to do it now. Today is a short day, and if there are four or five people who wish to speak at 10 minutes each, it is no handicap or hazard to the Government.

I would hope, Sir, that we could avoid this type of manoeuvring, if the Government wishes to have lots of co-operation from the opposition Parties.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member for Spadina (Mr. Heap) on debate.

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, I do wish to speak on this Bill, and I am glad to have the chance today. This is a Bill to privatize Eldorado Nuclear Limited, a small firm renamed and taken over by the Government in 1942. Since then it has been the recipient of a vast amount of government subsidies. The Government has pumped taxpayers' money into this firm. In spite of that, the firm still has debts which the Government is willing to pay off as a favour to any prospective buyer.

It is a bad deal, financially, but there is another aspect that is even worse that I will address shortly. First, I wish to review the generally bad aspects of the deal. This deal is arranged in such a manner that the public sector will be taking the debts, while the private sector takes the profits. This is what is traditionally known as socialism for the rich. Many corporations that will indirectly benefit from this, and many individuals who will directly benefit from this, pay no tax. We do not know exactly who until the time comes, but we do know that they will be among those rich people in Canada who pay no tax, and they will be subsidized by the working people, small business people, and farmers of Canada who pay taxes. As I said, large multimillion dollar debts of this company will be taken over by the Government after the agreement to sell this company to private owners for their private profit. That is one problem.

Another problem is that the safety regulations, which have not been enforced as well as they ought to be in the case of a public corporation, will be much less enforced in the case of a private corporation. I am speaking of safety to the workers, safety to the neighbouring public, and safety to the environment. The sale of this company into private hands will put the industry in the position of becoming a much greater physical risk to those who work there, to those who live nearby, and to the air, water, and soil of our country. Those are the general problems.

What I want to speak of particularly is that this company, Eldorado, has been from the outset part of a scam. I am not referring only to the cartel for price fixing, of which it was part and on which the evidence was gathered by the Department of Justice; 75,000 documents of evidence gathered and kept secret until this day. Nevertheless, clearly there is no question that Eldorado and other companies in the cartel, Canadian and international, were guilty of price fixing. The matter was never brought to court, because Eldorado during this time has been a Crown corporation and was therefore able to misuse or to abuse the royal prerogative to avoid being sued for its violation of the laws of Canada. I am speaking of a still more serious scam, and that is a scam in the relationship between nuclear power and nuclear weapons.

I refer partly to an address recorded in The Gazette for April 14, 1988 by Helen Caldicott who says to us through the audience she addressed in Montreal:

> You are the root of half the arsenal of nuclear bombs in the world.

This is what she told her audience of about 900 people at St. Patrick's Church in Montreal. She goes on to say that if we continue with the proposed nuclear powered subs, we will be extending our guilt for the proliferation of the threat of nuclear devastation either by accident or by war.

What happened was that in the 1940s Canada helped the United States to build the atomic bombs that were tested in the U.S., mostly on non-humans, not deliberately on humans though some American and some Canadian soldiers have suffered severely from the radiation to which they were exposed there, but they were tested cold-bloodedly on the people of Hiroshima and Nagasaki. Canada helped by providing uranium and by providing expertise. This was done primarily through Eldorado. Canada for many years, then, has sold uranium to the United States.

When the United States uranium industry became protectionist and objected to the importing of Canadian uranium, the Canadian Government under Lester Pearson became more peace loving and said: "We won't sell uranium except for peaceful purposes". They never explained from that date to this how you identify a uranium atom or a uranium molecule or a uranium shipment, for that matter, when it has been stockpiled with uranium from other mines, or how you tell which one was used for peaceful purposes only and which one was used to produce weapons grade plutonium for bombs.

At the time this scam was promoted by Eisenhower, the former General commanding U.S. Forces in Europe and later recycled as President of Columbia University and then as President of the United States. In 1953, when Eisenhower spoke to the United Nations General Assembly, he undertook to announce a new nuclear policy for the U.S. He proposed, and I quote, "to take this weapon out of the hands of the soldiers and put it into the hands of those who will know how to strip its military casing and adapt it to the arts of peace". He was going to establish a new international agency called "Atoms for Peace". They were going to provide abundant electrical power, growing roses in the Antarctic, and so on and so forth. It was quite a paradise that he described. He assured us that this Atoms for Peace would "diminish the potential destructive power of the world's atomic stockpiles", and a further quote that they would be "entirely eliminating the use of atomic energy for destructive purposes and promoting its use for industrial and humanitarian purposes".

Canada, through Eldorado, went along with this project disguised as a pipe-dream for Utopia with cheap, safe power. Canada helped to set up the International Atomic Energy Agency, which facilitated the sale of uranium and overlooked the serious dangers of uranium from Canada and other uranium producing countries being used to produce nuclear weapons.

During these years Canada prided itself on not manufacturing or storing nuclear weapons, except for a few years when we had the Bomarc nuclear warhead here. Some Canadians were making plenty of money. Other Canadians were subsidizing the industry from the beginning, but the owners of uranium industries were making plenty of money by selling uranium to the United States and to other bomb-producing countries, including even the Soviet Union.

There was also the project of producing the CANDU reactor. The CANDU was a flop commercially. It has had to be constantly subsidized by the taxpayers; again the profits go mainly to the owners directly or indirectly, to the financiers, to the banks and others that lend the money to this money losing, weapons producing industry. I call it "weapons producing" because even though no Canadian agency has manufactured the bombs, we have been an important part of the American bomb manufacturing industry.

This has been well documented in a book called Canada and the Nuclear Arms Race, particularly a section by Gordon Edwards, a professor of mathematics, called "Canada's Nuclear Industry and the Myth of the Peaceful Atom". He points out that when, for example, there was concern about proliferation of nuclear weaponry into Argentina through the use of Canada's CANDU reactor and materials associated with it, there was a high level discussion and there was an inquiry, not a public inquiry but a judiciously private inquiry. Edwards says in the book, and I quote:

> The nuclear review was carried out by an interdepartmental committee of government officials, with assistance and advice from AECL—

That is Atomic Energy of Canada Limited. That is to say not the regulatory board but a corporation interested in producing and selling atomic energy. He went on to say:

• (1020)

> —Eldorado Nuclear Limited, the Atomic Energy Control Board, and the Canadian Nuclear Association—all organizations which are dedicated to the promotion of nuclear technology. However—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I regret to interrupt the Hon. Member but his time has expired.

[Translation]

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, I am taking part in this debate because I feel that from now until June, the Government will use delaying tactics of this kind to put an end to debates in the House, to shorten them, and perhaps even to silence some opposition Members who would like to speak on certain subjects.

I will remind Hon. Members that yesterday in the House, I raised a series of issues that the Government must address, subjects as important as the privatization of Air Canada and abortion. So the Government must present the legislation as soon as possible if we are to study these issues seriously in the House by the end of June.

[English]

In speaking to the motion before us, which motion is that the question be now put, I would like to state that the Liberal caucus does not like this tactic of the Government. Nevertheless, it has been done now. We hope that the Government will not make a habit of it and will allow for the exercise of free speech without having to go to such extremes.

Bill C-121, an Act to authorize the reorganization and divestiture of Eldorado Nuclear Limited and to amend certain Acts in consequence thereof, with reservations from the Liberal caucus, will receive our affirmative vote. That is the case basically because this Bill seems to be a step in the right direction, and we favour the move.

I must tell Hon. Members that for political reasons and from a political perspective I personally may have some difficulties with this merger. It is a gift to Premier Grant Devine and his Saskatchewan buddies. I am not very inclined at this time to be very nice to Mr. Devine because he is not being very nice to me. Therefore with that reservation, a personal one, and without putting that reservation before my vote, I will stand in my place to support the Bill. I hope that Premier Devine will do the same in his province, stand up and support some of the things for which we all fight, that is, basic fundamental rights in Canada, and give generously to his people.

The assets of Eldorado are valued at about $915.9 million while the assets of Saskatchewan Mining and Development Corporation, which is the company with which Eldorado will be merged, are $973.2 million. The Government of Canada will have a 38.5 per cent share of the new company while Saskatchewan will have a 61.5 per cent share.

The new company will issue promissory notes valued at 40 per cent of fixed assets to cover all the debt owed to the Saskatchewan Government, and $230 million of the $570 million owed to the Government of Canada.

It is indeed a gift to the Province of Saskatchewan. We are covering the debt by doing this and helping Saskatchewan balance its books. However, the price for which the Government of Canada is selling Eldorado nevertheless appears low to some of us.

Some stock brokerage companies, in particular Burns Fry, which is assisting the Government with this sale, has explained to us some of the difficulties of placing a value on the Saskatchewan Mining and Development Corporation and Eldorado Nuclear, which is a federally owned company. The two companies were evaluated from a discounted cash flow basis rather than from an assets basis. SMDC had lower operating costs, partially as a result of lower royalties. Eldorado was also determined to be lower in value as a result of its less profitable refinery business.

We know that the product that the Canadian uranium industry exports makes Canada one of the leading producers and exporters of uranium. I have statistics with which I will not bore the House but which state that in 1987 Canadian output and exports each exceeded 12,000 tonnes of uranium, surpassing the five year highs set in 1986. The value of Canadian uranium production exceeded $1 billion in 1987.

One of the points that I would like to touch upon in the few minutes available to me is that the head office of the new merged company will be moved to Saskatchewan. This means that there will be 50 employees who will be without jobs. However, if we are to believe some of the press reports, there will be some efforts made by the new merged privatized company to look very attentively at the possibility of offering to these people future employment if at all possible. I hope that they will be treated fairly and justly and that they will not suffer from this decision and from this transfer to Saskatchewan.

I hope that if among these employees there are francophones, they will be able to go to Saskatchewan, have their kids educated in Saskatchewan en français, s'il vous plaît, and have access to their courts as well as access to the legislature, in French as well as in English because of course that is a fact of life in Saskatchewan.

Having made these few remarks I would like to say to the House once again that we indeed support Bill C-121. I do not think that we have any further speakers on it.

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Mr. Speaker, we in the New Democratic Party oppose the sale of Eldorado Nuclear Limited because in our opinion it is a bad deal. It is a bad deal for Canadians. I have a whole number of concerns. I have listened to the speeches over the last several days on this Bill. I think anyone watching this debate will readily recognize that there are many facets to what the Government is attempting to do here. One of those with which I have a great deal of concern is the environmental implications of this deal.

Considering the environmental aspects of Bill C-121 I think a greater consideration should be given to the situation of Eldorado Nuclear now and the wider implications of uranium mining which the new merged company will encounter. Eldorado Nuclear has severe environmental problems with which to deal, especially at its Port Hope, Ontario, refinery, and at its northern Saskatchewan mine sites. Essentially the Eldorado Port Hope dump site is full.

The situation has been summarized this way by research staff from the Library of Parliament. The researchers have pointed out that the effluent treatment process at the Port Hope refinery produces approximately 600 tonnes per year of solid waste which is mainly calcium oxide containing calcium fluoride and uranium at 500 to 1000 parts per thousand.

This material and much smaller quantities of other smaller wastes that contain metallic impurities, including arsenic, are dumped at a licensed site near Port Hope, the Granby dump site. This depository is close to being full and yet no alternate site or plan has been selected. Eldorado has been waiting for the federal Government to decide what should be done with this dump, and presumably the new company will also wait for direction.

• (1030)

Any plan that requires the removal of the material to a new site will be very expensive, mainly in terms of transportation, and according to the details released with the merger plans, the costs, possibly up to as much as $100 million, will be borne mainly by the federal Government.

That is according to the research staff of the Parliamentary Library, and I think all Hon. Members have a great respect for the integrity of the research done by the staff in the research branch.

The resolution of Port Hope is mainly to dump the responsibility onto the federal Government which will pay the bulk of the costs. In our estimation, the first $2 million will be borne by the company and the next $98 million or 23.5 per cent will be borne by the company, with 76.5 per cent of the cost being borne by the federal Government. Any cost above $100 million will be borne entirely by the federal Government. I defy anyone to say that that is a good deal for the taxpayers of Canada who will end up absorbing these costs.

Why is there such a sweetheart deal for a company being purchased as it is? Companies are normally purchased with assets and liabilities, but some of the key liabilities in this transaction have been taken over by the federal Government. We must ask why this is so. The answer is simply that the Government is desperately anxious for a good share price on the flotation of the new company's stock. What better way to achieve that than for the federal Government to assume the liability of environmental responsibilities and Eldorado's enormous debt?

Eldorado's environmental difficulties do not end with the dump sites. There are further problems in Port Hope and in Saskatchewan's mine mills. Again, according to the researchers from the Library of Parliament, the continued operation of the Port Hope facility, especially at present high rates of production, will generate considerable levels of solid and liquid waste. With the proximity of the plant to both Lake Ontario and the town site, the new company would do its image a great deal of good by committing itself to efforts to recycle or clean up and sell all such wastes. No mention has been made of such an approach, according to the researchers.

Clean-up problems exist at the mills in Saskatchewan as well. The tailings that are produced contain small amounts of uranium, radium and other elements. Very good effluent treatment is required on an ongoing basis, and a thorough understanding of the principles involved have to be taught to the personnel involved. Historically, such understanding has been suspect at best.

The two areas I have just pointed out have been identified as problems which the Government has yet to acknowledge. This leads to the suspicion that the Government feels that the less said about environmental aspects of uranium production, the better. This is unfortunate for a Government that assumed office with some expectations that it would examine the inherent difficulties of the nuclear fuel cycle.

Although there is considerable public support for such an inquiry, there has not been one. We in the New Democratic Party have formed our own inquiry headed by the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Birds Hill (Mr. Blaikie) and the Hon. Member for Vancouver—Kingsway (Mr. Waddell).

At this time when the Government is backing away from involvement with uranium, it would be an appropriate time to review the issues involved with uranium mining, particularly in light of recent experience in Canada where new high-grade ore mines have developed in recent years and are likely to require both novel and sophisticated technologies. Similarly, Atomic Energy control regulations have been under review for a number of years. A public inquiry could reveal the problems of mining uranium at this time.

I think this issue begs that I ask some of the environmental questions associated with uranium mining which are grouped around three themes: occupational safety for miners, public health hazards from mine waste and disposal and the propriety of producing material for possible use in nuclear weapons.

As I pointed out earlier, the New Democratic Party opposes this deal because it is a bad deal. It is a bad deal on environmental grounds and it is certainly a bad deal for the taxpayers of Canada. I say that because the deal is structured so that the public sector takes the risks and obligations and the private sector gets the profits, profits not only from the commercial activities of the company merged from Eldorado and the Saskatchewan Mining Development Corporation but also from the heavy public subsidies which are given the uranium mining industry in the form of favourable taxation, marketing arrangements and sweetheart contracts.

The House has been given no assurances from the Government that it recognizes the sacrifice of the public sector and the public interest in this deal. It is clear that this deal has been structured so that the Government can say that privatization works, just look at the share price. However, of all sectors of industry, I cannot think of another that is less appropriate for privatization than the nuclear industry. In my opinion, it displays an ideological approach that defies any kind of logic or responsibility to the public which is supposed to be represented by the Government.

In order for this stock flotation deal to succeed, and that is all it really is, the public sector will underwrite the risks by assuming the debt of Eldorado Nuclear and Saskatchewan Mining Development Corporation and the federal Government will assume the further liability of Eldorado's nuclear waste problems at Port Hope at a cost of perhaps some $75 million. This take-back of debt has been described by the financial advisers to the Government, Burns Fry, another respected organization, as being necessary for the flotation. Eldorado's debts are substantial. They are in the range of $550 million.

The federal Government will receive from the newly merged company about $250 million, leaving $300 million that must be made up in the sale of shares in the new company before the Government breaks even on its debt obligations alone. This is to say nothing of the cumulative investment which has been made in Eldorado in the form of government equity.

The Government needs a high share price or else it will wind up with a brick in its hands, or something like a BCRIC, the B.C. resource privatization under the Bennett Government which issued shares at $5, shares which now trade for about 80 cents or 90 cents.

There are a whole number of concerns to which the Government has not responded in the House in its defence of this Bill. I am rather disappointed that more Members from the government side have not spoken out on behalf of their own constituents' interest in this matter. I am sure the concerns I have expressed are shared by many Canadians, regardless of where they live in Canada.

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to rise to participate in the debate on this very important piece of legislation. My colleague from Beaches has set out in his usual eloquent manner a number of reasons, both environmental and financial, for our opposition to this legislation. He has noted that government Members seem somewhat reluctant to defend this provision, and I am saddened as well to note that the Official Opposition seems to be supporting this legislation. Indeed, I suppose that this is not terribly surprising because too often we have seen that the initial suggestion for other privatization ventures by this Government came from the Liberal Party of Canada.

We know that the Conservative Government, in its obsession with the private sector and its contempt for a strong and vibrant public sector accountable to the people of Canada, is now in the process of selling off, in a sense, Canada's heritage as a nation. I speak of Crown corporations such as Air Canada where we had the announcement earlier this week that the Conservative Government intends to sell it off. We have put the Government on notice that we will do everything in our power to block this sale, which is not only wrong in principle but which is opposed by the great majority of Canadians from coast to coast.

I would point out that among those who oppose the sale of Air Canada are federal Progressive Conservative supporters. A majority of them are saying to their Government: Back off. Air Canada is running well. We are concerned that smaller communities should not be denied effective transportation and if it is privatized, then there is a real risk that both service and safety will deteriorate.

I mentioned the fact that, sadly, it was the Liberal Party that started this trend towards privatization. Indeed, it was the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy), then Minister of Transport, who suggested, I believe in March of 1984, that the time had come to privatize Air Canada. However, not only will we in the NDP do everything in our power to block the sale of this vital Crown corporation, we have also said that following the next federal election an NDP Government will take Air Canada back into public hands. That is our commitment to the people of Canada.

We approached this legislation with deep concern from a number of perspectives, including environmental and sound financial management, from the perspective of those who work in the industry, and certainly from the perspective of a movement which has historically argued for a strong public sector, particularly in essential areas of the economy. Let us not forget that it was in the 1940s that the federal Government recognized the importance of nuclear energy by first expropriating the assets of Eldorado Mines and then using the declaratory power in the then British North America Act to take jurisdiction over this resource. It was precisely that action which underlined the seriousness with which nuclear energy was regarded and certainly should still be regarded.

We as New Democrats also believe we must break the cycle of nuclear proliferation. The risks inherent in continued nuclear proliferation at all stages are very great. My colleague from Beaches spoke of the concern over nuclear wastes and the fact that the Port Hope facility is almost full. As a society we still have not come up with a method for safely disposing of nuclear wastes.

As well, we are concerned about the health of those who work in the industry. There are serious occupational health and safety concerns that arise. That is partly why two of the major unions who represent workers at Eldorado and Saskatchewan Mining Development Corporation are fundamentally opposed to this legislation. I am speaking of the Energy and Chemical Workers Union that represents employees at the Cluff Lake Mine in northern Saskatchewan in which SMDC holds a majority share, and the United Steelworkers, who represent employees at the Key Lake Mine, the Rabbit Lake Mine, and three locals of the Eldorado uranium refinery at Port Hope. Those people who work in the field are asking the Government to back off on its ideological obsession with privatization, with paying off its friends in the private sector.

We say that this matter is of concern on environmental grounds also. We say it is a concern to the workers. We also say it is a bad deal economically. Why? Because the deal is structured in such a way that the public sector takes all of the real risks and obligations, and the private sector gets the profits. It is the same old story that Tommy Douglas used to tell so effectively, and we are seeing it again in this legislation. For example, we have just learned, I believe it was in this morning's Globe and Mail, that the profits of SMDC have doubled. The company recorded a $60.3 million profit in 1987, almost double what it made the previous year. What is happening to that company? It is being sold off to the private sector.

I am a Member of Parliament from British Columbia and I remember a similar sale of public assets by the British Columbia Resources Investment Corporation. I remember the Premier of British Columbia telling us that this was an example of private enterprise at work, of the market system at its finest. If that is an example of the market system at its finest, God help us, because it was a disaster for the ordinary people of British Columbia who, after all, owned all of the assets in those corporations in the first place.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, we in the NDP support a large public sector in Canada. For example, we called for the nationalization of a Canadian bank. This would allow us some influence on the banks' policies throughout Canada. It would also allow us to exert greater influence on financial policies in Canada. This is not a very radical policy. All, or almost all, countries in the western world, including France, Italy, West Germany, Belgium and many others, have a public stake in the financial sector.

And I take this opportunity to correct the suggestion made in an article in today's La Presse by Mario Fontaine, who suggests that the NDP's policy is to nationalize all the banks in Canada. That is not at all the case, Mr. Speaker, but we are in favor of nationalizing one bank, as many other countries in the world have already done.

[English]

My time, Mr. Speaker—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Has expired.

Mr. Robinson: —has expired. Thank you.

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Mr. Speaker, I am delighted to have the opportunity that the Hon. Member for Calgary West (Mr. Hawkes) gave me to speak again. I appreciate that very much. I hope he continues to use that kind of strategy and tactic in the conduct of the business of the House.

We in the NDP have no problem with the merging of two Crown corporations, Eldorado Nuclear and the Saskatchewan Mining Development Corporation. Eldorado is mainly in the refining end of the business with some mining, and SMDC is in the mining business in the main. However, the Government then says it will privatize that merged company and turn it over to private investors via the stock market. With the shape which the stockmarket is in, this is perhaps a stupid time to be making share offerings for Eldorado and Air Canada which would amount to something in the order of $400 million to $500 million. The offering will either fail or the shares will go for a pittance, which means that the taxpayers are again taken to the cleaners.

I would like to point out another example of the poor treatment which the taxpayers get at the hands of the Government. The people of Canada invested hundreds of millions of dollars in Eldorado. The people of Saskatchewan probably invested hundreds of millions of dollars in the Saskatchewan Mining Development Corporation.

We all know that over the last number of years the uranium market has been soft, to put it mildly. In fact, prices were down so badly that we could hardly give the stuff away. However, things have improved. As was reported in today's Globe and Mail, the Saskatchewan Mining Development Corporation had a net profit last year of $60.3 million, double the profit of the year before, and it reduced its long-term debt from $600 million to around $315 million over the last three or four years. However, it still has long-term debts in excess of $300 million. Eldorado Nuclear has debts of about $300 million.

The pattern is the same in the case of the Saskatchewan Mining Development Corporation. Every time the taxpayers get a chance to get a return on their investment, or to get their money back, the free enterprise nonsense comes out from under the rocks, the Tories come out of the woodwork and say that because it is making a profit it should be sold to their private enterprise friends.

You cannot win with the Tories. If a Crown corporation loses money, ergo Crown corporations are bad in principle and in general. They are terrible, they do not work, they are inefficient, et cetera. If a Crown corporation makes a profit, it is equally bad, according to the Tories. The Government and the taxpayers have no business being in an enterprise which should be in the hands of the private sector. You cannot win with these birds.

That kind of convoluted thinking and double standard set out by the Government over nearly the last four years cause many people to believe that the Government does not know what it is doing, that it does not know what it wants to do or how it wants to do it. The only thing the Government has been consistent about is the narrow ideological binge that it is on in this case, the case of Air Canada, and a number of other matters.

In addition to being taken again by the privatization of a company which will be making a profit and being denied a chance to get a return on their investment or to get their money back, this Bill saddles the taxpayers with $300 million of the debt of Eldorado Nuclear. That is not the first time the Government has done that. You and I, Mr. Speaker, could be good capitalists and free enterprisers too if someone would offer us a company on the cheap without any of the debts and all of the assets.

Why should the taxpayer be victimized by the Government's headlong plunge into turning an industry over to the private sector when the long-term future of the investment is good and the opportunity exists for the taxpayers to get their money back and maybe even make a profit on it? The Conservatives want the taxpayer to pay both ways.

If you were in the private sector and went to the stock exchange in Toronto, Vancouver, Montreal or New York and announced a share offering in a private company, announcing as well that you were going to keep a majority interest in the company and instruct your members of the board of directors to vote with the minority private shareholders, they would laugh you out of the place. You would not be able to give a share away.

However, that is the methodology of the Tories in their announcement about Air Canada. If the Government sells 45 per cent of the shares of the company to the private sector it still retains, on behalf of the taxpayers, 55 per cent of the ownership of Air Canada. The Minister says that the Government will instruct the government members on the board of directors to vote the majority stock with the minority stockholders. If you were to do that in a private company you would be fired the next day. No group of a majority of shareholders would hold still for that kind of nonsense.

However, that is the way the Government is treating the taxpayers. We think that the deal itself and the way the public is being treated by the Government is so fundamentally bad that the Bill should be withdrawn. The Bill should go back to the drawing board. Those two Crown corporations should simply be merged into one and the taxpayers should be given an opportunity to get their money back.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, I should think not. I know that you yourself have quite enjoyed the debate that has been entered into with particular vigour over the last couple of days on a matter of increasingly obvious importance. I am sure that you enjoyed our examination yesterday of the ideological basis of this legislation which would merge the Saskatchewan Mining Development Corporation and Eldorado Nuclear. I am sorry to see that the Member for Calgary West (Mr. Hawkes) is not here to continue the exploration of the faults underlying this Bill.

Yesterday we said that this Bill was a very nice example of the triumphs of ideology in that Eldorado Nuclear dramatized many of the difficulties and the failures of the Government to consider all of the ramifications of actions that it takes under the umbrella of ideology.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): It being eleven o'clock, pursuant to Standing Order 19(4), the House will now proceed to Statements by Members pursuant to Standing Order 21.

TRANSPORT

NATIONAL CAPITAL REGION—BRIDGE REQUIREMENTS

Mrs. Claudy Mailly (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, in 1984 after this Government was elected, Benoît Bouchard, as Minister of State (Transport), asked me to identify my region's transportation needs. I organized a meeting with him for the mayors of Buckingham, Gatineau and the Chairman of Société d'Aménagement de l'Outaouais, in order to explain to the Minister the needs of my riding and the issue of bridges, a matter that had been neglected for over fifty years.

The NCC, which is responsible for the National Capital Region which includes my riding, was asked to do a feasibility study. Subsequently, the NCC decided to consider the bridge requirements of Aylmer and Hull as well. This week, the consulting firm hired by the NCC caused considerable concern and anger among our Quebec communities as result of its cavalier approach to this study. We demand that the people in our respective communities be formally consulted as soon as possible. They may be afraid of the truth, Mr. Speaker, but there is no escaping hard facts. Taxpayers want to have their say. We cannot tolerate development in our area unless the people, through their elected representatives, are allowed to establish their priorities in this respect.

RADIO-CANADA

IMPORTANCE OF RETAINING ANIMATION BRANCH

M. Ian Waddell (Vancouver—Kingsway): While senior Radio-Canada executives are dancing around Frédéric Back and the Department of Communications is celebrating because of the Oscar, in the wings we can get a glimpse of how Radio-Canada is dismantling its animation department.

I may remind Hon. Members that the network sold one of the two cameras used to make animated films, and that the Department will no longer be authorized to make fiction films.

We must not forget that most of the international recognition received by Radio-Canada in the past was based on the quality of the productions of its animation department. We see here one of the disastrous results of the Government's budget cuts in cultural affairs.

[English]

Frédéric Back and his colleagues in the animation department at Radio-Canada have won two Oscars in six years. I call on the Minister of Communications (Miss MacDonald) to start funding the CBC in such a way that future generations of Canadian artists will have the opportunity to match Mr. Back's achievement.

Mr. Speaker: I am afraid the Hon. Member's time has expired.

THE ECONOMY

EFFECTS OF GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mr. Jim Caldwell (Essex—Kent): Mr. Speaker, Canadians are becoming more and more convinced that the present Government is providing good government.

Canadians have sifted through the rhetoric of the NDP and have found it lacking in substance. Canadians see an Official Opposition devoid of policies and direction, and we are watching a Liberal Government in Ontario increase spending by 10 per cent per year while in good economic times. It has even threatened higher taxes in its upcoming budget.

This Government's record of job creation is unprecedented. The unemployment rate in Ontario is at its lowest in 14 years. Canadians are saying that they do not want to return to double digit inflation, double digit interest rates, a double digit unemployment rate, and runaway deficits. Canadians want good government and they are getting it.

OFFICIAL LANGUAGES

SASKATCHEWAN LANGUAGE BILL—POSITION OF QUÉBEC PREMIER

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, how can Premier Bourassa of Québec condone Saskatchewan Bill 2 when every language minority group in the country says that this Bill is a step backward for language justice? Is it because Premier Bourassa wants to hand out similar treatment to the anglophone minority in Québec once the Supreme Court renders its judgment on bilingual signs under Québec Bill 101?

Saskatchewan Bill 2 cuts back on francophone rights which the Supreme Court of Canada said existed in Saskatchewan prior to 1905, and the sign provisions of Bill 101 cut back on rights held by Québec Anglophones for over 100 years. Both measures are contrary to the spirit of the Canadian Constitution, the Meech Accord, and federal Bill C-72.

In these circumstances, I urge Premier Bourassa and Devine to adopt a spirit of tolerance, generosity, and fairness with respect to their language minorities and to amend their language Bills accordingly.

GOVERNMENT APPOINTMENTS

REVIEW PROCESS—POSITION OF ONTARIO PREMIER

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): Mr. Speaker, yesterday's announcement by the Minister of Justice (Mr. Hnatyshyn) concerning the establishment of review committees for federal judicial appointments is another step in the right direction toward an open and public appointments process. As you know, appointments to federal boards and agencies have been subject to a parliamentary review for almost three years now.

Unfortunately, the same cannot be said for the Province of Ontario where Premier David Peterson has rejected a recommendation signed by some of his own Liberal members of the Legislature calling for the establishment of a similar review process for appointments to provincial boards and agencies. Instead, Premier Peterson has opted to consult opposition Party Leaders in private in connection with only a few appointments.

What we need at all levels of government is not a secret process but an open one; a process in which all positions are publicly advertised and applied for, and where all positions are subject to a parliamentary review.

NATIONAL PAROLE BOARD

PRISON INMATE'S HALFWAY HOUSE APPLICATION DENIED

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, I rise to speak out on a grave injustice which has been done to the son of a couple who live in my constituency in Burnaby. His name is Sonny McLaren. He is a man who has served over 12 years on a sentence of 61-1/2 years for breaking into a Masonic lodge in the United States, with no injury involved, and stealing less than $100.

As I say, he served over 12 years. Recently, though, he has had solid support from correction officials and parole officers and from his family to move into a halfway house in Vancouver, operated by the Salvation Army. Yesterday, the National Parole Board dashed Sonny McLaren's hopes. He has been treated in an appalling fashion by the National Parole Board. It ignored all of the recommendations of those who have been working with him.

This is the same National Parole Board that lets out a Foster but keeps in a Sonny McLaren. I say shame on the National Parole Board for its treatment of Sonny McLaren in these circumstances.

I call on Ole Ingstrup, Chairman of the National Parole Board, to review this cruel decision very quickly and to grant Sonny McLaren's appeal in order to allow him to get on with his life.

AIR SAFETY

TRIBUTE TO WORK OF CIVIL AVIATION TRIBUNAL

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, the mandate of the Civil Aviation Tribunal established June 1, 1986, pursuant to the recommendations of the Dubin inquiry into aviation safety in Canada, is to provide the aviation community with an independent appeal system with regard to enforcement decisions and penalties assessed by the Ministry of Transport under the Aeronautics Act.

The Tribunal is now bringing natural justice to aviation matters. Under the chairmanship of Mr. J. W. Snow, the Tribunal has done an excellent job disposing of some 127 cases in 1987, its first full year of operation. Both the aviation fraternity and the Ministry of Transport are served well by this independent tribunal.

HUMAN RIGHTS

GUATEMALA—RETURN OF HUMAN RIGHTS ADVOCATES

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, this weekend a group of Guatemalan nationals will be returning to their country for the first time. These are a group of individuals who have valiantly fought for the cause of human rights in their own country. In the last several years they have been forced into exile and have been speaking and trying to interest other countries in the plight of their colleagues and friends in their own country.

This weekend they will be returning for the first time to give test to the new Guatemalan Government's commitment to open up human rights and provide for a more beneficial environment. They will be accompanied by a group of international observers, including a clergyman from Canada. I think it is essential that other countries take note of this very important action both as a way of providing protection and also giving testimony to their valiant and courageous act.

I call upon our Department of External Affairs to ensure that the observation monitoring of our own Department will be carefully directed toward Guatemala this weekend, and it may want to contact the Guatemalan Government. Most important, I hope Members of this House will not only recognize the importance of this act of courage but also lend their support to this very initiative.

JUSTICE

APPOINTMENT OF JUDGES—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Gabriel Fontaine (Lévis): Mr. Speaker, for many years the Liberals appointed judges on a strictly partisan basis, almost like the Senate. Yesterday, our Government and our Minister of Justice (Mr. Hnatyshyn) put an end to this system of partisan appointments.

This Government is not only cleaning up patronage but also changing the system, so that once and for all on Parliament Hill, procedures will be open and crystal clear, so that competence will be the only basis for selection.

Under the Conservatives, Mr. Speaker, integrity is gaining ground on Parliament Hill.

SUSPENSION OF UNIONIZED WORKERS

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Mr. Speaker, last night on the evening shift at Canada Post's Alta Vista Terminal in Ottawa, 50 to 75 unionized workers were suspended. According to some reports, more than 90 per cent of the women on the shift were suspended. For the most part these women were suspended for having their purses in the work area.

Canada Post says it is doing this to protect the security of the mail. It already had the right to search purses of people entering or leaving the workplace. It already had the right to search lockers. The difference is that in the Marchment report that looked at the Post Office, Judge Marchment said people should only be searched if there were reasonable grounds to believe something was wrong.

The Post Office has gone much further. One woman was suspended because she wanted to keep her purse with medication in it. One man was suspended because he had a sports paper in his back pocket. One man was suspended for not putting his jacket in his locker even though, according to witnesses, the man had not been issued a locker.

The Post Office is being stupid and provocative. It already has the tools to deal with security. What it is trying to do is pick a fight with the union and abuse the workers. This is not the way to build a better Post Office.

NORTH ATLANTIC TREATY ORGANIZATION

CONTINUED CANADIAN PARTICIPATION

Mr. J. R. Ellis (Prince Edward—Hastings): Mr. Speaker, for the past few days the Canada-Europe Parliamentary Association has been hosting a delegation from the Western European Union which consists of members of the national Parliaments of Germany, Luxembourg, France, Belgium, Italy, Netherlands, Portugal, and the United Kingdom. The members of this very important group of European countries are most interested in our mutual defence, arms limitation, and other similar topics which impinge on the NATO alliance and on our countries individually.

These are our colleagues. These are our friends. These are our allies. In fact, most members of this House can trace their heritage to one of these countries.

I want to emphasize the policy of our Government that we will remain in NATO, that we will continue to enhance our presence in the alliance in Europe with men and material. To do less, to weaken our resolve in any way, would be to betray our friends, our colleagues, our allies, our forefathers. This we will not do.

WELFARE

CHANGES TO BRITISH COLUMBIA SYSTEM

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, I read with absolute shock and dismay the latest in the series of actions taken by the Premier of British Columbia who claims to be in support of the family. With his latest decision to cut off welfare for single mothers who have one child over the age of three and one-half months, or have two children under the age of 12 years, he is penalizing the children of this country.

The federal Government, through its CAP funding, does much to support welfare programs in various provinces. I call upon the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) to show some leadership in this area, to contact the Premier of British Columbia and tell him that this latest action is completely unacceptable. It is going to hurt the children of British Columbia and, what is more, if the Minister stands by silently and lets this happen, it is going to be hurtful to the children and the families of Canada.

FISHERIES

GEORGES BANK—GRANTING OF NEW OFFSHORE LOBSTER FISHING LICENCES OPPOSED

Mr. Gerald Comeau (South West Nova): Mr. Speaker, on January 1 the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. Siddon) issued four new offshore lobster licences giving access to the lobster grounds on Georges Bank. This decision has been widely criticized by the provincial Legislature, the inshore lobster fishermen, the community in general, and by this Member of Parliament.

The Minister must realize that the fishing industry is serious business in western Nova Scotia and my constituents do not take lightly to having decisions imposed upon them. The message from my constituents is very clear. The issuing of new offshore lobster licences was unacceptable in the past, and nothing has changed to make the decision acceptable. On this issue, I stand with my fishermen.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

ISRAEL—REPORTED USE OF TOXIC GASES AGAINST PALESTINIAN DEMONSTRATORS

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg—Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, in recent days there have been reports that Israeli forces may be using highly toxic gases in their efforts to control Palestinian demonstrations in the occupied territories. These gases are reported to cause severe abdominal pain and impaired muscle control, to cause miscarriages and even death. If these reports are accurate, the use of toxic gases represents a frightening development in the ongoing violence in the occupied territories and should be condemned by all Members of this House and, indeed, the entire world community.

Just as Canadians are outraged at the use of chemical weapons in the Iran-Iraq war, so should we be outraged if these most recent reports are true. The use of chemical weapons by any nation is morally abhorrent and has absolutely no place in a civilized world.

I urge the Government to endeavour vigorously to determine the accuracy of the recent reports and, if they are true, to speak out forcefully against the use of chemical weapons against Palestinians, or anyone else for that matter.

RESEARCH AND DEVELOPMENT

TAX MEASURES WELCOMED

Mr. Bill Tupper (Nepean—Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I was delighted with the announcement of the Government that Revenue Canada will carry into effect administrative measures and amendments to the Income Tax Act to expedite tax credit refunds for qualified Canadian controlled private corporations engaged in scientific research. The R and D tax credit provides assistance for corporations in those years in which they do not have any tax liability. This program has already stimulated over $1 billion of research activity in Canada.

The Government will issue refunds or partial refunds for R and D claims made by Canadian controlled private corporations, with established track records as research and development performers, within two months of their filing complete claims with the Department, in other words, prior to an audit of those companies. This will ensure that companies with a proven track record in R and D do not experience administrative delays in the processing of tax refunds.

These tax improvements will assist the cash flow of small firms and enable them to plan their long-term activities better. The announced tax amendments will mean a more stable research and development sector, more jobs for highly qualified Canadians, and a more competitive economy.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

UNITED STATES OMNIBUS TRADE BILL—APPLICATION OF COUNTERVAIL MEASURES

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, this question would have been directed to the Minister for International Trade, but in his absence I will put the question to the Deputy Prime Minister. On April 3, 1987, the Prime Minister of Canada told the Wall Street Journal: "Trade remedy laws can't apply to Canada. You can't have a free trade arrangement and expect the traditional laws of countervail to apply". But the omnibus trade legislation currently before the U.S. Congress contains 15 new protectionist moves by the United States which are harmful to Canada.

The Prime Minister said that the American countervail and anti-dumping laws could not apply. This new Bill applies 15 separate new measures. These new measures did not even exist when the Prime Minister signed his trade deal with the President. These measures include a redefinition of subsidy which is unfavourable to Canada, and a provision for monitoring our products which is unfavourable to Canada.

Could the Deputy Prime Minister tell us how his Minister for International Trade could say yesterday that the American Bill is, to use the Minister's words, "likely a Bill we can live with", when there are now rules in that Bill which are worse than when the Prime Minister signed his deal with the United States?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the Minister for International Trade I can say that I think he dealt with that question quite completely yesterday. I refer my hon. friend to page 14469 of Hansard. I think he did say that there have been continuing discussions going on between the administration and Congress with respect to the omnibus Trade Bill. Representations are certainly being made from Canadian authorities in an attempt to modify some of the areas of concern to us.

Obviously, the Government will conduct a detailed examination of the final version of the Bill to identify those provisions we consider to be inconsistent with the free trade agreement. That work is going on and I think the comments made by the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition are to some extent premature because the discussions are continuing.

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. John N.Turner (Leader of the Opposition): The document reintroduced in the House yesterday is a discussion consensus of the two Houses of the United States Congress. Mr. Yeutter, the United States trade representative, told the Minister for International Trade yesterday that the administration would accept that Bill. So we have a very serious situation on our hands.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, the argument made by the present Minister of International Trade that we need the trade agreement to protect us from the omnibus bill before the United States Congress is dishonest and false because this very bad U.S. law is included in the trade agreement under Section 1904. The Prime Minister therefore agreed that this bad law would be automatically included in his trade agreement. How can the Deputy Prime Minister continue to maintain, together with his minister, that Canada is sheltered from the American law and that the Prime Minister's agreement improves the situation when he knows very well that this argument is completely misleading? We are not protected. The Deputy Prime Minister knows this and so does his minister.

• (1120)

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, to the extent that there are any inconsistencies between the omnibus Trade Bill and the free trade agreement, certainly the Government of Canada will pursue those issues with vigour. It is our expectation that the United States of America will live up to the spirit of the free trade agreement, and that is what we will be working toward.

Whether or not we have an omnibus Trade Bill, there is clearly no doubt that Canadians will be much better off under a bilateral trading arrangement with the United States, as is proposed, to settle disputes by a neutral body on a binational basis, plus all the other inherent benefits that will accrue to Canadians.

I know that the Leader of the Opposition has consistently tried to discredit the agreement. I know that it is still his desire to rip it up. There are many millions of Canadians who hold a different view, and perhaps one of these days the Hon. Leader of the Opposition may have to reconsider his position.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, I think that we ought to give those millions of Canadians an opportunity to express their views at a very early opportunity in a general election.

UNITED STATES TRADE REMEDY LAWS

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): The Prime Minister said that U.S. trade remedy law should not apply to Canada, period. The unanimous view of the trade committee of the House of Commons, including Conservative Members, was that there should have been an exemption from this omnibus trade legislation. There is not. Yesterday the Minister retreated and outside the House stated that the Government could live with that Trade Bill.

Does the Deputy Prime Minister not understand the argument that the only purpose of any bilateral agreement was secure access to the American market? That meant an exemption from American trade remedy law. We didn't get it. Articles 1902 and 1904 of the agreement show that we didn't get it. The legislation currently before Congress does not give us an exemption, and by virtue of the agreement it is incorporated into that trade agreement.

Does the Deputy Prime Minister not recognize that we have a very dangerous and difficult situation before the country?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, may I remind the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition that there is a Premier in this country who asked for a vote to determine, among other things, what position Canadians are taking on the free trade agreement. It will be very interesting to see how Premier Pawley and his Party fare in the case of Manitoba, they being vigorously opposed to the free trade agreement. That will be a very good test.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): How about David Peterson?

Mr. Mazankowski: The Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition talks about David Peterson. I think he knows that Mr. Peterson lost a very important by-election right in his own home town.

Mr. Axworthy: That was just an act of charity.

Mr. Mazankowski: If that's charity, we will take it.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Any time, Don. Think about it over the weekend.

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Speaker, as I indicated earlier, we have every expectation that the omnibus Trade Bill will be consistent with the spirit of the free trade agreement.

I might also indicate to the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition, as he is obviously aware, that both countries have committed themselves to developing a substitute system for the rules and regulations with regard to countervail, duties, and tariffs. That process will take place over the next five-year period.

Within the ambit of the free trade agreement, the provision to deal with many of the issues referred to by the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition is precisely incorporated, so that we can move forward to establish—

Some Hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Speaker: It is a fascinating discussion, but I think we will have to move on. The Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier.

OFFICIAL LANGUAGES

SASKATCHEWAN—PROTECTION OF MINORITIES—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Jean Robert-Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Deputy Prime Minister. On Monday, April 11, the Prime Minister said in the House that his Government was disappointed with the solution proposed by Saskatchewan to comply with the recent Supreme Court decision. Page 14325, the Government Leader in the Senate quotes on the Government's position, expressing his disappointment with this legislation and hoping that the Government of Saskatchewan would go much further in protecting minority rights. Again on Monday, the Prime Minister announced to us that three ministers were to negotiate with Saskatchewan, that they had visited Saskatchewan on the weekend. On Tuesday morning, Grant Devine said, "No way, I'm not going to change a thing." On Wednesday, the Prime Minister told me that fundamental rights are not negotiable.

What have the ministers been doing since April 8? Are they negotiating Canadians' fundamental rights with Mr. Devine or do these rights really exist today in the Constitution?

[English]

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I find the question a little puzzling from the Hon. Member who is normally quite up to date with respect to these important minority language rights.

If the Hon. Member wants to be correct with respect to the record, the fact is that indeed there are ongoing discussions between senior Ministers of the Saskatchewan Government, senior Ministers of the federal Government, the Prime Minister, and the Premier. This is for the very purpose of dealing with a situation which has intruded itself by virtue of a judgment of the Supreme Court of Canada. It requires leadership on the part of not only the Premier of Saskatchewan but also the federal Government.

The Prime Minister had a very full discussion with the Premier yesterday for some two hours, looking at the implications of the Mercure decision. There are areas with which we are not au courant. But the fact is that we are working together in a constructive and positive way.

I wish to point out to the Hon. Member that Premier Devine has made a very important statement with respect to the position he sees for Saskatchewan, and he is moving toward Saskatchewan becoming a part of a bilingual Canada, for which he should be given full credit. We are now trying to give the assistance of the federal Government in any way we can to move the process along so that equity for minorities across the country will in fact be recognized.

POSITION OF PRIME MINISTER

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, that fuzzy statement begs another question.

On April 13, as reported at page 14420 of Hansard, I asked the Prime Minister:

> I trust the Prime Minister will agree with me that basic and vested rights are not negotiable.

The Prime Minister replied in part:

> In fact, I have already indicated to my hon. friend that I fully share his views. There are no differences between the Hon. Member and myself.

Today the Prime Minister is quoted in the press as "M. Mulroney appuie M. Devine". Would the Minister please tell us what is the position of the Prime Minister? Does he support Mr. Devine fully, or does he support fundamental basic rights in this country?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, the premise of the question put forward by the Hon. Member was that we were somehow negotiating with Saskatchewan. I attempted to point out that that is not the case. We are having discussions with respect to a position of principle which the Prime Minister has laid out clearly. There is, in fact, no question about the position that we have put forward.

Mr. Gauthier: What is it?

Mr. Hnatyshyn: The Prime Minister's letter set it out. If the Hon. Member wishes me to read the letter into the record, that is fine.

The fact is that we are making progress. There are encouraging discussions going on. The statement made by the Premier of Saskatchewan is encouraging. I would hope that the Liberal Party would work in a constructive way to ensure that the legitimate rights of the minority in Saskatchewan are properly protected, and not take a confrontational attitude with respect to the people of Saskatchewan at a time when they are trying to do the best they can.

CANADA-FRANCE DISPUTE—BOARDING OF FRENCH VESSEL

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg—Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Fisheries, and it has to do with the boarding yesterday by Canadian authorities of a French vessel. I wonder if the Minister could bring the House up to date as to what the Government's intentions are with respect to the event yesterday and with respect to the people who were apprehended.

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, I wish to indicate to the Hon. Member that we made a statement at 10.30 this morning on this issue indicating that the vessel, the Croix de Lorraine, has been successfully apprehended after suspicion of fishing contrary to Canadian law. It has been brought to the Port of St. John's, and at the present moment charges are being brought against members of the crew on that vessel.

There is a full examination under way of the circumstances, and collaboration between officials of the Department of Justice and of the Department of Fisheries and Oceans on the nature of the charges, and that is the extent of my ability to report at the moment.

POSITION OF FRENCH GOVERNMENT

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg—Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, could the Minister tell us what the Government has heard from the Government of France in respect of this issue? Has the Government of France officially disowned this provocative action? If it has not, will the Government be seeking that kind of statement from the Government of France?

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): I do not intend to comment on the position or otherwise of the Government of France in this matter, Mr. Speaker. However, I would indicate that, as is our usual practice in these kinds of apprehensions and suspected violations of our fishing laws, the Ambassador for France in Canada was notified the moment the vessel was boarded that it was a factual report, that the vessel had been suspected of fishing contrary to our law and was being brought to port.

POSSIBLE EFFECT ON NEGOTIATIONS WITH FRANCE

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg—Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, the point is that if the Government of France is not prepared to disown this provocative action, obviously the suspicion remains that this is part of an over-all strategy by France in its ongoing negotiations with Canada in respect fishing rights.

Is the Government prepared to seek that kind of message from the Government of France? What effect does the Government foresee it having on negotiations between Canada and France, if France is not prepared to disown this action and is prepared to see it as part of the way in which it hopes to succeed in its negotiations with Canada?

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, obviously the Hon. Member wishes to engage in speculation. Perhaps he should ask his question of the Government of France.

We have in fact notified the French Embassy that this action was undertaken. We continue to seek a return to the discussion table with France on the matter of the referral of this important boundary question, the boundary around St. Pierre and Miquelon, to some form of international arbitration and discussion on fish quotas.

Since France suspended those discussions last October 9, we continue to seek its early co-operation to get that process back on track.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

CONCENTRATION OF CONTROL AND SWITCHING OF RAILWAY TRAFFIC—MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport. I would like to indicate to the Minister the concern of Members on this side of the House regarding CN's rationalization plan, which would concentrate control over all railway traffic in Eastern Canada in the Toronto area and in the process shift 100 jobs from Montreal to Toronto. We raised the issue earlier in March, when the oddball Minister from Newfoundland who was then Minister of Transport gave us the following answer, no more: "I was not consulted by CN on this proposal which would involve the loss of 100 jobs in Montreal".

I would like to ask the Minister of Transport whether CN management is keeping him informed of plans as sinister as the one I just described, and whether he has expressed his firm disagreement with a project that would threaten hundreds of jobs in the Montreal area.

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I would certainly not assume CN's plans are sinister. I will wait and see exactly what is going to happen. The Hon. Member knows perfectly well, in this connection, that following an accident, the Canadian Transport Commission had advised Canadian National that it should tighten up its safety regulations. CN is now assessing a number of options, including centralizing security operations. However, I think it is premature to say that Canadian National wants to proceed with an operation of this kind and would do so at the earliest opportunity. I repeat that this is certainly not the case, although I certainly intend to keep informed and keep a close watch on developments. If a decision of this kind is taken by CN, we intend to consider the various options with the Corporation.

DEMAND THAT MINISTER GIVE COMMITMENT

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (St-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, with respect, I would like to make it clear to the Minister that we feel it is imperative that part of railway traffic control operations continue to be based in Montreal and take place in French.

I would like to ask the Minister to commit himself to opposing any plan that would export these specialized jobs, where French is spoken, from Montreal to any other part of the country.

Could the Minister at least give us a commitment that he will not approve a plan of this kind?

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, by giving this kind of commitment, I would be making assumptions about decisions the Corporation has yet to make, and I would be assuming that given the proposed options, Canadian National would not consider the concerns you mentioned.

Railway security and the use of French in security services are issues we feel are very important. But once again, the Hon. Member must recognize the fact that we will have to let Canadian National look at the various options, and we will monitor developments and bear in mind the Hon. Member's concerns.

EXTERNAL AID

ETHIOPIA—DELIVERY OF FOOD TO NORTHERN AREA

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Walkerville): As you know, Mr. Speaker, on Wednesday the Minister for External Relations indicated that the Canadian Government was seeking means by which a ship laden with food could in fact be sent to relieve the starvation in northern Ethiopia.

I guess my question must be directed to the Hon. Deputy Prime Minister, and it is simply this. In view of the fact that NGOs operating in the north have indicated that they are ready, willing, and able to deliver this food, would the Government not find it in the interests of the people to deliver that food now to the Port of Sudan to allow the NGOs to deliver the food to starving people in Ethiopia?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for his question. I regret that I am not able to respond in any detailed way on the progress being made. I simply want to take the question as notice and will try to get back to the Hon. Member as soon as I can.

CONTINUATION OF WAR—EFFECT ON STARVING PEOPLES

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, there is another question which I would like the Deputy Prime Minister to explore with his colleagues. As he knows, Resolution 390 passed by the United Nations some years ago, recognized the autonomy of Eritrea and Tygre in confederation with Ethiopia. The war occurring there now is in contradiction to that resolution and underlies the starvation and deprivation occurring in that country.

Will the Government take initiatives in the United Nations to seek a solution to that war based on the contents of Resolution 390 and, in addition, in bringing this before the United Nations, to address the culpability of the Ethiopian Government in taking aid deliverers out of Ethiopia who are trying desperately to feed the Ethiopian people?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I think the Government of Canada and all Canadians can be very proud of the work we have done and the support we have given, particularly under the leadership of David MacDonald. Outstanding work has been ongoing on behalf of the Government and of all Canadians.

I simply want to assure the Hon. Member that that commitment on the part of the Government of Canada has not diminished. However, I most certainly will take his point into consideration and, as I said earlier, I will try to get back to him as early as possible at the beginning of the week.

THE JUDICIARY

REVIEW OF FEDERAL APPOINTMENTS

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Justice. The Minister's announcement yesterday about the establishment of review committees for federal judicial appointments is, in my opinion, a major step forward in the process of creating a fully open and public appointments process.

Will the Minister take that process one step further and agree to a parliamentary review of those appointments once they are made? Does the Minister agree with the Premier of Ontario who has actually rejected the concept of a parliamentary review even for provincial appointments to boards and agencies?

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for his very important question. I am very pleased with the response that I received to my announcement on behalf of the Government. By way of example, the President of the Canadian Bar Association said that this is without a doubt the most important development in the judicial appointment process of Canada since Confederation.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): What's his name?

Mr. Hnatyshyn: This is hard for the Leader of the Opposition. He is used to Senators criticizing his policies. I believe that such support by Senators of our policy is a very helpful and hopeful sign.

With respect to the question that was posed, I want to remind the Hon. Member that I had the honour as Government House Leader to bring in a number of reforms to the process and procedures of the House of Commons, including the scrutiny of all Governor in Council appointments. At that time in its wisdom the House decided, with the co-operation of opposition Parties in this process, to exclude judicial appointments as such. However, we have moved to consult widely. This process is an important step.

In terms of Meech Lake, we are now involved with consulting the provincial levels of government as well with respect to appointments to the Supreme Court of Canada. We are expanding accountability. It is very important in this age of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms that we have widespread input with respect to appointments made to the bench.

DISASTERS

CANADIAN AVIATION SAFETY BOARD—REPORT ON GANDER AIR CRASH

Mr. George Baker (Gander—Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, the report of the Canadian Aviation Safety Board into the cause of the 1985 air disaster in Gander, Newfoundland, which killed 248 U.S. servicemen and eight crew members, has been sent to interested parties in Gander, Newfoundland, and in the United States. It excludes key evidence that cyanide was found in the blood of many of the 248 who were killed.

I ask the Minister of Transport this. Will he order that this report be withdrawn by the Canadian Aviation Safety Board, and order that another report be drawn up which would include all the evidence found during the autopsies that were done, including the fact that most likely many of the servicemen had breathed in deadly gas prior to the crash?

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I think the Hon. Member for Gander—Twillingate is normally well informed about transport matters. He knows full well that the report to which he refers is a draft report tabled in December for all parties. Those parties have requested to be heard again by the board, which is what is being done at the present time.

When an official report is issued in due course I believe the Minister will have to ask some questions or make some comments. It would be imprudent at this period of time for the Minister of Transport to comment on anything concerning what we call the draft report.

MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. George Baker (Gander—Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, half the members of the Aviation Safety Board disagree with the findings of the report that has been sent out. How can the Minister be satisfied with the draft report that has been sent out? Does he not agree that those people who live around airports in Canada have a right to know all the facts surrounding air disasters? If that is the way that investigations are to be carried out by the Government then perhaps we should investigate the Aviation Safety Board.

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the premise of the question bothers me somewhat. I believe that the Hon. Member would not want me to comment on a leaked report. If there is anything which has to be said about what happened in Gander it must be said in an official way. That official way will be the report that is to be tabled. I will have to see what I can do. I will consider very seriously the recommendations made by the board.

At the present time, once again, I believe it would be very imprudent to make any serious comment about what happened in Gander that day.

CONTENT OF REPORT

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Mr. Speaker, my question is on the same subject to the Minister of Transport. This is my first chance to ask him a question since his appointment. I want to congratulate him on it. I wish him well. He will need all the help he can get. I will be glad to help if he will accept some of my policies.

I am assuming that the Minister has received a copy of this report, whether it is draft, preliminary, or whatever. Will he confirm whether it is true or not true that key evidence, as my hon. friend pointed out earlier, has been excluded from the report, and that other matters such as the likelihood that the aircraft was on fire, experienced a loss of power, had problems with reverse thrust of an outer starboard engine and elevator trimmer flaps, were excluded from the report as well?

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I thank my hon. friend for his best wishes. I would have more respect for the Hon. Member than I have for his policies.

The answer has to be the same as the one I gave to the Hon. Member for Gander—Twillingate. Once again, it is a draft report. The Government is one of the parties which could be heard again by the Canadian Aviation Safety Board. I think that any comment by the Minister could prejudice the quality of the report itself when it is issued by the board.

I think it would be better to await the official report, not the draft report which we received in December.

ACTIVITIES OF BOARD

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Mr. Speaker, it is absolutely essential that the Canadian Aviation Safety Board have the utmost of credibility and confidence of the public. It has been riven with internal wrangling, bickering, and other allegations. How a board could have a meeting and make a decision on a draft, or whatever kind of report, with half the board members absent looks to me as it it is not conducting its affairs properly.

Will the Minister get hold of the Aviation Safety Board, see to it that its operations are improved and straightened out, get us a new chairman who has the confidence of all concerned, and have it again go over its investigation concerning the Gander crash?

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, what I said before is still true. The Canadian Aviation Safety Board has a very good record. In 1987 there were 500 reports for the Minister of Transport. They were all considered very carefully and very seriously.

I believe that the Hon. Member will agree that I never have and I will not start to comment about a leak. If we have to make any comment, it has to be done in the regular way. In the meantime, this is a serious issue. I think we all agree that this is the worst air disaster which has happened in the country. We have to give time to the board to make an official report and at the same time ensure that what will be recommended to the Minister of Transport will be the best. For that reason I think my friend will agree that we have to give some time and await what I call the official report of the Canadian Aviation Safety Board.

TELEFILM CANADA

JEAN SIROIS AFFAIR—MODE OF DEPARTURE

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, on Wednesday evening, the French CBC program Le

Point reported the sad story of Telefilm Canada, under the leadership of the Prime Minister's friend Jean Sirois. I would like to put my question to the Deputy Prime Minister, in the absence of the Minister of Communications. Since less than two years after Jean Sirois took over as president of Telefilm Canada, this first-class agency has lost 25 per cent of its managers, the executive director has resigned, the president's expenses have increased fivefold and a consultant was even required to pick up the pieces at Telefilm Canada, why has Mr. Jean Sirois been kept in his position until Wednesday of this week? Is it because he is the Prime Minister's friend or is there another even lousier reason?

• (1150)

[English]

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, that question has been asked in the House before and the Minister of Communications has responded fully.

RETENTION OF PRESIDENT

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, we have asked questions on that before but we never did receive answers. I want to ask the question of the Deputy Prime Minister here and now.

We now know what happened at Telefilm Canada. We have had numerous reports about the activities there and we know that perhaps irreparable—though hopefully not—but certainly considerable damage was done to that corporation under the leadership of Mr. Jean Sirois. Why was he kept as the president when we knew that everything was going wrong? What is the answer to that very simple question?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the answer to the question is that it is a repetition of the Hon. Member's earlier question and other questions he has posed to the Minister of Communications, questions which are not founded and to which the Minister has responded fully.

RADIO-CANADA

USE OF CANADIAN BROADCAST MATERIAL BY SOUTH AFRICAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver—Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I would like to turn to the Deputy Prime Minister on a new topic. Is the Government aware that Radio-Canada International has been sending tapes and disks of Canadian programs and commentaries to the South African Broadcasting Corporation which has sometimes been using them out of context? An example of this is that Michel Valpy's comments on the one-Party state in Zimbabwe were used for propaganda purposes by South African Broadcasting Corporation against the interests of front-line states and against Canada. Is that the Canadian Government's policy? If it is not, why is Radio-Canada International doing that?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I am not personally aware of the allegations the Hon. Member makes. I will certainly make inquiries and report back to him.

Mr. Beatty: Are you proposing censorship?

Mr. Waddell: No, I am not proposing censorship, as someone has said.

GOVERNMENT OF SOUTH AFRICA'S PROPAGANDA CAMPAIGN

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver—Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, if Radio-Canada International and the Government are permitting this, are they not being incredibly naive about the motives of South Africa? Is it not a fact that the Government of South Africa has been mounting a propaganda campaign not only against the front-line states—one of whose members is represented today in the gallery—but against Canada as well, the friend of the front-line states? Why are we naively sending these tapes to South Africa so that South Africa can use them for propaganda purposes?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, first I would want to check out the veracity of the statement the Hon. Member makes, and I think I should state very clearly here and now that the position of the federal Government is very clear with respect to its policy on South Africa. If the Hon. Member is suggesting that this is part of a government policy, I think he is somewhat wrong.

I said that I will check out the allegation he has made here, find out if there is any validity to it, and report back to him as soon as I possibly can.

EMPLOYMENT

EFFECTS OF CANADA-UNITED STATES FREE TRADE AGREEMENT—REQUEST FOR SPECIAL RETRAINING AND ADJUSTMENT PROGRAMS

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Employment and Immigration, whom I congratulate on her recent appointment.

According to the report of the Economic Council tabled Wednesday, the Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement will result in a major realignment of jobs in Canada, with job losses in 17 manufacturing industries including electrical products, metals, plastics, textiles, machinery and chemicals, while job increases will take place principally in clerical, sales, service and administrative positions, very different fields.

On Tuesday of this week, the Standing Committee on Labour said that special retraining and adjustment programs were necessary to deal with the U.S. trade agreement. In December, the Standing Committee on International Trade said the same thing.

In these circumstances, when will the Government announce special adjustment and retraining programs in anticipation of the U.S. trade agreement? When will the Government do something about this very important matter?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for his congratulations, and I appreciate them. However, I do have to correct the impression he has given to the House about what will happen after free trade.

That same report says that calculations suggest an estimated net gain of 251,000 jobs, resulting from about 439,000 being created. It says that set against the number of jobs that appear and disappear each year under the impetus of competitive realities, technological shifts, changes in consumer tastes and so on, or against the three million new jobs that will be filled during the same period as the labour force grows, these are not large numbers.

We have also made it clear that we have in place a labour adjustment board from the private sector which will help workers take advantage of new opportunities in more sophisticated industries as a result of free trade. That is good for Canadians. Those are better jobs and we are standing by Canadian workers to fill them.

RECOMMENDATIONS MADE BY PARLIAMENTARY COMMITTEES

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, the report says that the dislocation and adjustment set in train by the trade agreement will certainly be important for the people involved. In fact, jobs will be lost in 17 manufacturing areas and the new jobs will be in service sectors, very different types of jobs.

Two committees of the House made up of a majority of Conservative members prepared unanimous reports indicating that new training and adjustment programs were necessary. Will the Minister not read those reports and listen to the Standing Committees of the House instead of rejecting them outright?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I congratulate the Standing Committee for its work on labour adjustment and on the Canadian Jobs Strategy. As the Hon. Member knows, we have already met many of its recommendations.

All the reports say that compared with the normal economic adjustments that are to be made, we expect minimal adjustment. Within the Canadian Jobs Strategy we have the correct mechanism to help people adjust, as we do on an ongoing basis.

I agree with the Hon. Member. Of course this is important to the people who are affected. It is very important to them. However, other job adjustment is important to people who are affected as well. Separating out the factors that go into job adjustment every year is part of our job. We do that all the time, as the Hon. Member knows, and will continue to do it under free trade, and make sure that the people affected do have an opportunity to take advantage of the new opportunities created by free trade.

FINANCE

REFORM OF LEGISLATION—CONSEQUENCES FOR MOUVEMENT DESJARDINS

Mr. Gabriel Fontaine (Lévis): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of State for Finance and it relates to our proposed reform of legislation concerning financial institutions. Will Caisses populaires and the Mouvement Desjardins be affected by this reform; more specifically, is it true that the Mouvement Desjardins will have to dispose of all of its non-financial sector?

Mr. Tom Hockin (Minister of State for Finance): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member knows that the Mouvement Desjardins is made up of several institutions, of which only two have a federal charter. All the others are chartered by the Province of Quebec. Those are the facts. But our policy, the federal policy, will in no way oblige the Mouvement Desjardins to dispose of what is called its non-financial sector.

HATE LITERATURE

CRIMINAL CODE—REQUEST FOR STRENGTHENING OF PROVISIONS

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Justice. On November 8, 1984, the then Conservative Minister of Justice promised the House the following:

> The area of hate propaganda will be dealt with and those amendments will come after Christmas as well.

Given the serious weakness of the existing Criminal Code hate literature provisions, a weakness demonstrated most recently in the case of the virulently anti-Semitic books and articles written by Moncton teacher Malcom Ross and also demonstrated by the offensive writings of R. L. Smith in British Columbia, inciting violence against Slocan Valley environmentalists, does the Government remain committed to strengthening hate literature laws as promised over three years ago? If so, when will the Minister finally bring forward this long overdue legislation?

• (1200)

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the question. I should point out that I will have an opportunity of discussing this matter with my provincial counterparts at the next meeting of federal-provincial Ministers to be held in Quebec City at the end of May.

We are looking at this particular section of the Criminal Code, and the Hon. Member will be the first one to understand that under the Charter of Rights and Freedoms one has to consider Criminal Code amendments in light of the balance which has to be demonstrated between, on the one hand, the type of statements which cause harm and damage and, on the other, the right of freedom of speech.

I appreciate the representation. I hope that if the Hon. Member has any specific suggestions he will bring them to my attention and we will be glad to give them the consideration they deserve.

Mr. Robinson: Mr. Speaker, the Minister is suggesting that he is just looking at these possibilities. He is backing away from the commitment made by his predecessor.

REQUEST FOR MINISTERIAL COMMITMENT

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, the Attorney General of New Brunswick recently said that while Malcolm Ross' writings, which speak of a global Jewish conspiracy and deny the Holocaust, almost certainly constitute hate literature, he says the existing law is effectively useless. His Conservative predecessor said the same thing.

I am asking this Minister of Justice if he is prepared to make the same commitment made by his predecessor to amend these laws which are simply not enforceable right now? Will he take that important step?

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, the difficulty we often have with the NDP is that they find it very easy to get up and suggest we take all sorts of legislative action. I would ask the NDP to help my House Leader to deal with the legislation we now have before us. There was a concerted effort with respect to this matter and if we had some co-operation we could work together in the better interests of the Canadian public.

Mr. Speaker: I will recognize the Hon. Member for Trinity and ask that there be one question in view of the time.

FINANCE

MANUFACTURERS SALES TAX

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Acting Minister of Finance and it concerns the manufacturers sales tax which the Minister of Finance describes as a silent killer of jobs even though he goes on using it more and more. As the Canadian Chamber of Commerce pointed out, the last Budget increase in the rate of sales tax creates a bias in that Canadian produced capital goods will attract a tax of up to 14 per cent, while imports are taxed 2 1/2 per cent less.

Can the Minister tell the House whether the Government plans to correct this inequity, particularly since, as the Chamber points out, the bias will become more marked as a result of the Canada-U.S. trade deal?

Hon. Tom Hockin (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member's question should be looked at in context. We now have a manufacturers sales tax which is flawed. The Minister of Finance made it clear that his interim approach to that tax is just that, an interim measure, and has to be improved. This the Minister is doing. In the process he hopes to bring in a national sales tax at a level which is not only fair for Canadians but will also make us competitive with the U.S.

Mr. Speaker: A single question by the Hon. Member for Beaches.

GREAT LAKES WATER POLLUTION—PRIME MINISTER'S FORTHCOMING MEETING WITH UNITED STATES PRESIDENT

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister and concerns the summit meeting later this month between the Prime Minister and the U.S. President.

Can he advise the House whether or not he can ensure that the matter of Great Lakes water pollution is on the agenda for that meeting, and can he secure an agreement from the U.S. President that there will be a clean-up of the Great Lakes water system, say, over the next 10-year period?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): I cannot confirm that precisely, Mr. Speaker. However, I would be very surprised if environmental issues in general were not discussed at the meeting. I will certainly take the Hon. Member's question as a representation and take it up with the Prime Minister. I am sure it is of interest to the Hon. Member and I appreciate him raising the matter at this time.

RESEARCH AND DEVELOPMENT

TAX CREDIT PAYMENTS

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Science and Technology. Refundable investment tax credits for research and development are of considerable benefit, especially to small Canadian controlled firms. However, there have been numerous complaints about slow payment of refunds. What is being done to solve this problem?

Hon. Frank Oberle (Minister of State (Science and Technology)): Mr. Speaker, this research tax credit was made refundable in 1985 and has since triggered over $1 billion worth of industrial research. Experience shows that unless these kinds of programs are properly audited and managed they could invite abuse. Therefore, the regime put in place did create some delays in the process. I am pleased to tell the Hon. Member that these delays have been reduced if not eliminated, and I am very pleased with the reaction we are receiving from the research community which endorses this program and also with the fact we still have the best and most generous treatment of research tax credits in the world.

GOVERNMENT RESPONSE

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 106(8), I have the honour to table, in both official languages, the Government's response to the 13 petitions with the following Nos.: 332-3972, 332-3996, 332-4005, 332-4106 to and including 332-4112, 332-4139, 332-4156 and 332-4177.

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, it is my honour and duty in accordance with Standing Order 106 to present a petition from a number of residents of Spadina and Trinity and other ridings in Toronto. They are very concerned that, as they see it, Canadian sovereignty is threatened by the proposed trade deal between the Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Mulroney) and the President of the U.S., which the Prime Minister had absolutely no mandate to negotiate given his approach to the people in the last election. They point out that this deal will reduce Canada's ability to plan economic, social and cultural programs that we need and will integrate Canada still further into the North American defence-industrial base.

For those reasons they ask the House of Commons to ensure that a national debate takes place on the Mulroney-Reagan trade deal and that it result in a national general election before the agreement is finalized.

PROHIBITION OF DISCRIMINATION ON GROUNDS OF SEXUAL ORIENTATION

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Mr. Speaker, in February, 1985, the Government ordered the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs to prepare a report on equality rights in Canada. In March of 1986 the Government accepted this report and its recommendation, saying it would take whatever measures necessary to ensure that sexual orientation is a prohibited ground of discrimination. As the Government has yet to introduce significant legislation acting upon these recommendations supported by the Government, the petitioners humbly pray and call upon Parliament to ensure that the Government and Parliament act to implement all the recommendations contained in this report as specified above with all due haste and speed.

REQUEST FOR REPARATIONS TO VICTIMS OF EXPERIMENTS AT ALLAN MEMORIAL INSTITUTE

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition signed by a number of residents of Oshawa and Toronto, Ontario; from Edmonton; and from various other cities in Canada who note that the Canadian Government funded unethical brainwashing experiments of the late psychiatrist, D. Ewen Cameron, which were conducted at the Allan Memorial Institute in Montreal in the 1950s and early 1960s.

They note that many Canadians were permanently damaged, both psychologically and neurologically, by these experiments which were inflicted on them without their knowledge or consent. A number of these individuals are suing the CIA in the United States for its complicity. They note, finally, that the Canadian Government has refused to admit its legal or moral responsibility for these Canadians or to offer them any reparations for their permanent damage, pain, and suffering.

They therefore call upon Parliament to release all incriminating evidence to assist them, to acknowledge the legal and moral responsibility of the Government of Canada to these Canadians, and to offer reparations to these Canadians who were victims of such unethical experiments.

PROHIBITION OF DISCRIMINATION ON GROUNDS OF SEXUAL ORIENTATION

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, I have another petition which is signed primarily by residents of Ontario, mais, il y a aussi beaucoup de résidants de Montréal et de la Ville de Québec. These petitioners note that over two years ago the Government of Canada accepted the unanimous report of the Subcommittee on Equality Rights and its recommendations and said that it would take whatever measures were necessary to ensure that sexual orientation is a prohibited ground of discrimination.

They note that the Government has not yet acted on this important promise and therefore urge the Government to implement the recommendations contained in that report with all due haste and speed.

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, I have another petition signed by a large number of residents of Burnaby, my own constituency, who express their deep concern about the implications of the Mulroney-Reagan trade deal for Canada.

They note that the Government had no mandate from the Canadian people to negotiate this trade deal. In fact, they note that during the course of these negotiations the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) promised that Canadian sovereignty would not be compromised. They note that this deal would deny Canada the policy freedom to determine our own economic future and undermine our ability to build a society distinct from that of the United States.

They therefore call upon the Government to dissolve Parliament and allow the people of Canada the opportunity to accept or reject this profoundly dangerous agreement during a national general election.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is the Hon. Member rising on petitions? Members will have to rise so that I will know. When Hon. Members are running in and out of the House it makes it difficult for the Chair to know whether they are rising on petitions or on something else.

PROHIBITION OF DISCRIMINATION ON GROUNDS OF SEXUAL ORIENTATION

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Mr. Speaker, I have the duty to submit a petition to the House from citizens of Victoria, Nanaimo, and Calgary. They say that the Government commissioned the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs to prepare a report on equality rights in Canada and they humbly pray and call upon Parliament to ensure that the Government and Parliament act to implement the recommendations contained in that report with all due haste and speed.

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver—Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I am sorry. I remember that a senior fellow from the Edmonton area once told me to do only one thing at a time and I might get something accomplished. I have been trying to do four or five things and I take that to heart.

I have two petitions, Mr. Speaker, which I will introduce at the same time. One is with regard to the trade agreement. The petitioners are asking the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) to dissolve Parliament and call an election in order that we can have a national debate on the issue and a determination.

These people from my own riding of Vancouver—Kingsway are concerned about the loss of economic sovereignty by removing the power of the Canadian Government to control foreign ownership effectively.

PROHIBITION OF DISCRIMINATION ON GROUNDS OF SEXUAL ORIENTATION

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver—Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, the other petition I have is signed by a number of people from the Toronto and Mississauga areas. In 1986 the Government accepted a report of an all-Party committee of the House on sexual orientation. It said that it would "take whatever measures are necessary to ensure that sexual orientation is a prohibited ground of discrimination" in order that there would be no discrimination on that basis. These petitioners would like the Government to act on that.

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased and honoured, on behalf of some 200 members of my constituency, to submit a petition which has been properly certified under Standing Order 106.

The petitioners state that the Conservative Government had no mandate from the Canadian people to conclude a free trade agreement with the United States and that the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) promised, in the course of the bilateral trade negotiations, that Canadian sovereignty would not be compromised.

They say that the trade agreement negotiated by the Mulroney Government threatens the very fabric of Canadian political and economic sovereignty by removing the power of the Canadian Government to control foreign ownership effectively, to develop Canadian energy resources in the best interests of Canadians, and to equalize opportunities between regions.

They say that the proposed trade agreement would deny Canada the policy freedom to determine its own economic future and would undermine our ability to build a society distinct from that of the United States. They state that the proposed trade agreement not only denies Canadians the secure access to the U.S. markets that was the key objective of these negotiations but threatens the loss of hundreds of thousands of Canadian jobs.

Therefore, the undersigned, your petitioners, humbly pray and call upon Parliament to dissolve and allow the people of Canada the opportunity to accept or reject the proposed free trade agreement during a national general election.

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: Nos. 203, 271, and 272. I ask that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

JOB CREATION IN VICTORIA—HALIBURTON

Question No. 203—Mr. Scott (Victoria—Haliburton):

1. Since September, 1984, how many jobs, per year, have been created in the constituency of Victoria—Haliburton as a direct result of the programs of the government?

2. How many of the jobs are full-time new positions and in what way does this compare to the record of the previous government between 1980 and 1984?

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of State and Minister of State (Treasury Board): I am informed by the Departments of Employment and Immigration and Regional Industrial Expansion as follows: In so far as the Department of Employment and Immigration is concerned:

1. Between September 1, 1984, and September 30, 1987 (a period of 37 months), 1,111 people received training and work experience under the Canadian Jobs Strategy (EIC). This represents a monthly average of 30 jobs and a yearly average of 360 jobs.

Between April 1, 1980, and August 31, 1984 (a period of 53 months), 1,210 jobs were created by the programs of Employment and Immigration Canada. This represents a monthly average of 23 jobs and a yearly average of 276 jobs.

2. As jobs in both periods have a wide combination of training and work experience sometimes becoming permanent jobs, sometimes qualifying the participant for another permanent job and sometimes providing a limited period only of employment, it is not possible to compile data on the number of "full-time new positions" involved.

In so far as the Department of Regional Industrial Expansion is concerned:

1. During the period of September 1, 1984, to September 30, 1987, a total of nine projects were approved under programs administered by the Department of Regional Industrial Expansion, generating an estimated 492 full-time jobs, 477 of which would be considered new jobs, between 1985 and 1993. The number of jobs actually created in a given year is not estimated pending the completion and final review of each project. Therefore, an accurate annual tabulation of the jobs created is not readily available.

2. During the period of October 1, 1980, to August 31, 1984, a total of ten projects were approved, two of which were subsequently cancelled by the applicant, under programs of the Departments of Regional Industrial Expansion and predecessors, the Depatments of Regional Economic Expansion and Industry, Trade and Commerce. These eight projects generated an estimated 97 full-time jobs, 87 which would be considered new jobs.

INCREASE OF CANADIAN FORCES IN ARCTIC

Question No. 271—Ms. McLaughlin:

Will consultations be held concerning the three major projects announced February 4, 1988, which will increase Canadian Forces in the Arctic, specifically the northern training centre at Nanisivik, N.W.T. and, if so (a) what groups and individuals will be consulted (b) at what (i) time (ii) place will the consultations be held (c) at what time will the consultation process be completed (d) will there be guarantees that permanent skilled positions will be created and that training for northerners will be a priority?

Mr. Bud Bradley (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Defence): 1. Yes, consultation on the concept began well before the Minister's announcement.

(a) Other federal departments, Government of the Northwest Territories, the Inuit Tapirisat of Canada, the Tungavik Federation of Nunavut, the Baffin Region Council, the Baffin Region Inuit Association, the Arctic Bay Community, the Management of Nanisivik Mines.

(b) (i) (ii) All of the foregoing groups have been contacted again by letter and there is a standing offer for follow-on briefings. To date no specific dates, times or places have been suggested by the above groups.

(c) There is no cut-off date for consultation at this time, sufficient to say that the target occupancy date of 1992-93 will allow adequate time for full and thorough consultation and discussion.

(d) It is too early to give details. Certainly the Government will follow all in place guidelines with respect to the development in the North of those skills required to support emerging infrastructures.

RIMPAC EXERCISES

Question No. 272—Mr. Frith:

1. During the period 1970 to 1987 (a) were Canadian naval ships involved in RIMPAC exercises off Hawaii and, if so, how often (b) did they use the Kaho'olawe firing range and, if so (i) how often (ii) for how long (c) have there been Canadian naval ships off California and, if so, how often (d) was the San Clemente firing range used and, if so (i) how often (ii) for how long?

2. What is the rental or usage fee (a) per day (b) per usage for the (i) Kaho'olawe (ii) San Clemente range?

3. Has the government investigated specific options for setting up a Canadian test firing range and, if so, what are they and, in each case (a) when were they investigated (b) what is the estimated cost?

4. What is the minimum annual need for actual bombardment training to maintain operational capability?

5. What are the dates for (a) RIMPAC'88 exercises (b) Canada's use of the Kaho'olawe firing range?

Mr. Bud Bradley (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Defence): 1. (a) Yes in 1973, 75, 77, 78, 80, 82, 84 and 86. (b) Yes. (i) Each time. (ii) Three Canadian naval vessels have utilized the range during each exercise since 1980. Record of usage prior to 1980 is not readily available but would approximate that reported after 1980. The exact length of time has varied with each exercise and the naval ships involved, but is normally about four hours per ship.

(c) Yes, an average of four times per year.

(d) Yes. (i) Since 1980, the San Clemente range has been utilized by Squadrons of three Canadian naval ships, twice per year.

(ii) Record of usage prior to 1980 is not readily available but would approximate that reported after 1980. The time of the range varies but is normally about four hours per ship.

2. (a) (i) $3,600 (U.S.) per four hours. (ii) $3,600 (U.S.) per four hours.

3. The concept has been researched frequently and rejected due to the high capital costs involved. Further, the time required on the range by west coast would not justify this large expenditure.

4. Canadian naval ships utilizing the San Clemente and Kaho'olawe ranges at every possible opportunity only permit us to achieve minimum Combat Readiness requirements.

5. (a) Early summer 1988. (b) As scheduled by the USN authorities.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The questions as enumerated by the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary have been answered. Shall the remaining questions be allowed to stand?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Robinson: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask a question, through you, of the Parliamentary Secretary with respect to question No. 219 which has been on the Order Paper since November 16, 1987. A response to this question was requested within 45 days. Over two months ago I asked the Parliamentary Secretary when the answer to this important question would be forthcoming and he assured me that it would be within a matter of days.

Since that time there has been no answer whatsoever, as is the case with question No. 243 which has been on the Order Paper since January 18 of this year to which a response was again requested within 45 days. Both of these questions relate to contracting within the Correctional Service of Canada.

Given the earlier assurance of the Parliamentary Secretary that these answers would be forthcoming very soon, why the delay? Why has it taken so long? When can I finally expect a response to these important questions?

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Speaker, I believe the Member opposite has been personally in correspondence with the Solicitor General (Mr. Kelleher) asking for the reasons for the delay. I can give him no more detailed information in this Chamber than he is likely to get on his own. I will make further inquiries into this. There seems to be some problem in finalizing the answer to the question, but I do not know what it is.

NATIONAL PARKS ACT

Hon. Doug Lewis (for the Minister of the Environment) moved that Bill C-30, an Act to amend the National Parks Act and to amend an Act to amend the National Parks Act, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

Mrs. Pauline Browes (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, it gives me a great deal of pleasure to see Bill C-30, an Act to amend the National Parks Act, brought forward for second reading. Bill C-30 represents the first major overhaul of this Act since it was proclaimed more than half a century ago. The 37 proposed amendments are a measure of the Government's commitment to national parks and of the extent to which the current Act is outdated. The amendments proposed in the House of Commons will provide this country with an integrated, contemporary and forward-looking conservation framework for our national parks.

Reform is long overdue. For example, when the first poaching provisions for national parks were set in 1919, a $500 maximum fine may have been sufficiently onerous to deter violators. Now, however, that fine really represents a licence to kill.

Modern poachers of park wildlife are part of a highly organized, lucrative, international criminal network. The stakes are very high. A trophy head of Dall's sheep can command $50,000, a live falcon $20,000. Taking rare and endangered species anywhere on this planet is indeed a crime, not just against the animal or that species, but a crime against humanity. The taking of such animals from within the boundaries of wilderness areas protected by our most stringent conservation law is an outrage.

Meaningful sanctions must be put in place and enforced. The amendments before us today will create maximum penalties of $150,000 or six months in jail. These penalties will be matched by a tough new enforcement regime, with the help of the RCMP.

For poachers of non-threatened species for meat or fur, the Bill proposes a fine of $2,000. However, we have concluded that that will not be enough. Therefore, the Government will seek an additional amendment to increase fines to $10,000 or six months in jail.

Let me highlight some of the main provisions of Bill C-30. Fines will be increased for destructive activities in our parks, such as use of all terrain vehicles in ecologically sensitive areas. A new provision will allow for traditional subsistence activities in new parks, such as hunting and fishing, by native communities. An enabling section will allow self- government for the towns of Jasper and Banff if and when and residents so elect. The Bill will also allow the setting of legislative boundaries for the two towns, will limit the development of new commercial ski areas, and restrict any further transportation and energy supply corridors through our parks.

Provisions will also be made for a citizens' heritage fund to allow Canadians to contribute directly to our national parks system. Amendments will regulate the use of pesticides in parks.

The Bill provides for the establishment of Ellesmere Island National Park in the far North and Grasslands National Park, which we hope will soon be a reality in Saskatchewan.

The Government will also ask the legislative committee to propose the necessary amendments to create our first national marine park, combined with the terrestrial park at Bruce Peninsula in the great Province of Ontario.

I want to go into some detail on the poaching provisions of the amendment. Under the proposed amendments, poaching on certain species of endangered and trophy animals indeed would be subject to a maximum fine of $150,000 on summary conviction, or in the case of a conviction and indictment, a maximum fine of $150,000 or up to six months in prison, or both.

Poaching of all other wildlife would be subject to a maximum fine of $2,000 on summary conviction. The inadequacy of the penalties for poaching in national parks has been cited repeatedly by judges annoyed by the reliance on multiple charges and forfeiture of vehicles and equipment to create at least some deterrent to poaching.

The current maximum fine of $500 has been in effect since 1919 and is inadequate as a deterrent to poaching.

Combatting organized poaching activities is of particular concern. Provisions to proceed by indictment should serve as a deterrent both to the organizers and their clients who are often wealthy individuals.

How serious is this problem of poaching in national parks? Since many poaching incidents go undetected, it is difficult to provide accurate statistics on the problem. However, in the mountain parks it is estimated that at least 50 animals are poached each year, many of which are trophy animals.

The poaching of trophy animals is not a problem of large numbers being taken but rather the significance of losing any of these animals. Not only is the public deprived of the opportunity to view them in the wild, the loss of even a few prime animals each year can affect the long-term health of their populations.

These animals are still relatively abundant in the national parks, and as they become scarce in areas where they can be hunted legally, the parks are becoming more and more attractive to poachers. Perhaps the most insidious aspect of the problem has been the development of the sophisticated organized poaching rings.

In parks where animals are poached primarily for meat, the incidents of poaching are much higher. Estimates of up to 100 or 200 incidents of poaching a year are not uncommon in some parks.

The actual number of incidents of poaching vary from park to park, depending on local factors such as access to game close to park boundaries and along highway corridors, park size, and the actual types of species within the park. Recent studies in several U.S. states show that only about 5 per cent of poaching incidents are ever detected.

Based on a more conservative estimate that 20 per cent of poaching incidents are detected, it is suspected that about 50 big game animals are poached in the mountain parks each year. This would include many that are on the schedule that is available to those persons interested.

On the same basis, it is estimated that on average a total of 800 big game animals are poached each year in all national parks.

Poaching of trophy animals is particularly of concern in mountain parks and Kluane National Park in the Yukon Territory.

Poaching in the parks is very serious and is very much a part of the amendments we are discussing today. Wildlife that is not covered under Section 8(1.1) are poached primarily for their meat. The $2,000 maximum fine exceeds the highest prices paid for big game carcasses in the black market for wildlife meat. This fine is in the mid-range of similar penalties in the provinces and territories.

Across the country, the array of penalties for poaching is complex. Penalties vary depending on several factors, such as the species involved, the poaching methods used, and whether or not the case involved is the first or second offence.

Some jurisdictions include provisions for imprisonment. On balance, the $2,000 maximum fine is already falling below comparable penalties in the provinces and territories, and several jurisdictions have recently increased their levels. Therefore, the Government will propose an additional amendment to increase fines to $10,000 or six months in jail on indictment, which would put the penalty back in the top range. Another species schedule relating to wildlife which are poached primarily for meat or fur would trigger this penalty.

We are very pleased that in relation to penalties for poaching in national parks, a special budget has been established to fund the activities of warden enforcement support teams. These teams will be deployed to parks where poaching is a problem in order to boost enforcement capabilities at key times of the year. A number of special surveillance operations have been initiated this year to coincide with the fall season. Park officials are in the process of renewing their law enforcement procedures and training programs to identify areas where improvements will be made.

The feasibility of an awards program for information leading to the conviction of poachers is under investigation also. An agreement with the RCMP for greater co-operation in law enforcement in national parks has been drafted and signed. That part of the amendment is very important.

I would just like to refer to another section of the Act, which is the traditional subsistence activities. There are two groups implicated by these provisions, the traditional subsistence use by local people, and the traditional subsistence use by native groups. The former are, in some cases, dependent on resources in a park area for their subsistence needs. The latter have both subsistence and cultural associations with the land and its resources. These activities are generally fishing, trapping, woodcutting and other limited use of renewable resources.

Subsistence resource use has been an issue since the early 1970s, both in public consultations and in federal-provincial negotiations. The rights of native people to hunt and fish for domestic purposes must be respected and integrated into park planning and management in the context of claims and establishment negotiations. Similarly, concessions have been made to certain resource uses by non-native local people in order to avoid detrimental impact on the livelihood of such residents. Non-native resource uses would only apply for one or more generations where no alternatives exist outside the park.

Controls will allow natives or local users to continue to exercise their traditional practices while allowing parks to fulfil their mandate to protect natural heritage resources. All such activities are subject to the requirement to protect natural resources of the park. Providing the continuation of subsistence level activities will permit the creation of new parks for the benefit of all Canadians while at the same time not penalizing local people who have traditionally relied on the area for the necessities of life.

For natives, such activities as hunting and fishing have been an essential part of their culture for thousands of years. Such subsistence activities would be closely monitored and regulated where necessary to ensure the maintenance of viable populations of fish and wildlife.

The amendment is intended to provide a greater degree of protection for the wilderness areas of national parks. Over the last few years, conservation groups and northern native groups have expressed concern that wilderness areas could in the future be subjected to increased pressure for development of visitor facilities, and they should, therefore, be given added protection in the law. This amendment will ensure that wilderness areas remain essentially undeveloped lands and that any proposed change to the boundaries of a wilderness area will be open for public review, not only during the park planning process but also through the regulatory process.

As new national park plans are completed, or existing park plan management plans are reviewed with the public, it is the Government's intention to recommend designation of its wilderness areas to the Governor in Council.

I would like to go to another section of this Act which concerns pollution. We have recently passed the Environmental Protection Act. We are very pleased it has passed committee stage and has come back into the House for third reading. It deals with toxic chemicals. I would like to mention here pollution in national parks as related to these amendments. Section 8(1.3) reads:

> . . . recognizes the special status of national park lands as areas set aside for the benefit of all Canadians. Its effect, and that of (1.4), (1.5), and (1.6) which follow it, is to provide the necessary level of protection to the environment and ensure public health and safety in parks. These amendments will limit the deleterious effects of potentially harmful substances by giving the Minister the ability to take action forthwith if compliance does not occur, and to recover costs for any such mitigating activities. It is important to note that existing and proposed legislation can be used where an incident is of such great proportions that a much higher penalty is called for.

Modern society produces or uses many substances that can adversely affect natural processes or threaten human health. Parks are not exempt from these consequences of industrialization. Recognizing that this danger exists, it is imperative to minimize any negative impact as quickly and effectively as possible. When the person discharging or depositing an undesirable substance will not take responsibility, significant measures would be allowed both to force action and to exact payment when Her Majesty must undertake the appropriate action.

You may recall, Mr. Speaker, that on May 14 of last year, this House made history by unanimously endorsing a resolution for the protection of the South Moresby area of the Queen Charlotte Islands of British Columbia as a national park reserve. In the last three and a half years, more new parks have been created than in the previous decade and a half. Indeed none were established in that desolate period. This Government is a parks Government. We intend not only to save individual wilderness areas as parks but to lay the groundwork for the completion of our national parks' system.

Over 100 years ago Sir John A. Macdonald established Canada's first national park in what is now Banff. Since then Canada's parks system has become the best in the world encompassing over 140,000 square kilometres and attracting some 25 million visitors every year. We are proud of that as Canadians.

The environmental commitment made by Sir John A. Macdonald to protect and preserve Canada's unique natural beauty is being continued by this Government. In addition to creating three new parks and introducing these amendments, the Minister of the Environment (Mr. McMillan) commissioned a national task force on new park establishment chaired by Professor John Theberge of the University of Waterloo. The mandate of the commission was to propose new ideas for expanding our national parks system.

One of the key recommendations of the task force was to urge all levels of government to work together and to develop new ways of preserving unique natural areas. A new designation called Heritage Lands was also proposed by the task force. It could act as a mechanism for protecting more unique wilderness areas. An example of how this designation could be used can be found in the City of Scarborough, that part of Canada that I have the honour and privilege of representing.

The Rouge River Valley which winds its way through 5,000 acres of wilderness in northeast Scarborough represents the last wildlife area in Metropolitan Toronto. The valley is home to white-tailed deer, coyotes, red fox, and a host of nationally rare birds and plant life. The valley also serves as a huge outdoor classroom for thousands of school children who visit the area to learn about nature and conservation.

Unfortunately, the Ontario Government, which owns virtually all of the land, is considering using this precious natural area for luxury housing, or indeed it even talked about a garbage dump. The people of Scarborough and the people of Canada cannot let that happen. Once we lose an area like the Rouge, we can never get it back.

Earlier this week I invited representatives of Save the Rouge Valley Citizens' Group in Scarborough to come to Ottawa and bring this important issue to the attention of Members of Parliament. I was especially honoured that you, Mr. Speaker, took the time to meet with the group and you expressed your support for saving the Rouge Valley.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa—Carleton): Save the Rouge.

Mrs. Browes: Members of Parliament are saying that saving the Rouge is very important to the House of Commons.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa—Carleton): It is extremely important to Canada.

Mrs. Browes: Also this week the federal Minister of the Environment (Mr. McMillan) joined me in a tour of the Rouge. He offered his support for preserving the valley. In fact, the federal Government has provided nearly $80,000 to date to the Save the Rouge Valley organization to help them direct public attention to this issue and persuade the Province of Ontario to listen to the people.

The recommendations of this task force report, together with the outstanding parks record of the Minister of the Environment, should be enough to convince the Ontario Government to work with Environment Canada to protect this environmentally significant area.

In conclusion, when the House stood together to save South Moresby, we accomplished a dream. We now have an opportunity to realize another dream in Scarborough, and in all the special wildlife areas across Canada.

As Wildlife Week draws to a close, it is appropriate that we are discussing Bill C-30. It is only fitting that we give speedy passage to Bill C-30, because, as the task force noted, national parks do not impede our future, they anchor it.

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane—Superior): Mr. Speaker, to the Parliamentary Secretary and to her Minister I would like to say that this day could well be described as a red letter day for Canada's national parks. It is a red letter day that has taken a little while to get here. By my calculations, it has been 487 days since the Bill was first introduced. However, we now have the Bill, and we want to see it move quickly through all stages and become the law of the land.

The amendments to the National Parks Act which are contained in Bill C-30 are amendments that we in the Liberal Party, the Official Opposition, in principle welcome. It should be noted that these amendments have not come about suddenly. They were developed through a long process of evolution that goes back for quite a number of years in the recent history of our country.

It was in the 1970s that there began some extensive national public consultations regarding a new parks policy. These consultations led to the 1978 statement on a new national parks policy. The House ought to know that most of the amendments that are found in Bill C-30 that we are debating today were actually introduced into Cabinet and approved in the Liberal administration in the month of March, 1984. They did not reach the House in the form of a Bill prior to the dissolution of that Parliament.

The Bill that we are dealing with today, Bill C-30, could really be called Liberal legislation. But even putting that aside, we could certainly describe it as liberal in spirit. The amendments find support on this side of the House.

I want to point out again that it did take a long while for these amendments to be debated at second reading stage. In fact, it took the Government two full years from when it first took office to even recognize that national parks were needed. I say that because there was no mention of national parks in the Government's program until the Throne Speech of October, 1986. In the Throne Speech it states:

> Canada's National Parks represent a heritage of great importance to the present and future generations. My government will ask Parliament to approve major reforms to the National Parks Act . . .

That can be found at page 12 of Hansard on October 1, 1986.

Shortly thereafter, in the same month, the Minister of the Environment (Mr. McMillan) told the House:

> The Parks amendments will be ready for first reading in Parliament soon, and I urge the Opposition to give them expeditious passage.

That can be found at page 290 of Hansard on October 10, 1986.

Finally, on December 11, 1986 the Minister tabled Bill C-30 for first reading and now it is back in the House for the first time for expeditious passage.

Ever since Bill C-30 was given that first reading in 1986 we in this Party, parks and conservation groups, and the general public have been asking the Government when the second reading debate is going to take place. They have asked: "Why is second reading debate being postponed for such a long period of time? Why is the Minister's desire for expeditious passage being frustrated?"

I think we have a few clues about why there has been such a long delay in what I am describing as a red letter day for Canada's national parks. We know, for example, that in Banff National Park the operators of the Sunshine Village ski area want to expand their boundaries and move into some ecologically sensitive areas, those that are known as the Sunshine Meadows. With the passage of Bill C-30 they will not be able to do that. One of the most important aspects of Bill C-30 is that it clearly sets out the boundaries of ski areas in three parks—Banff, Jasper, and Riding Mountain. If one were interested, one could look at the Bill and find the boundaries in Schedule III on page 41 of the Bill. Incidentally, those were the same boundaries that were agreed to in 1978.

It is this boundary question for developers which has made the Bill controversial, not among the Parties in the House but within the ranks of the governing Party itself. The so-called developers have some very strong allies. They certainly have behind them the Government of Alberta, and they have certainly had with them many, if not all, Alberta Conservative caucus federal Members of Parliament. These two powerful groups—the Alberta caucus of the Government and the Alberta Government—have applied some enormous pressure on the Minister of the Environment regarding the boundaries contained in Bill C-30.

I believe and I hope that the fact we are now debating Bill C-30 at second reading today is testimony to the fact that the Minister of the Environment has withstood those pressures. It still has to go to the legislative committee and come back to the House at report stage. However, if the Bill survives without major amendments, particularly to the section dealing with the boundaries for development, I will credit the Minister with having scored a very major victory in the name of parks.

I want to return to the kind of opposition the Minister of the Environment has had to face. On December 15, 1987, The Edmonton Journal featured an article entitled "Parks plan 'held hostage' by Alta. MPs". The writer of this piece, Mr. Ed Struzik of the Ottawa Bureau of The Edmonton Journal, wrote as follows:

> The future of Canada's national parks is being "held hostage" by the Alberta Conservative caucus, say federal officials and national environment leaders.
> At issue are persistent attempts by the caucus to change Bill C-30, a National Parks Act amendment.
> The MPs want to allow more tourism and resource development, taking a stand that's almost a carbon copy of a confidential Alberta government paper presented to Environment Minister Tom McMillan.

In referring to that Alberta government paper, the article indicates:

> It calls for expansion of ski hills and townsites in the mountain parks.
> The matter has become so critical that McMillan, who rejects the Alberta position, is considering calling in the country's conservation leaders to gather support for the Bill, sources say.
> The Minister said last week that "if we suburbanize national parks, we'll kill them".
> A senior Environment official confirmed McMillan is becoming frustrated by the "stubbornness" of the Alberta MPs.
> "They are a powerful force and if they continue, they could kill the bill altogether," the official said.

Mr. Blaikie: The power of ignorance.

Mr. Penner: I thank my Hon. friend for his useful contribution to the debate with that interjection.

The article continues:

> John Theberge, chairman of a ministerial task force on national parks, said if Alberta had its way it will mean the end of the national park system in Canada.
> "It seems that a lot of people, particularly the Alberta caucus and the Alberta government, have lost sight of the fact that parks were not established to promote tourism opportunities."
> The bill was introduced in Parliament a year ago and still hasn't received second reading.

The article is dated December 15, 1987 and goes on to indicate:

> Keven MacNamee, executive director of the Canadian Parks and Wilderness Society, said: "What really bothers me is that cabinet has approved these amendments. This Bill could die and it will be completely the fault of the Alberta caucus."

Alberta has "no right holding the rest of the country hostage" because of its "greedy desire" for more economic opportunities, he said.

If the bill dies, he said new national parks like Gros Morne, Northern Ellesmere, Bruce Peninsula and South Moresby may never be given full park status because of legal obstacles only the proposed amendments can clear.

I have taken a little time to read from the article to set the debate in some kind of context because it is a major piece of legislation. What we are doing today is extremely important for the future of our parks.

I suppose it is never fair when one deals with an article not to allow the other side to give its point of view. The same article tells us the position of the chairman of the Alberta caucus of the federal Government. He said that the Bill currently before us "is good, but it's just too airtight". The Hon. Member for Crowfoot (Mr. Malone) went on to say:

It won't allow for the enhancement of the tourism industry.

The article continues:

—he sees room for some "limited to moderate lumber developments" in national parks and the possibility of angle-drilling for oil and gas from outside the park boundaries".

Wilderness and development can go hand-in-hand in the big national parks, he said.

Although apparently this is the position of the Alberta caucus on the government side, and it is the position of the Alberta Government in a paper which it has given to the Minister, happily it is not the position taken by the people of the Province of Alberta. Some polls have been taken and reported upon, testing the views of the people of Alberta regarding national parks. They show that most Albertans support Bill C-30 and feel that the four mountain parks should be protected against further development.

I am sure that it will surprise you, Mr. Speaker, that the Alberta Government and the Alberta caucus on the government side could be out of touch with the people of Alberta. I found that to be astounding. I thought that there was great sensitivity within the Alberta caucus on the government side and in the Alberta Government on issues of this kind.

The Edmonton Journal certainly seems to be a great supporter of parks. In an April 7, 1987 editorial it took the Government of Alberta to task and asked the following question:

Will the Alberta Government ever learn that the natural resources found in Banff, Jasper, and Waterton Lakes are too important to sacrifice for the sake of convenience?

The Economic Development Minister wants Jasper National Park to become a provincial park. The Tourism Minister told an Alberta Tory convention that he strongly supports a proposal to build a six-storey hotel at the Sunshine Village ski development at Banff National Park.

• (1300)

The editorial concludes:

For the sake of convenience and money, they would jeopardize priceless natural resources to build condominiums on the shores of pristine mountain lakes or huge hotels on the side of a mountain.

Mr. Thacker: That is absolute nonsense.

Mr. Penner: It is. My friend says to do that would be absolute nonsense. I agree with him. The editorial agrees with the Hon. Member as well.

The editorial concludes in this way:

Tourism certainly offers great potential to diversify the province's economy. But there must be a balance between development and preservation of national parks for future generations.

I want it to be understood that the Liberal Party is committed to the passage of Bill C-30. We want those Sunshine Village boundaries to be intact. We will strongly resist and oppose any move that may be taken in the legislative committee or by the Government at report stage or whenever, either to have those boundaries removed or to have any future changes left in the hands of the Governor in Council. On this side of the House we believe that the Governor in Council would be less able to withstand the strengths of powerful lobbyists to adjust those boundaries than if we had those boundaries established in law and approved by Parliament.

The House and the country ought to know that national parks are revenue generating. They provide more than 34,000 person years of employment and over $145 million in taxes, duties and royalties for local, provincial and federal governments. That is a 300 per cent return on investment, according to the National Parks Task Force of 1986. Additionally, there is evidence that limiting development in parks is the key factor to stimulating growth in surrounding communities, in the case of Alberta such communities as Canmore and Pincher Creek, and Golden, B.C.

I have said repeatedly that we support Bill C-30, but there is in the Bill one clause that does give us some concern. It is not necessarily that we would seek to have that clause removed, but it does give us a little bit of concern. It is the clause that deals with the citizens heritage fund.

At the moment we are not in a clause-by-clause study of the Bill so I will stay away from excessive detail and deal only with the principle in this particular clause. The so-called citizens heritage fund has raised a number of questions. The Canadian Parks and Wilderness Society, for example, has written to the Minister asking some pointed questions about this fund. I will refer to just two paragraphs of the letter to the Minister which state:

During the past months, the Society has consulted with many individuals on Bill C-30. While reaction has been favourable, many expressed concern over the Citizens Heritage Fund. The proposed Fund raises three main questions: (1) Why is it being established? (2) Will it compete with existing voluntary organizations? (3) How will the Fund operate? The total lack of information on this major proposal has prompted this concern.

The letter goes on to state:

We believe the concerns expressed about the Fund are justified. A government administered Fund aimed at raising private monies to supplement a tax based program is a fundamental shift in how government will fund the national parks program. While the Society supports in principle private initiatives to further the national parks program, clearly such involvement must evolve in an informed manner.

That is the difficulty with the citizens heritage fund. It is not evolving in an informed manner. For example, it is my understanding that this fund is to be dispensed at the discretion of the Minister. Whoever is the Minister of the Environment in charge of Parks Canada will be able to use this fund presumably as he sees fit. I am worried about that because it has at least the potential of being just another one of those infamous slush funds that governments like to have available. They like to have them available because at the appropriate moment in time, that is, the closer to an election it is, the more useful these funds become. They can be doled out on a regional basis with a political connotation.

We do not want that at all. After all, Parliament has been reformed. Government is being reformed. We want to be a part of that new wave. I believe that I probably have the support of my colleagues in the New Democratic Party and probably have at least a modest degree of support from the government benches in this regard.

Before winding down my contribution to this debate I want to talk about a couple of the other aspects of the Bill that I consider to be important. The Parliamentary Secretary made reference to the traditional subsistence activities that are contained in the Bill. This particular aspect of the Bill recognizes that new national parks must not inhibit traditional activities that are carried on by local people. The range of activities is broad. It goes from hunting, fishing and trapping by aboriginal peoples, to rabbit hunting and domestic wood cutting in the Atlantic region. It must be made clear that this provision does not apply retroactively to existing parks such as Banff and Jasper but that it will allow the settlement of aboriginal land claims outstanding in national park reserves, such as, for example, the claim of the Haida to South Moresby.

When a new national park was established quite a number of years ago in the constituency which I represent, the Government of Canada entered into extensive negotiations with the Robinson- Superior Treaty as to the extinguishment of their rights. These negotiations were very protracted in nature. The desire of the Government was to find an accommodation. It believed at the time that the best accommodation was to have these aboriginal rights relinquished in return for a cash compensation.

After a long period of discussion, it soon became apparent that we really cannot put a dollar value on aboriginal rights. The Government of the day had enough wisdom to drop the negotiations and say to the Robinson-Superior Treaty with reference to Pukaskwa National Park that they may retain their rights of hunting, fishing and trapping.

Happily, I can report to the House that since the Government of the day made that decision, there have been no serious problems in Pukaskwa National Park. There have been no abuses by the aboriginal people. In fact, it has been proven, as I have said on other occasions, that the aboriginal people are among this nation's finest conservationists.

I would also point out that Bill C-30 provides for wilderness zones and the activities allowed therein. This gives legislative authority to a policy that is already in practice. Environment and conservation groups were hoping for something stronger, but nevertheless, these wilderness zones are now in the Bill. The policy that is in effect has been made law, and that is a welcome development.

As well, something ought to be said about the powers of expropriation. This has been described as a particular fingerprint of this particular Minister and Government. The previous Government had wanted the powers of expropriation to remain in the National Parks Act. This legislation takes away those expropriation powers. In so doing, I believe that the future negotiating position of the Government of Canada in the establishment of new national parks is weakened.

I recognize that in the past, the power of expropriation has created serious difficulties, and perhaps in some instances it could even be described as having been abused. There ought legitimately among Members of Parliament to be concern about expropriation powers. However, I would want to point out that when dealing with national parks, it is very difficult to say that there exists something that could be described as federal greed. That is hardly the case because national parks and national park reserves total only 1.5 per cent of the Canadian landscape. Who among us would say that that is too much?

The Parliamentary Secretary spent a good part of her time dealing with the question of poaching. I am pleased that she did, and there is no need for me to go over all of that ground again, except to say that it is correct and right, in our view, that poaching will now carry significantly heavier fines under the new legislation. This, I believe, well reflects the priority the public is giving today to wildlife protection. There are to be fines of up to $150,000 for poaching any one of the nine endangered species: bighorn sheep, Dall's sheep, grizzly bear, gyrfalcon, mountain goat, peregrine falcon, piping plover, polar bear and whooping crane.

I believe Hon. Members ought to know, however, that the poaching of other game animals such as caribou, elk and deer in national parks carries a much lower fine, a fine of only $2,000. We in the Official Opposition think that the poaching of game animals should carry a higher penalty. We urge the Minister to reassess that particular aspect of the poaching provisions in the Bill.

I am convinced that Canada has far too little in the way of lands that fall under the aegis of national parks. It is certainly not my view that all wilderness in Canada should be protected, but there are special places that ought to be protected like South Moresby, Jasper, Banff and other national parks.

If Bill C-30 passes unaltered, if it is not radically adjusted along the way, then I think it will strike a very positive note for the protection of what others in Canada, on many occasions, have described as a priceless national heritage, the national parks of Canada.

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I was wondering when the Hon. Member for Calgary West (Mr. Hawkes) would rise on a point of order.

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Speaker, I have had a brief conversation with the critic for the Official Opposition who informed me that it was his understanding that there would be one speaker per Party and then we might be able to dispose of the Bill. I have not had a chance to talk to a representative of the New Democratic Party since there was some confusion today about to whom to speak. I wonder if the Members of the New Democratic Party have the same understanding or not.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Birds Hill (Mr. Blaikie) is the designated speaker today, so I imagine he would be the one who could answer.

Mr. Blaikie: Mr. Speaker, I am not aware of any discussions. I am aware that this Bill was sprung on us without any notice this afternoon and that the environment critic for the NDP is not present. I can only assume that she and perhaps others would want to speak on this Bill. I am afraid that I could not agree to any such proposition, given the circumstances under which the Bill was introduced.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I then recognize the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Birds Hill on debate.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa—Carleton): Your environment critic supports the Bill.

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg—Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Carleton (Mr. Turner) says that the Hon. Member for Broadview—Greenwood (Ms. McDonald) supports the Bill. Of course she supports it. We support the Bill. That is not the question. The question is, is this any way to run a Parliament.

At 12.30 in the afternoon on a Friday, the Government decides it will call a Bill without any notice. The environment critics for the Official Opposition and the New Democratic Party are not able to be here to comment. Fortunately for both the Liberal Party and for the NDP, the Hon. Member for Cochrane—Superior (Mr. Penner) and I happened to be around.

I was around 15 months ago when this Bill was introduced. In fact, I was the NDP environment critic at that time. It was only because I was the critic at that time and because I happened to be here this afternoon that we are able to comment on this Bill in a prepared way.

There is no way that this can be considered fair play by the Government. The Government sat on this Bill for 15 months and then on a Friday afternoon in April, without any warning, it brings it forward and hopes that it can slip it into committee. It is not our intention to delay this Bill at all, but it certainly is our intention to make some comments on the principles of the Bill at second reading stage, and that is just what I intend to do and what I expect other NDP Members to be able to do as well.

I began by saying that we support the Bill. We would have liked to have seen it go through a long time ago, but because the Government itself has delayed it for 15 months, there is no reason for us now to be pressured into dealing with it in an hour and a half.

I want to take this opportunity to go over some of the shortcomings of the Bill. First, why do we support it? We support it because it does provide the legislative housekeeping needed for the smooth operation of national parks. It puts into legislation current parks policies, particularly in the limitation of future resort development in the parks system. It provides stiff fines for poaching of rare game and birds, and, as has already been mentioned, many of the parks and wilderness associations are eager to see this Bill pass. Indeed, they are eager to see it go to committee, and that is why it will go to committee after an appropriate time has been allowed for debate at second reading stage.

If this Bill was introduced 15 months ago, one might ask what has taken it so long. With all due respect to you and your province of origin, Mr. Speaker, the cause of the delay has been what we in this House sometimes call the goon squad from Alberta. This goon squad regularly stands in the way of any kind of progressive legislation the Government might be considering. It is rare enough that the Government considers progressive legislation, but when it does you always have the goon squad from Alberta trying to retard the process.

The only national park, I suppose, that would be appropriate for Alberta as far as those people are concerned would be some kind of human dinosaur park where the goon squad from Alberta could be stuffed and mounted so people could see just what political dinosaurs look like.

Mr. Daubney: The NDP in Manitoba will be in a museum after the next election.

Mr. Blaikie: The Alberta caucus might go for that if you could convince them there was a buck to be made. That is the way they see the world. It is just a place out there waiting for a buck to be made.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa—Carleton): We could put Howard Pawley in a museum.

Mr. Blaikie: The goon squad has the most morally primitive view of the world you could imagine. Any Bill that would suggest there should be areas of the planet that are left alone, where no money is made out of them, is a travesty for them of Progressive Conservative doctrine. That is the reason for the delay, the goon squad from Alberta. Enough about them; history will deal with them appropriately.

Some of the points we would like to raise and elaborate upon have to do with the requirement for the Government to be more frank with Parliament in this Bill and this debate about its intentions for various parks, particularly those which have been the object of some controversy. We need to see proposed boundaries for Banff and Jasper. We need to see any agreement with the Alberta Government that might have been arrived at prior to the Bill finally being brought forward for second reading. We need to see actual proposals for what would constitute a wilderness area, and planned use, and the details of the administration of the citizens heritage fund. These are all things we are debating in the dark because the Government refuses to give us any details.

We need to know that the Government is willing to support parks as natural preserves and not as tourist sites. We need to know that the Government is willing to allocate resources to park development without having to develop quasi-private fund-raising programs like the citizens heritage fund. What is the Government's commitment to these kinds of parks separate and apart from these private fund-raising schemes it has in mind?

In short, we need to know whether the Government has a clear and unequivocal commitment to national parks. We need to know whether there will be amendments to the Park Act which give clearly articulated principles by which the parks will be administered. Parks have suffered from too much ad hoc and discretionary decision-making already.

We need to know about amendments to the Park Act which will legislate current policy against resource development. It is not enough just to have a policy. We want to see that policy enshrined in legislation. We remember that it is not so long ago that a former unlamented Minister of the Environment, I cannot remember the name of her riding, spoke about logging and mining in national parks. We need legislation which prevents any Minister from suddenly getting a whim about logging and mining in national parks and permitting that sort of atrocity to go on.

What does Bill C-30 do? It expands the National Parks system. We all should regard that positively. It entrenches in legislation the establishment of Ellesmere Island National Park and provides for the future establishment of Grasslands National Park in Saskatchewan. I got some mail on that park the other day. It has been dragging on and on. Some agreement was reached with respect to I believe water rights but other negotiations are still going on.

When we think about areas that need to be preserved we quite rightly think about South Moresby or places which, by their nature, command the attention of the media and others in such a way that a grasslands national park does not. However, there is very little natural grassland left in western Canada and that in and of itself is a feature of what naturally occurs and what there was a great deal of in Canada at one point. Just as much effort should go into preserving natural prairie habitat as goes into preserving natural habitat in British Columbia, Ontario or the Atlantic provinces. I make the plea on behalf of the Grasslands National Park that it might be completed very soon.

We wonder why the Bill makes no mention of the establishment of national marine parks. The federal Cabinet approved a national marine parks policy in September, 1986, well before Bill C-30 was introduced. At the moment there are no marine parks in Canada, although there are proposals for five potential parks. One of the reasons no such park exists is that the Government has no statutory authority to establish marine parks. In its marine park policy the Government decided to create this authority with an amendment to the National Parks Act. What do we have here? Amendments to the National Parks Act but nothing with respect to marine parks, the very kind of amendments that the Government said it ought to bring in before this Bill was drafted. Perhaps there will be some explanation for the absence of those kinds of amendments.

Bill C-30 also works to eliminate poaching. Under the 1930 Parks Act the maximum fine for any transgression against a park is a $500 fine. That $500 is certainly not what it used to be, certainly not what it was in 1930. The penalty is too paltry to dissuade poachers from taking the valuable game which can be found in the parks. The Parliamentary Secretary went on at some length about that.

The Bill lists nine species deserving of protection in particular, including bighorn sheep, Dall's sheep, grizzly bear, gyrfalcon, mountain goat, peregrine falcon, piping plover, polar bear and whooping crane. It creates a penalty for poaching those animals of a maximum of $150,000 or six months in jail. It also raises to $2,000 the maximum fine for other offences under the Act. We are delighted to see that and we await the day when those kinds of penalties will be available to the Government. However, the one thing it could have done, and this is very timely given the program on The Journal a couple of weeks ago about the poaching not of these rare animals—

Mr. Turner (Ottawa—Carleton): The Silent Slaughter.

Mr. Blaikie: Yes, that is what it was called, about the poaching not of animals considered to be rare but animals that are normally hunted.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa—Carleton): Like elk.

Mr. Blaikie: Yes, like elk, moose or bear. The Government has not moved on that in this Bill and I hope it will. It will have an opportunity in committee to move amendments to provide stiffer penalties for the poaching of animals like black bear, moose, elk, caribou and others. Strange as it may seem, there is an incredible black market for various animal parts. I will not go into the details, Mr. Speaker, for fear of offending your great sensitivity and innocence in these things. Bear gall bladder is an example of one part for which there is great demand in Asia. With all due respect to Asian aspirations to greater virility, the people in Asia who need these products and the people who are providing them with these products should stay out of Canada, leave our wildlife alone, and sort out their assorted problems in some other way.

I hope that we will see amendments to this Act which take into account that which we have come to know since this Bill was introduced about the silent slaughter of many ordinary game animals here in Canada because once they are gone, there is no way of getting them back.

I would like to say a word about the National Parks citizens' heritage fund. The Government wishes to establish a fund to which Canadians could make tax deductible donations to expand or enhance the parks site system. Since this fund was first discussed Canadians have been trying to find out exactly what the Government has in mind. All we have learned is that the Minister says that any money raised via the fund will not diminish the allocation to the department through Parliament. That should be "will not diminish an already diminished allocation" because we all know of the cut-backs which have already occurred in the Department of the Environment. There is, however, no assurance from the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) or Treasury officials that we will see no further diminishing of the Parks Canada budget. That is not much of a guarantee at all.

The Minister says that the money will be used for special projects and not regular operations. The Bill itself is ambiguous on that point and offers no definition of "enhancing the park and site system". Furthermore, there will not be an arm's length agency to administer the fund. It will be at the Minister's discretion.

Where I come from and where the Hon. Member for Cochrane—Superior comes from this is called a slush fund and is suspect. I appreciate that the Member for Cochrane—Superior brought his vast experience with slush funds to bear on this debate and that he has now repented of his association with slush funds through his membership in the Liberal Party and a new day has dawned in the Liberal Party.

In any event, being enshrined in this Bill is a ministerial slush fund of which we are critical. We feel that it is an irresponsible and dangerous measure. It is irresponsible because there is already a mechanism for Canadians to make gifts to the Crown. The Minister says he wants to make it easier for Canadians to give lands and estates for parks. In effect, what he wants is a way to circumvent the Financial Administration Act.

Such a fund is dangerous because it is government encroachment on private fund-raising which already exists or may exist in the future. It would increase the moneys which are spent at the Minister's discretion, and it would consequently increase the leverage the Minister has over non-governmental organizations and other organizations which would be in line for grants flowing from this fund.

It is sad to note that some environmental groups have supported the notion of this fund. They are entitled to their view, but we feel that they have perhaps been influenced by the Minister's officials who have told them that this is the only way in which money can be made available for park projects. It is a sad commentary that this Minister sees more hope in getting money to enhance and expand his department's operations through voluntary taxation than through Treasury Board.

We in the New Democratic Party are not prepared to accept that we are at the limit of what Canadians are willing to spend on the preservation of their natural heritage. Obviously the Minister feels that we have reached that limit and that he must arrange a fund through which he can raid the moneys that might be available to other voluntary groups which are concerned about the environment.

Bill C-30 permits the Government to set boundaries for Banff and Jasper. The Government offers two reasons why it wants these boundaries to be legislated. It says that boundaries are needed before local self-government can be negotiated and that it wants to limit the development of town sites. Yet, we are not offered any idea of what these boundaries will be. By passing Bill C-30 Parliament may be agreeing to boundaries far wider than it would desire. We are basically asked to sign a blank cheque, to turn over the question of what boundaries may be established for Banff and Jasper to the Government. That is something we are not willing to do.

By the way, I understand that the citizens of Jasper have already indicated that they do not wish to pursue self-government at this time. Residents of Banff, however, will be voting later this year on whether they wish to negotiate self-government. I know that there are people in Alberta, who are looking to a different kind of self-government. They would like self-government for Alberta and I understand that some of them will be running against the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) and other incumbents in Alberta.

I take it that the movement for self-government has really got off the ground in Alberta. That which is happening in the town site of Banff is only a manifestation of a larger phenomenon. We hope that this will not develop into a political movement which will sweep away the goon squad because we value them so highly. Besides, what would be the point of replacing the current goon squad with a separatist goon squad? We intend to sweep away the Alberta goon squad and replace them with New Democrats. That is the solution which we see to that problem.

Another issue in Bill C-30 is the definition and limitation of a ski area. Bill C-30 very explicitly states the exact boundaries of permitted ski resorts and places a moratorium on future ski development in the parks. There are currently five ski areas in national parks and a sixth is provided for by the federal-provincial arrangement which established Gros Morne National Park in Newfoundland.

It has been government policy for some years to limit the development of ski areas. This policy has not, unfortunately, been rigorously implemented and ski resorts have continued to expand, particularly in Banff National Park. There is a clear need to legislate boundaries for ski development and we welcome this provision of the Bill.

However, the Minister has already expressed his willingness to entertain changes to this section of Bill C-30. We know why. We know that it is because of the pressure applied on the Minister by the goon squad in Alberta with respect to a particular development in one of the national parks, the Sunshine ski hill. The Minister has said that it is okay with him if the committee studying the Bill decides to defer a decision on the Sunshine ski hill to some future date. Sunshine is remarkably successful, it seems, at getting Parks Canada to bend its policies and, although I really hope I am wrong in this, it seems to have won another round with the Minister.

I see that the Member for Ottawa—Carleton is shaking his head. I hope he is right. Time will tell. I know that the commitment of the Member for Ottawa—Carleton to this and to holding the line against the goon squad is beyond question and I wish him very well. He knows that he will have our support in this. We hope that the Minister has not been weakening on this matter of defining and living in ski areas.

Bill C-30 permits the Government to establish wilderness areas. It then requires the Minister not to authorize any activities which are likely to impair the wilderness character of the area. Notwithstanding this prohibition, Parks Canada can build rudimentary camp sites and permit aircraft to fly in.

One of the more striking deficiencies of Bill C-30 is a missing definition of wilderness. I admit that there might be some difficulty in defining wilderness, but no attempt is even made. We can infer from the activities which will be permitted that to Parks Canada wilderness is an area in which humans can camp, walk, travel by aircraft, and carry on other activities. Many Canadians would disagree with this definition. Many Canadians would say that there ought to be some wilderness which is in fact wilderness and left completely alone.

They would see wilderness as an area to be protected from human activity. Nowhere does Bill C-30 make any legislative provision for true wilderness sanctuaries. We see this as a serious shortcoming. For example, some members of the Alberta caucus—the same group to which I have been referring all along—are concerned that this Bill will stop the proposed condominium development at Maligne Lake. This is because Maligne Lake is apparently slated to be a wilderness area. However, Maligne Lake already has a small group of buildings at one end and motorboats, including tourist boats, on the lake. That is not my definition of wilderness. I hope it is not a definition which anyone else accepts.

One end of the lake is zoned for development and a corridor down the lake is zoned for commercial activities so that a diesel boat can travel back and forth on the lake. The sides of the lake are wilderness zones. I suggest we need a better zoning program for wilderness areas than is currently offered. It is as ridiculous as suggesting that if there is no housing in the bush at the edge of an airport, the area is a wilderness zone.

Mr. Heap: Maybe the bottom of the lake is wilderness.

Mr. Blaikie: Indeed. I would suggest that the wilderness might exist in the minds of the Alberta Tory caucus, but that would be an insult to wilderness. Before this Bill goes to committee the Minister should provide all interested Members with his plans for the zoning and preservation of a wilderness area.

Bill C-30 permits certain subsistence activities. For example, it permits the Minister to allow certain subsistence hunting and fishing and other activities in national parks when these are part of a federal-provincial agreement. We are in favour of this in principle, especially because we wish to see future parks developed in areas which are traditional hunting grounds for local peoples, particularly aboriginal peoples. The fact is that some of the new parks which we want to create are also the traditional lands of various aboriginal peoples. Some accommodation will have to be made between their rights and the desire of Canadians to establish national parks in these areas.

Those kinds of arrangements are being worked out, as in the case of South Moresby, and those kinds of arrangements will have to be worked out in future parks development where there is legitimate conflict between aboriginal rights and the desire of Canadians to establish national parks. The Government has given very little indication of its intentions in this area, and we want to see more detail.

To its credit, Bill C-30 accomplishes much housekeeping. Most of the amendments are to the regulatory power for parks administration and, generally speaking, we favour good housekeeping. Some of the proposed changes are disconcerting. For instance, the Government wishes to continue to be able to kill "dangerous or superabundant animals". The parks mandate is to permit natural processes to prevail. Therefore, is not the killing of superabundant animals against this philosophy? Likewise, permitting the destruction of dangerous animals denies what is often the reality of humans encroaching on the wildlife habitat of a park and putting these animals under the kind of pressure that results in attacks from time to time. This accepts the premise that it is appropriate to destroy animals which are disturbed in this way. We question that rationale.

The Bill expands the activities which may exist outside of town sites in national parks to include those for accommodation, recreation or entertainment of visitors to the parks. Courtesy of Bill C-30, the Government could permit a casino or amusement park to be built anywhere in the national parks system.

Bill C-30 authorizes regulated use of pesticides and other toxic substances in the parks. We believe that is something which should have been dealt with much more stringently.

In closing, I believe I have dealt with most of the NDP views on this Bill. We have no desire to delay it, but we want to have an adequate debate at second reading. I know that the environment critic for the New Democratic Party, the Hon. Member for Broadview—Greenwood will regret that she was not here. No notice was given that this Bill might be debated, and if the Government thinks it will play these kinds of games with important legislation like this and slip it through by surprise, it has another thought coming. We have others who are willing to speak to this Bill.

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure to make a few comments about Bill C-30. First, I think I must deal with the closing comments of my hon. friend. He said that they have no desire to delay the legislation because it is important.

Four minutes prior to that he said it was his Party's position that the Bill could not even go forward to committee, where democracy could take place, until the Minister provided him with detailed zoning regulations for every national park in Canada. That is blackmail. It is the kind of blackmail that we have seen consistently with each piece of legislation that has come to this House this week. For five days we debated the joining of two Crown corporations into a stronger entity to enable it to compete better and provide more jobs. There were $3 million or $4 million in public funds expended on a piece of legislation so that those Members would be able to stand up in the future to say the Government cannot manage to get legislation through the House and we do not have time to deal with important issues. This deliberate filibustering began some three months ago. They stand up to say they are willing to co-operate, but if the Government acts in this way it will not get co-operation.

We have seen six-month hoist motions to kill two pieces of very important legislation earlier this week. One is a tax Bill to provide rebates to farmers, miners and fishermen so that there will be jobs. Every time we try to create a job the NDP fights us because they want to campaign in the next election as the champions of job creation. In spite of that we have created one and a quarter million jobs in three and one-half years.

Mr. Waddell: How many in national parks?

Mr. Hawkes: One must really listen to what they say in order to contrast it with what they do.

Canadians have a lot of common sense. It is what that Party will do that will count on voting day. That Party has embarked on a very dangerous course of obstructing this House.

Mr. Waddell: What does this have to do with national parks?

Mr. Hawkes: They are trying to subject this House to the tyranny of a minority. Every time people see those poor people from Turkey who were scammed by a travel agent and brought to this country under false pretences—

Mr. Robinson: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I just came into the House for what I understood was a debate on the National Parks Act. Unless the Order of the Day has been changed, I would respectfully ask that you urge the Member to stick to the subject before the House.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I believe the Hon. Member was getting to the Bill. The Hon. Member.

• (1350)

Mr. Hawkes: I certainly was, Mr. Speaker. We are trying to move on a situation that has existed for many years, decades, in relation to our national parks. We are trying to do something in the public interest and this House and members of all parties should co-operate. But when the Opposition filibusters and delays things like the refugee legislation they cause heartache and disaster for Turks and people of one kind or another. When those Members delay something like this National Parks Bill even longer, they put wildlife population at risk.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member does have 20 minutes and then we can have questions and comments. I would hope Hon. Members would keep their questions and comments for the next time we have an opportunity to question him. It has been a wonderful Friday afternoon. Please do not tax the Chair.

Mr. Hawkes: This Government was elected by the Canadian people. Three quarters of the Members of this House, members of my Party, were chosen by the Canadian people to come to this House. We were chosen because the country was in turmoil and we promised to consult and we promised to co-operate. We promised to end the era of confrontation. We have been working well for Canada in areas of language policy, in terms of job creation and with the development of sensible pieces of legislation. We have tried to produce legislation for this House in first reading stage in most instances months in advance of the debate.

This Bill was produced for this Chamber 15 months ago so that the consultation process with respect to its strengths and weaknesses could occur and we could get our act together, so that if it needed some fine tuning at committee stage, we would know the witnesses who needed to be called and we could move it forward and put it into place.

I have sat here and listened to the New Democratic Party after getting the clear-cut support from the Liberal Party. The Liberal Party believes that national parks are important. The Liberals believe that we need to get this piece of legislation in place and the Conservatives also believe those two things. But the New Democratic Party stands up at the very first opportunity and tries to blackmail the whole House. Less than 35 Members try to blackmail this whole House. They say: "You produce a certain document, Mr. Minister, or we will not let it go to committee". That is blackmail and this House cannot allow itself to be subjected to that kind of blackmail. This Bill should go to committee now. The Bill we debated earlier today should have gone to committee a week ago. The Bill we were debating on Thursday should have gone to committee on that day. It is time to get the job done, to clear the decks, so we can have an election. Those Members holler for an election and then obstruct the House which stops us from going to the Canadian people until we get our legislation through.

For those reasons, and to stop the kind of dilatory motions we have experienced every time we have brought significant work forward this week—they moved a six-months hoist and tried to get a second round of speakers—I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Nanaimo—Alberni (Mr. Shellenberg):

That the question be now put.

Mr. Heap: Questions and comments, Mr. Speaker?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): There are no questions or comments.

Mr. Waddell: I would like to speak on the motion, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member for Vancouver—Kingsway (Mr. Waddell).

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver—Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, nothing could be farther from the truth when the Member says that the New Democratic Party is trying to stop this Bill.

Mr. Hawkes: You are trying to blackmail us. You tell us to give you this document or you will not go to committee. That is blackmail.

Mr. Waddell: Those Hon. Members can scream all they like. They have 211 Members of Parliament. They have control over the agenda of the House. They have had the management of this House for almost four years. They are plugged up with all their Bills and then the Hon. Member has the audacity to blame us.

Mr. Hawkes: You deserve the blame, so take it.

Mr. Waddell: Then he suggests we are stopping the calling of the election. Let me suggest to the Member, if he wants to call an election, to get the Hon. Member for Manicouagan, the Prime Minister, (Mr. Mulroney), to go to the Governor General this afternoon and call an election. We are ready for an election.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Waddell: We will take you on in an election. We are not afraid.

Mr. McCurdy: Let us have an election right now.

Mr. Waddell: We want to talk about the honesty and promises of the Right Hon. Member for Manicouagan. We want to talk about that.

Some Hon. Members: Oh. oh!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order. The Hon. Member for Vancouver—Kingsway has the floor.

Mr. Waddell: We are prepared to talk about free trade in the election campaign, the so-called free trade deal, and how it is going to end Canadian sovereignty if it goes through. We are prepared to talk about the environment. We are prepared to say exactly what the Conservatives have done about the environment and what can be done. We are also prepared to talk about jobs, not just in one section of the country but in all parts of the country, like my part of the country in British Columbia, in Newfoundland, in the north of Canada and in northern Ontario and Quebec where we still have too many people unemployed.

We are prepared to talk about the sell-out of this country to the Americans with respect to culture and the sell-out of this country in the trade deal. We are prepared to talk about the fact that the Government is prepared, at the last minute, after four years, to privatize an airline that is working well for Canadians and how it is going to be run down to the standard of Texas Air or one of those airlines in the United States. We are prepared to talk about that.

We are not shying away in any way from dealing with the environment. On May 2, 1980, I introduced a Private Member's Bill in this House entitled "An Act Respecting a National Park on Moresby Island and its Adjacent Islands". That was a long time ago and I am happy to point out that after some struggles by the Hon. Member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton), in particular, and some help from the Chair and from the Hon. Minister of the Environment (Mr. McMillan), and because of co-operation throughout the House, we were able to work together and indeed get a wilderness area for South Moresby.

The Government is taking an environment Bill which it has been sitting on for 16 months and bringing it into the House of Commons today without any notice. We were supposed to debate another Bill. We were supposed to debate Eldorado Nuclear. The Government drops it on us because it thinks it is very smart, and then the Hon. Member brings in what amounts to a closure on this Bill.

Some other governments did that. The St. Laurent Government acted in that way in 1957. In 1958 the people showed what they thought of that Government. The Diefenbaker Government got too arrogant in 1962 and the people put that Government in a minority position and then got rid of it.

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): It being two o'clock, the House will now proceed to the consideration of Private Members' Business as listed on today's Order Paper.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' BUSINESS—BILLS

[English]

CANADA SAFE DRINKING WATER ACT

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches) moved that Bill C-224, an Act to protect and enhance the quality of drinking water in Canada, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have the opportunity to say a few words on this Private Member's Bill that I put forward for the second time in this Parliament. The intention of the Bill is to attempt to address some of the serious concerns felt by Canadians about the quality of drinking water where they live. The Bill goes even further than that, and I will expand as I make my remarks this afternoon.

The explanation of the Bill itself is that it would protect and enhance the quality of drinking water in Canada. It provides for opportunities for public involvement in the making of regulations to set maximal permissible levels for contaminants and other substances in drinking water. The regulations would apply to both public and private water systems. The operator of a public water system would be required to monitor water quality regularly and supply the results to the users and to the Minister of the Environment. Any user of a private water system may have the water tested by the Minister of the Environment. Under this Bill, it would also be an offence for the operator of a public water system to provide water which contravenes the regulations or fails to comply with monitoring and notice requirements. It would also be an offence for anyone to pollute a public or private water system. The Bill also permits water users to sue or to recover damages for contraventions of the Act. It gives any person standing to seek judicial review against the Minister of the Environment. The Bill authorizes the Minister to commission research into matters related to drinking water quality and establish an advisory council to assist the Minister. That then is the explanation of the Bill.

During the last election campaign, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) promised:

> A P.C. Government will work with the provincial Governments to establish a set of regulations which will lead to standards for safe drinking water. This will be accomplished with due regard to the best practical technology and to economic constraints.

That promise was made by the Prime Minister during the last election campaign. The last time that the House had an opportunity to debate this Bill on January 21, 1985, the government Members' argument against having the Bill referred to a legislative committee at that time was that the Government had indeed made a commitment to do something about bringing in a safe drinking water Act. That was in January, 1985, and we still have not seen any indication from the Government that we are about to be presented with a safe drinking water Act. Some time ago in a paper tabled in the House, the Minister of the Environment also indicated that he would support bringing in such an Act.

In the absence of the Government coming forward with a proposed Act as has been promised, and assurances given to Canadians, the House is now given the opportunity to deal with this important matter and, indeed, refer it to a legislative committee for public input, discussion, and to allow Members on all sides of the House to examine the importance of this question. Since January, 1985, the House has not had an opportunity to express its views on this question. That is one of the reasons why the House of Commons committee that makes recommendations on Private Members' Business did recommend that this Bill be given some priority for debate in the House. That is why it is here again today.

In terms of the debate it is useful to take a look at some of the information that we do have about the quality of drinking water, not only in Canada but elsewhere. While Canada has less than 1 per cent of the world's population, we possess an estimated 25 per cent of the earth's fresh water. The Great Lakes contain 18 per cent of the planet's surface fresh water. Canada's rivers have a combined flow of 68,000 cubic metres per second, enough to fill all of the country's bathtubs every 10 seconds. On a global scale, fresh water constitutes only 0.2 per cent of the total water supply.

Until the first decades of the 20th century, water-borne diseases such as typhoid fever claimed the lives of many Canadians. Although modern medicine has advanced to the point where this disease is no longer a serious threat, new forms of water-borne diseases are still emerging. The World Health Organization indicates that in the Third World diseases associated with dirty water kills 50,000 people every day, more than 80 million people per year. As long as bacterial contamination of Canadian water is allowed to continue, such as that generated by food processing plants, Canadians cannot assume that they are immune to water-borne diseases that currently plague the Third World.

Currently the greatest threat to Canada's drinking water is caused by chemical contaminants. It has been estimated by many environmental scientists, including those associated with the federal Department of the Environment that, in the Great Lakes alone, there are anywhere between 400 and 800 known chemicals which have been identified in the Great Lakes waters. Among those existing pollutants are mercury, lead, copper, chromium, zinc, PAHs (polyaromatic hydrocarbons), phenols, asbestos fibres, arsenic, PCBs, DDT, chlorinated organics, dioxin, HCB (hevachlorobenzene), ammonia, mirex and selenium.

Most of those chemicals come from a variety of sources, but one of the worst areas of concern are those chemical plants located on the U.S. side of the Niagara River. Approximately four or five years ago I had an opportunity to go to the Niagara Peninsula and over to the New York side of the Niagara River and take a look at some of those chemical companies which operate there. Some of the most serious environmental problems are coming from these chemical plants and on dump sites which, when one takes a look at the map of the U.S. side of the Niagara River, enough to scare one half to death when one notices how close those chemical dump sites are located to the face of the Niagara gorge. I will return to that in a second.

Some of the best known sources of pollution over there are the infamous Love Canal, the Hyde Park dump site, the "S" area dump, the 102nd Street dump, and the Niagara Falls, New York, Waste Water Treatment Plant, among many others.

It is worth-while pointing out that I was the chairman of this particular group that went there to take a look at this. I received agreement from all Parties in the House to table the report that we had drawn up as a result of that investigation. Certainly, the Members who were in the House at that time and who gave agreement to the tabling of the report, recognized the seriousness of the situation. What happened and is still happening is that when those chemical companies wanted to get rid of waste, all they did was excavate large holes in the ground and dumped these waste chemicals in there willy-nilly. They were dumped in a raw state without any kind of pretreatment. They were put in containers which were bound to leak and leach in later years, and that is exactly what is happening. As the chemicals are freed from the containers, they are going into ground water supplies and through the ground water into the Niagara River.

In fact, when we visited the area, coincidentally the CTV Television Network also had a camera crew down there which took an aquarium tank and filled it with water from the Niagara River. Then they placed a live fish in the tank. I am sure it was just coincidence but the fish immediately jumped out of the tank, even though scientific data indicate that the Niagara River is so polluted now that scientists can hardly even measure how much fresh water is in that river.

It is a very serious matter. Much of the pollutants which have gone into the Niagara River have been in the form of dioxin, the dioxin used in the Vietnam war to defoliate trees. That was the initial intention, but of course we know what it did to human beings.

I believe it was a scientist working for Environment Canada who estimated that one shovel full of dioxin thrown into the Great Lakes would kill anything that lived in the Great Lakes for the next 100 years. However, we have chemical dump sites on the U.S. side of the Niagara River containing tonnes of this stuff. It is leaching into the river and posing a very serious threat to the drinking water supply of some six million Canadians who live around Lake Ontario, not least of whom are those who happen to live in my constituency of Beaches located right on the edge of Lake Ontario.

The Government's response—and I am sure that we will hear it in this debate as well—to this kind of alarming report is that all it serves to do is to scare Canadians.

As a result of the last time that I spoke on the matter in the House, I received a number of telephone calls from people in my constituency who happened to be pregnant. They asked: "Should I be drinking water from Lake Ontario?" It is an extremely difficult question to answer. I drink the water myself, but it is absolutely clear that doctors and scientists recommend that pregnant women not eat any more than one fish per year caught in Lake Ontario. Just as a matter of interest, when I first heard that recommendation a number of years ago, I asked the then Minister of National Health and Welfare in the previous Liberal Government why the allowable dioxin contamination in fish happened to be 20 parts per trillion in Canada while in the United States the limit was 10 parts per trillion.

The response I received was that it was twice as much in Canada because Canadians ate half as much fish on a per capita basis as did Americans. In other words, the Government's response to that contamination in fish was that because we eat half as much fish as Americans supposedly do, our bodies can absorb twice as much dioxin. My answer to that was that if one eats more than the average amount of fish for a Canadian, one is out of luck; one is really out of luck.

This is the kind of response that we have been receiving from Governments. They indicate that all we are trying to do is scare people and that the trace amounts of all the contaminants I have mentioned, including dioxin, in the Great Lakes are in such minute quantities that it is inconceivable that they would present any kind of danger to anyone's health.

I should like to dispute that point, because it has been estimated that anywhere between 400 and 800 known, identifiable chemicals have been found in the Great Lakes. No one knows what effect each of these chemicals have on each other. Even although they may be in minute traces, by the time they combine with each other they may well be establishing some new kind of chemical. This was pointed out in an issue of Protect Yourself magazine on Canada's drinking water, wherein an environmental scientist indicated the following:

> While it is true that the Great Lakes may contain up to 800 known chemicals, and any number of unknown substances, it is also true that chemical levels are extremely low. The development of sophisticated technology in the past two decades has enabled scientists to detect minute quantities of substances in our water supply.
> Dioxin, for example, can be measured in parts per quadrillion. The current measurement standard is parts per billion . . . We have almost reached the stage where we are measuring numbers of molecules. Yet as Dr. Ross Hall, a professor of biochemistry at McMaster University, has pointed out, to a human cell, "a part per trillion is not a minute amount . . . It represents a few hundred molecules. And we know in the case of dioxin that a few hundred molecules is sufficient to impact on a cell harmfully." So the fact that chemical levels in drinking water are very low should not induce complacency. Once again, it is important to keep in mind that there is a great deal we don't know about the effects of modern pollutants. Much more research is needed, for example, on the phenomenon of chemical synergism, or interaction.
> Synergism is the process whereby two or more substances, acting together, have a combined effect that is greater than the sum of their individual effects. This process is well-illustrated by the medical histories of workers in asbestos industry. The incidence of cancer amongst asbestos workers is nine times higher than it is amongst the general population. Yet the risk of cancer is 92 times higher amongst asbestos workers who smoke, in comparison to the rate amongst men who neither smoke nor work with asbestos.

That is just a very simple example of some of the scientific concerns which have been expressed about the lack of government action in the whole area of water quality.

In that my time has practically expired, I want to wind up by saying very seriously that the only standards which exist in Canada for the safe drinking water supply have nothing to do with human beings. The only standards which exist at the present time concern fish. If one poisons a fish by contaminating water, one is liable to charges under existing regulations. However, there is nothing to say that one cannot pollute drinking water or any kind of water to endanger human beings; it is only if it endangers fish.

I have called time and time again to have the matter referred to a standing committee of the House to allow Hon. Members to examine the matter in a much closer way than we can examine it by considering a Private Member's Bill for one hour, to call expert testimony, and to listen to and give the public an opportunity to express its concerns about the quality of drinking water in Canadian communities. I think the House would serve those people very well if it were to give them that kind of opportunity.

I say seriously to Hon. Members on all sides of the House: "Don't talk this Bill out, refer it to a legislative committee, and allow for the kind of discussion this matter of serious consequence deserves".

Mrs. Monique Tardif (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to speak today about safe drinking water, an issue of vital importance to the health and well-being of all Canadians, and one that is particularly by important to the Department of National Health and Welfare. I am indeed much encouraged by the initiative taken by the Hon. Member for Beaches (Mr. Young) in tabling Bill C-224 which concerns safe drinking water. This Bill is similar to Bills C-212, C-226 and C-276 that were tabled in the past three years.

The Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) has stressed many times how vital safe drinking water is to public health, and that is why, as was pointed out by the Minister of the Environment (Mr. McMillan), the Department of National Health and Welfare is primarily responsible at the federal level for the quality of our drinking water.

When similar legislation, C-212, C-266 and C-276, was introduced previously, we indicated at the time that the Government intended to introduce legislation on safe drinking water in Canada.

Mr. Speaker, we must not forget that both levels of government, federal and provincial or territorial, have an important role to play in the distribution of safe drinking water. The Department of National Health and Welfare of course appreciates the fact that provincial governments have always taken responsibility for the treatment of water for the purposes of production and distribution of drinking water. While the provinces are primarily responsible for the protection and control of drinking water supplies, authority is generally delegated to municipalities and public utilities for the production and distribution of drinking water in their respective communities. The standards or guidelines to be met are defined by the Department of National Health and Welfare, in co-operation with the provincial goverments.

As a matter of fact, the Department has been actively involved in setting standards for the quality of drinking water since 1923, when an order in council was adopted to regulate the bacteriological content of drinking water on board ships using continental water supplies. In 1968, the Department published the first set of universal standards and objectives for drinking water in Canada, prescribing standards for a substantial number of toxic chemicals and also for radioactive substances and microorganisms. These standards were completely revised in 1978 by a joint federal-provincial committee, which produced recommendations for the quality of drinking water in Canada, including guidelines on fifty-one parameters, of which forty-two involved chemical substances.

Since that time, Mr. Speaker, new scientific data have found that water contains a broad range of chemical products and that some of them enter the water as a result of the treatment process itself. Considering this new information, the Department has recognized the need for revising its recommendations for the quality of drinking water in Canada, and this document is now in the process of being published. As in the past, the review process took place with the full co-operation and participation of the provincial governments, under the auspices of the Joint Federal-Provincial Advisory Board on Environmental and Occupational Health. Considering the importance of the safety of our drinking water and the rapidly increasing body of knowledge in this respect, a standing sub-committee has been set up so that we can update the recommendations on an on-going basis and also consider other important matters related to water supplies generally. In fact, the actual changes are already being made.

The next edition of the recommendations will include 41 pesticides, of which 31 were not previously considered. The recommendations will include 15 new organic parameters and the re-evaluation of nine inorganic and organic substances, including an evaluation of the need to set guidelines for PCBs and dioxins, which interest and concern many Canadians now.

Setting guidelines is not the only activity related to drinking water that the Department of National Health and Welfare carries out. The safety of drinking water supplies can only be assured with a much broader approach. Overall, the Department's long-term goals for drinking water are:

—Ensure that all Canadians are supplied with drinking water that satisfies the recommendations for drinking water quality in Canada;

—Ensure that the operational safety of point-of-use water treatment devices sold commercially is determined by laboratory tests under actual conditions, so that potentially dangerous devices are removed from the market;

—Ensure also that all chemicals and materials directly or indirectly involved in the production, distribution or conservation of drinking water be evaluated for their potential dangers in order to guarantee their safety.

Mr. Speaker, in view of the concerns expressed about the quality of some drinking water, it seems that some Canadians have lost confidence in their municipal drinking water to the extent that they turn to other sources of supply or feel obliged to further purify their own drinking water. It is estimated that the sales of bottled water made by the soft drink industry alone amount to some $15 million a year. Spring water and other types of water sold in containers can be seen on the shelves of grocery stores and pharmacies and sometimes even at roadside stands.

Over the last few years, we have also witnessed a proliferation of devices of every imaginable kind to treat water at the point of use and it seems that these devices are increasingly popular with the general public. Departmental surveys carried out in major Canadian cities indicate that about 3 per cent of all households are using some device to treat tap water and that half of these devices are equipped with activated charcoal filters. Beside their prices, most of the devices available in stores have one or several other use-related inconveniences, so that any improvement perceived in the water quality could in fact go hand in hand with a number of potential hazards.

It is important to remember that the treatment of drinking water to make it safe and its subsequent distribution to consumers could also contribute to the contamination process. Many products may be used to treat water, including disinfectants, coagulants, dechlorination agents, fluoridation and fluoride adjustment agents, as well as corrosion and scale prevention compounds, and water softeners. Among the materials used in the building of water storage and distribution system pipes and liners, we could single out cement coated cast iron and steel, asbestos cement, plastics (for instance, polyvinyl chloride, polybutylene, chlorinated polyethylene), epoxy resins, enamels, as well as tar pitch and bituminous mastics.

As a rule, Mr. Speaker, when these products are prepared for a drinking water related application, they are of higher quality. Just the same, it would be appropriate to set up strict standards to assess the health acceptability of all products and chemical substances in contact with drinking water; the possibilities for implementation of appropriate measures are under active study by the Department of National Health and Welfare and some provincial organizations.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I would say that even though the principle underlying Bill C-224 is commendable, the Department believes that it fails to address the whole series of questions which must be considered so that we can continue to have a reliable supply of safe drinking water. In addition, it does not really take into full consideration the major role played by the provinces in this field. Any new legislation in this field simply must include provisions to harmonize the respective roles of the provinces and of the federal Government. Obviously a new and specific parliamentary mandate must be established if the quality and safety of Canada's drinking water supply are to be guaranteed. Legislation does exist, but it does not cover new issues, including the one to which I have just alluded. The only requirements pertaining to drinking water in the regulations adopted pursuant to the Department of National Health and Welfare Act concern public transport companies. The Food and Drugs Act does give specific powers but, except for bottled water, they are not exercised because the executory powers are quite inappropriate in the case of collective drinking water supplies.

In this respect, in recent months, representatives of the Department of National Health and Welfare have been meeting with the interested parties, including spokesmen for the provinces, concerning the possibility of extending the powers of the federal government to monitor the quality of drinking water.

Mr. Speaker, I think that what I have just said clearly indicates that the Department of National Health and Welfare is committed to see to it that Canadians can indeed count on reliable water supplies and that, in co-operation with the other parties involved, we are seriously considering measures which will enable us to reach that goal.

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the opportunity this afternoon to take part in this exhaustive debate on a subject that is very important to most, perhaps I should say all, Members of this House. I am of course referring to Bill C-224, introduced by our colleague, the Hon. Member for Beaches (Mr. Young).

Mr. Fontaine: Colleague?

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, I maintain that all Members of this House are colleagues, and even that the Hon. Member opposite is a colleague of the socialist Members. We are all colleagues.

But seriously, and I say this because we are talking about a very serious subject which is the pollution of our water supply and our drinking water in this country.

[English]

The Hon. Member for Beaches (Mr. Young) presented a Bill in the House some time ago. As a matter of fact, I believe it was first debated on January 21, 1985. I would like to bring to the attention of the Conservative Member who just spoke what the position of the Government on the Bill was at that time. The Conservative speaker who was designated to talk the Bill out that day was the Hon. Member for Matapédia—Matane (Mr. Joncas). He is the one who had been given notes to read in the House, and this is what the Hon. Member for Matapédia—Matane read on January 21, 1985:

> I bring this to your attention, Mr. Speaker, because in my view it is premature at this point to discuss legislation on the quality of drinking water in Canada within the framework of a Private Members' Bill. I am convinced that my colleague, the Hon. Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp), will make good use of Bill C-212 and the results of the Pearse Committee investigation when preparing recommendations on the quality of drinking water.

The Government said on January 21, 1985, that the Bill was premature because at that time, the Government was waiting for the Pearse report on water quality. We have now had that report for a year, so I would now ask the Hon. Member across, and hope that another Conservative Member would answer, what is the reason now for not proceeding with this Bill. It is obviously not premature any longer. It is indeed quite timely.

I was only reading comments made by a Conservative Member in the House of Commons. I know that it is unfair to quote a Tory using his own words, but I have to do it from time to time.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa—Carleton): This is private Members' hour.

Mr. Boudria: The Hon. Member for Ottawa—Carleton (Mr. Turner) says that it is private Members' hour, and he is right. One would wish that we could all express private views, not written text prepared by government officials. This is an important topic. On January 21, 1985, that is what the government position was stated as being. I am only quoting what was said.

Since January 21, 1985, there was another report tabled in the House prepared by the Minister of the Environment (Mr. McMillan). This report is complete with a nice picture of the Minister of the Environment. The Minister of the Environment always puts his picture on everything. The report is entitled Federal Water Policy, and it talks about the management of toxic chemicals and about all kinds of topics like that. It talks about safe drinking water, and says about safe drinking water the following:

> To meet this commitment, the federal government will continue to:
> consider legislation to ensure the safety of drinking water within federal jurisdiction and to complement provincial and territorial programs;—

Again, that comes from the Minister's own report. It is unfair to quote his own words, but I will do it anyway. It goes on:

> —establish national drinking water quality guidelines to help all jurisdictions in setting safe drinking water standards;—

That is exactly what the private Member's Bill of the Hon. Member for Beaches is proposing.

Who am I to disagree with the Minister of the Environment? I would not want to do that. I would want to adhere to the wishes he has expressed in the House to have such legislation pass. That is why I am supporting the Bill presented to us by the Hon. Member for Beaches. It is my usual objective support for the Minister of the Environment, and I will not tolerate this partisan rhetoric coming from Members across the way who disagree with the Minister of the Environment who wants to propose such good legislation.

The next promise of the Minister of the Environment in his report with his picture on it is to promote public awareness and understanding of critical issues respecting drinking water safety such as the prevention of contamination of drinking water sources from land area runoff. He will conduct research and support technological development and transfer in drinking-water treatment processes. There are pages and pages of promises and commitments from the Government of Canada regarding drinking water, some of which are practically identical to what my colleague, the Hon. Member for Beaches, is proposing today.

That being the case, I have analysed the promises of the Minister of the Environment very carefully and have listened to the eloquent remarks made to us today by all Hon. Members of the House. I have seen that there have been a number of reports on the quality of drinking water. These reports that I have in hand now deal only with the Ottawa River and were prepared between 1978 and 1982. This is how much study has been done on one river alone, the Ottawa River, which of course flows on the boundary of the great riding of Glengarry—Prescott—Russell—

Mr. Gauthier: And Ottawa—Vanier.

Mr. Boudria: And of course, the boundary of the great riding of Ottawa—Vanier which is so well represented in the House by my very distinguished colleague here.

Why should we not be able to inform our constituents of the quality of their drinking water on a frequent basis, the way our distinguished colleague from Beaches has suggested to us today, and the way the Minister of the Environment has suggested in that book with his picture in it? That is what we should be doing. That is what all Hon. Members should want.

Another body of water that flows through my riding is the St. Lawrence River. From Cornwall, Ontario, it goes east through Lancaster, Bainsville and all those other nice communities I have described to you in the past, Mr. Speaker, and that I am sure all Hon. Members will want to visit during their summer holidays.

The St. Lawrence River and Lake St. Francis is also in that area, and we know, of course, that the Akwesasne Indian reserve is right there on the edge of my constituency. It is being polluted right now because of the discharge of certain chemicals in New York, on the American side. We know those toxic chemicals are in the water there. It is unfortunate to see what we are doing to so many of our first citizens by allowing that contamination. I say "we", we collectively as citizens are allowing that water to be contaminated and that is affecting the life and health of so many of our first citizens, and so many citizens in general, of course.

What we should be doing is taking a tangible step today and saying yes to Bill C-224.

[Translation]

We should therefore support this Bill. Mr. Speaker, this legislation alone will not solve all the problems we have with our drinking water. However, I think it is a step in the right direction. The purpose of this Bill is to protect and enhance drinking water quality in Canada, and it provides opportunities for public involvement in the making of regulations, for instance, and requires operators of a public water system to supply the results of water quality tests made on a weekly or monthly basis. Mr. Speaker, I think this kind of Bill should be supported on all sides of the House, or at least by those Members who want to support the initiative taken by the Minister of Environment, in his document tabled in the House some time ago, in fact in 1987. I think we should all do our share so that we can at least make some tangible progress today towards finding out what our drinking water contains.

[English]

Mrs. Jennifer Cossitt (Leeds—Grenville): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure to have an opportunity to put forward some comments on Bill C-224 proposed by my friend, the Hon. Member for Beaches (Mr. Young).

Safe drinking water is one of the basic requirements for good health and is therefore of great importance not only to all Canadians but also to the Department of National Health and Welfare. The department is pleased to observe the widespread interest and concern over the issue of safe drinking water, particularly with the introduction of this Bill and Bill C-266 and Bill C-276.

The Minister of the Environment (Mr. McMillan) has noted that primary responsibility for drinking water quality at the federal level lies with the Department of National Health and Welfare. This is for a number of reasons. Water is, first, a basic necessity of life. Our bodies cannot function without it. It is also the basis of good personal and domestic hygiene which is essential to prevent the spread of many diseases. Water may also have a beneficial effect in preventing or reducing the incidence of disease. For example, the association between water hardness and a reduction in the incidence of cardiovascular disease, and a highly significant reduction in dental decay owing to the presence of fluoride in drinking water.

However, water can also have an adverse effect on health and this is our concern today. It can carry micro-organisms that cause diseases such as typhoid and cholera. Human beings can also be exposed to many types of toxic substances which find their way into water, such as chlorinated hydrocarbons and pesticides, heavy metals such as lead, mercury and arsenic, and inorganic chemicals such as nitrates and radionuclides. I should mention here that the department was at the forefront in providing advice on the increased levels of radioactive chemicals in water which resulted from the radioactive fall-out from the Chernobyl nuclear accident in 1986.

The Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) has specific powers relating to drinking water under the Food and Drugs Act. Although regulations have been established for bottled water and pre-packaged ice, the department has so far chosen not to use the powers conferred by this legislation to control public community water supplies. This decision was made because of the traditional arrangements whereby provinces have the primary responsibility to protect and control drinking water resources from which potable water supplies are produced.

Notwithstanding this, however, the department developed guidelines to protect against adverse effects of contaminants in drinking water and to minimize unpleasant aesthetic characteristics of water. This was accomplished with the full co-operation and participation of the provincial and territorial Governments, under the federal-provincial Advisory Committee on Environmental and Occupational Health. The department's first comprehensive drinking water standards and objectives were developed in 1968, and later revised in 1978 by a joint federal-provincial mechanism.

The 1978 guidelines have served us well, but the scientific data base from which they are derived is constantly changing. The department recognized the need to revise the Canadian drinking water guidelines, and the 1987 edition of the revised guidelines is now in publication. Once again, the revisions were accomplished through a federal-provincial mechanism.

Because of the importance of safe drinking water and the rapid advances in scientific data, a permanent subcommittee has been established to update guidelines and deal with important issues related to drinking water supply.

The department plays an active role in many areas pertaining to drinking water quality. It has initiated biannual national conferences on drinking water, the first of which was held in Ottawa in 1984. These conferences are co-sponsored by a number of agencies or organizations which have an interest in water quality. The second conference held in Edmonton in 1986 focused on an issue of concern to scientists and lay people alike. The topic was "Treatment for Organic Contaminants".

The next conference is scheduled for St. John's, Newfoundland, on the topic of "Small System Alternatives".

Health and Welfare Canada is also involved in a wide range of research projects such as conducting studies to ascertain whether asbestos ingested from drinking water can cause cancer, and collaboration with the Province of New Brunswick in a study to determine if there is any association between nitrate in drinking water and birth defects. Here in Ontario the Ministry of the Environment and the Department of National Health and Welfare have jointly funded a study carried out by the Canadian Public Health Association on the impact of chemicals in the Great Lakes on drinking water quality.

Another area of interest is the effect acid rain may have on drinking water quality. Departmental officials have already conducted a survey on water quality in rural areas and cottages around Muskoka. Model studies are being conducted at present at La Ronge, Saskatchewan, Sioux Lookout, Ontario, in the Canadian Shield, and in Shelburne, Nova Scotia. The aim is to develop an index that will help identify drinking water supplies being affected by acid rain. In addition, the department has ongoing research programs to control disease-causing micro-organisms in drinking water more effectively. It is collaborating with research centres conducting studies on the intestinal parasite Giardia Lamblia, which is the organism responsible for most water-borne diseases in Canada.

The Canadian public is increasingly concerned about the adequacy of conventional water treatment processes and some have purchased their own treatment devices to address the problem. A recent survey conducted by the department in metropolitan centres in Canada found that some kind of device is used in about 3 per cent of homes to treat municipal water supplies. Activated carbon filters are the most common devices on the market. Although they are relatively effective in removing chlorine, organic chemicals, taste and odour, one disadvantage is the growth of bacteria on the filter medium. Most devices have one or more drawbacks associated with their use. The department evaluates and, in some cases, tests devices and provides advice to consumers, other federal departments, provincial Governments and some agencies.

No Bill regarding safe water would be complete without addressing the piping and lining materials used in water storage and distribution systems since these materials can also add contaminants to the water. It is imperative that any new legislation include mechanisms to evaluate, from a health point of view, the acceptability of all products and chemicals used in contact with potable water.

Bill C-224 has many positive elements but does not recognize the vital role of the Minister of the Department of National Health and Welfare regarding drinking water and does not acknowledge the function of the provinces in this area. It is very clear that new legislation is needed to assure the quality and safety of drinking water supplies in Canada. However, such legislation must address all the issues. Consultation with the provinces will continue and efforts will be made to provide all Canadians with drinking water of the highest possible quality.

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver—Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I rise as a committed environmentalist to speak on what I consider to be one of the most important environmental questions in Canada, perhaps in the world, that is, the issue of plentiful, clean, fresh drinking water.

In 1745 Benjamin Franklin, a noted American said: "When the well is dry we know the worth of water". Most Canadians feel that we in Canada are awash with water and that the well will never be dry. After all, Canada has less than 1 per cent of the world's population yet possesses an estimated 25 per cent of the earth's fresh water. The Great Lakes contain 18 per cent of the planet's surface fresh water and Canada's rivers have a combined flow of 68,000 cubic metres per second, enough to fill all the country's bathtubs every 10 seconds. Yet, on a global scale fresh water constitutes only 0.2 per cent of the total water supply. That reminds me of the line in Coleridge's Ancient Mariner:

> Water, water, everywhere,
> Nor any drop to drink.
> Water, water, everywhere,
> And still the ship did sink.

The ship may be analagous to the world in which we have a tremendous need for fresh water. We have the fresh water in Canada and the question is whether we are going to preserve it. That is why this Bill before us is very important.

This Bill provides opportunities for public involvement in the making of regulations to set maximum permissible levels for contaminants in drinking water. It calls for the establishment of a water review board which would be empowered to hold hearings on the safety of our drinking water. The Bill also calls for a water advisory council which would advise the Minister of the Environment as to the results of current research related to drinking water quality.

The operator of a public water system would be required to monitor water quality regularly and notify the users of the system as well as the Minister of the Environment of the results in order that people would know about their systems. Any use of a private water system could have the water tested by the Minister of the Environment.

Under the proposed Act it would be an offence for the operator of a public water system to provide water which contravenes the regulations or fails to comply with monitoring and notice requirements. It would be an offence for anyone to pollute a public or private water system as is happening in many places in Canada now.

The Bill would permit water users to sue to recover damages for contraventions of the Act which would give it some teeth. Any person could seek judicial review against the Minister of the Environment under this proposed legislation in order that he or she would be forced to do his job. This is a good Bill.

In the new riding which I hope to represent in the next Parliament, Port Moody—Coquitlam, the municipalities of Belcarra, Port Moody, Port Coquitlam, and Coquitlam are located on the other side of Simon Fraser University where there are rolling hills and a view to the North Shore mountains which is unsurpassed. When you look at those North Shore mountains and see the beauty, the trees, and the snow at the top, you think that we have water forever. However, the fact is that we do not necessarily have water forever. We must ensure that that water is protected.

I started out as an environmentalist because I was counsel to the Berger inquiry on the Mackenzie Valley pipeline about 15 years ago. That was a great inquiry because it studied the environmental impact of a large project in northern Canada. We blazed new ground in studying that project and I became a very committed environmentalist.

Justice Tom Berger said an interesting thing when addressing an audience in Toronto. He said that Canadians are northerners, that Canadians are environmentalists, and that every part of the country belongs to everyone in the country. People in Toronto have an interest in the North and in the clean water and beautiful environment of British Columbia. We in British Columbia and those people in the North have an interest in helping the people of Toronto to make their drinking water pure as well.

We are a northern country, we are a northern people. We are a people very attuned to the environment. Canadians love their environment and are committed environmentalists. It is not good enough in this debate today to hear from two spokespersons for the government departments. Ordinary Members of Parliament should be pushing for this Bill as well.

On May 2, 1980, I stood in this House and introduced a Bill entitled an Act respecting a national park on Moresby Island and its adjacent islands. There were a lot of people pressing for this. I had help from the Member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton), the Member for Vancouver South (Mr. Fraser), and the present Minister of the Environment. Many people worked together. The Government in my province had to be brought aboard kicking and screaming. It would prefer to mine in provincial parks. However, together we achieved a national park in South Moresby.

Like South Moresby, the time for this Bill on clean drinking water will come too. The Government and Canadians will realize that although we have an abundance of water resources in this country we will want to preserve those resources through a clean water Act.

There are other water issues. There are a couple of schemes now to export water from Canada. There is a scheme to damn up the Rocky Mountain trench and send water to the United States via that route. There is another scheme to damn up James Bay and make it a fresh water lake. The people involved in that scheme are not unknown, this is not science fiction. They include Simon Reisman, Robert Bourassa, and others.

There is an issue of water exports, an issue of safe water, and an issue of clean water. That is why I am very proud to support this Bill today. Its time I hope will soon come to be enacted into legislation.

Mr. Barry Turner (Ottawa—Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I am sort of batting clean-up today. I do not mean that as a pun. The Member for Beaches (Mr. Young) has brought before the House a very important piece of legislation.

You live in Alberta, Mr. Speaker. What do you want to have after climbing the mountains in Banff National Park? When you have worked up a sweat going up through the valleys and the beautiful Douglas fir trees you want to sit down and take a sip of fresh, crystal clean Canadian water. We all want to do that, whether in Banff National Park or in the Niagara River.

We saw in the paper this morning that there are fish full of tumours in the Niagara River. This is unbelievable. The Member for Vancouver—Kingsway (Mr. Waddell) cited: "Water, water everywhere, And all the boards did shrink". The only thing that is shrinking in this country is our access to good fresh water. One of the areas in which that is happening is right here in the national capital region in the Rideau River and Mooney's Bay.

I see the Member for Beaches. When I hear the word "beaches" I think of sand, of beaches, and of Mooney's Bay. The fact is that if you fall out of your boat into that piece of water in August they will rush you to the Riverside Hospital for a tetanus shot because it is so polluted that if you swallow any of it you will die. The Government must act to clean up our water.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The time provided for consideration of Private Members' Business has now expired. Pursuant to Standing Order 42(1) the order is dropped from the Order Paper.

It being three o'clock, this House stands adjourned until next Monday at 11 a.m., pursuant to Standing Order 3(1).

The House adjourned at 3 p.m.

CANADA-U.S. FREE TRADE AGREEMENT

Mr. Derek Blackburn (Brant): Mr. Speaker, I have two petitions from constituents of Brant who are strongly opposing the Government's trade deal with the United States. The petitioners call upon the Government to issue the writ for the next election as soon as possible, so that this can be a major issue for the people of Canada to decide, not just the Government.

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the following question will be answered today: No. 287.

[Text]

CANADA PENSION PLAN APPLICATIONS

Question No. 287—Mr. Young:

1. In 1987, were applications received by the Department of Health and Welfare for disability benefits under the provisions of the Canada Pension Plan and, if so, what number of applications (a) were received (b) were approved on the basis of information provided with the initial application (c) required the provision of further information by the (i) applicant (ii) attending physician (iii) employer?

2. Were applications for these benefits refused and, if so (a) in what numbers (b) were appeals filed against these decisions and, if so (i) in what numbers (ii) what number of appeals were successful?

3. What was the average length of time between (a) the date of an application approved on the basis of information provided initially and its approval (b) the provision of additional information and the approval of the application (c) the filing and the hearing of an appeal (d) the hearing of an appeal and the rendering of a decision?

Hon. Arthur Jacob Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): 1. Yes.

(a) 62,174; (b) 21,094; (c) 12,627

(i) (ii) and (iii) Not readily available, however, past experience indicate: (i) 2%; (ii) 98%; (iii) One or two cases a year

2. Yes.

(a) 26,148; (b) Yes.

(i) 11,226; (ii) 3,666

3. (a) 2 1/2 months; (b) 4 1/2 months; (c) and (d)

Average length of time between the receipt of a first level appeal (to the Minister) to the rendering of a decision.
5 months

Average length of time between the receipt of a second level appeal (to a Review Committee) and the issuance of a decision without proceeding to a hearing. 6 1/2 months

Average length of time between the receipt of a second level appeal (to a Review Committee) and the hearing of the appeal and the rendering of a decision. 10 months

Note: While no statistics are readily available on the average length of time between the receipt of a third level appeal (to the Pension Appeals Board) and the hearing of the appeal, the great majority of these appeals are heard within one year of the granting of Leave to Appeal.

It should be noted that the statistics for the various stages of the application and appeal process do not correspond directly. Many decisions rendered in 1987 were for applications and appeals received in 1986 and, similarly, decisions on many initial applications and appeals received late in 1987 will be rendered in 1988.

[English]

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Speaker, I ask that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

Mr. Speaker: The question as enumerated by the Parliamentary Secretary has been answered. Shall the remaining questions stand?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed from Friday, April 15, consideration of the motion of Mrs. McDougall that Bill C-121, an Act to authorize the reorganization and divestiture of Eldorado Nuclear Limited and to amend certain Acts in consequence thereof, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

And on the motion of Mr. Hawkes (p. 14501) that this question be now put.

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, on a point of order.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier), on a point of order.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, I would like to point out to the House that once again, we have a situation that may create problems for Opposition Members. In today's Projected Order of Business, the Government indicated that Bill C-110, an Act to establish the Canadian International Trade Tribunal and to amend or repeal other acts in consequence thereof, was to be considered by Members at eleven o'clock this morning.

It seems the Government has changed its mind, since it is now proceeding with Bill C-121. To give you an idea, Mr. Speaker, how this can complicate matters, when the order of business is published, the critics, the people who are responsible for speaking to the Bill called this morning, are advised accordingly, and when the Bill is to be C-121 instead of Bill C-110, all these people have to be called up again and told the Government has changed its mind and that it will be C-121. And then they have to call all the people involved with Bill C-121. The logistics can get very complex for the Opposition!

I am raising this point of order simply because I want to remind the Government that when I first became a Member in 1972, and even before that, it was customary for the Opposition to rise every day to ask the Government for the next day's order of business, and that is what we will have to do if we can no longer rely on this list, Mr. Speaker. It would be one way, between now and the end of June, to ensure that we can plan accordingly and also that the Opposition is not taken for granted and treated in this cavalier fashion. We do want to work, we do want to co-operate with the Government, but we must be given a chance to do a good job and to come well prepared.

[English]

Mr. Angus: Mr. Speaker, in the absence of my House Leader I want to rise on the same point of order. If this House is to function the way it is supposed to and deal with the business of the Government of Canada on behalf of the people of Canada there has to be some order. That is why we have Orders of the Day and advance notice to indicate to the parties involved that particular issues will be dealt with. This kind of last minute change makes it more difficult for us to participate in this House in a knowledgeable manner. We are quite prepared to debate either Bill, or any Bill, but we would like to make sure that we have the kind of notice that is needed.

More important, this action indicates, as have a number of other actions over the last little while, that the Government does not even have control of its own agenda, let alone the House. It is indicative of the problems the Government has. I expect, and I regret this, that between now and June there will be many more of these kinds of last minute decisions which will make it more difficult for us to co-operate on other matters.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I would point out briefly to the House that the Government is in full control of its agenda and also in full control of the business of the House, except for Private Members' Hour. I would also point out that in the projected order of business Bill C-121 is listed as the second item.

As a matter of fact very few Bills get to the point of having eight hours of debate and more which Bill C-121 has. It is now at the stage where speeches are limited to 10 minutes. We feel there has been full and adequate debate and we feel that continuing debate would be a method of moving the Bill along. For that reason and it being the back-up legislation, I think we should be in a position to proceed to debate the Bill.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: This point of order was raised by the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier). Both members of the Opposition did not contest the fact that the Government does have the right to decide which order of business it will deal with. I am sure that the Government House Leader will take note of the representations made by members of the Opposition.

Resuming debate, the Hon. Member for Thunder Bay—Atikokan (Mr. Angus).

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay—Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, I want to take this opportunity to participate in the debate on Eldorado Nuclear. I am sorry that one of the government Members has decided that there needs to be an elimination of further debate by moving to prevent additional amendments to the Bill.

I want to deal with a couple of matters. One is the question of privatization, and the second is the impact of privatization as it relates to the handling of nuclear waste, be it low level or high level.

I had the opportunity both as a Member of Parliament and as a member of the provincial legislature of Ontario to deal with the matter of low level nuclear waste being stored in the Port Hope area and I was able to meet with citizens concerned about the existence of a dump so close to a major water body.

The people see quite realistically that although they have had difficulty getting a Crown corporation to move the dump away from their source of drinking water, they fear, legitimately, that a privately owned company would be even less responsive than a government owned one. When we have commodities such as uranium and its by-products, I do not think we should follow what the Americans do, which is to leave it to private profit enterprise to handle and manage this volatile fuel, a fuel that has well known, well documented dangers to the health and safety of those who come near it whether in its fuel or in its waste form. In fact, Mr. Speaker, the Standing Committee on the Environment and Forestry tabled an excellent report. That committee reviewed the whole nuclear waste cycle and made a number of recommendations to the Government as to how it should approach the issue. The privatization of Eldorado flies in the face of the intent of that report and flies in the face of sound economic management of a company that is using as its energy source a volatile material. It is wrong for that reason.

Then we have the whole concept of privatization as embodied by the Conservative Government of Canada. It is really difficult for the Government to accept the reality that you can actually have a publicly owned, that is, a taxpayer owned company, that can be efficient and profitable and that does not need to draw on the taxpayers of Canada to sustain it. The Government for years has preached that the private sector is the only sector that can do that, that public Crown corporations do not work and are a socialist evil. Whether it is Eldorado Nuclear, Air Canada or any other Crown corporation in this country, Canada has a tradition of where there is a public need the Government has the responsibility to ensure that all of us own it.

Where in Canada over our history have we had for any length of time privately owned hydroelectricity distribution systems? The vast majority of them are publicly owned. I come from a community in part of the country that has gone beyond the electricity aspect and has got into the telephone company business. We have Sask Tel, Alberta Tel, the City of Thunder Bay telephone company, and the Kenora telephone company—all are publicly owned, profit making companies that are able to keep rates down.

Let us look at Air Canada. We have in Air Canada a company that has not cost the taxpayers a cent in 25 years. In fact, in the last 11 years, its after-tax profit has been in the magnitude of $450 million. It is an efficient company. It provides a public good. It gives the Government of Canada and therefore the people of Canada a window into the industry to help shape policies in a deregulated environment. What is wrong with that? What is wrong with every taxpayer having a share in Air Canada? Every man, woman and child who lives in Canada and is a Canadian citizen does in fact own Air Canada, Eldorado Nuclear and all the other Crown corporations.

Now the Government, in its Conservative wisdom, wants to give as few as 10 people the right not only to own 45 per cent of the shares of Air Canada but, as the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski) stated in the House when he announced the sale of those shares, the right to have total control of Air Canada. The Minister responsible for privatization, the Deputy Prime Minister, will order the Chairman of Air Canada to vote his or her shares in accordance with the majority of the public shareholders.

Let me backtrack. Ten people could own Air Canada, but six individuals could tell Air Canada what to do.

Mr. Blenkarn: Oh, come on.

Mr. Angus: I hear some guffaws from across the way, but the Government's stated policy is that no one can own more than 10 per cent of the share offering, amounting to 4.5 per cent. However, 10 individuals collectively could own that 45 per cent. In fact, a number of them could be non-Canadians. That is the Conservative view of privatization.

The Conservatives want to privatize Air Canada rather than having it remain a company that is there to do the bidding of the Government of Canada on behalf of the people of Canada. The Government now says to Air Canada that in spite of what the competition does, it will have to service smaller communities and it will have to service them with jets that will accommodate the needs of the people.

We are in a deregulated environment. In its wisdom, the Government has thrown the environment open. Gone are the days of ensuring public necessity and convenience. It has been now left up to the market to decide. The Conservatives argue that in that kind of an environment, Air Canada, Eldorado or whatever Crown corporation will be better off privatized. However, the Government is missing the point that it has the responsibility to ensure service to the people in all parts of Canada.

Let us take a look at one of those other major airlines in Canada, a privately-owned one. It is a fledgling airline which is growing. Wardair started out as a western-based airline, primarily dealing in charters. Now it is involved in scheduled runs and is moving into the lucrative Toronto-Ottawa-Montreal triangle.

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. One of the rules we hold dear in this Chamber is the rule of relevance. This is the sixth day of debate. We are into a filibuster on Eldorado Nuclear, and I do not think it is appropriate to allow too much straining toward other issues which will be before the House.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Chair feels that the Hon. Member for Thunder Bay—Atikokan (Mr. Angus) is relevant, but unfortunately for the Hon. Member, he has only 30 seconds left.

Mr. Angus: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for both your ruling and for the notice of time.

Obviously the Hon. Member opposite was not listening. I referred to Eldorado Nuclear on a number of occasions, pointing out comparisons between the ideology of the Conservatives on that matter and on the matter of Air Canada. It is clear that the Conservative Government does not want to do what is best for Canadians. It wants to apply its Conservative ideology to a system that has worked well.

There is an old rule of thumb: if it works, don't fix it. Eldorado, Air Canada and many other Crown corporations work. Instead of leaving them alone and moving on to provide leadership in other areas required to stimulate the economy, the Government is wasting our time and, more important, it is wasting the dollars of the taxpayers through this kind of measure.

I realize that my time has run out, Mr. Speaker. I want to thank you for your indulgence.

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, I would like to make a couple of points with regard to the Eldorado privatization legislation which is before the House. Eldorado as a Crown corporation has been able to carry out a very important role in regional development. The federal Government located some of its refining facilities at Blind River, Ontario. As well, it has undertaken important developmental activity in Saskatchewan and has located a refinery and upgrading facility in Port Hope.

Crown corporations play a dual role. They play a role of economic development, job creation and wealth generation and they also play a national role in developing regional economies. When we privatize an industry of this type, we must be sure that commitments which have been made by the Crown corporation to the municipalities and communities involved are honoured by the company that will succeed Eldorado.

This may seem like a small thing in the global context of a corporation which will have assets of $1.6 billion and annual sales of $500 million, but those commitments which have been made to the communities are of vital importance. They are important to the communities' over-all social activities, the organization of the communities and their recreational facilities. They are important as well to the economic viability of the communities.

For instance, in the Town of Blind River, Eldorado established a uranium refinery in 1983-84 and made commitments to provide certain leases to the town at nominal rates for recreational facilities such as a campground and a golf course. In the case of the golf course, I believe that the lease is $1 per year for 100 acres or so of land. That golf course was developed in co-operation with the town. I am sure there are similar kinds of arrangements in Port Hope as well.

The people of these communities want to be sure that when the company is amalgamated with the Saskatchewan Mining Development Corporation, those commitments will be honoured. If they are not, then clearly I as an elected representative cannot and would not support this divestiture and privatization of the corporation. It would simply be breaking a legally binding commitment.

There are other commitments as well. For instance, Blind River built a recreational facility which carries a debt of some $1.2 million, I understand, and Eldorado Resources has made a commitment of a grant of some 60 per cent for recreational facilities in lieu of taxes. The details of this tend to be rather technical, but it is a very real benefit for the Town of Blind River. This past year, the grant for recreational facilities was some $85,000. That figure is prorated on the basis of the grant in lieu of taxes. Certainly we on this side of the House, and I am sure the Hon. Member from the Port Hope area, if there are similar arrangements with that community and perhaps areas in the West as well, want a commitment that at committee stage those arrangements, such as in the case of the community recreation facility in Blind River, will be honoured if and when the amalgamated company is sold to the private sector. If not, Blind River will be thrown into complete financial disarray because that commitment could not easily be picked up by the local taxpayers. The town's industrial base is practically just the uranium refinery there.

I think over-all this privatization-amalgamation with SMDC can be a positive thing. SMDC has always tried to get an exemption for further refining and upgrading in this country. If it is concerned about the long-term benefit to that corporation, it will want under this arrangement, to see uranium refined as well as mined in this country.

The amalgamated companies will have extensive low-cost reserves and will be well able to compete on the world stage. That strength will help in the further refining and upgrading part of the company. Unfortunately, in the free trade deal the Government has given away our upgrading policy in many areas, including uranium. It wants to drive our country back to being hewers of wood and drawers of water. This amalgamation will partially compensate for that because SMDC will obviously want to do its refining in Canada when it amalgamates with the only company with uranium refining and upgrading facilities.

In conclusion, I hope those concerns relating to the communities where Eldorado has facilities will be taken into account. Clearly we will be looking very closely at the Bill in committee to ensure that those legally binding commitments are honoured not only by the Government of the day but by Eldorado Resources and the new company being created. We want to see those commitments and binding obligations carried forward to the new privatized corporation.

Mr. Ernie Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure to join in this debate on Bill C-121. I am glad to have the opportunity to raise some questions about this proposal to take a vitally important company, one of the most important developments in mining and processing which the 20th century has witnessed, and have it pass out of the immediate control of the Government of Canada through a Crown corporation.

My friend, the Hon. Member for Algoma (Mr. Foster), judging by the tenor of his observations this morning, has accepted this situation. In my remarks I would like to reject that outcome and consider good reasons why the proposal the Government has put before us should be rejected by this House. In that way we will ensure that Eldorado Nuclear continues as one of Canada's Crown corporations in order to achieve a number of desirable economic, social, and, if you will, political goals for the Canadian people.

One might of course ask at the outset why it is necessary to privatize Eldorado Nuclear. Our Conservative Government would still, I suppose, pride itself on being one of a long tradition of Conservative Governments concerned about the development of Canada's resources in order to provide economic development and other gains for the Canadian people. Given that, the Canadian people might well ask the Government for its reason for the decision to privatize in this particular area. Surely it is not sufficient simply to think that ideology should govern in any of these matters. I do not think the Canadian people are ever impressed when the only reason a Party has for doing something is that that is what the Party program says. They want to be convinced that the Party program makes sense for them. I know the Conservatives will be very good at making that kind of criticism of items in the NDP program, so it seems to me more than fair to ask the same kinds of questions of the Conservative Government.

Why privatize something that was created during the 1940s as a vital instrument to ensure that uranium would be available for war purposes and then turned to more peaceful purposes later on? I make that comment to remind Canadians that there can be no doubt about our involvement with the nuclear age and our responsibility for the use of atomic weapons, or our role in the way in which the use of nuclear weapons has developed in this century, particularly in the United States. Canadians have been involved both directly and indirectly.

Given that reality, it made sense to have a Crown corporation do this. Is there now any reason at all to turn away and put it out to the private sector? Surely one can summon any number of reasons. I know my friends and colleagues speaking before me in this debate, having 20 minutes to respond to this Bill, have provided abundant reasons why Eldorado Nuclear should remain a Crown corporation, why this kind of flotation should not be carried out.

The Government has decided that holding the shares on behalf of the people of Canada is the way to go. Having questioned that decision on behalf of the people of Canada we might look to the others involved in this company, those who work for it, those who are represented by the United Steel Workers and by the Energy and Chemical Workers. We might well ask them whether it makes sense to carry through this privatization.

The media have been having a great deal of fun in the last days asking Air Canada employees whether privatization of our national air carrier makes sense. Of course, the fun has been that a certain number of Air Canada employees have said that it is a great idea. It is significant that in the case of Eldorado Nuclear such support does not exist. The two unions involved have listed a number of very good reasons for being opposed to this particular proposal. They have pointed to concerns about occupational health and safety. They have raised concerns about the environmental problems which uranium mining and processing create in the areas in which it is carried on. They have, of course, the most natural reason for being concerned about jobs as well.

I would think that everyone knows that the mining and processing of uranium involves very real dangers to those who do it and to the places in which it is carried on. In fact, concerns about health and about the environment are profoundly interrelated. We have here, after all, some of the most insidious dangers to life of all sorts that the late 19th century has to offer. Those who did the initial research—and one thinks of Madame Curie who carried out research on radiation without realizing what it could do—very often died a terrible and early death because of the lack of knowledge of its consequences.

The concern about health in the processing of uranium is one which private corporations can all too easily dodge. A Crown corporation should have the highest standards, and Eldorado Nuclear should be maintained as a Crown corporation to ensure that Canadians remain state of the art in terms of occupational health and safety in the mining and processing of uranium.

With regard to the environmental concerns rising before us, at the Port Hope refinery we have enormous quantities of tailings. The dump is practically full and the disposal problem gets larger and larger in an area which is all too close to the Great Lakes and the St. Lawrence system. We have disposal problems in other areas as well.

Not immediately related, but as a consequence of the way in which we use the nuclear age to produce electric power, we have additional waste disposal problems. Atomic Energy of Canada has been involved for years in trying to come to grips with these questions. Surely it would be far better to support and supplement the endeavours of AECL by maintaining Eldorado Nuclear as a Crown corporation equipped to do the work that is necessary and ensure that the environmental concerns of so many Canadians will be provided for adequately.

The occupational health and safety and environmental concerns which the unions have expressed and so many Canadians believe exist are powerful arguments against the proposal the Government has put forward.

In the area of jobs the Government may provide fine assurances that there will be continued employment in the mining and processing of uranium, but the reality is that there is no real guarantee given. In an era of over-production, of difficulties of controlling and managing supply in order to maintain prices that allow the industry some small amount of profit, activities that created enormous difficulties for Canada when a legal process was begun in the United States against the cartel-like arrangements that were involved in this argue all the more for careful involvement with the industry rather than hiving it off on the private sector to have Lord-knows-what happen.

If the Conservative Government, in utter irresponsibility, in rejection of all the concerns—the public concerns, the workers' concerns, and the public interest that I have been sketching—wanted to dispose of the whole area, simply get itself out from under it, there might be a case for looking at that, although it would strike everyone as completely irresponsible. However, this particular proposal is not as clear-cut as that. We are going to see a flotation of stock in the best stock promoter tradition of the capital markets of this country and other countries of the world. We are going to see an attempt to sell stock in order to bring in capital for Eldorado.

How is that going to be facilitated? How does the Government want to encourage investors to buy the stock? It is going to do that by ensuring that the new company resulting from the reorganization of the Saskatchewan Mining Development Corporation and Eldorado Nuclear is not burdened with debt, and particularly not burdened with the expenses which may well ensue at Port Hope as the environmental control and tailings disposal problems arise and someone is forced to deal with them. Those who buy the stock of this new company will be spared all of those problems because the Government of Canada intends to shoulder the larger part of the cost.

There, of course, is the most atrocious kind of privatization which the Conservative Government has carried through a number of times—tempt someone into control of a new enterprise, or an old enterprise transformed in this way, turn it over to them, make it tempting for them, offer them the chance to profit by leaving all the costs with the Canadian taxpayer. Take from the Government of Canada the possibility of future profits and give those to others. Leave the burden of the costs on the Canadian taxpayer. That surely, Mr. Speaker, is the final stupidity in this kind of privatization.

It is for those reasons that I join with my colleagues in firmly opposing the Government's proposal in Bill C-121.

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, I would not want to miss the opportunity to say a few words on Bill C-121.

Mr. Blenkarn: Filibuster.

Mr. Rodriguez: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn) accuses me of trying to filibuster. I want to correct the Hon. Member, who flits in and out of the House. I have not spoken on this Bill since it was introduced for second reading and I want to say a few words because, first, the whole subject of privatization is a principle and issue on which I want to put some comments on the record. Second, the whole business of nuclear development, the business of finishing uranium, affects many people in the areas in which I live.

Just to the west of my riding of Nickel Belt are some very large reserves of uranium which are mined by two companies, Rio Algom and Denison Mines. We have a long history of workers who have carried on an ongoing battle to improve occupational health and safety in those mines. As a matter of fact, the founder of Denison Mines, Mr. Stephen Roman, passed away recently. Many articles in the newspapers comment on how he was a great capitalist who dragged himself up by the bootstraps after immigrating to Canada, to build Denison Mines into the great uranium giant it is today. However, the fact is that this was done with a considerable amount of public moneys. I have often said that he has lived off the avails of the Canadian taxpayer.

All of these so-called great giants of free enterprise who pulled themselves up by their bootstraps, including Roman, Pocklington and Campeau, made it off the taxpayers. They continue to live off the taxpayer but are the first ones to say they do not want the government on their backs and telling them how to operate. They are the first ones there with their hands out at the trough to collect from the taxpayer.

I wish they would stop those phoney arguments because they cannot have it both ways. If they do not want government involvement, they should stay out and stop asking for handouts.

I believe that the real reason we are seeing Bills such as C-121 and the move to turn 45 per cent of Air Canada over to the private sector is that there is a real problem in the Conservative caucus. The Neanderthals on the back bench are tugging at the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), telling him to put the Government back into what they believe are the true blue Conservative colours. They want the Government to return to a real Conservative agenda.

However, the Government recognizes that this is not the wish of Canadians. The problem is that the Prime Minister recognizes he is facing a real hornet's nest in the area of language and, in order to get these Neanderthals off his back, he announces an intention to privatize. Privatization is like a national hymn to those Conservatives. Whenever they put on the pressure, the Prime Minister throws them a bone in the form of privatization. The Prime Minister can then say that the Government is sticking to the principles of Conservatism by turning over to the private sector many of the things in which the taxpayers have invested and which they have built up in the past. We do not like this knee-jerk reaction of the Government to privatize everything the taxpayers have invested in and built up over the years.

In the 1940s the Government established declaratory powers with respect to uranium. The Government of the day recognized the importance of uranium and therefore brought Eldorado into the public sector. While resources are a provincial jurisdiction according to the Constitution of Canada, uranium became a federal responsibility because the Government recognized the importance of having direct control over the exploitation of that resource. As a result of moving in and establishing Eldorado Nuclear, the federal Government and the people of Canada had a direct control over this particular resource. The federal Government is responsible for this resource and its jurisdiction is clear. Parliament can hold the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources responsible and accountable for the exploitation and the research and development of uranium which is part of Eldorado's mandate.

The Government is going to privatize Eldorado. In doing so, where does it leave the taxpayers? I have already said that the Government is removing its direct control over this particular company. Furthermore, the taxpayers of Canada will keep the debt. The buyers get the gravy and we get the scraps.

Ms. McDonald: Who gets the waste disposal problem?

Mr. Rodriguez: We have a problem with that. We cannot give that to the private sector because it is too costly for them. Those great free enterprisers cannot be given that problem because it will cost money. Leave that for the people of Canada so that we, the taxpayers, pick up that cost.

The Member from Mississauga thinks that is pretty funny. We get to keep all the risks while the private sector gets all the gravy. We get the clean-up and the debt and the risks, while the private sector gets the profits. That is why we oppose Bill C-121.

Eldorado Nuclear Limited

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview—Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, in rising today to address Bill C-121 and further motions on it, I must express my grave concerns as the environment critic for my Party. The previous Member talked about the money aspect of this deal and the total unfairness for the Canadian public since the privatization deal will mean profits to the private industry and responsibility and costs to be left to the public sector. As well, the cost of long term clean-up and waste disposal problems are left with the people of Canada. That is certainly unfair.

If privatization meant that companies would become more responsible in this industry and, looking at the long-term costs, would decide that it is not an industry in their best interest from the point of view of profits, I would be in favour of privatization. I would favour it if I thought it would result in environmental improvement, improved health for Canadians and more sanity in an area where we as a society have made mistakes in the past.

That does not exist with Bill C-121. It is a very misguided Bill which will not have the same results as we have seen happening in the United States where nuclear facilities are either being closed down or planned ones not opening because of the enormous costs and the fact that profits will evaporate in an industry which entails such danger. There is also the possibility of law suits, spills, melt-downs, and so on which would certainly discourage private facilities in the United States. However, we will not have any of those disincentives with Bill C-121. Instead of talking about privatization, we should really be talking about environment and health and whether this is a safe industry for Canadians in the first place. If we thought it was safe, and I think the answer to that is no, the question would be, would it produce as many jobs as using other energy sources? We would certainly find the answer to that is, no, that we would do much better in terms of job creation and safety of communities in Canada if we went a different route.

I do want to spend a little time in dealing with a problem within Eldorado Nuclear itself. All Members of Parliament will have received a letter from the Port Granby Monitoring Committee. I would like to read a couple of paragraphs into the record. They read:

> We are writing this letter to you to enlist your help with a very serious problem. Eldorado Resources Limited, a Crown corporation, has been operating a nuclear dump right on the edge of Lake Ontario since 1952.
> The Port Granby dump is leaky, ill conceived and a potential disaster, a fact which is not unrecognized by various experts and authorities who have examined this dump site.

Indeed, the danger of the situation has been recognized for a very long time. We are talking about Lake Ontario from which 2.5 million Canadians get their drinking water. We are not talking about some obscure place unconnected to any major waterways. There are no obscure places unconnected to major waterways in Canada. Our water is connected by stream and underground river. The letter goes on to say:

> In 1976, the Atomic Energy Control Board (AECB) issued a press release recognizing that the site is a problem and decided that the dump was to be decommissioned as of January 1977.

This has not been done.

> In 1978, a panel of experts examined all aspects of a proposed refinery and permanent dump site in Port Granby and decided that neither the refinery nor a dump should be located in Port Granby.

This was decided for all kinds of good reasons. This is what the experts had been saying. But this dump site is still in use. The licence expires at the end of April this year and we do not know whether it will be renewed. We do not know what is going to happen. We do not even know what rights citizens will have to participate in the decision-making because the procedures under the Atomic Energy Control Board are very sloppy. Citizens do not have clear rights. They fare somewhat better before other regulatory bodies, but the AECB is one which has not remotely recognized the need for citizen participation. AECB has ordered plans for decommissioning, but this dump site is still in use and, possibly by the end of this month, it will be licensed for further ongoing use.

In the meantime a task force was established on the principles of establishing a site for dumping. The task force set out the kinds of criteria which meant that Port Granby would not be chosen. Indeed, it is hard to imagine what communities might be chosen because the task force set very strict criteria. Unfortunately, it did propose to let communities bid for the honour of being a nuclear dump site. I say "unfortunately" because perhaps there is no alternative. It considered that there might be communities which are so desperate for jobs that they would be prepared to take this on because there would be some income coming into the community.

The issue of the Port Granby dump site actually became a subject in the last election campaign. I have a letter dated August 21, 1984, and everyone in the House will remember the time in August of 1984 as being at the height of the election campaign. The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), the then Leader of the Opposition, an aspirant for the Office of Prime Minister, wrote to the Port Hope community saying:

> Thank you for your letter outlining your concern about the proposed permanent disposal site for low-level radioactive waste in the vicinity of Wesleyville, Ontario.

He pointed out that this had been contested for a very long time and that the proposals by Eldorado Nuclear for establishing a permanent radioactive waste disposal dump either near Port Granby or Wesleyville were not acceptable to the people of those communities. He further stated:

> All such waste should be removed from major population areas and kept well away from any major resource such as Lake Ontario.

Let us look to the fine print of this message. It is fine if one lives on Lake Ontario, and after all Toronto is on Lake Ontario and we would not want to have some kind of leakage which would affect a large population, but if one lives in a smaller community, further away and not on Lake Ontario, on some smaller lake, then it is all right. They do not want to bump off millions of people with some kind of nuclear disaster, but what is wrong with hundreds or thousands? There is a notion that as long as it is moved away from major centres, perhaps it is all right. What that means is that people are dispensable. If they are in small enough numbers we can ignore them. They can be left out of consideration completely. I think it is highly immoral to think that if it is only a small number of people who will get leukemia, or a small number of women who will bear children with birth defects, that somehow that is acceptable. The Prime Minister pointed out:

> While this would involve greater expense, the federal Government, as owner of the Eldorado Nuclear Limited, must accept at least partial responsibility and provide the leadership.

Well, what the Government is doing now is moving to privatization and simply ignoring the ongoing problem, and that is something the public will have to pay for with their lives and with their quality of life. The Prime Minister concluded:

> I appreciate being advised of your concern about this matter which, I know, is shared by many Canadians. You can be assured that a Progressive Conservative Government will work most actively towards a safe, acceptable and permanent storage arrangement for all hazardous wastes.

This is beautiful language, "safe, acceptable and permanent storage arrangement for all hazardous wastes". But that does not exist. We do not have safe methods of disposal for low-level or high-level radioactive waste. The Standing Committee on the Environment and Forestry, in the case of high-level radioactive waste, recommended a moratorium on nuclear facilities until we have a safe and affordable method of disposal. Yet there are even more low-level radioactive wastes than high-level in Canada. Quantitatively, it is a greater problem even considering the disproportion in the effect it may have, because we have millions of tonnes of low-level radioactive waste. We have had mining for a long time. The material has not been dealt with adequately and this problem will continue.

I simply point out that we have an enormous environmental and health problem with which to deal. The high sounding words of the Prime Minister do not help us to solve the problem because they do not recognize that the problem exists and we do not have a solution. That is what we should be talking about.

The question of privatization has to be dealt with within the context of what we are talking about. We are not talking about a cookie factory. We are talking about an outfit that mines and processes uranium into nuclear products, either military or non-military. We are talking about a product for which we have as yet no safe means of disposal. We are talking about a product that requires safe disposal for thousands of years. The problem is serious. The Government is not dealing with the environmental consequences and, therefore, I urge the House to send this Bill back so we can really look at the environmental questions which are absolutely critical.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. McKinnon): Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. McKinnon): The question is on the motion of Mr. Hawkes. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. McKinnon): All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. McKinnon): All those opposed to the motion will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. McKinnon): In my opinion the yeas have it.

And more than five Members having risen: During the ringing of the bells:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. McKinnon): In accordance with Standing Order 13(4), at the request of the Chief Government Whip, the recorded division is deferred until 6 p.m. tomorrow.

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed from Thursday, April 14, consideration of the motion of Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre) that Bill C-117, an Act to amend the Excise Tax Act and the Excise Act, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Finance and Economic Affairs, and on the amendment of Ms. McLaughlin:

That the motion be amended by deleting all the words after the word "That" and substituting the following therefor:

"Bill C-117, An Act to amend the Excise Tax Act and the Excise Act, be not now read a second time but that it be read a second time this day six months hence."

The Acting Speaker (Mr. McKinnon): Debate.

Mr. Angus: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I think that common courtesy would require that, even though it is not within the rules to allow the third Party to have a say in whether or not a vote is deferred. I think it is common courtesy that the Government Whip or the Government House Leader should at least have the courtesy to inform the third Party and not have us discover on television that the bells have stopped ringing when we thought that there was an agreement to have a vote at 25 minutes to the hour. This is a ridiculous way to run this place. I can assure you, Mr. Speaker, that there is not going to be any more co-operation, that we are going to do whatever we can to disrupt this place.

Mr. Nickerson: That is what you are doing already.

Mr. Angus: No. What we have been doing is debating an important piece of legislation. We finished debating it. We are now ready for a vote on a motion put forward by a member of the Government, a motion that would force the question to be now put. Instead of taking that vote at the time at which we thought we had an agreement, the Government has run roughshod over the House without any consultation whatever.

Quite frankly, we are not going to tolerate this kind of gamesmanship at all.

Mr. Rodriguez: Mr. Speaker, I rise on the same point of order. It has been a long-standing practice around this place, and I have been here for a while, that the business of the House is moved forward on the basis of consultation among the three Parties. That has been the practice and the process here.

Before us was Bill C-121 with respect to which there was to be a standing vote. We were told that there would be a 30-minute bell. Lo and behold, 10 minutes into waiting for the vote, the Government Whip and the Whip of the Official Opposition got together and cooked up this deal that they would postpone the vote until tomorrow. The only conclusion I can come to is that either the government Party or the Official Opposition would be embarrassed because of the fact that they do not have the Members around this place to make a favourable showing in a vote. That is the only conclusion that one can come to.

I must say that when the Government takes this type of action and ignores the practices of the House and does not follow the procedure of consultation, it is inviting trouble. I want to say that. The Government Whip is inviting trouble. In fact, if he does not recognize the need to consult, then he will have to accept the consequences that will flow from that action. In fact, we will do our thing. That is the danger of following this departure from practice which occurred today.

I can only say it is probable that the Liberals have not got their troops around and they do not want to be embarrassed by the vote and have only eight or ten people stand up. They have been embarrassed in the past by their own motions when they have not had enough Members. I think that they have got together and forced this vote to be postponed until tomorrow. This Party is not in agreement with postponing the vote until tomorrow.

Mr. Fennell: Mr. Speaker, I have heard a lot of hearsay around here about an agreement between the Government Whip and the Chief Opposition Whip. I want to tell Hon. Members that there is no co-operation. I had the courtesy to go to the Opposition Whip and advise him that I was deferring this vote until six o'clock. It was nothing to do with numbers. We have 88 people here today. If the Hon. Member wants to check, then he can just wait until Question Period. The intent was to move on and to get into Orders of the Day and deal with the legislation that we have to get through in the short period of time between now and the end of June.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, I just want to set the record straight. I was told about five minutes ago by the Chief Government Whip that he wanted to defer the vote until tomorrow at 6 p.m.—tomorrow at 6 p.m.

Mr. Rodriguez: They do not even know when.

Mr. Gauthier: That is what I was told.

Mr. Rodriguez: He said today at 6 p.m.

Mr. Gauthier: The Whip confirms that. His agreement with me was that he could do that according to Standing Order 13(4)(a) which states:

> When the Speaker has put the question on any debatable motion, except as provided pursuant to section (2) of this Standing Order, the bells to call in the Members shall be sounded for not more than thirty minutes; provided that, while the Members are being called in, either the Chief Government Whip or the Chief Opposition Whip may approach the Speaker to request that the division be deferred, in which case, the Speaker shall defer the said division until a specified time but, in any case, not later than six o'clock p.m. on the next sitting date thereafter, when the bells to call in the Members shall be sounded for not more than fifteen minutes—

This Standing Order has been used before. It is a product of reform. We do not catch people by surprise. I am surprised that the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt—

Mr. Rodriguez: You did.

Mr. Gauthier: I was just as surprised as the Hon. Member. But to tell me that with the Chief Government Whip I was planning or cooking something in the kitchen, it does not make much sense.

The Government Whip has that authority. He can go to the Speaker and ask him to defer the vote. I did not ask him why he wanted to do that, I just said, "Thank you very much". That is the way that civilized people operate. I was surprised to hear the bells stop after only perhaps 10 minutes of ringing. Normally they would ring for half an hour before the Speaker would interrupt the bells. I was surprised because I was in a meeting at the time.

Mr. Angus: Mr. Speaker, on the same point of order.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. McKinnon): I think we have heard enough on this point of order. Whether something is polite or good manners is not a point of order. The rules are clear that the Chief Government Whip or the Chief Opposition Whip can ask for the vote to be deferred. The Speaker can grant it. I declare that there is no point of order and debate shall resume.

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, as I understand it we are now on Bill C-117, an Act to amend the Excise Tax Act and the Excise Act. This was introduced into the House on March 22 and combines a number of provisions announced in the 1987-88 budgets and a number of the tax reform items in the June and December Ways and Means resolutions which were put before the House. The most current item from the point of view of Canadians is the implementation just a week ago of the excise tax on gasoline amounting to 1 cent a litre. Although this occurred during the week of April 1, it certainly was no small April Fool's joke for Canadians.

It is interesting that in the Ways and Means resolution we have tax adjustments which provide for the reduction of tariffs of some $460 million in the first full calendar year under the trade agreement between Canada and the United States. In those same Budget Papers there is provision for a reduction in tariffs of some $55 million in the first three months of 1989. This Ways and Means resolution taxpaper suggests that the increase in revenues generated by the Government of Canada from the excise tax provision included in Bill C-117 will raise, I believe, some $300 million in the second year and some $275 million in the first year. Those figures indicate some of the problems of the free trade agreement. The Government would have us believe that the equivalent of 1 cent a litre will give us massive new access to the United States market. It is hard to believe that the equivalent of tariffs of that amount will give us that massive new access. In fact, it is unbelievable.

When we look at the tariffs under the trade deal we see that 80 per cent of everything that goes into the United States goes in tax-free or tariff-free already. The tax tariffs involve only 5 per cent on the balance of 15 per cent on which item there are tariffs. We see a trade-off there of the Government imposing an excise tax of 1 cent a litre to pay for the loss of the tariffs from the free trade deal.

These revenues raised under the Excise Tax Act through Bill C-117 are some of the tools used by the Government to create a smoke and mirrors illusion that the deficit has been reduced. If so, the deficit has been decreased at the expense of the average Canadian's wallet.

Mr. Angus: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I think the Hon. Member deserves to have an audience. I call for a quorum count.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. McKinnon): I have now had time to count the Members in the House and there is a quorum. The Hon. Member for Algoma (Mr. Foster) has the floor.

Mr. Foster: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the Hon. Member for Thunder Bay—Atikokan (Mr. Angus) getting a more adequate audience for my comments regarding Bill C-17, which is not one of the Government's finest achievements.

The Government's proposition that it will reduce the deficit level is really hard to believe. If we look at the list of taxation items which the Government has imposed on Canadians since 1984, it is devastating. It reads like one of the largest taxation grabs in our history. I believe that in the first two and a half years it involved some $22 billion. Most Canadians hardly notice these things because they are so constant. The increase we had last week in gasoline tax will raise $300 million.

The tax levied on January 1 will raise hundreds of millions of dollars. The sales tax, without getting into the new sales tax planned by the Minister, which will apply to everything from getting your car fixed to getting your hair cut, has raised hundreds of millions and billions of dollars because the Government has increased the sales tax by some 25 per cent from 9 per cent to 12 per cent in its first two and a half years in office. To look over the list of taxes, let alone the excise tax on gasoline, is a frightening prospect for Canadians. People often come to me and ask, "What are you guys doing down there? Every time I have been able, through my union, to get an increase in my pay of 3 per cent, 4 per cent or 5 per cent over the last three or four years, I don't have any more take-home pay". That is the problem of the Government having deindexed the income tax schedules. The Government has imposed every conceivable kind of tax on Canadians.

This Bill provides for some taxes in 1987 and 1988. Let us look at the list of taxes from 1984 to 1988. The first sales tax of 1 per cent was imposed in the fall of 1984, which increased taxes for Canadians by $1 billion. The second one was imposed via the sales tax in 1986, which increased the sales tax by another $1 billion. The third increase of 1 per cent in sales tax in 1986 raised another billion dollars.

Looking at the increases in gasoline tax, the first increase of 2 cents a litre was imposed in 1985, and it raised $930 million. The second increase of one cent per litre on gas occurred in 1987 and raised $450 million. The third increase of one cent per litre on gas in 1987 raised $450 million. Those are just excise taxes and sales taxes which have been imposed since the Government came to power.

The equalization of the sales tax on unleaded versus leaded gasoline in 1987 raised another $30 million. The extension of the sales tax to candy, soft drinks and pet foods in 1985 raised $400 million. Just think, we are even imposing taxes on children's confections and soft drinks and on pet food. There was then an extension of the sales tax to snack food in 1987, raising $60 million.

The first increase on cigarettes and tobacco taxes in 1985 raised $320 million. That was in direct defiance of the promises of the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) who made a solid, binding commitment that there would be no new taxes on cigarettes and tobacco because of the adverse impact they would have on the tobacco farmers of southwestern Ontario. There was then a deliberate, planned, calculated increase designed to hurt those hard-pressed tobacco farmers of southwestern Ontario.

As if that were not enough, there was another increase of taxes on tobacco and alcohol in 1986, raising $150 million. There was a third increase of 4 per cent on tobacco taxes in 1987, increasing taxes by some $70 million.

The elimination of the Registered Home Ownership Savings Plan occurred in 1985 at a time when there was a shortage of affordable housing in many areas of southern Ontario. The Government took away that program, not only increasing taxes by $105 million but making things impossible for young couples who were just starting out and had been saving to be able to buy a home. That ability was snatched away from them by a Government hell-bent on raising taxes but not actually reducing the deficit by any appreciable amount.

The deindexation of the taxation system in 1986 increased taxes by $635 million. The elimination of the federal tax reduction in 1986 had the impact of increasing taxes by $650 million. The changes to the marital exemptions in 1986 imposed an additional $20 million in taxes.

The general 3 per cent surtax change which occurred in 1986 is costing Canada a whopping $1.2 billion, the largest single tax increase since the Government came to power. The temporary 5 per cent and 10 per cent surtaxes of 1986 raised $500 million, creating a greater burden of taxes on Canadians.

An increase in the airport transportation tax in 1987 has required travellers to pay an extra $45 million. The 10 per cent tax on long-distance phone calls and cable services effective January 1 is imposing some $945 million in taxes on Canadians. That particular tax measure is seen by many Canadians, and particularly those who live in rural areas, as being a tax on rural Canada and on the regions. It is also a tax on older people because they are often the ones who make long-distance calls to their children and their grandchildren who live across Canada.

We know that there already is a very high taxation rate on long-distance calls, and this new tax only makes it worse. Some small businessmen from my constituency find that this raises a major new cost for them, an additional cost of up to $100 per month. This is a tax which they cannot afford to pay.

We know that long-distance charges already carry a larger burden of the cost of phone services of almost $1 billion because more charges are put on long-distance calls than on monthly charges for individual telephones. The rate structure of the CRTC has, over the years, put the additional cost on long-distance charges rather than on the hand-sets in homes.

The last item on the list I have here of tax increases the Government has implemented in the last three and a half devastating years of tax increases is the taxation on paint, wallpaper, toys and handicrafts. The Government has taxed everything in sight before the election, even to the point of taxing the wallpaper and paint used in our homes and our toys and handicrafts. This increase amounts to $370 million.

This is a very harsh and destructive tale of tax increases, some of which are to be implemented by Bill C-117. We see this as being an ongoing approach. The Government just dealt with the divestiture of Eldorado Nuclear, and through that we see the Government reaching out to get its hands on another $4 million, $5 million or $6 million which the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) will use if and when the deal goes through to the private sector to try to make the Budget look good. At the same time as the debt will be left with the federal Government, the available cash from that deal will go into the Government's current Budget.

Of course, the Minister of Finance did the same thing with Teleglobe Canada. That sale of some $500 million or $600 million was used last year in an attempt to get the budget deficit for the year below $30 billion. That comes on top of the hit list of at least $22 billion in tax increases for the average Canadian. Everything from the indexation of income tax rolls to toys, handicrafts, pet foods and non-prescription drugs has come under the hammer of this Minister of Finance in his quest for more taxes.

I spoke of the deficit of $29.3 billion that the Government has sustained in its last Budget. The Government was able to get the deficit down below the magical figure of the Minister of Finance through the sale of Teleglobe and other Crown corporations. I suppose that Air Canada will be the next item which will be used to generate revenues while leaving the national debt untouched and making the deficit for the current year's financing drop below that figure of $30 billion.

It bears repeating that one of the ways this illusion was created was through the use of accounting tricks such as acceleration of tax remittances. Employers who deduct income tax, unemployment insurance premiums and Canada Pension Plan contributions from their employees have been required to do it earlier and with greater frequency since 1987. Employers had been remitting once a month, but in January of that year they had to start remitting twice a month. It is this kind of trickery that the Government used to try to get the deficit below the $30 billion mark. That does not really fool Canadians. It just shows how desperate the Government is to look good even though the facts say otherwise.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. McKinnon): Questions or comments?

Mr. Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the opportunity to comment on the speech given by the Hon. Member on Bill C-117 which the Government suddenly sprung on the House. The uncertainty that characterizes the Government is never more clear than in the planning of House business.

The Hon. Member represents a riding at the other end of Lake Superior and has done so for a good many years now as a member of the Liberal caucus. I would like to have him comment on some of the particular consequences the tax measures of the Conservative Government have for our constituents in northern Ontario. I am thinking particularly of the several increases in the tax on gasoline, which he said something about. I would also like him to refer to the impact of the 10 per cent telecommunications tax which the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) so kindly gave Canadians who have to use the telephone to keep in touch and do business. The combination of those two taxes could be very serious indeed for our constituents in northern Ontario.

We can easily appreciate that persons in Metropolitan Toronto, for example, where the Minister of Finance has his own political base, are able to make all kinds of business calls without running into the kinds of charges that constituents in my riding and, I expect, in his, face. Our constituents who do business with people in the large cities have to pay long-distances charges. To have this tax laid on top is just another burden. I recognize that in the resource industries we sometimes have pretty good wage rates, but in comparison with what one can do in Metropolitan Toronto I would not think our constituents have much to boast about on the income side. To have these taxes loaded on them is really a very heavy burden.

The Hon. Member represents a riding where the Liberal Party has had strength for a long time. We NDP and the Liberals will be wrestling in northern Ontario again to see how many seats we can win there. It is going to be a pleasure to see the Conservatives bite the dust in some of those ridings which they happened to win in 1984 or a little earlier for just the kinds of reasons we see in this Bill. It spares the people in the metropolitan areas, who can make business calls without long-distance charges or who can ride the subway to work, those expenses that our constituents face in Thunder Bay—Nipigon, Algoma, and the other northern Ontario ridings.

Mr. Foster: Mr. Speaker, I could not have put it better myself. The Hon. Member has raised the inequity of the Government's fiscal policy as it relates to the regions.

If we look at the impact of the several Budgets the Minister of Finance has brought in, we find that he has imposed at least a four cent a litre increase in the tax on gasoline. That is almost 20 cents a gallon. We recall that the Minister for International Trade (Mr. Crosbie), when he was Minister of Finance and brought in his Budget in 1979, went down the drain by imposing an 18 cent a gallon tax on gasoline. Clearly 20 cents a gallon will be enough to break the Government's back in the next election, certainly in regions like northern Ontario.

This is not only a regressive tax for northern Ontario, it is regressive for every low-income person in this country. The person earning $100,000 a year probably lives in a big urban centre anyway and can certainly afford that 20 cents a gallon much easier than the low-income person who maybe has to drive 10 or 15 miles a day to work because he lives in a rural area. He lives there because he cannot afford a home in the urban centre. That of course is just doubled and tripled for everyone living in areas like northern Ontario, northern Quebec, the Prairies and other regions.

This gas tax is extremely regressive and is part of the overall scheme of the Government to get away from the graduated income tax. It is always interesting to hear the Minister of Finance and the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) saying that with tax reform we are going to take 850,000 Canadians off the tax rolls. What they do not say is that they have put over a million people on the tax rolls by deindexing income tax rates, and are taking millions of dollars away from them when they buy their gas. The sales tax has been increased by 25 per cent as well. That applies to non-prescription drugs, confectionery products, even pet foods. All this will impact much more heavily on low-income Canadians.

The Hon. Member mentioned the telecommunications tax. We already pay extremely high long-distance charges. Over the years the CRTC skewed the rate structure for Bell Canada and other telephone companies so that the basic service charge is relatively low and long-distance charges are high. It is skewed by about $1 billion. What do we find out on January 1? It is skewed by another $1 billion. This is not something that built up over a period of time, it went boom in last year's Budget.

That impacts especially on small businesses. I am familiar with one small business in Little Current, Ontario, a marina. They wrote to me and said they just cannot afford this. It is an extra tax of almost $100 a month on the operation of the business. They are in a rural area far away from the sources of supply. As the Hon. Member indicated, the impact is very adverse for the regions of our country like northern Ontario.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. McKinnon): The time for comments and questions has now ended.

It being 1 p.m., I do now leave the chair until 2 p.m. this day.

At 1 p.m. the House took recess.

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

FISHERIES

CANADA-FRANCE DISPUTE

Mr. George Henderson (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, the federal Government has totally bungled the issues of the St. Pierre and Miquelon boundary and the French fishing quotas. The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) has failed to take these matters seriously. In a letter to the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. Siddon) dated August 29, 1986, the Prime Minister wrote:

> I agree that in dealing with this sensitive issue we must weigh, on the one hand, the interests of Canadian fishermen and fishing communities and, on the other hand, our bilateral relations with France.

This policy was fundamentally wrong. The interests of our fishermen should have been the foremost priority. It is no wonder that the Atlantic fishing industry strongly condemned the agreement reached in January, 1987.

What is the state of our bilateral relations with France now? In response to the arrest of a boat apprehended for illegally fishing in our waters, the French Government has recalled its Ambassador. Canadian travellers are now being harassed by the French at border points. I hope that now, finally, the federal Government and the Prime Minister will give this matter the serious attention it deserves.

NATIONAL CITIZENSHIP WEEK

BENEFITS OF MULTICULTURALISM

Mr. Bob Pennock (Etobicoke North): Mr. Speaker, during this National Citizenship Week all Canadians should reflect on one of the most fundamental aspects of our citizenship, namely, the rich multicultural diversity of our society. Citizenship in Canada means acceptance of difference, tolerance of difference, and celebration of the richness that this diversity has brought to our nation.

I believe that the positive approach to preserving our linguistic and cultural diversity is one of the things that sets us apart among nations. It is worth preserving. It is an integral part of our concept of citizenship. By living together and working together in harmony we can provide an example for all people and enrich our own lives as well.

Citizenship Week provides a real opportunity for all of us to reflect on how much we have benefited from our multiculturalism and the enormous contribution that Canadians of all ethnic and religious backgrounds have made to the building of this great country.

COPYRIGHT ACT

SENATE DELAY IN PASSING AMENDING BILL

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver—Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, this morning representatives of the Creators and Artists of Canada, a coalition of over 20 artistic and creative groups, came to Parliament Hill to pressure the Liberal Senate finally to pass Bill C-60, the amendments to the Copyright Act.

Among those present were Dan Hill, Pierre Berton, Pat Durr, Timothy Findlay, Paul Siren and others.

The Liberal Senate is delaying and threatening to block this Bill which received all-Party support in this House. The artistic community has waited 64 years for copyright reform. These are the actions of a Liberal Senate which has turned a blind eye to the aspirations of Canadian artists and creators.

[Translation]

Bill C-60 recognizes that artists must have a certain copyright income. The Senate knows that by acting this way, it is calling into question years of effort for copyright reform.

[English]

If the Liberals in the Senate sabotage this Bill the artistic community will hold the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) and the Liberal Party of Canada responsible. The Senators should realize that Canadian artists deserve a fair deal.

SITUATION IN TORONTO—FUNDING OF METRO YOUTH JOB CORPS

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): Mr. Speaker, ironically the booming economy of Metropolitan Toronto has created a strange contradiction. Federal funding for a program aimed at making productive citizens out of hard-core unemployed youth is being threatened by the low Metro unemployment rate.

The Metro Youth Job Corps was initiated to help young people 16 to 24 years of age who are unable to get or keep a job because of their poor attendance or punctuality, or attitude toward their work, their supervisors, or their co-workers.

Unfortunately, the lower the unemployment rate the less federal funding there is available to train these young people to find and hold jobs. The kinds of young persons assisted by the Job Corps program will always be a problem for themselves and for society unless we give them a helping hand. I hope the Government will re-examine its funding criteria for this program.

IMMIGRATION

RE-EVALUATION OF PARLIAMENTARIANS' WORK

Mr. Gilles Grondin (Saint-Maurice): Mr. Speaker, since last week, I have received many letters and comments from constituents deploring our attitude to the Turks' problem. I myself was very disappointed to hear the new Minister responsible for this issue say that she could do nothing for them when we all know in this House that she has the authority to intervene without breaking the law.

This attitude led me to re-evaluate our work as parliamentarians of whatever party on this issue and several others. Unfortunately, we find that in our discussions and our decisions, political or partisan considerations too often override the public interest, that narrow-minded politics outweigh ethics, etc. For the Turks and the 40,000 people awaiting a reply, I hope that we will be able to hear the suggestions of those who can act, make the necessary corrections and amendments to the Immigration Act quickly and without political fanaticism and thus restore our image with our fellow citizens. Especially on issues where humanitarian considerations come first, we must set aside partisanship and together try to find a solution to the problem at hand.

IMPORTANCE FOR YOUNG PEOPLE

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, National Citizenship Week, which we are celebrating this year from April 17 to April 23, is an important occasion for all Canadians. It is particularly important for our young people.

The concept of citizenship represents an ideal of how we see ourselves as a society. It is important that we pass on from generation to generation an understanding of what citizenship means, the benefits it bestows and the duties that good citizenship entails.

This week, in classrooms all across Canada, tens of thousands of young Canadians will be taking part in many projects designed to build that understanding. Teaching our young people about Canada and about the rights and responsibilities of citizenship is one of the best investments we can make in the future of this nation.

LUMBER EXPORTS—EFFECT OF INTEREST RATES AND EXCHANGE RATE OF DOLLAR

Mr. John Parry (Kenora—Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, the actions or, should I say, inactions of the Government, are once again laying the grounds for further hardship for Canadian lumber producers and their workers who depend on the U.S. market.

The holding of Canadian interest rates at current high levels and the rising value of the Canadian dollar are jeopardizing the competitiveness of not only our lumber exports but all our exports.

A growing number of Canadians are convinced that the maintenance of high interest rates in Canada, coupled with the rising value of the Canadian dollar, constitute a deliberate government policy to appease U.S. interests and secure U.S. support for the trade agreement to which the Government has tied its political future.

I say again: whose side is the Government on? A cut in interest rates would not only assist the average consumer but would go a long way to safeguarding jobs in our resource industries.

The NDP once again calls upon the Government to cut interest rates by one per cent to two per cent. But is the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) listening?

BANKS AND BANKING

SERVICE CHARGES EXCEEDED INTEREST PAYMENT

Mr. Reginald Stackhouse (Scarborough West): Mr. Speaker, banks defend increased service charges because they pay higher interest rates on accounts. However, when asked for facts, that often turns out to be a myth.

For example, one Canadian has written to me about his opening a small account and after one month finding that the service charges were three times the amount received in interest. To make it worse, there had been no cheques, no withdrawals, no deposits and, as far as he could see, no service.

ACQUISITION OF NEW AIRCRAFT—ROLE OF FORMER OFFICIAL

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, Canadians will no doubt remember statements by the former Minister of Transport who said in the House that Mr. Ramsey Withers had not been involved with the Air Canada airbus transaction.

I have here a letter, dated December 22, 1987, signed by Mr. Ramsey Withers. It states:

> Thank you for your letter of December 7, 1987, in which you expressed concern over Air Canada's reported fleet plans and offered to assist in assessing these plans.
> In today's highly competitive airline environment I do not feel at liberty to disclose Air Canada's future plans, but I am able to say that the article upon which your concerns are based was inaccurate in some significant areas.

> Your very extensive experience and knowledge in the field of airline fleet planning are well recognized in the industry . . .

Clearly there is contradiction here between statements by the Minister and the facts.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

CONSEQUENCES OF NEW DEMOCRATIC PARTY'S POLICY

Mr. Marc Ferland (Portneuf): Mr. Speaker, I want to talk about the New Democratic Party's position on defence in the light of recent changes towards an irrealistic policy.

As it stands today, the NDP policy calls for a withdrawal of our Canadian troops stationed in Europe, the cancellation of the NORAD agreement and pulling out NATO.

Our withdrawal from NATO will alienate our allies, not to mention the fact that we would be barred from the negotiation table which recently made it possible to conclude the FNI agreement.

Any change to NORAD would also involve huge expenditures for Canadians. For example, under the existing agreement our contribution amounts to only 12 per cent of the $7 billion being spent to modernize it. To that we can add annual operating costs of more than $100 million.

In short, Mr. Speaker, if Canada were to put an end to these alliances, as advocated by the NDP, it will cost every taxpayer more to have a less effective defence system in this country.

DISARMAMENT

MESSAGE OF DR. HELEN CALDICOTT

Ms. Pauline Jewett (New Westminster—Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, this morning my Leader and I had the great honour of speaking with a woman of uncommon determination, eloquence and conviction, Dr. Helen Caldicott. The driving force behind the Nobel Prize winning Physicians for Social Responsibility and the founder of Women's Action for Nuclear Disarmament, Dr. Caldicott has devoted herself to preventing what she has aptly described as the "final epidemic", a nuclear holocaust.

Travelling the world simply with a suitcase and a vision, Dr. Caldicott has mobilized hundreds of thousands of men and women in her great crusade to end the nuclear arms race. Her message is one that we and millions of Canadians share, that national and international security can only be achieved through disarmament and peace, that we can make Canada a nuclear weapons free zone, that we can end the militarization of the Canadian economy and that we can reverse Canada's increasing complicity in the world-wide trade in arms.

I urge Canadians to meet Dr. Caldicott as she continues her Canada-wide tour this week.

TRADE

GOVERNMENT EFFORTS TO REDUCE INTERNATIONAL OBSTACLES

Mr. Patrick Crofton (Esquimalt—Saanich): Mr. Speaker, this past weekend an important meeting was held in beautiful British Columbia, bringing together representatives for 70 per cent of the world's international trade. The focus of discussion was barriers to trade and how to reduce them.

Unlike the opposition Parties in this house which state a desire to tear up current trade agreements, the federal Government continues to seek new and better ways of reducing these obstacles to trade.

Canada is a trading nation. Our national economic health is directly dependent on healthy foreign markets for our goods and services. The opposition Parties continue to demonstrate a total lack of understanding that our sovereignty, our culture and, indeed, our national social programs are only sustained by a strong healthy economy.

This Government believes in negotiation, consultation, conciliation, and discussion. We support GATT. We continue to initiate important new measures in GATT. Unlike the opposition Parties that want to ignore or reject GATT when an unfavourable decision for Canada is reached, we believe that the mandate and authority of GATT must be strengthened, as must our access to that vital U.S. market to the south. The Canadian public is developing this understanding. What a pity that the thinking of the Opposition is still mired in the 19th century.

MULTICULTURALISM

MINISTER'S ATTENDANCE AT CELEBRATION SPONSORED BY SIKH ORGANIZATIONS

Mr. Ernie Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, the new Minister for Employment and Immigration (Mrs. McDougall) gave Canadians a fine demonstration of Cabinet solidarity over the weekend. The Minister attended a Baisakh celebration in Toronto planned by various Sikh organizations, including those whose meetings the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) asked Canadian Premiers and other politicians by letter earlier this year to boycott. When the Minister was asked to explain why she attended the meeting in spite of her senior colleague's proscription, she had "no comment" on the contradiction.

I support the Minister's decision to attend the Basakhi celebration and to assure the Sikhs gathered there that the Government's aim is to achieve a better understanding with them. But surely it is time the Secretary of State for External Affairs recognized his mistake and recalled or renounced the advice he handed out so freely. Canadian politicians generally know their communities and can be trusted not to support activities that are illegal or destructive of other states. Let us have a proper regard by our Government for organizations in our communities which are working to advance human rights and the good of their own community.

POLITICAL PARTIES

NATO—POLICY OF NEW DEMOCRATIC PARTY

Mr. Bob Hicks (Scarborough East): Mr. Speaker, this past weekend we once again witnessed a new interpretation of the New Democratic Party position on defence as a result of its latest policy or, should I say, politics conference. In an attempt to obfuscate an already unintelligible policy on NATO and NORAD, the "No Defence Party" or NDP has taken a major step back from its long-standing position to withdraw from NATO.

This new position is an incredible thing. It threatens to alienate our allies because it calls for an immediate withdrawal of our troops in Germany thereby affecting the balance of power in Europe. It threatens to alienate the NDP's core supporters because it has consistently insisted on an immediate withdrawal from NATO and cancellation of the NORAD agreement.

Finally, it threatens to alienate all Canadians from the New Democratic Party because of what can only be perceived as an immature, irresponsible, and downright reprehensible act.

The Progressive Conservative Party has the only clear position on defence. Ours is the only Government willing to back up that position with realistic commitments. Finally, on the subject of platforms and positions, I would simply like to ask who is the spokesman on this subject. Is it Derek Blackburn, the NDP defence critic? Is it Bob White and the Seven Dwarfs, the NDP's leader in waiting? Or is the Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson) who so adamantly opposes this new position?

PROPAGATION OF THE FAITH IN CHURCHES

THE DEEDS OF TRINITARIAN ARMAND GAGNÉ—TRIBUTE TO VOLUNTEERS

Mr. Claude Lanthier (LaSalle): Mr. Speaker, next Sunday at the André Laurendeau CEGEP in the beautiful riding of La Salle, a biennial event will take place that is extremely important, not just to the Montreal area but internationally. I am referring to the general meeting concerning the work of Father Armand Gagné, who is responsible for the propagation of the faith in the churches that heroically hold the torch of Christianity in countries behind the Iron Curtain.

Mr. Speaker, I therefore have the pleasure and the privilege to invite Members of this House to pay a well-deserved tribute to one hundred volunteers and about 3,000 general participants who will ensure that adequate funds are sent to Rome, to this Trinitarian Father from Ville-Émard, whose mission is to tell people that democracy still exists in our troubled world and to send this message to a civilization deprived of the most elementary freedoms, including the free expression of one's religious convictions.

THE LATE MRS. PHYLLIS ROSS

Mr. Speaker: I know that Hon. Members would want me to interrupt proceedings briefly to hear from the Deputy Prime Minister.

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and the Government, and I am sure all Members of the House, I wish to extend my sincere condolences to the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) on the passing of his mother, Mrs. Phyllis Ross. Our prayers are with her and all members of the family.

Mrs. Ross led a full and vigorous life, a life of service to her country, to the Province of British Columbia, and to her family. She inspired more of the same with her son and her daughter, Brenda Norris.

On behalf of us all, Mr. Speaker, allow me to extend our deepest sympathies to the right hon. gentleman at this time.

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, as you can understand, the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) is not in the House today. On his behalf I am very pleased to receive the words of the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski). I will convey those words to the Leader of the Opposition.

I also wish to say on my own behalf and on behalf of my colleagues that we want to express our deepest sympathy to the Leader of the Opposition and to his sister Brenda Norris on the loss of their mother. She was a very distinguished woman, an example well before her time of what women can accomplish in our society and how they can serve the entire country.

She became in her time the most senior woman in the Canadian Public Service. She went on to become the first woman chancellor of a university in the British Commonwealth. She accomplished this by virtue of the strength of her mind and her personality, being an example of a person standing alone, and raising a family alone, in a way that inspired her children with her example of service and intelligence.

The Bible, in the Book of Proverbs, speaks of a woman of valour. Truly, the mother of the Leader of the Opposition exemplified that concept to the utmost. Therefore, on my own behalf and on behalf of all of the colleagues of the Leader of the Opposition, we wish to extend to him and to his family our deepest sympathy on his tragic loss.

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I would like to join with the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski) and the House Leader of the Liberal Party (Mr. Gray) in extending to the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) the deepest sympathy of the members of the New Democratic Party on the passing of his mother earlier today.

As has been noted, Mrs. Ross was an outstanding Canadian. In addition to having a distinguished son she established very much a reputation in her own right many years ago in this city as one of the forerunners, if I can put it this way, in the women's movement, achieving outstanding success in the Public Service of Canada. She also made a distinguished contribution to the Province of British Columbia.

We extend to the Leader of the Opposition our heartfelt sympathy on the passing of this woman who played such an important role in his life and, of course, extend those sympathies to his sister Brenda.

FISHERIES

CANADA-FRANCE DISPUTE—HARASSMENT OF CANADIAN AIR TRAVELLERS

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In good part as a result of the fisheries dispute, we have seen an unprecedented deterioration of the relationship between Canada and France over the weekend leading to the recall of the French Ambassador.

Canadians have been dismayed to see some of their fellow citizens harassed at French airports, with some of them having their passports confiscated. We understand that the Secretary of State for External Affairs has filed a protest with the French. However, some of the people who are now visiting France, or who are planning to do so shortly, would like to know more.

I would like to ask the Secretary of State whether he can provide an update report as to the situation at entry points to France. Can Canadians expect to be able to leave or enter France in a civilized manner without being harassed, or has the Government come to think that it will have to issue a travel advisory?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, this incident of course arises directly from a long-standing negotiation regarding fisheries matters between Canada and France. This most recent and isolated episode was created by a decision by some French citizens from St. Pierre and Miquelon to take actions which challenged the law of Canada. When they challenge the law of Canada they are subject to the penalties of the law of Canada. That is what occurred in this case.

There was also an action authorized in France that involved delays imposed upon Canadians who were visiting in France. I protested those delays. We have been advised today that senior authorities in France have ordered that those delays be stopped.

CANADA-FRANCE RELATIONS

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, Canada no longer has an Ambassador to France and France has recalled its Ambassador. The sad fact is that the two countries are not able to talk to each other in a normal fashion through Ambassadors, all of this at a time when there are differences between the two countries that the Government has not resolved and which have to be resolved quickly.

I would like to ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs or the Deputy Prime Minister to explain to the House and to the country how the Government could let the relationship between Canada and France fall to this all-time low. What does the Government intend to do to normalize relations between our two countries? What has former Ambassador, Lucien Bouchard, been doing in Paris over the last three years?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, not to take the whole day, among the things that former Ambassador Lucien Bouchard had been doing in Paris was to be very instrumental in achieving an agreement on the basis for establishing the international conference of la francophonie, an accomplishment which was impossible for years when the Government of this country was led by a Liberal Party of which the Hon. Member was a participant and supporter.

Among other matters that Mr. Bouchard was able to move forward was a quite dramatic improvement in the relations, whether in economic exchanges, science and technology, or in others.

In a third area it was possible for us, during the time that Ambassador Bouchard represented Canada in France, to begin to make progress on a very serious fisheries dispute that had been caused in part by a bad decision taken by a former Liberal Government with regard to the fisheries questions. Those are some of the things that have been done by Mr. Bouchard, since his name has been raised.

The Hon. Member is wrong on a couple of other points. He suggests that there is not full diplomatic interchange between Canada and France. That is false. There is that type of interchange between our two countries.

Third, there is scheduled, as there has been for some time, a meeting for Thursday of this week at which the negotiators of the two countries will come together again to see if we can make further progress toward resolving the fisheries dispute by resolution. We are hopeful that we might find some progress in that regard.

• (1425)

Finally, Mr. Speaker, I should say that our relations with France are very important to us as they are to France. We do not intend to allow those important relations to be diverted by an episode of a voyage by a few people from St. Pierre and Miquelon who were almost certainly seeking political profile.

NEGOTIATION OF MARKETS WITH FRANCE—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, the Secretary of State may be proud of Mr. Bouchard's achievements as our ambassador and of our relations with France, but the fact is, our relations have never been this tense. We don't even have a Canadian ambassador in Paris, and now France has recalled its own ambassador for consultation.

Canadians are being harassed at French airports. Passports have been confiscated, and Canadians certainly have every right to wonder what former ambassador Lucien Bouchard has been doing with his time in France during the last three years. Meanwhile, it's business as usual between Canada and France.

I would like to ask the Secretary of State or the Deputy Prime Minister whether they do not think the time has come to reconsider the suitability of continuing negotiations with France on major purchase contracts, including the purchase of a fleet of Airbus aircraft and those silly nuclear submarines. Is it going to be business as usual for the Government?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): There are two or three points I would like to make, Mr. Speaker. First of all, the Hon. Member certainly has a short memory, if he thinks relations between France and Canada have reached a new low. I remember the statements made by General de Gaulle, and I remember the problems that arose between Canada and France. By contrast, the present situation is just a straightforward disagreement about a matter that is important to both countries. The way to resolve this disagreement is to continue negotiations on the fishing zone, and the next meeting has been set for Thursday. Canada intends to have its negotiators at the meeting to protect Canadian interests in the fishing zone. And as a Government that wishes to do business with everyone, we intend to continue to seek out opportunities for investment and projects involving Canada and France. Relations between our two countries have improved a great deal since the Mulroney Government came to power. We would like the situation to continue. We want to continue to take advantage of the possibility such a situation creates for this country.

ARREST OF FRENCH NATIONALS—SUNDAY COURT HEARING

Mr. George Baker (Gander—Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, on Friday after being taunted for over 12 hours the Government finally took a long overdue step, however symbolic, and arrested those persons who were aboard a vessel owned by the Government of France, for violating Canadian fishing regulations.

By what precedent did the Government of Canada agree to have a court hearing on Sunday, when it was scheduled for Monday, to allow for the early release of those people who had broken Canadian law, and to allow the Royal Bank of Canada to bail them out to the tune of over half a million dollars? By whose suggestion did the court sit on Sunday?

Sunday night wasn't—was God the Government of Canada?

[English]

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of International Trade): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member's French has brought me to my feet.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Crosbie: Let me say that when the Hon. Member asks at whose urging did the court meet on Sunday, quite obviously the defendants are represented by legal counsel. Any experienced legal counsel experienced in the criminal law knows that it is not novel to arrange a bail hearing on a Saturday or a Sunday. Although it is not usual, it is certainly not novel. I think the Hon. Member will have to contact those legal representatives of the defendants to discover just how they made this arrangement.

But, Mr. Speaker, after all, there has not been any trial yet and everybody is entitled to bail as anyone should know who sits in this House.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

• (1430)

CONDUCT OF NEGOTIATIONS

Mr. George Baker (Gander—Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, would the Minister not agree that Canada is the country that is in a position of strength in this dispute? Can he guarantee Canadians that in the negotiations that are coming up on Thursday, the Canadian Government will go no further than a 12-mile zone around St. Pierre and Miquelon, and that the Government of France and the French metropolitan fleet from France will be treated the same way as anyone else who breaks Canadian law in Canadian waters? Can he guarantee that there will be no special Sunday soirées in court, let alone any special Sunday banking privileges?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, with respect to the negotiations that will be proceeding again next Thursday, these are not negotiations to deal with the territorial boundary between St. Pierre and Miquelon and Canada. Those are matters that we have been trying now for several years to get before an international tribunal so that an international tribunal could decide that issue.

I can assure the hon. gentleman that Canada takes the position that France should certainly not have any territorial boundaries around St. Pierre and Miquelon that exceed 12 miles, if indeed it should even be 12 miles, and not something like the 200-mile economic zone it is claiming. However, that question is not now up for negotiation. We are trying to persuade France to agree with us to send that matter to an international tribunal for decision.

With respect to the French metropolitan fleet, I believe the events of the last several days have shown what action the Government takes without fanfare, without histrionics, and without hysteria, when foreign fleets or vessels fish in Canadian waters without a permit.

OPPORTUNITY TO APPOINT LUCIEN BOUCHARD TO CABINET

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. The Prime Minister decided to appoint Mr. Bouchard to Cabinet at the very moment of the most serious conflict between our two countries. Before this decision, did the Prime Minister discuss it with the Secretary of State for External Affairs and does the Minister agree with this decision?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, it is often difficult to know where to draw the line between ministerial and other conversations. But I can tell the leader of the New Democratic Party that I was one of Lucien Bouchard's present colleagues who suggested that he seek a position as a Minister in our government. I have great respect for his abilities and his vision of Canada. I am sure that he will continue to be an effective Minister in our Government. Of course, I was involved in the discussions that resulted in Mr. Bouchard's appointment to Cabinet. I think that it is important to know that the decision made by some French citizens from Saint-Pierre and Miquelon came after Mr. Bouchard's appointment to Cabinet. Our diplomatic relations with France are as strong as before. Mr. Bouchard's successor as Ambassador to France will be appointed shortly.

TIMING OF AMBASSADOR'S APPOINTMENT AS MINISTER

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, the question, of course, has absolutely nothing to do with Mr. Bouchard's personal competence. I certainly have no question about that or his past performance as Ambassador to France. The question is directly pertinent to the competence of the Government.

Since this crisis did not just begin before the weekend and has been ongoing for a number of weeks, was it not very irresponsible of the Prime Minister to take our Ambassador out of France and have him selected to go into a Cabinet, to run in a by-election that has not been called, in a part of Québec that has not yet been selected, during the period of the most serious crisis in modern history between France and Canada? Was the timing not entirely wrong? That is the question.

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I learned over the weekend that the New Democratic Party has a very peculiar view of Canada's defence requirements and how we deal with them, but I did not know that they were also so confused about diplomatic practice. The Hon. Member is talking about a fisheries dispute that has been going on for 18 months, a fisheries dispute that we want to have resolved, a fisheries dispute in which negotiations are being carried forward by a very distinguished negotiator, Mr. Yves Fortier.

It is always the case that, when a diplomat leaves a post that is an important post in its relations with Canada, some files continue to be open. The Hon. Member laughs. He laughs, betraying his ignorance of the way diplomatic practices proceed.

The point I am making is that we cannot expect every Ambassador in the real world to stay in place until every important file which is current between another country and Canada is completed. That would be an absurdity. That would be a diplomatic practice as absurd as it would be to have a defence policy that said: "Well, we're going to pull out of NATO but we might not do it now. We just want you to know that for the first four years we might be there you couldn't trust us with a single secret, you couldn't trust us with a single plan of common action".

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, the Minister has exceeded his capacity to go to the lowest level of argumentation. I did not think he could do it, but he did it today.

Now would the Minister deal with the issue? Since the Minister, earlier in Question Period, correctly acknowledged that the relationship between our two countries is important and is at a very low level, and since no one in his right mind would ever contend that there are not some files open that continue when Ambassadors are changed, the question is surely still pertinent, and would he answer it? Is it appropriate for a Government to take an Ambassador who is doing a good job out of his job while an ongoing crisis is under way in order to run in a by-election that has not even been called? That is the issue.

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, let us have a little honesty here.

Mr. Broadbent: Good idea.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): I can attribute the NATO policy to naivete and the NDP will have to answer for its naivete on a policy that says: "Sometime we are going to pull out of NATO and say goodbye to Europe, goodbye to our obligations; we are going to hunker down here in Canada". That is simple naivete and they will have to answer for that kind of position.

Let us come back now to the question of honesty and let us look at the sequence of events. There was a discussion about the signing of an arrangement in January of a year ago that might have brought some resolution to the fisheries disputes. It turned out that that did not succeed, has not yet succeeded. Negotiations are continuing. Those negotiations have been continuing in an atmosphere of quite remarkable calm. The next meeting had been established—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): No, no, they were proceeding in an atmosphere of quite remarkable calm. The next meeting had been established for Thursday of this week. During that period of remarkable calm in those relations on this issue, the Government of Canada decided to bring back to Canada our Ambassador, Lucien Bouchard, and to assign him to responsibilities in the Cabinet of Canada.

After that happened, an episode began, generated by 14 or 15 citizens of St. Pierre and Miquelon, occurring after the return to Canada of Mr. Bouchard, an episode, by the way, that has now by and large been resolved by the steady and firm response of the Government of Canada. Those are the honest facts that I believe are understood by the great majority of Canadians.

PRESENCE IN GALLERY OF PARLIAMENTARY DELEGATION FROM MEXICO

Mr. Speaker: I wish to draw to the attention of Hon. Members the presence in the gallery of a parliamentary delegation from Mexico led by Senator Humberto Hernandez Haddad.

AIR CANADA

ACQUISITION OF AIRCRAFT—ROLE OF FORMER OFFICIAL

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister and pertains to the Air Canada airbus government transaction. On March 14, 1988, the Member of Parliament for St. John's West, when he was Minister of Transport and Ramsey Withers' boss, said about Mr. Withers' involvement in the Air Canada airbus purchase: "He has had no connection with this matter".

• (1440)

Given that statement, can the Deputy Prime Minister explain to this House the existence of a letter which I have in hand signed by Mr. Withers, dated December 22, 1987, which says:

> —I do not feel at liberty to disclose Air Canada's future plans, but I am able to say that the article upon which your concerns are based was inaccurate in some significant areas.

In other words, why was he answering letters about a topic in which he was not involved?

Mr. Crosbie: What is the letter about, you turkey?

[Translation]

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I would just like to repeat what my predecessor said on March 14, 1988 about Mr. Withers . . .

[English]

> —he is a man of complete integrity, honour, faithful service, and rectitude.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, I think that as usual, the Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell did not understand that Mr. Withers was then still Deputy Minister of Transport and that he just answered a letter from someone by telling that person that the Department of Transport did not intend to retain his services. That is all. And if the Hon. Member were honest enough, I think he would have read the whole letter, which simply says:

[English]

> —I do not feel at liberty to disclose Air Canada's future plans, but I am able to say that the article upon which your concerns are based was inaccurate in some significant areas.

Mr. Speaker, I think once again, and I repeat today what the Hon. Member for St. John's West said then, that there is no connection between any matter related to Air Canada and December 22 and the former Deputy Minister of Transport, Ramsay Withers.

REQUEST FOR ESTABLISHMENT OF PUBLIC INQUIRY

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary for the Minster. I read the entire letter in the House barely forty-five minutes ago.

So I would like to ask the Minister, considering the fact that twenty-two days after Mr. Withers announced he was leaving Transport Canada to work for GCI, a lobby firm, and that he answered certain letters to which the other Minister referred, about a matter with which Mr. Withers had no connection, and I am quoting what the Minister said in the House . . .

Does the Minister intend to order a commission of inquiry to shed some light on this matter, and if not, why not?

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, there is absolutely no reason for ordering a commission of inquiry since there is no law against Mr. Withers using the words "Air Canada". There is no law against a person who advises a Department and the Government that he is leaving . . .

Again, this was just a letter concerning a consultant, and what Mr. Withers said was:

[English]

> Your offer of assistance is appreciated . . . However, it does not appear at this time that there is a need to seek external advisory services in this area.

That is all.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, I must say once again that the Hon. Member has made a habit of bringing up this kind of issues. I just want to say that once again, he has unfortunately . . .

[English]

FORMER OFFICIAL'S LETTER

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay—Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport. The letter referred to, signed by Mr. Withers, clearly indicates enough knowledge about the potential purchase by Air Canada to indicate to the person the letter went to that his facts were wrong. How does the Minister square the information in Mr. Withers' letter with the article which suggests very clearly he had full knowledge of what is happening with Air Canada and is therefore in conflict of interest?

Mr. Crosbie: What did the letter say?

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I said, and I repeat, there is no relation between what he said and any purchase by Air Canada. I think all we can do is table this letter so everyone can look at it and realize it has nothing to do with any purchase by Air Canada.

Mr. McDermid: What did the article say, Iain?

Mr. Angus: Mr. Speaker, the Minister is welcome to table the letter, as he can do pursuant to the Standing Orders, but the information has been fully transmitted to this House already.

FORMER OFFICIAL'S KNOWLEDGE

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay—Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, I ask the Minister once again, does the phrasing of that letter not make it clear that Mr. Withers had knowledge of the plans of Air Canada regarding fleet replacement? Is it not clear from that letter?

Mr. Crosbie: No, it is not.

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Transport): No, Mr. Speaker. Any reference by Mr. Withers relates to what we call the corporate plan, but the corporate plan has nothing to do with any kind of selection of equipment by Air Canada.

AIRPORTS

PEARSON INTERNATIONAL AIRPORT—WASTE DISPOSAL—PROPOSED USE OF INCINERATOR

Mr. Bob Pennock (Etobicoke North): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Agriculture. As he knows, Pearson International Airport, with its projected increase in volume, is quickly facing a waste disposal problem. The Department of Agriculture proposed to address this problem with an incinerator system. The residents of Etobicoke appreciate the need, for health reasons, for an efficient system, but are very concerned about the adverse effect an incinerator will have on the air in the surrounding area of Etobicoke and Mississauga.

Will the Minister put a hold on this project until all viable options are examined and the community has had full input?

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Yes, Mr. Speaker. I want to extend my appreciation for the interest that the Hon. Member, and his colleagues in neighbouring ridings, have shown in this issue. I can assure him that the project has been placed on hold and will remain on hold until such time as we are satisfied that all of the environmental studies have been satisfactorily completed. Secondly, it will remain on hold until we are satisfied that adequate citizen consultations have been carried out.

CLEAN-UP OF ST. LAWRENCE RIVER—REQUEST FOR ASSISTANCE

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Deputy Prime Minister. Several months ago the Quebec Premier asked the federal Government to share the costs of his St. Lawrence River clean-up program. As a matter of fact, he asked for the kind of assistance Ontario was offered for cleaning up the Great Lakes, $100 million. Mr. Speaker, since the St. Lawrence River is as important to Quebecers as the Great Lakes are to Ontario, when could we expect an answer to Quebec concerning this important matter? Why is the Government dragging its feet on this issue?

[English]

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, I would like to point out that for many years the Government of Canada and the Government of Quebec have been working together to develop a plan to deal with the very costly measures necessary to clean up the St. Lawrence River. Those discussions have taken on a high level of activity these past two years in particular, between our Minister of the Environment and the Hon. Clifford Lincoln on behalf of Québec.

These discussions deal with very complex issues and they are continuing, but as in the case of other areas where this Government has made unparalleled progress, for example, acid rain, the ozone layer, CFCs, and the general clean-up of water quality in the Great Lakes, we have to take lessons from no one, certainly no preceding Government, on the attention we are devoting to these important questions.

FEDERAL POSITION

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, that is not the impression we get in the Province of Quebec. As the Government might know, the St. Lawrence River is the main street of Quebec. It is important for transportation, fishing, recreation, water supply and so on. Recent surveys show that 83 per cent of the population of Québec consider this to be a major concern.

On April 8, 1986, the Minister of the Environment said in Montreal that the St. Lawrence was an open sewer. If that is his conviction why is he waiting so long to respond to the demand of the province? That demand was made in February but we still have not had an answer from the Government.

Mr. McDermid: What did you do for the last 20 years?

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, I note that on the weekend the Liberal Party finally discovered the importance of environmental and ecological issues.

• (1450)

I understand that the Leader of the Official Opposition said that the Liberal Party will become the Party of the environment and prove that economic development can go hand in hand with environmental protection.

That is what the Government has been doing since it took office to a far greater degree than his Government and its predecessor were ever able to do.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

MIDDLE EAST—ASSASSINATION OF PALESTINIAN OFFICIAL

Mr. Bob Corbett (Fundy—Royal): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Will the Minister advise the House what the Government's response is to the assassination of a top Palestinian official in Tunis over the weekend? Will he also advise what our position is on the repression by Israel of Palestinians in the occupied territories in the wake of that assassination, where hundreds have been injured, a score or more killed, and where once again the free press has been banned in an effort to mask the realities?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, this is, of course, a tragic event, both in terms of the loss of personal life and in terms of the continuing nature of the cycle of violence in the Middle East which is not only taking human victims on both sides but is creating an atmosphere, almost a self image, on both sides which will become increasingly dangerous as time goes on.

This underlines the absolute importance of all of us who might have any influence at all, whether on the Government of Israel, on members of the PLO, or of others who might have authority over either side, to use whatever influence we have. We must do that as Governments and we must try to do that as individuals.

I would hope that the large number of Canadians who have begun to join the debate about issues in the Middle East will themselves also use their imagination as extensively as they can to try to find some way in which they might be able to have some small influence upon encouraging some change in the situation which is dangerous, almost lethal, to both sides.

COPYRIGHT ACT

SENATE DELAY IN PASSING AMENDING LEGISLATION

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver—Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Communications my question is directed to the Government House Leader who, I understand, is celebrating his fiftieth birthday. I would like to congratulate him. He is half way there.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Waddell: The Minister will know that this House passed Bill C-60 to amend the copyright law which, for the first time, really protects the rights of Canadian artists. The Minister will know that the Liberal Senators, the Liberal Party of Canada in the Senate, are delaying this and are likely to send it back to the House.

Would the Minister confirm that if the Liberals send this back to the House, due to the Government's full timetable we may not in fact be able to get back to this Bill before Parliament rises for the summer and that, in fact, Canadian artists will suffer as a result of what the Liberal Party is doing?

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of State and Minister of State (Treasury Board)): Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank my friend for the question. I can assure the House that the Government has every intention of moving to complete discussions, as far as the House is concerned, on the copyright Bill. We believe that the amendments to the Act will benefit the artists of the country. The Government has a great interest in ensuring that that benefit is maintained through the final passage of these amendments.

[Translation]

Mr. Waddell: I fail to understand why the Liberal Party of Canada does not want to protect the interests of Canadian artists.

[English]

– SECOND PHASE OF LEGISLATION

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver—Kingsway): The New Democrats will be prepared to help in terms of Phase II of the copyright legislation with regard to spontaneous use and so on.

Will the Government be prepared to help matters by bringing in Phase II fairly quickly? If reasonable, that legislation could get through the House so that finally, after 64 years, the artists of Canada would not have to wait any longer for their just share of the products of their work.

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of State and Minister of State (Treasury Board)): Mr. Speaker, we share our colleague's concern with respect to the delays to which this and other matters such as the emergency refugee legislation and the Immigration Act, are being treated by the Senate. I can assure my hon. friend that, once consideration is completed in the Senate, if there are any changes we will deal with them quickly and be prepared to move on to the second phase of the copyright legislation.

FINANCE

FLOW-THROUGH SHARES TAX DEDUCTION

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane—Superior): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Deputy Prime Minister. As he may know, without exception every resource region across the country would like to see the full retention of the so-called flow-through share tax deduction. This has proven to be a most useful tool for regional development. For example, 34 new mines were established in Canada in the last two years because of this program. In the Province of Manitoba, I am advised, 70 per cent of all mineral exploration dollars are directly related to the flow-through share program.

Will the Government reconsider its plan to phase out the earned depletion allowance, or will the Minister tell the House that it has to go because this is yet one more concession of the Government to the United States in its trade deal with that country?

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, if I may be permitted to respond to my my hon. friend, he undoubtedly knows that following the initial statement on flow-through shares by my colleague, the Minister of Finance, there has been some consideration given to the submissions made. He is also aware that the Committee on Finance and Economic Affairs will probably be studying this and, if I am not mistaken, it will be meeting again tomorrow.

The Member also knows that the use of flow-through shares, as is true of other equity financing measures, has fallen off drastically since the recent stock market set-back. All of these things are being evaluated and the Government is giving the matter close consideration.

NORTHERN ALLOWANCES—APPLICATION OF TAX BENEFIT

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane—Superior): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the same Minister. One of the most justified and needed tax breaks for people who live in isolated resource regions is the northern benefit tax package. The trouble with that tax package is that it is being applied in a haphazard, illogical, and arbitrary fashion. For example, in the Province of Manitoba, northern Manitoba is included in general but Thomson and Wabowden are out. That makes no sense at all.

Will the Minister of National Revenue arrange a meeting between himself, the Minister of Finance, the Hon. Member for Laval-des-Rapides, and myself, to hear a serious proposal to improve the application of the northern benefits tax deduction? If this proposal could be accepted it would save the Government a great deal of time and expense in the setting up of the commission which it plans to have some time later this spring.

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Minister of National Revenue): That is a very constructive suggestion, Mr. Speaker. I will certainly discuss this with my colleague, the Minister of Finance. My colleague is aware that both my Ministry and the Ministry of Finance have been giving great consideration to this problem. He is aware that we have brought a lot of tax equity to Canadians who previously did not enjoy it. I agree with the Member that there are administrative flaws in this. We welcome his help in assessing ways to make this measure more equitable for everyone.

SIKH ORGANIZATIONS

MINISTER'S LETTER TO PREMIERS

Mr. Ernie Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State for External Affairs who is aware that even one of his own Cabinet colleagues has rejected his advice to boycott meetings organized by certain Sikh organizations.

Is the Minister ready to reconsider the letter he sent Canadian Premiers some months ago, and to recall the advice he gave them so gratuitously?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is, unhappily and uncharacteristically, wrong in the premise of his question. The event attended by my colleague, the Minister of Employment and Immigration, was sponsored by a wide number of organizations representative of Sikhs in Canada. That is precisely the kind of thing that I want to see Members of this House and members of the Government becoming involved in.

I, myself, in Edmonton on Saturday night was present at a celebration of the anniversary of the Prairie Link newspaper at which there were present many members of the moderate Sikh community.

If we want Sikh communities in Canada to be governed by the moderates who want to live within the rules of Canada, a large part of our challenge is to be seen to be associated with those moderates. That is what my colleague was doing in Toronto, that is what I was doing in Edmonton, that is what was done under the auspices of the Speaker of the House of Commons here on Parliament Hill last week, and that is what I want to see encouraged.

While I am on my feet, Mr. Speaker, let me break the rules very slightly and welcome to the Chamber of the House of Commons those distinguished students of the school of Tomahawk, Alberta, in the constituency of Yellowhead.

• (1500)

POLICY OF DEPARTMENT

Mr. Ernie Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, under the eyes of the students to whom the Minister has referred, I want to ask him, given that we are interested in teaching people the principles of Canadian life, how he plans to deal with teaching that people should not to be judged before they have been found guilty somewhere? How will he avoid guilt by association? How will he teach people what a democratic society is about? What does the Department of External Affairs plan to do to ensure that one slip does not become the general policy applied to other communities in Canada?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, if the Hon. Member were more acquainted with the evidence that has been gathered with regard to the activities of the Babbar Khalsa, with the activities of the International Sikh Youth Organization, and if he had taken the care to read the constitution of the World Sikh Organization which calls for an independent state of Khalistan, he would then understand the grave concerns we have.

I know him to be an unusually fair minded Member of this House. I know him also to be a person who is very genuinely dedicated to the full participation in Canada of people who bring to this nation the blessing of traditions and cultures from around the world. We all know that that needs to proceed in an atmosphere of tolerance and an atmosphere of order. We have to encourage that.

There is a small minority within the Sikh community in Canada that is running not only against the rules of order of Canada but that is running against the preferences of the great majority of Canadians of Sikh origin. We cannot leave that great majority of Sikhs without support. We need to support them and we need to do it evidently. The Hon. Member needs to do it, I need to do it, and, my colleague needs to do it. That is what both she and I were doing this past weekend.

MINISTERS ATTENDANCE AT SIKH RALLY

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. It also concerns the attendance by his Cabinet colleague, the Minister of Employment and Immigration, at a large Sikh Canadian rally organized in part by the very same three organizations of which the Minister urged a political boycott only months ago. The Minister cannot have it both ways.

Given that Conservative Members of Parliament in his caucus have disregarded, ignored, and disagreed with this policy, and that a senior Cabinet Minister attended a meeting organized in part by these three organizations, is the Minister prepared to tell the House that he erred in the language contained in that letter sent to the Premiers and that he is now prepared to do the right and courageous things, withdraw that letter and change his Government's policy?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the meeting in question attended by my colleague, the Minister of Employment and Immigration, was organized by nine temples in Toronto. The Hon. Member's facts are wrong.

This is a sensitive issue. There is a particular obligation upon Members who want to be engaged in this issue to get their facts right and to act honestly. Otherwise, they will subject themselves to the worst of suspicions.

Mr. Marchi: Of the nine groups, three were the same organizations against which he urged political boycott. By that definition, this senior Cabinet Minister has disregarded the External Affairs direction.

GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, I want to direct my supplementary question to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. Given that the official government line is still to boycott those three organizations, and that those three organizations helped organize yesterday's rally, will the Minister offer her explanation to the House of why she did attend that rally despite the urgings of the Secretary of State for External Affairs?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, this question has been raised four times now.

Mr. Marchi: Not to you, your colleague.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): This question has been answered. The Hon. Member knows that some of the facts he has put on the floor of the House of Commons are, at least, in serious dispute.

Mr. Marchi: Which ones?

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Those are the politest words I can use to describe it. If he and his Party want to retain any colour of credibility of being interested in the order of this country and interested in the effective participation of Canadians of different cultures in this country, then he should stop playing politics with issues that are so sensitive.

When he asks questions in the House and receives answers to those questions in the House, he should accept those answers and stop playing politics.

Mr. Speaker: Hon. Members will remember that, in view of statements that were made at 2.15 p.m., Question Period was extended. However, this will be the last question. The Hon. Member for Regina West.

Point of Order—Mr. Nickerson

AIR CANADA

SALE OF SHARES—VOTING BY BOARD OF DIRECTORS

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister who, I believe, is in charge of privatization and the selling out of Air Canada. Is it government policy that people who are appointed by the Government to a board of directors, to represent the majority of taxpayers, should vote, according to government instructions in accordance with the wishes of the minority private shareholders?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): I already answered that question in the House the other day. I think the Hon. Member knows that under the provisions of the Canada Business Corporations Act, directors, no matter who appoints them, must perform their duties in the best interests of the company and in the best interests of the shareholders of that company. That is the law of the land.

Mr. Benjamin: Now we have it.

GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Mr. Speaker, the Government states in the second paragraph on page 8 of the Deputy Prime Minister's statement that the Government will instruct the Chairman of Air Canada's Board of Directors to vote its shares—that is the taxpayers shares—in accordance with the majority of the public shareholders, who are the private shareholders. How can that be in the interest of the taxpayers? How can it be in accordance with government policy should the private shareholders desire to shut down the technological centre in Dorval or the maintenance depot in Winnipeg, when you have already instructed our members of the Board of Directors to vote with the minority?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, if the majority shareholder interferes in the decisions that are made and are consistent with the best commercial interest of the company, that would be a direct violation of the Canada Business Corporations Act.

Mr. Speaker: I know that other Members wish to rise, but I regret that time has expired. I will try to recognize them tomorrow.

POINT OF ORDER

ERRONEOUS INSERTION IN HANSARD OF ORDER PAPER QUESTION AND ANSWER

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, I have a point of order relating to the answering of Order Paper questions last Friday, April 15. Quoting from Hansard, page 14522, the Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Hawkes) said:

> Mr. Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: Nos. 203, 271, and 272. I ask that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

If you then read through the text of Hansard you will find that there is an answer also given for Question No. 303, which I had asked of the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp).

I have checked with the Table Officers and they confirm that Question No. 303 was not answered on that day and that the text of the answer appears there by mistake. The Table Officers have also confirmed to me that the purported answer to the question will not appear in the bound edition of Hansard and that the question will continue to appear on the Notice Paper until it is answered.

I wanted to raise this because I believe the purported answer is incorrect and I did not want any embarrassment to be caused to the Minister of National Health and Welfare.

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, what the Member for Western Arctic (Mr. Nickerson) says is correct. It had been found that the answer that was given and which was to be tabled was in error. That is what created the difficulty. His intervention is correct.

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, there may be a process problem. I do not think that answer was contained in the information I handed to the page. There may have been notification of another kind that ended up in Hansard, rather than the actual document I presented to the House of Commons. Perhaps we could look into that procedural aspect and make sure it does not occur again.

Mr. Speaker: I thank Hon. Members for their intervention. I will also take this matter under advisement and see if we can ensure that it does not happen again, as the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary said.

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre) that Bill C-117, an Act to amend the Excise Tax Act and the Excise Act, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Finance and Economic Affairs, and the amendment of Ms. McLaughlin (page 14479).

Mr. Ernie Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the opportunity to say something about Bill C-117, an Act to amend the Excise Tax Act and the Excise Act. I particularly appreciate the opportunity to expand on some observations I made just before we rose for lunch. I was commenting on the speech given by the Hon. Member for Algoma (Mr. Foster), a colleague from a northern Ontario riding. The Bill we are dealing with covers a great deal of territory in its way. It represents the legislative amendments required to implement quite a number of federal sales and excise taxes and excise duty changes. These are changes the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) announced at various times, for instance, in his Budget of February 18, 1987, and then again in his Budget of February 10, 1988.

There were some changes proposed in the June 18, 1987, White Paper on tax reform and other changes were made in the December 16, 1987 White Paper on tax reform. The changes proposed at those various times have all been gathered together in this Bill, which brings forward for approval by this House of Commons and by the other place changes in the excise tax, sales tax and excise duty.

I am speaking in support of the amendment of my colleague, the Hon. Member for the Yukon (Ms. McLaughlin), for a six-month hoist. It is a classic opposition proposal to send this Bill away for six months so that the Government can reconsider, the intention being to have the matter dropped. It is appropriate to propose such a motion on this particular Bill because of the regressive nature of sales and excise duty taxation and because of the gross unfairness these tax changes represent for Canadians in some regions of Canada as opposed to Canadians in other regions.

In speaking to the motion to hoist Bill C-117 for six months, I want to examine the particular proposals made and to demonstrate why they are wrong in principle, wrong in their economic effect on the people of Canada and wrong as part of the fiscal policy of the Canadian Government. I note that among the changes in Bill C-117 there is a proposal to increase the sales tax on paint and wallpaper products from 8 per cent to 12 per cent. That strikes me as a substantial increase. Those who like to play with numbers would say immediately that it is a 50 per cent increase in the rate of taxation because it has gone from 8 per cent to 12 per cent. One can think of the building boom going on in various parts of the country and the way in which people are involved in improving their various properties, and one can readily see the burden represented in this 50 per cent increase in the rate of taxation on these products.

The Minister of Finance has been involved time after time since he was first appointed as Minister of Finance in 1984 in loading down Canadian families and homeowners with more and more taxes. I note that Bill C-117 will authorize an increase in the federal sales tax on beer, spirits, wine and tobacco products from 15 per cent to 18 per cent. That is a fairly significant increase. That is a 20 per cent increase in the rate of taxation. This is an area of taxation that Government after Government has looked at as fair game.

Obviously, when we speak about taxes on alcoholic beverages and tobacco we are speaking about sin taxes. No doubt the products involved rarely serve the good health of the persons involved. We know tobacco is very detrimental to good health. But this particular loading on of more taxes in this area means the taxes are paid by everyone who consumes the products no matter what their incomes. Some people may think, in the pursuit of virtue and the construction of a moral society, that we ought to try to tax these products right out of existence. Those, of course, with larger incomes will still be able to enjoy these products without feeling anything like the burden put upon those with low incomes, those who barely manage, and there are those who indulge themselves all too frequently at the expense of their families, their wives and children. In those cases I do not overstate the harsh reality of what the Minister of Finance is doing in laying on another of those sin taxes. He is reducing the well-being of far too many of our citizens who are already in very serious circumstances.

In these two areas, the tax on products used to beautify our homes and the tax on products used by people who want to relax and have a little pleasure in life, the Minister of Finance has added to the burden that low and middle-income Canadians have to bear. There is no distinction in the amount of tax one has to pay because one is taxed on the quantity one buys. There is clearly a limit as to how much can be consumed no matter what one's income might be. It is all too tragically the case, particularly with alcoholic beverages and tobacco, that those who are the least able to afford it, may well end up being the excessive consumers of the product. Again, if the intention is to tax these products out of existence, there might be an argument for it. But if the consequence of that action is to reduce the food and the necessities of life of family members, surely it is to be regretted, at the very least, and provides some of the reason why hoisting this Bill for six months is quite appropriate.

However, it was not in those areas of regressive taxation on which I focused my own comments earlier today, although the Hon. Member for Algoma, in responding to my comments, expanded on the regressive features. It is in terms of regional unfairness that I want to make some additional observations. There are some other changes for which Bill C-117 provides. First, this Bill establishes a 10 per cent tax on telecommunications services such as telephone and telex, although it does not include any charge on local residential telephone lines. In the imposition of a 10 per cent tax on long-distance telephone charges we have a very good example about which I will elaborate. I notice that the Chairman of the House Committee on Finance, who is here, is shaking his head. Presumably he is shaking it at something else, although I expect that he might agree. After all, he is a Member for a Toronto area riding. He knows how his constituents can do business and carry on social activities in all kinds of ways in the Metro Toronto area without ever incurring a long-distance charge.

It would be quite fascinating to know how the long-distance charges of the citizens of Toronto compare with the long-distance charges incurred by people in northern Ontario. Compared with the citizens of Thunder Bay, which is in my own constituency, the difference might not be all that great. However, there are a great many northern Ontarians who live outside the local calling area of a city. In those cases they face very high costs of carrying telephone communications. They have to do this for all types of reasons, whether it is to make an appointment at the doctor or to make a contact on a business matter using the yellow pages, which are such a delightful way of finding out where we can get products rather than burning gasoline. If one wants to do that in the community of Pass Lake, for example, in my constituency, which is only some 30 miles out, those are all long-distance charges. I have constituents there who routinely, although they have modest enough incomes, run up month by month long-distance bills of $100, $150 or $200 and more.

That is an excellent illustration of the situation that faces some Canadians by contrast with those who live in the City of Toronto from which the Minister of Finance himself comes. Persons there can make a diversity of calls. They can ask, inquire about practically any product on earth and do so without ever getting close to a long-distance call. They can enjoy all the marvels that life in Metro Toronto offers in the way of society, culture and so on without facing anything remotely like the type of costs that my constituents face.

That is a nice indication of why constituents of mine began writing and calling when they first spotted this 10 per cent tax. They wanted to know from where it came. They wanted to know who had done this to them. They, living even in the City of Thunder Bay—and I am thinking now of some of my older constituents with children who are grown and gone to work in Toronto, Winnipeg or wherever, far from the City of Thunder Bay, which, too, is all too often another feature of northern Ontario life—are being faced with a 10 per cent tax without any cap on it. That is the same level of taxation that someone would face if one lived anywhere in the City of Toronto. That is surely manifestly unfair.

What I want to spotlight in this matter particularly is that when the on finance committee considered this matter it suggested that there should be a cap on it. It was suggested that there should be a limit to the amount of this telecommunications tax that a person could pay. That was designed to ensure that those who live in circumstances such as my constituents in northern Ontario did not pay a tax that was immediately proportional to the number of long-distance calls they had to make.

The Minister of Finance refused to accept that recommendation. He refused to put a cap on this tax so that a person might have to pay $3 or whatever it happened to be. However, if one has the misfortune of making $100 in long-distance calls then one must pay another $10 in tax. That is that. There is no way of avoiding it.

There is an element of inflation in the country. Surely putting this tax on long-distance calls and on telex services is to place a cost on the transmission of information in our society that is bound to be reflected in the inflation rate. The Minister of Finance, who encourages the Governor of the Bank of Canada to keep the inflation rate stable or even to cut it down to zero, is being shamelessly hypocritical when he lays on a 10 per cent tax on telecommunication services and refuses to put a cap on it. This allows some Canadians to face the type of disproportionate burden that I have been describing.

There are other taxes in this Bill which are equally unfair in their effect on Canadians in one area and another. I notice that the gasoline tax was increased for the fourth time. We have faced this tax time after time. The Minister of Finance sees an opportunity every time he has to do a financial statement or a Budget in the fact that Canadians use cars and trucks. Some Canadians, in particular northern Ontarians, depend on aircraft to get about. There is another case of the unfairness of things. There is one cent more per litre on gasoline, which is four and a half cents a gallon. The taxes pile up each time a cent is placed on a litre. The Minister of Finance is probably grateful, despite whatever some of his Tory colleagues may have thought earlier, that the country went metric. This way he can raise taxes by one cent per litre rather than by one cent per gallon.

I remember as a graduate student living in Toronto 20 years ago. I do not know how typical my life was that year. I expect there are a good many Torontonians who own cars, which I did not that particular year. The really impressive thing, if one spends any time in the City of Toronto, is that thanks to the public transit system it is possible to get around and to enjoy a marvellous life in Metro Toronto without ever having to use an automobile.

Against that my constituents may very well have to drive 20 or 30 miles to work every day. They will be forced to take longer trips if they want to take the family for any type of holiday outing since they will want to cover some distance. In northern Ontario the distances are extreme.

If one is involved in the basic resource industries, the tax rebates have been increased in order to offset this. However, for all of those who are not involved in the basic resource industries here is another addition to the cost of doing business. Here is another inflationary impact on our society.

The high costs are being run up in terms of the purchases of fuel that have to be made and the burden of taxation on my constituents in Thunder Bay—Nipigon and in other parts of northern Ontario by contrast to the happy lot of people in our largest cities with excellent systems of public transit in order to spare people the expense of using gasoline while we have to use so much of it, and this pays all these tax costs. Lord knows whether or not my constituents in northern Ontario are not helping to maintain the subway system in the City of Toronto.

This is the ultimate demonstration of how unfair the system of regressive taxation across the board with percentage increases in one item or another is for Canadians. It is for those reasons that I oppose this Bill so profoundly. It is one thing to have a tax system that is oriented toward the ability to pay. It has been a challenge to be consistent even in that principle in income taxation. We have seen how often the Minister of Finance has rejected calls to him to ensure that our income tax system on individuals and corporations was fairly applied to everyone. That system is rife with exceptions. That system is rife with favouritism. It is favouritism of the wealthy, the powerful and the large corporations.

A splendid example of this came last week when Robert Campeau, after his triumphs in purchasing Federated Department Stores, offered some thoughts on taxation and some musings on social philosophy. What were his thoughts? He was opposed to various features of the Canadian social system. He was not honest enough himself to remind people that he had been a glorious recipient, as was his company, Campeau Corporation, of one aspect of the Canadian social system, that is, favouritism for the powerful and the wealthy in being able to avoid paying income tax for years through the 1980s. He did not talk about that, suggesting that others are free-loaders when he himself is a splendid example of corporate free-loading in Canada. He then ran off to the U.S. to swashbuckle about down there.

If we had a system that was fair to the ability to pay, there would be the revenues to allow us to do away with all of these excise taxes, sales taxes, and excise duties which are loaded on to people without regard to how much they have in the way of resources, and without regard to how much their incomes may be. They are simply loaded on them, grinding the poor into the dirt while the rich get away scot-free.

There is more than enough reason to reject this Bill. There is every reason to give it the six months hoist and tell the Government to go back to the drawing board, start from scratch, do the job right and in the fair way that Canadian taxpayers have been wanting for years and years.

Mr. Blenkarn: We heard the Member for Thunder Bay—Atikokan (Mr. Angus) rant and rave about tax changes without recognizing the fact that every one of these tax changes have been debated before. The ones with respect to telecommunications, cable, and television are all part of the White Paper on taxation and were debated in full with public hearings; 178 witnesses appeared before the committee that travelled the length of the country and made comments on those taxes. These taxes were not objected to in the minutes of that committee.

I would have thought with that degree of unanimity across the House dealing with these particular measures that this Member and that Party would have said: "Well, we have heard this before. There has been a good inquiry into it, and let us accept them".

I want to ask the Hon. Member if he bothered looking at the finance committee report on the White Paper. Did he bother looking at the evidence with respect to the telecommunications tax? Does the Hon. Member realize that, as far as long distance charges are concerned, the result of the CRTC order is to reduce the price on long distance charges by 30 per cent? The effect of the taxation at a 10 per cent level is that the reduction, instead of being 30 per cent, is only 20 per cent, as far as households are concerned. Did the Hon. Member look at these matters? Does he realize that with tax reform there is a massive and significant reduction in taxes that individuals pay? The result is that the burden has to be paid somewhere, and that burden has been placed on business as that tax affects business almost entirely and totally. It is a transfer from individual taxation to business taxation.

Mr. Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): In his last words the Hon. Member and chairman of the finance committee of the House indicates something of the ignorance of northern Ontario and generally the remote northern riding situation that I have been suggesting is at the heart of the problem. The Hon. Member may think that long distance is chiefly a business charge. That is not the case in northern Ontario. It is not the case for elderly constituents who live in the City of Thunder Bay who cannot keep in touch with their children across the country without making long distance calls and running up significant charges.

The question is not what I have read. The question is what the chairman of the committee is conscious of and what he remembers. My notes indicate that the committee considered this matter of telecommunications charges and that it actually recommended that there be a cap on them, in some limited recognition of what I am arguing that people in remote ridings face very high costs, and that it is simply unfair to them. Perhaps the Hon. Member's constituents can get away with making a couple of long distance calls a year, so he thinks that it is entirely a business matter. Those in remote ridings for whom long distance calls are a very important reality should find their obligation to pay a tax severely limited. That is the type of thing that I would expect him to be saying. I would like him to recognize that the Minister of Finance refused to accept that advice.

If my notes are wrong and the committee did not recommend that then I have been badly briefed, as sometimes happens.

Mr. Blenkarn: The Hon. Member does not appreciate the fact that his constituents, via a CRTC order, are receiving a 30 per cent reduction in telecommunications tax for long distance purposes. The effect of this tax imposed on his constituents is that instead of getting a 30 per cent reduction, they are only getting a 20 per cent reduction. Does the Hon. Member not realize that the burden is coming down? I was wondering if he wanted to tie those things together, because that has to happen.

As far as the far northern branches are concerned, I suspect that there are not any of the conditions in his constituency, although I may be wrong, that would have been affected by that particular recommendation the Hon. Member is talking about.

Mr. Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): I apologize to the Hon. Member for not noting his CRTC reference as well. It is not necessarily to the Government's credit. It has been an ongoing process for the CRTC to consider how telephone costs should be borne, given the way in which the technology reduces the expenses of those transmissions. Here is a reduction, and this is how real progress occurs, when it is possible to reduce the cost of things significantly. The Minister of Finance, of course, sees the opportunity for a revenue grab to get part of that, so that Canadians do not get the full benefit of the progress, if it really is progress.

The other possibility in this rate rebalancing is to load down the residential telephone user, the person who rents the telephone, pays for the service on a monthly rate, with a significant increase in charges. There has been much concern to ensure that that does not happen in any excessive manner.

As far as reductions are concerned, we have seen the CRTC in an ongoing battle, in particular with Bell Canada, which does not want to carry through the reductions. It is going to other courts to try to turn a ruling back, and it will do its best to keep what it can. Certainly, there has been a saving there. Like all Canadians, I appreciate progress that produces economic gains for us.

If the Member is correct that the provision that I was alluding to, the $3 cap, would have done nothing for northern Ontario, that only underscores my indignation that the resident of Toronto may well be able to avoid paying any of this tax while leading a rich and well-rounded life, while some of my limited income constituents, many of them seniors living on pensions or in the situation of many senior women or widows who are living on the edge of poverty find themselves faced with a 10 per cent tax on the long distance charges they make to keep in touch with their children. That is why I am angry. I suspect that is an emotion that the chairman of the Commons finance committee probably would share, if he really thought about it and brought his mind into the situation of my constituents in Thunder Bay—Nipigon.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions and comments are now terminated. The Hon. Member for York West (Mr. Marchi) on debate.

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to participate in this debate on Bill C-17 on behalf of my Party and caucus. The purpose of this Bill is to implement the many sales and excise tax increases announced by the Conservative administration in the Budget of February 18, 1987, and June 18, 1987 and December 16, 1987 with respect to tax reform proposals, and recently the February 10, 1988 Budget.

One of the pertinent aspects within these fiscal plans and arrangements that irks Canadians and angers Members on this side of the House is essentially the commitments and promises made by the current Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) and the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) back in 1984.

• (1540)

They promised Canadians very clearly that the Tory administration had no desire to raise the taxes of Canadians. Yet following the September 1984 election, we in this House and Canadians across the country not only saw but experienced unprecedented tax increases.

I think it is worth recalling that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) and the Prime Minister promised not to raise taxes. On March 6, 1984, the Minister of Finance, as reported in Hansard, said:

> We will reduce spending. We will refrain from increasing taxes, which are already too high.

Not to be outdone by that promise, the Prime Minister, according to Le Devoir for November 29, 1984, said:

> Canadians pay a good deal of money for government services and feel that they are already paying quite enough.

Yet, despite those statements, we in this House have had to sit in our places, despite our urgings and complaints about what we hear from average Canadians when we meet with them in our constituency offices, when we visit them in their places of work or in their homes, and we have had to endure and witness a litany of tax increases which makes all the promises simply a sham. But it is more than that. These so-called promises have instituted a certain kind of cynicism among Canadians about their elected representatives and political institutions.

Right after those statements were uttered in 1984, we had a sales tax increase from 9 per cent to 10 per cent. In January, 1986 the sales tax went from 10 per cent to 11 per cent. In April, 1986 there was another increase from 11 per cent to 12 per cent. Those three increases have had an impact of raising tax revenues to the tune of $3 billion, taken from the pockets of Canadians. The Government between the years of 1985 and 1987 extended the sales tax on candy, soft drinks, fast food and snacks. In January 1988 there was a sales tax increase from 8 per cent to 12 per cent on paper, wallpaper and toys. In September, 1986 there was a gasoline tax increase of two cents a litre, and an additional one cent increase was imposed in January, 1987, with a further one cent increase on February 19, 1987. There were other increased taxes on alcohol and tobacco. The first one came in January, 1985. Since then there have been three increases.

Canadians accept their duties as citizens of this country. We enjoy a certain kind of lifestyle, we receive services and programs from our government and accept as part of this contract with Canada the imposition of taxes so that we and our children and their children's children can live in a country as blessed as Canada is. Canadians are prepared to share the burden of taxes to maintain the social, economic, cultural and political stability that we enjoy as a nation. What is upsetting to Canadians is that they realistically perceive and realistically believe that some of us are being asked to share a disproportionate share of the national burden. They are correct.

When we look at the litany of tax increases we have had, we have to ask ourselves what is the cumulative impact on the average Canadian household. When you do that, you find there is an unfairness in the system. If you take the four federal budgets presented to this House by the Conservative Government, you will find that a Canadian earning $15,000 to $20,000 a year will by 1990 have to pay nearly a 36 per cent increase in taxes from the tax level of 1984. An individual earning between $35,000 and $45,000 will have to face an increase in his or her taxes of approximately 12 per cent. But those Canadians in the $100,000 bracket will have an increase of only 4 per cent. If you are fortunate enough to be in the circle of Canadians who earn $200,000 and up, your increase is only 2 per cent. That is the spectrum, Mr. Speaker.

On the one hand, a $15,000 wage earner has a 36 per cent tax increase while on the other hand a $200,000 wage earner has only a 2 per cent tax increase. You can say what you want and cut it in however technical financial language that you can, but at the end of the day Canadians are seeing that proportionate tax sharing as being fundamentally and irresponsibly unfair. It is having an impact.

We are seeing the squeeze play. Those who are working class Canadians and those who are middle-class Canadians or who think of themselves in those two categories are being squeezed. If you talk to Canadians in those economic brackets, you will hear that they are finding it more difficult with each passing day to maintain their current standard and status. If you talk to Canadians who see themselves as middle-class Canadians, they will tell you that they are finding it hard to stay in the middle class section.

Because of the cumulative effect of these fiscal policies by the Conservative Government people are seeing a stratification of class like never before. For the first time in many years, perhaps for the very first time, Canadians see themselves through various polling studies being more in a class stratification while the British see themselves in very well delineated classes by class designations. That is dangerous. One of the things about which we have pride is an underplaying of class stratification seen in other societies.

The taxes and budgets that we have had do not help. These taxes and budgets do not provide the bridge or shorten that gulf, that growing disparity, both in reality and in feeling which is dividing those who are falling more and more every day between the haves and the have-nots.

There is a struggle in certain communities and families at the end of the month. Canadians who face increased property taxes on their homes, coupled with increased federal income taxes, excise and sales taxes are having a tough time making ends meet. This struggle is all the more acute if you happen to be a senior and you want to hold onto the home that took a lifetime of work and sacrifice to build and own. If you are a single mother trying to keep the household together, these numbers make your life very difficult.

Individuals who are collecting workers' compensation because of injuries incurred on construction jobs face property taxes and increased sales taxes. We will meet those construction workers at some point in time in our constituency offices. They will be looking for help, looking for answers, looking for direction.

For a family with two parents, both of whom are working in middle-class jobs, with kids to clothe and send to school, the end of the month is not a day that is looked forward to. We in this House of Commons have to look beyond the numbers. We have to know that behind these numbers are real, living Canadians who have real, living struggles.

We in this House have recognized the need to try to pull Canada ahead, to leave it one step forward from where it was when we found it. We must recognize as well that as Canada goes forward, we cannot allow some Canadians to be left lagging behind. While we will not have a perfect system, we cannot have those who earn $200,000 per year paying an increase in taxes of 2 per cent while those who earn $15,000 per year are paying an increase in taxes of 36 per cent. That gulf must be minimized. We must bridge that difference so that Canadians in the lower income brackets can have the perception that though it will be difficult, they know that their next door neighbours are also pulling their weight and other Canadians in similar circumstances are paying for the future of their country.

What breeds contempt, anger and cynicism is having such a perverse difference in the rates based on the incomes brought in at the end of the year. That is why we complain. That is why we are not timid about standing in our places and talking about these issues. They need to be talked about.

The chairman of the finance committee has done a good job on the finance committee and he has been recognized for that. However, he asks why the Opposition is continuing to talk about this matter if it has already been analysed in committee and in the Budget. We are talking about it because there have been no changes. These voices of anger across the country have fallen on deaf ears. Canadians continue to have their struggles. That is why we are still talking about it. That is why we are still prepared to debate it. We are talking about two different visions of Canada, and Canadians ought to have the opportunity to witness these debates on their television sets and to agree with whatever vision they believe to be correct.

We will continue to argue for a tax system in which Canadians must participate that comes a step closer to being equitable and fair and to breeding the confidence that all Canadians are giving a bit and sacrificing a bit for the building of a great country. Everyone must shoulder the burden, pull up his or her shirt sleeves and put the shovel to the ground.

We do not want to go the way of Great Britain where there are great stratifications in classes, and everyone knows them. If we do not want to go in that direction, then we had better do something about it by changing these numbers. That is why we are standing up today and why we will continue to stand up.

Mr. Blenkarn: Mr. Speaker, this Bill involves certain sales tax and excise tax items that have largely been debated before and are part of the over-all thrust of paying the bills of the country. These are not brand new propositions that have not been broached before or have not been subject to debate.

I wonder why we hear this haranguing about the problems of taxation. I appreciate that the taxes in Canada are too high, but so is the debt of Canada too high. That Hon. Member was responsible, as a member of the Liberal Party, for putting us where we are.

If we get into the glue, we have to do something about it. I wonder if the Hon. Member has any suggestions for what public expenditures he thinks ought to be cut, what pensions, for example, ought to be cut, in order that we would not have to levy the taxes set out in Bill C-117.

Mr. Marchi: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn) has asked me why we are haranguing the Government about what he calls old taxes. As I mentioned in my remarks only a few moments ago, we are debating these policies because we believe them to be wrong. We believe them to be fundamentally unfair. We find that they impose a greater degree of burden on many Canadians and their families who can least afford to pay.

The Hon. Member asks what I would suggest instead. I suggested that we cannot afford to have $200,000-per-year wage earners facing 2 per cent increases while $15,000-per-year wage earners are facing 36 per cent increases. My suggestion would be to minimize that difference. We would find that we would still bring in the capital required to fund our services and programs. Not only that, we would regain the confidence of many Canadians who will again believe in the fairness of the system.

We as a country have existed for a long, long time. We have not had to place such a high proportion of the taxes on the poor and middle-income earners. It is only in the last four years that we have seen a tax imposition that has been unprecedented. Unless the Government is prepared to make it fairer, I suggest that it remove itself from governing the country and allow the people who can do it properly and with some compassion as well to do it.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 66, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the Hon. Member for Scarborough West (Mr. Stackhouse)—Labour Relations—Federal minimum wage; the Hon. Member for Cochrane—Superior (Mr. Penner)—Finance—Northern tax allowances—Geographical delimitation of affected community/Request that regulations be amended; the Hon. Member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor)—National Defence—Acquisition of new trucks.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre) that Bill C-117, an Act to amend the Excise Tax Act and the Excise Act, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Finance and Economic Affairs, and on the amendment of Ms. McLaughlin (p. 14479).

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, in the context of tax reform, something that is dear to our Party's heart, I believe that this is the most significant piece of legislation we have been able to introduce in the House. Bill C-117 puts into place many of the elements of the White Paper on tax reform which we presented to the Canadian people well over nine months ago, and in fact last June, I believe.

The measures which came out of that consultation process were discussed and presented to the House in the Budgets of February 18, 1987, and February 10, 1988. They are also in this piece of legislation, and I think it is particularly discouraging that, so quickly, a six-month hoist amendment was moved.

Many farmers in western Canada, for instance, are in difficult circumstances. The collapse of farm prices on a worldwide basis created severe economic hardships, and the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) needs to have the legislative capacity to produce for the Canadian people and for the farmers of Canada the rebate on excise taxes which will help their cash flow situations.

Last week was a disturbing week. I think there was some consternation in the House this morning as well related to legislation and the Government's responsibility to manage the business of the House. I think it is important that this Bill get to committee as quickly as possible. Therefore, I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Edmonton—Strathcona (Mr. Kilgour):

> That the House continue to sit beyond the ordinary hour of daily adjournment for the purpose of continuing consideration of Bill C-117, an Act to amend the Excise Tax Act and the Excise Act.

• (1600)

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The House has heard the terms of the motion moved by the Parliamentary Secretary. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): According to the provisions of Standing Order 9(4)(b), if 15 Members rise in their places to object the motion is defeated. Shall the motion carry?

And fewer than 15 Members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): There not being 15 Members rising in objection to the motion, according to the provisions of Standing Order 9(4)(b), the motion is deemed to be carried.

Motion (Mr. Hawkes) agreed to.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Debate.

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Mr. Speaker, on several occasions in the last week or two the Government has made appeals for the co-operation of members of the opposition Parties. Something occurred this morning and just now which means the Government is insincere and does not want that co-operation. It could not care less about Parliament and its traditions. Because the Government has to find something for its great number of Members to do, we have lots of legislative, standing and special committees, some of which are meeting this afternoon. Members of the opposition, in our temporarily depleted ranks, are part of those committees. The Government knows it is highly unlikely, indeed physically impossible, if members of the Opposition are to carry out their duties, for us to keep 15 Members in the House at all times. After its demands, requests, wooing and handing out of sugar in an attempt to gain the co-operation of the opposition Parties, the Government then does a dumb thing like extending the hours.

I want to inform my hon. friends opposite that I am something of an expert on extended hours. In balmier days we kept the Government sitting until six o'clock and eight o'clock in the morning. We even sent out for Kentucky Fried. If we have to do that again, so be it. If we have to do it on every other damn Bill it wants through between now and the end of June and again this fall, or as I strongly suspect when it calls us back this summer if the Speaker agrees, then do not say we did not warn you. Even if we are in a situation of 10 Tories and one NDP, it will be an even fight.

I do not understand why the Government cannot use, as Conservatives are wont to say, sound business practices, but more particularly why it cannot arrange to implement that Party and Prime Minister's commitment on the issue of federal sales and excise taxes. The Conservative Party when it was in opposition, and the NDP as well in those years, were on all fours kicking the bejabers out of those awful Liberals over federal sales and excise taxes.

Mr. Rodriguez: Point of order, Mr. Speaker. I think the Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin) deserves an audience and I do not see a quorum here.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I regret but there is a quorum.

Mr. Benjamin: They are not in their seats. They are still scrambling around.

An Hon. Member, to be considered part of the quorum, has to be in his seat and these birds are hovering around by the curtains. The Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Andre) is way down that end of the Chamber and his seat is here. With all respect, Mr. Speaker—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): With all respect to the Hon. Member who has been around here for 20 years, I am in the chair and I will count the quorum. There are 21 Members in the House. The Hon. Member has the floor, he can carry on with the debate.

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, I bow to your prescience and superior knowledge of the subject. My understanding is that Members must be present and in their seats in the House for any kind of a count. I hope, Sir, that you will take that under advisement for a future occasion. When you watch the spectacle of these guys acting like a flock of wild partridges running out of the bushes—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I have a lot of admiration for the Hon. Member and I would just like him to know that even when we start off the session in the morning Members do not necessarily have to be in their seats in order for us to have a quorum. I know how intelligent the Hon. Member is as far as the rules of this House are concerned, but I must say to him that it is not necessary for any Hon. Member to be in his seat as long as he is in the Chamber to a count of 21 Members.

I do not wish to get into an argument with my friend who I have known for many, many years. The Chair would just like to hear his speech, please.

Mr. Benjamin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I hope there are more than you who would like to hear my speech. You see, there they go again out the door. If they do not have duties somewhere else then they should be sitting in their place in the House earning their keep. I hope I can find enough of them who have earned their keep.

Let us get back to the issue of federal sales and excise taxes. I was saying, before I was interrupted by my colleague, the Member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez), who has done properly, that if the Government was living up to what it said, promised, and the way it acted in this Chamber in the years when the Grits were in power, we would not have this Bill in front of us now.

Now you and I, Mr. Speaker, had to suffer through listening to the Conservatives making the same speeches that the Liberals made about sales and excise taxes when the Liberals were in power. Now we have to suffer through listening to Liberals making the same speeches that Conservatives made in the terrible Liberal days about sales and excise taxes, which proves again that there is no difference between them except that one is in and one is out. They have the same basic economic philosophy. They may differ on a minor detail about how they are going to do it and who they are going to do it to, but there is no basic difference.

I can remember Conservative Members getting up in support of speeches by NDP Members and NDP Members getting up in support of Conservative speakers about the terrible situation concerning deferred corporation taxes. There is over $32 billion on the books of Canada, an interest-free loan which corporations will never pay which has been accumulating since the mid-1950s. If they were charged just the bank rate, which is the best interest rate that preferred borrowers can get, which last Thursday was 8.8 per cent, that would bring in $2.7 billion in interest on deferred corporation taxes.

By the way, if we were to start charging that you would be surprised at how fast they would start paying back their deferred corporation taxes. By doing that the Government could cut its required revenues from sales and excise taxes by over 50 per cent.

If we were to lower the interest rate by 1 per cent or, at worst, set it at no higher than the U.S. rate, the business community would be able to borrow more and would put more people to work. Those people would purchase a lot of things and the Government's revenues in income tax and a low sales tax would increase accordingly. It would have as much, or more, money as it says it needs in the current fiscal year. If we were to impose a modest minimum tax of 10 or 15 per cent on all corporations which show a profit, the 60,000 corporations which earned a profit last year and will pay nothing this year would pay a minimum tax. Tories have been known to put a minimum tax on the individual taxpayer. Why can the same rule not apply to corporations? Why the double standard?

Corporate profits to the end of October, 1987, were up by 26 per cent. Their tax bill went up by 15 per cent.

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Again I do not see a quorum in the House. We seem to be having a lot of trouble this afternoon keeping the government Members in the House and they are the ones who want extended hours.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I regret, I do see a quorum.

Mr. Benjamin: They might as well stay in their seats because we will flush them out of the woodwork and out of the lobby opposite every five minutes as and when necessary.

Mr. Andre: I thought you were a nicer guy than that, Blackburn.

Mr. Fennell: You have to listen to him but we don't.

Mr. Benjamin: Do I have the floor?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): What is happening here? This is only Monday.

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): Wait until we get to Wednesday.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): It is not a full moon. I do not really know what is happening here today. The hon. gentleman for Regina West has an extra five minutes.

Mr. Benjamin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, I am going to need it. We are going to keep flushing these birds out of the bushes very frequently. The Member for Calgary West (Mr. Hawkes) has made it plain that they do not want our co-operation, so be prepared.

I was saying that corporate profits to the end of October, 1987, were up by 26 per cent and their taxes in total went up by 15 per cent. Therefore, they had 11 per cent to their benefit. That would be all right, but why did the same thing not happen for the individual taxpayer? Personal incomes stayed about the same. Most of them did not quite keep up with inflation, but let us say that they stayed about the same. Personal taxes went up by 16 per cent. The corporations get to take home an extra 11 per cent of increased profits after taxes but the individual taxpayer, the average family with two children earning about $30,000 a year, pays more.

The best economic brains on all sides of the political spectrum have said that a sales and excise tax is a regressive tax, that those on the lowest end of the income scale have to pay proportionately more than those on high incomes. I have always believed that that is what is so unfair about exemptions. If you raise the exemption of the person in the 50 per cent tax bracket by $1,000 he saves $500, but the person in the 16 per cent tax bracket, because of his low income, saves $160. That is unfair.

I want to remind the House that in the great debate of 1984 the present Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) said twice in response to my Leader, the Hon. Member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent), who raised the whole matter of tax fairness in the tax system: "You're right, Ed". Since we are right and the Prime Minister has said on national television that we are right about a fair tax system, why in the name of heaven are we dealing with a Bill such as this? It flies in the face of tax fairness. It flies in the face of equity. It flies in the face of teaching people decency. It shows an unmitigated bias for those who have and a terrible insensitivity for those who have not.

Surely the Government could go back to the drawing board on legislation such as this, or could ask for a new royal prerogative and make substantial amendments to this legislation so that it will be a beginning to a fair tax system. Canadians believe they are being unfairly treated because they see it happening to them every day. They will notice this particularly between now and the end of April while they are filling out their income tax returns.

I had the honour to visit Sudbury on Saturday. There will be an excellent New Democratic Party Member of Parliament from Sudbury, a United Church minister. I know that we will want to welcome Bill Majors as a new Member of Parliament here before too long. Another clergyman will not do any of us any harm.

In Sudbury last Saturday I spoke with small business people, professionals and steelworkers who are in the process of filling out their income tax returns. They know from filing their returns and knowing what others who are much richer than they are paying that they are being unfairly treated. Even the Prime Minister said that.

It is time the Government withdrew this Bill or rewrote it. If it introduces a fair system of taxation it will have the support of my Party. It can take all the credit it wants. The people of Canada deserve a fair tax system because it is long past due.

Mr. Speaker, there were many occasions when you and I demanded fairness for people in our constituencies and throughout the country but did not receive it from the Liberals. Now, we are not receiving fairness from the Conservatives.

[Translation]

Mr. Marcel Prud'homme (Saint-Denis): Mr. Speaker, I wish nevertheless to deal briefly with this Bill which will impose a great many sales and excise tax increases which, contrary to what some people may think, have already been announced and for which we are already paying. I do not know what would have happened if the Government had been defeated or had called an election, for it would be collecting taxes which would not have been noted by the House.

But, for the information of our listeners these taxes are the result of the February 1987 Budget, Mr. Speaker, I insist on this, as well as from the tax reform of June 18, 1987—I emphasize 1987—of December 16, 1987, and the February 10, 1988 Budget.

Of course, I could not forget this date of February 10, because it was on that date, 24 years ago, that I came here for the first time as the elected member for the Montreal—Saint-Denis riding, a riding which has undergone a great many changes, but which I would represent should the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) decide to call an election after July the 13th—I repeat, July the 13th. If he calls an election before, I hope to be a candidate for the present riding of Montreal—Saint-Denis.

Mr. Speaker, I should like to point out that all these taxes to please the Government Whip, Mr. Fennell, who is giving me his undivided attention and whom I prefer to call by his name—in order to cooperate, I shall not read the whole list of these taxes. But the Canadian people are paying them even if they have not yet been voted by the House of Commons. These are hidden taxes, so people are not too sure who imposed them, but these are major taxes, Mr. Speaker. A 12 per cent tax on snack foods and they said: Children are being taxed, but they forgot to tax rich people! In 1987-88 it will produce $60 million in revenues and, according to the 1988-89 estimates, that will rise to $80 million. A 4 per cent increase in the cigarette and tobacco tax. I take this opportunity to say that I have not smoked since this morning and I find it very difficult . . .

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Prud'homme: I know, it is a very bad habit, and I say that to the people who are listening to me. Smoking is a very bad habit and I hope to speak long enough not to smoke this afternoon. At least I will try not to smoke until tonight.

This tax was imposed on February 19, 1987 and brought in $70 million last year and it will again bring in $70 million this year. A $4 increase in the tax on every airline ticket was imposed on May 1 and August 1, 1987. The higher gasoline tax which became effective on April 1, 1987 yielded $30 million this year.

There was also another major increase which is not always immediately obvious and which came on stream as a result of the tax reform of June and December 1987, a 10 per cent tax on long distance telephone calls, along with another one of 8 to 10 per cent on cable TV. Both together will bring in $870 million in 1988-89, and estimates range from $945 million in 1989-90 to $1 billion in 1990-91.

There are other tax increases—my colleague mentioned them— on paint and wallpaper, and the sales and excise taxes must be remitted more often, another $1.6 billion. As people used to say in my neighbourhood, that is not chicken feed! A total of $1.6 billion. A record 15 to 18 per cent tax increase on alcohol and tobacco. I insist that smoking is a bad, a very bad habit. I am addicted to it, I shake it, I am hooked again. I have not indulged since this morning, and it is now 4.30 p.m., but anyway that tax will bring $175 million this year, Mr. Speaker, $175 million next year, and another $175 million the year after.

We now come to the February 1988 Budget. Another 1c. per litre increase on the excise tax on gas. That adds up to 4.5c. a gallon. On April 1st, 1988, it went unnoticed, but it was not an April fool's hoax—$225 million were suddenly imposed that day on unsuspecting taxpayers. That hidden tax will bring $300 million next year, Mr. Speaker, and another $300 million the year after.

That coming from a Government that suggested we were paying too much in taxes. I am realistic enough to realize that any expenditure must be taxed. But they should stop stating they will not impose new taxes during election times, because three and a half years later, we now find this is the Government that taxed the most after saying it would not tax that much, and that was a public commitment, a commitment that was taken at face value by the people who voted to change the Government and who found themselves in a situation that is much worse than before.

[English]

We have an old expression which comes from my grandfather: "Tory times are hard times".

I feel this is increasingly accurate. The Minister of Finance suggested he would cut spending he would not raise taxes which, according to what he said, and I was here in this House, Mr. Speaker, I was in Parliament when the Minister of Finance on March 6, 1984, not any Minister of Finance but the current one, one of the two Ministers from Toronto . . . At least in Toronto they are lucky, they have two. In Montreal I wonder if we have one or half of one. The two largest Canadian cities are underrepresented in Cabinet, even though everything may not have been perfect before. But when we look at the then impressive delegation from Montreal in Cabinet, we knew that the interests of Montreal were protected. Presumably this Government decided to erase Toronto and Montreal from the election map. This seems clear to me.

But again it is the same Minister of Finance who on March 6, 1984, stated they would not raise taxes because tax levels in Canada were already too high. And as usual I cannot but call him my excellent friend—what else could I call him?

[English]

The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) was quoted in le Devoir in November of 1984, after the election, as saying: "It's been done before me. I am going to do it too".

"Canadians pay a whole lot of money for Government services. They feel they are paying enough". Well, what happened since November 29—that is the day before my birthday, this is why I recall perfectly those dates—there has been—it is unbelievable, I see my colleague who is smiling, and I am also smiling because the poor Prime Minister is always caught up in his rhetoric. How do we reconcile today's actions with yesterday's promises? That is what's happening.

And now, Mr. Speaker, I would like to take a quick look at the revenue. I don't want to keep on talking just to play a trick on the Chair. If other speakers come forward, we might still be here tonight. In any case, let's look at the revenue.

In 1984-85, individual income taxes amounted to $29 billion; in 1988-89, to $45.4 billion. That was from people who paid enough income tax, according to Le Devoir of November 29, 1984. It was from people who paid too much income tax, the Hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) said on March 6, 1984. I repeat: individual income taxes amounted to $29.3 billion in 1984-85 and $45.4 billion in 1988-89. Corporations were a lot better off: they paid only $9.4 billion in 1984-85 and $12 billion in 1988-89. In 1984-1985, excise and sales taxes went from $13.7 to $24.3 billion. Other taxes worth $18 billion increased to $21 billion in 1984-85 for a grand total, in that same year, of $70.9 billion if my researchers' figures are correct and I believe they are. That became $103.3 billion in 1988-89.

And that from a Government who said, on March 6, 1984, that they would not increase taxes that Mr. Wilson found too high already. The Right Hon. Prime Minister (M. Mulroney) also said in Le Devoir on November 29, after the election, that taxpayers were paying through the nose for Government services and felt like they were paying too much. Well, Mr. Speaker, they have paid a lot more since then.

Once more, I must point out that this Government broke its promises and collected hundreds of millions, even billions of dollars more in taxes. And there lies the danger, Mr. Speaker, as I try to convince my own party to quantify its promises. We are currently developing our electoral platform. People are becoming cynical about politics. They do not often believe politicians because they listen to electoral campaign speeches. Candidates promise this and that and, two or three years later, they take the opposite course of action.

[English]

I am not surprised that people are becoming more and more cynical because they believed passionately during the election campaign that here was a Party which would be the kind of Party they wanted, and so it was elected. But it was promises, promises, promises. Then they turn around and they see that all the promises were broken. I am not at all surprised that people become very cynical when they talk about politics.

• (1640)

I am suggesting to my own Party that we put a price on every promise that we are going to make in the next election. We are at the moment writing our electoral platform. It is not an easy task.

It is not an easy thing because we well know that to win votes, we have to make promises left and right, promises in the Atlantic, the Far North, Montreal, Toronto, the West. But we must still have a sense of responsibility. So Mr. Speaker, I hope that the party I represent will have a sense of responsibility the next time and will quantify the expenditures that we will have to impose on the people as a result of our promises or our election platform and that we will stop lying to the people by making completely unacceptable promises because we know in advance, when we make them, that we cannot pay for them. So we will have to tax. And that has happened to the tune of billions and billions of dollars. That is why we took the time required. That is why I wanted to stand in my place this Monday afternoon, April 18, and tell you, Mr. Speaker, that the more I read these promises, this pile of promises, the more I see the increasing numbers of people telling me that almost all this government's promises have been broken. I just wanted to point out some of them. And by speaking out, I hope to help political parties a little to act more wisely in the coming elections that may be held next year.

[English]

I see that you are ready to jump with the motion, Mr. Speaker. I wonder if I should not keep talking.

Mr. Angus: No.

Mr. Prud'homme: There is only one person who can tell me to sit down here. It is Your Honour and certainly not the third Party which will be the fourth Party after the next election.

Having said all that, I will still show some co-operation and allow members of that Party to hearken to what I have just said. One thing is for sure, and at least members of the New Democratic Party will agree with me when I say it. It is that Tory times are hard times. That is what my grandfather said. That is what my father said. That is what I will say.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The question is on the amendment of Ms. McLaughlin. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): All those opposed to the motion will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Call in the Members.

• (1710)

And the division bells having rung:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. McKinnon): Order, please. In accordance with Standing Order 13(4)(a), at the request of the Chief Opposition Whip, the recorded division is deferred until six o'clock p.m. tomorrow, Tuesday, April 19.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): It being after 5 p.m., the House will now proceed to the consideration of Private Members' Business as listed on today's Order Paper.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' BUSINESS--MOTIONS

[English]

SENIOR CITIZENS' DAY

DESIGNATION OF NATIONAL DAY

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby) moved:

That the Standing Committee on Justice and Solicitor General be empowered to study the question of designating, as National Senior Citizens' Day, the second Sunday in June each year in order to recognize the outstanding contribution made by senior citizens to Canada.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to rise today in support of a motion which would recognize the outstanding contributions of senior citizens in Canada. My motion, which I hope will receive the support of Members on all sides of the House, reads as follows:

That the Standing Committee on Justice and Solicitor General be empowered to study the question of designating, as National Senior Citizens' Day, the second Sunday in June each year in order to recognize the outstanding contribution made by senior citizens to Canada.

This motion was appropriately seconded by my hon. colleague and friend from Beaches who has done an outstanding job over the years speaking on behalf of the New Democratic Party as our official spokesperson on senior citizens' issues. I intend to concentrate, during the few minutes available to me, on some of the concerns of the senior citizens of Canada in the areas of health care, community support and services, housing and pensions.

I might just say that this is an issue which I have been interested in from the very earliest age. Indeed, the first volunteer job I had was at the Napier Personal Care Home where I worked as a volunteer with senior citizens, helping them do their shopping and calling bingo. I did this at the age of 16 years, so I got involved at an early age with volunteer work with seniors.

Later, I had the honour of serving as a member of the board of directors of the New Vista Society in Burnaby, B.C.'s largest seniors' housing complex. The New Vista Society was founded by a great pioneer of the CCF, Ernie Winch, who did an incredible job in service to seniors and indeed to the people of Burnaby for many, many years as the CCF MLA for Burnaby.

As well, it is appropriate that I note the extraordinary contribution made by leaders of the CCF and the NDP at the national level who have acted as tireless advocates for the rights of seniors in Canada. M. J. Coldwell and J. S. Woodsworth single-handedly pressured the Liberal Government of the day into implementing old age pensions. Yes, the people were means-tested at the age of 70, but certainly it was M. J. Coldwell and J. S. Woodsworth, those great CCF leaders, who established that fundamental principle.

Then, of course, there is the indefatigable Stanley Knowles who served for so many years as a Member of this House with such great distinction, over and over again speaking out for seniors, for better pensions and for dignity for those who have served our community over the years. Of course, it is particularly appropriate in the context of health care to mention Tommy Douglas, who in fact represented the constituency that I have the honour of representing now, Burnaby—Seymour. Certainly we join today in paying tribute to people such as Ernie Winch, M. J. Coldwell, J. S. Woodsworth, Tommy Douglas and indeed, my own colleague, the Hon. Member for Beaches (Mr. Young), who has done such an outstanding job in this area.

I am not today speaking solely of the role of the Government of Canada in improving the lot of seniors and in recognizing the contribution made by seniors. I also want to highlight one particular area of concern for immigrants from the United Kingdom who are now entitled to a pension from the United Kingdom. However, the Conservative Thatcher Government of the United Kingdom has refused to pass on the cost of living increases to which they are entitled. Certainly justice demands that these senior citizens originally from the United Kingdom receive the increases to which they are entitled.

It is true that the Government has taken an important first step in recognizing the contribution of senior citizens, recognizing the contribution of the Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. Hees) by appointing him as Minister of State for Senior Citizens. I am speaking, of course, of a Member of Parliament who is admired, respected and loved on all sides of the House, and I speak of the Hon. Member for Northumberland who has done such an outstanding job in this important capacity.

This motion is important both in terms of symbolism and of action. Just as we recognize each year the contribution of our mothers on Mother's Day and of our fathers on Father's Day, so too I suggest it is appropriate to recognize the contribution made by senior citizens in Canada.

I mentioned some particular concerns of senior citizens and I would like to touch on some of them now. One of the major concerns is health care. Older people, of course, are some of the most frequent users of the health care system, in terms of both acute and chronic health problems. We recognize a need in Canada to study the important and emerging area of gerontology. This is an area of study for health care and social agency professionals. This recognition should be made by promoting gerontology as a field of study for the future and by way of increased funding by the federal Government for universities and research agencies in the field of gerontology.

Another area of major concern for senior citizens in my constituency of Burnaby and indeed those throughout the country is the question of affordable and accessible health care. Affordable health care is absolutely vital to seniors who remain on fixed incomes. Certainly we have concerns that the recent legislation covering the generic drug industry may in fact result in a significant increase in the price of essential drugs in the future. These are concerns that must be addressed by the Government.

As well, one of the most devastating concerns for seniors is the question of isolation, of loneliness. It has been said many times that friends are good for your health, and when it comes to seniors, nothing could be more accurate. In my riding, for example, which I have had the honour of representing for almost nine years now, there are over 74 different senior citizens' groups.

With respect to community support, once again I would like to use the example of my own riding because we are fortunate in having not only a large number of senior citizens, who live both at home and in senior citizens' facilities, but they are also very active. They work with their peers in providing many needed services in the community. After all, it is the community where services are needed. I am proud to be a member of a community which is prepared to look at the challenges posed by its large number of seniors.

For example, we have the Burnaby United Way Services for Seniors group ably chaired by Eddy Fisher which brings together a number of different services for seniors in order to provide the most efficient and needed services in the community. As well, we have the Seniors Bureau of New Westminster, presided over by an exceptional woman, Corol Strandberg, the executive director. It provides a wide range of services to seniors in the Burnaby-New Westminster area. These include shopping, friendly visiting outings, income tax clinics and handyman service. Most of those services are provided on a voluntary basis. I suggest this could serve as a model for other communities in realizing that seniors want to remain independent and active when well past retirement.

The municipality of Burnaby provides a number of important resources to my constituents, whether it be the Cameron Rec Centre, Bonsor Recreation Centre, Confederation Centre, or the Edmonds Community Centre for the Retired which provides special programs, events, workshops and bus trips for Burnaby senior citizens.

I mentioned that in my constituency there is a particularly significant number of seniors. Many of them live in seniors' housing complexes, including the New Horizons Facility, Seton Villa in North Burnaby, the Salish Tower, Doug Drummond Manor, Hall Towers, and many other outstanding facilities. In March, the mayor of Burnaby, Bill Copeland, announced that from June 12 to June 25 he would proclaim B.C. Old Age Pensioners, Senior Citizens and All Elder Citizens' Week. I am proud that my community has recognized the importance of seniors and chose this two-week period to concentrate on the issues and concerns facing senior citizens. Indeed, I hope the House will adopt this motion in time to designate the second Sunday in June this year as National Senior Citizens' Day which falls during that two-week period suggested by the mayor of Burnaby.

When I speak of these groups, of course there are similar groups throughout Canada, including in Edmonton, Winnipeg and many other areas. I speak now of the B.C. Old Age Pensioners Organization. I am always pleased to meet with representatives of that organization, people like Bill Anderson, Mildred McKay, and certainly their hard-working secretary, Delphine Carroll. The Burnaby Health Department, along with health departments throughout Canada, sponsors a volunteer section which provides shopping and banking services for seniors as well as volunteers to accompany them on walks or simply have a telephone conversation. The Edmonds Community Centre recently received New Horizons grant funding to run the Retired Health Watch Program. I had the honour of presenting a cheque to that group so they could continue this important work.

Similarly, the Burnaby Seniors Peer Counselling Service offers counselling to senior citizens in Burnaby who are experiencing the normal difficulties in life. These are seniors in the community who have completed a training program and are chosen for their warmth, sensitivity and life experiences. I would hope similar programs would be developed across Canada.

Other New Horizons grants which have gone recently to my constituency include one to the Bonsor seniors of Burnaby who requested a contribution for their program of recreational activities. Then there was the New Outlook group based at the Swedish Senior Citizens Home which got a contribution to establish a gardening program. Telecare Burnaby Senior Services assist with a support and information referral service for those in need. The New Vista Seniors Bowlers involves a program of carpet bowling. Finally there is a group called the Use It or Lose It group in Burnaby which just received a contribution to enhance a variety of outdoor sports activities at the Cameron Community Centre.

There is much that is being done in the community and many important services are being offered. However, there still remain concerns. There is the question of telephones and the Post Office, vital services for seniors in keeping in contact with relatives and friends and remaining active in volunteer work. It is therefore essential that the Government consider seniors when it increases postal rates and pursues a policy which may jeopardize door-to-door delivery. In my own riding, for example, on too many occasions the Post Office has removed postal boxes without even consulting seniors affected by the decision. Seniors are also very concerned across Canada about the possibility of telephone companies such as B.C. Tel and Bell Canada implementing Local Measured Service which would mean charges for individual calls. My colleague from Beaches spoke about this on a number of occasions. It is a policy which flies in the face of the concept of universal access to telephones. I have tabled many petitions on behalf of the residents of Burnaby with respect to this issue.

Other concerns include the question of taxation. We in the NDP have long called for a fair tax system. Our most recent figures show that 8,000 Canadians with incomes in excess of $50,000 paid not one penny in income tax. Another 250 Canadians with incomes in excess of $250,000 did not pay a cent in income tax. That is unacceptable. That increases the burden on senior citizens and other ordinary Canadians. Frank Helden, for example, a senior in my constituency has raised concerns about the fact that the small pension he receives is taxed at the source. Surely that is unjust and unacceptable.

Another group of seniors who should be recognized for their contribution to our community and country is our veterans. This is done in an outstanding way in many cases by the Canadian Legion. I have two branches of the Legion in my constituency, the South Burnaby Branch, No. 83, and the North Burnaby Branch. Certainly they do a terrific job. However, veterans from World War I, World War II, the Korean War, indeed veterans who volunteered to fight in the Spanish Civil War, the Mac-Paps, of which I understand some 100 are still living in Canada, fought for democracy and deserve recognition. We have called on the Government to recognize their contribution. Other seniors volunteered for combat duty but were never called to serve overseas. We believe they should be entitled to be treated with justice, fairness and equity. That is a promise the Government made which remains unfulfilled.

Finally, with respect to housing, there is no doubt many seniors would like to live on their own but are prevented from doing so because of the lack of affordable and accessible housing. Seniors want to live independently and with dignity. Recently I participated in the opening of Douglas Manor in Burnaby, named after Tommy Douglas, of course. That is another example of the tremendous work done by the New Vista society in Burnaby. The goal of that society in striving for an integrated living system for seniors is essential to our communities. They have, for example, special facilities for the disabled. That is the kind of concept we want to encourage everywhere in our society. I had the pleasure of opening the new wing of Douglas Manor with other officials recently and I could only think of how civilized it would be if all our seniors could live independently in such well-constructed, well-designed and well-maintained facilities. It is truly a great tribute to Tommy Douglas.

Finally, there is another sadder part of the story. We recognize that seniors in communities have contributed an enormous amount to our society. The purpose of this motion is to recognize the contribution they have made. It is clear that we have forgotten about too many of them with regard to such things as pensions and housing. It is unfortunate, as well, but we must remember that the vast majority of seniors who live in poverty are women. In 1984, 59 per cent of single elderly women lived on an income of less than $9,000 per year. That was well below the poverty level set by the National Council on Welfare. In 1981, 14 per cent of the men over 65 were widowed while 49 per cent of women were. We must look seriously at eliminating this inequality and bringing about meaningful pension reform which addresses the very serious problems faced by elderly women in particular in our society.

• (1730)

As I said, this motion is important. It is important, both in terms of action and in terms of symbolism, to recognize the outstanding contribution which senior citizens have made to our society in the past and will continue to make in the future.

Probably the most important legacy that a society can leave is a world of peace and disarmament. I know that groups such as Veterans Against Nuclear Arms and other seniors across Canada are deeply concerned that Canadians reaffirm our commitment to peace, disarmament, development, and a more just distribution of wealth globally. In fact, this Saturday, April 23, in Vancouver I will be joining with, I hope, tens of thousands of people, many of them elderly, in the annual Walk for Peace. Seniors will be walking for peace for their children and for their children's children.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I hope that the House will recognize the importance of this motion which is not a partisan issue. I hope that Members on all sides of the House in all Parties will join together in agreeing to consider seriously this important issue of recognizing the tremendous work and the tremendous contribution of senior citizens in Canada and designating the second Sunday in June of each year as National Senior Citizens' Day.

As the Member of Parliament for Burnaby and a member of the New Democratic Party caucus I am proud to bring this motion before the House. I hope that it will be approved unanimously by all Members.

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Veterans Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to be the lead speaker for the government side on the motion before us today. As the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Veterans Affairs, I have had the honour to take part in a number of seniors-related discussions and activities. I can tell the House that the Minister's interest in and commitment to seniors is no less than his very well known commitment to veterans.

Hon. Members will recall that the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) appointed the Minister as Canada's first Minister of State for Seniors in August of last year. This appointment was a very important watershed in the Progressive Conservative Party's long and distinguished record of caring and commitment toward seniors. It is a tradition which we in this Party build on day by day. The significance of the appointment of a Minister of State for Seniors should not be underestimated. Seniors themselves certainly do not.

For the first time seniors have a Minister who is mandated to represent their interests at the cabinet table and in government. They also have, as the Minister himself describes it, a "friend at court" to speak out on their behalf, to help cut red tape, and to simplify their dealings with the Government. If seniors need help, they know they can always count on George to provide it.

Finally, seniors have a Minister who is actively to seek their thoughts and ideas and to make those views known to the appropriate line Ministers. We have already seen the effectiveness of this role with the announcement of the seniors initiative on February 9. I will touch on that later in my remarks.

Consequently, in considering what can and should be done on behalf of Canadian seniors it should first be recognized that the appointment of a seniors Minister is a very major accomplishment. All of us on the government benches are proud of the development and I can assure the House that seniors are delighted as well. Fundamental to the success of a seniors Minister is that he or she be in touch with the views of the people being represented. The current Minister is firmly dedicated to that principle and he has often said that seniors are the ones setting the priorities. This was exactly the course the Minister followed with veterans, and with considerable success.

Over the past several months the Minister has heard from over 2,500 seniors and seniors' organizations. First-class ideas have come forward and the Minister has been actively reviewing these proposals. The Minister has also been asking seniors for their views on specific questions so as to enable them to best represent their interests in government.

In keeping with this approach, it very much seems to me that this motion is premature. Instead of barging ahead with a motion or referring the subject matter to a parliamentary committee, we should have some assurance that seniors themselves feel that this is an idea worth priority call on our time and efforts. This raises an interesting question and I tend to believe, Mr. Speaker, that seniors would prefer that we concentrate on initiatives similar to the seniors' initiatives announced this February.

I say this because the seniors' initiative was tailored to the priority items raised with the Minister of State for Seniors during his consultations. These items reflect the areas of importance to seniors and are worth reviewing to provide a point of comparison with the motion before us today.

The first component is the seniors' independence program. It is an entirely new program designed to improve the quality of life and independence of seniors. I am very excited about this initiative because it will help keep seniors in their own homes, where they are far happier, and out of institutions. Twenty million dollars a year will be made available for projects approved under this program.

Increased support for the New Horizons program was the second component of the seniors initiative. This program has helped thousands of seniors to develop resources, services, and opportunities that will benefit themselves and their communities. Some $8 million a year has been provided. This will rise to $15 million a year by 1989-90.

The third element on which I would like to touch is a less happy one. As too many Canadians are personally aware, the devastation caused by Alzheimer's disease is horrendous. There is no known cure and seniors are the chief victims. At least 300,000 Canadians suffer from Alzheimer's disease and many more, primarily family members, suffer along with those stricken by the disease. A research fund of $4 million annually has been established to focus on Alzheimer's as well as osteoporosis, both of which are serious impediments to independent living.

These initiatives are important, imaginative, and innovative, just like the people we are here to serve. However, this is only the beginning. The Minister has embarked on a second round of consultations and he is counting on seniors, their representatives, and parliamentarians to provide the help and advice needed to plan for tomorrow and beyond.

Knowing the Minister, he will want to follow up on this motion, as well as the one sponsored by Senator Croll, to see how seniors themselves feel about a national day or week in their honour. Further speakers may wish to elaborate on this point but I would be very concerned about intruding, or appearing to intrude, in an area that has largely been provincial in nature. Discussions with the provinces are a must in my opinion.

Another concern which I believe would be shared by all Members of Parliament is the fact that seniors are a diverse group with tremendously different backgrounds, goals and aspirations. We see this every day in our constituency office meetings, our mail, and our conversations. Consequently, what is it we wish to celebrate in a national seniors' day? Is it to celebrate the attainment of an arbitrary age or retirement status? It is easy enough to say that we want to acknowledge the outstanding achievements of seniors in building this country, but it is far more difficult to define the segment of the population we wish to recognize.

In short, Mr. Speaker, I would recommend that we follow the Minister's philosophy and, indeed, the Government's philosophy of letting seniors speak for themselves on this question. Let us seek out the views of our constituents. Let them bring forward their thoughts on the advisability of a national seniors' day. If we truly believe, as this Government does, that one listens and then acts, we will not proceed with a motion that has had only limited discussion among seniors and seniors' organizations.

I, for one, have no hesitation in waiting until the seniors in my riding have had a chance to consider this proposal.

[Translation]

Mr. Marcel Prud'homme (Saint-Denis): Mr. Speaker, I must say that after a very careful scrutiny of the orders of the day I became aware just a few minutes ago that this is the evening on which we were supposed to consider the motion of the Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson). I was in fact very supprised to see the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Assiniboine (Mr. McKenzie) rise in his place since it would have been a first here in this House to see both Members agree on something. I was simply astounded to see them speak on the same issue for the first time. But after careful scrutiny, after having listened attentively to what the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Assiniboine was saying, I realized that he was wondering what would be the use of examining this issue or of proclaiming a National Senior Citizen's Day.

I must say that I always find great interest in the debates of this House. Whether they be of a political, ethnic or religious nature, I listen and I respond. I shall therefore respond. Why have a National Senior Citizens Day? It seems so obvious to me. We have Mother's Day and we have Father's Day. Why have Mother's Day since we should celebrate our mothers every day? Why have Father's Day since we ought to celebrate our fathers every day. And what about Secretaries' Week, which is this week, unless I am mistaken? Why? It should be all year long. The reason is that we want to call people's attention more specifically at a certain time during the year to a group or a commemoration, such as the one which will be held on a coming Sunday, on April 24th, here on Parliament Hill, between twelve and one o'clock. The day will be devoted to the commemoration of the Armenians' massacre, or the Armenian genocide. Why on the 24th? We know the facts.

Therefore why should a day be set aside to acknowledge the outstanding contribution of our seniors to the development of Canada? This is because the more we age the more unfortunately our communities neglect their seniors. We forget them. I ride the subway in Montreal, I do not drive a car and I often see older people sitting there who are sadly looking at me. I look back and smile at them. This is not difficult. And suddenly I see their face alter and they often tell me: "You were quite nice, you smiled at me". You know that according to a saying, nobody needs more to smile than the one who has no reason to be smiling. So, I smile, because it is a nice gesture. It may seem insignificant for some, I see some laughing. I am quite sincere. I smile. And apparently, it added a little something, on the subway on that day.

It is not much, but the day of recognition will be held in that spirit. It is a national day to acknowledge the outstanding contribution . . . You know that today everything is taken for granted in our fine Canadian community, but if we stop to consider the matter a little, should we not say loudly what our grandparents, our pioneers, our senior citizens have done for that great and noble country.

[English]

I think it is a good idea. I am even tempted to amend the motion in order to strengthen it.

For example, the Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson) talked about Mr. Tommy Douglas. We all love Tommy Douglas. What about that great lady, Therese Casgrain, or Senator Bird, "Ladybird" as we call her? What about the contribution of an hon. colleague, Senator Croll. Senator Croll is the conscience—

... the soul that reminds us constantly in the caucus the problems of ageing in Canada. Do you realize ...

[English]

"Poverty in Canada: Highlights from the Special Report of the Senate Committee".

... the highlight of the report published by the Senate Special Committee and entitled "Poverty in Canada". It was signed and written by senator Croll.

[English]

He is 88 years old, born in Moscow, Russia, in 1900. He has had a brilliant career in Canada. He was a minister in Ontario and now a senator. He calls us young men, and even referred to me that way once. He may have called me other things, but that is another debate.

I am sure he will not mind if I say that I respect the "old man". My father, who died at 90, did not mind being called a "beautiful old man" when he was in his eighties because it is polite. It is said with respect, as I do in the case of Senator Croll.

That is what prompted me to make my contribution today. I see a very esteemed colleague listening to me and I must admit that he is almost inspiring me when I speak. He is the Hon. Member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor), a fine gentleman who is young at heart. While politics divide people, on an issue like this I look at him and he inspires me because he has made many contributions. He would not mind if there was a day to remember what these people have done.

In a few minutes I intend to move an amendment because this motion by the hon. younger Member of Parliament is too much like one by Paul Martin. Perhaps he wants to be a great statesman, and will be sooner or later, but he talks a lot like Paul Martin.

Mr. Robinson: Junior or senior?

Mr. Prud'homme: Senior.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member has one minute remaining.

Mr. Prud'homme: I wish to move a motion, which you have in front of you.

• (1750)

He said: "... be empowered to study the question of designating" but in French it looks like Paul Martin Senior, another fine gentleman who did a lot for this country. He is probably listening to the debate right now.

"be empowered to study the question of designating". You know, when you don't want something to be done, you say: Let us set up a committee which will study the possibility of doing something.

So, with your permission ... Anyway, I am not going to ask his permission, I move, seconded by my friend, the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) that the motion reads as follows: "That the Standing Committee on Justice and Solicitor General be empowered", Stop! we remove the words "to study the question of designating" and we replace them by "to recommend the proclamation", as National Senior Citizen's Day, of the second Sunday in June each year.

So, in order that people listening to us understand, it would now read as follows: "That the Standing Committee on Justice and Solicitor General be empowered to recommend the proclamation, as National Senior Citizen's Day, of the second Sunday in June of each year in order to recognize the outstanding contribution made by senior citizens to Canada."

Now, that looks more positive, more serious.

[English]

You show that you mean business. You are not only saying it would be nice to study the possibility. Therefore, I have prepared it in both languages. I protest too often when I receive something in one language only so I have to show by example. To conclude, I would ask you to recognize the amendment as receivable.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I must say that the Hon. Member—

Mr. Prud'homme: I will conclude in 30 seconds. I want to thank the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Assiniboine (Mr. McKenzie) because I was inspired by him and by the Hon. Member for Bow River. So I think it should be done but the way I have proposed kindly to your Honour to put it back to the House.

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Mr. Speaker, first, I want to say, in the spirit of Private Members' hour, my colleague from Bonavista—Trinity—Conception allowed me to say a few words. I know he was scheduled to speak next. I will not abuse that courtesy. I only want to speak for a couple of minutes.

The Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. McKenzie) in his argument in opposing the motion put forward by the Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr.

Robinson) made the very strong point, and it was central to his argument, that senior citizens themselves should have an opportunity to determine whether in fact they desire to have a senior citizens' day in Canada. That is no argument at all. I know, as a member of the Canadian delegation to Vienna several years ago to the United Nations Assembly on Aging, one of the key proposals put forward at that UN Assembly, in the final document, was a national day to celebrate the contribution of senior citizens, not only in Canada but in other countries around the world, and it was passed unanimously at that UN Assembly. Canada was a participant in that vote. In fact, our delegation, prior to the amendment made to the main document at the United Nations, wanted in fact to establish a senior citizens' day in Canada.

The Parliamentary Secretary asked what we would do on a national senior citizens' day. It is very simple. The seniors in this country want to be recognized for their contribution to Canadian society and Canada's role in the world. Senior citizens do not want any less or anymore than those under age 65. They want to be recognized and encouraged to fully participate in the mainstream of Canadian life. They want equality and they certainly do not have that in Canada today, unfortunately. In the kind of society and economy in which we live, we tend to view people as only being of value in terms of their productivity toward the economy of the nation. That is what has happened to seniors over the years.

If adopted, I think the motion put forward by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Burnaby, would go a long way toward establishing this. I will not take up any more time. I certainly have no desire to participate in talking this motion out. I would seriously ask those members on the government side who have not spoken to join with me in not talking this motion out, and in fact agree to send this motion to committee, as has been suggested by the Hon. Member, for further discussion and implementation.

Mr. Gabriel Desjardins (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I am deeply interested in participating in today's debate. The subject matter is too important to prevent Members of the House from speaking about the very laudable motion introduced by the Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson). I believe all Members and the Canadian public totally agree with the designation of a National Senior Citizens' Day. Mr. Speaker, representing a riding like that of Témiscamingue here in Ottawa is enough to understand the important role played by senior citizens in areas such as mine.

A region like Abitibi-Temiscamingue was able to grow over these last years and the past decades because a long time ago, people coming from Lower St. Lawrence settled down in that area . . .

[English]

Mr. Robinson: Mr. Speaker, on a brief point of order, I wonder if the Hon. Member would recognize that if he continues to talk this motion will not be referred to committee. I wonder if he would co-operate in allowing this very important motion to in fact go to committee and he can then appear as a witness before the committee?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member for Témiscamingue has the floor.

[Translation]

Mr. Desjardins: Mr. Speaker, I still want to make my point because as far as the motion is concerned, I said it was commendable, although I was not sure that we should decide on a national seniors' day. On that subject, I think . . .

Mr. Robinson: The Committee can do that.

Mr. Desjardins: . . . there should be more consultation. I had discussions today with the Senior Citizens Regional Council of my area, and they told me they would prefer that day to fall on the first Sunday in May instead of the second Sunday in June.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I think that we should hear from the seniors and discuss the matter with their representatives and with the provinces because we must bear in mind, Mr. Speaker, that in British Columbia as well as in Quebec, some specific weeks through the year are dedicated to senior citizens. In Quebec, the last week of May is such a week.

Then, Mr. Speaker, why not consider the last Sunday in May also as a possible national seniors' Day.

The point I wanted to make, Mr. Speaker, is that although I am all for a senior citizens' Day, I think that we should have much more discussion on the subject than we have had so far.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The time provided for consideration of Private Members' Business has now expired.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 66 deemed to have been moved.

LABOUR RELATIONS—FEDERAL MINIMUM WAGE

Mr. Reginald Stackhouse (Scarborough West): Mr. Speaker, for the fourth time since last summer I take the floor to speak about those forgotten Canadians who work for the minimum wage. They are so forgotten that Statistics Canada and the Department of Labour do not know how many under federal jurisdiction are living on the minimum wage. It is an indication of how minimal is the interest in the minimum wage.

Their lot is hard enough in most provinces but harder still in industries under federal jurisdiction such as railways, airlines, shipping companies, radio stations, television channels, and telecommunications. It is harder because in so many instances—indeed in all but one—the federal rate is lower.

The hardship they endure, however, is due not only to the wage being so low—$4 per hour—it is due also in the way inflation is outstripping their wages. These are wages which are earned by low paid, unskilled, unorganized, and largely forgotten workers.

The last federal minimum wage increase was in May, 1986, almost two years ago. Since that time the Consumer Price Index has gone up over 8 per cent so that the $4 per hour of 1986 are now worth only $3.84 in 1988. It was little enough in 1986, impossibly low in 1988.

It is time, and over time, that this wage rate were reviewed and improved. I submit, as I did in raising this subject, that the solution must include not only raising the federal minimum wage but indexing it according to the Consumer Price Index.

That is done, is it not, Mr. Speaker, for old age security pensions? It is done for Canada pensions. It is done for public service pensions. It is done for parliamentary pensions. Why is it so impossible for us to consider doing the same for those who need it most?

This proposal is not any wildcat radical notion. It has been practised in France since 1952. It was recommended in the United States by the Minimum Wage Study Commission and the General Accounting Office in 1983. It is not an irresponsible notion that surfaces in Private Members' Hour or in the Adjournment Debate. It is demonstrably a reasonable proposal put forward and practised by major Governments.

I am aware that some economists argue against minimum wages at all. I submit that that is not the issue. To raise the point at all is really to be irrelevant. The fact is we have the minimum wage. We have it in every jurisdiction in Canada, federally, provincially, and territorially.

The issue becomes: Is the minimum wage adequate to the need. Is it keeping pace with the cost of living? Is it providing protection to those who need it most, those who do not have other advocacy than this Parliament can afford? I am speaking about people who do not have any trade unions to speak for them or any hired agents, high-priced lawyers negotiating contracts for them. These are people who have to look to where I am speaking. They have to look to Parliament. They have to look to the House of Commons to bring before the representatives of the people of Canada, and through them the people themselves, the need of those who are otherwise without a voice.

I think of people who are struggling to make do on this kind of minimum wage, not only those who receive it under the federal jurisdiction but those who receive it in provincial and territorial industries. I am impressed at how impossible their plight is, especially when I think of what it costs to put a roof over one's head, the roof of just one rented room, or perhaps two or three rooms in a basement apartment in the riding of Scarborough West or some other part of Metro Toronto.

I see why we have the arrival and the apparent though tragic permanency of food banks, for housing today is costing such a percentage of anyone's income that when a person's income is minimal the result is impossible without supplementary assistance.

I ask the Government to expedite its consideration of this matter and, if possible, to take the second step of indexing this wage so that in the future workers will not have to wait until officials get around to considering them, but like Members of Parliament, like pensioners, they will automatically receive their just due.

Mr. Joe Price (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I wish to thank the Hon. Member for his comments and for his concern for the plight of the working poor.

Since the Government took office it has increased the federal adult minimum wage from $3.50 to $4 per hour, an increase of 14 per cent. Also, given its potential conflict with the Charter of Rights and Freedoms, the lower youth rate was eliminated, augmenting the federal minimum wage for workers under the age of 17 to the adult rate, an increase of 23 per cent.

Labour Canada is constantly monitoring the status of the federal minimum wage. This monitoring takes into account such factors as changes in the rate of inflation, shifts in the unemployment rate, general economic conditions, and minimum wage rates in other jurisdictions.

As was indicated the last time the Hon. Member raised this issue, the most recent percentage increases in the federal minimum wage are above the rise in the Consumer Price Index since the Government took office in September, 1984. Thus, the purchasing power of minimum wage earners has been protected during the Government's mandate. Moreover, the federal rate remains at the median of the provincial rates.

On the specific issue of automatic indexation of the minimum wage versus periodic reviews, the Government and indeed all provincial and territorial Governments across Canada have until now taken the approach of periodically reviewing their minimum wage policy, rather than binding themselves to automatic increases that may or may not have a detrimental effect on the potential employment of minimum wage earners.

Minimum wage earners, and indeed all Canadian workers, have benefited from the Government's successful battle against inflation. Since 1984, inflation has remained in check despite very impressive rates of growth in the national economy and in the number of jobs created. All Canadian workers, including those working at minimum wage, will benefit from a controlled inflation rate and the creation of new employment possibilities.

In conclusion, I wish to state that the Government will continue to monitor the situation of minimum wage earners and their economic prospects. As the Minister previously indicated to the Hon. Member, a review is presently under way which will be completed shortly. I can assure the Hon. Member that the Minister will take into account the Hon. Member's concerns in the examination of the results of that review.

NATIONAL DEFENCE—ACQUISITION OF NEW TRUCKS

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, on February 10, 1988, I asked the Hon. Associate Minister of National Defence (Mr. Dick) the following question: Why did the Department accept a truck designed and patented by a non-NATO country when there was an opportunity to get a "made-in-North America" truck to any specifications desired?

The Hon. Associate Minister of National Defence replied:

—on June 6, 1986, an interdepartmental force, which was later confirmed by the Ministers, decided to open up the bidding to all truck manufacturers in the world and not restrict it to NATO trucks.

At that time when the tenders were put out on July 31, 1986, all truck manufacturers, both inside and outside NATO, had an equal opportunity to meet the specifications.

When a truck was purchased, we purchased the lower priced truck of those trucks which met specifications. A couple of trucks did not meet specifications.

I wish to make the following comments. First, this was a wonderful opportunity to secure a truck to the specifications set out by the Department that could have been designed and made to those standards in Canada.

It would not then have been necessary to think about patents or technology that belonged to another country. Bombardier was one firm prepared to do this if sufficient time had been given, and possibly other Canadian firms would have come up with a vehicle. Then we would have had a Canadian or North American vehicle that perhaps would have cost less. This opportunity has now been lost. While the Department is satisfied with the truck that it has purchased it is still not and never will be a Canadian made truck as its technology rests in another land.

Second, the original press release stated that the new truck will be manufactured by the Urban Transportation Development Corporation (UTDC) Inc., Kingston, Ontario. Actually Lavalin Inc. of Montreal owns 85 per cent of UTDC, and the balance is owned by the provincial Government of Ontario. The trucks are now going to be built in Ontario. The contract is expected to generate some 500 jobs over a 24-month period and a large number of jobs after that.

Third, it is a shame, indeed, that the vehicles required are not to be manufactured in either western Canada under the Western Diversification Program or in the Maritimes. One firm, Bombardier, would have done the manufacturing in Cochrane, Alberta and would have used the entire western provinces for purchasing supplies. This would have added much to the economy of the West, had consideration been given to disparities. The Minister had advised that, in accordance with the government procurement guidelines no consideration could be given to regional disparities during the evaluation process.

It is my view that every contract let by the Government of Canada should consider regional disparities, and the guidelines should be so amended. This contract was let in Ontario where there is buoyancy in the economy, whereas in both the West and the Maritimes unemployment is rampant and both need industries that will be there for a long time. We missed this opportunity to secure an industry in the West that would have provided a great deal of diversification for many years to come.

Fourth, another matter of concern in this contract is the patent. I have been advised that Lavalin Inc. secured full rights to this vehicle. Is there a patent on the entire vehicle, and also on parts of the vehicle, that may spring up once the vehicle is constructed? It appears that the Government paid Lavalin $116,000 for the technology. I hope that all legal questions of ownership, patents, copyrights, et cetera, have been cleared so there can be no future trouble or cost to the Canadian people.

Fifth, the contract actually included seven types of trucks based on a common cab and chassis. There may be good reasons why these seven types of trucks had to be included in one contract, but, again, had this been broken down, there is always the possibility that a better price could have been secured and the work could have been spread across the country.

Sixth, there is also the matter of parts for the said vehicles. When 122 heavy trucks are being purchased, there should be a requirement that the manufacturer keep on hand a large supply of every part that may wear out or eventually have to be replaced. Certainly the grease, oil, and diesel fuel are standard, but there are some very serious questions about many truck parts that could wear out when lives are being threatened. I believe Lavalin should be required, with no ands, ifs, or buts, to keep all parts that may wear out in ready supply. It is not good enough to say that there might be other NATO trucks that have similar transmissions, similar cargo boxes, similar dump trucks, and similar carburetors.

I and the people of Cochrane, and indeed the people of western Canada, were bitterly disappointed when Bombardier lost this contract. Part of the hurt was salved when the Department of National Defence stated that, even when the present contract has been completed, there will still be a shortage of some 2,500 trucks. The splendid buildings in Cochrane, Alberta are still available. The people are anxious to welcome Bombardier, a Quebec firm to our province. It will strengthen unity of the nation. The firm would have an opportunity to expand its market to western Canada and the western U.S. states, and the diversification resulting would meet the requirements of the Western Diversification Program.

Cochrane stands ready to assist our military to secure the best equipment possible if given the opportunity. May the next tender come soon, and I hope the people of Cochrane will have reasons to cheer when the contract is let.

• (1815)

Mr. Joe Price (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member must be congratulated for his vigorous defence of his constituents.

In February, the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Beatty) announced that UTDC of Kingston would manufacture 1,122 heavy trucks at an approximate cost of $250 million. As the Hon. Member knows, there is a competitive bidding process, and in July of 1986, our request for proposal was sent to 13 Canadian companies. In March of 1987, responses were received from four companies.

In the request for proposal, the prospective bidders were advised that the final selection would be based on an aggregate assessment of five factors: one, the over-all cost to the Crown; two, compliance of the vehicle and its variants with the specification and the bidder proposed project management; three, industrial benefit; four, compliance of the Integrated Logistic Support System; and five, delivery.

An evaluation plan was prepared prior to receipt of the proposals and, as a part of the evaluation, candidate vehicles from the four bidders were acquired for technical and user trials. The results of these trials were incorporated into the final evaluation.

In August of 1987, the four bidders were requested to submit proposals for higher quantities because of the additional requirements arising from the White Paper. These proposals were received and separate evaluations were done by members of the Departments of National Defence, Regional Industrial Expansion, and Supply and Services. These results were consolidated into a final assessment and presented to an interdepartmental senior review board in January of this year and subsequently endorsed by Cabinet.

The awarding of this contract to UTDC ensures that Canada receives the optimum benefits in terms of excellence of equipment, Canadian content, industrial offsets, transfer of technology, employment, and value for money, and fully meets the requirements of the Canadian Forces.

COMMITTEES OF THE HOUSE

BILL C-77—REPORT OF LEGISLATIVE COMMITTEE

Hon. Allan B. McKinnon (Victoria): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present in both official languages the report of the legislative committee on Bill C-77, an Act to authorize the taking of special temporary measures to ensure safety and security during national emergencies and to amend other Acts in consequence thereof.

I would like to thank the members of the committee who attended very faithfully to their duties, particularly the Hon. Member for Esquimalt—Saanich (Mr. Crofton), the Hon. Member for Brant (Mr. Blackburn), the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of National Defence the Hon. Member Haldimand—Norfolk (Mr. Bradley); the Hon. Member for Portneuf (Mr. Ferland) and the Hon. Member for Northumberland—Miramichi (Mr. Jardine). We had over 100 amendments to this Bill and accepted 88 of them.

COMMUNICATIONS AND CULTURE—FOURTEENTH REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. John Gormley (The Battlefords—Meadow Lake): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 96(2), I have the honour to present the fourteenth report of the Standing Committee on Communications and Culture in both official languages.

This report addresses itself to the issue of taxation of the artists and the arts. The key recommendation of our report aims to give force of law to a definition of the professional status of artists which, along with six other recommendations, would allow the artists and related organizations to receive more equitable treatment under Canada's tax laws. While the committee members accept that the principle of tax fairness was adopted in the White Paper on tax reform, we as committee members also accept that there are special circumstances to which different groups of taxpayers may be subject. In this case we believe that the arts should be considered, given the special nature of artists and the arts in Canada today.

Our seven recommendations are fair suggestions and represent long expressed needs of Canadian artists. It is our hope that the Government will consider these recommendations for implementation.

[Translation]

The Committee therefore requests that the government produce a reply to this report in accordance with Standing Order 99(2).

I take this opportunity to thank the representatives of all three parties for their care in writing this unanimous report with a really parliamentary spirit.

PETITIONS

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay—Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 106, I have the honour and the privilege to present a number of petitions signed by residents of Atikokan and the surrounding area. The signatures number over 200 in this case. The petition is about the northern residents' tax deduction. The residents of Atikokan believe that in its present form it is discriminatory because many communities not on the list are adjacent to listed communities. The Township of Atikokan in particular and its surrounding area was excluded from the designated area only because it is located too close to Thunder Bay.

The petitioners argue that the listed communities and many of those communities left off the list share identical environments in that they are northern, isolated communities paying increased costs for food, fuel and housing, and that the tax deduction was designed to assist in alleviating the added costs involved with living in northern, isolated communities.

The petitioners humbly pray and call upon Parliament to declare the Township of Atikokan and the surrounding area to be eligible for the northern residents' deduction.

OPPOSITION TO BILL C-72—OFFICIAL LANGUAGES

Mrs. Barbara Sparrow (Calgary South): Mr. Speaker, I have the privilege today to present some petitions signed by over 100 residents of southern Alberta, living in such communities as Acme, Irricana, Beiseker, Carstairs, Cochrane, Crossfield and North Calgary and South Calgary. These petitioners humbly pray and call upon Parliament to cancel Bill C-72 so that the unilingual-speaking people of Canada have a chance for positions in Government.

CANADA-U.S. FREE TRADE AGREEMENT

Mr. Ernie Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, I have the duty and honour of presenting a petition from constituents of mine in the City of Thunder Bay and the small community of Murillo. These petitioners state that the Conservative Government had no mandate from the Canadian people to conclude a free trade agreement with the U.S. The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) promised in the course of the bilateral trade negotiations that Canadian sovereignty would not be compromised, but they assert that the trade agreement negotiated by the Government threatens the very fabric of Canadian political and economic sovereignty by removing the power of the Canadian Government to effectively control foreign ownership, to develop Canadian energy resources in the best interests of Canadians and to equalize opportunities between the regions. Since the agreement would deny Canada the policy freedom to determine its own economic future, the petitioners call upon the House to dissolve and to give them and other Canadians the opportunity to accept or to reject this Mulroney-Reagan trade deal.

PROTECTION OF RIGHTS OF THE UNBORN

Mr. Robert Wenman (Fraser Valley West): Mr. Speaker, I have the duty and responsibility to present this petition on behalf of constituents throughout the riding of Fraser Valley West. The nature of this petition is to express concern over the total lack of legal control over abortions in Canada today. The purpose of this petition is to call on Parliament to implement laws to protect the unborn child.

The petitioners state that all human beings are deserving of legal protection and that the unborn child is a human being and in need of preservation from the moment of origin; namely, the time of conception. Furthermore, the people who have signed this document are particularly concerned that at the present time, there is no law to defend the unborn from being destroyed in the womb. These constituents pray that the Members of this House will implement legislation to protect the unborn.

REQUEST FOR TAX DEDUCTION FOR STUDENTS

Mrs. Gabrielle Bertrand (Brome—Missisquoi): Mr. Speaker, I would like to present a petition from a group of university students. This petition refers mainly to those university students who alternate between academic and practical training each semester. These students are known as co-op students. They humbly pray and call upon Parliament to allow all full-time students to claim the tax deduction for the cost of moving to their educational institutions, irrespective of the amount of financial aid received through scholarships, fellowships, bursaries, prizes or research grants. The students come from the Province of Québec and the Province of Ontario and a few are from my riding.

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, question No. 279 will be answered today.

THE OZONE LAYER

Question No. 279—Mr. Howie:

> During the past year, have studies been undertaken by the government concerning the depletion of the ozone layer in the atmosphere and remedial measures in respect thereof and, if so, in each case (a) by what organization or individual (b) under what terms of reference?

Hon. Tom McMillan (Minister of the Environment): Yes. The following studies are being undertaken by Environment Canada under the terms of reference outlined by the Montreal Protocol (signed in September 1987) on substances that deplete the ozone layer:

—a control options report which will identify the choices available to meet the obligations set out in the Montreal Protocol; —development of a comprehensive information base to evaluate the costs and benefits associated with each identified control option; and

—in-house studies to identify the 1986 Canadian consumption of controlled substances in order to establish Canadian reduction targets.

Environment Canada is also involved in:

—studies concerning the chemical composition of the stratosphere with particular emphasis on implications for the Canadian Arctic; and —global studies aimed at determining levels of ozone layer depletion from ground based and satellite borne instruments.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The question as enumerated by the Parliamentary Secretary has been answered.

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Speaker, I would ask that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Shall the remaining questions stand?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

NATIONAL PARKS ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed from Friday, April 15, consideration of the motion of Mr. McMillan that Bill C-30, an Act to amend the National Parks Act and to amend an Act to amend the National Parks Act, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee, and the motion of Mr. Hawkes:

That the question be now put.

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, I believe that the country is anxious to have this legislation passed, and I certainly do not want to delay its passage, but as the Member for Bow River, a riding which includes Lake Louise and Banff, I feel that there is some responsibility on my part to say a few words in connection with this very important legislation.

First, I would like to pay a tribute to the Minister, who has been willing to discuss various aspects of the Act with the people of Banff National Park and with Members who are concerned about preserving the beauty of our national parks. The Minister has been very tolerant and very free to discuss these many items, and I look forward to further discussions when the Bill goes to committee.

I would like to say a word about two or three items that are of very great concern to the people I represent. The first deals with the Banff air strip. When it comes to development, certainly no one to whom I have spoken in the Banff area or in the Alberta caucus has any notion of putting in place something like a Coney Island in our national parks. That would be the furthest thing from our thoughts. We want to preserve this beauty, but we want to make the beauty available to as many Canadians and as many people of the world as possible. I believe that that is in keeping with the spirit of the National Parks Act.

Certainly there is no thought of having a Coney Island, but an air strip would not destroy any property. It is already there. The air strip has been there for about 20 years. To my knowledge, there has never been one accident in connection with this air strip during that entire time.

Banff, as everyone knows, is the mid-way point between Springbank and Golden. It is critical that pilots have the option to land in Banff if there is a sudden change in weather. The weather changes very rapidly in this area and many times, as a matter of fact on an average of four times a month, airplanes have to land in order to avoid terrible accidents. This is because the Bow Corridor is the main VFR route through the Rockies, and I must emphasize that: the Bow Corridor is the main VFR route through the Rockies. An average of 10 transmitting aircraft go through there every day.

I mentioned before that this air strip would not interfere with the environment or with the animals. As a matter of fact, the elk have prospered and thrived in this very area throughout the years. If we want to deal with animals that are not quite so desirable, the gophers have even done well on the air strip. There is no thought of interfering with the environment, but we are living in the 20th century and air strips are necessary in these places. Certainly the air strip in this area aids the cause of safety.

Many times, those who live in Banff have used their aircraft for searches for those who have been lost, particularly in the winter time. This area in the winter-time is inhabited by elk and these elk have done well. There has never been an accident and they have thrived in this area.

I would like to urge the Hon. Minister to consider the retention of this air strip in the Banff National Park. I believe it is essential not only for the aircraft but for safety as well.

I would like to deal now with one or two points in connection with development in the area. I do not know how many Hon. Members have had to drive all night to find a place to sleep in Banff National Park, but I have. In the summer-time particularly it is very difficult to find accommodation. When you consider that more than a million people, Canadians and others from around the world, go to the park every year, it would leave a very sour taste in the mouths of those who cannot find a place to sleep. There is also a need for good eating places. These I think add lustre to the park and our enjoyment of it. Without a place to sleep or eat no one is going to enjoy a holiday in Banff or anywhere else. So when we talk about reasonable development in the area, we are certainly not talking about Coney Island type development. We are simply asking that we have development so that Canadians are able to enjoy the beauties of the Banff National Park setting.

The same thing applies to the two ski areas, Sunshine and Lake Louise. They have to compete with ski areas in other parts of Canada and the U.S. If their equipment and facilities are not up to date, then we lose those people who would like to enjoy the beauties of the park and do their skiing. After all, enjoyment is not just in standing on Banff Avenue and gazing at Sulphur Mountain. Enjoyment is doing things in the national park in keeping with the park. Certainly skiing is one of those. Hundreds of people enjoy skiing, and development at Sunshine will simply make its facilities somewhat equal to those found in other ski areas. I have seen signs in the outskirts of Calgary urging skiers to go down to Montana and other parts of the U.S. This not only costs the people of Canada revenue, it makes it difficult for those operating the ski areas.

Lake Louise also wants to improve its facilities, which are not equal to what can be found elsewhere, and they want to put in a quad chair. This is not going to hurt the environment because it is being carried out between the main lodge and the top of the mountain. It will simply take people from one of the lower places to a higher location in order that they can enjoy the beauty and the skiing. The existing lift is certainly not comparable to those in many other ski areas. This development will not hurt the environment because the proposed lift will make little or no difference at all to the natural beauty of the area as it will be built between existing chair lifts and cut ski runs. It will simply add to the facilities so people can enjoy the beauty of that area even more.

I would like to say a word or two in connection with lodges. I think I am speaking on behalf of the vast majority of people not only in the park but in other areas, too. There is some thought of closing the Spray River Hostel entirely at the end of the year. I would like to urge the Minister to reconsider this step. This place enables a great number of young people to enjoy Banff National Park. Just let me read from a letter I received from a boy scout troop in Calgary. They sent it to me unsolicited. It says:

> Last weekend, we enjoyed our first expedition to the Spray River Hostel in Banff National Park with a group of young scouts from the Dalhousie (Calgary) 141 Scout Troop. For many of the boys this was their first overnight backpacking experience, and it served as an excellent low risk introduction to the pleasures of self-propelled back country travel—

Is that not what we want in our national parks? It continues:

> We will build on the knowledge and confidence they gained in planning our future exploits—

The letter goes on to say:

> Location of hostels in urban settings, while possibly resulting in more efficiency on a $ / person / night basis, cannot provide the rich experience we enjoyed back in the mountains last weekend. Life for today's young people (and even for some of us middle-aged folks) is already excessively synthetic and pre-packaged. We need to hang on to those sparks of originality that remain—

He urges that this lodge not be closed:

> Please do everything you can to ensure that we can continue to share the Spray River Hostel for years to come—it's a gem, and it would be vandalism to tear it down.

This is not destroying the beauty of the national park. This is simply making the park more enjoyable to those who go there. In my view, that is one of the purposes of the park.

There is just one other instance I would like to mention in connection with development. Shadow Lake is a beautiful area. I do not know how many people have ever climbed the mountain and walked the two or three miles up to Shadow Lake. For many years the Brewster people have carried out an expedition for the aged, the crippled, and those who cannot walk very far but can walk a little way. They take these people from the bottom of the mountain up about seven or eight miles to a point where the road stops. Then they walk on a path for the last two or three miles. They can take their time. It is a pleasure to see the happiness in the eyes and faces of senior citizens and crippled people who could not begin to walk 15 miles but who will walk two and a half miles to get to Shadow Lake. When they get there it is worthwhile. The beauty of that entire area is thrilling indeed. Almost indescribable. Who would want to deny those people who cannot walk very far that pleasure and happiness?

Again, this is not destroying anything in the national park. It is opening up the beauties of the park and making them available to more people who would otherwise not be able to attend.

There are many other points that could be discussed in connection with Banff National Park. Many people are very concerned about the excessive land rents. I believe the department is now looking at that. Many people are concerned about the town site being 2,000 miles away from Ottawa and there being no local self-government. They have a school board but most of the decisions have to be made by the Minister, who is really the Mayor of Banff National Park. The Minister is giving the people an opportunity to consider the possibility of self-government in the town site. It is not being thrust upon the people there, it is going to be up to them to decide. However, for a Minister 2,000 miles away to decide what has to be done to their streets and what has to be done with regard to everyday services is not fair to the Minister or to the people. I believe the opportunity will come soon for the people of Banff National Park to decide whether they want self-government in order that they can run their own affairs like any other town.

• (1130)

That will not interfere with the park. The only thing we have to ensure is that there is sufficient room to build more single family dwellings so that more people can live in and enjoy the national park. There is no thought among the townspeople to create a Coney Island effect. The people who would be elected would be residents of the area dedicated to preserving national parks. However, allowing people to have a form of self-government has proven to be worthwhile over the years.

For many years land rents were very nominal. In 1980 an assessment was done on a basis with which I could not agree, the land residual method. That simply means that you place a hypothetical building on the land giving the land its best possible use. The fact is that the buildings are already there. There is no sense in placing a hypothetical building on the land and then assessing it because every building there has been approved by Parks Canada. Consequently, the basis of that assessment in 1980 was wrong and resulted in people paying up to as high as 3,500 per cent increases in their rents. If that happened in any other place in Canada there would be a revolution. It is just not sensible at all. I want the Minister to take a careful look at that because those types of increases are not fair.

I would like to deal with two further points which arise from living in a national park. First, the Government owns a number of homes in Banff and in Lake Louise. People such as RCMP members are required to live in these homes. The Department of Public Works gave them a discount on the rent on the homes just prior to 1987. This was sensible because some of the homes are right along the railway track, particularly in Banff where 20 to 24 trains pass by every 24 hours. Another department of the Government is now going to tax the reduction which was given, which is not fair at all and the RCMP and public servants in Banff are dedicated people and should not be taxed on the amount of reduction they receive in their rents.

The other point I wish to mention briefly is that for over 20 years there have been trailers in the townsite of Lake Louise. People were required to buy a trailer in order to work for Parks Canada. There is now a move to have these people give up their homes, which are trailers, and become renters. I do not think that is sound. The trailers have been there for 20 years and are not hurting anyone. We should leave those trailers there for a few more years and the problem will solve itself. Let us not make these Canadian homeowners into renters. It is the philosophy of the Government that people should own their own homes. Here is a chance to put our words into practice.

In conclusion, Banff National Park is one of the beauty spots of the world. We want it to be there forever for Canadians to enjoy. However, we want it to be available to all types of Canadians— the old, the crippled, and the young—to come and enjoy the grandeur and the majesty of that beautiful place. I support the passage of this Bill and look forward to discussions on it in committee.

[Translation]

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview—Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to speak today and of course to support Bill C-30 and to congratulate the Minister for bringing in some measures required to conserve the national parks.

At the same time, the need to amend this bill and to add the measures required for the proper and true protection of the great outdoors must be pointed out. This bill does not provide a clear definition of the areas of wilderness that must be protected for citizens of the future, native people and outdoor activities. This is a shortcoming of the bill under consideration today. In talking about the measures proposed by some Conservative Members and the Conservative Government, the need to properly protect the wilderness areas becomes quite obvious.

[English]

I am pleased to see this Bill before us. I hope that the Minister himself will speak on the Bill and will answer questions in the House about some of the measures which are not adequate. Perhaps he will put to rest some of the rumours about pressure in the Conservative caucus, especially in Alberta, to weaken the measures before us. The Bill before us is not a strong Bill. It is a very necessary Bill but has been weakened. We understand that a better Bill came out of the Ministry of the Environment but it has been weakened in the course.

One of the major deficiencies which I want to cite is the failure to include a clear definition of a wilderness area. The Bill will permit the Minister to establish wilderness areas but it does not say what they are. Aircraft are allowed to fly in wilderness areas, there can be rudimentary campsites and some kind of tourism will be permitted in them. There is pressure by Alberta Conservatives to see that there is more development in the parks.

It is very important when only 1.5 per cent of the land mass of Canada is consecrated to national parks, when the land that is protected is as small a part of our natural heritage as it is, that there be some substantial protection. This Bill does not go far enough toward doing that.

Alberta Conservatives want to see more development. They are afraid that condos cannot go up in a wilderness area. There is a corridor in the middle of Maligne Lake, supposedly a wilderness area, where boats can ply. There are houses and cottages at one end. What kind of a wilderness area is this?

The previous speaker spoke about the need to have tourism and to allow everyone to see a wilderness area. That is a contradiction. There is a place for tourism and a place for people to enjoy our national parks, but we must be very clear that it is fundamental for the survival of Canada that we have some real wilderness areas. This is part of our heritage and is for the protection of species. We do not have enough of that at present and there is a real risk that there will be further encroachments.

I think of the comments which have already been made about the ski areas. We do have some ski areas allowed in national parks and the proposal from some Conservative Members is that there ought to be more of them, that they ought to be expanded. We currently have five ski areas in national parks and a sixth is provided for by federal-provincial agreement in Newfoundland. The government policy is to limit development of ski areas but it has not been rigorously enforced.

The Minister has expressed his willingness to entertain changes to this section of Bill C-30. He says that it is all right if the committee studying the Bill decides to defer a decision on the Sunshine ski hill to some future date. Sunshine has been very adept at getting further developments permitted. It has people lobbying for it to have the policies bent. I am very leery of this and hope that the Minister will have a firm backbone on this issue.

Given that we only have a small area of Canada devoted to national parks, it is absolutely vital that there not be further encroachments. There is a place for commercial tourism but there is a place for Canada to stand firm about the protection of nature. That has to be a priority, and, as environment critic, I will certainly be firm about speaking strongly for those kinds of measures.

Bill C-30 will allow for boundaries to be established for municipal areas for Banff and Jasper. Two reasons that the Government has offered are to permit local self-government and to limit the development of town sites. However, we are not offered any idea of what these boundaries will be. They may go wider than what we would like and essentially be another way of reducing the areas that are really set aside for the survival of species in Canada.

Citizens of Jasper have already indicated that they do not want to pursue self-government at this time. Residents of Banff will vote later on whether or not they want to negotiate it. Before the committee begins its study of the Bill, the Government should bring forward its draft boundaries. We should know what we are passing. There should not be surprises later.

I have mentioned the role of the Alberta Government in lobbying on this measure. I want to refer specifically to some of the comments it has made. They show that the Alberta Government does not really understand what protection of the environment is all about.

On the question of ski areas, the document stating the views of the Alberta Government on the amendments to the National Parks Act states: "We cannot support the amendments which which seek to limit expansion of existing ski facilities and preclude new developments."

To continue: "Foreclosing the option of future ski development in Banff and Jasper National Parks would be a serious obstacle to expanding the tourism sector".

Yes, it would be. However, there are other places where there can be expansion of commercial skiing. That is a very legitimate activity and we support it, but the very raison d'être of national parks is to preserve our natural heritage. Some things simply do not go together and the purpose of having national parks is to give a high priority to conservation and to ensure that at some point we say that making a buck is not the most important. We must show some responsibility for the future.

The Alberta Government points out that the boundaries for Banff and Jasper town sites, once fixed by act of Parliament, would require an act of Parliament to change the boundaries. It considers that unnecessary and cumbersome and wants flexibility. Why? It wants to allow for more commercial developments. In short, the Alberta Government wants to weaken the national parks system and take some of this out of the land bank for the future and devote it to making money commercially, something to which 99 per cent of Canada is already devoted. In short, it wants to weaken the whole idea of having a national parks system.

Let me continue to quote the brief of the Alberta Government: "There is a fundamental difference between Alberta's approach to land and resource management on public lands and the approach adopted by Parks Canada with the national parks".

Yes, there certainly is a difference. The approach taken by Parks Canada is the proper one. While I may argue that it is not strong enough in terms of conservation, and there are areas where I have some worries about it being the thin edge of the wedge in terms of how it describes pollution and the kinds of developments that would be allowed, it is certainly far better than the approach proposed by the Alberta Government.

Let me turn to wilderness areas. The Alberta brief states: "We are concerned that the amendment might restrict present tourism related activities and exclude future development of appropriate tourism related facilities and activities which recognize the wilderness attributes of these areas".

One cannot have it both ways. If you really want to recognize the wilderness aspects, you cannot be having entertainment and recreation, more hotels and casinos with slot machines, dancing, parties and more fish and chip shops.

Mr. McDermid: There go the NDP Members exaggerating again. What nonsense.

Ms. McDonald: It is quite clear in the part to which they want to add that recreation and entertainment areas would be permitted. Is this recreation and entertainment for the gophers, elk and caribou?

Mr. McDermid: Ask Ian about skiing.

Ms. McDonald: Skiing enterprises are quite appropriate, but not in national parks. There must be limitations on that. Some of the positive measures in the Bill include expanding national parks and incorporating in the legislation some decisions that have already been made and announced. Bill C-30 entrenches the establishment of Ellesmere Island National Park and makes provision for the establishment of the Grasslands National Park. Naturally, we support this.

The Minister also proposed that we could establish the first marine national park in the Bruce area through an amendment at committee. We certainly would support that, but wonder why it was not provided for in the original Bill since it is something the department has been considering for some time. The need to establish marine parks has certainly been agreed upon by environmentalists for a long time. In any event, we certainly support that principle.

Another measure I do not like in the Bill is a proposal to establish a citizens heritage fund. Even the Government of Alberta makes some wise proposals and points out that there will be competition for fund raising to get people to donate to this citizens heritage fund.

What is wrong with this idea? The Minister states that the money would not go toward usual activities and become a substitute for expenses that taxpayers would otherwise bear, but would be used for expansion purposes. Some environmental groups have been basically told that it is the only way our national parks will be expanded.

I point out, however, that any citizen who wants to make a donation to the Crown can do so through other current provisions. We do not need a special measure, and I believe some people would get upset, as people in the arts world were upset when there was a proposal that the National Gallery do fund-raising in the private sector. All the small museums became worried that they would have trouble raising funds for their operations with such a big organization hustling funds from the same people.

Environmentalists should be concerned that this may happen with a citizens' heritage fund. We have a responsibility as citizens to have a public presence in the parks system. There should be no need for private fund raising in order to fulfil these obligations. Private citizens who have ample opportunity to make donations to smaller parks and other environmental causes should not be crowded out.

Further, the proposal would increase the leverage the Minister has over non-governmental organizations who would then have to apply for funding from this citizens' heritage fund. There is no proposal that it even be an arm's length agency, and this would be a very unhealthy development. I hope the Minister will reconsider that and drop this proposal. It has not been well accepted by the people most involved with national parks.

The Bill would permit certain subsistence activities. This is an important matter in the case of native people who have been using national park areas. As we hopefully expand the system in the future, this would be a very important measure. As well, non-native people in local areas have used parks for subsistence purposes. The idea is that they not be cut off from this source of livelihood. I would certainly agree with that, especially if this is a measure in the case of non native people, to include those people already involved but not necessarily to expand this practice.

It makes a great deal of sense in the case of native people in areas where we may want to see further park development and some kind of integrated way of carrying on traditional hunting and gathering activities. Native people are extremely good conservationists. This kind of combination of activity would be very desirable and suitable.

Another measure in this Bill about which we heartily approve is the increased penalties for poaching. I note that the Parliamentary Secretary spent a great deal of time talking about this section. I suppose this is the real motherhood section of the Bill. No one can object to it. We might even want some stronger measures. I understand the Government is going to entertain amendments for stronger measures in parts of the penalty section where the penalties are not quite strong enough for species of animals that are not rare. Everyone is on board in this one. This is something that environmentalists have been talking about for a long time. The penalties in place right now are, in effect, a licence to poach. They certainly do not discourage poaching. They do not adequately punish for such activities.

Members of the Liberal Party have spoken on this Bill. They have joined in condemning the Government for its inactivity with respect to national parks. I simply want to state that I think the Liberal Party does not have a leg to stand on. This is an area where the present Government has at least taken a few steps forward, although I do not think it has done enough in this area. We know of its record in slashing funds at the beginning of its mandate in the environmental area. We do not want to suggest that the Conservative Government is a model to follow. We would like things done very much differently. However, the Liberal criticism of the Conservative record is really far-fetched indeed.

There was a long, blank period on national parks under the Liberal Government when nothing was done. It was only because of considerable agitation from voluntary organizations and the non-governmental sector that we got some action. Of course, my Party was very active in fighting to get a national park on Ellesmere Island. Finally, we had a three-Party consensus and pressure was put on the Social Credit Government of British Columbia to get that deal negotiated, and we see the fruits of that consensus in Bill C-30 today. But it was tough going and we certainly did not see leadership from either the present Government or the previous Liberal Government with respect to those issues.

There are a number of housekeeping measures in Bill C-30. The present National Parks Act has been out of date for some time. We are in favour of good housekeeping. There are many minor measures that simply bring Bill C-30 up to date. However, some of these minor measures are perhaps not worded as carefully as they might be. We see the authorized use, regulated use—but how prudently regulated, we wonder—of pesticides and other toxic substances in the parks. I find even the contemplation of this a rather daunting prospect. There is certainly provision for spills in transportation. I suppose that has to be there if that kind of transportation is going to be permitted. But it is certainly a rather dismal prospect that there would be toxic substances used in the parks.

We have had pressure from the Government of Alberta and Conservatives from that province who would want to make greater use of pesticides, and who believe that we have to protect the human commercial areas adjacent to national parks. Not only do they want to encroach into the national parks but they want to reduce the naturalness of our national parks by allowing the use of these toxic substances, supposedly to protect commercial activities next to the parks. It is a very short-sighted approach, that profits in the short term are all we should be considering. We have thousands of toxic substances in use and we do not know what the impact will be on the environment. We would like to think there are some areas where there would be an absolutely total ban. I would like to think there are some areas where the use of chemical pesticides simply would not be contemplated.

National parks themselves would be threatened enough by the waters and by air coming into them from some other areas. The idea that we would permit or in any way encourage the use of chemical pesticides in national parks seems to me to be very unfortunate. Therefore, when we talk about regulation, does it mean zero regulation or some regulation? We have too many people in the pesticide business who think that as long as we do not have too much of it at any one time, it is all right. They completely forget the cumulative effect of chemical pesticides. The stuff does not go away. It is there in the soil, in the ground water and it continues to have its effect year after year after year.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I would just like to bring to the Hon. Member's attention that her time has expired. However, I will give her another minute or so to wind up.

Mr. Angus: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if there would be a disposition of the House to grant my colleague the traditional 40 minutes? As you know, Mr. Speaker, the Bill was brought forward without notice on Friday and a number of other Members had to participate. I see the Minister of the Environment (Mr. McMillan) is here today as well and perhaps he would like 40 minutes.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is there consent?

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): There is no consent. The Hon. Member for Broadview—Greenwood (Ms. McDonald) will have an extra 60 seconds.

Ms. McDonald: Mr. Speaker, I will just take one minute to wrap up by saying that we certainly support this Bill. We think it is important. We want to see some further clarification and we are looking for certain amendments. I hope the Minister will address these questions very promptly. I hope this will be put into the context that we need stronger environmental protection. A Ministry which has slashed its budget in the environment, I think, has to answer these questions and not simply ask us to be confident that everything will be done properly. I think we need very precise assurances. Is the Minister going to give way on the ski areas? Is he going to give way on development? Is he going to put commercial interests ahead of conservation? I think he has to answer those questions. I hope he will answer them favourably.

We will support him in taking a very strong stand for the environment. This Bill goes some of the way but it does not go quite far enough. We would like to be very sure that mistakes are not made, that we get a very clear definition of wilderness areas so that we will have a National Parks Act of which we as Canadians can be proud, an Act which will ensure some protection for future generations.

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, I was extremely surprised to hear the Hon. Member say that Liberal Governments did nothing for national parks. I know she has a reputation for telling the truth and I do not think that she would want to mislead the House. Any objective person who looks at our record will see that during the 1970s, the number of national parks was more than doubled. In fact, they were substantially increased. I can recall when the Hon. Jean Chrétien was appointed Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. At that time national parks was under that Ministry. The number of national parks in Canada was relatively small and were doubled, if not tripled. I can go through the list of national parks. I do not know the exact number but there was a substantial increase of national parks at that time. I was also the Minister responsible.

I challenge anyone in this House to look at the great increase in national parks under the Government of the Right Hon. Pierre Elliott Trudeau. There was a substantial increase not only in national parks but in historic places, in canals and waterways. There was a fantastic increase. I think to suggest otherwise to the House is simply to mislead the House and the country.

I might say as well that in the period when I was the Minister responsible for national parks, we did not always get the co-operation we wanted in establishing new parks from New Democratic and Conservative provincial Governments. As a matter of fact, very often they took a very dog in the manager approach to the creation of national parks in British Columbia, Manitoba, and Saskatchewan. I challenge anyone to look at the record and to stand by that kind of statement.

• (1200)

Ms. McDonald: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member talked only in generalities. He did not name one park. He did not name one square mile. He just talked about his wonderful record. I do not have the dates or the square miles with me either. I would be a little bit skeptical about these kinds of claims. Let him put on the record exactly what the Liberal achievement was. I do not think that it was very good. The result is that we have a relatively small part of our national heritage devoted to national parks after a very long period of Liberal Government. Let the Hon. Member be specific if he really wants to make that case.

Mr. Allmand: I would be glad to.

Ms. McDonald: I would be very glad to listen to him, but I am not impressed.

Mr. Ravis: Mr. Speaker, I would like to make a couple of comments on the presentation of the Hon. Member for Broadview—Greenwood (Ms. McDonald). I happen to enjoy one of the national parks in Saskatchewan. It is called Prince Albert National Park. Of course we go through the same kind of discussion there as to commercial activities versus environmental concerns.

The point I want to make is that we have to keep in mind that national parks are for people and, I suppose, for wildlife as well, but primarily for the enjoyment of people. I certainly want to protect these parks for centuries to come.

It seems to me that we tend to forget that we have to maintain a balance. I suggest that this is a rather imperfect balance when we look at a figure of as little as 1 per cent or less. As a matter of fact, it would be a mere fraction of the total land surface of national parks devoted to some kind of town site with some commercial activity that is there to serve the needs of people. Of course, the thousands of square miles that are devoted to our heritage are there for conservation purposes.

I would like to ask the Hon. Member to expand a little and to try to demonstrate perhaps a little better understanding. In her presentation this morning I detected that she felt that the Act and that the Conservatives, particularly people from Alberta and western Canada, have no feeling for these concerns. I do not think that is accurate. I would like her to comment on that.

Ms. McDonald: Mr. Speaker, I am delighted to comment on that very crucial question. The Hon. member talked about balance. My whole point is that the balance is too skewed the other way. If 98.5 per cent of land surface is devoted to commercial activity and 1.5 per cent is devoted to national parks, and then a lobby group of Alberta back-benchers is talking about reducing that 1.5 per cent to something smaller, then I think that the balance is entirely missing.

Mrs. Sparrow: That is not true.

Ms. McDonald: The Hon. Member said that I did not think people in the West or Alberta understood. My point is that there are many environmentalists, many people who are concerned to preserve some of our heritage, our physical heritage, for future generations. There are people who are concerned. I do not think that the Alberta Conservative caucus represents those people.

Mrs. Sparrow: And you think you do?

Ms. McDonald: Let me quote from one Alberta Member who said, "They could not offend anyone to do some angle drilling for gas and oil from outside the parks' boundaries". He does not see any objection to limited to moderate lumber developments. Good grief, this is just saying that we will use the national parks for making a fast buck, the same as the rest of the country. That is against the whole idea. Some areas need to be preserved as wilderness areas. Some areas must provide for the preservation of some species. There must be some areas where we human beings will not be boss and kill off everything else with chemical pesticides or what have you. There must be some areas about which we will be thinking for the future and where there will be some conservation.

Mr. Ravis: Mr. Speaker, all I can say is thank goodness that the elks and the bears do not have television sets to watch and listen to this sort of nonsense. It is a prime example of a distortion of what in fact has happened. It makes me a little annoyed.

The point I am trying to make is that we have to strike a balance with respect to what the status quo is today, for example, when we take a look at a national park. I am all for including more national parks in the country. We have to take a look at setting aside town sites which represent probably less than 1 per cent of our national parks. Surely to goodness, as we do in our cities right now where we have such things as zoning by-laws, we have to be very careful as to what we will allow into parks. For goodness' sakes, let us separate the wilderness from the town sites. That is the point I am trying to make. I think that the Hon. Member has taken this to the extreme and has brought in all kinds of other issues which are totally unrelated.

Ms. McDonald: Mr. Speaker, I think the problem is that some Conservative Members, and I believe it is true of some Liberal Members as well, want to have it both ways. They talk about wanting wilderness areas and everyone to be there to enjoy it. They must have restaurants and motels so that they can enjoy these wilderness areas in comfort. But then one cannot have a wilderness area if one has all these amenities. Let us not kid ourselves. That is ordinary tourism, which is perfectly desirable. I am not objecting to that. But there has to be something separate from that. There needs to be some areas which are wilderness areas that protect nature, that say this is an area in which the human destructive urges are going to be limited and we are going to keep something from being wrecked by the normal processes of civilization for the future.

Ms. Jewett: You would think that the dinosaur club would like that.

Ms. McDonald: Dinosaur club indeed. Let me quote another dinosaur who said that decisions regarding highway construction and maintenance should reflect the important role they play in Canada's economy and not be based solely on park land use criteria. This is saying that a park should not be a park, but a place where highways go and the normal economic criteria are the ones that would count. That is missing the whole point of having wilderness areas and having national parks.

Mr. Edwards: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the opportunity to ask a question of the Hon. Member for Broadview—Greenwood (Ms. McDonald). A few moments ago the Hon. Member made reference to a particular Alberta Member of Parliament. I hope that she had a particular one in mind since I am going to ask her to identify that Member of Parliament. As I understood the Hon. Member, a particular Alberta Member of Parliament said or recommended that angle drilling and lumbering in national parks was all right. I would appreciate if the Hon. Member would identify the Alberta Member of Parliament and the source that she is using.

By making the statement as she did she brings into question all Alberta Members of Parliament and their positions on this issue.

Ms. McDonald: Mr. Speaker, I welcome that intervention. I hope that the Hon. Member will rise and give a very strong pro-conservation, pro-environment, pro-parks speech. I think that would be very important.

I cannot give the Hon. Member the source of the quote right now. I will give it to him later. The Member I am quoting is the Hon. Member for Crow's Nest. With respect to the highway construction it is another one from the Alberta Government. I can give him the exact quote on the spot.

Mr. Edwards: I am afraid that, again, we are dealing with NDP fear, fabrication and fantasy. In fact, there is no Member for Crow's Nest.

Ms. Jewett: Mr. Speaker, first, I would ask the Hon. Member when she replies to my question to make any further comments.

We have been having an uproar in British Columbia because of the Government's attitude on Strathcona and the possible despoliation of Strathcona. I would like to ask the Hon. Member if she sees any possible replication in the Government's attitudes, the dinosaur club's attitudes in this Bill. Is there any potential replication of the Strathcona affair on Vancouver Island?

• (1210)

Ms. McDonald: I apologize for the mistake. It was the riding of Crowfoot, and it is contained in a newspaper interview.

In answer to the Hon. Member for New Westminster—Coquitlam (Ms. Jewett) I think the Strathcona situation in British Columbia is one of the most flagrant examples of the misuse of provincial parks. This is an example of simply rezoning an area that is supposed to be wilderness, or it had limited development, and calling it a recreational area, then mining, lumbering, and other economic activities can be allowed. I would hate to think that the Government would be so unenlightened, but the legislation is not clear enough. It does not state precisely what wilderness areas will be. It gives the Minister the right to designate wilderness areas, and it talks about activities consistent with protecting wilderness areas. Since there is little understanding about what a wilderness area is in the caucus at large, and I do not know if that is true for the Minister and I hope that he will clear it up, we must be a little worried. That could be dealt with by having a clear amendment about what is a wilderness area, in order that people will not have to be worried about a repeat of the Strathcona Park affair.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions and comments are now terminated. On debate, the Hon. Member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia).

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, I know the Minister is anxious to close the debate. We are not only on the motion of the Minister, but on the motion of another Member whereby there could be further speakers. I think that it would add to the total quality of this debate if the Minister had an opportunity to answer some of the questions asked and dispelled certain fears, some may be legitimate and some may not be, and concluded with the full knowledge of the criticism put forward rather than being attacked from the back, so to speak, after he has spoken.

I am glad to take the floor at this point. In answer to the question put forward by the Hon. Member for Edmonton South (Mr. Edwards), I would like to give him additional information now that he knows it is the Hon. Member for Crowfoot (Mr. Malone) who was quoted on angle drilling in parks as a possibility for exploitation. As to the source, we can only go by one that is highly reputable, because it comes from the city of the Hon. Member, and it is The Edmonton Journal for Tuesday, December 15, 1987.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Caccia: Not only did it contain the gem of angle drilling, which everyone found quite amusing, but it also contained another interesting notion attributed to the same Hon. Member for Crowfoot, namely, the possibility that he sees room for some "limited to moderate lumber developments". That was contained in the same article.

Evidently we are dealing here with quotations. We all know from past experience that they are not all reliable. We will be glad to give the Hon. Member for Crowfoot the benefit of the doubt of a misquote.

Where we cannot give him or other colleagues from Alberta the same benefit of the doubt, because the source is solid and irrefutable, is in a letter from the Chairman of the Edmonton chapter of the Canadian Parks and Wilderness Society dated January 10, 1988. In that letter, Mr. Speaker, I would like to bring to your attention a couple of sentences in which Mr. Rasmussen writes: "I realize that the Alberta caucus is lobbying hard to alter or stall the Bill", namely Bill C-30. "Frankly, the Bill is not nearly strong enough in its protectionist stance. However, on behalf of the membership of my organization, I urge you", and this is a circular letter addressed to all Members of Parliament, "to move it in an unaltered form to a second reading in the very near future".

Mr. Rasmussen goes on to say, "The Alberta caucus is very much out of touch with Albertans on this issue". That is an interesting statement coming from someone in Edmonton, not from one of us here, or an unwashed Member of Parliament from Toronto. Mr. Rasmussen goes on to say: "The letters and editorials are unanimously against the development stance. In fact, there has not been a single letter", meaning letter to the editor, "supporting the stance of the Alberta caucus. The press in all other Alberta centres is running the same on this issue!"

The substance of this letter is that there is a national consensus to get this Bill going and through. The sentiments expressed by Mr. Rasmussen are such, coming from Alberta, that we have to take them into account and give them the credence and the weight that they deserve, unless Alberta

Members in the House would like to rise and debate the content of Mr. Rasmussen's letter dated January 10, 1988.

In detail the Bill contains a number of measures that we do support. Those measures are strangely reminiscent of a decision made in 1984 to amend the Bill. In other words, the Bill contains a set of measures, except for one or two, including the one that deals with the citizens' heritage fund, which have been available to the Government for action since it came into power in September, 1984, three and a half years ago.

As my colleague, the Hon. Member for Cochrane—Superior, did on Friday, we would like to express our support in general terms. On more than one occasion on Thursdays when the business of the House is called, the Liberal Party inquired with the House Leader of the Government as to when this Bill would be brought forward. That is something that does not happen very often.

Having analysed the Bill in depth, I have some reservations about the weakness of clauses 1.3 to 1.6 on pollution. It seems to me that those clauses need to be strengthened. Perhaps they were written in isolation from what we have been attempting to do on Bill C-74, an Act respecting the protection of the environment. I would hope when the Minister will appear in committee he will find it possible to come forward with amendments that will strengthen the pollution clauses of the Bill. Perhaps today he has some comments to make to that effect.

In those particular clauses on the costs of clean-up, I would urge the Minister to review the Bill carefully as we are approving it on second reading. Since we will have an opportunity in committee to examine it clause by clause, I urge the Minister to come forward with an amendment to strengthen those clauses. If not, we in the Opposition will be prepared to do so, provided we receive the necessary support from Members on the government side.

The main controversy which has been raised by others is whether or not the Ministers can give us assurance, possibly today, on the question of boundaries in the ski area. That is definitely a source of great uncertainty, speculation, and unnecessary grief. In other words, we would like to be given the assurance that the Government will not come forward in committee with an amendment to the present Bill that will make the boundaries of Sunshine Village changeable by way of a cabinet decision. Therefore, the assurance today in the House that the boundaries of Sunshine Village will remain as they are proposed now at second reading would go a long way in removing fears on the part of all parties concerned, not only in the House, but those outside who follow the proceedings of this Bill very carefully.

I would love to engage, if time were to permit, but I will not, in putting on the record numerous national parks that were established in Liberal times just to straighten out the false impression which the Hon. Member for Broadview—Greenwood (Ms. McDonald) has in relation to the Liberal record, which is a very fine and outstanding one. We are very glad to see that our record is being built upon at the present time in the life of this Parliament by Bill C-30, but there is no justification at all for the Member's statement made earlier.

The Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East (Mr. Allmand) indicated that the number of national parks introduced when he was the Minister runs into a dozen or more. It would take too much time to cite them all, but they stretch from east to west and from south to north. They are there to be seen by every Canadian who wants to enjoy the beauty and recreation that such parks offer. The national parks system is an outstanding one and it is the envy of every visitor from outside of Canada. What puzzles me is that the Government in October, 1986, in the Speech from the Throne announced the following:

> Canada's national parks represent a heritage of great importance to the present and future generations.

We agree. "My government" said the representative of the Queen in the Senate:

> —will ask Parliament to approve major reforms to the National Parks Act.

Where are the major reforms in this Bill? They are extremely difficult to find. Maybe one could make the case for a major reform, as the Minister no doubt will try to do about the proposed citizens' heritage fund, but that is not something that can go by uncriticized because it has a number of flaws. In my view it is not in that category of initiatives. Why was it necessary for almost four years to go by to introduce a piece of legislation which so closely reminds us of decisions which were ready for this Government to make when it took power in September, 1984? That is a puzzle very few can answer.

The Government has demonstrated by this enormous delay since September, 1984,—when there was also a hiatus between two administrations and a lack of legislation—that it cannot manage in a competent manner the flow of legislative measures to be introduced in this House. This very measure we are debating here today, I submit, could have been debated in 1985, at the latest in 1986, because it was all there to be brought forward. No wonder if Canadians in communities across the country, who cherish and place a high value, understandably and quite rightly so, on our national parks systems and ways to strengthen and improve them, have become so frustrated. To add to that particular frustration is this uncertainty created in Alberta, in your own province, Mr. Speaker, as reflected in the letter written by Mr. Rasmussen which I read a few moments ago.

We have within the Alberta Progressive Conservative caucus two members, one is the Hon. Member for Crowfoot (Mr. Malone) whose tendency is to favour angle-drilling in national parks, and the other is the Hon. Member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor), who would like, if one reads between the lines in what he said, our national parks to be turned into tourist playgrounds. That would be the ultimate joy and accomplishment for the Member from Bow River. On the one hand he finds that the taxation system on citizens of Banff and Jasper is too high, yet he had to admit that citizens do not want to switch to a municipal type of government as in any other part of the country. Evidently there are some advantages in the regime that Canadians in Banff and Jasper do enjoy, otherwise they would have already opted and decided in favour of introducing a municipal form of government in their own towns.

I would like to draw your attention, Mr. Speaker, the importance of spelling out the boundaries of the ski areas in the three parks, namely, Banff, Jasper and Riding Mountain, as this Bill does, and to obtain the assurance that these boundaries will remain entrenched in the Bill so that the assurance will be in a legislative form and changes will not be possible by way of an executive decision.

In moving on to the question of the citizens' heritage fund proposed by the Minister in Clause 8, the question is one that shifts the onus for the establishment of such a fund from the public to private initiative. The creation of a fund by way of a competitive effort with other efforts which take place every year and frequently in any community region and across the country is in itself a disadvantage. Second, the fund would be put at the disposal of the Minister and we would not know how that fund would be applied, how the decisions would be made on priorities, whether it would be a highly political fund or one whose utilization would be guided by principles having to do with the best interests of improving the quality and the extent of the national parks system. We do not think it will be a fund that will not be perceived as a slush fund by the public.

Therefore, we would much rather see an approach recommended by the task force on park establishment in November, 1986 of a 5 per cent minimum allocation yearly in Parks Canada's total annual budget to build up and develop over the next five years and more a capital acquisition fund. After a very few years that fund would be substantial, and it would allow acquisition with a degree of certainty. Money would be built up and everybody would know that by a certain date funds would be available. It would permit a gradual, constant, well planned expansion of the already fine system we have.

We are all trying to search for ways of establishing a capital acquisition fund for parks, and I do not want to knock down completely the proposal in Clause 8, but I can assure Hon. Members that it lends itself to a number of very legitimate criticisms which I am sure the Minister will take into account and deal with. I believe that out of general revenue which provides funds to the newly named Environment Canada Parks, the allocation ought to be established. Then there would be continuity and consistency so that in the long term these funds would be reliably built up.

When dealing with acquisitions of this size and with a program that is intergenerational, we want to provide for something that does not depend on the whims of economic conditions as they exist from one year to the next or on the whims of the success or lack of success of fund-raising initiatives. This particular sector of public interest deserves stability and continuity of this nature.

My colleague, the Hon. Member for Cochrane—Superior (Mr. Penner), dealt on Friday with traditional subsistence activities and with Clause 4 in particular, and I would like to reinforce what he said. This is the measure that recognizes the fact that new national parks must not inhibit traditional activities carried on by local native people. We are glad to see that this measure is being introduced because it was part of a package that was ready for implementation in 1984. It commands the attention of all of us who are concerned about the stability of the economies of native people in national parks.

I will conclude by stressing the importance, as others have, of wilderness zones. If this Bill had been introduced in 1985, we would certainly be ahead with that particular activity. A policy was already in practice at that time. The removal of the powers of expropriation is a new feature which I do not support because I think those powers ought to be in the Bill. Expropriation ought to be used very carefully, of course, but there may be times, over a period of 20, 30 or 40 years, when we may want to use expropriation powers in a careful and thoughtful manner. Without those powers, our ability to establish new areas will be weakened.

I do welcome the poaching regulations contained in Clause 7, but I find that the fines for the poaching of game animals such as caribou, elk and deer are far too low. In light of a television program which appeared a couple of weeks ago, we see that poaching is now an activity which constitutes an emergency, and I hope that either today or in committee, the Minister will indicate that these fines will be strengthened in a manner that will make it prohibitive to conduct such activity. I thank you for your indulgence, Mr. Speaker, and I look forward to hearing the next Hon. Member.

Ms. McDonald: Mr. Speaker, I welcome the support of the Hon. Member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia) on the need to have a clear definition of wilderness areas. I wonder if he could elaborate a bit on that. I wonder as well if he would comment on how much wilderness area we need.

Such a very small proportion of Canada is devoted to national parks. Would he therefore be in agreement that it would be desirable for Canada to have a much larger proportion of land devoted to national parks, particularly to wilderness areas within parks? Would he want to put a percentage figure on that?

Mr. Caccia: Mr. Speaker, unlike the Hon. Member for Broadview—Greenwood (Ms. McDonald), I do not have instant answers. On a matter of such complexity as wilderness zones, I do not know if anyone could give an immediate response by way of percentages or direct numbers.

Of course, there is an enormous potential for wilderness zones. One would want to put aside the largest possible acreage one could put his or her hands on in areas that would qualify and would be suitable. The concept is a very good one, and as I said in my intervention, this policy has already been in practice for some time.

The creation of a wilderness national parks status is something that we should examine in committee in great depth. Perhaps we could also find the correct phraseology to use in introducing such an amendment. We might even conclude, after studying the Bill, that there are certain parks, though perhaps not all of them, that could be set aside as wilderness reserves. Thus we could enhance and elevate the status of existing national parks. Obviously, in order to be successful with that, we would have to be very firm on pollution-control measures. As the Hon. Member knows, wilderness is easily affected by certain chemical products, and therefore we must establish the linkages necessary for the protection of wildlife over-all.

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, because certain Hon. Members are not very familiar with the national parks system in Canada, and in particular the Hon. Member for Broadview—Greenwood (Ms. McDonald) who said that under Liberal Governments nothing had been done, is the Hon. Member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia) aware of the fact that under the Trudeau Government alone, the following national parks were created: Kejimkujik in Nova Scotia, Kouchibouguac in New Brunswick, La Mauricie in Quebec, Pacific Rim in British Columbia, Forillon in Québec, Gros Morne in Newfoundland, Pukaskwa in Ontario, Kluane in the Yukon Territories, Nahanni in the Northwest Territories, Auyuitiuq in the Northwest Territories, Grasslands in Saskatchewan, Mingan in Québec and the Northern Yukon Park in the Yukon Territory which came at the end of the regime and was followed through by the Government opposite?

That makes 13 national parks created under the Trudeau Government alone, out of a total of 32. I said that they were doubled, but I was wrong. They were close to doubled since 13 out of 32 were created since 1968 when Mr. Trudeau came to power. That does not include the national historic sites of which there are now 80 in Canada, many of which were created under the previous Liberal Government, not to mention the heritage rivers and canals.

Is the Hon. Member also aware of the fact that in Canada we now have 180,000 square kilometres set aside for national parks, one of the largest areas in the world, and that most of those parks were created under Liberal Governments which were in power during that time and gave a high priority to national parks?

Mr. Caccia: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is highly qualified to ask this question because he is a former Minister concerned with northern affairs and national parks. He was personally involved in the establishment of some of the parks that he just mentioned.

As I said, the record speaks for itself, and it is an outstanding record. The system is there to be seen by visitors. I would not be surprised if the St. Lawrence Island National Park was also established by a former Liberal Government. I would not be surprised if Point Pelee National Park were in that category as well. I am not quite sure about Mount Revelstoke National Park and Elk Island National Park, but the fact is that the whole system was given momentum and great impetus by successive Liberal administrations. That does not mean that negotiations at times, as the Hon. Member indicated, cannot go on so long that sometimes a park is announced and launched when the Progressive Conservative Party is in power. The Bruce Peninsula negotiations started a long time ago, even before my time here. I would like to add to that Ellesmere, an area over which negotiations go back over a decade or so.

This is a very tricky field in which to claim paternity or maternity, but nevertheless the basic point is that the Hon. Member for Broadview—Greenwood who unfortunately is not here to listen to us, made a statement that was a little bit off the mark, and that we in Canada have a fantastic network of parks of which we can collectively be very proud.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions and comments are now terminated.

Mrs. Barbara Sparrow (Calgary South): Mr. Speaker, it is indeed a pleasure for me to participate in the debate today on Bill C-30. The Bill means a great deal to western Canada, if not to all of Canada.

First I would like to congratulate the Minister for introducing the Bill. It contains many excellent amendments to the Act and I want to commend him especially for the new poaching laws to protect wildlife. It is extremely important that our national parks be protected. The parks are there for everyone to enjoy, whether they be hikers, skiers, visitors, or even residents of one of the town sites such as Banff, Jasper, or indeed Waterton National Park.

Tourism and the environment can work together. We in the Conservative Party certainly do not want to promote a cement jungle or a Coney Island situation in any of our national parks. However, we feel that with open debate and meetings, with participation by the residents of the various parks, we can sit down and design a controlled-type of development that will be beneficial not only to those residents but to the provinces as well.

As you well know, Mr. Speaker, coming from that great province, we in Alberta have more square kilometres of national park than any other province and are very pleased and proud to have them. Within Banff and Jasper National Parks we have skiing facilities which have been in place for many years. I am a skier and have been for about 30 or 35 years. Since about 1965 or 1966 I spent almost every weekend during the ski season skiing at Sunshine, Lake Louise or even Marmot Basin up near your area. We are very proud of those skiing areas.

Our main problem today is that a lot of the facilities in those parks have to be replaced in order to make them competitive with other areas such as Whistler or indeed places like Aspen which have tremendous skiing facilities. I would like to see this Bill go to committee where the Minister can appear along with other witnesses to discuss how we can maintain some of these excellent skiing facilities in order to bring tourists and other visitors to our parks so they can enjoy the facilities.

Another area I wanted to discuss concerns the boundaries of the Towns of Banff and Jasper. It is noted in Bill C-30 that the Governor in Council may fix the boundaries of those two towns by an order adding a description of those boundaries as a schedule to the Act. I am very pleased to see that. The Minister has been very open and honest and feels he has to go to the residents of those areas and talk to them. He has to hear and see their concerns before carving the boundaries in stone. I must thank him for that move.

During the past two and a half years I have visited Jasper, Banff and Lake Louise and talked to their Chambers of Commerce as well as the residents about self-government. They also want self-sufficiency. They want to protect their areas. They do not want open development, they want controlled development so they can move towards self-sufficiency and reliability. I have to say that here again the Minister said he would have open meetings. He will listen to the people who live there, the people who are designing the future of those areas. Then, after close consultation with them and his officials, and indeed I hope the House, he will bring forward recommendations as to what the boundaries might be or indeed should be.

I think that is part of our efforts at national reconciliation, where the decisions are not made here in Ottawa without consultation. This Government is moving towards talking to the people in the provinces and the industry to decide what they need and what is best.

I have also had a lot of discussions with the Minister's department concerning land lease rates. The 1980 assessment value on properties in Banff, Jasper and Waterton National Parks proved to be perhaps too much of a hardship. Some of the rates increased by 2,000, 3,000 or 4,000 per cent. This Government does not feel that we should make a decision here and enforce it on people somewhere else in Canada, and we are reviewing the land lease rates and the assessment value of the various properties in those areas. A special committee has been formed which will make recommendations to the Minister. I know he will review those recommendations with all due care and try to make things more fair and equitable for the people who live in those areas.

With regard to the wilderness areas, it is very difficult to put boundaries on them. Perhaps many people here in the House today have never visited some of these huge parks in western Canada. It would be totally impossible to lay out specifically all the boundaries for wilderness areas. The mountain ranges are very vast and the Minister would have a great deal of difficulty if he tried to carve those boundaries in stone.

I am very interested in Bill C-30. It should really go to committee where we can hear the concerns of the people from the various parks and also hear from representatives of the tourism industry why they want to maintain and upgrade their equipment in order to attract people to the parks.

Therefore, I would like to move:

> That this House sit through the lunch hour for the purpose of continuing consideration of Bill C-30, an Act to amend the National Parks Act and to amend an Act to amend the National Parks Act.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Will those Members who object to the motion please rise in their places?

And fewer than 15 Members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Fewer than 15 Members having risen, pursuant to Standing Order 9(4)(b), the motion is adopted.

Motion (Mrs. Sparrow) agreed to.

Mr. Ernie Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, I feel decidedly of two minds about the continuation of the debate at the moment. It has been as badly handled as the parks system of Canada very often has been. This debate began Friday when the Minister was not here and other people, including our critic on the environment, were not here to take part in the debate. The debate blundered on this morning with one of the Members from Alberta speaking first.

The Minister has been sitting there quietly not saying a word. He has had several opportunities to speak to the matter. He is, I am sure, taking it all in, but we expect the Minister to make a statement on the Bill, to make a defence of it. Rather, he sits there quietly, wanders around behind the curtains, and pays some attention to the debate. When does he intend to get into it and give us a defence of what he has put forward? More significantly, when does he plan to deal with those shortcomings in the Bill which have not been provided for?

There has been a nice debate between members of the Official Opposition and the Government on who should get credit for the development of the parks system. Longevity always helps in these matters and the Liberals, having had the privilege of governing this country for so much of this century, can, of course, take credit for a good deal of parks creation. However, to ensure that the parks system is maintained and provided for through legislation is surely the responsibility of the present Minister.

The Bill has significant shortcomings. It fails in a number of very important areas to provide for what is already supposedly the policy of the Government. For a private Member of the governing caucus to pull this particular stunt, with the connivance of the Ministry of course, while the Minister sits there quietly not having said anything in the debate so far, seems to me to be a contemptible use of this House by the Conservative Government.

It is truly contemptible to interfere with the proper order of the day, to attempt to conclude the matter today by speaking through the noon hour when the debate on something which is of enormous importance to Canadians has barely started. The Government House Leader smiles his sarcastic smile and serves up another piece of the arrogance of the Conservatives which we have seen all too often.

With those comments on the way in which this has been done, let me turn to Bill C-30, which is of such enormous importance to all Canadians who recognize the need for a well developed parks system. Canadians recognize that Canada, which covers such a large part of the earth's surface, has responsibility for its large natural resources and has all too often been preoccupied with the economic value of those resources. Canadians recognize the importance of the parks system in ensuring that some small part of Canada's territory will be set aside in preserves, in parks, to be enjoyed for decades and centuries to come in as close as possible to its pristine state.

I had intended to ask the Member who has just pulled this parliamentary trick on us whether she is in agreement with the Minister of Forestry, Lands and Wildlife in the Alberta Government who has suggested that we need more ski hills in the parks. A good part of the Member's quite short speech was a celebration of skiing in the mountains of Alberta and British Columbia. That certainly leaves me suspicious that she is not all that committed to the development and maintenance of our parks system.

The way in which this whole matter has been treated leaves me acutely suspicious, together with my colleagues in the New Democratic caucus, that the Conservatives have gone some distance toward doing what they had to do, that is, providing legislative amendments which the operation of the parks and the working responsibility of the officials absolutely required. However, they have neglected to put into this Bill those matters which have apparently already been established as government policy.

Given this particular manoeuver, I find it more difficult to say that we in our caucus are supportive of Bill C-30 as far as it goes. This Bill dates back to 1930 and was only amended significantly once, in 1974. As our sensitivity to the needs of the parks has developed and as the threat to the parks system has become more acute, there has been a very significant advance in our understanding of what is required. The failure of the Government to provide for that in this Bill leaves us with constrained support. To provide legislative housekeeping needed for the smooth operation of the national parks is a basic necessity for good administration. To put current parks policy into legislation is again taking a very small step.

The Minister of the Environment (Mr. McMillan), who does like to celebrate his own accomplishments and to put on a fine front before the environmentalists of the country, could do a lot better than he has in this Bill. He could have done a lot better by speaking to the Bill and possibly opening himself up to some questions and comments, although the rules of the House tend to constrain that in ways which are quite detrimental.

I find it particularly unfortunate that it seems to be the intention to have the entire second reading debate in as brief a time as possible. It was thrown into the House on Friday and they want to wrap it up on the following Tuesday and get it into legislative committee. Lord knows what sort of attacks on the parliamentary process will take place in the committee.

My friend, the Member for Broadview—Greenwood (Ms. McDonald), has already pointed out the need for far more frankness by the Government in dealing with the parks system of the country. That was a point made in a briefing note to my colleagues and myself.

The refusal of the Minister to rise to the occasion and speak on policy and his refusal to come to grips with the needs of the parks system and to ensure they are met, only underscores the Government's lack of frankness.

This country needs a government that will support parks as natural preserves, not as tourist sites to attract floods of people. Obviously, we want Canadians to have an opportunity to appreciate and enjoy natural preserves, but that calls for careful control of how we operate them. We want to ensure that the Government is committed to that kind of principle.

We need a government that will allocate resources to parks development with the funds of Canadians, without opening the kinds of possibilities that obtain with the citizens, heritage fund proposal of the Minister. There must be a clear commitment by the Government through taxpayers' funds to ensure that the parks system is maintained and expanded. Obviously this means that there must be clear evidence that the Government is really committed without equivocation to the development of the national parks system of Canada. There are very serious questions about whether that is really the case.

For example, the concept of wilderness is integral to the concern about natural preserves. Only when we know how those within the Government responsible for the parks system envisage wilderness will we be assured that the preserves will remain in perpetuity for the people of Canada to enjoy. The Bill does not provide for that because there is no definition. One is left guessing at the Government's intention as to what wilderness may be.

The fact that the suggestion for activities within these parks include aircraft and surface transportation rates is a real concern. We are particularly suspicious of Conservative caucus members from Alberta who want highways development in parks removed from the control of the department responsible for the parks. There is a very clear danger that in spite of our desire to maintain wilderness areas, roads will be built to cut through these parks and thereby violate the sense of wilderness and the entire ecology of the park system. The failure to define wilderness in the Bill leaves us with no assurance that this fundamental need within the parks system will be met by the Government.

Another concern is the lack of clear provision for certain subsistence activities that can be carried on in parks. This is a concern that arises as parks are established in northern areas and places where aboriginal peoples still subsist on the natural resources and wildlife. We must take into account the treaty rights and more recent land negotiation agreements with our aboriginal peoples when we are establishing these parks. We want to ensure that in allowing these activities to continue in some parks there is a clear definition of them within the legislation. The failure to do so properly in Bill C-30 arouses a great deal of concern.

We must be concerned that others may try to assume the rights being given to aboriginal peoples, which represents more than just the thin edge of the wedge. As the wedge opens the park more and more to these activities what assurances are there that the desire to maintain the preserves as much as possible will be respected in these circumstances?

The Government's failure to define these matters clearly are reasons for the constrained support and concern about the Minister's and the Government's policy on parks that I have been expressing.

These concerns find their greatest expression in two of our greatest and oldest national parks in the Rockies, in which the towns of Jasper and Banff are located. There has been a certain amount of skiing activity in these parks for some time. The Bill does not provide us with proper assurance with respect to the boundaries of the town sites within the parks, and that substantial commercial development along with ski development will be carefully controlled within the parks.

I wish to pursue some even greater concerns than those particular elements in the Bill I have discussed. There is the matter of the establishment of national marine parks. If anyone listening thinks that these remarks have been rhetoric brought up for the occasion, particularly as we speak into the lunch hour, let me say clearly and firmly that in the matter of national marine parks it is anything but rhetoric. Here we see one of the most significant indications of the failure of the Minister, which makes it no surprise to me that he sits there silent, ashamed to get up and speak to the Bill.

We have the opportunity to establish parks along shorelines in various places to add significantly to what already exists within our large land-based parks in the nation. The Government has declared its policy that there will be marine parks, but in this grab bag of amendments to the National Parks Act there is no clear provision for the establishment of these marine parks.

That is particularly unfortunate given the fact that the existing Act, in another of its shortcomings, does not provide clearly for the process by which territory is acquired. The Government of Canada gets the rights to territory and gradually works through the process of creating a national park. That process is not provided for in the existing National Parks Act, so difficulties arise. The Government of Canada has to use one Act and another Act, one form of authorization and another form of authorization, in dealing with provincial Governments, which generally have the rights of the Crown in ownership, if you will, of natural resources. In dealings with provincial Governments, the federal Government has great difficulties in carrying the process through.

The Minister walks out of the House, presumably off to his lunch, leaving behind a Bill which has not provided properly for a process for the acquisition of territory and the process of establishing a park. That seems to me a monstrous shortcoming in the Bill. He should have a declaration of policy for the establishment of national marine parks when the process is finally concluded, a process which has, by ministerial directive and under one pretext or another, to be carried forward. Not to have the final basis provided for the final destination of the process, if you will, and a national marine park provided, only underscores how limited Bill C-30 really is.

As a Member of Parliament from Northern Ontario, whose riding includes a vast chunk of northwestern Ontario land, small lakes, rivers and so on, my constituency has Lake Superior located on its southern border. Lake Superior is a great body of water. As we all know it is the largest lake of this kind on the face of the earth. It has one national park, a territory abutting on the north, but no necessity in our concern to provide natural preserves for the establishment of a marine park on Lake Superior.

I am not the only one who feels that lack. I am particularly critical of the failure to provide for national marine parks. We should have a basis for establishing such a park on Lake Superior, to draw this great lake to the attention of Canadians from coast to coast, and people from other countries as well, and encourage them to enjoy a part of it. It should be something as close to the pristine state as we can find.

Mr. Caccia: I hate to interrupt the Hon. Member, but the government Party called for an extension of debate into the lunch hour. I wonder if you, Mr. Speaker, would wish to call a quorum.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I do not see a quorum. Call in the Members.

And the bells having rung:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I do see a quorum now.

The Hon. Member for Thunder Bay—Nipigon (Mr. Epp) has just completed his speech. His time has expired. Are there questions are comments? There are no questions or comments.

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The question is on the motion that the question be now put. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I declare the motion carried.

Motion (Mr. Hawkes) agreed to.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The next question is on the main motion. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): It being 1.20 p.m., I do now leave the Chair until 2 p.m. this day.

At 1.20 p.m. the House took recess.

LIBERAL PARTY OF CANADA'S CONVENTION

RESOLUTIONS ON JOB EQUALITY FOR WOMEN

Mrs. Lucie Pépin (Outremont): Mr. Speaker, the Liberal Party of Canada held its convention over the week-end and, on that occasion, several resolutions of great importance if women are to achieve social equality were passed because the Liberal Party is convinced that women must get the help they need to achieve equality in society. This means that work in the home must be considered as the responsibility of both parents and of society as a whole. This means that education and training circles must be made aware of the special needs of women. Job equality and equal pay for equal work programs must be carried out immediately and remain in force as long as women's wages are not equal to men's.

The labour market and the education system must recognize the needs of men and women, not only as employees but as parents. The system must evolve and consider workers and students, both men and women, as parents with family responsibilities who want to have some time to spend with their children.

Job equality goes hand in hand with the establishment of family assistance services, and the Liberal Party considers that the government must act now. It is unacceptable and unreasonable to think that obstacles to the women employment will, given time, go away on their own. Job equality will become a reality only if we make it happen.

And the Liberal Party of Canada has decided to adopt these resolutions aimed at equality for women in the workplace.

CANADA POST CORPORATION

OBJECTION TO VARIETY STORE SERVICE IN HAMILTON

Mr. Geoff Scott (Hamilton—Wentworth): Mr. Speaker, I rise to report on a meeting that I attended Sunday evening with two dozen very concerned residents in a fashionable new housing development on the Mountain in my riding.

The problem that my constituents raised with the Minister responsible for Canada Post is this. With no door-to-door mail delivery anywhere in the area there is only one tiny postal counter, and it is located in a variety store which is right next door to a strip joint: "Girls, Girls, Girls, Six Nights a Week", and a hard rock club, all of which suggests that this convenience store provides considerably more variety than usual.

My neighbours told me bluntly that what we do not need is our wives and children being molested because of a strip joint next door to a so-called convenience store.

I toured the area and was appalled at the proximity of a rack of pornographic magazines and tapes no more than six feet away from the postal counter. Surely this shabby situation is unacceptable.

I urge the Minister and Canada Post to take immediate action to provide this new, large and growing community with proper mail service, and preferably door-to-door delivery.

HUMAN RIGHTS

GUATEMALA—ARREST AND RELEASE OF RETURNING OF POLITICAL OPPOSITION LEADERS

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, yesterday there was an alert phoned to many Canadians about Guatemala. Rigoberta Mencher, an outspoken critic of the army in Guatemala, who has been living in Canada, and Orlando Castillo, were arrested at the airport returning to Guatemala, along with others, including the Right Rev. Bob Smith, a former Moderator of the United Church of Canada.

Phone calls, telexes, and other communications from Canadians went to encourage their release. Today, Ambassador Federico Ulloa phoned to tell me that Mencher and Castillo were released for lack of evidence or lack of a sustainable charge, and were at all times during their arrest accompanied by a representative of the Human Rights Commission of Guatemala.

I congratulate the Government of Guatemala on making progress in respect for human rights. I congratulate Canadians and others who kept watch on human rights in Guatemala and sent the encouraging telexes.

ABORTION

ANNUAL LOSS OF 60,000 UNBORN CANADIAN BABIES

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, it must be costing the taxpayers of Canada a tremendous sum of money to process, feed and clothe, and accommodate the thousands of immigrants who are coming daily to our country. It is ironic that while we are populating our country with people from other lands we are permitting some 60,000 unborn babies in Canada every year to be murdered in the womb.

Abortion has been wrong since the beginning of life, and is still wrong because it defies God's moral law and the natural law governing all men and women. Is it not time we started spending some money to keep the family together and to help women and girls to keep their babies, along the lines presently being followed by the Government of British Columbia?

We are listening to everybody except the unborn baby. Mr. Speaker, can you not hear the silent cry from a baby in the womb, who is being torn apart, asking: "Why can't I live?"

PUBLISHING INDUSTRY

GINN CANADA TAKEOVER—CRITICISM OF GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, the Government's approval of the sale of New American Library to Penguin Books appears to have given the final death blow to the Baie Comeau book publishing policy. Over and over again the Government has stated that it is committed to building a Canadian publishing industry, but recent government actions demonstrate otherwise.

The 1985 Baie Comeau book publishing policy stipulated that in any takeover of a Canadian based publishing company or subsidiary, either directly or indirectly through an international merger, a foreign buyer must find a majority Canadian partner for the subsidiary within two years.

Last month the Government announced its offer to buy 51 per cent equity control of Ginn Canada from American entertainment conglomerate Gulf and Western. However, it appears to have allowed the retention of a veto power over significant operating decisions. This offer does not make good business sense for Canadian management, because it disallows and disavows Canadian control.

Now, with the NAL takeover, the Government has shown a total lack of commitment not only to its own policy but to the building of a Canadian publishing industry. It is time that the Government re-read Baie Comeau, this time the lines, not just between them.

POLITICAL PARTIES

SOCIAL POLICIES OF PROGRESSIVE CONSERVATIVE PARTY

Mr. Marcel R. Tremblay (Québec-Est): Mr. Speaker, during this first term, we have tried to emphasize the importance of the individual by letting people live responsibly, with dignity, instead of holding them hostage and keeping them in a servile state.

The Progressive Conservative Party of Canada is proud of this achievement and has no regrets about putting its trust in the people of this country who are the motor of the economy. Never before have Canadians been as confident about the stability and guarantees of their social policies. It took the Progressive Conservative Party to bring about this change and the resulting prosperity in this country. For a long time, the general attitude was to depend on the Government, which meant that people lacked self-confidence and failed to develop collective initiatives.

As Sartre said: "Responsibility is a necessary and logical consequence of freedom". The Conservative Government understands and implements this philosophy.

RAIL TRANSPORT

PORT COQUITLAM TO VANCOUVER COMMUTER RAIL PROJECT

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver—Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, before the Hon. Member for Mission—Port Moody (Mr. St. Germain) was recently appointed a Minister in the Mulroney

Government, he supported federal funding for commuter rail transit from Port Coquitlam to Vancouver to service those rapidly growing communities. Even the Vander Zalm Government promised $16 million for the project. The Hon. Member for Mission—Port Moody was quoted locally as saying that there have already been enough studies done.

What is his first act as junior Transport Minister? You guessed it, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday, he and his provincial counterpart announced another study.

I believe that the federal Government has the money and the clout with CP Rail to make commuter rail happen, and to make it happen soon.

Please, Mr. Speaker, we want a specific commitment of federal funds, and a deadline. No more studies!

SCIENTIFIC RESEARCH

ANIMAL DISEASE RESEARCH GRANT

Mr. Don Ravis (Saskatoon East): Mr. Speaker, the federal Government has again demonstrated its dedication to the advancement of biotechnology in Canada. This month the Natural Sciences and Engineering Research Council together with Ciba-Geigy Canada Ltd. allocated $6.4 million to the Veterinary Infectious Disease Organization of Saskatoon. This is the largest grant ever awarded by NSERC under its university-industry program.

Over the next five years these funds will be dedicated to a major research project on animal disease. The greatest beneficiary of this particular venture will be the Canadian livestock industry, which still loses millions of dollars annually to disease.

The expertise in research at the University of Saskatchewan has attracted an international component through the involvement of Ciba-Geigy, and hopefully some of this research will carry on at its headquarters in Switzerland.

I know that all Canadians will join with me in congratulating the University of Saskatchewan, and those companies, for illustrating the potential to be found in academic, corporate, and government co-operation. This is an investment in research which will translate into improved competitiveness for our industries.

FISHERIES

FINANCIAL AID FOR RESTRUCTURING PÊCHEURS-UNIS COMPANY—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Fernand Robichaud (Westmorland—Kent): Mr. Speaker, I rise in the House today to express my disappointment following the federal Government's refusal to assist Les pêcheurs-Unis des Maritimes.

The company applied to DRIE for financial assistance to help rationalize its operations. However, the bad news came in a letter signed on March 25 this year by the Minister of State (Small Businesses and Tourism). Yesterday, Judge Alfred Landry of the Court of Queen's Bench of New Brunswick rendered his judgment concerning the company's financial problems. He decided the company was not solvent and that the rationalization plan was not feasible, especially since the federal Government had refused to grant financial assistance.

Mr. Speaker, by refusing to help the company, the federal Government has put over 800 jobs directly at risk and indirectly endangered hundreds of jobs in the Atlantic region. I urge the Government to work actively towards finding a solution to this very serious problem. Our region cannot afford a loss of this magnitude. The situation is strangely similar to the CN workshop case. Once again, the Government has refused to get involved.

INTELLECTUAL PROPERTY

POSITION OF LIBERALS

Mr. Gabriel Fontaine (Lévis): Mr. Speaker, Canadian authors, creators, composers, poets, writers, artists, programmers and others who are affected by the issue of intellectual property have now reached the very limits of their patience. Today, they are protected by a law that basically goes back to 1924. Although the House of Commons decided to update the legislation on intellectual property, the Liberals in this House, the Liberal Caucus and the Liberal majority in our non-elected Senate are using all kinds of political tricks and strategies to hold up the legislation on intellectual property.

This is just one more instance that proves, Mr. Speaker, that the Liberal Leader has no leadership!

WELFARE

STATEMENT ATTRIBUTED TO BRITISH COLUMBIA PREMIER

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands): Mr. Speaker, Premier Vander Zalm of British Columbia, whose Government has cut back on services to poor people, now has the hypocrisy to say:

> If we can somehow help them to get to know Jesus Christ they'll be much happier and their problems will be resolved much easier.

Carl Sandburg, the American poet, didn't know Bill Vander Zalm, but he did know the kind of people who used this kind of pious cant. In 1915 he wrote:

> You tell people living in shanties Jesus is going to fix it up all right with them by giving them mansions in the skies after they're dead and the worms have eaten 'em.
> You tell $6 a week department store girls all they need is Jesus . . .
> You tell poor people they don't need any more money on pay day and even if it's fierce to be out of a job, Jesus'll fix that up all right, all right—all they gotta do is take Jesus the way you say.

RAILWAYS

CARRIAGE OF DANGEROUS GOODS—TORONTO REQUEST FOR RELOCATION OF LINES

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): Mr. Speaker, if the Railway Safety Act, Bill C-105, is passed in its present form it will repeal the Railway Relocation Act and for the first time in living memory there will be no legislative authority for railway relocation in Canada.

This comes at a time when Metropolitan Toronto is specially asking for the relocation of rail lines carrying dangerous goods and commodities away from high density residential areas. Hopefully, the Minister of Transport (Mr. Bouchard) and my friends on the Transport Committee, which is currently studying Bill C-105, will reconsider the decision to repeal the Railway Relocation Act.

PRIDE IN BEING CANADIAN

Mr. Claude Lanthier (La Salle): Mr. Speaker, it being National Citizenship Week, I would like to express today, before my colleagues in the House of Commons and before the people of Canada, my great pride in being a citizen of this beautiful country. I am proud to be a Canadian because Canada, besides being a beautiful country, is also one of the most advanced countries with respect to the rights and freedoms enjoyed by its citizens.

I am proud to live in a wonderful country that encourages all its cultural communities to safeguard and enhance the language and traditions of their ancestors. I am proud to be a citizen of this marvelous country that has always been considered to be a country open to all. Its democratic tradition, its respect for individual freedoms, and the industrious, peace-loving and tolerant nature of its people are the envy of many nations on this earth. In fact, Mr. Speaker, since our first Citizenship Act was adopted in 1947, more than 3 million people have elected to become citizens of this beautiful country of ours.

Mr. Speaker, I don't think Canadians are particularly lacking in national pride but they lack opportunities to express that pride loudly and clearly. I therefore urge my fellow citizens to take advantage of Citizenship Week to express and show their pride in being a Canadian.

I am proud to be a Canadian Mr. Speaker! Je suis fier d'être Canadien, monsieur le Président!

NATIONAL DEFENCE

GOVERNMENT POLICIES

Mr. Derek Blackburn (Brant): Mr. Speaker, all Parties expect to give and receive fair criticism in a legitimate debate on Canada's defence priorities. And I will debate any Conservative cold warrior on his or her bleak policy to fuel the international arm's race, but I cannot stomach duplicity. When the Minister of Defence (Mr. Beatty) has the nerve to call our proposals costly, dishonest, and cowardly, I must draw the line.

Didn't he read last week's newspapers? We found out that it was Conservative Defence Minister Erik Nielsen who first proposed to pull Canada's troops out of Europe.

• (1415)

Does the Minister not remember his own White Paper? It was his Government that abandoned our friend and ally, Norway, without notice. Is he forgetting the cost of his own proposals? It is the Conservative Government that wants to drive up defence spending with its outrageously expensive scheme to buy nuclear submarines.

Before any other Conservative tries to score cheap political points in the defence debate, he or she should check the Government's record. They are in no position to criticize.

Mr. William C. Winegard (Guelph): Mr. Speaker, the United Nations has asked Canada to consider participating in a multinational force to observe the withdrawal of Soviet troops from Afghanistan. As well, there would be a continuing role for the force in peace-keeping.

I cannot think of a more dangerous role for our armed forces to play than to be on site in Afghanistan before a complete ceasefire has been negotiated. Let us not even consider putting Canadian Forces personnel into a situation that holds out, at least at this moment, no promise for peace.

THE JUDICIARY

SECURITY OF TENURE—CHIEF JUSTICE OF QUEBEC COURT OF APPEAL

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question, in the absence of the Prime Minister, is for the Acting Prime Minister. There is a long tradition in Canada—

Some Hon. Members: Here he comes.

Mr. Kaplan: Okay, will this be worth waiting for?

An Hon. Member: You bet it is.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Kaplan: Mr. Speaker, there is a long tradition in Canada of independence of the judiciary from the political process and from the administration in Ottawa. The independence of the judiciary rests firmly on the tradition of security of tenure for judges. They cannot be removed by the Government.

In flagrant violation of this tradition, the Prime Minister, last fall, sent his Principal Secretary, Bernard Roy, to ask the Chief Justice of the Court of Appeal of Québec, Marcel Crête, to resign, so that a Conservative could be appointed, and offered the judge a favour in return for acceding to this demand. The judge refused.

I want to ask the Prime Minister to explain why this happened.

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, because it never happened. The statement of my hon. friend is false from beginning to end.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

REQUEST THAT PRIME MINISTER'S PRINCIPAL SECRETARY APPEAR BEFORE HOUSE COMMITTEE

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, details of this scandal, the worst yet under this Government, were published in this month's Le monde juridique. This morning I spoke to a confidante of the judge, who confirmed the story. If the Prime Minister denies it is true, is he prepared to let his Principal Secretary appear before the Committee on Justice and Solicitor General of the House of Commons and to let us question the confidante who confirmed the story?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I said the Hon. Member's statement was false. It is calumny and a complete fabrication. The Hon. Member said in reply that this morning he spoke to a confidante of the Chief Justice, who confirmed this story. Let him name the confidante now before this House!

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): The confidante is André Gagnon, the editor of the magazine. The magazine's editorial staff include a judge and four lawyers, so it is a publication of some substance.

POSITION OF PRIME MINISTER'S PRINCIPAL SECRETARY

QUERY WHETHER PRIME MINISTER ASKED PRINCIPAL SECRETARY TO MEET JUDGE

Hon. Jean Lapierre (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. Like the Prime Minister, we members of the Civil Bar receive Le monde juridique. I would like to ask the Prime Minister whether the whole story is false from start to finish, or did the Prime Minister actually ask his Principal Secretary to meet Judge Crête, and did a meeting take place, yes or no?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I informed the Hon. Member from Toronto in English, and I say it again in French to the Hon. Member for Shefford, that this libellous article, published by the so-called confidante of the Chief Justice now deceased, the late Chief Justice Marcel Crête, that this article was a complete falsehood. It is a fabrication from start to finish.

PRIME MINISTER'S POSITION

Hon. Jean Lapierre (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, in other words, is the Prime Minister telling the House that there never was a meeting between his Principal Secretary and Chief Justice Marcel Crête?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I gave my answer to the Hon. Member from Toronto. He asked whether legal action had been taken, and the answer is yes. On April 5, Mr. Roy's lawyer sent a letter to André Gagnon, editor in chief of Le monde juridique, warning him that this was a falsehood and asking for appropriate action by Le monde juridique, otherwise the necessary legal action would be taken, and the falsehood and libel the Hon. Member just repeated would be exposed before the general public. And we have a member of the Civil Bar repeating libellous remarks of this kind about a colleague! Shame!

THE ENVIRONMENT

ALLOCATION OF FUNDS TO QUEBEC TO REMOVE POLLUTION FROM ST. LAWRENCE RIVER—MINISTER'S POSITION

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview—Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of the Environment and concerns the clean up of the St. Lawrence, where half the population of Quebec gets its drinking water. Could the Minister now react favourably to a request by the Quebec Minister of the Environment for the financing required to clean up the St. Lawrence River and, especially, to conduct a study of toxic substances and their sources prior to setting up a realistic clean-up program?

[English]

Hon. Tom McMillan (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, the way the question was posed implies that the role of the federal Government in this regard is merely one of responding to a request from the Quebec Government for federal funding of a Quebec project. Nothing could be farther from the truth.

What is happening here is that the Minister of the Environment, on behalf of the federal Government, is working hand in glove with his counterpart in Quebec on an action plan to clean up the St. Lawrence, a major international waterway for which the federal Government has some real responsibility. We are not responding to Quebec; we are working with Quebec on a matter of common concern.

SAGUENAY REGION—THREAT TO BELUGA WHALES

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview—Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I am glad to hear the Government is working, but a very specific request has been made and I want to know if there is going to be a favourable answer. Is the answer going to be yes?

As well, there is the Saguenay region and the death of beluga whales in that area. Then there is the situation of the Aquasasne people who are subject to toxic substances coming from the U.S. What responsibility does the federal Minister have for clean up in those two particular areas?

Hon. Tom McMillan (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, I do not wish to be partisan about this issue, but I think the House would agree that for a quarter of a century, when the Liberal Party was in power, the federal Government it discriminated wildly against Quebec as far as the environment was concerned. It did do some valuable work in the Great Lakes but totally ignored the St. Lawrence as an integral part of the over-all St. Lawrence River—Great Lakes basin.

• (1425)

The Progressive Conservative Party is eager to redress a quarter-century-old imbalance. The action plan to which I made reference in my earlier response will contain some provisions earmarked for Saguenay and the better management of the beluga whales, which are very much threatened.

TOXIC WASTES IN GREAT LAKES—PRIME MINISTER'S SCHEDULED MEETING WITH UNITED STATES PRESIDENT

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview—Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct my supplementary question to the Prime Minister because it deals with the summit meeting coming up with Mr. Reagan.

We have an agreement with the United States on the removal of toxic wastes from the Great Lakes and particularly the hot sites identified earlier. Ninety per cent of those toxic substances come from the United States. We have an agreement about water quality, but there is no action on the American side.

Will the question of the actual cleanup of those hot spots, those toxic places around the Niagara region from which toxins are coming into the drinking water of Ontario and moving out into the St. Lawrence, be on the agenda with Mr. Reagan at the end of the month?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I thank my hon. friend for that important question. Indeed, that and other matters relating to the question of the environment will be on the agenda for the various meetings that I will be holding with President Reagan and the leadership of the Congress because I believe that all Parties in this House are very firmly of the view that, with regard to the Niagara situation and others, joint action on the environment is urgently required.

OFFICIAL LANGUAGES

LINGUISTIC SITUATION IN WEST—PRIME MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister.

Before leaving for the West, the Prime Minister, in answer to a question I put to him on April 12, used a reference from the 1987 Report of the Commissioner of Official Languages to inform the House that there had been, and I quote: "Substancial progress in Saskatchewan with respect to use of French."

I read the Commissioner's report, and in fact it mentions on page 159: "Special difficulties, sharp debates, confrontations over the demands for French language schools, legal battles over the right of accused persons to trials in the official language of their choice and the controversy surrounding the status and use of French in the provincial legislatures". This is entirely different from what the Prime Minister told us in the House.

I wonder whether the Prime Minister, now that he is back from his trip out West, could inform the House whether the language situation he found there corresponds to the situation described by the Commissioner of Official Languages or to the one he described in the House last week, in rather optimistic and perhaps slightly exaggerated terms.

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, at the time I was referring to... I am trying to remember the context, but I think it was a direct reference to the number of English-speaking students who were studying French in Saskatchewan, numbers which were progressing substantially, and if I am not mistaken—and I speak here to the Hon. Member—it was a rather interesting and laudatory comment by reporter William Johnson, who has an abiding interest in language issues at the national level. And I think that was widely reported. Now I may be mistaken about the person, and I can go back a few weeks to look at the file.

As for the second part of the question, last week I had meetings with the Government of Saskatchewan and with the province's Francophone leaders and other intervenors, and we will continue our work, which is to try and improve the status of this language minority in Saskatchewan.

MANDATE OF FEDERAL REPRESENTATIVES

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, I would like some clarification if possible. The federal Government presently has some negotiators or representatives, whatever it wants to call them, in Saskatchewan talking to the Government of Saskatchewan.

Can the Prime Minister tell us if these representatives of the federal Government, these high public servants, are indeed authorized to negotiate something in terms of monetary settlement or support? Are they talking specifically about a deal? Are they talking specifically about offering human resources, technical resources in translation? Are they indeed talking to the Government of Saskatchewan about the constitutional rights that exist in Saskatchewan today in terms of education?

Will he give the House the assurance that he will press Saskatchewan to respect at least that minimum in our present Constitution to give minorities access to their educational institutions?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, indeed I have stated in Saskatchewan that which I have stated here and elsewhere. In my judgment, and I believe in the view of my hon. friend, minority rights are indivisible. You either believe in the protection of minority rights or you do not. You do not believe in them three-quarters of the time or half the time. That is the position that I adopted in Saskatchewan and it is the same position in Manitoba, Quebec, or British Columbia.

When minority constitutional rights could have been constitutionalized in 1982, because that is the only way in which to protect them fully, I think it was a source of regret to everyone that that was not done. I think that is a source of deep regret not only to my hon. friend but to many of us.

Presence in the Gallery

Linguistic minorities were left hanging out in 1982. Moreover, what is a matter of deep concern to me is that at that time provincial Premiers were given the right of constitutional over-ride in certain provisions. In exchange for what? This remains to be seen.

That is the constitutional position I have taken. I deeply deplore, as do the people in Saskatchewan, that there were not better protections at that time. L'Association des fransaskois is concerned as well with the residual implications of the Supreme Court decision, as am I.

With regard to the future, Premier Devine has set out his wish that Saskatchewan become bilingual. I think it is an important step forward for Canada that a Premier of a western province make that statement. As Prime Minister of Canada, I have genuinely encouraged Premier Devine along that road. I think it would be an important new advance for Canada in this regard. To that extent representatives of the Government of Canada are there working with the representatives of the Government of Saskatchewan to bring what I hope will be a greater degree of fairness to the province, a greater degree of understanding of this sensitive matter, and a greater degree of support for the French language minority in the Province of Saskatchewan, to enable them to preserve their language, their heritage, and their contribution to Canada.

CANADA MORTGAGE AND HOUSING CORPORATION

SALE OF KITCHENER HOUSES—METHANE GAS HAZARD

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister responsible for Canada Mortgage and Housing. I gave the Minister notice of this question last week.

As the Minister knows, CMHC owns some 80 townhouses in the city of Kitchener, Ontario, that have been vacant for some eight years because it was discovered that they were located on a landfill and garbage dumpsite. The reason they are vacant is because methane gas from the dump has been migrating into the houses.

Will the Minister advise the House why CMHC is now trying to sell those houses on the private market and is claiming that it does not want to destroy the houses because it considers them to be affordable housing?

Hon. Stewart McInnes (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I am grateful to the Hon. Member for notice of the question. This is a situation which has existed for some 10 years. There is a lack of affordable housing in that particular area and we are endeavouring to respond.

We have called for private sector solutions to see if the methane gas problem can be dealt with. We have had 13 responses and are now analyzing those to see if the criteria we have put in place can be adhered to.

We will not sell those houses until we have guarantees approved by the appropriate regulatory bodies that the sales can proceed without damage to anyone.

DANGER OF GAS EXPLOSION

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Mr. Speaker, the Minister must be aware that his Department has commissioned reports which clearly indicate the danger involved in occupying these homes which are contaminated by methane gas. Does the Minister not agree with those reports which state that the only solution to the problem is to demolish the houses and excavate the garbage in those dumps? Will the Minister not agree that his proposal is really quite a hare-brained scheme? I do not know of anyone who would want to live in those houses which could explode on ignition of that methane gas.

Hon. Stewart McInnes (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, it may not be relevant, but there are five houses in the methane gas area which are now occupied and have been occupied for the past six years.

Mr. Cassidy: By non-smokers.

Mr. McInnes: Nevertheless, we recognize that there is a danger and we recognize the health problem. We will not proceed until officials give us advice that we can do so in safety.

AIRPORTS

CONSTRUCTION OF THIRD TERMINAL AT PEARSON INTERNATIONAL AIRPORT—QUERY WHY WORK NOT STARTED

Mr. Fernand Robichaud (Westmorland—Kent): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport. On June 22, 1987, the Government announced that Toronto developer Huang and Danczay Ltd., supported by consultant

Frank Moores, a friend of the Prime Minister, had won the contract for the $381-million project to build Terminal 3 at Pearson International Airport and that construction would begin in the fall of 1987.

Since the project is now some six months late and passenger congestion at Pearson has reached unprecedented levels, can the Minister explain to this House why the work has not begun? Yet privatization was supposed to speed up the whole process. What is happening on this?

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I think that my friend will admit that privatization has nothing to do with Terminal 3 in Toronto.

Yes, for all sorts of reasons, there were delays in the beginning the work began at Terminal 3 in Toronto, but I think that these issues are progessively being solved and I hope in the coming days to go to Toronto for the ground-breaking at Terminal 3.

[English]

GOVERNMENT LOAN GUARANTEES

Mr. Fernand Robichaud (Westmorland—Kent): Mr. Speaker, will the Minister confirm to the House that the real reason why work has not started at Terminal 3 is that Huang and Danczkay want more than the $70 million in loan guarantees already granted by the Government and which other bidders have already labelled as a sham and an unfair commitment never offered to the other bidders? Is the Government prepared to offer more financial support to this one developer? Are the original terms of the June 22 offer being revised?

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, it has nothing to do with what my hon. friend proposed. As I said in French, there were some complexities involved with all of this contract. We are quite sure that next Monday we will be able to perform the sod turning in Toronto.

SHIPBUILDING

CONSTRUCTION OF POLAR 8 ICE-BREAKER—STATUS OF PROJECT

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Minister of State for Transport. Since he is new at the job I have made it kind of easy. What is the current status of the Polar 8 ice-breaker project? When will construction start? Is there any good news for British Columbia?

Hon. Gerry St. Germain (Minister of State (Transport)): Mr. Speaker, first I want to thank the Hon. Member for posing the first question I will have to answer in the House after being selected to Cabinet. I want to say to all Members in the House that I am prepared to work with them in helping serve their constituents better.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. St. Germain: In regard to the Polar 8 contract which is so important to British Columbia and to the Hon. Member's riding, I can tell the Hon. Member that the project is proceeding well. The actual construction contract should take place in December of 1988 and the contract should be completed by 1992. I think this important project will not only mean jobs for British Columbians but jobs for the people in the Arctic as well.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

WINDSOR—PROBLEMS CAUSED BY UNITED STATES PROJECTS

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Right Hon. Prime Minister who knows that Windsor has been plagued by a number of environmental disputes precipitated by actions taken on the American side. These include the Detroit incinerator, the Fermi II nuclear plant and the Detroit airport expansion. None of these issues has been resolved.

Just last night the Governor of Michigan indicated to Premier Peterson that a Canadian request for the installation of pollution control devices on the incinerator had been rejected. Will the Prime Minister raise these issues with President Reagan to the end of seeking a satisfactory resolution to these horrendous environmental problems in the Windsor area?

Hon. Tom McMillan (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, the Government of Canada, and myself in particular, attach a great deal of importance to the three issues mentioned and others of import to the Windsor residents. The matter of the Detroit incinerator was raised by myself with Vice-President George Bush when he was in Ottawa. So the U.S. administration is very sensitive, indeed, to Canadian concerns and those of the Canadian Government.

As for the other two issues raised by the Hon. Member, among them Fermi II, the Government is making the most vigorous representations possible through all diplomatic and political channels available to us.

MECHANISM TO RESOLVE DISPUTES

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, the Canadian Government claims to have made vigorous interventions. The fact is that nothing has happened. Will the Prime Minister raise the serious problems resulting particularly from trans-boundary atmospheric pollution? Will he suggest to the President of the United States that a mechanism ought to be developed whereby we can have environmental impact assessment establishments on either side of the border which will affect the other country, and some mechanism designed to resolve the kinds of disputes we have in the Windsor area and other parts of Canada which are not now subject to any kind of resolution?

Hon. Tom McMillan (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, I am a little puzzled by the question because it reflects what appears to be a lack of appreciation on the part of the Hon. Member of the truth that there are now mechanisms that can be pressed into service for this kind of environmental problem. I refer, for example, to the Canada-U.S. Great Lakes Water Quality Agreement, in one context and, in another context the International Joint Commission. We have already made references to the IJC for such purposes. If the Hon. Member thinks that further representations need to be made, and that more needs to be done through the International Joint Commission and through other existing joint instruments, we would be very open to his representations in that connection.

HORTICULTURE

BEES—NEED FOR REPLACEMENT STOCKS

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Acting Minister of Agriculture in the absence of the Minister. The Minister knows that thousands of honey producers in western Canada, from Manitoba through to the Peace River country, are facing the loss of their business this year due to the Government closing the border with respect to replacement stocks of bees from the United States.

Can the Acting Minister explain what the Government is going to do with respect to this serious problem for western Canada? Some 2,500 jobs are involved and tens of millions of dollars of production of honey. There is also the impact on clover and canola crops. What is the Government going to do to provide assistance with respect to bringing in replacement stocks of bees from non-infected countries or areas?

Mr. Lee Clark (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, as the Hon. Member knows, the federal Government has responded to the request on the part of nine provincial beekeepers' associations throughout Canada to take the necessary precautions to close the door to Canada because of the presence of the Varroa mite in many States of the United States. Our concern in doing that, of course, was to protect the well-being of the Canadian honey industry in general. We recognize in doing that that there is, of course, a very substantial disadvantage to those who have been buying packaged bees.

The industry has worked with the Department to try to ensure that supplies are made available to be brought into Canada from alternative sources such as Australia and New Zealand. Of course, as the Member also knows, the inclusion of the honey industry in the Special Grains Program was a first this year. We hope that as well will help ease the financial crisis being experienced by honey producers.

REQUEST THAT HONEY PRODUCERS BE GIVEN GOVERNMENT COMPENSATION

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, what we want to know is when the Government is going to provide assistance to bring in replacement bees from other countries, and not the history of why the border was closed. The Government has dawdled so long since January 1 in carrying this out. Is it now prepared to provide direct compensation to these honey producers who are facing the loss of their business and losses of tens of millions of dollars?

Mr. Lee Clark (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, again as the Hon. Member knows, the Government has a responsibility to try to make decisions for the betterment of the industry as a whole. In doing that, we have acted in very close co-operation with the provincial honey producers' associations. We have been following their advice. We have also been trying to provide guidance in terms of location of those available alternative sources.

As I said before, the fact that there has already been a payment under the Special Grains Program, we believe will assist those producers who need help at this particular time. I would also point out that some provincial Departments of Agriculture in western Canada have responded very, very well to the needs of their own honey producers by making special grants available. Unfortunately, there are certain provinces in the Prairies which have not accepted that responsibility, so there is a certain disparity for honey producers in western Canada. Perhaps elections in the future will change that.

SASKATCHEWAN—CONSTRUCTION OF DAM ON SOURIS RIVER

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of the Environment. I am sure he is aware that the Saskatchewan Government has started construction of the Rafferty Dam on the Souris River which is located in the Premier's riding. I am sure he is also aware that under the International River Improvements Act this construction requires a licence from the federal Government. Has the Government of Saskatchewan applied for this licence? Has the licence been granted? If the licence has not been granted, will the Minister seek an injunction to stop the Province of Saskatchewan from proceeding with construction of this dam?

Hon. Tom McMillan (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is correct in saying that a permit is required under the International River Improvements Act, for which purpose the Government of Saskatchewan has made an application. I believe the application was received by my Department, which administers the relevant Act, in January. Due process is being followed.

The Government of Saskatchewan will have to satisfy the Government of Canada that issues surrounding the quantity and quality of the water, will be resolved in favour of the environment. I have followed the matter with keen personal interest, of course at a distance, to ensure that the integrity of the process is preserved. I am advised by my most senior officials that every environmental consideration is being factored into the equation.

REQUEST THAT CONSTRUCTION BE HALTED PENDING ISSUANCE OF LICENCE

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the same Minister. Despite what the Minister has stated, the fact is that the Saskatchewan Government has proceeded with construction. It has built several coffer dams which deflect the flow of this river. This is clearly illegal under the International River Improvements Act.

• (1450)

Will the Minister assure us that the federal Environmental Assessment Review Process will be followed before a licence is issued? Will the Minister ask the Government of Saskatchewan to stop construction until it gets its licence?

Hon. Tom McMillan (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, I said in my first answer that an application had been made. The permit has yet to be issued. I will not pronounce now, since it would be premature to do so, on whether a permit will be issued. The building of the coffer dams is not in contravention of the relevant Act because it does not yet have an effect on the inter-basin flows as far as international and national jurisdictions are concerned.

I can tell the Hon. Member, in response to his question, that the Federal Environmental Assessment and Review Process is now being followed.

Oral Questions

CANADA POST CORPORATION

EMPLOYEE SEMINAR MEETINGS

Mr. Alfonso Gagliano (Saint-Léonard—Anjou): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister responsible for Canada Post Corporation. Canada Post buses its employees to downtown luxury hotels in maximum security and secrecy to show videos of the Post Office, while ordering them to leave their jobs unattended and the mail on the floor while at the meetings.

If Canada Post is performing so well, why all these supersecrets about these meetings? If these meetings are regular why is there all this security, with walkie-talkies in people's hands while walking around the hotel forbidding anyone to get close to the meeting place? What does Canada Post have to hide?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I presume the Hon. Member is asking a question about an erroneous television report from BC TV. What Canada Post was doing, which is what most corporations do, was holding a seminar for its employees to which employees were invited to attend on a voluntary basis. It had to do with internal communications and trying to encourage the employees to treat customers like real customers, to recognize there is competition and that they should be polite in dealing with customers.

If the Hon. Member finds that an insidious activity on the part of Canada Post, then that is his opinion. It is not one that I share.

Mr. Gagliano: Mr. Speaker, I would like to inform the Minister that these meetings are going on not only in Vancouver but also in Montreal.

[Translation]

MAIL DELIVERY—MEETING COSTS—MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Alfonso Gagliano (Saint-Léonard—Anjou): While Canada Post wants to improve its employees' morale by showing them videos in luxury hotels, who is delivering the mail left on the ground and who pays? How much will these meetings, to be held across the country by the end of May cost?

[English]

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, if the Hon. Member wants to know how much it costs to rent a room in a hotel, why does he not phone the hotel? This is somewhat of an absurd question to raise in Question Period.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Andre: When this meeting was set up by Canada Post one of the union shop stewards, one to whom the Hon. Member seems to listen all the time, called the television studio to say that Canada Post was having a secret meeting to lay off some employees. When it turned out to be false, of course the union was a little embarrassed. It is now trying to cover up by giving this erroneous information to the Hon. Member who dutifully brings it forward to the House of Commons, wasting the time of everyone here.

FISHERIES

COMMERCIAL FISHING AND PROCESSING INDUSTRY IN BRITISH COLUMBIA

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans. I am sure all Members of the House are aware that over the weekend and again yesterday the Socred Minister responsible for environment and fisheries in B.C. suggested that the commercial fishing and processing industry in B.C. should be shut down.

Will the Minister advise the House what formal steps he has taken to protest the attacks on an industry that produced over $750 million in product last year alone, and make it clear to the Canadian public and to the B.C. public that this is a viable, wealth producing industry and that it has its place on the B.C. coast?

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, when I heard of the statements attributed to the Hon. Mr. Strachan I could not believe that he could have said what he is said to have said. Therefore I intend to be calling him in the next 24 hours to find out if indeed he did say what he was reported to have said with respect to the commercial fishery. At the same time I intend to set him straight if he feels that in any way we could sacrifice this very important industry on the Pacific Coast of Canada employing 20,000 to 25,000 Canadians, fishermen and shore workers, and producing some three-quarters of a billion dollars worth of wealth to the British Columbia and Canadian economy each year.

I intend to ensure that he has his figures straight, and that we recognize that all of those who enjoy the opportunity to have access to our precious salmon resources share equitably in that benefit.

REQUEST THAT MINISTER CONVENE MEETING OF ALL INTERESTED PARTIES

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, the B.C. Minister has been variously described as a lunatic, and other things. I would like to know why the Minister of Fisheries is waiting to call him.

Since both Ministers have failed miserably to seek consensus among the competing user groups in B.C., and since the B.C. Government has now thrown down the gauntlet and escalated the conflict to new heights, will the Minister today agree to take steps before the end of May to pull together the competing user groups in B.C., native, sports and commercial groups, to a summit meeting in British Columbia to find common ground before obtaining consensus in British Columbia is impossible?

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, I do not normally make a practice of calling persons lunatics in a hurry.

I do not know to what crisis the Hon. Member is referring. In fact, we are involving all user groups in consultation on all important fishery matters. I treat them with an even-handedness and a sense of concern for all of their problems, as I will continue to do.

CANADA ELECTIONS ACT

REQUEST FOR AMENDMENTS TO PROHIBIT FINANCING OF MUNICIPAL ELECTION CANDIDATES

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Deputy Prime Minister. I am sure that he is aware of the fact that the Province of Ontario has just introduced legislation which will give a financial contributor to a municipal political candidate a deduction from real estate property taxes for that contribution.

Will the Deputy Prime Minister assure the House that he will move immediately to introduce amendments to the Canada Elections Act to ensure that the devious minds in the NDP do not find a way to rip off the taxpayers of Canada further by giving the contributors to their municipal candidates both the deduction from property taxes and also, in addition to that, the immoral deduction from federal income taxes which the NDP presently gives?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I think that all Canadians will be grateful for the watchful eye of the Hon. Member.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mazankowski: I can advise him and other Hon. Members of the House that there are a number of suggested amendments to the Canada Elections Act that we are now considering. What I am presently trying to determine is whether it might be better to seek unanimous consent of all Members of the House to withdraw this Bill and to rewrite it, incorporating some of the new amendments, or whether we can work out some way in which the amendments can be incorporated. However, that is something that I will be taking up with the House Leaders in the next few days.

FERMI II NUCLEAR GENERATING PLANT—ROLE OF INTERNATIONAL JOINT COMMISSION

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of the Environment. Earlier in Question Period I understood him to say that matters such as the Fermi II nuclear generating plant could be dealt with through the International Joint Commission. I want to ask him is he not aware that the International Joint Commission has no reference giving it a mandate to deal with matters like Fermi II.

Is he not aware that after I requested the Secretary of State for External Affairs to get the U.S. Government to agree to such a reference, the Secretary of State for External Affairs rejected that request? I want to know why he is telling Members of the House and the public that the IJC has a role to deal with Fermi II when his own Government is refusing to get the United States to agree to a reference which would give the IJC a mandate to go into this important matter.

Hon. Tom McMillan (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, I think that a careful reading of the "blues" by the Hon. Member will support me when I say that my reference to the International Joint Commission was with respect to the Detroit incinerator and not Fermi II.

• (1500)

REQUEST FOR REFERRAL TO INTERNATIONAL JOINT COMMISSION

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask the Minister of the Environment if he would join with me in urging his colleague, the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark), to reopen and rethink his previous refusal of my request, and get him to agree to ask the United States to agree to a reference of the Fermi II and other similar matters to the International Joint Commission to allow the International Joint Commission to monitor Fermi II on an ongoing basis.

Will the Minister of the Environment be serious about his mandate to protect the environment in the Windsor area, and join with me in order that some action can be taken on this important matter which is so worrisome to the people of Windsor and Essex County?

Hon. Tom McMillan (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member will know that one of his idols, Premier Peterson of Ontario, made a very vigorous representation to his opposite number in the State of Michigan on this and several other environmental matters, and struck out. It is, therefore, understandable that the House Leader of the Liberal Party would come to the floor of the House of Commons and make this type of appeal.

I commit myself and the Government of Canada to the cause. We have been following every possible legal and political route. We have had some genuine success. I do not think that the Hon. Member should be so wedded to the International Joint Commission that he rules out other possibilities that the federal Government itself is at present entertaining. I am open to representations from the Hon. Member and his Party on this as on other matters.

IMMIGRATION

ABUSERS OF CANADIAN POLICY

Mr. Ross Belsher (Fraser Valley East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. The House is now aware that last Saturday 22 Chinese arrived at Vancouver International Airport claiming refugee status; on Sunday, 18 Iranians did the same; on Monday, two Sri Lankans and eight more Chinese repeated this action. None of those people were carrying proper documentation.

What is the legal position of the Government with regard to action that can be taken against abusers of our immigration policy?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for his question. As the Hon. Member knows, if people arrive in Canada without proper documentation there is a process to be followed in terms of immigration officials. As long as we are aware that people will show up for their immigration hearing, we do not like to detain them. We are not in the business of detaining people. As soon as we receive that assurance, we do not detain them any longer. That is why we need the two immigration Bills C-84 and C-55 in order that we can turn around as soon as possible refugee claimants who are not genuine.

The immigration officials deal with each of those cases on an individual basis when they first arrive in Canada.

Mr. Speaker: This will be the last single question of Question Period. The Hon. Member for Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

GUATEMALA—SAFETY OF OPPOSITION LEADERS

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Yesterday, when the five leaders of the political opposition returned to Guatemala two of them, Rigoberto Menchu and Rolando Castillo, were arrested and subsequently released.

Given the precarious nature of human rights in Guatemala where political kidnappings and disappearances still take place, will the Canadian Government make representations to the Government of Guatemala indicating Canadian concern for the continued safety of the five opposition leaders who have returned to Guatemala as part of the reconciliation process that was called for by the Esquipulas Accord?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, two of the Guatemalan leaders in exile who returned to Guatemala on April 18 were arrested as they deplaned. They have since been released, which we welcome, and think that it will encourage further moderation and dialogue in Guatemala.

Our Ambassador to Guatemala has expressed to the President the concern of Canadians with respect to the safety and well-being of those individuals. We will continue to make representations in that respect.

We should note that the human rights situation in Guatemala has improved considerably since the election of a civilian government. That is at least a step in the right direction.

Mr. Speaker: I have several observations with respect to the matter that is in front of the House at the present time.

[Translation]

There are 31 motions in amendment for consideration at the report stage of Bill C-74, an Act respecting the protection of the environment and human life and health. After much deliberation and especially discussion with the concerned Members, I am now ready to make a ruling on the grouping and voting pattern for the report stage.

[English]

Motions Nos. 1, 5(a) and 31 standing in the name of the Hon. Member for Cochrane—Superior (Mr. Penner) cause the Chair some procedural difficulty. I will deal with parts (b) and (c) of motion No. 5 later. These three motions in amendment refer to aboriginal peoples. The Hon. Member is attempting to introduce into Bill C-74 a definition of aboriginal peoples which is designated in section 35 of the Constitution Act. Unfortunately, by inserting this particular definition, the Hon. Member is increasing the scope of the Bill to a stage beyond what was agreed to at second reading. The only reference already included in the Bill is to reserves or surrendered lands subject to the Indian Act which, of course, concerns Indians or Métis but not specifically Cree or Naskapi bands. Therefore, I am of the opinion that to include this particular definition of "Aboriginal Peoples" takes the Bill beyond what was originally envisaged, consequently I must rule these amendments out of order. Therefore, motions Nos. 1, 5(a) and 31 will not be put to the House.

Motion No. 2 standing in the name of the Hon. Member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia) was moved in the committee during its study of the Bill. The legislative committee had debated at length similar amendments which were negatived on recorded divisions. Nevertheless, after consultation with the Hon. Member, he has made the case that this matter of "establishing national standards" is of such significance that it warrants further consideration as permitted under Standing Order 114(10). Accordingly, Motion No. 2 will be debated and voted upon separately.

Motions Nos. 3, 5(b), 5(c), 7, 20, and 21 standing in the name of the Hon. Member for Cochrane—Superior (Mr. Penner) are also a cause of some procedural difficulty to the Chair. Each of these motions in amendment attempts to insert into the Bill additional aspects based upon the James Bay and Northern Quebec agreement. These further motions go beyond the scope of the clauses which they attempt to amend. However important and worthy these proposed changes may be, I feel that I must declare them procedurally unacceptable in accordance with Beauchesne's Fifth edition at Citation 773(1). Consequently, they will not be put to the House.

[Translation]

Motions numbered 4, 14 and 25 are acceptable and will be debated together but voted on as follows. Motion No. 4 will be voted upon separately and the vote on motion No. 14 will apply to motion No. 25.

[English]

Motions Nos. 6, 8 and 9 are in order and will be debated together but voted on separately.

Motions Nos. 10 and 11, standing in the name of the Hon. Members for Cochrane—Superior (Mr. Penner) and Davenport (Mr. Caccia) respectively, are similar to amendments debated and negatived in committee. Therefore, in accordance with Standing Order 114(10), I shall not put them to the House for further debate.

[Translation]

Motions Nos. 12 and 13 are in order and will be debated together but voted upon separately.

[English]

Motions Nos. 15, 16, 19 are in order and will be debated together but voted upon separately.

Motions Nos. 17 and 18 are acceptable and will be debated and voted upon separately.

Motion No. 22 standing in the name of the Hon. Member for Broadview—Greenwood (Ms. McDonald) causes the Chair some procedural difficulty. The clause which the Hon. Member proposes to amend concerns air pollution in countries other than Canada in possible violation of an international agreement. The proposal of the Hon. Member deals with air pollution in a province within Canada. Therefore, I must rule this motion in amendment inadmissible in accordance with Beauchesne's Citation 773(1) in that it goes beyond the scope of the clause.

Motions Nos. 23 and 24 are in order but will be debated and voted upon separately.

Motions Nos. 26, 27 and 28 will be debated together but voted upon separately.

[Translation]

Motions Nos. 29 and 30 are acceptable and will be debated together but voted upon separately.

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport) moved:

Motion No. 2

That Bill C-74 be amended in Clause 2 by striking out lines 19 and 20 at page 2 and substituting the following therefor:

(f) endeavour to establish national standards of environmental quality.

He said: Madam Speaker, I want to thank you for the acceptance of this motion which is extremely important. It deals with a question that strikes at the very heart of the Bill itself having to do with the importance of recognizing the establishment of national standards of environmental quality.

The Bill as worded now is weak and reveals on the part of the Government a lack of political will in acting as it speaks. The Government announced that this Bill is the greatest measure to clean up the environment, which it does not, and will open up a new era for the protection of the environment from damage that could be caused by new products, which it does attempt to do. But in endeavouring to do that the Government shies away, it withdraws and is afraid to put forward and entrench in the Bill, which is to be known as the Canadian Environmental Protection Act, the notion that it will establish national standards of environmental quality for the protection of Canadians.

It is interesting to note, and I want to bring it to your attention as forcefully as I can, Madam Speaker, that when this Bill was the object of public consultations in draft form it had in it exactly what I am proposing this afternoon. I draw your attention to page one of the draft Bill entitled Proposed Environmental Protection Act. On page one you will find in subparagraph (b) the following:

provide leadership in the establishment of nationally consistent standards of environmental quality,

I repeat, "standards of environmental quality". That phrase has disappeared and one wonders why because it was a good phrase. It received substantial and widespread support throughout the country in the process of public consultation, but it has gone. This is why at committee it became absolutely essential to put forward again this phrase, this concept, that in the duties of the Government in applying this Bill national standards of environmental quality be established. Instead what we have here, and what we object to, is this phrase which simply says "endeavour to establish nationally consistent levels of environmental quality". This is a far cry, quite different and extremely weak in comparison to the wording, "establish national standards of environmental quality".

The way the Bill is drafted now puts the emphasis on consistency. The way that Motion No.2 as proposed by us reads is to establish national standards. The difference that I want to bring out as clearly as I can is between the public relations effort of the Government in appearing to be the defender of environmental quality and the substance it delivered.

There was the impression, as I read from page 1, subparagraph (b), that the Government would provide leadership in the establishment of nationally consistent standards of environmental quality, but when it comes to the crunch the Government retreats into the words, "nationally consistent levels of environmental quality". What a sham, Madam Speaker. No wonder Canadians are catching up with the Government because they are beginning to see through the smokescreen which the Government has attempted to create not only with environmental matters. Here is a glowing and classical example of abandonment of the Government's stand when it launched the Bill and the substance we are facing today at report stage debate. This is why we objected in committee.

I am glad and very grateful to the Chair for having overruled the Chairman of the committee who ruled out of order what is now Motion No. 2 when we were in committee. I am extremely grateful because Mr. Speaker understood the importance of this amendment, its validity and its acceptability as we now have an opportunity to debate it in the light of the ruling a few minutes ago.

I cannot stress sufficiently and with enough vigour and passion the importance of this clause covered in Motion No. 2. When a government retreats from the policy concept of establishing national standards into the comfortable mushy world of endeavouring to establish nationally consistent levels, the Government does a 180 turnaround and says "Look, what we are really going to achieve is the lowest common denominator, that is what we will accept". The lowest, weakest standard that will be established in one part of the country will become our guiding principle in the application of our duties in relation to this particular legislation. There will no longer be national standards but only consistency. There will no longer be the strongest possible standards from the point of view of the public interest. We will only use what the weakest element in the link will be willing to accept. I do not want to mention any region or any particular province because that would be unfair and premature.

I draw your attention, Madam Speaker, to the serious implication of the departure in political and policy terms that this Government has made by abandoning the concept that existed in the draft legislation and what came out of the committee as a result of the clause-by-clause analysis. I see you are indicating that my time is up, Madam Speaker. I will sit down, but again I want to express my gratitude to the Chair for having overruled the decision, thus permitting the debate on this particular amendment to occur today.

Mrs. Pauline Browes (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of the Environment): Madam Speaker, we are very pleased that this Bill has now proceeded to report stage on the floor of the House of Commons. We spent many weeks on it in committee. We debated a number of amendments that were put to the committee, and of all the committees on which I have worked, it seems to me that there was the greatest amount of co-operation extended on the legislative committee on this Bill under the direction of Barry Turner, the chairman at the time, and I know you are telling me that I should not be mentioning any names, Madam Speaker, but I have forgotten his riding, one of those great Ottawa ridings.

A number of witnesses appeared before the committee. A number of amendments were debated, the vast majority of which were passed. The members of the committee had the sense that we wanted this to be the finest environment Bill that had ever come to the House of Commons because this is the first environment Bill that has come to the House of Commons for 11 years. The amendment before us indeed was debated at great length in the committee. The amendment deals with national standards as opposed to nationally consistent levels.

For the first time, the Canadian Environmental Protection Act will provide an ecosystem management approach to environmental protection, an approach that protects the Canadian environment against the contamination of our air, our waterways, our soils and the marine environment. For the first time, we will have an Act with real teeth.

Clause 33 of the Canadian Environmental Protection Bill gives the Government broad powers to regulate against substances that harm the health and/or the environment of Canada and its citizens. These regulations will define national standards of control on the toxic substances now threatening our nation.

The Hon. Member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia), who has just spoken, proposed a seemingly minor amendment to the administrative duties section of the Bill. He has recommended that we make one word change by substituting the word "levels" for the word "standards" so that subclause 2(f) would require the Government of Canada to endeavour to establish nationally consistent standards, not levels, of environmental quality.

Although I recognize the Hon. Member's intention is to further strengthen this important piece of legislation, to adopt his seemingly innocent word change would be to impair the very goal he seeks. Consider the fact that subclause 2(f) lies within the administrative duties part of the Bill, the part that establishes the framework for the functioning of the Bill. It establishes a framework of flexibility, reflecting the very complexity of environmental management in a country this size and in this day and age.

The establishment of environmental standards, as requested by the Hon. Member, is an option under the Bill's regulatory apparatus. The replacement of the word "levels" with the word "standards" under the administrative duties part of the Bill would limit its regulatory powers to but one regulatory option which would be that of standards.

The Canadian Environmental Protection Bill, by signalling the Government's intention to establish nationally consistent levels, not standards, of environmental quality, is also signalling its refusal to limit itself to just one option of environmental control. The word "levels" allows for a range of regulatory possibilities, guidelines for industries to follow, objectives to be aimed at, codes of practice to be adhered to, standards to be achieved and outright bans to be implemented if required.

Canada's acid rain program is a case in point. The federal Government did not establish standards that would have prescribed emission limits at specific sources. Rather, it established an objective, the famous 20 kilograms of sulphur dioxide per hectare per year, as necessary for the protection of the Canadian environment. The provinces east of Saskatchewan have agreed to that objective and each of them is working to control its emissions to help meet that objective.

Flexibility of action is the key here. The provinces have different industries with different technologies. How they meet that objective is left to them. To call for national standards of environmental quality is to restrict unduly the many options for environmental control and to impair the capacity of the Government to offer Canadians the environmental protection they are demanding. I would ask that Hon. Members reject the proposed amendment to subclause 2(f).

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview—Greenwood): Madam Speaker, I rise to support the amendment proposed by the Hon. Member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia), and I would like to thank the Chair for allowing this debate on such an important matter by in effect overruling the decision of the committee which tried to dispose of it by simply denying the importance of this question. We will now have a debate in the House on this absolutely crucial, vital matter.

Subclause 2(f) of the Bill simply says that we endeavour to establish nationally consistent levels of environmental quality. That is the obligation set out in the Bill, but the obligation is to establish nationally consistent levels, and the clause only requires that we endeavour to do so. How weak can the wording be? The amendment merely asks that we endeavour to establish national standards of environmental equality. I believe the wording ought to be far, far stronger than that.

The Brundtland Commission report entitled Our Common Future, The World Commission on Environment and Development, concluded the following:

> —national governments should establish clear environmental goals and enforce environmental laws, regulations, incentives and standards on industrial enterprises.
> This should normally be done at the national level with local governments being empowered to exceed, but not to lower, national norms.

• (1530)

This is a proposal of the UN World Commission headed by the Prime Minister of Norway. The report has been approved in principle by the federal and provincial Governments. They say in principle we want this excellent protection for the environment, but here we have a specific piece of legislation and they do not stand up to be counted. They are not there when it comes to actually having national standards. Guidelines are weaker.

The committee heard in detail from environmental groups coast to coast, national, provincial and local groups, all kinds of experts and concerned citizens, about environmental protection and the need for really strong national standards. Let me just quote some of the advice given to the committee, now to the House, and so far ignored by the Government. Pollution Probe is a major environmental group and I quote them:

> In Clause 8, CEPA leaves out one of the strongest tools that can be used for environmental protection—legally enforceable standards. Not all numbers related to environmental protection need to be standards, but not to have the option of using them is simply short-sighted, and limits available tools for use in the future.

I could not agree more. Let me quote Friends of the Earth:

> The Bill should provide the opportunity to set numeric standards for ambient environmental quality, discharge limitations, or any other area which can be appropriately regulated in this manner and delete the reference to guidelines since they would allow for displacement of truly enforceable regulatory tools.

It is perfectly clear what the advice is but, I am sorry to say, it is being ignored by the Government. Let me quote the Environmental Law Centre, a major source of expertise on the subject:

> It is unfortunate that the guidelines to be formulated by the Minister will not be legally binding. They should be given legislative force and enacted as regulations. The Minister should be given authority to issue standards.

The language is perfectly clear. Toxic Watch Project said this:

> The absence of the word "standards" from this clause is a concern especially since CEPA repeals the Clean Air Act. The federal government must be able to set standards since only standards can be enforced.

To quote that group further:

> The federal government should have the ability to set national minimum standards with provincial authority to exceed such standards.

I heartily agree that the provinces should have the opportunity to set higher standards where they believe they are necessary for conditions in their own provinces. However, we should have nothing but the best national standards to ensure there will not be pollution ghettos and that some province will opt out or there will be negotiations whereby some kind of agreed upon objective is accepted as the only one politically saleables. In short, one that is not good enough.

Let me quote the Canadian Labour Congress, which participated in these hearings:

> The federal government should have authority to establish strong minimum national standards.

Let me be clear that this kind of advice came from all across the country. No province with environmental groups said anything different. All across the country there is agreement that environmental questions require minimum national standards. Why? Because environmentalists understand that pollution does not stop at provincial or municipal boundaries. Rivers cross international and provincial boundaries. Underground water crosses all kinds of boundaries. This very parochial approach does not take into account the reality that all life is connected, that pollution travels by air and by water, and that it is extremely important to have thoroughly adequate national standards.

Some of us thought we were going to get them. We thought we were going to get something at least close. The Minister stated earlier that there would be consultation with the provinces. He said that under the new amendment the federal Government is not compelled to consult with the provinces before taking action in cases where it is going to be necessary to act without it. Instead, where a province can convince the federal Government that its regulations are as strong or stronger than federal regulations and that the province is actively enforcing them, both Governments can enter into an agreement that ensures the requirements of the federal legislation are met.

The idea was that the federal Minister of the Environment (Mr. McMillan) would publish a report on the status of agreements worked out with the provinces and they would be made public so people would be able to look at the adequacy of the agreements. Further, any group of 12 provincial residents can petition the federal Minister if they believe the province is failing to honour the agreement. In that case the federal Minister would be required to investigate and respond within 90 days. The Minister said the effect of the relevant provisions would be to create a mechanism for provincial accountability for the environment through federal statute. In his view those provisions, along with others in the Act, have the potential to create an unprecedented level of integration and co-operation between the federal and provincial Governments on environmental issues in a way which respects the jurisdiction of both.

That is what the Minister said. Subsequently he introduced new amendments that went against it. We saw the Bill being weakened. I think it is extremely unfortunate that the very high standards Canadians wanted are not going to be achieved at all in this Bill. We hope there will be some modest effort toward reducing pollution in the future but we should not have any illusions at all that this Bill will achieve any kind of clean-up whatsoever.

Therefore, I very much support the wording proposed by the Hon. Member for Davenport. It is modest but it is certainly in the spirit of the Brundtland Commission report. It is strongly supported by environmental groups across the country and would indeed make the Act stronger and contribute to giving Canadians the kind of protection they want for the environment. I strongly urge all Hon. Members to accept this amendment because we will end up with a far better Bill.

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Madam Speaker, I was very impressed with the amendment presented by my colleague from Davenport. He may well be referred to as the Hon. Member from Italy or Zimbabwe or the European National Council because he is internationally renowned in the field of environmental studies, environment control, and certainly very knowledgeable in the field of pollution. If he felt there was an error in the way the Government structured the wording of this Bill, I suggest that we pay close attention to what he has to say.

Obviously this Bill will be touted by the Government as a great piece of pollution control. It will be a feather in the cap of the Government, a centre-piece of the Government's approach on the election trail. Yet it really is a bunch of smoke and mirrors that does not clean up the environment and control pollution. Let us not have any illusions. If the Government is serious about going through with a very important piece of legislation, let it be open enough to acknowledge the fact that we have to strengthen it. That, it seems to me, is not such a terrible thing. I think it would be in the Government's best interests.

The Parliamentary Secretary said it is just a minor word we are talking about, that all the Hon. Member wants to do is change the word "levels" to "standards", and I think that speaks reams.

• (1540)

I would suggest that the Meech Lake virus is creeping in here. The Member knows that within the Meech Lake concept one must establish national standards in order for the provincial governments to co-operate with the federal Government. That is exactly what they are trying to avoid doing by establishing the proper wording which has been recommended by my colleague, that is:

> That Bill C-74 be amended in Clause 2 by striking out lines 19 and 20 at page 2 and substituting the following therefor:
> "(f) endeavour to establish national standards of environmental quality;"

—instead of leaving it as it presently is under "Administrative Duties", "Duties of the Government of Canada":

> (f) endeavour to establish nationally consistent levels of environmental quality;"

You and I, Madam Speaker, know very well that we have had enough examples of the establishment of low quality criteria in some provinces while other provinces have been very concerned and very effective. To include this clause puts the lowest common denominator in place rather than the approach which my colleague has suggested which has been supported by the Member for Broadview—Greenwood (Ms. McDonald).

We are asking the Government to adopt this seemingly innocent change which has a powerful impact and is worth serious consideration rather than the light approach taken by the Member of the Government. This is an enforceable tool which makes it worth while. I am very glad that the Member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia) brought this forward so that we can address it.

The Brundtland Commission said that we should establish and enforce national standards on enterprises. We need this excellent protection. As the Member for Broadview—Greenwood pointed out, pollution does not recognize boundaries whether international, national, provincial, or municipal. If this will enable us to effect that kind of change the Government should gladly accept it and be appreciative of what the Member for Davenport has done.

I want to conclude by quoting something said by Mr. Higgins, a senior Canadian Government official, before the committee. He said:

> The term "standard" in the context of environmental quality standard is one that has had some considerable debate within the environmental regulatory community in Canada. In terms of developing water quality guidelines, the Canadian Council of Resource and Environment Ministers attempted to define various terms to allow for a differentiation of them. Perhaps I could read what they have described as a water quality standard:
> "It is an objective that is recognized in enforceable environmental control laws of a level of government.
> I think that is what the committee is suggesting—that members of the committee would like to see, within this particular section of the legislation, the ability of the Minister to set such standards, which would be enforceable in law.

That is what is wrong with many of the Bills the Government has brought in. They all say certain things in essence but have no teeth which enable us to move forward in a concrete way in order to realize the goals which are enunciated but not carried out in the legislation. This is a perfect example of such misuse of words and intent. I hope that the House will support the motion put forward by the Hon. Member.

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay—Atikokan): Madam Speaker, I want to participate briefly in the grouping of motions before us. I am particularly interested in the clause which relates to legally enforceable standards. It is important that we place in law the strength necessary to provide rules that make clear what is required. Not all aspects of environmental protection need to be chiselled in stone, but we must be able to examine them and adhere to them.

In Clause 8, for example, the Canadian Environmental Protection Act leaves out one of the strongest tools that can be used for environmental protection, that is, legally enforceable standards. Not all numbers related to environmental protection need to be standards, but not to have the option of using them is simply short-sighted and limits available tools for use in the future.

Pollution Probe has recommended that the authority to set standards should be added to Clause 8 wherever it is now limited to objective, guidelines, and codes of practice. Clearly, "objectives, guidelines, and codes of practice" are kind of fuzzy. They are subject to interpretation and abuse, if you like.

However, when placed in law they become, if I can use the analogy, like a zoning by-law in a municipality. In order to change them one must go through a set process. If any government wanted to change those standards, to make them either stronger or weaker, it would have to come before this Parliament to do so. It would require a Bill and the kind of public notification and public debate that is occurring with regard to this Bill today. I think it is important that we provide that level of protection for our environment to ensure that any changes over and above those provided for by this Act must come before this House in order that the public is made aware of the changes desired.

The Bill should provide the opportunity to set numeric standards for ambient environmental quality, discharge limitations, or any other area which can be appropriately regulated in this manner and delete the reference to guidelines since they would allow for displacement of truly enforceable regulatory tools.

Also, codes of practice should not be part of the Department's legislative mandate. The development of such codes may be an internal tool for regulated parties to achieve compliance but should not replace regulatory or legal requirements.

I think it makes eminent sense that this amendment be accepted. It provides the Bill with stronger teeth and much more rigid adherence to the protection of our environment.

Mr. David Berger (Laurier): Madam Speaker, I understand that the time I have is somewhat limited. I will therefore try to state concisely why I agree with my colleagues that this provision in Section 2 of the Act is a cop-out compared to the language found in the proposed Environmental Protection Act which was circulated by the Minister of the Environment (Mr. McMillan) some time ago.

Section (b) of the discussion paper which was circulated to interested parties throughout the country said that the Department's responsibilities were to include providing leadership—and I stress the word "leadership"—in the establishment of nationally consistent standards of environmental quality. I think that the word which should be stressed in the second part of this objective is "standard".

The legislation which we are studying today as amended by the legislative committee talks about the responsibility of the department to establish nationally consistent levels of environmental quality. Therefore, I say it is a cop-out because, first, the word "leadership" has been removed. Quite clearly the Government does not want to take the bold step of saying that leadership should be part of its role as a national government.

The Government is not prepared to say that it should be the role of the Parliament of Canada and agencies of this Parliament and the national Government to speak for all of Canada and provide national leadership which can only come from a body that speaks for the whole of the country.

We are familiar with the Meech Lake agreement. As my colleague, the Member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia) has described it, the Meech Lake virus has found its way into the area of environmental protection. Quite clearly, the Government is reluctant to express it in those kinds of terms. It is reluctant to assume leadership. Again, I think this is reflected in the change of the word "standards" to "levels", whatever "levels" means.

I recall Professor Al Johnston who appeared before the joint committee of the House of Commons and Senate. He referred to the significance of the word "standard". He related it to the Canada Health Act which contains objectives to promote the health and well-being of Canadians, but then lists a set of standards which include such things as accessibility, universality, and comprehensiveness of a national health care plan with which the federal Government requires the provinces to comply with in order not to be penalized financially under the Canada Health Act.

This is the kind of standard which should be included in the environmental protection Bill. I am not saying the federal Government should devise these standards and impose them without any form of consultation because clearly there should be consultation among all levels of government and all interested parties. However, at some point someone has to decide what is in the national interest and clearly that is the role of the Parliament of Canada and the federal department or agency.

I deplore the fact that these changes have been made to this legislation. They are clearly not just semantic differences. These differences reflect themselves in many of the provisions of this Bill which we will be addressing during this report stage. Therefore, I wish to support the amendment of my colleague, the Member for Davenport, who argues that Clause 2 should be amended by striking out the text we find in lines 19 and 20 at page 2 and adding that it is the role of the department to endeavour to establish national standards of environmental quality.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The question is on Motion No. 2 standing in the name of the Hon. Member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia). Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): In my opinion, the yeas have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Pursuant to Standing Order 114(11), the recorded division on the proposed motion stands deferred.

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview—Greenwood) moved:

Motion No. 4.

That Bill C-74 be amended in Clause 2 by adding immediately after line 28 at page 2 the following:

'(j) endeavour to act expeditiously to assess whether substances in use in Canada are toxic or capable of becoming toxic.'

Motion No. 14.

That Bill C-74 be amended by adding immediately after line 38 at page 10 the following:

'14. Where a substance has been specified on the Priority substance list for a period of five years and the Ministers have not yet assessed whether the substance is toxic or capable of becoming toxic, any person may file a notice of objection with the Minister requesting that a board of review be established under section 88.'

Motion No. 25

That Bill C-74 be amended in Clause 88 by adding immediately after line 35 at page 65 the following:

'(5) Where a person files with the Minister a notice of objection under subsection 13(2) in respect of failure to make a decision about whether a substance is toxic the Minister shall establish a board of review to inquire into whether the substance is toxic or capable of becoming toxic.'

She said: Madam Speaker, I simply want to explain the purpose of these three motions. They reflect the frustration that many of us felt at committee stage that the Government was not prepared to implement sufficiently strong measures and particularly to move expeditiously to review the toxic chemicals. If the Government could have given us firm guarantees in the legislation, these amendments would not have been necessary.

The first motion simply seeks to add a new clause which states that the Minister shall endeavour to act expeditiously to assess whether substances in use in Canada are toxic or capable of becoming toxic. We were unable to get any specific time frame in the legislation, so this at least gives the Minister some direction to act expeditiously.

The problem has been caused by slow response. There are substances which for years have been known to be toxic. Experts have raised objections and environmental groups have protested. Yet there has been a long tedious period of review. It has taken years to get toxic chemicals placed on a list and banned. In some cases, the chemical has even gone out of production because of objections in other places. It has even taken a long time to have substances that are no longer manufactured thoroughly banned on account of their toxicity. This motion is an additional attempt to get the Minister to act expeditiously.

Motion No. 14 deals with this problem of time. Five years is a long time for the Government to investigate the toxic substances in question. In the case of frivolous objections, there is no need to proceed. The Bill cannot compel the Government to assess toxicity of substances specified on the priority substances list.

The Minister's representative said that it would be unrealistic and unreasonable to require that any substances be assessed within a particular time frame. Even 10 years was considered to be unreasonable. What I have done is propose an amendment so that at least people can object if there has been no action in five years. That seems to me the least we can do in the circumstances. The Bill gives too much discretion to the Minister. With this amendment the Minister could still take as long as he wished to decide which priority substances were toxic and the public would have the right to abort a review when more than five years had lapsed.

The third motion, Motion No. 25, is consequential on the previous motion. Where a person files with the Minister a notice of objection in respect of failure to make a decision about whether a substance is toxic, the Minister shall establish a board of review to inquire into whether the subject is toxic or not. That seems to me the least we can do in the circumstances.

We have here a Bill with procedures that are, frankly, quite cumbersome. Many people have pointed out how cumbersome these procedures are and how very long it takes under the existing procedures to get a substance ruled to be toxic and regulated or banned. The new procedure is actually a little more complicated. We fear it will be even more time consuming to get action on it. These are three amendments which simply give citizens a bit of a right to push, to require the Minister to act when five years has elapsed. This makes the Bill a little more realistic and a little easier to respond to the really serious concerns environmentalists have. I would hope the Government would see fit at this stage to support these very reasonable and quite simple amendments.

Mrs. Pauline Browes (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of the Environment): Madam Speaker, with respect to these three motions we are debating together today, I would first like to speak to Motion No. 4. The key word here is "expeditiously". The Hon. Member for Broadview—Greenwood (Ms. McDonald) has brought it to our attention. I think it is an important word for us to include in this Act. This word, I am certain, was chosen because assessments of the toxic effects of substances existing in Canadian commerce have in the past not been carried out quickly enough. As we know, the Government has committed new resources to speed up the assessment process. Therefore, we would be pleased to accept Motion No. 4 as presented.

Motion No. 14 talks about the five years on the priority substance list. The Government is committed in assessing the substances placed on the priority substance list. That is its purpose. We want them assessed. We are in complete agreement with the establishment of a board of review when a substance has remained on the list for a five-year period without assessment. Therefore, the Government accepts Motion No. 14 also.

I understand we will be voting on Motion No. 14 with motion No. 25. Consequently, we will be supporting Motion No. 25 as it relates to Clause 88 of the Bill.

Mr. John Parry (Kenora—Rainy River): Madam Speaker, as the seconder of these three motions, Motions Nos. 4, 14 and 25, I would like to record my Party's thanks and satisfaction to the Parliamentary Secretary for the acceptance of these motions and, of course, our congratulations to the Hon. Member for Broadview-Greenwood (Ms. McDonald) who put them forward.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The question is on Motion No. 4 standing in the name of the Hon. Member for Broadview Greenwood (Ms. McDonald).

Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion No. 4 agreed to.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): the next question is on Motion No. 14 standing in the name of the Hon. Member for Broadview—Greenwood (Ms. McDonald). The vote on Motion No. 14 will also apply to Motion No. 25.

Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motions Nos. 14 and 25 agreed to.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The next question is on Motion No. 6.

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview—Greenwood) moved:

Motion No. 6:

That Bill C-74 be amended by deleting Clause 5 and substituting the following therefor:

"5.(1) For the purposes of carrying out the Minister's duties under this Act, the Minister shall establish an advisory council, composed of equal representation from industry, labour and environmental public interest groups, to

(a) provide advice to the Minister on matters that have been brought to its attention or referred to it concerning notification, assessment or procedure, and policy issues;

(b) make recommendations to the Minister concerning the administration of the Act;

(c) make recommendations with respect to biotechnology and products of biotechnology; and

(d) review the new chemicals program every three years.

(2) The advisory council shall report annually to the Minister on its activities, and this report shall be made public."

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne)): The next question is on Motion No. 8.

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport) moved:

Motion No. 8:

That Bill C-74 be amended by deleting Clause 6 and substituting the following therefor:

"6. (1) Either Minister may, in cooperation with the governments of the provinces, establish a federal-provincial advisory committee to advise the Ministers on the exercise of the powers conferred by sections 7 and 32, paragraphs 33(1)(a), (b), (d), (o) and (q).

(2) The Minister shall include in the annual report required by section 137 a report of the activities of the federal-provincial advisory committee."

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The next question is on Motion No. 9:

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview—Greenwood) moved:

Motion No. 9:

That Bill C-74 be amended by adding immediately after line 39 at page 5 the following:

"7. The Minister will make public all correspondence, documents and information arising from the work of the committees referred to in sections 5 and 6."

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Madam Speaker, I will speak briefly on Motion No. 6 and Motion No. 8. I would like to draw to the attention of my colleagues in this House the way in which Clause 5 is presently written. It does not indicate the disposition on the part of the Government of the day or the Minister of the day to appoint an advisory committee that would be balanced in representing different interests in the community at large. It may well be that that might happen, but it may not. It may well be that an advisory committee could be loaded, so to speak, in favour of one interest in society as opposed to another.

• (1610)

I submit that it is good legislative practice to indicate in the law how a committee ought to be representative of the community at large. This is the reason why in the amendment that Your Honour just read reference is made on the part of my Party to equal representation by industry, labour and non-governmental groups, mainly public interest groups that are active in environmental protection.

Why is that? First, it is to ensure that there is a certain balance in advisory committees to be created under the clause. Second, it is to open up the process, to ensure that the process of environmental advisory committees, which committees would advise the Minister of the day, would have access to it as well as a guarantee in the legislation to have this type of access.

It was our Party which in committee ensured by way of an amendment the inclusion of labour in a clause further on in the Bill, an inclusion which had been omitted, so that it would be a participant in a consultative process envisaged further on in the Bill. We therefore spoke for labour on that occasion. We are glad to do the same here now by way of an amendment that opens up the process to these three major sectors in society which usually have something very important to say when it comes to environmental matters.

With respect to Motion No. 8, the purpose of the motion is very simple. It is to make public the information that is the object of Clause 6. It is a very straightforward amendment that endeavours to do something that we do in a variety of ways when it comes to reports in other activities that are of public interest.

Therefore I hope that the House will see fit to adopt Motion No. 6 and Motion No. 8 in order to improve the quality of the Bill, the quality of consultation and the quality of public information.

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview—Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to support Motion No. 6 put forward by the Hon. Member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia). I think it is an important matter to have in the type of consultations proposed here an advisory council composed of equal representation from industry, labour and environmental public interest groups. It would have the function of providing advice to the Minister on matters brought forward, make recommendations concerning administration of the Act and recommendations respecting biotechnology and products of biotechnology, and review the new chemicals program and report annually.

These same three groups, industry, labour and environmental, have been working together in a variety of respects. Apropos toxic chemicals they came forward with a united approach as to how they should be dealt with. So we have had some useful experience of the groups working together to try to come up with some decent standards and advice. It seems to me that this is a very reasonable proposal. Perhaps these groups have other ways of getting their advice into Government and felt that a permanent advisory council was necessary and that Government was not listening to them. They wanted to have some input on the over-all direction with respect to how we are going and whether or not it is working. Frankly, we have a process that is not all that strong, and perhaps there need to be reviews of it. I do not mean solely with respect to particular substances where there can be input on the whole direction of the program to reduce pollution by toxic chemicals. There has been significant demand in order to have this type of a central consultative committee.

The second part of the proposal, Motion No. 8, I am a little bit more leery of because this is a federal-provincial advisory committee to advise Ministers on the exercise of powers. What makes me a little bit leery—and of course I am in favour of the principle of consultation between the federal and provincial Governments—is the very cumbersome process that has been put up. It is something like the double-whammy approach. First, we were told that if we were to have national standards with consultation then that was one thing. If a process of equivalency is set up that says that we will not have national standards, that we will let the provinces set up equivalent standards, and we will only have very modest guidelines, then why would there be the consultative process? It seems that one would spend all one's time consulting and that one would not end up with national standards since they have been rejected.

I am not happy with this. It seems that the principle of consultation is certainly a proper one. However, when we end up with too much consultation and we do not end up with adequate standards as a result of that consultation, I wonder if we are not wasting some time and should be going one or other route more consistently.

The third of the motions is the one that I proposed. It is Motion No. 9. It would amend the Bill to the effect that the Minister will make public all correspondence, documents and information arising from the work of the committees referred to in Sections 5 and 6, that is, the labour, industry and environmental committee, and the federal-provincial committee.

The reason for this needs to be understood very carefully. We have a Government that has bowed to pressure from the provinces to be consulted before the federal Government exercises its authority in environmental matters. This consultation seems to be going on at all times with respect to equivalency. It is being built into the process. However, there are some dangers in this consultation that have to be understood. One of them is a loophole that exists in accessing information passed between federal and provincial Governments. The provinces should not be able to become lobbyists in secret. By giving the public clear access to federal-provincial correspondence, abuse of this federal-provincial advisory process will be mitigated.

If we are to have the process which is proposed in the second motion, then it is very clear that experts, environmental groups and critics in the Opposition will be able to have access to the documents to ensure that there are not secret deals being made. We need to know what this advice is. Clearly, the environment is an area of shared jurisdiction in our Constitution. Clearly, the provinces have an important role. Clearly, the need for national standards and the national presence is also there.

If we are to have decent environmental regulation, then we have to understand what consultation is going on between the federal Government and the provinces. We need to know what advice is being given. If a province is advising that it wants a pollution ghetto, if it is asking for standards to be reduced or is trying to look for ways to get out of having adequate environmental protection, then we need to know that. We do not want to have secret deals. So it seems to me very reasonable that Motion No. 9 would be passed.

It would simply respect the intent of the Bill to improve environmental protection and to involve the public and environmental groups. The Government has built this into the Bill at various stages. It has certainly showed a willingness to work with environmental groups and, indeed, to benefit from the expertise, the knowledge and experience which environmental groups have. It seems to me that this would be a very logical extension of that principle. Accordingly, I hope that the Government will see fit to support these amendments.

• (1620)

Mrs. Pauline Browes (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of the Environment): Madam Speaker, as we begin discussing Motion No. 6 and Motion No. 8, I am going to ask if it is possible to divide Motion No. 6 and vote on each part separately. The first part relates to Clause 5(1), and the second part relates to Clause 5(2). Motion No. 8 relates to Clause 6. Might we vote on Clauses 6(1) and 6(2) separately?

First, I will speak to Motion No. 6. The Canadian Environmental Protection Act does in fact provide an effective framework for protecting the Canadian environment. The Act is designed to counter the increasing number of environmental and health threats afflicting the world around us.

The very drafting and formulation of the Canadian Environmental Protection Act was truly a national effort, because it is the culmination of extensive public consultations involving all three levels of Government, industry, labour, the university community, and citizens' groups. Indeed, it is the product of five years' work as experts joined together to grapple with the problems associated with toxic chemicals.

That consultative process is built into the very fabric of this Act. Citizens now have unprecedented rights of participation in helping to implement and enforce the Canadian Environmental Protection Act.

Citizens can request that a substance be added to the priority substance list for assessment and possible controls. They can object to regulatory decisions by requesting that a board of review be established, and they can make representation before those boards. Canadians can petition the Minister of the Environment to investigate an alleged infraction under the Act. The people of Canada will have a very strong say in how this Act is administered.

Section 5 of the Canadian Environmental Protection Act also provides the Minister with an opportunity to establish special advisory committees. It is an important provision; environmental concerns are complex. A Minister must have proper recourse to a range of possibilities in overseeing an implementation of the Act. Flexibility of approach is the key to good management.

The Hon. Member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia) has proposed that Section 5 be amended. He suggested that it require the Minister to establish an advisory council to oversee the administration of the Act. I find this point redundant. We have debated this extensively in committee. There already exists an advisory body, the Canadian Environmental Advisory Council, which advises the Minister. It was established in 1972.

The council provides guidance and makes recommendations to the Minister of the Environment, and through him to the Government as a whole, and through the Government to the public on environmental policy. Its work is becoming increasingly public. In the same manner as it was active in the national consultation process on CEPA and gave impetus to many of the changes in the earlier parts, so also will it play a key role in advising on the administration of the legislation following passage.

The council has been involved in the development of CEPA. It is now working on a project to enhance the efficiency of the assessment of substances. The council is representative; its members appointed to reflect the reality that is Canada. They come from all regions. At different times, the council members have been drawn from the ranks of academe, citizens' groups, industry, and labour, the goal being a genuine cross-section of Canadian society and expertise.

I see no point in the Hon. Member's amendment to tie down in legislation a reality that already exists, an advisory council to advise the Minister. In this section, with your indulgence, Madam Speaker, I do recommend that the House reject the first part of this amendment.

In regard to part (2) requiring an annual report on the activities of advisory committees, because Section 5 talks about advisory committees, the Government accepts that part of the motion if it refers to advisory committees.

In relation to Motion No. 8 before the House, we would also seek your indulgence, Madam Speaker, in having the two parts voted on separately. In this motion, Bill C-74 provides a Canada-wide framework of environmental protection. Forging a partnership between the federal Government and the provinces will serve to harmonize environmental controls, and ensure an equivalent level of protection for all Canadians, no matter where they reside in this country. The federal-provincial advisory committee is an important manifestation of that partnership. Therefore, it shall be established.

The committee's focus is regulations. The motion suggests that the committee also deal with monitoring activities described in Clause 7. There is well-established co-operation among Governments for sharing monitoring and operating equipment, and Clause 7(2) confirms that. In our view, it is unnecessary to have this activity be the subject of a federal-provincial advisory committee.

The motion proposes the committee deal with clause 32 which establishes a list of toxic substances. This clause is linked with the regulation making power set in Clause 33, and regulations are the subject of the committee. The amendment is therefore not considered necessary. The amendment drops the whole idea of consultation in paragraph 33(1)(c) which deals with regulations on the release of toxic substances to the environment at the commercial, manufacturing, or processing stages of the life cycle.

This paragraph will be of just as much interest and import to the provinces as paragraphs 33(1)(a),(b), and (d) which also deal with regulations on the release of toxic substances. These areas have traditionally fallen within the purview of provincial governments.

In general, the motion would define a very narrow role for the federal-provincial advisory committee, while removing the flexibility to assign to it tasks of mutual interest to both the federal and provincial Governments. Rather, our intention is that the committee will be an important mechanism for forging and maintaining the federal-provincial partnership.

To be effective in this role, both the Minister and the committee must retain a considerable flexibility in the tasks which can be assigned and assumed. Therefore, Madam Speaker, we reject the first part of this motion. If, in any given year, the committee is active and contributes to the administration of the Act, its work must be included in the annual report to Parliament. Therefore, we accept the second part of this motion.

Motion No. 9 is aimed at releasing the maximum amount of information to the public on matters arising from the work of the ministerial and federal-provincial advisory committees established under Bill C-74. Section 5(2) of the Act already provides for public release of reports of the ministerial advisory committees, subject to the confidentiality provisions of the Act. This provision is necessary to allow ministerial advisory committees to work with confidential business information, such as trade secrets, where circumstances warrant.

As far the federal-provincial advisory committees are concerned, the Access to Information Act allows exemption from release for information transmitted between the two levels of Government. The motion as proposed might put in jeopardy the provision of advice to the Minister by the provinces, and therefore Motion No. 9 would not be supported by the Government.

• (1630)

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Madam Speaker, I want to deal with Motion No. 6 at the outset. Motion No. 6 amends Bill C-74 by deleting Clause 5 and substituting the following:

Motion No. 6

> "5.(1) For the purposes of carrying out the Minister's duties under this Act, the Minister shall establish an advisory council, composed of equal representation from industry, labour and environmental public interest groups,

It goes on to outline what the responsibilities of these groups would be; namely, to:

> (a) provide advice to the Minister on matters that have been brought to its attention or referred to it concerning notification, assessment or procedure, and policy issues;

That is the provision of advice. Then to:

> (b) make recommendations to the Minister concerning the administration of the Act;

So we are now talking about advice and recommendations. We go on to:

> (c) make recommendations with respect to biotechnology and products of biotechnology;

Lord only knows we certainly need some concrete recommendations in this new and evolving technology. Last to:

> (d) review the new chemicals program every three years.

We know how quickly we are changing in this new and dynamic field and certainly the review every three years just makes quite logical sense of chemical programs. Then we come to:

> (2) The advisory council shall report annually to the the Minister on its activities,—

It strikes me that we are elected Members of this House, and that the Minister through his contacts carries his responsibilities further than that of an elected Member, but he is in a position to give real meaning to listening to the grass-roots, to listening to the professional organizations and to listening to those labour and industry groups actively involved in pursuing improvement in pollution and pollution control. They have already worked together as the Hon. Member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia) and the Hon. Member for Broadview—Greenwood (Ms. McDonald) have said. We know that the STOP group and La société pour vaincre la pollution, S.V.P., are very important.

We enable national standards and we establish national standards. This should be a primary goal which I am sure the Minister would like to have so there would not be the sense of copping out or hiding—which surely the Minister does not want. In the establishment of national standards and having this advisory group enable us to establish those national standards, we will be giving real meaning to the intent behind this particular Bill. I would strongly suggest that if the Minister will consider this, it would be much appreciated by groups in society with respect to the goals that he has established for this Bill.

If you look to Motion No. 8, Madam Speaker, you will see that there is a move on the part of my colleague from Davenport involving the deletion of Clause 6. I think his point was well accepted by the Parliamentary Secretary. I read from the committee reports, issue No. 22 for March 3, the exchange between the Member, the Hon. Member for Vancouver—Kingsway (Mr. Waddell), Mr. Higgins, the expert and the Parliamentary Secretary. It is obvious they had a pleasant exchange but fundamentally the exchange is all about why we need this correction. Mr. Higgins said:

[Translation]

"The guidelines proposed in clause 8 are certainly the sorts of issues that advisory committees could deal with to advise the minister."

I do not see why the Minister would not agree to be advised. I believe that he has very effective advisors, but this would add to his competence in the subject.

Later, my colleague said, "Given Mr. Higgins' answer, it would be desirable to move a subamendment to clause 6 by adding after the words" other environmental matters that are of mutual interest to the federal and provincial governments and pertain to this Act."

[English]

What we have here is a tidying up of a lot of rhetoric, an establishment of principle and practice that is clear, unfuzzy and denotes the goals that are envisaged in this Bill.

[Translation]

So I suggest that we adopt the effective and enlightened recommendations to improve the contents of this Bill and the procedures provided therein.

[English]

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Madam Speaker, I had not intended to participate in this very enlightening debate. I think that the Parliamentary Secretary has articulated very well the general views of the Government with respect to the proposals put forward by our colleague, the Hon. Member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia). As is usually the case, one wants to be as accommodating as possible for constructive suggestions.

However, one of the difficulties is the nature of these proposals. Sometimes the way in which motions are put makes it difficult to accommodate the intentions of the Government and the intentions of the Opposition. I am not sure whether anything would be gained by having a look at whether or not we can, in effect, salvage this matter. It may be the form of the Hon. Member's motion as such, having predicated the whole set of amendments on deleting the clause completely. The Minister is here and I defer to my colleague. I guess I am donning my old House Leader's hat, seeing whether there is something that might be done and asking whether we might give some consideration to seeing what we can do, but I think it is very difficult for us in light of the form of the amendment. I think as a government we will have to vote against this amendment as per the explanation given by the Parliamentary Secretary. I might explain that while we are interested in certain aspects of the amendment, because of its nature we cannot accept it, and we will have to vote against the total amendment. That is the final and definitive position of the Government, until there is a change.

Mr. Angus: Madam Speaker, I know there have been some discussions at the table but I wonder whether it might make sense at this point to defer any further debate on these clauses and allow a resolve that might meet the intent of the Hon. Member who moved the motion and the Government.

Mr. Caccia: Madam Speaker, I thank the Minister of Justice (Mr. Hnatyshyn) for his helpful intervention both in the spirit and in the substance of what he has just said. I also want to express my gratitude to the Parliamentary Secretary for having expressed very clearly the will of the Government in relation to Motion Nos. 6 and 8 in particular. It seems to me that the difficulty which the Minister of Justice just outlined could be resolved.

Of course, I am making a case to see whether it would not be within the power of the House that if you were to call for a split in the vote so as to permit Motion No. 6, in particular, and Motion No. 8—or whichever it is that requires a splitting—so that by way of unanimous consent each motion is approached paragraph by paragraph. Having done so, we might then be able to overcome the procedural difficulty to which the Minister of Justice referred a few moments ago. That, of course, does not preclude the prerogative and privilege on the part of the Opposition to seek a recorded vote on the balance of the motion which is not acceptable to the Government. That, of course, is normal procedure.

I thought that the timely intervention on the part of the Minister of Justice and the speech made by the Parliamentary Secretary might indicate an avenue for us to explore, a route which is entirely in your hands at this point, Madam Speaker, but it might allow us to overcome this procedural hurdle. I seek your guidance on this matter.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): I will hear from the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary in a moment. The Chair is quite aware of the difficult situation which was quite well explained by the Parliamentary Secretary and the Minister of Justice (Mr. Hnatyshyn), and obviously well understood by members of the Opposition. There could also be another avenue which Hon. Members might want to consider, and that is the possibility of proposing a subamendment. I will now hear from the Parliamentary Secretary, and perhaps representatives of the different Parties may wish to get together on this. I wanted to make the House aware of this other possibility at this time.

Mrs. Browes: Madam Speaker, the Government applauds those parts of the amendments which deal with making reports of committees available to the public and with having the annual report to the federal-provincial advisory committee included in the annual report. We would like to accept those parts of the motions which make the information available to the public.

As I understand it, the difficulty arises because the motion begins by deleting the whole clause. If we voted against the first part and voted for the second part, all we would have is the second part. We would have a public report with no committees having been formed. As I understand what was said by the Hon. Member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia), it would not be acceptable for the Government to accept the second part of the motion as the preamble to it now reads.

Mr. Angus: Madam Speaker, let me for a few moments join in this discussion. Perhaps there is another option, and that is for the Hon. Member who moved the motion to withdraw his motion. I would assume that that would require unanimous consent. Then either he or the Government could put forward a motion dealing with these two clauses, a motion that would meet what the Government is prepared to accept.

Mr. Caccia: Madam Speaker, returning to your intervention of a few minutes ago, it would seem to me that although the Parliamentary Secretary has expressed very clearly what is acceptable and what is not acceptable to the Government, nevertheless that will ought to be expressed in the language with which the Government is best acquainted. It would not be so easy for me to formulate the phraseology necessary to express the will of the Government. It seems to me, therefore, that your suggestion of a few moments ago to proceed by way of a subamendment would permit the clarity of language that only the Government could achieve.

The Government itself knows exactly what it is willing to accept, and to me, it would be perfectly acceptable to support a subamendment, in the spirit of co-operation that is emerging on these two motions. Therefore, the route you have suggested seems to me to be the one that will lead to a precision of language that in the end will achieve the desired result.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): After listening very carefully to all Hon. Members, I have a suggestion that the House may want to consider. I suggest that we let Motions Nos. 6, 8 and 9 stand at this point. Perhaps tomorrow the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary or someone else could propose an amendment to the motions that are now before the House so that it would be clearly understood by everyone what is hoped to be achieved through these motions. That is one suggestion that I am prepared to offer to the House.

Mrs. Browes: Madam Speaker, thank you for that suggestion. As I indicated, we are prepared to look at the latter parts of Motions Nos. 6 and 8. Your suggestion is to defer this until we have had time to review it in order to draw up such a subamendment. However, I would seek some clarification. If that were to be so, would Motions Nos. 6 and 8 be withdrawn?

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Amendments to the motions would be presented to the House at that time, and the House would deal with those amendments to these motions. Then the House could vote on the amendments to the motions.

The Hon. Member would have to make sure that the appropriate changes are made to the motions so that they could be presented to the House again.

Mrs. Browes: Madam Speaker, I gather that we will not be able to complete all of the motions today, so we could carry on to the next motion then.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Is there unanimous consent to stand Motions Nos. 6, 8 and 9 at this time?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): We will then move to the next grouping, Motions Nos. 12 and 13.

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview—Greenwood) moved:

Motion No. 12.

That Bill C-74 be amended in Clause 11 by striking out line 16 at page 9 and substituting the following therefor:

"human, animal or plant life depends; or".

Motion No. 13.

That Bill C-74 be amended in Clause 11 by striking out line 18 at page 9 and substituting the following therefor:

"danger in Canada to life or health."

She said: Madam Speaker, I rise to explain Motions Nos. 12 and 13 and to urge Hon. Members to support them. The purpose of these motions is to ensure that we have an adequately broad definition of the environment and of the kinds of harm that exist.

Clause 11 deals with toxic substances. It provides that for the purposes of this part, a substance is toxic if it is entering or may enter the environment in a quantity or concentration or under conditions, and the first condition is having or may have an immediate or long-term harmful effect on the environment. The second is constituting or that may constitute a danger to the environment on which human life depends. The third part says "constituting or that may constitute a danger in Canada to human life or health."

• (1650)

Under the first amendment at line 16 the new wording would be:

constituting or that may constitute a danger to the environment on which human life depends;

Then the words "human life" simply become "life". This is to broaden the definition in two particular places and the point is to indicate very clearly that we are all part of the environment. It is not just human life and health that can be affected by toxic substances. We want to make it very clear that our environment includes plants and animals, and if a toxic substance is causing harm to plants and animals, eventually it will get to us because we live on the same planet. There is a food chain, one thing leads to another, and the effect of toxic substances is magnified as they move up the food chain. If it is only lichens or very simple forms of life affected first, we should not ignore it on the grounds they are not human beings but some kind of low, non-conscious form of life. Lichens, after all, are eaten by other creatures, those creatures are eaten by larger creatures, and so on. Toxic substances are then concentrated as they move up the food chain.

I hope people will not see this as being unduly sentimental. I happen to take a perhaps more religious view of our responsibilities as stewards of the environment. However, we have to be practical. We all live on the planet and these things are connected. It is just foolish to think that we human beings stand at the top and we can ignore the threat to those beings further down the chain. We are all in it together and we have responsibilities. We have not taken those responsibilities very well and we have had all kinds of environmental disasters as a result of our lack of conscience, vigour, enforcement, and slowness in appreciating what is happening to the environment.

These amendments are to say let us be careful that we are not too narrow in defining only threats to human health or the environment on which human beings depend, but really understand that plants, animals and human beings all affect each other. We have to be clear. This is an Environmental Protection Act. Human health is an important part but let us not focus too narrowly and assume that by doing that we are going to protect ourselves or the environment.

It seems to me that these are simple amendments and will be recognized by every environmentalist as being eminently practical and wise. We cannot set ourselves apart and protect only ourselves. We have to be good environmentalists and understand the importance of protecting all life, plant and animal, and those of us who rise and speak in Parliament as well.

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Madam Speaker, in support of this amendment I would like to bring to your attention the fact that we spent a considerable amount of time in committee debating this clause because it deals with a definition of nothing less than toxic substances. Therefore, this is the heart and soul, in a way, of this Bill. Toxic substances cannot be regulated, you will appreciate, until a comprehensive and adequate definition has been worked out. We spent a lot of time in committee focusing on two words, "significant" and "important". In the end we collectively managed to arrive at a significantly improved definition, the one here before us today. In that respect we were all quite satisfied that we had made progress.

The two motions deal with two other subclauses that were, in retrospect, overlooked at bit because of our preoccupation in committee, as I recall it, with the first half of this clause. The thrust of the motion by the Hon. Member is to broaden the orientation of this clause from just and only the human perspective, as she put it, to a recognition of the totality of the value of an environment which is more than just humans. We know that what happens in animal life, for example, and this is why we have the Canadian Wildlife Service, or in plant life, eventually can reach humans because of the ecological chain the Hon. Member spoke about. If this clause is left the way it reads now, it means that toxic substances are important only within the context of human life. That is not bad. It is a good start.

However, we are saying, in the hope the Parliamentary Secretary will agree, that there has to be a totality in the description of what is toxic which is broader than just what affects humans. Hence, the value and importance of this amendment which also looks at life as plants and the animal world, not because of a romantic notion so much, as the Hon. Member for Broadview—Greenwood (Ms. McDonald) quite rightly put it, but because we know from experience that what happens in animals and plant life eventually has a significant, and sometimes profound effect on human beings on this planet.

Mrs. Pauline Browes (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of the Environment): Madam Speaker, I will be very brief. I would like to point out that what has happened here today was generally the kind of thing that happened in the committee. There was a kind of co-operation that took place with respect to the seven or eight amendments that we have discussed here today. The Government accepted three of them and is taking a look at two others.

However, in relation to Motion No. 12 and Motion No. 13, we feel they are not necessary and the Government will not support them. They are designed to add the concept of animal and plant life, but subclause 11(a) deals with the effects on the environment. If you go to Clause 3 of the Bill where it defines "environment", it already includes plant and animal life in the words "living organisms" in the definition of the word "environment". We believe these amendments are therefore unnecessary and the Government will not support them.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Is the House ready for the question?

An Hon. Member: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): We will then continue with Motions 12 and 13 tomorrow.

It being 5 p.m., the House will now proceed to the consideration of Private Members' Business as listed on today's Order Paper.

BLUE WATER BRIDGE AUTHORITY ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

Mr. Ken James (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Supply and Services) moved that Bill C-210, an Act to amend the Blue Water Bridge Authority Act, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

He said: Madam Speaker, I find myself in a somewhat unorthodox situation and I will explain why. This Bill is very important to me and I would like to expand upon it. However, you may be aware, Madam Speaker, that I have recently been appointed Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Supply and Services.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. James: Consequently, I do not feel that it would be right for me to continue as the sponsor of this Bill. I have been in contact with my colleague, the Member for Kent (Mr. Hardey) who will take over for me as the sponsor of this Bill.

I would like to take this opportunity, however, to say a few words because I am honoured to have been given the opportunity to present this Bill. The concerns which have been expressed to me centre around the issue of liability on the Blue Water Bridge which spans the St. Clair River between Michigan and Ontario.

As Hon. Members may recall, the insurance industry has been very volatile in recent years and liability insurance costs sky-rocketed. In 1984-85 the Blue Water Bridge Authority's insurance brokers provided a $50 million public liability umbrella policy on the bridge for $18,000 a year. In 1986-87 the highest insurance package that the brokers could offer was a $45 million public liability policy for $80,000 a year—a decrease in coverage with a premium increase of nearly 500 per cent.

Traffic on the bridge continues to increase dramatically. The commissioners and the general manager of the Blue Water Bridge Authority are concerned that, in the event of a major disaster on the bridge, their personal property and possessions could be attached if the $50 million coverage was not sufficient. Given the liberal insurance settlements we have seen recently in the courts, this is a real concern.

It is the contention of the Department of Transport that this issue is dealt with through the common law and is covered through other Acts of Parliament. I am aware of Transport Canada's concern and I do respect the department's position. However, I have been approached by the Blue Water Bridge Authority and it is clear that the commissioners do not feel entirely comfortable with the department's position.

I believe that the concerns expressed by the Blue Water Bridge Authority are valid. Also, I do understand and respect the reservations of the Department of Transport. However, the problem remains and a solution must be found. It is my feeling that a legislative committee will provide the best possible forum in which to resolve this subject to everyone's satisfaction.

It may be that the solution to the issue lies somewhere between Bill C-210 and the current situation. I would encourage all Hon. Members to support this Bill at second reading. It is too important a subject to ignore.

I understand that consultations have taken place with the opposition Parties and I believe, Madam Speaker, that you will find consent for the following motion:

> That the motion of Mr. James for second reading and reference to a legislative committee of Bill C-210, an Act to amend the Blue Water Bridge Authority Act, be, by unanimous consent, amended to stand in the name of Mr. Hardey, and that in any subsequent proceedings on the said Bill, the Bill will be deemed to stand in that Member's name.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The House has heard the terms of the motion presented by the Hon. Member for Sarnia—Lambton (Mr. James). Is there unanimous consent?

Mr. Boudria: Madam Speaker, there have been discussions among various Members. I and my colleagues are certainly willing to give that unanimous consent in order to assist the Member with this Bill which could be of benefit to his constituency.

Mr. Angus: Madam Speaker, I, too, want to indicate that there have been discussions and that we are agreeable. Let me bootleg my congratulations to the Hon. Member on his appointment.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): As there is unanimous consent, the motion is agreed to.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay—Atikokan): Madam Speaker, I just want to make one short intervention. I appreciate that we want to get Bill C-210 into a legislative committee so that there can be an examination of both its principle and its content. However, I have one question in my mind after having read the Bill. The Bill says that the members of the bridge authority are not personally liable for any injury or loss suffered by any user of the Blue Water Bridge as a result of an act of terrorism or the fault, neglect, want of skill, or willful or wrongful act of any person.

Does that free the board as an entity from any action taken against it because of a decision it has made? I am not sure that it was the intent of the mover to take away the legal responsibility and liability of the board should it decide to forego maintenance and should that lack of maintenance lead to a situation which creates an accident. I do not think that the board should be exempt from action by a citizen who finds himself injured because of that.

I hope that that will be examined during the discussions of the legislative committee to ensure that while an individual member is not taken to court as a result of an action over which he or she had no control, there must be some onus on the board itself. If a court of law finds the board negligent, an aggrieved party should have some recourse such as a pay-out or whatever.

We are not going to put up any more speakers and are quite willing to have this Bill passed very quickly.

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Madam Speaker, I only want a moment or two to participate in this debate. I certainly have no intention of delaying this Bill in any way, shape, or form. I share the concerns which have been brought to the attention of the House. Perhaps, with unanimous consent, the Member could speak again and address some of those concerns. I would be willing to give such consent.

We do not want, of course, board members to be singularly or collectively responsible for liability. On the other hand, there must be provision, in the event of a mishap, for persons affected to collect. For example, if there was a major spill from a vehicle that perhaps ran off the end of the bridge due to a deficiency in the bridge as opposed to their own neglect, we would want to ensure there are provisions there for that kind of situation.

• (1710)

The Member prepared a briefing book for us and it states in the notes that he was to have delivered to us prior to his promotion, which cut down somewhat on his speech, that in the event of a major disaster on the bridge there is presently a $50 million liability coverage. If I understand it correctly, the situation is such that board members could be sued for a claim that was in excess of that. That is essentially the problem that the Hon. Member was explaining to us.

Nevertheless, we are also concerned particularly because of settlements that have been made in courts in recent years. We do not want to create the situation which would cause undue hardship for members of the board of that bridge authority.

We are willing to let the Bill go to committee. I invite the Member or one of his colleagues to perhaps answer some of those concerns. If that is possible, as far as I am concerned the Bill could then go to a legislative committee in order to be dealt with as soon as possible.

Mr. Blaine A. Thacker (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, it is an honour to rise on behalf of the Government and present its view on this Private Members' Bill. First, I want to commend my colleague, the Member for Sarnia—Lambton (Mr. James), for his appointment as Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Supply and Services. It is a very important department which will involve a lot of extra work on his behalf. I am sure his constituents will understand that and will be thankful that he is to provide his judgment on behalf of the people of Canada.

Second, I want to commend the Hon. Member for this Bill. My colleague is a new Member and does not remember the old days when private Members had a Private Members' Hour but their Bills were almost universally talked out. No matter what Government was in power, private Members had no ability to legislate. This built frustrations that were genuine on our part as back-benchers.

Therefore, this new procedure whereby more and more Bills go to legislative committee and can actually become law of the land is a tremendous addition to law-making in this country. There is now a short list of 20 Bills which can come up, six of which can be drawn and are actually forced to a vote. Even though a Member may have a Bill that is inconvenient or indeed opposed by the Cabinet, if it is on the votable list it will come to a vote and the Cabinet has to accept that. That is tremendous power for back-benchers.

It is an historic occasion for a Bill to go to a legislative committee. We should be thankful because this would not be the rule of the House if it had not been for the actions of our Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney). Only he had the courage, after a whole succession of Prime Ministers, to face this directly. As a new Prime Minister he said that he wanted Members of Parliament to be important. We should all be thankful for that. We may have partisan differences, but the Prime Minister deserves credit for this amendment to our rules.

In response to the Member for Thunder Bay—Atikokan (Mr. Angus) and the Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell (Mr. Boudria), I have seen a briefing note raising the points the officials have made. I think it would be wiser to send the Bill to committee where we will make sure all the witnesses necessary will explain any questions Members might have. I suggest that would be a wiser resolution, rather than getting into debate on it today. Therefore, I hope Members will agree to send it to committee.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

Mr. Angus: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. In view of the hour, and knowing that there is a vote scheduled at six o'clock, perhaps it would be appropriate to suspend the sitting until then.

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

At 5.17 p.m., the sitting of the House was suspended.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

ACTION TAKEN BY INTERPARLIAMENTARY UNION

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, the protection of the environment was given a boost at the conference of the Interparliamentary Union held in Guatemala last week when parliamentarians from over 100 nations adopted a strongly worded document on environmental protection and sustainable development.

The policy document which is now being reported to other Parliaments as well contains substantial recommendations on key subjects such as the protection of the ozone layer, energy efficiency, pollution control, acid rain abatement, conservation of natural resources, population policies, debt relief to developing countries, climate protection, genetic diversity, development assistance, peace, arms race and disarmament, transportation of toxic wastes, education, protection of the world's artistic and cultural heritage, tropical forests and the like.

Parliamentarians have an important role in informing the public about global trends which affect our life on this planet. This policy document which is now available should be the object of serious consideration by all parliamentarians here in Ottawa and by the Government of Canada.

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES FREE TRADE AGREEMENT—SUPPORT FROM CANADIAN REAL ESTATE ASSOCIATION

Mr. Stan Darling (Parry Sound—Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, 70,000 Canadians cannot be all wrong. The Canadian Real Estate Association, CREA, which is holding its annual executive meeting here in Ottawa, has given its full support to the free trade agreement with the United States. They as well as a growing number of Canadians realize the benefits that the free trade agreement will bring to the service industry in Canada.

Homes in Canada will cost less to purchase. Opportunities and growth will occur in all related industries. This alone will translate into a great many jobs across Canada. As a service industry, the Canadian Real Estate Association understands the importance of such an agreement. We must ensure our existing markets and create more.

• (1405)

The service industry is one of the fastest growing Canadian exports. In coming years Canada must be ready to accept the challenge and offer our children the chance to grow and live in their native land.

CREA, like a great many other national associations, is encouraging the acceptance of the free trade agreement with the U.S. as a great step forward in maintaining our freedom and expanding our economic base. For CREA and all Canadians let us make sure we take advantage of this great opportunity.

CANADA POST CORPORATION

SUPERMAILBOXES—DISADVANTAGES TO USE BY ELDERLY AND THE DISABLED

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Mr. Speaker, the Minister responsible for the Post Office declared to a group of citizens soon after his appointment that he was not responsible for the Post Office. Perhaps this explains why he has refused to take decisive corrective action on issues of such fundamental importance to many Canadians as that of supermailboxes.

The supermailbox program disadvantages the elderly and disabled, making the mail virtually inaccessible during the rigours of winter. Supermailboxes have adversely affected property values and there are serious security concerns associated with them.

Instead of recognizing that supermailboxes were a super grandiose disaster and revoking the policy, the Minister chooses to fudge the numbers and tells Canadians that to extend home mail delivery to all homes would cause the price of a first-class stamp to rise to 60 cents. That is utter nonsense and he knows it.

In response to a question I put to him in the House on this topic he said that in front of his house there was a mailbox, an electrical utility box, and telephone poles. That later proved to be incorrect. Clearly the Minister is not responsible to the Canadian public. Clearly it is time he offered his resignation.

IMMIGRATION

BOGUS REFUGEE STATUS CLAIMANTS

Mr. Paul Gagnon (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, the Government must be congratulated on taking a difficult but correct decision in deporting bogus refugees such as the Turks. This decision means personal hardship for those individuals. However, it is imperative that the world be given this clear, concise message: liars and cheaters are not welcome in Canada.

Genuine refugees are welcome. Immigrants who have waited in the immigration process are welcome. However, fairness dictates queue jumpers are not welcome.

FAMILY VIOLENCE

REQUEST THAT MINISTER OF JUSTICE AMEND LAW

Mrs. Lucie Pépin (Outremont): Mr. Speaker, I rise again today to bring up once more the problem of family violence. I asked the Minister of Justice (Mr. Hnatyshyn) several times to reflect on this deplorable situation of family violence in this country. We have learned that, following Ontario's lead, Quebec's Minister of Justice yesterday increased his budget by $1.8 million to deal with the growing number of cases of family violence.

Yesterday morning, before the parliamentary committee reviewing his Estimates, the Minister of Justice said that the number of attorneys dealing with such cases increased fivefold in 1987 alone. Also, the various police forces in Quebec had to answer 6,559 cases involving offences. New services were set up, such as telephone services to help the victims of family violence.

That is not enough. Mr. Speaker, we must still re-examine the cause of this violence as well as amend the law. One of the things that could be done is, instead of taking women and children from their homes and sending them to shelters, to send the spouses and husbands who are responsible for this violence to shelters. The federal Government has cut grants, with the result that the shelters are not big enough and are now overcrowded.

So I again ask the Minister of Justice to reconsider bringing in amendments to improve the present law in cases of family violence.

WORLD CONFERENCE ON GLOBAL SURVIVAL

CIRCULATION OF STATEMENT TO PARLIAMENTARIANS

Mr. Bruce Halliday (Oxford): Mr. Speaker, last week our colleague, the Hon. Member for Waterloo (Mr. McLean), and I had the opportunity and privilege of attending the World Conference on Global Survival held at Christ Church, Oxford University, England.

It was organized jointly by the Global Committee of Parliamentarians on Population and Development together with the Temple of Understanding, and served to bring together for the first time over 100 spiritual leaders of the major world religions with a like number of parliamentarians from around the world to talk about issues which challenge the very survival of life on our planet.

This unique conference heard keynote speakers in the arts and sciences who had messages to offer to the delegates. Workshops of smaller numbers provided excellent opportunities for sharing and exchanging views on three main topics, namely, physical and spiritual resources, crisis and human responsibility, and global opportunities.

The conference concluded by approving a statement which I shall circulate in both official languages to all Members of this House and the other place.

CANADA POST CORPORATION

PRIVATIZATION—EFFECT ON SALARIES

Ms. Marion Dewar (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, the Canada Post Corporation is trying to sell its privatization policy by telling small businesses they can't lose on a postal concession because it will attract more customers.

However, privatization has the effect of dramatically reducing the salaries of employees who work in those concessions, and we know that most of these employees are women. This policy will certainly not help reduce the wage gap between men and women.

[English]

As well, Mr. Speaker, Canada Post is giving its services an image that is certainly inappropriate for a government corporation. Many of these new franchises are convenience stores or video rentals that are selling pornography. Many women, and certainly those with children, are not interested in having to patronize stores that sell images that are degrading to women and disturbing to children.

The Government, in supporting Canada Post's policy of privatization, has clearly shown once again its lack of commitment to equality for Canadian women and to the strength of Canadian families.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

COLLECTIVE LIBERTY AND SECURITY

Mr. Marcel R. Tremblay (Québec-Est): Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to draw the attention of the House to the cordial and supportive reception members of the select Club de la garnison de Québec gave on April 18 to Canada's Minister of National Defence, the Hon. Perrin Beatty.

For those attending, it was a unique opportunity to become more familiar with the Conservative Government's defence policy.

In keeping with its respect for the democratic process, the Mulroney Government has proceeded with many consultations on the views of Canadians about "peace and order in Canada". The concerns expressed in the course of these consultations will help us determine how we can make Canada a country that seeks peace through freedom, and security through international cooperation.

Mr. Speaker, the present Government will continue to meet its responsibility, which is that of any free and sovereign State, to ensure our common freedom and security.

MINORITY RIGHTS

JUSTICE FOR THE FRANSASKOIS

Mr. Marcel Prud'homme (Saint-Denis): Mr. Speaker, this morning, the federal Liberal Caucus met the President of the Association culturelle franco-canadienne de la Saskatchewan. Rupert Baudais, a Saskatchewan Francophone from Prince Albert whose ancestors settled in Saskatchewan in 1883, was accompanied by Vice President Margot Michaud of Gravelbourg and the proud President of Jeunesse fransaskoise, Francis Machildon of Zenon Park, where I had the privilege of campaigning several times back in 1964 and 1967.

They expressed their anxiety and concern, now that the Conservative Government in Saskatchewan, under the leadership of Mr. Devine, is about to adopt Bill 2. I hope Mr. Devine's government will review its position and start by consulting with those directly concerned, the Saskatchewan Francophones themselves. I found their representations so reasonable, and I wish they were better known to Canadians, that I fail to see why the government intends to adopt this Bill. The Fransaskois are reasonable people. They are asking far less than what is already provided by Section 133 of the Constitution in Quebec to protect our Anglophone minority, and I hope that . . .

Altogether, we should depoliticize this question and ask Mr. Devine to take the necessary steps by consulting the fransaskois themselves.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

THE JUDICIARY

ARTICLE PUBLISHED IN LE MONDE JURIDIQUE—MINISTER'S POSITION

Hon. Jean Lapierre (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Justice. For nearly two weeks now, the Prime Minister's Office has been aware that Le Monde juridique was to publish an important article on Judge Crête's succession. I therefore ask the Minister of Justice: When the Prime Minister's Office was informed on April 5, was the Minister of Justice also informed that the article was to be published?

[English]

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I must tell the Hon. Member that this matter was brought to my attention in a very general way possibly within the last two weeks, but it had not been published and there had been an absolute denial.

I think the Hon. Member will know that, indeed, Mr. Yves Pratte wrote to the publisher and the author of this article, indicating that it was without foundation and there would be serious legal consequences if the publication proceeded.

As we now discuss this matter, legal proceedings are being initiated to have this matter dealt with by a court of law. According to my information, I understand there will be an action commenced and served within the next day against the author, against the publisher and other defendants with respect to this matter. An absolute denial by Mr. Roy has been made public. I hope the Hon. Member will accept the statement at this time and let the court decide exactly what are the circumstances.

INDEPENDENCE OF JUSTICE—REQUEST THAT MINISTER INSTITUTE INQUIRY

Hon. Jean Lapierre (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask a supplementary question, because yesterday evening again, Mr. André Gagnon, who is a law graduate, was attached to Quebec's Minister of Justice and is editor in chief of this specialized journal, continued to maintain his allegations. Therefore I ask the Minister of Justice, setting aside the civil matter involving Bernard Roy, does he not think that it is his duty as Minister of Justice to look after the public interest and to ensure the independence of justice? Given the seriousness of the allegations, has he considered instituting an inquiry?

[English]

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, it may interest the Hon. Member to know that I am involved in the matter in terms of the appointment of judges in the courts. I can assure the Hon. Member that at no time has there been any influence attempted by any member of the Cabinet with respect to judicial appointments. I hold very seriously any suggestion that any of my recommendations are tempered by any improper act. If the Hon. Member wants to make that allegation I ask him to stand in the House and make it.

I tell the Hon. Member that this matter will be dealt with, not by any third party but by Mr. Roy himself. He will bring this matter forward so that it can be decided by the court. I think we will have an opportunity at that time to see exactly what are the circumstances.

[Translation]

REQUEST THAT MATTER BE REFERRED TO COMMITTEE ON JUSTICE AND SOLICITOR GENERAL

Hon. Jean Lapierre (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is for the Minister of Justice. Outside the civil and private matter involving Mr. Roy, would it not be in the interest of this House and of justice for this matter to be referred to the Committee on Justice and Solicitor General, where Mr. Gagnon himself has told us he is ready to testify at any time because he knows that civil proceedings could take very long and that we would be in doubt for a long time? Hopefully, in the interest of Mr. Roy as well, this will be cleared up as soon as possible. Could the Minister of Justice suggest some procedure like that where the integrity of the process would no longer be at stake?

[English]

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, of course we can have any number of proceedings at the same time. I believe the Hon. Member is a lawyer who has standing at the Bar of Quebec. I think he will understand that when a very serious allegation is made with respect to the integrity of an individual, that person, regardless of their position in our country, is entitled to seek legal recourse. I think that is what Mr. Roy intends to do and is in the process of doing. I think the matter will be dealt with expeditiously, that justice will be served in the courts, and that the full story will come out.

CANADA LANDS COMPANY

COST OF PRINTING BROCHURES

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Public Works. It concerns the latest scandalous misuse of taxpayers' dollars by the Canada Lands Company at Mirabel. Can the Minister explain to the House why the Canada Lands Company at Mirabel spent $61,000 of taxpayers' money to publish five thousand 24-page colour brochures featuring the Member of Parliament for Joliette (Mr. LaSalle) and his cousin Pierre Hardy congratulating each other for the fine mess they created at Mirabel? Is this Pierre Hardy's revenge, or is this Roch LaSalle's last hurrah?

Hon. Stewart McInnes (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, the previous Government expropriated 98,000 acres of property which adversely affected some 10,000 people. It spent $225 million and engaged in $100 million worth of law suits. This Government settled the law suits, brought in investment to the extent of $22 million, restored the properties, and social justice has now been given to the people. It is a good investment to tell that story.

Mr. Boudria: I don't blame the Minister for not answering the question. He is probably just as embarrassed over this as everyone else.

AWARDING OF CONTRACT—MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Minister of Public Works to explain to the House why a contract for $36,960 was awarded to have this publication printed and why the contract was split in two, which contravenes Chapter 310 of the Administrative Policy Manual.

Why did this happen? Why were Treasury Board guidelines ignored?

[English]

Hon. Stewart McInnes (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I would think an expenditure of $1 million would not be enough to remind the people of Canada of the mismanagement and scandal of that Government.

Mr. Rossi: In other words, you don't know the answer.

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES FREE TRADE AGREEMENT—
TREATMENT OF FOREIGN FIRMS IN CANADA

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister for International Trade. Last night The Journal ran a powerful documentary—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Langdon: —on the losses in economic independence that this country will suffer from the U.S. trade deal. That is the true tragedy of this deal. Will the Minister be forthright and confirm one of the key points made in that documentary, that this deal would prevent us from ever putting in place performance requirements on a foreign firm such as those we put on RCA, which gave us Spar Aerospace, now a dynamic high-tech firm with exports world-wide?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, luckily last night I was able to watch this program which the hon. gentleman describes as powerful. I found the arguments put forward by Mr. Lipsey to be most powerful, convincing, and intellectually honest. I don't want to mention any of the politicians who were on the program, but the Minister of Finance was a shining star there as well.

The U.S. Canada Free Trade Agreement does not in any way prevent us from acting. It governs how we may act in certain situations but it certainly does not prevent us from acting.

Mr. Riis: You are acting now.

Mr. Crosbie: We have to act in ways that are fair and non-discriminatory with the people who engage with our chief trading partner, just as they have to treat us fairly in a non-discriminatory way down there. That is the nature of the bargain. That is a very powerful case for approval of this agreement, as soon as we can get it, so that regime will commence.

• (1425)

PERFORMANCE REQUIREMENTS FOR COMPANIES

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, since the Minister claims that this is a non-discriminatory deal let me ask him this question. Is it not true that if a foreign company from another country is involved then performance requirements are possible, but if a company from the United States is involved then performance requirements are not possible? In short, there is complete discrimination here. Are these not the facts?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, of course those are not the facts. I have not heard the Hon. Member give a fact yet in this whole discussion.

As far as whether it is discriminatory or not, let us look to an outside source, Mr. Arthur Dunkel, the GATT Secretary-General, who said this as quoted in today's Globe and Mail:

> The proposed free-trade pact between Canada and the United States "will in no way hinder" each country's trading obligations with the rest of the world—

He is advised by his Secretariat that the agreement generally conforms with the crucial section of the GATT charter banning discriminatory trade practices against other nations.

That is the hallmark of this agreement. What is sauce for the goose in the agreement is sauce for the gander.

CANADIAN INDEPENDENCE

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, it is certainly clear who got goosed in this particular agreement. I have to say that it is definitely this country.

I want to suggest a last question to the Minister since he listened only to one side of the argument last night. It was the argument of those in favour of the deal, such as Mr. D'Aquino, who was absolutely clear that there was some loss of independence. How can he justify this giving away of Canadian independence for no more than jobs 25,000 per year, which is the maximum estimation of the Economic Council of Canada? How can he justify that?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, what the hon. gentleman forgets is that what is good for the Oshawa goose should be good for the Canadian gander generally.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crosbie: There is no loss of independence under this agreement. There is a loss in certain choices that can be made, just as when we entered into the GATT agreement. The hon. gentleman's Party believes in GATT. Why was it not up moaning and shrieking about GATT when we entered into the GATT?

There is a certain loss of independence in the sense that one loses certain choices because it is a bargain between two independent countries. When a man and a woman marry they each give up certain of their independence. Would anybody say that they are both slaves? They might be love slaves, but they are not slaves in any other direction.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Crosbie: The hon. gentleman's argument is completely silly. The Americans give up certain rights of independent action of theirs in certain areas, as do we, for our mutual benefit, for increasing the economic wealth of the two countries. For heaven's sake, grasp the fundamentals.

Oral Questions

FINANCE

FLOW-THROUGH SHARES TAX DEDUCTION—EFFECT ON MINERAL EXPLORATION

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane—Superior): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. On March 1 of this year John Larche, President of the Prospectors & Developers Association of Canada, said that flow-throughs can perform despite the market conditions. He went on to say that at present flow-through is the only viable means of raising risk capital for mineral exploration.

On Monday of this week the Minister of National Revenue said in reply to a question I raised on flow-through shares: "... the Government is giving the matter close consideration."

I wish to ask the Minister of Finance this. When will he be ready to act? When will he give a favourable announcement and tell the mineral industry that this first-rate excellent tool for economic development is going to be retained?

• (1430)

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, let me reaffirm what my colleague said on Monday. We are giving close consideration to this particular matter. Let me also say to the Member posing the question that the flow-through share mechanism has been retained.

There are some allegations made that tax reform has had some serious effects on the flow-through share mechanism. I would point out to the Hon. Member, as I have on previous occasions in the House, that the change since the stock market crash of October 19 has had the effect of upsetting equity financing for all industries, not only flow-through shares.

These are things that have come to bear on the attractiveness of flow-through share financing to investors. We are considering this matter closely, and in a short time I hope that I will have some announcements.

EARNED DEPRECIATION ALLOWANCE

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane—Superior): Mr. Speaker, that, of course, comes as good news. I wish to remind the Minister that he knows the industry does not want grants or subsidies. What it wants is retention of the earned depletion allowance. Time is a vital factor, because there are projects that are presently on hold, and also jobs.

I want to say to the Minister, if he is reluctant to accept these demands from the Opposition that, if he would listen to some of his own Members from the ridings of Timmins—Chapleau, Timiskaming, Western Arctic, and Abitibi, he will get exactly the same response, and that is, save the flow-through.

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, as I have indicated, we are fully in agreement. We are saving the flow-through share.

We made some changes in the December announcements on tax reform which changed some of the provisions of the flow-through share financing with a view to improving its attractiveness.

The Hon. Member says that we should extend earned depletions. I also ask him to consider what he and others of his Party have said, that we should avoid tax shelter gimmicks. The Hon. Member is shaking is head.

Mr. Penner: Not gimmicks.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): The Hon. Member should read some of the literature that his Party has written, and some of the things that his colleagues have said. This is one of the considerations that we are going through in discussions that we are having on flow-through share financing. I would expect that we would get his support.

MINORITY RIGHTS

PARTICIPATION OF FRANSASKOIS IN NEGOTIATIONS

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Deputy Prime Minister about language rights in Saskatchewan. Yesterday, the Prime Minister said he was pleased with Premier Devine's intention to declare Saskatchewan bilingual fifteen years from now, but strangely enough, he refused to criticize Bill 2 which will deny the historical and age-old rights of the Francophone minority in Saskatchewan. My question is this: Since the federal Government and the provincial Government are negotiating the future of the Fransaskois in their absence and in the upmost secrecy, is the Government now prepared to make a commitment to involve representatives of the Francophone minority of Saskatchewan directly in these negotiations?

[English]

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the interest of the New Democratic Party in this issue with respect to the Province of Saskatchewan. In fact, the federal Government, through my colleague, the Secretary of State for External Affairs, and I believe through other officials of government who are dealing with this particular issue, is in communication with L'Association des fransaskois. I think that I have made it a point to keep them fully informed with respect to the position of the federal Government in this matter.

As far as I am aware, there have also been communications with the French minority group in Saskatchewan by the provincial Government. It is in the process of ongoing discussions with them, and receiving the benefit of their views.

As I indicated, and as the Prime Minister has indicated, it is our hope that we will be able in our discussions—and I like to term them as discussions as opposed to negotiations—to make our position quite clear. The Prime Minister has stated in the House of Commons, outside the House of Commons, and in a letter to Premier Devine, the position which we as a federal Government take.

On these issues at this point in time, we are always wanting to carry on these discussions to resolve them on a co-operative basis. That is my hope for Saskatchewan. I trust that the members of the New Democratic Party share that particular point of view.

PROPOSED TRIPARTITE SPONSORSHIP OF RESOLUTION

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, is the Minister of Justice not aware that L'Association des fransaskois, which has taken the trouble to come here to meet with the three caucuses over the last 24 hours, has stated quite specifically that it is excluded from participating in, from being present, or involved in any way in the negotiations or discussions that are now under way between the federal Government and the provincial Government?

In the meantime, Premier Devine refuses either to abandon or withdraw Bill 2, or substantially amend it.

Under those circumstances, is the Government ready now to come to the aid of the proposal of my Leader that the three political Parties in this Chamber should come together with a resolution which would clearly signal the desire of every Member of Parliament to support the rights of the francophone minority in Saskatchewan, and press the Government of that province to delay adopting Bill 2 until there has been a real consultation with the Saskatchewan francophone minority?

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I find it strange that the Hon. Member put the question in the manner that he did. If he talked to his colleagues in the New Democratic caucus who come from the Province of Saskatchewan, he might be able to understand the nature of this problem.

Mr. Benjamin: We do.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: This is a problem which resulted from the Supreme Court decision, which is a matter within the provincial domain and jurisdiction at the present time. We in the federal Government have taken exemplary leadership in going forward and trying to assist the Province of Saskatchewan as best we can in the interests of the minority in Saskatchewan to resolve this matter.

Am I to take it that the Hon. Member is stating the position of the New Democratic Party, the federal New Democratic Party and, indeed, the provincial New Democratic Party, that he does not want us to carry on with these discussions to advance the cause of minority rights in Saskatchewan? Is that the position the Hon. Member is taking? If that is the case, shame on him.

Mr. Cassidy: We want the fransaskois to be involved.

OFFICIAL LANGUAGES

FRENCH FACT IN QUÉBEC—PUBLIC SERVICE LANGUAGE TEACHERS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Robert Toupin (Terrebonne): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. It concerns his Government's attitude in two cases: First, the transfer of funds from the Department of the Secretary of State to Alliance Quebec, funds that are used to fight the French fact in Quebec and Bill 101; second, the Government's cavalier treatment of Public Service language teachers with respect to their working conditions and the impact this will have on the availability of services in French to all Canadians.

My question is this: Is the Deputy Prime Minister aware of the fact that Alliance Quebec obtained $1,109,000 in 1984; $1,183,000 in 1985; $1,150,000 in 1986; and $1,215,0000 in 1987? And this is still going on now! Is he aware of the fact that these funds have been used largely to fight the French fact and Bill 101 in Quebec? What do the Deputy Prime Minister and his Government intend to do to remedy a situation that is both unfair and dangerous?

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I think the direction in which the Hon. Member is pointing his question is a perilous one, because I think it would be extremely imprudent to make any value judgments about the way Alliance Quebec's funds are spent. I was once Secretary of State and I was involved in providing assistance to all language minorities in this country, both in Quebec and outside that province, to both Anglophone and Francophone minorities. I think the policies of the Department of the Secretary of State, which were established before this Government and which consist in helping minorities, are excellent and should be maintained as a reflection of the way this country was built and the way we want to continue to live in this country.

• (1440)

CONSEQUENCES FOR FRENCH SERVICES

Mr. Robert Toupin (Terrebonne): Mr. Speaker, I have the facts here and I can show the Minister.

Now, about our language teachers: What do the Deputy Prime Minister and his Government intend to do about their working conditions, since these will have a direct negative impact on French services offered to Canadians across this country, and also considering the fact that his Government's attitude seems to be in direct contradiction with the Government's own language policies?

[English]

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of State and Minister of State (Treasury Board)): Mr. Speaker, questions have been asked about that particular strike several times in the House.

We have indicated that the Government accepts the majority report of the conciliation board and that it is ready to go back to the bargaining table with the language teachers at any time.

POSITION OF SASKATCHEWAN GOVERNMENT

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, I want to come back to the Saskatchewan question and ask the Minister of Justice a question. Yesterday in the House the Prime Minister, in answer to a question I put to him, said:

> In my judgment, and I believe in the view of my hon. friend, minority rights are indivisible. You either believe in the protection of minority rights or you do not. You do not believe in them three-quarters of the time or half the time. That is the position that I adopted in Saskatchewan—

That was the position of the Prime Minister yesterday. We know that there are existing acquired rights in Saskatchewan now in regard to languages, French and English. We know that Section 110 of the Northwest Territories Act gave that obligation and gave that access to the people of Saskatchewan in both English and French. There exist today certain rights.

Does the Minister believe that the Government of Saskatchewan in proposing to abrogate those rights, to reduce those rights, to make them possibly subject to the whims of Governments, is meeting the requirements of the Prime Minister, that the rights are indivisible, that you believe in them fully, that you do not cut them up and do not abrogate them?

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, of course I stand with and behind the Prime Minister in his position with respect to the indivisibility of minority rights in our country. That is why the Prime Minister has taken so many initiatives with respect to this issue in the time that he has been Leader of our Party in opposition and in government as Prime Minister.

I think the Hon. Member would agree with me that the Supreme Court itself in its judgment recognizes the fact that its declaration with respect to this issue was one which indicated that there should not be a declaration at the time of the judgment and that there should be a reasonable opportunity for appropriate measures to be put into place with respect to the rights of the minority.

What I am saying is that it is important for us on an urgent basis to do what we can in the federal regime to assist the Province of Saskatchewan to meet the full implications of the Mercure decision of the Supreme Court of Canada. In that I share the same point of view as the Hon. Member. There is no difference between us. It is a question of us working has hard as possible to obtain justice for minority rights in Saskatchewan.

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, the Minister is condemning Premier Devine who is actually going to abrogate those rights. If I understand the Minister clearly, he is actually critical of the measure before the Saskatchewan Government, because the Minister cannot have it both ways. You must either stand or not stand. That problem is there. You cannot have it half way.

[Translation]

PARTICIPATION OF FRANSASKOIS IN NEGOTIATIONS

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, the Fransaskois who were here today told us they were not involved in current talks between the federal Government and Saskatchewan. They felt left out of negotiations that, after all, concern their fundamental rights and their future. Could the Minister give the House the assurance that as a participant in the current negotiations, he will make sure the Fransaskois are invited to the negotiating table and are present when their future is being discussed and when decisions are made concerning their future in Saskatchewan? I want to ask the Minister to give the House the assurance here today that the federal Government will ensure the Fransaskois are at the negotiating table to discuss their future.

[English]

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, first I want to make sure that there is no misunderstanding. I do not accept the commentary of the Hon. Member on my last answer before the premise to the next question.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Hnatyshyn: I think he has caught up with me, Mr. Speaker.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Hnatyshyn: I have indicated that in our discussions we have been cognizant of the role and participation of the fransaskois. The Prime Minister had a very good meeting with representatives of the association in Saskatchewan. We are in the process of dealing on behalf of the federal Government and discussing, among other things, what we can do on the federal government side on this very important issue. Naturally we are going to be in communication and we will be having an ongoing discussion with the fransaskois. We think it is important that we have the Association's point of view as we discuss the matter with the Province of Saskatchewan.

SPORTS

DIRECTOR OF INTERNATIONAL SPORTS RELATIONS

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay—Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of State for Fitness and Amateur Sport. First, let me congratulate him on his new responsibilities.

Earlier this year his predecessor, in conjuction with the Secretary of State for External Affairs, announced the formation of an international sports relations body to represent Canadian sport around the world. Will the Minister explain why, when there were approximately seven Canadians who applied for the job of Director of International Sports Relations, his Department hired a British citizen?

Hon. Jean J. Charest (Minister of State (Youth) and Minister of State (Fitness and Amateur Sport)): Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank my hon colleague for his best wishes. It will be a very difficult challenge for me to replace my predecessor.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Charest: The item to which my colleague is referring stems from an initiative announced jointly by the Secretary of State for External Affairs and my predecessor which has as an objective to give Canada more prominence on the international scene as far as sports are concerned.

The information that I have at this point would indicate that we searched for the best candidate for the position. That is why the person to whom the Member is referring was chosen. He has not yet taken up the position. This person was chosen because of the very specific needs that we were looking to meet.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Thunder Bay—Atikokan, a short supplemental, please.

EXPRESSION OF VIEWS

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay—Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, why would the Government of Canada choose someone with a reputation for expressing the views of Great Britain, particularly when the views of Great Britain are known to differ from that of Canada, particularly as they relate to apartheid in South Africa? Why didn't the Government hire a Canadian, and why did it give a slap in the face to the sports fraternity of Canada?

Hon. Jean J. Charest (Minister of State (Youth) and Minister of State (Fitness and Amateur Sport)): Mr. Speaker, I do not think I would want to share in what my colleague has said. I have no evidence that what he said would be the case. I will look at the matter very closely and see whether there is any foundation to what the Hon. Member has just alleged.

As far as I am concerned, the person chosen was chosen because there were very specific detailed needs. This is a new initiative and, as far as we know, this was the best choice in the circumstances.

TAX REFORM

FORMAT OF PROPOSED LEGISLATION

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. Last week the Government released draft legislation on taxation in 360 pages of arcane language, with no index or table of contents, and no technical notes. The public is given only until May 20 to respond.

Is this the Minister's idea of appropriate consultation on a major tax change?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I think the Hon. Member is well aware that we heard the first reports of this as a result of tax reform in December and we have had a fair amount of consultation with the community since that time. In fact, there has been quite a bit of consultation. I do not think that there are any new concepts in the proposals released last week. I think that that, together with the ongoing process of legislative review, which will probably take us into June when we get to the final legislation, will give plenty of opportunity for people to provide us with their views.

• (1450)

INTRODUCTION OF SECOND PHASE OF TAX REFORM

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, the Minister set the date of May 20, and much of this is in fact new. The Minister also continues to put off introduction of phase two of tax reform, although he calls the present sales tax system a silent killer of jobs. Why does he want to rush through phase one without proper examination while phase two remains shrouded in mystery until after the next election?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, let me be quite clear. The comments we are looking for by May 20 are on the draft legislation. There will be final legislation put forward then. That can be amended, as my hon. friend is well aware, so I do not want to have her leave the impression that May 20 is the last opportunity.

As regards phase two, my colleague is quite aware of the very full discussions we are having with the provinces and others. There is a difference between phase one and phase two. Phase one involves a number of changes to the existing system. Phase two involves the introduction of a new sales tax system. That is why we must have these fuller discussions. There are some very complex issues at stake.

CO-OPERATIVES

UNITED MARITIME FISHERMEN CO-OPERATIVE

Mr. Ernie Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of State for Small Business. The Minister is aware that the New Brunswick Court of Queen's Bench yesterday placed the United Maritime Fishermen Co-operative in receivership, just days before the Atlantic fishing season is to start. Could the Minister explain why the federal Government refused to join with the Government of New Brunswick in providing assistance to management that was trying to put this co-operative on a sound basis and needed new capital to do so?

Hon. Bernard Valcourt (Minister of State (Small Businesses and Tourism) and Minister of State (Indian Affairs and Northern Development)): Mr. Speaker, first I would tell the Hon. Member that we were never asked by the province to participate in the refinancing of this operation. The Hon. Member must know and understand that in 1982 DRIE's predecessor Department provided a guarantee of $7 million for this operation. In 1984 the guarantee was converted to a $6.5 million interest-free repayable contribution which does not have to be repaid until the year 2000. With assets of about $10 million to $15 million, this operation had a total debt estimated at some $41 million.

The feasibility of the financial plan that was submitted was looked at carefully by the Department. The conclusion was that, unfortunately, that plan would not ensure the viability of the operation. Hence, we have declined to put more money into something which obviously could not make it financially.

FISHERMEN'S LIVELIHOOD

Mr. Ernie Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, the Minister suggests the need for co-operation, so I seek his commitment that he will take an active role in this matter on behalf of the federal Government to ensure that the reorganization of the United Maritime Fishermen Co-operative is carried through successfully in order to save 650 jobs in various plants and to safeguard the livelihood of some 3,000 fishermen.

Hon. Bernard Valcourt (Minister of State (Small Businesses and Tourism) and Minister of State (Indian Affairs and Northern Development)): Mr. Speaker, I have already had contact with the President of UMF, Mr. Menard, among others. If the Government can be helpful in any way to the reorganization of this on a sound financial basis, of course we will be there to be helpful.

HORTICULTURE

IMPORTATION OF BEE STOCKS FROM AUSTRALIA

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Agriculture. In regard to the desperate situation facing thousands of honey producers in western Canada due to the Canadian embargo on replacement packages of bees from the United States, yesterday the Parliamentary Secretary said that the Government was advising producers in western Canada to bring these packages in from Australia.

I wonder if the Minister of Agriculture can certify that the bees in Canada are absolutely free from infestations of the borer mite. Since bringing in these replacement supplies from Australia will completely double the cost, will the Government provide the difference in additional costs to the honey producers of western Canada?

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the question. I understand that the Hon. Member put the question to my Parliamentary Secretary, and I have been informed that his answer was very complete and indeed very accurate.

I have to take advice from the inspection branch of my Department with respect to the first part of his question. I have been advised that the Department is certain that we are mite-free in Canada. I take my Department's advice on that subject and, indeed, the Department continues to monitor and will continue to carry out surveys of this.

In conjunction with the industry, we have looked at the possibility of some type of a compensation plan, but to this point in time most of the attention has been directed at the people who would indeed have to pay an additional cost for bringing in packages. However, this industry is one with some division within it. It is an industry that has some difficulty reaching a common position. That has not been all that helpful to me, at least to this point in time.

We are cognizant of the additional costs required. Yet on the other hand we are fully aware of about 95 per cent of the industry which fully—

Mr. Speaker: Considering the hour, I would ask the Hon. Minister to resume his seat. The Hon. Member for Algoma on a short supplemental.

REQUEST FOR COMPENSATION FOR PRODUCERS

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, the Minister seems to be fumbling around on whether or not he will provide any assistance in bringing in replacement supplies from other countries that are free of the infestation. If he continues to fumble and cannot make up his mind if he will provide any assistance, will he provide direct compensation to these producers, some of whom are expecting to lose tens of thousands of dollars this year? After all, they do not want to be stung by this Government again.

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, obviously I want to reject the Hon. Member's reference to fumbling around. This is a very complex and a very difficult problem and we are working on a day-to-day basis with the industry.

I have indicated to the Hon. Member that we continue to look at some method by which we could apply some compensation, but every option so far brings with it some inequities in the system. To this point in time we have concluded that it would not be possible to make a compensation payment and still be fair and equitable to all producers.

SUPPLY AND SERVICES

ACCESS BY ALL REGIONS TO GOVERNMENT CONTRACTS

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Minister of Supply and Services. It is always a concern to the outlying regions of Canada such as the one I represent that they might not be getting their fair share of government procurement. What action is being taken to ensure that all regions have equal access to government contracts?

Hon. Otto Jelinek (Minister of Supply and Services): Mr. Speaker, as the Hon. Member knows, much has been done in this area by my predecessor since 1984. We need only look at the tremendous success that has been achieved in the Atlantic provinces in government procurement through the Atlantic Opportunities Program. Nevertheless, I am currently and actively working with a number of my cabinet colleagues in building on these successes and initiatives taken in the last three years to bring a greater emphasis on openness and fairness to all regions and all Canadians, something that the previous Liberal administration did not know anything about.

EXTERNAL AID

ETHIOPIA—DELIVERY TO NORTHERN AREA

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, last week I asked the Deputy Prime Minister if Canada would deliver aid to Eritrea and Tigray by the northern route through the Sudan. I now have an answer from the Minister for External Relations which I appreciate, but this letter indicates that there are difficulties in assuring delivery and obtaining the co-operation of the Sudanese Government. The NGOs that are willing and able to deliver this aid dismissed this claim.

Today we learn that a shipload of food is in port in Asab and will probably never reach the North. Is not the real reason for Canada's hesitation about the continued unnecessary starvation in the north Canada's policy against cross-border aid, and an excessive deference to the autonomy or sovereignty of the Ethiopian states, given the massive starvation going on there?

• (1500)

[Translation]

Hon. Monique Landry (Minister for External Relations): Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the Hon. Member for his question, and I share his concerns and the concerns of all Canadians and the Canadian Government about the situation facing millions of Ethiopians today.

Last week, the Hon. Member raised the question of the delivery of aid by non-governmental organizations.

Mr. Speaker, the NGOs play a very important role in the delivery of our aid programs in Ethiopia and elsewhere, but today, when we consider the possibility of delivery through Sudan, the point is that we are not sure, and we are now trying to find out, whether the Sudanese port and the various routes would be able to handle and carry this aid to the people who need it.

We are concerned about finding the best way to route this aid, and we believe that if the Government allows NGOs to return to the North, that would be the best solution to the problem of how to deliver aid to the people that need it.

AUTONOMY OF ERITREA—IMPLEMENTATION OF UNITED NATIONS RESOLUTION

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, the Minister has confirmed the assumption that we are going to fiddle around trying to deal with a Government which refuses to deal with us while people starve in the north. Last week I pointed out that Resolution 390 assured the autonomy of Eritrea in the Ethiopian confederation. In her answer she indicated that resolution no longer applies. It still applies, and it is the basis of the war and the cause of starvation.

Will the Government not take initiatives in the UN to force the UN to assume its responsibility with respect to the implementation of Resolution 390 which is the basis on which the war must end?

[Translation]

Hon. Monique Landry (Minister for External Relations): Mr. Speaker, we are looking at all the alternatives to ensure that aid is delivered as soon as possible.

At the present time, we have been given the assurance that the mission conducted by the Assistant Secretary-General of the United Nations, Mr. Ahtisaari, has produced results, in that Ethiopia will allow the United Nations to return and help deliver aid in the regions where people are starving.

Mr. Speaker, we are looking at all the possibilities, and we are also prepared to consider any suggestions the Hon. Member may have.

PETITIONS

GOVERNMENT RESPONSE

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 106(8), I have the honour to table, in both official languages, the Government's response to 11 petitions bearing Nos. 332-3951, 332-3994, 332-3995, 332-3998, 332-3999, 332-4127, 332-4136, 332-4180, 332-4196, 332-4223 and 332-4228.

PETITIONS

CANADA-U.S. FREE TRADE AGREEMENT

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, it is my honour to present a petition pursuant to Standing Order 106 from a number of constituents concerned that the trade deal the Government signed with the U.S. will have a very fundamental impact on Canada's economic, cultural and political independence. They believe the agreement will result in a loss of jobs not only in many sectors of the economy but in various regions.

Therefore, they ask the Parliament of Canada to obtain a clear mandate from the people on this critical issue through a national general election.

OPPOSITION TO CANADA POST SUPERMAILBOXES SERVICE

Mr. Geoff Scott (Hamilton—Wentworth): Madam Speaker, it is my honour to present a petition from a number of residents of Waterdown, Ontario, in my constituency of Hamilton—Wentworth. This petition is one of many circulating in my riding and so far we have approximately 1,300 signatures.

My constituents are very concerned over Canada Post's proposal to provide supermailbox service to 850 general delivery customers. The Flamboro Town Council passed a resolution objecting to the plan. Council stated, together with the majority of the users of the Waterdown Post Office, that they would rather see the existing building expanded. I support the petitioners' request and urge the Government to consider their wishes. By expanding the facility, Canada Post will be able to provide, in the most practical and realistic way, the best possible postal service for the next 25 years.

SUPPORT FOR BILL C-54 TO COMBAT PORNOGRAPHY

Mr. John Reimer (Kitchener): Madam Speaker, it is my honour to present a petition from 99 constituents of the riding of Kitchener. The petitioners support the Government's initiative in Bill C-54 to combat pornography. As they say, pornography offends standards of decency, portrays an abnormal view of societal values, and is harmful to normal family associations.

These 99 signatures are added to the close to 2,000 I have presented in the House previously which call upon the Government to bring in Bill C-54 and deal with this very serious social problem.

OPPOSITION TO SALES TAX ON FOOD

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Madam Speaker, I have the honour and privilege to present two petitions signed by several hundred of my constituents in Spanish, Ontario, on the north shore of Lake Huron, as well as petitioners from St. Joseph's Island and Richard's Landing, as well as a number of petitioners from Sault Ste. Marie, who deplore the action of the Government in its massive increase in regressive taxation on all manner of commodities. They call on the Government not to impose a tax on food.

RESEARCH INTO PREVENTION AND CURE OF SCHIZOPHRENIA

Mr. Peter Peterson (Hamilton West): Madam Speaker, I have two petitions to present to the House today, both of them signed by constituents of mine. The first petition relates to the issue of the illness of schizophrenia. The petitioners point out that it costs Canada $3 billion annually to treat that illness. They humbly pray and call upon Parliament to ensure that research efforts related to schizophrenia will in the future be commensurate with the seriousness of this illness.

ALLEGED WITHHOLDING OF FOOD BY ISRAEL TO CONTROL RIOTS

Mr. Peter Peterson (Hamilton West): The second petition deals with a concern expressed by a number of constituents regarding the remarks made by the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) when he charged that the State of Israel was using food as a weapon to control the riots in the occupied territories of the West Bank and Gaza Strip. The petitioners humbly pray and call upon Parliament to ask the Department of External Affairs to provide the Canadian people with the evidence to support the charges made by the Minister.

Question No. 275—Mr. Redway:

Since September 4, 1984, did the Department of Supply and Services make grants and/or loans to persons or corporations, non-governmental organizations and governments within metropolitan Toronto and, if so, to which ones and, in each case, in what amount and for what purpose?

Hon. Otto Jelinek (Minister of Supply and Services): Since September 4, 1984, the Department of Supply and Services has not made grants and/or loans to persons or corporations, non-governmental organizations and governments within metropolitan Toronto.

AIR CANADA FLIGHT 123

Question No. 304—Ms. McDonald:

1. On February 24, 1988 did a lighted cigarette fall to the floor and cause an emergency landing for the 155 passengers on Air Canada flight 123?

2. Is it the position of the Department of Transport that there is no safety hazard posed by passenger smoking on commercial aircraft?

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Transport): 1. On February 24, 1988, on Air Canada Flight 123, a passenger dropped a lit cigarette on the floor into an area where it could not be seen directly nor retrieved. A flight attendant discharged a fire extinguisher in the area. As a precautionary step, the Captain elected to land in Winnipeg, where the dead cigarette was located and removed.

2. Aircraft are equipped to safely permit smoking, with items such as enclosed metal ashtrays, fire retardant seat cushion material and lavatories equipped with smoke detectors and automatic fire extinguishers for waste bins.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

CANADIAN ENVIRONMENTAL PROTECTION ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed from Tuesday, April 19, consideration of Bill C-74, an Act respecting the protection of the environment and of human life and health, as reported (with amendments) from a legislative committee, and the following motions of Ms. McDonald:

Motion No. 12

That Bill C-74 be amended in Clause 11 by striking out line 16 at page 9 and substituting the following therefor:

"human, animal or plant life depends; or".

Motion No. 13

That Bill C-74 be amended in Clause 11 by striking out line 18 at page 9 and substituting the following therefor:

"danger in Canada to life or health."

Mrs. Pauline Browes (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of the Environment): On a point of order, Madam Speaker. Yesterday during the debate at report stage, Motions Nos. 6, 8 and 9 were deferred. We discussed the possibility of a subamendment to Motion No. 8 and I would like to move:

• (1510)

That Motion No. 8 be amended by deleting all the words after "That" and substituting the following:

Bill C-74 be amended in Clause 6 by adding after line 39 on page 5 the following:

(2) the Minister shall include in the annual report required by Section 137, a report of the activities of the federal-provincial advisory committee.

Mr. Caccia: Madam Speaker, the Parliamentary Secretary has kindly read the subamendment as proposed by the Government to my amendment to Motion No. 8. The amendment is perfectly acceptable and I want to thank the Parliamentary Secretary.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): I would at this time require the unanimous consent of the House to return to Motion No. 8 to deal with the amendment suggested by the Parliamentary Secretary, as Motions Nos. 12 and 13 were actually being debated.

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The House has heard the terms of the motion. Is it the pleasure of the House to accept the amendment?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Amendment (Mrs. Browes) agreed to.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Shall Motion No. 8, as amended, carry?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion No. 8, as amended, agreed to.

Mrs. Browes: Madam Speaker, we also deferred Motion No. 6. There was considerable discussion yesterday about splitting Motion No. 6 as presented by the Hon. Member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia). I would seek the unanimous consent of the House to put forward the following text as the new Motion No. 6:

Motion No. 6

That Bill C-74 be amended in Clause 5 by adding after line 22 on page 5:

(3) the Minister shall include in the annual report required by Section 137, a report of the activities of any committees established under paragraph 5(1)(a).

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): For this new Motion No. 6 to be acceptable the Hon. Member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia) would have to withdraw, with unanimous consent, his Motion No. 6. Does the Hon. Member agree to that?

Mr. Caccia: Madam Speaker, I have just had the opportunity to read the proposed alternative amendment as just read by the Parliamentary Secretary. It is helpful, no doubt, and probably could to be registered under the heading "better half a loaf than none". Therefore, I am prepared to withdraw my motion.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Is there unanimous consent for the Hon. Member to withdraw his motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The House has heard the terms of the new motion. Is it the pleasure of the House to accept the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion No. 6, as amended agreed to.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): As the House has disposed of Motions Nos. 6 and 8, would the House agree to dispose of Motion No. 9 at this time? The motion in the name of the Hon. Member for Broadview—Greenwood (Ms. McDonald) reads:

Motion No. 9

That Bill C-74 be amended by adding immediately after line 39 at page 5 the following:

"7. The Minister will make public all correspondence, documents and information arising from the work of the committees referred to in sections 5 and 6."

Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt this motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Pursuant to Standing Order 114(11), the recorded division on the proposed motion stands deferred.

Resuming debate on Motions Nos. 12 and 13, the Hon. Member for Kenora—Rainy River (Mr. Parry).

Mr. John Parry (Kenora—Rainy River): Madam Speaker, I would like to bring to the attention of the House what I believe will be an internal contradiction in the text of the Bill if these amendments, Motions Nos. 12 and 13, in the name of the Hon. Member for Broadview—Greenwood (Ms. McDonald), are not accepted. Specifically, in Clause 3 of the Bill we have the following definition of "environment":

—"environment" means the components of the Earth and includes

(a) air, land and water,

(b) all layers of the atmosphere,

(c) all organic and inorganic matter and living organisms and

(d) the interacting natural systems that include components referred to in paragraphs (a) to (c);

Ms. McDonald: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. We are trying to make an extremely important point about a definition and the Parliamentary Secretary is having a conversation and will not be able to respond to it.

Some Hon. Members: Order.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The Hon. Member for Kenora—Rainy River.

Mr. Parry: Madam Speaker, this is an important point because I do not believe that it should lie within the purview of the House to pass legislation which is in some way internally inconsistent. As I quoted from Clause 3, we have a comprehensive and all-encompassing—as indeed it should be—definition of what the environment constitutes. Yet, Clause 11(b) reads:

> constituting or that may constitute a danger to the environment on which human life depends;

Taken on its own, that seems unnecessarily and unwarrantedly to circumscribe the interpretation of the meaning of "environment".

• (1520)

However, when we place it in the context of the definition that is provided in Clause 3, it is not only unwonted and unwarranted, it becomes inconsistent. There is an essential conflict between the global definition of environment in Clause 3 and the circumscribed definition we find in Clause 11(b).

The text of the amendment that is put forward by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Broadview—Greenwood is that the part "human life depends" is removed and replaced with "human, animal or plant life".

Given the understanding that seems to be general in the House of the interdependence of ecosystems within the total environment, I believe that would restore the internal consistency to the Bill. We would be talking in the definition section of environment broadly defined in the definition section and, when we get to Part II on toxic substances, we would be talking of environment broadly defined.

Motion No. 13 is of similar significance because Clause 11(c) in the present text states "may constitute a danger in Canada to human life or health" and Motion No. 13 proposed by my colleague would substitute "danger in Canada to life or health". Obviously that implies the life or health of all ecosystems, of all living components of the environment and not just human.

Obviously, we have a situation whereby in a country as vast and as sparsely populated as Canada, that which is not a hazard to human life or health today may indeed be a hazard to human life or health tomorrow.

The Parliamentary Secretary comes from the Golden Horseshoe in southern Ontario. I am sure she need not be reminded of some of the situations which have arisen there, whereby areas that were considered to be remote or isolated even a matter of years let alone a few decades ago, and where toxic substances were discarded, are now considered to be prime real estate but for the existence of the toxic substances.

There is this phenomenon of ever expanding areas in which substances must be collected and, therefore, even further areas for their storage or disposal that must be looked for.

Therefore, I conclude by urging the Government to accept these two amendments because I believe that by rejecting them the Government would leave within the legislation a serious inconsistency that would undermine not only the credibility of the legislation but also the credibility of the commitment that all Parties should be making to the environment, not only of Canada today but in Canada's future.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The question is on Motion No. 12 standing in the name of the Hon. Member for Broadview—Greenwood (Ms. McDonald). Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): In my opinion, the nays have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Pursuant to Standing Order 114(11), the recorded division on the proposed motion stands deferred.

The next question is on Motion No. 13 standing in the name of the Hon. Member for Broadview—Greenwood (Ms. McDonald). Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): In my opinion, the nays have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Pursuant to Standing Order 114(11), the recorded division on the proposed motion stands deferred.

Mrs. Browes: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I know that you have grouped Motions Nos. 15, 16 and 19 for debate. Might you consider grouping Motion No. 23 with Motions Nos. 15, 16 and 19 since they are equivalent?

Mr. Caccia: Madam Speaker, it is already very difficult to debate three motions within the time allocation of 10 minutes. If we were to add a fourth motion it would make the task even more difficult. I would prefer to leave it the way the motions have been grouped by you in their present form, so as to allow a better debate.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): There is not unanimous consent.

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport) moved:

Motion No. 15:

That Bill C-74 be amended in Clause 33 by striking out lines 12 to 22 at page 24 and substituting the following therefor:

'33.(1) Subject to subsection (3), where an order has been made to add a substance to the List of Toxic Substances in Schedule 1, the Governor in Council may, on the recommendation of the Minister, make regulations with respect to the substance, including regulations providing for or imposing requirements respecting'.

Motion No. 16:

That Bill C-74 be amended in Clause 33 by deleting lines 45 to 48 at page 26 and lines 1 to 32 at page 27.

Motion No. 19:

That Bill C-74 be amended by deleting Clause 53 and substituting the following therefor:

'53. Where no other Act of Parliament expressly provides for the making of regulations that result in the protection of the environment, the Governor in Council may, on the recommendation of the Minister, make regulations for the protection of the environment respecting

(a) limits on the release of emissions and effluents by departments, boards and agencies of the Government of Canada or from federal works or undertakings, and where appropriate, by corporations named in Schedule C to the Financial Administration Act, or on federal lands; and

(b) waste handling and accepted disposal practices for departments, boards, agencies and corporations referred to in paragraph (a), federal works or undertakings or on federal lands.'

He said: In essence, Motion No. 15 endeavours to delete the mandatory consultation for the federal Minister of the Environment with a committee that would be essentially a committee of a federal-provincial nature. This would slow down a process of environmental protection, which would not be beneficial to the whole thrust of this Bill. Motion No. 16 is a specific motion to delete the purpose of having this equivalency policy which was introduced by the Government in February, and I will come back to that in a moment. Finally, Motion No. 19 is a motion which, if adopted, will not require the concurrency of a federal Minister if his or her department are polluting and the Minister of the Environment wants to proceed and lay charges against that specific department or agency coming under the jurisdiction of another Minister of the Crown.

I will recite briefly a chronology of Motion No. 15. In June 1987, when the Bill was introduced, the Minister introduced it in a form that did not have this equivalency provision. It is important to remember the date because it was in the same month that the Meech Lake Accord was cooked up within 24 hours behind closed doors across the street from Parliament Hill. The Minister at that time was very keen on pointing to the fact that he wanted to avoid compulsory consultation with the provinces. That was almost a year ago.

This notion of freedom from consultation was defended right up to the last appearance of the Minister before our committee in February of this year. In March of this year, all of a sudden, out of the blue, we have this concept of compulsory consultation introduced. This is a subject we investigated in depth in committee and with officials as well. There was no technical reason for it. It was evident and quite clear a political decision emanating from what I would call the Meech Lake virus that had penetrated the body politics of this Government.

What we are doing with Motion No. 15 is giving the Minister back what he wanted to have until March 1988, namely, the ability to make federal regulations without compulsory consultations.

With respect to the constitutionality of the federal Government to regulate in the area of environmental protection—because this is what we are talking about, in essence—it is worth putting on record an excerpt from a letter written by Mr. Ian Blue, a lawyer in Toronto, who wrote to the committee following his appearance before us in January. He said: "It is a well known principle that where Parliament can legislate over a topic under Section 91 for one aspect and the provinces can legislate over the same topic on another aspect, that both pieces of legislation are valid. If, however, the two pieces of legislation have an operational conflict and create autonomy, then the provincial legislation is rendered inoperative and the federal legislation must prevail. If, therefore, Bill C-74 conflicts with existing provincial legislation, it is my opinion that existing provincial legislation must be inoperative to the extent of the conflict and Bill C-74 must prevail. I hasten to add that this is a legal opinion and not a political opinion, which I leave to the members of the committee and your colleagues in Parliament".

A similar observation on a different line of thought was made by Alistair Lucas, a constitutional expert from Calgary. He said in essence that the constitutional issue in this connection, which has been raised by some people, is that since the federal Government cannot effectively delegate its exclusive legislative powers to provinces, an acceptable definition of equivalency, however, he feels, may prove elusive, in any event. The conclusion of Alistair Lucas is that this was not a constitutionally based decision, that of having the equivalency provision, but a decision that relates to a political initiative.

The concept of an equivalency provision is a consequence of the Meech Lake Accord. It must be criticized on the floor of this House because it is an abrogation of federal powers to protect the environment and because it could in some cases lead to the creation of pollution havens and most definitely to a patchwork of environmental protection standards, if any, across Canada.

A number of comments have been made on this matter, and in the limited time available I can only quote what was said by Toby Vigod, a lawyer with the Canadian Environmental Law Association. She said: With this law the federal Government is essentially abdicating its responsibility to take a strong role in protecting the environment. We think the feds do have the constitutional authority to set minimum national standards.

It is here where Ms. Vigod indicates that the equivalency provision in this Bill could lead to pollution havens created by inconsistencies in province to province standards. This is very important and it is very unfortunate, as you are aware, Madam Speaker, that the grouping of these three issues into one permits only an intervention of 10 minutes. The equivalency provisions, in other words, may probably be a great victory for the provinces but are certainly not one for Canada.

Coming now to Motion No. 19, which is the third and last motion, I would say that after a strong lobbying by environmental groups to our committee, and the efforts made by opposition Members—and I must also pay due recognition to the Hon. Member for York East (Mr. Redway), the Government relented and brought in amendments to regulate federal polluters. However, unfortunately the Government refused to remove a clause which requires the concurrence of the Minister responsible for a case of pollution. It could be the Minister of Transport (Mr. Bouchard) or the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Masse), you name it.

The requirement of the concurrence of another Minister, the Minister responsible for the pollution, is tantamount to leaving the fox in charge of the chickens. So we are attempting with this motion simply to remove the concurrence of a Minister other than the Minister of the Environment (Mr. McMillan). If this is not accepted, we can still have pollution in the Ottawa River by the Bank of Canada. We can still see in years to come the National Research Council dumping all sorts of substances, including chemical substances, as has happened, I am told, into the Ottawa River. No one would be able to take action against Via Rail for not bringing polluting diesel engines up to standards.

I see my time is up so I will conclude by saying that I hope that at least one, if not more of these measures, will be favourably received by our most generous Parliamentary Secretary.

• (1540)

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview—Greenwood): Madam Speaker, I am pleased to speak in support of the three motions of my colleague, the Hon. Member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia). I will begin my remarks on the last motion, Motion No. 19, which is a very important one.

The federal Government is itself a polluter, as we all know, and we hang our heads in shame. This motion is in aid of reducing that pollution and in bringing about some accountability. What it would do is to strengthen the ability of the Minister of the Environment (Mr. McMillan) to stop other federal agencies from polluting.

We know that the Minister of the Environment sometimes has a great deal of trouble in Cabinet with his colleagues. We seem to have one Minister in charge of getting rid of pollution and other Ministers in charge of increasing it, subsidizing it and letting people get away with contributing to it. In the Bill we have provisions that are supposed to be directed to reducing pollution, particularly of toxic chemicals, but the Minister can only make regulations for federal agencies with the concurrence of the Minister of the Crown who has the administration and control of duties or functions in relation to these works. In effect, other Ministers have veto power over this type of enforcement.

If the Minister of the Environment wanted CN to change the type of pesticide it uses along railroad tracks or, indeed, to get rid of the use of chemical pesticides, or to stop any other Crown agency from polluting, he could only do so if the Minister of Transport (Mr. Bouchard) approved. If the Department of National Defence wanted to put more PCBs in northern lands, the Minister could do nothing without the agreement of the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Beatty).

Very simply, the Minister of the Environment is restricted what he can do, which is the reason for having this amendment. It will give more teeth to do something that surely as parliamentarians we all agree needs to be done. We want this to be a tough piece of legislation. We need it to be tough to do the job that it should do.

With respect to the very complex matter of the equivalency proposals, here we have a situation wherein the Minister in bringing in legislation said that this will be tough federal legislation. There was no equivalency at that time. Months after the committee started its review of the legislation there was no equivalency, and then suddenly it was brought in. The Hon. Member for Davenport calls this the Meech Lake virus. I do not want to call it that since I am a supporter of Meech Lake and a supporter of consultation. I think that consultation with the provinces on environmental matters, including toxic chemicals, is important. I think that it is quite proper. However, we do not want the type of consultation that will be mandatory at particular stages to slow up the process. We want on-going consultation and, yes, we have various provisions for it.

We have First Ministers' meetings with the provinces. There are working groups of officials that get together. There are all kinds of opportunities for the sort of consultation that is perfectly proper. Here we have a situation to get toxic chemicals on to the list, and it is very time consuming. Environmentalists tell us that it has been far too time consuming and that the delays have been enormous. It took a period of 10 years to have five toxic chemicals banned in Canada. This is an incredibly slow record. To add another stage of consultation here in order to work out these equivalency rules seems to me to be quite wrong. We need to have tough minimum national standards. Provinces can certainly have higher standards if they wish. That is quite proper and everyone agrees with that. However, in order to have measures that would hold things up seems to me to be looking the wrong way.

I might add that industry does not like this idea either. It would rather know where it stands. It would rather have national standards than different standards in different provinces. Industry has some reservations.

Environmentalists have certainly spoken most eloquently about the need to have tough national minimum standards. They are worried about what will happen with equivalency. I would like to refer to some of the reservations.

An additional concern is the impact of the process for development of equivalency agreements on the public consultation process. Environmentalists point out that these federal-provincial consultations can be held entirely in secret. A motion I moved to see that these were brought out of secret process was defeated. This refers to the in camera consultations. The public would not have access to this information. We could even have sell-outs and the public would not know about it. Experts working for environmental groups, voluntary organizations and in the ecology field would not know about it. A noteworthy diversion from the process has been in camera federal-provincial negotiations and amendments, and they sure do not like it.

As Clause 37 currently stands, it provides for no public scrutiny in the process of determining equivalency. Limited access to agreements after the fact forces the public into the old reactive mode. Members of the public get to complain after the decision has been made in secret. That is contrary to what we are trying to achieve with this Bill, to recognize that environmentalists are important resources with knowledge and expertise that should be used in the process.

I strongly urge acceptance of these motions by the Hon. Member for Davenport. They are good and sensible. They have enormous support from one end of the country to the other, from experts and from environmentalists. I hope that the Government will accept these amendments.

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have this opportunity to say a brief word with respect to Motion No. 19 standing in the name of the Hon. Member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia). I think it is an important and significant motion.

As you are probably aware, Madam Speaker, I had the honour and privilege to serve as a member of the legislative committee, along with the Parliamentary Secretary, the Hon. Member for Davenport, the Hon. Member for Broadview—Greenwood (Ms. McDonald), the Hon. Member for Vancouver—Kingsway (Mr. Waddell), the Hon. Member for Mississauga North (Mr. Horner), and a number of other Members who are in the House at the present time. It was a very special committee in my view because, as many people have said, a true spirit of co-operation existed. An enormous amount of the credit for that is due to the Parliamentary Secretary. I congratulate her for the outstanding job that she did on the legislative committee. A great deal of the credit also belongs to the Minister. Without his over-all guidance and co-operation, obviously, nothing could have been achieved.

Having said that, as you may know, Madam Speaker, I put forward a number of amendments myself to this Bill. In all I think the Bill had some 300 different amendments proposed to it. There were a number moved by members of the Liberal Party, by members of the New Democratic Party, a number which emanated from the Library of Parliament, and the Government of course had numerous amendments. I myself put forward a number of amendments, one of which was in this area which is dealt with in Motion No. 19.

I raised that matter in the House on January 21. On that day I put a question to the Minister, which I will quote to refresh your memory, Madam Speaker. It was:

> Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of the Environment. He has indicated that he believes all federal Departments and agencies should be subject to environmental law, but recently the Minister of Justice and the Department of Justice have defended federal polluters on the grounds of federal immunity from provincial legislation.
> Will the Minister agree to amend immediately Bill C-74, which is presently in committee, to make absolutely certain that federal polluters are subject to all environmental laws? Will he ask his colleague, the Minister of Justice, to ensure that in future the defence of federal immunity will not be used in cases of this sort?

The Minister's response to my question was as follows:

> Mr. Speaker, I believe strongly—and I know that my view is shared widely in the House—that the federal Government is not above the law. That principle applies as much to the environmental field as it does to any other.
> When a federal Department or agency breaks the law and violates pollution controls, then the book should be thrown at it. That texture is woven into the very fabric of the Canadian Environmental Act now before committee.

He went on to say:

> If the Hon. Member, and the Hon. Member for Davenport who is heckling me now, both of whom are members of that committee, believe that the law as it is proposed falls short of the principle that the Hon. Member for York East has now articulated in his question, I invite them to propose an amendment, and it will be viewed with great sympathy by me and by the Government.

• (1550)

In response to that invitation by the Minister, I did put amendments to this clause. I think that the clause has been strengthened. I certainly do not suggest for a minute that there has not been a response to that. But I do think that the clause still leaves something to be desired, and it could be strengthened further. As it presently stands, it indicates that "the Governor in Council may, on the recommendation of the Minister and with the concurrence of the Minister of the Crown who has the administration and control of or duties and functions in relation to those works, undertakings or lands, make regulations . . . "

It could very well be said that if the words "with the concurrence of the Minister of the Crown who has the administration and control of or duties and functions in relation to those works" were removed from that section, there would be no effect whatsoever. In fact, the Governor in Council has some option or flexibility to make or not to make regulations which would restrict federal polluters. If the words "with the concurrence of" some other Minister were removed, it could very well be said that it would not mean anything whatsoever in the clause. The same flexibility would be there for the Governor in Council to function with.

Frankly, it is my view that those words are superfluous to the whole point of the clause. By taking them out, Motion No. 19 would leave us with the discretion once more in the hands of the Cabinet, the Governor in Council, to make regulations to restrict federal polluters.

Leaving them in leads to another problem for the people who will be trying to prosecute under this legislation. The problem is, will a court say that not only has there to be a regulation in place, but that somehow or another the Crown Attorney prosecuting this case will have to prove to the satisfaction of the judge hearing the case that there was concurrence of the other Minister of the Crown in this whole process? If that is the case, and if it is interpreted in that manner, and frankly I would be surprised if it were not, I think that there would be some problems for a Crown Attorney in prosecuting a federal polluter and getting a conviction of the federal polluter, which is the intention under this legislation not only of the House but of the Parliamentary Secretary, the Minister, and I hope of the Government. By taking those words out, Motion No. 19 would strengthen the whole effect of the Bill and make it easier to get a conviction where it was warranted. It would also not fetter the hands of the Governor in Council in making a decision as to whether to restrict a federal polluter.

Personally, I would like to see the whole thing go much further than this. I would like a clear statement in this Bill, a clause that made it quite clear that all federal polluters, whether it is a government department, agency, board, or commission, were bound by this Bill quite clearly as far as the federal jurisdiction was concerned. That would be the ideal situation and that would make it as clear as it possibly could be. If that is not the case, there will be future occasions when the Government will be embarrassed by its own legislation.

There is still an opportunity for the Government to move or to bring forward an amendment which would make it clear that federal polluters are absolutely subject to being required to obey federal environmental law. I hope that the Government will see fit to bring in an amendment of that sort before third reading of this Bill is finally attained.

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver—Kingsway): Madam Speaker, I would like to say a few words on the amendment and on the debate. I was a member of the legislative committee for a short period of two weeks. As the Hon. Member for York East (Mr. Redway) has stated, something in the order of 300 amendments were proposed.

Many people who follow the proceedings of the House of Commons on television or in the gallery only see Members in the Chamber itself, and many of the people watch the theatrical antics of Question Period, not that I have anything against the theatre.

What I am attempting to say is that many people do not realize that many things go on behind the scenes in Parliament, for example, in the legislative committees. When a Bill receives second reading in the House of Commons it goes to the legislative committee. This was an incredible committee. I only saw a small part of it, but there were 300 amendments, before it which is a lot of work. I note some of the members of the committee are present in the House today, for example, the Hon. Member for York East, the Parliamentary Secretary, the Hon. Member for Scarborough Centre (Mrs. Browes), the Hon. Member for Mississauga North (Mr. Horner), the Hon. Member for Broadview—Greenwood (Ms. McDonald), the Hon. Member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia), and the Hon. Member for Niagara Falls (Mr. Nicholson). They are here today. I was very impressed at the work done in committee, so we can collectively pat ourselves on the back.

Having said that, perhaps sometimes the public does not understand what equivalency is. Let me back-track a little and attempt to define the problem as I see it. In 1867, when Canada came together in Confederation, there were many things left out of the Constitution, because we were just not there at that point in history. For example, nuclear energy and telecommunications are not there, although there was the telegraph, which is in the British North America Act. But the environment and environmental concerns were not included. We had a much purer environment then, and did not have the economic growth that has led to the downside of economic growth, which is pollution of the environment. Now we have a country where Canadians are environmentalists and well aware of how we must preserve one of the greatest environments in the world. Canada is the second largest country in the world, and we are very keen on preserving its environment. That was not included in the Constitution to deal with.

What happened in this Bill, as I understand it, is that the Minister came forward and said that the federal Government is going to act in the following manner. Committee hearings were held on that basis. Then there was panic among the provinces, which is typically Canadian, because the provinces stated that they had provincial Ministers of the Environment and they want to be consulted.

I am trying to remember the old joke where university students from different countries were writing an essay on how to define the elephant. The English student wrote about the elephant in colonial history. The American student wrote how to make bigger and better elephants. What did the Canadian student write? He wrote about the role of the elephant in federal-provincial relations. It is very typical of Canadians to get bogged down in federal-provincial relations.

What happened here is that the provincial Governments put pressure on the federal Government. I do not know whether it was a coincidence that it was at the time of Meech Lake. The Hon. Member for Broadview—Greenwood has stated that she is for Meech Lake, and she does not think that that mattered. I am against Meech Lake, and I am not sure that that really mattered at the time. What mattered was that the federal Minister backed up and stated that we are not going to take action through the Government of Canada without consulting the provinces, or having equivalent measures in place in the provinces. If the provinces have equivalent measures, then there is no need for the federal Government to take any action. I think that we have a fundamental difference between the Governments. I know that the Member for Davenport and I disagree with the Government here, because we need tough federal minimum standards that apply to the whole country. At some point the provincial Premiers will have to deal with the role of the environment in the Constitution, and the courts will also have to deal with that in a little more detail. That came up in this particular Bill.

I am sorry that the Minister backed away from his original position, as I understood it, and has watered down the role of the federal Government. I think that we will live to regret it, and that it makes for a weaker Bill. I wish the Minister had toughed it out and stuck with tough minimum national standards, and forgot about the equivalency rules. I think that is a defeat for this Minister who has been, in my view, a fairly good Minister. I would give this Bill a C if I had to grade it.

Look at the difference between what California is doing and what Canada is doing. California is bringing in a citizen's bill of rights on energy where a citizen can go to court and sue one of these polluters. Look at what we are doing in Canada. No way do we give the average citizen that right. We do not even give the federal Government that right. The federal Minister has to spend his or her time debating with the provinces. What we are going to do, which is a typical Canadian solution, instead of going to the people and having an environmental bill of rights, we are going to the bureaucrats to have the federal bureaucrats fighting with the provincial bureaucrats behind closed doors. Isn't that too bad? Isn't that the sort of old Canada of the past? I would like to see a different kind of Canada that is more open and has—

. . . for the people, for people's environmental rights.

[English]

That is what is wrong with this particular section of the Bill. I could not agree more with the courageous stand taken by the Hon. Member for York East the stand on the amendments taken by the Hon. Member for Davenport and by my own Party's critic, the Hon. Member for Broadview—Greenwood.

Mrs. Pauline Browes (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of the Environment): Madam Speaker, I am pleased to join in the discussion of these particular motions. I have listened intently to the speakers who have preceded me. Having listened yesterday and today, I feel it is time for me to respond to the confusion expressed by a number of Members opposite on the issue of national standards.

Contrary to what has been stated in this House, this Bill does provide for national standards, national environmental control standards, and I emphasize the adjective "control". This is what is important. This is where prevention of environmental pollution will be fought.

This is the point where laws can be enforced and transgressers of the law dealt with by the innovative as well as the tough penalties provided for in this Bill. These control standards provided for in Sections 33 and 53 will apply nationally, national controls on toxic substances, at any point in their life-cycle, and we will be able to do so efficiently and effectively because of the provisions in this Bill.

These provisions will not only provide national control standards but will provide for national consultations in their making, just as this Bill was made. Provisions that recognize both levels of Government can, should, in fact, contain environmental control standards which will protect this fragile planet that we share. The equivalency provisions will forge the kind of national protection framework demanded of governments by the multistakeholder consultative group which provided the report From Cradle to Grave: A Management Approach to Chemicals in the fall of 1986, which provided the basis on which much of the conceptual framework of this Bill was drawn. I applaud those persons who worked on that committee.

That consultative group, on which there was participation from environmental groups, both the Conservation Council of New Brunswick and Friends of the Earth, consumer groups, Miss Pat Brock of Redwater, Alberta, organized labour, the legislature and health co-ordinator of the Energy and Chemical Worker's Union on behalf of the Labour of Congress, industry and both levels of Government, reached consensus on a framework for managing chemicals and within it called on Governments to be innovative in sorting out the jurisdictional confusion that exists in Canada. They called for harmonization and co-operation. I want to quote from that very important consultative group report: It reads:

This report is the result of that shared vision. The cradle-to-grave approach to managing chemicals detailed in the report was developed through consultation, through a recognition that cooperation and coordination rather than conflict is the only response to a growing societal realization: that the current haphazard management of man-made chemicals threatens not only health and the environment but the economy as well; that all stakeholders—from industry and labour to government, the environmental movement and society in general—continue to lose if the status quo is maintained; that a chemical crisis or disaster should not have to occur in this country before attention is drawn to the need for practical, preventive measures.

Then the report goes on to politics and government. It states:

In fairness to Governments, they are often confronted with conflicting demands. They are also working from a jumble of laws and standards which fail to adequately manage chemicals from their inception to their disposal. What is needed is a fundamental re-evaluation of governmental approaches to environmental issues. Politicians and governmental officials must assume leadership for establishing co-ordination and consistency in the management of chemicals. They must develop, through consultation with the appropriate stakeholders, measures to erase gaps in decision-making, legislation and enforcement.

Let me go to another section, Madam Speaker, having to do with achieving jurisdictional harmony. When the first Prime Minister of Canada, in drafting the Constitution, did not include in that Constitution, the British North America Act, the idea of environment, achieving jurisdictional harmony when it comes to the environment became a challenge for all of us. This consultative report states:

A management approach cannot be effective without jurisdictional consistency and co-ordination . . . It will require the co-operation of federal and provincial Governments . . .

At the moment, laws, programs and guidelines are frequently overlapping, inadequate or incoherent, while priorities are often conflicting. Disputes between Governments, or even between departments and agencies within the same level of Government, are at the root of some problems.

—a comprehensive review of existing powers, laws, regulations and programs at the various levels of government is an essential first step not only to ensuring jurisdictional co-ordination but to improving the over-all management system. The review should lead to simplification, co-ordination and consistency in regulatory and program approaches.

Jurisdictional rationalization is a big job.

We have tackled that, Madam Speaker:

It will require effective leadership—

And we have that from the Minister of the Environment (Mr. McMillan) and from the Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Mulroney):

—and commitment to the management approach, as well as comprehensive legislation and enforcement mechanisms.

The Bill incorporates some new and innovative ideas, and equivalency provisions are part of that approach, an approach that properly respects, indeed, strives for partnership with all Canadians and particularly reorganizes the need for effective partnerships with the provinces, real co-operative federalism in the spirit of national reconciliation which was begun by our Government and is the cornerstone of everything that we do. Equivalency agreements will ensure efficient, effective application of environmental control standards across this country, thus affording Canadians an equal level of protection. They will be based on tough national environmental control standards, not on the lowest common denominator, as stated by some Members opposite yesterday.

• (1610)

Canadians are demanding nothing less. This Government, through this Bill, aims to provide a national level of protection, and equivalency agreements will do this without duplication and against strict criteria, national criteria, which will ensure that each and every Canadian is afforded equal protection and a high level of protection under the law.

I note that you are indicating that my time is up, Madam Speaker. I just want to say that this Bill does not cop out on national standards, as some Hon. Members opposite say they believe it does. It provides for effective—

Mr. Caccia: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I do not think it is within the rules at this stage of debate to permit a statement on the entire Bill and its thrust. We are debating a specific motion. Apart from the fact that the content is misleading, the Parliamentary Secretary is making a statement that she should make at third reading stage and not at this point in debate. I would ask you to intervene and to rule on this because I do not think it is within the rules of debate.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The time available to the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary has expired.

[Translation]

Mr. Gilles Grondin (Saint-Maurice): Madam Speaker, I am pleased to take part this afternoon in this debate to support the amendments presented by my colleague the Hon. Member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia) and also because as a former mayor of a Quebec municipality, I have trouble seeing how one can seek to decrease or even remove the ability of the Minister of the Environment to make the necessary decisions, especially in emergencies.

I experienced such situations when I was mayor of a municipality and the regulations in place, whether federal or provincial, resulted in tremendous enforcement problems and also problems for a municipality to obtain proper information to make the required decisions in a situation where toxic substances had to be stored and therefore transported within the municipal boundaries. Around 1980-81, a company had obtained permission to store in our municipality extremely dangerous toxic wastes commonly known as PCBs and more scientifically, perhaps, as polychlorinated biphenyls. These are carcinogenic materials found particularly in Hydro-Quebec's transformers and generators and this carcinogenic oil must absolutely be disposed of under very special conditions. And to this very day, although the problem has existed in the municipality, where I was mayor until 1985, for seven or eight years, no adequate support has been forthcoming from the federal or provincial governments so that we could completely eliminate both the storage and transport of these toxic products within the municipality. Although representations were made to various senior officials in the Department of the Environment and even to the provincial and federal Ministers, the answers we received were always more or less the same: "We are faced with a problem that is not exclusive to your area, and you will just have to deal with it as best you can until we have found a definitive solution".

Unfortunately, Madam Speaker, in a municipality like the one where I was mayor, with a population of about 12,000, there was not enough staff, especially qualified staff, to be able to examine all the risks involved in storing certain toxic products within a municipality.

We therefore decided, before issuing a permit to the company, to consult the provincial and federal Department of the Environment to find out whether departmental experts felt that the storage or transport of these toxic materials constituted a genuine hazard to public health.

We received the astonishing reply that there was no problem and the company had been given a storage permit, since it needed a permit to store toxic products considered to be extremely hazardous.

The fact is we were told there was no problem at all and that this substance could be stored within the limits of the municipality. However, shortly after the company had stored the 5,000 gallons of PCB oil, a reporter heard about the decision by federal and provincial authorities to allow the company to store this substance in our municipality, and it then became public knowledge that hazardous products were being stored in the municipality of Shawinigan South.

It took several meetings with employees at the Department of the Environment, at various levels, to find out that there was a real hazard but that municipal authorities had never been informed of the fact.

Madam Speaker, I wonder, for instance, when we have to transport toxic products in a municipality and the Minister of the Environment is supposed to consult with his colleague at the Department of Transport . . . I have the impression there will be some reluctance to take the responsibility, and that in emergencies often no decision will be made because we will lack the requisite consultation mechanisms to ensure that both the quality of the environment and our quality of life are protected.

I also presented a motion in the House not so long ago to the effect that the Government should consider the advisability of implementing a national toxic waste disposal program in cooperation with the provinces, counties and municipalities for the very purpose of avoiding a recurrence of what happened. I would then hope that the prerogatives and powers of the Minister of the Environment, far from being dispersed and shared with other colleagues, would be broadened and that he would really be given the ability to take all required action and make all necessary decisions and sometimes even be forced to have his departmental officials truly give all the required scope and attention to the problems raised, whether by municipalities, interest groups or Hon. Members in the amendments that they wish to make to the Bill.

So, Madam Speaker, I think the problem that we encountered in our municipality is not peculiar to Shawinigan South, but it helped me realize that the presently existing provincial and federal rules were not sufficient to ensure the quality of life for all our fellow citizens. So I would like to ask this Government in a very special way to accept the amendments presented in this House and to pay very particular attention to the transportation and storage of toxic substances, which are indeed a danger to the public.

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview—Greenwood) moved:

Motion No. 17

That Bill C-74 be amended by adding immediately after line 9 at page 29 the following:

"35. Where

(a) a substance

(i) is not specified on the List of Toxic Substances in Schedule I and the Ministers have reason to believe it is toxic, or

(ii) if the substance is specified on that List, the Ministers have reason to believe it is not adequately regulated, and

(b) the Minister has made no interim order in respect of the substance,

Her Majesty in Right of Canada may be held liable for all injury and damage resulting from the use of that substance in any period after the Ministers have reason to believe it is toxic or not adequately regulated."

She said: Madam Speaker, Motion No. 17 is an amendment which will add to the accountability of the Government through this Bill. The purpose of this motion is this. We are going to have a list of toxic substances and there is a process for placing substances on the list. However, what happens if substances simply remain on the list and there is no regulation, no action and no protection for the public or the environment, all the investigations are done and the conclusion is reached that the substance is toxic, but inadequate regulation is the result? One of the major flaws of the Bill is that the Minister is given enormous discretion as to when to assess a substance and how to regulate it. It seems to me only reasonable, if you are going to permit that enormous range of discretion, that there be some method of accountability if the Minister does not take action. He has to be liable.

Even if a substance is known to be toxic under any definition the Government is under no compulsion to regulate its use.

We tried to get requirements built into the legislation to say that once it has been established that a substance is toxic, then the Minister is required within a certain period of time to respond with some kind of regulation. It seems very reasonable that when something has been determined to be toxic, we ought to have some plans for regulation promptly put in place. That would have been by far the more desirable course of events, but we did not succeed. Since that was not accepted by the Government and the discretion has been left with the Minister, this at least gives some incentive to the Minister to ensure action.

How will this work? There is Access to Information. People can find out what these studies are. We can find out that a substance was determined to be toxic and the Minister sat back and bowed to pressure. This, of course, is what will happen. Some people are going to say the substance is toxic and ought not to be used or ought to be regulated in a certain way, and there are going to be industrial interests on the other side who say that maybe it is not as bad as all that, it will be expensive to replace it, and we would rather go ahead.

We know the Government is under pressure all the time to permit dangerous chemicals to be used because they have at least some short-term economic advantage. Short-term economic advantages are long-term economic disadvantages. We know that if they are destroying the environment, they are destroying productivity and livelihoods in the future. However, too many people are prepared to look at the short term and say, "It is economically beneficial to use this toxic substance, we do not want to replace it or do the research to find a different way". If there is some liability then there is an incentive to take this seriously.

The motion says that Her Majesty in right of Canada may be held liable for all injury and damage resulting from the use of the substance in that period after the Minister had reason to believe it is toxic. It allows for an adequate period of time for an investigation and adequate research. Then, if we find that the Minister has determined it is toxic, the liability would occur if he did not act. That seems to me a very reasonable recourse if Government has failed to pay attention to the studies done. People ought to have some kind of recourse in order to collect as a result of the negligence.

Although the Government is not compelled to act under this amendment, it would be held liable for administrative negligence when it has failed to discharge its responsibilities under the Act. Ideally this would never be used. It is much more likely, if you have this on the books, that Government would decide it does not want to be held liable and therefore would act when the toxic substance has been established as such.

I cannot see any harm in having this legislated or any reason why the Government would not want it, because it has a perfectly adequate time to make the assessment. The liability only occurs after such an assessment has been made. It is very logical for there to be regulations after the assessment has been made, and it seems to me this is a perfectly reasonable and responsible approach, and I hope the Government sees fit to support it.

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Madam Speaker, the principle that the Hon. Member introduces with this motion is extremely important.

It goes right to the heart of ministerial responsibility. If the Government had the moral fortitude to practice what it preaches, it would adopt this today. If the rhetoric with which we were showered from a prepared statement by the Parliamentary Secretary for 10 minutes half an hour ago on the glorious achievements of this proposed Bill were a reality, she would accept this motion. It falls exactly in the category of amendments from which the Government has retreated since the draft Bill was produced last summer and while it has travelled through various processes in committee until today. The Parliamentary Secretary's reply in a few moments will be the test of the pudding.

Imagine a situation in which the Minister of the Environment of the day knows that a substance is toxic but decides not to regulate it. This motion would address that situation of ministerial negligence. An example from the recent past is PCBs. The Minister has information which shows that PCBs are a threat to health but chooses not to regulate for reasons already given by the Hon. Member for Broadview—Greenwood (Ms. McDonald), because of strong industry lobby, because of pressures, or because of widespread use—you name it.

If a citizen who suffered the consequences of a particular substance, in this case PCBs, can demonstrate that the Minister of the day had the information but failed to act on it, the citizen would be able to take legal action to hold the Minister liable if this motion were passed. That is the substance of this amendment and I commend it for your consideration.

Mrs. Pauline Browes (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of the Environment): Madam Speaker, I do not intend to make as lengthy a speech on Motion No. 17 as I did on the previous motion. It was very important to make some strong points on that motion.

The Government does not accept Motion No. 17. Canada has always supported the concept that the polluter must pay for damage caused to the environment. The premise of Motion No. 17 that Her Majesty be held liable for activities of others is, therefore, unacceptable.

The Act does protect Canadians and their environment in emergency situations where urgent action is required to deal with danger to the environment, human life, or health. Section 44 is designed to allow action on an urgent basis where the Ministers of the Environment and National Health and Welfare believe that a substance not yet specified on the list of toxic substances is toxic or where the two Ministers believe that a listed substance is not adequately regulated. The Minister of the Environment may then issue an interim order covering any aspect or activity that can be regulated under Section 33 of the Act.

Therefore, Madam Speaker, the Government does not accept this motion.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The question is on Motion No. 17 standing in the name of the Hon. Member for Broadview—Greenwood (Ms. McDonald). Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): In my opinion, the nays have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Pursuant to Standing Order 114(11), the recorded division on the motion stands deferred.

Mrs. Browes: Madam Speaker, continuing with the sequence which we are following, I would expect that you would be calling Motion No. 18. There have been discussions with the critics of the other Parties and I would request that we proceed now to Motions Nos. 29 and 30 in order that persons who must leave the House are able to speak on them before they leave.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Is there unanimous consent for that?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport) moved:

Motion No. 29

That Bill C-74 be amended in Clause 129 by striking out lines 38 to 43 at page 84 and substituting the following therefor:

"(g) directing the offender to compensate the Minister, in whole or in part, for the cost of

(i) the investigation of the offence and the proceedings under this Act, and

(ii) any remedial or preventive action taken by or caused to be taken on behalf of the Minister as a result of the act or omission that constituted the offence;".

Motion No. 30

That Bill C-74 be amended in Clause 134 by striking out lines 41 to 45 at page 87 and lines 1 to 10 at page 88 and substituting the following therefor:

"134.(1) Where, on the application of any person, it appears to a court of competent jurisdiction that a person has done or is about to do or is likely to do any act or thing constituting or directed toward the commission of an offence under this Act, the court may issue an injunction ordering any person named in the application to refrain from doing any act or thing that it appears to the court may constitute or be directed toward the commission of an offence under this Act."

He said: Madam Speaker, you may recall that when this Bill was adopted in June, 1987, it contained a remarkable and very welcome precedent in terms of penalties to polluters. We on this side of the House were quite glad about that because it also included what could be called a nullitive sentencing and the right of the Minister to collect the costs of investigation from a polluter. The provision was, unfortunately, struck from the Bill during clause-by-clause analysis by a motion of the Member for Niagara Falls (Mr. Nicholson) on the basis that it was unprecedented and caused undue hardship to the polluter.

The effect of our motion today, Madam Speaker, is to put this provision back into the Bill as the Minister himself obviously intended when he tabled the Bill in June, 1987. We are actually reinforcing the will of the Government with this motion. The net effect would be that the cost of investigation of crimes against the environment, which can be very expensive, could be carried by giving the Minister the discretionary power to recover the cost of investigation. This is a very important tool in environmental protection policy.

As I said, this tool would be discretionary to be applied in certain circumstances according to the judgment of the Minister of the day. I hope that the Parliamentary Secretary will put back into the Bill what it contained in the first place.

With regard to Motion No. 30, I would like to refer you to the submission made by the Canadian Bar Association. The CBA urged a measure which would allow a citizen, rather than only the Minister, to seek an injunction. It would be the democratization of pollution control and environmental protection to which the Member for Vancouver—Kingsway (Mr. Waddell) referred earlier this afternoon.

The Canadian Bar Association urged us in committee to change Clause 134 and allow a citizen to seek an injunction to stop pollution that is in violation of this Bill. There is an intimate connection.

As Members who were on the committee will recall, this particular proposal was also supported by the Canadian Environmental Law Association. By allowing a citizen to seek an injunction, it would be at least a small step in the direction of what many have already referred to in the debate yesterday and today, an environmental bill of rights that would allow direct citizen participation. It would be citizen participation in the protection of the environment.

As written now, a citizen who sees a violation of this legislation can report it to the Minister but only hope that the Minister will seek an injunction to stop that particular pollution. This is not only a time consuming and cumbersome way to proceed, in a highly sophisticated and democratic society like ours it seems to remove the right of a citizen to participate in the protection of his or her environment.

In conclusion, it seems to me that the Minister of the Environment should not be the only person in Canada to be able to seek an injunction. The active participation of citizens, even though it will generate a number of injunctions, would still be an important exercise because the courts would be quite capable of screening frivolous injunction requests.

At the same time it would provide an atmosphere in which the courts would require information, be it the Minister making the injunction or an organization like Pollution Probe, Greenpeace, STOP or La Societé pour vaincre la pollution. It could be a lonely citizen on a remote lake in northern British Columbia who feels that his environmental rights have been infringed upon because of an activity that is damaging the enviroment from which he derives a livelihood. I hope we will receive a positive reply from the Parliamentary Secretary.

Mr. Rob Nicholson (Niagara Falls): Madam Speaker, I am pleased to address my comments to Motion No. 29. I appreciate the co-operation in the House in moving this matter forward inasmuch as it arises out of an amendment that I proposed to the Bill at the legislative committee stage.

Motion No. 29 would undo that amendment and it would include among the powers that a judge has in sentencing an individual the right of that judge to impose a penalty that would include whatever investigation costs led up to the conviction. I oppose that for three reasons.

It goes back to my reasons for being a part of the legislative committee. When this Bill was brought before Parliament, I approached the Parliamentary Secretary because I was pleased at the sentencing provisions within the Bill. For the first time, meaningful fines are included in federal legislation for those individuals who would pollute our environment. They are substantial fines, not the mere token fines that I suggest are nothing more than a licence to continue to pollute. In addition, the prison sentences provided for companies, directors and those individuals who would pollute, are important. That is one reason why I wanted to be part of that legislative committee.

I was also pleased with those sections contained in what is now Clause 129, which gives the power to the judge to impose a sentence that would include the remedial work, money that would compensate for whatever we had to do to repair the environment. However, I do disagree with the investigative costs. The Member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia) is quite correct when he said it was unprecedented. It is unprecedented and I believe it should be rejected.

One of the principles of our criminal law jurisdiction is that an individual, regardless of whatever crime of which he might ultimately be found guilty, is entitled to appear before the court without cost. To my knowledge, it has never been suggested that an individual subsequently found guilty of a Criminal Code offence must pay for part of the police department's budget or pay for the salary of those police officers who investigated his crime. That has never been suggested, to my knowledge. After questioning officials from the Department of Justice, they confirmed that there is no other provision of the Criminal Code in which investigative costs are included as part of the fine. I believe there are some good reasons for that.

Under legislation such as this, it may be concluded after a long investigation that only a minor infraction of the law had occurred. Would it be fair for that person to be saddled with a huge investigative cost, completely outside that person's control?

I also suggest that it would be very difficult to make a proper determination of just what are the investigative costs. Would it be a percentage of the department's budget? Could an unlimited number of lawyers and investigators say that they had something to do with the investigation and their salary should be paid? I suggest it would be difficult, if not impossible, to calculate that.

I disagree with it from the point of view that it takes the punishment outside the jurisdiction of the judge. Certainly, crimes against the environment are as terrible as any we could care to discuss in this Chamber. Everyone agrees upon their seriousness. I want the judge to be able to decide with some precision what is that individual's or company's punishment, be it imprisonment, fine, or money to pay for remedial action. I suggest that it takes the punishment outside the jurisdiction of a judge when the matter could be referred to some other board or agency to determine the investigative costs.

I appreciate having the opportunity to intervene in this debate. I believe this motion should be rejected inasmuch as I believe all Hon. Members should agree that the proper punishment should be decided at the time that an individual is sentenced. If an individual is liable to imprisonment, fine, and money for remedial action, then that is the proper type of punishment that should be contained in a Bill such as this.

Mrs. Pauline Browes (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of the Environment): Madam Speaker, the Member for Niagara Falls (Mr. Nicholson) spoke eloquently and made a major contribution to the legislative committee. I agree with his comments in relation to Motion No. 29.

I wish to make a few comments on Motion No. 30 which we are also debating. The Constitution of Canada is silent on environmental matters. Both federal and provincial governments have been active in environmental protection. Environmental jurisdiction from the federal perspective is based on criminal law power and on the peace, order and good government provision of the Constitution.

• (1650)

The language in the Canadian Environmental Protection Act reflects the views of the Department of Justice, the legal experts, those who advise us on how best to assert federal environmental authority without tripping up the law when we depart from the essential constitutional base on which the federal Government can act. To the extent that we depart from our criminal law powers, even in the direction of peace, order and good government, we risk having one provision, if not the entire Bill, declared ultra vires. I, for one, in this House of Commons, do not intend to see the Environmental Protection Act scrapped by the courts. The Canadian people want this legislation and it is our intent to deliver this legislation to the Canadian people.

The Hon. Member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia) has suggested a word change in Section 134, the replacement of the word "Minister" with that of "person". Section 134 gives the Minister the authority to issue injunctions to halt activities that might constitute an offence under the Act. The Hon. Member would have the Minister's authority eliminated if his amendment were to be approved. I believe, however, the Minister must have these powers.

Section 135 allows persons who suffer or are about to suffer damage to seek an injunction and to halt activity. This is tort law and is in the legislative jurisdiction of the provinces. Based on constitutional advice, we recommend that Motion No. 30 be rejected by this House.

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview—Greenwood): Madam Speaker, I rise to support Motions Nos. 29 and 30. I am quite amazed by the arguments given by the Government, by its caving in on this quite important matter. It is, indeed, going back on previous statements government Members have made, particularly with respect to Motion No. 29.

Motion No. 29 amends Clause 129 by striking out lines 38 to 43 at page 84 and substituting the following:

> "(g) directing the offender to compensate the Minister, in whole or in part, for the cost of
> (i) the investigation of the offence and the proceedings under this Act, and
> (ii) remedial or preventive action taken by or caused to be taken on behalf of the Minister as a result of the act or omission that constituted the offence;".

That is simply the "polluter pays" principal. It is a very elementary principle which has been agreed upon world wide. Preferably we will not have pollution. This is not an argument for licensing pollution and collecting money for it. This is to forbid pollution, particularly in the case of toxic substances. However, in cases where there are violations, it seems very reasonable that it should be possible at least—and this is discretionary. It does not mean that it would necessarily happen—to direct the offender to compensate for the investigation and for the damage. Why should the taxpayers have to pay for the clean-up of some kind of toxic offence? Why should the taxpayers have to pay for the investigation leading to the determination of whatever it is that would result in the clean-up? Why should it always be the public which has to bear this burden? Surely, the whole thrust of the Brundtland Commission report, the World Commission on Environment and Development, is to get rid of contaminates and pollution and to see there are really strong economic incentives not to pollute. We have to make it cheaper not to pollute than to pollute.

There are penalties in this Bill and, fortunately, they are substantial penalties. It seems very reasonable that costs ought to be included. Why should we just collect penalty money when the investigation itself could be quite costly and when the remedial action or action to prevent some kind of toxic disasters, may be quite high? Why should the public at large pay this? This is like the Eldorado Nuclear privatization scheme. It is the private sector that gets the profits and the public sector pays for the clean-up, all the costs of radioactive wastes disposal management. It is crazy. We should not allow people to pollute at will and then have the taxpayer pay for it. There is no disincentive to pollution, or there is inadequate disincentive to pollution, when that is permitted. It is simply a very reasonable approach to add another element, another piece of ammunition, in the fight to get rid of toxic substances and reduce pollution.

I will just spend a minute on Motion No. 30. It simply says that where, on the application of any person, not just the Minister, it appears to a court of competent jurisdiction that a person has done or is about to do or is likely to do any act directed toward the commission of an offence under this Act, the court may issue an injunction ordering any person named in the application to refrain from doing such act. This is very sensible. It is to prevent pollution crises. It is to prevent disasters. We are talking about toxic substances. We are talking about really serious matters and if it is possible, a court can issue an injunction to prevent these actions. Let us not be concerned merely to clean-up after the fact. Let us see where it is at all possible to use the courts to prevent the action from occurring in the first place. This is another weapon in the arsenal against pollution and against ecological disasters. I think we need all the weapons at our disposal. I think this motion is reasonable and ought to be supported.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The first question is on Motion No. 29. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): In my opinion, the nays have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Pursuant to Standing Order 114(11), the recorded division on the proposed motion stands deferred.

The next question is on Motion No. 30 standing in the name of the Hon. Member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia). Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): In my opinion, the nays have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Pursuant to Standing Order 114(11), the recorded division on the proposed motion stands deferred.

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (for Mr. Penner) moved:

Motion No. 18

That Bill 74 be amended in Clause 51 by deleting lines 10 and 11 at page 40.

He said: Madam Speaker, the history of this motion is that in its ruling the Chair gave the reasons why Motion No. 20 on the Order Paper of Tuesday, April 19 was not acceptable. The reasons were, of course, understandable and quite clear. Because of that, it becomes desirable to adopt Motion No. 18, and I will explain why.

• (1700)

In committee we did move an amendment which was accepted to include category IA lands, namely, lands covered by the Cree-Naskapi Act. That was done at the request of the Grand Council of the Cree as part of a package of reforms submitted for the consideration of the Government and the committee by the Council.

The key amendment to go with the inclusion of IA lands in Bill C-74 was Motion No. 20 which is now no longer before us, so to speak. Since it has been ruled out of order we find ourselves in a position of limping badly, so to speak, on one leg.

Motion No. 20 states:

That Bill C-74 be amended in Clause 53 by adding immediately after line 39 at page 41 the following:

"(3) Notwithstanding subsection (1), in the case of Category IA lands, The Governor in Council may, on the recommendation of the Minister, and with the concurrence of the responsible Cree Band within the meaning of the Cree-Naskapi (of Quebec) Act, make regulations applicable thereto for the protection of the environment."

Since we no longer can operate with Motion No. 20 it is important I submit to you, Madam Speaker, and to the House that Motion No. 18 be adopted now. Motion No. 20 cannot be put before the House, at the request contained in a letter to the Hon. Member for Cochrane—Superior (Mr. Penner) from the Executive Chief of the Grand Council of the Cree of Québec.

Mrs. Pauline Browes (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of the Environment): Madam Speaker, this motion that excludes the category IA lands provision of Part IV of Bill C-74 is one on which we had considerable discussion at the legislative committee. As well, we had as witnesses those persons coming from the Cree and Naskapi group that presented their positions very well. Thus what was included in the Bill at committee stage was that category IA lands be included in the new Act. The legislative committee considered carefully this provision. It was added to the Bill. We now have the motion to say that it should be excluded.

The committee recognized that Bill C-74 as it was drafted was intended to apply to reserves, surrendered lands or any other lands vested in Her Majesty and subject to the Indian Act. The committee also recognized that category IA lands as defined in the Cree-Naskapi (of Quebec) Act would be excluded unless this provision now shown in Clause 51(c) were added. We supported this principle in the legislative committee. We still believe that it is important. We would like to retain it in Bill C-74. Therefore this particular motion should not be defeated. We do not support it.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The question is on Motion No. 18 standing in the name of the Hon. Member for Cochrane—Superior (Mr. Penner). Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): In my opinion, the nays have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Pursuant to Standing Order 114(11), the recorded division on the proposed motion stands deferred.

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport) moved:

Motion No. 23.

That Bill C-74 be amended in Clause 62

(a) by striking out line 15 at page 47 and substituting the following therefor:

"62. The Gove-"

He said: Madam Speaker, in this motion we deal with a very important aspect of the Bill which applies to international air pollution. We discovered with dismay in committee that when it comes to international air pollution the Minister through this Bill would apply the concept of equivalency that he applied to toxic chemicals. That, of course, for the reason that I gave earlier when we debated Motion 15 and Motion No. 16, is not a desirable route to take.

The equivalency provisions when they are applied to the international air pollution section are a big step backward, in our view. I would like to put on record comments made to the committee by Pollution Probe. It stated in its brief that the consultation requirements show that the federal Government is retreating from its responsibility to protect the environment and that this represents a step backward from existing federal environmental legislation, such as the Clean Air Act. Presently, the Clean Air Act allows the federal Government to set national air emission standards without consulting the provinces. Yet this power will be repealed if Bill C-74 becomes law.

That is a rather devastating statement on the part of a non-partisan organization which has produced in the course of our clause-by-clause analysis of the Bill a number of extremely helpful recommendations. Pollution Probe is not alone in this observation. For example, in its brief on national and international air pollution Friends of the Earth made the following observation. It stated that international transboundary pollution is unquestionably the domain of the federal Government.

Friends of the Earth recommends that the clause we are now attempting to amend be reworked to provide the Minister of the Environment with a mandate to take a strong, active and pro-active role in protecting national and international air quality. This is the life and blood of environmental protection that we are discussing right now. Subsequently, Friends of the Earth went on to recommend with the requirement for joint environmental health and welfare action, the requirement of the Minister to endeavour to convince the provinces to regulate the opportunity to grant equivalency exemptions and the need to wait until an international law has been breached, be deleted. This is what we are proposing in this particular motion.

Friends of the Earth also stated in its brief that because of its stated discomfort with the substance-by-substance approach, its preferred approach would be to maintain and incorporate—and I repeat the importance of the word "incorporate" for Members of the House. The incorporation of the Clean Air Act and its powers in this Bill is the solution to this shortcoming and vacuum. There is this type of provision in the existing legislation that will be repealed when Bill C-74 is proclaimed. A piece of legislation will be proclaimed that will not contain what is presently in the Clean Air Act. We are abandoning a very important tool.

This is why Friends of the Earth are urging to maintain and incorporate the Clean Air Act and its powers to pass national emission standards into Bill C-74. That is a very reasonable request. It is to ensure that the new legislation has the powers contained in the legislation that will eventually be repealed. Friends of the Earth urge that we bring the preamble into conformity with Bill C-74 by basing air quality control actions on the need to protect both human and environmental health.

I suppose it would be fair to say that the conceptual flaw begins with the equivalency provisions debated in Motion No. 16. The concept seems to re-emerge in the motion we are presently debating. All of a sudden, as I recited earlier, in February of this year the Minister proposed a set of amendments that required consultation with the provinces in what was purely and traditionally a well established federal domain and jurisdiction.

In this respect, I am afraid to conclude that the Government has made a very serious mistake which will become a political liability at the time of the next election. Certainly, we will not miss the opportunity to raise this particular point with the electors, but I do not think we will be alone. The non-government organizations that have followed the progress of this Bill and that have been extremely helpful with advice will take up this cause. The gap between preaching and the substance is becoming wider as we conclude analysis of this Bill, and as we move from report stage into third reading.

Therefore, it is with a sense of regret that I make this intervention. When the draft Bill was introduced in June, 1987, I thought we had a good solid foundation. It was a draft Bill that expressed a certain political determination. Unfortunately, that political will and determination has been eroded, diminished, fragmented, and dispelled. By the time we started the work in committee we faced a piece of legislation that had been badly weakened and badly rearranged, and as I have stated on a number of occasions, had been badly infected by the Meech Lake virus.

In this particular case, the situation can be corrected and very well defended by the Government, if it were simply to say that what it wanted to do was maintain the provisions in the Clean Air Act in Bill C-74. Nothing would be lost, and everything would be gained. That is the substance and the genesis of this particular motion for your consideration, Madam Speaker.

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview—Greenwood): Madam Speaker, I certainly support the amendment proposed by the Hon. Member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia). It is a very important amendment, and I think the Government would be making a very serious mistake not to accept it. It is sad that the House is contemplating a measure that turns the clock back and reduces protection for the environment. We presently have the measures in the Clean Air Act, and we have a new Bill before us, the environmental protection act, which is supposed to improve protection of the environment. In some respects, it does. But hidden in with positive measures to improve environmental protection is one section that actually reduces it. It is a very sad step.

Environmentalists spoke eloquently of the need to move forward and the need to continue to entrench the progress that has been made so far in the Clean Air Act and control of national standards for emissions, and here we have the equivalency provisions coming in and weakening the Bill. We are talking about air. Air and water do not respect provincial or national boundaries. Clearly there is a need for national standards, indeed international standards. The idea that we should be parochial and move toward provincial standards in this area of dealing with air standards is simply missing the point entirely. It is extremely sad to see that the Government has not seen fit to say that in some areas we will move forward, but in no areas will we move backward, and everything will be a gain from here on in. That is foolish.

In the newspapers today, these are concerns of the public on precisely this point. There is a report contained in La Presse which states:

[Translation]

"According to a survey, 9 Canadians out of 10 believe that their health has deteriorated because of environmental pollution and 93 per cent fear being poisoned by as yet unidentified toxins."

[English]

This is precisely what we are talking about, the unidentified and the need to have emission standards. People are afraid and they want better standards. People want us to go further than we have gone so far.

[Translation]

"The survey published on Monday for the joint convention of the Ontario Chapter of the Air Pollution Control Association and the Ontario Pollution Control Association also reveals that 76 per cent of the public is prepared to pay higher taxes to fight pollution."

[English]

Here we have public concerns in a major survey. Let me quote one other item where the public is attempting to tell us something.

[Translation]

"Furthermore, only 6 per cent of respondents do not believe that environmental pollution is increasing. Despite the efforts of industry and government in the past 10 years, it is clear that a perception of deterioration remains and that the situation will continue to get worse and worse."

[English]

People are concerned and they are attempting to give us a message. We see political responses to this among many caucuses that are coming out in favour of the environment. We see that the Conservatives from Quebec have put the environment as number one on their agenda. Instead of talking about it at conventions and passing resolutions, why do the Conservatives not do something about it, respect the concerns out there in the public, and really make this a stronger Bill and accept the measures that we are proposing for amendment. That is what the public is telling us, that is what the experts are telling us, and it seems to me that it is about time the Government listened and made this a Bill where we go forward, where we make improvements, and in no areas accept lower standards than what we had with the existing legislation.

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay—Atikokan): Madam Speaker, I want to participate for a few moments today on this very important piece of legislation, and of course the amendment before us. It has always bothered me where we have competing jurisdictions both throughout this country and between countries in terms of trying, unfortunately, for the lowest common denominator. In the environment we have seen that happen from time to time. In fact, many of us are quite fearful that, as a result of the trade deal, we will see our environmental rules drawn down to the low denominator in the United States.

We have nothing against consultation. We believe that the Government of Canada has the power under the Constitution to do whatever consultation it feels appropriate. Sometimes, however, we wonder if it has the political will to do it the right way.

The Bill makes it a requirement that before any changes can be made to protect our environment, the Government has to not only consult with but, I gather, get agreement from the provinces. That unnecessarily places in danger the environment, the people and the wildlife of Canada. For that reason, we must support this particular amendment.

This legislation in fact takes a step backward from the existing environmental legislation, including the Clean Air Act which provides for the federal Government to enact national ambient air emissions standards without the necessity of consulting with the provinces. We contend that Clause 37 will ensure what we have been afraid of all along, which is that the federal Government has no intention of regulating toxic chemicals. We feel that the Minister of the Environment (Mr. McMillan) has been getting extremely conservative advice—surprise, surprise—on federal constitutional authority to protect the environment.

We believe that the federal Government should set national standards to ensure that Canada does not create pollution havens. For example, the pulp and paper sector is concentrated in a few provinces. Because of modern technology, we are now able to determine the existence of things we did not know existed before. I am talking particularly of some of the toxic wastes that have been discovered in the effluent of kraft mills in Ontario, Quebec and perhaps British Columbia. A by-product that was not known to exist has been discovered to exist and it is a very lethal one. We cannot fault the pulp and paper companies for this because they did not know that this by-product existed, nor did the federal Ministry of the Environment and the provincial Environment Ministries. However, we now know it exists.

In the past, there have been pressures on provincial Governments not to go forward with very strong environmental protection legislation. I am worried that if we do not change this particular clause in the Bill, those provinces, for economic reasons or whatever, will convince the federal Government of the day not to go forward with such legislation.

Let us remember that we are writing legislation that will apply for quite some time. There may be a change in Environment Ministers, there may be a change in Government. We must have a piece of legislation that will stand the test of time.

I suggest that it is up to the Canadian Government to provide leadership. Sure, the Government should talk to the provinces, but it should not be forced to consult in this particular way. We have a responsibility to protect our environment for our children and our children's children, and leaving the clause as is would be a step backward.

Mrs. Pauline Browes (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of the Environment): Madam Speaker, in the last few moments, I have been hearing some comments to which I need to respond. The Canadian people are very proud of this legislation. The witnesses who came before the legislative committee each started off by saying that the Government should be applauded for this legislation, for bringing in an environmental protection Act, the first piece of environmental legislation brought before the House of Commons or the Canadian people in 11 years.

This Government has had the political will to tackle the very sensitive, complex issues of environmental protection and the control of toxic wastes. We have come up with a piece of legislation that has probably involved more consultation with the people of Canada than any piece of legislation that has come before the House of Commons.

Motion No. 23 would give the Minister the exclusive jurisdiction to control domestic air pollution that has an international transboundary impact. I was very surprised to hear the two critics for the opposition Parties speak on this point in the way they did today. Let us take a case in point, Canada's acid rain abatement program.

Canada's acid rain abatement program is an excellent example of the spirit of co-operation that exists between the federal Government and the provinces when dealing with international air pollution. We were able, with the co-operation of the federal Government and seven provinces, to get an abatement program that would allow us to put our own house in order as we start and continue negotiations with our neighbours to the south. Agreements have been signed with all provinces in eastern Canada to reduce acid-rain-causing emissions by 50 per cent by 1994. There is no need for the federal Government to have exclusive jurisdiction in such matters when the provinces clearly have the authority, jurisdiction and obligation to act.

This clause is consistent with other parts of the legislation which recognize and respect provincial authorities in regard to environmental protection and provide the opportunity to consult and enter into agreements to afford the maximum level of protection to Canada's environment in a cost effective and non-duplicative manner. I recommend that the House reject Motion No. 23.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The question is on Motion No. 23 standing in the name of the Hon. Member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia).

Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): All those in favour please yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): All those opposed please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): In my opinion, the nays have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Pursuant to Standing Order 114(11), a recorded division on the proposed motion stands deferred.

The next question is on Motion No. 24.

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview—Greenwood) moved:

Motion No. 24.

That Bill C-74 be amended in Clause 65 by striking out lines 35 to 38 at page 49.

She said: Madam Speaker, I rise to support Motion No. 24 which deals with what I think is a very serious anomaly in the Bill. Here we are supposed to be dealing with ocean dumping. In the Ocean Dumping Control Act, regulations can be made and penalties imposed for dumping. However, there is a loophole in this legislation and I think it is a very serious one. My motion is directed at plugging that serious loophole, the exclusion from the present provisions of any discharge that is incidental to or derived from the exploration for, exploitation of and associated offshore processing of seabed mineral resources.

In ordinary, every-day English, that means that any oil spill or pollution, whether deliberate or accidental, put into the sea by the oil industry or by other mineral resource industries in Canadian waters is not addressed by the Act. That is a very serious omission. Exploration is now going on and we can expect that there will be further exploration and development of oil and other mineral resources. To exclude them from the Environmental Protection Act is very, very misguided.

Unfortunately, ocean dumping exists. It exists all over the world. It is getting worse. It is convenient to dump and it is cheap. However, it is the public at large that inherits the health problems, the contamination problems and the problems associated with the pollution of fish and animals that live in the sea. We need very stringent laws against this. We already have some such laws and here we have an ideal opportunity to add to them under the Environmental Protection Act. Why should we pass that Act with a serious omission?

It is a simple question. Do we want to be consistent? Do we want tough legislation? Or, do we want a loophole which permits this kind of pollution of an extremely important resource? The oceans are part of what the Brundtland Commission calls the global commons. It is part of our responsibility to the planet to ensure that safe and proper standards are respected. We as Canadians are responsible for three oceans so it is extremely important that we have adequate laws in this respect. I hope all Hon. Members will ensure that we have a decent Act, close this loophole, and obtain adequate protection.

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Madam Speaker, there is no doubt that the Hon. Member has put forward a very important thought here. She caught the passage in the Bill which had escaped unnoticed by many of us. She has an excellent point.

The thrust of the motion is to include the discharges from activities related to exploration or processing of offshore sea bed mineral resources and have them come under the definition of dumping and therefore be subject to Part VI of this Bill. Those discharges would be excluded if the Hon. Member had not moved this amendment.

It is desirable that the Bill covers all kinds of dumping from offshore mineral exploration so that we provide protection for the marine and coastal environment. Anyone who knows the fragility of that environment in the Arctic Ocean in particular knows the importance of protecting that environment. Exploration in the Arctic has been quite frequent in the past and that frequency may increase in the decades ahead as we run out of non-renewable resources.

The amendment has a particular significance. We support it, of course, and hope that the Parliamentary Secretary will be in a position to give us a favourable reply.

Mrs. Pauline Browes (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of the Environment): Madam Speaker, this motion would delete one of the exclusions to the definition of dumping in legislation on offshore exploration and development, specifically the Canada Oil and Gas Act. We do not agree with the motion that the Hon. Member has put forward. CEPA is designed to complement and not duplicate other federal legislation so we will not support this motion.

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay—Atikokan): Madam Speaker, as my caucus' spokesperson on marine matters, I felt it was appropriate for me to participate in the debate on this amendment. I regret that the Government has decided that double coverage is not important. I accept the Parliamentary Secretary's statement that this is covered in another Bill, but that does not necessarily mean it should not be reinforced in a Bill which deals with the protection of the environment. This should be the predominant Bill regardless of a Bill dealing with oil and gas exploration, or shipping, as does the Canada Shipping Act, where other aspects of the environment are dealt with. The Environmental Protection Act should be supreme.

As my colleague pointed out in her comments, dumping as described in the Bill does not include any discharge incidental to or derived from the exploration for, exploitation of, and associated offshore processing of sea bed mineral resources. What that means is that a lawyer could argue that because this is a later Act, they would be able to use a tram scoop or continuing conveyor belt of some kind which would have lots of overflow deposited in the ocean, creating havoc with aquaculture, disrupting fishing patterns, the ability of the fish to survive, and depending on the type of mineral, perhaps even creating a contaminant that will follow through the food chain.

An example would be asbestos if a way was found to extract asbestos from the ocean floor. There was a severe problem on Lake Superior because of a discharge of not asbestos but taconite tailings that got into the drinking water as well as the food chain because of a mining operation. That could conceivably happen again and we need to have sufficiently strong enough laws to protect our environment from that.

Once again, I regret the decision of the Government to err on the side of comfortability as opposed to caution. I would rather see this amendment accepted by the Government and reinforce what the Parliamentary Secretary says exists in other legislation, just to make sure there is no question whatsoever that some smart lawyer could use its absence in this legislation to suggest that Parliament was not interested in preventing such pollution from occurring.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The question is on Motion No. 24 standing in the name of the Hon. Member for Broadview—Greenwood (Ms. McDonald). Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): In my opinion, the nays have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Pursuant to Standing Order 114(11), the recorded division on the proposed motion stands deferred.

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview—Greenwood) moved:

Motion No. 26

That Bill C-74 be amended in Clause 110 by striking out line 37 at page 77 and substituting the following therefor:

"for a term not exceeding one year, or to".

Motion No. 27

That Bill C-74 be amended in Clause 111 by striking out line 7 at page 78 and substituting the following therefor:

"for a term not exceeding one year or to".

Motion No. 28

That Bill C-74 be amended in Clause 115 by striking out line 4 at page 80 and substituting the following therefor:

"for a term not exceeding one year, or to".

She said: Madam Speaker, these last three motions we have before us deal with the available penalties. The Environmental Protection Act does specify penalties, albeit not very hefty ones. They presently go up to six months. Let us be clear about the penalties in the three different sections.

• (1740)

Clause 110 under "Offences and Punishment" reads:

Every person who

(a) fails to give an inspector all reasonable assistance or to provide the inspector with information as required under section 101, or

(b) contravenes section 102 is guilty of an offence and is liable on summary conviction to a fine not exceeding two hundred thousand dollars or to imprisonment for a term not exceeding six months, or to both.

The notion of using prison sentences as penalties is, of course, controversial. We have traditionally had prison sentences available for nonpayment of fines in commercial areas, but have tended to use prison sentences as penalties only for Criminal Code offences or offences very similar to Criminal Code offences. In the past there has been a notion that perhaps there ought to be financial penalties for commercial activities, that we would not want to have commercial criminals or white collar criminals go to jail, that that is for unsavoury characters, for real crooks, not for people who pollute the environment or fail to assist in regulations in order to protect the environment.

That has been the procedure and the mentality of the past. However, in the last 10 years we have seen a significant change in public opinion. Parliamentarians are expected to reflect that. In some cases we should lead but in this matter the public is well ahead of us. The public is demanding criminal penalties for offences against the environment. People have a notion that the environment is very important and deserves the best protection. Sending someone to prison is the highest symbolic condemnation, criticism, opposition to behaviour that we have in our country. When we say that you are liable to a prison sentence, we are saying that we profoundly disapprove of what you are doing and that only measures of that sort are suitable to deal with the offence that you have committed. Canadians have increasingly begun to put offences against the environment into precisely that category and that is a good thing.

I normally argue against prison sentences. I think we overuse our prisons substantially. We have too many prisons and too many people in them by and large. However, in this area the threat of a prison sentence might actually be a very good deterrent because this is deliberate behaviour. These are not irrational people who are acting out against society. These are not juvenile delinquents. These are people in responsible positions who, frankly, make money by polluting, by covering up the pollution, by preventing the pollution from being uncovered, and by not helping inspectors do their job.

The fine provided for is $200,000, which is a hefty fine. The amendment is simply to make the prison penalty a little tougher, to communicate to potential polluters that they can suffer for this, that we are going to condemn them. We want them to know that it is not only their pocketbook which will be hurt but that they risk going to jail, being treated like a common criminal, being embarrassed.

Mr. Angus: They are common criminals.

Ms. McDonald: My hon. colleague says that they are common criminals and that is increasingly how the Canadian public views this. Knocking someone on the head is assault, but you can kill people, maim them, cut their lives short, or wreck the quality of their lives with pollution. This is an important matter.

We are now saying that these assaults on the environment and health which affect us and future generations are serious matters which deserve serious penalties, not only commercial penalties but the unpleasantness of a prison term. Prisons are unpleasant places, they smell, they are crowded, and they do not very often have the nicest of clientele. The company may not be the most desirable. There are other clubs which have more desirable people. Some people in prisons may be very fine, but by and large prisons are places in which people do not want to be. People are uncomfortable there.

Therefore, when we impose the risk of a prison sentence for these offences, we are saying something very important with which Canadians agree. Canadians have switched their mentality. They no longer treat this as something for which you impose a fine and a slap on the wrist. Canadians are now taking this very seriously.

The next amendment relates to Clause 111 which reads:

Every person who

(a) fails to provide the Minister with information as required under section 15 . . .

(b) fails to notify the Minister as required under paragraph 17(1)(a) . . .

(c) fails to conduct the tests referred to in paragraph 17(1)(c), or

(d) contravenes subsection 49(1) is guilty of an offence and is liable on summary conviction to a fine not exceeding two hundred thousand dollars or to imprisonment for a term not exceeding six months or to both.

My amendment would hike that term of imprisonment up to one year as well. One of the offences included in this clause is failing to provide the Minister with information needed. Of course, there is an incentive to fail to provide the Minister with information needed for an investigation which can lead to regulation and an order to stop, et cetera. Another offence included is failing to conduct the tests referred to. Tests will have to be provided for. We now have a process which requires that that be the case, and we need a penalty to ensure that that is so in order to give adequate protection to the public. This is simply another statement by society that these are serious provisions. The Act will not have teeth without them and we want bigger, tougher teeth in the Bill than the original wording provided for.

The third motion would amend Clause 115 which reads:

> Every person who contravenes any provision of this Act, other than a provision referred to in sections 110 to 114, or of any regulation made under this Act is guilty of an offence punishable on summary conviction and is liable to a fine not exceeding two hundred thousand dollars or to imprisonment for a term not exceeding six months, or to both.

Again, my proposal is to increase that from six months to year. The same rationale applies. We agree with the $200,000 fine and simply want to increase the term of imprisonment to a year. It is still not a penitentiary term or the worst we can impose. I suspect that as time goes on the Canadian public will want to throw them in the clink for longer. That is the direction in which people are going.

However, this is a start. It is not an enormous change from what we have, but it is progress toward being tougher, which is what we want. That is what the Canadian public is demanding. Environmentalists are saying that we must take this seriously, that we must not let people get away with this. Financial penalties are simply a licence to pollute, people can just pay their way. They cannot pay their way out of a prison sentence. They will be embarrassed, their fingerprints will go to the RCMP and Interpol. They will go to prison where they will not like it very much.

That will be a real deterrent for these rational people who weigh the pros and cons. Let us give them more cons to weigh. Let us give them some threats such as this and we will perhaps achieve environmental protection which will be tougher and better. That is what Canadians send us here to Parliament to do.

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Madam Speaker, the Minister wanted a strong Bill. He proclaimed on a number of occasions that this would be a strong Bill. These three motions offer the Government, the Minister, and the Parliamentary Secretary an opportunity to have a strong Bill.

• (1750)

Most likely, we will again see a backtracking on the part of the Government, saying that these measures are too strong. It is another example of the Government preaching in one direction but retreating into a cloud of contradictions when it comes to the crunch. It is retreating from an opportunity to do exactly what was originally intended with this Bill, to give Canadians strong protection for the environment.

We are gradually learning that activities against the environment eventually damage human health, and, in the long term, environmental pollution damages the water. It contaminates surface and ground water in particular and we are learning that the cost of rehabilitation from the damage against the environment is phenomenal.

They are staggering as an economic burden that is sometimes shifted from our generation to the next. This is evident in the case of Lake Ontario, with the leaching from toxic dump sites along the Niagara River into Lake Ontario, affecting the quality of water for municipalities along Lake Ontario. The world is full of examples of this kind.

What is the intent of these three motions? They are to provide a deterrent. This would set a ceiling so that society would be in a position to take action for up to one year. It will not necessarily be implemented because it will be a decision for the judge responsible for rendering the sentence.

The Minister wanted a strong Bill. Once again, this afternoon the Opposition is giving him an opportunity to adopt a measure that will give some teeth to the Bill. The matter will rest with the answer by the Parliamentary Secretary.

Mrs. Pauline Browes (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of the Environment): Madam Speaker, we are debating the last three motions concerning the Environmental Protection Act. There has been a good debate and I appreciate the co-operation of the other Parties in getting to the points of the issue. Since we are getting close to the adjournment hour, I move:

> That this House continue to sit beyond the ordinary hour of daily adjournment for the purpose of continuing consideration of report stage of Bill C-74, an Act respecting the protection of the environment and of human life and health.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The House has heard the terms of the motion moved by the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

And fewer than 15 members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): There not being 15 Members rising in objection to the motion, the motion is deemed to be carried.

Continuing debate.

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay—Atikokan): Madam Speaker, I was simply going to speak for a few moments to conclude the debate on behalf of my Party and perhaps be the sole Opposition Member who was going to speak on these motions. The reality is that the Government, in its typical clumsy way, has probably ensured that certain matters they wished to complete tonight as they hoped may not happen. I will not predict what will happen after I sit down and the bells starting ringing, but I think it is safe to say that there may be some surprises in store.

I am pleased to support my colleague's three motions. It is important that we send a signal to the corporate sector of this country that it cannot get away with evading the law of the land. Let me give an example. Dow Chemical used to operate a plant in Thunder Bay, adjacent to Great Lakes Forest Products Limited. It polluted the Kaminisqua River with mercury for quite some time but was not greatly punished. However, those other industries that are involved in using that waterway must pay to have their silt stored in a special facility. While the company that caused the pollution gets off scot-free, others have to pay the price.

Furthermore, the clauses referred to provide for a monetary fine. Yet if one looks at the profits being made and the values of the companies involved, a simple fine of even $1 million is a drop in the bucket. However, if we send the chief executive officer to a correctional institution for being found guilty of polluting the environment, it will send a clear message to all corporate individuals.

Last summer in Toronto an operator of a factory in Toronto who had been consistently polluting was found guilty under a provincial law and put in jail. That sent two kinds of shock waves throughout Ontario. It meant to consumers and environmentalists that finally the Government had become as harsh with polluters as housebreakers. The other shock wave went to executives of companies in the Province of Ontario. Suddenly they realized that rather than the company paying for this violation, they would be thrown in jail. What would this mean to their children and spouses, when they are thrown in jail for permitting the environment to be destroyed?

I know that you do not wish to sit here all evening to hear debate. I see that it is six o'clock, the normal time of adjournment. I am going to complete my remarks by thanking the Government once again for its bungling, and I look forward to the results of the vote.

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, it is really very helpful when we respect freedom of speech and there is a little co-operation in trying to work things out. This is a very important Bill to Canadians. I doubt in the history of the country there has been a Bill which received such thorough examination and so many amendments at committee stage. Because of the persuasive arguments and common sense of the motions produced by the Opposition in this report stage, many have been accepted. Some, indeed, have been rejected on voice votes by the Government.

It is our intention, Madam Speaker, when you call Motions Nos. 26, 27 and 28 not to support them for several, I think, pretty solid reasons. Clause 110, 111 and 115 already provide for what we think are adequate penalties on summary convictions. That is the section of the Bill we are dealing with. Those adequate penalties are six months, which can be coupled with fines of $200,000. Six months imprisonment and $200,000 for a summary conviction offence, I think is adequate. If we were to adopt the amendments proposed by the Opposition, we would be creating a one year imprisonment term, but that would take us out of the normal course of events for the Criminal Code when it comes to summary convictions and might indeed provide a legal argument to get somebody off. That is not what government Members want, and it would be a penalty too severe for the offence.

The six months prison term for the offence of failure to render assistance to and the offence of obstruction of an inspector in the exercise of his or her duties in Clause 110 of the Act is identical to similar provisions in other federal Statutes such as the Food and Drug Act, the Post Office Corporation Act, and so on. Consistently in legislation is an important kind of principle if members of this House want to be fair to all parties in all circumstances. We also think it is sufficient punishment and sufficient deterrent for conviction offences in Clauses 110, 111 and 115.

In closing, if there had been a will to co-operate and if there had been clear-cut signals from Members opposite, we could indeed have ended this debate without having to run past six o'clock, or we could have had unanimous consent to have a few last remarks and go a few minutes after six o'clock. Those are fairly normal provisions. What is abnormal is the tendency on the part of Members of the Opposition to filibuster even on things that they basically believe in. It is part of a clear-cut long-term strategy by the Opposition to try to jam up the public calendar. We suspect that the strategy exists because the Government is anxious to complete its agenda and go to the people and give Canadians a chance to choose their next Government. The Opposition will say they would like an election but its behaviour is to consistently jam a situation so that an election becomes more and more difficult to call.

We think it is time for Canadians to be able to reach a judgment on what we believe is our superb record of three and a half, close to four years. If we continue to allow the Opposition to filibuster and delay, we will not get there. Hopefully, a few more minutes of debate, delaying people five or ten minutes, will enable us to have a vote this evening.

If the Opposition chooses to delay it, we can have a vote tomorrow. We would then be in a position for third reading and sending the Bill to the Senate. Everyone in this Chamber knows the Senate is composed primarily of members of the former Government and that they are delaying all kinds of legislation for the same reason, we think the fear of an election. We would like to facilitate the passage of public business. We intend to do that within the rules of the House as much as we can.

If the Opposition would like to facilitate the passage of important legislation like this, we would be glad to hear about it. However, the signal the Opposition sends is that it wants this Bill to carry over to tomorrow even after it has been so thoroughly debated and the spirit has been so good. We have to ask ourselves why the Opposition would want to delay it until tomorrow. We do not believe there is a good reason and that is why we have moved the motion.

• (1810)

Mr. Angus: Madam Speaker, I just wish to point out to the Hon. Member that the House has made considerable progress today. I gather 12 amendments have been dealt with. Neither of the Opposition Parties has put up an extraordinary number of speakers. In fact, in the last hour or so we have had only two speakers from my Party for each amendment. I think that is going overboard in terms of trying to facilitate the House. I want to remind the Government once again that every time it takes these kinds of steps, we remember, and it lowers the level of co-operation.

I sat in on the House Leaders' meeting yesterday as we tried to work out the business of this House for the next week or so. It was very clear that yesterday and today would be devoted to this Bill. Sometimes we do not get the timing exactly right and, in this case, it might spill over until tomorrow morning, but that is all. I do not think it is fair for the Government to suggest that we are filibustering on such a very important piece of legislation. The important changes my colleague and the Hon. Member for the Liberal Party put forward, I think, deserve consideration by this House.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The first question is on Motion No. 26. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): In my opinion, the nays have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Pursuant to Standing Order 114(11), the recorded division on the proposed motion stands deferred.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): In my opinion, the nays have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Pursuant to Standing Order 114(11), the recorded division on the proposed motion stands deferred.

The last question is on Motion No. 28. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Pursuant to Standing Order 114(11), the recorded division on the proposed motion stands deferred.

The House will now proceed to the taking of the deferred division of the report stage of the Bill now before the House. Call in the Members.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Pursuant to Standing Order 13(4)(a) I have been requested by the Chief Government Whip to defer the division until a later time. Accordingly, pursuant to Standing Order 13(5) the division on the question now before the House stands deferred until tomorrow at six o'clock at which time the bells to call in the Members will be sounded for not more than 15 minutes.

PETITIONS

THE HOMELESS—REQUEST FOR GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mrs. Thérèse Killens (Saint-Michel—Ahuntsic): Mr. Speaker, the petitions I am tabling today concern housing and are signed by residents of Laval, Montreal, Saint-Hilaire, Deux-Montagnes, Saint-Eustache, Longueuil, Quebec City, Winnipeg and Fredericton, New Brunswick.

The undersigned deplore the fact that over 100,000 people were homeless in Canada last year, that many young people, women and entire families lack adequate shelter, that the number of affordable housing units is dwindling steadily and that the Government has done nothing so far to deal with this problem.

Wherefore your petitioners humbly pray Parliament to take immediate action to provide suitable accommodation for all Canadians and to set up social reintegration programs so that needy Canadians can get back into the mainstream of Canadian society.

• (1110)

PROTECTION OF RIGHTS OF THE UNBORN

Mr. Gus Mitges (Grey—Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, it is with great pride and honour that I am presenting a petition which includes the astronomical figure of 10,000 signatures of very concerned Canadians from all across the country who are deeply devoted and concerned for the rights of unborn children. These 10,000 signatures are only the forerunners of thousands upon thousands of additional signatures that will be forthcoming as time goes on.

With prayers and hope, the petitioners request the Government to enact legislation immediately which will protect the lives of our unborn children and our future generation.

ALLEGED WITHHOLDING OF FOOD BY ISRAEL TO CONTROL RIOTS

Mr. Peter Peterson (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, I have two petitions to present today, both of which have been signed by constituents of my riding of Hamilton West and the surrounding area.

The signatories of the first petition are primarily from the Hamilton Jewish Federation who take issue with the remarks made by the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) on March 10 at a Canada Israel Committee function.

These petitioners humbly pray and call upon Parliament to ask the Department of External Affairs to provide the Canadian people with the evidence to support the charges made by that Minister.

Order Paper Questions

RESEARCH INTO PREVENTION AND CURE OF SCHIZOPHRENIA

Mr. Peter Peterson (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, the second petition is related to the illness of schizophrenia. The petitioners would like to point out that it is a major illness in Canada, affecting about 1 per cent of the population, which causes severe mental anguish and suffering to the patients and their relatives and costs Canadian society more than $3 billion annually in direct health care and other support costs. The petitioners humbly pray and call upon Parliament to ensure that research efforts are increased in Canada.

EQUALITY OF CHOICE IN CHILD CARE

Mr. Paul Gagnon (Calgary North): Madam Speaker, I have both the duty and honour to present a petition signed by 25 people and addressed to the Parliament of Canada which states that a number of Canadians believe that the state and our tax dollars have no place in the area of child care, which is a parental responsibility, except in cases of demonstrated financial need.

The petitioners call upon Parliament to restore the system of fairness and justice by opposing any form of national child care policy that does not provide equality of choice, thereby leaving the child care decision-making process with the parents where it belongs.

Mr. Richard Grisé (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, question nº. 285 will be answered today.

RESEARCH INTO DEVELOPMENT OF NITROGEN FIXING WHEAT

Question No. 285—Mr. Althouse:

1. In the past ten fiscal years, has the Department of Agriculture conducted research with a view to the development of a nitrogen-fixing wheat and, if so (a) along what lines (b) involving which research stations?

2. In each of the past ten fiscal years, at each station involved (a) how many staff members (b) what financial resources have been dedicated to this research?

3. For 1988-89 (a) what are the (i) staff (ii) financial commitments to this project (b) which research stations will be involved in this research?

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): 1. (a) Yes, the Lethbridge Research Station carried out original work which showed that certain soil bacteria appeared to cause wheat plants to fix nitrogen in much the same way as legumes fix atmospheric nitrogen. Subsequent studies at Lethbridge and in other countries demonstrated that the process was not the same, but rather that bacteria, capable of fixing nitrogen, lived in the rhizosphere (a unique zone near the roots that support the growth of specific micro-organisms) and functioned in association with specific wheat lines to promote growth.

Recent studies conducted by industry have focused on the genetic engineering of wheat plants to transfer genetic coding for nitrogen fixation (ability of bacteria to infect wheat roots, to grow in nodules on the root and to actively fix nitrogen). This is a very complex, high-risk area and progress has been slow.

(b) The Lethbridge Research Station only has been involved.

2. (a) and (b) The Lethbridge Research Station has dedicated the following ressources over the past ten fiscal years to this research:

3. (a) (i) and (ii) The Lethbridge Research Station has committed the following resources to this research for 1988-89:

(b) The Lethbridge Station only is maintaining a small program with the associative bacteria concept concentrating on the theory that these bacteria are releasing growth promoting substances which are stimulating root development, thereby making the plant more capable of obtaining nutrients. Since not all varieties react in the same way, this process is also complex. A decision will be made in 1988-89 whether the cost/benefit justifies further work.

CANADIAN INTERNATIONAL TRADE TRIBUNAL ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

Hon. Doug Lewis (for the Minister of State (Finance)) moved that Bill C-110, an Act to establish the Canadian International Trade Tribunal and to amend or repeal other Acts in consequence thereof, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Debate.

Mr. Pierre H. Vincent (Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance): He said: Madam Speaker, I am pleased to rise on second reading of Bill C-110, which will create the Canadian International Trade Tribunal and consequently amend and repeal a number of other Acts. The Canadien International Trade Tribunal will replace and take over the functions of the three institutions: the Canadian Import Tribunal, the Textile and Clothing Board and the Tariff Board. The legislation creating these latter institutions will be repealed and they will disappear. The Bill also contains amendments to other Acts. These amendments are consequential to the Bill and technical in nature. The Bill also includes provisions to ensure an orderly transition to the new tribunal.

The decision in principle to amalgamate the three import institutions was first announced in the May 1985 budget. This is part of the Government's efforts to rationalize and streamline federal institutions and practices. By bringing the functions of these institutions under one roof, expertise and knowledge regarding trade matters will be more efficiently focused. The treatment of import and other international trade issues will be harmonized. The new tribunal will provide a central and common focus for examining the trade-related concerns of Canadians. The Government will have a sound and consistent base on which to make decisions.

The easiest way to explain the main purpose of Bill C-110 is to first look at the responsibilities of the existing three institutions. The Tariff Board's functions are threefold. First, they undertake inquiries into any issue relating to trade and commerce when asked by the Government. Second, the Tariff Board advises the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) on tariff-related issues the Minister may refer to it such as the valuation of goods and the implications of adopting the harmonized system of tariff classification. Under a standing reference by the Minister of Finance, it inquires into complaints by Canadian industry as to whether imports at preferential tariffs granted to developing countries are causing injury.

Finally, the Tariff Board acts as an appeal tribunal primarily in customs and excise disputes. Most of the Tariff Board members' time is spent on the appeal function.

Madam Speaker, my colleague from Roberval (Mr. Bouchard) told me earlier this morning that he fully supports this Bill.

The main role of the Canadian Import Tribunal is to undertake material injury inquiries as part of anti-dumping and countervailing duty investigations. I know that this is important to the riding of Roberval, Madam Speaker.

The Canadian Import Tribunal also undertakes general injury inquiries when requested by the Government.

Finally, Madam Speaker, the Textile and Clothing Board is primarily an advisory body. The Government can ask the board to give advice on any matter affecting the textile and clothing industry. Either the government or the textile and clothing industry can request the board to undertake an injury inquiry.

The TCB also monitors developments in the Canadian textile and clothing industry.

Madam Speaker, I would note that under the new Bill the Government will continue to be able to seek advice from the new tribunal on textile and clothing issues that may arise as it will be the case for any other sector. The government, through its relevant departments will continue to monitor development in that industry as it currently does for several other sectors.

Madam Speaker, this brief description highlights the degree of duplication and overlap that now exists and that a particular issue may be treated differently depending on the agency dealing with it.

If I may I will now turn to the powers and functions of the new tribunal which constitute the substantive provisions of the bill. The new Canadian International Trade Tribunal will take over the main functions of the three import institutions as well as being given an important new function. As such the Canadian International Trade Tribunal will be responsible for undertaking a wide variety of inquiries such as general economic inquiries, injury inquiries and tariff-related inquiries. In addition, it will take over responsibility for hearing appeals of customs and excise decisions that are currently heard by the Tariff Board.

Finally, the new tribunal will be given an important new inquiry function: hearing complaints by Canadian producers in any industry that increased imports are causing or threatening serious injury.

General Economic Inquiries. The legislation contains general inquiry provisions whereby the government can ask the tribunal to inquire into matters relating to the economic, commercial and trade interests of Canada. Such fact-finding inquiries could be made regarding goods or services. Their purpose is to give the Government an independent assessment as a basis for developing policies. Any Government reference to the tribunal under these provisions will specify the issues to be examined. An example of the kind of inquiry the new tribunal could be asked to undertake is the recent study by the Tariff Board regarding the economic prospects of the Canadian natural sweetener industry.

Tariff-Related Inquiries. The tribunal will also undertake tariff-related inquiries when requested by the Minister of Finance. These inquiries are helpful in relation to the Minister's responsabilities for tariff policy.

A recent inquiry undertaken by the Tariff Board in this area was an analysis of the conversion of Canada's tariff to the harmonized commodity description and coding system. You will recall that legislation implementing the harmonized system was passed by this parliament late last year.

Another example of a tariff-related inquiry is the reference to the Tariff Board by the Minister of Finance to undertake inquiries at the request of Canadian producers as to whether general preferential tariff concessions unilateraly granted to developing countries are injurious to Canadian producers. The procedures associated with these inquiries are intended to be retained by the new tribunal.

Injury Inquiries. The new tribunal will have general responsibilities for all injury inquiries. However, the current "fast-track" procedures whereby producers of horticultural products can seek emergency safeguard action without reference to an independent tribunal will continue to be available. The most common of injury inquiries are those associated with anti-dumping and countervail cases initiated under the Special Import Measures Act. In addition, the Government will continue to be able to direct the tribunal to conduct general inquiries into the injurious impact of imports of goods or services. The specific authority to request such inquiries is now set out in the special import measures Act and, in the case of textile and clothing products, under the textile and clothing Board Act. Direct Access Injury Inquiries. The existing rights of the textile and clothing industry to directly petition an independent body for an injury inquiry will be extended to all industries. In such inquiries the tribunal will examine whether increased imports are a principal cause of serious injury to domestic producers of like goods. Until now, except for the textile and clothing industry, such inquiries could only be undertaken at the request of the government. It is important to note that the tribunal will only consider complaints under the direct access provisions where the cause of the alleged injury is increased imports of fairly traded goods. Complaints regarding injurious dumping or subsidization will continue to be dealt with under the anti-dumping or countervail provisions of the Special Import Measures Act.

The right of direct access is being extended to all producers to make the procedures of dealing with injury complaints by Canadian producers more equitable and open. The new system will be more transparent and clear for Canadian producers. There will no longer be any doubt in Canadian producer's minds concerning the procedures to be followed when they feel that increased imports are causing them serious injury.

In extending the direct access to all industries the Government was mindful to ensure that frivolous, ill-founded, trade harassing complaints would not stand before the new tribunal. In this connection, it is worth recalling that the purpose of safeguard actions is to help an industry adjust to legitimate import competition. Such actions are therefore meant to be temporary and designed in such a way as to encourage such adjustment.

As you can see, Madam Speaker, there is widespread support for Bill C-110!

For a safeguard injury inquiry to be initiated by the new tribunal, certain conditions will therefore need to be met. For example, the petition must be made by firms producing the majority of the Canadian production of the goods to be investigated. Furthermore, producers will have to provide adequate evidence that increased imports are causing the alleged injury. These conditions should ensure that only legitimate complaints will be accepted by the tribunal.

The legislation contains provisions whereby the Government can ask the tribunal to investigate and report on related issues, at any time during or after a direct access inquiry. These issues could include such public interest matters as competition policy, competitiveness, prices and/or the availability of imports. They could also include the desirability of following various courses of action to deal with serious injury that may be caused by increased imports.

These provisions will allow the Government to have the public interest considered in the context of a direct access inquiry and when choosing to do so to tailor its intervention to the particularities of the case.

The decision regarding the taking of border action or any other appropriate measures pursuant to a serious injury report, resulting either from a government reference or a direct access petition, will continue to rest with the government. In making a decision on border action the Government will, among other things, take into account trade relations considerations, particularly since affected parties generally have rights under the GATT to compensation or to take equivalent action in retaliation when safeguard actions are taken.

Appeals. The new tribunal will take over the existing appeal function of the Tariff Board. This essentially involves the hearing of appeals of Revenue Canada decisions regarding customs and excise duties. The current attractive attributes of the Tariff Board process—ease of access, speediness, ability to represent self, informality, low costs—will be retained in the new tribunal. And I know, Madam speaker, that some people in the riding of Roberval have benefitted from this.

Madam Speaker, the other provisions of the bill deal essentially with the establishment of the new tribunal, organizational and procedural matters. Most of these provisions originate in the statutes of the existing tribunals, particularly the Canadian Import Tribunal which was established at the end of 1984.

The new tribunal will be composed of nine members appointed by Governor in Council. This is a significant reduction from the existing 15 members of the three agencies being replaced. This is made possible by the rationalization resulting from amalgamation. In order to deal with situations of heavy work-load, the law contains provisions for the appointment of temporary members. The chairman will be the Chief Executive Officer of the tribunal.

In developing this bill the government was concerned about maintaining the current "easy access" attributes of the existing institutions. The bill contains provisions which will ensure that this objective is met. For example, parties will continue to be able to appear in person before the tribunal and a provision specifically states that hearings must be conducted as informally as possible.

The bill contains several provisions which will ensure transparency. For example, public notice of reports and decisions of the new tribunal will be made. In the same vein, the bill provides for the making by the new tribunal of rules of procedures for the conduct of its proceedings and for the submission of an annual report on its activities as is currently the case for the Canadian Import Tribunal.

Finally, the bill contains detailed disclosure of information provisions which will ensure access by interested parties to information before the tribunal in the course of proceedings while at the same time protect information which must legitimately remain confidential.

Madam Speaker, I believe this bill will significantly modernize, rationalize and streamline Canadian import institutions. It puts an end to the duplication and overlap that now exists as well as to the confusion this may create. It will ensure that the government gets sound and consistent advice on trade-related matters. This is particularly important for a country like Canada where a major proportion of its wealth depends on trade. It will give to all Canadian producers an important new right to have their legitimate trade concerns heard by an independent tribunal. Since the Bill was first introduced in the House, we have not received any representations against the purpose of this Bill and I hope the House will give it speedy approval.

[English]

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Madam Speaker, the Bill before us today, as the Parliamentary Secretary has said, creates a new agency, the Canadian International Trade Tribunal, by amalgamating three existing agencies, the Canadian Import Tribunal, the Tariff Board and the Textile and Clothing Board. The aim is to remove whatever duplication and overlap currently exists. Presumably, the new agency will provide for greater harmonization and standardization in the way import issues are treated.

At present the Canadian Import Tribunal conducts inquiries into anti-dumping and countervail cases. It also has the responsibility for undertaking general injury inquiries when requested to do so by the Government.

The Tariff Board advises the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) on matters of trade and economic issues and particularly tariff-related measures. It also acts as an appeal tribunal for disputes between importers and Revenue Canada regarding decisions made on excise tariff and other administrative matters. I will return to this appeal tribunal function later.

The Textile and Clothing Board, the third agency, gives advice on trade matters that affect the Canadian textile and clothing industries. The newest tribunal will be responsible for undertaking a wide variety of inquiries; general economic inquiries, injury inquiries and tariff-related inquiries. The Government will be able to ask the tribunal to inquire into matters relating to the trade interests of Canada under the rubric of the general economic inquiries. Examples of injury inquiries are anti-dumping and countervail cases. However, the current fast-track procedures whereby producers of horticultural products can seek emergency safeguard action without reference to an independent tribunal will continue to be available.

The direct access injury inquiries, such as the existing rights of the textile and clothing industry to petition directly the Textile and Clothing Board for an injury inquiry, will be extended to all industries. At present only the Government can initiate such an inquiry for other industries. In the case of the tariff-related inquiries, the tribunal would conduct these when requested to do so by the Minister of Finance. Therefore, the Government is still maintaining a fair amount of control over the access to this independent tribunal.

The new tribunal takes over the appeal function of the Tariff Board involving appeals of Revenue Canada decisions regarding customs and excise duties. The new tribunal will be composed of nine instead of the present fifteen members. Therefore, essentially, the present members will be competing for their jobs since the tribunal is not yet established.

We may very well find ourselves faced with a similar situation as that of the Immigration Appeal Board. Recently the Federal Court of Canada ruled that the Government's refugee Bill, Bill C-55, created "a reasonable apprehension of bias" on the part of the Immigration Appeal Board because the Government proposes to fire all its members and rehire only some of them. Therefore, according to the court, the board could appear to lean in favour of the Government's position in immigration cases where the situation arose where the board members were in effect competing for their jobs. That specific ruling, which was rendered in March, was that the present Immigration Appeal Board was prohibited from determining the refugee status of one applicant "for as long as a reasonable apprehension of bias exists", and immigration lawyers have said that that ruling affects every refugee claimant in Canada.

If the same principle is applied to this Bill before us, if someone chooses to challenge that, we may find that the situation of fifteen members of the three amalgamated tribunals competing for nine jobs may create "a reasonable apprehension of bias" that toward the Government's position and industry may find itself without the access to appeals which the Bill promises until the matter is cleared up by the courts.

I also want to speak particularly about the apparel trade. In Canada, unlike the United States, we find a certain rift, or at least there are different interests presented by the Apparel Manufacturers Institute and the textile trade. In the United States the two work together and form a very effective and, unfortunately, very protectionist lobby. Recently, the Minister of Finance told members of the Canadian Apparel Manufacturers Institute that the Government was determined to give clothing manufacturers a fighting chance to compete in their own market against the Americans, and that the high tariffs on foreign textiles, which run on average about twice as high as comparable U.S. external tariffs, would be reduced to at least U.S. levels over the the 1990s.

This will not guarantee survival under free trade for Canadian apparel manufacturers but it will help lower their input costs since they now import about 60 per cent of their fabrics from third countries. I am not talking about low cost, low quality goods, but rather about many of the high quality fabrics and textiles which are used for Canada's most stylish clothing products. However, the trouble is that most of the tariff relief is in the future and will be shaped by this new government regulatory body, the Canadian International Trade Tribunal, which may very well find itself limited in what it can do. Although the tribunal is theoretically independent, it will of course hear not only from manufacturers but from the textile makers, who have a totally different set of priorities and interests and whose lobbying was responsible for the erecting of these high tariff walls, in the first place.

Some time ago the Government announced and began to shape a massive duty remission package which would have cost $2 billion in lost revenues over 10 years. This was designed to assist the apparel manufacturers. However, when word of the package reached the United States and its powerful protectionist textile industry, the reaction was fierce and fast.

The Minister backed off and the duty remission portion of the policy was scaled down, with the major part of the tariff relief policy being pushed into the future and extended to cover both textile and apparel industries. To make it additionally palatable, Canada gave the U.S. a partial or total preference on several immediate tariff reductions for specialty fabrics or yarns not made in Canada.

This will present the Canadian apparel manufacturers with a number of difficulties both because of the preference and also because of the rules of origin. Canadian manufacturers will be driven to find American rather than third country sources of fabrics wherever possible in order to qualify for duty-free access to the United States market beyond a stipulated quota.

The North American market is very difficult. Some Canadian clothing manufacturers will survive. They will perhaps find themselves specialty niches such as winter clothing. Some may be able to maintain their markets because of being so near, if they are able to provide very quick and effective supply. However, increasingly, the industry will be facing a great deal of restructuring.

Canadian manufacturers are saying that it is no longer enough to manufacture a few good items of clothing, that the industry trend is to product lines manufactured, assembled and marketed to retail chains. That takes size and export and marketing skills. There is really no guarantee of success even in the domestic market after putting out all these additional moneys.

Thus Canadian suppliers are facing a difficult time. It will not be a smooth restructuring. The situation is complicated because the industry is divided. The situation in the United States, where textiles and clothing manufacturers work together as a very large and very effective lobby, leaves our Canadian manufacturers and our Canadian textile industry much more vulnerable. I am not sure that the creation of this additional international trade tribunal, which simply delays the process of finding solutions, is the way to go at this particular time.

There is one significant exclusion upon which I wish to comment before giving the floor to some of the other Members who I know wish to speak on this matter. It is that the international import tribunal is not empowered to inquire into or otherwise administer complaints that involve dumping or subsidization of imported goods. Such questions in the future are to be referred to the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. MacKay) to be dealt with under the Special Import Measures Act.

That does not inspire confidence, not with a Government like this, which has shown such a singular lack of backbone in standing up to American pressures. We have to be very uneasy with the present Government about any move that increases ministerial discretion and takes matters of trade dispute away from an independent tribunal with public hearings where Canadians can be fully informed.

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Madam Speaker, first I would like to suggest that this is a Bill which is actually more controversial than the Government suggested in its opening comments. Certainly, in our discussions with a number of groups throughout the country, in particular groups which were previously subject to the Textile and Clothing Board, which had certain powers and certain capacities to act which this particular new international trade tribunal will not have, they have expressed to us their serious concerns about what the Government is doing in this case.

I must say that we have also had from a number of importers and import competing institutions a sense that this Bill is really far too weak when compared to what they had hoped to see come forward from the Government, given the much more difficult international situation which our traders face throughout the world. Frankly, it is for that reason that it is somewhat disappointing that the Minister is not here to carry forward this debate today.

I must also make the point that there are a great many parts of the Bill which we find to be half-hearted, timid, timorous and which give one a sense of taking steps backward at a time when we should be taking steps forward to try to establish a more dynamic institution which could act more effectively on behalf of Canadian businesses and Canadian workers.

Despite these basic concerns which we intend to raise in the form of amendments at the legislative committee stage we still as a Party support the basic principle of the Bill. That principle is to streamline, rationalize and obtain a more effective single institution which can serve the important needs of Canadian business at the present time with the great escalation of what has to be considered unfair competition internationally. The situation must certainly be considered much more competitive and threatening to exports from this country than has been true in the past, exports to other markets which we have considered to rest with us in the past.

This sense of trying to pull together the three institutions which have dealt with trade policy restrictions in the past is something which we think makes sense. The reduction of a number of agencies operating in this field, we also think is important. It seems to us that it is not sensible to have three separate bodies dealing very much with the same type of concerns in relation to trade, all of them building up sources of expertise and manpower to support them. That type of proliferation of government agencies seems to us both unnecessary and wasteful, as far as the public is concerned.

But if we are aiming to pull together these three institutions into one effective and dynamic institution, I believe it is necessary that we do it very differently from what this Bill has set out to do with respect to a number of the key details of the Bill itself. Some of those details will be debated at much greater length in the legislative committee. But I do not think that the Government should simply assume that it has an uncontroversial Bill before the House which will simply sail through without a lot of questions being raised by the opposition Parties. These questions have certainly been raised with us by the people who will be affected by this change in institutions.

There is a certain irony that while we are taking backward steps with respect to what some of our institutions have been able to do, especially the Textile and Clothing Board, this very day the United States is voting on an omnibus Trade Bill which will not reduce the powers of its International Trade Commission, but, rather, will increase them very considerably. It will also increase the powers of the United States trade representative very considerably. It will provide a greater arm's length relationship between the Government and the various institutions regulating international trade in the United States.

In short, if the omnibus Trade Bill passes today, as everybody predicts, the United States will be setting up a system which will establish weapons which it has developed for the increasingly tough international trade wars that are taking place which are very much more powerful, quicker in their capacity to respond, and more independent and therefore responsive to business' and workers' concerns within the United States.

While the United States is doing that, we have before us a Bill which, in a number of very important respects, weakens the capacity of Canadian business and the capacity of Canadian workers to take the tough steps that are often needed to deal with unfair trade activities occurring within the international economy.

If I may point out some of those concerns in particular, they start with the speed with which this tribunal will be able to move. In Canada, that has certainly been a problem in the past. For instance, it is not uncommon for the Tariff Board to take a year to hear appeals on tariff classifications or valuation issues which come before the Tariff Board. In fact, the average length of time taken is one year. That is clearly not fast enough to respond to the concerns of Canadians workers and business people who want to get a decision from the Tariff Board.

I have great deal of concern looking at this so-called rationalization that by reducing the number of people who will be involved in this process, potentially we will make it an even lengthier and more difficult process for Canadian workers and business people to get decisions from this institution. Therefore, speed is the first concern. Is this in fact an effective institution that will be created that will be able to respond rapidly to problems of unfair trade, as is often crucial in the international economy these days? I have a serious doubt in my mind with respect to the question of speed.

Second, the Textile and Clothing Board, the TCB, has had within its powers one important function, and that has been the independent capacity to initiate inquiries with respect to dangers to the industry, with respect to questions of adjustment and restructuring within the industry, and with respect to questions which involve the future of workers within that industry.

• (1200)

That is not a power that has been associated with the International Trade Tribunal. It is not a power that has been associated the Tariff Board. However, in attempting to put these three bodies together, the sensible thing to do would surely be to recognize that the power which existed with the TCB has been a useful, effective and responsive power which has made it possible for the Textile and Clothing Board to move quickly to initiate inquiries when it was crucial. In attempting to rationalize all three of these institutions, surely the sensible and efficient thing to do would be to give the producers the capacity to look for assistance when unfair trading is taking place. Surely the sensible thing to do would be to give to this new tribunal the power which the Textile and Clothing Board had. However, that is not what has been done.

Instead, the power which existed with the TCB has been stripped away. The new tribunal will not have the power to take independent initiatives on problems which may occur in the future. That seems to me to be a serious mistake and a question with which we will attempt to deal in committee.

Third, besides conducting inquiries, it has been possible in the past for a board such as the Textile and Clothing Board to actually make recommendations to the Government. If the board discovers, for instance, that there is import action which is seriously hurting a sector of the Canadian industry, it has been possible for the TCB to recommend to the Government specifically what it feels should be done. That has been a key part of this institution's activities. Yet this Bill strips that power away from the TCB. The Bill sets up a tribunal which itself is much less powerful, precisely because it cannot do what its equivalent in the United States will be able to do, which is to make direct recommendations about what should be done to counter an import threat of some kind which is hurting Canadian producers.

Again, I have a sense of irony, almost a sense of unreality, about the Government's weakness as it sets up a new institution here in Canada after looking at the one in the United States. The International Trade Commission in the United States has complete authority to make recommendations. No one there would think of establishing an institution which did not have that authority, and in fact, the omnibus Trade Bill which is being voted on today increases the capacity of the United States ITC to make such recommendations in the future. That increases the necessity of institutions elsewhere in the United States trade mix to respond to those recommendations from the ITC. Yet here in Canada, we are taking a backward step by providing that in the future, the International Trade Tribunal will not have the capacity to make recommendations to the Government with respect to any trade problem it has discovered.

It is not simply weak of the Government to be doing this, it is also stupid. The Government is creating a collection of expertise, and that expertise should surely be employed not just to assess import problems or trade threats but also to make recommendations, based on that expertise, as to how the Government should respond to that difficulty.

Fourth, I must deal with the question of direct access. Almost three years ago now, a special committee was established to look at international relations, a joint Senate and House committee. That committee recommended that we should have a much stronger and more flexible single international trade tribunal and that it should be possible for Canadian businesses to access that trade tribunal directly.

In this Bill, the Government pretends that it has established that direct access. In fact, however, the details of the Bill show that the principle of direct access is trumpeted but the reality of direct access is prevented. Let me point out two specific ways in which this is true.

First, it is not possible for companies to have direct access with respect to countervail actions. Countervail actions have become the heart of the international trade conflict which is taking place in the world today. Yet this Bill suggests that companies will not have direct access with respect to this absolutely crucial part of trading activities and policies. They will have direct access to everything else, but they will not have direct access to what really counts. Surely that too is a weak and foolish step to take.

I must also say that it is a very curious principle that this direct access to the new institution will only be possible if companies from an industry can prove that they are speaking on behalf of a majority of that industry. What does that mean? For example, textile companies based in the Atlantic provinces feel they are being attacked by unfair trade practices on the part of another country. It is not possible for them to take their case to this new import tribunal. The case has to be taken there by a majority of the industry across the country. It might be that the industry in Quebec and Ontario, which would make up the majority, would be quite pleased to see their competitors in Atlantic Canada go down the drain and would not support their Atlantic counterparts in taking their case to the tribunal. That would stop the Atlantic producers from having an inquiry take place.

Exactly the same is true of western producers of, let us say, steel. For example, both Saskatchewan and British Columbia produce small but important amounts of steel. They might want to take a case to this new tribunal saying that they are being damaged by imports. Yet they are not permitted to do so because the rest of the industry concentrated in central Canada refuses to go along with their concern. This could be because the industry in central Canada wishes to see the industry in western Canada wiped out as a future competitor.

Again, this seems to me to be a ridiculous, weak and misguided attempt to set the parameters for this institution. In short, we are likely to find ourselves in a situation where it is not possible for certain parts of the country affected by import pressure to take their case to this tribunal unless they have a majority of the entire industry across the country with them. Even if they do that, they cannot do it with respect to unfair trade in the way of countervailing duties.

There is a fifth point, the last key weakness in this Bill. If we want to put together a body of serious expertise able to operate effectively in this tough international environment, why do we not give that institution much more freedom than is established by this Bill? As I have noted, it is not possible for countervailing duty issues to be considered by the tribunal unless there is a reference from the Governor in Council, in fact the whole Cabinet. Why do we want to control this institution so closely? What is it about the Textile and Clothing Board which has been so ineffective in the past? In fact, that board, with its sense of greater freedom, has been able to be quite effective and efficient with respect to many of the inquiries it has initiated and its analysis of issues with respect to countervailing duties. Yet the Government is preventing this new institution, which it says is supposed to be more effective and efficient, from operating on its own. I just do not understand the logic. It seems it can only be justified by a sense of wanting to create some kind of institution dealing with trade without actually establishing a serious and substantive institution.

It is for that reason that the fight which will take place in committee to try to establish a serious international trade tribunal will be extremely long and hard. It will be necessary to call as many witnesses as we need to convince the Government that it is establishing a hollow shell instead of a tough and efficient institution which can act on behalf of Canadian producers in the future. That is what the Government has brought on itself by not consulting with as wide a sector of the industry as it should have. It did not consult with workers and their institutions. It certainly did not consult with the opposition Parties. It is certainly not attempting to open up to broader public discussion the question of what kind of institution we need. That is a recipe for serious problems in getting the Bill through the House in the short time available before the summer recess and a possible election.

Frankly, I am quite sad that the Government chose this approach. It has taken a good and sensible idea and put it together in such a way as to vitiate the idea. It has weakened it and, as I said, created the form but not the substance of what producers in the international economy will need in the very difficult days in the future.

• (1220)

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Madam Speaker, last night I was driven to amusement by the appearance of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) on national television protesting his innocence on matters of patronage. I knew that pending on the legislative timetable was Bill C-110, one of the most blatant and egregious examples of the Government's horrendous appetite for finding places for its favourite colleagues. More important, this Bill has created a serious level of confusion in the procedures of trade remedy law in the country.

On March 15 the case of Maltby versus the Minister of National Revenue before the Tariff Board was referred to the Federal Court because of the clear apprehension of bias which was created as a result of the Bill which we are debating at second reading today. This Bill contains clauses which permit the extermination of the existing members of all tariff boards and agencies in Canada without any form of severance or allowance for services.

The precedent was set with the Immigration Appeal Board when the Government undertook the ridiculous initiative of firing all the people on the board without any of the due processes which are generally allowed for under our Labour Code. The incredible confusion in the immigration system has now been compounded by the fact that the Immigration Appeal Board cannot work. We now have a similar circumstance with the tariff boards.

The Prime Minister of Canada is saying, "My hands are clean, my conscience is clear, we do things totally in the public interest without any advantage being sought". Yet, we have two Bills still before Parliament, one on immigration and one on tariffs, in which the Government is executing the most severe and blatant example of trying to eliminate people in quasi-judicial positions whose independence is absolutely sacrosanct, thereby creating a clear apprehension of bias to the point where the courts of the country have now endorsed that position. The Federal Court has always said, in the case of the Immigration Appeal Board, that there is an apprehension of bias, and that particular regulatory agency has now ground to a halt.

I think it would be very important, perhaps for the Clerks or the Speaker's office, to determine whether this legislation in fact contravenes some of the basic rules. If you are creating that apprehension and bias you are running into clear legal jurisdictional problems. This certainly gives full lie to the speech made by the Prime Minister yesterday and will be one of the clear exhibits which the people of Canada will have in front of them of the appetite the Government has shown. It is not satisfied simply to replace people as their terms come to an end, but most commit a form of guillotine on sitting Members in order to get their own partisans on these boards and agencies. The Government is thereby clearly guilty of interfering in the quasi-judicial regulatory structure of the country.

I do not think that any other Government in the history of this country has ever undertaken that kind of action. That is why this Bill, with some laudable purposes in terms of trying to reform the trade mechanism, because of that voracious appetite for patronage has turned into a very ugly piece of legislation which has very serious overtones which go beyond simply matters of trade.

That is why we find this piece of legislation as repugnant as we did Bill C-55, which was repugnant for a number of reasons dealing with human rights and individual liberties. However, the fact that this Bill has built into it a clear and unmistakable whiff of patronage of the most evident and manifest kind will result in other Canadians finding it equally repugnant. That is unfortunate because reform is required in our trade administration. There must be better rationalization for determining trade remedy laws.

I do not understand why the Government does things like this. I do not understand why it takes something which could have been useful, could have been purposeful, could have been positive, and perverts it so badly. It was unnecessary. There is attrition. People resign their offices. They do not have to be kicked out summarily by a piece of legislation, thereby destroying the whole system. That was not necessary. It is not contingent to the effective utilization of this Bill. The Government is blinded by the thought that it may not be here much longer and wants to get its friends into cushy jobs for the next 10 years. This kind of philosophy has biased a good piece of legislation. As I said, it is just not necessary to do those kinds of things and establish such a precedent.

I fully expect that the Federal Court will rule on this legislation in the same way as it did on Bill C-55. I expect that it will rule that it is the cause of a clear apprehension of bias in the present operations of our regulatory system. Therefore, all the cases presently before the import tribunals will not be able to be considered until we expunge this particular set of clauses from the Bill. Members opposite should be duly warned that that is going to have to happen, that they cannot contravene basic principles of regulatory law, which is what they are doing with this legislation. It will be our responsibility to ensure that we cleanse it of this particular obvious and evident maladministration of our trade law.

Speaking of that, Madam Speaker, my Party has put forward a number of proposals over the last two years on how we should rationalize and reorganize the trade administration system in Canada in keeping with the new international trade atmosphere which we face. As a piece of legislation this is simply tinkering, it is not doing what we would have liked, that is, rewriting the trade law itself to ensure that Canadian producers facing competition, facing the requirement to offset unfair trade practices of other countries, will be able to receive fair and adequate protection. We can say quite honestly that our trade law is not adequate for the task, nor is our trade machinery.

Let me give one very clear example of where a serious omission has been made, and that is in the area of adjustment. We have done an awful lot of experimentation in the last 10 years to try to find ways to assist industry in dealing with the dislocations that are caused by international competition, by trade competition. As tariffs have come down as a consequence of various GATT rounds, we have attempted, through such things as the Canadian Industrial Renewal Board to help industry meet that kind of competition. The Canadian Industrial Renewal Board was a separate agency administered by a board composed of people from the private sector. It was meant to provide both labour adjustment and capital adjustment to the footwear and textile industries to help them meet that kind of competition and allow them to modernize.

Similarly, our administration brought in the Industrial Labour Adjustment Program which was designed to help individual industries like the automobile sector which was facing a downturn in 1980, or the textile and other sectors to provide assistance to workers for retraining or pre-retirement benefits, as well as to give industrial assistance to firms or communities.

Those programs were wiped out by the Government. In some cases, it allowed them to lapse, such as with the retirement benefits for older workers. The Canadian Industrial Renewal Board was allowed to lapse, but nothing was put in its place.

I am not saying that those instruments were perfect. They were experiments in recognition that something had to be done to deal with the major problem of industrial adjustment in this country. However, if it was the judgment of the Government in 1984 that these programs were not good enough, it should have introduced something better. Instead, it created a vacuum, and there is no adequate means of enabling industries to respond to dislocation, to help workers affected by competition or to give some security for our workforce in light of the new trade conditions.

Approximately one month ago, the Economic Council published a report entitled "Managing Adjustment: Policies for Trade Sensitive Industries". The Council made a very clear set of recommendations that the new Canadian import tribunal should have the ability to provide for adjustments or forms of protection for industries affected by international competition. The Economic Council indicated that in order to make it work effectively a broad-based set of instruments had to be available. I do not believe anyone on the government side is suspicious of the Economic Council, which tends to endorse all of the Government's initiatives.

The question is why the Government did not respond at least to these set of recommendations and say that one of the powers of the new tribunal would be to ensure that the tribunal would be able to make a judgment, whether it be in the form of temporary quotas or direct assistance to the workers in the particular industry. Part of its responsibility should be to make such a judgment, for example, in the case of a town affected by the closure of its textile plant because of a new high technology area or a trade arrangement. In my opinion, Bill C-110 contains no such powers.

For example, the Employment Support Act, passed in 1972, is still on the statute books of Canada. It was brought in by a previous Liberal administration when the United States introduced its 10 per cent surtax under the Nixon administration. That Employment Support Act enabled Canadian industry to stay in business while we reconciled that particular conflict. Those industries did not have to shut down because they were able to get assistance to fight those particular incursions. As a result, some 5,000 Canadian businesses kept their doors open during that period.

The Employment Support Act has been put in abeyance. It could be brought off the shelf and reactivated with the new Canadian International Trade Tribunal as the agency to make the judgment as to when and how support for workers could be provided as a result of international trade competition.

The Government is contemplating signing an agreement with the United States which will require massive adjustments in this country. The Bank of Nova Scotia, an agency to which I presume the Government would listen, has listed some 17 to 20 different industries that will face massive relocation. The only response we have received so far from the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) and others is that they will use existing programs to provide that adjustment. However, existing programs have been cut back by 30 per cent. The labour adjustment and training programs have been cut back by 30 percent. How will it be possible to deal with this new adjustment when the funds are being severely cut? It does not make sense. Furthermore, the existing programs are not trade sensitive.

We are still waiting with great anticipation for some kind of older worker adjustment program, the people affected most directly when an industry must shut down or change its technology as a consequence of trade or other matters.

The promise was made over a year ago and we are near the end of the legislative agenda, but nothing has happened. Simple amendments to this legislation would enable us to provide for labour adjustment for older workers affected by trade dislocation. I believe it is a prime opportunity for the Government to fulfil a promise that it made over a year ago because it could easily be done in this legislation.

The Economic Council study described in principle how it could be implemented. The fact that this legislation has those omissions only indicates to me that the Government has no intention of bringing in adjustment programs. It made a false promise to older workers and has no interest in providing any kind of federal government support.

This does not mean there will be no adjustment assistance, it will simply have to be picked up by the provinces or the private sector, adding costs to their budgets which have not been in any way provided for. The Minister of Finance may be able to keep his own financial books in order, but when we look at the national accounts of Canada we see that someone will have to pay for thousands of workers who will be affected.

It will certainly be our intention in dealing with this legislation to make the tribunal a far more contemporary instrument of dealing with trade sensitive adjustment programs than anything that is presently provided for by the Government. If the Government will not do it, someone will have to, and I only hope that members of the government caucus would be aware of their obligation in this respect and support those kinds of amendments that will have to be introduced.

Finally, let me point out that I also believe the trade law itself needs to be reformed. The reorganization of the tribunal is not good enough. The tribunal is only as good as the law it must implement and, as we have seen in the recent Hyundai case, our present anti-dumping rules are not sufficient to encompass the kind of new conditions we face whereby corporations are making different products in different countries with a market system that requires a different test for countervail or dumping. Again, it would seem to me that a corollary piece of legislation, if not included in this, must be a very major overhaul in rewriting of our trade law generally to catch up with modern contemporary circumstances.

Those are only some of the reasons that I think this is a deeply flawed piece of legislation. The Government has taken what should have been a good idea and failed very badly in its execution both because of what it omits and because of the very severe perversion of the Act in terms of trying to exterminate existing members of the tribunals we now have in a way that can only be interpreted as an appetite for the patronage machine of the Conservative Party.

Mr. Langdon: Madam Speaker, I have just one question that I would like to raise with my colleague, the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy). I would like to refer specifically to the Textile and Clothing Board and the particular powers it has had in the past, powers which have given the board the capacity to initiate inquiries of its own which, in turn, gave the board the possibility, indeed, the duty, of making recommendations to go with its findings from inquiries.

I know the Member is a fellow member of several committees looking at trade matters, and of course a fellow member of the Standing Committee on External Affairs and International Trade. I would be interested in his explanation or analysis of why he feels the Government, in amalgamating the three institutions, has cut out those key functions which the Textile and Clothing Board in the past was quite successfully able to fulfil. What explanation would the Hon. Member offer of that, to me, very strange and very foolish move?

Mr. Axworthy: Madam Speaker, I did not address that specific part of the legislation, first, because I thought the Hon. Member himself had dealt with it so adequately and, second, because time was a constraint. However, I would want to offer my own sense of puzzlement as to why what was a useful and effective power is being stripped. I can only suggest two things; first, there is an increasing tendency on the part of the Government to strip down the arm's length relationship between itself and a number of agencies, to politicize, in effect, the kind of quasi-judicial system which has been used in this country for a long time.

As the Hon. Member knows, I spoke on the one area where it is stripping the members out, and I think it is again an attempt to try to control decisions, especially because of the Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement. I think the Government recognizes there are going to be a number of new areas of sensitivity growing up. It does not want someone else out there examining them in an independent way and reaching conclusions the Government may not like. I think it is quite a deliberate attempt to squelch and restrict the orbit of independent inquiry, examination or initiative because of the potential embarrassment of the Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement. I really believe that is reason number one.

Second, I also believe we are again seeing a tendency, one that disturbs me, to have our trade matters basically decided in the Department of External Affairs itself. I think my own Government takes some responsibility for this when it amalgamated the Department of Trade, the Department of External Affairs and others and made trade a kind of handmaiden to foreign policy, as opposed to trade as a direct outcome of domestic needs and the requirement of our own producers to go out and get markets. I think we have reversed the onus as to what our trade policy should be. As a result, we do not want these agencies doing things the Department of External Affairs does not want them to do. It is just part and parcel of the same area. Again, it may result in different sensitivities. We know there is an incredibly difficult balancing act going on in the textile area between the importation of low-cost products from Third World countries and the protection of our own domestic industry. I think that is an area that we as a country must come to grips with in a more effective way than we have.

Unfortunately, the way in which it could have been done more effectively, through the Textile and Clothing Board, will no longer be allowed. It will now be in the hands of a Minister to determine whether and how they are going to do it. So I think that restriction on those freedoms is really a consequence of a kind of political and bureaucratic agenda on how to deal with trade policy.

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Madam Speaker, I am pleased to participate in the debate today on Bill C-110, an Act to establish the Canadian International Trade Tribunal. We have heard some interesting and useful remarks this morning, as is often the case, only from the opposition Parties. It seems to me that even with the largest majority in Canadian history, government Members cannot seem to pull themselves together to speak on any legislation.

There are some fundamental questions one has to ask oneself when looking at a Bill such as this Act to establish the Canadian International Trade Tribunal and to amend or repeal other Acts in consequence thereof. I think we have to ask ourselves if it does cut red tape. How accessible will it be to those who would want to use it? Is it at arm's length? Is it likely to be independent? And does it have real power?

The question of the arm's length relationship is perhaps one on which we should focus first. The new tribunal will not have the power to initiate inquiries, nor can it make recommendations for remedial action. I think that is a fundamental test that any piece of legislation should be put to. Is it going to be at arm's length and can it do what the Government is trying to sell it as being able to do?

We can look under the clauses related to powers, duties and functions and find quite quickly that this has been designed in a certain way by the Government and by those who drafted this Bill. Clause 16 states that the duties and functions of the tribunal are to conduct inquiries, consider complaints, to hear, determine and deal with all appeals and exercise and perform such other duties or functions. One quickly sees that the Governor in Council, the Cabinet and the Minister have maintained control over the processes which might be launched under the new tribunal thoroughly and totally.

I think the points made by my friends, the Hon. Member for Essex Windsor (Mr. Langdon) and the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy), make clear the question: if we are going to have a body, if we are going to amalgamate a number of other tribunals, reduce the number of members of that tribunal, obviously increase the work-load of a smaller number of individuals, are we actually providing powers? Are we actually making it independent so that a producer from wherever in Canada, whether from British Columbia, Prince Edward Island or Yellowknife, actually has access to a tribunal that is truly independent and can look at the real ramifications and causes of the complaint?

If we look at the first section under inquiries, inquiries into economic trade or commercial matters, we see it is strictly for the Governor in Council, so it is a political matter the Minister might bring to Cabinet, saying: "Here is something we should inquire into". Inquiries into tariff-related matters and inquiries into injuries are all very well laid out in terms of reference, tabling of reports, and so on. That is the political area. If there is some political heat coming from a collection of producers or from a number of regions or a number of provinces, the Minister in Cabinet can make a decision to send it on to the tribunal.

When we come to the clause on complaints by domestic producers, there is certainly a great deal of verbiage. There is Clause 22, Clause 23, and on and on it goes for pages about what a domestic producer would have to go through. There are 21-day time limits, 30-day time limits, reporting periods of 180 days and so on. When one moves on to Clauses 25, 26 and so on, one sees that they all lead once again right back to the Minister and the Cabinet.

A domestic producer might say, "Is that a little unusual in a piece of legislation?" It certainly is, if the Government is trying to sell this as cutting red tape, getting rid of three boards and making it one. It sounds great. It sounds like streamlining, government efficiency and cutting down on government debt, wastage and bureaucrats and so on. However, I have not even heard members of the Government trying to sell it as that.

When one looks at what type of real access domestic producers would have, one finds that it is likely to be stifled and snuffed out if any political waves might be made. Members who have already spoken have pointed out that in sensitive areas of obvious deficiency such as in the Mulroney-Reagan deal, areas in which our domestic producers will likely be harmed by certain things that will now be allowed under that agreement, should it be promulgated, they will not have the type of opportunity to be heard by an independent process. This is something that is fundamentally important and is provided by many other legislatures and parliaments around the world. In this way there is a truly independent arm's length operation.

All of the drafting of the Bill leads it back into the situation wherein it can be manipulated politically either by the Minister or by the Cabinet. In some cases it can be diverted off to the Deputy Minister of National Revenue for consideration under another Act, the Special Import Measures Act.

On the test of its independence it fails. On the test of its relevance, its accessibility and its timeliness for domestic producers, it fails, and it fails miserably.

I was always interested in listening to Conservative Members in opposition berate the Liberals when I was elected here in my second term in 1980 to 1984. They berated Liberals for bringing forward legislation without the accompanying regulations. They were always saying, "We are always expected to buy a pig in a poke". Now that the Conservatives are in government, they are even worse than the Liberals were in continually promulgating legislation before the House. The Government has been in office for four years. Surely, the regulations associated with this particular Bill could have been provided to Members of the House so that we could make a realistic evaluation of the legislation.

Let us look at Clause 40 of the Bill, which is now becoming standard Tory fare. They print a few pages with a few general themes but they never put the regulations in place. For example, even on definitions with respect to what is a domestic producer the Governor in Council has yet to make a regulation. This clause is worth reading into the record because it reveals that the Conservatives are once again bringing in a true pig in the poke before the House and asking it to be passed in its entirety. It states:

> The Governor in Council may make regulations.
> (a) respecting the matters to be addressed or examined by the Tribunal in an inquiry—

That means that we do not even know what matters may be addressed or examined by the tribunal. We have a general idea. It will be almost impossible for a domestic producer to get anywhere unless the Minister is on side and the Cabinet is on side. If there are any political problems associated with having evidence heard before the tribunal then it will be squashed by the Minister or by Cabinet before the producer even has a hearing. We now find that the definitions are not even provided to us. We read:

> (b) defining the expressions "domestic producer", "domestic production" and "like or directly competitive goods" for the purposes of this Act—

Those definitions are yet to be made by the Governor in Council. They will be promulgated after the Act is dealt with by Parliament. Once again, this is a truly undemocratic way of dealing with legislation. It reads:

> (c) defining the expression "other interested party" for the purposes of section 25, 26, 28, 29 or 30—

This is where domestic producers are in the midst of their process of identifying the problem that they have and trying to get themselves before the tribunal. We find that even in terms of defining other interested parties it has not been defined. For example, let us say that there is a domestic producer of a commodity in British Columbia who feels that there are other interested parties, perhaps someone who produces part of that commodity from, say, Calgary, Regina, Montreal or St. John's, Newfoundland, and wants to bring them in as an interested party because of the impact that certain imports might have on them. That is not being made available to them. I see the Minister of Transport (Mr. Bouchard) nodding in agreement. Once again, we have a pig in a poke before the House.

One could drive a Kenworth truck through Clause 40 as a result of this type of loophole. It reads:

> (d) prescribing any matter or thing that under this Act may or is to be prescribed—

The real coup de grâce of the Bill, a test that any Member of Parliament must put a piece of legislation to, is the following which states:

> (e) generally, for carrying out the purposes and provisions of this Act.

There is the big Kenworth. It allows the Government to turn this Bill, this paper tiger as it is presently written, into anything the Government should so desire.

Let us take a look at what the Government claims Bill C-110 does. It claims that it amalgamates three existing agencies: the Canadian Import Tribunal, known as CIT; the Tariff Board, known as TB; and the Textile and Clothing Board, the TCB. There is no doubt that it does that. It wipes out their legislative foundation and will turn them all into the Canadian International Trade Tribunal.

The duties and functions of the new tribunal are to inquire and report on economic trade or commercial matters as requested by the Government. Let us make sure that everyone in the country understands. This is not an independent tribunal where domestic producers, friends of the Minister of Transport, might have an opportunity to come to have a hearing before the board.

Mr. Bouchard: You are not very convincing.

Mr. Fulton: The Minister of Transport says that I am very convincing. I am sure he will go back to Cabinet and make sure that this Bill is rewritten.

The Bill is to require a report to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) and, as I referred to earlier, to refer some matters to National Revenue, including Canada's international rights and obligations. The terms and reference for both are then set by the Government.

In addition to its research functions, and this is where there is a problem, the tribunal cannot independently initiate its own inquiries into matters. They can only really come from the Minister or Cabinet. It is true that domestic producers can try to wind their way through, but before they ever actually complete the process it has to have the stamp of approval of the Minister or Cabinet. So how likely is it that that will happen in the case of a sensitive trade matter when we find out that the Minister for International Trade and Mr. Reisman bungled? Let us say that they forgot something and there is a little area there. The Government can say that this is embarrassing and that people will know there are a great many termite holes in this agreement. It will keep it to the side, whether it is a horticultural matter, a domestically produced commodity or whatever.

That reminds me, back in 1975 the then Liberal Government lifted the tariff and non-tariff barriers on Canadian household appliances. I refer to pop-up toasters, fridges, stoves, dishwashers and all that kind of thing. At that time we produced 90 per cent of our home appliances. They were purchased in Canada and made in Canada in Vancouver, Edmonton and various other centres across the country such as Toronto, Montreal and so on. After 10 years of having that tariff and non-tariff barrier removed, which was about a 4 per cent barrier to incoming products, there has been a complete reversal. Some 90 per cent of home appliances purchased in Canada are made in the United States.

We must ask ourselves this. Would this legislation meet the test of Canadian home appliance producers if we found ourselves in the situation of 1975 today in terms of that level of production? Would they be able to wind their way through, if they were having unfair dumping and unfair practices from another country, the United States or anywhere else? Would this type of tribunal provide timely, easily accessible and independent hearings and inquiries? The answer is no. I say that because it has been clutched so tightly politically to the body politic in this case to the Conservative Government, that it fails on all those really key tests. It is unlikely to be either accessible or useful to domestic producers.

I see that it is one o'clock. I will resume my comments later in the day.

THE ECONOMY

SITUATION OF PERSONS LIVING BELOW POVERTY LINE

Mrs. Lucie Pépin (Outremont): Mr. Speaker, in spite of the economic recovery in our country, Statistics Canada confirms that the percentage of Canadians living below the poverty line has increased.

These statistics are upsetting and support our statements to the effect that only couples where both spouses work outside the home have been able to maintain their standard of living, compared to couples living on one salary, who have seen their income drop by 4 per cent.

The situation of young couples has deteriorated to such an extent that their children—our children, Mr. Speaker—are living in poverty. One out of five children in Canada is poor.

[English]

Young people, women, and children are living in poverty, and the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) has missed many opportunities to ensure a guaranteed annual income by reforming the welfare system. Nor has child care been discussed in the broader context of the poverty of Canada's young families.

These women and children wonder, in view of the fact that the poor of our country are unlikely to be adequately heard, insofar as welfare and child care are concerned what reforms does the Government have to offer which will be specifically targeted to the young people and the women and children of our society?

What has the Conservative Government done and what does it plan to do to change this unfair situation and to give families and children in this country the right to live in equality and justice?

THE CONSTITUTION

INCLUSION OF PROPERTY RIGHTS URGED

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, the right to own property, singly, jointly, or in a group, is one of the strengths of democracy. This right distinguishes a democratic country from all brands of totalitarianism and socialism that believe in the state owning all land.

Thousands of Canadians who came from other countries came to Canada because of their desire to own land, their own home, their own farm. The right to own property is part of the Canadian heritage. Why is this fundamental right not included in the Canadian Charter of Rights?

In 1981, because of the efforts of the PC Members, it was in the Charter for 48 hours, but during the weekend the Liberals caved in to the demands of the NDP and took it out, to their everlasting shame.

The Canadian Real Estate Association, the Canadian Bar, and the Canadian Chamber of Commerce all, along with most Canadians, want the right to own property enshrined in the Constitution. So let's put it in!

HISTORIC EVENTS

ISRAEL—ANNIVERSARY OF STATEHOOD

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, today is the fortieth anniversary of the creation of the State of Israel, a nation based on religion and democracy. Created out of the chaos of World War II, it was a deliberate attempt by the United Nations to a find a homeland for a displaced people. Then, as now, the desire for peace and security from violence demanded tolerance, understanding, and good will.

We offer our congratulations today to Israel, believing that Israel and its neighbours will some day find that elusive solution to their problems by applying their genius, tolerance, and imagination. Then all peoples of the area will be able to celebrate peace.

It is all too easy for Canadians with our vast, thinly populated spaces to have difficulty understanding the problems of a part of the world heavily populated with many nationalities. However, today Canadians wish to congratulate Israel and offer our best wishes for peace and happiness.

THE LATE JEAN GASCON

Hon. Andrée Champagne (Saint-Hyacinthe—Bagot): Mr. Speaker, I first wish to thank you and Hon. Members from all three parties who defied custom and let me speak.

Today, the arts community is in mourning. Canada has lost a man of the theatre whose talent, versatility, devotion and leadership marked an era and will continue to have an impact on the whole Canadian arts community.

As Jean Gascon was preparing yet another production at the Stratford Festival, sadly the curtain fell and Canada's artistic community is in mourning.

To his wife, children and whole family, we extend our deepest sympathy.

Companions in good times and bad, disciples, students, patrons, and all of us in the general public will never let the flame he passed on to us die. Jean Gascon was a great artist and like all great artists, by making us laugh or cry, he made us better.

Thank you, Jean!

GOVERNMENT APPOINTMENTS

PRIME MINISTER'S ADDRESS TO NEWSPAPER PUBLISHERS' ASSOCIATION

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, the crown prince of Canadian comedy appeared yesterday as the invited guest of the Canadian newspaper publishers. "I don't get no respect" said the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney). The media ignore the great appointments the Prime Minister has made. Let us review some of those great appointments.

For instance, we could talk about Jean Sirois. We could talk about the kissing cousins of Pierre Hardy and the Hon. Member for Joliette (Mr. La Salle). We could talk about Gayle Christie, the Duchess of York. We could talk about Peter Clark. We could talk about Marcia Clark, the wife of Peter Clark. We could talk about the Minister of International Trade's (Mr. Crosbie) two sons. Remember them? They used to do some legal work. We could talk about Lawrence Hannigan, defeated Conservative candidate in the riding of Laval-des-Rapides. How about Jocelyne Ouellette? How about the present Secretary of State?

If you allowed me two hours, Mr. Speaker, I could continue giving you a full list of all those very good and excellent patronage appointments that the Prime Minister talked about. In my opinion the Prime Minister's appointments were a fraud, a deceit, and a sham. He had the option to say no to those old Tory ways, but he did not.

• (1405)

As the Prime Minister put it, "There will be jobs for Liberals and NDPs too once I have been Prime Minister for 15 years and I cannot find a living, breathing Tory left in the country". He also said, "I was talking to Tories then and that is what they wanted to hear. Talking to Canadians at election time is something else". Those are all quotes that he will remember.

VOLUNTARY ORGANIZATIONS

NATIONAL VOLUNTEER WEEK

Mr. Marcel R. Tremblay (Québec-Est): Mr. Speaker, during National Volunteer Week, I would like to pay tribute to all those Canadians who give so generously of their time for the benefit of their fellow citizens and their country. Across Canada this week, people are praising the invaluable contribution made by volunteers to the quality of our lives here in Canada. Their unselfishness has made us more compassionate and has made our cities and towns a good place to live.

Volunteer work is done in practically every sector of our society, including health care and social services, recreation, the arts, the environment and community development. Many volunteers are active in social work, making Canadians aware of the injustice and disparities present in our society.

Volunteer work is so much a part of our lives in this country that we often take it for granted. However, it deserves to be mentioned as one of the social forces that sustain our communities and as a source of national pride. Only through public recognition of the essential role played by volunteers in Canada can volunteer work continue to expand. Without their efforts, Mr. Speaker, the country would lose one of its fundamental characteristics: the spirit of solidarity and mutual assistance.

NECHAKO HYDRO AGREEMENT—ALCAN'S REFUSAL TO APPEAR BEFORE PARLIAMENTARY COMMITTEE

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, Alcan refused to appear before the Standing Committee on Fisheries and Oceans this week to answer questions about the Nechako hydro agreement signed last fall and has now been ordered to do so by all Parties represented on the committee. The agreement puts at risk 53 per cent of the sockeye habitat of the entire Fraser River system, will lower the natural flows of the Nechako to as little as 6 per cent of its volume, and will lower the Fraser River itself by three feet at some times of the year.

Alcan has been placed above the law and above Parliament through this agreement with the Minister of Fisheries (Mr. Siddon), insulated from public inquiry and scrutiny. It is unprecedented in Canada for a Cabinet or a Parliament to concede such constitutional powers to a private corporation. Rather than defend the rights of Parliament to set water flows necessary to protect fish, the Minister chose to impose an adverse water flow regime upon a common property resource for the private benefit of Alcan, not the public.

In British Columbia a province-wide coalition has taken this matter to the Federal Court, having filed just last week, and plans to fight all the way to the Supreme Court of Canada for justice and for Canada.

PROVINCIAL AFFAIRS

ONTARIO BUDGET

Mr. Bob Pennock (Etobicoke North):

Fear not, children of Canada, for Robin Hood is still alive and well.

He wears not a cloak of green but a tie of red.

He lives not in Sherwood Forest, but at Queen's Park.

He leads not merry men, but a pack of thieves.

They rob, not from the rich but from everyone in Ontario.

They give not to the poor, but squander, squander, squander.

His name is not Robin, but Peterson, and his band calls itself Liberals.

Yesterday the people of Ontario again saw the effects of electing a Liberal Government which is irresponsible in its fiscal outlook and learned everything it knows from its federal Liberal cousins.

A Conservative Government in Ottawa is now attempting to correct the Grit years of mismanagement of Canada. The people of Ontario will not soon forget how they were hoodwinked by Peterson and his band of merry spenders.

HISTORIC EVENTS

ISRAEL—ANNIVERSARY OF STATEHOOD

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, I rise on behalf of many other Members of the House to pay tribute, on the 40th anniversary of the creation of the State of Israel, to a remarkable country and a remarkable group of people who, over that 40 years, made great achievements in establishing a democratic system of government in the Middle East and in undertaking a number of important initiatives in science, technology, education, culture, and economics.

I think that Canadians have always felt a strong affinity for Israel, and throughout the years have clearly established our support for the existence of the State of Israel and its future. We all recognize that Israel is now going through a serious time of trouble and turbulence. I think all Members of the House reach out to that country and its neighbours in the hope their future will be far less troublesome than it is at present.

• (1410)

On behalf of my caucus and, I hope, other Members, I say congratulations to Israel on its 40th anniversary, and we look forward to another 40 years and more. To quote the Talmud, which I think represents the spirit of Israel,"if we can save one life, we save the whole world". I think that should be the standard we apply to the State of Israel and the situation it is now facing in its time of trouble.

ISRAEL—ANNIVERSARY OF STATEHOOD

Hon. John W. Bosley (Don Valley West): Mr. Speaker, most of us have experienced a 40th birthday. We know, Sir, that whether that event is traumatic or positive, it is a time when one takes stock of what one has achieved and what one hopes to achieve. Today is of course a very special birthday, for today Israel is indeed 40 years old, only 40 years old.

Whatever one thinks of Israel's policies, and one does not have to agree with all of them, no one can visit Israel without being utterly staggered by what she has achieved in such a short time. From desert to orange groves, her industrial, cultural, social and economic achievements have been miraculous. No other country in the world has achieved so much in 40 years. To have done all that in what has been far too often a war zone is only that much more impressive.

Israel is younger than most of us. Her people deserve even more our congratulations and the sure knowledge that we continue to support their right to exist within secure borders. Perhaps we could paraphrase an old saying which is appropriate to this day and say let us pray, Sir, that "peace begins at 40".

NATIONAL DEFENCE

NUCLEAR POWERED SUBMARINES—COSTS OF ACQUISITION

Mr. Derek Blackburn (Brant): Mr. Speaker, the Government's expensive scheme to buy nuclear submarines is dying the death of a thousand cuts. Expert after expert around the world is questioning the cost and the very reason for this program.

Jane's, perhaps the most respected voice on defence matters in the world, has just published the latest condemnation in a book by Anthony Cordesman who says "the true cost would be at least twelve billion." He warns that the horrendous cost of nuclear submarines "would mortgage Canadian defence investment funds for a generation." Mr. Cordesman is not alone.

Last week, Frank Gaffney from the Hudson Institute pointed out that the Government has not told Canadians about the total cost of operating and maintaining nuclear submarines. In fact, he even called them "obsolete death traps".

The chorus of experts condemning the nuclear submarine program is getting louder and louder. The question is: will the cold warriors in the Government listen?

FORESTRY

CANFOR CORPORATION—DISCOVERY OF COMPOUND TO REPLACE CHEMICAL SPRAYS

Mrs. Mary Collins (Capilano): Mr. Speaker, it is always a pleasure to bring to the attention of the House news of important discoveries made in British Columbia. Recently, Canfor Corporation of Vancouver announced a major breakthrough in the search for an environmentally safe spray to protect lumber from mold and fungi during shipment and storage. After two years of research and testing, Canfor has perfected an inorganic compound which is both safe and effective, so that potential harmful chemical sprays will no longer have to be used.

It is expected that lumber producers from around the world will want to use this product for the safety of their employees and customers.

In these days of increased focus on environmental and health issues, I am sure all Members of the House will want to join me in congratulating Dr. Suezone Chow, the creator of this important new product. Discoveries like this prove that British Columbia is a world leader when it comes to innovation and producing firsts in the forest industry.

BRIDGES

OPPORTUNITY TO END TOLLS ON CHAMPLAIN BRIDGE

Hon. Jean Lapierre (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, since 1984, I have taken every opportunity to mention the dissatisfaction of 40 million drivers who cross the Champlain Bridge each year with a situation that also discriminates against residents of the South Shore.

Mr. Speaker, in August 1984, the Conservative Party promised to abolish the toll on the Champlain Bridge. Many ministers later, ministers of state (Transport) as well as senior ministers, this problem has yet to be solved. Now that the present Minister, formerly Minister of State, has the portfolio and, I hope, the power, we will finally be able to deal with the case of the toll on the Champlain Bridge that wastes hundreds of hours of work and hundreds of dollars worth of energy, and in the final instance yields very little to the Government of Canada.

Mr. Speaker, I know the Government of Canada will have no choice but to end this discrimination. Why not do it now, because the people of the Eastern Townships and the South Shore should be able to go where they want without paying more than anyone else, and especially without wasting the amount of time they do now on the Champlain Bridge. Once again, I would urge the Government to meet the commitment it made in 1984, while there is still time!

POLITICAL PARTIES

THEME FOR NEXT FEDERAL ELECTION

Mr. Gabriel Fontaine (Lévis): Mr. Speaker, the next election will be like the fable of the ant and the cricket. On one side we have the crickets who dance and sing and have fun in other people's gardens, who borrow and spend other people's money, like the Socialists and their allies in the next election, the Liberals.

On the other side, we have the ants who are industrious, thrifty and concerned about the present and the future, and they are the Conservatives.

The Socialist Party has already persuaded the unions to raise their dues to pay for the election campaign. Just think what it would cost the individual Canadian if a Liberal-Socialist coalition came to power!

GOVERNMENT APPOINTMENTS

PRIME MINISTER'S ADDRESS TO NEWSPAPER PUBLISHERS' ASSOCIATION

Mr. John Nunziata (York South—Weston): Mr. Speaker, of all the nerve. Yesterday the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) tried to defend the indefensible. The king of patronage was trying to defend the Conservative record of patronage.

In the last election campaign, in his thirst for power, the Prime Minister was prepared to make any promise in order to secure political power. He promised the people of Canada that he would change the patronage system in Canada. Yesterday the Prime Minister said:

> Patronage appointments have been part of the Canadian political system since Confederation.

That is not what he told the people of Canada three and a half years ago. He hoodwinked the people of Canada. He tricked the people of Canada into believing that he would change things.

Once he came to power he proceeded to appoint every Tory hack, flack, and bagperson from one end of the country to the other. If you went to school with the Prime Minister, whether high school or university, you would get a political appointment.

The Prime Minister ought to be ashamed for hoodwinking the people of Canada three and a half years ago. They were fooled once, but they will not be fooled again.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

FISHERIES

CANADA-FRANCE DISPUTE—STATE OF RELATIONS

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask a question of the Secretary of State for External Affairs. We understand that he has been doing his best to downplay as much as possible the diplomatic storm between Canada and France.

Last Monday, in answer to a question in this House he went as far as to say, and I want to quote him precisely, that the negotiations on fisheries "have been continuing in an atmosphere of quite remarkable calm".

Since then I have been wondering where the Minister has been and who gave him the advice to stick his head in the sand.

Why have the Secretary of State for External Affairs and the Government allowed our relationship with France to deteriorate to such a level that France has withdrawn her Ambassador, and our own outgoing Ambassador and yet unelected Secretary of State had this to say:

> It is serious. If we don't take care it could be very serious.
> It is not a sport. We cannot go on like this—escalation must stop somewhere.

Perhaps the Secretary of State for External Affairs can try to square that with what he calls "calm negotiations".

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I was not sure that that question would end in time to allow me to answer in this Question Period.

I am happy to report to the House that the two negotiators in the fishery dispute, which is at the base of all of this, have been meeting today in Paris. They have had a very constructive and cordial meeting. They will be meeting again tonight and, if necessary, again tomorrow. As we have throughout the piece, if there are matters to report to the House, we will report them.

[Translation]

RELATIONS BETWEEN FRANCE AND CANADA—MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, the negotiators are meeting, but the atmosphere must be a stormy one.

Tuesday evening we were able to measure the extent to which relations between our two countries had cooled off when ex-Ambassador Bouchard gave a reception and none of the French ministers showed up. Canadians must have concluded that their ex-Ambassador's last tango in Paris was a solo affair.

I want to ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs what he intends to do to improve or rather to salvage relations between France and Canada before they deteriorate even further.

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I can only repeat what I said in English: The two negotiators have been meeting in a cordial atmosphere. It was a positive meeting. There will be another meeting this evening, and I intend to inform the House of any new developments with respect to meetings between my colleague, the Secretary of State, and the French Minister of Foreign Affairs and the French President this week, as the Hon. Member knows perfectly well.

• (1420)

UNFOLDING OF CRISIS—QUERY CONCERNING NEGOTIATIONS

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, the unelected Secretary of State seems to know no more about negotiations between the French and Canadian negotiators than the Secretary of State for External Affaires. He was quoted as saying: "Our two countries have certain plans and they will try to carry out those plans and explore what might be a new avenue for negotiations".

I would like to ask the Minister what this new avenue is. What is its central theme? And when can Canadians expect to see this crisis resolved?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I notice the Hon. Member referred to an unelected Minister. If I am not mistaken, he himself had a Leader, a Prime Minister who was not elected . . .

I want to make it clear to the Hon. Member that we had discussions today in Paris through our two negotiators. As we indicated in the House, discussions centred on finding a way to deal with the basic issue through negotiation.

THE CABINET

ETHICS

Hon. Jean Lapierre (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister and in fact concerns the unelected Secretary of State.

Since the Prime Minister said in front of Rideau Hall that the Secretary of State would be responsible for ethics, how can the Prime Minister justify the fact that in order to find a riding for the Minister, the Prime Minister's Office offered the Hon. Member for Chicoutimi a job with an annual salary of $75,000 for ten years, in other words three-quarters of a million dollars to buy the Minister a riding; that, according to rumours, a judgeship is being offered to the Hon. Member for Verchères; and that the Hon. Member for Langelier has put his seat on the auction block to get the Prime Minister's attention and maybe get a job as well? Is this the new ethics the Secretary of State wants to bring to Canada: Get in throught the backdoor of patronage?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, at the beginning of his question, the Hon. Member mentioned that the Prime Minister announced in front of Rideau Hall that the Secretary of State would be responsible for ethics. That is the first falsehood in his statement.

He starts his statement with a falsehood and finishes it with a falsehood. This has become his trade mark in this House. As a lawyer who is supposed to believe in the presumption of innocence, he is not enhancing his image. His behaviour has consistently been unworthy of this House and he is becoming a disgrace to the Parliament of Canada.

Oral Questions

PRIME MINISTER'S POSITION

Hon. Jean Lapierre (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, I have the feeling that I have hit on a sore subject with the Prime Minister.

[English]

Yesterday the Prime Minister was trying to say that there was no problem with his patronage appointments while at the same time his office is conducting a sleaze-bag operation to find a seat for the future Secretary of State.

Some Hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Speaker: I would ask the Hon. Member to restrain his language. I point out that historically this is not the first time that this particular way of bringing someone into the House of Commons has taken place. It has happened with both of the principal Parties in the history of our country.

[Translation]

Mr. Lapierre: Mr. Speaker, I ask the Prime Minister: Is this the new morality, using the taxpayers' money to find a seat for his friend from Paris?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, if I am not mistaken, he himself was co-chairman of the election campaign for someone who was not elected, Mr. Turner, who did not seek to become just a Member of Parliament or a Minister, but Prime Minister. You supported Mr. Turner's election as Prime Minister while he was still unelected. Prime Minister of Canada! he sat as Prime Minister without being elected. He was even Prime Minister and director of some Canadian corporations.

Now he is getting offended—you yourself had an unelected leader who, while he was Prime Minister of Canada, sat on the boards of the largest Canadian corporations. You are joking. You are misleading the House and that is why you are not taken seriously in Quebec.

SPACE DEVELOPMENT

CANADIAN PARTICIPATION IN SPACE PLATFORM PROJECT

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister in lieu of the Minister of State for Science and Technology who was here a moment ago. It concerns the announcement to be made today that Canada has agreed to participate with the United States and others in the space platform. The Prime Minister will know that the cost has escalated from $800 million to $1.2 billion and there is quite a bit of concern that this increase in cost will be at the expense of other scientific endeavours in the country. I have two preliminary questions.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, Oh!

Mr. Crosbie: Get to the point.

Mr. McCurdy: First, is there any provision in connection with this agreement to ensure that the cost will not go beyond $1.2 billion now estimated? And where will the extra $400 million over and above the original estimate come from?

Mr. Crosbie: From space.

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, both the Minister of Industry, Science and Technology and the Minister of State for Science and Technology are in the process of making this announcement. I think it is an announcement that all Canadians will welcome very much. It is a very positive announcement that will provide leading research and technical capability in the field of space for Canadians for future generations. I would hope the Hon. Member would applaud this initiative.

COST OF SPACE PROGRAM

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, there is going to be an awful lot of Canadian money in orbit and Canadians want to know where that money is going to come from. It was a Cabinet decision to participate. My question is directed to the Prime Minister who promised there would be an additional $1.3 billion spent for fundamental research principally in the universities. I would like the Prime Minister's assurance now that the additional money for the space program will not come from that $1.3 billion, and some indication of where in fact the additional money for the space program is going to come from.

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): Nuclear subs.

Mr. de Jong: Are they going to send them into space, too?

An Hon. Member: They are already in a black hole over there.

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): Will you go?

Mr. Hnatyshyn: A bunch of Gary Doers over there.

Mr. Mulroney: Well, there is the answer.

Mr. McCurdy: Well, it is clear, Mr. Speaker, that space has caused the entire caucus opposite to become spaced out, including the Prime Minister. We are not getting anything near a considered answer.

RESEARCH UNDERTAKEN IN UNIVERSITIES

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, I will repeat my question for the Prime Minister who made the promise. Is this to be another broken promise? Is the Prime Minister going to provide the $1.3 billion for the purposes for which he promised, or are we going to sneak some money away from the universities again for a project that, while everyone agrees is necessary, is in danger of affecting the entire Canadian scientific program?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I tried to answer my hon. friend a few seconds ago but I was prevented from doing so. I am happy to try again. We made the commitment in January at the National Conference on Science, Technology and Innovation in Toronto. Since that time I have had meetings with the Association of Canadian University Presidents. On Monday I chaired again a meeting of the National Advisory Board on Science and Technology.

This large increase of investment in science and technology will go the education route, in substantial measure. It will, with the blessing of the universities, go for the Canada Science Scholarships, which are a unique and important improvement in this area. There is a series of initiatives.

I should tell my hon. friend because this will please him, I think, that I met last Thursday at the University of Saskatchewan with leaders of the university research communities, the small and medium businessmen who interlock in the research and development field, all of whom expressed great satisfaction with the major commitment of the Government in the area of science and technology, plus the fact that much of this money is going to increase research at the universities. I know my hon. friend will want to applaud that initiative.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

LAY-OFFS AT MANITOBA CANADA PACKERS PLANT—NON-PAYMENT OF BENEFITS

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Employment and Immigration I address my question to the Prime Minister.

On March 28 I addressed a very serious problem to the then Minister of Employment and Immigration concerning the lay-off of 350 workers at the Canada Packers plant, and the fact that unemployment insurance was given to the salaried workers but denied to the workers who were being paid on an hourly basis or who belonged to the union. At that time the Minister said that the Government would take immediate action. It is now close to four weeks ago and absolutely no action has been taken.

Will the Prime Minister instruct his new Minister of Employment and Immigration to address immediately the serious inequity faced by those laid off workers at the Canada Packers plant, and ask for immediate redress so that they receive the same treatment as those who received salaries?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend raises a very important problem in regard to the employees at Canada Packers. I regret the absence of the Minister of Employment and Immigration from the House today. I will be in touch with her immediately to go through the matter raised by my hon. friend. I will report back to the House just as quickly as possible.

SITUATION OF OLDER WORKERS

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the Prime Minister's response. We will look forward within the next 24 to 36 hours for the action that he promises.

Along with the workers who are facing that inequity there are a number of older workers who are not being given any form of retirement benefits, even though the Government promised a similar type of program over a year ago. Has the Government now decided on a program for older workers? In particular, will that program be retroactive so that workers such as those at the Canada Packers plant who need early retirement benefits will be able to receive them because of the vacuum caused by the lack of government action in this very crucial area?

Hon. Pierre H. Cadieux (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I would like to inform my hon. colleague that, assuming that the old program which was instituted by the former Government was still in place, those workers would not be indemnified by that particular program since it dealt with only four particular sectors, not including Canada Packers.

As announced in the 1986 Budget the POWA initiative is being negotiated now. As a matter of fact, there are negotiations ongoing right now with the Province of Manitoba.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES FREE TRADE AGREEMENT—FINANCIAL INSTITUTION'S REFUSAL TO RENEW LOANS

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Right Hon. Prime Minister who will be sad to learn that the first victim of the trade deal has been identified. It is the Somer family of Kelowna, British Columbia, who a few days ago received from the financial institution with which they have been doing business for many, many years a letter that includes the following quote:

> If the Free Trade Agreement with the USA is implemented the grape industry in the Okanagan will be devastated. This is particularly unfortunate for your family—we have a responsibility to minimize risk in all loans we make.
> With this in mind, we are unable to renew your loans—

That letter is signed by the Branch Manager of one of the financial institutions in the Okanagan Valley.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Name the institution.

Mr. Riis: Since the Prime Minister identified that there would be compensation packages for those who are hurt by the deal, and considering that this family will now be wiped out before the deal is actually in place, will the Prime Minister explain just what the compensation package will be and when the actual details will be made known?

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the Hon. Member's question. I have some fair and considerable degree of understanding and sympathy for the particular individual. The Hon. Member should take satisfaction in the fact that I convened a meeting with provincial representatives and a cross-section of the total industry, including producers, the wineries and so on, as early as December 4. Task forces both in B.C. and Ontario have held meetings at least every other week. They have presented me with their reports. We are having a detailed look at them. We should be in a position very shortly to make some recommendations to the Government.

REQUEST FOR COMPENSATION PACKAGE

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister visited the interior of British Columbia last week. He will be interested to know that the individual involved in this case has indicated in a letter that his parents and himself will be losing their homes. His parents will be losing their retirement funds, and he will lose his job. He will lose his business, as well as his property. The employees that he employs will be laid off. In other words, he is going to lose everything that he and his family have worked for over many, many years in building up their vineyard in the Okanagan Valley.

I appreciate the Minister of Agriculture indicated that he is studying the matter and that he has received reports. This person's life is now about to come to an end in terms of providing for his family.

Can the Prime Minister be specific and indicate precisely when families such as the Somer family in the Okanagan Valley—and I am sure there are many others in the Okanagan Valley and other parts of Canada—will receive a specific compensation package as the Prime Minister promised?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend is quite right. I had the pleasure of spending time in British Columbia on Friday. In fact, I was in Kamloops where I passed on his warm regards to the voters.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: They never see him there.

Mr. Mulroney: They do not see him very often, Mr. Speaker.

My hon. friend raises a very serious matter. Unemployment is high in Kamloops, unacceptably high. When this Party was sworn in as a Government, unemployment in British Columbia was 15 per cent. We brought it down to 10 per cent province-wide, a decrease of one-third in three years. I think that is pretty good going. However, unemployment remains unacceptably high in Kamloops itself.

I had some excellent meetings with the Mayor of Kamloops and with other individuals. We agreed to examine proposals put forward to increase employment in Kamloops.

Mr. Riis: This guy wants to keep his farm. He does not want a job, he has a job.

Mr. Mulroney: My hon. friend raises the loss and the sadness in a given family, and I regret that a great deal. I will examine carefully the point that he raised.

I am really quite astonished by the letter from that financial institution. I would like to take a good look at it.

With regard to the dislocation, there is a committee established under the leadership of Jean de Grandpré which will be advising Parliament in regard to all new measures that should be taken. I ask my hon. friend to remember this. If there is dislocation in this particular family, and I regret it, he should also know that the Economic Council of Canada last week released a report which predicted 250,000 new jobs in Canada—

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Riis: This guy has lost his farm as of today.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

PRESENCE IN THE GALLERY OF UNITED STATES SECRETARY OF THE TREASURY

Mr. Speaker: I wish to draw to the attention of Hon. Members the presence in the gallery of the Hon. James A. Baker, United States Secretary of the Treasury.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES FREE TRADE AGREEMENT—SITUATION OF OKANAGAN FAMILY

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, the Government announced its trade deal with the United States last October.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): Why after so many months is the Prime Minister unable to say in this House today exactly what it is going to do for the Somer family which will clearly lose its farm, its livelihood, and its well-being because of the Government's trade deal? After all the time he has had why can the Prime Minister not give a clear, definite, helpful, and meaningful answer today?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend knows full well that with respect to an individual case having been raised I am incapable of responding directly to how that might take place in six months or a year. It is an individual case, and I will work with the Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap in regard to that individual case.

If the Hon. Member wants to deal with substantial issues, he should look at the one million new jobs that have been created and the 250,000 new ones that will be created under the free trade deal, including the 30,000 new jobs that will be created in British Columbia alone over and above the important job-creation statistics that are ongoing in Canada. He should be pleased and celebrating that great fact here in Canada.

• (1440)

ECONOMIC COUNCIL'S REPORT

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, the Economic Council Report that he cited in his earlier response suggested that there would be far fewer jobs than the number he suggested, and I suggest that will continue.

That same report said that there had to be an adjustment program now to help those it admitted would be hurt by the Government's free trade deal.

Why has the Government failed to act on the advice of the very body it cites in support of its program? What is the use of talking about new jobs when it cannot point to the new jobs that it is going to give to even one family that will be hurt by the Government's trade deal?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, the very report that the hon. gentleman refers to was very positive and very supportive of the free trade agreement.

I am sure all Members in the House will be delighted today to see that Ontario Hydro in its assessment of the deal states: "free trade will be a boon to at least the six largest electricity consuming industries in the province", and "the proposed pact will add a further 3 per cent to gross provincial product" in Ontario "over the next decade".

That is a very positive assessment by Ontario Hydro right in the central province of Canada. Why does the hon. gentleman not open his eyes, and not just concentrate on the negative? The positives far outweigh the negative effects of this arrangement.

TAX REFORM

ONTARIO BUDGET—TAX INCREASES

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Minister of Finance. I am sure the Minister is aware that yesterday the Government of Ontario raised provincial sales and personal income taxes. This follows a disturbing trend set by Saskatchewan, New Brunswick, and Prince Edward Island. All of these provincial Governments have, in the last few months, increased the sales and personal taxes of Canadians. Obviously, the Minister has failed to obtain consensus and co-operation from the provinces in regard to tax reform.

My question to the Minister is the following. Why did the Minister fail to anticipate this provincial tax grab, and why did he not secure provincial co-operation when he introduced tax reform?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I do not think it will come as any surprise to the Hon. Member if I say that I am quite disappointed in the actions of the Ontario Government in its Budget yesterday. I think that this goes contrary to the direction that we have set out in tax reform where we are trying to get tax rates down for Canadians right across the board. This runs counter to that.

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): That's why it's not going to work.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): If the Hon. Member wishes to look behind the reasons for this, he will find that the reason for the tax increase is the very high level of government spending in the Province of Ontario. It has been running at 9.5 per cent for four years now.

I should remind the Hon. Member that if Governments would follow the same course of action that his Party recommends of increasing spending successively year in and year out, that is the sort of response that we are going to see.

EFFECT OF PROVINCIAL ACTIONS

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Minister of Finance. Hopefully, the Minister of Finance will also be in touch with Gary Lane, his colleague and friend in the Province of Saskatchewan. Because of his tax reform and what the Minister of Finance in Saskatchewan has done, the people of Saskatchewan are paying $22 million more in personal taxes. Obviously, Ontario residents face a net loss of some $286 million in tax savings.

Will the Minister not admit today that he has failed in providing Canadians with fair tax reform? Will the Minister tell the House if he has been in contact with provincial Finance Ministers? If not, will he do so immediately and use his influence to find a solution to this disastrous situation? Canadian taxpayers are paying more and more every day.

Mr. Crosbie: Take it up with the provinces.

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): That's why your tax policy is not going to work. We have provinces.

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I do not know what more I can add to the question that the Hon. Member has put to me. The Hon. Member should look at the province next door to him which has been labouring under the burden of an NDP Government for a number of years. Last year there was a tax hit comparable to what we saw yesterday in the Province of Ontario, a tax hit that was unprecedented.

The type of thing that we have to be cautious about in government is to control government spending; keep the rate of growth of government spending under reasonable control, as we have in the federal Government where government spending has grown at a rate of approximately 4 per cent per annum for the period of time that we have been in office. It is that type of spending discipline which is the answer to the questions that the Hon. Member is posing. That is how we can get taxes down.

FINANCE

FLOW-THROUGH SHARES—IMPORTANCE OF MAINTAINING INTEGRITY OF REGIME

Mr. Gabriel Desjardins (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance and concerns flow-through shares, which are such an important issue for the Abitibi-Témiscamingue region. After his tax reform was tabled, the Minister of Finance said many times that he would monitor developments in the mining exploration industry very closely and that he would make the necessary changes as required.

Given the poor prospects for mineral exploration, the many consultations that the Department of Finance has had with the industry and various socio-economic interest groups and the many contradictory rumours going around the country, can the Minister tell the House today whether the consultations are over and whether he is considering the possibility of maintaining the present flow-through share regime at 133 1/3 per cent after June 30, 1988; does he intend to make an announcement in the coming days?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I would first of all like to say that we have had many meetings with members of the industry and also members of Parliament for northern Canada and Quebec, my friend, the Hon. Member for Témiscamingue, and also others in the Province of Ontario. We had meetings to discuss the situation in the industry now, the situation after the stock market crash, after October 19, 1987, and I wish to say today that it will be possible in a few weeks to have a decision to rectify the situation. I realize that the situation is very important for my friend, the Hon. Member for Témiscamingue.

GOVERNMENT APPOINTMENTS

PRIME MINISTER'S ADDRESS TO NEWSPAPER PUBLISHERS' ASSOCIATION

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the king of patronage, the Prime Minister—

Some Hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member will put his question.

Mr. Boudria: Yesterday, in making his "I don't get no respect" statement, the Prime Minister complained that the media pay too much attention to the wrong appointments, and that people forgot too quickly that the Prime Minister had appointed an Acadian and a francophone woman.

Does this mean that the Prime Minister now approves and still approves of the appointment of Jean Sirois, that he still likes Pierre Hardy's nomination, that he likes Gayle Christie's nomination to the board of directors of Air Canada, and that he likes the appointment of the two sons of the Minister for International Trade? Does he not at least repent for the appointment of Dalton Camp?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I would hope that my hon. friend would take the time to read the entire remarks yesterday, because I think that he might be interested in some of the facts. For example, when we became a Government, and I think that my hon. friend would applaud this, 15 per cent of the appointments of the Government of Canada to agencies, boards, and commissions were women. We have increased that in three years to 30.9 per cent, a 100 per cent increase.

Mr. Nunziata: What about all your university buddies? What about all your friends?

Mr. Mulroney: We have increased the number of women to federal court positions by 59 per cent in three years, including the Supreme Court of Canada.

Mr. Nunziata: You are full of it.

Mr. Mulroney: When I became Prime Minister there were two women ambassadors in the federal Public Service.

Mr. Nunziata: You hoodwinked the people of Canada. You lied to them. You are lying.

Mr. Mulroney: There are now—

• (1450)

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member will please withdraw the comment that I just heard.

Mr. Nunziata: I so do, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: I thank the Hon. Member.

Mr. Mulroney: Because my hon. friend raises an important question, the use of the appointment power to deal with minorities and to improve affirmative action for women, for example, which I have tried to do, my hon. friend will be happy to know that, when I became Prime Minister, I believe there were two or perhaps three women at the Deputy Minister rank; there are now 12 or 13, so there have been very important increases.

For example, I had the honour of appointing most recently a black as the first Public Service Commissioner in Ottawa, preceded by the appointment of a black as the Lieutenant-Governor of Ontario for the first time in history. This is very important for the nation. It is very important that these ladies and gentlemen of distinction across Canada be honoured, and this is one appropriate and, I think, effective use of the appointment procedures we have followed since we formed the Government. I know that my hon. friend would want to comment on that favourably.

LUCIEN BOUCHARD

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, I want to remind the Prime Minister of what he said on May 24, 1983: "There will be jobs for Liberals and NDPs too after I have been in power for 15 years and I can't find a living, breathing Tory left to appoint". Those are the facts that I want to bring to the attention of the Prime Minister.

[Translation]

I would like to ask the Prime Minister how dare he take the information media to task while at the same time resorting to every known patronage scheme to find a seat for his friend Lucien Bouchard?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, indeed my hon. friend will allow me to make a few comments in French concerning this opportunity for appointments. In certain cases the federal Government has the power to make appointments. Within three years we doubled the number of women appointed to federal commissions and agencies, and I should think that is significant progress for the House and Canada as a whole. We appointed women to the Supreme Court. Listen, when I was sworn in as Prime Minister there were, if I am not mistaken, two women in ambassadorial posts here in Canada, and there are now 12 or 13. There were two or three deputy ministers, now there are 12 or 13. I had the honour to appoint a woman to the Supreme Court of Canada, and a black as Lieutenant-Governor of Ontario. Those were important appointments for the country which I think the Hon. Member ought to praise rather than criticize.

AIR TRANSPORT

TRANSPORTATION OF PLUTONIUM BY AIR ACROSS ARCTIC

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport. When Cosmos 954 crashed in northern Canada 10 years ago, only five grams or one-tenth of one per cent of the deadly radioactive U-235 cargo was recovered. Two U.S. military bombers have crashed carrying plutonium, and when plutonium was released in Greenland 20 years ago, the clean-up cost $300 million. When plutonium was similarly released in Palmares, Spain, the clean-up cost $500 million.

What steps has the Minister of Transport taken to evaluate the safety of an emergency landing or the impact of an accident on northern Canada from the plutonium overflights of the Arctic by Japan which can begin next Monday?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, it is interesting to note that the nature of the Hon. Member's question has been changed and that he is keeping up with the facts. His concern when he first raised this issue in the House was that there would be overflights over Canada. This Government took that concern very seriously, entered into discussions with Japan and the United States, and the agreement now is, as the Hon. Member will know, that if there is to be carriage of plutonium by air, it will not be over Canadian air space. We have secured that protection for Canadians.

The Hon. Member raises another important question that we are continuing to look into and will be discussing with the Governments of Japan and the United States, but I think it is time, for once in this House, that he give this Government credit for acting on an important concern and achieving results.

Oral Questions

PLUTONIUM CONTAINERS

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Minister of the Environment. I have lived on the B.C. coast my whole life and have watched garbage dumped by Japan outside its territorial waters washing on to the coast of British Columbia for the past 20 years.

Since the safety containers for the transport of plutonium have failed the safety tests and no impact assessment has been done or filed, will the Minister of the Environment at least assure Canadians that a complete existing radioactive profile of the North will be conducted so that, should an accident occur, we will at least have a basis on which to perform the clean-up? If there is an accident, it is quite clear that that plutonium can and likely will enter Canadian territory.

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I want to say this as gently as I can. The Hon. Member should adopt the practice of telling the whole truth in the House rather than being as selective as he is being. He should also resist the temptation to indulge in Japan bashing or in an attack upon other countries. That is not at all constructive.

I have told the Hon. Member that we are looking at all of the implications of potential flights through space that will not involve Canadian air space. The other point the House should know is that if plutonium is to be moved following current practices, by sea, that plutonium is subject to hijacking, subject to uses that can be extremely dangerous, not only to all Canadians but to—

Mr. Fulton: Planes are never hijacked, eh?

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): —but to all of mankind. The Hon. Member asks if planes are never hijacked. The incidence of hijacking of cargo planes which are in question here is virtually zero. The Hon. Member knows that. He should stop trying to create false fears among Canadians.

MINORITIES

ASSIMILATION OF FRANSASKOIS—PRIME MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Right Hon. Prime Minister.

According to StatsCan data released yesterday, there has been a net regression in French outside Quebec, and if we read the information carefully, the fast rate of assimilation of a major group in our country makes it an endangered species.

I would like to ask the Prime Minister, considering the promise by the Premier of Saskatchewan to make Saskatchewan fully bilingual in fifteen years, how are we to reconcile the Premier's rather optimistic promise with this threat of assimilation?

How can he endorse and congratulate the Premier of Saskatchewan who is trying to evade the issue by having us believe that in fifteen years, Saskatchewan will be bilingual, although we know perfectly well that once there are no more Francophones in Saskatchewan, there is no way the province could be made bilingual?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member's question concerns two issues. First of all, there is the Supreme Court's decision, and I have made it clear what my position and that of the Government was in this respect. I think it is substantially that taken by the Hon. Member. The first item is the Supreme Court's decision.

The second is the future of the Fransaskois. I think that for the first time, the Government of a Western province has said fairly and squarely that it intends to make a province that is now officially unilingual into a bilingual province sometime in the future, by taking concrete action.

As Prime Minister of Canada, I feel I must congratulate the Leader of this government and be prepared to co-operate with him in order to implement this new initiative intended to help the Fransaskois who, like other language minorities across this country, have been left to their own resources for nearly 90 years. I think we all have work to do at both levels, and perhaps at a third level as well, to help this language minority in Saskatchewan, and to protect its rights and enhance its prospects for the future.

DEMANDS OF FRANSASKOIS—PRIME MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, the Fransaskois are not asking for the moon. Yesterday, they published their main demands, and I quote:

First, that the main documents of the Legislative Assembly be bilingual; second, that the laws passed in future—and I do mean the future, not old laws—be in both official languages; third, that French can be used in our courts—this seems an essential right to me—and fourth, the creation of an office of francophone affairs.

Is the Prime Minister in favour of, or in principle in agreement with, these very basic, essential demands? Is he prepared to put this into practice and support the Fransaskois in their demands that the province act today, not in 15 years, to show some respect to minority groups?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): But, Mr. Speaker, I find the recommendations published yesterday fitting and appropriate. And I am doing my best with the Association des fransaskois and the Saskatchewan government to implement as many of them as possible for this linguistic minority.

The problem arises from the fact that this House has not cooperated on behalf of this minority for decades. There was complete silence from successive governments, leaving this francophone minority . . .

Some Hon. Members: . . . he's a dinosaur!

Mr. Mulroney: . . . speaking of dinosaurs, . . . but it was mostly a Liberal government that was in power here in Ottawa, and unfortunately, as the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier knows, successive governments here . . .

AUTOMOTIVE INDUSTRY

CLOSURE OF AUTO PARTS PLANT IN WINDSOR

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, Birla auto parts plant in Windsor has just been closed by its creditors, throwing 152 people out of work. A major cause, we have been told by officials of the Federal Business Development Bank, is the 10-cent increase in the value of the dollar over the last year.

Is the Minister of Finance finally prepared to admit that the increase in interest rates has been responsible for that increase in the value of our dollar and has killed this plant and thrown 152 people out of work?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I think the Hon. Member is drawing a very narrow conclusion about the cause of this situation. I have a good deal of sympathy for the people who work at that plant but if I were to be honest with them I would have to say that if that operation cannot make money with the dollar at the current level, there are other things wrong with it.

We have lived for a few years now with a dollar that was somewhat undervalued. That gave a new lease on life for some of those companies that were probably not competitive. However, we believe the level of the Canadian dollar reflects the strength of the Canadian economy and the increased level of activity here.

I should point out to the Hon. Member that in each of the last three or four months our trade surplus has increased so that we are demonstrating in a broad sense an ability to deal quite effectively with the level of the Canadian dollar at the position it is today.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I would ask the Deputy Government House Leader to make a statement about the business he intends to call for the coming week. If he is not ready to do that, I will be happy to ask the Deputy Prime Minister to do so on his behalf.

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of State and Minister of State (Treasury Board)): Mr. Speaker, this afternoon we will continue debate on Bill C-117, amendments to the Excise Tax Act. Tomorrow we expect to resume debate at second reading on Bill C-118 assuming we do not finish Bill C-117 today. Following that will be Bill C-110, the Trade Tribunal Act.

On Monday and through the rest of next week we will be dealing with Bill C-77, the Emergencies Act, C-74, the Environmental Protection Act, and possibly later on in the week, Bill C-103, the Atlantic Opportunities Agency.

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed from Tuesday, April 19, consideration of the motion of Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre) that Bill C-117, an Act to amend the Excise Tax Act and the Excise Act, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Finance and Economic Affairs.

Mr. John Gormley (The Battlefords—Meadow Lake): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate this opportunity as a western Canadian to say a few words this afternoon about this Bill. While it is an Act to amend the Excise Tax Act and the Excise Act, in short a Bill to impose certain taxes, it is of significant importance to farmers across Canada, particularly many in western Canada.

There are a number of changes in this Bill, among which is an increase in the price of gasoline of 1 cent a litre. As Members will know, that increase took effect on April 1 despite the fact that this Bill had not been passed. However, until the Bill is passed the Government cannot rebate the 1 cent a litre tax on gasoline to prairie farmers.

Obviously a lot of us are very concerned about the small vendors who will sell gasoline products to farmers without charging the tax and then have to apply to Revenue Canada to get the rebate back to the dealer. We are similarly concerned about farmers who buy from very small retail dealers where the farmers apply for the rebate. The Bill is still in the House, it has not been sent to committee, and these small dealers are unable to claim the 1 cent rebate.

In western Canada it is a little drier than it usually is at this time of year and many farmers are making their plans for spring seeding. In fact, in many areas of the prairies, farmers are already actively working the land. This is a time when they consume a great deal of fuel. It is of significant concern to a lot of farmers that they must await passage of this Bill before they can claim their rebate.

I know that while this Bill contains certain tax increases, and no Member of Parliament ever likes to argue in favour of tax increases, we do acknowledge that many of the revenue-raising measures will fund reductions in personal income taxes and the increase in the child care tax credit which is part of tax reform. We see those tax increases as having some social value.

However, that brings us back to the concern I raised. I am very concerned on behalf of prairie farmers that because of the prolonged debate on this Bill their rebates are being delayed. I do not think that is acceptable, and for that reason I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Edmonton South (Mr. Edwards) that:

The question be now put.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. John Nunziata (York South—Weston): Madam Speaker, needless to say the Official Opposition is somewhat surprised at the move by the Hon. Member. He purports to move the motion because of his concern about the rebate of the excise tax which went into effect on April 1, 1988. Perhaps he has not taken the opportunity to read the legislation, so I will remind him that if you do not increase the tax there is no necessity to give a rebate.

Mr. Gormley: It took effect on April 1.

Mr. Nunziata: You cannot speak out of both sides of your mouth. The Hon. Member says that these tax increases have social value. He went on to say that they have social merit. How strange for him to be making those comments about a Bill amending the Excise Tax Act, especially in view of the comments made by certain members of his Party prior to the last election.

• (1510)

We all remember that during that particular election campaign, the Finance Minister (Mr. Wilson) made certain comments and certain promises. I would like to remind you, Madam Speaker, Hon. Members in the House, and indeed all Canadians, of some of the comments made by the Finance Minister, the Member for Etobicoke Centre, and some comments made by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) himself.

For example, on March 6, 1984, when he was on this side of the House, the Finance Minister said:

We will reduce spending. We will refrain from increasing taxes, which are already too high.

This was a promise made by the Hon. Member for Etobicoke Centre as a representative of the Conservative Party. He promised the people of Canada that a Conservative Government would not increase taxes because taxes were already too high. What did the Conservative Government do from the moment it took office? Well, time is too short this afternoon to list all the taxes that have been implemented by the Government, but I would like to mention just a few.

In the February 1987 Budget there was a 12 per cent increase on snack foods and ice cream effective July 1, 1987. There was a 4 per cent increase in tax on cigarettes and tobacco effective February 19, 1987. There was a $4 per ticket increase in tax on air transport effective May 1, 1987, and August 1, 1987. There was an increase in sales tax on leaded and unleaded gasoline effective April 1, April Fool's Day, 1987. That was his February Budget, and we all remember that he said, "We will not raise taxes".

Let us look at some other tax measures implemented by the Government through the Minister of Finance, the June and December 1987 tax reforms. What did the Government do in those particular measures? There was a 10 per cent tax imposed on long distance telephone calls. When Canadians are paying their telephone bills and see that there is a 10 per cent tax, they should be reminded that this tax was introduced by the man who told Canadians that they were already paying too much in taxes, the guy who promised that he would not increase taxes.

Not only did he implement that tax in the June and December 1987 tax reform measures, he also increased the tax on paint and wallpaper from 8 per cent to 12 per cent. He increased the tax on alcohol and tobacco from 15 per cent to 18 per cent.

I am not criticizing the fact that Governments must at times raise taxes in order to meet expenditures. That is understandable as long as there is fairness and equity and the burden is equally shared among all segments of society. However, we on this side of the House take great exception to the fact that Members opposite seem to be speaking out of both sides of their mouths. What they say depends on whether they are in Government or in Opposition, whether they are speaking to a group in Ontario or a group in Prince Edward Island, or whether it is during an election campaign or it is said as Minister of Finance.

Let us look at another tax initiative introduced by the Minister of Finance. In the February 1988 Budget, he increased excise tax on motor fuels by 1 cent per litre. The list goes on, Madam Speaker, notwithstanding the Minister's promise not to increase taxes.

That was the Finance Minister. What did the Prime Minister have to say a few short years ago? On November 29, 1984, the Prime Minister said:

Canadians pay a good deal of money for government services and feel that they are already paying quite enough.

That was a fair comment by the Prime Minister three and a half years ago. If he meant what he said on November 29, 1984—although his actions and those of his Government suggest that perhaps he did not really mean what he said—why did he allow his Finance Minister to introduce three or four Budgets resulting in substantial tax increases which hit low and middle-income earners more than higher income earners and corporations?

They made promises and they broke promises. These were not the only promises that the Prime Minister and the Minister of Finance made during that election campaign. We all know of the many promises they made and the many promises they have broken. During the election campaign three and a half years ago they also promised to share the tax burden across the board and reduce personal income tax. Let us examine the record of the Government vis-à-vis its Budgets over the last three and a half years and the increase in taxation.

In terms of budget revenues, from fiscal year 1984-85 to fiscal year 1988-89 personal income taxes were increased by a total of $15.1 billion, a 55 per cent increase. Compare that, if you will, to the increase in the corporate income tax. In fiscal year 1984-85 the increase was $9.4 billion, and in fiscal year 1988-89 it will be $12 billion, an increase of 28 per cent or $2.6 billion. A 28 per cent increase in corporate income taxes and a 55 per cent increase in personal income taxes hardly seems fair, not only because of the promises made by the Government during the election campaign, but also because of comments made by the Government throughout the last three and a half years. One questions the fairness and equity in increasing personal income taxes by 55 per cent and increasing corporate taxes by only 28 per cent. One can see from these figures that the increases have not been fair across the board.

In moving his motion the Member indicated that the excise tax increase on gasoline which went into effect on April 1, 1988, was of social value and social merit. The reason for moving his motion was to allow the rebate to be made to the farmers in western Canada more quickly. However, he does not tell the farmers in western Canada that the rebate is only given because of the tax increase itself. If he was truly concerned about the farmers in western Canada he would not vote for this particular measure which increases the tax not only on gasoline but on a number of other products and goods.

As I indicated, Bill C-117, an Act to amend the Excise Tax Act and the Excise Act is a rather lengthy Bill of 70 or 80 pages which contains a number of measures which would give lawful authority to some of the tax measures which were announced in the 1987 and 1988 Budgets and in the tax reform Ways and Means motions of June and December, 1987. Most of the main revenue- raising items in this piece of legislation have already been implemented, with the exception of one or two items. These revenue-raising items are some of the tools used by the Government to create its smoke and mirrors illusion. We know that during the election campaign the Conservative Party promised the people of Canada that they would reduce the deficit. That is fair enough, but one would have hoped and expected that the Government would have decreased the deficit by honest means.

I submit that it has used the smoke and mirrors illusion to lead the Canadians into believing that the deficit has in fact been decreased. The fact is that it has used certain measures not only at the expense of the average Canadian's wallet, but has used certain accounting techniques to reduce the deficit simply on paper.

I want to talk very briefly about the acceleration of federal excise and tax remittances and the manufacturers' sales tax. The Government has used the acceleration of federal sales tax and excise tax remittances as a method to have people believe that the $29.3 billion deficit the Government has been speaking about is lower than it actually is.

It bears repeating that one of the ways this illusion was created was with the use of accounting tricks such as the acceleration of federal sales and excise tax remittances. Canadian employers, who must deduct income tax, unemployment insurance premiums and Canada Pension Plan contributions from their employees and remit these deductions to the Government, have been required to do this more often since 1987. In effect, rather than remitting the federal income tax, Canada Pension Plan contribution and unemployment insurance contribution once a month, the Government has required the employers in Canada to remit them more often. In effect, it is getting money a little earlier than it otherwise would have received it and thereby affecting the cash flow of a lot of small businesses across the country. It does not represent an actual decrease in the deficit but is a trick to lead Canadians into believing the deficit is that much lower. It is only delaying an increase in the deficit.

In January, 1987, employers were remitting once a month. Now they are remitting twice a month. This gave the Government a one time only increase in revenue of $1.6 billion.

The Government then told employers to remit the deductions weekly, resulting in another increase in revenue for the Government. Due to the fact that the payroll deductions based on the new tax rates will not begin until July this year, the Government gives itself a six-month interest-free loan for this year, amounting to about $1 billion. That is another trick used by the Government to have Canadians believe the deficit is lower than it actually is.

The manufacturers' sales tax was dubbed by the Hon. Member for Etobicoke Centre, the Minister of Finance, as "the silent killer of jobs". Between October 1, 1984, and April 1, 1986, this tax increased from 9 per cent to 12 per cent because of his tax measures, notwithstanding the concerns he expressed when he was a member of the Opposition. This particular tax increase resulted in a $3 billion gain to the Government.

Manufacturers, too, are being required to remit this tax earlier, sometimes even before they have collected the tax from sales.

The Government continues to tinker with this tax, apply it to more goods, broaden the base, and increase the rates. Evidently, this will continue because the national sales tax with which the Government was going to replace it will not be presented before the next election.

The Government said in 1984 that it would not raise taxes, but it has proceeded to do so. Canadians take great exception to the fact that these tax increases have not been fair across the board. We all remember the first Budget that was handed down by the Minister of Finance in the spring of 1985, shortly after the election campaign. That was the Budget in which the Government tried to deindex senior citizens' pensions.

Who will forget the election campaign in the summer of 1984 when the Prime Minister referred to senior citizens' pensions as "a sacred trust"?

Canadians took him at his word, but when he came to office and the Minister of Finance brought down his first Budget, he tried to deindex senior citizens' pensions. The Government tried to reduce the deficit on the backs of senior citizens in Canada, thousands of whom are at or near the poverty line. The House will recall that in the very same Budget the Government gave a $500,000 capital gains exemption to the wealthy in society. In effect, it was a pure out and out gift of $125,000 to the wealthy in society.

Mr. Boudria: To their friends.

Mr. Nunziata: To the Bay Street boys who support the Prime Minister.

I have outlined some of the income tax increases implemented by the Government. It has also used a number of other tricks to try to reduce the deficit. If it were not for the Opposition in the House of Commons and senior citizens from one coast to the other, that measure to deindex senior citizens' pensions would have been implemented. Because of the Opposition, the Minister of Finance and the Government were forced to back down. However, they did not back down from the deindexing of family allowances, personal credits and income tax tables. The Government proceeded with those measures by tricking Canadians. Rather than increasing taxes directly in this regard, it raised $635 million by deindexing some measures that Canadians have had as part of their income tax system for a number of years. These were measures that were meant to protect Canadian taxpayers from the ravages of inflation.

Other measures introduced by the Government include the elimination of the tax abatement, effective January 1, 1986, which was intended to raise $650 million. There was the elimination of the Registered Home Ownership Savings Plan, which was a very successful plan that was implemented by the previous Liberal administration. That plan was used by thousands of Canadians in order to assist them in purchasing their first home. It was obliterated by the Government, effective May 27, 1985. By so doing, it saved $105 million.

The Government also put a temporary surtax on high-income earners of 5 per cent and 10 per cent, effective July 1, 1985, to December 31, 1986. However, it slapped on top of that a permanent 3 per cent surtax on all taxpayers, including low-income earners.

It also implemented changes in the tax treatment of dividend income. Those tax changes were effective January 1, 1986. It also changed spousal exemptions, which took effect January 1, 1986, to save the Government $20 billion.

In closing let me say that the Government has been somewhat less than forthright and honest with the people of Canada. As I indicated, promises were made and promises were broken. We in the Opposition have attempted to remind Canadians of those broken promises by the Prime Minister and the Minister of Finance with regard to taxation. It seems to me it is not too much to ask of politicians to follow through on their promises, although it might be too much to ask of Conservative politicians.

• (1530)

Mr. de Jong: Madam Speaker, it was with interest that I listened to the comments of the Hon. Member for York South—Weston (Mr. Nunziata). Indeed, the Member made some excellent points in this debate, especially in relation to the aggressiveness of the sales tax and how the Conservative Party, since being elected in 1984, has increased the tax burden on average Canadian families, particularly the middle and lower income earners.

I was dismayed, however, with respect to the Budget introduced last night in Queen's Park. I would have thought that the Liberal Party in Ontario would at least sing from the same hymn book as the Liberal Party in the House of Commons. The Liberal Party in Ontario has increased the sales tax by 1 per cent, from 7 per cent to 8 per cent. It also increased income tax by one point with another point increase next year.

The Ontario taxpayer would have been paying $450 million less because of the tax reform proposals. Now it will only be saving $164 million. What we are finding is that the provinces have been increasing their taxes, the tax rates have been going up, while the federal tax rate has in fact gone down because of tax reform, but at the same time the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) reduced the federal tax rates, he made up for it by increasing the sales tax. Now the provinces are increasing their part of the income tax rate as well as increasing their sales tax, so really what is happening is the poor taxpayers caught between provincial Finance Ministers and the federal Minister of Finance are being picked clean. I wonder if the Hon. Member would want to comment on what happened in Ontario last night.

Mr. Nunziata: I would be pleased to comment, Madam Speaker. As the Hon. Member knows, all the provinces in Canada are suffering as a result of the tax measures introduced by this Government. Provincial governments have found themselves in the last several years with less revenue from the federal Government under the Established Programs Financing Act. This federal Government has reduced the transfer payments which would otherwise have gone to the provinces, including Ontario, which was especially hard hit by these drastic decreases in federal transfer payments for education and health care.

Billions and billions of dollars have not been transferred to the provinces because of the Government's tax measures, so the Province of Ontario was put in a position where it had to increase certain taxes. I would certainly ask the Hon. Member to understand some of the reasons certain tax measures were necessary in the Province of Ontario and also to examine that particular Budget as a package to see how the Government of Ontario has effectively assisted those low and middle income earners, more so than the wealthier in society.

The Hon. Member also has to consider some of the expenditures announced in that particular Budget. For example, I am sure he agrees with the increase of $300 million for education in the Province of Ontario. When one looks at the tax measures introduced in the Budget, one also has to look at the expenditures. It would be my respectful submission that the Budget handed down by the Treasurer of the Province of Ontario is a fair and equitable Budget, unlike the Budgets handed down by this Government.

Mr. Boudria: Madam Speaker, first, I want to congratulate the Hon. Member for York South—Weston (Mr. Nunziata) for having made a very thoughtful and well reasoned speech in the House of Commons today. The Member will know, as I do, that the free trade agreement has been well advertised by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) as having one very worthwhile redeeming feature, if nothing else was good about it. According to the Prime Minister, this particular free trade agreement would result in lower tariffs. Therefore, when Canadians purchase goods made in the United States of America, presumably these goods would be cheaper. However, the last Budget brought down by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), supported by his Prime Minister, presented to Canadians an increase in the price of gasoline. There was an equal reduction in the amount of revenues generated by tariffs on products imported into Canada. That leads me to believe that in fact what we have done is increased the price of gasoline to pay for the reduction of tariffs.

Would my colleague not agree that that being the case, this so-called free trade deal can be considered anything but free, particularly because what we have allegedly saved in the right hand we will now be paying out from the left hand? Is it not a little less than honest of the Government to pretend that Canadians will be saving money because of free trade when such is not the case?

Mr. Nunziata: Madam Speaker, there is no doubt at all that Canadians will be made to pay for the so-called free trade agreement. As my colleague pointed out, it is really not a "free" trade agreement. Canadians are receiving nothing for free. They in fact will have to pay for this pet project of the Prime Minister, if ever this particular agreement is ratified by Parliament.

It was hidden in the last Budget handed down by the federal Government. It was not something the Minister of Finance stood up and spoke about. It was tucked away in the many documents given to us when the budget was handed down. Tucked away was the fact that lower tariffs would result in lower revenues for the Government. Just by some strange coincidence, or what might appear to be a strange coincidence, the amount of dollars the Canadian Government would not receive because of the reduction in tariffs happens to be exactly the same amount Canadians would be asked to pay through the increase in the price of gasoline. That might appear to some to be coincidental, but I am sure the Minister of Finance and his colleagues sat around the cabinet table and asked themselves: "We are not going to get as much money as we otherwise might get without free trade. It is going to cost us. Let's stick it to Canadians through the Excise Tax Act by increasing the price of gasoline".

I hope the Hon. Member for The Battlefords—Meadow Lake will remind his constituents, his farmers, that it is because of the free trade agreement that the excise tax on gasoline has increased. Had it not been for the free trade agreement with the United States, this particular tax increase might not have been necessary, in which case there would be no need to provide a rebate.

In reply to the question put by my hon. colleague, the Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell (Mr. Boudria), who always asks direct and forthright questions, yes, the bottom line is that this particular Bill, Bill C-117, which provides amendments to the Excise Tax Act and the Excise Act, has some ramifications so far as the free trade agreement with the United States is concerned.

• (1540)

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina East): Madam Speaker, I too wish to participate in this debate this afternoon. The Hon. Member for The Battlefords—Meadow Lake (Mr. Gormley) has introduced a motion which states that the question be now put with respect to Bill C-117. This certainly gives me another opportunity to make some comments on the Bill.

When I think of all the manoeuvres taken by the present Conservative Government in the area of taxation, Bill C-117 clearly indicates the record of the Government. In many ways the Conservative Party and its Government make claims that they have reduced the taxes of large numbers of Canadians through tax reform, a piece of legislation which we have yet to see. The fact is that many of those dollars that Canadians will get back in terms of reduced tax rates because of tax reform the Government has already taken back through increasing the sales tax.

To unscrupulous politicians the sales tax is a beautiful tax. It is a tax that is hardly noticed. It is the nickel and diming tax. It is the tax that one pays every time one buys a chocolate bar. So many cents go to the federal Government because of the federal sales tax that the Conservative Party slapped on kids' chocolate bars, soft drinks and popsicles. Every time they go to the corner store to spend part of their allowance on a popsicle they, too, will be helping to reduce the national deficit so to speak. They, too, will be paying part of their allowance to the federal Treasury in terms of taxes on popsicles, soft drinks, chocolate bars and ice cream cones.

People who have pets will be contributing to the national coffers when they go to buy pet food or kitty litter. The Government has imposed as well a sales tax on cat food, dog food, canary feed, cat litter and so forth. The kid who goes out to buy himself or herself a kite or a model airplane will be contributing to the national coffers since the Government has decided to tax those items as well.

Those who live in rural and remote communities and who have to place long distance telephone calls to their friends or family in the town next to them will also be paying new taxes, thus adding to the federal coffers. One move the Government has taken is with respect to slapping on a 10 per cent tax on communications. I will have more to say about that later on in my speech.

What we have is a Government that on the one hand is claiming to have reduced personal income tax rates while on the other because of tax reform, it is taking almost all of that back as a result of increasing the sales tax, the hidden tax, the sneaky tax as I call it.

Even the claim that the Government has made that it has reduced income taxes on the vast majority of Canadians is something that also has to be taken into context. When we compare what those Canadians will be paying after tax reform we see that it will still be more than what they were paying before the Tories came into power.

When the Tories claim that they reduced taxes and the number of people on the tax rolls, they do not compare it with 1984 when they were elected. They just compare it to the previous year. Thus what we have is the Tories coming into power in 1984 and every year that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) has stood up on budget day we have seen different tax increases. In fact, Canadians did not even have to wait for budget night to find tax increases. They also found them every other time the Minister of Finance stood up to make an economic statement. Invariably, he took the opportunity to slap another tax on the taxpayers of Canada.

What we find in terms of the Tory record starting from 1984 is steady tax increases every year. Let me read into the record what some of those are. The main revenue raising item in the Bill before us is a 10 per cent tax on telecommunications services, such as telephone and telex services but not including charges for local residential telephone lines. That measure was announced in the June, 1987, White Paper.

As I mentioned before, this tax discriminates against people in northern and remote communities as well as in rural communities. There are parts in my constituency of Regina East in which people pay long distance rates to call their doctor who might live in the town next to them. These people will be charged 10 per cent on those calls. It is a charge that people living in urban centres will not have to pay. Surely, the strength of this country is also its rural areas. We have a vast country, and in many ways it is underpopulated. Surely, it should be government policy to encourage people to live in our rural areas, the small towns, villages and hamlets of Canada. Instead, what we find when sales taxes such as the telecommunications tax are imposed is that people who live in our small towns, our hamlets and our villages are being penalized.

The same can also be said for the many increases the Government has introduced on the gasoline tax. Let us consider that history.

In 1984, the economic statement increased the price of oil and gas which meant $100 extra would be paid per year by the average family. As well, in November of 1984, after barely two months in office, the Government introduced sales tax increases and other increases, such as increases in the unemployment insurance premium, which totalled an increase for the average Canadian family of some $352 per year. Then, a few months later, on May 23, 1985, the Minister of Finance brought down his first Budget. It contained various tax measures which meant that the average taxpayer after that day ended up paying some $512.50 more in taxes. Thus we had to pay $352 more in taxes in November, 1984.

In May of 1985 we saw a further increase in taxes of $512.50. As well in that statement we saw that the gas tax was increased. A few months later, on June 27, 1985, before the parliamentary break for summer, the Minister of Finance rose in the House to increase again the taxes that Canadian taxpayers would be paying. That day cost the average Canadian family some $340 in extra taxes per year. Again, there was a 1 per cent increase on gasoline.

A few months later, on February 18, 1987, the Minister of Finance introduced a Budget. There was again a further tax increase on gasoline, as well as increases in the sales tax, cigarette tax and so forth. That day cost the average family some $65 to $100 extra in taxes per year.

We also find that not too long ago, on February 10 of this year, the Minister of Finance stood in the House to increase the tax on gasoline by one cent per litre. That cost the average Canadian family some $50.

In every one of his economic statements or Budgets the Minister of Finance has increased the tax on gasoline. That discriminates against my rural constituents. People who live in the rural areas of Canada and who need to drive their cars longer distances to go to visit their dentist, to go shopping or to visit family will be paying more in taxes than Canadians living in larger urban centres. The tax on communications and the tax on gasoline is a direct disservice and a disincentive for Canadians who live in the rural areas of this great country of ours. It is darn poor policy planning on the part of the Government, and it is a crime what it is doing to the rural areas of Canada.

There is another aspect of the increase in sales taxes that should be mentioned in this debate. That is the effect that the Tory tax increases have had on inflation. It is common sense that as the tax is increased on goods and services, the price is increased that Canadians have to pay, and inflation is increased. Last year there was an inflation rate of some 4 per cent. If the Tory Government had not introduced all of the sales tax increases, that inflation rate would be closer to 2 per cent. A 2 per cent inflation rate is an acceptable inflation rate.

With an inflation rate of 2 per cent, interest rates could be reduced. A true inflation rate of 2 per cent would justify a 1 per cent drop in interest rates. A 1 per cent drop in interest rates would help young families struggling to get by and paying off their mortgage month after month. It would make life a little easier for them. It would give them a little more disposable income that they could spend on other goods and services, for example, going to the family restaurant on a weekend which, in turn, perhaps would allow the restaurateur to hire an extra waitress and create more employment.

A drop of 1 per cent in the interest rate would have a tremendous benefit on many farmers who live in my constituency. It would give them some relief on the payments that they have to make to service their farm debt. A decrease in the interest rates charged would have an economic benefit throughout the country.

The Minister of Finance and the Governor of the Bank of Canada have rejected our appeals for lower interest rates, appeals called for by various provincial Premiers, economic advisory bodies, and some of the banks. The Minister of Finance has told us in the House that it is bad economics to lower the interest rate because it would be inflationary. The Minister of Finance has stated that as long as inflation is at 4 per cent we cannot afford to drop that interest rate. I would suggest that if we are really interested in dropping the inflationary rate, then let us get rid of some of the sales taxes that have increased the inflation rate. In fact, the major reason that we have inflation in this country is because of the increases in the sales tax.

The other aspect that I wish to touch upon in this debate is the interrelationship between the sales tax increases and free trade. I noted that the spokesperson from the Liberal Party also made mention of this fact. When the Minister of Finance presented the Budget in February of this year, we again saw an increase in the sales tax on gasoline. Further on in the documents we noted the Minister stating that the Canadian public would save somewhere in the order of $300 million to $400 million because of the reduction in tariffs that would occur starting in 1989.

When one looks at the number given by the Minister for the reduction in public revenues because of the elimination of certain tariffs, it is approximately the same as the revenue the Government was going to gather by increasing the sales taxes. That said it all. Under the free trade agreement we will see a certain reduction in some of the tariff items, which means decreased government revenues. The Government gave notice in the February Budget that those savings that Canadians will enjoy because of this agreement will be paid back to the federal Treasury in increased sales taxes. I submit that that is dishonest.

Let the Government at least be honest and state that while there will be a reduction in prices because of the elimination of some tariffs, the federal Treasury cannot afford the loss of that revenue and, therefore, it will be collecting it back from Canadians by increasing the sales tax, income tax, or by whatever means. But at least be honest. Do not play games with the people of Canada. They are tired of governments that promise one thing and say one thing and do the exact opposite. They want honest government that is up front.

If the Government can demonstrate that those revenues are needed, that it has done everything it can to reduce government waste and duplication, and that it is not in the pork barrel and squandering money on its friends and chums, then I think that the Canadian people would be prepared to accept hard economic reality and would be willing to put their shoulder to the wheel in a national effort to reduce the deficit.

Canadians get very angry when they find that games are being played on them, and with sleight of hand tricks that attempt to snatch an extra dollar out of their pockets; when they see patronage appointments and the squandering of public money; when they see that the burden of reducing the deficit is not properly and fairly shared, that the well-to-do and the large corporations are not paying their fair share. In fact, in many instances the large profitable corporations are not paying a cent of tax. I think that Canadians are angry and disgusted, and they have had enough with this Government.

Despite the promises of open, clean, and fair Government that the Tories made in the 1984 election, we have seen the Tories, as we saw the previous Liberal administration, with their snouts in the barrel or trough looking after their pals and their friends. There has been the continuation of an unfair tax system that benefits the rich and the well-to-do and fleeces the middle income earner, the low income earner, and the poor of this country.

That is why it is with pleasure that I participate in this debate today and urge the House to defeat the motion, and later to defeat the Bill itself.

Excise Tax Act

Mr. White: Madam Speaker, I have sat in the House for three and half years now and during all that time I have heard Members of the NDP sanctimoniously tell us that they have all the answers. There may be some people in Canada who believe some of the things that the NDP are saying. We in Manitoba have been able to judge the NDP by their actions as a government. Very briefly, I want to mention a couple of points.

• (1600)

The Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin) spoke about squandering of public money. In the past seven years, government expenditures were up 87 per cent in Manitoba. The debt has doubled, and 60 per cent of that is owed to foreigners.

What about taxes? In the past 12 months, there has been one of the largest tax grabs in Manitoba's history. The increased sales tax affects everyone. In the past 12 months, taxes to the middle class have increased in the neighbourhood of 25 per cent. There is a payroll tax of 2.25 per cent in Manitoba. Every employer in the province must pay 2.25 per cent on gross payroll. I call it an employment tax, the Manitoba Government calls it a payroll tax.

The Hon. Member talks of dishonesty. I would like him to tell me how he rationalizes what the NDP says about things like that and what it does when it is in Government.

Mr. de Jong: Madam Speaker, I certainly thank the Hon. Member for the points he has raised. First, though, the Hon. Member neglected to mention the debt rate the NDP inherited from the previous Tory Government, left by the squandering of money and the inefficient programs that were undertaken in Manitoba at that time.

To be sure, Manitoba has gone through a rough period and continues to go through a rough period. The Government there made a decision to attempt to maintain a satisfactory level of employment and has conducted economic programs that have cost money.

I noted that in the Hon. Member's question he did not make any suggestion as to what programs the Manitoba provincial Government should have cut. I wish he would also look at the situation in the Province of Saskatchewan where there has been a Tory Government since 1982. That Government inherited a public treasury with a surplus, and it had been running with a surplus for years. Since that Government was elected, the Saskatchewan Tories have driven that province so far into debt that Saskatchewan now has the highest per capita debt in Canada, thanks to a Tory Government.

I could list a whole ream of programs that Government introduced that have been wasteful and have squandered public money. That Government continues to do that. Let me give you several examples of this, as so many come to mind.

Seeing that it was in some political difficulty, the Government of Saskatchewan made a very strategic decision to buy its re-election during the last provincial election of 1986. One of the things it did was to offer every farmer in Saskatchewan $25 an acre at 6 per cent interest, whether they needed it or not, whether they were in difficulty or not, whether they farmed their land or not. The program was universal. Everyone got it and everyone took it.

We now hear of cases of people who did not need the money but took the $25 an acre at 6 per cent interest, turned it around and reinvested it at 10 per cent, 11 per cent or 12 per cent. They made themselves a tidy sum of money. That whole program cost the public treasury some $1 billion.

Now the Tories are trying to collect this money back. Of course, the farm situation has not improved. There are many farmers who are worse off today than they were when they got the $25 an acre. They are in no position to start paying that money back.

Now the Government of Saskatchewan is starting to patch together some programs. It is attempting in all sorts of ways to get this money back. Of course, it is creating divisions within the communities. The provincial Government might very well be in a position of having to force some farmers into bankruptcy just to try to get this money back.

That was a very irresponsible program, a program that was badly designed and badly thought out from a public administration point of view. Of course, that program's entire reason for being was the re-election of the Devine Government, and it was willing to spend $1 billion on it, increasing the public debt in Saskatchewan by $1 billion.

I see that the Minister of the Environment (Mr. McMillan) is leaving. The Minister knows, as I pointed out in the House earlier this week—I am sorry, I should not mention that the Minister of the Environment is present or is not present. In any event, I mentioned to the Minister earlier this week the project the Government of Saskatchewan wants to undertake. It wants to build a dam on the Souris River, a dam that will cost over $1.5 billion. This will create employment in the Town of Estevan in the Premier's riding, but that dam will depend entirely on run-off. It will create electricity that is more expensive than the electricity that can be bought from Manitoba or even from North Dakota. It makes no economic sense whatsoever, and environmentally, it is the most foolish idea. That is one of the driest parts of the province.

I understand that it was in 1912 when the water levels of the Souris River were first measured. Had the construction of that dam been finished in 1912, that body of water would not have filled up sufficiently to allow the generation of electricity until 1942. That is how much run-off water exists in that part of the province. Yet Mr. Devine is prepared to squander $1.5 billion of the money of Saskatchewan taxpayers just to ensure his re-election in his constituency of Estevan. That, I would suggest, is irresponsible public behaviour on the part of the Tory Government of the Province of Saskatchewan, and it is totally reprehensible.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): I would like to advise all Hon. Members that the first eight hours of debate on this Bill have now expired. From now on, speeches will be 10 minutes long, and there will be no period of questions or comments.

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, this Bill has been before Parliament for quite a while. It was preceded by a White Paper. It deals with the Government's tax reform package. It is time it go to committee, and I hope today will be the day because farmers need their rebates. Therefore, I move:

That the House continue to sit beyond the ordinary hour of daily adjournment for the purpose of continuing consideration of Bill C-117, an Act to amend the Excise Tax Act and the Excise Act.

Mr. Foster: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point or order. I do not think, since this is a tax measure, that the Hon. Member should introduce such a motion at this time. Surely this is an important matter involving billions of dollars in taxes. Surely it requires a full and complete debate, and the Government ought not to try to choke off debate on this matter today. The matter involves all kinds of sales taxes, taxes that are regressive in nature, and the debate should not be choked off in this manner by this kind of a tactic on the part of the Government.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The motion is in order. The House has heard the terms of the motion moved by the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

And fewer than 15 Members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): There not being 15 Members rising in objection to the motion, pursuant to Standing Order 9(4)(b), the motion is deemed to be carried.

• (1610)

Mr. de Jong: Madam Speaker, is this not a debatable motion as well?

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): No, it is not.

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Madam Speaker, it is obvious that the Tories do not want to hear about the tragic way in which they are trying to hoodwink Canadians. This legislation is typical Tory. It hits the poor, the weak, and the low income earner. Those with high incomes benefit. People like the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) and the Minister of State for Forestry and Mines (Mr. Merrithew) have high salaries, so they have the big advantage. It is the poor ordinary Canadian, those who work in Canada's forest industry, the small entrepreneurs hauling wood in northern Ontario or northern New Brunswick, who are hurt by this legislation. All of these tax reform measures introduced by the Government are regressive in nature. The income tax rates have been pushed down, but who does that help? Mainly those in the upper income bracket.

On the CTV program Question Period in the spring of 1984 the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) said he would not have to increase taxes. He said he would be able to solve any deficit problem simply by cutting expenditures. He certainly did that. He cut everything in sight, from old age pensions to the deindexation of tax rates, research in agriculture, and he increased service charges. He did so in a dramatically more regressive way than any other Minister of Finance in history. The personal tax increases put in place between September 4, 1984, and the spring of 1987 represent the largest increase at any time in our history.

However, this is all part of a grand scheme. It is designed to hit hard early in the mandate of the Government and then give back a pittance toward the end. The Government has not got around to giving back the pittance, but we are told that a reduction in income taxes for the average Canadian of about $100 or $150 will take place around the end of July of this year.

It is interesting that the Government has been unable to reduce the deficit by any significant amount. The projected deficit was $30 billion and it is still $30 billion, yet over that period of time the Government increased personal income taxes by 16 per cent or some $22 billion.

It is not only the amount of taxes which is horrendous, it is the type of taxes. It is the senior citizen going to the drugstore to buy a non-prescription drug who will pay an extra 12 per cent. This adds up to $950 million on all prescription drugs. Then we have gasoline. If you live in western Canada or northern Canada where you have to drive maybe 60 or 100 miles to do your shopping or obtain health care or see a lawyer or whatever, you have to pay an extra 4 cents a litre for your gas. That is almost 20 cents a gallon. The Clark Government in 1979 increased the tax by only 18 cents a gallon and it was driven out after nine months. You can imagine what is going to happen to the present Government after four years and a 20 cent a gallon increase in gasoline taxes.

We also have to deal with the extremely regressive nature of these taxes. The increase in the sales tax alone amounts to 25 per cent. If you bought a television for $1,000 in 1984, you paid a $90 tax. Today you will pay $120 tax on that same item. That is just for openers. The Government has not revealed what its new super-duper sales tax is going to be. We hear snatches here and there of how it is going to work. For example, yesterday the Canadian Real Estate Board met here in Ottawa. One of its members described how the tax is going to work on a family buying a new home.

We read today how housing prices, especially in the area around Toronto, are going up dramatically. Let us say you buy a home for $100,000. The builder has paid perhaps $50,000 for materials. Under the proposed super-duper sales tax which the Minister of Finance forecast in his tax reform, if it is 10 per cent you will be paying a tax of $10,000 because you will be paying tax not only on the materials but also on the labour as well.

We have to look at the approach the Government has used to justify the tremendous tax increases in every direction. Not only has it dramatically increased taxes, it has used every possible trick in the book to make its Budgets look great. It does not look that great to Canadians but it would look a lot worse, certainly to the Government's friends on Bay Street in Toronto, if it did not use all these tricks. For example, it sold Teleglobe, one of the very profitable Crown corporations and entered the money it received in last year's Budget projections to pull the deficit below $30 billion. As well, it speeded up the remittance of income tax, Canada pension and unemployment insurance remittances employers have to make, thereby giving itself a one-time windfall of about $1.5 billion. Little beknown to most Canadians, that is what is happening right now. They have imposed the new tax increases and do not actually have to reduce them until July.

We have this litany of tremendously regressive tax increases combined with all kinds of tax tricks which the Government has been using to try to make itself look good in spite of its very poor management of the economy and the fiscal framework of the country.

Mr. John Parry (Kenora—Rainy River): Madam Speaker, I am glad to have the opportunity this afternoon to speak on the motion to put the question on Bill C-117. It gives me the opportunity to put on the record some of the consequences of Bill C-117 and also to draw, particularly in the light of last night's events, some interesting parallels between the direction in which the federal Government is heading and the direction in which the Government of Ontario is heading.

We know that the proposed outline for federal tax reform which the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) has put forward is generally quite good. Under that tax reform many taxpayers can look forward to savings. Were it my Party the Government introducing such a tax reform, we would not have distributed the savings disproportionately toward the upper end of income earners as has the Government. Nevertheless, there is an over-all tax saving by way of the tax reform which is, of course, a reform of income taxation essentially in the order of $450 million.

We saw the parallel to Bill C-117 in Ontario last night, that is, that the federal Government and the Liberal Government in the Province of Ontario are determined to get those taxes back somehow. When we compare the litany of additional taxes, extension to taxes, and additional charges by way of excise and federal sales tax with the tax grab conducted by the Treasurer of Ontario, the Hon. Robert Nixon, last night, we will see some parallels in the way in which it is being done.

The 10 per cent tax on telecommunications services which is already being collected and which I believe has led to disproportionate taxation, particularly on the residents of my riding for whom most calls are long-distance calls rather than local calls, is one example of how the federal Government has identified a new area not previously subject to taxation and has decided to dip the revenue ladle into that pool of funds.

It has, of course, already cost residents of Kenora—Rainy River dollars on their telephone bills. However, one area of service which I believe is particularly unfair to tax is radio-telephones. These normally rent for $50 and up per month, depending on a number of factors. The taxation of what is essentially a lifeline, because these are, of course, installed for people who cannot get normal pole line telephone service, to the tune of $5 or $10 a month before the long-distance calls are taxed, is an unfair impact of the Government's tax program.

The increase in taxation on telecommunication programming—cable and pay TV—from 8 per cent to 10 per cent has been remarked upon before. There has been an increase in tax on paint and wallpaper from 8 per cent to 12 per cent. There has been an acceleration of the remittances somewhat along the lines of the acceleration in the remittances of employee deductions. There has been an increase from 15 per cent to 18 per cent in the sales tax on beer, spirits, wines and tobacco. That is directly paralleled in the Ontario Budget. There is also the increase in the tax levy on air transportation and the increase in taxation on gasoline.

When we look at the parallels with the Province of Ontario it would seem, in the most daring tax grab in living memory by a provincial government, the Liberal Government of Ontario, that it has learned very well some of the lessons which the federal Government has taught. The sales tax is to go up by 1 per cent, from 7 per cent to 8 per cent. In Ontario a family of four is going to be facing a sales tax increase of $126 per year with no off-setting credits. Under federal income tax reform Ontario taxpayers would have saved $450 million. Of that $450 million saving, the Treasurer of Ontario, the grinch who stole spring, has taken that $286 million into the tax coffers of the province.

This poses a problem in designing tax systems in the country and raises the question of whether there should perhaps be more federal-provincial consultation before these changes are made. If one level of government reduces taxation in one area, which a province then moves in to occupy, at the same time as the federal Government is increasing taxation in the sales and excise tax areas, we have over-all higher taxation and the average taxpayer is hit with a double whammy, the provincial tax and the federal sales and excise taxes.

In addition to that the Treasurer of the Province of Ontario has, in two stages, raised provincial income tax by 2 per cent which, of course, is an effective increase in the tax yield to Ontario of 4 per cent. That will become effective in the 1988 and 1989 tax years.

I do not want to make any particularly detailed comment on the increases in the so-called sin taxes which we see in both Bill C-117 and the provincial Budget. However, the Governments together must recognize that there will be a point of diminishing returns.

Turning to the gasoline tax, the rate of increase by the federal Government under Bill C-117 is 1 cent a litre and the provincial Government in Ontario is taking an extra penny a litre on unleaded and an extra 4 cents a litre on leaded. I think that that is sheer tax opportunism on the part of the Liberal Government of the Province of Ontario. Surely it was not necessary to increase the tax rate on leaded gasoline by a full 4 cents per litre in order to get price parity between leaded and unleaded.

In my riding many people are still using leaded gasoline for their daily transportation. For example, there are people in some 27 communities in my riding which do not have road connections who use snowmobiles in the winter and outboard motor boats in the summer just to get around their communities. In addition, leaded gasoline is a necessity for those who have kept older vehicles.

I do not think that it was necessary for the province to jump that rate by 4 cents per litre. They should have recognized that it is simply a marketing situation. The leaded gasoline, while it is still available and still needed, is used as, so to speak, the fighting brand at the gasoline pump and is priced significantly lower. An increase in the order of 2.5 cents would have led to a rethinking of pricing structures by the petroleum companies and eventually to price parity between leaded and unleaded gasoline, which is surely what was desired. However, the Treasurer of Ontario went straight ahead and took 4 cents.

Another impact of that gasoline taxation is, of course, the phenomenon of ratcheting. Those of us who live in remote areas of the country, to where goods have to be transported over larger distances, end up paying higher prices and therefore, of course, higher taxes. A bedroom suite which would cost $900 in Toronto would cost $1,200 in the community of Red Lake. That means, of course, a contribution of one-third more by the taxpayer in Red Lake than by the taxpayer in Toronto.

• (1630)

Increases in the price of gasoline and the price of motor fuels that are used to transport the goods tend to ever increase that difference between the tax contribution made in the more remote parts of the country and the major centres.

I see that you are signalling that my time is up. I am glad to have had the opportunity to make these comparisons between this Government's tax grab and that of the Liberal Government in Ontario.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Resuming debate. The Hon. Member for Richmond—Wolfe (Mr. Tardif).

Mr. Alain Tardif (Richmond—Wolfe): Madam Speaker, I also welcome the opportunity to take part in this debate and to deal with a very important aspect of this administration.

Madam Speaker, I think it is important to go back to September 1984, when the Government took over the responsibility for the country's finances. At the time, Canada was coming out of an unprecedented recession which had obliged governments to take steps to ensure that Canadians would not suffer unduly from the consequences of this recession.

There was, of course, a substantial deficit which had to be dealt with after the election. Although by September 1984 the economy had started to improve quite considerably, decisions had to be made with a view to reducing the deficit.

Mr. Speaker, I think it is important to recall that this Government promised to substantially reduce the deficit and also to substantially reduce the tax burden on Canadians. At this point, it would be relevant to mention two comments. The first was made by the present Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), who said on March 6, 1984 that they would reduce spending and refrain from increasing taxes that were already very high. Later in that same year, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) said that Canadians were paying a pretty penny for Government services and had the feeling they were paying enough.

Mr. Speaker, these two comments left the impression that the Government would deal with this tax burden by substantially reducing the amounts paid by Canadians which were already fairly high.

Today, the House is considering Bill C-117, whose purpose is to ratify substantial tax increases, most of which are already in effect and undermining Canadians' ability to pay.

Mr. Speaker, I think it is important to explain what this Government has done in the three and half years it has been running this country. I think that in the circumstances, it would have been normal for the Government to deal with the country's finances by going to those who are able to pay and to cope with these tax increases.

The Government did the exact opposite. It has been said many times and on many occasions that the tax burden had to be redistributed. In other words, improve the country's finances by letting those who are well off pay their share and provide relief for people on low incomes.

Today, in April 1988, we see that after three and a half years, revenues from sales tax and personal income tax increased by 55 per cent, while revenues collected from corporations increased 28 per cent.

We also see that revenues from sales tax and excise tax increased 77 per cent. The conclusion is that personal income tax and sales and excise tax increased far more than corporate taxes. I would like to get back to this later on.

Madam Speaker, we have here an administration that has constantly increased taxes since it came to power in 1984. This Government, instead of collecting the money where it is likely to find it, has taken the opposite stand and launched a cruel, savage and even obscene attack on the incomes of those who unfortunately have no way of escaping these systematic and on-going increases and are not able to cope with all these expenses—

As you know, all indirect taxes are regressive. The low-income taxpayer tends to spend a larger share of his income on consumer goods. We all know that, and we all agree it is true. In 1986, the Government introduced a refundable sales tax credit. This credit is clearly inadequate, however, since it now totals $70 per adult and $35 per child. The cutoff point, after which the credit starts to go down was set at $16,000, well below the poverty line.

Madam Speaker, this proves beyond a doubt what the Government has indicated on many occasions, and that is its determination to make average Canadians whose ability to pay is certainly not able to absorb all these increases . . . To prove that these increases are aimed especially at those who do not necessarily have the ability to absorb them, I shall, if I may, give a short summary of the tax increases we have seen since September 1984.

As far as indirect taxes are concerned, we have had repeated increases in sales tax: from 9 to 10 per cent on October 1, 1984, from 10 to 11 per cent on January 1, 1986, and from 11 to 12 per cent on April 1, 1986. These three increases in indirect taxes yielded $3 billion.

There was also the decision to extend sales tax to candy, soft drinks and snacks, with increases on July 1, 1985 and July 1, 1987, resulting in revenues totalling $460 million for the Treasury. We also had an increase in sales tax from 8 to 12 per cent on paint, wallpaper and toys, which yielded another $60 million. We had the increases in the excise tax on gasoline: 2 cents per litre on September 3, 1985, 1 cent per litre on January 1, 1987, 1 cent per litre on February 19, 1987, and 1 cent per litre on April 1, 1988, which yielded the princely sums of nearly $900 million and $450 million! Equalizing the sales tax on leaded and unleaded gasoline meant another $30 million. We also had progressive increases in the rate of airport taxes. The excise tax on alcohol and tobacco rose as well, yielding many hundreds of millions of dollars. Finally, the 10 per cent tax on long-distance calls and cable TV services, totalling $945 million.

Madam Speaker, these taxes have brought in billions of dollars in revenues and this entire burden has been assumed almost exclusively and fully by Canadian men and women with a very limited ability to pay. This is the trick which the Government used not really to reduce the deficit, but to increase the revenues in order to be able to claim openly: We have managed to slow down the rate of increase of Government expenditures.

That is not the point at all. The fact is that callously the Government has very heavily taxed Canadian men and women to secure considerably higher revenues.

Also, indirect taxes have been shamefully increased by the Government. Furthermore family allowances, personal credits and income tax deductions were de-indexed effective January 1, 1986, which brought in as much as $635 million in tax revenues. The elimination of the tax abatement brought in $650 million in additional revenues; the elimination of the Registered Home Ownership Savings Plan deduction: $105 million; the 5-10 per cent temporary surtax on high income earners, the only one which could be acceptable because it is aimed at high income earners, Madam Speaker, brought in $500 million in a context of several billion dollars. There was the permanent 3 per cent surtax on all taxpayers which brought in $1.2 billion; there were the changes in the tax treatment of dividend income, and finally in the spousal exemption, which saved the Government $20 million.

Madam Speaker, this is clear evidence that the Government is determined to place the tax burden on the backs of low and middle income taxpayers, when it should use this opportunity to work on a fair, equitable and harmonious tax reform and thus those with the ability to pay could share in the deficit reduction effort.

[English]

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Walkerville): Madam Speaker, it is indeed a pleasure to speak to Bill C-117 which, of course, is intended to give legislative effect to a number of federal sales tax and excise tax increases and excise duty changes announced by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson). This legislation calls attention to the characteristics of the sales tax which recommend it and similar taxes to this Government. It, of course, has a number of advantages, one of which is it is simple to administer.

Another attractive aspect of the sales tax is it is hidden. The ordinary citizen does not really know how much it is costing him or her. It is a tax which is completely consistent with the character of this Government. It is a tax to be implemented by this Government for one simple reason, it is sneaky and perfectly consistent with the approach the Government has chosen to use with the Canadian people. The Government's way to get money from the taxpayers is to be a pick-pocket rather than be up front in arranging things so people will be fully conscious of how much it will cost them.

There is another perhaps more important aspect of this kind of tax that is perhaps even more attractive in an ideological way than the fact it is a pickpocket tax. It is a regressive tax. It is a tax that soaks the poor and middle income earners far more than the rich. It has none of the advantages of an income tax which can be so designed as to be fair. This tax inherently speaks to another characteristic of the Government and that is its refusal to be fair.

I do not want to be misunderstood that I am alleging only this Government as being sufficiently ideologically right wing as to see advantages of soaking the poor to pay for the rich. We have other examples, one revealed to us just recently. Colleagues of the Official Opposition in Ontario have demonstrated their capacity to respond to those ideological imperatives. They have lowered the corporate tax rate from 17 per cent to 15 per cent while raising the sales tax from 7 per cent to 8 per cent. It has to be admitted that that Government is a little less sneaky because at the provincial level everyone knows what they are paying. Nevertheless, the notion of fairness, whether it be the Ontario Government, the Saskatchewan Government or at the federal level, seems not to motivate the design of the tax structure.

The Government claims it has removed 850,000 people from the tax rolls while at the same time it does not mention that it was responsible for putting an additional million people on the tax rolls in the first place. We are dealing with a Government that, on the one hand, says it is interested in tax reform and, on the other hand, the average Canadian family is paying an additional $1,000 per year in federal taxes as a result of the Budgets of the present Government. Of course, while we would have to admit there are certain changes in the income tax structure which are beneficial to certain of our citizens, even those modest reforms are to be counteracted in the future by the national sales tax structure to be introduced, the details of which the Government has not seen fit to release, and I am sure they will reveal how unfair the approach of the Government will continue to be for ordinary Canadians.

There are a couple of aspects of the sales tax changes that I would like to examine for a moment. The 10 per cent increase in telecommunications and the effect it will have on our rural population, especially in northern Ontario, has already been adequately discussed. I would like to simply address two sales tax changes which are significant to my own constituency.

I come from a community where automobile manufacture is extremely important. An important aspect of operating an automobile is economy. Since the Government has come into power, by virtue of steadily increasing sales taxes on gasoline, the average family is now spending $300 more a year on gasoline. It is a situation made worse by the progressive Liberals in Ontario who have themselves tacked on an additional one cent a litre tax on gasoline. So we have the pattern established of soaking the poor to benefit the rich, making it as difficult as possible for ordinary people. The significant issue, of course, is the prosperity of the automobile industry in Canada, severely threatened already. It is certainly not in the interests of that industry to impose an additional burden of cost of fuel on those who drive the cars that are manufactured so well in Windsor.

In Windsor, one of the more significant distilleries in the country, Hiram Walker, has been a corporate citizen of great value to our city. It employs a significant number of Windsorites who have been very worried for many years now about the steadily increasing burden of taxation on distilled spirits. One can look at this in two ways. I am fully conscious of the role the taxation of alcoholic beverages plays in trying to control the consumption of alcohol. Certainly there needs to be a control on the consumption of alcohol so that it is not abused. However, we go too far in limiting a perfectly legal product by means of a taxation regime which is costing jobs. The evidence is clear that the imbalanced imposition of sales taxes and excise taxes on distilled spirits is costing jobs. Distilled spirits are taxed more than beer and wine. The taxes should be balanced. This taxation really must stop in the interests of this industry and those constituents of mine who are constantly being threatened because jobs are being lost by the continued imposition of taxation on a product that is legal.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The question is on the motion of Mr. Gormley. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): All those opposed to the motion will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): In my opinion the yeas have it.

I declare the motion (Mr. Gormley) agreed to on division.

Motion agreed to.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The next question is on the motion of Mr. Wilson. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): All those opposed to the motion will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): In my opinion the yeas have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

Excise Tax Act

Mr. Gauthier: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. It being close to 5 p.m., and since I was in a meeting this afternoon, I am not sure whether there is Private Members' Business to consider at 5 p.m. or not. If there is I would like to have that confirmed. We have had discussions among the Parties and I suggest that the vote to be taken on this Bill be deferred until 6 p.m. tonight so that we can group the votes on Bill C-74 and C-117 together. It will avoid having the bells ring for the next half hour and we could proceed with our work.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Does the House agree to calling it 5 p.m.

Mr. Hawkes: Madam Speaker, I think the Hon. Member opposite asked a question with respect to Private Members' Hour. It is my understanding that the Hon. Member is not here. The Hon. Member also asked for a deferral of the bells until 6 p.m. so that we could combine the votes. The House is in agreement with that. I will request it if it is appropriate, or my Whip will, but then I think we should go back to Government Orders. I would like the House to call Bill C-110.

Mr. Riis: Madam Speaker, I think that is changing the proposal of my colleague for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier). Since there is no Private Members' Hour, I suggest that we might want to consider having a short bell, call the Members in now and then dealing with it expeditiously rather than wait until 6 p.m. to vote.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The House can understand that Hon. Members seem to know that the Hon. Member whose motion was to be debated at 5 p.m. will not be present. The Chair could not take that for granted until the moment we present the Bill to the House and then understand that the Hon. Member is not here.

As more than five Members rose when the question was asked, call in the Members.

Mr. Gauthier: There have been discussions and, as usual, the Opposition feels very co-operative. We would not want to keep Members here for the next 15 votes, and I propose that the votes on Motions Nos. 9, 12, 13, 15, 16, 19, 17, 29, 30, 18, 23, 24, 26, 27, and 28 be taken as having the same results as the vote which was just taken, adding the names of those Members who just came in who, because of the hour, were unable to be here. Perhaps some of them would like to rise and have their votes recorded.

Mr. Pietz: Madam Speaker, I would like my vote to be recorded with the Government.

Mr. MacKay: Madam Speaker, I, too, would like to have my vote recorded with the Government.

CUSTOMS TARIFF

MEASURE TO AMEND

Hon. Doug Lewis (for the Minister of Finance) moved that Bill C-118, an Act to amend the Customs Tariff, as reported (without amendment) from the Standing Committee on Finance and Economic Affairs, be concurred in.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Lewis (for the Minister of Finance) moved that the Bill be read the third time and passed.

Mrs. Shirley Martin (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I thank you for the opportunity to speak on third reading of Bill C-118, an Act to amend the Customs Tariff. As Members will know, this Bill provides for the reduction and removal of duties on a narrow range of products not manufactured in Canada.

Bill C-118 also makes some technical amendments to the Customs Tariff to correct errors in the new harmonized system which came into effect on January 1, 1988, and to allow facsimile transmission equipment and diesel engines to continue to enter Canada at the rates which have historically been applied.

I would be remiss, Mr. Speaker, if I did not make mention of my colleagues on the finance committee who once again put their collective expertise to work to deal expeditiously with this piece of legislation.

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, I want to take only a few minutes to add a brief word on behalf of the Liberal Party with regard to this Bill. Normally, of course, my distinguished colleague, the Member for Trinity (Miss Nicholson), would be responding on this Bill, but this morning she is temporarily detained elsewhere here on Parliament Hill. Since she cannot be with us to address this issue I will make a few remarks on her behalf.

Bill C-118 is designed to do a number of things. It is to correct errors in the new harmonized system of tariffs by amending Section 20 to restore duty treatment for certain imported alcoholic beverages. It will correct an error in the new system in relation to remissions under the machinery program. It will delete the tariff item being amended in Schedule I to the Bill.

Another item in the Bill is the continued free entry for facsimile equipment not made in Canada. This equipment is commonly referred to as telecopying equipment. There will also be a removal of the duty on radio controlled model glider kits and radio controlled self-propelled electrically powered model vehicle kits. This hobby equipment is not manufactured in Canada and therefore the Tariff Board recommended that free entry be provided for these items. The Bill will address that issue as well.

Schedule II also provides for the removal of the duty on burial shrouds. We are told that they are not made in Canada and I suppose until such time as they are made here there would be no purpose in having a duty to protect an industry that does not exist at the present time.

There are a number of items generally involving tariffs which sometimes come to the attention of Members as being contentious. I remember a year or two ago a case involving veterinarians. Veterinarians working with farm animals have a specific piece of equipment which they attach to the back of their truck. This equipment has a refrigerated compartment in which to keep drugs and another space to keep medical equipment used by veterinarians. This piece of equipment had a duty imposed on it, even though it was not made in Canada.

A number of Members of Parliament, including myself, wrote to the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) to ask that he intervene with the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. MacKay) in order to have the duty removed since there was really no purpose for it. It only created hardship for some veterinarians. I am happy to say that the representation was effective because the Minister saw fit to intervene and I understand the duty was eventually removed. That is an example of how these tariffs are sometimes counterproductive.

I am told that officials at the Department of Customs and Excise interpreted that equipment to be a part of a truck body, which it was not, and gave it the same recognition as a camper. Obviously it had nothing to do with camping but met a very specific purpose and should not have been subject to a tariff.

I want to bring to the attention of the House a letter I received concerning another tariff issue. Since we are dealing with an Act to amend the Customs Tariff Act, I thought I would use this opportunity to raise a specific tariff issue that has been brought to my attention by a textile firm in my constituency known as Consoltex. Consoltex is a company located in Montreal but which also has a plant in my constituency.

[Translation]

In the letter sent to me by Mr. John F. Trickett of Consoltex, he informed me of correspondence he had with the Hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) after the announcement on March 22, 1988 of the tariff reform for the textile and clothing industries.

So Mr. Trickett said in a letter that he sent to the Minister, and I quote:

> I am very concerned that this list of fabrics included in Schedule I . . .

. . . of the tariff list . . .

> . . . was not thoroughly considered and contains several items that are definitely manufactured in Canada by Consoltex as well as other textile companies. Furthermore, some products on this list can be directly substituted for others made in Canada.
> It is essential that direct consultation with us and other Canadian textile companies take place before finalizing what fabrics—will be eligible for customs exemption.

So in this case, Mr. Speaker, we have a situation where the Government has chosen this time, it seems, to eliminate tariffs which should not have been eliminated; that is, removing them will hurt the textile industry that is so important for the riding of Glengarry—Prescott—Russell.

I will give you an example of some of these fabrics, according to the list provided by Consoltex:

> (1) Fabrics of a weight not exceeding 70 grams per square meter, other than lining fabrics.

It seems this is one type of fabric for which we are proposing tariff remission. Consoltex informs us that they manufacture this product themselves.

> (2) Fabrics containing 35 per cent or more, by weight, of silk.

Consoltex says:

> This item alone could result in unfair competition for virtually all fabrics now manufactured in Canada, because of the tariff remission.

In other words, this particular product that will not be subject to duty could be substituted for others that are now being manufactured in Canada.

> (3) Jacquard fabrics: These fabrics are now manufactured in Canada, and Consoltex is manufacturing more and more fabrics that are not included in this item but might be adversely affected by duty free imports under this tariff item.
> (4) "Leno" fabrics containing 50 per cent or more, by weight, of cotton. Consoltex manufactures "Leno" fabrics and other fabrics that are not included in this item and would be directly affected and, in fact, replaced by duty-free imports.

Mr. Speaker, the rest of the text I have here reads as follows:

> In addition to the above items, there are other products on the list that require further clarification and definition. The list is too vague in its present form, and significant improvements are urgently needed.

What Mr. Trickett is trying to say is this: Although all Members of this House do, I imagine, approve of the principle of tariff remission which is important to the garment manufacturers in my riding, we should not forget that those who manufacture fabrics in Canada must be protected, so that when we provide for tariff remission, we should make sure that we protect products that are manufactured in Canada or that can be replaced by a product manufactured in our own country.

Mr. Speaker, those were my brief comments this morning on Bill C-118, and I also wanted to take this opportunity to point out that one of the manufacturers in my riding is dissatisfied with some of this Government's tariff policies.

That being said, Mr. Speaker, I want to thank you, and we in the Liberal Party intend to co-operate in getting this Bill through the House as soon as possible.

[English]

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, this is not one of the earthshaking pieces of legislation to come before the House of Commons. Nevertheless, it is legislation which, during the second reading debate, the Parliamentary Secretary to the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Hawkes), suggested represented the following principle: "The policy of the Government is to meet the needs of the business sector and individuals by amending the tariffs in its annual Budget. This Bill maintains this tradition, and I therefore urge the House to adopt it as quickly as possible".

• (1020)

It is interesting in the context of that statement to recount to the House of Commons the case of a machine manufacturing plant in my constituency, Tri-Way Machine Ltd. which is one of the few companies in this country capable of producing a machining system, combined with transfer mechanisms within the machining system, all computerized, which permits a product to be produced to extremely high levels of tolerance. We raised the case of Tri-Way with the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) and the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. MacKay) this past year. In fact, Tri-Way officials came to Ottawa to point out very clearly to the Government the tremendous irony which exists in the present tariff schedule. It is the irony that if one imports certain machines which go to make up this transfer system of machining, one can import them at no tariff rate.

If, however, one imports a complete transfer system—with the machining and transfer mechanisms built in—one has to pay a tariff of over 9 per cent. One could not recognize a more detrimental situation for the production of these very sophisticated high-tech machines here in Canada. By that structure of the tariff, every incentive is given to plants to bring into the country the basic machines and to assemble a transfer system based on those machines, instead of actually creating the transfer system from the ground up, as Tri-Way itself has done in Windsor, and it has employed over 200 people in the process of production.

This case was put very, very clearly to the Minister of National Revenue. It was put very clearly to the Minister of Finance. We have here a Bill which claims to represent amendments to the customs tariff in response to requests from the private sector. Yet there is absolutely no response to this request which would give to this country a greater capacity to produce sophisticated machinery right from the ground up, to expand employment and thereby build the base for exports in the future.

Tri-Way exports the great bulk of what it produces to other countries, mostly the United States. Yet the Government has seen fit to ignore completely this absolutely straightforward and legitimate request from this important company within my constituency for a tariff change . I think it is a shame the Government would act that way with respect to this specific company.

I think there is inherent in the changes proposed in this Bill a perspective on Canada for the future which reflects exactly that "no" to a high-tech machine- based company in my own constituency. The kinds of changes which are taking place with respect to this Bill, when you consider them in detail, indicate what we are opening ourselves up for. We are reducing the incentive to Canadian producers to produce high-technology machinery which is crucial for many sectors of our economy in the future.

If we take, for instance, the changes which have to do with machinery which is employed in mining, recovering and producing crude oil from shales, oil sands or tar sands, what do we see taking place? We see a vast variety of machines which we in this country have the capacity to produce and the incentives to produce them stripped away from the various tariffs which existed under the general preferential tariff or the most favoured nation tariff. We see a reduction to free entry for the whole set of these machines, including bridge conveyer systems, mechanical shovels, multi-bucket excavators, coke cutters and so on.

I cannot understand the logic of trying to paint a picture, as the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) sometimes does, of this country as a technologically sophisticated nation with a capacity, not just to produce this kind of important machinery but to export it, based on the fact that we have resource sectors here which require such machinery. I cannot see the logic of taking the incentives to Canadian producers to produce this machinery here in Canada out of our tariff structure.

If what the bulk of this Bill were aiming to do was to make some reductions on very skilled, non-technology intensive products, and to give some advantages to less developed countries to be able to export into our country, one would have no problem with that. It would make some sort of sense. But to take the very top, the most sophisticated of our products, the most sophisticated potential for the future of the country, as represented in some of this machinery which is being given duty-free status, as represented by the lack of response to a company such as Tri-Way, which is producing extremely sophisticated machining systems, is to say that the Government believes that the future of Canada is to be a resource producer. It is to say that our future is to be an extractor of raw materials rather than a high-tech producer able to compete with the rest of the world.

That just makes no sense from an industrial policy perspective whatsoever. Anyone who looks seriously at what our industrial future will be, in terms of what we can potentially compete in against the lower wage, lower benefit, developing countries of the world, comes to an obvious conclusion. We have to move toward more sophisticated production. We have to move toward production of precisely the type of items I am talking about, much more sophisticated technology machine goods. That is the direction we have to take. That is the direction which will make us competitive, because the capacity to export products which have a skill input is important for the future of Canada. Yet the Government heads us in precisely the opposite direction.

I grant Hon. Members that this is not, as I started out to say, a major Bill. However, taken together with the other elements which exist in the Government's trade policy direction, there is only one conclusion that one can draw. It is that the Government does not have a trade policy which sees Canada as a leader in high technology production in the future. Instead, it sees us tied in dependent terms to the United States through the trade agreement that it wishes to sign. It sees our companies as unable to respond rapidly and flexibly to trade threats, as Bill C-110 which we talked about yesterday demonstrates. It sees us as a country which is devoted to importing other people's machinery, to giving other people advantages and benefits, and to cutting out the incentives which exist for our country with respect to high technology machinery for the future.

It is a policy which is as ridiculous as one can possibly imagine. It is sending us on a track which in 20 years' time will make us much less competitive and much more dependent at a time when we could be taking steps, albeit small ones in this Bill, in the opposite direction. We could be taking steps which would give us much more capacity for sophisticated machinery production in the future, not just in the case of Tri-Way in my own constitutency but in the case of the various machine goods which are noted in this Bill itself.

Thus we have a Bill which is a failure through what it omits, such as the Tri-Way case and the tremendous benefits which machine transfer systems being produced from the ground up could give to the country. We have a Bill which is a failure in terms of what is in it, in terms of cutting away incentives which presently exist that favour us moving in the direction of higher technology and more sophisticated production which will give us a place in the world in the future.

If this were taking place at a time when we had prosperity throughout the country one might sit back and not be so concerned about it. However, if one looks at the statistics for Canada one sees that, with the exception of small geographic parts of the country, unemployment rates are unacceptably high. We see unemployment rates in Atlantic Canada which are simply shameful for us to accept. We see unemployment rates in the West where there is a lack of a diversified manufacturing base which western economists and western producers are very concerned about. We see in much of Ontario and Quebec communities which face serious problems for the future. We see textile communities, for instance—

[Translation]

. . . there are textile communities in Quebec that are facing a very uncertain future. We must try to do something about these problems, and I am referring to present and future jobs. Unfortunately, there is nothing in this Bill that shows the Government understands the problem.

[English]

The same is true of Ontario. In my own community of Windsor we have an unemployment rate of over 9 per cent. That is the official rate. Many people in the community think that the unofficial rate is much higher. In great parts of northern Ontario unemployment rates are as bad or worse. In Brantford, unemployment rates are at levels which reflect the tremendous collapse of one of our important machine producing sectors of the past, the farm equipment sector.

• (1040)

With the small exceptions of certain geographic areas, in this country we have serious economic problems and unemployment. This unemployment is the basic and fundamental reason why we should be looking at a future which gives us high technology potential and potential in the machining sector. These are the sectors where highly skilled employment is possible in the future. These are the sectors where exports based on these skills, growth of technology, and the sophistication of the products that can be produced in this country. That is where the future exists for Canada. Yet this Bill takes steps away from that future.

I have gone through the Tri-Way plant in Windsor and seen the tremendously sophisticated production of which it is capable. Officials of that plant have also put to me the fact that that production is vulnerable if there is not a fair base of protection for them, not to establish high costs for Canadians buying their equipment, but to establish fairness between those who import the equipment and those who import the parts and assemble them here in Canada.

I would urge that the Government look at this Bill again, that it realize that it has embarked very much in the wrong direction, and that it give this country a sense of a high-tech future which this Bill does not present to us.

Mr. Althouse: I have a question for the Hon. Member for Essex—Windsor (Mr. Langdon). I was not privileged to be in the House when the Government introduced the Bill, but I have gone through the remarks of the Hon. Member who introduced it on behalf of the Government. I did not see any explanation of the Bill, other than a very brief description of some of the goods on which the Government is proposing to reduce the tariffs.

Did the Hon. Member for Essex—Windsor have an opportunity to look into the reasons for some of the tariff reductions that were posted? I notice that some of them include tariff item 73.08 which would reduce the tariff to zero on structures and parts of structures mostly for bridges and bridge sections, lock gates, towers, masts, roofing, framework, et cetera. In short, these are mostly products made out of steel in which we understood Canada normally has an ability to be quite competitive. Does the Hon. Member have any insight as to why these proposals were put forward in this case?

I notice that very large compressors will now be permitted to have better access from outside the country. I know these are very much in use in the oil and mining industries, and I wondered if the Hon. Member has any insight into the effect that this change will have on the steel industry which produces materials for doors, belts, and so on. What, if any, impact will there be on the compressor industry? I know that that industry is fairly important in Calgary and the West as they are great users of compressed air in the oil and mining industries.

Mr. Langdon: The Parliamentary Secretary to the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Hawkes) was absolutely frank in saying why these particular changes had been introduced. He said that the policy of the Government is to meet the needs of the business sector and individuals by amending the tariffs in its annual Budgets. The Bill maintains this tradition.

Unfortunately, that is not quite an accurate statement. The needs of businesses which have been put before the Minister of National Revenue and the Minister of Finance have not been met, except on a selective basis. There have been certain things on which the Government has stated that it would accept that representation and put it into effect. But, for example, on this representation from Tri-Way to get the capacity for better machining and better production of transfer systems in this country, the Government states that it will not select that particular suggestion.

The logic of saying to the business community that it will be responsive is not being followed with respect to this Bill. Therefore, one has to ask, why is the Government choosing particular groups and individuals to say yes to, and other groups and other individuals to say no to?

I was particularly intrigued in trying to answer that question by the fact that burial shrouds were going to be allowed into the country duty free. Personally, Mr. Speaker, I associated that with the next election and the fact that there would be a tremendous demand on the part of the Conservative Party for such burial shrouds.

With respect to the points raised by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Humboldt—Lake Centre (Mr. Althouse), there are serious problems raised. Here we are being hit by countervail tariffs in the United States on some of our specialty steel items, and what we do is to establish a reduction in tariff levels, and in many cases completely free entry for other specialty steel items coming into this country.

Again, we seem to be hurting an industry which has been tremendously competitive, which has a high technology base, and which has tremendous skill inputs. My friend asks, does it make sense? My answer is that I do not think it does make sense. I do not think there is logic in what has been put before us, and certainly that logic has not, at any stage, been presented by the Government in attempting to defend this unfortunate Bill.

• (1050)

Mr. McCurdy: Mr. Speaker, I hasten to congratulate the Hon. Member on his excellent speech about a Bill which, at first sight, is not of great moment in the context of more important legislation we will be considering to implement the free trade agreement. Nevertheless, he has indicated to us in a very informative way some of its implications.

What is involved here is the lowering of customs duties on goods coming into Canada. Part of the free trade agreement, of course, is to eliminate almost all tariffs over a period of time. That is intended to gain Canadian access to the American market. I think Canadians have done reasonably well over the last little while in the American market because of the value of the Canadian dollar compared to the American dollar. That difference, which was to our advantage, overcame some of the tariff barriers imposed by the Americans.

I am sure my colleague would be more than willing to examine the situation of Birla Industries in Windsor in the context of the free trade agreement and the increase in the value of our dollar. Perhaps he would also consider it in the context of the Canadian dollar achieving the not unprecedented level of 90 cents or even parity, and what would be the implications of that situation for Canadian industry, particularly in the City of Windsor, the representation of which I share with my colleague as a Member of Parliament.

Mr. Langdon: Mr. Speaker, the collapse of Birla Industries is perhaps the sixth or seventh shut-down of an auto parts plant to hit Windsor and Essex County in the last year. Previous shut-downs include Cross-LaSalle, International Tools Ltd., and others.

There has been a constant and growing sense of pressure on the auto parts industry which comes from three things. First, because of a possible downturn in the industry associated with the problems of a lack of government policy and lack of enforcement of the 60 per cent Canadian content rule on Japanese producers. The second factor is the expectation on the part of many of those companies that the free trade agreement will be passed. I would suggest that they should not be so certain about that, but the expectation has led them in a number of cases to design at this stage to shift production to the U.S. That would seem to have been the case with Cross-LaSalle and the recent Hawker-Siddley shut-down. It is possible, given that Birla produces in the U.S. as well, that this was a factor in that shut-down.

The third factor has been confirmed for us by the Federal Business Development Bank with respect to Birla Industries. They and the management of the company, in their statement about the shut-down, pointed to the 10 cent increase over the past year in the value of the Canadian dollar. I think that appreciation is part of a quiet agreement between the Government and the U.S. Government with respect to the trade agreement, and it has resulted in this particular plant shut-down. It has also resulted in the shut-down of certain other auto parts producers across Ontario.

I have a sense that the Government does not understand what it is doing when it puts into effect a high interest rate policy which creates this tremendous increase in the value of the dollar. These high interest rates have now brought us to a point where the prime lending rate is 10.25 per cent at the chartered banks. That means a flow into this country of short-term capital which does not go into new industries or new production but into speculative paper investments. At the same time we have an increase in the value of our dollar which, in the case of Birla Industries, has cost 152 people their jobs. Again, I think this is a sign of the lack of serious economic thinking and economic policy making on the part of the Government.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: May I call it eleven o'clock?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being eleven o'clock, it is now time for Statements by Members.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

CRITICISM OF PROGRAM ON ABORTION

Mr. Gus Mitges (Grey—Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, the CBC Commentary program of February 3 featured comments by Dr. Peter Cole, regional health officer for the County of Peel, Ontario, who made the false statement that the abortion rate in the U.S. decreased after abortion on demand became legal in 1973. Dr. Cole misled the Canadian public by distorting the true facts, that abortion has indeed increased drastically since 1973.

The CBC showed its bias by not even having one pro-life commentator on the program despite the fact that a substantial number of people stand on both sides of the question. The question that begs to be answered is how the CBC Commentary guests are selected, and by whom. As well, why was the pro-life side of the issue not presented after the Supreme Court decision on the Morgentaler case?

This is another example of the CBC once again doing a poor job in keeping bias out of its programs. It is hoped that the ongoing investigation by the CRTC will censor the CBC and force it to curtail its biased programming and henceforth give equal opportunity for both sides of all issues to be heard, and not just what the CBC wants people to hear.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

APPOINTMENT OF WOMAN AS ASSISTANT DEPUTY SERGEANT-AT-ARMS

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, since the House came back at Easter one thing is very different around this place and perhaps it is time we noted it as Members of Parliament.

You, Sir, and the Sergeant-at-Arms have seen fit to appoint for the first time in the history of our country an Assistant Deputy Sergeant-at-Arms who is a woman. The appointment is great and should be underlined and recognized in this House by all Members.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Boudria: On behalf of all my colleagues I want to congratulate Mrs. Marie Charbonneau who is now our Assistant Deputy Sergeant-at-Arms.

I hope this is the beginning of a number of such appointments recognizing the fact that women have their place not only in the house, but in the House of Commons.

UNION LEADERS

ATTITUDE TOWARD GOVERNMENT

Mr. Barry Turner (Ottawa—Carleton): Mr. Speaker, isn't it wonderful to live in a democracy?

We have the President of PSAC, the President of the CLC, and the President of CUPW, three of Canada's favourite people, saying they are going to do everything to defeat the current PC Government. Well, I'll be damned. Three of Canada's favourite people are all now clearly aiming their expensive union membership dues at our Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney).

Daryl, remember the imposed program of 6 and 5 on pensioners by the former Liberal Government? Do you want that kind of co-operative government again? Do you remember the April 11, 1985, agreement that you signed relating to pension deindexing and what you have done and said since?

And Shirley, if you think the Prime Minister is Margaret Thatcher in jockey shorts, wait until he takes his gloves off.

And we have dear Jean-Claude, that great defender of democracy and postal rights.

Oh boy, what a three-ring circus they will represent. Worse than Larry, Moe, and Curly. And you figure out who Curly is!

With loose cannons like this firing at us, Mr. Speaker, we can't lose.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

SPALLUMCHEEN INDIAN BAND—CHILD WELFARE PROGRAM

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, the chief, the council, and the Spallumcheen Indian Band members reject the Minister of Indian Affairs' (Mr. McKnight) recent proposed child welfare program. They reject not only the policy but also the so-called consultation process. They believe that by transferring jurisdiction over native children's welfare to provincial Governments the federal Government is actually breaching its trust responsibility for Indian people and is playing politics with the lives of Indian children.

Seven years ago this band began its own child welfare program based on a thoughtful and well developed band by-law which gave the band members the right to administer their own child welfare programs, which they have done exceptionally well. They do not wish now to surrender this jurisdiction to provincial Governments.

If native self-government is to be a reality in Canada, those bands which presently have complete jurisdiction and responsibility over their child welfare programs must be able to continue to act in that fashion.

SOCIALISTS' RECRUITING METHODS

Mr. Gabriel Fontaine (Lévis): Mr. Speaker, the socialists are certainly using underhanded recruiting methods. Here is the stratagem: The socialist "comrades" attend all the meetings of the Postal Workers' Union, without identifying themselves as "comrades." They ask the participants whether they are satisfied with Brian Mulroney. "Do you want to work against his re-election as volunteers?" If they answer yes, afterwards, one of the "comrades" will contact them to say that they will volunteer under the socialist banner. That, Mr. Speaker, is real hypocrisy!

IN MEMORY OF JEAN GASCON

Mrs. Lucie Pépin (Outremont): Mr. Speaker, Quebecers and Canadians learned yesterday of the death of one of the most important figures in Canadian theatre, Jean Gascon. Jean Gascon, actor and producer, distinguished himself as co-founder and director of the Théâtre du Nouveau Monde, founder of the National Theatre School in Montreal, artistic director of the Stratford Theatre in Ontario and, in 1977, director of the National Arts Centre in Ottawa.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to pay a personal tribute to Mr. Gascon and say how important he was in discovering and establishing the theatre in Quebec to people of my generation. Jean Gascon helped us discover and love Molière. He gave us the desire to go to the theatre and pride in seeing local Canadian actors perform on our stages in Quebec. He gave us a taste for quality. With Denise Pelletier and Jean-Louis Roux, he made us realize that the theatre was as important in our lives as science and the other professions.

To his family and to all theatre people, I offer my sincerest condolences on behalf of Quebecers and Canadians; we all share their sorrow.

ONTARIO BUDGET—TAX INCREASES

Mr. Felix Holtmann (Selkirk—Interlake): Mr. Speaker, on Tuesday next Manitoba's new Liberal queen is hoping to lead a new lean machine in the provincial Legislature. "Competence with heart" is the campaign theme.

Ontario residents learned yesterday that both the competence and the heart have gone out of the Ontario Liberal Government. In Ontario, the Liberals are taxing and spending as only Liberals know how. Gas tax has increased by 18 cents per gallon. Cigarettes are up by 1 cent per smoke. Ontario residents have seen an increase in their sales tax of 1 per cent, and personal income tax increases of 1 per cent this year and another 1 per cent next year. Why, even a case of beer will cost half a buck more. Ontario residents have learned what confidence with heart means.

In Manitoba, without a doubt the new Liberal Queen of Hearts would quickly show her true colours. Manitobans should learn from the Ontario experience. They should use their heads on April 26 because, if their choice is wrong, they may lose their heads after the election.

THE LATE JEAN GASCON

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview—Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, last night at the Théâtre du Nouveau Monde, actors and audience observed one minute's silence as a tribute to a great man of the theatre who had just died, Jean Gascon.

Mr. Speaker, Canada has lost one of its most prominent performing artists. The founder of the Théâtre du Nouveau Monde and the father of modern theatre in Quebec became one of the most respected figures in this country.

His work as actor, producer and director took him from Montreal to Paris. Subsequently, he was made artistic director of the well-known Stratford Festival. His passion for the theatre was overwhelming: From Tennessee Williams to Tchekov, Molière, Claudel and Shakespeare, he made us laugh and cry.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

CANADA-FRANCE DISPUTE—STATUS OF ST. PIERRE AND MIQUELON

Mr. Pat Nowlan (Annapolis Valley—Hants): Mr. Speaker, the papers are full of reports of the cod war between Canada and the United States, and the posturing politicians vying for the presidential prize in Paris are talking about the situation. Mitterand says it is "an unacceptable situation". Mr. Chirac says it is "an absurd conflict". I fundamentally agree with them both, Mr. Speaker, but not for the reasons they say.

I suggest it is time that the last of the empires on North American soil came to an end. The Spanish left several hundred years ago, the British have gone, and now it is time that the French got out of North American affairs.

Discussions with France should not be just on fish but also on this anachronism of history. St. Pierre and Miquelon should no longer be a curiosity clone of France but should take its proper territorial place and develop a status with Canada.

As a former colony, which found its national soul, Canada knows what independence is all about. It is time that St. Pierre and Miquelon cast aside the shackles of history, came out of the shadow of Napoleon, and entered the 20th century.

If France still stays imperial on fish, then it better get realistic in its relations with Canada. Why should we buy the French airbus or submarine if we cannot agree on basic cod?

The Canadian union is all embracing, and if Newfoundland can join the union and sustain its national distinct character, so can St. Pierre and Miquelon. Viva St. Pierre and Miquelon libre! Vive St. Pierre and Miquelon Canadien!

PROVINCIAL AFFAIRS

MANITOBA ELECTION

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, a few moments ago we heard about the appointment in this Chamber of the first Assistant Deputy Sergeant-at-Arms who happens to be a woman.

I would like to talk now about the first Premier of Canada who happens to be a woman, namely, Sharon Carstairs. Next Tuesday she will come up through the middle. The NDP have botched it in Manitoba. The New Democrats have autopacted themselves out of any possible government and the Conservatives have been forced to put their Leader under wraps. Every time they let him out to speak for a moment or two he takes one foot out of his mouth and replaces it with another.

The only Leader who is speaking the truth, the only Leader who is speaking with consistency, the only Leader who has taken a Party and led it from third place to the possibility of forming the Government is the fiery Sharon Carstairs. She will provide for the Liberal Party the kind of resurgence on the provincial scene that we will also see in the next federal election. Go to it, Sharon! Take those Tories out. You are going to be the next Premier, and congratulations.

HISTORIC EVENTS

ANNIVERSARY OF ARMENIAN GENOCIDE

Mr. W. Paul McCrossan (York-Scarborough): Mr. Speaker, on Sunday, April 24, the Armenian community in Canada will be commemorating the anniversary of the commencement of the Armenian genocide which began in 1915. Last year we discussed in the House setting aside a special day which would have occurred this week, not only to commemorate the Armenian and Jewish genocides of the first two World Wars, but also to focus on the acts of individual and state terrorism occurring in the present.

Seventy-three years ago may sound like ancient history to most Canadians. However, my point in presenting the motion was that it is really living history. Earlier this year we again learned of the wanton killing of peaceful Armenian civilians in Azerbaidzhan merely as a result of requesting a referendum.

Members of Parliament in all Parties join with the Armenian community in commemorating these tragic events.

ENERGY

ETHANOL ADVOCATED FOR USE IN AUTOMOBILES

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt—Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, by the end of 1992 all Canadian car owners will be driving automobiles powered by unleaded gasoline. Manufacturers will thus be in need of a good octane enhancer. Ethanol, an alcohol based fuel derived from agricultural sources, is just what the refineries need.

In spite of the proven ability of this product to fulfil Canadian fuel needs and at the same time help farmers by converting their lower quality feed grains into fuel, the tariff provisions in the Mulroney-Reagan trade deal favour the choice of a petrochemical octane enhancer over ethanol. As well, Canada's own Petro-Canada has been very negative about ethanol and has even refused to blend the product at its refinery in Taylor, B.C. Why does its shareholder, the Government of Canada, not instruct Petro-Canada to reconsider?

I urge the Minister to begin promoting ethanol for use in all Canadian cars by 1992 to avoid lead pollution and to enhance the agricultural sector.

NATIONAL VOLUNTEER WEEK

IMPORTANCE OF WORK OF VOLUNTEERS

Mr. William G. Lesick (Edmonton East): Mr. Speaker, the week of April 17 to 23 has been declared National Volunteer Week across Canada, and I ask all Hon. Members to join with me in saluting Canada's volunteers and in wishing them every success and continued participation.

We in Edmonton have been blessed with a legion of citizens who endlessly donate of themselves for causes that are truly honourable. Whether it is working at a sporting event, bringing cheer to hospital shut-ins or, as was evidenced after last summer's devastating tornado, pitching in to bring comfort and other essentials to the desperate and homeless, Edmonton's volunteer brigade is as vibrant as ever.

I am proud that the Government of Canada has taken such a positive and financially supportive stance in promoting the volunteer spirit in Canada. It is important that volunteers know that their time and efforts have not been spent in vain.

SEARCH AND RESCUE

EAST COAST—DEPLOYMENT OF HELICOPTERS

Mr. Howard Crosby (Halifax West): Mr. Speaker, marine accidents in Atlantic Canada have brought to national attention the need for a more responsive search and rescue system on the East Coast of Canada. While strengthening the human resources and equipment of the Canadian Coast Guard should be encouraged, the solution lies in the effective deployment of search and rescue helicopters operated by the Canadian Forces.

Only highly disciplined and dedicated service people can respond to the life or death situations that occur regularly on the North Atlantic. Our East Coast fishermen risk their lives on the open sea. Let us do everything possible to protect them.

ABORTION

SUPREME COURT DECISION—CALL FOR INTRODUCTION OF NEW LEGISLATION

Mr. Andrew Witer (Parkdale—High Park): Mr. Speaker, the Supreme Court decision which struck down Section 251 of the Criminal Code has sparked a heated and divisive debate in homes across Canada. As an individual opposed to abortion, I was deeply disappointed by the Supreme Court decision, as were many other Canadians who hold similar convictions.

While the court ruled that Section 251 violated the constitutional guarantee of life, liberty, and security of the person, the door was left wide open on the rights of the unborn child. Parliament must take up the challenge to define and protect the rights of the unborn child. We must ensure the rights of doctors and nurses to act according to their consciences. We must make certain that the new law is applied equally in every province. All of this must be accomplished in a manner consistent with the social, moral, and ethical standards of Canadian society.

Clearly the need for action is pressing. I urge the Minister of Justice (Mr. Hnatyshyn) to bring forth new legislation with all speed to fill the vacuum created by the Supreme Court decision.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

ACID RAIN—PRIME MINISTER'S FORTHCOMING MEETING WITH UNITED STATES PRESIDENT

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Acting Prime Minister. Following the Prime Minister's first summit with President Reagan in March of 1985, he said he had a deal on acid rain. He said the same thing following his summits of 1986 and 1987. However, to the great regret of all Canadians, the United States has not cut acid rain by one drop since the Prime Minister has taken office, despite all these great deals.

Now, the leading private environmental agency in the world, the Sierra Club, has said: "Mulroney is doing his own country a great disservice".

The Prime Minister is having his fourth and final summit with President Reagan next week. Will the President and the Prime Minister be signing a meaningful treaty to actually cut emissions of acid rain from the United States, or will this just be another summit full of photo opportunities and talk and no real action to cut acid rain?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, it will certainly not be the latter. The Hon. Member will know that this Government and the Prime Minister have given the highest possible priority, to the question of making progress on acid rain. We have made some progress, though not nearly enough. We will be continuing to press for progress on acid rain in this series of summits.

I find it curious that the Hon. Member would quote a publication suggesting that it is somehow against Canada's interests for the Prime Minister of Canada to make the fight against acid rain an international priority and for him and for his Government to assume leadership at home in Canada so that we can ensure that we go with our hands clean into those negotiations and discussions with the United States.

This Government has acted very vigorously to deal with the threat of acid rain to Canada. We have not had the success that we have been seeking. We continue to seek that kind of movement.

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, the fact is that the United States has not reduced its acid rain by one drop. In spite of the supposed efforts of the Prime Minister, his policy has been a failure.

[Translation]

COST OF DAMAGE CAUSED BY ACID RAIN—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Herb Gray (Windor West): Mr. Speaker, as far as summits with the President of United States are concerned, the Prime Minister is more interested in photo sessions than in reducing acid rain.

I therefore want to ask the Acting Prime Minister: Will the Prime Minister give President Reagan a bill at the next summit for the millions of dollars of damage to our lakes and forests, especially our maple forests, all as a result of U.S. acid rain? And will the Prime Minister ask President Reagan to have the United States pay for these damages immediately? Could he give the House a concrete answer with respect to these important and decisive issues?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I can give a concrete answer. Our Government is determined to continue its search for an international and bilateral solution to the acid rain question. We have made considerable progress. We have made more progress than the previous government, because we have consistently set a high priority on the acid rain issue. We have not attained our objectives, but we intend to continue to seek further progress.

[English]

The Hon. Member talks about whether or not we will be presenting a bill to the United States. That proposal was put forward by his colleague, the Liberal Party spokesman on the environment, some time ago. It is a classic example of a stunt: when you have no policy, you pursue a stunt. We have a policy, we have a goal. It is to reduce acid rain emissions in this country, and it is to reach an agreement with the United States. We are not interested in Liberal stunts.

PRIME MINISTER'S POSITION

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, the Acting Prime Minister is saying that he would prefer to have the Prime Minister sing When Irish Eyes Are Smiling than to do something concrete to get the United States to act finally on the damage it is doing to Canada because of its acid rain.

Will the Acting Prime Minister not admit that the Prime Minister made a monumental mistake when all he did over the past four years was praise, agree to, and accept the U.S. line that research was enough? Is it not a fact that all the Prime Minister has done is agree with President Reagan when he said that acid rain was caused by ducks and birds and trees?

• (1120)

The fact is that the Prime Minister has let pass a monumental opportunity to get action accomplished on acid rain. Will he not admit that failure? Everyone else in the country realizes that, and it is time that the Government admitted it as well.

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, that, of course, is not the case. I do not know of anyone in the country who holds that view except the Hon. House Leader of the Liberal Party and perhaps a duck or two which have been reading presidential directives. We have never accepted the view that research alone was enough.

The relevant comparison is between what was done by the Progressive Conservative Prime Minister on acid rain and what was done by his Liberal predecessors. His Liberal predecessors did not summon the courage to raise the issue in meetings with the President. We have not succeeded as much as we would want to, but it has been a consistent theme of ours.

Ms. Copps: We can swallow a lot, Joe, but we can't swallow that.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): The Hon. Member for Hamilton East is telling me what she can swallow. Frankly, I am not interested in what she can swallow. I am interested in the fact that the former Government took no effective action on acid rain. We have. We have not succeeded as much as we would like, but it continues to be a priority of the Government and the Prime Minister of Canada.

PUBLISHING INDUSTRY

GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, I have in my hand a letter issued by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, the former Minister of Communications, in which he is pleading for the application of the Government's book publishing policy, the Baie Comeau policy, to his colleague, the Minister of Industry.

He is saying that it is obvious that there is a split around the Cabinet table, that Canada is abandoning its own cultural policy, and that it is pretty obvious that the Minister of Communications is sitting there powerless.

My question is directed to the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion. Is the Government prepared to admit that it is betraying its own policy, that it is backing off under pressure from the Americans in the interests of free trade and thereby abandoning a very important sector of our cultural industry?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, the answer is quite clear. No, we are not backing away from anything. We are not giving in to any kind of pressures. I have never been under any pressure from the Americans on any of the issues which confront us in this area. The decision which was made in the case referred to by my hon. colleague is totally consistent with the Baie Comeau policy.

There is no split in Cabinet. Obviously, members of Cabinet have the right to express their opinions. We do that. We talk to each other. That may be a practice not known to the Opposition. We consider the positions of various members.

I am convinced that this, in no way, shape, or form, goes against the Baie Comeau policy and in no way, shape, or form goes against the Investment Canada Act.

[Translation]

Mrs. Finestone: That is totally false and the Minister knows it!

IMPLEMENTATION OF CULTURAL POLICY

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, our cultural industries need distribution outlets, and the Cabinet knows it. Could you explain to me why the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources had to plead with his Cabinet colleagues to stop them from abandoning the entire book publishing policy to American interests? At stake is the survival of the cultural industries, so that is a bad policy for Canada. You are well aware that you have jeopardized the cultural industries. Why don't you apply this policy, as it should be?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, my honourable friend's preambule is totally false. As I mentioned in reply to her first question . . .

[English]

Ms. Copps: Why the letter?

Mr. de Cotret: —because we consult with each other and I am always interested in the opinions of my colleagues.

With regard to this transaction, NAL Canada is not a full distributor. For example, the company pays no accounts receivable, it performs no accounting functions, it does no invoicing of accounts receivable, it makes no significant management decisions, it does no promotion, it has no distribution contract with NAL U.S., it holds no sales conferences, and has no computer installation other than a terminal linked to the main computer of NAL U.S. It is a warehousing operation that does not fall under the Baie Comeau policy.

THE ENVIRONMENT

ACID RAIN—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the the Secretary of State for External Affairs. The Prime Minister and President Reagan have discussed the acid rain issue at every summit. Again a month ago the Prime Minister of Canada criticized President Reagan, but yesterday our Minister of the Environment said that the Canadian Government did not expect positive results. What is hapening here? Is this mere grandstanding for domestic political motives?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): As far as we are concerned, Mr. Speaker, the acid rain threat is definitely more than grandstanding, it is a fundamental issue which affects both the environment and the integrity of our country. This is why we have given such high priority to our negotiations with the Americans with respect to the mutual reduction of acid rain. We have not been as successful as we had hoped, but we will continue to seek an agreement on acid rain. It is the Prime Minister's personal priority and that of all Ministers in this Government. We did suggest specific means to achieve something, and I hope we will continue to make progress. However the American approach is the antithesis of our basic premise.

[English]

REQUEST FOR PRE-SUMMIT STATEMENT

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, the Minister knows that the truth is that the Prime Minister of Canada has not made a single critical observation of President Reagan after these summits. In fact, incredibly enough, he praised him for progress after the last summit when the President committed himself to absolutely nothing.

The Prime Minister said in his speech in New York that friendship has inescapable costs. Considering that the Americans have the friendship but the Canadians have paid the costs in this, is the Prime Minister for once prepared to say, in advance of this summit, that unless President Reagan commits himself to very specific reductions in levels of emissions, the Government of Canada will regard this summit as a failure? Will the Prime Minister say that in advance of the summit?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I do not have before me in the House the precise language used by the President of the United States when he spoke to this Chamber. However, I think my memory is quite good. At that time the President indicated that he was going to consider seriously the proposal of the Prime Minister of Canada for an accord. That was certainly the intent of what was put forward.

Canada has followed up with some detailed suggestions as to how that might be given effect. We have not been successful in getting that accepted yet.

Surely what is at issue here is that we have given this a priority. We have worked very hard to achieve it and we intend to continue to do that.

The Leader of the New Democratic Party has an approach which I would think novel except that it is, unfortunately, characteristic of his Party. He wants us to condemn the results of the meeting before the Prime Minister arrives in the United States. That would be rather like a political Party saying: "We are in favour of NATO but we are going to get out".

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: Another example of high wit from the Conservative Party.

Mr. Nystrom: Half-wit.

CANADIAN POSITION

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I hope the Minister will deal with the question. The Minister knows that the people of Canada take this issue very seriously. Whether or not the Government does is another issue.

The Minister responsible said yesterday, and I quote, that the Government of Canada has no expectations of any progress. That is what the Minister of the Crown who has responsibility is saying before the summit takes place. We want the Government to stop fooling around on this issue.

• (1130)

In the past on such questions as the South African issue, the Government has said before a conference that unless there is progress of a specific kind it would regard the conference as a failure. Why does the Government of Canada not take the same approach on this important issue for Canadians and say that unless Mr. Reagan—the only politician in the world who believes that trees cause acid rain—makes progress, the meeting will be a failure? Why does the Government of Canada not act with some gumption on this issue?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, because the meeting between the President and the Prime Minister—a very important development in our relations with our largest bilateral partner—deals with a range of issues. To say that they will all be a failure because we are unable to make the progress we want on acid rain would be a foolish position.

We are very concerned that we have been unable to persuade the United States Administration to see what we believe the world sees with regard to the cause and the importance of acid rain.

Mr. Tobin: Why not give someone else a chance.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): I hear from a Liberal that someone else should be given a chance. The Liberal Party had a chance for years and did not even have the courage to raise the question at presidential levels.

I may well have misrepresented the New Democratic Party. I see they are raising their hands. It could be that their position in fact is: "We are not in favour of NATO so we are going to stay".

PUBLISHING INDUSTRY

INVESTMENT CANADA—GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion, who just said that in his opinion the takeover of New American Library by Penguin does not come under the policy of the Government.

Let me remind him that a letter he received from the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources on April 13, 1988, begins by saying just the contrary. The letter states that this takeover:

> ... clearly falls under the guidelines established by our Government concerning acquisitions in the book industry in Canada. (It goes without saying that any distribution company needs warehouse facilities.)

The jewel which the Minister does not want to mention is that the Minister said in his letter:

> ... in deciding not to apply the 1985 policy, Investment Canada makes itself vulnerable to accusations that the Government is backing off under pressure from the United States, where dislike of the measures that apply to foreign investment in publishing and distribution has been vocal.

Will the Minister honestly admit that he has been caving in to the Americans in order to make sure that they are pleased and the trade deal will pass? Is that not the reason? Why not be honest?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, I am being honest. I have not been lobbied on this issue by anyone from the U.S.

Mr. Tobin: Your fellow Minister.

Mr. de Cotret: I have heard the comments of my colleagues. I have looked at the facts. I can assure you that, to the best of my knowledge and my judgment, this decision falls well within the Baie Comeau policy and well within Investment Canada policy. There has been absolutely no pressure. That is a figment of the imagination of my colleague opposite.

NEGOTIATION OF CULTURAL MATTERS

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, here is a figment of the imagination of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources:

> I remain convinced that the popularity of the trade agreement will be related to our success in demonstrating to Canadians that we have not sacrificed our cultural sovereignty in pursuit of this agreement.

Mr. Tobin: Who said that?

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): This is from the Minister of Energy.

[Translation]

The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources himself, who used to be the minister responsible for culture, is telling us that the Government put cultural issues on the table, something the Government has always denied. Today, admit yourself, Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion, or you, Secretary of State of Canada, that you negotiated culture with the Americans and that you did so on your knees instead of standing up for Canadians.

[English]

Hon. Robert de Cotret (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion and Minister of State for Science and Technology): First, Mr. Speaker, the preamble contradicts the preamble of the Member's first question. In the former question I was accused of caving in to American pressure. I have not been lobbied by anyone on this issue. As we always do in cases like this, we consult with other Departments. We consulted with the Department of Communications, which agreed that this did not fall within the purview of the Baie Comeau policy.

I can only say that this company pays no accounts receivable, performs no accounting functions, does no invoicing of accounts receivable, makes no significant management decisions, does no promotion, has no distribution contract with NAL U.S. and holds no sales conferences. It is a warehousing operation and does not fall within the purview of the policy. I am sorry to disappoint the Hon. Member, but it is just not there.

ACID RAIN—PRIME MINISTER'S FORTHCOMING MEETING WITH UNITED STATES PRESIDENT

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview—Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Let me express our very great concern with his answers to the Hon. Member for Oshawa. They are just not good enough.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Ms. McDonald: When the Minister of the Environment says that he does not expect any progress with President Reagan on the issue of acid rain, is that not giving up? Is it a satisfactory answer to tell Canadians that we have given up on this subject?

Will he not say that it is absolutely essential to get an agreement for real reductions in emissions that cause acid rain and that nothing less will be considered a success? Will he not agree that that is absolutely fundamental in our relationship with the United States?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the only proposal that I have heard about giving up on acid rain was the proposal by the Leader of the New Democratic Party a few minutes ago when, as I understood him, he said that before the meeting begins we should declare a failure on the question of acid rain. That may be the NDP position, but we do not think that is a very fruitful way to proceed.

I have indicated that we have taken a number of initiatives with the United States. We have proposed an accord with them. We have made very clear that our objective with the United States is an acid rain accord which contains specific targets and a timetable of emission reductions. We have proposed specific ways that that can be done.

I think it would be the height of folly for us to adopt the NDP advice and call the meetings a failure before they begin. I am not optimistic that we will be able to get a great deal of progress on this issue in the summit next week, but the Prime Minister, the Minister of the Environment, and I will continue to press because the environment of Canada is too important to abandon, as the NDP appears to propose.

AGENDA FOR MEETING

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview—Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question concerns the notion of trade-off to which the Hon. Minister was referring earlier in answer to the Hon. Member for Oshawa. He suggested that there are other items on the agenda and would not consider the summit meeting a failure if progress was made on the other items. We want to make it very clear that the environment is not to be traded off against other items. That is absolutely fundamental. Will he at least say that?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, there can be no question that the environment cannot be traded off against other issues. Neither can there be any question, as far as we are concerned, that we do not want to write off the chances of progress on the environment before conferences occur.

The NDP is at least consistent. Their attitude on NATO is to get out; their attitude on free trade is to get out; their attitude on acid rain is that, because we have made no progress, get out. That is nonsense.

FISHERIES

BLAZING OIL TANKER—POSSIBLE HAZARD TO ATLANTIC FISHING GROUNDS

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Acting Minister of Fisheries and Oceans. The Minister will know that an unidentified oil tanker has broken in two and is ablaze about 370 miles south-southeast of Cape Race, Newfoundland. I know that all Members will regret any loss of life in this incident.

The vessel appears to have been sailing the Great Circle route in the Gulf Stream. The Gulf Stream flows north, past the Georges Bank, a very rich fishing ground, and north, past the Grand Banks, an equally rich and important fishing ground.

Will the Minister advise the House what action Canada has taken in conjunction with the United States to protect our environment and particularly to contain any potential oil spill that could have disastrous consequences for both the Georges Bank and the Grand Banks?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, as the Hon. Member pointed out, this vessel is in international waters. The rescue efforts are being co-ordinated by the United States Coast Guard. The House will know that Canadian aircraft are now in the air searching for survivors.

The Department of the Environment and the Department of Transport are monitoring the situation. They advise that most of the oil seems to be burning off. There is no sign of any oil slick yet. If there is an oil slick, it would likely be carried northeast by the Gulf Stream and would not threaten fish stocks in Canadian waters.

If the situation changes and there is a pollution threat, our Department of Environment and other Departments will react accordingly. The situation is being monitored. We do not see it as a major threat, certainly not at this particular stage.

• (1140)

OIL SPILL CONTAINMENT MEASURES

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, I thank the Minister for his answer. I appreciate the information is still very sketchy with respect to this particular incident. I wonder if the Minister can assure the House and, through the House, assure Canadians, particularly Atlantic Canadians, that the Government is now taking the preparatory action and has the means to take the preparatory action to contain any potential oil slick?

I agree that if the oil burns off, all of us will be well served. However, the Minister knows that we have to act quickly to contain any oil slick if we are to protect the Georges Bank fishing grounds and, indeed, the Gulf Stream flows right by those grounds and ultimately by the Grand Banks. Can the Minister give the people of Canada, particularly the fishermen of Atlantic Canada, the assurance that the Government is ready, willing and able to act today?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, the latest information I have is that there is a slick and that the American aircraft is evaluating that slick today. But let us keep this in perspective. This is some 300 miles off our coast. It is not a slick that is going to come in. I have already explained the direction of the slick. These incidents do happen on the world's oceans everywhere. The situation is being monitored. If there is any action that needs to be taken and can reasonably be taken, our Government, I suppose in conjunction with the U.S. Government, would take whatever action we can reasonably take in these circumstances. This is an incident that is happening out at sea and beyond our 200-mile economic zone.

AUDITOR GENERAL

EXPENDITURES ON INTERNATIONAL AUDITING MATTERS

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for the Treasury Board. As the Minister is aware, the Auditor General is currently spending some 25 per cent of his time and about 3 per cent of the total budget of his office, that budget being some $48 million a year, on international auditing matters for which there is no legislative mandate or authority.

Will the Minister advise the House if it is the Government's intention to introduce legislation to amend the Auditor General Act to give the Auditor General authority in this area and to legalize these expenditures? Will he also explain to the House why for 40 years now the Auditor General has been permitted to continue these expenditures on international auditing matters and for 40 years apparently the Treasury Board has been approving these illegal expenditures?

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of State and Minister of State (Treasury Board)): Mr. Speaker, I cannot really deal with the last 40 years but I am prepared to deal with the present. I think it is fair to say, and I know my friend has a list of this information in committee, that Governments are traditionally reluctant to do anything which would appear to interfere with the independence of the Auditor General. At the same time, I think a case can be made for broadening the knowledge of the Auditor General in other countries through international relations.

I would suggest in this matter that if in fact the Auditor General was operating without legislative authority, there are two course of action which may be appropriate. One course of action would be for the Auditor General to seek amendments to the Auditor General Act from the Government. The other alternative might be for the committee, either the Public Accounts Committee or the Finance Committee, to follow this up and present a recommendation to the House.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier—I mean Ottawa Centre.

Mr. Cassidy: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I do intend to run in Ottawa Centre next time.

Mr. Speaker: I apologize to the Hon. Member. I realize it does cause distress when the riding is improperly identified, and I extend my apologies.

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, since you reside in my constituency, I accept that with pleasure.

AUTOMOTIVE INDUSTRY

CLOSURE OF PARTS PLANT

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Industry, Science and Technology. It concerns the impact of the new rise in bank interest rates and the continued high level of the Canadian dollar on Canadian workers and industry. Does the Minister agree with his colleague, the Minister of Finance, who told the House yesterday that if an automobile parts plant in Windsor has had to close, it is not the fault of the current high rates of interest, or the fault of the current high rate of the dollar, but that there are "other things wrong with it"?

Is it the policy of the Government to put the blame on workers and plant managers if plants close because of the Government's tight money policy? Or is the Minister prepared, with the Government, to press the Bank of Canada to bring interest rates down to more reasonable levels?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion and Minister of State for Science and Technology): First, Mr. Speaker, I can tell my hon. colleague that I just happen to agree with my colleague, the Minister of Finance. Second, I would like to say that interest rates today, just to enlighten my hon. colleague from Ottawa Centre, are significantly lower than what we have known in past years. That is largely because of the initiatives that were taken by my hon. colleague, the Minister of Finance. As a result, the Canadian economy and Canadian industry are doing much better.

INTEREST RATE LEVELS

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, what I hear the Minister of Industry, Science and Technology saying is that despite the objections of the Canadian Exporters' Association at the high level of the dollar, despite the objections of the Canadian Manufacturers' Association at the high level of the dollar, he is not prepared to have the Government take any responsibility. If they are having trouble, it is all their fault. You are simply going to point the other way and say someone else is responsible.

Is the Minister aware that the Government's estimate just two months ago for interest rates in 1988 called for interest rates of 8.6 per cent average over the course of the year, but they have now risen to 10.25 per cent and are continuing to rise? What will be the impact of that sharp increase in interest rates from the Government's forecast in terms of Canadian industry, Canadian jobs, and Canada's depressed regions? Will the Government bring forward a new forecast next week to see what its tight money policy is doing to Canadian workers and industry?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, in answer to my colleague, the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre, what our policies are really doing are creating jobs, the fastest rate of job creation we have known in this country for decades. It is the fastest rate of growth in job creation in any of the industrialized nations. They have maintained our inflation rate stable. They have brought down interest rates. Our economy right now is outpacing the economy of the U.S. and Japan. It is outpacing the economies of all our major trading partners. That is what our policies have done. That is what our policies will continue to do, to ensure that this country, in terms of economic performance, is well ahead of any other country in the world in relative terms. That is what we are doing.

CANADA POST CORPORATION

TRANSPORTATION OF MAIL TO EUROPE

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister responsible for Canada Post. Last Monday Canada Post abandoned the long tradition of transporting mail to Europe by way of Canadian based airlines. Does the Minister approve of the new Canada Post policy of sending Canadian mail to Europe by way of truck to New York and then using Interstate Airlines of Little Rock, Arkansas? Will the Minister tell the people of Canada Post, the ones with those little rocks rattling in their heads, to come to their senses? What is the Minister doing about this horrible situation?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, when Canada Post Corporation was unanimously created by this House, it was for the purposes of allowing it to operate independent of the kind of political interference the Hon. Member now seems to suggest I should engage in. As I understand from Canada Post with respect to this contract, in order to meet competition it was seeking the ability to meet a 24-hour turnaround or delivery time for special express mail to Europe. Because of the schedules of airlines, and so on, this could only be met by the particular airline with which it contracted. It had extensive conversations with the Canadian carriers and they are simply not able to make it.

The other difficulty in terms of long-term relationships is that the Canadian carriers had added the mail to normal passenger flights if space was available. Canada Post, in endeavouring to improve service, put in a requirement that it must be guaranteed space and Canadian carriers were not willing or able to meet that requirement.

• (1150)

If the Hon. Member wants more details, then why does he not go before committee when Canada Post will appear in the not too distant future?

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, I suppose the next thing is that we will be labelling our mail "U.S. Mail".

[Translation]

JUSTIFICATION FOR EXPENDITURE OF $3 MILLION

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Minister how he can justify spending $3 million a year more. How can he justify spending $8,000 a day more than before to send mail to Europe?

Why not take this $3 million a year to give postal service to Canadians instead of giving $3 million to the Americans?

[English]

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I do not know from where the Hon. Member got those figures. He probably invented them, along with most of the other accusations he makes.

I suppose he may not be aware of it but I understand that previously when Canadian carriers had the contract, and because they did not have the space to fulfil the contract obligations, they subcontracted to KLM. I guess we had "Dutch Mail" then, did we?

The Hon. Member is asking stupid questions that really ought to be asked in another—

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Annapolis Valley—Hants.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

STATUS OF ST. PIERRE AND MIQUELON

Mr. Pat Nowlan (Annapolis Valley—Hants): Mr. Speaker, this will not be that type of question, obviously. It is addressed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs.

In all the discussions and debate over St. Pierre and Miquelon, and the question of fish and who has what fish and what quota, has there been any discussion at all between our Government and the Government of France about the status of St. Pierre and Miquelon and the fact that it is long overdue that that last vestige of an old empire should get out of North American affairs? If we have not advanced it, is there any position within External Affairs that is being studied so that we can start to move to have that type of status?

After all, if Newfoundland can join Canada and maintain its distinct character, and there can be other distinct characters in Canada, then St. Pierre and Miquelon could very well enjoy a very interesting status.

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the answer to those questions is no. The Hon. Member would know that if there were to be any initiative of that kind to be taken by any political entity not now associated with Canada, that would have to be initiated in that other political entity. To my knowledge there is nothing of that kind occurring. We certainly have no intention of initiating some action of that kind.

PUBLISHING INDUSTRY

NEW AMERICAN LIBRARY ACQUISITION

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion who clearly does have a difference of opinion with the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources.

The Minister of Energy says very clearly in this letter that the New American Library acquisition clearly falls under the guidelines established by our Government. He also says that his own Department has been affected by this because: "— other foreign investors who have complied with the policy . . . will perceive that they have been dealt with unfairly and will argue that the Government is capricious in the application of its own policies." Investors value one quality—

Mr. Speaker: I would ask Hon. Members, especially taking into account the time, not to quote unduly and to put their questions directly.

Mr. Langdon: Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

My question is this. In view of the Minister's statement that this represents an inconsistency, why has the Minister taken it upon himself to establish this inconsistency with respect to that important takeover?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, as I have answered before, and I will again, after a careful review of the request that was put before us in Investment Canada, my officials and myself, after consultation with the respective Departments, came to the conclusion that this particular transaction did not fall under the Baie Comeau policy and was fully consistent with the objectives and the guidelines contained in the Investment Canada Act.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member on a short supplementary, please.

MINISTERS' POSITIONS

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is for the Acting Prime Minister. How does the Government intend to deal with this split between the Minister who established this policy and the Minister who is now in charge of it?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, there is no split. Of course, if this were the New Democratic Party and there were a split the New Democratic Party would simply get out of the split, too, like it would get out of NATO, the free trade agreement, and they would tear up everything that would come before it.

MUNITIONS

EXPORTS OF GUNPOWDER

Mr. John Nunziata (York South—Weston): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. It concerns large shipments of gunpowder which was manufactured in Canada, which made its way to Iran and was used in the Iran-Iraq war.

As the Minister knows, late last year his Department issued export permits to Expro Chemical Products of Valleyfield, Quebec, which is the largest privately run gunpowder factory in North America. These export permits were issued to allow the shipment of gunpowder to Portugal which has a reputation of being an arms gateway to Iran.

My question to the Secretary of External Affairs is as follows. How was it possible for these export permits to be issued when his Department knew or ought to have known that the ultimate destination for this gunpowder was Iran?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, if the Hon. Member is making an allegation that the Government knew that the ultimate destination was Iran, then he is wrong. He knows that this is an issue with some history, including a history of discussion in this House.

He knows that there has been an RCMP investigation that has cleared Expro of any fault or guilt in the matter. He knows that there are investigations continuing in Europe with regard to follow-on actions of this kind. He knows that immediately the matter was raised in the House of Commons I issued an order that there should be no new export permits issued to Expro.

I have read reports, as he may well have, that there has been some action taken by Expro on some export permits that were issued to it prior to the order that I gave. I am very concerned about those reports. I learned about them today, and I am looking into them. I will report to the House once I have some result to those investigations.

EXPORT PERMITS

Mr. John Nunziata (York South—Weston): Mr. Speaker, the Secretary of State for External Affairs or his Department knew that these export permits were issued even though the Dutch Government had suspended exports to Portugal of a company which is a partner of Expro of Canada.

If the Government was aware that the Dutch Government had taken action, why did it issue the permits? Does the Minister not believe that his Department ought to have known that the Dutch Government had taken the action that it took against the partner of Expro?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, on the general question, we cannot know everything. Unlike the Hon. Member, when I do not know something I do not pretend that I do. I have answered the question that the Hon. Member put forward. Not only have I answered it, we have acted on it.

We stopped the issuance of export permits. As soon as this matter arose an RCMP investigation was caused to be undertaken. That has found that there was no violation of the law by Expro.

There are ongoing investigations regarding other connections that may have occurred outside our jurisdiction by other police forces in other countries.

The issue that concerns me in any event, and which should concern the Hon. Member, is that it appears as though there might have been some action taken on pre-existing export permits after I had issued an order that no new permits be given. I am concerned about that. That would be a mistake if it occurred. I want to find out exactly what happened and why.

Even though the Hon. Member did not ask the important question, I will certainly report to him and to the House upon the results of my enquiries.

HUMAN RIGHTS

POLAND—IMPRISONMENT OF DR. KORNEL MORAWIECKI

Mr. Andrew Witer (Parkdale—High Park): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. He will know that Dr. Kornel Morawiecki, leader of the Polish opposition group, Fighting Solidarity, has been imprisoned by Polish authorities since November, 1987. Dr. Morawiecki's only crime is his dedication to democracy, freedom, and fundamental human rights.

• (1200)

Can the Minister tell the House what actions the Government of Canada is taking to secure the release of Dr. Morawiecki, and to reprimand authorities in Poland for violating the letter and spirit of the Helsinki Accord?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I am familiar with the case of Dr. Morawiecki, and certainly know the interest of the Hon. Member in the case.

The Hon. Member will know when I was in Poland earlier in this session I raised the question of the need to put in place arrangements that would allow Canada to deal more effectively with this broad category of question.

With respect to the particular case, I have asked our embassy in Warsaw to monitor the status of that case. I have also brought it to the attention of Canada's delegation to the third follow-up meeting of the Conference on Security and Co-operation that is meeting in Vienna.

As we have progress, and I hope we do have progress, I will naturally keep the Hon. Member closely informed.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Windsor—Walkerville, a single question, please.

APARTHEID

SOUTH AFRICA—CANADIAN EXPORTS OF RIFLE NIGHT SIGHT MATERIAL

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs.

Would the Secretary of State for External Affairs explain to the House, and to those of us who are concerned about the defeat of apartheid in South Africa, how it is that his Department has approved the sale of germanium crystals and indium antimonide in sufficient amounts to supply night sights for hundreds of rifles to South Africa?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I do not believe that is the case, but the Hon. Member is usually very careful about his facts. I will take a look at the facts, see what they are, and report to him. If there is a need for us to tighten our arrangements, if there is some loophole that I have not seen, I will certainly try to close it.

That is the best answer that I can give to that question at this time in the House.

Mr. Speaker: I would like to advise the House that there will be a single question from the Hon. Member for Hamilton East, followed by a single question from the Hon. Member for York—Scarborough, if the Hon. Member is present.

CONSUMER AFFAIRS

LABELLING OF FAST FOODS

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, my question was going to be directed to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs in the absence of the Minister of National Health and Welfare, but I believe that he has just left so I will ask the Acting Minister of National Health and Welfare the following question.

I have here in my hand letters from across the country, petitions, resolutions passed by more than 30 municipalities in the Province of Ontario, more than 12 school boards, 16 Members of Parliament, including Conservatives, as well as Members of the Legislature in the Province of Ontario, supporting legislation to restrict the sale of fast foods across the country to fast foods that are labelled so that lives can be saved, particularly in the case of people who suffer from severe food allergies.

I wish to ask the Acting Minister of National Health and Welfare, given that the Government has refused to introduce its own Bill on the matter, whether the Government will be prepared to support the Bill that I am in fact tabling today, and of which I gave a copy to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I can only give a procedural answer to that question, for reasons the Hon. Member will obviously understand. I will take her representation as notice and convey it to my colleague.

GOVERNMENT RESPONSE

Mr. Richard Grisé (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 106(8), I have the honour of tabling, in both official languages, the Government's response to fifty-two petitions numbered as follows: 332-4059 to 332-4065, inclusive; 332-4138, 332-4217 to 332-4222, inclusive; 332-4230 to 332-4232, inclusive; and 332-4246 to 332-4280, inclusive.

FOOD AND DRUGS ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-289, an Act to amend the Food and Drugs Act.

The Deputy Speaker: Shall the Hon. Member have leave to introduce the said Bill?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Ms. Copps: Mr. Speaker, the intent of this Bill is very simple. It would require each restaurant to make available for public consultation a list of all ingredients in any food sold by it, and specifically it would also compel each branch or chain restaurant to affix on the packaging of any packaged food sold by it a list of the ingredients in the food. We feel that this is a life saving measure which should be supported by all Members of the House.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

BLOCK AVERAGING OF INCOME

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt—Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have a petition that has gone through the proper procedures under Standing Order 106. The petition is from residents of the Wishart, Wynyard, and Elfros areas of my riding. They call upon the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) who, on December 16, 1987, indicated his intention to eliminate block averaging, to accept the recommendation of the Standing Committee on Finance and Economic Affairs to retain block averaging for farmers and fishermen as stated in its report on the White Paper on tax reform, stage one.

LABELLING OF FAST-FOOD INGREDIENTS

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, I have several petitions, and following the practice of the House to table them together, I will do so.

The petitions are primarily from the Chatham area. The petitioners call upon the Government and Parliament to ensure that legislation and regulations are enacted to require ingredient labelling of take-out and fast foods, and public access in all restaurants to a complete list of food ingredients for sale in the restaurant establishment.

I have several dozen signatures from the Chatham area, primarily as a result of a tragic death in that area. I am sure there will be many more coming in the near future.

IMMIGRATION—FAMILY REUNIFICATION PROGRAM

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, it is my duty and honour to present a petition from some hundred and more residents of the City of Toronto, mainly from the riding of Spadina, but also from other constituencies in Metro Toronto.

The petitioners are concerned that last year the then Minister of State for Immigration promised that unmarried sons and daughters of all ages would be considered as members of the family class of immigrants, and that married children and brothers and sisters in the assisted relative class would get 15 points instead of 10 points when they were assessed for immigration to Canada.

The former Minister of Justice promised that the unfair distinction between Canadians citizens and permanent residents of three years or more would be eliminated, in order that both groups would have equal rights to sponsor parents of any age.

Whereas none of these promises has yet been fulfilled, these undersigned citizens and residents of Canada, call on the House of Commons to ensure that the Government fulfils its promises in these matters now.

CANADA-U.S. FREE TRADE AGREEMENT

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, I also have a petition from some 150 residents of Toronto, Windsor, Sudbury, Guelph, Aurora, Mississauga, Scarborough, and North York, in the Province of Ontario.

The petitioners point out that the fabric of Canadian sovereignty is threatened by the proposed Mulroney-Reagan trade deal, for which the Government had no mandate whatsoever; this trade deal will reduce Canada's ability to plan our economic, social, and cultural programs; and it will integrate Canada further into the North American defence industrial base.

Therefore, for those reasons, the undersigned ask the House of Commons to ensure that a national debate take place on the Mulroney-Reagan trade deal, and that this debate result in a national general election before any agreement is signed.

PROTECTION OF RIGHTS OF THE UNBORN

Mrs. Claudy Mailly (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, I have petitions signed by some 79 people. These are, in part, people who worship at the St-Columbans and St-Aloysius parishes in Gatineau. They live in that community as well as in Perkins, Quebec, and Ottawa, Ontario. They have asked me to present these petitions because they are concerned that the Supreme Court has struck down Canada's abortion law, leaving unborn children without any legal protection. They feel the unborn should be protected by law and that the court has said Parliament can act on this matter. I am therefore presenting these petitions in their name.

• (1210)

OPPOSITION TO BILL C-72—OFFICIAL LANGUAGES

Mr. Alex Kindy (Calgary East): Mr. Speaker, it is an honour for me to present a petition on behalf of over 200 Calgarians who believe that Bill C-72 discriminates against unilingual Canadians and therefore does not help them to get a promotion in the Public Service of Canada. They wish that this Bill would die on the Order Paper.

Questions on the Order Paper

SUPPORT FOR BILL C-54 TO COMBAT PORNOGRAPHY

Mr. Geoff Wilson (Swift Current—Maple Creek): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour and duty to present petitions on two topics. The first petition is from a number of residents of Swift Current, Saskatchewan, parishioners of the First United Church, who are concerned about Bill C-54. They humbly pray and call upon Parliament to support the Bill which would make it illegal to manufacture, import, sell or rent pornographic material as defined in the Bill. They call upon the Government to pass Bill C-54 without dilution in the belief that this Bill gives recognition to the inherent dignity of individuals, particularly women and young people who are most vulnerable to exploitation in this area.

BLOCK AVERAGING OF INCOME

Mr. Wilson (Swift Current—Maple Creek): Mr. Speaker, I have two further petitions from residents of southwestern Saskatchewan who are concerned that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), in December of 1987, indicated his intention to eliminate block averaging for farmers. The petitioners humbly pray and call upon Parliament to take the necessary steps to retain block averaging for farmers as recommended by the Standing Committee on Finance and Economic Affairs in its report on the White Paper on tax reform, stage one.

NORTHERN TAX ALLOWANCE

Mr. John Parry (Kenora—Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, I have today two petitions, one signed mostly by residents of Ignace, Ontario, and the second signed by residents of Dryden and Vermilion Bay, Ontario, all in my riding. The petitioners feel that the application of the northern residents tax allowance is unjust and divides northerners, making some communities eligible and some neighbouring communities ineligible. Therefore, they humbly pray and call upon Parliament to designate all communities in tier three ridings as eligible for the allowance.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

Mr. Richard Grisé (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I ask that all questions be allowed to stand.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Shall all questions stand?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

CUSTOMS TARIFF

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed consideration of the motion of the Minister of Finance that Bill C-118, an Act to amend the Customs Tariff, be read the third time and passed.

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have an opportunity to speak on Bill C-118, an Act to establish the Canadian International Trade Tribunal. I would first like to outline the main points of the Bill and the main concerns my Party has with it.

The Bill is something with which my Party is generally in agreement. It combines three existing agencies, the Canadian Import Tribunal, the Tariff Board, and the Textile and Clothing Board. It is the last board with which I have had the most association on account of the presence in Spadina of a very large textile and clothing industry. The duties and functions of the new tribunal are, first, to inquire and report on economic trade or commercial matters as requested by the Government. I will come back to that because that is a limitation on the powers presently available to the Textile and Clothing Board, a very grave limitation.

Second, it has the duty to inquire and report to the Minister of Finance on any tariff-related matter, including Canada's international rights and obligations. The Government will set the terms of reference for those two inquiry functions. In addition to its research functions, the new tribunal will take over the existing appeal function of the Tariff Board. It will hear appeals of Revenue Canada decisions regarding customs and excise duties and classifications.

Finally, the tribunal will provide direct access on injury inquiries. When a Canadian industry considers that it has been injured it will have direct access to the board. We are particularly in favour of that aspect of its functions.

At present the Textile and Clothing Board provides the right of direct access for an injury inquiry upon petition by producers. That is to say, if clothing or textile producers feel they are being injured by imports or subsidies in a foreign country, they have the right to petition directly to the Textile and Clothing Board. That right is now to be extended to other industries, and we are in favour of that.

The new tribunal will then examine whether the increased imports are the primary cause of the injury. Obviously there could be loss of business for reasons other than imports, even if imports were also present. Therefore, it will examine whether the imports are the primary cause of the injury. However, it cannot deal with subsidized and anti-dumping conditions for injury inquiries.

I am very concerned that it will not be able to deal with subsidies. The matter of subsidies has been a very important point during the last several years, particularly in the discussions about the trade deal with the U.S. They have accused us of subsidies and they are vulnerable to the same accusation. I think it is very unfortunate that this new board will be prevented from inquiring into such things.

Our main concerns, but not our sole concerns, with the board are as follows. We agree with the Canadian Manufacturers' Association—

Mr. Redway: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I believe the Hon. Member's remarks are being directed towards Bill C-110 rather than Bill C-118. As you know, Bill C-118 is before the House for debate. The question of the import tribunal is Bill C-110, and perhaps you might ask the Hon. Member to direct his remarks to the correct Bill, or perhaps he would like to finish his remarks at this stage.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Could I ask the Hon. Member to be relevant to the Bill, please?

Mr. Heap: Mr. Speaker, I accept the correction of the Hon. Member. I was under the mistaken impression that we would begin Bill C-110. I am sorry if I misunderstood.

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, I should like to speak on Bill C-118 for a brief period of time. It is noted that this Bill introduces amendments to the customs tariff in response to a request from the private sector. Duties are being removed on a range of equipment used by the oilsands industry, such as certain differentials, compressors for motor vehicles, steel rods for farm silos, recording tapes used to make cassettes for the blind, certain model kits, and burial shrouds. The Bill also provides for a few technical amendments to the customs tariff.

It is, as others have remarked, not a big Bill. We can compare this Bill to C-87. Bill C-87 concerned the development and implementation of a new harmonized system. A great deal of work was done on tariffs and so on. Much of what was of concern to manufacturers, importers and other business people was satisfied in that legislation. In any case, as one of the Parliamentary Secretaries to the Deputy Prime Minister and the President of the Privy Council noted, most people are preoccupied with the free trade agreement that has been negotiated with the United States. We are waiting to see what the Government will do with legislation to implement the agreement. We are waiting also to see what will happen in the United States on that agreement and what its impact will be on the Trade Bill now being considered in Congress as well as other activities that must occur in the United States in that regard.

One of the elements of the free trade agreement that concerns us all is what it may mean to the future economic development in our country. We have a reputation for selling off our vast resources to other countries to the profit of those who own companies involved in shipping our wood, minerals, fish, coal and oil which produce jobs. The primary motivation of the Americans, is to ensure the availability of just those resources that we have. Of course, the old pattern of selling off our resources to Japan, Europe, the United States or Great Britain so jobs can be produced elsewhere rather than in Canada has, over the years, inescapably led to a never tested, rather casual, happy economic existence for this country because we did not take a close look at the real world. It is wrong that those same elements in our society and in the United States which sold off our resources cheaply so jobs could be produced elsewhere will be able by this agreement to ensure that that state of affairs continues in Canada.

There is a lesson in the contents of this Bill which refers to a number of items. Let me just list a few as they are listed in the schedule attached. Other Members have made reference to this list, but let me do it again. First, with respect to the removal of tariffs, these include those on specified machinery used by the oil sands production industry, certain compressors and differentials for automotive vehicles, steel rods used in the construction of silos, unrecorded magnetic tapes used to make cassettes for the blind, certain model kits and burial shrouds.

Mr. Speaker and colleagues in this House, does it not strike you as being a little ridiculous that Canada does not manufacture burial shrouds, much less the electronic technology and construction equipment and equipment for the oil sands industry? Does it not strike you as ironic that we do not produce these things in a country in which these products are commonly used? That calls attention to our continuing problem. We have got into a mind-set by which we are willing to depend upon others to use our resources to produce products which are sold back to us. We have not even developed the capacity to produce products which have a vast market in Canada. If we are not capable of making implements for the mining and petroleum industry ourselves and capable of doing so well that the machinery and implements can be sold elsewhere, then we are failing our own country and our own people. It is for this reason that the free trade agreement is an admission of failure.

At least perhaps it is a failure that results from a marriage of attitudes between this Government and that of the United States because the Americans believe that Canada should remain one vast resource pool for the benefit of others. If there is any doubt that that is not the case, one need only look at the free trade agreement.

If one thing is clear, the free trade agreement deprives us of the mechanisms by which we can mobilize our own capacities and industries to produce jobs here with respect particularly to science and technology. We should embark seriously on an effort to make this a knowledge-based economy, but we have put ourselves in a situation by the conditions accepted in the free trade agreement with respect to control of our industries in the face of foreign acquisition from the United States that we cannot mobilize the kind of scientific and research thrust necessary to depart from this long-standing habit of great enrichment of the few at the expense of the many who could have jobs generated from those resources.

Let us just consider, in discussing this small Bill but nevertheless symbolic Bill, some of the things that we would not have been able to do if a century ago we had this free trade agreement with the United States. Every one of the following would have been impossible under this free trade agreement: prairie settlement, the Canadian Pacific Railway, our domestic steel industry, the Canadian National Railway, the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, Air Canada, the Canadian Wheat Board, de Havilland, Canadair, Petro-Canada, health insurance, the Auto Pact, Bell Canada, Northern Telecom, Hydro Quebec, the James Bay Development, Lavalin and, indeed, the domestic automobile industry.

All of these areas in which Canada has had success which have benefited Canadians and created jobs—all things which Canadians hold dear as the manifestation of what we are capable of and on which we are prepared to take government action in co-operation with industry—would be impossible to do again under this free trade agreement.

That is what is at issue, not elimination of tariffs but the elimination of the capacity in Canada to organize our resources, our manpower, our industry and our inventiveness to ensure that in this sovereign nation we can move forward to a new kind of vision of a prosperous yet just land which would be a symbol for all the world and a certain contrast to the neighbour with whom we are going to sign this agreement.

Mr. Heap: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Windsor—Walkerville (Mr. McCurdy) has expressed himself more than once on the subject of development and the need to develop our industries. He has just listed industries which could not have been developed had the proposed trade deal agreement been in place in the past.

I know he is also concerned, for example, in the future, the not too distant future, for the development of energy from hydrogen. I have heard him comment on this subject, and I am wondering whether he can comment on the relationship of the trade deal restrictions to our chances for developing the potential that we have for the hydrogen energy system in this country.

Mr. McCurdy: Mr. Speaker, I will try to answer that very briefly. Of course, the many reports that have advocated, as we have advocated, a national mission for Canada in hydrogen technology have pointed out that it is not possible to embark on such a mission without it being owned by Canadians. There is no question that this mission would require participation by the Government. Unquestionably, it would involve in some measure, for example, subsidies and procurement largely limited to Canadian interests. It would have to involve the ownership of those companies which are participants.

According to the free trade agreement, we could not insist upon a research and development standard to be met after the acquisition of Canadian companies. In brief, if Canada is to launch into a future which would be defined in terms of the knowledge we possess and the technology we have developed, one way of doing that would be to have a large mission which is uniquely national. It is not to be a hanger-on, a follower or a passenger, a participant in someone else's national mission, as is the case with the space station. However valuable that may be, it does not have the mobilizing characteristics that bring people together with pride to point to a vision of Canada which this kind of technology would produce for us, using the resources and skills we already have and the technology we have already developed to some extent.

If we are to go on such a mission, that mission must be owned by Canada totally. That would be specifically excluded by the free trade agreement. That mission is very much like Northern Telecom, Canadair, de Havilland, CP and the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, institutions and corporations which have been established in the Canadian interest. They were established because we felt it necessary to establish the means by which we could maintain our uniqueness, our sovereignty and particularly our economic sovereignty.

[Translation]

Mrs. Mailly: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member who just spoke has once again revealed the New Democractic Party's intellectual weakness. He referred to free trade as a handicap for the further development of Hydro-Québec, which is absolutely ridiculous, because as he well knows, most Quebecers are in favour of free trade, and Hydro-Québec, which was an expression of René Lévesque's Quebec nationalism, has profited enormously from American capital, but this did not prevent Quebec and Quebecers from prospering. I think it is too bad he is so hostile to an agreement that is strictly a trade agreement and will benefit generations of Quebecers.

I just want to make that clear, Mr. Speaker, before we vote on this issue.

[English]

Mr. McCurdy: Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for her question. Again, I think that the Hon. Member is a participant, along with her Party, in failing to understand what the free trade agreement is all about. Perhaps that explains why there is this preoccupation with association with the space station and the development of artificial intelligence among the Conservatives. They may very well need it.

The Hon. Member cited Hydro Québec. In fact, Hydro Québec could not have existed if there had been a free trade agreement before its establishment. That is fact.

The fact is that this Party is not opposed to free trade. We are opposed to those elements of the agreement about which Conservatives do not talk about. The CBC talked the other night about the elements that would have us give control over our own country to another nation in whose interest it would be to use our resources and our capacities to produce jobs over there and not in Canada.

Those facts will be illuminated and emphasized in a debate during an election campaign. If the Conservatives want to join in with the New Democrats in discussing the merits of multilateral free trade versus a stupid agreement to which they are committed, we would be happy to do so at any time.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre) moved that Bill C-118, an Act to amend the Customs Tariff, be read the third time and passed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion, the yeas have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Pursuant to Standing Order 13(5), a recorded division on the proposed motion stands deferred until 6 p.m. on Monday, April 25, 1988.

CANADIAN INTERNATIONAL TRADE TRIBUNAL ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed from Thursday, April 21, consideration of the motion of Mr. Hockin that Bill C-110, an Act to establish the Canadian International Trade Tribunal and to amend or repeal other Acts in consequence thereof, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

Hon. Paul Dick (Associate Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I move:

That the question be now put.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The House has heard the terms of the motion. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Debate.

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, I am glad that I do have this chance to speak on this Bill, Bill C-110. The point that I wish to make in this Bill is that while we support it because we support the idea, the general principle of bringing the three boards together into one, that is, the Canadian Import Tribunal, the Tariff Board and the Textile and Clothing Board, we are concerned that the powers are too limited and that powers that did belong to the Textile and Clothing Board will be taken away in the new legislation.

The powers being proposed here are that they inquire and report on economic trade or commercial matters as requested by the Government, that they inquire into and report to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) on any tariff-related matter including Canada's international rights and obligations, and on those two inquiries, they will of course be directed by the Government's terms of reference. In addition, the tribunal will take over the existing appeal functions of the Tariff Board. That is to say, it will hear appeals of Revenue Canada decisions about customs and excise duties and classifications.

Then, fourth, it will provide direct access on injury inquiries. This is the one that concerns me very much. The existing right of the Textile and Clothing Board for an injury inquiry upon direct petition by producers will be extended to all industries. We are very much in favour of that. However, when the new tribunal examines whether increased imports are the primary cause of injury, they will not be able to deal with subsidizing and anti-dumping concerns. This is a very serious restriction and I think it is very unfortunate.

I want to explain why I think it is so unfortunate by giving an example of what has recently come to my attention through the clothing industry in Spadina. From talking with some of the representatives of the corporations that produce clothing in Spadina, and through Style magazine, I find that there is a new player in the field. Thailand has, in the last two or three years, moved from a country whose main export was rice to a country whose main export is clothing.

Thailand has a large and fairly modern clothing industry financed jointly with countries such as Japan, Hong Kong, Taiwan, and the United Kingdom. There are over 400,000 workers in their clothing industry, move than twice as many as we have in Canada. Their population, of course, is twice as large as ours. Last year they exported 140 million pieces of clothing, one-quarter of their total national production.

According to reports handed out by the Thai Government, their export is increasing at 23 per cent per annum. In the past year they sent only two or three per cent of their total production to Canada but they wish to increase that very considerably.

It is also alleged, although of course not reported in their government hand-out, that their labour conditions are very substandard, that there is very serious suppression of the rights of trade unionists in that country, and that large numbers of the workers, young women largely from the countryside, are required to live a regimented life in dormitories on low wages. It is also alleged that quite young children are used as labour there.

These practices have been excluded from accepted labour practices in Canada, Great Britain, and western Europe. Therefore, we should not be encouraging countries which use these unacceptable practices to produce goods at prices below world market prices for the sake of competition. That is unfair competition.

Unfortunately, it is quite possible that that situation would be removed from the jurisdiction of the Textile and Clothing board and the new tribunal to be created. It is not a matter included in their jurisdiction according to the description which we have been given of this Bill. In particular, subsidies and related matters are excluded. I believe, also, that labour conditions would no longer be considered.

I want to point in particular to a very aggressive subsidy policy of the Government of Thailand. It is the policy to promote producers of garments for export and to give them heavy tax privileges. That is to say, the producers of export clothing will pay a lower rate of tax than will producers of clothing for domestic use. The industry ministry has also exempted garment factories that have no more than 20 sewing machines from the requirement of obtaining a permit for setting up a factory. There are also tax rebates given to exporters who use local raw materials. For imported raw materials the duty on the manufacture of garments for export is refundable. There is also an export tax and business tax exemption for manufacturers of garments for export.

These are very weighty exemption privileges and are subsidies which the new board will not be allowed to examine. Another even more direct form of subsidy is a rebate on electricity payments to manufacturers of garments for export.

I hope that this will be considered very seriously by the Government because Canadian producers will not be able to come before this new tribunal, which will unify the present three tribunals, to raise issues such as this very recent issue with regard to Thailand. It is only this year that some Canadian producers became fully aware of these conditions in Thailand. It would be unfortunate if the Government introduced legislation which would reduce or perhaps cut off their ability to take the matter up with the new tribunal.

There are other difficulties with this new tribunal. It offers very little protection to small and medium-sized producers unless they can organize in large associations because the tribunal can only take up an injury complaint if the producers of the majority of goods petition for the injury inquiry. However, within the garment industry there are so many subsectors and sub-subsectors which have very specific conditions of their own and which relate very specifically to other countries, either for export or for import, that it is not at all clear that this requirement of having a majority of the producers of the goods in question petition would be interpreted in a way which would be properly sensitive to the needs of producers in some of the sectors.

In Spadina in particular we have many factories with 10, 20, 30, or 40 employees. These are long-standing, traditional firms for the most part. They are not mass organizations. They have been a very important part of the life of Canada, both in the production of clothing and in the life of the City of Toronto and of Spadina in particular. They are the mainstay of many families, including many immigrant families for whom that is often the first and best opportunity of employment.

In fact, I have talked with immigrants who are themselves from Asia who are not happy at the thought that their jobs may be transferred back to Asia from where they came. They came here as legitimate immigrants seeking, as has been said over the decades, a better life. They met the conditions and arrived. They have settled in Canada and do not like to see the better life being exported to some other country, even to the country from which they came.

The new tribunal must be reshaped to enlarge its scope so that it can take account of things like the alleged very bad labour conditions, and either the bad labour laws or the neglect of labour laws in countries like Thailand. It must also take account of the subsidies which have not been quantified. We do not know the number of dollars or the per cent of costs concerned. However, with regard to the tax exemptions and the rebates for electrical power consumed, it looks like a very considerable subsidy, particularly since the Thai Government reports that labour costs as a share of the total are increasing and that costs other than labour and raw materials are increasing as compared to raw materials.

They have a legitimate natural advantage in raw materials because of their climate. They can produce fabrics such as cotton that we cannot. That is fair enough for them to use that, but it is not fair for them to use bad labour conditions or direct subsidies apart from what is allowable under the GATT.

Therefore, we do need a broader tribunal to be able to give the producers in Canada, who understand the situation, the chance to bring this information to the attention of the tribunal. The tribunal should not only have the jurisdiction to inquire but also have the jurisdiction to make recommendations. Who better than a tribunal, such as the present Clothing and Textile Board, can recognize the facts, the conditions and the standards by which recommendations ought to be made?

Of course, it is still up to the Minister, having received recommendations, to take action as he or she sees fit. But I think it is very unfortunate to remove from this board the power and the duty that the present Textile and Clothing Board has, the power and duty to make recommendations in cases of injury by imports. Therefore, I hope the Government will take these matters into consideration before the Bill has been finalized.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, since we have disposed of the two items of business on the Order Paper, Bill C-110 and Bill C-118, the Government has no further business it wishes to call today. I want to express my appreciation for the co-operation of my colleagues in the House.

I believe we have two alternatives. We could suspend business until two o'clock and proceed with Private Members' Business at that time. The other alternative would be to have consent of the Chamber to move immediately to consideration of Private Members' Business from one o'clock to two o'clock. We are in the hands of the Opposition. We would be prepared to co-operate in any way they suggest.

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, let me suggest another alternative. It is that we suspend the sitting to the call of the Chair and then deal with Private Members' Business. This may give us time to contact Members who are interested in participating. If we call Private Members' Business for one o'clock, some Members may be doing something else right now and will not be able to get to the House.

Mr. McCurdy: Mr. Speaker, while in other circumstances the suggestion would meet with our approval, unfortunately we are not in a position to give our consent. The author of the Bill is indisposed and will be so until two o'clock. She is responsible for arranging our speakers in respect of this Bill to which we attach great importance. It would be our preference to recess until two o'clock.

Mr. Lewis: Under those circumstances, Mr. Speaker, and in accordance with our undertaking, I suggest that the House suspend until two o'clock, at which time we will proceed with Private Members' Business.

SITTING SUSPENDED

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the wish of the House to suspend the sitting until Private Members' Business at two o'clock?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

At 12.56 p.m. the sitting of the House was suspended.

SITTING RESUMED

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being two o'clock, the House will now proceed to the study of Private Members' Business as listed on today's Order Paper.

NON-SMOKERS' HEALTH ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House proceeded to the consideration of Bill C-204, an Act to regulate smoking in the federal workplace and on common carriers and to amend the Hazardous Products Act in relation to cigarette advertising, as reported (with amendments) from a legislative committee.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: There are four motions on the Order Paper to amend Bill C-204, an Act to regulate smoking in the federal workplace and on common carriers and to amend the Hazardous Products Act in relation to cigarette advertising. After deliberation, I am now ready to make a ruling with respect to their procedural acceptability. All of these motions I find to be in order. Motion No. 1 and Motion No. 2 deal with enclosed work space and will be grouped for debate. A vote on Motion No. 1 will apply to Motion No. 2.

Motion No. 3 and Motion No. 4 deal with passenger transportation and will be grouped for debate. A vote on Motion No. 3 will apply to Motion No. 4.

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview—Greenwood) moved:

Motion No. 1.

That Bill C-204 be amended in Clause 2 by striking out lines 16 to 18 at page 1 and substituting the following therefor:

"(a) for an office building or other enclosed work space constructed prior to January 1, 1990 an enclosed space, and

(b) for an office building or other enclosed work space constructed on or".

Motion No. 2.

That Bill C-204 be amended in Clause 4 by striking out line 33 at page 3 and substituting the following therefor:

"other enclosed work space provided by an employer,".

She said: Mr. Speaker, the four amendments before us today are purely technical amendments, non-controversial. They were proposed by Departments concerned to take care of a few flaws left in the Bill after second reading and study at committee stage. I am hoping that Hon. Members will move quickly through report stage today into third reading and pass this legislation which has been before the House and in committee for years. I am hoping people will not speak against it. I suggest to anyone who, in the guise of friendship to the Bill, stands up to talk it out today is not a friend of the Bill. I ask very strongly for the House to show its support for this important health legislation by letting it go through today.

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to have an opportunity to say a few words with respect to this first motion and also with respect to my support, notwithstanding the comments of the Hon. Member for Broadview—Greenwood (Ms. McDonald), for her Bill, Bill C-204.

The Bill, as you know, Mr. Speaker, is an act to regulate smoking in the federal workplace and on common carriers and to amend the Hazardous Products Act in relation to cigarette advertising. The most controversial portions of the Bill, of course, do not relate to this particular amendment—

Ms. Copps: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I understood we were speaking to the amendment at this point. I think it would be appropriate if we restricted our remarks to the amendment and, if we want to make a speech, to make it after it is into Committee of the Whole.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Ms. Copps: He was speaking to other elements of the Bill. We are dealing with Motions Nos. 1, 2, 3 and 4. Can we deal with those amendments, please, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I believe the Hon. Member is speaking on Motions Nos. 1 and 2.

Mr. Redway: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As you have indicated, I am speaking to Motions Nos. 1 and 2. I was referring to the fact that they are obviously not controversial amendments in any way, shape or form. The main controversial portion of the Bill really deals with the whole question of advertising and the restrictions on advertising and those are the sections of the Bill which have generated a great deal of concern and controversy.

The aspect of the Bill with which we are dealing here relates to the type of area in which smoking would be restricted. Those restrictions would apply to smoking within federal Departments and agencies. I am led to believe there are some 235,000 workers involved. It also applies to Crown corporations and private sector workplaces under federal jurisdiction. I believe there are some 700,000 workers that would be involved there. It would also apply, of course, to this Chamber, the Senate, and to the Parliamentary Library. It could be applied, I suppose, to aircraft, buses, passenger trains, ships, passenger terminals, museums and other public places under federal jurisdiction. All of the provisions to which we are referring in Motions Nos. 1 and 2 would apply.

Those amendments, of course, while not controversial in themselves, are part of a Bill about which there has been a great deal of controversy. That has not only happened with this Bill, but with Bill C-51, which is going to be coming before this House at report stage very soon. That Bill contains other provisions that will also spark a great deal of controversy and a great deal of debate.

I have listened to the debate and I have been subjected to lobbying by my constituents and by various organizations, including tobacco companies, organizations such as the Canadian Cancer Society, Physicians for a Smoke Free Canada and the Canadian Dental Association. I would point out that in fact I have received in total certainly a much smaller number of communications than most of my colleagues. I think I received in total some 34 letters and calls against this Bill. They have mainly come from a lobby that has been organized by the tobacco companies. I think I have received about 22 calls or letters in favour of the provisions in this Bill. Most of those I find come from cards that were inspired by the Canadian Cancer Society, or letters from them or from the Physicians for a Smoke Free Canada or the Canadian Dental Association, and so on.

I have had to debate and resolve in my own mind how I felt about these varying lobbying efforts, the principles they contained and the concerns they set out with respect to this Bill and with respect to Bill C-51. I resolved that debate within my own mind in favour of supporting this Bill. I think it is a good Bill.

• (1410)

As the Hon. Member has pointed out, the amendments that are before us today are technical amendments. I am sure that when we get to a thorough debate on the Bill at third reading, which I am sure will happen since there are very strong feelings on this matter, there will be many other points raised, particularly with respect to the advertising aspects.

I want to say at this stage that I am a supporter of the Bill. I will be supporting it and voting in favour of it when it comes to third reading.

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, specifically on the amendments, and briefly, since it is certainly not the intention on this side of the House to kill the Bill by excessive rhetoric—it means nothing if the Bill does not pass today—I am glad to see that there has been some cleaning up of the language, in particular with respect to the first amendment. It makes it more clear that the intent of the legislation is specifically to deal with enclosed work space as opposed to any space.

I must point out that in the last couple of weeks I had an opportunity to visit a military base. There was some concern expressed about legislation that might impinge upon a person's right to smoke within their own married quarters and residential quarters. This amendment deals with that issue.

We will certainly be supporting the amendmens. We will be restricting our rhetoric on the issue because we would like to see the Bill passed today.

[Translation]

Mrs. Claudy Mailly (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure for me to speak on this Bill today since I did not have the opportunity to do so on previous occasions. I understand that some Members would want to amend certain sections of the Bill about which I am concerned myself. For example, according to the definition in section 2(g) of the Bill, "employer" includes:

> a Member of Parliament who, in that capacity, employs or engages the services of any person or has the direction and control of staff employed by or engaged to provide research or associated services to the caucus members of a political party represented in Parliament.

Further on in the Bill, it says in paragraph 3(3):

Notwithstanding sub-section (1), an employee may, because of the nature of the employee's duties, be required by an employer—in other words, the Member of Parliament described in Clause 2 may be required by an employer, by me, the Member for Gatineau—to perform his or her duties from time to time in a designated smoking room.

In fact, according to this Bill I should tell my office staff that if they want to smoke, I can require them to go and work in a room I would set aside as the designated smoking room in my office. I have a problem with this, because first of all, Mr. Speaker, in our office we work as a team and we respect each other. For instance, we have job descriptions, something that is not required by Parliament. However, I went through this exercise because I respect my employees and I want them to have a say in their working conditions, and I want those working conditions to be respected. I have to be able to negotiate these working conditions with my employees, including whether or not they are allowed to smoke and whether or not they want to smoke in the office. This Bill would deny me the right to sit down with my employees and discuss whether they want to restrict smoking in the office. In that case, the Bill is a threat, not only to the freedom of my employees but also to my own freedom as an employer to create in my office an atmosphere where we work as a team and respect each other's freedom. That is why I have a problem with this Bill.

Now, someone might say to me, "Well, yes, it is only a paragraph and we could exclude all MPs' offices; that would solve the problem." No, Mr. Speaker, that would not solve the problem because I feel that if a bill were to exclude MPs, it would not be fair for me to rise in the House and support a bill that excludes me, that gives me freedoms that I would not allow, for example, to the library staff, to the committee staff, to civil servants in general, etc., namely all those covered by this Bill. I find that would be unfair.

So it shows the flaws that exist in this Bill, unfortunately. We must deal with the problem, this very important problem of smoke, which affects those around the smoker, it has been pointed out, and solve it.

But unfortunately, this Bill goes further. To solve a health problem, it will create legal problems, it will create problems for working conditions and employee-employer relations. It will also disturb the very special atmosphere that develops in an MP's office, where all the staff must work as a team to serve the constituents who elected us, their Members of Parliament, to serve them not only at some hours of the day, but to be available and to be ready to meet their needs at any time. We all have emergency answering services so that when our constituents call our offices, they do not go unanswered.

So I could not tell a constituent that he or she cannot speak to a certain member of my staff because that person is then in the smoking lounge. That would bother me a lot. I would prefer to continue running our offices with respect for our employees.

I understand very well that the Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps) does not appreciate that I refer to the respect for employees, because she finds it very difficult to respect anyone, including herself. But I insist just the same, Mr. Speaker, that a legislation that would be enacted by the House, by elected representatives who must at all times meet the needs of the Canadian people, should not include provisions that affect the service we may offer our constituents, that might affect the atmosphere and work conditions, the spirit of co-operation that must and does exist in our offices, Mr. Speaker. Otherwise we could not serve our constituents.

Therefore, I would suggest that we continue with the Government's legislation, which itself raises some problems, but I believe it certainly would be easier to iron out those problems than the ones which are so evident in this legislation.

Mr. Speaker, indeed I find that this Bill very well reflects a certain philosophy that is apparent in every question raised by the Hon. Member, a tone of authority that calls for unquestioned obedience. When she wants to solve a problem, she throws a very wide net that will create other problems while attempting to solve the problem at hand. I believe this is evident in the wording of the legislation, especially the clause I read earlier: "An employee may, because of the nature of the employee's duties, be required by an employer to perform his or her duties from time to time in a designated smoking room."

This means a "designated smoking room" could be a small box no larger than this, and I would have to tell my legislative assistant, who is now looking at the Abortion Act, a very, very sensitive subject Mr. Speaker, who is preparing a very sensible document on the matter and who suddenly would want to smoke, relax a bit because he works long hours, he works over weekends and all that on very sensitive matters, I would have to tell him: You cannot relax now, or then you will have to go to the smoking room to continue your work because I cannot afford that you stop for 15 ou 20 minutes since the legislation must be ready.

So, we must face reality. We must tell that person to take with him or her all the big books and the Statutes of Canada—because somebody working on legislation like the new abortion law must do very extensive research in very big books—and go right away to the designated area and stay there as long as he or she wants to smoke. It means that he or she is going to stay in the smoking area for 30 seconds because that's all the time he or she can stay away from work. If this person stays in the designated area for quite some time, she must interrupt her work and that's why I object to this Bill.

In addition, I think that subjecting railway companies and airlines to a bill intended to protect people's health against smokers amounts to using Parliament's authority to tell all those companies with their own authority to implement our decisions because some Hon. Member of Parliament somewhere decided that it was the way to do things.

I think it is the wrong approach to the problem. I would rather have a government bill. We put forward Bill C-51 and we should proceed with it instead of this one which, in my opinion, has major shortcomings.

• (1420)

Mr. Gabriel Fontaine (Lévis): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased also to take that opportunity to speak to that subject, and I shall try not to be political on an issue of such a vital importance for the health of Canadian men and women because the resolution under consideration could reduce by 35,000 the number of people who die each year in Canada because of tobacco.

One must admit that those 35,000 deaths if we are to believe experts, is quite a high price to pay and for two reasons. First, it means that we lose a segment of our population, often the most active one, at an age where it could achieve a lot for the country. And second the use of tobacco is very costly for our health care system and it accounts for an enormous part of our medical expenses.

Costs are also incurred as a result for example of fires either in our communities or in our forests and so on and also as a result of traffic accidents. When will we know the exact number of accidents caused by someone who dropped or lighted a cigarette while driving?

So all these costs are difficult to assess, but nonetheless they are important costs.

There is also a cost attached to non-smokers environment. Those who decided to quit smoking at some point in their life are innocent victims of smokers. That is also a cost.

The physical well being of people can be a cost. I was a smoker for some time and since I quit, I think I am in a better physical condition, which enables me to be more of a fighter in the House of Commons, or at least to have a very positive attitude towards what the socialists say. If I was less fit, I would be less able to defend our country against socialist policies, if we can describe them as such.

Furthermore, smoking reduces productivity. People working in an office who smoke . . . It is unfortunate to have to say that, Mr. Speaker, to the leader of the socialist party who secretly smokes cigars, Havana cigars, communist cigars he can afford because he lives in a wealthy country.

I beg my colleague to try and convince her leader to stop smoking. It is not nice. It is not nice either to develop secret policies. Her leader should perhaps emulate the leader of the Liberal Party: I hear he does not smoke. I am sure that the leader of my party does not. Now, conditions could perhaps be first improved within the socialist party. On one hand, this could affect the Communist economy of Havana, because the leader is smoking Havana cigars on the sly. This is how moreover he wants to develop his policies. Whether he speaks about NATO, economy, income tax, the Meech Lake agreement, there is always, Mr. Speaker, the image of the leader who acts secretly with a gang of extremists, etc.

As a result of all those considerations, Mr. Speaker, I should like to point out that my Governement has tabled a Bill to control the negative effects of tobacco, that is Bill C-5l, the Tobbacco Products Control Act. And for the benefit of Canadians, I could state some of its highlights. The purpose of this legislation is to prohibit or to regulate the advertising of tobacco products.

So, with that Bill, it will now be prohibited to use billboards to promote smoking and that prohibition would be in effect as of January 1991.

Second, advertisement at the place of business of a retailer will be prohibited as of January 1993. The value of the sponsoring agreements using the brand name of a tobacco product shall not exceed the level of support agreed to in 1987.

Most other types of advertising and promotion will be prohibited from January 1st 1988 onward. Warnings on the health effects of tobacco and information on its toxic constituents must be printed on cigarette packages.

There is also a provision to require that health warnings be put inside packages. Finally, according to existing legislation and consultative process, various measures are already in effect to limit tobacco use to smoking rooms or areas, or to prohibit smoking in certain places.

I also want to mention the policies of this Government, including the Treasury Board policy that limits tobacco use to certain areas since October 1st, 1987. Aside from a few exceptions, it will be forbidden to smoke in all Public Service offices beginning January 1st, 1989. I hope that those rules will also apply to the socialist leader who likes to sneak a smoke. I hope that he will abide by Public Service rules, that he will object to the importation of cigars from communist countries, namely Cuba, for which he pays with capitalist money, Mr. Speaker.

Finally, in 1987, the Labour Department asked employers to take steps to restrict the use of tobacco in the workplace. Many, such as Air Canada and Petro-Canada have already done so. Air Canada, Mr. Speaker, is that corporation which is bound to become very profitable over the next few years because we as a Party have decided to privatise it in the best interests of Canadian consumers and producers.

An Hon. Member: Capitalist!

Mr. Fontaine: Thank you! I love being called a capitalist, Mr. Speaker, and I see that my socialist colleague from across the way is probably unhappy with the fact that I said that his leader puffed in private and probably without the knowledge of the Hon. Member who tabled this legislation on smoking. This is why I am always happy to hear his remarks about capitalism, to which, by the way, he owes his good living. I am sure he is very happy to get a good salary as an MP because of capitalist companies that can afford to pay a group of marginal people like the members of his party. They can make a good living in our rich and capitalist society. As a matter of fact, I don't know why they did not choose to live in a place where there are lots of Communists and where the political system is compatible with their ideology. Still, I want to thank the Hon. Member for his remarks, Mr. Speaker, he is most welcome.

I would like to speak now of the position of the House of Commons with respect to smoking. We know that the Speaker of the Senate and the Parliamentary Librarian have both asked their officers to propose options in order to implement a Parliamentary policy similar to that of the Public Service. In that case, the socialist leader would have no way out. He is here on Parliament Hill and he will have to abide by the rules, at least I hope he will.

Mr. Speaker, these were a few comments and I thank you for signalling that I have two minutes left. I will not speak any more of the leader of the Socialist party who is perhaps hiding in the lobby to smoke his Havana cigars, because my time is running out.

For the time being, Mr. Speaker, I am convinced that our Bill C-51 duly takes into consideration the interest and health of all Canadians; it takes into account the quality of life of Canadians, a quality of life that we, the Conservative Party, have continued to improve. We have continued to increase the standard of living of Canadians, and that is something on which we all agree. That is why we have introduced in the House our Bill prohibiting the advertising and promotion of tobacco, and I am talking only to this Bill, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, I want to congratulate the Hon. Member for Broadview—Greenwood (Ms. McDonald). I am in favour of the Bill. I am in favour of the amendment that we are supposed to be speaking to. I want to indicate to you that any attempt by the Government to speak on this issue in the guise of friendly or otherwise remarks will be considered by all Canadians for what it is, a deliberate attempt to stall this Bill. Shame on the Tories!

Mr. Redway: Point of order, Mr. Speaker. It seems to me that a comment of that sort could be considered a threat to Members of this House and I would ask you to rule on that.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Chair considers it a matter for debate.

[Translation]

Mr. Fontaine: A point of order, Mr. Speaker,

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Lévis (Mr. Fontaine) on a point of order.

Mr. Fontaine: Mr. Speaker, should the remarks which were obviously directed to me by the Liberal Member on the other side be considered a threat to my rights as a parliamentarian, for I have no intention of standing still while someone challenges my right as an elected Member, my right as representative of the riding of Lévis, and my right to speak . . .

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I thank the Hon. Member, but the Chair does not consider that a threat. The Hon. Member for Chambly (Mr. Grisé).

Mr. Richard Grisé (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, like my colleagues on this side of the House I think that the remarks of the Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell (Mr. Boudria) are almost unacceptable, considering it was this Government which brought in parliamentary reform to enable Members of the House to air their views on various bills. For the benefit of my colleague from Glengarry—Prescott—Russell, the parliamentray reform does not apply exclusively to Members of the Opposition but to Government Members as well. Mr. Speaker, I listened very carefully to the short remarks of the Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell . . .

Mr. Boudria: You could have fooled me!

Mr. Grisé: —and I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that I have every right to be heard when I rise in this House.

What I was saying, Mr. Speaker, is that each and every member of this House, no matter what legislation is being considered, has the right to represent his or her riding and constituents. Also, each member of this House has the right to speak out. There are no first class and second class members in this House, Mr. Speaker. The Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell should take this into account and try to remember that he is no different from his colleagues in this House.

Personally, I want to deal with Bill C-204 because when the health of Canadian men and women is at stake, the issue is always vital and should not be taken lightly. Each and every member of this House has the right to deal with the issue of his or her choise. Today, Mr. Speaker, I have chosen to speak on Bill C-204.

Indeed, the fewer possible smokers there are in this country, the better it is for the health of all Canadians. As a former smoker, Mr. Speaker, I know. I stopped smoking seven years ago and now I feel much better physically. To stop smoking is a very positive step for Canadian men and women to take and to those who have never smoked, I say: Hear hear! Now, Mr. Speaker, we are all well aware that there are Canadian men and women who are still smoking.

Getting back to Bill C-204, Section 3 reads as follows:

> Every employer shall provide a smoke-free environment where all employees may perform the duties that are directly or indirectly related to their employment.

How are we to define, in this case, the term "smoke-free"? Are we only talking about smoke? If there is a smoking room on one floor, will absolutely all the smoke generated in that room stay there? Can we be sure that some of that smoke will not spread through the building or into adjacent offices? Have we set up systems or devices to check constantly and systematically the quantity of smoke in the air? Is there an alarm system which will trigger a buzzer or start a fan when a particular level of smoke in the air is reached or exceeded?

And, Mr. Speaker, when we are talking about the House of Commons and Members' offices where a designated smoking room is provided, I wonder, if I understand correctly the purpose of this Bill, whether this will not be extended to our riding offices, because they are, after all, an extension of the offices of Members of the House of Commons. The rent for a riding office is paid by the House of Commons. Employees who work for a Member in the riding office are paid by the House of Commons of Canada. Should this legislation apply to them as well? Considering that a riding office is often far less spacious than an office in one of the departments here in Ottawa or in the Parliament Buildings, how can we provide a smoking room inside a riding office? Will we have to rent another building or rent space in the building next door if we don't have enough room? Will we have to find another space and let our employees go there when they want to smoke during the day?

Mr. Speaker, I realize our Government is concerned about the health of Canadians, and the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) has, through Bill C-51, launched a national anti-smoking program, headed by representatives of the federal and provincial Governments and our national health care agencies. As part of this program, federal funding for promotional and educational activities are being increased.

Mr. Speaker, my colleague from Lévis (Mr. Fontaine) was quoting Air Canada earlier as an example—and I applaud its initiative to prohibit smoking during flights lasting less than two hours. Even on more popular routes like Montreal-Toronto, we now have non-smoking flights. That initiative is quite commendable and it is in that spirit that the Conservative Government wants to implement legislation aimed at protecting Canadians' health and welfare, but we must still allow Canadians who, for very personal reasons of course, decide to keep on smoking to . . . Are we going to treat these Canadians as second-class citizens? As an ex-smoker, I know how one tends to smoke more in a stressful situation; so are we going to ask those people, when they are working on very important matters, to leave everything there and get out of the room to smoke? I agree that filling one's lungs with smoke is not very healthy, but these people have a need to smoke.

Mr. Speaker, I see you indicating that my time has expired. I understand very well the purpose of Bill C-204, Mr. Speaker, but I think we should first consider Bill C-51 which was introduced in the House by this Government.

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, I will speak on Motion Nos. 1 and 2 before us at report stage. I will preface this with the remark that if there are two Members of this House who are more guilty of speaking on and on and on whenever the occasion arises, it is the Hon. Member for Broadview—Greenwood (Ms. McDonald) and the Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell (Mr. Boudria). These two Members go on and on and on at all times when the Government is trying to get through very important legislation critical to the well-being of Canada. For them to say on this occasion that anyone who wants to speak at report stage or third reading of this particular Bill is somehow frustrating the great wishes of Canada, I cannot understand that rationale whatsoever.

I wish that the hon. proposer of the motions with which we are dealing, namely, Motion Nos. 1 and 2, had taken some time to explain what these amendments are all about. The Member brushed them off as mere technicalities. It took me considerable time to read through them, referring backward and forward to the Bill to find out exactly what they were about. The first one is to add words in the definition section. In talking about designated smoking rooms, it said initially that a designated smoking room means (a) for an office building constructed prior to January, 1990, an enclosed space" et cetera. Now we have added the words "for an office building or other enclosed work space". I guess that is a necessary amendment if you read it in reference to Clause 4 of the Bill, to which I will speak a little later.

When we start telling people what they can do, where, and where they cannot do a certain thing we get ourselves into trouble and problems start to arise. What exactly is meant by an enclosed work space? I think we all understand what we mean by an office. But what do we mean by an enclosed work space? A workshop would obviously be one. Whether you would want to ban smoking in all workshops, I do not know. But there are the marginal cases.

During this winter, Mr. Speaker, you as well as other Members must have seen the stone masons who work on the Parliament Buildings. These are people who would obviously be covered by this Bill. During the summer they can work outside and presumably they would be able to smoke as much they wanted as they work on Parliament's stone work. In winter when the temperatures are a little colder and the weather sometimes inclement, a structure is erected made of scaffolding and two-by-fours. It is enclosed with plywood or canvas. The stone masons work in what might be described under this Bill, were it to become law, as an enclosed work space. This illustrates the difficulties we get into when we try to be so precise. I do not think that I would want to tell a stone mason, who is legally smoking at his work in June or July, that he should not be able to smoke when doing the same work in October or November. That deals with the amendments contemplated in Motion No. 1.

I understand that Motion No. 2 is being dealt with at the same time and I have a few comments with respect to Motion No. 2, which seeks to amend Clause 4. This would add the word "enclosed" between the words "other" and "work". The present clause reads "No person shall smoke in any office or other work space provided by an employer, outside of the designated smoking room or designated smoking area". I am certainly in favour of this proposed amendment, Mr. Speaker, because, of course, work space could be, unless you add that adjective, an open field. Surely it was not the intention, even of the Hon. Member from Broadview—Greenwood, to stop people working in the fields of the Experimental Farm from smoking. I do not think that was the case at all. I am entirely in favour of adding the word "enclosed" before work space in Clause No. 4.

In discussing this matter there is one other point I want to make. It is an important point because it has constitutional implications for the part of the country that I represent.

You, Sir, are undoubtedly aware of a court ruling made several years ago that said that a municipal undertaking in the Northwest Territories was to be designated as an undertaking or business under the definition of Section 2 of the Canada Labour Code. There is a long story behind this as to why it came about, but for certain reasons under the Canada Labour Code municipal operations within the Territories were deemed to be federal work or a federal undertaking. Of course, this Bill would apply, pursuant to paragraph 2(c), to all federal works and undertakings. Therefore, because of that court ruling it would presumably apply to municipal undertakings in the Northwest Territories. I think if this Bill became law we would have to look at a further amendment to restrict that.

I do not think it is correct that we should legislate here with respect to whether somebody can smoke in a municipal garage in Fort Smith. There may be good arguments as to whether somebody should be allowed to smoke there or not, but it is not really the duty or the responsibility of the Parliament of Canada to say so. It would obviously be something which should be done by municipal by-law. Those are some of the concerns that I have with the first two motions put before us today at the report stage debate.

Mr. William G. Lesick (Edmonton East): Mr. Speaker, in rising to speak on Bill C-204, I find that there are many incongruances as I have read the Bill and as I have heard different speakers from both sides of the House. Members have been addressing an issue of great importance to Canadians who are affected by pollutants and smoke, in particular.

Smoking has been with us since the time of Sir Walter Raleigh.

Mr. Cassidy: Really?

Mr. Lesick: Really.

Mr. Cassidy: That is only 400 years. It is a short episode in the life of our humanity.

Mr. Lesick: It has been something we have grown up with and smoking has been part of our culture and how we have lived.

Mr. Cassidy: So was opium. Do you want to bring back opium?

Mr. Lesick: Smoking has been part of what we have always felt as a right that we have had, the same as other things, for example, driving vehicles and horses. They cause pollution as well, as do certain pieces of machinery. There are pollutants all over the place.

• (1450)

It is not only smoke that causes a great deal of trouble for certain people who have problems with breathing or have chest problems. We find in the last 50 years particularly, with the mechanization and the manufacturing of so many different types of chemicals, that there are a great number of problems for the people around the whole world.

There are over 100 million people in China, and they have a great habit of smoking. Nearly one billion of the people of China are good smokers, it seems.

When I was in Africa, there was a great deal of smoking. Almost everyone there smoked, and there were seven of us on the parliamentary committee, including Hon. Members from the other side, who somehow did not smoke. However, all the folks there did.

Mr. Cassidy: Do you want their life expectancy?

Mr. Lesick: We find that this is quite common in many countries throughout the world.

Some eight weeks ago, we were at Gaza and the Hon. Member for Broadview—Greenwood was there with us. We were in a hospital and a doctor was telling us of the deep-seated problems that have been occurring there because of the difficulties between the Palestinians and the Israelis. This doctor who was speaking to us was a volunteer. He was receiving a minimum amount of money just to pay his expenses.

As this doctor was talking to us, he was smoking. The Hon. Member for Broadview—Greenwood was somewhat incensed by this and, in a somewhat forceful tone, told the doctor that he had better stop smoking because it was not good. Of course, this embarrassed the good doctor who was saving the lives of dozens if not hundreds of Palestinians who were in that hospital.

I suppose that when one is under a great deal of pressure, one may take up drinking, smoking or some other bad habits that some of us would frown upon. Of course, the good doctor put out the cigarette by smashing it on the floor. Therefore, peace was restored within the hospital room.

We are trying to purify ourselves so much these days by trying to keep out pollutants. There are now buildings that are completely sealed and air is circulated throughout these buildings. We are finding that more and more people in that atmosphere are getting sick. The air is circulated but no fresh air tends to come in from outdoors.

Mr. Cassidy: That's one reason smoking needs to be banned. They are recycling the smoke.

Mr. Lesick: Therefore, we have a greater and greater problem. Even though there is no smoking there, the air is being recirculated.

Mr. Cassidy: They have the smoke from 10 years ago still circulating around.

Mr. Lesick: The germs are going from one person to another. There are more colds and more people who are not well in that atmosphere.

Mr. Cassidy: Just like the Hon. Member's argument.

Mr. Lesick: This Bill provides that we cannot smoke in a so-called enclosed space. What is an enclosed space? I remember driving to the City of Edmonton early one morning. I looked over Edmonton and saw a brown cloud of pollution over the city. This could conceivably be called an enclosed space. As I saw this from a distance, I thought that surely Edmonton seemed to have a cap on it, a cap of pollution, of dirt, a cap of a greyish colour. Under this Bill, could we smoke in Edmonton if it tends to be an enclosed space?

This Bill does have excellent intentions. The Hon. Member for Broadview—Greenwood has excellent intentions, and certainly the Bill is for the benefit of people who have health problems—

Mr. Cassidy: You're damning it with faint praise.

Mr. Lesick: Despite that, we have to be sure. We have to respect all the people and ensure that they can be free to smoke if they wish to smoke.

Mr. Cassidy: That's what your colleagues said about child labour laws. We would still have child labour today if that argument would be followed.

Mr. Lesick: Mr. Speaker, I am having to speak louder and louder because of the problems that seem to be coming from across the way.

I would like to continue, if I may, to deal with this enclosed work space and the cloud over Edmonton. I know what it is like to work in a space where there is an excessive amount of smoking. I work as a volunteer at bingos. It seems that bingo players love to do two things. They love to play bingo and most of them love to smoke. By the time I get home after four hours of working there, I can smell smoke on my clothing.

Of course, anyone who is affected by smoke should not work in a place like that, in this workplace or this place of fun, frolic and enjoyment. There is a problem, and the Bill has good intentions. However, it is flawed in that it does not allow enough latitude for those who wish to smoke. I would like to respect smokers, even though I personally am not a smoker.

The Government has also brought in a Bill covering much of what Bill C-204 covers, but it has more latitude. The many areas of great concern that have been expressed to me and to many other Members of Parliament about smoking are addressed by the government Bill which allows freedom for smokers yet protects the lives of non-smokers.

In conclusion, as much as I believe that Bill C-204 has good intentions, I would urge that this Bill not be passed at this time. The Government has introduced a tobacco products control Act which will cover the concerns of non-smokers and those who are affected by smoke while still respecting those who wish to smoke.

Mr. J. R. Ellis (Prince Edward—Hastings): Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Cassidy: For shame.

Mr. Ellis: If the Member with the enlarged facial aperture would be quiet, we could get on with this.

I support Bill C-204, but I have been around this House longer than many, though not all, who are in the Chamber this afternoon. I have put Private Members' Bills before the House and have watched them talked out by government Members. I have watched responsible Governments, shortly thereafter, bring in Bills containing the essence of my Bills and do a good job. That is the way this House works. That is the way it has worked for over 100 years. That is the way it will continue to work.

I support the Bill and I would like to see the contents of the Bill become legislation—you are telling me that it is three o'clock, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The time provided for the consideration of Private Members' Business has now expired. Pursuant to Standing Order 36(2), the order is dropped to the bottom of the list of the order of precedence on the Order Paper.

It being three o'clock, this House stands adjourned until next Monday at 11 a.m., pursuant to Standing Order 3(1).

EMERGENCIES ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House proceeded to the consideration of Bill C-77, an Act to authorize the taking of special temporary measures to ensure safety and security during national emergencies and to amend other Acts in consequence thereof, as reported (with amendments) from a legislative committee.

• (1110)

Mr. Speaker: There are 10 motions on the Order Paper and Notices offered in amendment to Bill C-77, an Act to authorize the taking of special temporary measures to ensure safety and security during national emergencies and to amend other Acts in consequence thereof. Motion No. 1 stands in the name of the Hon. Member for Brant (Mr. Blackburn). Motions Nos. 2 to 10 stand in the name of the Hon. Minister of National Defence (Mr. Beatty).

Amendments somewhat related to Motion No. 1 were moved, debated and negatived in the legislative committee. Motion No. 1, however, refers to persons who are finally determined under the Immigration Act, 1976 to be Convention refugees. The term "Convention refugee" is defined by the Geneva Convention of 1951, which has a different connotation from what was considered in the legislative committee. Therefore, I would rule Motion No. 1 in order. It will be debated and voted on separately.

Motions Nos. 2 and 8 are in order and will be grouped for debate. The vote on Motion No. 2 will apply to Motion No. 8. Motions Nos. 3, 4, 5 and 9 are in order and will be grouped for debate as they deal with the same subject. The vote on Motion No. 3 will apply to Motions Nos. 4, 5, and 9.

[Translation]

Motions Nos. 6, 7 and 10 are in order, and each will be debated and voted on separately.

[English]

The House will now proceed to the first motion, Motion No. 1. I will now propose the question to the House.

Mr. Derek Blackburn (Brant) moved:

Motion No. 1

That Bill C-77 be amended in Clause 30 by striking out lines 32 to 35 at page 16 and substituting the following therefor:

"(h) the removal from Canada of persons, other than Canadian citizens, permanent residents as defined in the Immigration Act, 1976 and persons, not being persons described in paragraph 19(1)(c), (e), (f) or (g) of that Act, who are finally determined under that Act to be Convention refugees;".

He said: Mr. Speaker, I introduced an amendment on this topic at committee as we went through it clause by clause which would have prohibited the Government from forcing back a boatload or shipload of persons seeking refuge in this country during a time of emergency. I felt we had already blemished our record once many years ago in this regard. I think it was 1938 or 1939. When I say we "blemished our record" I mean as a nation. A group of Jews from Europe were desperately seeking refuge in the free world in their attempt to escape the horrors of Naziism. The Government of the day refused to allow that ship to dock in Canada and it was forced to continue on. If memory serves me correctly from reading about that episode, I think most of the persons on board ended up back in Europe.

My original motion would have prevented a Government, even under a proclamation of emergency, from allowing that kind of tragic situation to happen again.

The committee debated the amendment at length and it was lost. Motion No. 1 which I am proposing at report stage today is somewhat of a compromise. I would hope it would meet with the acceptance of members of all Parties assembled here this morning. It does not exclude those seeking refugee status but would include them once they had been determined to be refugees. In other words, once they had landed on Canadian territory and had gone through the determination process, they would be here in this country legally at that point even though still designated as refugees.

I am not an expert on the Immigration Act and I can fully appreciate that had my original proposed amendment been accepted, it would have drastically altered, I would suggest for the better, the immigration provisions existing at the present time with respect to refugees. I readily admit we have what one might call a crisis on our hands with respect to refugees coming into Canada without proper qualifications and identification. We do not know whether they are genuine refugees or not.

Rather than hold up this Bill, because another Bill is finding rough passage through this House, I was reluctantly prepared and with some considerable regret to put forward this compromise with respect to refugees. I commend the motion to the House. I would hope that at report stage this amendment would be accepted by a majority of all Parties and that that would be as far as we could carry the refugee issue in relation to Bill C-77.

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton—The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, I would like to speak to Motion No. 1 and say that I agree with the Hon. Member for Brant (Mr. Blackburn) that this would be a definite plus to the Bill as brought forward. As he has stated, it may only be a compromise position but this compromise position would be an improvement on the Bill as presently structured.

I think the Government is trying to deal with immigration concerns in emergency legislation. I do not think that should even be considered by this House of Commons. I think an amendment to this Act is absolutely necessary. It is unfortunate that the original amendment put forward was not adopted, but this compromise amendment is certainly better than leaving the Act the way it is at the present time. I, too, would ask the House to adopt this motion.

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, it seems to me from the two interventions just made by my colleagues on this side of the House that we have here a very important principle at stake, namely of keeping immigration matters and principles standing on their own because of the highly humanitarian nature that immigration policies involve. Examples have already been given to that effect by the Hon. Member for Brant (Mr. Blackburn), reinforced by the Hon. Member for Cape Breton—The Sydneys) (Mr. MacLellan).

As the Hon. Member for Cape Breton—The Sydneys has just indicated, this amendment is a partial solution or compromise. While not perfect in itself, it would at least provide a certain degree of protection in cases of immigration situations that would have to be dealt with on their own merits and not under the over-all umbrella of this specific Bill. It seems to me that we all have a particular duty to perform in convincing the Government of the necessity and desirability of adopting this motion as a measure that attempts at least, within limits of course, to achieve the goal of being able to say: "Look. When it comes to immigration matters, we want potential immigrants treated in a fair and humanitarian manner and not under the general thrust of this specific Bill".

I hope the Parliamentary Secretary, who is well known for his sensitivity, will have a positive reply. I hope that he will be in a position to accept this particular amendment for the reasons that have been given thus far.

• (1120)

Mr. Bud Bradley (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, at the outset I would like to thank my colleague, the Hon. Member for Brant (Mr. Blackburn), for this compromise amendment. I should also point out to my colleagues in the House that the Hon. Member was extremely helpful in committee. He worked very hard for the legislation, and thus for Canadians. I believe he moved some 60 amendments, 30 of which were accepted by the committee in one form or another.

The problem with this amendment at the time was the fact that in committee we were referring to bona fide refugees. There was a difficulty in legalese with respect to defining what is a bona fide refugee. The new terminology being proposed by my colleague will ensure that Canada's treaty obligations under the 1951 UN Convention relating to the status of refugees will be respected even during emergencies.

It also conforms to the Immigration Act of 1976, and the spirit of Bill C-55. It gives people who finally have been determined to be Convention refugees under that legislation protection equal to that granted to Canadian citizens and permanent residents under the Act. The Government has given a great deal of consideration to the amendment moved by my hon. friend. We are in a position at which we can accept it.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The question is on Motion No. 1 standing in the name of the Hon. Member for Brant (Mr. Blackburn). Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion No. 1 (Mr. Blackburn)(Brant) agreed to.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Motion No. 2 and Motion No. 8 are in order. They have been grouped for debate. The vote on Motion No. 2 will apply to Motion No. 8.

Mr. Jim Hawkes (for the Minister of National Defence) moved:

Motion No. 2

That Bill C-77 be amended in Clause 52

(a) by striking out lines 35 to 45 at page 25 and substituting the following therefor:

"(b) notwithstanding the maximum amount, if any, of compensation that may be paid to the person appealing, vary the decision of the Minister; or

(c) refer the matter back to the Minister for such further action as the Assessor may direct, including the calculation of compensation without regard to the maximum amount, if any, that may otherwise be paid."

(b) by striking out lines 8 to 13 at page 26 and substituting the following therefor:

"(4) Where the Assessor varies a decision of the Minister by awarding compensation or increasing the amount of compensation awarded by the Minister or the Minister, on a matter referred back for further action, increases the amount of compensation previously awarded, the Minister shall pay that compensation or increased compensation, as the case may be."

Motion No. 8

That Bill C-77 be amended in Clause 71

(a) by striking out lines 32 to 42 at page 36 and substituting the following therefor:

"(b) notwithstanding the maximum amount, if any, of compensation that may be paid to the person appealing, vary the decision of the Minister; or

(c) refer the matter back to the Minister for such further action as the Assessor may direct, including the calculation of compensation without regard to the maximum amount, if any, that may otherwise be paid."

(b) by striking out lines 3 to 8 at page 37 and substituting the following therefor:

(4) Where the Assessor varies a decision of the Minister by awarding compensation or increasing the amount of compensation awarded by the Minister or the Minister, on a matter referred back for further action, increases the amount of compensation previously awarded, the Minister shall pay that compensation or increased compensation, as the case may be."

Mr. Bud Bradley (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, the Government is placing before the House this morning 10 motions to amend Bill C-77. Although it was not our original intent to move motions at report stage, we find ourselves obliged to move these amendments to correct oversights, to clarify ambiguous language in the Bill and, in general, to add greater precision to the Bill. I can assure Hon. Members that none of these motions will change the substance of any clause in the Bill.

There is a requirement because of their wording and because of the areas to which they relate to group them into three separate groups as you have found, Mr. Speaker. However, I hope that with the explanation that I have made being kept in mind that Members will seek to deal expeditiously with all 10 government motions.

Mr. Derek Blackburn (Brant): Mr. Speaker, I intended to get up before the Parliamentary Secretary to inform him through you that these amendments are all acceptable to me. I went through them earlier this morning. In fact, they simply clean up the legal language.

While I am on my feet and on the subject of legal language, I think one of the reasons—and this is purely my own opinion—why the committee was able to work so harmoniously was twofold. First, we had a very excellent Chairman, the Hon. Member for Victoria (Mr. McKinnon). Second, there was not one lawyer on the committee. We got through the matters expeditiously. We all understood what we were talking about. I would like to suggest that we all understand what the Bill is about today, too, as a result of that.

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, I am not sure I want to share in that comment about the legal profession.

I have read the amendments proposed to the Bill. It is our opinion as well on this side of the House that there are no substantive change made to the Bill by the amendments.

I have a question in the area of the translation. Perhaps the Parliamentary Secretary can explain to us one part of the translation of the Bill.

When we look at Motion No. 2 (b) the English words are, "notwithstanding the maximum amount". That expression usually translates and means to me, "nonobstant le montant maximal". I read in the motion, "ou bien, malgré le montant maximal". I wonder if there could be a different interpretation. Perhaps that is not the case. I bring it to the attention of the Parliamentary Secretary nonetheless. If his officials have indicated that those words that are in the motion as printed in the Order Paper are an accurate translation which will make it clear that both versions mean exactly the same thing, then I am willing to accept that.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Before I can recognize the Parliamentary Secretary I need to have unanimous consent. Is it agreed?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Bradley: Mr. Speaker, I thank my hon. friend for raising this matter. If my memory serves me correctly, and possibly my hon. friend from Brant can confirm this for me, this became part of a discussion in committee. It was decided that these were the words that might best explain matters.

My French is nowhere near as good as my colleague's, although his English is as good as mine. If he has a concern with that, I would be willing to accept it. The note I have just been given, with efficiency, was that both English and French versions are consistent with what they classify now as the good drafting practice for that expression.

• (1130)

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The question is on Motions Nos. 2 and 8 standing in the name of the Minister of National Defence.

Motions Nos. 2 and 8 (Mr. Beatty) agreed to.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I would like to bring to the attention of the House that Motions Nos. 3, 4, 5, and 9 standing in the name of the Minister of National Defence will be grouped for debate.

Hon. Doug Lewis (for the Minister of National Defence) moved:

(b) by striking out lines 39 to 41 at page 39 and substituting the following therefor:

"(3) A motion taken up and considered in accordance with subsection (2) shall be debated without interruption and, at such time as the House is ready for the question, the Speaker shall forthwith, without further debate or amendment, put every question necessary for the disposition of the motion."

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motions?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motions Nos. 3, 4, 5, and 9 (Mr. Beatty) agreed to.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The next question is on Motions No. 6, 7, and 10.

Hon. Flora MacDonald (for the Minister of National Defence) moved:

Motion No. 6

That Bill C-77 be amended in Clause 62 by striking out lines 20 to 25 at page 32.

Motion No. 7

That Bill C-77 be amended in Clause 63 by striking out lines 33 to 36 at page 32 and substituting the following therefor:

"(2) A report of an inquiry held pursuant to this section shall be laid before each House of Parliament within three hundred and sixty days after the expiration or revocation of the declaration of emergency."

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motions?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motions Nos. 6, 7, and 10 (Mr. Beatty) agreed to.

Miss MacDonald (for the Minister of National Defence) moved that Bill C-77, as amended, be concurred in.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

Hon. Doug Lewis (for the Minister of National Defence) moved that the Bill be read the third time and passed.

He said: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. There have been discussions among the House Leaders, and I think you will find that there is unanimous consent to allow the first three speakers equal time. That would give the Official Opposition and the spokesperson for the NDP equal time to the first speaker from the Government and the Official Opposition.

There are also informal discussions continuing which would lead to a division, if required on this matter, being taken on Wednesday at 6 p.m. We would like to take some time and work out an appropriate House order which would accomplish that.

Mr. Angus: Mr. Speaker, I wish to confirm the remarks of the Hon. Member that there have been discussions with regard to equal time at the beginning, and there will be ongoing discussions regarding the House order for a vote, should it be required, on Wednesday of this week.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion? On debate, the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of National Defence.

Mr. Bud Bradley (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, last June, the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Beatty), the Minister responsible for emergency preparedness, tabled Bill C-77, the Emergencies Act, which will replace the War Measures Act legislation.

Since 1970, all Parties of the House have been on record as favouring new legislation to replace that archaic and abhorrent act. Nearly 18 years have elapsed since Canadians were promised a more enlightened approach for dealing with safety and security during national emergencies, and I am very gratified indeed to see how close we are now to fulfilling that promise.

It is time to ensure that the abuses of civil liberties committed against Japanese Canadians in World War II, and against Quebecers during the 1970 October crisis, will never happen again. Bill C-77 does this, and more.

I consider the October crisis a blot on our national conscience. As a political device the War Measures Act was tremendously effective. As an instrument for dispensing justice, it was not effective at all. We saw the disgraceful state of affairs where more than 450 Canadians were arrested and detained without charges being laid, and without being allowed to consult a lawyer. Of those people who were taken into custody, 439 were later released without being charged. To quote Ron Haggart and Aubrey Golden from their book Rumours of War:

> They had been placed at the worst possible legal disadvantage, denied information on what was alleged against them, denied counsel, interrogated and then "tried" in someone's office in their absence.

Going back further in our history, the War Measures Act was legitimately invoked in 1939 to permit Canada to play its proper role during the Second World War. There is no doubt that during those six difficult years from 1939 to 1945, the men and women who served in Canada's Armed Forces, and the Canadians at home whose efforts supported them, brought honour to Canada and contributed in no small way to Canada's emergence as an independent nation deserving our pride and allegiance.

• (1140)

We must also look back with sadness and regret at one aspect of the use of the War Measures Act in that period. I refer, of course, to the displacement and internment of Canadian citizens of Japanese descent and the confiscation of their property. Without wishing to make judgments about the exigencies and pressures that faced the decision-makers at that time and which led to these measures, Canadians today can only look back on those events with a good deal of national shame. The Minister was determined to ensure that the legislation which replaced the War Measures Act would be abundantly clear on at least this point, that this sort of abuse of executive power could not recur.

The Minister was very aware last summer, when he presented the replacement to the War Measures Act in this House, that because of the past events to which I have just referred the legislation would be seen as much as a civil rights issue as a means for allowing the Government to act swiftly and effectively in national emergencies. We thought we had a well considered piece of legislation, but we also knew that this time we had to be absolutely sure to get it right. After 17 years it was simply too important to the country to do otherwise.

For this reason the Minister invited all Canadians to comment on the draft legislation. The Minister and I have been impressed enormously in the past month with the care and amount of time which individuals and organizations have devoted to examining this important piece of legislation. There is something special about a country whose citizens care so passionately for individual freedom that they will devote hours of thoughtful reflection to a proposed law which may never have to be invoked.

When the Minister spoke during second reading debate, he indicated that the Government had an open mind on the detailed provisions of the Bill and would welcome constructive suggestions aimed at ensuring that when finally passed it would be the best that we could produce by working together.

At this time I would like to express the Government's sincere appreciation and gratitude to the many witnesses who appeared before the legislative committee and presented briefs which were obviously the product of a good deal of intense thought, research, and study. I would also like to compliment my colleagues in this House of all Party persuasions who worked on the Bill and gave the committee the benefit of their thoughtfully considered views.

The Bill which is the product of the committee's deliberations, and which we are now proposing for third reading and passage by this House, is similar in appearance to the original Bill and is consistent with the principle of the Bill which we approved at second reading. However, I can assure you, Mr. Speaker, that it is very different in detail. It is a much improved Bill. The amendments which the committee developed and approved and which are incorporated in the Bill we now have before us are numerous. I would hesitate to try to count the number of individual changes. They cover some three dozen distinct areas.

A point of note is that my hon. friend, the Member for Brant (Mr. Blackburn), introduced 61 amendments. Forty-eight were either adopted or incorporated in a government amendment. I would like to thank him personally for the work that he has done on this piece of legislation.

All the amendments contributed to better meeting the objective which I stated earlier in debate, that we should produce a Bill which adequately equips the Government of Canada to meet its constitutional responsibilities to provide for the safety and security of Canadians during national emergencies but does so with the minimum encroachment on the rights and freedoms of individual Canadians. The Government must be given the authorities it needs to minimize human suffering during emergencies but the legislation giving these authorities must be carefully crafted to ensure that ordinary governmental powers are exceeded only to the extent that is absolutely necessary in the circumstances. I am impressed by the manner in which the legislative committee was able to adhere to these objectives and produce a vastly improved Bill.

The changes that have been made to the Bill fall into three general categories. First, there are those which add precision to the legal formulation of what the Government is empowered to do and in what circumstances it would be given these additional powers. In this category I would include changes to the definition of "national emergency" and the definitions of the four specific types of national emergency, as well as changes to many of the specific powers granted in each of the four main parts of the Act.

Second are the changes which tighten up and enhance the supervision of the Government's exercise of the special authorities granted by the Act, supervisions which would be carried out both by the courts and by Parliament.

Finally, there are several changes which enhance the regime for providing redress to those individuals who, in the confusion and upheaval which inevitably would accompany a national emergency, might have suffered loss or injury as a result of measures taken by the Government in dealing with the emergency.

Without in any way intending to minimize the contributions made by any of the witnesses who appeared before the committee, I would like to single out three important Canadian organizations which gave very serious thought to this Bill and submitted briefs which were clearly the result of pooling the insight and experience of many individuals, people who are genuinely concerned about the impact that this important Bill would have on the future of Canada.

These three organizations are the Canadian Civil Liberties Association, the Canadian Bar Association, and the National Association of Japanese Canadians. A comparison of the recommendations in their briefs with the specific amendments incorporated into the Bill gives clear evidence of the contribution which these three organizations have made.

I would like to review in a little more detail some of the key amendments in each of the three categories to which I referred a moment ago. I referred earlier to the legacy of shame which we share because of the regrettable action taken against Japanese Canadians during World War II. Our legal advisors assured us that with the safeguards we had built into Bill C-77, coupled with the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms and the complex legal structure which has been put in place to implement the Charter, we could be 99.9 per cent sure that no conceivable situation could arise in which Bill C-77 could be used to empower a future Government to do anything resembling what was done to the Japanese Canadians.

However, I am sure that all Members of this House will agree with me that 99.9 per cent is not good enough. We want to be 100 per cent sure on this point. Hence the Government proposed, and the committee adopted, an amendment which states clearly and unequivocally that Bill C-77 does not empower the Government to make orders or regulations providing for detention, imprisonment, or internment of Canadian citizens or landed immigrants on the basis of race, nationality or ethnic origin, colour, religion, sex, age, or mental or physical disability. When Bill C-77 is passed, Mr. Speaker, we will have removed the last vestige of the legal underpinnings to that regrettable episode of Canadian history.

As correctly pointed out by many of the witnesses who appeared before the committee and by others who have commented on this Bill, the question of definitions is crucial. These have been gone over very carefully and I am confident that the definitions now in the Bill state as accurately and as clearly as can be done the intended scope of the Act in each of its four parts.

The definition of "national emergency" as now formulated captures the four elements common to all the proposals put to the committee. It represents the distilled consensus of the collective wisdom of the highly qualified people whose advice we were fortunate to receive. The four elements incorporated in a new definition of national emergency are; first, the notion of urgency; second, the temporary character of the abnormal situation; third, the inadequacy of the normal legal framework; and finally, the presence of a serious threat, either to the security of the country as a whole, or to public safety in circumstances which exceed provincial capabilities.

To qualify as a national emergency, all four elements must be present. In addition, the situation must meet the more detailed characteristics of one of the four particular types of national emergency as defined in each of Parts I through IV, and only those powers relevant to that class of emergency will be available to the Government. All of the definitions of the four types of emergencies have been tightened up by amendments.

With regard to the particular powers, permit me to enumerate some of the more important changes that have been made to limit more precisely the scope of the powers: Travel restrictions in Part I are now confined to those necessary for the protection of the health and safety of individuals. Use of Part I to terminate a labour dispute is now specifically excluded. Part II powers over public assembly are now confined to assemblies that may be reasonably expected to lead to a breach of the peace. Part III, search and seizure powers, are now confined only to the narrow requirements related to enforcing laws dealing with the defence contracts in order to prevent abuses, such as profiteering. Censorship is now explicitly excluded in Part III powers. All powers of Part I through III are to be exercised in a way that will not unduly impair the ability of a province to deal with a provincial emergency; and the powers of all parts are to be exercised with a view to obtaining the maximum possible concerted action with the provinces.

Let me now turn to a second general category of amendments. Several important changes have been made to enhance the manner in which the Government's use of the Act will be overseen by the courts and by Parliament. Perhaps the most important of these is the change in wording in about 20 subsections to ensure that judgments made about the necessity for exceptional measures must now be based on "reasonable grounds" rather than the unqualified "opinion" of the Governor in Council. This change means that all important decisions by the Governor in Council relating to the invocation and use of the emergency power will be challengeable in the courts.

I cannot emphasize too strongly how important this new approach is to the assurance of full protection of fundamental rights and freedoms. The continued application of the Charter, which is also assured by the Bill, coupled with the accountability of the Governor in Council inherent in this new wording, ensures that the fundamental freedoms of Canadians will be preserved as long as the nation, its institutions and its constitution are preserved.

In addition to this very basic change, a number of further amendments have been made to strengthen the parliamentary supervision, including the following: The sunset periods after which the powers will expire, unless renewed by Parliament, have been substantially reduced. All orders and regulations to be continued past the normal sunset period will have to be explicitly reconfirmed by Parliament. One House alone will be able to revoke a declaration of emergency at any time. Parliament will have a longer time to consider whether orders and regulations passed by the Governor in Council should be revoked, and will be able to reconsider any order or regulation at any time.

The all-Party Parliamentary Review Committee, which will be established whenever the Act is invoked, will keep the Government's use of its extraordinary powers under continuous review and will report to Parliament at least every 60 days. Whenever a declaration expires or is revoked, that is, when the emergency is over, a formal inquiry will be conducted. The number of MPs and Senators required to initiate a motion to revoke either a declaration or a particular order or regulation has been substantially reduced, and the time limits on debate of the motion have been removed. Orders and regulations passed by the Government will have to be tabled with much less delay.

Finally, let me comment briefly on the third category of amendment where the many changes made to the regime for compensation will add significantly to its effectiveness. Amendments include the following: The establishment of the right to reasonable compensation for commandeered services. The provision of reasonable compensation under Part V is now mandatory rather than discretionary. The appeal process in the compensation provisions is now mandatory and will allow the appeal judge to exceed the maximum compensation when to do otherwise would be unreasonable and unfair.

I think it is quite evident from this review of a selection of the amendments made by the legislative committee that it has most effectively and conscientiously acquitted its responsibilities and that Bill C-77 is much the better for its endeavours.

I said earlier that from the beginning we knew that the protection of basic rights in a national emergency would undoubtedly become the focus for public discussion of this Bill. Public discussion has, however, unfortunately led to some misunderstandings about the constitutional and legal protection of fundamental rights and freedoms in our country, both as it applies to normal times and as the protection is further strengthened in time of national emergency by provisions in Bill C-77.

The bulwark is the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms, and Bill C-77 goes to considerable length to ensure that the normal mechanisms for applying Charter protections will be upheld. The suggestion made by one of the witnesses that the Government could invoke the "notwithstanding" clause of Section 33 of the Charter, using an Order in Council pursuant to this Act, is completely without foundation. The Charter unequivocably states that to use the notwithstanding clause to override certain Charter rights, Parliament must declare the override expressly in an Act of Parliament. Bill C-77 contains no such provision. There is no doubt whatsoever that any attempt to use Section 33 through an Order in Council, should any future government be so ill advised as to try it, would be struck down by the courts.

Any limitation to charter rights a government might consider necessary in a national emergency would be challengeable on two counts. First, under Bill C-77 as I indicated earlier, the Governor in Council could be challenged in court to demonstrate that there are reasonable grounds for the necessity of the measure. Second, under Section 1 of the Charter, the Government could be challenged to demonstrate that the limitations were "reasonable and demonstrably justifiable in a free and democratic society." It is difficult to imagine, Mr. Speaker, a Government going ahead with measures if there were any doubts about its ability to justify its actions in court.

There are additional protections in the system which have been put in place to ensure that all orders and regulations are consistent with the Charter, whether they are passed in normal times or in an emergency. The Statutory Instruments Act, the Canadian Bill of Rights and the Department of Justice Act have been amended, and I might point out that these amendments were made by the current Parliament to place special responsibilities on the Minister of Justice to examine every regulation and every Bill in order to ascertain whether there are any inconsistencies with the Charter and to report such inconsistency to the House of Commons at the earliest opportunity. These responsibilities of the Minister of Justice are, in a sense, separate from his role as a member of Cabinet and confer on him a quasi-judicial role for which he is responsible directly to Parliament.

To carry out this responsibility the Minister, of course, relies on the highly qualified support of the law officers of the Crown. To suggest that a Government might attempt, for some obscure motives of expediency, to pass regulations which were knowingly inconsistent with the Charter, is to impugn the integrity not only of a Minister of the Crown but also of a major and extremely important branch of the Public Service. The emergence of such an eventuality is beyond belief, Mr. Speaker.

Much has been made of mention in this Bill of the possibility of secret orders or regulations. No one has questioned that in very rare and unusual circumstances there may possibly be a need for secrecy to protect the purpose of the action being taken. However, Bill C-77 is not the source of the authority to make secret orders or regulations. This authority stems from the Statutory Instruments Act and is also available in normal times.

• (1200)

There is nothing in Bill C-77 which extends or alters in any way the restrictions on the use of secret orders inherent in the Statutory Instruments Act and its associated regulations. Quite the contrary. What Bill C-77 does do, Mr. Speaker, is to introduce a means of opening up such matters to scrutiny by Parliament, not only by requiring that all secret orders be referred to a parliamentary committee, but also by empowering that committee to revoke or amend such orders. Thus, Bill C-77 provides additional protection, not less, against abuse of secret orders in a national emergency.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, I should like to say a word about the confusion that has arisen concerning the requirement for warrants for search and seizure.

Protection against unreasonable search or seizure is a Charter right, and this has been interpreted by the Supreme Court to imply that a warrant is always required except in administrative inspections or in certain exigent circumstances where there is a physical impossibility of obtaining a warrant in time and where not to act would unreasonably thwart the administration of justice.

Any Act of Parliament that provided for a warrantless search or seizure would thus be inconsistent with the Charter, and of course Bill C-77 does not include any such provision.

The way in which the members of the legislative committee, those who made representations before it, and individual Canadians in general have responded to this legislation in terms of suggestions for amendment and fine tuning, has been most impressive. We have tried to accommodate all points of view as best we could.

Some things are above politics, Mr. Speaker. I think Bill C-77 falls into that category. All Canadians, wherever they live, whatever their political affiliation, whatever their occupation, have a vested interest in suitable emergency powers legislation, legislation that can meet, swiftly and effectively, any national emergency that may confront us.

We have seen some old wounds reopened in recent weeks. The publication of Mr. Jamieson's diary, with its allegations of political expediency, along with the public representations of the National Association of Japanese Canadians remind us of the horrors of the events of October 1970 and the early 1940s.

Those events are now behind us. Let us not waste more time by engaging in unfruitful accusations. The important thing now is to get on with it, and to see that such events cannot recur.

The Bill the Minister is recommending today for third reading represents the culmination of a considerable effort on the part of Canadian men and women to try to accommodate, first and foremost, the rights of their fellow citizens, while giving Government the tools it needs to ensure the safety and security of our citizenry in a national crisis.

I trust, Mr. Speaker, that the other place will view Bill C-77 as an honest attempt on the part of those of us who have the privilege of serving Canadians in Parliament to achieve that end and thus worthy of both their careful consideration and expeditious treatment.

Mr. Derek Blackburn (Brant): Mr. Speaker, I, too, am happy to participate in the debate on the motion for the third reading of Bill C-77. I am proud to say—and I think I say this on behalf of all members of the committee—that we have, at this stage, a much better Bill than that which was introduced for first reading in the House. Bill C-77, in its final form, is a Bill that is certainly acceptable to the majority of Canadians.

Parliament does work, and this is one very good example of how we can make this place work. I would hope that this can be duplicated many times over with respect to other Bills.

Looking at the history of Bill C-77, Mr. Speaker, I note that it was introduced by the Government with great fanfare last June. The Minister expected all Canadians to be grateful that we were finally moving to replace the dreaded and Draconian War Measures Act—and there was some initial support for that concept.

My own criticisms, voiced at the press conference held at the time that the proposed Emergencies Act was introduced, were extremely limited. I had not had time to go through the Bill in any detail, but I did have, even at that time, some very grave misgivings as to what was contained in it as introduced for first reading.

I think it is also fair to say, Mr. Speaker, that the Government was surprised at the strength of the criticism the Bill as originally introduced attracted. Those who took the time to read the proposed Emergencies Act were shocked. They were startled to find that a Bill to replace the War Measures Act would contain so many threats to civil liberties, and in that sense it seemed inconsistent. Criticism rained down from lawyers, from civil libertarians, and from ethnic organizations— the very groups that the Government had hoped to please.

But, to its credit, the Government, and the Minister, did not go on the defensive. The Minister adopted, instead, a flexible attitude. He showed that he was not afraid to lose face—and I am convinced that he did not, in any event. He demonstrated that he had an open mind. We managed to avoid an ugly confrontation, the reason being that so much outside advice was taken to heart. This was wise, in our view. The Government was sailing in uncharted waters in the context of the proposed Emergencies Act. We had no pattern or blueprint to guide us. We were not amending the War Measures Act; we were starting from scratch.

The most important changes made, in my view, were those made to the opening clauses of the Bill. The definition of "emergency" was changed substantially, thanks largely to the unrelenting pressure from Canadians concerned about civil liberties. There are several requirements that a situation must meet before emergency powers can be used. The situation must be urgent, critical and temporary. It must endanger the lives, health and safety of Canadians, and it must exceed the capacity of any province to deal with the matter.

Alternatively, the emergency must threaten the Government's ability to preserve the sovereignty, security and territorial integrity of this country. And there is one final hurdle that must be cleared—and I think this is a very important one: emergency powers can only be used when the situation is so drastic that no other law of Canada can deal with the situation.

At the time of the introduction of the War Measures Act of 1970, it was strongly argued by the opponents of the proclamation of that Act that the Criminal Code could have handled that emergency in the City of Montreal, and elsewhere. But, the Government of the day chose to bring forward the Draconian War Measures Act, instead of using the Criminal Code, as many of us thought it should have done.

Looking back at that situation, the Government of the day would have had to have used the Criminal Code, because it was applicable at that time. These conditions should prevent any future Government from invoking emergency powers irresponsibly, on flimsy excuses.

The Cabinet, under Bill C-77, would be prohibited from giving itself new powers by Order in Council. The Act cannot be changed by Cabinet. This means that no Government could give itself the power to override the Charter of Rights and Freedoms in the Constitution. That opinion came to the committee from law officers of the Crown, who were giving us their professional advice and interpretation.

We have ensured that Parliament will have greater oversight powers during an emergency. Cabinet must report to Parliament more frequently and ask permission to continue emergency measures, and the maximum time allowed for emergency powers has been reduced to 120 days—and that is in time of war. So, the maximum time allowable is 120 days, and that for the most critical kind of emergency, that which is set out under Part IV, or an emergency involving Canada at war.

When Parliament debates whether to grant or extend a period of emergency, a full debate is now guaranteed. All references to time allocation have been removed from this Bill. Parliament also can now initiate a debate to revoke emergency powers much more easily. Now only 20 MPs or 10 Senators can force a debate. That debate can no longer be delayed, it must happen within three days. It will be a full debate, allowing all to be heard. We have doubled the length of debate to 10 hours. Neither can the Government avoid the verdict of Parliament. There will be no filibuster to extend emergency powers. A vote is mandatory after those 10 hours of debate.

A similar debate is guaranteed when Members want to challenge an unjust order or regulation. We have also removed any time limit on challenges. There is no longer a limited window of opportunity when MPs would have to decide whether or not to challenge an order. They can do so whenever an injustice or abuse takes place.

Parliament will also get the information necessary to take corrective action quickly. Orders and regulations must be tabled in the House or sent to a parliamentary review committee within two days of their passage by Cabinet. We have also placed more restrictions on the type of orders and regulations that Cabinet can make. For example, travel restrictions can be placed on Canadians only during a public welfare emergency to protect health and safety. Public assembly could only be restricted during a public order emergency if the Government could show reasonable grounds to believe that it would lead to violence. Even there, at the height of an emergency, I anticipate that in most circumstances, unlike under the War Measures Act, Canadian citizens living in Canada will be able to assemble to discuss that specific proclamation and that emergency, provided in the view of the law enforcement agencies that assembly will not by its nature result in violence.

Persons who might be conscripted to provide an essential service during an emergency can no longer be sued for any action committed under orders from the Government. The Government has to provide reasonable compensation to any conscriptee. If that conscriptee is unhappy with the compensation, he or she now has the right to appeal. We have made the appeal process mandatory, "We" meaning the committee. The same rights have been extended to people who might suffer material damage from government action during an emergency. They can also get compensation and appeal any award. No one can be exempted from seeking compensation. That provision of the Bill has been deleted. The Minister cannot be arbitrary or capricious in setting some artificial maximum compensation. He can be overruled by a Federal Court judge acting as an accessor.

Finally, Canadians will not be kept in the dark after the emergency is over. There will be no repeat of the deafening and shameful silence that followed the October, 1970, crisis. An inquiry must be held and its findings made public within 360 days. Any Government that abuses the emergency powers will certainly be made to pay the political price.

I think it is shameful that the people of Canada are still waiting for the official report on all aspects of the proclamation of the War Measures Act in October, 1970. That is almost 18 years ago. Books and articles have been written on it and diaries exposed after death, but we have never really had a comprehensive report. There are still people, particularly in the City of Montreal and the Province of Quebec, very upset that no official report has been provided to the public.

That list of amendments is by no means exhaustive. The Government has already listed others and it would take up too much of the time of the House to hear all the amendments made since the Act was first introduced. In fact, the Bill is barely recognizable. The Speaker has been quite generous in allowing this Bill to proceed in such a different form. However, it is precisely because this Bill has changed so much that I will be recommending its support at third reading to my caucus later this week.

I do not wish to take credit for all the changes we have made. I am no lawyer and I am certainly not an expert in emergency situations. This was a collective effort. I would like to pay tribute to those organizations and individuals who provided us with their expert advice. The forceful representations of the National Association of Japanese Canadians, the Canadian Civil Liberties Association, the Canadian Bar Association, the Canadian Labour Congress, the Ukrainian Canadian Committee, the Law Union of Ontario, La Ligue des Droits et Libertés, Professors Maxwell Cohen and Peter Rosenthal, various provincial Governments, police forces and others deserve the thanks of this House, the committee, indeed of all Canadians.

I cannot say that all their concerns were satisfied. Neither were mine. However, they can take pride in the changes that are rooted in their contribution.

No Act of course is perfect coming from this Chamber because, as I have said on many occasions and I keep reminding myself, no one in this Chamber is perfect anyway—with some possibly notable exceptions—but nonetheless it is important to draw to the attention of my colleagues and people outside the Chamber that we really have done our co-operative best in producing what is I think a very good Bill to cope with emergencies.

In fairness, I think I should also mention some measures that might still be taken. In particular, the National Association of Japanese Canadians would like to see this Act referred to the Supreme Court. They would like a ruling that clearly states that no Charter overrides are possible under the powers of this Bill. I support that idea. We have the consensus of the executive, through Cabinet, and will soon have the approval of the legislature when this Bill passes third reading and the Senate. Why not get approval from the judiciary as well, here and now or within a reasonable period of time when the Bill is fresh in our minds and the Act becomes law? If we have done our work properly, there is nothing to fear. A Supreme Court ruling would provide a crowning touch, giving Canadians that final assurance that their rights and freedoms are secure, even in the most trying of times.

For my part, I would have liked to have seen some protection for refugees under Clause 28(g). We were discussing that earlier this morning at report stage amendments. I understand the Government's arguments about throwing open the immigration processes, but I want to avoid any chance of a repetition of that shameful incident of the 1930s when a boatload of Jews was turned away from our shores to face the concentration camps in Europe. It could be any other kind of people today given the conflict-ridden world in which we live. However, I think we should always keep in mind, and I do not want to open up the Immigration Act in this debate, the relationship between the word "refuge" and "refugee". A refugee is a person, a human being.

We may or may not have prejudices against certain groups in the world, certain races. Being human, these things unfortunately do happen. Fortunately, they are usually only temporary. However, if we keep our minds set on the understanding and meaning of the word "refuge", I would like to think that this country of ours is still big enough, still magnanimous enough and still has a big enough heart that we can say to the world's beleaguered peoples: Yes, we are still a refuge for you. They can come here to live in peace, to work and develop, provided that basic laws are upheld and the administrative process works. I must admit that these are very important considerations that other Members in other committees are currently addressing with other Bills.

I would have liked to see the kind of amendment to Clause 28(h) applied here as well with respect to refugees, but I can appreciate the problems that this would have caused with respect to the process of another piece of legislation dealing with refugees that will soon be back before the House. I accept the fact that my arguments failed to sway the other members in the committee's clause-by-clause discussion. Perhaps some time in the future another government and another minister may want to look at that situation again.

While I am speaking of disappointments, I have something else to say. I have mentioned those who have helped. Let me also point out that others have not. I am referring to the Liberal Party. This is not meant as a partisan cheap shot, and my colleague from Sudbury knows that I bear him no personal animosity, but he also knows that he is the third spokesman that his Party has had on this issue. None of them attended the legislative committee with any consistency. They proposed no amendments. That is very disappointing because, after all, it was a Liberal Government that last imposed the War Measures Act. His Leader was Minister of Justice at that time. That government's actions have never really been explained and a promise to replace the War Measures Act was never honoured. I hope that this legislation is not discovered to be faulty because of some oversight that might have been avoided with the help of Members of the Liberal Party.

I am also somewhat disappointed that a law of such importance got such little attention in the national press. We are dealing with the sovereignty, safety and security of our country. This Bill deals with safeguards that will protect lives, liberties, rights and freedoms of Canadians from arbitrary Government action. Yet because this debate was not as acrimonious as Question Period usually is, few people know anything about it.

The vast majority of Canadians do not know how important this work has been. It may sound strange to say, but I hope they never will. I hope that no disaster, either natural or caused by man's weaknesses, follies or foibles, ever befalls this country and causes this law to be used. I hope that no one has to discover that the Government no longer has the arbitrary powers of the War Measures Act. But I do hope that all who have been involved in writing this legislation will take quiet satisfaction in their work. I think Canada is a better place with this Bill on the books and the War Measures Act relegated to the pages of history texts.

It was a pleasure working in the committee with my colleagues in the House. It was a pleasure listening to the briefs and it was refreshing to see a representative of a Government that has an overwhelming majority in the House accede to the wishes of many witnesses and, indeed, to Opposition Members like myself at committee stage.

I agree with the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary, who was also most co-operative, that this is a Bill of which we can all be justly proud.

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton—The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure to speak to a Bill of such great importance not only to our country and our citizens, but to our very way of life. Legislation such as this not only reflects the will of the Government and Parliament, but the attitudes of the people of that particular country. Not only does this Parliament wish to send such a message to other countries, we want to send it to our citizens so they may realize that not only are they protected during a time of crisis, they also have rights. The rights of Canadians are paramount.

It has been suggested that this legislation improves upon the War Measures Act, which certainly needed to be addressed. This legislation, as it is presently amended in the House of Commons, is a vast improvement over the Bill that was introduced by the Government some months ago. It is a credit to the Government and all Members of Parliament that they realized the Government had undertaken measures that even it did not quite understand.

During the debate on this legislation, there has been much criticism of the War Measures Act. Although that law has been roundly denounced, it has only been implemented three times: during the First World War, the Second World War, and the October crisis.

When one considers that the War Measures Act has been implemented on only three occasions, I am concerned that Bill C-77, the emergencies legislation, can be implemented far too often. While the number of cases in which it can be implemented have been reduced even further as a result of amendments, my Party still believes that there are occasions when this legislation can be used needlessly. We also believe that further improvements could be made to this legislation, including the provision dealing with wars which suggests that Canada does not have to be involved in such a war. It only states that this war has to be so serious as to be a national emergency. This is a very grey area that should be addressed.

The Parliamentary Secretary and the Member for Brant (Mr. Blackburn) also talked about assemblies, which are now permitted as long as they do not lead to a breach of the peace. That remains as a very grey area because the right of assembly is of paramount importance in this country. There must be nothing in the legislation that is so vague as to prevent people not only from having the right of assembly but knowing when it can occur. Witnesses who appeared before the committee also raised some of these important points. I think these have been very important, indeed.

I would like to mention one group which appeared, the Canadian Association of Japanese Canadians. To reiterate the injustice that was done to Japanese Canadians during the Second World War should not be considered repetitious. This is the sort of thing we must continue to talk about. To not rethink this injustice will dim our memories, giving us further inclination to allow something like this to happen again. It was a travesty, a black mark on our history. I am pleased to see the Government has made mention of it because that would indicate to me that it was in the Government's thinking as it continued to work on this Bill.

I believe it is also important at this time to mention the Charter of Rights and Freedoms which were brought forward just a little over six years ago. The Charter is absolutely fundamental to the success of a Bill such as this emergency legislation. It is now in the Constitution that Canadians have specified rights. It is in our Constitution that Canadians cannot be taken advantage of. It is in our Constitution that Canadians can rely on those rights and freedoms regardless of the expediency of Governments emergency situations.

The Parliamentary Secretary mentioned that Governments will not take advantage of expediency in cases of national emergency or other emergencies specified under this legislation. He said his Party would not do it. A short while after, he proceeded to bring up the case of the diaries of the former Secretary of State for External Affairs, the Hon. Don Jamieson. The Government could not resist bringing that up for no reason at all, using an expediency within the same speech. How is it going to be relied upon to resist expediencies in time of national crisis? It cannot be relied upon and that is a very serious situation. However, it is minimized somewhat because we do have, thanks to the former Liberal Government, the Charter of Rights and Freedoms, which underlies and, to a great extent, gives some kind of security in spite of what this Government may consider expedient at any particular time.

I was particularly dismayed at the expediency taken by the Hon. Member for Brant who himself has played a large role in the amendments brought forward. He himself could not resist the temptation to take a dig at the Hon. Member for Sudbury (Mr. Frith) who, unfortunately, was not able to be present at some of the meetings. I think that certainly minimizes the role of the Hon. Member's Party when it feels that in order to build up its particular role it has to take aim at certain Members of Parliament. Certainly, the Hon. Member for Sudbury is very concerned about this legislation and vitally interested in the rights of all Canadians.

I think it is important that we in Parliament make a very definite commitment to the rights of Canadians. It is not something we can do just once. All of our legislation must continually show this. It is a fundamental underpinning of our whole society. The witnesses that came before the committee were not merely stating an opinion as Canadians. They were stating an experience, a belief and an education about these very important subjects. If we qualify our beliefs with respect to the rights of Canadians, we are very likely to qualify our rights on other issues as well. If we qualify our beliefs and say that a certain right can be violated in a state of emergency, regardless of the seriousness of the emergency, we are gradually starting the process of the abolition of the rights of Canadians in all aspects of our Canadian way of life.

It is important to look at this issue from an aspect of the safety and security of Canadians in times of emergency. We cannot discount that. We must also look at it within the framework of the rights of all Canadians. We must not in any sense of the word try to chip away at these rights in anticipation of solving a situation regardless of how important. By chipping away at these rights, even if we are solving a situation, we are creating a greater problem, that is eroding the rights and principles on which this country is built.

The Liberal Party supports the legislation. Granted, there are things we would like to see changed. It is not a perfect Bill, in our opinion, but it is a Bill which has been much improved. As such we give it our support. We appreciate the concerns of a lot of witnesses who appeared before the committee. These concerns are definitely concerns which, in many cases, should have been given greater consideration.

I do feel it is important that this Parliament not rely on the Supreme Court of Canada to draft our legislation. If we as parliamentarians do not have the knowledge and belief of what is right for this country, then we should turn over the whole function of law making to the Supreme Court of Canada. Parliament has a role and its role is to make the laws. The role of the Supreme Court of Canada is to interpret those laws. If we cannot believe in the laws we make, particularly in areas of such tremendous importance as emergency legislation, if we are hesitant about what we are doing, then we have no right to be here.

This is an improved Bill, although it is not perfect by any means. It falls short in many ways. But it is a Bill that has been improved. We in the Liberal Party feel this legislation will be constantly reviewed through the sunset provisions and that will mean that we will constantly examine and never lose sight of the rights of all Canadians.

Mr. Marc Ferland (Portneuf): Mr. Speaker, as the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Beatty) observed recently, it is not up to us to rewrite history or to delete with one stroke of the pen the story of the darkest days this country ever experienced. However, it is in our power to turn the page and write a new chapter, and we can have that satisfaction today, by adopting the third reading stage of the proposed Emergencies Act.

We, my Quebec colleagues and in fact all Members of this House, have cast a little further behind us our memories of the War Measures Act, memories that still persist in the minds of so many of our fellow citizens. When former Minister Don Jamieson's memoirs were published, it was clear from the considerable emotion they aroused that the wounds of October 1970 have not completely healed.

As a Member from Quebec and sitting on the Legislative Committee responsible for examining the Emergencies Bill, I was able to measure the depth of the suffering and fear of those who came to testify against the War Measures Act. Through the various arguments and points made by each group, the same message persisted: Never again! While listening to both the protests and the hope in the voices of these men and women, I saw in my mind other faces and the suffering and indignation they expressed.

Of course, as a Government we are proud we were able to keep a major commitment to national security and to safeguarding the individual rights of Canadians in an emergency. However, I must acknowledge the work that has been done by all Members of this House, and I give praise where praise is due. I believe this House has realized that the interests of our fellow citizens are more important than ideological differences or personal rivalry.

When the Emergencies Bill, Bill C-77, was tabled, the Members of this House, as did legal experts, the media and the general public, recognized the fact that the proposed legislation had nothing in common with the War Measures Act. In fact, everyone agreed that the latter legislation should be repealed.

Bill C-77 provides unprecedented guarantees. The Emergencies Act, which will ensure a coherent and graduated response during national emergencies, will be subject to the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms and the Canadian Bill of Rights, and it will be consistent with the 1967 United Nations International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights. It will be governed by mechanisms designed to prevent abuse, and its application will be subject to very strict control by Parliament. Furthermore, it will provide for compensation in the event of personal loss, injury or damage.

Despite this undeniable progress, certain concerns were expressed about the definition of the powers the Government could be given in an emergency, the existence of effective control over the Government's actions and the compensation of victims.

The Government did not reject this criticism but carefully examined the various points. The Minister responsible for civil defence made it clear that he deliberately tabled the Bill early last summer to give as much time as possible to those who wished to make suggestions for improvements. Very much aware of the implications of this Bill and its impact on Canadians generally, the Government felt that passage of the Bill should be based on a broad consensus.

Provincial governments, including the Government of Quebec, legal experts, civil liberties activists and representatives of Canada's various ethnic groups responded with an interest and enthusiasm we found most impressive.

As the minister responsible for emergency preparedness, the Minister of National Defence, said recently, there were many suggestions, "sometimes contradictory, but mostly constructive. Expressed as amendments, these suggestions were meant to provide a better balance in the difficult reconciliation of the exercise of a necessary power and the no less necessary protection of rights."

The text presented to us today goes far beyond the semantic or terminological changes made to it. By clarifying some concepts, it safeguards in emergency situations the freedom we have won.

With the Emergency Measures Act, the Government will be able to handle disasters and peace-time emergencies with the desired moderation. It will be able to react in a deliberate manner to situations of international tension. It will allow the Government to meet its obligation to ensure the security of its citizens in crisis situations; this obligation is rooted in the Constitution and in history.

"Never again!" Japanese Canadians told us. The Government listened to them. The War Measures Act will be repealed and the Emergencies Act will contain guarantees making a recurrence of the persecution they suffered impossible.

The National Association of Japanese Canadians made many recommendations, and they were followed. The amendments adopted by the Government are along the lines desired by this association. Further guarantees have even been added.

Thus, the Bill explicitly excludes detention, imprisonment or internment of Canadian citizens or landed immigrants for reasons of race, nationality or ethnic origin or other discriminatory reasons.

The types of situations that would justify granting emergency powers were more clearly described and defined. Reasonable compensation for loss, injury or damage will be specified in a comminatory rather that discretionary way. The section allowing for the exclusion of some groups of people was removed. All orders and regulations issued under the emergencies legislation must be directly related to resolving the crisis. Furthermore, the Government may be required to justify its reasons for such orders and regulations before the courts.

Orders and regulations will be subject to review by a Parliamentary Review Committee, consisting of Members of the various parties and acting independently from Cabinet. The Committee will be required to report regularly to Parliament on the way the Government is handling the emergency. All orders and regulations shall be tabled within two days; time limits on debate on a motion for confirmation of a declaration of emergency, for confirmation of a proclamation continuing a declaration of emergency or for the revocation of an order or regulation, have been removed.

Limits on moving a motion for revocation or amendment of an order or regulation have been removed. An inquiry following an emergency must be completed within one year.

Never again, Mr. Speaker! No more Black October in Quebec! The very structure of Bill C-77, in which the part dealing with insurrection in peace time has been separated from provisions applying in time of war, makes this impossible. This is only one of a series of guarantees that provide safeguards against abuse.

Mr. Speaker, some venues are particularly inspiring. Today, we are keenly aware of the people of this country who elected us, and of the presence in these precincts of senior Members of all parties to whom the War Mesures Act was a thorn in the conscience of honest citizens.

Mr. Speaker, I am a junior Member of Parliament, but I must say that I was very proud to work with Members of all parties on this Bill. As so many Quebecers, I experienced the events of October 1970. In Quebec, there was general astonishment that these measures were applied. We, who were there, did not have the impression of any real danger. However, the Government at the time decided to use this reactionary piece of legislation.

An Hon. Member: At the request of the Government of Quebec!

Mr. Ferland: Legislation which, I feel, did not respond to what was needed at the time. This Bill, however, will respect the individual and respect our freedom but will also allow the Government to provide for the security of all Canadians. I think that is a step in the right direction. I think that Canada and this Parliament could only be praised for voting in favour of this legislation. I hope, Mr. Speaker, that Members will vote unanimously in favour of this Bill. That would be an example for all nations on this planet. Canada could once again show that it leads the way in passing laws that protect its citizens and at the same time let them express their views instead of being rebuffed as this happened in the past.

Heaven knows the Japanese suffered when their basic rights were violated. This legislation will prevent such abominations from happening again.

This Bill will enable the police in this country to play their proper role. I remember the testimony of various representatives of police corps in Canada who appeared before the Committee and told us: This Bill will really let us do the work we are paid to do. All the groups we met, including civil rights groups, believe this is a good Bill and that it provides the kind of legislation we expect as citizens of a free country like Canada.

However, I was somewhat disappointed in the lack of participation by my Liberal colleagues. I would have liked to see them take a more active part, as did my colleagues of the New Democratic Party and the Conservative Party, in drafting this Bill. This is a non-partisan Bill. This is a Bill that really meets Canadians' expectations. I was quite disappointed with the Liberals' participation in this Bill.

My party still proposed 35 amendments to this Bill, which were adopted. The NDP proposed 61, and 48 were associated with our amendments, and we agreed to make a Bill that really satisfied the expectations of all the interested parties we met.

We heard 22 witnesses and 15 Hon. Members took part on the legislative committee. It is a great credit to all those people who gave a great deal of time to analyse and study a difficult piece of legislation. It is not easy to pass a Bill that is meant to protect people but that limits some freedoms in times of crisis.

But for the first time, we have an Emergency Measures Bill for periods of crisis where the citizen who feels his rights have been violated can appeal, seek compensation and submit the decisions rendered to a review committee. Canadians will even be able to take the Government to court if that they think their rights have been violated or that the Government has abused its powers. I do not know so many countries on earth that have such a broad piece of legislation that protects so many citizens as the one tabled in the House for third reading today. I hope that it will be passed quickly, because Quebecers and Japanese Canadians whose rights were violated expect it, as do all those Canadians, men and women, who were wronged by the former War Measures Act.

Mr. Speaker, thank you for letting me speak today and tell Canadians that I am proud that this Bill was tabled today for third reading. This Bill in fact reflects Canada and the fairness that this Parliament, this government, really want to show to all Canadian citizens in this country.

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, I wish to take this opportunity to congratulate, in particular, the Hon. Member for Brant (Mr. Blackburn) who certainly performed heroics in getting some 41 amendments to Bill C-77, the Emergencies Act. I wish to say to the Hon. Member, through you, Mr. Speaker, that the people of Canada owe a debt to his insight and persistence in participating in this, and to those members on the committee from the government side who participated in rolling up their sleeves and tackling an issue that has been a most controversial one in modern Canadian history.

I was not an elected Member of the House at the time, but I certainly was a candidate in the wings. I remember when the New Democratic Party stood up and voted against the imposition of the War Measures Act. You could not give New Democrats away around this country, Mr. Speaker. There was this great upswell that the then Prime Minister, Pierre Elliott Trudeau, represented everything that was right in the Canadian psyche, that he was acting with the best interests of Canada at heart, that he was acting with a considerable amount of insight and depth about the FLQ problem in Quebec. There was this upswing and support within the communities, and within my community, that somehow or another the New Democrats were less than patriotic in their opposition to something that was so obviously correct, the imposition of the War Measures Act. We opposed the imposition of the War Measures Act.

Mr. Caccia: You approved it on first reading.

Mr. Rodriguez: There were 16 members of this caucus who stood up and voted against the imposition of the War Measures Act. I remember receiving many phone calls from people who felt that the New Democrats were not patriotic in doing that. I recall at that time our Leader, Tommy Douglas, put forward the argument that I regurgitated to our supporters in the area, that he had met with the Prime Minister and there was no information the Prime Minister gave him that would lead him to be convinced that other Acts could not have been used, for example, the Criminal Code. Mr. Douglas was not persuaded that there was a situation of apprehended insurrection. As history has unfolded, history has absolved the New Democrats and the position that they took at that time.

Mr. Caccia: With the benefit of hindsight. How about Pierre Laporte?

Mr. Rodriguez: In fact, even after the imposition of the War Measures Act, and now we come to 1988 and we finally have a Bill that goes a long way to correcting what was essentially a very Lucy-goosey kind of law at that time. For example, it does not state that there are not certain emergencies where the Government needs the power to do certain things. This Bill clearly defines what that national emergency is. In defining that, it clearly points out in Clause 3 that the Government must go through all the laws of the land, and the various codes to ensure that what it has to do cannot be done under those particular codes. It is only after the Government has gone through that process that it can then declare an emergency. It is only then that the Government can take steps under this Emergencies Act.

It seems to me that we all remember Pierre Trudeau as some great proponent of human rights.

Mr. Caccia: He was.

Mr. Rodriguez: Even after implementing this, he never took seriously the need to reform that emergency Act.

Mr. Caccia: Look at the Charter. He brought in the Charter.

An Hon. Member: Order.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Before I call it one o'clock, the Hon. Member will have 15 minutes, plus 10 minutes for questions and comments.

The Hon. Member for Cape Breton—The Sydneys on a point of order.

Mr. MacLellan: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez) seems to be getting away with a lot of innuendoes. He made an inference that former Prime Minister Trudeau let everyone believe that he was seriously interested and seriously concerned. I want to know from the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt if he really doubts the sincere concern that Mr. Trudeau had at that time.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member may wish to put that question during questions and comments.

It being 1 p.m., I do now leave the chair until 2 p.m. this day.

At 1 p.m. the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

ACID RAIN—HELSINKI PROTOCOL—CALL FOR UNITED STATES SIGNATURE

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, instead of using metaphors on acid rain the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) should be to the point with President Reagan and make Canada's position clear once and for all, namely, that the U.S. Government should sign the Helsinki Protocol as 21 other nations have done so as to join in the global effort to cut SO2 pollution by at least 30 per cent by 1993 based on 1980 emission levels, and that the United States Government should, by 1994, cut sulphur pollution by 50 per cent using 1980 as a base year.

The Prime Minister should also ask the President of the United States to explain why only one per cent of the $5 billion Clean Coal Technology Program announced in 1986 has so far been spent.

Finally, the Prime Minister should notify the President of the United States that the Government of Canada will seek yearly compensation payments for the damage caused by transboundary air pollution, beginning with compensation for damage to our maple syrup farmers who have already started to quantify their yearly damage.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

DESTRUCTION OF AMAZON RAIN FORESTS

Mr. John Oostrom (Willowdale): Mr. Speaker, major development projects in Third World nations are threatening our planet's future. In Brazil the rain forests are being decimated daily. The Polonoroeste Project has been responsible for the destruction of an area of the Amazon forests the size of Great Britain. The Carajas Project threatens to destroy another 58,000 square miles of rain forests in just three years. That is the same area as our Maritime provinces.

Destruction of rain forests, which provide the majority of the world's oxygen supply, is continuing on the same scale in other nations. Since the majority of these projects are funded by the World Bank, and since Canadian taxpayers provide one-third of a billion dollars through the World Bank via our Government, we must use this opportunity to voice our concerns over the destruction of the environment. Canada must assume a leadership role or we can become unwilling accomplices to an environmental disaster which will envelop our planet.

INCOME TAX

NORTHERN RESIDENTS TAX ALLOWANCE

Mr. John Parry (Kenora—Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) must not persist in trying to side-step the growing protest from many remote areas of the country against the inequitable application of the Northern Residents Tax Allowance. Things have reached such a pass in my riding, for example, that the Fort Frances Chamber of Commerce has retained a lawyer to prepare a legal case against the Minister for his Department's misguided action in denying the allowance to Fort Frances residents while extending it to all the adjacent communities.

Meanwhile, the Minister has refused to meet with several elected leaders of affected communities, leading 12 of them to sign an invitation to him which, 10 days after delivery, still awaits a reply.

Meanwhile, the Parliamentary Secretary appeared at the adjournment proceedings to advise, again, that a review commission will be appointed "soon". Well, Mr. Speaker, how soon is "soon", and why, in our democratic society, does the Minister display such an obdurate disdain for the reasonable requests of elected municipal leaders?

VOLUNTARY ORGANIZATIONS

TRIBUTE TO VOLUNTEERS

Mr. Claude Lanthier (La Salle): Mr. Speaker, I should like to repeat the comments made last week by my hon. colleagues in praise of our dedicated Canadian volunteers.

Polls carried out over the past year indicate that 32 per cent of all Canadians are involved in some sort of volunteer work.

For the millions of Canadians men and women who devote their time and effort to charitable work the satisfaction of improving the living conditions of their fellow human beings is their only reward.

Mr. Speaker, all these volunteers operating within the framework of community organizations, devote their spare time to recreational activities, such as the Laurendeau—Dunton, as well as cultural and church activities. They provide institutionalized and hospitalized patients, as well as the aged with comfort. A great many of them are also involved with new Canadians, young people, as well as individuals faced with legal or mental problems.

Mr. Speaker, volunteer work is the very backbone of social life within our Canadian democracy.

Good luck to all these Canadian men and women volunteers!

CHILD CARE

CALL FOR WITHDRAWAL OF GOVERNMENT PROGRAM

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, hundreds of parents, child care workers, and interested people have joined in Ottawa this week to send a message to the Conservative Government. The so-called national child care package of the Government is simply not going to work and should be withdrawn. The message came through loud and clear that parents want to be able to have available spaces, and safe spaces, so that their children might be well looked after when they are outside of their own care.

This morning all three Parties had a chance to meet with representatives of the child care movement across the country and to make a commitment so that we will have a move toward a universally acceptable child care system that ensures a safe atmosphere for every child across the country. It is a crime that in today's society in a country as rich as Canada our most precious resource is left oftentimes as latchkey children in unsafe spaces, and outside the care of a really good situation.

• (1405)

We call on the Government—it has a last chance to recant on the road to election—to bring in a national child care strategy that really deals with child care.

WESTERN GRAIN STABILIZATION ACT

ANNOUNCEMENT OF INTERIM PAYMENT TO FARMERS

Mr. Geoff Wilson (Swift Current—Maple Creek): Mr. Speaker, in 1985 our Government amended the Western Grain Stabilization Act to provide for interim payments to be made in time for spring seeding. Under Western Grain over $500 million was paid out in 1985, $859 million in 1986, $1.398 billion last year, and now the Minister of State for Grains and Oilseeds (Mr. Mayer) has announced an interim payment of $695 million for the current crop year.

In the Province of Saskatchewan, 61,000 producers will share some $380 million. A final payment will be made in the fall once complete figures for the current crop year are available.

The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) has said that the Government will spare no effort in assisting the farm community during these times of low international prices. These payments constitute further concrete tangible evidence of this Government's commitment to the Canadian grain and oilseeds sector.

This Government has delivered time and time again for Canadian agriculture, and it will continue to deliver.

SOCIAL AFFAIRS

POVERTY STATISTICS—SITUATION OF CHILDREN

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands): Mr. Speaker, in today's Toronto Star, Leonard Shifrin writes "Poverty in Canada has a new face—the face of a child".

In the 1981 census people over the age of 65 had the highest incidence of poverty, but the poverty rate for seniors has now dropped, thanks to increases in the Guaranteed Annual Income Supplement, and seniors were able to organize and fight off the Mulroney Government's dishonest attempt to deindex their pensions.

But who speaks for children in Canada today? Twenty-one per cent of Canadian children under six years of age live in poverty. For children six to fourteen years of age the rate is 19 per cent, and for young people 15 to 24 years of age the rate is 20 per cent. Poverty is twice as common for families with one or two children as it is for childless couples.

If the Government cares about our future it must address child poverty. It should restore full indexation to family allowances, provide income tax exemptions that take into account the real cost of raising children, and provide a child tax credit that is more than a token.

CANADIAN SECURITY INTELLIGENCE SERVICE

DELAY IN PROCESSING SECURITY CLEARANCES

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, the nominal lead time for security clearances to be processed through CSIS is an amazing nine months. There is a huge backlog.

These interminable delays are causing undue hardships to other government Departments and also to contractors working on projects such as the North Warning System. Individuals are having to wait for months before they can take up promised jobs.

The situation is close to intolerable, and I call upon the Solicitor General (Mr. Kelleher) to take immediate corrective action.

VICKERS HEIGHTS POST OFFICE

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay—Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, the post mistress of the Vickers Heights Post Office will soon be retiring. Canada Post wants to close this post office and replace it with group mailboxes, supermailboxes, or a retail outlet if it can find one.

On April 20 Canada Post invited all Vickers Heights residents to a meeting to "review their options". However, this meeting was a complete sham. Canada Post had no intention of reviewing the only option the residents wanted, to keep the post office open.

Canada Post officials claimed at the meeting that they have to reduce their deficit, and they have decided to do this by closing down post offices. However, they flatly refuse to say whether or not the Vickers Heights Post Office has been losing money. They simply were not prepared to explain why it was not possible to retain the Vickers Heights Post Office. We can only assume they don't have a reasonable answer.

The 200 residents who attended this meeting got up and angrily walked out, and rightly so. This meeting was supposed to be a consultation with the residents, but it was nothing of the kind. Canada Post already had its mind made up.

It is time that Canada Post stopped patronizing Canadians in small communities with its arrogant and hypocritical approach. It is time Canada Post focused on service to the Canadian people instead.

POLITICAL PARTIES

LIBERAL PARTY'S DEBT

Mr. Gilles Bernier (Beauce): Mr. Speaker, I want to echo an editorial by Frédéric Wagnière in La Presse of April 16 and quote some news items entitled "Party for Sale." The financial area that calls for the most imagination and creativity, Mr. Speaker, is undoubtedly the financing of political parties. Even in this sometimes so fanciful area, we have never heard such a preposterous idea as the one expressed by Mr. Iseman, former president of the Ontario wing of the Liberal Party of Canada.

This party has a debt of some $6 million and two creditor banks have refused to lend any more. Mr. Iseman feels that other banks should take over. "The country needs the Party," he said. "The banking industry needs the Party. The whole industrial world needs the Party." Such talk is unworthy of a great Party. Let us admit that the banks are lending it all the money they need, Mr. Speaker. How does the Party intend to repay them? Would it be with special favours at the next revision of the Bank Act? How does this Party show that it is serious and credible? What does the Hon. Member for Laval-des-Rapides (Mr. Garneau), a former banker from Quebec, say about this? I ask the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner), how do you intend to run the country when you cannot even run your Party!

WESTERN GRAIN STABILIZATION ACT

ANNOUNCEMENT OF INTERIM PAYMENT TO FARMERS

Mr. Bill Gottselig (Moose Jaw): Mr. Speaker, the Western Grain Stabilization interim payment announced last Friday is indeed good news for participating producers. It makes the fourth year in a row that this payment will be in the producers' hands, to assist with the cost of seeding the current year's crop, and it comes as a direct result of the amendments our Government made to the Western Grain Stabilization Act in February of 1985.

This interim payment, along with strengthening grain prices, is a reason for optimism among western grain producers, although unfavourable weather conditions have prevailed since last fall.

The lack of spring runoff is particularly evident throughout most of central Saskatchewan, and could be crucial to livestock producers, as a continued shortage of water on grazing land could require the movement of large numbers of livestock.

Hope does spring eternal from the human breast, and Saskatchewan people realize only too well that, although we are dependent on the weather, we have never lost a crop in April, and particularly one that is yet to be planted.

CHILD CARE

CRITICISM OF GOVERNMENT PROPOSALS

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, along with many Members of the House I had the opportunity, earlier today, to meet with the members of the Child Care Advocacy Association, the representatives of which were on the Hill today to talk to Members of Parliament. In addition to the sympathy that I would normally provide to such a group, I have a special interest in that I, too, have a child in day care. As well, I am a member of the board of a child care institution.

An Hon. Member: A conflict of interest!

Mr. Axworthy: In terms of sympathy for the concern expressed by the Child Care Advocacy Association, I felt that I was on their side of the table. The concern, of course, is that the present proposals on child care are totally inadequate to meet the need. There is no more vital responsibility on any parent than the handing over of the care of one's child to another person for six or seven hours of the day. That is a function that demands the best of care, the best of facilities, and the best of education.

Given the low wages in the child care field, and the sometimes spurious conditions under which child care is offered in this country, we must do much better than we are doing now, and much better than is proposed.

I stand today in the House not only to support the case made this morning by those very strong and very eloquent advocates of child care in this country, but to say that it is time that we went back to the drawing board for the purpose of coming up with a much more effective child care program than that which is being offered by the Government today.

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL RELATIONS

ASIA-PACIFIC INITIATIVE—PARTICIPATION OF FEDERAL AND BRITISH COLUMBIA GOVERNMENTS

Mrs. Mary Collins (Capilano): Mr. Speaker, if one relied only on the media, one might think that the federal Government and the Government of British Columbia engage more in confrontation rather than co-operation. In fact, the opposite is true. A shining example is the Asia-Pacific Initiative, jointly established and funded by both levels of government and chaired by a Minister from each Government, and involving over 100 volunteers on its various committees.

The Asia-Pacific Initiative is working on proposals to make British Columbia flourish as a Pacific centre for trade, commerce and travel. One proposal already announced is a business and environment conference and trade show, to be held in Vancouver in March, 1990. This conference will contribute to establishing British Columbia as a world-class environmental centre of excellence.

Last Friday the Pacific Council of Ministers, a unique council composed of Ministers from both levels of government, announced agreement to work toward the transfer of the management and development of the Vancouver International Airport to a local authority.

It is this kind of co-operation between the two Governments which will ensure promotion of economic opportunities for British Columbia, and a bright future for all British Columbians.

THE ECONOMY

INTEREST RATES—EXCHANGE VALUE OF DOLLAR—EFFECT ON FARM EXPORTS

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt—Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, this Government's persistent policy of high interest rates is hurting people in rural Canada. The Government says that it has to strengthen the dollar and increase interest rates. Yet, this is a policy which creates great problems in respect of farm products that are exported, at least those exported from my part of the country. These products are sold on the basis of American dollars, and as we strengthen our dollar the value of those exports drops.

High interest rates, together with the lower value of the product, force land prices down.

The Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) says that his policies are aimed at fighting inflation. Yet, in my region of the country, in the last four years, land prices have decreased to approximately half of what they were when this Government took power.

How much further does he have to drive land prices down before he is satisfied that he has fought inflation to the ground?

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

AIR CANADA

ACQUISITION OF NEW AIRCRAFT—DATE OF ANNOUNCEMENT

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister and concerns Air Canada. The Government is wheeling and dealing in a transparent and blatant attempt to manipulate the Manitoba election—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): —and to deceive once again the people of Manitoba as it did on the CF-18.

Will the Deputy Prime Minister confirm that Air Canada's negotiations to replace its 727 fleet have been completed? Will he also confirm that an announcement to that effect by Air Canada was scheduled for March 30, but the federal Government intervened to delay that announcement because of the effect it would have on the Manitoba election arising from the loss of jobs at the Air Canada maintenance facility in Winnipeg? Will he also confirm that the delay was a result of the pleading of the Manitoba Conservative Leader, Gary Filmon?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, what we are witnessing here on the floor of the House of Commons is the final act of desperation by the Liberal Party to help their Leader who is sinking as quickly as a stone. I am rather surprised at the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition because, at the time of the CF-18 decision, the Liberal Party, as I recall, took a position in favour of that decision.

Mr. Axworthy: Pardon me?

Mr. Mazankowski: Some Members excepted.

Unlike the Liberal Government when it was in office, this Government does not interfere with the decision—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Mazankowski: —on fleet acquisition. That is a decision made by Air Canada based upon the criteria, the technical requirements, the mission and mandate for a particular aircraft which it has to fulfil. This is an issue resolved by the management and board.

I see the Right Hon. Leader grinning. He will recall that the last time there was any interference was in 1979 when the Liberal Government of the day wanted to overturn a decision made by Air Canada which supported the Boeing purchase. The Liberals wanted an Airbus acquisition.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, let it be noted that the Deputy Prime Minister did not reply to the question as to whether the Government intervened in the decision to postpone the March 30 announcement.

WINNIPEG MAINTENANCE BASE—REQUEST FOR LEGISLATIVE COMMITMENT

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of National Health and Welfare, who is presumably in Manitoba today, said over the weekend that Cabinet decided two weeks ago that a guarantee to keep the maintenance base in Winnipeg would be included in the legislation to privatize Air Canada.

I want to quote what the Deputy Prime Minister told the House of Commons on April 12 as reported at page 14363 of Hansard:

> The provisions of the legislation and/or the articles of incorporation of the new company will ensure that the location of the corporate headquarters remains in Montreal—

A legislative guarantee for Montreal, but no mention of Winnipeg.

If, as the Minister of National Health and Welfare claims, a guarantee was given to Winnipeg that the maintenance facility would remain in Winnipeg by legislation, why was that not stated in the same announcement where the Deputy Prime Minister guaranteed Montreal the corporate headquarters? We are delighted with the legislative commitment to Montreal, but why not Winnipeg? Why did the Deputy Prime Minister not give Winnipeg the same legislative commitment he gave to Montreal two weeks ago in this House when he made the statement?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, first may I just reiterate, in response to the first question, the fact that the Government does not make the decision on what kind of aircraft to buy. The Government's responsibility is to approve the corporate plan. That is consistent with the Financial Administration Act. The mandate of Air Canada is to manage and choose the airplane it believes is best suited to meet a particular mission and mandate. Those are the facts.

With regard to the second part of the question, it is unfortunate that the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition does not quote the whole statement. Rather, he chooses to quote very selectively. If he will read page 14363, I said this:

> While full details of this initiative will be contained in the legislation and will be developed by the Board of Air Canada over the coming months, I wish to inform the House further today of a few of the most important provisions under which this initiative will proceed.

• (1420)

I went on to cite a number of them with respect to the broad ownership of shares, with respect to individual ownership, with respect to foreign ownership. Then I said, in the seventh point:

> The major operational and overhaul centres which have been built up over the years in Montreal, Toronto, and Winnipeg are sources of great pride for Air Canada and fundamental to the success of this airline. No centres will be degraded. The overhaul base in Winnipeg will continue as a prominent and integral function of Air Canada and an aircraft fleet will continue to be maintained there.

That is all under the section of the guidelines and the commitment to legislation. I said it then, and I say it again today.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

SALE OF SHARES—GOVERNMENT COMMITMENT

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, the citation just given to us by the Deputy Prime Minister is a commitment from Air Canada that the Government will be unable to enforce because it is selling off the shares and has transferred to the private sector shareholders the voting rights of even the shares retained by the Government. It cannot fulfill that commitment.

The commitment the Deputy Prime Minister just read does not have legislative authority.

Mr. Mazankowski: Read it.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): It is not included in the series of legislative commitments, beginning with the corporate headquarters in Montreal, the two official languages, the employment equity. That commitment to Winnipeg does not have legislative backing and the hon. gentleman knows that. They are two different sections of the speech.

The Deputy Prime Minister's answer is absolutely incredible. It is just about as incredible as the statement by the Minister of National Health and Welfare over the weekend. According to the Winnipeg Free Press, the Minister said that the reason Winnipeg was not given the same legislative guarantees as Montreal—at least he admitted it—was that: ". . . there wasn't time to get it into the release". To quote the words in the Winnipeg Free Press: "Epp said there wasn't time to get it into the release".

There was time to get the legislative commitment to Montreal into the release, but not Winnipeg. Why was that legislative commitment not given then? Why was there not time to put it in the release? Is it that much harder for the Deputy Prime Minister to spell Winnipeg than it is to spell Montreal?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition, aided and abetted by the Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry, is acting very pathetically and silly. That is really unfortunate.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Minister.

Mr. Mazankowski: What could be more clear than when I said:

> While full details of this initiative will be contained in the legislation and will be developed by the Board of Air Canada over the coming months, I wish to inform the House further today of a few of the most important provisions under which this initiative will proceed.

That condition is laid out very clearly, as has been done in other privatization initiatives on which I have elaborated in the House on many occasions.

REQUEST FOR INCLUSION OF WINNIPEG MAINTENANCE BASE IN LEGISLATION

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, we still do not have an answer from the Deputy Prime Minister. In the statement to which he is referring, he is talking about legislative entrenchment only for the corporate headquarters in Montreal. When I asked him on April 12 whether he would include Winnipeg as part of that legislative protection, he refused to answer.

Why did they keep it a secret on April 12? Why did they not include Winnipeg as part of the legislative protection, as the Minister of National Health and Welfare now says they thought they would do? Why were they keeping it a secret then?

Who is playing games with this issue? Are we to take the word of the Deputy Prime Minister or of the Minister of National Health and Welfare? Obviously they are singing from a different songbook and are simply trying to scramble their way out of a situation that will put the Air Canada maintenance base in Winnipeg in deep jeopardy.

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, we have just heard another Fort Garry fabrication of the truth. The facts are very clear. As I said, these are the items that will be enshrined in legislation. I also said that with respect to other items such as Montreal being the head office, and official bilingualism, there will be provisions in the legislation and/or articles of incorporation. I was clear then and I am clear today.

• (1425)

As I said, no centres will be degraded. The overhaul base in Winnipeg will continue as a prominent and integral function of Air Canada. The commitment I made then was to put it in legislation and/or articles of incorporation, and I do so here and now, right today, Mr. Speaker.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Two weeks too late. Come on, Don!

Oral Questions

MAINTENANCE WORK FOR PROPOSED NEW AIRCRAFT

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, the Deputy Prime Minister is quickly learning the art of the double backward flip-flop. I think what we want to do is come back to this issue. In his statement the Deputy Prime Minister mentions only one centre, and that is Montreal. He now says he has changed his mind. Specifically, will the Government today give a guarantee, that's all—he can clear up the confusion—that with respect to the replacement aircraft for the 727, the over-haul and maintenance work on that replacement aircraft will be done in the Winnipeg overhaul facility?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member wants to talk about flip-flops, but we have to question the sincerity of this gentleman's commitment to western Canada because of what he said on March 1. He took issue with the fact that the Western Diversification Office was going to be located in Edmonton. He wanted it located here in Ottawa.

Mr. Axworthy: Answer my question.

Mr. Mazankowski: With respect to the Hon. Member's question, it is clearly pointed out—he does not believe me. Will he believe Air Canada?

Mr. Axworthy: No, I don't.

Mr. Mazankowski: On March 24—

Mr. Axworthy: Give us a guarantee.

Mr. Mazankowski: On March 24—

Mr. Axworthy: No guarantee. Okay!

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Minister has the floor and should be extended the appropriate courtesies.

Mr. Mazankowski: Assurances, Mr. Speaker, are given in two ways. The March 24 Air Canada press release stated as follows:

> Regardless of the aircraft type which is eventually selected as the replacement for Air Canada's B-727 fleet, the future of the Air Canada maintenance base in Winnipeg is not in question, says the airline Vice-President of Maintenance and Engineering, Bernard Gillies.

Furthermore, as part of the conditions upon which the privatization process will be proceeded with, I said:

> No centres will be degraded. The overhaul base in Winnipeg will continue as a prominent and integral function of Air Canada and an aircraft fleet will continue to be maintained there.

What could be more clear than that?

ALLOCATION OF MAINTENANCE WORK

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Mr. Speaker, we will have to try again. Air Canada has looked at bids from three companies for those replacements of the B-727s, and, of course, it is in the process of getting rid of DC-9s. According to the President of Canadair Limited of Montreal, the Airbus Limited bid is linked to future work for his company, which effectively eliminates Bristol Aerospace in Winnipeg. That is what the President of Canadair in Montreal said.

Can the Minister give us a guarantee that Bristol Aerospace in Winnipeg will get at least a fair share of any construction, repair, or maintenance of the Airbus?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I am not sure of the allegation the Hon. Member is making, but I recall the President of Bristol Aerospace totally denying and categorically refuting the allegation made by the Hon. Member, as well as that made by the Leader of the New Democratic Party in Manitoba. The fact is that I do not know what the connection is.

I repeat again, the Government of Canada does not choose the aircraft that Air Canada will use for its purposes. It has established the criteria, the technical requirements, and the mission and mandate which that particular aircraft has to fulfil. It will be making the best decision. I am sure the Hon. Member would take issue with us if we were to interfere in any way, shape or form.

Mr. Benjamin: Of course, Mr. Speaker, we do not expect him to pick the aircraft. He wouldn't know the difference between a Tiger Moth and a 747.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Benjamin: But there is a difference between picking the aircraft and picking the time of the announcement.

Some Hon. Members: Right on!

TIMING OF ANNOUNCEMENT

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Mr. Speaker, a senior Boeing official in Canada has told us that he believes the deed is done. A senior sales official of Boeing in Seattle informs us that his company's offer expired March 30. Air Canada did not ask Boeing to renew it.

• (1430)

A similar story comes from a Canadian official at McDonnell-Douglas who tells the same story.

I want to ask the Minister whether or not the Government is waiting until the Manitoba election is over before letting the Air Canada cat out of the bag, and whether or not Bristol Aerospace will be guaranteed a fair share of the work.

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, it is rather strange, when the NDP are running third, that there are some rather interesting and strange questions in the House of Commons.

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): You should know; you have been in third place for a year and a half.

Mr. Mazankowski: The responsibility and the obligation of the federal Government are to approve the corporate plan. The former Minister of Transport knows that. That is a process that has to be followed through consistent with the provisions of the Financial Administration Act. I am advised that that corporate plan has not yet been approved.

Obviously, the announcement of April 12 wherein it was the announced intention of the Government to proceed along the lines of public participation in the ownership of the airline will have some effect upon the future and the health of the airline.

The Government has a responsibility and an obligation to ensure that it remains healthy and strong in the interests of a good airline system, and in the interests of the employees. That is exactly what we are doing.

FUTURE OF WINNIPEG MAINTENANCE BASE

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Mr. Speaker, the Government four times still has not answered whether or not it is aware of a decision on the Airbus having been made.

The Minister said that there will be no degradation of any of the maintenance and repair depots. He is asking us to believe the unbelievable.

Air Canada is getting rid of its DC-9s, and its 727s, which make up a great majority of its fleet. It will have a handful of 747s and 767s left. Without the Airbus how can it not help but be a degradation of the maintenance and repair centre at Winnipeg? Who is the Minister trying to kid?

Mr. Nystrom: The Manitoba voters.

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member can take issue with the recommendations and the management decisions of Air Canada. He can do that here in the House, or he can do that directly with management.

I regret that he disagrees. He obviously has more expertise in the management of an airline than Mr. Claude Taylor or Mr. Pierre Jeanniot. I will put my money on Mr. Taylor and Mr. Jeanniot any day before I would on the Hon. Member.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mazankowski: The fact of the matter is, Mr. Speaker, that I have laid out the conditions, the commitment, and the requirements under which this privatization process would proceed. I said that it would be put in the form of legislation and/or articles of incorporation. I said it then. I say it today. When the legislation comes out Hon. Members can see for themselves.

DAY CARE CENTRES

ABSENCE OF GOVERNMENT REPRESENTATIVE FROM ANNUAL MEETING OF CCCAG

Mrs. Lucie Pépin (Outremont): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. Last week, the Prime Minister stated that before an election was called, three priority issues had to be dealt with: Meech Lake, free trade and day-care. Mr. Speaker, I wish the Prime Minister would explain, if day-care centres are so important to the Conservative Government, why that Government refused to meet the Canadian Child Care Advocacy Group last Friday. Why did no one from the Government attend the group's annual meeting? Is the Government's absence a reflection of the kind of priority the Conservatives have set on day-care?

[English]

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, first, let me say that, yes, this Government and this Prime Minister regard child care as a priority, unlike the previous Government which, despite the fact that child care was declared an urgent problem in 1970, did nothing for 14 years. Within two years we produced a national child care strategy.

Neither the Prime Minister, my colleague the Minister of National Health and Welfare, nor myself have at any time refused to meet people to discuss this issue.

We have all had meetings with different women's groups across Canada, and with other groups, to discuss this important topic. We are very anxious that it move ahead as planned in our strategy which will add 200,000 child care spaces.

Mrs. Pépin: Why was there no representative of the Government last Friday at the conference? There was not one representative of the Conservative Government at that conference.

AMERICAN DAY CARE CENTRES IN CANADA—REQUEST FOR ASSURANCE SUBSIDIES WILL NOT BE PAID

Mrs. Lucie Pépin (Outremont): Mr. Speaker, since last January, the Government has been saying that day-care services are not mentioned in the free trade agreement. That does not mean they are excluded, certainly not!

I therefore wish the Prime Minister would promise the House that no subsidies will be paid to American businesses that come to Canada to open for-profit day-care centres.

Can the Prime Minister give the House the assurance that none of these companies will be subsidized, either through the entrepreneurship program or in some other way?

[English]

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, we have introduced our national child care strategy, in co-operation with the provinces, which will ensure high standards of child care in Canada.

Let me say as well, with respect to this nonsense about not meeting with people, that we offered on Friday to have the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of National Health and Welfare meet with the group. It did not want that. It wanted the Minister. I can understand that because I have met them many times. However, there was an offer for representatives of this Party to be there. So I am not taking that kind of nonsense from the Hon. Member.

We will be putting in place a child care strategy for the first time since it was declared an urgent problem. It will have its own legislation. It will meet the needs of communities of different sizes and different objectives all across Canada. That is what the people of Canada want. That is what the women of Canada want. They have said that themselves by the thousands, not 200 marching on the Hill.

PRIME MINISTER'S POSITION

Ms. Marion Dewar (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. Unfortunately, the Prime Minister was not here this morning when over 200 delegates to a conference condemned the Conservative strategy on day-care. Their message was clear: The national strategy proposed by this Government is not an acceptable solution to the problems related to child care.

My question is this: Will the Prime Minister now admit that his Government has only one choice, which is to withdraw its program and completely revise it?

[English]

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, we reviewed the child care situation in Canada very carefully before we introduced this strategy by looking at all the material that we had on hand. In addition, a parliamentary committee went across Canada to talk to different women and different individuals in different communities. It responded to the family needs that were presented in the strategy that we brought forward.

Our negotiations with the provinces continue. Clearly, the provinces have a strong role to play in this. They are continuing. The funding will be put in place as soon as those negotiations are completed.

I would like it to have been done instantly, but it is not possible. We are setting up a brand new strategy under a brand new body of legislation. That takes longer than we would like, and longer than the Hon. Member would like. But it is going to be done, and it is going to be done right.

GOVERNMENT POLICY—NUMBER OF DAY CARE SPACES

Ms. Marion Dewar (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, it is clear that the people of Canada are not satisfied with that type of strategy, a strategy that really says that there will not be more child care spaces in the country.

Did the representatives of the Minister's Government tell the people today that fiscal responsibility was more important and that reducing the deficit was more important than our children? Is that why there is a strategy that is not increasing spaces?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, there were 10 Progressive Conservative MPs at the event today. It was well attended by this Party, and by representatives of the Government.

When this plan is over we will have 200,000 new subsidized spaces in Canada. There are about 100,000 now, thus we are tripling the number of subsidized spaces.

At the end of the initial period of this strategy, of course we will be reviewing it to see what comes next. However, we are going to get it up and running and working for the parents of Canada and for the children.

This debate is about children, not just about women's groups. That is the most important thing that we have to remember. We are adding 200,000 spaces for children. At the end of that time we will review it to see what the needs are at that time.

AIRPORTS

VANCOUVER INTERNATIONAL AIRPORT—TRANSFER OF MANAGEMENT TO LOCAL AUTHORITY

Mrs. Mary Collins (Capilano): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Transport.

The announcement last Friday in Vancouver that the federal Government was prepared to proceed with negotiations to transfer the management and development of the Vancouver International Airport to a local body was indeed welcome, as it will help the airport to fulfil its potential as an economic generator.

Could the Minister tell the House if there are criteria established by his Department for this transfer, and an anticipated time frame for the completion of such negotiations and the establishment of an appropriate local authority?

Hon. Gerry St. Germain (Minister of State (Transport): Mr. Speaker, following discussions with the provincial Government there has been a consensus that Vancouver International Airport remain a federal asset. A negotiating group will be appointed shortly to deal with the possibility of turning the airport over to a local authority. The negotiating group will proceed along the lines of the federal Government's April 1987 policy. If there is a recommendation, first and foremost the negotiating group will be responsible for satisfying the criteria for the transfer of employees—

Some Hon. Members: Author, author!

Mr. St. Germain: —and we will be proceeding immediately?

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe.

AIR CANADA

MAINTENANCE WORK IN WINNIPEG

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Deputy Prime Minister. When it comes to the Government and the manner in which it handles important questions in western Canada, it is obviously true to say that you can't teach an old dog new tricks.

This is the same Government that last year withheld information on the awarding of the CF-18 maintenance contract until a provincial election was over, notwithstanding all kinds of unconfirmed reports at the time of what action was to occur.

The same Government is now in the process of doing the same thing with respect to Air Canada, its sale, its acquisition of new aircraft, and the impact that this will have on Winnipeg.

My question to the Deputy Prime Minister is a very straightforward and clear one. Can the Deputy Prime Minister tell the House of Commons today, and through the House the people of Winnipeg, Manitoba, and indeed of all western Canada, that when Air Canada announces within days, perhaps within a week or two of the election campaign in Manitoba, what aircraft will be purchased to replace the 727, that that aircraft will be maintained in the city of Winnipeg? Can the Deputy Prime Minister give that simple, clear assurance today?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, as westerners we certainly do not have to take any lessons from the Hon. Member, or from any Liberal Member of Parliament as to how the West should be treated.

We have the bitter memories of the National Energy Program, we have the bitter memories of 25 per cent interest rates, and we have the bitter memories of the confiscation of $60 billion out of western Canada into the coffers of the federal Government, so we certainly know that, Mr. Speaker.

Air Canada has given the Hon. Member the assurance he wants. I have quoted it, and I will requote it. I have given assurances. I have indicated it would be enshrined in legislation and/or the articles of incorporation.

I ask Hon. Members to reread page 14363 of Hansard. It is all there. I stood by it then, I stand by it today, and I will stand by it in the future.

MAINTENANCE WORK ON NEW AIRCRAFT

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, we in the Liberal Party, and those of us from Newfoundland, believe that Canada belongs to all of us from border to border, and I make no apology for expressing a concern about western Canada, or for asking questions about issues of importance to western Canada. I want some westerners to pay more attention to Newfoundland in the process.

The Deputy Prime Minister says that he has a bitter memory. His memory has failed him, because he did not answer my question. I repeat it. It is a simple and clear question. It is a litmus test for the weasel words that are being issued today.

Can he give a clear assurance today that whatever aircraft is chosen to replace the 727 it will be maintained fully in Winnipeg, totally in Winnipeg, as the 727 is today? Anything less than a clear answer is an indicator that it is the CF-18 nightmare all over again for western Canada.

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, we can certainly see the acts of desperation in the hands of the Liberals. I have given an answer on many occasions. I stand by that answer. I stand by the statement that I made in the House. I stand by the statement of Air Canada. It is clear for everyone to see.

Mr. Axworthy: What is the answer?

Mr. Tobin: The answer is no.

CANADA POST CORPORATION

RESIDENTS AGAINST MAILBOXES—OPPOSITION TO SUPERMAILBOXES

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister who is responsible for Canada Post.

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): Irresponsible.

Mr. Rodriguez: Irresponsible, perhaps is the appropriate word.

This weekend 30 groups of Canadians from across the country banded together to form Residents Against Mailboxes, or RAM for short. This group represents over 1 million Canadians. One million Canadians are saying to the Government that they are not satisfied with the second-class service they are receiving when they have to go to supermailboxes.

I wish to ask the Minister if he is now prepared to stop treating Canada Post in this type of fashion where it has to cut back service to Canadians? Is he now prepared to withdraw those supermailboxes and reintroduce the high level of door-to-door service in urban centres across the country?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, let me deal with some of the inaccuracies. First, on what happened on the weekend, as I understand it the Letter Carriers' Union flew in a lot of people from around the country to hold a press event, which they did quite successfully. I compliment them on their ability to control the CBC.

But the fact of the matter is that nobody who receives group mailbox service had door-to-door delivery taken away from them. In 1974 or 1976, because then it was a Department of government, the Government decided that door-to-door delivery would not be extended into new areas, new subdivisions, and so on, and the Post Office as a Crown corporation, with the unanimous consent of every Party in the House, is operating in a fiscally responsible way.

If it is the desire of the New Democratic Party that door-to-door delivery be given to everybody who now receives mail in group mailboxes, general delivery, and so on, is the New Democratic Party also prepared to be honest enough to admit that it is willing to see a 60-cent stamp, because that is what it would cost?

MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is the following. In light of the fact that yes, while everyone in this House, this Party included, wanted the Post Office Department to be turned into a Crown corporation, Canada Post, the fact remains that the Government handed to Canada Post a business plan which forced Canada Post to cut back services to millions of Canadians across the country, rural Canadians and urban Canadians.

Does the Minister think it is fair and just that, in an urban community, on one side of the street Canadians receive door-to-door delivery, and pay the same taxes as those who live across the street, and those who live across the street have to walk down to a supermailbox, and have the values of their properties reduced by having these monstrosities parked on their lawns? Does the Minister think that that is fair?

Mr. McDermid: It has always been that way, John. Where have you been?

Mr. Rodriguez: In no city has it been that way.

Mr. McDermid: Always in my city.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Minister has the floor.

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, nobody has had door-to-door delivery taken away from them, so the Hon. Member is simply making a false assertion.

Mr. Rodriguez: You have set up a two-class system.

Mr. Andre: The Hon. Member talks about two classes of citizens. Ever since Canada Post was formed there have been four or five ways for the mail to be delivered, door to door, group mailboxes, general delivery, or rural route. So, to use the NDP's definition, there must be four classes. That has been in existence for over 100 years. There has always been that distinction. No one has had a service taken away from them. Services have been improved. To do what the Hon. Member suggests is possible; it would only require an additional $1.3 billion. If the Hon. Member wants that money to be borrowed so that future generations pay for the cost of delivering a letter today, let him have the integrity to say so openly.

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES FREE TRADE AGREEMENT—REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT COMPENSATE GRAPE GROWERS

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Agriculture. Last week we learned of the first victim of the free trade deal, an Okanagan grape grower. Today we learn that some 15 of the grape producers in Ontario have had to walk off their farms because of the free trade deal.

Will the Government make a commitment right now that there will be direct emergency compensation provided to the grape growers who are being devastated by this free trade deal?

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I am a little bit concerned. I question the accuracy of the Hon. Member's observation. I indicated in response to a question last Thursday or Friday that we have had problems in the grape industry, particularly in Ontario, for a good number of years. The Hon. Member should realize that we have purchased surplus grapes eight years out of ten. He must also realize that the most devastating effect on the industry is, of course, the GATT ruling.

We recognize that there is going to be some pressure on that industry. That is why we moved as quickly as December 4 last year to establish a federal-provincial and industry task force. That group has worked diligently since that time. I indicated on Thursday that it provided me with its report about 10 days or two weeks ago. Along with the provinces we are assessing it. As I said on Thursday, we will be making certain recommendations to Cabinet in the very near future.

Mr. Foster: Mr. Speaker, one of the Tory Members called those honest, hard-working farmers "quitters". They are certainly not quitters. They are being destroyed by the Government.

REQUEST FOR GUARANTEED LINES OF CREDIT

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, the Minister has written to the head of the Bankers' Association asking the bankers to provide credit. Clearly the banks and credit unions are not able to provide credit to these producers because they know that their businesses are going to be destroyed.

Will the Government give guarantees to those banking institutions and credit unions for a line of credit so that these producers can continue to operate their farms and vineyards? Surely that is the least it can do if it is not prepared to come forward with a direct compensation program immediately.

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the Hon. Member's interest in the subject but he must realize that you cannot just snap your fingers and come forth with a fair and equitable adjustment package. He must also realize that there will have to be negotiations with the provinces as far as the cost-sharing aspect of the package is concerned.

I wonder whether the Hon. Member has forgotten where this problem started. The problem with GATT really started with provincially established trade barriers and provincial pricing mechanisms which the provinces signalled to our GATT partners at the last round of GATT that they were going to move away from. Of course they did not move away from them, and that is the basis for the difficulty in which the wine and grape industry finds itself today.

BRITISH COLUMBIA GRAPE GROWER

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, my question is also for the Minister of Agriculture. Many British Columbians were disturbed to learn, in writing, that Fred Somer was going to lose his home and his vineyard in British Columbia as a result of the Mulroney-Reagan deal. That was made very precise and very specific in the letter to him from the financial institution.

What precise steps is the Minister of Agriculture going to take today, this being the time of year that grape growers go to get their loans? What steps is the Minister of Agriculture going to take?

The Government can find $500 million for the Reichmanns to buy Husky Oil. What is it going to do to help the grape growers in Canada?

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, it is obvious that the Hon. Member has no appreciation or understanding of the difficulty involved in putting an adjustment package of this kind together in such a way that it contains the components of fairness and equity.

The farmer in question is quoted in the Vancouver Province:

"People took risks to grow grapes" said the 61-year-old farmer. "The bureaucracy must take its time on this."

We have moved expeditiously, but we are going to take the time to get the program right so that it is fair and equitable to all producers.

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Speaker, I meant to say Gulf when I said Husky a moment ago.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): That was only one of the errors. Tell the whole truth.

Mr. Fulton: Perhaps the Secretary of State for External Affairs could take a breath of air. It would double his IQ.

Mr. Foster: He needs more than oxygen.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps all Hon. Members would notice the time and put their questions briefly.

LOANS SOUGHT BY GRAPE GROWERS

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Minister of Agriculture. Brian Nash, the Chairman of the Ontario Grape Growers Marketing Board, said that he was not surprised to hear about the woes of Fred Somer, but that in fact the problem is three times as bad in Ontario as it is in B.C.

Grape growers in Ontario and in British Columbia, particularly in the Niagara region and in the central interior of B.C., would like to know what steps the Government is going to take now. In March, April, and May the grape growers go to get their loans. What steps is the Minister of Agriculture proposing as they go to financial institutions to get loans to get the grapes growing on the vines again?

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, as a result of the meeting that we had on December 4 certain commitments were given. I had the opportunity to communicate our feelings on behalf of the grape industry to the Bankers' Association. In most cases most of the financial institutions have been quite responsible. However, we have encountered some individual cases and we are obviously making representations on their behalf.

AGRICULTURE

DROUGHT IN SOUTHERN SASKATCHEWAN AND ALBERTA

Mr. Geoff Wilson (Swift Current—Maple Creek): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Agriculture who will know that the southern areas of Saskatchewan and Alberta are experiencing the second driest winter and spring in 102 years. This has resulted in soil erosion, and at least one community is already trucking in water. However, the immediate concern is for livestock producers who are suffering from a lack of spring run-off water.

Has the Minister, notwithstanding that it is early in the spring, had an opportunity to discuss contingency plans with his provincial counterparts in the event that this drought worsens?

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the question. The short answer to the question is definitely yes. In fact we have been communicating and working with the provincial Governments of western Canada and many farm organizations since March.

As was observed over the weekend by the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development from Saskatchewan, and also by the Member for Moose Jaw, we have not lost a crop in April yet.

Let me utilize this opportunity to remind producers that we sent out a notice on April 20 reminding western producers that their deadline for crop insurance is April 30.

THE ECONOMY

EXCHANGE VALUE OF DOLLAR—EFFECT ON EXPORTS

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of State for Finance. In view of the fact that Adam Zimmerman of Noranda has said that an added penny to the value of the Canadian dollar against the U.S. dollar means about $15 million in lost revenue, and that a spokesman for Falconbridge has said that a rise of one cent in the dollar chops about $7 million from that firm's annual export revenues, does the Minister agree with the statement made last week by the Minister of Finance that a firm which cannot make money with the dollar at its present rate has something wrong with it?

Hon. Tom Hockin (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, the dollar that the Government believes in is a dollar that moves within a narrow range at low levels, unlike a dollar which gyrates wildly between 95 cents and $1.05 as it did from 1970 to 1984.

• (1500)

PROPOSED UNITED STATES LEGISLATION—MANIPULATION OF CURRENCY EXCHANGE RATES

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is for the same Minister. A paragraph in the U.S. omnibus trade Bill states that when another country "manipulates" its currency exchange rate, the U.S. President shall intervene.

Will the Minister tell the House what the definition of "manipulate" is? For instance, does it include what he has just said about a narrow range? We would like to hear the definition of "manipulate", which would allow the U.S. Government to control our monetary policy.

Hon. Tom Hockin (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, I think it is impossible to allege with credibility that the U.S. Government has controlled our monetary policy in any way in the last four years.

Miss Nicholson (Trinity): That is not the point. It is what is in the Bill.

Mr. Hockin: The Government of Canada, in fact, through its interest rate policy, through its reduction of the deficit four years in a row, has decreased the burden of government on the financial markets. This has kept the Canadian economy strong and the Canadian dollar strong.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

ACID RAIN—PRIME MINISTER'S FORTHCOMING MEETING WITH UNITED STATES PRESIDENT

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Right Hon. Prime Minister. Later this week he will be meeting with President Reagan in Washington. I want to ask him about the acid rain situation.

According to some of the reports of the last few days, the Prime Minister appears to have given up on his friend Ronald Reagan to assist him on the question of acid rain abatement in this country. I want to know whether or not the special relationship between the Prime Minister and Mr. Reagan was there only for a dance, a shuffle, and a photo op? What indeed now is the situation with acid rain? Is it on the agenda? Is it still a priority of the Government? What is going to happen?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, indeed acid rain is very much on the agenda between Canada and the United States.

We have made some progress in regard to this important matter, but certainly not as much as we would have wanted. I acknowledge that readily on behalf of all Canadians.

The fact of the matter is that, as my hon. friend knows, responsibility while that of the administration is also that of Congress. The Democrats and the Republicans are quite capable of initiating their own legislation in the Congress to deal with this blight of acid rain. We, for three and a half years, have been pursuing both the administration and the Congress.

Acid rain indiscriminately is destroying the environment of Canada and the United States, and the evidence is overwhelming that it is very much in the interest of Canada and the United States that it be cleaned up immediately.

I will be back at the matter both with the President and the leadership of Congress to take actions that are not in any way doing Canada a favour. When the Americans are cleaning their environment and fulfilling their responsibilities to Canada as a neighbour, they are not doing us a favour; they are fulfilling their fundamental obligations to themselves.

Mr. Speaker: A short supplementary.

[Translation]

ACID RAIN—GOVERMENT POSITION

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Mr. Speaker, I think that the Prime Minister is aware of the fact that, according to Gallup polls, the acid rain issue ranks now ahead of free trade as a major concern for all Canadian men and women.

Because he referred to the Congress of the United States, could the Prime Minister advise the House of the Federal Government's new strategy to convince the U.S. Congress to share Canada's views concerning acid rain? What argument is the Canadian Government going to use to try and convince its American counterpart?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I will have a series of meetings with the leadership of the two U.S political parties following the speech I am scheduled to make before that American Congress. We are going to pursue most vigorously all the initiatives, because we have supporters in the Congress. There are leaders among these two political formations there who actively support the Canadian Government's initiatives in this vital area.

I call the attention of my honourable friend to the fact that while preparing the speech I will make next Wednesday before the U.S. Congress, I looked at the last speech made by a Canadian Prime Minister before the U.S. Congress in 1977. I noted that in that major address the words "acid rain" are not even mentioned.

POINT OF ORDER

REQUEST THAT MINISTER TABLE DOCUMENT—SPEAKER'S RULING

Mr. Speaker: I wish to report to the House on a point of order raised by the Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin).

On March 28 and 29, 1988, the Hon. Member for Regina West raised a point of order contending that, in response to a question asked by the Hon. Member for St. John's East (Mr. Harris) during Question Period on March 28, the former Minister of Transport, now the Minister for International Trade (Mr. Crosbie), cited a document when he referred to "CN's studies" and, therefore, that he should be required to table in the House the rationalization studies of Canadian National Railways the Moncton shops.

The Chair is appreciative of the arguments put forward by the Hon. Member for Regina West and the Minister's unequivocal response to the point of order.

The rule which guides the House and the Chair on this matter is very clear and precise. It is found on page 433 of Erskine May's Parliamentary Practice, Twentieth Edition, and repeated in Citation 327 of Beauchesne's Fifth Edition, as follows:

> A Minister of the Crown may not read or quote from a despatch or other state paper not before the House, unless he is prepared to lay it upon the Table. Similarly, it has been accepted that a document which has been cited by a Minister ought to be laid upon the Table of the House, if it can be done without injury to the public interest.

[Translation]

Beauchesne's citation goes even further:

> The principle is so reasonable that it has not been contested; and when the objection has been made in time, it has been generally acquiesced in.

In fact, in their observations, the Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin) and the Minister did not question the rule. They just raised the question as to whether the Minister had actually "quoted" from the "CN Studies", thus creating an obligation to table them, according to a recognized and accepted rule and tradition of the House.

[English]

The Hon. Member for Regina West very ably gave the House several definitions of the words "cite" and "quote" to substantiate his arguments. Though he was very convincing in his approach, the Chair must nevertheless refer to past practice and rulings in determining what interpretation has been given procedurally to those words. Essentially, as there is general acceptance of the rule itself, there is also general unanimity in the interpretation given over the years by various Speakers. For there to be an obligation on the Minister to table a document, it has to have been actually quoted from.

For example, on November 16, 1971, Speaker Lamoureux said as recorded at page 922 of the House of Commons Journals:

> In fairness, looking at the matter as objectively as I can, I do not see how it is possible for the Chair to make a ruling at this point that a document that has simply been referred to but has not been directly quoted should be tabled in debate. I find it difficult to rule otherwise . . . If a document has been actually cited or quoted in debate by a Minister of the Crown, it has to be tabled. If only reference is made to it, I do not see how there is an obligation to table it.

Further, on April 8, 1976, as can be found at page 12612 of the House of Commons Debates, Speaker Jerome gave the same interpretation when he ruled that the obligation to table a document:

> —certainly has never been held to apply to a situation in which a Minister has simply been asked a question about a document and given an answer.

Finally, in a case similar to the one now before the House, Speaker Bosley confirmed numerous rulings by his predecessors when, on November 14, 1984, he said, as reported at page 220 of the House of Commons Debates:

> It seems to me that when a Minister is specifically questioned about a document and he refers to that document in the course of his reply, it would be difficult to find that he was attempting to influence debate.

[Translation]

Although the Hon. Member for Regina West contended that there are reasons to establish a precedent on this point, I do not intend to move away from the uniform interpretations of my predecessors and to give the term "cite" a new procedurally different meaning.

[English]

As to whether the Minister actually quoted from a document, the Minister's statement on March 29 that he has no such study, that he did not quote from any such study and that he has nothing that he could table, stands on its own and, according to our tradition, the House must accept his word.

I therefore must conclude that, since the Minister has not actually quoted from the "CN's studies", he is not obliged to table the document in question.

I thank the Hon. Member for Regina West for the opportunity to clarify this important aspect of our procedure, but I also say to the Hon. Member, having listened very carefully to both the question and the answer and having considered very carefully the argument of the Hon. Member for Regina West, I think it might be fair to observe that Ministers perhaps could avoid applications of this kind by being very careful not to leave in the minds of questioners that there may be a document which, naturally, anybody asking questions in the House would seek to have tabled. I thank both the Hon. Member and the Hon. Minister for their interventions.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

EMERGENCIES ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Beatty that Bill C-77, an Act to authorize the taking of special temporary measures to ensure safety and security during national emergencies and to amend other Acts in consequence thereof, be read the third time and passed.

Mr. Speaker: I should advise the House that when the House rose at 1 p.m., the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez) had the floor. I now recognize the Hon. Member for Thunder Bay—Atikokan (Mr. Angus) on a point of order.

Mr. Angus: Mr. Speaker, there have been discussions among representatives of all Parties, and I believe you will find unanimous consent to allow the Member for Spadina (Mr. Heap) to complete the time allocated to the Member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez).

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the proposition of the Hon. Member. Is there agreement?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Minister of State (Mr. Lewis) on a point of order.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, there have been discussions among representatives of all Parties, and I think you will find consent for the following motion to go forward immediately:

> That, when the debate on the motion for third reading of Bill C-77, an Act to authorize the taking of special temporary measures to ensure safety and security during national emergencies and to amend other Acts in consequence thereof, has been concluded, the said debate shall stand adjourned until 6:00 o'clock p.m., Wednesday, April 27, 1988, at which time, Mr. Speaker shall put every question necessary to dispose of the third reading stage of the Bill.

Mr. Speaker: Before proceeding with debate, I shall hear the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier).

Mr. Gauthier: On a point of clarification, I take it the Government is also agreeing that it will not invoke Standing Order 9(4)(a) at any stage in this debate.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Minister, in reply.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, there has been excellent co-operation on the part of all Parties on Bill C-77, with the result that we see no necessity of going that route on this particular Bill.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Thunder Bay—Atikokan (Mr. Angus).

Mr. Angus: Mr. Speaker, I just wish to confirm our support for the motion. We think it is an appropriate way of dealing with this matter.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the motion. Is there agreement?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the suggestion that the Hon. Member for Spadina (Mr. Heap) be now heard in debate. Is there agreement?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Spadina (Mr. Heap) on debate.

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, at the outset I wish to thank Hon. Members for accommodating me as I have a plane to catch later in the afternoon. I regard Bill C-77 as an important piece of legislation, and as such I wish to participate in the debate.

When I studied Bill C-77 as introduced, I was very much concerned about it. It contained very broad, if not loose, definitions of emergencies; very broad, if not loose, declarations of powers to be declared, or statements of powers, and rather narrow safeguards on the application of those powers. On reading Bill C-77 as introduced, I was led to wondering about the intentions of the Government in this regard.

It is not enough to say that Bill C-77 is better than the War Measures Act, or not as bad as, on the ground that it restricts the powers of the Government in respect of the first three classes of emergency. It is not enough to say that, to some extent, the Charter will continue to govern, even in respect of the fourth and highest class of emergency.

As has been pointed out by a number of concerned members of the public, the proposed Emergencies Act can be used far more easily and far more frequently than the War Measures Act could be used, simply because it has less threatening grades of emergency, with less threatening grades of power incorporated into it.

The feeling has been expressed that the proposed Emergencies Act could be used too freely, and used in an atmosphere of fear of strangers and outsiders, or perhaps with the effect of exacerbating an atmosphere of fear of strangers and outsiders.

I had discussions with members of the public who are more experienced in this area than I, and I was glad to have the opportunity, on a few occasions, to sit in on the deliberations of the committee, either replacing the Member for Brant (Mr. Blackburn) when he was unavoidably called away or accompanying him. I was encouraged by the actions of the committee, and particularly by the actions of the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Bradley).

The legislative process has led to considerable improvement of Bill C-77, and it, in itself, is an improvement over the War Measures Act in as much as use of this legislation in respect of the first three grades of emergency will carry with it clear restrictions on the powers of the Government, thus leading to less temptation for its use.

Many of the improvements have already been touched upon by previous speakers. The first that I find very encouraging is that the Cabinet must have reasonable grounds to invoke the emergency powers. It is no longer just the opinion of the Governor in Council. There must be reasonable grounds, which I understand to mean that the Government will have to prove to the court that there were in fact reasonable grounds. And the grounds must seem reasonable, not just to the Governor in Council, but to the court. That is an important advance over the Bill as originally introduced.

I am also pleased to see that the powers of the Government, at least in respect of a public welfare emergency, cannot be used to break a strike.

I am not quite clear how freely this Bill could be used in a public order emergency, or an international emergency, to break and strike. I have some concern about that. But, for the time being, at least, on the lowest grade of emergency, we are assured that it cannot be used for that purpose.

We are now assured that those whose services are commandeered for emergencies will be paid for their work, and will be paid at a reasonable rate. As well, people whose property is damaged as a consequence of any action taken in an emergency will be eligible for compensation.

These are important clarifications to the legislation. We are also assured that censorship will not be used during peace time. That is of extreme importance.

The second most important, if not the most important, improvement is that having to do with the definition of an "emergency". It is a critically important improvement in the Bill as currently drafted. Bill C-77, as currently drafted, states:

> 3. For the purposes of this Act, a "national emergency" is an urgent and critical situation of a temporary nature that
> (a) seriously endangers the lives, health or safety of Canadians and is of such proportions or nature as to exceed the capacity or authority of a province to deal with it, or
> (b) seriously threatens the ability of the Government of Canada to preserve the sovereignty, security and territorial integrity of Canada—

Those are very important concrete criteria, and I am glad that they are in the legislation in those terms, although I will have a word or two to say about the second of those two criteria later in my remarks.

• (1520)

However, to continue, it also provides, and this is very far-reaching, that these events or dangers "cannot be effectively dealt with under any other law of Canada." As has been pointed out, had a definition of that sort been operative in 1970, the application of the War Measures Act would have been ruled out. The only concern I have with it, and one of the previous speakers raised the question of vagueness in the definitions and I have some concerns there, but this is as far as we could get, when you say "preserve the sovereignty and security of Canada", those words can be very subjectively judged. Dictator Pinochet in Chile does many terrible, unjustifiable things, by our standards, in the name of security. Security is an elastic word and I could not think of any way to clarify it further, but that may be an item we have to consider further in future years.

Sovereignty is also a rather vague and often rhetorical term. I do not think it is the most reliable basis for law, but given the final clause concerning no other law being sufficient to meet the matter, I think the vagueness is limited a little bit.

I also wish to point out a very important amendment proposed by the National Association of Japanese Canadians. We now have the guarantee that the Cabinet could not give itself new powers or override the Charter of Rights and Freedoms. I understand that in 1945 the Cabinet did exactly the first of those things. It gave itself a power that did not exist under the original War Measures Act. The original Act was due to terminate or be terminated after the war, but before that could happen the Cabinet gave itself the power to extend its power beyond 1945 respecting Japanese Canadians. In fact, it held them, exiled from their homes in British Columbia, for four years. I admire the Japanese Canadians. They warned us that we must make sure that in the excitement of wartime the Cabinet is prohibited from enlarging its powers under this Act. I am very pleased that the committee recommended that and the Government adopted it.

The Bill contains restrictions on the power to restrict public assembly, but only to be used for events that are apparently leading to violence. Again there is a little uncertainty there. There is left a judgment to be made by someone, and of course we cannot at this point know exactly who, that if a meeting is considered to be leading to violence, then it can be prohibited or restricted. I suppose there would be a requirement to show evidence that that was likely to happen or a reasonable person would see that as likely to happen. The Hon. Member for Cape Breton—The Sydneys (Mr. MacLellan) feels that is not tight or not clear enough. I have some uneasiness of the same sort. I wish the Member had assisted the committee in improving on the wording. He did not offer an amendment today. It may be that he has the same difficulty as I do, that he does not know how to improve it. However, it may be an item we will have to improve in future.

A good deal has been said about the proposal to refer this legislation to the Supreme Court. I do not believe it would demean the status of this House or the Government, given such an extremely important Bill, to ask the Supreme Court for its comments when we have done our work here. It is not that we have not done our work, it is not that we have not tried, it is not that we have not had some very excellent advice from experienced members of the public on this Bill. In as much as nothing is perfect, we do not know how imperfect or in what way it might be imperfect.

When this legislation is used, if it ever must be used, it will be very difficult to go back and correct it. It is not enough to try out sort of one experiment and say we will do better next time. The stakes are much too high. I think, therefore, it would be very appropriate, not with every Bill but with this Bill, to ask the Supreme Court to give us its advice. If it did and asked us to improve some things, I believe this Parliament and Government would probably accept the advice gladly.

There was one amendment made with respect to refugees and I am very glad of it. They will not be expelled. Those who are refugees in the legal sense and not prohibited in any other legal sense will not be expelled under the powers given on page 16. However, there is a lack of clarity as to the admission of refugees. I think, because of the unfinished state of Bill C-55, the Government is taking an overly cautious position there, so I would hope that is another point that can be cleared up later on.

In my final couple of minutes I want to say that in my experience we owe a very considerable debt of gratitude to those Japanese Canadians who have formed the National Association of Japanese Canadians. There are many other groups that helped in this. My colleague, the Hon. Member for Brant, listed them this morning. However, the Japanese Canadians are a small group, a group singled out for an attack such as no other group has suffered in our time in this century, a group still crippled in their association by the results of that attack, financially and emotionally.

That group has single-mindedly, to my knowledge, for at least 15 years campaigned to have the War Measures Act repealed or revised. It is a small group, one of the smaller ethnic groups in Canada. As I say, it has been much hurt by the events of the 1940s particularly. However, not solely for themselves but for all Canadians, they have insisted that we make sure that what was done wrongly to them—not an excess in wartime as Prime Minister Trudeau tried to excuse it—done wrongly for wrong reasons to them under the guise of war measures, can never be done to anyone again. I think they have done a great service to this country in that respect.

Finally, I want to congratulate my colleague, the Hon. Member for Brant, for very steady, patient and effective work on this Bill, considering, as was remarked, that there is much less public interest in it than I would have expected. I also wish to thank the Government for its willingness to revise its own Bill not once, not twice, but several times in accordance with suggestions from the public or the Opposition. I do believe this Bill is vastly better than it was last June.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions or comments?

• (1530)

Mr. Caccia: Mr. Speaker, I rise to ask a question of the Hon. Member for Spadina (Mr. Heap) who shared the time with the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez). I listened to both of them very attentively.

Perhaps the Hon. Member for Spadina could tell the House what he would have done in 1970 when the Quebec Minister of Labour had been kidnapped and no one knew of his whereabouts, and when the United Kingdom High Commissioner had been kidnapped and no one knew of his whereabouts. Furthermore, the Government of Quebec asked Ottawa to invoke the War Measures Act.

I want to ask him, without the benefit of hindsight, whether he would have invoked the War Measures Act under those circumstances. If not, what would he have done?

Mr. Heap: Mr. Speaker, I remember the occasion. Of course, I was not in Ottawa then and did not have either the advantage or disadvantage of being on the Hill.

I remember my feeling then, which has been sharpened by recent information, that it was overkill, that we have a Criminal Code, laws on treason and sedition. We have the RCMP, the local police forces and the Army.

I believe that the imposition of the War Measures Act was unnecessary. I think the experience showed that. I think the general understanding of what happened is that the successes that were achieved in apprehending the small groups that were causing the violence were achieved not because of the War Measures Act but irrelevantly to it, that is, by the normal operation of the law and the forces of the law.

I think it was grossly destructive that several hundred people were arbitrarily arrested, held without charge for a number of weeks, and most of them released without charge. I think that induced a sense of panic.

Perhaps the Government was in a panic, but I have been told by Members of this House at that time and who are still here today that they were promised evidence of an apprehended insurrection and that that evidence was never brought to them.

I do not know how the then Prime Minister answers for such a vital promise broken, but I believe that raises a long-standing question as to the wisdom of using that Act.

Mr. Caccia: Mr. Speaker, the Member for Spadina perhaps might wish to comment on the following excerpt from a letter written by the Mayor of Montreal at that time, when he wrote to the federal Government and said:

> The Chief of the Montreal Police—

I am reading this passage because the Member for Spadina made reference to the adequacy of the municipal police forces:

> —has informed us that the means available to him are proving inadequate and that the assistance of higher levels of Government has become essential for the protection of society against the seditious plot and the apprehended insurrection in which the recent kidnappings were the first step.

Would the Hon. Member like to comment on that?

Mr. Heap: I would be very glad to comment on that because that same mayor of Montreal has a long established reputation for being quite a dictator, not a democrat in his conduct. In fact, it is interesting to know that there was an electoral movement of opposition to him, the FRAP, organized in Montreal, about to contest the municipal elections, which was completely shattered and made ineffective by the use of the War Measures Act.

It may be true in a sense that the mayor felt he was faced by things he could not control, but it is not clear that it was the kind of thing that the War Measures Act should be dealing with. If he cleaned up his own act as mayor of Montreal he might not have had to make such an overreaching demand.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I will allow another supplementary.

Mr. Caccia: Would the Hon. Member for Spadina apply the same criteria to the Premier of Quebec at that time for being a dictator? He wrote and made a request along the following lines:

> Under the circumstances, on behalf of the Government of Quebec, I request that emergency powers be provided as soon as possible so that more effective steps may be taken. I request particularly that such powers encompass the authority to apprehend and keep in custody individuals who, the Attorney General of Quebec has valid reasons to believe, are determined to overthrow the Government through violent and illegal means. According to the information we have and which is available to you, we are facing a concerted effort to intimidate and overthrow the Government and the democratic institutions of this province through planned and systematic illegal action, including insurrection. It is obvious that those participating in this concerted effort completely reject the principle of freedom under the rule of law.

That was the Premier of Quebec. Does he also qualify as a dictator or unduly elected representative of the people?

Mr. Heap: Mr. Speaker, my knowledge about the mayor of Montreal is more specific than my knowledge about the then Premier of Quebec, although I had lived in Quebec previous to that and I have had experience, directly and indirectly, with the dictatorial concept of a former Attorney General of Quebec, the inventor and user of the padlock law, which fortunately was a thing of the past at the time we are speaking of.

I would say, about the time we are speaking of, that the proof of the pudding is in the eating. If the Premier of Quebec thought that the several hundred artists, performers, social workers, lawyers and other professional people were somehow or other an armed band going to overthrow the Government of Quebec, then he clearly did not have the judgment which his office requires and his letter was clearly a foolish letter.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions and comments are now terminated. Debate.

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, first I want to congratulate my colleague, the Member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia), for the excellent questions he just raised in the House.

I was not going to raise the issue of the imposition of the War Measures Act in 1970, but because of the replies that have just been given by the Member for Spadina (Mr. Heap) to the questions asked by my colleague, I believe this issue should be raised in the House now.

Of course, no one looks back on 1970 with pride. It was a very regrettable situation in the history of our country. However, we have survived as a nation and we can at least look back upon the year 1970. I suppose it is fair for anyone in the House to criticize the Government of the day for the actions that were taken to invoke the War Measures Act in 1970, with the support of a majority of the Official Opposition, as I understand it. It is not simply a situation where a Government acted unilaterally with anyone's input, consent or support. Of course, hindsight is 20-20 vision, especially if one is a New Democrat, but I remind this House, as did my distinguished colleague, the Hon. Member for Davenport of a letter sent by the Premier of Quebec at that time. Whether one agrees or disagrees with him, he certainly held office for three terms and his Government was elected again very recently with a substantial majority vote. Presumably, that Government enjoys the respect of the population of that province.

• (1540)

In 1970 the Premier of Quebec wrote to his federal counterpart asking for assistance. I remind the Hon. Member for Portneuf (Mr. Ferland), who spoke a little earlier today about unilateral actions taken by the federal Government against Quebec, of an excerpt of the letter which reads:

> Under the circumstances, on behalf of the Government of Quebec, I request that emergency powers be provided as soon as possible so that more effective steps may be taken. I request particularly that such powers encompass the authority to apprehend and keep in custody individuals who, the Attorney General of Quebec has valid reasons to believe, are determined to overthrow the Government through violence and illegal means.
> According to the information we have and which is available to you, we are facing a concerted effort to intimidate and overthrow the Government and the democratic institutions of this province through planned and systematic illegal action, including insurrection. It is obvious that those participating in this concerted effort completely reject the principle of freedom under the rule of law.

That is a very strong letter written by the Premier of Quebec at that time, sharing with his federal counterparts the opinion not only of himself but that of his Attorney General. A letter written by the Mayor of Montreal has already been read in part into the record. The Mayor of Montreal, with probably the largest or the second largest municipal police force in this country, said at that time:

> The Chief of the Montreal Police has informed us that the means available to him are proving inadequate and that the assistance of higher levels of Government has become essential for the protection of society against the seditious plot and the apprehended insurrection in which the recent kidnappings were the first step.

We all know which kidnappings were referred to in that letter. It referred to the kidnappings of a prominent provincial cabinet Minister and the British Trade Commissioner in Canada. Those activities, eventually led to a manifesto being read on television. We all remember that. It was read by the media which at that time certainly felt that what was happening was so intimidating that it must read the upsetting FLQ manifesto on air.

Those people who were not living in the Province of Quebec at the time and those who pretended that nothing had happened then, could moralize today. I suppose that is their right. But at least they should remember what happened then.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, I myself am a native of Quebec and represent a Franco-Ontarian riding; the border between Ontario and Quebec, where I live in my riding, is mostly the Ottawa River. I remember crossing the bridge between Grenville, Quebec and Hawkesbury, Ontario the evening that the late Mr. Laporte was found dead in the trunk of a car. I remember waiting three hours that night to cross Perley Bridge into Hawkesbury, something that should have taken about 45 seconds. We all remember those days. But as a Canadian that night, Mr. Speaker, I certainly felt some frustration when I had to wait to cross the Perley Bridge to return home. I was coming back from work in Quebec, where I used to work on the weekend, and still I think that all of us who were waiting there knew—or at any rate, believed—that the measures that had been taken were necessary.

[English]

It is important to remember that the letters written by the Premier of Quebec and the Mayor of Montreal, who was responding to a request of the Chief of the Montreal Police, referred to acts of apprehended insurrection. The Premier requested powers encompassing the authority to apprehend and keep in custody individuals who, the Attorney General of Quebec had valid reasons to believe, were determined to overthrow the Government through violence and illegal means. So the federal Government at that time used the tools it had.

Today, of course, we will have a better law or, at least, a law which we hope will be better. Heaven forbid that this new law will ever be used, but in the unfortunate event that it is used, will we look at it and say what a blunt instrument it is and how inappropriate? That was the only law available to us to do the job we had to do, given what we knew at the time. So I remind all Members about those facts.

Enough about that part of our history. We should really address the new Bill which, of course, is one all Members of this House will agree is better than the one we had, as it should be better. If the new Bill is not going to be better than what we had before, we would really have to question the work of all Members of Parliament, the legislative draft persons, and so on, all those who assisted us with the drafting, amending, correcting and passage of the legislation. I just want to remind the Parliamentary Secretary about the speech he gave us a little earlier today. In large measure, it was a fairly good speech.

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): Just fairly good, Bud.

Mr. Boudria: Well, we can say it was a good speech, in large measure. I want to remind the Parliamentary Secretary, as I reminded members of the New Democratic Party, to the imposition of the War Measures Act of 1970. The Parliamentary Secretary said earlier today: "Some things are above politics. I think Bill C-77 is one of them". He further stated, we have seen some old wounds reopened in recent weeks. Publication of Mr. Jamieson's diaries with their allegations of political expediency and public representations made by the National Association of Japanese Canadians has reminded us of the horrors of the events of October 1970 and the early 1940s.

• (1550)

I suggest to the Parliamentary Secretary that he should remind whoever it is who prepared his notes that these two paragraphs should be used together in a speech to lecture someone else. To say that something is above politics and then to enter two lines later into political diatribe is somewhat inappropriate in my considered opinion.

Notwithstanding all of that, I am happy that we have this Bill. I am pleased with the amendments that have been proposed. I know of a text which was written for a publication entitled The National in its March, 1988 edition. The article is entitled "Committee Outlines Problems in Emergency Measures Bill". This publication is published by the Canadian Bar Association, and I quote from it:

> It is our submission that the definitions of the various classes of emergencies need "tightening up" . . . As it presently stands, this legislation could permit the government to invoke sweeping public order emergency powers to combat such problems as unemployment and inflation.
> For example, a "public order emergency" could be declared under the legislation in order to regulate a situation of rising unemployment and inflation.

Indeed, there have been other countries which have used similar legislation to deal with such matters as labour strikes and so on. Of course, we do not want that in Canada, or least I do not want that. I do not think that any Member of the House wants that.

I am glad that the amendments which were proposed and adopted earlier today were worded in such a way as to tighten up the language of the Bill. They remove some of the confusion that could have otherwise been there so that a situation whereby this legislation could be used in such a way has been avoided. I am not suggesting that the Government ever wanted to use the legislation in a situation of strike or anything else. I am not saying that. However, it is important as well that the legislation be perceived as being fair and just. The proposed amendments will give that appearance and will make Canadians generally feel better about the Bill, notwithstanding the good intentions of the people who proposed the Bill in its original form.

As Hon. Members will know, I did not sit on the parliamentary committee that dealt with this Bill. However, judging from the debate earlier today it seems obvious that the committee was not only a very good one but that it was also very well chaired and organized. I congratulate the Members of the House on all sides who participated in the committee and who have proposed the amendments which were carried earlier today.

It is quite obvious that when the Government agrees to adopt amendments of opposition Members and when members of the Opposition unanimously agree to adopt government amendments that means that there was indeed a good spirit of co-operation on the parliamentary committee which dealt with the Bill. I underline that point, along with my other colleagues who have done so. I congratulate the Members of the House who worked on this Bill at the parliamentary committee level.

With those few words, Mr. Speaker, I want to thank you for allowing me to participate in the debate on this Bill. It is my hope that it will become law very soon.

[Translation]

Mr. Ferland: Mr. Speaker, I may have a small question for my colleague from Glengarry—Prescott—Russell (Mr. Boudria).

He said a moment ago that in my speech I had referred to the federal Government's unilateral action. I do not believe I said that in my remarks. However I listened carefully to what he said concerning the requests of the Quebec Premier in 1970, and the way he read the document my understanding was that at the time the Quebec Premier sought the assistance of the federal Government but, unless I am mistaken, he did not specifically ask that the War Measures Act be invoked.

Now in light of Mr. Jamieson's statements which, to some extent, were confirmed recently by certain people who were in Cabinet at the time, it would seem much more probable that the then federal Liberal Government had indeed wanted to resort to the War Measures Act for what we Quebecers have understood to be a means to get Quebecers to toe the line. It was much more a means of retaliation of the federal Government against the people of Quebec than an attempt to respond to a request for assistance on the part of the Premier of Quebec, as my colleague from Glengarry—Prescott—Russell has suggested.

I wish he would shed some light on the documents he has been reading, because the way I see it it was simply a request for assistance and not for the implementation of the war measures.

[English]

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, I will be glad to respond to my colleague who just asked a question of me. I want to refresh his memory with respect to the contents of the letter. I quote in part the letter from the Premier of Quebec which states:

> —I request that emergency powers be provided as soon as possible—

That is the first point. The next sentence states:

> I request particularly that such powers encompass the authority to apprehend and keep in custody individuals who, the Attorney General of Quebec has valid reasons to believe, are determined to overthrow the Government through violence and illegal means.

I remind the Hon. Member of what the Mayor of Montreal said after consulting with his Chief of Police. He said that he needed the assistance of "higher levels of government". He also said that it has become essential for the protection of society against the seditious plot and the apprehended insurrection in which the recent kidnappings were the first step. Those are not my words, those are the words of the Mayor of the city and of the Premier of the province, a Premier who is in office today as we are speaking.

Something else I wish to say to the Hon. Member is that if he thinks and feels that his Party would have done differently in 1970, and if that was so bad, then why did his own Party support this measure at that time?

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): Mr. Speaker, I wish to clarify a point that my Liberal colleague made at the outset of his speech this afternoon when he made reference to the fact that with the wisdom of hindsight vision is 20-20, or words to that effect. In other words, he was implying that because we are looking back some 18 years it is easy to be critical of what the Government of the day did.

I wish to put on the record once again, and I wish to remind my hon. friend, that at the time in the autumn of 1970 some 16 members of my Party out of, I believe, 19 Members, voted against the imposition of the War Measures Act. So I did not stand here in my place today with the wisdom of hindsight and 20-20 vision. My Party voted against its imposition and took a terrible beating in the popular opinion polls at the time for having done so. I just want to clarify that point and not leave the misconception on the record.

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, I agree with the Hon. Member for Brant (Mr. Blackburn). Unlike the Tories who said yes at that time, members of the Hon. Member's Party were divided on the issue. There was division within the NDP caucus. Some said yes and some said no, that is quite true.

• (1600)

Mr. Kilgour: Not all Tories supported the measure in 1973, some of us, the Hon. David MacDonald, and others actually published a book opposing the use of the War Measures Act in 1970.

Has the Member read the book entitled The Politics of Racism: The Uprooting of Japanese Canadians During The Second World War by Ann Gomer Sunahara, who happens to be a constituent of mine, about the internment of Japanese Canadians?. If the Hon. Member is aware of those events, and he may not be because it is a long time ago for both of us, would he tell us whether he thinks that the Right Hon. Ian Mackenzie, the British Columbia Minister at the time in the King Cabinet, to put it mildly, was not guilty of racism for what he did in British Columbia? Does the Hon. Member have a comment on that?

Mr. Boudria: The Hon. Member for Edmonton—Strathcona (Mr. Kilgour) is quite correct when he says that I was not around at the time. In my opinion, the internment of Japanese Canadians was an absolutely abhorrent act, just like the deportation of the Acadians.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions and comments are now terminated. On debate, the Hon. Member for Esquimalt—Saanich.

Mr. Patrick Crofton (Esquimalt—Saanich): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the opportunity to offer a few thoughts on Bill C-77. As a member of the legislative committee, I can attest to the diligence and sensitivity with which all Members from various Parties in the House debated the matter. In particular, I would like to single out the excellent chairmanship of my colleague, the Hon. Member for Victoria (Mr. McKinnon) and the very fine contribution made by our colleague, the Hon. Member for Brant (Mr. Blackburn). To me it was the spirit of Parliament debating a serious issue seriously in the best possible tradition. Consequently, I believe Parliament should make the proposed Emergencies Act the law of the land, for the protection of all Canadians, young and old, and to do it now.

The Bill is flexible. It is responsible, and it is responsive. It is yet another example of a promise made and a promise kept. It is legislation that is long overdue. For the past 18 years, Canadians, and representatives on all sides of the House, have been saying, "The War Measures Act must go".

The Emergencies Act, this replacement for the War Measures Act, is finely tuned legislation, considered with care to deal flexibly with four different types of national emergencies. First, public welfare emergency caused by serious natural disaster, disease, accident, pollution, or breakdown in services; second, public order emergency caused by serious threats to the security of the country; third, international emergency caused by serious acts or threats of intimidation or coercion against Canada or our allies; and finally, war emergency caused by actual or imminent war or armed conflict involving Canada or our allies.

This is legislation which vitally affects the rights of young children, senior citizens, disabled persons, the sick, and everyone who, in an emergency, might depend entirely on the capacities, resources, protection, and the sense of responsibility of the Government of Canada.

I think I can rightly say that each of us in this House is most concerned with three basic issues: the completely unsatisfactory legislation we have had in the past; the compelling need to deal effectively and fairly with national emergencies in the future; and the carefully constructed and remodeled Bill which the Government proposes today.

Thoughtful citizens in each of our constituencies across this country, realize that Parliament must create now a new legal framework to deal with national emergencies, and one that safeguards the civil rights of its citizens. They recognize that the law must provide, on the one hand, authority for prompt action by the Government to protect all Canadians as a nation, and on the other hand, safeguards for our basic rights and freedoms, to protect each Canadian as an individual.

Preparation of this legislation required a just, careful balancing between the interests of the public and the freedoms of the individual person. We are assured that this legislation will be subservient always to the Charter of Rights and Freedoms. I believe we can agree that leaders of the Government, Public Service advisers, members of the legislative committee, representatives of many associations, individual citizens and, most certainly, Members of the House, can all take satisfaction from having contributed to this endeavour. Many perceptive, prudent people have invested time and effort in this Bill as it was prepared, debated, discussed, and now amended. Our fellow citizens in each of our constituencies now expect us to weigh, to decide, and to act on this legislation.

We are fortunate to have had the time and opportunity, now, in conditions of peace and calm, far removed from the relentless pressures of a compelling emergency, to reflect, to discuss, and to prepare for the future.

Sadly, we need merely watch the news on television, or read newspapers and magazines to see every day people and Governments around the world struggling with war, revolt, famine, and disasters. They certainly are reminders of how fortunate we Canadians are.

This has not always been the case in Canada, as we know to our sorrow. One of the darkest episodes of Canadian history took place in my own province. After years of official and unofficial harassment, the ill treatment of Japanese residents of British Columbia reached a new low in February, 1942, when the Government of Canada issued an executive order under the War Measures Act. It decreed the forced removal from their homes of more than 20,000 men, women, and children who were citizens or permanent residents of Canada. They were to be sent to camps and towns at least 100 miles from the Pacific coast.

In the climate of the time the public did have good reason to be concerned. The world was at war. In a sudden peacetime attack on Pearl Harbour, Japanese Armed Forces had just sunk 19 ships of the United States Navy. They had killed and captured hundreds of Canadian troops defending Hong Kong. They were about to launch a successful landing on the Aleutian Islands of Alaska. Japanese submarines were scouting the Pacific coast.

Nevertheless, the local commanders of the Canadian Armed Forces and the Royal Canadian Mounted Police advised the Government that Japanese Canadians, permanent residents, citizens, and people born in Canada, posed no threat to security. In fact, the Government never did charge any Japanese Canadian with disloyalty.

Instead of following reasoned, professional advice, the Government reacted to prejudice and fear. Thousands upon thousands of Japanese Canadians were rounded up and interned. The Government then proceeded to sell their fishing boats, automobiles, farms, businesses, homes, and even their personal belongings at less than true value. All this took place under powers provided by Parliament when it passed the War Measures Act in 1914.

This disgraceful treatment of our fellow citizens by the Government of Canada over 40 years ago is most relevant to the provisions of the Emergencies Act which we have before us today. It underscores the need for Parliament to consider such a serious issue in a period of calm away from the attentions of an emergency situation, in order that we can have on the legislative books a reasoned, proper, fair, and legal method for dealing with emergencies, so that these sad occasions of the past will never be repeated.

Over the past six months, the Minister and the Government have listened to, and acted upon, many of the suggestions of the National Association of Japanese Canadians, the Canadian Civil Liberties Association, the Canadian Bar Association, and others. This Bill explicitly rules out detention, imprisonment, or internment of Canadians citizens or permanent residents, on the basis of race, national or ethnic origin, or other discrimination.

The types of situations that would justify emergency powers have been narrowed and defined more clearly. Reasonable compensation for loss, injury, or damage will be mandatory, rather than at the discretion of the Government. Emergency orders and regulations must be related directly to remedying the particular emergency, and citizens may challenge these in the courts. Orders and regulations are to be reviewed by a special all-Party parliamentary committee. This independent committee is to report regularly to Parliament on what the Government is doing and why. The Government must table orders and regulations within two days. The Bill now specifies no time limits on debate of a motion to confirm or continue a state of emergency or to revoke orders or regulations. A Member of Parliament may raise a motion to revoke or amend an order or regulation with no time limit now specified in the Bill.

• (1610)

As the result of the contributions of many organizations and citizens, these are safeguards of the rights of the individual and the rights of Parliament which have now become part of this legislation.

There are many other important amendments which greatly improved the Bill. The legislation, as has been pointed out, also reinforces provincial authority and explicitly provides for federal participation by request of a provincial Government.

For example, one seismologist told an interviewer on The Journal, the CBC television program, that we might have an earthquake along the coast of B.C. as big as the one which broke the southern coast of Chile in 1960. Five thousand people died there. He said that we must also take seriously the possibility of a much bigger earthquake, as big as any in the world in the last 1,500 years. It would be completely off the Richter scale.

This is a prediction that no one wants to hear, but in B.C. we have to face it. As experts have explained, an earthquake is like having a whole series of disasters all at once. Some day the following, God forbid, could occur suddenly and simultaneously: hundreds of deaths; thousands of injuries; thousands trapped, including the very young, the elderly, and the sick; hospitals swamped; homes destroyed; buildings demolished; bridges collapsed; highways closed; power cut; communications cut; gas mains broken; water mains broken; many fires out of control; massive floods; and streets full of debris and closed to rescuers.

This is the terrible situation that the Emergencies Act is designed to help in recovery. This will be a national emergency crying out for and demanding a national response. This legislation provides the framework and allows for the regulations required by the Government of Canada to carry out its mandate, its responsibilities, if a national emergency arises. Unfortunately we must say, realistically, "when a national emergency arises".

We must respond with a sense of urgency to these circumstances. Our past legislation has been completely unsatisfactory. We have a compelling need to deal effectively and fairly with national emergencies in the future. The Government has now proposed a carefully constructed and remodeled Bill. This is legislation which vitally affects all Canadians. We must now join the ranks of the other western democracies which have had modern legislation to deal with emergencies in place for years.

This is a meritorious Bill. We have had debate in the House. We have had qualified advice from knowledgeable witnesses who appeared before the committee. We have had careful review in committee. We have had cogent, incisive amendments which the Government has accepted and adopted as needed improvements.

The Government made a promise. The Government has kept that promise. The time has come for us to act. Canadians across the country in each of our constituencies are waiting for us to put in place the law we need to deal with national emergencies.

I am confident, Mr. Speaker, that Members on both sides of the House feel that we can now come together, in unity of purpose, and make the Emergencies Act the law of the land, for the protection of Canadians, young and old.

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, in the course of this very interesting debate today the Parliamentary Secretary, the Member for Haldimand—Norfolk (Mr. Bradley), stated, in introducing the legislation, said that it is intended to prevent abuse of the executive power or, in other words, to ensure that abuse of executive power will not recur. That seems to me to be the nub of this Bill and the principle behind its concept, at least in good part.

In the case of the Japanese Canadians, history has already amply demonstrated that there was abuse of executive power at that time. As was shown on a television program recently, the same happened to Americans of Japanese descent. Twice on this continent in the same period of history there occurred the phenomenon of executive power taking action with respect to citizens in their own country.

I refer to Canadians of Japanese descent and, south of the border, to Americans of Japanese descent. They were removed to camps from their homes, villages, towns, and from their property. This blatant infliction of injustice on them on a personal basis as well as a collective basis remains with us today, and other Members have quite rightly referred to it.

We disagree, however, in this debate on the assessment of what happened in 1970 in Montreal. It may be that not enough time has elapsed for everyone to have developed a sufficient detachment from the occurrences of that time. If you agree with me, Mr. Speaker, that there is a role for the state on behalf of society in cases of kidnappings to protect the collective rights and at the same time to resolve the serious and tragic predicaments of individuals in that society, you will understand why I reject the intervention made earlier by the Member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez) and elaborated upon by his colleague, the Member for Spadina (Mr. Heap).

Either they are misguided, their historical memories are short or, as I suspect, they are historically wrong, their facts are incorrect and they are trying now to appear to be on the side of the angels, namely, on the side of individual rights, forgetting what was going on at that time both in this House and in Quebec, particularly in Montreal.

Therefore, I object strenuously to the statements made by the Member for Nickel Belt and the Member for Spadina because they seem to forget that at that time not one but two residents of Quebec had been kidnapped. I would like to ask them rhetorically what they would have done if they had had the responsibility to govern. Evidently they have never had the responsibility to govern.
